Temporary Foreign Worker Advisory Offices

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In my constituency I recently attended an information session for temporary foreign workers, and I was impressed by the presentation and the opportunity for workers to speak to an adviser from the temporary foreign worker advisory office in person, right in their local community, two hours from Edmonton. My questions are for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Why were the advisory offices created, and are they able to engage workers who may be leery of bringing their concerns forward?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, the offices were set up to help people who may be vulnerable. These were set up to help them understand their rights and responsibilities. Alberta has set an example in Canada by opening these offices both in Edmonton and Calgary. We've got a very proactive approach to delivering local presentations to workers, employers, and other public groups. Last year office staff participated in over 100 presentations and meetings. Those are just one of the many things that we do as part of our advisory offices.

Mr. Johnson: To the same minister: if a worker or a concerned constituent feels there is an issue warranting investigation by this government, what do they need to do in order to have your department look into it, and how do we protect them from reprisals, which they're often fearful of?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Basically, we need someone to report a complaint or problem, and it is very, very hard to help if we don't have specific complaints to follow up on. There is a lot of hearsay, but unless somebody comes in with something very specific, it's very difficult. I know this can be difficult, but temporary foreign workers' information and concerns are also handled in a very confidential manner. They can get assistance from the advisory office through our helpline, by e-mail, or in person.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Some would have us believe that this is a rampant issue in Alberta and that a majority of employers here are taking advantage of their temporary foreign workers. Does this minister's office have statistics on how widespread this issue actually is, and are we seeing continuous improvement in this regard?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are 2 million working Albertans in this province, and temporary foreign workers make up about 2 and a half per cent of those 2 million workers. Temporary foreign workers have the same workplace rights as any worker, and most employers treat them well. In fact, in Alberta 98 per cent of our employers don't have any complaints against temporary foreign workers. Any allegations of mistreatment are taken very seriously, and all complaints from temporary foreign workers and other workers are investigated.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

2:40 Grizzly Bear Management

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Sustainable Resource Development has been waiting on DNA data to take action on the declining grizzly bear population, yet we are now told the information will not be ready until later this year. For five years we've been waiting for this, and during that time the population continued to decline. To the Minister of SRD: why has the minister not taken any action aside from suspending the grizzly bear hunt to stop the decline?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is wrong on almost every count. We've taken half a dozen different strategies to deal with grizzly bear issues since then in addition to suspending the hunt, in addition to doing the DNA study, in addition to doing the BearSmart communities, and also integrated resource management and reducing impact. Let's start with a new question that gets closer to the facts.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will this minister commit to listing the grizzly bear as threatened now to minimize the population decline until all the DNA data can be analyzed?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows very well that I won't commit to anything until the results of the study are in. The people over there always want science-based policy. That's all we hear. Well, we want the results of the study in before we make a decision. You guys are always in a hurry. Be patient.

Mr. Hehr: Well, I don't think we have to wait for science. There are only about 230 bears left. Why don't you just list them as threatened now and save us the time in waiting for it?

Dr. Morton: Once again, the hon. member is just picking numbers out of thin air. There's absolutely no evidence to support either the number that he just gave or the fact that there are fewer bears today than there were when the study began. There is no reliable baseline count. As I said, be patient. You guys are always in a hurry. When the numbers are in, we'll make the right decision.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that was 102 questions and responses today. In a few seconds from now I'll call upon the remaining members to participate in Members' Statements.

Alberta-Canada Growing Forward Program

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, I rise today to highlight an important partnership that was announced last week. The five-year Alberta-Canada Growing Forward agreement provides for a cost-shared investment and commitment to moving our agricultural industry forward. It is part of a strategic national framework that's focused on concrete actions to help position our producers for long-term success.

Alberta's agricultural industry is export oriented, and in today's highly competitive global economy our producers, processors, and other agribusinesses need to make changes in order to compete. That is what Alberta's Growing Forward programs are designed to help support.

Just as important, Mr. Speaker, Growing Forward recognizes that industry needs to be a leader in creating our own success. Grants are dependent on industry members also investing in projects. Simply put, Growing Forward is designed to help industry help itself. This partnership is very responsive to Alberta's needs. It gives us the flexibility to focus on the specific areas that industry in this province needs to further develop in order to advance. The program includes ones that will help industry differentiate its products for priority markets and integrate best practices to further protect our land and water. The bottom line is that Growing Forward programs will help industry become more competitive and innovative, manage risk, and contribute to the priorities of Albertans.

Alberta's agricultural industry helped build this province. With the strategic support provided through Growing Forward, this industry will continue to make an important contribution to Alberta's economy, its rural communities, and its future.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

National Immunization Awareness Week

Mr. Berger: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Keeping up to date with immunizations is important. The World Health Organization reports that each year immunizations save over 3 million lives worldwide. However, just as many lives are lost each year due to diseases that are preventable with existing vaccines. Immunization is one of the best health measures that Albertans can take to protect themselves and their families from disease and illness.

Children, teenagers, and adults all have varying needs for immunization. Keeping immunizations up to date is a lifelong process, that begins at birth and continues throughout a lifetime. The need for immunizations includes occupational requirements, foreign travel, underlying illness, and age. The number of vaccine-preventable diseases is growing, and immunization vaccines provide one of the most effective, long-lasting methods of preventing infectious disease in all age groups. Immunizations can help Albertans to protect themselves against diseases such as measles, influenza, the meningococcal virus, and hepatitis A and B. Immunizations also help reduce the burden on Alberta's health care system, which can result in fewer hospital admissions and reduced medical care.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to take this opportunity to recognize this week as National Immunization Awareness Week, and I encourage all Albertans to talk to a doctor, a pharmacist, a nurse, or a public health official for more information on immunizations.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Alberta Land Surveyors' Association

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Land Surveyors' Association kicked off their centennial celebrations at their 100th annual general meeting in Banff last weekend. The theme of their annual conference was Honouring the Past, Celebrating the Present, Looking to the Future.

The association was created by the Alberta Land Surveyors Act, which was introduced in this Assembly in 1910 by the hon. Jean Leon Côté, a Dominion land surveyor and MLA for the riding of Athabasca. His Honour Jean Leon Côté of the Alberta Court of Appeal is the grandson of J.L., as he was affectionately known.

Subsequent to the passing of the Land Surveyors Act the association was formed, with William Pearce, another dominion land surveyor, as president. Pearce was known as the czar of the prairies for his intimate involvement in irrigation, resource development, and general land management in this new province. Lionel Charlesworth, another DLS and provincial director of surveys, was the first secretary-treasurer. Initially there were 45 members, all of which were dominion land surveyors practising in the province. The Alberta Surveys Act was passed the following year.

The Alberta Land Surveyors' Association is still a relatively small professional association after 100 years, with only 388 members today. Despite their small size they are very active and are recognized as one of the leading professional associations in North America.

Mr. Speaker, colleagues, please join me in congratulating the Alberta Land Surveyors' Association on 100 years of maintaining an orderly system of stable, well-defined land boundaries in the province of Alberta.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Yes. Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I'd like to present a petition which reads:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government to continue to cover under the Alberta Health Care Insurance Plan all health services which promote health and wellness, including chiropractic services.

The petition today has 370 signatures.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Marketing of Agricultural Products Amendment Act, 2009 (No. 2)

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, thank you. I rise today to request leave to introduce Bill 43, the Marketing of Agricultural Products Amendment Act, 2009 (No. 2).

These amendments support freedom of choice, Mr. Speaker. They support giving individual producers the right to decide how their hard-earned money is spent. Under the amended act producers in four commodity groups – beef, pork, sheep and lamb, and potato growers – will be able to request refunds on the service fees they pay to agricultural commissions that represent them. These proposed changes are about the viability of the agricultural industry. They're about ensuring that commissions are responsive to the needs and wishes of their members. This act will bring uniformity of regulation to all 13 boards and commissions that do not set prices or function as marketing boards.

I look forward to the debate and discussion on this bill. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 43 read a first time]

2:50

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that Bill 43 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Culture and Community Spirit.

Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Amendment Act, 2009

Mr. Blackett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I respectfully request leave to move first reading of Bill 44, the Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Amendment Act, 2009.

The proposed changes will update and make the legislation and the commission more effective and efficient and in line with current and future realities.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 44 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In accordance with section 211 of the Metis Settlements Act I'm tabling five copies of the Métis Settlements Appeal Tribunal 2008 annual report. The Métis Settlements Appeal Tribunal, referred to as MSAT, was established in 1990. Along with the Métis Settlements General Council and local settlements' councils it acts as a courtlike body, ruling on land, membership, and other matters. Finally, in 2008 the MSAT office co-ordinated 1,038 inquiries and projects, more than double the number from the previous year. This is a true measure of the valuable service that MSAT provides to Métis settlement members in Alberta.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings this afternoon. I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of information regarding the 2009 excellence in teaching awards semifinalist regional celebration, the itinerary and program, which honoured all the recipients. That'll be for the Edmonton celebration.

My second tabling, Mr. Speaker, is the 2009 excellence in teaching awards semifinalist regional celebration that took place in Calgary, the appropriate itinerary and a listing of the celebrants for that particular evening.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is information I got from the Employment and Immigration office last October. It is a ministerial order, and it lists the work sites requiring a joint work-site health and safety committee here in Alberta.

My second tabling is a copy of a petition which is essentially a cease-and-desist order for the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness requesting the hon. minister to stop dismantling our public health care structure. It's put out by the Friends of Medicare.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have one tabling today, five copies of documents I referred to in question period from the Alberta corporate registration system regarding R.K. Heli-ski Panorama Incorporated, documents which were altered or changed on Sunday from the documents which I tabled yesterday, that we accessed on Thursday.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, do you have tablings?

Mr. Hehr: No.

The Speaker: Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Yes, I do, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. First, I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of the Alberta nuclear consultation online workbook, which can be accessed through the Alberta Energy home page. I referred to this document in my questions today.

My second tabling, Mr. Speaker, is a letter from a constituent, Mr. Guy Pallister, who indicates that he wants me to voice his concerns at the Alberta Legislature and that he is appalled that a picture of a U.K. beach was used in the promo of an Alberta tourism advertisement. He believes that someone's head should roll on this blunder.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 29 Family Law Amendment Act, 2009

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to begin debate on Bill 29, the Family Law Amendment Act, 2009.

Mr. Speaker, you may recall that in the fall 2008 session this Legislature passed Bill 15 to establish the child support recalculation program. This is a new and much-needed service for separated and divorced parents and the children of their relationships. The program will annually recalculate child support orders based on changes to parents' incomes. This process will be an administrative one so that parents do not have to go to court. The child support recalculation program will improve access to justice by offering a simple and low-cost way for parents to keep their child support orders current. It will help ensure that children receive the best support their parents can offer as their financial circumstances change from year to year. It will help child support payers whose incomes have gone down by reducing the amount of child support that they're obliged to pay, and it will also help children and support recipients by increasing the child support they receive if the payer's income has in fact gone up. In either case it will help parents meet the obligations they have in law to ensure that their child support orders are adjusted in order to match their incomes. This new program is expected to open by the end of this year.

Now, Mr. Speaker, although the child support recalculation program will share some resources with the maintenance enforcement program, parents can be clients with either program or both programs depending on their specific needs or circumstances.

For the child support recalculation program to adjust support annually based on the parents' incomes, the program needs income information from both parents. Bill 15 requires that parties registered with the recalculation program provide the program with documentation each year to show their current income. Mr. Speaker, that documentation is expected to be copies of the parent's income tax return and notice of assessment for the last taxation year as well as a short questionnaire. This information will allow the program to determine the party's income and set child support accordingly. It will make sure that the support to be paid reflects both good earning years and bad earning years over time.

Mr. Speaker, it's an unfortunate fact, however, that not all parents live up to their own obligations when it comes to child support. Even though parents registered with the child support recalculation program will have a legal obligation to provide their income disclosure, we know, unfortunately, that some will not. One parent's failure to disclose their income as legally required should not mean that the other parent is denied services from the new program. If it did, the whole purpose of the program, to keep parents out of court and to allow an easy, low-cost way to have child support amounts adjusted, would be defeated.

Bill 15 attempted to address this issue. Bill 15 stated that if a party failed to provide the required income disclosure, recalculation could still proceed based on a deemed 10 per cent increase in that parent's income. In other words, if the payer of child support did not give the recalculation program their tax return information, that program would recalculate the child support as if the payer's income had gone up by 10 per cent. The 10 per cent figure was chosen based on other recalculation programs throughout Canada.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta Justice staff have spent a lot of time over the past few months consulting with the public, with judges, with lawyers, and with others on the new child support recalculation program. Those consultations and information received from other jurisdictions suggested that in some cases the deemed increase of 10 per cent would be insufficient to provide income disclosure incentive. Consultations also suggested some unfairness in applying a flat 10 per cent deemed increase to all orders regardless of how much time had passed since the parent's income was last determined. It was felt that older orders needed a deemed increase of an amount higher than 10 per cent to promote income disclosure. Other provinces reporting low compliance by parties in providing their tax returns to facilitate recalculation also felt the same way. This is, of course, a real concern as compliance in Alberta could be even lower than other programs because we'll be recalculating orders that are much older than those that are being recalculated by other jurisdictions in the country.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the five existing recalculation programs in Canada are in British Columbia, Manitoba, Prince Edward Island, Newfoundland, and Nunavut. They only recalculate orders granted after their recalculation programs were created. Alberta will not make people go back for a new order so that they can participate in this program. Rather, our program will help parties with child support orders dating back to May 1997, when child support guidelines were first introduced. If the order used in the child support guidelines has set the child support and other means to meet the recalculation program's criteria, it will not matter when it was granted.

By the way, Mr. Speaker, the child support recalculation program will be widely accessible and will have even more success in assisting parents who do not wish to use the court process. However, the older the child support order that is being recalculated, the more likely that the 10 per cent deemed increase will fall short of that parent's actual income increase since the order was granted. This could actually encourage payers not to disclose their actual income as 10 per cent could be less than the increase that they actually realize.

Mr. Speaker, when we considered the Statistics Canada figures on average income increases and the consultation feedback, it became clear to us that Bill 15 needed to be amended. A more effective way needed to be found to encourage parties to comply with their obligation to provide income disclosure. We want this program to recalculate as many cases as possible based on the parents' actual income, not deemed income.

Bill 29 provides the additional encouragement to promote income disclosure and produces a fair result for parties and children if disclosure is not provided. The amendment would remove the blanket deemed increase in income of 10 per cent. With the proposed amendment the more time that has passed since the court recalculation program last set the parents' income, the higher the deemed increase will be. The minimal deemed increase of 10 per cent will be applied when no income information has been provided and the latest court order recalculation was completed less than one year before. For older orders another 3 per cent will be added for each additional year since the order was granted or recalculated. The deemed income increase will be escalated up to a maximum of 25 per cent, which would be applied to the order where five years or more have passed since the income was last determined.

Mr. Speaker, as I've said, the proposed amendment, one, will encourage parents to provide income disclosure to the program; two, is fair if income disclosure is not made; and finally, better protects Alberta's children, ensuring that they receive the financial support that they deserve even if their parents choose to withhold information regarding their income. I would encourage all members to support Bill 29.

With that, I would move to adjourn debate of this bill.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Rules of Court Statutes Amendment Act, 2009

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Mr. Denis: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise again today but this time to begin debate on Bill 31, the Rules of Court Statutes Amendment Act, 2009.

The Rules of Court, which govern practice and procedure in the Court of Appeal and the Court of Queen's Bench, are going through major revisions. The last time this happened was in 1968, when I wasn't even on this planet, Mr. Speaker. It is a special privilege for me to be able to argue this bill. I must remember that when I began articling the first time, I learned my first principle. The first rule I learned was rule 13, dealing with service of documents. [interjections] I think I may need to serve some of the members here with some notices today as well.

Over the next several years I became familiar with many of these rules, but more importantly I realized how much these rules affect not only the court but also the business outside of the court. Mr. Speaker, the rules affect how people, lawyers and nonlawyers, view the justice system as a whole. A common criticism I have heard is that the current rules are complex, they are cumbersome, and they do not effect timely resolutions. This is why I'm pleased to bring in the new rules on behalf of this government. The purpose of these rules is to maximize the rules' clarity, their usability, their effectiveness, as well as to contribute to a fair, timely, and cost-effective civil justice system. The new rules will improve the public's confidence in our justice system.

Implementing these new rules requires consensual amendments to be made to many statutes in order to reflect the different procedures and terminology used in the new rules. For example, under the new rules it will not be necessary to specify in an act the kind of application that is to be made in the court. As a result, phrases in an act such as "application by notice of motion" or "application by originating notice" are being changed to simply "application." An example of an amendment reflecting the updated terminology used in the new rules is as follows: if an act states that a person may be examined on their affidavit, the word "examined" will be replaced by "questioned."

One of the main things this bill will do is consolidate the authority of the Rules of Court in the Judicature Act. This will ensure that there is no confusion about which statute has the ultimate authority for introduction or amendment of a rule and will make the legislation more user friendly by locating any and all related provisions in one place.

Mr. Speaker, this bill also limits the number of years that a nonjudicial member can serve on the Rules of Court Committee and limits the number of times that they can be reappointed. This is to encourage a balance between renewal and experience on the committee, which makes recommendations to the minister on the amendments to the Rules of Court.

This bill will also relocate provisions regarding the enforcement of money judgments from the Rules of Court into the Civil Enforcement Act. The end result will be that all substantive provisions relating to the enforcement of money judgments will again be located in the Civil Enforcement Act and the civil enforcement regulation, making the legislation in this area more coherent, more integrated, and user friendly, again to both lawyers and nonlawyers.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is the result of literally years and hundreds, if not thousands, of hours of consultation with stakeholders and their volunteered time. I'm very proud to present it today. I would also like to add that I've always believed that one of the greatest gifts to the modern world has been the rule of law, being that the law must be prospective, well known, and have the characteristics of generality, equality, and certainty. Bill 31 is consistent with this and will be a credit to our legal system. I'd encourage all members to support Bill 31.

With that, I move to adjourn debate, Mr. Speaker. Thank you.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 32

Alberta Public Agencies Governance Act

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise for second reading of Bill 32, the Alberta Public Agencies Governance Act.

This bill focuses on Alberta's nearly 250 agencies, boards, and commissions. These organizations are situated across the province and play a key role in the lives of Albertans. They also administer a sizable portion, about 50 per cent, of this province's operating budget.

Mr. Speaker, the focus of Bill 32 is to improve the effectiveness of Alberta's agencies, boards, and commissions by ensuring that we have the right people for the job, by requiring competence-based recruitment and appointments, and by encouraging agencies to improve their effectiveness through orientation, evaluation, and training of their members. The bill will also ensure that agencies and the responsible ministers understand their mandates and respective roles and responsibilities. It will do this by requiring agencies to have a written statement of their mandate, their roles and responsibilities, and their codes of conduct and will clearly articulate the respective responsibilities of agencies and ministers.

Bill 32 will clarify the relationships and accountabilities between government and agencies, including policy-making and information sharing. It will also require periodic reviews of all agencies to ensure that they are operating as effectively as possible. The Alberta Public Agencies Governance Act will enhance public awareness by requiring information about agencies to be made publicly available.

Mr. Speaker, the Alberta Public Agencies Governance Act builds on the work done by the Board Governance Review Task Force, which was struck by our Premier in 2007. This was one of the key actions under Premier Stelmach's commitment to govern Alberta with integrity and transparency. This task force was charged with providing recommendations to improve the transparency, accountability, and governance of Alberta's agencies, boards, and commissions. In October 2007 the task force released its final report, which included 15 recommendations.

The first of these recommendations was for an Alberta public agencies governance act that would institutionalize a governance framework for agencies, that provides clear agency mandates and a competence-based appointment process. As a result, the public agencies governance framework was developed and then released in February 2008, and that brings us to today and the Alberta Public Agencies Governance Act, which provides the legislation to implement the policies set out in the framework.

I'd like to point out, Mr. Speaker, that implementation of the public agencies governance framework is already under way for many agencies. For many agencies Bill 32 simply formalizes what has already been in place. It cements the solid relationship between government and agencies. The bill builds on those efforts and will ensure further transparency with respect to agency governance, agency mandates, and their activities.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to talk for a few moments about the principles underlying Bill 32. First, the bill is based on the principle that having the right governance structure in place is critical for any organization to achieve its goals and objectives effectively and efficiently. Public agencies are no exception to that rule. The next key principle is that of accountability; that is to say, who is responsible to whom and for what.

Mr. Speaker, agencies operate as an extension of government, carrying out tasks delegated to them through legislation and by the executive branch of government. Once government has delegated authority to an agency, the agency then becomes responsible to government. Given this, the bill reflects the principle that agencies are responsible to the minister of the portfolio under which they fall, and as elected officials ministers are accountable to the public.

Ministers and agencies have the same fundamental objective, to promote the best interests of Albertans, but advancing this common goal is only possible when the parties work co-operatively. Therefore, another key principle underlying Bill 32 is that there should be free and open communication and a co-operative and collaborative working relationship between an agency and its responsible minister.

Mr. Speaker, another principle of Bill 32 is the need for flexibility in governance structures. This reflects that Alberta's agencies, boards, and commissions come in many shapes and sizes. They range from large organizations with multimillion-dollar budgets to small advisory groups that do not administer a budget. They may deliver services, provide advice to government, manage Crown assets, or perform regulatory or adjudicative functions. Given these differences it would obviously be counterproductive to impose a one-size-fits-all governance standard.

Another key principle underlying this bill is the need for openness and transparency with respect to agency governance, mandates, and activities. This reflects the large number of agencies that currently exist and the importance of the roles they play in the lives of Albertans each day.

With that background, Mr. Speaker, I will leave details of specific features of the bill to other speakers in second reading.

I'd like to make a few final comments regarding application of this proposed legislation. The bill applies to all public agencies. This includes any agency for which the government appoints the majority of its members. However, this bill does not apply to the following: the provincial court of Alberta; a body all of whose members are elected officials; a purely advisory agency that does not administer a budget and whose members are unpaid; a body established under federal law; a body whose establishing enactment or instrument provides that it will be dissolved within one year; or a body chaired by a minister or government employee, a majority of whose members are ministers or government employees, as long as it does not perform any adjudicative functions. Further, the bill does not apply to officers of the Legislative Assembly such as the Auditor General, the Ethics Commissioner, the Information and Privacy Commissioner, the Ombudsman, the Chief Electoral Officer, and the Legislative Assembly Office.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I'd just like to close by saying that I look forward to the balance of debate on this bill.

At this time I would move that the House adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 33

Fiscal Responsibility Act

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure to rise today to speak to Bill 33, the Fiscal Responsibility Act.

We're in the midst of some challenging times, and Bill 33 provides a simpler framework that enhances the flexibility needed to address today's economic climate while still retaining elements of fiscal discipline.

Our previous fiscal framework legislation has been the solid foundation of this government's commitment to fiscal responsibility, but it needs to be updated to reflect today's economic realities. I'd like to point out that since implementation of the fiscal responsibility framework, in 1993, the Alberta government has made major changes to it every four to five years, generally to reflect changes to the province's fiscal situation.

In addition, our current framework has become quite complex, requiring transfers between funds, which are often confusing to Albertans. The result was a lack of the transparency that we've promised those same Albertans. The changes within Bill 33 simplify the framework, make it clearer and more transparent. It also provides the enhanced flexibility necessary to fulfill the commitments we've made to Albertans in Budget 2009.

Bill 33 contains a number of basic elements from our past fiscal frameworks, which have helped us to position Alberta to build on our strengths as we move forward. In terms of deficits, they will only be allowed if offset by a transfer from the sustainability fund. When it comes to debt, government will only be able to borrow for certain things, including capital investment, support for capital projects owned by school boards, postsecondary institutions, and health authorities, as required by self-supporting corporations such as the Alberta Capital Finance Authority, and to fulfill our commitment to pay back funds owed by the pre-1992 teachers' pension plan to the post-1992 plan. Government will not be permitted to borrow for operating expense.

One of the main pillars of the act will see the sustainability fund expand to include the capital account and the amounts set aside from 2008-09 year-end results for carbon capture and public transit. This new single fund is allowed to offset approved deficits, and the confusing transfers between funds that currently take place are all eliminated.

Although it may be necessary to draw from this fund for the immediate future, it will be replenished as our fiscal circumstances allow, much as the original sustainability fund has been built up over the years. The act also demonstrates fiscal responsibility by putting limits on in-year increases in operating expense, which has been a successful element of past frameworks. This spending would be limited to 1 per cent of total ministry operating expense with an exception for things like disasters or emergencies or if there's a revenue associated with the expense. When it comes to nonrenewable resource revenue, the act will remove the limit on the amount of this revenue that can be used for budget purposes.

Overall, Bill 33 will continue our history of fiscal responsibility. It will help us to build on the work we've done in the past and help us deal with the current economic situation by increasing our fiscal flexibility.

I urge all members of this Assembly to give their support to Bill 33. Thank you.

I would like to adjourn debate on second reading of Bill 33.

Gas Utilities Amendment Act, 2009

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to move second reading of Bill 35, the Gas Utilities Amendment Act, 2009.

As mentioned at introduction, this is an administrative act to give legislative authority to a ruling of the National Energy Board. It's a small and minor amendment, as most members would see if they perused the legislation that was introduced last week. In fact, had the decision from the NEB come down a little bit sooner, Mr. Speaker, we'd likely be discussing this matter under Bill 28, the Energy Statutes Amendment Act, 2009, that I introduced last week as well.

This quasi-judicial ruling concerned the NOVA Gas Transmission pipeline owned by TransCanada PipeLines. Specifically, the ruling was to accept an application by TransCanada to make this pipeline be subject to federal regulation.

Mr. Speaker, many Albertans who've followed the history of oil and gas development will recall the establishment and subsequent growth of the Alberta Gas Trunk Line. Created over 50 years ago, this trunk line system was the underground highway that facilitated exploration and development of natural gas fields across Alberta. Over those decades the people involved – the company, the farmers under whose land much of the pipe was laid, and the provincial regulator – have become very familiar with each other. Quite rightly, people ask what this move to federal regulation will mean to them.

Both TransCanada and the federal regulator are engaging the agricultural community in consultation on where there may be differences in wording of various regulations. In fact, though, where the wording may be different, the practical result is that there will be negligible difference to individual Albertans. Under its new name of NOVA Gas Transmission this system is about to take on an additional and very important role to the province as a whole.

Mr. Speaker, people should know that Alberta is Canada's leading producer of petrochemicals. In fact, in 2007 the petrochemical and chemical industry produced over $15 billion in products, almost half of which were exported. This is what we and others mean when we talk about adding value. We're talking about taking bitumen or natural gas and stripping ethylene from it to create a host of value-added petrochemical products. In order to grow that value-added industry, Alberta needs new, additional sources of feedstock. The NOVA gas system will accomplish that by feeding the Alberta gas hub with product from British Columbia and potentially beyond. The history of this gas transmission system is a success story of Alberta exploration and development. Now it's poised to provide the future success of our value-added industry.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to move that we adjourn debate on second reading of Bill 35. Thank you very much.

Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2009

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to move second reading of the Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2009.

I would ask my colleague the proponent of this bill, the hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater, to please speak to this bill.

The Speaker: Okay. The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Corporate Tax Act is generally amended every year to ensure that Alberta maintains a fair, equitable, and competitive tax regime. The legislation will introduce a relieving provision into the Alberta royalty tax credit program this year. The provision ensures that participants in certain financing arrangements are not denied benefits in situations where wells were disposed of on rig release dates rather than finish drilling dates.

Also, in 2008 the federal government implemented new rules allowing corporations to report in the functional currencies in which they conduct their day-to-day affairs as long as they were in U.S., Australian dollars, the euro, or the British pound. For ease of administration Alberta will also adopt functional currency reporting. Amendments in this bill will require functional currency reporters to calculate their Alberta taxes payable in Canadian dollars using the average exchange rate for the year rather than the spot rate on the payment due dates as provided under federal legislation. This approach does not add any administrative burden and has the added benefit of retaining a relationship between Alberta's tax rate of 10 per cent and taxes payable in Canadian dollars.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, some issues remained outstanding from last year's introduction of the scientific research and experimental development credit. These amendments will address and provide additional certainty for taxpayers and company and government officials administering the credit.

Lastly, the other proposals largely correct technical deficiencies in parallel federal measures.

Thank you. With that, I would move that we adjourn debate on second reading of Bill 37.

Tourism Levy Amendment Act, 2009

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance and Enterprise.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to move second reading of the Tourism Levy Amendment Act, 2009.

I would ask my colleague the proponent of this bill, the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne, to speak to this bill, please.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just to refresh everyone's memory, Alberta imposes a 4 per cent levy on short-term accommodations like hotel rooms. As MLAs we've all travelled through our constituencies enough to see this charge on our bills, and there are a few issues about what is subject to the levy. This amendment act is meant to clarify the situation.

It used to be that when you pay for your room, you pay cash or you pay by credit card. Nowadays you can use reward points like air miles to pay for your room. This practice has brought with it some complications. How do you apply the 4 per cent levy on accommodations paid through reward points, Mr. Speaker? Currently it isn't clear, and the practices aren't consistent. That's why the industry has taken a look at the issue and asked us to come up with a fair and consistent approach, and we've done that.

When a person uses their reward points to book a room, the company operating the reward point program may pay the accommodation provider a certain amount of money. In other cases the operator doesn't receive money for a room booked with reward points. So this legislation aims to clarify what is subject to the tourism levy and make sure that the practices are consistent throughout the province.

In a nutshell, if the operator is paid for the accommodations, then the province of Alberta expects to be paid the 4 per cent levy. If the operator is providing the accommodations out of their pocket and is not being paid and the room is complimentary, we don't expect to get paid either.

As well, deposits and cancellations: the same approach, Mr. Speaker. You know, if the operator gets a deposit or a cancellation, you cancel the room, and you get a refund. We don't expect to have the 4 per cent tourism levy. But if they withhold your deposit or have a cancellation fee, we expect our pound of flesh as well. So that just kind of clarifies that situation.

Joint bank accounts is another issue that this legislation will deal with. If at any time the lodging provider fails to submit the tourism levy, then it's within the government's power to seize an operator's bank account. That's the existing process. The Tourism Levy Act, however, doesn't allow for seizing the bank accounts of the service provider when they are a joint owner. This amendment act does. It specifically proposes the ability to make proportionate amounts from a joint bank account of someone who has defaulted on paying the levy, not a big problem throughout the province, but we want to make sure that our acts are consistent, and this is something that is going to be done throughout the department.

Finally, there are a few other minor changes that are administrative in nature. The most efficient and effective way for Albertans' laws to work is to make sure that they are harmonious. These housekeeping changes do that by ensuring this legislation is consistent with all other acts in the province.

Thank you. I'd move that we adjourn debate on second reading.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Tobacco Tax Amendment Act, 2009

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance and Enterprise.

Ms Evans: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to move second reading of the Tobacco Tax Amendment Act, 2009.

I would ask with your permission to invite my colleague the proponent of this bill, the hon. Member for Lethbridge-West, to speak to the bill, please.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This bill implements the tobacco tax rate increase that was announced in Budget 2009. Proposed amendments will also strengthen the tobacco tax framework and support the province's safe communities initiative.

By way of background, the act imposes a tax on tobacco purchased in Alberta. It also prohibits various activities and requires industry participants to register in order to import or sell tobacco in Alberta. Amendments are needed as the current Tobacco Tax Act does not effectively prohibit unwanted activity, and prosecutions are becoming difficult. To help ensure that tax is properly paid and only legitimate participants are involved in the industry, amendments strengthen prohibitions and clarify their application.

The bill also broadens seizure powers and adds the ability to seize joint bank accounts in proportion to ownership for those in default. To be comparable to other jurisdictions, fines are doubled and civil penalties tripled for unlawful possession for sale of tax-free tobacco or tobacco on which tax has not been paid. A late filing penalty for tax collectors will be imposed. Changes also enhance requirements for tax collectors and make reporting obligations more transparent.

In summary, these proposed amendments raise the tobacco tax rates, clarify prohibitions, and make enforcement more effective and efficient. In addition, providing more serious penalties will act as a greater deterrent to prohibit activities. I urge all members in this Assembly to give their support to Bill 39.

Thank you. With that, I would move that we adjourn debate on Bill 39.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2009

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure to rise today to move second reading of Bill 40, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2009.

I want to thank the hon. Minister of Finance and Enterprise for the opportunity of sponsoring this bill. I'm pleased to review for the benefit of the hon. members the proposed changes to the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act. It's not a terribly complicated bill, and I'm pleased to say that it's one tax measure which I believe I actually understand, if not the arithmetic calculations then at least the principles underlying the changes.

The proposed amendments will accomplish two objectives. First, they will ensure that Alberta's dividend tax credit is administered in accordance with existing Alberta government policy. Secondly, they will align the eligibility for tuition credit for students to reflect the way that our tuition credits for foreign students are currently administered in Alberta.

First, dealing with the dividend tax credit, the legislation is being changed to ensure that Alberta's dividend tax credit will be consistent with the changes in the federal legislation. The proposed amendment will set Alberta's dividend tax credit rate for eligible dividends to be taxed at the corporate rate of 10 per cent for 2009 and for subsequent years. As an example, if a person has $1,000 worth of income from dividends, the policy is that no personal tax is payable on that same $1,000 of income. The rationale is that the income has already been taxed in the hands of the corporation, and therefore to avoid double taxation, the individual receiving such dividend income receives a dividend tax credit. As hon. members are aware, Alberta's corporate tax rate is 10 per cent, and our personal tax rate is 10 per cent. Therefore, the dividend tax credit should be 10 per cent to reflect the corporate tax already assessed on those funds.

In calculating the amount of the provincial tax credit, there's reference to a section in the federal Income Tax Act. Mr. Speaker, under the federal Conservative government the gross-up factor applicable to federal dividend income is going down to reflect reductions to the federal corporate tax rate. So adjustment of the formula in our act is required to ensure that Alberta's dividend tax credit, which is calculated based on the federal gross-up, does not also go down. The numerical ratios which are set out in section 2 of the bill reflect the adjustments necessary to maintain the status quo as to calculating Alberta's dividend tax credit. If we did not adjust the formulae in our tax act, we would in effect be double-taxing Albertans on a portion of their dividend income. In other words, the ratio set forth will ensure that for the 2009 through 2012 tax years Alberta's personal and corporate tax systems are integrated with the federal tax act, preventing dividends from being double-taxed.

Mr. Speaker, the second amendment entailed in this bill relates to the tuition credit. The proposed amendments will ensure that eligibility for the Alberta tuition credit parallels eligibility for the federal tuition credit. This is required under the Alberta-Canada tax collection agreement. Section 41(1) of the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act is being amended to delete reference to section 15. To bring the legislation into conformity with present policy and with the way that the Canada Revenue Agency is administering tuition credits presently, we need to make this change. The objective of the change is to ensure that one does not have to obtain 90 per cent plus of their income – and the tax act actually says “all or substantially all” of one's income – from sources in Canada in order to claim tuition credit. As I stated, this amendment to policy is required under the tax collection agreement between Canada and Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, I would urge all hon. members to support the passage of Bill 40 and at this juncture would move adjournment of debate on the bill.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Protection for Persons in Care Act

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to move second reading of Bill 41, the Protection for Persons in Care Act.

I'd like to thank the hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports for allowing me to bring this bill before the Legislature on her behalf. I want to acknowledge her strong support of the legislation and her interest in protecting those in our care facilities.

The Protection for Persons in Care Act, Mr. Speaker, is an important piece of legislation. It's meant to enhance safeguards and improve the prevention of abuse of adults who receive government-funded care or support services. The act was first proclaimed in 1998, and after more than 10 years of experience with this act, which I would note was first introduced as a private member's bill, we know that more can be done to promote the prevention of abuse and to strengthen our response to the abuse complaints.

There has been extensive public consultation regarding these amendments, which first came under legislative review in 2002. At that time Albertans told us to give the act more teeth, to make people more accountable for their actions, and to do more to deter abuse from happening in the first place. I also conducted a further review in 2006, including consultations with stakeholders most affected by the act. Based on these reviews, the act has been rewritten as Bill 41.

Overall, the protection of clients from abuse will be enhanced by improving prevention, monitoring, and follow-up when abuse has been reported. Some of the key changes to the act include expanding the scope of the act to apply to broader groups of clients receiving care and support services, such as individuals receiving home care services and those in mental health facilities; changing the definition of abuse so that it is not defined by intent but focuses on the act or omission by a service provider which causes harm to the client; and ensuring that there is a fair and unbiased process to address complaints by enhancing administrative fairness practices, including written notification, capacity to respond to allegations, and establishing an appeal mechanism.

Mr. Speaker, I would urge all hon. members to support the passing of Bill 41, the Protection for Persons in Care Act, and at this juncture I move adjournment of debate on this bill.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Gaming and Liquor Amendment Act, 2009

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Making Alberta communities safer is one of this government's key priorities. Albertans want and deserve the freedom to enjoy a night at a bar or nightclub without fear of violence breaking out and innocent bystanders being hurt. Two key amendments in Bill 42 will help prevent liquor-related and gang violence in bars and nightclubs.

Under these new amendments police would have the ability to identify and remove suspected gang members and their associates before an offence is committed. Mr. Speaker, the presence of these kinds of individuals is a danger to the safety of others. We understand there could be some concern that those powers could violate an individual's right to freedom of movement. However, this proposed amendment was given a thorough legal review, including a review by the Privacy Commissioner, and the powers being proposed are limited and specific to provide the police with the ability to address known problem patrons. Ultimately, we believe that the safety of law-abiding Albertans should be the priority, and if it makes it a little more inconvenient for gang members and their associates to conduct their shady rendezvous, so be it. I and this government will take the side of keeping Albertans safe.

Another proposed amendment would give bar operators a tool to deal with problem patrons. They would have the authority to collect, use, and share limited personal information with other licensees and the police. This limited information would be names, birthdates, and depending on the system used, photographs of the patron may be taken. Licensees would not have access to addresses, phone numbers, or driver's licence numbers. Because the collection, use, and disclosure of personal information will be contained in the Gaming and Liquor Act, the provisions of FOIP and PIPA will not apply. The idea behind these proposed amendments will allow police and licensees to work together to keep individuals who don't respect the law as well as gang members and those with ties to criminal organizations out of bars and lounges. For example, the police and licensees could agree that if a licensee identifies a person who poses a danger to patrons or the order of the operation of the business, the licensee may call the police. When the police arrive, they'll confirm the identity of the individual and remove that person from the premises.

There are several other proposed amendments to the Gaming and Liquor Act that are housekeeping in nature. These changes are designed to enhance the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission's governance practices and ensure that the act remains relevant given changes in technology in the business environment.

Mr. Speaker, liquor related violence is a community problem that needs a community solution, and these amendments have received the support of Alberta's police chiefs and bar operators. The presence of people who don't respect the law and those who are involved in organized crime in bars has grown in recent years, and violent incidents in these establishments is on the rise. Staff and bar owners say that when they go to work, they hear threats or sometimes have to break up fights in and outside their establishments. Dealing with these kinds of situations day in and day out has drastically increased the risk for anyone who wants to work in the hospitality industry.

These proposed amendments will bring police and businesses together in an effort to alleviate criminal activities and undesirable behaviour. This will be beneficial for the promotion of public safety and the orderly operation of licensed premises across the province.

I look forward to the debate and receiving the support of the members for proceeding with this bill.

Mr. Speaker, with that I move to adjourn debate. Thank you.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

3:40 Government Bills and Orders
 Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I would like to call the committee to order.

Land Assembly Project Area Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I want to briefly summarize where we're at with Bill 19. Very early on in the process the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar tried to provide both the government and Albertans in general an opportunity to have the discussions, participate in public forums, do the consultation, work collaboratively with Alberta landowners, whether they be rural or urban. Unfortunately, the notion of sending the bill to committee, which was among the first amendments provided, was not accepted by this government, so we see Bill 19 now in its Committee of the Whole stage.

Both the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar and the hon. members of the third party, specifically the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, attempted to bring out concerns with regard to the legality of the bill. We participated in a discussion on the difference between, for example, enjoining and arresting. It was pointed out that enjoining basically prevented individuals from following through on concerns they had with regard to their land being expropriated. They were basically rendered silent because they were not having an opportunity to participate further in hearings to argue their case. It was simply a circumstance where the decision had been made and they were out of luck. Their land was going to be taken.

We discussed a series of possibilities which would try and make a flawed piece of legislation at least to a degree more palatable and less subject to court challenges, as has been the case to date, but unfortunately that hasn't occurred. The last time I had an opportunity to talk in Committee of the Whole on Bill 19, the Land Assembly Project Area Act, I used the suggestion that this Bill 19 was putting the cart before the horse. I referred specifically to how badly Alberta needs a land-use framework act. We're still at least two years away from that act even being drawn up or presented to this House for further discussion, yet while we wait, numerous activities are occurring throughout the province, many of which are going to be very hard to reclaim or restore.

Despite former Environment minister Lorne Taylor's best intentions with water for life and the idea of scientific knowledge and the need to locate and get a sense of the size of our water resources so that we could then move ahead in protecting them, very little has taken place. Approximately a year and a half ago the government did provide I believe the figure was $21 million toward water protection and water mapping. There has been a degree of progress on the mapping of aquifers, but we are still not at the point where we can protect underground resources when we're not sure where they exist.

In terms of expropriation or determining what activities go ahead, for example, members of the Pekisko Group – and, you know, that included Ian Tyson, a landowner west of Longview – a number of individuals in that Longview area moving down to the Chain Lakes, moving along to the Livingstone Range, are very concerned about how the land under Bill 19 will potentially be used. Therefore, we need to put Bill 19, the Land Assembly Project Area Act, in sort of a cumulative perspective as part of the land-use framework.

Now, hopefully, somewhere in connection with Bill 19 there is a type of map that indicates where projected growth, projected development is likely to occur, say, five, 10, 15, 20 years out. I have had a chance to be at a number of presentations on where the effects of current progress if unaltered might lead. The map kind of indicated where historical development had occurred, and it indicated that if development were to continue at the current pace, this was what the map would look like. It was based on progress to date and, obviously, made certain assumptions. It did not draw conclusions, but it was extremely interesting.

I would hope, as I say, that in connection with Bill 19 the government would sort of lay out this map on a table and say to Albertans, “Here, for example, are two proposed routes for the rapid-speed rail,” that hopefully will come sooner rather than later. “Here are proposed routes for utility corridors. Here is the west route from Lake Wabamun. Here’s the east route. Here are the advantages and disadvantages of the two routes.” They would clearly lay out, for example, where the expansions on the Canamex highway would occur that have had a very determinant factor on southern Alberta, especially, obviously, between Lethbridge and the American border, Coutts crossing and so on.

If we had this tentative plan as part of the land-use framework in connection with Bill 19, I think it would take away a lot of the worries that landowners have. If it had any degree of accuracy, if the projections had validity, if there was scientific background to them, then Albertans could say: “Well, this land appears to be stable. There don’t appear to be any particular land-use changes that the government is considering. Therefore, I can go ahead with whatever it is on my land that I wish to do that, obviously, falls within provincial regulations.” But in failing to have that projection map, it leaves Albertans in a concerned state.

Now, with regard to Bill 19, the Land Assembly Project Area Act, as I say, I cannot separate the two from the land-use framework because they both deal with how land is going to be used and what degree of protection it will receive. The whole idea of watershed protection as a priority I believe has to be taken into account, whether we’re through Bill 19 proposing a highway, whether we’re proposing a utility corridor. For whatever it is that is going to leave a large footprint, whether it’s the direction a pipeline takes, there has to be a collaborative process beginning with the government saying that the number one priority is the protection of our water. From that, obviously, the protection of our air and the way we acquire the land and what we do with that land and how long we freeze that land in Bill 19 will then play out in kind of a natural order.

We have to start with, as I say, priority uses, watershed protection, river crossings, mapping the aquifers. We don’t want to develop a system, when we’re creating what will hopefully be a public good, from some kind of lack of scientific knowledge. As we proceed with Bill 19, it’s extremely important that the greatest amount of input from Albertans is provided. We haven’t reached that point, but I know, hon. chair, that there are other people who have concerns or who maybe can provide assurances. Therefore, I will sit down at this point and offer them the opportunity to provide those assurances or express their concerns.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Advanced Ed. and Technology.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I wanted to just get on record a couple of things. The first thing I wanted to get on record was a clarification of something that I noticed in Hansard from last Thursday, I believe it was, when the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar had been waxing, well, on and on for awhile there and talking about a map that supposedly I might have in my possession as it related to Bill 19. It had no relationship to Bill 19, but somehow he suggested that I might have a map as it related to where this new corridor might go. It’s absolutely false, and I just wanted to make sure that constituents who read Hansard, as I’m sure some do, would not get that impression.

I also wanted to say, Mr. Chairman, that with the amendments in this bill as it’s now been amended, the concerns of the people in my constituency have been eased, and I support this bill a hundred per cent.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I’d just like to add my comments at the committee stage on this bill. I appreciate the comments of my hon. colleague from Calgary-Varsity, who went before and who really laid out sort of a very good synopsis of where we need to go in this province and a real devotion to understanding our landscape and our priorities as a province and our water and our wind and our more ecological resources as we go forward.

Really, what I appreciated most was that it does appear that we have a bit of a cart-before-the-horse scenario here in that Bill 19, what we’re going forward on, appears to be going before, really, a land-use framework albeit we are seeming to go down that path right now with at least the legal framework to allowing the land-use framework to come into play again some two years down the road. I guess that if all things work out the way we hope they do on a land-use framework, in two years this will come into play and give some guidance and some direction as to how the regional corridors are developed, on their interworkings with both the city and the surrounding towns and all the other jurisdictions, and, I guess, how we’re going to utilize the water in all these areas comes into play.

Bill 19 sort of supercedes that, and it really, I guess, stresses the fact that we should have been on this land-use framework about 10 years ago, like many of the other jurisdictions out there. Jurisdictions in both Canada and the United States have moved at a much more rapid speed on getting a land-use framework out there. Now, it would be of great assistance to have a land-use framework to enable something like Bill 19 to travel more smoothly and to allow people to have some direction as to where the province is going instead of having this come up without the mechanisms in place for people to understand the direction that this government is going.

Moving on from that, I do note that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar did provide numerous amendments that would have given people a chance for more input. There was a feeling amongst many communities, mostly in rural jurisdictions of this province, that their voice wasn’t being heard. By having the amendment go to committee, it would have been an opportunity for us to field some more voices for democracy to do its thing and maybe some more time to get the information out to people or maybe to bring the bill together in a little more concise fashion. That would have alleviated many more concerns from people. That’s why we set up the committees: to hopefully allow for democracy to proceed more smoothly, to allow for some contentious bills to be decided, debated, discussed, to hear from public groups, and to go forward.

For instance, last summer we discussed in committee a bill regarding weeds. You know, we heard from the community and many of the rural towns and the rural farmers and many of the other people who were more directly affected by weeds, and they gave us their input as to how these weeds should be dealt with both in terms of a fining mechanism and in terms of how many days to wait before people would receive notification of their fines. It was really quite detailed, and really I learned a lot about weeds. I'm sure that I would have learned a lot about Bill 19 and the reasons for it and all that stuff if we would have gone to committee stage with Bill 19. More importantly, not only would I have learned a lot, but the fact is that the people teaching me would have been the citizens of Alberta: what their experience is and what they wanted and what they would have liked to have seen out of Bill 19.

I could go on and comment about other amendments, but I won't. You know, we will need electricity corridors. There is no doubt about it. But the simple fact is that we are seen to do things, again, backwards here – and that's starting with the land-use framework and moving more fluidly to Bill 19 – going in this direction.

Nevertheless, those are my comments. I look forward to the province getting a land-use framework in place, sooner rather than later, that can hopefully implement the direction our province takes. Actually, a document I read that I think was released in January of 2008 or somewhere around there recognized that Alberta was at a tipping point, that we're going to have to really evaluate what goes forward on our land in terms of business opportunities as well as the development of citizens, how they participate with the land, how our agricultural community is going to go forward, how wildlife reserve areas are going to be able to be, and all that sort of stuff.

Anyway, those are my comments, and I thank you for allowing me to comment today at the committee stage.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chair. I have had the opportunity to speak to this before, but I will take this opportunity again. I think the fact that, if I'm correct, this is the third week that we're talking about this bill should probably tell us something: that it probably should have gone back to committee. Certainly, I still am hearing from farmers and, actually, other landowners, those types of small acreage landowners, who still are very much afraid of this bill and feel that it really did require more public input and, perhaps, having gone to committee. That wasn't what they suggested, but what I'm saying is that had it gone to committee, we would have eliminated, perhaps, some of the people that have been contacted on this. It shouldn't have just been focus groups or sort of hand-picked groups but real people that are really involved.

Had it gone to committee, of course, we would have known that it would have all been Hansarded, it would have all been recorded, and it would have been open for anyone to actually understand some of the dialogue and discussion that had gone on.

Bill 19, of course, is really a follow-up and in many ways is tied to Bill 46, which in itself was a very controversial bill. Despite the fact that it was passed, there are still many people that understand and are opposed to it, opposed to what they were trying to do.

As has been said many times, the fact that we have to get utility corridors, transportation corridors, and all of those is certainly a given. I don't think that that's the question here today. What I've said many times in this House I'll say again, that quite often what happens with bills from this government is that it's not necessarily what they're trying to do; it's how they try to do it. It more often is very – what's the word? – draconian I think was used by the minister of sustainable resources, and that will probably do for now. It really can be overbearing.

It might have been the goal of Bill 19 that the actual document is more restrictive than would appear to be required, and I think that still holds true. The sections related to enforcement orders and the injunction regarding the commission of offences are far stricter than really are necessary. Indeed, some sections such as 12(1) – and that is not one that was changed by the government amendments, which, of course, have passed – allow an injunction on the basis of suspicion of protest or action forbidden by one of the many regulatory powers in the bill, suggestive of a government that is afraid of almost any form of opposition. It seems to not be welcomed, and when it is, it is often put down, is degraded and a degradation of the people that actually want to honestly come forward and make a complaint or ask to have something changed.

The significant failings of the bill are that the committee – I'm sorry; I'm back to the committee – really should be able to study the bill and involve the public. What I had said before is that the public, to me, are those that could well be directly affected. Often big organizations are known to not have listened to their actual membership, and what comes through the presidency sometimes of large boards isn't really necessarily what the members of a particular group want.

Many of the discussions about this bill I don't think were put to a ballot in terms of what some of the people in these groups actually thought. I've certainly had people phone me and say that these are their concerns, but they don't want me to use their name because of perhaps a fear that something later on would be held against them, which I think is a pretty sad state of affairs when we have to say things like that.

There's no doubt that we need, as I've said, the transportation corridors, and we have to plan for growth and development. Certainly, I believe I heard yesterday in a budget discussion that in this province we are looking at 2 per cent growth for the next two years, which is fairly significant in a province that is already struggling to keep up with the growth that we've had over the last 10 years. We really have to be looking at the future, but I think what we should be looking at – and I'm going off on a little bit of a tangent here – is public transport. We're looking at, certainly, high-speed rail. I for one certainly support that, but I think we have to start those discussions quicker and get on with it.

One of the things we keep looking at is road transportation. I drive highway 2 all the time, and I can be very clear when I say that it's absolutely obsolete. We need four lanes on each side of the divide on that highway. There's a tremendous amount of traffic. Some of the traffic is trucks. I'm not trying to knock off the trucking industry, but a lot of those could be sent on high-speed rail. High-speed rail does do freight, certainly, in Europe as well as just moving people.

There are things that we should be looking at, and this bill is necessary so that we can look at those things and put that land aside. We had proposed amendments to introduce time limits and limits on the scope of the project area orders and to weaken some of the sections on offences and enforcement under the bill, and as we all know, those weren't successful. Actually, a number of those amendments were very good amendments, and I'm sorry that it's so confrontational that they probably weren't given the consideration that they actually deserved.

One of the other problems. Again, it was tried to bring this up in an amendment. It sets out the criteria that public projects must meet. They will be transportation corridors, utility corridors in the main, but the bill also provides for water management as well as any project that the Lieutenant Governor in Council may call a public project. Now, this is, in my mind, a problem and one that should be raised. What's the point of the immediately preceding criteria when the fourth, which is (d), simply states that a public project is any project the government calls a public project. There's no legislative framework. It's simply a ministerial fiat.

Again, we're back to the fact – and this was discussed – that I think there is a flaw in the way this House operates, actually, in that before we even vote on a bill, we are not allowed to see the regulations. The regulations can be changed, so to speak, in the backroom. When we say Lieutenant Governor in Council, of course, we know that we mean the cabinet, but there are many people out there that don't realize that's what it is.

There's also a key section. It requires the Lieutenant Governor in Council to undertake a plan for the project, to make that plan public, and to notify and consult with the landowners in the project area. Quite an extent is necessary in each of these requirements but would be later determined by regulations. If a landowner is going to be notified about something going across his property and he wants to get the support of the people around him, it's a lot of work that he has to do to be able to notify his neighbours of what's going on, instead of having a very, very public notice that should be put in all the newspapers. In fact, it probably could be put on other websites, Facebook, whatever else is being used out there.

I think we know that sometimes newspaper readership actually can be limited, which is a shame because some of the good information that really should be getting out is not getting out, or people aren't reading it, and by the time it's twittered and tweeted and whatever those other things are, it really has been watered down to often not having very good information in it. It often comes down to opinions of people who really haven't the proper information to make those opinions.

There is a key section that is set up for later weak regulations, allowing the government to offer merely nominal consultation, planning, and notification. As I've said, it should be a very, very broad notification. It shouldn't just be a small group of people involved. Every time our land in Alberta is adjusted or changed in some way, it really does affect all Albertans. It directly affects the farmers that own the land, but it truly affects all Albertans in the long run. When we look at the future, it definitely affects all Albertans.

The government can fulfill the bill's requirements but not actually undertake anything meaningful. What kind of protection does this section provide the landowners? If the government won't state what kind of consultation and planning is required and, instead, later again puts it through regulations, how can it claim to be protecting the landowners' rights?

The notwithstanding clause allows the Lieutenant Governor in Council to make regulations relating to the project area that apply regardless of other legal and regulatory provisions. I think that this should be very carefully used because if they can override legal and regulatory provisions just by an order in council, which we know is in the backroom and not often brought out for public view or public discussion – this is something that is causing the people who are calling me to say: "What's going on here? What rights are we losing here in this province? Is this just a slippery slope to other uses and what could well be misuse by a government that has power through regulations?"

In section 3(1)(a) and (b), relating to the project area, they include controlling the use, development, and occupation of the land in the project area, but it also gives the minister the ability to exempt land that they choose from these restrictions. That is a very serious power. The minister is the arbitrator of landowners' activities. How will these decisions be made? Again, we're assuming they are being made by regulation. Doesn't this lead to an impression that landowners have to be nice to the minister because of the power over land use that the minister holds? These words that I've just said are being reiterated to me on the telephone. They're saying that, yes, they are afraid to speak out and would have preferred to be able to speak out in a committee as opposed to having a third party, someone like me, repeat what they've said. They wanted it out in the open, which would have been a committee.

They are talking about it requiring the minister to send notice to the chief administrative officer of affected municipalities and to the provincial registrar and to the last address of any person with land titles in the project area. It requires that similar notice of amendments to project area orders be sent out, and it requires similar notice of amendments to regulations governing the project area orders. It ensures that while the notice is required, it isn't in any way necessary for the regulations to have impact. In other words, even if no notice is given, everything can still go ahead. This is a problem and certainly, I know, has been discussed before, but I think it is worthy of being talked about again.

What is the point of having the notice if it isn't integral to the process? It shows that the government isn't really respecting the landowners. If they cared, then notification would be an entirely necessary part of the deal, and failure to notify would cause the project itself to fail or to at least go back to the drawing board until everyone who is involved is aware and has the ability to sit at the table to voice their concerns. The notification process isn't necessarily particularly difficult. Ultimately, it's a sign that the government doesn't really respect that landowners should be given notification in a very, very public way.

We were proposing an amendment. Right now it allows the minister to change enforcement orders by amending, adding, and deleting terms or conditions. We did propose an amendment to this section to cut out the section that the minister can amend or add conditions. It is an awful lot of power in one minister's hands. It allows additional penalties and powers outside of the process that has been set up previously. We think that it's unfair to landowners. Certainly, there are many landowners that also feel it's unfair; in fact, fear for this kind of power that should they step out of line, the enforcement police, so to speak, could move in on their property. People who have always lived on the land and have respected and honoured their ancestors, many people who've been three generations on this land, respect their privacy, respect their independence. This is the main thing that they feel that they're losing with this bill.

The other thing that would go along with that is that it allows the minister to apply to the Court of Queen's Bench for an injunction if it appears "that a person has done, is doing or is about to do any act or thing constituting or directed toward the commission of an offence under this Act." We think that the marked section is extremely problematic. Again, we did put in an amendment to pull that part. It is an awful lot of power in any minister's hands to be able to impose a penalty based on a suspicion. I believe that this is a flawed part of this bill. I think it's very heavy-handed. I think that if things are handled properly, it should never come to this sort of an action that would be required by a government on its own citizens.

The government does have a job to get these sorts of utility corridors. That is their job. However, they also should be of the people and for the people. I think that many of the people are feeling that the heavy-handedness is taking away the fact that the government is for them. We should be protecting the people. We should be protecting all of the people. But in protecting the people and coming forward with the utility corridors that we need for the good of all, we still have to respect the people who will be directly impacted for the good of all.

We've certainly seen roads. This province is just over a hundred years old. We've gone from native pony tracks to wagon wheel tracks to sort of superhighways, if highway 2 could count as a superhighway, over just a period of a hundred years. We can see how quickly our society is evolving. As I've said before, 2 per cent growth in two years is fairly substantial to be putting on our roads.

Certainly, we have to do these things. Certainly, we have to think in the future. However, I think we also do have to have the deep respect for the people that truly are this province who we the government, sitting in this House, were elected to protect. We were elected to bring their thoughts to this House. We were elected to make sure that what we do is good for all but that it really is also good for the person that is directly involved and will be directly affected by any moves that are for the public good.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to comment? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Not to prolong this much further, but what's missing with Bill 19, as was referred to with the prior bill, Bill 46, by the Member for Lethbridge-East, is consultation. That is what is absolutely necessary if we're going to go forward. The government has not only the right but the responsibility of moving forward on projects that are of benefit to the entire province, but in that moving forward, the province has to strike a balance. The way that balance can be achieved in Bill 19 or bills that follow with regard to land use is through the consultation process. We need to take this directly to Albertans and involve their input.

All members of our caucus and members of the NDP caucus have provided examples of concerns that people have raised. The newspapers, the media have been full of concerns. Unless these concerns are addressed and the value of these concerns is addressed in Bill 19, then this stigma of government power and influence and regulatory ability to change and turn a potentially innocent concern into a condemnation – unless we take those into account, we cannot expect Albertans to be onside with this piece of legislation or any other land-use designation legislation. So it's extremely important that we get this right, and at this point, unfortunately, that hasn't occurred.

I am hoping that the government may in the third reading, which we will be approaching shortly, have further amendments that will make this, as I say, flawed piece of legislation fly. If it proceeds as it currently is amended, then I'm afraid that we can expect the Alberta taxpayer to be on the hook for thousands if not millions of dollars in court costs because simply saying, "We want it; we need it" and then creating a series of laws to make expropriation easier rather than fair is going to be subject to dispute.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chair, for providing the opportunities to debate and express concerns in Committee of the Whole over Bill 19. I firmly believe that we need to do better if this province is going to progress.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Are you ready for the question on Bill 19, the Land Assembly Project Area Act?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 19 as amended agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

Protection of Children Abusing Drugs Amendment Act, 2009

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments or questions or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. The concern that I still have that I tried to address through an amendment is that after the 10-day period what treatment possibilities are there for these children that either voluntarily or through the court procedures have been taken into custody because of their addictions? I don't think there's a single member within this House who doesn't want what's best for children trying to break their addictions, but if we simply have a bill that is a holding bill that manages to keep kids off the street for a period of 10 days and if we have no place then to direct the children after that, then what's the point? If anything, it's injurious to the children and to their parents to give them a false sense of hope. Having recognized their addiction problem and having begun the preliminary process of dealing with their addiction, the program comes to an abrupt end.

I'm pleased, Mr. Chair, that we're in committee because I am looking forward to the opportunity to hear from the hon. mover of the bill what we can expect after the 10-day period. Do we, in fact, within the province have sufficient treatment beds in accredited facilities with individuals whose education provides them with the understanding and the background to deal with the addictions that the children are facing? Now, I realize that to provide counselling you don't have to have a doctorate, you don't necessarily have to have a master's, but you do have to have some type of relevant education beyond just simple field experience. We know that these children are going to need to be kept in custody – we call it protective custody – for some period of time.

I had a very interesting discussion this past Friday with a psychologist who explained that addiction, whether it be alcohol or drugs, is in some cases a predisposed genetic circumstance where some people might try a particular drug or they might consume a number of glasses of alcohol but not be adversely affected or almost instantly addicted, but the biological makeup of other peoples' brains predisposes them to addiction. For these people the 10-day period would not be sufficient for them to, you know, as we see portrayed in movies, break the habit or sweat it out or go through the bends or whatever other terminology you want to use in terms of trying to overcome their addiction.

I am hoping, as I say, that any member in this House who is more familiar with addictions treatment than I am can lay out, for example, how the PCHAD will direct us to a longer term addictions treatment. I know that we have nurses, or in their former lives nurses, and individuals with that type of background. I am hoping that somebody can provide assurances that once we have taken these children into our temporary custody as Bill 6, the Protection of Children Abusing Drugs Amendment Act, 2009, from a five-day period to a 10-day period – I'm really looking for someone to give me hope that we have sufficient facilities within this province, with beds at the ready, to break this addiction cycle that is so detrimental.

When we look at what happened at West Edmonton Mall and the tragic death of a young, basically junior high school student or possibly just grade 10, age 14, this wasn't a case of addictions as Bill 6 is referring to, but it was drug related, and Bill 6 is trying to break that relationship between addiction and youth.

I will take my seat, Mr. Chair, knowing that this is committee. I'm hoping that questions I've raised will be answered so that I can have faith that Bill 6 is just the beginning of a longer term process of addiction treatment.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It gives me a great deal of pleasure to stand up and try once again to answer the questions from the hon. member in regard to some of the things that he's brought up. I want to remind the hon. member that Bill 6, first of all, is a first in Canada. It's been a very, very successful bill. It was brought forward originally by the Member for Red Deer-South. All of the amendments that have been brought forward in this legislation are amendments that were based on the staff that are working with these children, on the children themselves, which I think is absolutely fascinating, and the families that are dealing with these addicted children.

The 10 days that we're talking about in this particular piece of legislation, Mr. Chairman, are for detoxification and stabilization of these children. What happens from there, after that, is based on the wonderful people that work with these children, AADAC counsellors that are dealing with children and who know how to deal with children with addictions. It could be a voluntary component that they put these kids in. They could go back to the courts and have another five days to detoxify or stabilize these children.

I think that what we're looking at here, Mr. Chairman, is a unique piece of legislation. Amendments on the floor at this particular moment are all based on the professionals that work with these children.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Yeah. Well, I appreciate the chair giving me the opportunity to speak, and I also appreciate the comments of the hon. member from the government side who gave some of those answers. I do really want to actually commend the government on having brought this forward and, again, extending the timeline from five to 10 days, with the opportunity of going back for an extra five days. I believe that the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity would agree that this is a good first step.

Nevertheless, despite the assurances of the hon. member, what I think we're more getting at here is that we're hoping there is an AADAC counsellor available for these people and that there is some aftercare provided for both the family and the teenager. If there is going to be that, if that is what is available, I'm very happy to hear that.

I guess another thing we've been told or led to believe – not led to believe; I believe it's true. We have a crisis when it comes to spaces for addictions counselling. Are there going to be guaranteed spaces for these people coming out of a 15-day treatment sentence when they have become addicted to, say, harder type drugs that need longer treatment times?

I know that I for one have watched on Monday nights this show called Intervention on I think it's channel 25. I can't remember. I'm not a regular viewer. That's Monday night RAW, so I switch back and forth between wrestling and the Intervention program. [interjections] I'm kidding. I'm kidding. I'm amusing myself a little bit here.

Anyway, back to that addiction thing. They do have the program on, and they're in addiction recovery for 30, 60, and 90 days. Right here we have an addiction counselling session that is going to go on for 10 days and then possibly another five. Clearly, although this is a great first step, hopefully for some of the people, because they're young and maybe they haven't been addicted that long, they are able then with their parents' help, with AADAC counsellors and all that, to move on with their lives and proceed from there.

What I think we're looking for is more of an assurance that when people get out of this program and they need an additional bed, those beds are going to be earmarked, whether it's through the safe communities program, whether it's through the ministry of health or some other cross-ministry movement where addictions are going to be dealt with, that is going to guarantee that: "Hey, this person is getting out of here in a couple of days, and we need to have a bed ready for them. Will that be available?" That's the type of assurance we're looking for, that whole wraparound care provision that will hopefully be there. In case the parents are not, the youth and maybe their counsellors can arrange to get a longer term stay with a bed available if that is necessary should they be addicted to harder drugs. I believe that's all we're getting at.

Other than that, this is, again, a very good bill. I wasn't here when this bill was first announced, but I'm glad to see that Alberta was the first to introduce legislation like that. Let's keep building on that.

We know from the example brought out that drugs continue to be a difficult thing faced by many of the youth in our society. Again, just to reiterate, the strength and the potency of the drugs is much more than it was when I was in high school. They are no longer gateway drugs, more or less. Really, people just become addicted almost immediately upon their use. That being the case, we have to do even a more diligent job of having methods available for people to try and give themselves opportunity to set things right in their lives and find themselves a way off the drugs and the destructive path they've been on.

Those are my comments. I know it's very difficult for the government to be able to assure me that a bed will be available if necessary, but that's what we're looking for, that there's a wrap-around care provision. I think some of the answer was provided, but that's what we're looking for.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to comment? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I do appreciate the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek providing some clarification. We've gone to almost a bidding process: "Do I hear five? Do I hear 10? Now we're up to 15." We're talking 15 days. I freely admit that I don't have a medical background, but I don't believe the stabilization and detoxification process can necessarily be accomplished, whether it's within a 10-day or a 15-day period. Take the testing of Olympic athletes, for example. The residual effects show up months after the fact. The reality is that the drugs are still within the system, and the withdrawal process, even in some strict cases when you have different, less horrific drugs that you use as part of – methadone is the word I'm looking for, for example, for heroin treatment. Even when we have more medically appropriate drugs, it takes a long, long time to break that cycle of addiction.

Now, the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek also brought forward the terrific intent of the Member for Red Deer-North. We all or at least a number of us in this House remember how quickly we pushed through that piece of legislation. It's extremely important that the Member for Red Deer-North through her consultation process came up with the figure of 90 days. She felt that it would take 90 days of treatment to break the addiction cycle with crystal meth.

Again, I'm not a pharmacologist, and I don't have a medical background, but given the different types of drug cocktails that are out there and that have various degrees of addiction, crystal meth apparently is probably number one in terms of how quickly it develops a dependency and how quickly it can destroy a person's mental capacities. If we're simply using what I referred to earlier as a kind of catch-and-release and hope-for-the-best kind of approach, which Bill 6 is unfortunately limited to advocating, then, you know, we cannot as Albertans be overly proud of our innovative strategy when it stops so short of the extended treatment and care that's provided. To be truly innovative, we've got to see the end results.

I think Bill 6 is a wonderful beginning, but it doesn't go far enough. It does not guarantee that after 10 or 15 days the type of treatment that addicted adolescents require will be provided either in terms of the individuals providing the counselling or the infrastructure in which the counselling will occur. Again, I'm hoping that someone can clarify the fact that we have X number of facilities with X number of beds that are ready and waiting and Y number of programs for these addicted children to move to after their 10- or 15-day introduction to the program.

Thank you again, Mr. Chair, for allowing me to participate. I want to thank the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek for offering some words of clarification. As I say, specific examples and a kind of an accounting of what facilities we have prepared to take the next step would be much appreciated.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to comment? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I, too, would like to say that I believe that this is a good bill. It is a good first step. Certainly, the intent is – I guess I could use the word – noble because, really, it is working in the best interests of our children, who, of course, are addicted and cannot help themselves. Cognitive abilities are definitely strained when one is addicted.

The one thing that I would like to see is a time frame on an evaluation, a review of how this is working. I'd like it to go fairly in depth. I'd like real numbers, with different kinds of follow-ups after those 10 days. Did they get the bed? Did they get the support? I think we all know that 10 days is, really, absolutely nothing in terms of the fight against any kind of addiction. I'd like to see those real numbers and to actually follow up on how successful the different steps have been in being able to get the young kids off it. [interjection] I'm hearing from my hon. colleague from Calgary-Fish Creek that some of these numbers are available, and I would be most interested in looking at them.

One of the things that I think is really important is the fact that the parents are involved. The parents that are dealing with these situations often feel like they're talking to brick walls, and there are many, many tears. Parents, of course, have such an emotional attachment not only to the child but to the process. Often the emotions can get the best of both the children and the parents, and it's very difficult for the parents to be able to handle it. The help that they will get I think is very important. They have to be involved. It's saying that the parents will have to attend a mandatory information centre regarding PCHAD so that they're better informed of the programs before they can complete an application for a protection order.

Addictions hit all socioeconomic levels. It doesn't matter how educated the parents are, how they understand the process, how they understand what they're up against. It really doesn't matter when their emotions are involved. Often depending on the drugs these kids have used, of course, it can go almost overnight. Here's a kid that they never worried about. Here's a kid that was actually doing well in school, could well have been an athlete, and, boom, it hits them. Parents are totally at a loss on what to do.

Also, undereducated parents often are at a loss on what to do as well. Sometimes, particularly with the undereducated parents or even with the educated parents, the mom and dad are both working, and the kids sometimes get away from them because of the hours that they have to work. Again, it doesn't matter: educated or undereducated parents.

Sometimes the parents are actually users themselves. Certainly, they clearly aren't addicted. Often parents can be very functional users of drugs. Pot is one that would come to mind. So I think this is really forward-thinking that we're actually involving the parents and giving them the help that they need as well.

There was a news article on July 9, '07. A statistic was given, stating that almost 400 children had been sent to treatment and that at least 112 of them appealed, and 58 of the protection orders were overturned and that this translates to about 14.5 per cent of the protection orders being issued without enough basis to actually force the child into treatment. That's not how I would interpret that. I would have to see where the statistics came from and what the mandate was, you know, what they were really looking for because I think it's very, very sad that someone who has been given that opportunity to help turn their life around would appeal it.

Who's doing this appealing? Is it these kids who are on drugs? And if they're on drugs, they're either going up or going down. They're never really at that steady, in-between stage that could even remotely be considered a cognitive decision that would have any basis of a normal – perhaps that's not quite the right word – way of thinking. If you're going up or down on drugs, there is no way that your cognitive ability is at its best or how it should be.

The other question that has already been asked – and it's something that I'm very strong on – is on that 10 days. Okay. Fine. It's a good step, but it isn't even close to being enough. We really have to ensure that we have that backup support for these kids. We have to get them away from their friends, who will of course be more than delighted. We have to get them away from the teenage dealer, that is probably their classmate. We have to be able to identify how these kids got into the problem in the first place, which is a long psychological treatment.

We have to know who is giving them the drugs, what the atmosphere is that we do not want to send them back into so that they actually have a chance to be able to help themselves to understand that in the end, no matter what we do, no matter how much we support them, it's they that have to want to do it. Otherwise, it'll never happen. We can keep them in treatment. We can do all kinds of wonderful things. Until we can get through to their minds that they are the ones that have to want to do it and they are the ones that have to want to change, then it's very difficult to consider that the treatment has been a success.

I think all we have to do is think about if even as adults we are taken off a medication, we're not just taken off that medication right now. We are teetered off of that, and sometimes it can take as much as 30 days to be teetered off a medication that you have been on for a great deal of time. If you're on it every day, then you may take it only every second day, every third day, and so on until the end of the month. So it's quite clear. How many people have tried to come off coffee? Yes, you can come off that, but the effects are still there, certainly, after 10 days. How about coming off cigarettes? Just coming off booze certainly takes longer than the 10 days.

Another research statistic that is interesting is that it actually takes three months to really change a habit. Even the habit of doodling can take three months to change. A physical behaviour such as pointing takes three months to really ingrain as a change of physical habit that you would want to make. For instance, changing bed-times, sleep times, or awake times takes three months, actually, to get through, to make that exact change. Certainly, I'm supportive of this bill, but again I would like to of course see it go further.

The transportation of the child to the treatment facility, that sometimes the police could assist the guardians in the transportation: I'm not altogether sure, but I think that's a good thing. I think some kids who aren't really, really hard-core drug addicts and who have had brushes with the police before will get, hopefully, a police officer – certainly, many of the police officers I know of in Lethbridge and in some other areas are very cognizant. I think that many of our police officers today, particularly where they're dealing with these kids, know the difference between the hard-core addict and the kid that has a hope of actually getting through. They can actually create that good feeling between someone who is there to protect them and someone who is also an authority figure.

I do believe that good police officers – and I know we have many of them – who have children of their own really can relate to these kids. I know that I've certainly had conversations with some. The last thing they want to do is take some kid and throw him in the back of their car, that, of course, has the bars between them and the front seat. They want to be able to talk to these kids in the back seat of their car. They want to be able to connect with them. I know that police officers are in some ways no different than the nurses that I'm aware of.

Time is of the essence, and it's so important that somewhere along the line we give police officers and nurses somewhere on that bottom line that – you know what? – to treat people with dignity does take time. Yes, it's money. It's got to show up somewhere on a bottom line. We can't just have people saying: "You're going to go pick somebody up. It's going to take 10 minutes. You'd better get on with it." It's just not how it works when we have to give people respect.

Mr. Chair, I think I will take my seat at this point. Again, just to say that I really believe that 10 days is a good start, that I don't think it's enough, and how important that follow-up support is. The follow-up evaluations must be kept up. I'm glad to hear that there are some, but we must keep them up on a very timely basis and be able to follow these kids. I think I'd love to see a kid followed for at least a year – let's see how it really works – not just within a month after they've left the treatment.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to comment? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. One thing I've learned through 34 years of teaching is that you can't create parent profiles. You can't suggest – and the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East alluded to this – that drug addiction is upper class; it's white collar. Bill 6 recognizes, I believe, the fact that anybody's children can be addicted. It isn't necessarily that the parents are so busy with their double salaries or professions. It doesn't matter whether the parent is a stay-at-home mother. Despite the best intentions we have as parents or grandparents, kids can get sidetracked. With the best intentions that we have, sometimes we miss this.

Bill 6 is kind of like the safety net. It's the catch. It's the first attempt as a child is falling farther and farther, almost like an Alice-in-Wonderland scenario down the rabbit hole. In this case it's a hole of addiction. This is the first time that safety net reaches out and catches them. It holds them for, unfortunately, a limited amount of time. Bill 6 allows the safety net to last for 10 days, potentially 15 days, but at the end of that time the net starts to untangle. Unless we can guarantee that we have another net or somehow that we can strengthen this net that has temporarily caught the child and taken them out of the circumstance which led to their addiction, unless we can provide that assurance, then Bill 6 stops short of the intention of helping children to break their addictions.

The intention is great. We need the facilities, and we need the government funding commitments to follow through with these children. As the Member for Lethbridge-East indicated, we need to try and come up with whatever commonalities we can in terms of how effective the treatment program worked. We obviously want to repeat successes.

Therefore Bill 6 starts the process. It captures the child momentarily, but what do we do after Bill 6? Unfortunately, I don't see where we're headed after this piece of legislation. If three years down we extend the period to 20 days, I don't think it's going to capture the intent. We have to have a long-term commitment. Bill 6 begins it, but unfortunately it brings it to an abrupt end.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Why, thanks, Mr. Chair, for giving me an opportunity to speak on this again. I don't mean to belabour the point that's been made by both my hon. colleagues and me in this debate, but the more I listen, the more this becomes clear. If we look at what it really costs the health care system and society in terms of what, I guess, drugs play and crime plays and health plays in the future of people who have become addicted in their teens or earlier to drugs, it's substantial on all three fronts: on crime, on health, on those individuals' ability to take care of their own families later on in life.

I would like to reiterate that this bill is a great start, but with those things in focus I think we do need some sort of follow-up or to have some necessary things put into place to ensure that these children, hopefully, if their parents are around, are given opportunities to whatever it is that is going to make their transition from drug use easier, more accessible, more, I guess, tangible in terms of actually achieving that. Yarding them off the street and then putting them back into the exact same situation they were in or hoping that their parents then can manage the situation, I think may be naïve thinking at best.

I'm sure that this bill in the past can point to success stories – I have no doubt about that – where a person who has been looked after for these five to 10 days and now 15 days will go back to their old lives and will be able to successfully break away from drug addiction; however, I don't know if anyone has done studies or numbers on it following what this bill has done. I'd hazard a guess that we're not having as high a success rate as we could have if we had the follow-up care, the follow-up beds, the follow-up intervention by AADAC, or whatever it's going to be called under the new superboard, if those services are, hopefully, still there under the new superboard. That's all we're getting at.

I thank you again, to the Chair, for the opportunity to speak on this. With that, I'll take my seat.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. One of the concerns that this recession has brought out is the potential of cuts to the health care programs. First Nations children and First Nations individuals show up in disproportionate numbers in terms of addiction, and Bill 6 doesn't discriminate on the basis of a person's heritage. We have seen, for example, suicide prevention, the potential of that being cut. There is a very direct connection in Bill 6 between addiction and suicide. A number of kids either become so disoriented or so delusional that they cannot tell the difference between reality and a drug-induced circumstance. Their failure, the bouncing back and forth between the real world and the detox world, for example a 10-day treatment program, and with all of the loving care surrounding them and the intentions, children who are addicted are among the most likely to require suicide intervention.

The intention of Bill 6 is wonderful, but we've got to take this further. We've got to take into account where addiction leads. We have to include suicide prevention, not just simply temporarily break the hold it has on youth. We have to include education, with the hope that more and more children get the message early on about the problems of addiction, but for those that are affected, we have to break the cycle, and 10 or 15 days, unfortunately, is not going to provide that break.

I'm pleased that the government has taken into account the very preliminary need, as I used the image before, of catching children, but we then have to envelop them, protect them in a caring circumstance. We need to monitor that the programs in Bill 6 will achieve the success that's intended.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Are you ready for the question on Bill 6, Protection of Children Abusing Drugs Amendment Act, 2009?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 6 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

Public Health Amendment Act, 2009

The Deputy Chair: Are there comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. The major rationale behind Bill 7, the Public Health Amendment Act, 2009, is the control of health-related information, and there seems to be a tremendous amount of controversy with regard to who has the proprietary rights to that information.

In a series of outreach that the Liberal caucus participated in, I had an opportunity while down in Lethbridge to talk to a company that provides secure website compilation of records and so on. One of the concerns that was pointed out to me was the number of different health regions, the number of different computer systems that are unable to talk to each other in terms of sharing that information. A large concern has to do with how we protect the information that has been received and who should have access to that information.

Obviously, the chief medical officer of health is the health traffic control officer, but before that individual receives the information, there are so many different levels. Of course, consent by the individual is absolutely essential to direct where this information is going to be sent and with whom it's going to be shared. So consent is a large part of it.

The Auditor General talked about, basically, electronic hacking – I think he referred to it as prints; I'm not sure what the correct electronic term would be – evidence of individuals trying to break in and acquire information which they had no right to receive. Ideally, we can create a system which protects the information and shares it with those who need to have it. I've spoken before debate on Bill 7 about the need to have an electronic health card which carries the information, and in the advent of an injury we would have that information available on the spot. I know from my most recent visit to the Calgary Foothills hospital that they no longer have the plastic cards, so obviously their electronic information has been updated beyond that point.

One example of the tracking of information that Bill 7, the Public Health Amendment Act, takes into account is immunizations at the local school level. We've had examples where because their computers didn't have a scrambling code, information was taken from stolen laptops. I mean, prior to that time we might have had break-ins and files being interfered with or whatever, but the further we get in terms of electronic security, the greater the challenge to individuals to hack into those security situations. When you consider the hundreds of thousands of school-age children and the importance of the privacy of their information and then take it to the adult level where it's whether a person receives insurance, as Bill 7, the Public Health Amendment Act, suggests, then it's extremely important that we protect that information.

For example, there have been concerns raised over the chief medical officer's ability to access this information, as I mentioned, without consent. How much information is exposed in the public realm and for what purpose? Whether we get concerned about information leaving the country or leaving the province or leaving the confines of the chief medical officer, I think we need to be concerned about how that information is tracked.

We also have concerns about information that will then be prescribed in regulations. Without going into detail, unless we have a sense as to how in Bill 7, the Public Health Amendment Act, the regulations are going to achieve the protective intent of the information and the degree to which it is shared only with those who have the right to have that information, then concerns will continue to be raised about privacy. This is my first real opportunity in committee to express these concerns.

Overall, I believe that Bill 7, the Public Health Amendment Act, is headed in the right direction. How we control the information is absolutely essential, not only to our privacy but, most importantly, to our health and the services that we receive. So much of our discussion during this time period is on maintaining our public health standards and expanding the universality of the services. There has been a lot of talk lately about cuts as opposed to improvements. This is always a very concerning discussion when our universal health is at stake.

I thank the hon. chair for allowing this first participation in Committee of the Whole on Bill 7, Public Health Amendment Act. I think the intention is good. If individuals who have a greater understanding of computer security can provide assurances as to how well the information is protected, I'm sure that will help in my decision whether to support this bill.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to comment? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Chair, for giving me the opportunity to speak to Bill 7, the Public Health Amendment Act. At this time I note that the bill is headed in the correct direction. I believe this will lead to more reporting of public health care matters, that will give Albertans a greater sense of trust in the health care system than in the past was generally given. I believe that this will expand on the program, where you can access the inspection records of various things like restaurants and other businesses that are involved in the public realm.

We do have some questions on this. Again, like the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity suggested, it is primarily due to the collection and dissemination of information that is going to be in the hands of the chief medical officer of health. I guess the question is: how much right to private information does the chief medical officer of health have in the name of public health surveillance? That is always one of those slopes. How much is necessary to ensure, I guess, society's health, to answer that question? Do they need to know everything? Do they need to know a little? That's one of those questions I have regarding this bill.

Also, this act changes the lines of reporting for the chief medical officer of health from an assistant deputy minister directly to the minister. I guess that change is in the right direction. However, why aren't we having the chief medical officer, who's in charge of Albertans' health, report directly to the Legislature? It seems like this would be an excellent opportunity for people to get a look at our health care system in the full light of day and to understand, then, what is happening. Let's face it. I firmly believe that the health system in Alberta is probably what our citizens are most interested in us doing correctly.

For instance, many times people don't pay attention until they get into a hospital or when they're suffering their last breath or they have a spinal cord injury or whatever you have. That's when they understand that their government is needed. That's when they understand that: "Oh, my goodness. I've been paying taxes, and thank goodness I've been paying taxes because – guess what? – I've got this nice public health care system that I can now go into and rely on." Why don't we have that person, who's in charge of what we have built here in Alberta in the name of public stewardship and of us coming together and collectively deciding how we're going to run our health care system, report directly to the Legislature? I think that would be a step in the right direction.

I think the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity also went over numerous other things that were pertinent. The fact that the collection of information from students at school could then be possibly given to, I guess, other governments or other foreign officials, also gives us more concern. It's more along the lines of:

how much protection is going to be given towards people's privacy? I know this concern has seemingly come to grips with almost everyone in this modern world. Simply put, I guess, the advent of computers, with the advent of being able to transport people's information a great deal of distance in a short period of time, has alerted the public to the fact that we should be vigilant, even borderline hypervigilant, about the dissemination of this type of information.

I believe the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity did an adequate job of highlighting those concerns, actually, more than adequate – more than adequate – and as I'm fumbling over my words here, I will rely on his statements in that regard and thank the chair for allowing me to speak on this bill.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I wanted to say a few words about the bill and indicate that the section of the bill that allows the chief medical officer to share information with foreign governments seems quite broad. According to the Information and Privacy Commissioner he's satisfied that it does strike a reasonable balance between protection of privacy and public safety. The reasons he might disclose the information – for the purpose of addressing public health matters, patient safety, quality of care, or the general public interest – put enough of a limit on the powers there.

I think that he's also a custodian of information under the Health Information Act, section 58(1), which requires him or her to "collect, use or disclose only the amount of health information that is essential to enable the custodian or the recipient of the information, as the case may be, to carry out the intended purpose." So there's another limit on the chief medical officer's power in the Health Information Act that pertains to this type of disclosure. However, the broadness of the provision still does cause us some concern. We need to make sure that private health information is not being released unnecessarily.

Privacy of health information is a hot issue right now, Mr. Chairman, with the Standing Committee on Health reviewing Bill 52, the Health Information Amendment Act, 2009. In that committee on January 21 the Information and Privacy Commissioner said that the monitoring of access to health information is conducted through a complaints-driven process. There is not a proactive system in place to make sure that health information is only being viewed by those people who should be viewing it. That, Mr. Chairman, is worrying.

Orphaned medical records are another example of how medical information has been mishandled in this province. Just recently there were newspaper articles about a woman in Didsbury whose father's medical records were lost. These issues alert us to the importance of making sure that there is a proactive way of monitoring what information is being shared by our public health system, especially when it's being shared with other governments and other countries.

The powers given to the minister and the health board to publish results of public health inspections and nuisance orders should be given instead to the chief medical officer because he is less political. This is, once again, an area where the decision has to go through the minister or board before information can be made available to the public. The chief medical officer should have more freedom to provide information to Albertans directly.

We need a strong public health system in Alberta, Mr. Chairman. Families here need to feel secure that the ministry of health is looking after their well-being by using preventative and educational approaches and not just by providing services once something bad happens. Giving the chief medical officer the ability to gather contact information from all schools in order to contact children and their parents about public health programs is a positive step to keep families feeling supported and informed. We can try to improve our public health system by giving the chief medical officer more power, but it won't do any good if the chief medical officer is not free to do his or her job.

Last August our province's chief medical officer along with three other top public health doctors did not have their contracts renewed for reasons that this government still refuses to divulge. Meanwhile, despite warnings from the outgoing chief medical officer that there was a serious syphilis outbreak in Alberta that required a broad-based information campaign, the minister of health refused to acknowledge the extent of the outbreak and cancelled plans for a widespread campaign. Because of the government's secretiveness, we still don't know why those public health officials left.

This kind of hush-hush political intervention does not belong in our public health system. If this is the way the chief medical officer will be treated by the government, then this change in legislation will be ineffective. The province's new public health model announced in September gives the chief medical officer a direct reporting line to the minister. If the minister is going to interfere in a politically motivated manner as he did in the syphilis case, then a reporting line to the minister is useless for creating accountability and better public health.

That concern, Mr. Chairman, gives rise to our amendment to the bill, which I will now send up to the table.

The Deputy Chair: We'll pause for a moment while the amendment is brought to the table and then distributed. This amendment will be amendment A1.

Hon. member.

Mr. Mason: We're ready to go? Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman.

I will therefore move that Bill 7, the Public Health Amendment Act, 2009, be amended in section 2 by adding the following after the proposed subsection (4):

- (5) If the Chief Medical Officer considers that the interests of the people of Alberta are best served by making a report public on health issues in Alberta or on the need for legislation or a change of policy or practice respecting health in Alberta, the Chief Medical Officer may make that report public in the manner the Chief Medical Officer considers most appropriate.

Mr. Chairman, if I may, just a few minutes on this amendment. This amendment would give the chief medical officer the option to report directly to the public on matters of public health. This would allow the chief medical officer to communicate with the public without ministry interference. This provision is very similar to one contained in British Columbia's Health Act which governs B.C.'s provincial health officer, which is their equivalent to our chief medical officer. Given some of the interference that we've seen in recent events, we believe that the chief medical officer needs a way to ensure his independence and his ability to act, when he believes the public interest requires it, without political interference.

Now, we know the government has claimed that they wish to increase the powers of the chief medical officer. The bill only increases those powers in a minimal way. The amendment would actually give the chief medical officer a substantive increase in reporting powers. The public has a right to be able to hear the concerns and opinions of the chief medical officer even when they don't match up with the wishes of the government of the day and their political considerations, that may be involved.

The amendment, just to summarize, Mr. Chairman, gives the chief medical officer the legislative ability to report directly to the public with or without agreement from the health minister or officials in the department of health and gives him a responsibility thereby for communicating directly to the public on important matters affecting the public health. We think that this would strengthen the bill considerably and ensure that the chief medical officer has the independence necessary to pursue the public health and the public interest. So I would urge all of my colleagues to support this amendment.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: On amendment A1 the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. What the hon. leader of the third party has pointed out is the need to have a balance between governance and health delivery. We've run into this circumstance of: who's in charge, and to what extent are they allowed to communicate their advice?

When we had the first news of syringes being used repeatedly for a variety of procedures at the Vegreville hospital, and then it turned out that this procedure had been abandoned in other hospitals, it's here where having a person directly in charge such as the chief medical officer, given their medical training and background and the fact that we have faith in their ability, is extremely important and that the chief medical officer be able to report directly to the people.

Now, whether or not the Legislature is in session, the appropriate sort of next circumstance I would like to think would be that the Legislature would receive a fairly immediate briefing. In the event that we're not in session, the chief medical officer should not have any restraints or layers or filters that he needs to go through in order to indicate a concern to the public.

The speed at which infections – MRSA, I believe, is the infection that travels so quickly through an open wound and can be acquired through just casual contact, brushing up against somebody in a gym circumstance. If it turns out that there seems to be a potential outbreak in a particular area of the province, whether it's due to the lack of simple activities such as are being recommended for the influenza, which is handwashing, or whether it's the need to wear masks or take precautions by wearing gloves or absenting yourself from particular types of activities, isolation, it's extremely important that the chief medical officer be able to issue these bulletins as quickly as possible, not to alarm but to create a sense that the health management of the province is in good hands given the number of circumstances, as I say, in the last two years where we weren't sure who was in charge and the bouncing of blame back and forth between various political layers and medical individuals, whether they be front-line nurses who had received a particular type of training which was now considered out of date but where the information was never passed on.

We now have the individual who's the go-to person, and that's the chief medical officer. What amendment A1 is saying is: recognize the individual's professionalism. He was basically hired and/or appointed by members of a government ministry, the ministry of health, I'm assuming with cabinet approval because of the importance of such a position as the chief medical officer. Allow him the professional judgment to make the necessary pronouncements. It's always a balance between the governance role that a government needs to provide and the picking of individuals in whom Albertans can have faith to carry out their job, and I can't think of a job more important than that of the chief medical officer. Let's not have this individual encumbered by red tape, forced to filter information before a decision is made. Let's allow, as amendment A1 suggests, the opportunity for the chief medical officer to do what he has been chosen to do, and that's to protect the health of Albertans.

I support the intent of A1. Medical decisions need to be made by medical individuals. Governance requires the government to evaluate those decisions but not interfere with them.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair, for giving me an opportunity to speak on this notice of amendment to Bill 7, the Public Health Amendment Act, 2009. I'd really like to thank the hon. leader of the third party for bringing forward this amendment. It's similar to what I was discussing, actually, in Committee of the Whole before this amendment was brought forward, but it has given me some time to clarify my thoughts on the matter.

If you look at this, the chief medical officer is appointed by our government to look after, essentially, our province's health care system. Like I said in Committee of the Whole, I believe that what is most important to Albertans and most important to what we do under the dome and what we do here in governing in the public interest is to see that our citizens are healthy and taken care of in a publicly funded, publicly delivered health care system. The chief medical officer, as this government's representative on the front lines, shall we say, should have the ability to make a report on public health to the people of Alberta. I would suggest that the most logical place for that would be in this Legislature. They should have the ability to bring forward matters that he or she believes to be of fundamental importance to the way our publicly funded, publicly delivered health care system is run, how it can best be run, and to offer suggestions to the Legislature as to what is needed to be done, whether that's in terms of a change in policy or practice respecting health in Alberta.

I think that having the ability of the chief medical officer to make that report to the Legislature, to the public, would greatly add to our ability to provide excellent health care in this province. It would actually relieve the chief medical officer of some of the political apparatus that is currently in place that may actually work against what's in the best interests of the health of all Albertans. This amendment goes a long way to highlighting that ability, giving the chief medical officer the same sort of ability that other officers currently have to provide information to this Legislature. For instance, the Auditor General does so in a twice yearly time period. Obviously, the chief medical officer should have a greater ability than even the Auditor General to do so.

On that note, I am supportive of this amendment and thank the leader of the third party for bringing it forward. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I, too, am standing to support this amendment. I just think that it is almost a no-brainer that medical decisions, especially at the level that this medical officer would be making decisions, should be made on a medical level and also that he should be consulting with other medical consultants, certainly not a politician. I don't think that medical emergencies should be politicized. Just the thought of it is very, very scary.

Last night in the estimates for Municipal Affairs I think the Minister of Municipal Affairs actually proved to me that, in my mind, he really got it. He was saying that emergencies should not be partisan, that his department would do the very best to make sure that all emergencies were looked after, period, and that it had nothing to do with partisanship. So kudos on that one.

One of the things that I've dealt with within the last month or so is the fact that the health minister actually said that it was his decision to not go forward with the public information program about the increase in syphilis in this province, and one of the considerations for that was cost. I mean, it should scare anybody to think that this kind of information is being withheld because of cost and the decision actually made by someone with no medical background.

We have a good chief medical officer. I think that some of the things that he's done in the last three days in regard to the swine flu have become, certainly, a topic of conversation everywhere. He's done a good job. He's brought it out in the open. He was right on top of it. He said that our labs are ready to go, to do the testing that we actually need. I think that at any given point in time there are thousands of people in this province that have what we would call the flu. People who feel that they've got the flu are being encouraged to go to our labs and actually be tested so that we here in Alberta and certainly in Canada will be able to get a jump-start on this, and nothing else would be spread.

I think that the SARS example in Toronto is another good example where the information wasn't forthcoming right at the very beginning. They had to scramble. They did handle it. Certainly, there were many, many unfortunate deaths with SARS, but it wasn't right out in the open to begin with. I think that's one good example of why medical emergencies should never, never, never be politicized, and we would politicize it by not allowing the chief medical officer to be responsible to this House. He absolutely has to have no constraints on him by having to report to anyone other than the House or have restraints put on him that may have any kind of a political overtone.

This is why I would support this in its entirety, and I think that if people in this House have actually listened and really thought about this, they would support it as well.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to comment? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: On the amendment, then, Mr. Chairman. Thank you very much. I think this is an important amendment. You know, I regret that nobody from the government side has risen to comment on it. I'm only assuming that that means it's a routine voting down of an opposition amendment, but this is an important amendment. It is, in fact, based on legislation that does exist in other provinces, specifically British Columbia, which gives a higher responsibility to the chief medical officer of health to report directly to the public on matters of serious concern to the public health. For example, with the current outbreak of swine flu, if actions were not being taken by the government for whatever reason that the chief medical officer felt were necessary, he could communicate directly to them without having to get his comments vetted by the minister or by the government. I think that's self-evidently important.

I want to just clear up a little confusion. This is not setting up the chief medical officer as an officer of the Legislature to report to the Legislature about these issues but to allow him or her to make public comments, through the media or through other means, directly to the public to inform them of threats to their health or steps that are being taken to protect their health, things that they should do and things that they should not do in order to reduce the risk of the spread of disease. As we begin to see this development of what could potentially be a pandemic, I think it underlines the importance of the role of public health in our society and the role of responsible and objective people who are responsible for the public health.

It's by no means a new or a radical notion. In fact, it has been adopted, as I've mentioned, in other places. Clearly, we've seen, for example in the SARS epidemic and the situation that developed in Toronto, where the top people in public health in Toronto, in Ontario, were on the front lines in terms of communicating to the public, taking measures to protect the public, making sure the public was informed, and they became in many respects very well-known and very well-respected figures that the public looked to for guidance in a very frightening time. We simply want to make sure that this role is not constrained for any reason and that these responsible officials have the capacity to communicate directly to the public, should that be necessary, on matters affecting the public health.

That's the intent of the amendment, and I would encourage all members on both sides of the House to support this.

The Deputy Chair: Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Deputy Chair: Back to the bill. Any other comments or questions on the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I know that there are members of my caucus who would like to potentially participate in the Committee of the Whole process on Bill 7. In particular, I'm thinking of the hon. leader, the Member for Calgary-Mountain View. If you would consider the possibility, I would like to adjourn debate on Bill 7 so that other members of my caucus may have the opportunity to discuss it further.

[Motion to adjourn debate lost]

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Well, thank you. I had hoped that reason would prevail, but in that it hasn't, then I stand up in support of reason.

My background in education indicates to me that education is an important topic, but health care is absolutely essential to our very being. Had it not been for health care, we wouldn't be here to be discussing Bill 7, the Public Health Amendment Act, 2009. I don't quite understand whether all members opposite think that this is just a wonderful piece of legislation that requires no amendment, no discussion, or that the authors of Bill 7 just by sheer intelligence or force of effort have come to the conclusion that this is the be-all and end-all in terms of legislation.

We have raised concerns with regard to how secure the information is. We have raised concerns about the extent to which the population is subject to surveillance. We have raised concerns with regard to the tracking and securing of information. With no privacy impact statement to be submitted, there is little assurance that this information will be used properly. There is no provision, for example, in section (4.1) that the information transferred will be stripped of any identifying features. This was what I was referring to in our earlier discussion on Bill 7: encrypting. I wasn't able to remember that particular term, but that's the term, encrypting the information such that only those that have access to the code – of course, we're assuming that these are the people within the medical profession – would be able to access that information.

In one sense we support the idea of taking some of the power that had sort of been behind closed doors in the cabinet, otherwise known as the Lieutenant Governor in Council, and bringing it a little more forward to the public domain, but Bill 7, Public Health Amendment Act, 2009, doesn't deliver the information and the accountability far enough towards the public. Also, it doesn't give sufficient accountability to the chief medical officer.

If I were to go through the bill clause by clause, I could point out some of the concerns. For example, 66(4) allows the minister to make "a code, standard, guideline or body of rules" instead of regulation. Now, that's not such a bad idea providing that the regulations are published and available to the public, but as is so frequently the case, the regulations seem to be the sole domain of the cabinet, or the Lieutenant Governor in Council, as it is sometimes referred to. Because of this, neither members of the opposition nor the public in general have a sense of the type of regulations that are controlling the access to and transmittal of their information.

Now, with Bill 7, the Public Health Amendment Act, 2009, we have sort of sent out to various stakeholders and asked them to give us an account of their concerns. For example, the Canadian Association of Professional Access and Privacy Administrators have come out against some of the amendments proposed in this bill. The first issue they have is that school boards can be compelled to disclose students' and parents' names, addresses, dates of birth, and school. There is also a section that states that the chief medical officer of health can request any other information the regulations allow. While we believe that the medical officer should have all of the pertinent medical information available, there has to be some type of protection of privacy for the individuals involved.

A second issue that stakeholders brought forward with regard to Bill 7, the Public Health Amendment Act, 2009, is that the chief medical officer has the potential of disclosing information outside of the limits of this province. Parents and guardians need to be able to own their own information, and the way this legislation is currently worded, that privacy protection is not guaranteed.

Members from the Consumers' Association of Alberta echo the concerns brought forward by the Canadian Association of Professional Access and Privacy Administrators. They've pointed out that there needs to be strong evidence provided for the means that will be taken in the name of surveillance and interference in Albertans' lives. We have become a surveillance society, and some of that surveillance, as Bill 7 is proposing, in terms of watching at airports, particularly given the swine flu influenza, watching for people who are coming off at our international airports who have recently come from Mexico – that type of surveillance for the sake of the public good is extremely important. Other people would argue that the collection of information that we currently have from street cams and their locations and who reviews the information from which the surveillance is reported is also a concern.

Okay. Mr. Chair, we do have time, and I know it's the wish of the hon. Assembly to move Bill 7 forward to third reading. Therefore, I will not oppose our progress. We may bring forward amendments during third.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Are you ready for the question on Bill 7?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 7 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? That is carried.

Hon. members, according to Standing Order 4(3) the committee will now rise and report.

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bills: Bill 19 as amended, Bill 6, and Bill 7. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Having heard the report of the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays, does the Assembly agree with the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I see it's just about 6 o'clock. On that note, I would move that we call it 6 p.m. and now adjourn until 1:30 tomorrow.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:56 p.m. to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Welcome.

Let us pray. Grant that we the members of our province's Legislature fulfill our office with honesty and integrity. May our first concern be for the good of all our citizens. Let us be guided by these principles in our deliberations this day. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Hayden: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a visiting group from the Lakeview Christian school in the constituency of Drumheller-Stettler. These are some wonderful grade 7 to grade 9 students, with their teachers, Miss Grace Yoder and Mr. Wayne Toews, and accompanied by parents Mrs. Sharon Toews, Mr. Keith Klassen, and Mrs. Kathy Klassen. I would now ask them to please rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege today to introduce to you and through you to all members 53 students from Rideau Park elementary school in my constituency of Edmonton-Rutherford. There are 27 students seated in the members' gallery, and I believe 24 students – and they'll be wondering if I can add – seated in the public gallery. They're accompanied by their teachers, Mrs. Tara Jones-Whitford and Mrs. Tanja Burns. I'd like to ask all of them to please rise and receive our very warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly this afternoon a group of 20 grade 7 students from Rosemary school, including one that's particularly close to me, my niece Lindsey Doerksen. They're accompanied today by their school principal, Mr. David Blumell, and parent helpers Mrs. Pam Norton, Mr. Arnold Retzlaff, Mr. Russ Pickett, Mrs. Yvonne Doerksen, Mrs. Jan Lepp, Mr. Cliff Walde, Mrs. Loretta Berg, and Mrs. Kristie Hall. I'd like to ask them all to rise and enjoy the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two sets of introductions today. First of all, I have 34 fabulous students visiting our Legislature today from St. Lucy Catholic elementary school. They're accompanied by two teachers, Ms Dawn Miskew and Mrs. Karen Robinson. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of our Assembly.

Also, Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly nine young high school students who formed a group called Erin and friends because they wanted to make a difference in our community. These students from Jasper Place high school arrange time away from class so that they can volunteer for Habitat for Humanity, a nonprofit organization that works with volunteers and builders to build affordable housing. With us today are Erin Austen, Mariève Langevin, Kyla Stoodley, Jocelyn McCaw, Megan Mah, Monique Mah, Emily Dyck, Jennie Austen, and Monica Winstone. Accompanying them is Mr. Alfred Nikolai, president and CEO of Habitat for Humanity since 2005. Mr. Alfred Nikolai is a charismatic individual. He started building six homes per year; now they're building over 30 homes per year. I would ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of our Assembly.

Mr. Cao: It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly the community sponsors of the School at the Legislature. Seated in your gallery, Mr. Speaker, from Priority Printing Limited Mr. Tim Downey, president; Mr. Lloyd Lewis, vice-president and general manager, CTV; Mr. Eric Rice, production and interactive, Access TV; Mr. David Fisher, production and interactive, Access TV; from the Rotary Club of Edmonton Mr. Jack Clements and Mr. Bill Hamilton, youth services committee; from CKUA Radio Network Mr. Ken Regan, general manager, and Ms Sharon Marcus, director of development; and finally, Mr. Ron LaFranchise, a volunteer.

The School at the Legislature program gives grade 6 teachers from all over the province an opportunity to relocate their classroom to the Alberta Legislature for a week.

I would ask our guests to rise and receive a warm welcome from our Legislative Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly three individuals seated in the members' gallery. With us this afternoon are Mr. J.F. Turcotte, president of the National Smokeless Tobacco Company; Mr. Jeremy Adams, director of government relations for the NST; and Jim Dau, no stranger to this Assembly, from Prismatic Group. The National Smokeless Tobacco Company is based in the province of Quebec but does substantial business here in our province. They're here today visiting MLAs to talk about issues important to their industry. Would they please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm just delighted to welcome back to Alberta Richard Engelhardt. Richard is sitting in the public gallery. He worked for me for a number of years as my constituency assistant and manager. I keep losing constituency assistants because I convince them to go back and finish their degrees, which is what he did. He went off to UBC to complete his degree, so he's back for the summer. Richard, would you rise and allow us to welcome you to the Alberta Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I have the privilege of introducing to you and through you to Members of the Legislative Assembly a number of staff from Alberta Employment and Immigration who are visiting the Legislature today. They play a very important role in keeping Alberta workplaces safe and fair.

I would ask our guests to stand as I introduce them: Kelechi Madu, Muneer Naseer, Teresa McKinnon, Roy Clough, Fazal Hussain, Gita Sud, Angela Curtis, Jane Kieser, Bernice Doyle, and Gayle Joyes-Bond. I would ask my guests to stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to this Assembly 11 workers from Alberta Care Resources. Alberta Care Resources is a private child, youth, and family support agency within the constituency of Edmonton-Glenora. They've provided 15 years of service to the Edmonton community and have provided quality programs, serving diverse client and community needs for every one of those 15 years. I'd like to introduce the individuals here: Ms Sunny Thaleshvar, Mrs. Aly Fergus, Mr. Brian LaBelle, Mrs. Becky Kiryluk, Mr. Shane Whippier, Miss Katie Grant, Mr. Jack Johnson, Ms Sylvia Reynolds, Miss Michelle Crawford, Mrs. Donna Smith, and Miss Vanessa Wyard-Scott. I'd like to welcome all of these individuals to the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure for me to rise and introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly four guests seated in the members' gallery. Growing up in rural Alberta, I knew of the UFA as the co-op, or the co-operative. They're a hundred years old this year. I knew of them in the fuel business and the farm business, but they're also in the construction business.

I'm introducing to the Assembly today the four people attending on behalf of the UFA Construction company, who bid on a luncheon with me at the St. Albert Housing Society fundraising breakfast in March. I would ask that each of them stand to receive the warm welcome of this Assembly as I call their name. They are Bill Hutchings, Gregg Shoemaker, Darryl Hartigh, and Reid Lillico. We had a great discussion around P3 concepts, Mr. Speaker. I would ask that the Assembly give them a warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today it's my great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly a very good friend of mine, Cheryl Davis. Cheryl is the owner-manager of two of Alberta's finest registries, the One Stop Licence Shop in Red Deer-North and in Red Deer-South. She has also been the very successful manager of my last four election campaigns. She's a very successful businesswoman, a very thoughtful and loyal friend, and a very hard-working member of the PC Party. Cheryl is in the members' gallery, and I would ask her to rise and receive the warm welcome of the House.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater.

Education Week

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This week we are celebrating Education Week across Alberta. This year's theme, Learning Connections: Celebrating Student Engagement, speaks to the past, present, and future needs and successes of our students. The theme also reflects a natural and very powerful urge within the education community to effect positive change. It recognizes that we are strongest when we stand and work together.

Today Alberta is renowned for a high quality of educational programming available to all our citizens. That is today, but what about tomorrow? Education is the basis of a successful, open, and progressive society. We thrive if Albertans of the future are truly an educated people; we fail if they are not.

As a parent and as an elected official I am acutely aware of the challenges in preparing our children for a future that may be very different from today. We seriously need to rethink how we design our education system so that it continues to meet the needs of learners 20 years from now.

I'm very pleased to be co-chair of the steering committee for Inspiring Education: A Dialogue with Albertans, which kicked off the first of 10 community conversations this morning. We are asking a fundamental question to Albertans about our future: what qualities and abilities will future Albertans need to be successful and contributing citizens?

When you ask Albertans this question, they will have many ideas. From oil rig workers to farmers, from businesspeople to community leaders, from First Nations peoples to newly arrived Albertans, we all have the right, the obligation to bring our ideas, our dreams, and our hopes forward for this discussion. We need to hear all voices and all points of view. Education belongs to the entire community and to all Albertans. The future prosperity and success of Alberta, the Alberta of our children and our grandchildren, is dependent on our efforts and our commitment to education today.

Mr. Speaker, during Education Week 2009 let us take some time to consider the value and importance of education to our lives now and in the future.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Partners in Injury Reduction

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On April 23 I was privileged to attend the annual WCB partners in injury reduction luncheon. I would like to congratulate the safety and industry associations who serve as certifying partners and the employers who participate in this program. Their hard work and their dedication in this joint program between the Workers' Compensation Board and Alberta Employment and Immigration is paying off.

The latest projections from the WCB are that the number of lost-time injuries on Alberta work sites went down again significantly, from 35,900 in 2007 to 32,800 in 2008. This is a huge achievement on its own, Mr. Speaker, and even a bigger one because the number of workers covered by WCB grew by over 86,000. Nearly 5 per cent more workers were covered last year, and the number of compensation claims fell by more than 8 per cent. More than 7,000 companies which participate in this program are proving the old saying: safety is good for business.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Habitat for Humanity Funding

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. Members of this Assembly know that homelessness and a lack of affordable housing are challenges for all Canadian cities, and ours in Alberta are no exception. Individuals, many with families, who are hard-working but have low-income or entry-level jobs are having a difficult time finding a place to live. On April 24 I was pleased to join our Premier and our Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs to announce the largest partnership in Canada between a province and Habitat for Humanity, an organization which has made home ownership possible for many hard-working Albertans.

Through the Ministry of Housing and Urban Affairs Habitat for Humanity Alberta will receive $6 million to help build 67 homes in several communities across the province, including Brooks, Camrose, Calgary, Edmonton, Lethbridge, Olds, and Red Deer. All of the homes are built by volunteers, donors, and the actual recipients themselves. The 67 new homes will be sold to low-income families at 80 per cent of market value.

Habitat for Humanity holds the mortgage, charges no interest, and amortizes the mortgage for as many years as necessary to ensure the families pay only 30 per cent of their income. The program also requires a contribution of 500 hours of work by the homeowner recipient and his family.

Mr. Speaker, this unique partnership reminds us all that we need to continue to work together as one community to ensure Albertans have a safe and sustainable place to call home. In just two years this government has increased access to safe and affordable housing by developing more than 5,600 new units, and we are on our way to achieving our goal of 11,000 units by 2012. In doing so, we will build a stronger Alberta, a place where our communities are modern, diverse, and dynamic.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Welcoming and Inclusive Communities

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak on welcoming communities. Canada as a country of immigrants is well aware that the character of a city or community can be considerably shaped by migration. Migration not only alters the size of the city but also the cultural expression of the collective over time. Recent Alberta-based consultations and reports are telling us that many of our communities know they need to do something to respond to the changes, but they don't know what to do. Then we have research informing us that a community tends to enjoy a smoother transition if its institutions and citizens understand how diversity influences and benefits communities, if communities are prepared for the diversity they face, and that integration is a two-way street, that it is both for newcomers as well as established communities.

Mr. Speaker, our government's goal on developing strong and inclusive communities sets a context for continued development in creating welcoming communities in Alberta. In 2005-06 with a grant from the human rights, citizenship, and multiculturalism education fund the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association produced the welcoming and inclusive communities toolkit, an online resource for municipalities interested in becoming more welcoming and inclusive and in combating racism and discrimination.

In Alberta the municipalities of Wood Buffalo, Drayton Valley, Calgary, Edmonton, Brooks, Grande Prairie, Lethbridge, and St. Albert joined the UNESCO Coalition of Municipalities Against Racism and Discrimination. Their request for support in building welcoming communities led to a three-year welcoming and inclusive communities (WIC) partnership between the Alberta Human Rights and Citizenship Commission, the human rights and citizenship branch, and AUMA. This partnership will increase the capacity of municipalities to build welcoming communities and provide greater networking opportunities to the CMARD members.

Sensitive and proactive management on the effects of immigration and diversity would help cities prosper through the process of change.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Hospital Capacity

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We've heard complaints from both patients and doctors that Alberta's health care facilities are seriously over capacity and can barely deal with the daily pressures, let alone any extra demand that may occur such as that with the influenza outbreak. Lack of capacity is revealed by beds in hallways and overcrowded rooms, that have become the new normal on a hospital visit today. To the Premier: how far over capacity are Edmonton and Calgary's major hospitals?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the budget for health increased 4.7 per cent. Physicians received, over the next three years, a billion-dollar increase in their remuneration. We're doing whatever we can to attract more nurses and other health care providers to the province of Alberta. We're doing a lot to offset, of course, the challenges to the system: more people moving to the province of Alberta, an aging population, more technology, and just more of what we're doing in terms of hip and joint replacement, heart surgery, anything and everything that we can provide in Alberta. There's more demand, and we're meeting those demands.

Dr. Swann: Apparently the Premier doesn't want to talk about overcapacity.

Overcrowding ultimately increases the cost of health care because it creates a higher risk of infection, staff fatigue and burnout, medical mistakes, and patients staying longer. Why is the Premier cutting health care when the real problem is in space and professionals? We're bursting at the seams, Mr. Premier.

Mr. Stelmach: I have to reiterate: I don't know where the opposition sees it as a cut to health when it's the only department to receive an increase of 4.7 per cent. I was reminded yesterday that other departments actually saw a reduction in their individual ministry budgets to make sure that we had enough money for the 4.7 per cent increase in health. We're continuing to recruit nurses. We're continuing to train more nurses and more physicians here in the province of Alberta, Alberta born and bred students that have an opportunity now to get their medical degrees and nursing degrees right here in the province.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, under current conditions of overcrowding in our system we cannot — we cannot — manage a major disaster. This is not a responsible or acceptable state of affairs in Alberta. Even opening new beds tomorrow, Mr. Premier, means weeks or months before we have staff to fill those. Will the Premier act immediately to open new beds in Edmonton and Calgary?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we're putting billions of dollars into infrastructure in health. It's not only in acute-care research facilities but also in long-term care. You combine that with all of the additional training, the number of spaces that we increased in universities and colleges. Again, let's not just focus on doctors and nurses. There are other allied health care providers. We've increased those numbers to provide and support the nurses and doctors that are delivering health care in this province. So we have done a lot for the future. Just as a reminder to everyone, here in the province of Alberta, in the city of Calgary, the new Children's hospital has one bed per child, also room for the parent, again, you know, for breaking the chain for disease prevention within the facility. There's a very good example of the additional investment in infrastructure.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the most vulnerable times of their lives this government is denying basic human dignity to patients by putting them in hallways or overcrowded coed rooms. If my loved one were lying in a hallway somewhere or embarrassed by being in a coed room, I would be livid with this government, just as many Albertans who are writing to me are. To the Premier. This government is mismanaging health care so badly that even in a province this wealthy we are cramming three or more patients into a two-bed room. When will you resolve this chaos, Mr. Premier?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, you know, back in 1958 – I don't want to give away my age because people will really know how old I am – I was in a six-man ward. I spent a month and a half in that facility recovering from a broken bone. Today the same facility is coed. There are men and there are women in the very same facility being treated just as well as I was many, many years ago as a young lad.

The point I'm making is that the system is continually changing. It's increasing the scope of service that we deliver to Albertans. The new technology is amazing. For the month and a half that I spent in the hospital, today I would have been in perhaps a couple of days, and I'd have been home convalescing and more than likely, perhaps, healed up better; I'm not quite sure. But that's how health has changed, and that's what we have to keep in mind. We also have a very aging population. This is the glut generation, the baby boomer generation. They'll be retiring in 10 years, putting on additional strain, and that's why billions of dollars are being spent on health care facilities in Alberta.

Dr. Swann: Well, I wonder how the Premier's parents would feel about being in a coed room.

This government is failing Alberta's health care professionals as well, working in unacceptable, crowded rooms crammed with more patients than they were designed for, increasing the risk of mistakes and litigation. How will we keep professionals in this province, Mr. Premier?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, once the leader starts talking about my parents – my parents were not any different than many parents in this room. When they were helping to build this province, there was no publicly funded health care. They were lucky to have a bed. When they did go to the hospital, many had to sell a farm, or neighbours had to get together, put money together to keep someone in the hospital. Those were the true pioneer days of this province. This thing about a coed room: that's the least of our issues. Our issue today is to make sure that this health care system is sustained for the next generation. That's how we've got to start working together.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government is failing all Albertans by putting them in hallways and cramming them into overcrowded rooms. What will the Premier do in the next 90 days to fix this problem?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, you know, someone that has come from the health care profession – and that's the leader – unfortunately has very little knowledge of actually what's happening in the province in terms of the number of beds that have been opened, the physicians that have been attracted to the province of Alberta. Just since April 1, 2004, and, again, rolling this out in an intensive, aggressive, capital plan, $2.6 billion dollars has been spent on health care facilities just in Calgary alone, just in one city. That is more, I dare say, than some provinces have spent in the entire, whole province, and this is in one city.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

AIMCo Governance

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There is no question that the minister of finance should not be telling AIMCo, as an arm's-length investment corporation, what specific investment decisions to make. But the minister absolutely should be telling AIMCo the rules under which it makes those decisions and making sure those rules, the codes of conduct, are enforced. This is $75 billion worth of public money, and the public, in the person of the finance minister, should always know that decisions were made appropriately. To the minister: does the minister understand that the conduct and activities of AIMCo are her responsibility as the minister of finance?

Ms Evans: Yes, absolutely, Mr. Speaker. We have also legislation that clearly articulates not only the role and relationship with the government of Alberta but the responsibility for the directors that serve on AIMCo.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think we made a tiny, tiny little bit of progress there.

If this government has acted appropriately and taken all the necessary steps to avoid a potential or perceived conflict of interest in AIMCo's investment in Precision Drilling, why won't the minister just table AIMCo's code of conduct documents and all other relevant documents and show us the proof?

Ms Evans: You know, Mr. Speaker, I know that the CEO, president and chief executive officer, Leo de Bever, contacted the hon. member opposite to make a comment relative to the challenges to, really, the code of ethics that exists between the board members and the kinds of decision-making they have. It is proper and right, I believe, for those kinds of questions to go initially to the chairman of the board, Mr. Charles Baillie, who will be pleased to answer them. We will arrange for that comment and response back. But the inference in this House about that lack of conduct, as implied by the member opposite, is totally inappropriate.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I am still waiting for that phone call that she referred to. I have not received that phone call or that contact yet.

Ms Evans: E-mail.

Mr. Taylor: E-mail? Haven't received it. Go back and check your sources, Minister.

Since ATB, another arm's-length Crown corporation, publicly displays its code of conduct, corporate statement of governance practices, and directors' independent standards on its website, if ATB can do this, why isn't the same expected of AIMCo, the manager of over $70 billion worth of public funds? And if it is expected, where is it?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, as of January 1, 2008, AIMCo was established with a board of directors that only very recently, last August, after a global search, was able to appoint president and CEO Leo de Bever. Over the last period of time his focus and energy has been committed to looking after the images, looking after the IT system and all those things the Auditor General identified. I will acknowledge that there may be more need for public communication, but the primary focus of AIMCo should be to raise the maximum amount of dollars for Albertans with Albertans' money. We will get on to making our communication refined in a way that, hopefully, will meet the needs of Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Parental Choice in Education

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Premier stated that the teaching of evolution will become optional in Alberta public schools if parents object on religious grounds. Eighty-three years after the Scopes monkey trial in Tennessee teaching evolution in public schools will again be prohibited for some children. Why will the Premier allow some children to be denied a balanced, scientific, and objective education?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, that statement is totally wrong. He was at the news conference yesterday. That statement is totally wrong, and I ask him to withdraw it. If he wants to ask questions about the act that was put here before the Legislature, that's fine, but don't come here with the wrong information.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I heard the Premier confirm it, and so did reporters because it has been also contained in the coverage of his news conference yesterday. I want to know how far this Premier is prepared to go in allowing parental choice based on religious views to affect what children are taught in public schools. Will Holocaust deniers be able to claim religious grounds to prevent their children from learning about the Holocaust? Will those who believe in the subordination of women be able to prevent their children from learning about the human . . .

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, this government supports a very, very fundamental right, and that is parental rights with respect to education. The proposed amendments are very clear. These are amendments to the legislation that was introduced in this House yesterday, and this is how – and I mentioned to the media that when you start talking about human rights, it's very easy to crank up headlines because sometimes the media will try just to crank up the emotion either through fear or some other means. But emotion gets past the hard evidence of what's before this House. Simply said, the amendments to the human rights legislation simply confirm rights that parents or guardians have already concerning the education of their children. Parents or guardians would have the right to exempt their children from courses of study, programs, or materials that include subject matter dealing explicitly with religious instruction, sexuality, or sexual orientation. This is already in the manual that the Department of Education has. This is simply putting it into the act.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I hope to get the same consideration as the Premier.

This government just spent $25 million of taxpayers' money to give Alberta a new image. All they've done is to make Alberta look like Northumberland and sound like Arkansas. Albertans are embarrassed by this government's ineptitude. When will the Premier start projecting an image of Albertans that is as modern, progressive, and culturally sophisticated as Albertans actually are?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I'm glad he asked that question. Just look at this caucus. You find me another caucus in the country of Canada that is more diverse than right here in the Alberta Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne. [interjections] The chair has recognized the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne. He is interested in the concerns of the member.

Nursing Education

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, our health care budget takes about 40 per cent of our overall budget. As funding demands on government, so do the demands of the strong health care system. To support this system, we need to ensure that we are well prepared to meet these demands. My first question is to the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology. What is the cost share for educating our nurses between the student and the Alberta taxpayer?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We in the government of Alberta look at the investment in Albertans' futures as a sharing in that investment. This vocation, nursing, is almost a hundred per cent employable, so it's a great investment for students to make. The cost to the government and taxpayers for a nursing education if you just looked at the operating costs alone is approximately $13,000 to $14,000 per year. The average, dependent upon the institution that you're in, for students in the nursing field is roughly just under 40 per cent of what the total cost would be. So taxpayers are investing about 60-plus, and the students are investing about 40.

Mr. VanderBurg: To the same minister. I have students from Whitecourt-St. Anne attending the Grant MacEwan College, and they started a four-year nursing program. How will the number of nurses going through this program impact the targets that have been set for the growing Alberta workforce to meet the demands of our future?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, in this House we've made the commitment on several occasions to the Premier's vision of where we're going with graduating nurses, 2,000 nurses by 2012. That's graduating nurses by 2012. The Grant MacEwan program is a critical and key component of that. We expect that they would be graduating upwards of 300 students per year – graduating those students per year – to reach that target, so they're a very key component of that. We look forward to some ladder opportunities as well within the system.

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, my next question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Can the minister tell us what nurse retraining initiatives the Health and Wellness ministry has undertaken to get more nurses working in this province?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's an excellent question because we have committed through the Alberta health workforce action plan some $45 million. Over the past two years we've had almost 400 former registered nurses participating in the refresher education program to become reregistered. We've also made a number of investments to ensure that we have funding for internationally trained nurses, and we're working with our postsecondary institutions to do refresher courses for licensed practical nurses.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Condominium Property Act Consultation

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government held a meeting last summer to discuss residential construction practices and condominium legislative changes, which did not include stakeholders from the condominium community. These stakeholders need to be part of these discussions as they are the ones ultimately on the hook for the poor construction of their condos. To the Minister of Service Alberta: why did the government hold a meeting to discuss condominium changes without including the condo owners, board members, and property managers, who would be most impacted by these changes?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to the meeting the hon. member is referring to, I'd like to assure the hon. member that any time that Service Alberta is looking at a particular act, especially the Condominium Property Act, we are very inclusive and we consult with a number of different people. As I indicated in the House last week, we have been looking at that property act for some time, and we are going to be moving forward on a further consultation on this very complex piece of legislation.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. So far we don't know who the minister has been consulting. To the minister again: who has the minister been consulting regarding legislative changes for the condominium community or the study involving residential construction practices?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, with respect to any piece of legislation the approach of Service Alberta is to be inclusive and respectful and to bring everyone to the table. Again, there are a number of issues that have been on the table with Service Alberta, whether it's payday loan regulation or whether it's this act. I am looking forward to further consultation on this and bringing forward more individuals. If there's a particular group that we should engage with, I'd be more than happy to meet with that group.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the minister again: what specific policy changes to protect condominium stakeholders are being considered by the minister?

2:10

Mrs. Klimchuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, we know that the Condominium Property Act has been around for some time. We know the economy has changed. We know that there are situations with mediation. There are situations with property management companies, situations with the amount of fees that are in the condo associations. There are a whole number of issues on the table, so we should be looking at the whole breadth and depth of all of those issues to make sure that the legislation is updated and inclusive of what's happening in today's world.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Crime Reduction and Prevention Strategy

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to say that much work has been done for the benefit of Albertans of helping build safe and secure communities. As hon. members know, in response to recommendation 31 from the keeping communities safe strategy the Safe Communities Secretariat was established to oversee the implementation of the task force recommendations on crime prevention. My first question is to the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General. Can the minister tell us what action is being taken to establish a comprehensive, long-term crime reduction and prevention strategy?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's very good news that we have a Safe Communities Secretariat. That was started a year ago. It's housed within my ministry. The important piece of that secretariat is that it's beginning to build that long-term plan. I think there are two components that are very important to that plan. The first is that communities need to be engaged. There's a lot of work that communities are doing right now with respect to building safe and strong communities that we need to listen to and we need to support. The second piece that is very important is bringing together the eight government departments that we think have a particular role in safe communities.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. I recently, along with my hon. colleague from Wetaskiwin-Camrose, attended a community consultation at the Ermineskin Elders Centre in my constituency with respect to the government's gang suppression initiative in Hobbema. Can the minister tell me how this particular initiative fits into the province's long-term crime prevention and reduction strategy?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is an important part of the work that the government is doing at the moment. Out of the 31 recommendations that the task force made last year, eight of them have something to do with education, awareness, prevention, or enforcement around gangs. So we're using this opportunity of the antigang summit that's coming forward in June, that the Premier will be chairing, where we will build a comprehensive gang prevention strategy to demonstrate how to work with communities and work with government departments on an integrated approach to an overall strategy. A part of that is the consultations that have been taking place across the province in eight different communities.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Finally, to the same minister: how will we use what we have learned in these consultations in developing both a gang suppression initiative and a longer term strategy?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, one of the things that we know about the work that we're doing around safe communities and building strong communities is that there are a number of pieces of work that are already happening. But what we need to do is to bring that work together in a way where we're able to benefit from one experience in one part of the province and learn from that to build on another program in another part of the province. The other piece is that it gives us the opportunity to develop new policy approaches and deliver new programs that will support the community in the work that they think needs to be done to build safer communities.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Homelessness

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans continue to be concerned about homelessness as now some are afraid of being homeless because of having lost their job. They're turning up in our offices and on our website www.budget2009.ca. These ordinary people are worried about the recent transfer of homeless and eviction prevention funding to the programs that are beyond capacity and have waiting lists of 3,000 people. To the Minister of Employment and Immigration: Jason from Calgary would like the minister to explain why he has not been able to access any employment training through income support for over two years.

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, at any one time and in any society and in any economy we find that there are people who struggle to make ends meet. In Alberta we do have some very good programs to help individuals. Those programs are important both in good times and in tougher times. We deal with individuals on a priority basis. We do have emergency assistance that's available on a very, very short-term notice. But in the long run we work with all individuals that are affected.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. David from Calgary has two questions for the Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs. Does the minister have a distinct off-reserve aboriginal housing plan that is consistent with the province's 10-year plan to end homelessness, and if not, why not?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If the hon. member doesn't mind, I'd just like to go back to the first question. I want to assure you that Jason is being well looked after, hon. member, because he is a constituent of mine. We've met with him often. I know exactly the situation. We are working very closely with Jason.

An off-reserve housing plan that's specifically for aboriginal people. The plan that we have for permanent housing for the homeless is for all people that are homeless, and that would include aboriginal people.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Jason will be delighted that we are discussing this in the House.

To the same minister: will the funding allocation for off-reserve aboriginal housing be proportional to the high percentage of urban homeless aboriginal people?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The housing program for people that are homeless will be based on, as I said, what is available for all people. The criteria are exactly the same for off-reserve aboriginal people as it is for all Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

First Nations Consultation

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 2005 the government adopted a First Nations consultation policy, and the intent was that there would be consultation with First Nations people with regard to projects that might adversely affect their treaty rights. Part of that policy was also that it would be reviewed every four years. My questions are for the Minister of Aboriginal Relations. I now have constituents asking me: since the four years are up, is the review going ahead, and what are the particulars of the review?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The member is quite right. We did bring in that policy. We were the first province, in fact, to have a First Nations policy and consultation guidelines, developed back in 2005. We will be doing that review this year as part of our larger consultation initiative. We will be doing that review with the greatest of respect for so-called treaty rights and with as much involvement as possible with First Nations right from the beginning.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Olson: Thank you. Again for the minister. Just relating to his last comment there, sometimes there can be a little bit of angst when somebody says that they're going to be consulted with. I'm just wondering if the minister can provide some particulars as to how they will be meaningfully consulted with.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, we're very committed to honouring our relationships with First Nations on a government-to-government basis. That's exactly the way it's reflected in our historic protocol agreement which our Premier signed with the grand chiefs and deputy grand chiefs and myself last year. We already have regularly scheduled meetings – that's another very important thing – with consultations with ministers, MLAs, and others. We are also very involved with them in other capacities, through which I ask them how they want to be consulted. I'm asking them to be part of the design process this time, and that will give us the most meaningful consultation, I think, that they have ever had.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Olson: Thank you. Again for the minister. No doubt the process will require some resources, and I'm told that the capacity to do that kind of a review could be an issue for some First Nations. I'm wondering if there is any funding available, then, for just the process.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, that's a very critical part of what we're trying to do as a recently established self-standing ministry: develop the specific relationships that will help move that particular issue forward. For example, we provide about $6.6 million annually to First Nations. Some of that is obviously centred right around the consultation process. With respect to this particular review, as we go down the path together with First Nations, as they provide feedback as to how they want to be involved and have input in the design, that might require us to take a look at other sources to augment the funding that they are already receiving.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Campsite Reservations

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While the $10 online registration fee will provide piece of mind for those who can afford to secure a spot in any of the 25 campgrounds where two-thirds of the sites are restricted to reservation only, for others it will be viewed as an exclusionary practice whose aim is to generate revenue rather than promote a natural recreation experience. To the Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation: what mechanisms are in place to prevent an individual with an extra hundred dollars burning a hole in his wallet from turning a publicly subsidized campsite into a season-long exclusive weekend retreat?

Mrs. Ady: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank the hon. member for talking about the new reservation system that's going to light up on Friday. It's something that Albertans have been asking for for a long time. I'm happy and pleased to say that we're ready with 25 campgrounds. I went online just a little while ago to demonstrate that site, and for the May long weekend it would cost me $88, including the $10 fee, to be able to go and use a very nice campsite in this province. These campsites have to be serviced – garbage has to be hauled out; they have to be cleaned and kept – so I don't think that that's too large an amount of money. I do think that Albertans see our campsites as a good value.

Mr. Chase: As a former campground operator in K Country I had a number of individuals question the rates, and now we've increased the rates by another $10, so it is a concern to campers, particularly during this recessionary period. Are there any public safeguards to prevent an individual from monopolizing or booking more than one site each weekend, thereby further eliminating the availability of spaces?

Mrs. Ady: Well, Mr. Speaker, in all honesty, if the hon. member was to have called a campground in the past to book a site, it would have cost him $10 to book that site, so it's not any different. That being said, I think that we will be looking at the reservation system. The beauty of an online system is that you can actually see where people are booking and how they're booking so that you can determine how to prevent those kinds of issues in the future. You can book four sites at a time. Then you've got to go off the system and go back on. We think it's a very rational way to go about it and that it will serve the majority of Albertans very well.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I very much want it to serve Albertans very well. It's these unintended consequences that I am concerned about.

Has the minister taken into consideration that by making at least a somewhat supervised park camping experience more expensive, more families may be driven to random camping, where safety and security cannot be guaranteed?

Mrs. Ady: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would say to the hon. member that we have not really made it more expensive. We are really offering much the same service as before. It is just now online, with better opportunity, I think, for fairness. We're always concerned about the random camping, and we are looking at opportunities that will create maybe a bit more of a rougher type of camping that's more affordable in the future for those that do like the random, but those are decisions we'll make in the future. This is about a state-of-the-art system that helps Albertans that are trying to book their campsites this summer.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Career Development and Academic Upgrading

Ms. Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently we learned that the number of Albertans on EI increased by more than 6,500 people in February, the highest increase in the country. Meanwhile, this government's plan for career development service and academic upgrading includes a 7 per cent cut in support for out-of-work Albertans trying to find the jobs they need. To the Minister of Employment and Immigration: how can he possibly expect to provide the growing number of out-of-work Albertans the upgrading and career development support they need when he's actually cutting back on those services?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, our priority has been and always will be to connect people with jobs and help them get the training and upgrade the skills that they require so they can succeed in the workforce. Our whole role is to assess those particular individuals, and if we sense that there's a need and if there's a desire for them to receive the upgrading, we do have the budgets to have that happen.

Ms. Notley: Well, that's great in theory, Mr. Speaker, but there's been nearly an 80 per cent increase in the number of Albertans on EI. Those benefits will last till February at the very latest, and only 1 in 3 unemployed Albertans even qualifies for EI benefits. Albertans needed a jobs budget, and the government gave them a welfare budget. To the minister: why is the minister abandoning the newly unemployed Albertans who need retraining help to support their families through this recession?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, we need to put things in perspective. When our unemployment levels are low, any type of increase will trigger a high percentage. We still have a lot of people, over 2 million, in Alberta that are presently working. There's no doubt that there are people that have lost their jobs. We're very, very sympathetic to them, and we will continue to work with them to see if we can find them additional jobs or the training that they require to meet their job requirements or additional job requirements.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's true that people have lost their jobs. Indeed, over 40,000 Albertans have lost their jobs so far this year, and no one thinks it will stop there. The number of Albertans on income support grows every month, and we know from the EI numbers that this trend will continue, yet this government is planning to provide less re-employment help to each Albertan who needs it. To the minister: just how out of touch can the minister be if he plans to give unemployed Albertans less help at exactly the time they need more help?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, we went through our budget estimates about 10 days ago, and I think I indicated to the hon. member at that particular time that our budgets have in fact increased. They have not decreased from previous years. We are putting more emphasis on training and supports. We're also finalizing agreements with our federal government to provide additional funding to those individuals that are impacted by the economic downturn. We will continue to work with them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Film Development Program

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The film and television industry brings big dollars into this province. It grows our cultural identity and brings more tourists to Alberta. But a recent cancellation of a television series shot in Calgary is the latest indication of a decline in film and television production in Alberta. My questions are for the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit. As the minister responsible for this industry, what are you doing to address this decline?

Mr. Blackett: Well, Mr. Speaker, it is true that CBC has cancelled Wild Roses production, as much as we would have loved to have it. They cancelled due to a ratings decline. As most people know, there's an economic downturn not just in Canada but across North America, and that has resulted in a downturn or a decline in the number of productions in film and television in the province and in the country. Last year the Alberta film development program guidelines were adjusted to try to help encourage more productions. We raised our cap from $1.5 million to $3 million so we could attract major motion pictures and full-feature series. We also increased the amount they were able to use in terms of their financing for the package with their broadcast partner.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My next question is to the same minister. Last year this minister committed to a new funding model for the film and television industry. What progress has been made? Or has this whole funding model been shelved?

Mr. Blackett: Well, actually, Mr. Speaker, we were looking at a funding model and we were looking at a tax credit system similar to everybody else in North America. But something has happened with this economic downturn. If you look at the situation that television, especially, finds itself in, right now the tax credit model is based on the fact that a province or state would give money to a producer who had a broadcast licence with a broadcaster. Well, the broadcasters are disappearing. The broadcasters are less able to fund their own productions. They're spending less money on Canadian productions and more on U.S. productions. So we're looking at a system that we think will be better for Alberta, not me too with everybody else. Right now the investors get their film development money two months after production instead of waiting up to 18 months.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last question to the same minister: all that being said, in these tough economic times can Alberta really afford a film development program, or can it afford not to have a film development program?

Mr. Blackett: Well, Mr. Speaker, we can't afford not to. We need a strong film and television production business to ensure that we have somebody telling our stories, somebody employing our crews, somebody filming in our great vistas. We need to have the $102 million that the sector provides to our economy, especially in these tough economic times. Our film and television industry is knowledge based, it's green, and it supports rural economic development, promotes tourism, and helps bring diversity to our economy, as I mentioned.

Lead Times for Trials

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, the Department of Justice has added Crown prosecutors to streamline the operation of the courts. However, increased resources may not have resulted in decreased trial times. During main estimates the minister indicated that trial times have increased slightly since 2007. This seems to indicate that the median time has increased from the previous total of 109 days. To the minister: can she confirm how long the median time is now in the province of Alberta?

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We appointed new Crown prosecutors for a number of reasons. One of them was to streamline the system. Another was to deal with the fact that we had an increasing number of people coming into the court system. There's no doubt that one of the reasons we did that is in order to deal with lead times and mean times. I believe that in estimates, if I recall my conversation, and it was part of an answer I gave previously in this House – whereas we have seen an increase in some lead times, we have not seen an increase in all lead times. There are specific charges where there have been slightly increased times, perhaps two or three days, but we've also seen reductions in cities and, in particular, courts.

Mr. Hehr: To understand the nature of my questions, if you could try and confirm in writing, that would be great.

Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: if the median time has surpassed the 109-day mark listed on page 208 of the 2009 ministry plan, what is the average number of days a litigant can expect between the first appearance in court and the conclusion of their matter now in the province of Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think that if we look at average mean times, we have to look at the applications that are coming forward. It depends on what court you're in, it depends what the matter is, and it depends whether you're in family court, youth court, or criminal court.

Mr. Hehr: Well, I understand that. Nevertheless, a study came out last year that said that we weren't doing very well in those measures. I assume you're familiar with that study. What I'm wondering is: are we past the 122-day national average as proposed in that study? If we are, what are we doing to combat that?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, that study that came out just about this time last year said that we had made progress in some courts and not in others, that we were in the middle of the road with respect to the country. That was before we took some steps. We're still finding those experiences. We are seeing some progress. We are seeing cases that aren't even going into the court system. I can't give you a number with respect to an average mean time because I think the way that we're approaching the situation is different than the way it's being tested.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Oil Sands Emissions

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There's been a lot of discussion on both sides of the border about oil sands and, specifically, carbon emissions from oil sands development. Last week there was some discussion in the Golden State as California debated and passed a low-carbon fuel standard. I understand Alberta officials were in attendance at the hearing. To the Minister of Energy: can he explain to the members of this Assembly why Alberta was at this hearing?

Mr. Knight: Well, most certainly I can, Mr. Speaker. The situation is that when it comes to oil sands and the development of oil sands and production of bitumen feedstock into the American market, what we want, quite simply, is not special treatment; we just want equal treatment. That's why we're at these meetings. We think it's a bit unfortunate, the result in California, given that the carbon intensity of oil sands production is equal to oil that is actually produced in places like California, Venezuela, or, for that matter, in Mexico. California's heavy oil is very carbon intensive, and it's actually produced in a similar way that in situ oil sands are produced in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Minister of Energy: could the minister explain to the Assembly what the implications of the California low-carbon fuel standard might be for Alberta's energy exports?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, we wouldn't expect that there'd be any immediate impact because we don't actually ship directly into the California market. However, we are looking at expanding markets for our products out of Alberta, and all we're asking for, again, as I said, is a level playing field for Alberta oil. California's situation shows that there is a need to continue our work with U.S. officials, number one, to protect Albertans' jobs and our economy and, secondly, to highlight our commitment to responsible energy development in the province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are some suggestions by environmental groups that the Alberta and Canadian governments are seeking special treatment for oil sands emissions. To the Minister of Environment: can he please advise how Alberta's oil sands are treated under the Alberta climate change plans and what we're seeking when it comes to federal or North American climate change plans?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can unequivocally confirm that Alberta and Canada are not looking for special treatment. In fact, as you know, there is no free pass for oil sands in Alberta's legislation. Oil sands emitters are treated exactly the same as any other large industrial emitter. We're asking for that same equal treatment in any kind of North American climate change strategy that's put in place. Our primary concern is that at the end of the day any kind of North American strategy results in a reduction in emissions where they are produced.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater.

Temporary Foreign Workers

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last May the Minister of Employment and Immigration said that he was unaware of any incidents of unpaid workers going back further than six months. However, on Monday the hon. minister admitted that over $3 million was owed to 132 Chinese temporary foreign workers working in Fort McMurray from April through to July of 2007. My first question is to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Given that wages were unpaid two years ago, why did the minister not do anything about it until now?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, we weren't aware until just very, very recently that these wages had not been paid. These discoveries occurred after the investigations following the deaths of the two Chinese workers. It was during that particular investigation when we found out that the wages had not been fully paid.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: given that the minister said also on Monday that the funds are being held in a government trust account, how did the minister get the 3 million dollars plus that was cheated from those workers in Fort McMurray back from the labour broker in Hong Kong?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, I believe there are two different situations. One is that there are some wages that were owing prior to them departing, and then as part of their contract there were some wages that were transferred over. We're dealing with the 3 million dollars plus that are held in a government trust account. Those will be disbursed directly to the workers who had not been paid for their work prior to their return to China.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: where did the Minister of Employment and Immigration collect the $3 million that was cheated from the temporary foreign workers in Fort McMurray? Where did he collect that money from?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, I believe those were collected from the various contractors that were involved on the job site.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Municipal Capital Financing

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Capital Finance Authority Act allows certain nonprofit groups such as municipalities to access capital at reasonable rates through the Alberta Capital Finance Authority. Other groups such as foundations which build and run seniors' lodges cannot. My first question is to the Minister of Finance and Enterprise. My constituents would like to know why municipalities have access to this low-cost capital while other nonprofit groups such as the Greater North Foundation, which runs seniors' lodges across northern Alberta, do not.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our practice has been to confine the access to these funds to those people that have either been elected or appointed to do jobs that the government needs and deems to be important and have been given a legislative mandate. If you look at a municipality, they have received funds through the ACFA, and that's their prerogative. The attitude of our government has been to channel people who want to have access to those kinds of funds for particular projects to go and seek approval at the municipal table first before moving further.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since municipalities have a debt-load cap, some feel that they should not have to borrow on behalf of these nonprofit groups. In addition, a foundation may have to get sign-off from a dozen municipalities, especially when you include summer villages, just to apply for a grant for access to capital. To the same minister: will the minister allow these nonprofit groups to go directly to the authority for capital?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, when we reviewed this practice last year, we determined that it was not wise to do so. Those were times of a different nature than we have today. Subsequent to that and in more recent weeks because of the concerns that have been raised by the hon. members and others in this Legislative Assembly, we will review this practice to see if it would be prudent to change our policy.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question to the Minister of Municipal Affairs: can the Minister of Municipal Affairs tell us whether there are opportunities for nonprofit groups like seniors' lodges to access funding through the municipal sustainability initiative?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This government is committed to building strong communities. Recent updates to the MSI guidelines have made it easier for municipalities to invest in nonprofit organizations. Capital and operating support is available and eligible under MSI if it's operated by a municipality or if it's operated by a nonprofit organization. Municipalities have the autonomy and the ability to make decisions on what they believe is important in their own communities. MSI has made a positive impact in our communities and will continue to do so.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that was 96 questions and responses today. In a few seconds from now we'll continue with the routine.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Support for Public Education

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's public education deficit. The Alberta government's support for public education is inadequate from kindergarten through to postgraduate studies. StatsCan figures confirm that 40 per cent of Albertans are functionally illiterate. Alberta has the highest dropout rate in Canada. Depending on how you define dropout or failure to complete high school within a consecutive five-year period, the number of students who fail to graduate ranges from one-third to one-quarter. An even more dramatic dropout reality occurs in English as a second language, where 75 per cent of students fail to complete high school within five years. Considering that every dollar invested in education yields a $3 return, academic failure undermines our economic viability.

Another lost opportunity Alberta statistic is the fact that year after year one-quarter of eligible high school graduates who achieved the grades necessary and can afford our inflated postsecondary tuition rates are turned away due to lack of postsecondary seats in Alberta. A key component of a successful education system is building upon a strong foundation. Because the government has failed to implement the recommendations of the Learning Commission, local school boards have been left scrambling to find the resources to fund full-day kindergarten for the most socioeconomically vulnerable or language-deficient children, never mind considering trying to find the money necessary to fund half-day junior kindergarten. The province still has a long way to go before achieving the 1 to 17 K to 3 pupil-teacher ratio six years after the reduction recommendation was accepted.

A strongly supported education system will be a key factor in eliminating the poverty under which 78,000 Alberta children were living prior to the recession's full force being felt. Our most important resource, the key to Alberta's survival, never mind success, is our youth. Education must be viewed as an investment rather than as an expense.

The Speaker: Is there an additional government speaker in Members' Statements today? Okay.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Bill 34 Drug Program Act

Mr. Liepert: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today and request leave to introduce first reading of Bill 34, the Drug Program Act. This being a money bill, His Honour the Honourable Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

This legislation puts in place a framework to guide pharmaceutical policies for the future.

[Motion carried; Bill 34 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last Friday, April 24, at Dr. E.W. Coffin elementary school in Calgary-Varsity I had the honour and pleasure of participating in the celebration of the SEEDS water conservation challenge. The students, staff, and supportive parents of this amazing school together with the corporate sponsorship of Devon Canada and Canada Safeway have dedicated themselves to preserving our environment. Previously they transformed a portion of their schoolyard into a creatively designed and illustratively signed nature preserve.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the chair is pleased to table five copies of the School at the Legislature report card for 2007-2008. This is a Legislative Assembly educational program for grade 6 students cosponsored with community partners Priority Printing, Access Media Group, CKUA Radio Network along with Via Rail Canada and the downtown Edmonton Rotary Club.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of the hon. Ms Evans, Minister of Finance and Enterprise, pursuant to the Insurance Act the Alberta Automobile Insurance Rate Board 2008 annual report.

The Speaker: Hon. members, before calling Orders of the Day, let us all congratulate the Clerk of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta, who has arrived at another momentous occasion in his time frame. It was a number of years ago that he entered the world.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 36 Alberta Land Stewardship Act

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to bring Bill 36, the Alberta Land Stewardship Act, before the Assembly for second reading today.

Alberta's new land-use framework was adopted this past December. This framework had three goals: a robust economy, healthy ecosystems, and people-friendly communities. The Alberta Land Stewardship Act creates the legal authority to turn these goals into realities.

Over the past generation Albertans have experienced unprecedented growth. Our population has more than doubled, and economic activity has increased at an even faster rate. We all know that Albertans have benefited greatly from this growth, but this same growth has crowded many of our landscapes and in some areas tested the health of our air, land, water, and wildlife. In some areas of the eastern slopes, for example, on the same parcel of land it's not uncommon to find a cattle grazing lease, an active forestry disposition, a gas well, recreational hikers and anglers, bears and deer, and, of course, the critical headwaters for the streams and rivers that water southern Alberta.

When it gets this crowded, we all lose. What worked when we were only 1 million Albertans is working less well at 3 and a half million and will not work at 5 million or 10 million. So it comes down to this, Mr. Speaker. If we want to keep what we have here in Alberta – and we have a lot – we have to change how we do it, and that's what the Alberta Land Stewardship Act does.

Regional planning is the cornerstone of the Land Stewardship Act. The act establishes seven planning regions, identifies the contents of the regional plans, outlines the planning process, and sets out the roles of the regional advisory councils and the secretariat. The seven regions are congruent with Alberta's major watersheds, a policy breakthrough that will facilitate the co-ordination of our land and water policies, and the act makes these regional plans binding on the provincial government, local governments, and all boards and commissions.

The act also creates four new stewardship policy tools. Voluntary conservation easements, already a growing presence on our landscapes, are further encouraged and expanded to include agricultural lands. Conservation offsets will help to protect land for conservation purposes and to compensate for industrial development. The transfer of development credits will rein in urban sprawl and prevent the fracturing of agricultural land and protect landscapes and habitat. Conservation directives will help protect valued landscapes and views on private and public lands. Where a directive is applied to private land, if there is a resulting loss of value, it provides for landowner compensation, a Canadian first in respecting property rights.

The Alberta Land Stewardship Act includes consequential amendments to more than 25 other acts. Most of these amendments are simply to ensure compliance with regional plans. Two of the amended acts are under my ministry. Amendments under the Public Lands Act will allow us to better manage access to public land and support conservation and recreation on those lands. Both the Public Lands Act and the Forests Act will have updated offence provisions, with higher fines and creative sentencing and the authority to establish a dispute resolution and appeal process. Also, the Forests Act will reference regional plans and clarify decisions and activities related to timber dispositions. Finally, the ability to create forest land-use zones, or FLUZ, is moved from the Forests Act to the Public Lands Act to facilitate the better management of crowded landscapes.

Mr. Speaker, work has already started on planning for the lower Athabasca region. Its regional advisory council is in place, and the advisory council for the South Saskatchewan will be announced in May. Timelines call for the regional plans for both of these regions to be completed in 2010. We need the legislative authority to ensure this work gets done in a timely manner. Bill 36, the Alberta Land Stewardship Act, provides that authority.

I would ask that second reading be adjourned. Thank you.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 43
Marketing of Agricultural Products
Amendment Act, 2009 (No. 2)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and move second reading of Bill 43, the Marketing of Agricultural Products Amendment Act, 2009 (No. 2).

The proposed amendments to the legislation will give producers of four commodity groups the same choice as other producers, a choice which they do not currently have. It will make our legislation consistent. It will help ensure accountability, it will help ensure leadership, and it will help ensure responsiveness of the commissions. Under the Marketing of Agricultural Products Act, or MAPA for short, agricultural producers are able to form boards and commissions. Twenty producer boards and commissions currently operate under MAPA, including seven supply-managed marketing boards, which Bill 43 does not impact or change in any way.

The remaining are commissions that collect mandatory per-head, per-acre, or per-pound levies, commonly called check-offs, for producers. Producers belonging to nine commodity groups have the option of requesting a refund. However, producers in the remaining four commodity groups are legally obliged to pay the check-off but have no means to ask for a refund. Bill 43 would change that and give beef, pork, sheep, and potato producers that fundamental right of choice. These producers would now have the ability to request a refund from their respective organizations, particularly if they are not satisfied with their association. Very simply, Mr. Speaker, what is being proposed is to give these producers the right and the ability to choose, to have a voice if they do not feel the organization has delivered value or met their needs.

It is important to note that the nine commissions with refundable check-offs all operate successfully and are thriving organizations that still have the financial means to support their members' needs. Yes, Mr. Speaker, some producers will request refunds when this change is made, but not every producer will. On average in the other nine commissions only about 7 to 10 per cent of the producers request refunds. Making the check-offs refundable for the remaining four commissions will encourage the commissions to remain relevant by being responsive to their members' needs and help ensure accountability. Producers who feel that their needs have been represented will see value in those commissions and likely won't request a refund. Perhaps for some of the commissions it will help them regain an active and engaged membership.

Beef, pork, sheep, and potato producers, like the rest of the producers paying check-offs in Alberta, should be able to decide if a commission is representing their needs, if they're getting value for their hard-earned dollars that laws are requiring them to pay for their respective commissions. If the answer is no to either of those two questions, those producers should not be forced under law to continue to provide financial support to a commission that they don't feel represents them.

I know we'll hear from some vocal individuals that will say that making these four check-offs refundable will destroy the associations, Mr. Speaker, but this is not about the industry associations. This is about the future viability of the industry itself and the future success of all of Alberta's producers, whether they're big or small and regardless of the commodity that they produce. Keeping the status quo and allowing commissions to be complacent will not allow for a profitable future for our producers and will not drive the industry ahead. This is about allowing new leadership and realistic market-based strategies to re-energize the industry.

It's also about fairness. It's about choice. It's about a successful future. As a Conservative government our law should not dictate what Albertans do with their money, what group they have to pay dues to, and whom they have to support with their own funds.

It's also important that our legislation is consistent, and Bill 43 is just the way to accomplish this. If passed, this change would not go into effect until each commission's 2010-2011 fiscal year. This time frame gives the commissions adequate time to make the necessary adjustments internally and to secure their members' willing support rather than legislated support for their organization. The Agricultural Products Marketing Council will continue to work closely with each commission and support them through the transition.

I look forward to the debate and receiving the support of members for this bill. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

With that, I would like to move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 44
Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism
Amendment Act, 2009

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Culture and Community Spirit.

Mr. Blackett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Bill 44, the Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Amendment Act, 2009, is the first update to our human rights legislation in almost 13 years. It is a key component of my department's review of Alberta's human rights system, with the goal of reducing discrimination in Alberta. We'll do this by focusing on three key areas of improvement: efficiency, effectiveness, and transparency. We also want to make sure that the commission has the capacity it needs to effectively serve all Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, this government is committed to ensuring all Albertans have equal opportunity to participate in the life of Alberta and to maximize their individual potential. Alberta's population is growing in size and diversity. We need to ensure that the act and the commission continue to meet the priorities and needs of a changing population in the most efficient and effective manner possible. The bill strives to meet this challenge with a number of administrative changes to the commission to reduce the time it takes to process and review a complaint. For example, the commission receives more than 30,000 inquiries per year. In 2008-09 they received 1,245 potential complaints in writing. All of these written complaints need to be carefully reviewed by commission staff.

In addition, the amendments will clarify the Alberta Human Rights and Citizenship Commission's role by removing "citizenship" from both its name and guiding legislation. The process for handling appeals as they arise will also be improved by ensuring that they are directed to members of a tribunal. This improved process will also increase transparency and will also make amendments that are consistent with current legislation and judicial decisions such as writing in sexual orientation. The rights of parents on the education of their child would also be confirmed. That is why it's important to support Bill 44, the Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Amendment Act, 2009.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta already has strong human rights legislation, and these changes are simply designed to fine-tune, update, and make it more effective and efficient. The legislation has not been revised, as I mentioned before, for over 13 years now. Although we've made some important changes to the commission already, including hiring a new chief commissioner, more needs to be done. I'm working closely with our new chief commissioner, the hon. Blair

Mason, to implement some practices that will help speed up the process and improve the transparency.

As part of Budget 2009 I've increased the commission's budget by $1.7 million, a 26 per cent increase, to make sure that the commission is able to implement the changes starting this year. We'll use these dollars to hire more staff, ensure that more legal resources are in place, and move the commission staff to new facilities away from those in my department. We can also use these dollars to help the commission build the capacity it needs to more effectively serve those who are newly immigrated to Alberta from other parts of the world. Our focus is to reduce discrimination, Mr. Speaker, and to enhance the system's ability to investigate and mediate complaints in a timely manner while maintaining fairness to all parties in the process.

Over the past year I have received input from several interested groups, including the Sheldon Chumir Foundation for Ethics in Leadership, faith leaders, the Canadian Civil Liberties Association, and others. The opinions of Albertans will continue to help ensure that the legislation reflects the core values and the principles of the province and its citizens. In our world today it is important to do everything we can to prevent discrimination and provide the means necessary to address it when it occurs. I think these changes will help us do that. However, many of the changes we would like to make to improve the complaint resolution process can only happen if these legislative amendments proceed.

Mr. Speaker, I'm here to ask for support in improving the human rights system so that it can benefit all Albertans. I move that we adjourn debate.

Carbon Capture and Storage Funding Act

[Adjourned debate March 3: Dr. Taft]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and join debate in second reading on Bill 14, the Carbon Capture and Storage Funding Act, and to add my own two cents' worth to $2 billion worth of proposed legislation. [interjections] Do I hear some groans from the other side? I promise that's the last bad joke of the afternoon, from me at any rate.

I think that by and large this is a good bill, and we will be supporting it as far as it goes. The problem that we have with this – and this is to speak to the broader issue of what we're going to do about global warming and greenhouse gases in the province of Alberta in concert with the government of Canada and the government of the United States because it's going to be a continent-wide approach. President Obama has made that pretty clear. Prime Minister Harper has made it pretty clear that he is going to work with President Obama on a joint Canadian-U.S. project that will involve cap and trade systems most likely, effectively put a price on greenhouse gases, so this province is going to have to look at ways to reduce its emissions. Otherwise, it will suffer a significant loss of competitiveness.

Carbon capture and storage is unquestionably one way of doing that, one way that is in many respects ideally suited to the geology of this province. The very same reservoirs that produce the oil and gas that made this province what it is today are now a natural storage point for carbon dioxide. There's the potential added benefit that the injection of the carbon dioxide down into these reservoirs can help us engage in some enhanced oil recovery or enhanced coal-bed methane recovery, so that could in effect create some revenue that will go some way to defray the costs of the carbon capture and sequestration system.

So, you know, it's good as far as it goes. It has some very real applications, I think, for this province. It has some very real applications for large point emitters, as they are called, the institutions that put out a lot of carbon dioxide in one place. That means in this province fossil fuel electrical generating stations, and that really is the single major source of our greenhouse gas emissions. Coal-fired generating stations are responsible for producing almost half of the power that we generate in the province of Alberta. Good solution for that. No question about it. Good solution in terms of upgraders for bitumen, should we get some significant number of them off the ground, because capturing and transporting the carbon requires infrastructure spending, so the desire is to get as much carbon as possible out of one place, and we have some good candidates for that.

We have some candidates, too, that are not so good. I mean, there has been much talk from the government side about how this will be applied in the oil sands. In that upgraders are part of the oil sands process, it certainly applies there. But there are some real doubts at this point, as I understand it, about whether carbon capture and sequestration is really a solution that you can apply to the many small power plants that are burning natural gas to provide steam for steam-assisted gravity drainage for that kind of oil sands extraction, so that may be a problem.

Nevertheless, this is a big step in the right direction. So what's our concern, really, with it? Well, the concern is that it's the only step in the direction of reducing greenhouse gasses whether we're talking about intensity-based targets or actual emissions. I know that there are others in this House that will have and probably have in many different opportunities, many different venues, many different formats debated that question of intensity-based targets versus actual emissions. I'm not going to go there right now. For the purposes of my argument this doesn't make any difference.

For the purposes of my argument what I'm saying is that carbon capture and sequestration is the only tool we have in the box, the only magic trick we can pull out of our bag of magic tricks, and I think that's part of the problem here. So let's go ahead and do carbon capture and storage. Let's go ahead and pass the Carbon Capture and Storage Funding Act, but let's also be far more aggressive on some of the other options, the other methods of addressing greenhouse gas emissions.

That's where I find that the government's strategy around greenhouse gas emissions is lacking at this point. Perhaps it wouldn't have been lacking so much if the government was going to be a little more aggressive about Green TRIP. Green TRIP was announced with much fanfare at the same time as carbon capture and sequestration, and each project, each strategy had $2 billion set aside for it. That aggregate total of $4 billion does still exist although under Bill 33, the Fiscal Responsibility Act, and the provisions of Budget 2009 the proposal is to move those monies along with the capital account into the new sustainability fund to give a total of about $17 billion in emergency savings that'll get us through the tough times ahead.

I understand the rationale behind that and agree with some of it and maybe have some problems around the edges of some of it, but agreeing with the rationale doesn't change the fact that all the real money dedicated to Green TRIP in this coming fiscal year has been reduced from a potential $2 billion. It's not that I think that there was ever a plan to try and spend $2 billion on buses and LRT cars and innovative public transit systems in one year, but that $2 billion promise has been whittled down in real terms to $10 million this year, which is the price, depending on the model that you buy, of maybe 20 buses or 10 LRT cars, which doesn't make a huge difference there.

The reason why I bring this up is because we know that public transit could make a significant difference. We know that getting cars off the road makes a difference, and we know if from nothing else than the Calgary experience – and, by the way, I suspect that very shortly we're going to see that experience replicated here in Edmonton now that the south leg of the Edmonton LRT is open. We know what the experience in Calgary has been over the last five, seven, 10 years, which is this: every time the city of Calgary can get its hands on another set of C-Train cars to put on those tracks, it's a matter, it seems, of moments, Mr. Speaker, a matter of days before that additional rolling stock is full to capacity.

If you build it and it can get you from point A to point B, they will come, and they will ride it, even in Alberta, which had, certainly when I moved here 23 years ago, a reputation as the last province in the world where anybody ever wanted to get on a bus or public transit. Well, times have changed, and urban Albertans are certainly very willing and very eager to ride public transit when it gets them in a quick and efficient manner from where they are to where they need to be. Certainly, LRT systems do that. I know that we talked, the Transportation minister and I, in Transportation department estimates debates about the desire for some innovative developments in rapid transit, regional transit programs, that sort of thing.

The thinking is going on on the government side of the House and the thinking is going on at a lot of other different levels around making public transit work well in Alberta: regional transit systems, for instance, regional transit models that complement one another. It's just that it's not very possible to do much about it with only $10 million in the budget. We do a little bit of early stage planning, but you're not going to get too deep into that. That's one example, Mr. Speaker, of alternative methods of addressing greenhouse emissions and reducing greenhouse gas emissions.

The point here, really – and I could go on. It doesn't appear that anybody in the House thinks I'm going on and on and on too long yet, so I'll wrap it up here pretty quick.

The point is that there are a number of alternatives – sorry; alternatives is the wrong word to use, Mr. Speaker – a number of options in addition to carbon capture and storage that we, I believe, should be pursuing as aggressively as possible given that this is a different fiscal and economic climate than a year ago. As the President of the Treasury Board and I discussed at some length in estimates last night, that requires different approaches, but it also requires some re-engineering of the way we've always done things. Here's a classic example of something that allows for precisely that. It's not even so much re-engineering as engineering something entirely new because we really haven't responded to the greenhouse gas threat in a meaningful way yet.

This Bill 14 is a good start. There's no question about that in my mind. I will be voting for it along, I think, with my colleagues when the time comes at the various stages, but I would urge the government to produce some follow-up legislation really quick that addresses some of the other options so that we're not putting all our carbon reduction eggs in one basket.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I'll take my seat and see if there are others who wish to join the debate. Thank you.

The Speaker: Well, the hon. member now can participate under Standing Order 29(2)(a) in a five-minute question-and-comment period if there are questions to the hon. member.

There being no questions, the chair is ready to recognize another speaker. The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Bill 14, the Carbon Capture and Storage Funding Act, is of course, as we all know, a very important one in terms of how we address the emissions that we create in this province. I, for one, would certainly never dream of standing up here – I certainly have some opinions on things that I have read – to say that I really fully understand exactly how all of this works and the ins and outs of the good and the bad. I guess a question from someone who doesn't come from within the industry would be: 20 years from now how do we know this stuff isn't going to bubble up out of the ground?

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Having said that, this is a good bill and clearly one that has to be done. The object is really to establish a fund that would provide for projects that capture and store carbon dioxide emissions. The bill would set up a $2 billion fund that would provide for a number of carbon capture and storage projects in Alberta. Currently the government is planning five projects. The government plans for the systems set up under this fund to store around 5 million tonnes of carbon dioxide annually by 2015.

I would like to repeat at this point, too, what my colleague from Calgary-Currie has said, that I think we really have to look at alternative methods as well as the carbon capture. Of course, the thing that I would like to see the most is huge conservation of our energy so that we don't have to produce as much. The government needs to be able to try to create other tools so that the public interest in the investment is protected and emphasized.

The carbon dioxide emissions are a serious problem for the global climate, as we all know. Man-made carbon dioxide levels are far above the natural base level. The excess gas prevents natural venting of the planetary heat, so the world is steadily warming. The exact impacts of this warming are not known, but the general probabilities are, and they imply a world with much more severe weather conditions, rising sea levels, increased massive disruption to human, animal, and plant life all over the planet.

At this point I would just like to sort of make a bit of a personal observation. Yes, I am worried about climate change, but what I'm more worried about is right next to home, right down at my level. I'm worried about the fact that we should conserve. The other thing that I'm even more worried about is the pollution that we are creating on our planet that has really nothing to do with climate change. I think that is a whole other issue, but climate change often seems to be the umbrella that they use over everything. I'm worried about the fact that our rivers are polluted. I'm worried about the fact that our air is polluted. I'm not sure what kind of food I'm eating. It's these sorts of things, that are actually right on my doorstep and affect me every day, that I'm probably more worried about than the actual climate change as a subject.

The climate change in Alberta will probably be felt primarily in the increase in drought conditions as rainfall lessens and the glaciers that feed our rivers shrink. Again, the glaciers may be shrinking, but when we look at them, there's a tremendous amount of pollution caught in the ice of those glaciers.

In 2006 the British government commissioned a report by Sir Nicholas Stern on the economic impacts of climate change. The report suggested that by the middle of the century unabated climate change could cost the global economy between 5 and 20 per cent of the global GDP, equivalent to trillions of dollars.

The naturally occurring greenhouse gases help regulate the earth's climate by trapping heat in the atmosphere and reflecting it back to the surface. Over the past 200 years increased atmospheric concentration of greenhouse gases resulting from human activity such as the burning of fossil fuels and deforestation have amplified this process. The deforestation, I believe, can be very easily fixed. Probably it's an easier fix than the greenhouse emissions and the trillions of dollars that it will cost us for carbon capture.

This is just a very small example. My constituency office is right next to a tire place that actually regrinds the tires and retreads them, and there is a smell coming out of there, and just not too far down the road are Canbra and Maple Leaf foods, that fry potatoes. That odour isn't all the best in the world either, and we get those odours in my office. What I decided I would do is get plants. I now have five large plants and four small plants. Everyone knows that I'm not good with plants, so I've hired a plant lady who keeps them alive for me. I cannot prove it, and I don't have any scientific evidence, but I know that the air quality in my office as a result of those plants is better. We notice it every day. We even noticed it in the winter when the heat was on. Again, there's a different odour that goes through. So deforestation, I think, is a huge area that we could be looking at because the trees do suck up the carbon that's in the air.

Alberta is one of the worst jurisdictions in the world in terms of per capita carbon dioxide emissions. In the data from various sources, including the government of Canada, the United Nations, and the World Resources Institute, Alberta has a worse per capita emission of greenhouse gases than Qatar, which is the worst country in the world. In other words, if Alberta were a country, it would be at the top of the list of greenhouse gas producers. The emissions in Alberta for 2005, according to the government of Canada, were 71 tonnes per person, with only Saskatchewan slightly ahead at 71.6 tonnes.

I think that those kinds of statistics are not new to us. I don't think that anyone is surprised at those statistics. I think that the government does recognize that there are some pretty strong reasons out there why we should be doing this carbon capture, and kudos to them for going ahead and looking at what we can do. I think there's still a lot of work to be done on what's going to happen. As I've mentioned before, what will be the long-term effects of this?

One of the main reasons, of course, for Alberta's oversized emissions is our reliance on fossil fuels. Again, we would go back to wind power with our windmills and, certainly, the wind that we have. I can certainly vouch for southern Alberta in the massive winds that we have, of course the argument being that they aren't steady at all times. Then my next thing would be that the sun in southern Alberta usually is quite steady. Between the sun and the wind I think that we could have a very steady source for creating our energy.

Most of the other provinces in Canada have access to cleaner solutions such as hydro power. That means that they don't produce greenhouse gases. Ontario produces much of its electricity through nuclear power, which, while it has all sorts of other environmental concerns that do not make it a good option for addressing climate change, does mean that there are fewer greenhouse gases emitted.

One of the things that I think about Ontario being able to produce hydro power is that we have to have a way – and this is one thing that is a starting point. I know I've spoken against TILMA, not so much the concept, again, not the what but the how, but I think it's a starting point. So my question after that starting point would be: why is a lot of Ontario's hydro power going to the States? Why are we not doing east-west? Why are we not working tighter as a country and opening up barriers? The answer, probably, to part of that is that we need transmission lines. Well, I think that possibly we should be sitting down and talking about transmission lines east-west because hydro power, of course, is so renewable. In southern Alberta it may not be so renewable. Certainly, water is a problem in Alberta. But in Ontario at this point in time it isn't.

The main way in which emissions could be reduced in coming years will be through the imposition of market forces through cap-and-trade systems or carbon taxes. These will put a price on greenhouse gases either directly or indirectly, causing people to move towards other sources of energy. I'm not sure that that's a bad thing. In fact, I think it's a good thing. I think that we will be looking at solar panels on our garages. We will be looking at small windmills on the tops of our houses. We will be looking at better forms of conservation within our homes, within our businesses.

I spoke last week about a business that we have in Lethbridge that has done that very thing. They have not only cut down on their use of energy, but they have ways of conserving their heat so that they can even recycle their own heat internally. These are the kinds of things we really have to be looking at.

In terms of the cap and trade President Obama has stated that he'll bring in the cap and trade. The response of the Prime Minister suggested that this will be a joint Canada-U.S. project. As Alberta is covered by the system, the province will have to look at ways of reducing emissions; otherwise, it will suffer a significant loss of competitiveness. I think that from some of the things that we have been hearing just lately even out of California, I'm not sure that cap and trade is up for discussion anymore. I think it's something that will be going ahead. Cap and trade is often touted as the solution to the oil sands' reputation as a greenhouse gas pollution problem, one of the things that comes partly along with our oil sands.

Again I'm back to this: why aren't we going east-west? Why aren't we keeping some of our stuff in Canada? We have so few upgraders in this province, and we are shipping our bitumen south, which is not a surprise to anyone. We need more upgraders. If we can't put them here, then let's put them in Saskatchewan; let's put them in B.C.; let's put them in Manitoba. Let's put them where we can start doing our trade going east-west. There's nothing wrong with sending some of our product to the States to be manufactured and then sold back to us, but I think that we can do it ourselves. I think we owe it to ourselves because these are, after all, our natural resources. I think that we should get the very last dollar out of our own natural resources. We are more than capable of doing it. I think that incentives for upgraders should be on the table in terms of discussions.

One of the things that, as usual, comes to my mind is that as with almost every single bill that I've dealt with, certainly more lately than before, there are so many regulations that allow the Lieutenant Governor in Council to make these regulations relating to all and any aspect of the bill and the bill's intent. Again, many of these things should be very clearly defined and put in legislation. It's a tremendous amount of power within very few people's hands, which, of course, we know is cabinet. These are the things that should be really clear in the legislation so that surprises don't come. This kind of behaviour can also lead to . . . [Ms Pastoor's speaking time expired]

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, we have five minutes available for comments or questions. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you. I was listening intently to our colleague. There's one thing I always want to ask, and I wonder what her position on it is. I've been here long enough to remember this discussion being a little bit around where there were proposals to build upgraders and refinery capacity around Edmonton, particularly in the heartland. It was not uncommon for members of her own caucus and the ND caucus to rise in here and say: "Stop that. There are environmental concerns. This needs to be studied and studied over again. Delay it. Make it last." Often those who invest big dollars in building upgraders and refineries clearly told us: you know, it's much easier to do it south of the 49th parallel because we don't have to put up with the opposition and the barriers that are being put before us in Alberta. I wouldn't say a lot but the majority of this opposition was coming from your caucus and some from the ND caucus. Now you're on the other side arguing that if only we'd built more upgraders and refineries, we wouldn't be shipping bitumen down south. How do you reconcile that?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. Thank you very much for that, hon. colleague. If I recall, prior to the last election one of the things that we spoke about was our policy called Western Tiger. That was to share upgrading with Saskatchewan and B.C. I'm not quite sure where that's coming from. The fact that things are cheaper south of the border because of less environmental oversight I don't think holds true anymore under the Obama administration. I think it's very clear that they are very aware of the need for strong environmental studies. In fact, I might be wrong and stand to be corrected, but I do believe that the Obama government has also backed off on some of the drilling they were going to allow offshore and in some of their protected areas in terms of a massive park, I believe, in Alaska. I think that they've backed off on allowing that. Times have certainly changed by elections both here in the province and in the United States.

But clearly, our policy was called the western tiger, and we really did want upgraders to be shared across western Canada.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, unless I'm missing something, you're arguing that all this upgrading capacity should have been built in Alberta since the inauguration of President Obama because the rules have changed so drastically in the United States since that time, and you're also arguing that we should have built refining and upgrading capacity in Saskatchewan and Manitoba and not have been building it in Alberta.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Nice stretch. Nice stretch. Good try. No, not at all. I'm not saying anything about what has happened since the Obama administration, which is – what? – a hundred days old. I don't think anyone has had a chance to even have some good beers in the meantime in a hundred days. It's not that long.

No. What we were saying with the western tiger was that we need to keep our upgraders in Canada. Saskatchewan was certainly going toward that, and they were getting some money. The point is: let's keep our upgraders here; let's keep our own natural resources here. We don't necessarily always have to be Alberta first. There's nothing wrong with sending our bitumen to Saskatchewan, where they, too, could have upgraders. It isn't always about us, us, us. It's supposed to be about us as Canadians.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. member to take the five minutes?

Seeing none, the chair shall now recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona on the bill.

Ms Notley: Thank you. It's a pleasure to be able to rise to participate in the debate on Bill 14, the Carbon Capture and Storage Funding Act. This is my first opportunity to speak to this bill since it's been introduced. I'd like to start right at the outset by saying that unlike other members in this House, I and the rest of my caucus will be voting against this bill. We do not support it. So that's sort of the introductory comment to this. Having said that, I'd like to give a few reasons for why that would be the case.

I think that, you know, the idea of carbon capture and storage is an untested but theoretically possible effective means to control greenhouse gas emissions. I think the idea of pursuing something which has a great risk to it but which has the potential, maybe, to play a role in reducing greenhouse gas emissions in some contexts can be a worthwhile venture. I appreciate that the objective here, in theory anyway, is to find some way for Alberta to commence some activity, any activity, geared towards reducing greenhouse gas emissions and that this might ultimately be a solution.

The difficulty is that, first of all, most experts on the issue don't believe that it will actually function as any kind of meaningful solution within the next 25 years and potentially much longer than that. In addition, we are, as this government has said to us repeatedly in the last few weeks and months, in a new world in Alberta. We are in a world where we have to look very, very critically at every dollar we spend, and we have to know that we're doing it wisely on behalf of Albertans. Frankly, as members opposite have said repeatedly, sometimes when you are in that environment, you need to pick winners and losers. You know, not everything can be funded. Not every program can be funded, not every service can be provided, and now we're in a process of picking winners and losers.

In that context I think you have to bring a very, very critical eye to this process, this carbon capture storage experiment, and the $2 billion price tag which is attached to this carbon capture and storage experiment. It is, as I've said, very, very costly, and it has, of course, yet to be proven. There is some good theoretical science out there – absolutely – but there is no example.

Mr. Liepert: Go to Weyburn.

Ms Notley: I know all about Weyburn, but it's not far enough along to justify a $2 billion investment. It's not. It's absolutely not.

I will get to why it is still only a theoretical success, but I want to talk first about what we're losing. What we're doing is that we're losing $2 billion out of our budget. We are losing $2 billion, that is not going to health care, which is not going to bring more nurses in, which is not opening long-term care beds, which is not expanding hospitals, which is not doing – and this is the key point – a whole bunch of other far more effective stuff that would help bring our greenhouse gas emissions down.

That is the place where I want to just start with this. The fact of the matter is that there are far more efficacious ways to reduce our greenhouse gas emissions than the theoretical, very expensive science behind carbon capture and storage; that is, simply reducing the energy that we use through retrofitting, through reducing the energy that people use in their homes and in their businesses and in their cars.

Anybody who knows anything about greenhouse gas emissions knows that the biggest bang for our buck for greenhouse gas emissions – you need money to do that. You need money to retrofit. You need money to bring down our energy use rates. You know what else that does? It creates jobs. You invest that money into broad-based retrofitting and energy reduction strategies. You put Albertans back to work. You know what? The second that retrofit is done to a building, that building stops producing as much greenhouse gas. So it works, and it works better.

The stats out there show, as this government in the past used to be very happy to tell us, that industry is not the primary producer of greenhouse gas emissions, that, in fact, it's generally Albertans. That's not going to be the case over the course of years. The tar sands will ultimately be the primary producer, but right now it's not. So the place to get the biggest bang for your buck is in retrofitting. You create jobs and you reduce greenhouse gas emissions and you do it right away. But these guys want to spend $2 billion on an experiment.

Now, the next question, then, is: how effective can carbon capture and storage be? Well, we've talked already about: what are the projections for where our greenhouse gas emissions are going to come from over the next 20 years? Who are the biggest culprits in terms of the production of greenhouse gas emissions? Right now we know it's primarily coal-based electricity generation. We also know that 15, 20 years down the road from now, even less, it will actually be the tar sands that are generating the most greenhouse gas emissions, yet it's pretty clear that the carbon capture and storage strategy is not designed to address that particular industrial polluter. It may work with the coal-based electricity generation. It may be able to have a notable impact there – it may – but the technology is not developed for it to have a significant impact in the tar sands.

The first thing, then, is that the area of our economy that is most likely to contribute to the growth of our greenhouse gas emissions is immune to any reductions that might be brought about through this particular strategy. Hmm. An effective way to use our money? I would say not so much.

The other question is, of course, that there is still a fair amount of uncertainty out there around the safety and environmental implications of greenhouse gas storage, or whatever, in our lands. I know everyone says that it's all great because we've got all this porous land. Maybe it is, but there is, frankly, a lot that we don't know about that yet. There is a lot that we don't know.

The next question then, the other concern that we have, is whether or not this is something that's going to be able to be effective quickly enough. Everybody has been quite clear that the carbon capture and storage mechanism is not going to be able to bring down our greenhouse gas emissions for somewhere between 25 and 40 years. Yet the intergovernmental panel on climate change tells us that we need to start a curve of reduction by 2015 if we're going to have any impact. So here we are investing money that is not going to a whole bunch of other important programs to not even achieve the things that we know we need to achieve. Even if the folks over there want to pretend that we don't have to achieve that and they're just going to ignore it, the fact of the matter is that the rest of the world is getting closer and closer to accepting that obligation.

The other concern that we have, of course, about carbon capture and storage – and I want to go back to my initial comments – is that it's experimental but it's hopeful. There is potential for it. For that reason there have been some groups that have given it very qualified and cautionary support. As I said before, I appreciate the hopefulness of it and the value that it has in terms of its potential, but even those groups that have given it cautionary or qualified support qualify and caution their support with the understanding that this is not something that should be paid for by taxpayers. This is something that should be paid for by polluters. They are the ones that should be paying the as yet unknown costs of putting in this very, very complex system which may or may not ever have any serious impact on greenhouse gases emitted from the tar sands. So why is it that we are putting in so much money?

Now, this government, of course, made a great fanfare because President Obama at one point had spoken quite positively about carbon capture and storage. But here's the thing. They are planning at this point to fund it, if it makes it all the way through their Congress, to the tune of about $10 or $11 per person. We are planning on funding it to the tune of just under $600 per Albertan. So Albertans are going to be paying for the cost of producing the oil which at this point is still being shipped south faster than these guys can build a pipeline to get it there, along with the jobs that might otherwise upgrade it up here. So we are paying . . . [interjection] Absolutely, but there are other ways to deal with that, as I've said before. We are paying, our taxpayers are paying, $600 each for however long to clean up the greenhouse gas emissions created by a resource which is then shipped to the States at fire-sale prices, with the absolute minimum of upgrading and economic diversification in the interests of Albertans.

The problem with this model is that there's no plan for it. So my concern should the government go ahead with it is: why is there no provision for industry to be stepping up? Why is there no provision for industry to be stepping up? Why is it all about the taxpayer having to subsidize industry to the tune of $2 billion for an experiment?

One of the other things that we have a concern about with respect to this bill in particular, again, going back to the first comment, is the theory. In its very theoretical form there are some elements to this which might possibly be worthwhile down the road, but it all comes down to how it's administered, how it's put into place, what the rules are. The devils are in the details, as it were. Well, of course, this is a bill that provides no details. This is a bill that provides for no accountability. This is a bill that provides for no performance standards. This is a bill where, in fact, the money, this $2 billion, will just sort of be handed out with little oversight, very little priorities identified or direction from Albertans about how it is that we're spending this $2 billion. And there's going to be an advisory committee consisting primarily of the folks that would be receiving the money. Of course, only in Alberta would they see this as a reasonable way to set the system up.

I would suggest that that is not the way to proceed, that if this legislation were actually to have any sort of merit, there would need to be a very clear set of rules in terms of how this money was being distributed, what the objectives were, what the measurements were, what was to be expected for it, and what we as Albertans get back for it. That's the other thing. We're just shovelling this money out the door. What are we getting back for it? Are we getting any ownership in the technology that we're funding for industry? Are we getting any of that? No, we're not getting that. We're just shovelling it out the door and crossing our fingers and closing our eyes and hoping it all works out just fine.

In this time of economic restraint it seems to me that this is an incredibly irresponsible way to shovel $2 billion off the back of the truck. I know that the shovelling of money off the back of a truck is a hard habit to break, but in this particular case, in this particular context I would suggest that it might be time to slow it up a bit and think about whether this is really the best bang for our dollar and think about whether the job creation benefits and the greenhouse gas emission reduction benefits that would come from the same amount of money being spent on retrofitting programs isn't a better way to go in the long term.

There are things that we can be doing in the interim which will be beneficial to our environment. As I've said before, we should be implementing a cap and trade system. As I've said, if we started using renewable energy sources and investing in the growth of the renewable energy industry, we wouldn't be as desperate to find a way to spend this $2 billion.

At the end of the day I would suggest that there are just better ways to do it, and I do not believe that what these folks have planned under this piece of legislation is the right way to go in the interests of Albertans. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Now is the time for the hon. member who wanted to interject when the hon. member had the floor to use the five minutes for comment and question.

Seeing none, do any hon. members wish to speak on the bill?

Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 14 read a second time]

Bill 10

Supportive Living Accommodation Licensing Act

[Adjourned debate April 8: Mr. Chase]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Okay. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll join second reading debate on Bill 10, the Supportive Living Accommodation Licensing Act. I don't have a lot to say about this.

Mr. Rodney: Hear, hear.

Mr. Taylor: Does the Member for Calgary-Lougheed wish to join debate? I'm sure that if he does, when I'm finished, he could get to his feet and the chair would recognize him. Otherwise, perhaps he should just sit back there and drink his coffee while I talk. Thank you.

In large part we're for this legislation, at least at second reading, but we think there are a couple of problems with it. Those are, in essence, this. There's too much leeway, we believe, left to regulation regarding what's exempt from the application of this act. There are issues around how a complaints officer may dismiss a complaint. We think this bill could do with a couple of amendments to that effect. Of course, that's something that needs to be done at committee stage.

Certainly, in broad principle the intent of this bill, I think, is good. It may not be perfect, but it does address some concerns that our caucus has raised in the past. We've often called on the government to table an act like this because the old Social Care Facilities Licensing Act, which dates back to 1978, is just kind of out of date and obsolete. It doesn't include many of the current seniors in the supportive living accommodations that are running in Alberta. They're not suitably covered under that legislation. An important aspect of this bill is that it will incorporate many of the smaller supportive living accommodations into its definitions, and that's important because 70 per cent of licensed facilities are either 10 beds or less. So it certainly is an improvement on what exists currently, but it's an improvement that we believe can be improved upon.

With those comments, I'll take my seat now and allow others to join debate at second. I'm sure we'll be back to this with more specifics in committee stage.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Yes. I rise to join in the debate on this bill in second reading. It's the first opportunity I've had to speak to it. This is an interesting bill. It's one that, on one hand, appears in some areas to improve the current standard, which is that found in the oversight of the Social Care Facilities Licensing Act. I understand that, in fact, the accommodation standards which are part of this new act have actually already been in place as a form of regulation under the old act. Nonetheless, this is sort of the attempt to bring in the governing legislation. In that sense, of course, there are some small improvements included in this act as it relates to the standards that have been in place for the Social Care Facilities Licensing Act.

The difficulty with this legislation, though, is found in the statements of government in its continuing care strategy, and it's within those statements that we find the future of care for seniors in this province. We see that this government is contemplating a significantly new and different role for the facilities which are expected to be covered by this act. While this act might represent an improvement to the standards for those facilities that previously were covered by it, because the expectation for those facilities has grown so significantly, it now, actually, right out of the starting gate is inadequate.

In effect, as we've heard, the government is planning to effectively halt further construction on long-term care beds. The Premier is not going to follow through on his election promise to construct the new beds in long-term care that he promised during the election. Instead, he will be funding the increased construction of supportive living beds, and those beds will be governed in large part by these standards. The problem, of course, is that we know there are a number of seniors who require long-term care, and as much as the government wants to say that it's so, those seniors are not going to have their needs met. Many of them are not going to have their needs met within the supportive living regime which is being contemplated by the government as announced through their continuing care strategy.

I appreciate that this particular bill deals only with accommodation standards, but this bill deals with accommodation standards for a population which ultimately is going to be a great deal more acute than is currently the case or has previously been the case. This is going to deal with a population which needs a great deal more care and a great deal more protection and which has a great deal more vulnerability than the population that currently lives in these places or has lived in these places in the past. It's not enough to simply look at this act and say, "Well, it's better than what we've had for the last 20 years" because we're not asking these accommodations and these facilities to do what they've done over the last 20 years. We're asking them to now effectively become the new long-term care beds that the government is not building. For that reason, we have a lot of concerns about this bill. It's calling itself one thing, but unfortunately it's going to turn into another.

Now, there are some specific concerns as well that we have with the bill. We understand that there are some concerns with the degree of consultation that occurred with people in the community that works particularly with people with developmental disabilities. I'm sure the minister will have an opportunity to speak to that in perhaps Committee of the Whole, but that's one issue that has been brought to our attention.

Accommodation standards in long-term care contain provisions for trust account management and safeguarding personal possessions, but that, of course, is not included in this bill notwithstanding that these facilities will receive people who, were it not for a lack of beds, would otherwise be in long-term care. As I said, improving the standards for assisted living is not addressing the overall problem, that seniors who need a higher level of care can't get into the long-term care facilities. So we have outlined a few of the concerns that we have.

On October 22 of last year the minister claimed in the House that the Extencare long-term care facility in Lethbridge that's being closed is being replaced by a designated assisted living centre, which I assume would be covered by this act. If I'm incorrect, I'd be happy to be told that, but that's my understanding. So this is not a replacement; it's a downgrade in the quality of care for those seniors.

On October 30, 2008, the patients in an auxiliary hospital in Jasper, including some who were palliative, had their care changed to a designated assisted living situation. I'm not sure the degree to which that would be covered by this new piece of legislation. Assisted living, ultimately, is just not appropriate for people who no longer have the cognitive ability to negotiate their own care needs or who are palliative.

As higher needs seniors are being diverted to assisted living and supportive living instead of long-term care, their rights and their safety are being put at risk. There's no bill of rights or ombudsman for seniors in supportive living situations, and that's not included in the act.

People in supportive living also do not have tenancy protection. The bill contains a consequential amendment that exempts them from the Residential Tenancies Act.

Seniors and people with developmental disabilities and their families need to know that they and their loved ones are getting the accommodation and the care that they need. This bill may support the implementation of slightly better standards for supportive living, but it does not address the problems with those standards or the larger issue of providing seniors with a lower level of care. Of course, the other piece that happens in these cases is more costs. There is, unfortunately, a significant problem with the absence of rules around the costs associated with this kind of living.

Generally speaking, you know, when you're looking at providing a more global and closer to home mechanism, to use the government's own language, for the care of our seniors and people with developmental disabilities, even in those places that are not nursing homes technically under the act but in those other places that treat people who are on the spectrum of need from barely any to, frankly, should be in a long-term care bed but can't because there's no space there, for those people on that spectrum of need, you need to provide them with some measurable and enforceable standards of care. These need to include best practices for staff ratios and support ratios and also resident complaint mechanisms. The whole issue of resident complaint mechanisms is a key issue.

Legislating standard qualifications for health care aides is another thing, for those people that provide day-to-day care and day-to-day support in some of these facilities.

The other thing, of course, is the whole issue of establishing community-based teams of mental health professionals to offer support to people living in these settings because often that kind of support wouldn't be available in the supportive living environment. We know that the government is in a very, very grave position with respect to the provision of community mental health services; i.e., it's a bit of a dog's breakfast, and they're not meeting anybody's needs. Now our plan for seniors is to take them out of the level of care that they used to be in, put them in supportive living, and plan for them to access more community resources.

Just like 25 years ago, when we all sang the deinstitutionalization mantra, we didn't actually follow that up with community support, so we have thousands of people falling through the cracks in terms of mental health issues in Alberta. Now we're going to do the same thing to seniors. We know from studies that geriatric mental health is a very significant issue. Again, we have no plan there. It's very clear from the health budget that we have absolutely no plan there. Many seniors who should have access to a nurse in a long-term care setting who might have some experience in that regard won't be there, obviously, in these supportive living environments regardless of where they appear in the spectrum of care offered. There'll be nobody in the community because they're not there now, and there's certainly no money for them to be there now.

All of that is to say that this bill, unfortunately, to the extent that it reflects any kind of facilitation of the continuing care strategy that the government announced in December of 2008, is not something that we can support. Any vehicle for that strategy we cannot support because that strategy is inherently faulty. It's not going to help seniors; it's going to hurt seniors. It may save money; no doubt it will save money. You know, I think we have a greater responsibility to the seniors in our province, and I'm afraid that we are not going to meet it by adopting the continuing care strategy. I'm afraid that, as I say, while we see the improvements that exist in this legislation to the Social Care Facilities Licensing Act, the improvements are not what is needed to actually provide for a functional vehicle for implementing the continuing care strategy and one that will protect and maintain the safety and health of our seniors in Alberta.

For that reason we have some very grave concerns with this bill. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: There are five minutes for comments and questions to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. Any hon. member?

Seeing none, the hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This isn't for a question, right?

The Deputy Speaker: Yes.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. As the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports I rise today to speak about Bill 10, the Supportive Living Accommodation Licensing Act, which will replace existing legislation for the licensing of supportive living accommodations in the province. I also want to thank my colleague the hon. Member for Red Deer-South for sponsoring this legislation. This legislation has the support of operators and associations who believe it reflects on the commitment and good work provided through Alberta's supportive living facilities. As well, industry groups have expressed that this legislation will encourage confidence in the province's supportive living system.

The act will assist in fulfilling the ministry's mandate to improve quality, improve supply, and improve client choice in supportive living accommodation. It will enhance the safety and security of residents, whether or not the facility is funded by the government. It will establish a licensing regime to ensure quality accommodation and services. It will improve the ministry's ability to keep the standards current and introduce new standards or features that will meet the needs of an evolving supportive living sector. It will establish a mechanism for addressing complaints and concerns about accommodations and services, and this legislation will allow the ministry to take the necessary steps, which may include closure, if a facility operator continually fails to meet standards or residents are in imminent danger.

This new act provides modern legislation that recognizes the changing needs and complexities of an aging population and a growing supportive living industry. It meets the ministry's mandate from our Premier of improving quality, supply, and choice, and it addresses the need for safeguards for some of Alberta's most vulnerable residents.

I urge all the members to support Bill 10, the Supportive Living Accommodation Licensing Act. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: We also have five minutes available for questions or comments to the hon. minister.

Seeing none, does any other hon. member wish to speak on the bill?

Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 10 read a second time]

Fisheries (Alberta) Amendment Act, 2009

[Adjourned debate March 11: Mr. Hehr]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This bill would appear to propose more punitive penalties for fisheries violations. The purpose is to equip the courts to include penalties that would bind offenders to return fisheries back to their healthy state. The impact would have much harsher penalties on those convicted of a penalty under the act. These punitive actions would have the effect of decreasing actions that have a profound effect on the fisheries' health such as overfishing beyond the limits of a licence, improper handling of fish, and probably one of the worst things that happens is poaching.

I know that I can speak for the lake that I'm fortunate enough to have a cabin on. That lake is stocked, and certainly it is a very, very popular spot in southern Alberta. It's very close to the mountains, and many people come there. A lot of the fishermen are catch-and-release, which is great, but every now and again you'll see someone walking away with more than their fair share of the fish that they're taking out of that lake that has been stocked. So just from my own personal observations I would certainly like to see more conservation officers looking after those sorts of things because that lake is not the only lake that is stocked in Alberta.

We need to keep our lakes in a healthy state. Certainly, we have some lakes that are called trophy lakes, and those are the ones that for sure we want to make sure that the fish are protected because my understanding is that they are all catch-and-release.

The fish stocks have been declining steadily since 2000, and the main reason seems to be overfishing, as I've just spoken to, and the loss of fish habitat due to rapid development. I think that the fish along with the grizzly bears and the cougars are many of the wildlife that we have lost and we are losing because of the encroachment of developments into what is their habitat.

Bill 11 hopes to address the issue of overfishing by introducing punitive measures to discourage overfishing. In the event that an angler would be charged under the Fisheries (Alberta) Act, strict penalties are introduced. I think that this is all fine and dandy and that the intent is noble; however, certainly with this government in Alberta we do have the regulations in place, but they're just not enforced. Part of it is because they don't have enough staff to actually enforce them. I, for one, would like to see an increase in our conservation officers. I am not convinced that sheriffs are the way to go with that. I don't think that they have the proper training. Conservation officers more often than not have degrees in the environment and can understand what they are protecting. I certainly would like to see the regulations actually being enforced.

Alberta has only about 1,500 fish-bearing streams and 1,100 lakes. Careful management is really needed to balance it against approximately 1,500 domestic and 200 commercial and 300,000 anglers competing for these same fish. One of the things that I find always interesting is that as we go north in Alberta, I'm starting to recognize what they actually call lakes. I was, again, fortunate to have a cottage on Lake Winnipeg, so I know what a lake looks like. In southern Alberta I think most of them could probably be called large sloughs. As we go north, we can talk about lakes. Regardless of the size of these lakes, certainly the depth is very important to fish habitat, particularly if we're going to want them to survive over the winter. That's a good strategy to try to help our fish population.

Fish management is divided into three zones: the eastern slopes, parkland-prairie, and the northern boreal. Each zone really does have a unique assemblage of water bodies, species of game fish, and management techniques. I think I sort of made a comment about water bodies and how they are certainly different through this province.

The species of game fish. Some are natural and replenish themselves. Certainly, in the lake that I'm speaking of, that I go to, it's mainly rainbow trout that they put in there. It's basically a closed lake. There's no water coming in and out; it's fed through springs. So there is no ability for the fish, actually, to replenish themselves if they're being fished out.

One of the other factors that is contributing to the declining fish stocks is the runoff from septic tanks and overfertilization, which is referred to as summer kill. I think I did speak a little bit on another bill this afternoon where I was saying that we can talk about climate change, but what I wanted to talk about is the pollution in my backyard. My backyard is not unique. My backyard is many, many, many backyards of people who can see that the wildlife and even the life that's in and around our lakes is certainly decreasing. There has to be a reason for that. I know that it is coming slowly but surely that people on acreages and in summer homes are going to actually have to have septic tanks, that will be emptied, as opposed to having septic fields, particularly septic fields that are too close to any body of water.

Also, another thing can happen in lakes that don't have a lot of natural movement of water as it's coming in one end and going out the other. They get algae blooms on the lake, and those algae blooms can rise to the top and then form a scum on the top of the water. That oxygen then doesn't get down to the fish, and they die. Micro-organisms break down the algae, and again part of that breaking down requires oxygen. That oxygen then, of course, is not available for the fish, and it causes a suffocating kind of atmosphere.

Damming land-use practices can also cause destruction of critical fish habitat such as altering shorelines and creating sand beaches. I don't think there are that many sand beaches in Alberta. I certainly know that there are some up north, that they could have easily photographed. I think all we have to do is talk to the member for — and I've forgotten exactly where she is from.

An Hon. Member: Lesser Slave Lake.

Ms Pastoor: Lesser Slave Lake. Thank you. Yes. The member certainly made it very clear that they have wonderful shorelines and was more than prepared to have her people on the shore having their pictures taken.

Altering shorelines and creating sand beaches. Often the altering of the shorelines is because of developments that have gone in. I think we really have to protect the shorelines for the public. Yes, we'll always have developments. They're getting uglier. They're getting more heavily dense in terms of the people that they try to cram in, and it goes up, down, and all around. But we really should not be allowing people to build right up to the shoreline. We really do need to be able to protect that for the public, and then part of that would eliminate the problem of altering shorelines.

By altering a shoreline, you actually can – and I'll use an example of that. Forty years ago, before a lot of the knowledge that we have, we didn't change our shoreline on purpose, but what we did was we had a small boat launch. When we first went to our lake, we could sit and watch the fish actually spawn on a shallow shoreline. Now, of course, since we had put that dock there, the fish didn't come anymore. Just even a small thing like putting out a small dock can really change what's happening.

The provincial government has taken steps to address overfertilization by banning the sale of weed and feed in Alberta, lawn care products that contain a combination of fertilizers and herbicides, which is certainly to their credit. It will go into effect in 2010. The intent, of course, is always to protect our water quality downstream of towns and cities. It will affect the fish habitats through runoff. The fact that the government has taken these steps is, I think, not just good for the fish, but they're good for us because we do use that water and not only to drink. In the summer – certainly, I can speak for my neck of the woods – the Oldman River has all kinds of aquatic activities on it, a lot of diving and a lot of kayaking. These are the kinds of things. The other thing that we do see in our rivers is a lot of swimming, so we want to have clean water.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I will sit down and perhaps have further words in committee.

The Deputy Speaker: We have five minutes for comments and questions to the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Seeing no other member wishing to speak, the chair shall now call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 11 read a second time]

4:20

Bill 12 Surface Rights Amendment Act, 2009

[Adjourned debate March 12: Mr. Hehr]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do have the honour to speak on Bill 12, brought in by Mr. Berger. As now the Surface Rights Board encourages parties to mediate their disputes, that that's how to resolve them, there are a few steps there, you know, to be followed. There are negotiations prior to the application to the board where operators and landowners are encouraged to attempt to negotiate a settlement. There's the application to the board, and then there's a prehearing dispute, the mediation, the hearing before the panel of the board, and then the SRB deals with all of the surface rights compensation.

Compensation orders or surface leases can be reviewed by the board. The board deals with that. It provides for payment of compensation on an annual basis or other periodic basis. If the order of agreement doesn't provide for annual or periodic payments, it cannot be reviewed unless it relates to a major power transmission line, 69 kV or larger.

There always have been tensions involved, you know, in the negotiation of surface rights for compensation between the resource companies and the landowners. Generally speaking, it is the objective of the resource company to obtain consent for access to the land. For compensation they want the payment to be low, while it is in the landowner's interest to obtain as much compensation as possible on the grounds that they cannot use that land for extraction purposes, for the nuisance on their property, or for the loss of income from that part of the land.

Areas of compensation can be for drilling wells, construction of pipelines, power lines, telephone lines, and other such points of entry. The rights of entry may be granted by the board on both private and Crown land for activities such as mineral extraction and drilling, whether the activity occurs on the tract of land under which the rights exist or from other lands through the use of horizontal wells; even for roads to connect mining or drilling operations on adjacent lands; for construction, operation, and removal of pipelines, power lines, or telephone lines; construction of tanks and other structures related to the above; drilling or operation of a well or installation of pipelines to and from a well that is used for various conservation purposes such as repressuring, storage, or obtaining water for such purposes; exploration; enabling reclamation in limited circumstances.

There are many areas that require compensation to landowners or occupants from resource companies. Most of the negotiations between the landowners and the resource companies are handled by land agents. There are about 1,200 of them, and they're all employed by the oil and gas industry.

That brings in another issue here, that there are serious issues involving the entire area of surface rights. Going on further, this process can be time consuming and expensive for the landowners. According to the SRB 2008 annual report there have been 898 scheduled hearings. Only 403 were heard, 293 settled, 193 rescheduled, six withdrawn, and three adjourned. It can be seen from the stats above and from hearings between 2006 and 2008 that there were 568 files scheduled to be heard in 2006, and only 209 files were actually heard. In 2007 665 files were scheduled to be heard, with 274 files actually heard. In 2008 898 files were scheduled to be heard; only 403 files were actually heard.

From the statistics the caseload for the SRB is increasing every year, and only around half the cases are actually heard. You know, this is a very, very drawn out process for landowners, and it can be expensive and emotionally draining. In other words, the process can be time consuming and expensive for landowners. As such, having a new mechanism in place to expedite the matters would be beneficial to landowners as long as any changes do not adversely affect the fairness of the process.

When we do the sectional analysis of the amendments, section 2 repeals section 3(3) to (7). This section deals with the composition of members of the board. The major change here is in the substance of the new subsections (5) and (6). This allows the chair of the SRB to select members or a panel of members to deal with any matter or class or group of matters. It also gives the members of the panel all the powers and jurisdiction of the board in any matter. The potential area of concern here is the delegation of the authority to only one member, who may be presiding over the hearing. It seems like too much authority in deciding these contentious matters to delegate to only one member.

Then it further goes on to section 5, which repeals sections 8(1), (2), and (3) of the act and substitutes new sections.

The amendment in this section basically takes the previous sections 4, 5, and 7 and incorporates these functions into a new section 8. The new section prescribes that the board keep records of its proceedings but doesn't specify how. This is left to the board to decide.

Then the new section 2 allows the board to make rules and essentially to conduct proceedings, incorporating the previous elements of section 5 into a new section 8. A new section (3.1) and (3.2) are added. Section (3.1) allows the board to make decisions based upon written submissions instead of oral hearings “subject to the principles of natural justice.” The principles of natural justice prescribe that an accused or interested individuals have an opportunity to be heard by an impartial tribunal in order to present arguments. Quite literally, this means hearing the other side before judgment is rendered. The new section (3.1) allows this process to take place without oral hearings; in other words, based solely upon written submissions.

You know, this option can be problematic. Evidence presented in person usually can carry much more weight than the same argument presented as a written document. Allowing this option will inevitably lead to a decrease in oral hearings, and this may affect rendered decisions for either party. There is a possibility that the SRB, in order to expedite procedures, may use this to avoid oral hearings in too many cases.

Section 6 repeals section 9 of the act, powers of members. This previous section spelled out conditions prescribing that any three members of the board may perform duties of the entire board. This change is being made, it appears, due to new provisions of sections 5 and 6 allowing any one member to perform the duties of the entire board. This could also be problematic, as stated earlier. One member shouldn't have the authority to render binding decisions.

Then going on to section 12, it amends certain parts of section 28, termination of right-of-entry order. This section allows an owner to apply for a termination of right of entry if the operator has not commenced operations within two months. The main amendment is repealing section (2), which sets out the process for fixed dates to appoint a date of inquiry.

The intent of these amendments is to take away the requirement for the board to hold a hearing into the matter. The intent is to allow the board to make a termination order without having to hold a proceeding. The only problem that could come from this amendment is if the board decided not to grant the termination order and there's no mandatory hearing for the owner of the land to present the argument. This could potentially be seen as depriving landowners of their right to a hearing; in other words, their right to the principle of natural justice. So there's a concern. You know, why in this bill is the right to a hearing being removed in the termination of right-of-entry orders?

This is a very important bill as it relates to the compensation for landowners who have resources activity on their land, and any changes to it must be carefully considered and must achieve an optimal balance between the rights of the owner and the rights of the operator. Given the increased workload of the Surface Rights Board, streamlining the process to expedite decisions is an admirable goal; however, this should not impede the elements of fairness to both parties and should not impair the principles of natural justice that guide any quasi-judicial boards.

Having those concerns, I'd like to have those addressed. Although the intent of the bill is simplify the process the board uses to resolve disputes, it is a step in the right direction. It is to implement a more informal, flexible form of dispute resolution. I agree with that.

With those comments, I will thank the chair.

The Deputy Speaker: We have five minutes for comments or questions. Does any member want to take that?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to speak to this bill. I particularly also appreciated the enthusiasm the Member for Calgary-Lougheed had earlier, and I hope that he also has a similar enthusiasm to hear from me. I would also like to thank the Member for Livingstone-Macleod for introducing this bill and the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development for his tireless work on this file. It's a pleasure to work with both of them on the Land-use Framework MLA Committee, Mr. Speaker.

Now, I've spoken to the Member for Livingstone-Macleod, and when this all started, it was simply an idea. Some folks decided more needed to be done to address the concerns of landowners and applicants when dealing with the Surface Rights Board. This process was too slow, there was a backlog, and decisions took months to be issued. After hearing these explanations about what was happening, the Member for Livingstone-Macleod put the ideas into words, and here we have an exceptional bill, the Surface Rights Amendment Act, 2009. It is being proposed to solve some of the problems indicated by stakeholders such as the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties. Mr. Speaker, they wanted a comprehensive review and look at board processes, and this bill is the outcome of the first part of this review.

I've heard concerns raised about allowing one member to be vested with the powers of the board. I consider this no different than having a judge preside over a court case whereas before we had a three-member panel for every single process. Now, you can imagine if every aspect of our court system required three judges to sit on and hear every case. This proposal before us allows the chair to determine whether a one-member panel or more is needed to hear a case or deal with the other members of the board. Of course, Mr. Speaker, during the process of writing a decision, board members will consult with legal counsel, other board members, and administrative staff. As hon. members do ourselves, we always consult with our colleagues before making important decisions.

Accountability here rests with the chair and by association the vice-chairs to ensure that the board is running smoothly and things keep moving along. The board is a quasi-judicial board, and an air of collegiality is certainly maintained amongst the members, ensuring that they consult with each other when making rules or decisions.

I do not believe there is a problem with added flexibility because, as I mentioned, matters will not be left to the sole discretion of one person. All good board members consult, discuss, and debate amongst each other matters before them so they can make the best ruling in every case, and they have been doing a good job, even with their current constraints. To give you an example, Mr. Speaker, in 2008 alone the board held 403 hearings, an increase of 93 per cent since 2006, when they held only 209.

With these proposed amendments, although still just a bill here in the Legislature, this will improve the way the board does its business, and one day it may become law. I'm asking members to support this bill.

With that being said, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to call for a vote on this matter.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, do you wish to be recognized? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Yes. I'm just looking to speak to this bill, okay?

The Deputy Speaker: On the bill.

Ms Notley: On the bill. Exactly. Notwithstanding the desire to vote on these things in lightning speed, I do appreciate the opportunity to be able to join in the debate on Bill 12, the Surface Rights Amendment Act, 2009. There are a number of concerns that we have with respect to this act, Bill 12, many of which have already been outlined by my colleague in the Official Opposition caucus.

I think that it is important to go over them again because as much as, you know, there's always the objective to have matters dealt with quickly and you can just assume that everybody is going to do the right thing and they're going to chat with each other and it's all going to be done really nicely and quickly, this is actually a quasi-judicial body that deals with significant rights of people. So it is absolutely incumbent that it maintain the capacity to operate in a fair way so that it can adjudicate in a fair and transparent way the competing interests. We know, and I'm sure all members in this House know, that the types of matters that the Surface Rights Board deals with can sometimes be very contentious and very significant to the parties before it.

This bill, from what I can tell, appears to do several things. The bill repeals sections that talk about a board secretary and assistant and allows the board more latitude in keeping records. The bill gives the board the power to design and implement alternative dispute resolution methods for settling cases before them, and the board is of course authorized to adopt any settlements reached through these processes. The board is able to choose to make their decisions about a dispute on the basis of written submissions, thereby denying the right to an oral hearing.

In a number of cases details about various processes and powers are removed from the act by the bill, leaving more of the specifics up to the regulations and, even more problematically, to the board itself. For example, as already mentioned, details around right-of-entry orders and the board's power to rehear applications and rescind decisions and the costs of proceedings would be largely removed from the act by this bill.

Finally, the bill fails to make any changes with respect to compensation. Now, as I say, I understand that the bill is designed to help deal with the backlog of cases and to deal with the delay in the hearings. One way, of course, to deal with the delay is to make the hearings shorter and quicker and faster and simpler and probably result in people not being able to say their piece, though. But, hey, you know, it's shorter and faster and quicker and simpler, so as long as we're doing that, that's great. Who cares what happens to the rights of the applicants and the parties before the board?

Well, I would suggest that that's not the way to approach problems in the area of judicial or quasi-judicial bodies. For one thing, we're talking about adding yet another mechanism for alternative dispute resolution. Now, it's my understanding that there are already in the act three separate opportunities for parties to resolve their disputes: during the negotiation process itself before any application is made before the board, if the issue goes to mediation after the application to the board is made, and during the prehearing dispute resolution before it goes to hearing. There are already three opportunities for there to be a negotiated settlement, so presumably if it's not being negotiated at that point, what's probably happening is that the parties have two very crystallized positions. You know what? In our world people are allowed to have crystallized positions. It is in that case that there needs to be an objective, clear, transparent process through which those disagreements can be adjudicated, and I mean adjudicated, not mediated.

Now, part of the problem, of course, with creating yet another alternative dispute resolution mechanism is that, as is often the case in these cases, if there is a power imbalance going into mediation, it is often maintained or enhanced through mediation. For many people who are involved in the legal system, particularly dealing with clients who tend to be less able to represent their interests, less powerful, having less resources, the more you move towards mediation, if it's not done right, the mediation can simply enhance any inequity that already exists.

The other thing, of course, is that the bill doesn't give a lot of detail about what the dispute resolution processes would look like. Again, we're just expected to trust the board and trust the cabinet and everything will be fine, but we're not going to be given any detail in the bill. For reasons that we've outlined repeatedly in the past, this is not a form of legislating that is fair to members of the Assembly or, more importantly, to the people in the province to whom we're accountable.

Now, it's interesting that, apparently, in the briefing people from our office were told that the alternate dispute resolution process was something that both parties had to choose and that a party could depart or back out of that dispute resolution process if it started to go off the rails. Unfortunately, that right is not included in the legislation. If it's not there, it's not there, so that guarantee is not there. Without that guarantee being there, there is a very significant problem.

The issue of taking away the right to an oral hearing is fundamental. Decisions made by the Surface Rights Board can only be appealed by going directly to the Court of Appeal. I found fascinating that it was not even possible to have any other level of appeal. Perhaps I'm incorrect, but this is the information that I'm provided with.

In any event, it should be the highest level of opportunity for a fair trial, and instead what we're talking about doing is effectively changing the process. We're turning the person that's making the decision into a desk-bound adjudicator who may never meet the applicants and who will never hear the full scope of the matter. You know, you don't have to be too, too involved in the legal system to understand that the whole right to an oral hearing is a fundamental component of natural justice. The idea that we would be taking that away is very disturbing. It really does look to me like, you know, sort of an exercise of power gone wild, especially given how many people do have concerns around how these decisions are made.

The final thing, I guess, is that throughout this process we have heard from various parties that the whole issue of the compensation schedule itself needs to be revised and also the process through which the issue of surface loss and/or reclamation is assessed needs to be reconsidered, that the tools that are defined in the act are not up to date enough and that there are more accurate ways to engage in this assessment.

That issue along with the compensation scale are other things that, certainly, landowners have articulated as being significant things that they would like to see this government move forward on. So it's disappointing to see that these issues, which landowners had been wanting to see movement on, remain unaddressed in this legislation while issues designed to effectively limit their access to a truly fair, transparent, and fully comprehensive hearing process are moving forward with great haste. Again, it seems as though there has been a decision made, a value judgment made, a choice made, winners and losers selected, and unfortunately the interests of all parties are not necessarily being reflected in this bill.

We're perfectly happy to have the government come to us with some proposals for how to help the Surface Rights Board function in more effective ways. The idea of going to a single-person panel as opposed to a tripartite panel: not an unreasonable proposal, has been done often in the past. Quite a reasonable way to deal with resource issues. So it's not as though we simply live to say no.

There are ways in which this can be done while maintaining the fundamental natural justice rights of the parties and, in particular, those who most often find themselves without representation in these situations, but where this is going right now is not to that destination. We think that it needs some very significant reworking and some amendments in order to meet the objectives that the government is seeking while at the same time protecting the interests of all parties to a fair and properly resourced hearing process.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: We have five minutes for comments and questions.

Seeing none, any hon. member wish to speak on the bill?

Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 12 read a second time]

Justice of the Peace Amendment Act, 2009

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The object of the bill is that under the current act justices of the peace are appointed for a term of 10 years but cannot sit past the age of 70 even if their appointment has not expired. The proposed amendment will allow justices of the peace to sit past the age of 70 up to a maximum age of 75 or until his or her appointment expires, whichever happens first. So the proposed amendment will be consistent with the provisions of the provincial act applicable to judges and to the provisions in the Court of Queen's Bench Act applicable to masters in chambers.

This bill will have an entirely positive effect on the administration of courts and similar amendments, as mentioned above, to overhaul the rules of appointment terms of the masters in chambers in the last sitting. In addition to conducting bail hearings and presiding over traffic court, justices of the peace provide front-line judicial services. These JPs, you know, work around the clock to grant search warrants, approve the apprehension of children in danger, authorize emergency protection orders that keep abusive family members out of the home.

As of January the number of experienced justices working in the Edmonton area fell from 17 to three because 10-year appointments expired January 31. Other jurisdictions across the province are facing a similar exodus of experienced justices. For some time now the department has assured Albertans that plans are in place to ensure that the court system continues to run smoothly during this transition. However, recently there was a court challenge about the delay in appointing replacements. Sources within the justice system are concerned, you know, about the big backup in bail hearings because the accused has the right to have a bail hearing done within 24 hours of arrest. Delays may allow criminal defence lawyers to launch Charter applications to have their clients' charges stayed due to the delay in the bail hearing.

This bill, I think, will go a long way to fix the problem in the court system, and it will speed up the process for bail hearings. This proposed amendment will allow justices of the peace to sit past age 70 up to a maximum age of 75. I think this is a good bill. We support this effort to ensure the smooth operation of the courts and security for Alberta's justices of the peace. Even though the problem has been known for some time, my only concern was that the government took a little bit of time to move on this issue, but I still support this bill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: We have five minutes for comments or questions.

Seeing none, does any hon. member wish to speak on the bill? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes. I would like to just stand up and maybe point out a couple of things. Actually, today's 70 is the old 50. I am delighted that they have actually looked at extending the age to 75. I think all we have to do is walk into Wal-Mart. As much as I can't believe I actually let that word cross my lips, but never mind, if we go into Wal-Mart, we see many people who are over 70 that are actually functioning as very effective greeters. There are many people out there working past 70.

One of the other reasons that I'm pleased with having a longer ability for our judges to serve – first, I'd like to make the comment that it was sort of very poor succession planning on the part of the government not to have younger people coming in behind them and being able to not only fill the positions of those that would be leaving but actually to increase them because of the number of increases that we've had in the population.

One other thing, just an incident that I've had lately, is that they are very short of judges to do citizenship courts. I do believe that some of the more mature judges, perhaps when they're getting to be around 75, might well be able to and be interested in presiding at those citizenship courts. I know that in Lethbridge – and I haven't been to any others – it's a big deal. It's a very big deal. We have the Senator, we have an MP, we have two MLAs, and our mayor. We all show up at citizenship courts. The people that are becoming our new citizens are most appreciative of having that level of government all represented and also that we can mingle with them afterwards. We've always had a really interesting judge, and I'm sorry that I've forgotten his name. He was entertaining, and after everyone was sworn through, he would run through the different countries. It was absolutely incredible, even in a group of 60, to see the number of countries that were represented that have now become Canadians.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I will take my seat. I think this is a very good bill for those two reasons, neither of which was in my notes.

The Deputy Speaker: We have five minutes for comments and questions to the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Seeing none, does any other member wish to speak on the bill?

Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 13 read a second time]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Cao in the chair]

The Chair: The Committee of the Whole will now come to order.

Government Organization Amendment Act, 2009

The Chair: Does any hon. member wish to speak on the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I think the intent of the bill is that it will improve the security and will improve and increase the accountability and the service delivery at the registries. As the registries hold lots of sensitive, private data, it is a necessity for the government to have strong, strong controls over registries. I have been asking questions, too, on the security of the personal information because the AG raised questions about the security of the information that the registries hold as well. With Alberta health care coming under the registries, they will be holding a lot more sensitive data about Albertans, and this bill will provide the government with strong controls over registries so that all of the information the registries hold won't fall into the wrong hands.

My concern has been that the registries have been private since 1993. It took a long time for us to come out to have a look at the registries. They have been holding sensitive data for a long time. My concern is, you know, so far I wonder how much information has ended up in the wrong hands. I hope for the best, that there's no private information that has ended up in the wrong hands.

With health care coming under the registries, they're going to do, I believe, 18 million transactions a year. I think it is a good idea to make the registries accountable, to make them secure. Some of my concerns have been addressed by the minister before. I think it will be a good bill which will increase the powers of accountability and the monitoring powers that the government is going to have over the registries and registry owners and who can be a registry owner. It will increase the regulatory powers of government over the registries as well.

I have some other issues, too, with the government. There will be an impact, you know. What will be the impact of these additional regulatory administrative burdens on the public service that registries provide? Will there be a time impact for registry agents? Will there be a financial impact for registry agents? Will the users of Service Alberta see an impact such as slower service or reduced options? Those are my concerns.

Overall I think it will be a good bill, and I'll support it. Thank you very much, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure today to rise and start Committee of the Whole debate on Bill 9, the Government Organization Amendment Act, 2009, schedule 12. As discussed in second reading, the registry agent network has been successfully providing registry agent services since 1993. In that time period there have been substantial changes to technology and a growing awareness surrounding the protection of personal information. These changing times dictate that amendments must be made to the governing legislation to ensure that Albertans' satisfaction with and confidence in the quality of registry services continues to remain high.

In second reading, Mr. Chairman, the Member for Calgary-McCall raised a number of questions about these proposed amendments, and I will take this opportunity to address his concerns. His first question was with respect to the current functioning of the registry agent network, specifically whether there's a serious problem with the existing security of the registry agent system that these changes are meant to address. Registry agents in Alberta provide excellent service to Albertans and consistently receive high marks from their customers. The proposed changes to the act are intended to ensure that there are clear and up-to-date accountabilities and protections in place for the future. In recent years there have been rapid technological developments and increasing need for information protection. The changes in the legislation will ensure that the registry network is well positioned to meet all these realities in the years ahead.

His second question dealt with the impact of these additional regulatory administrative burdens on the public service that registries provide and how much time it would take to make all those changes. The changes in legislation aren't expected to add any additional administrative burdens or significant changes in the way that registry agents conduct their business. In fact, the legislation will benefit registry agents by making expectations, accountabilities, reporting processes, and incentives clearer and easy to follow.

His remaining inquiries addressed the financial impact on the registry agents, specifically how much it will cost them to buy new equipment to get the new technology, along with the financial impact on the government, the ministry, taxpayers, and Albertans accessing registry services. At this time, Mr. Chairman, it's not expected that there will be any major financial impact on any registry agents, government, the ministry, taxpayers, or those who access registry services as a result of these legislative changes.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you. It's a pleasure to be able to rise in support of this bill. Who knows? It happens every now and then. I suppose just in my current grumpy mood that I apparently have to sort of qualify my support with: the better thing to do, of course, would be to reverse the process or the decision to privatize these registries in the first place because, of course, we never agreed with that plan, and it has probably created a lot of problems which we're trying to fix now.

Having said that, I do appreciate that this proposed change in legislation is coming forward in an effort to deal with some of the problems that we've had in the past and is an effort to tighten up some of the rules and the regulations around some of the problems that we've had with the private registries.

Alberta First Registries in Edmonton was shut down in July '07 for improper storage and handling of government documents. A government spokesman at that time said that no information was inappropriately used; however, quote, the threat existed. End quote.

Elizabeth Avenue Registries was shut down in June 2006 after gang members in B.C. were found in possession of fake licences issued by that registry. The Edmonton police actually first raised concerns about that particular registry in 2000, and gang members were arrested in B.C. in September of 2005. It took from October '05 to June '06. The government apparently was trying to force the registry owner to sell the business. At the same time, members of the public filed numerous complaints about poor service and errors in documentation at the registry.

Then there was apparently another registry in Calgary where the owner was forced to sell his business after some employees had taken bribes in return for fake licences.

Clearly, there is an issue of enforcement with this line of work. Of course, registries have tremendous access to a great deal of personal information, which, were it to fall into the wrong hands, would be very damaging to the people whose information it was. That being the case, though, it is my understanding that these regulations will go some distance, anyway, to give more tools to the government to monitor private registry agents, to tighten up their rules, and to increase penalties for registries that break the terms of their licence.

Of course, all of that will have to go hand in hand with comprehensive enforcement and inspection and follow-up and all that kind of stuff. No question that this does appear to be a moderate improvement of what is now a long-past, bad policy decision. But we're here now, so hopefully this will move us forward somewhat in order to at least protect the interests of Albertans in this particular area.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other hon. member who wishes to speak on the bill?

[The clauses of Bill 9 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

5:10

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I would move that the committee now rise and report Bill 9, the Government Organization Amendment Act, 2009.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 9.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 19 Land Assembly Project Area Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to thank the hon. members for their comments during the debate of Bill 19. I believe this is very important legislation.

Now, while Bill 19 does not grant additional land acquisition powers to government, it will improve the process that was used to assemble land for the transportation corridors such as the Edmonton and Calgary ring roads.

Bill 19 introduces three important changes to the process that will ensure that Albertans are well informed and that the rights of landowners are respected. Government will be required to consult in advance with the public and landowners before any final decisions are made. Government will be required to begin negotiations to buy land as soon as the affected property owners are prepared to sell. Government must decide if a project area is approved within two years of initiating the formal consultations in order to create greater certainty for landowners. Mr. Speaker, this legislation is good news for Albertans.

I move third reading of Bill 19, the Land Assembly Project Area Act.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and speak to third reading of the Land Assembly Project Area Act, Bill 19. It clearly raised some important issues for landowners, for all Albertans and attempts, no doubt, to address some of our need in the province for better utilities and transportation corridors, a better framework for dealing with the public interests in the context of private land. If we are to have better planning for growth and development, these corridors will play a key role.

As we have said on this side for a number of hours on this very important bill, we find it difficult to support as a result of some of what we feel are far more restrictive conditions: a section on enforcement orders that seems to be far stricter than necessary, far more draconian in terms of individual landowners' rights and freedoms, and discouraging of individuals expressing and standing for what is a reasonable balance for them, and some sections, like 12(1), allowing an injunction by the government on the basis of suspicion of protest or action forbidden by one of the many regulatory powers in the bill. These are of real concern to us as they are to many Albertans and bring shades of Bill 46, as we've raised in the House previously, and some of the concerns that that raised.

It's understandable that from the government's point of view they want to move things quickly both in terms of land expropriation and this bill in particular. We are trying to speak on behalf of quite a sizable number of Albertans who are concerned that the bill, although a certain number of amendments have been made already, does not conform to the values and interests of most Albertans and how they define the public interest. The first thing that we see as important in terms of the public interest is that we be much more clear in defining what a public project constitutes, which seems to be a catch-all for almost anything the government wants to do.

I will at this time, then, after raising questions in this House around the need for further public discussion and debate and a referral to the committee, on behalf of my colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar, move that the motion for third reading of Bill 19, Land Assembly Project Area Act, be amended as follows: by deleting all the words after "that" and substituting "Bill 19, the Land Assembly Project Area Act, be not now read a third time but that it be read a third time this day six months hence." I have the required copies here and will circulate them.

The Deputy Speaker: On the amendment to third reading of Bill 19 as proposed by the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition on behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, please proceed, hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Well, I think, Mr. Speaker, that we've raised considerable concern on behalf of Albertans here over the different sections of the debate. It's been clear that Albertans want to see a much more flexible, respectful, transparent, and public process before we move to enact this bill. There's significant anxiety and concern about inappropriate power, inappropriate abuse of power, and I think this could be significantly assuaged through referral to committee with public involvement and a real openness to making the kinds of concessions that we have been raising in this House repeatedly over the last few weeks.

I think it's not necessary to reiterate the many concerns that Albertans have raised and that we have raised on their behalf. I'll take my seat and listen to some of the further discussions around this amendment.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to speak against the amendment proposed by the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition. This bill has had a very thorough airing in this Chamber. In fact, in the last four years, since I have been elected to the House, I cannot remember too many bills that have been discussed at further length than this Bill 19. The minister and many of the MLAs in this Chamber have listened to the concerns of the Official Opposition and of the other members in the House. They've listened to the concerns of many of the rural landowners with respect to this bill. As a result of listening to those concerns, some changes and some accommodations have been made, which have improved the bill.

I would urge all hon. members to support me in defeating this amendment and having this bill go forward in third reading. It has received a lot of debate. It is a better bill now than when it came into the Chamber. I think it's time to move on and pass this bill on third reading.

The Deputy Speaker: On the amendment, the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Yes. Thank you. I certainly agree with the hon. colleague that spoke just ahead of me. We certainly have spent many, many, many hours, and yes, there were some amendments that came from the government side, surprisingly, that went through. Not surprisingly, again, there were many, many amendments that came from both the third party and the Official Opposition. Regardless of how many hours we've spent in here, we're still not hearing from the constituents that call us that say: oh, dandy, Andy; you've spent your time, and everything is wonderful. No, it's not.

One of the biggest concerns I hear, that actually is a huge concern to me, is that people don't trust the government. I think that that's a terrible thing to hear. To be able to disagree, to think that they're wrong, to say that they just think the government is wrong and to be able to come at it from that angle – but to say that they don't trust them I think is pretty scary when we hear this from citizens. So I really believe that this amendment is necessary.

I think this bill has to have further public input, further public discussion, and a chance for the government to really be able to make sure. This is huge, and it will affect many, many people, and it will affect them many, many years into the future. So let's make sure we get it right. Everyone out there may not be totally happy with it, but let's make sure that at least they're a lot happier because they felt they've been listened to, and in fact maybe there are further changes that should come. I for one certainly think there are. I think some of the amendments that were voted down were good amendments with good discussion around them. Of course, we know the numbers in the House dictate how those sorts of things go.

I really believe that this is a good thing. Let's get some more public input into it, and let's go back to citizens saying, "You know what? Okay. Fine. It's not too bad. I'll trust the government to do this," rather than saying, "I don't trust the government." That's pretty scary.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona on the amendment.

Ms Notley: Yes. Thank you. I rise to support the amendment; no great surprise. As has been mentioned several times, there has been a great, great deal of debate in the House with respect to this legislation. You know, it's interesting. That debate was generated through, in large part, the reaction of Albertans. As one member said, they've rarely seen a bill debated at that much length. Well, I can say that I've rarely seen a bill generate as much response and as much contact, certainly, with our offices and I'm sure with many others from people across the province. We know that that is the case. We know there are a lot of people who are deeply, deeply concerned about what this bill represents.

It's another one of those bills that, you know, when you talk about it sort of in the most high-level terms, in a very theoretical way, could potentially be somewhat compelling, the idea of essentially giving the government the ability to plan and to assemble land in a way that allows them to develop matters for, I guess the phrase is, the public good – I know it's not the public interest – in the future. In theory that's a great objective to pursue. The problem is: how do we do that? What is the process through which we will go? What are the details? Is the devil in the details? That, of course, is what we heard from Albertans to be the case, in many, many opinions.

I do appreciate that the minister did make some amendments to this legislation although I would suggest that the only amendment that was made that had any kind of notable effect was the decision to at least put a limit on the consultation period to two years. That particular amendment addressed a small problem, so that was notable and of some value. My recollection is that the remainder of those amendments were ultimately window dressing and window-dressingsque and really didn't address most of the concerns that had been raised by Albertans.

We continue to have significant concerns. We are concerned about the fact that only portions of enforcement orders can be appealed, and other portions of enforcement orders can't be appealed. We are concerned that once the land is designated as a project area, if the landowner chooses to stay on his land or her land, there is no compensation, no rent, no nothing for the restriction on the use of the land over that period of time. They're given a sell or stay option, and it may well be that the land in question may not ultimately be used for 15 years down the road even though it's designated as a project area. It may well be that the family wants to stay on that land for a whole variety of very important reasons, so they choose to stay there, but their use of the land is limited through it being a project area, and there's no mechanism for compensating them for that even if 15, 20 years down the road the government changes its mind and decides not to use that land. So that continues to be a very significant problem.

We talked as well about the really quite ham-fisted enforcement mechanisms that are given to government within this piece of legislation. We talked about, frankly, the way the legislation is written. As I said, people attending meetings that happen to include other people who have previously threatened to do something in breach of the act could well be subject to prosecution or subject to some type of enforcement action under this act. They could well be told that they're not allowed to attend the meeting. No one has ever really answered me to suggest why it is that that's an incorrect interpretation of the way the act currently reads. So it's truly problematic.

There are so many elements to the act that require more consultation. Although I give the minister credit for going out and meeting with a lot of people once the bill was introduced, I'm not sure if he intended to do that or if it sort of suddenly appeared on his agenda after the fact, sort of engaging in a damage control exercise. But I appreciate that he did travel to quite a lot of places to talk to people about the bill. Unfortunately, at that point it really was more of an issue management exercise than a consultation exercise.

Unfortunately, the landowners themselves were not consulted prior to the bill coming into effect. Some groups were but not the landowner association, so that's a concern. That's why having this bill put over for six months, you know, would be a good thing. It allows for some genuine sober second thought. Rather than sort of a reactive damage control assessment of what is in the act, it allows for some reasoned, less pressured consultation and sober second thought, and I think that landowners throughout the province would appreciate efforts on the part of the government to engage in that kind of initiative.

There are, as I say, a number of concerns that we continue to have about this bill and that landowners continue to have about this bill. We, of course, asked the government to consider amending the bill to include the phrase "the public interest." Some people argued: well, what does that mean? Conversely, if it's in other pieces of legislation, why would it not be included in this one? What's the resistance to including it in this one? Again, ultimately there is just no limit on how long land can be under a project area order. It could be 50 years. We don't know. There's no mechanism for a person to seek compensation when the government cancels the order. The details of the consultation process are still left to regulation, and as we've talked about, the consultation process in this particular bill left a great deal to be desired. In leaving further consultation to regulation, you can be not at all surprised, I'm sure, that we are concerned with what that will look like, and again we would suggest that it would be beneficial to include the particulars of that consultation within the legislation itself.

The minister still has the power to select a one-time, one-off appeal panel, which is always concerning. As I said, an injunction can still be sought for someone who appears to be about to commit an offence. These proposed changes, basically, do not remedy the fact that landowners remain very, very concerned about this. There have simply not been enough safeguards put in place to either assure them or assure members certainly in this caucus that the legislation will be implemented and administered in a way that fairly balances the right of landowners against the right of the government to pursue a particular development in a way that ultimately most effectively represents the best interests of the public as a whole.

I strongly urge members in this Assembly to vote in favour of this amendment. As I said, we certainly will be. I have great hopes that, in fact, there will be a surprising little minirevolution across the way and that just a few people will think about doing that, but perhaps I'm being naive. I'm sure I am. Anyway, I appreciate the opportunity to speak to this.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Does any other hon. member wish to speak on the amendment?

[Motion on amendment lost]

The Speaker: Under the provisions of the precedents of our Assembly the next order of business, then, is a vote with respect to Bill 19.

[Motion carried; Bill 19 read a third time]

Bill 6 Protection of Children Abusing Drugs Amendment Act, 2009

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek it's my pleasure to move third reading of the Protection of Children Abusing Drugs Amendment Act, 2009.

I think the points in favour of this bill have been enunciated very loudly and clearly in this House during previous stages of the bill. I just want to add my personal support to that. On behalf of all members who are concerned about protecting children who are in these unfortunate circumstances, I would ask for your support as well.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would concur with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek that the points in favour have been amply articulated as far as this bill is concerned. I really rise just as much at the request of my hon. colleague from Calgary-Varsity but also on my own behalf to get on the record one more time the one point against this bill that we have a serious concern about. In all other respects I think we favour Bill 6.

The notion that you can confine someone who has an addiction and put them through detox, which you can put them through for 10 or 15 days, and then have them come out the other side, in quotes, cured, if you will, of their addiction: the evidence is pretty clear that that's a false notion. The member whose bill this is, the sponsor, in Hansard yesterday made it clear that the period of time that is being talked about in this bill is for detoxification and stabilization of these children, which is all well and good.

Certainly, I suppose, it is better than the alternative of doing nothing, but it's not yet good enough. The notion of, you know, the child care workers, the people who are working with these addicted children magically finding AADAC counsellors or somebody else who knows how to deal with children with addictions and making sure every time that after the detox and stabilization period the kid is passed off to some counsellor who will finish the job I think needs a little more clarity and codification, if you will, than that, a little more certainty because we know that it just doesn't always go that smoothly. It takes a lot longer than 10 days or 15 days. It maybe doesn't take any more time than that to detox and to stabilize, but it takes a lot longer than 10 days or 15 days to rehab and come out the other end of rehab with a relatively good chance of not sliding back into your addiction.

In so many other ways this is a good bill, but that is still what's missing here in the process. It's a good enough bill that I'm going to vote in favour of it on third reading – there's no question about that – but with those concerns on the record. We need a piece of legislation here, whether it turns out to be the protection of children abusing drugs amendment act, fall 2009 or spring 2010 – I don't know – I believe, that deals with part two, which is rehab, and deals with it in a clear way so that we know that at the end of the 10- to 15-day period there is a place for that child who has kicked the most acute and critical aspects of their addiction to finish the healing process so that when they come out the other side, out of rehab, they're ready to rejoin society clean and sober and stay that way.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Shall I call the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 6 read a third time]

Public Health Amendment Act, 2009

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, it gives me a great deal of pleasure to move third reading of Bill 7, the Public Health Amendment Act, 2009.

I think it is very timely that we are passing this particular legislation at a time when public health relative to what is going on in the world today is at the forefront of ensuring that Albertans have a public health system that they can trust and rely on. I think this legislation will set that in place for the future, so it's my pleasure to move third reading of Bill 7.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, would like just a reiteration of a couple of things that I've already spoken to in this House and that I'd like on the record. One of the things that I think is very important is that the medical officer have complete freedom to be able to report to the public. I don't think that we should have any kind of political interference with what should always be medical decisions. I'm not sure that he should be consulting with the minister of health even if the minister of health was a doctor. I believe that he should consult with other medical consultants, come up with what he thinks is right, and be able to go directly to the people.

Having said that, I think that with the example of the swine flu, that we're going through right now, that is what the medical officer did do. He has been quite clear with the people in Alberta. He has said that our labs are ready, and in fact they have been doing testing right here in Alberta rather than having to wait to have it sent to Manitoba. So perhaps my words don't have quite the same weight that they may have had even a week ago; however, I still want it on the record that the medical officer truly must be able to be independent, make independent decisions that have not been politicized.

The Speaker: Others?

Shall I call the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 7 read a third time]

The Speaker: The Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A very good afternoon of outstanding progress on behalf of Albertans. On that note, since it's almost 6 o'clock, I would move that we, in fact, call it 6 o'clock and adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:54 p.m. to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Welcome.

Let us pray. As we conclude for this week our work in this Assembly, we renew our energies with thanks so that we may continue our work with the people in the constituencies we represent. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me today to rise to introduce to you and through you to members 34 visitors in the gallery from Killam public school. There are 28 students, and they are accompanied by their teachers – please forgive me if I mess up your names – Ms Karin Brussé-Paterson, Mrs. Janet Yarham and parents Mrs. Mavis Knodel, Mrs. Marilyn O'Brien, Dr. Tim Hanton, and Mr. Roger Rachid. It's a pleasure to have them here. I know that they're enjoying their time here in Edmonton, and I look forward to getting the opportunity to come and visit them in Killam, like I do with as many schools as possible, to talk to them about what we do here in the Legislature. I'd ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a tremendous pleasure for me today to rise to introduce a very good friend of mine, a very good friend of many people on this side of the House, Mr. Bill Smith. Mr. Bill Smith is a long-standing Calgarian. He used to be a firefighter. He made the wise decision later in his life to go back to school and become a lawyer. He is now a very respected member of the legal community in Calgary, and he is also vice-president of the Progressive Conservative Party of Alberta. Bill and his wife, Mary, have four children, very tall children: Connor, Logan, Liam, and Alison. I'd like to ask all members to join me in offering him a very warm welcome this afternoon.

Mr. Cao: Mr. Speaker, I have an introduction today. It's a great pleasure for me to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly two individuals from the Cantos Music Foundation in Calgary. They are executive director Andrew Mosker and fund developer Jeni Piegrass. Cantos Music Foundation owns a world-class collection of keyboards and electronic instruments, and it offers musical tours and programs for Alberta children and seniors. I would like to ask Andrew and Jeni to rise and receive a traditional welcome from our Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly another gentleman who has made some wise choices in his life, Mr. Tyler Shandro, who is sitting in the public gallery. Tyler is a lawyer with Walsh Wilkins Creighton in Calgary. He is a resident of Calgary-Buffalo although he grew up in Calgary-Fish Creek. I'm particularly proud that he could join us today as he and his wife have been very occupied with their eight-month-old boy, Phineas. I'd ask that Tyler please rise and accept the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly a group of 10 individuals who are visiting the Legislature today from Longmont, Colorado, which is about 45 minutes north of Denver. They're part of a home-school group led by Debbie Lukasiewicz and are in Alberta touring around, performing as the Luke Ham Sandwich Family Band. They have already toured the building today and are now looking forward to seeing government in action. They're seated in the public gallery, and I would ask that they all rise to receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Vandermeer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to introduce to you and through you two people. They're not lawyers. I'd ask them to rise as I mention their name. The first one is my new STEP student. She'll be working in the office. Her name is Bethany Long. She'll be taking care of my constituents this summer. The other one is my daughter Charlene, who is back home for the summer from Olds College, where she took design and marketing. You'll notice that she's wearing something that she designed, her jacket. I'd like you to give them both a warm welcome.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater.

Paving Health Pathways Strategy

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak about an exciting new initiative by the government of Alberta that I believe is one of the first of its kind in Canada. It'll provide high school students in several communities the opportunity to sample health courses contained in Alberta Education's revised career and technology studies program.

This opportunity will be available in 10 communities, which will serve as pilot sites for Paving Health Pathways: A Health Services Strategy, which aligns with the government's mandate to build Alberta's skilled workforce and initiatives in the Minister of Education's mandate letter. This strategy is backed by a three-year, $12 million funding commitment by the government. Under the revised program of studies the previous CTS strands have been replaced by a more deliberate and structured set of five clusters, including a health, recreation, and human resources cluster. Under the strategy students in these 10 pilot jurisdictions will have greater opportunity to explore the world of work, gain insight into possible health services careers, and work toward postsecondary education, all while still in high school.

Each pilot jurisdiction has determined its own course options and site location. Options include child care worker, health care aide, sports medicine, emergency responder, and licensed practical nurse. The revised CTS program of studies will be phased in starting this fall, with the health, recreation, and human resources cluster set for implementation in the fall of 2010. This initiative is a win-win for everyone. It opens doors for students to new career possibilities and may potentially increase the pool of qualified workers in Alberta's health services field. It also fosters collaboration between K to 12, postsecondary, industry, and other community partners and helps ease the transition into postsecondary education.

I applaud the school jurisdictions that applied for these pilot projects, and I'd also like to congratulate the 10, including those in my constituency, for being selected to pilot this initiative. The Premier, the Minister of Education, and his department staff deserve our thanks for moving this important pilot project forward.

Mr. Speaker, I look forward to seeing the results of this pilot project, and I hope that some day it will be available province-wide.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Oscar J. Lacombe

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Mr. Oscar Lacombe has made history in this province and has left a legacy that many aboriginal people are proud of. He has done this in so many ways, but more notable is his appointment as the first Métis Sergeant-at-Arms in this Assembly, from 1980 to 1993. He took this position seriously and showed this with the pride that he exhibited as he did his job. In fact, Mr. Lacombe was so respected in this position that on the day after his retirement, in January of 1993, government and opposition stood in unison to pass the motion that Oscar J. Lacombe receive the title of honorary Sergeant-at-Arms for life.

Oscar has had a distinguished career, spanning over 40 years; first, with the Canadian Armed Forces in 1949, serving in Korea, Japan, and Europe; with tours in Egypt, Cyprus, and the Middle East as a peacekeeper with the UN. Following his retirement from the military, for 12 years he worked as a bodyguard for then Premier of Alberta Hon. Peter Lougheed, something Oscar speaks about with pride.

Never one to back down from his heritage nor from his accomplishments, I believe the then Speaker of the House, David Carter, said it well: Mr. Lacombe has served his country, his province, the former Premier, and this Legislative Assembly with distinction. In his own right and as a representative of the Métis people Oscar has contributed to our province and country. Loyalty, dedication, and perseverance are some of the fine personal attributes that he possesses. But I believe that one of the greatest attributes that Oscar has is his Métis humour, which many of us who knew him could attest to. In fact, media types often dubbed him as having a salty humour and the strategic sense of a good soldier.

We will be celebrating Mr. Lacombe's 80 years of a remarkable life on Saturday. Still active, I am sure he will do the Métis jig with fervor and show up many of us younger people in the crowd.

I'm sure I speak on behalf of all of us here: Oscar Lacombe, our honorary Sergeant-at-Arms, happy birthday, and may you celebrate many more.

1:40 National Victims of Crime Awareness Week

Mr. Hehr: This week is National Victims of Crime Awareness Week, a time for all of us to consider real, life-affecting crimes on our neighbours and fellow citizens. It's easy to fall into the trap of thinking of crime as something that happens to other people, but once you're the victim, everything changes. Whether you've been robbed, assaulted, or defrauded, crime leaves you feeling hurt, violated, and frightened. Often there is an erosion of trust, a loss of faith in humanity. Violent crimes are seen as more devastating, with long-term emotional and physical consequences. No one wants to be a victim of crime, and indeed we all feel sympathy and regret when we hear that an Albertan has been murdered or robbed or otherwise victimized.

Fortunately, many Albertans go further than sympathy. I'm grateful to those citizens who decide to serve as Block Parents, for those who sign up for Rural Crime Watch or who volunteer to help out with Crime Stoppers videos. Above all, I'm grateful to the social workers and police officers, who put everything on the line every day to help victims of crime and to prevent crime. These dedicated men and women are real heroes. They do more to ease the pain of victims of crime than we can ever know.

As elected representatives of the people of Alberta the members of this House should always keep their eyes and ears open for new ways to alleviate the pain and suffering caused by crime, just as we should be open to new strategies to stop crime cold.

On behalf of my colleagues on both sides of the House I want to express our condolences and best wishes to all Albertans who have been victimized by criminals.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Work Safe Alberta Student Video Contest

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the first annual Work Safe Alberta Student Video Contest winners gathered at a ceremony in Edmonton to receive their awards from the Minister of Employment and Immigration. I would like to congratulate the winning students on their creativity and hard work in producing videos to bring the attention of their peers to the importance of working in a healthy and safe manner.

First place was Brad Fleischer from Bert Church high school in Airdrie with his entry called Mistakes and Regrets. Second place went to Mr. Curtis Huisman and Mr. Jeff Oudman from W.R. Myers in Taber for their entry called Promote Safe Work. Third place went to Mr. Evyn Boudreau and Ms Jessie Seberg from The Third Academy in Lethbridge for their entry called Work Smart Be Safe.

By putting this kind of effort into keeping other young Albertans safe, they have shown that they are truly winners. I encourage Albertans to see these award-winning calls for safety online at www.employment.alberta.ca.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Government Accountability

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Openness and accountability in government are the foundations of a true democracy, yet we're seeing, at an alarming rate, bill after bill take power out of the hands of the Legislature and give it to the cabinet or minister, where decisions can be made behind closed doors. So-called consultations are not public, and there is no onus placed on the government to follow the advice it is given. Hand-picked friends of the government are placed on boards and make important decisions that have significant impact on all Albertans.

Increasingly, government ministers are refusing to answer questions from the public and the opposition, demanding instead that we use the FOIP process. When this is done, they often refuse to release the information asked for or render what they do provide worthless by striking out key passages. The FOIP legislation itself is designed to allow the government to hide information from the public. There are built-in loopholes, such as the so-called advice to the minister, that allow almost anything to be withheld. Such a clause is not the norm in other freedom of information legislation in other jurisdictions. Most recently the government withheld an important report on mental health, based on the dubious assertion that it was advice to the minister.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans are concerned about what this government is hiding. They wonder whether a government that is afraid of public debate can be trusted. They worry that this government is more concerned with the interests of its friends and the oil industry than it is with the things that ordinary Albertans need to care for their families.

The Alberta government has become the most secretive in Canada. That is not what Albertans want. That is not what Albertans voted for.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Crime Reduction and Safe Communities

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'd like to talk about gangs and the safe communities task force and the impact of both on a community in my constituency. As you know, in recent weeks the safe communities task force has been conducting meetings around the province, talking about gang suppression. Last week the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar and myself had the opportunity to sit in on one of those meetings. Now, even though we were at a meeting in Hobbema, I want to stress that this is not an issue that's unique to aboriginal communities. This is something that all Albertans in every community deal with. It touches all of us either in terms of property or in terms of a more personal, individual impact, impacts like fear, intimidation, injury, and even death.

I want to focus a little bit on victims in a personal way but gang members as victims of gangs. While gangs are in many ways thought of as kind of large, monolithic, faceless organizations, they're made up of individuals and for the most part young individuals, kids. We were, I think, somewhat shocked to hear how kids are being used by gangs as couriers, enforcers, prostitutes, and so on. One of the most shocking things is how kids have lost hope. They don't see themselves as living even into their 20s, and that makes for a very dangerous formula both for themselves and for their communities.

However, it was interesting to hear a policeman say that the person that one of these young people wants to speak to when they get arrested is their mum. So I think we have to keep that in mind, that we're dealing in large part with kids. It's time to take firm action on crime, but it has to be coupled with good parenting, respect, good role models, education, and jobs. We need hope. That's what I like about the safe communities task force and what they're doing, and led by the people in Hobbema, I think they're going to make a difference to the people in that community.

Thank you.

Projected Government Business

The Speaker: The Official Opposition House Leader.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. According to Standing Order 7(6) I would request that the Government House Leader please provide the Assembly with the projected government business for the week commencing, Monday, May 4, a new month, with government business commencing Tuesday, the 5th of May.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Tuesday, May 5, under Government Bills and Orders for second reading we would anticipate dealing with Bill 20, Civil Enforcement Amendment Act, 2009;

Bill 23, Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2009; Bill 24, Animal Health Amendment Act, 2009; Bill 25, the Teachers' Pension Plans Amendment Act, 2009; Bill 26, Wildlife Amendment Act, 2009; and Bill 33, the Fiscal Responsibility Act. In Committee of the Whole Bill 10, Supportive Living Accommodation Licensing Act; Bill 11, Fisheries (Alberta) Amendment Act, 2009; Bill 12, Surface Rights Amendment Act, 2009; Bill 13, Justice of the Peace Amendment Act, 2009; Bill 14, Carbon Capture and Storage Funding Act; and Bill 16, Peace Officer Amendment Act, 2009.

On Wednesday, May 6, in the afternoon under Government Bills and Orders for second reading Bill 27, Alberta Research and Innovation Act; Bill 28, Energy Statutes Amendment Act, 2009; Bill 29, Family Law Amendment Act, 2009; Bill 30, Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2009; Bill 31, Rules of Court Statutes Amendment Act, 2009; Bill 34, Drug Program Act; Bill 36, Alberta Land Stewardship Act; Bill 43, Marketing of Agricultural Products Amendment Act, 2009 (No. 2); and Bill 44, Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Amendment Act, 2009; and in Committee of the Whole Bill 33, Fiscal Responsibility Act.

On Thursday, May 7, of course, we have scheduled Committee of Supply and the votes on the main estimates and, time permitting, second reading of Bill 34, Drug Program Act; Bill 36, Alberta Land Stewardship Act; Bill 43, Marketing of Agricultural Products Amendment Act, 2009 (No. 2); and Bill 44, Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Amendment Act, 2009; and as per the Order Paper.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: Hon. members, the Clerk will stop the clock. Before we proceed with Oral Question Period, there is a matter that arose yesterday in the House and which must be dealt with now. I'm going to invite the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie to make comment.

Member's Apology

Mr. Taylor: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, thank you for granting me this time to stand before the Assembly and say that I am sorry. I heckled yesterday during question period thoughtlessly, without any thought whatsoever that the words I used would be offensive. I just figured I was doing a little trash-talking with my heckling. Indeed, I was so insensitive to how my remark would be taken that I continued blithely along for the rest of the afternoon in here, thinking everything was fine, and it was only after we adjourned at 6 o'clock last night that I discovered how I had hurt and offended my colleagues on the benches opposite. That was never my intention. That never even entered my mind, and I am truly sorry for the offence and the pain that I have caused. It will not happen again.

The Speaker: The comment arose out of an exchange with the Premier. Mr. Premier, is that satisfactory to you?

Mr. Stelmach: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm going to table four copies of a letter that I sent to the Leader of the Official Opposition. Please permit me to quote just the one paragraph.

As members of the Assembly we are afforded special privilege under the law in an effort to promote free speech and honest debate. That privilege cannot be taken for granted and requires a high standard of integrity. That is why party leaders need to demonstrate through actions and words their commitment to, and respect for, democratic ideals. Simply put, with leadership comes the burden of discipline.

I believe that our caucus as a whole will accept the apology from the hon. member.

The Speaker: We will now proceed with the Oral Question Period. The clock will now be set in motion. First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Parental Choice in Education

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Enshrining parental rights in human rights legislation as Bill 44 proposes is either a deliberate attempt to undermine Alberta's public education system or a thoughtless, unintended consequence of social conservatism. Not only does this legislation guarantee a get out of class free card, but there's an expectation that the teachers stop, drop, and roll over the lesson to provide an immediate alternative learning experience for the objector. To the Premier: why has the majority of the Conservative caucus decreed that a minority tail wag its dogma at the expense of Alberta's public education system? Does a religious right make an Alberta education wrong?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Education responded to the allegations yesterday, and I'll ask him to respond in the House.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, what is being proposed in the human rights act merely puts into the human rights act something which is already in practice not only in Alberta but, I believe, in many places. Under the School Act a parent can exempt their children from religious study. Under the policies mandated by the Department of Education of the human sexuality education policy, schools are required to inform parents through letters or meetings when sensitive or human sexuality topics will be discussed in their child's class. Parents must be given the opportunity to request . . .

The Speaker: I appreciate that. This is the question period, not a time for debate.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are existing exemptions available to parents, including private schools, charter schools, home-schooling, and opt-out provisions currently within the School Act. What is the justification for allowing our universal public education system to be held hostage by the social conservatives in this Tory caucus?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, nothing of the sort is happening. Parents are always expected to have a strong role in the education of their children; in fact, parents are responsible for their children. At the beginning of every year schools have meet the teacher nights and open houses so that parents can be invited in and understand the curriculum that their children are being taught. There are specific areas where parents are required to be informed. One is with respect to teaching about human sexuality. Sex ed has always been the case; it's been a very sensitive subject. When it's taught, it's required that parents be informed, and they have the right to exempt their child. That happens now. Nothing will change.

Mr. Chase: Again to the Premier, or he can pass it off to the Education minister at his will. Don't students and teachers have the right to follow the publicly approved curriculum without the looming spectre of accusations of intolerance? Isn't that what a public school system is meant to be?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, sex education has always been something that is a family value, and we expect those family values to be maintained. Schools have a role in making sure students have appropriate information in accordance with the curriculum, and the curriculum is a public health curriculum when it comes to CALM, when it comes it comes to, I think, the junior high health program. In those cases, because sexual education is a sensitive issue and a family issue, parents are informed. They've always had the right to request that their child be exempted from sex education in school.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Income Support for Housing

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs claimed a few weeks ago that the cancellation of the homeless and eviction prevention fund was merely an administrative change. However, on page 2 of the Alberta works directive circulated on March 24, it states:

Even though clients may receive less than their full shortfall or be put on a waiting list by the Housing Authority, the Income Support program cannot exceed its required shelter maximums.

To the minister: given that the government has been fully aware of the funding gaps since the inception of this administrative change, what has the minister done to address the gap?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I did indicate, hon. member, the change to the homeless eviction and prevention fund is administrative. What will be happening for people is that they will more clearly see that their rent support program will be with Housing and Urban Affairs, much as it is with all other Albertans that require subsidy with rent support.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Okay. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The issue, though, is whether there is enough support there. Given that housing management bodies have wait-lists that can be up to two years, and in some cases, depending on the circumstances, even longer than that, will the minister explain how people will be able to pay the rent shortfall in this two-year-long interim?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The program will be under the direct-to-tenant rent supplement program. Rather than first-month rent and damage deposit only, it will be delivered on a 12-month basis, which is completely new for people that were previously under the HEP fund. That allows for, I think, greater financial peace of mind for people as they can undertake job retraining, employment counselling, or they can relocate to housing that's even more affordable for them in that time period. The rent shortfall benefit program and the other comments, you may speak to the minister of EI.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're hearing from constituents all the time that it's not working out that way for them. So considering that as a result of these administration changes some people will have to lose their homes before they can access programs and supports, will the minister explain how this new program is in line with the housing first model? It sounds more like a homelessness first strategy.

Mrs. Fritz: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can assure you that people will not be losing their homes through our rent supplement program. In fact, as I indicated, we're supporting people for a 12-month period rather than what had previously been a very short time for them. Previously people were going through about 22 application processes. Every month they were doing that. This ensures stability for people. The HEP fund program, the rent supplement people were receiving, will continue for a 12-month period for those individuals. They don't need to requalify. It's actually a very good change.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, with the cancellation of the rent shortfall portion of the homeless and eviction prevention fund many people who were receiving income support are no longer able to pay for housing. Under income support a single adult only receives a core shelter benefit of $323 per month. To the Minister of Employment and Immigration: given that even the Salvation Army charges rent of $525 per month, where exactly are income support recipients supposed to find housing for $323 a month?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, we do our best to help individuals find the proper accommodations, and those that need emergency help that are facing, say, emergency evictions or help for damage deposits, for instance, can apply directly to our ministry for that type of support. You'll recall that last fall we increased our budgets quite dramatically, and those increases are still in place. Our estimate for this year of $473 million towards income support programs represents an increase of just about $70 million from what we had last year.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs. People don't receive funding from your ministry until they are actually off the waiting list and at the front of the line. Can you tell us what they're supposed to do in the interim to receive funding to find a place to live?

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm assuming that the member is still discussing the HEP fund for people that are receiving a rent shortfall benefit. Those individuals that are moving into our direct to tenant supplement program will not need to qualify. They are moving directly over administratively to this department. They are, hon. member. I don't know why you're shaking your head no. I know exactly what's happening with this program. I can tell you that people are moving over to our program. They will be assisted not for a one-month period but for a 12-month period.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Premier. As the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie indicated, this sounds more like a homelessness first plan than a plan to end homelessness. Why are we continuing to not support the people who need support the most?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I can stand before this House with great confidence that there is not one jurisdiction in Canada that's doing as much to end homelessness as this province. Absolutely no one comes close to the millions of dollars invested. In fact, raised just yesterday in Members' Statements, a new idea: $6 million for Habitat for Humanity, that will add another 67 homes across Alberta in various communities. That's over and above the hundreds of millions of dollars that are going into affordable housing. Again, no jurisdiction is coming close to the plan that we have in place.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by the hon. Member for Strathcona.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I was at the news conference yesterday when the Premier was asked if his new Bill 44 could be used to prevent children from learning about evolution in schools. The Premier told the media, and I quote: parents would have the opportunity to make that choice. Yesterday the Premier denied making that statement and accused me of using wrong information. He said it, and I can play the tape if members wish. My question is to the Premier: you said it to the media, so why not say it to the House? You've drafted a bill that means that children can be prohibited from learning about evolution. Admit it.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, as I said yesterday, the bill is very explicit in what it says. The Minister of Education, again, referred to sections of the policy that's in place. This is nothing new in the province of Alberta. It's simply confirming the rights. Those rights will now be in our human rights legislation.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's very different, and in this respect: not only does the government think it's okay for children to be opted out of studying evolution in the classroom; it puts the onus on teachers to enforce it. If they don't, they can be hauled in front of the Human Rights Commission. That is new. Why is this Premier planning to expose Alberta teachers to persecution for teaching evolution in schools?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, nothing could be further from reality. Under the School Act, section 50(2): "Where a teacher or other person providing religious or patriotic instruction receives a written request signed by a parent of a student that the student be excluded from religious or patriotic instruction." That's in the School Act now. What Bill 44 basically says in section 11.1 is that when there's a course, educational program, or instructional materials that deal explicitly with religion, a student can be exempted from study. The School Act provides it now. It's now in the human rights act.

It's apparent that that's a parental right, to guide the course of education of their child, as we all know is a responsibility of parents. We have a public responsibility for public education. We have a strong curriculum in this province. What the hon. member is talking about is absolutely ludicrous.

Mr. Mason: Sure sounded like two completely different things to me, Mr. Speaker.

This government's so-called parents' rights policy exposes teachers to prosecution before the Human Rights Commission if they teach something a parent doesn't like. That's new. Teachers will be looking over their shoulders and afraid of open discussions with their class. This Education minister knows it. I know he's been put up to protect the Premier today, but I don't think he believes it himself. Why won't you admit that this policy will stifle education and end up hurting Alberta children?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, nothing in this policy or this act is going to stifle education in this province. We have a very strong curriculum in this province. We have a very strong curriculum in sexual education. We have a very strong curriculum in health. We're constantly improving the education. What we're saying is that under the act that exists and under the policies that exist, parents have a right to exclude their students from sexual education and from religious education. Under the human rights act they'll have the same privilege.

The Speaker: To the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. A lot of energy today; save it for the full debate on Bill 44, okay?

The hon. Member for Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

H1N1 Influenza Pandemic Planning

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the World Health Organization raised the level of the influenza pandemic alert from phase 4 to phase 5. This phase means a pandemic is likely imminent. Confirmed cases are now being reported world-wide, including six cases in Alberta. My questions are for the Minister of Health and Wellness: what measures are in place to protect Albertans from a pandemic?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, the member is correct that as of this morning we now have officially six cases of the influenza in Alberta. It should be pointed out, however, that all of the cases are mild in nature and are all either recovered or well on their way to recovery. We have a very extensive plan in place. It is being administered by our emergency operations centre. As of tomorrow Alberta Health Services will be part of that emergency operations centre, and in the event that the World Health Organization declares a pandemic, we also have a 100-page pandemic plan, which is available to all members on the website.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question, also to the Minister of Health and Wellness: what steps should individual Albertans be taking to help stop the spread of this infection?

Mr. Liepert: Well, I think, first of all, Mr. Speaker, individual Albertans should go about their normal business doing what they do on a day-to-day basis. If someone travelled to Mexico and returned and feels as though they may have, in fact, some contact with this particular influenza, we have the Health Link line, the professionals monitoring the Health Link line, who will give the advice that the average Albertan would be seeking, but overall we should be doing what we normally do on a day-to-day basis in this province.

Mr. Quest: Mr. Speaker, my final question is to the Minister of Education. We're hearing of school boards in this province that are cancelling trips for students. Is it necessary for parents and/or school boards to cancel planned trips at this time?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, from a public health perspective there's no reason to cancel field trips within the province or within the country. Obviously, if school trips are planned to an area or a gathering where there are confirmed laboratory cases, that should be a consideration. The deputy minister advised school boards on Tuesday to consider rescheduling student trips to Mexico and the affected areas of the United States until additional information is issued in the days ahead. I believe that's still good advice. There's no need for people to do wholesale cancellation of trips, but that decision is in the school boards' hands with respect to what's most appropriate for trips that their schools and their students are planning. What we've advised is that they should look very closely at cancelling trips to Mexico and clearly affected areas.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Secondary Ticket Sales

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Ontario Attorney General introduced amending legislation prohibiting secondary reselling of tickets between related sellers like Ticketmaster and TicketsNow and instituting a penalty of up to $50,000. While other jurisdictions are acting to protect their citizens, this government seems content to sit back, monitor the situation, and let Albertans be gouged on tickets for AC/DC, Leonard Cohen, and Britney Spears. My questions are to the Minister of Service Alberta. Why does the minister continue to allow our citizens to be ripped off?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm indeed aware of what the government in Ontario is doing. I think it's really important to note here that there are a number of cases across Canada. Of course, the federal commissioner has asked for an investigation as well. We need to look at all the answers and questions and make sure that what we do is right for Albertans and that it's enforceable and effective. So the fact that we are looking at what they are doing in Ontario is a step in the right direction.

Ms Blakeman: Back to the same minister. If this government is so aware of changing economic times for its own budget, why can't this administration understand that citizens get angry when a $90 ticket turns into a $300 ticket because there is no consumer protection for ticket reselling in this province?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think what's at stake here is the power of the consumer. The consumer has the power to make choices that I can't comment on. On the other hand, it's important to note that the consumer is protected under the Fair Trading Act. To make sure that consumers know and that they have the information to make the best decisions, we are looking at this very closely. We are not going to propose something that's a solution overnight. This is a complex situation that we are looking at from all angles.

Ms Blakeman: Well, back to the same minister. Does the minister not understand that Ticketmaster is the sole ticket supplier? She makes a remark like: oh, the consumers can decide to purchase tickets somewhere else. No, they can't. When will the minister stop monitoring the situation and introduce legislation like Ontario has prohibiting secondary ticket sales and instituting significant fines to deter this practice?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know in Service Alberta when I did my estimates, I made it very clear that any regulations or legislation that we introduce has to be the right legislation for Albertans. This is what this conversation is about. If we legislate something that's not effective and enforceable and has false expectations, that's not going to protect consumers either. That's why we are looking at what's happening across Canada and doing what's right for Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

2015 World University Games

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As all of my colleagues in the Legislature representing Edmonton constituencies will know, the coming weekend is a very important weekend for our city. An international sport delegation will be visiting Edmonton to view sport facilities and infrastructure for Edmonton's bid to host the 2015 Universiade summer games. My first question is to the Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation. What is the specific role of the delegation visiting Edmonton, and what will be happening with this weekend's site visit?

Mrs. Ady: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is right: this is a very exciting weekend for the city of Edmonton. We've got five members from the International University Sports Federation that are arriving today. They're going to be looking over the city of Edmonton and their sports facilities. They're going to meet with the bid committee, with government officials. They're going to be looking at Edmonton to see whether they have a chance to win the university bid in 2015. I'm here to tell you that I think this city is going to do a great job.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you to the minister for her optimism on behalf of our city.

To the same minister: what is the expected economic impact of hosting the games both for the city of Edmonton and Alberta?

Mrs. Ady: Well, Mr. Speaker, Economic Development Edmonton is projecting that the economic impact for the province is about $465 million, and for the city of Edmonton it's about $301 million. It's important to remember that there are legacies that get left from games in improved infrastructure but also in the attention that will be paid to sport and high-performance sport and fitness in this province. Those are legacies you can't put a price tag on.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Final supplementary question to the same minister. When does the minister expect the final decision will be made on Edmonton's bid? Specifically, what date can we expect to hear the good news?

Mrs. Ady: Well, Mr. Speaker, Edmonton is the final stop of these delegates. They've already been to Korea, and they've been to Taiwan. We get the last kick at the can to show what a great job Edmonton can do. I have to say that the city of Edmonton has such a great track record when it comes to hosting international sporting events that I think they're going to be in a very, very strong position. The decision will be made in Brussels on May 22 and 23. Good luck to Edmonton. Let's show them what we can do.

Unified Family Court

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, Alberta Justice has taken the initiative to improve maintenance enforcement collection by removing adversarial aspects surrounding recalculation. I applaud them for it. However, this government remains unwilling to commit to improvements flagged by the Graham report in 2003 to accomplish similar goals. Why is this Justice minister unwilling to commit to the creation of an integrated, single-forum court for Albertans facing a family breakdown?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think what the hon. member is referring to is a unified family court. Those are magic words. In theory they should allow certain objectives to be achieved, the most important objective being to find alternatives to litigation to resolve family matters. In Alberta Justice we have a number of programs that have been championed by court administrators, by judges, and by people who are involved within the entire court system with respect to ADR mediation, ensuring that we have full disclosure of financial information and that we look to what is in the best interests of the children with respect to custody. We believe that we meet those objectives already.

Mr. Hehr: Well, that does sound great, but it's not quite a unified family court. Unified family courts have been endorsed by academics, legal practitioners, and litigants as ways to increase access to justice. Why do we continue to deny litigants a more appropriate forum and streamlined access to the courts for family disputes?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think I made it very clear that it's not a unified family court. We've made a decision, this government has made a decision that we're going to meet the objectives that we need to make. One of the things that we know is that there are always lots of academics and lots of lawyers that have opinions and endorse this or that. What we know is that we're going to serve Albertans, and we're doing it.

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, just to be clear, are you, then, saying that your own expert task force back in 2003 was wrong and that a unified family court is no longer needed?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, that report included a number of pieces about what we needed to achieve for family law and family courts in this province. I think we're achieving those, and that's what we'll continue to do.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Public Transit Funding

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The announcement by the Premier of the extension of the northeast light rail transit line, including the portion from Clareview to the Gorman Town Centre in my riding of Edmonton-Manning, was great news. My question is to the Minister of Transportation. What are the priority projects funded with regard to the announcement today?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, this was indeed a great news story for Edmonton today. The funding today will support three projects. One is extending the LRT line from Clareview to the Gorman Town Centre in the northwest, as the hon. member mentioned, the second involves lengthening station platforms to handle longer trains and increase system capacity, and the third involves building three park-and-ride locations and upgrading signals on the LRT to improve systems efficiency.

Mr. Sandhu: My first supplemental to the same minister. The federal government promoted this project as a stimulus project. What does the announcement mean for the Edmonton construction workers?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, great news also for the Edmonton construction workers. The $300 million announced today will keep roughly 3,500 Alberta construction workers working. One of the priorities of this government is to keep people working in Alberta, so let's keep Albertans working.

Mr. Sandhu: My second supplemental: when can my constituents and other Edmontonians expect to see work begin on these projects, and when will the work be concluded so they can make use of an expanded public transit system?

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, on the planning and design, I understand the city of Edmonton has that under way or is getting it under way soon. If all goes well, the city of Edmonton could see construction start early this summer. I don't have exact completion dates, but I encourage the member to contact the city of Edmonton on that because the city is in charge of these construction projects.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Community Initiatives Program

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday it was made known that after a meeting with the international development organizations the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit reinstated the international funding component into the community initiatives program. The right decision, but it does call into question the quality of the research or the reasoning that led to the cut in the first place. My question is to the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit. Why did the minister torment the international development community and make it jump through hoops by withdrawing the funding in the first place?

Mr. Blackett: Mr. Speaker, I certainly didn't torment anyone. We had a budget decision, and we said in response to the budget estimates that we had to look at taking a reduction of $9 million in our budget, and what was the most effective way to be able to do that and to deliver the services to those organizations that we support? We thought that the Wild Rose Foundation could roll into the community initiatives program. We would find a way. We haven't made that commitment yet because I had committed that in 30 days we would deliver that. I said that it's our intention to honour the funding for $1.3 million to the international development fund. That's what I said, and we'll stick with that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again to the same minister: well, given the change of mind that the minister has had, how can the Assembly, the voluntary sector, and indeed citizens in Alberta have faith that this is the minister's final answer?

Mr. Blackett: Well, because this minister, Mr. Speaker, has been pretty consistent. I said on budget day, I said in the budget estimates, I said in every interview from there forward that my intention is to be able to provide funding on the same criteria to those organizations, whether it's with respect to international development, whether it's with respect to the organizations that need funding on a nonmatching basis. Albertans believe strongly in helping one another and the less fortunate. Our not-for-profit sector does a fantastic job, and our government will stand behind them.

Ms Blakeman: Teeter-totter Tories.

Back to the same minister. Given that a month ago there was 37 and a half million dollars in Wild Rose and CIP and now a reduction of both the original cut and this set aside for the international funding, how are all of the original Wild Rose grant recipients plus the groups that usually compete for CIP money supposed to cope with a loss of almost a third in the total funding available to them?

Mr. Blackett: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, the member opposite doesn't tell the truth. Our government through our department alone commits . . .

Ms Blakeman: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Blackett: I apologize, Mr. Speaker.

The statement is that in budget estimates I said that we have $166 million that comes through our department to the sector – it is not just CIP; it was not just Wild Rose funding – $20 million dollars from the community spirit donor program, new money introduced in 2008, $80 million in enhanced tax credit, and also the community facility enhancement program at $39 million.

The Speaker: Hon. minister, there was a comment made. I heard an apology, but I think it's very important to withdraw that comment as well.

Mr. Blackett: I withdraw that comment, sir.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Culture and Community Spirit has proposed a human rights policy that prevents teachers from discussing issues a parent might deem distasteful on religious grounds without first giving notice to the parent and censoring the discussion in the meantime. The minister's defence was that the law isn't meant to be taken literally. He said, and I quote: if you took the thing literally and ran it on its ear, we'd have anarchy. Well, I do agree with that. To the minister: if you never meant for this to be taken seriously, why are you trying to make it law and denying kids a balanced education?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, Alberta has one of the best educations in the world for our children, and no child is being denied a balanced education. What we have in this province is an opportunity for parents and the public to have a joint interest in making sure that every Albertan child is educated. Parents have a very strong responsibility for the education of their children.

There are two areas in this province and in every other place that I know of that are particularly important to parents. Those have to do with their religious values and sexual education. It's long been the practice in this province and, I believe, in most other places that parents have the right to exempt their children from religious instruction and from sexual education. They're entitled to be advised when it's in the curriculum, and they're entitled to ask that their child be excluded.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I'm going to recognize you. You are also the House leader of your caucus. Would you put some mufflers on the person sitting to your right? Now, proceed, please.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I could have sworn that the Human Rights Commission was part of the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit's area.

As part of a class discussion on current events a young girl asked her teacher about the oppression of women in many parts of the world. This minister's new policy means that the teacher would have to uncomfortably change the subject and refuse to answer the question until notice had been given to certain parents. In effect, this policy prohibits educators from using teachable moments to explain to students the values we hold dear. Why has the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit proposed policy that allows a parent who believes in the subordination of women on religious grounds to interfere with a young girl learning about her democratic rights?

Mr. Blackett: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, we engage in flights of fancy. What is there is an entrenchment of what's already in the School Act, the provisions that foster our curriculum. We are not telling teachers to do anything different than they've already done before. As the Minister of Education has eloquently stated, we are just putting into the human rights act something that is already there in the School Act. Teachers can respond to their students. They can have discussions. We are not creating the thought police. Please stop the misrepresentation of what we are actually doing. People are . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member. [interjection] It's okay. I've already recognized – boy, we're going to have an exciting debate if this bill ever gets to the House.

The hon. member.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The act is different from the policy.

Now, a bunch of kids surround another in the schoolyard, calling him something derogatory based on his sexual orientation. The teacher intervenes, telling the kids why people are completely equal regardless of sexual orientation. Under your policy he's just breached the human rights code. Why does your government want to prohibit this teacher from teaching human rights at the very time it's most needed?

Mr. Blackett: You know, again, we expect that Albertans will be reasonable. Parents are reasonable, and they have the ability to determine how their children are taught. We have protection. The Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Act is to prevent discrimination. What you're talking about: discussions, conversations . . . [interjection] We're not turning anything back. I'll have the Minister of Education respond.

The Speaker: Okay. Okay. First of all, you're going to debate this through the chair. Okay? Number one. Number two, we're going to move on.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Southwest Anthony Henday Drive

Mr. Xiao: Yes. Mr. Speaker, many constituents continue to call our office inquiring about the completion of the Edmonton ring road, specifically the southwest section, where there are still traffic lights plugging up traffic at certain points of the day. My question is to the Minister of Transportation. With the construction of the Stony Plain Road interchange under way, when will your department begin work on the remaining three interchanges at Cameron Heights, Lessard Road, and Callingwood Road?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to say that we are very, very close to moving forward on all three of the remaining intersections. In fact, we've completed the design work on both the Lessard Road and Callingwood Road interchanges, and we've just held an open house this past week for the Cameron Heights interchange. We're not quite ready to announce the start of construction on these projects, but we're moving forward quickly, very quickly. I would tell the hon. member to stay tuned. It could come any time.

Mr. Xiao: I'm very happy to hear that.

Again to the Minister of Transportation: will the minister ensure that by the time the northwest section of the ring road is completed, there will not be any lights remaining to slow traffic down at any point on the southwest ring road?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, as you know, our Premier has stated many times that the goal of this government is to complete the Edmonton ring road by 2015. That includes the removal of all traffic lights so that the entire ring road will be free flowing. My department is working very, very hard to remove those traffic signals as quickly as we can, and if possible we will have them removed by 2011.

Mr. Xiao: My second supplemental to the same minister: can the minister tell me what is the total estimated cost of the Edmonton ring road once completed?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have to tell you that to date my department has committed almost $2.4 billion towards the construction of the ring road. That includes the cost of the southwest, the southeast, the northwest sections as well as the Stony Plain Road interchange. Next we'll have to complete the three interchanges in the southwest, a bridge across the North Saskatchewan River, about 10 kilometres of new roadway, and improvements along the northeast leg of the Henday. By the time it's done, it'll be a multibillion-dollar project.

Mr. Xiao: My last supplemental . . .

The Speaker: You've already had three.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

2:30 Temporary Foreign Workers

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One hundred and thirty two Chinese temporary foreign workers in Fort McMurray were cheated out of 3 million plus dollars of their wages from April through July of 2007. A weakness in the Alberta Employment Standards Code prevents code violations going back further than six months from being investigated. My first question is to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. How can the minister guarantee that the unpaid Chinese temporary foreign workers will receive their wages which they were cheated out of when we can only go back six months in violations of the Employment Standards Code?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I indicated this past week, we have begun the process of verifying those individuals' identity and establishing the process for the distribution of unpaid earnings. The member is right in indicating that there is $3.17 million for distribution that's available to these particular workers, and we'll continue to make every reasonable effort to make sure that they get their money back.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: of the 132 workers cheated out of their wages, how many hours per week did they work and at what rates?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, I really cannot answer that particular question. I don't have those particular details. We know that they weren't paid their full amounts and that there is some money owing. Our staff have that particular file, and they have those particular details. I would be prepared, if the hon. member wishes, to get more details for him.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I and Alberta workers and members of this House would appreciate it if that information could be tabled forthwith.

Along with that, to the hon. minister: were the Chinese temporary foreign workers in Fort McMurray who were cheated out of their wages in 2007 paid for their overtime? If so, how much of the $3 million did they acquire through overtime rates?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, again, I cannot answer that particular question, those particular details. I'm sure that that information was made available as part of the investigation process to determine the earnings that were not paid. When we do look at earnings, it's the full complement of all of the earnings, including the overtime. Again, I don't have those details at my fingertips.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Federal Building Renovations

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It has been almost a year since the Minister of Infrastructure announced the redevelopment of the federal building, which has been vacant since 1989. It doesn't appear that much progress has been made. My question is for the Minister of Infrastructure. Can the minister update Albertans on the progress of the federal building redevelopment project?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to report that we are on schedule with the federal building, and it will be ready for occupancy at the end of 2011. Our construction manager and our design consultants are in place, and the design work has gone very well. The construction fencing – I'm sure all members have seen – is going up, and the excavation of the parking lot will begin very shortly. The interior demolition has gone very well, and we will be working on the restoration of the exterior of the building. In very early summer we'll get started with that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Allred: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: can the minister assure Albertans that the historical significance of the federal building as an architectural landmark will remain once the redevelopment is complete?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think it also would interest the members that the design team, in fact, includes historical resources professionals who are going to ensure that the heritage features of the building are preserved. There are a number of things we pay particular attention to: the restoration of the building exterior, the main lobby, the historic elements throughout. The stairwells, doors, and many other items have all been documented in their warehouse to be put back exactly in the right place to keep the historical significance of this building exactly what we want.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Allred: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to hear that. My final question is to the same minister. It can be a challenge to make older buildings environmentally friendly and energy efficient. What is the minister doing to make sure that the federal building will be a green building while keeping its history intact?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As you know, this is an area I take great joy in, the record of this government with respect to the environmentally friendly approach we take to our buildings and energy efficiency. We are targeting LEED gold on the federal building when completed with a green roof, high-performance mechanical systems, and landscaping that minimizes the irrigation needs that are required. We are recycling and reusing as much as we possibly can in the restoration of the building.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Marketing of Agricultural Products

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Time and again this government's agriculture policies benefit the small number of big players and discourage the large number of smaller players. The most recent example is Bill 43, which has many of the province's cattle, pork, lamb, and potato producers angry. My question is to the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development. Why is the minister ignoring the concerns presented by the producer commissions concerning Bill 43?

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, Mr. Speaker, of course, Bill 43 is in front of the House as we speak today. I'm not ignoring anyone. I'm just moving forward to what we believe very much on this side of the House is freedom of choice.

Dr. Taft: Boy, I can tell you that producer commissions don't see it that way.

Again to the same minister: why is this minister, who says he's in favour of freedom of choice, imposing this new provision on producer marketing commissions instead of allowing them to exercise their democratic right under existing legislation and conduct a plebiscite allowing all producers to decide whether or not they wish to make check-offs refundable?

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, Mr. Speaker, obviously, the member across the way doesn't understand how when you give people choice, that gives them the ultimate vote out there. They vote with their money. If their needs are not being met, they have the choice of pulling their hard-earned monies back.

Dr. Taft: How they vote with their money. That's a telling comment, Mr. Speaker.

This bill is about taking power from the hands of the many and concentrating it in the hands of the few. Bill 43 abandons the principle of one producer, one vote, and as the minister, I guess, is admitting, replaces it with a golden rule: he who has the gold makes the rules. Once again the big players who back the Premier's leadership campaign with secret donations rule the day. To the minister: will the minister admit that his intent with these changes is to take much power away from the small producers and their associations and concentrate it in the hands of giant feedlots and huge corporate producers?

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, Mr. Speaker, obviously, the question is full of innuendo and misrepresentations. I don't know where the hon. member gets his facts. We on this side of the House have a mind of our own. We know where we want to go. If you think I'm being unduly influenced by one or two people, you're very mistaken, hon. member.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Postsecondary Education Research Funding

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The doom and gloom associated with the global economic downturn is overshadowing some very strategic and significant investments that will strengthen Alberta's future economic position. My first question is to the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology. Mr. Minister, will recent investments position the Edmonton capital region as a first-rate centre for research and higher learning?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, that is a good question because given the current economic times many have probably been wondering whether or not we're pulling in our horns, so to speak, on investments in our postsecondaries, but Edmonton is definitely a success story as it relates to Campus Alberta. The postsecondary institutions are going to be receiving over a billion dollars in support in research funding and capital and operating expenses this year alone. We are certainly positioning ourselves in Campus Alberta with the University of Alberta and Grant MacEwan and NAIT and even the Universiade games that were mentioned earlier today in question period. We're positioning Edmonton to be a leader not only in the province but also on the globe.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rogers: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is to the same minister. There's been a lot of discussion in this House and, certainly, throughout our province about our health care system. To the minister: how are research and technology advancements through our universities enhancing the quality of life for all Albertans?

2:40

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, we've had a number of endowments over the years. We've had a considerable amount of capital expenditure in health research. Obviously, we're currently working with the ministry of health on the strategic health research initiative, where we're going to be working with not only Bill 27, that's before this House, in terms of the framework to align and focus our research efforts but also to strategically build on the strengths that we have in the province. The Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research just announced $25 million in funding for three new Alberta-based research teams that will be developing devices for brain and spinal cord regeneration and replacement for devices. Our biomedical services institution at the U of A . . .

The Speaker: You'll be able to get all this in the third question.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question to the same minister: how will these technological advancements enhance our next gen economy?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, we've heard our Premier say on a number of occasions that the vision for this economy is the next generation economy, or the knowledge-based economy. We know that the commodity of the future, if you will, is going to be knowledge. To that end, our investments and the legislation that's before this House and all of the capital expenditure that we've put on the table, the $1.2 billion across Campus Alberta over the next three years, including the $400 million that is in our budget this year, is all zoned in to build on the strengths that we have not only in health research but in life sciences, in biomedical, as I mentioned, regenerative medicine, working with the new Health Services Board and in a number of other areas.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Energy Conservation

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our budget website, budget2009.ca, has received some very interesting questions for this government. Albertans want to know more about the spending priorities of the government. My questions are for the Minister of Energy. Jordan from Edmonton wants to know why this government isn't investing more in renewable energy.

Mr. Knight: Well, to be quite honest, Mr. Speaker, the situation is that the province of Alberta, in fact, has a very robust support system for biofuels and alternate energy, one of the strongest support systems across Canada. We've got about $239 million in a program to do exactly that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. Fraser, also from Edmonton, wrote along the same lines. When are we going to use the money from oil and gas to prepare the next generation, the 21st century, for energy utilization?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, the preparation of individuals in the next generation for energy consumption, I suppose, could be a long, long debate because in the next generation, if she's talking in the kind of time frame I hear her talking about, there's an entire range of, I think, new energy discoveries and new technology that will be employed by that point in time. Who knows? We might have fusion energy by that time. So we're not able to kind of condition people for that kind of energy at this point in time, but we certainly are able to condition them to the use of alternate energies that we know about today.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. Fraser follows up with a clear example. Why aren't we making the best solar panels in the world and selling those?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, wonderful question, and I'm glad to answer it by saying that at our nanotechnology institute we have the top researcher in solar panels on the globe. We were able to attract him. It's a wonderful success story, and I'd be more than happy to share that with the hon. member.

Mr. Knight: And manufactured in Edmonton.

Mr. Horner: And manufactured here.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that was 102 questions and responses today.

Today is the last day of April. We begin May tomorrow. As there are almost four pages covering the various days and the weeks that May is, I'll deal with that Monday and Tuesday. I just want to advise all members, however, that because of all the interest and the enthusiasm in the room today, the chair really wondered why there was so much energy in this room today. The chair actually looked over to see what days are coming up, and the chair runs across May 2, Saturday, World Naked Gardening Day.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Bill 4

Post-secondary Learning Amendment Act, 2009

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and move third reading of Bill 4, the Post-secondary Learning Amendment Act, 2009.

The first proposed amendment to the Post-secondary Learning Amendment Act will allow baccalaureate and applied studies institutions the option of applying for the use of the term "university" in their name. The second amendment will clarify delegation powers for general faculties councils and faculty councils. These proposed amendments have been the subject of some very productive discussions in the House on what they will mean to further enhance the roles and mandates policy framework and the government's vision of Campus Alberta.

Campus Alberta and the six-sector model have enhanced and strengthened one of the best postsecondary systems in the world. We may not be the largest, Mr. Speaker, but we are recognized as one of the best by ensuring that diversity, independence, learner mobility, and teaching and research excellence are maintained within the system. These elements build upon the already strong foundation that has made Alberta's postsecondary system a shining example for other jurisdictions to follow and are critical to ensuring that Alberta realizes the goal of a knowledge economy for future generations.

The amendments will enable further sound decision-making to strategically and effectively invest public resources to address critical skilled labour shortages while at the same time creating a more educated society to respond to the growing need for knowledge workers.

Mr. Speaker, I am indeed very proud to be the mover of this legislation, and I encourage all members to support the passing of this bill. Thank you.

The Speaker: On third reading of Bill 4, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise on this particular issue. Postsecondary education is important to me on a number of accounts. First of all, the University of Alberta main campus and its south campus are in my constituency, as is the Jasper Place campus of MacEwan College. As well, I was a student at the university for a number of years, my wife taught in the school of nursing there for many years, and I must say that a number of members of my family – my mother, my stepfather, and two of my three sisters – are graduates of the University of Alberta as well. I will just simply finish off by saying that my father was very involved in the development of Canada's postsecondary education system in the period after World War II, in the 1950s and '60s in particular and into the '70s, and had quite a distinguished career in the postsecondary system. So this is an issue and a field that I feel very close to.

I also want to make the point that it's long been my view that the future of this province won't depend on oil and gas or forestry or tourism or high tech. None of us really know what it's going to depend on, but there's one thing we can be certain of, that whatever it is, it's going to require terrific education, and it's going to require terrific education right from preschool to the postgraduate level. That's why we have long argued in the Alberta Liberal caucus that the resources devoted to education need to be generous. They need to be thought of as an investment.

We long have argued that a portion of the nonrenewable resource revenues that fuel so much of this government's budget should be dedicated to establishing an uncapped endowment fund for postsecondary education so that the day comes, you know, the dream perhaps of all of us – I think I heard that in the voice of the Member for Calgary-Montrose, for example – when Alberta's postsecondary system really can take its place among the best in the world. One of the key ways to achieve that isn't just through this sort of legislation, but it's also through guaranteeing a stable and generous supply of revenues to the universities and to the colleges and to the technical schools. This Bill 4, the Post-secondary Learning Amendment Act, 2009, feeds into what for me and what for our caucus is a larger view of the position of postsecondary education in Alberta's economic, social, and cultural future.

When I debated this bill during committee, I commended the general steps taken by this bill that will allow the expansion of the university system in Alberta. The obvious candidate to become a university first is Mount Royal College. There may well be other campuses that follow suit. There's certainly talk about Grant MacEwan College, now more commonly known as MacEwan College, becoming MacEwan university. I even saw an article in the Edmonton Journal proposing that its name be changed to the university of Edmonton. [Ms Calahasen sneezed] I hope the member from Slave Lake hasn't been to Mexico recently because she's sneezing and coughing vigorously. Anyway, this bill will facilitate the expansion and development of the university system in this province. [Ms Calahasen sneezed] [interjections] We're all having a hard time with the member from Slave Lake.

Ms Calahasen: Lesser Slave Lake.

Dr. Taft: Lesser Slave Lake. Sorry.

I also want to make a couple of other points, Mr. Speaker, for the broader context of Bill 4. Hopefully by expanding the university system, we also expand and encourage more people to actually attend postsecondary education. Alberta has long had a relatively low high school completion rate, and there are many explanations for that, one of which has been the strong economy, another of which, in my view at least and in the view of some, is that in the downsizing of the 1990s, when we eliminated so many of the vocational high school programs, we actually cut out programs that drew many people into high school. Whatever the reason, we all agree that we need to increase the high school completion rate. I think we also need to expand the participation rate in postsecondary education, and I mean in everything from the technical schools to the diploma programs right through to, you know, the research in nanotechnology, that the minister of advanced education mentioned earlier today.

If this bill, by expanding the profile and extending the reach of the university system, actually draws more people of all ages and all backgrounds into Alberta's university system, I think that's a good step. It won't happen just by changing names. It won't happen just by changing designations. It's going to take a long-term strategy. It's going to take financial resources. It's going to take a social will. But a gesture like this bill will, I think, help to create the atmosphere for more people to think, "You know, it's not such a big deal to go to university. I could do that. I could go to Mount Royal university. I could go jump on the bus and attend MacEwan university" and to find that, lo and behold, three or four years later they come out with a degree, and they go on and contribute so much more not only to their lives and their families' lives but to society as a whole.

So I'm glad that this policy has been brought forward. The concepts in here are ones that we've long supported on this side of the House. It's definitely time that we see provisions in place for baccalaureate institutions to be able to achieve university status. It'll be interesting over the years to see how this plays out for other institutions like King's University College or Concordia College or those other institutions that are out there and perhaps will be drawn more clearly into the entire provincial university system as this develops.

Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to say that I think this is a step forward.

I hope it's part of a longer term, bigger vision to really help Alberta take its place as a champion of postsecondary education.

With those comments, Mr. Speaker, I'll take my seat. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour today to stand to celebrate the progress we've made on this legislation. I've had the opportunity as an Albertan to attend a number of different postsecondary institutions in this province – the University of Alberta, the University of Calgary, Mount Royal College – and also a number of institutions outside of the province. What I've found so important in all of those experiences is that the institutions in Alberta have not only provided a wonderful quality of education but also a unique experience in terms of the relationship that we as students are able to build with those institutions. I want to congratulate the minister who brought forward this legislation and the Member for Calgary-Montrose for understanding that regardless of the nature of an institution, the most important thing for those institutions is to serve their students.

In the work that I do and that our government does with respect to justice, when we talk about safe communities and the future of what the justice system would look like, one of the things that we celebrate is the fact that as we move forward to shift the kind of work that government does and communities do, we are now talking about different kinds of careers that people might have in the justice system. When I think back to when I went to law school, you pretty much became a lawyer, practised law however you might choose to do that, and participated in the system. Now when we talk to people about safe communities and what it means to be involved in helping people that need to make their way through the justice system, we talk about trained mediators, people who are trained in ADR, we talk about lawyers doing different kinds of work, we talk about paralegals that are involved in the system, and we talk about trying to understand that it's important for education in Alberta to meet the needs of the people that will require services in the future.

I look at programs across this province that are creating new ways to approach justice reform. There are programs such as the program at Mount Royal College. I know there are also programs in other parts of the province. Athabasca University has some. I just want to thank those institutions for looking forward in the way that the ministry has to try to find new ways to provide education to people that serves the needs of students now and will serve the needs of Albertans in the future.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for question and comment.

Then we'll recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, as a graduate of the University of Calgary I recognize the value of an undergraduate education and the benefits that it provides and the opportunities that it provides to people throughout their careers and their lives in pursuing their goals and dreams.

Also, I do want to recognize the importance of our baccalaureate-granting and applied study colleges. They're doing a very superb job of teaching and educating our students, which cannot be overlooked, specifically when it comes to the economic benefit that our province derives from these institutions in providing the people with the skills and knowledge to be very competitive in the global market. One of the forces that we're very much subject to these days is globalization, and part of being competitive on that level is ensuring that we have the skills and attitudes that are appropriate to get the work done that needs to be done in a manner that allows us to be competitive.

When I talk to both students as well as administrators at Mount Royal College, they're very happy to hear about this legislation not because it provides anything substantive to their organization, but it recognizes what they already do, and what they do is provide those opportunities for people to become very important members of our skilled workforce.

The second part is that it also recognizes what is happening at that university and provides future opportunities for those individuals that are attending that institution and getting their education there. Whether they want to move on to further graduate work or work in the workforce, it provides them with the recognition that they believe is equivalent to some of the other institutions that are delivering education, not just in this province but right across this country and across the world.

For those reasons I believe this legislation is important. I commend the hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose and the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology for bringing this forward and taking that one last step to ensure that recognition for this institution and the students that attend it is there so that they can further their endeavours in providing a workforce for us as well as allowing individuals to pursue their passions and their life's dreams through their education.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, then.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to participate in third reading on the Post-secondary Learning Amendment Act, 2009, as proposed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose. Certainly, our comments in third reading are similar or reflective of what has been stated earlier in previous stages of debate.

When we see this amendment to the Post-secondary Learning Act, we see that it is to allow institutions in the baccalaureate and applied studies institutions to – and, of course, this is all subject to the minister – be given the name “university.” The bill will also set out provisions which would allow the delegation of powers by a faculty council as the council sees fit.

Now, certainly Mount Royal College has had a consistent and sustained effort for some time to be named Mount Royal university, and this was part of the Alberta Liberal Party's platform in the last election. It's nice to see another policy from the Alberta Liberal Party being brought forward by this government and becoming eventually the law of the land.

Now, the President of the Treasury Board is sitting over there with a very satisfied smile on his face. Certainly, he must be very pleased, indeed, after this government, that he was a member of, was so reluctant to initiate or start a sustainability fund or a cookie jar for a rainy day. That was done. After a lot of discussion it was done, and certainly it's needed at the moment during this economic downturn. Hopefully, that cookie jar won't be emptied by the time the economic recovery resumes. I certainly hope not. This is another example of a good policy being adopted by this government.

Dr. Taft: Along with eliminating health premiums.

Mr. MacDonald: Eliminating health care premiums was another one. Hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, I'd forgotten about that. I appreciate that. [interjection] Mr. Speaker, I've been distracted again by the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

The Speaker: If we'd stick to the debate on Bill 4, you probably wouldn't have been.

Mr. MacDonald: You're absolutely right. Yes.

Now, with Bill 4, as Mount Royal seeks acceptance into the AUCC and with the provisions set out in this bill to allow university status to institutions such as Mount Royal, students with degrees from these institutions will have greater recognition. I think it was the previous speaker, from Calgary-North Hill, who talked about this.

Certainly, when you look at the information that's provided by CAUS, you can see the economic contributions being made not only by each respective institution but by the graduates from those institutions. The more education you have, the easier it is to make a good living, and I don't think there is a member of this Assembly who doesn't realize these days that it's very difficult for some people, unfortunately, to make a living.

This bill, I'm convinced, will not only improve the education that Mount Royal College or university will provide, but also I think there are applications for this, which was mentioned by previous members, for a lot of other institutions across this fine province.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

The speakers list that I have has now been exhausted. Should I call on the hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose to close?

Mr. Mason: I'll stand and say a few words, Mr. Speaker, on this. I rise to support this bill. I agree with some of the comments that have been made about the importance of education and encouraging people to engage in lifelong learning.

The community college system that was established in the 1950s, '60s, and '70s in this province I think has played a very important role in extending higher education much more broadly than had previously been the case. It has in a sense democratized education and made it available to many people who in earlier years would have been unable to obtain entrance to one of the universities for a variety of reasons: the number of spaces, costs, academic requirements, and so on.

That system has evolved over the years. Community colleges were given the ability to grant degrees, and that has been extended and extended. Now it's very much the policy that most students who embark on a bachelor's level education will do at least a couple of years at one of the colleges. There's been a real evolution in the development of colleges in this province.

Traditionally the distinction between a college and a university is that a university does research and a college does not. Both teach. But I think that that distinction is increasingly becoming obsolete. I know that both Mount Royal College and Grant MacEwan College here in Edmonton have their own reasons for seeking university status, and I agree that it can only help to enhance their stature, enhance the stature of the degrees which they grant. In general, I think it will benefit education and will benefit those who have received their education at those institutions. It will benefit those institutions and make them stronger.

Hopefully, they will be, like the existing universities and the rest of the postsecondary institutions, adequately funded so that they can accomplish the goal of ensuring that every Albertan who has the ability and the desire can have the education which they desire.

Meeting that goal is a very, very high priority for me and for our party, and I'm pleased to offer my support for this piece of legislation.

Thanks, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Shall I call on the hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose to close the debate?

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thank all hon. members for their support of this legislation and call the question.

Government Organization Amendment Act, 2009

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta on behalf of the hon. Member for West Yellowhead. Proceed.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would first like to give a quick recap of Bill 9, the Government Organization Amendment Act, 2009, that was introduced this session. Alberta is the only province in Canada that uses a registry agent model for delivery of registry services. This model allows Alberta to deliver the best registry services in the country. A full review was recently completed to ensure that the registry agent model continued to evolve and meet the changing needs of Albertans.

In response to the full review, the changes included in this bill focus on strengthening the requirements of registry agent agreements, clarifying the Minister of Service Alberta's right to inspect registry agent businesses, enhancing the offence and penalty sections of the act, and granting the Minister of Service Alberta additional regulation-making powers that will further protect Albertans and support registry agent operations. These changes will ensure that Albertans continue to receive unparalleled service and that Albertans' confidence in the registry agent delivery model remains high.

I move third reading of Bill 9, the Government Organization Amendment Act, 2009.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think this is one of those small but important bills that will work its way through this Assembly. I think it's telling that the bill is here to address some concerns with the registry system. The Minister of Service Alberta said in her comments – and she said it unequivocally – that Alberta has the best registry system in the country. I don't know that that's true; I don't know that it's false. If the minister has some interprovincial or some national comparisons or something to support that statement, I'd love to see it.

I think it's important, as the minister said, to take steps to protect the integrity of the registry system and to protect public confidence in it. Otherwise, people lose confidence in the system, we'll begin to have problems, and more drastic steps will have to be taken.

The presentation of this bill raises the question: why is it necessary? What were the issues and problems that prompted this legislation to be drafted and brought forward as this particular bill? Were there serious problems already occurring in registries that this is meant to address, or is this entirely in anticipation of problems that theoretically could arise in the future? You know, we don't want to overlegislate. We don't want to overcontrol. On the other hand, if there are real problems, we do need to address them.

One of the issues that immediately comes to mind when we begin talking about the security of private registries was a pretty dramatic series of incidents a few years ago in Edmonton where there were what I think were called crash and dash incidents at a handful of Edmonton registries, where people in off hours would crash vehicles through the front windows of the registry and steal special papers and documents and printers and other things that were required for producing secure documents. There was, of course, a lot of concern there. I haven't heard of that occurring recently, and I'm relieved by that, but I'm wondering if, you know, those kinds of problems maybe were partly what stimulated this bill coming forward. It is the case that registries, frankly, can hold a fair bit of quite sensitive personal data, so it is necessary for the government to have strong controls. I was going to say: in case the data gets into the wrong hands. But by then it's too late, I think, really, to prevent information from getting into the wrong hands.

I know this government is very keen on having a privately owned registry system. I'm always of the view that there are two sides to everything. I think there are benefits. There's no doubt that there are a lot of registry offices in all kinds of locations, and I know that when I go to them for my driver's licence or car registration or that sort of thing, other documents, usually, not always but usually, the service is good.

One of the concerns that has been brought up – and I hope the effect of this bill will be to address that – is the role of organized crime in registries. It's not that difficult to imagine that through a very clever organization of criminal activities, in fact, the ownership of a private registry falls into the hands of sophisticated organized criminals. I mean, we are talking in the world today about organized crime of remarkable sophistication. The Auditor General himself in his report last fall spoke about his staff being able to see, in his terms, the footprint of organized crime on the data of information in Alberta government computers.

I think we have to assume that organized criminals are out there and that they are working very hard. One of the ways that I've been concerned they could get access to all kinds of things we don't want them to have is by quietly taking ownership of what appears to be a perfectly legitimate registry business. Then – wow – think of the access to information and numbers. Insurance information, birth information, all that kind of thing could ever so quietly but ever so effectively be mined and stolen and repackaged in the hands of organized crime. So I think that's one of the risks of having privately owned registry agencies.

The people of Alberta and the people of Canada are rightly very alert to privacy issues. It's because people's private information is so valuable that we do need to be alert to that. To the extent that Bill 9 gives this minister more control over that information, frankly, I think it's a good idea.

When we look at the evolution of registries, I hope that this bill and this minister are trying to stay ahead of the game because registries are constantly evolving. They're sometimes taking on new services. If I'm right – and the minister might be able to nod her head yes or no – the day is perhaps now upon us or soon will be when Alberta health cards are issued through private registries. I believe that's the case. I'm getting a nod from the minister. Who would have thought that a few years ago?

We may even see private registries involved more and more in the marketing of auto insurance or home insurance so that you can go in and get your driver's licence and your pink card and all that stuff and also buy your auto insurance. Well, there is a merging of functions there, with access to personal data, that has to be thought through and managed very carefully. I hope that the minister and her department are anticipating where registries may be in five or 10 years from now because if we make mistakes, it's almost impossible to reverse them. It's virtually impossible to turn back the clock on this kind of thing and repair losses or damage that has occurred.

We on this side of the Assembly have supported this bill. I repeat my request to the minister that if there is actually interprovincial research comparing different registry systems that puts Alberta at the top, I'd be very interested to see that.

With those comments, Mr. Speaker, I'll take my seat. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to participate in the debate this afternoon on Bill 9, the Government Organization Amendment Act, 2009. When you look at what this bill is proposing to achieve by increasing the powers of accountability and monitoring that the government has over registries and registry owners and also increasing the government's regulatory powers over the registries, as I interpret this, I certainly think it's necessary.

I, too, would take exception to the comment from the hon. minister that this is the best registry system in the country. There have been issues in both Edmonton and in Calgary. There was an issue recently in the town of Athabasca, that I'm aware of, around the registries. You know, each and every one of us is entitled to our opinion, but in my view, after what happened in Calgary on Centre Street and what has happened here in Edmonton, I don't agree with that statement.

One would only have to look at the Auditor General's recommendations from previous years and from last year to see that there is a need for this bill. At the same time I think we should commend the minister and the hon. minister's department for bringing this forward and trying to tighten up some of the processes here. Certainly, issues of security, for instance, Mr. Speaker, were even brought up at Public Accounts earlier this week with Service Alberta and also during budget estimate debates, which I had the privilege of participating in, even if it was for a short time.

When we look at the intent of this bill, before we pass it on, Mr. Speaker, we have to look at some of the audit findings and recommendations of the Auditor General. Service Alberta provides many services to ministries, but specific to the registry system we can look at some of the recommendations that have been made. Now, the Auditor has flagged that Service Alberta should securely store void or cancelled documents with confidential information obtained through its vital statistics services. There was an issue around the secure storage of this, and I think Bill 9 will make a difference. Certainly, that recommendation will come into force much sooner.

We look, Mr. Speaker, at the system conversion process for the registry system and the Ministry of Service Alberta, and I'm going to quote directly from the Auditor's October 2008 report: "We recommend that the Ministry of Service Alberta document its review of actual system-conversion activities to ensure that they comply with the approved test plan for system conversion and data migration." Now, I'm not going to go into great detail here, but if members are interested, they can check this out on page 349. Those two examples are reason enough for all of us to consider passing Bill 9.

We look at other recommendations that the Auditor has made around the registry system. I'm not talking here about performance measures, Mr. Speaker, but IT project management for registry renewal initiatives, security, the issues around security and who has access and who doesn't, security administration for shared services. All of this relates to Bill 9.

I think the minister's and the department's intentions are very good. We have to ensure that the Auditor's recommendations – and I'm so disappointed that some of the Auditor's recommendations have been just rejected by this government, certainly not by the Minister of Service Alberta. If the hon. minister, you know, could maybe grab the President of the Treasury Board by the elbow and suggest to the President of the Treasury Board that he abide by all of the recommendations from the Auditor General, just like the hon. Minister of Service Alberta has done with this legislative initiative, I think we'd have a much better province and a better government.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to rise and speak to Bill 9, the Government Organization Amendment Act, 2009. I think it's quite clear that the government is taking steps in this bill to tighten up control over the private registries that exist in our province. A number of these steps, I think, are necessary and overdue. There are a number of aspects of the bill that are worthy of comment.

The agreement between the minister and the registry agent must specify the services the agent must provide and the location of the agent and that the agent shall not provide services other than those specified by the government and the agency cannot change ownership without the prior approval of the minister. That's particularly important, Mr. Speaker, an important control to prevent these registries from falling into hands of either criminals or people who do not have the best interests of the public and public information at heart.

It says that the minister may act to collect a debt that rises from a default by the agency. That's a necessary protection of the public. It also expands the regulation-making power of the minister in regard to the requirements people have to meet to be an agent, the use of information in a registry, and restrictions of access to the information following a contravention of regulations, the conduct of inspections and audits, and it deals with offences and deals with appeals by registry agents against contravention.

The bill goes on to establish the power to enter without warrant the business premises of a registry agent to inspect and audit the business, require the production of records, make copies of those, access the computer systems, and so on. It states that each registry and all information in the registry are the property of the government, which begs the question, Mr. Speaker, of why this is all necessary.

We could go back to the establishment of the new driver's licence for Alberta. Very, very expensive security features, two parts, were imposed, and this was after some incidents when driver's licences that were obtained through a registry were found in the possession of gang members. The costs of additional security features, the necessity for stronger regulation all really begs the question as to why this service is being provided through private enterprise as opposed to the government.

If you look at the history, Mr. Speaker, there have been a number of very serious problems that have been created by these private registries. Alberta First Registries of Edmonton was shut down in July 2007 for improper storage and handling of government documents. A government spokesman at the time said that no information was inappropriately used; however, the threat existed, he said. Elizabeth Avenue Registries in Edmonton was shut down in June 2006 after gang members in B.C. were found in possession of fake licences issued by the registry. Edmonton police first raised concerns about that registry in 2000. The gang members were arrested in B.C. in September 2005, five years later. From October 2005 to June 2006 the government tried to force the registry owner to sell the business. Members of the public have filed numerous complaints about poor service and errors in documentation at the registry. Mr. Speaker, a Calgary registry owner was forced to sell his business after some employees had taken bribes in return for fake licences.

It seems to me that these tighter regulations are in part a response to a problem it has created by privatizing the registries and the handling of very important aspects of public information in our province. The bill gives the government more tools to handle problems that it has created through the ideological approach to the delivery of public services.

Our policy is to reverse the privatization of the registries as the best way to ensure the protection of public information and the public interest, Mr. Speaker. I think that back in 2006 we indicated that raids at that time on a registry in Edmonton provided evidence that the decision to privatize registries was a disaster. It was the second time that very serious breaches of privacy and confidentiality of extremely sensitive information of Albertans that was entrusted to privatized registries took place.

Mr. Speaker, we live in a world where identity theft and threats to national security go hand in hand. Breaches that we have repeatedly seen in these registries are unacceptable. I believe that Albertans also deserve assurance that their personal information is secure. Identity theft leading to fraud is a very serious and still growing problem. We're not dealing here with how long people stand in line or whether correspondence is answered – those are the kind of performance standards that the government likes to talk about – but the very serious questions of the fundamental security and privacy of Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, I want to just indicate that we believe that registries demand close public scrutiny and government transparency, and that is best delivered when they are a part of government, not freewheeling privatization and ministerial complacency. We believe that ultimately what is needed is a decision to reverse the privatization of registries. We don't believe that anything short of that will actually fix the problem. Nevertheless, given that the government has shown no indication that it realizes the error of its ways but is moving to try and put a few more fingers into the dike here, we will support the bill.

Ultimately, Mr. Speaker, this is not the fix that we need. We need a more fundamental fix, and that is to have Albertans' information carefully protected by government. That cannot ultimately be done through its dissemination through multiple small businesses located around the province. There is something just inherently difficult about protecting Albertans' information with that type of system that the government has established.

I just want to indicate that we will support the bill while at the same time recognizing that the real problem has not been addressed.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Any other members wish to speak?

The hon. minister to close.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for the excellent comments on Bill 9. I believe that many of the comments about security and technology and wanting to be ahead of the parade I agree with. The critical point and the integrity of these registry agents and the information they have is paramount to me as Minister of Service Alberta. This unique partnership with the registry agents across Alberta means that this new agreement is going to give them more information and better assistance to do their job and to help them.

One of the things that we have been working very hard on is smart cards, cards that when you go onto the system you can track the service that you're doing and move forward on that. I think that ultimately what we're doing here relates to the work that's gone on with Service Alberta with the whole approach to IT, information management and security. This bill is going to assist agents to be accountable and to be alerted to situations when they need to be looking at a matter. I believe that this agreement is going to set out a number of important changes in the areas of accountability, requirements to become a registry agent, processes for audits and investigations, and other areas of legislation.

I'd like to move this bill.

[Motion carried; Bill 9 read a third time]

Bill 17

Securities Amendment Act, 2009

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to move third reading of Bill 17, the Securities Amendment Act, 2009.

I've been pleased to hear a number of the comments from colleagues in this Assembly about this particular piece of legislation. Bill 17 continues the commitment made by Alberta and all other provinces and territories except Ontario to reform this country's securities regulatory system. Alberta has been leading this work since we signed the 2004 provincial-territorial memorandum of understanding regarding securities regulation.

I understand that the federal government prefers a single federal securities regulator. However, I would suggest that that is more a policy looking for a problem than it is anything else. I would counter by pointing out that the provinces have been responsible for regulating securities markets for decades and have done a very good job. The work we've done and will continue to do under the 2004 MOU has led to the successful creation and implementation of a passport system, which is national in scope. The passport system is ready now, Mr. Speaker, and eases the regulatory burden by allowing market participants to deal with one provincial regulator, comply with one set of harmonized laws, and have the regulator's decision or approval apply automatically in other participating jurisdictions.

To move to a national regulator could take years. The passport system is a practical model that provinces and territories other than Ontario have implemented to create a national regulatory regime that is flexible and responsive and which respects provincial authority, all without the need for structural change. Canada's securities regulatory system is already ranked by independent organizations as one of the best in the world.

Bill 17 builds on the work that Alberta has done since 2004 to further modernize, harmonize, and streamline Alberta's securities law. The majority of the debate on this bill focused around whether we want to see a federal securities regulator and what the federal government is doing. I just want to remind members of the House that this bill is more to do with further harmonizing enforcement sanctions to improve disclosure to consumers and restore rescission rights to mutual fund investors until harmonized rules are adopted.

I would encourage all member to give their full support to third reading of Bill 17. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview. 3:40

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I noticed a phrase recurring in the comments we just heard from the Member for Calgary-North Hill. It was similar to a phrase from the comments from the Minister of Service Alberta, which was “best in the world”. So we have best in the world registries, and we have best in the world security systems. Again, I’m going to ask the member simply to show me. You know, you mentioned studies. Send them over at some point. Let me see who has ranked Alberta’s security system so well. I’d be interested in it. We are supporting this bill, so I’m not saying that out of any devious motive. I’d just like to see the basis.

Mr. Denis: Nothing devious, eh?

Dr. Taft: I would never be devious.

However, I think it’s worth noting, Mr. Speaker, that while most members in this Assembly will support this bill – I can’t speak for the third party – there are, in fact, serious, credible voices speaking for the other side. Over the years I’ve talked with any number of top business leaders, for example in Calgary, the hometown of the member who’s sponsoring this bill, who actually would prefer Canada to go with a single regulator. It seems to be the case that the larger the company and the more capacity they have to play on the national and international stage, the more likely they are to prefer a single national regulator.

I’ve heard people, big businesspeople and, I think, even New Democrats, propose what would be an interesting compromise. We know how close big business and the New Democrats can be at times. Another option would be to pursue a single national regulator but insist that its headquarters be in Alberta. That’s something that’s worth considering. Since I don’t think that’s going to happen, I think we need to look at this particular bill.

We have supported for any number of years, perhaps forever, the idea of an Alberta Securities Commission as opposed to a national one. There was a period when I was beginning to lose confidence in our support of that, and that was the session before the current Member for Calgary-North Hill was a member. That was about four years ago when there was some prolonged and extremely serious controversies in the Alberta Securities Commission that led to a real erosion of the credibility of the commission. It led to a number of firings, a major RCMP investigation, and although no charges were laid, there was no question that there were serious breaches of best practice.

We seem to have moved on from that as far as I can tell. The Alberta Securities Commission is more on track than it was four or five years ago, so that helped restore my faith in the model that Bill 17 represents, which is a passport system with many different provincial securities commissions.

One of the effects of Bill 17, I hope, is to increase interprovincial co-operation and integration. What we have here is a very interesting model of Confederation where provincial governments from the Pacific to the Atlantic, from Victoria to St. John’s, have come together and addressed some common concerns and discovered that we could work together as Canadians to make for a better security system and not sacrifice the regional interests either.

I think this is an interesting model. I do genuinely hope that one of the effects of a more effective passport system will be to increase the east-west integration of Canada. I think that we’re going to find – and we can see this already in the newspapers – more and more barriers coming up to easy north-south economic activity. The Americans now for almost the entire decade seem to be putting up one barrier after another, whether it’s cross-border movement of tourists or business, whether it’s all kinds of security issues, the no-fly list, and any number of trade issues: beef, wheat, softwood lumber, on and on. Now we may see the Americans erect other barriers concerning environmental issues.

We are at a moment where we need to be doing the kind of thing that Bill 17, I think, can facilitate, which is to strengthen our east-west ties and to make it easier for us to do business on a trans-Canadian basis because it may be becoming more and more difficult to do it on a north-south basis. I look forward to this bill being implemented, and like I’ve said, I think it’s a step in the right direction.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I’d like to just very briefly speak to Bill 17, the Securities Amendment Act, 2009. One of the problems that we have with a Constitution in our country – and this is not just confined to Canada; other countries have similar problems – is that it’s fairly difficult to amend. Constitutions usually are difficult to amend, and there’s very good reason why that’s so. Our system is based on division of powers. The provinces have some authority in certain areas; the federal government has authority in other areas. The problem when you establish a Constitution well over 100 years previous is that the world changes very quickly.

What has been changing the most quickly in the last decade or two is the degree to which the world is becoming unified in many respects, particularly in commerce, through the process of globalization. The type of regulatory system for securities that was appropriate in the late 1800s or through most of the 20th century has become rather obsolete, and we now have a situation where it’s not appropriate and does not adapt well to the modern realities of electronic transfer of information, money, and ownership.

We believe that the idea of provincial governments regulating securities is obsolete. It’s clearly an anachronism and is not appropriate for today’s world. We do see the need for a national regulator, but that doesn’t necessarily mean that it has to be the federal government. We need one, not 10, with a system of passports and a system of co-operation although it is a step perhaps in the right direction. Ultimately, we should be establishing a single regulator for Canada. What we propose is not to hand it over to the federal government but to organize one through mutual agreement between the provinces, and then create a national securities regulator in that way.

Calgary rivals Toronto as a financial centre in our country. It is a growing and very powerful city in respect to business and finance in our country and really is, in many respects, the financial capital of the new west, so it makes sense that the national regulator should be located in Calgary. I think we might have trouble with Ontario on that, but we’ll have trouble with Ontario even on the passport system and the agreement that has led to it.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to indicate that while the passport system is a move towards greater co-operation between the provinces, it does not go far enough, and our federal system needs to be more responsive and quicker to change than it is. Having said that, I think that we have seen more movement in this regard in the last few years than we have for a long time, so that is not a bad thing.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to indicate that we don't really have any difficulty with this legislation. But I just want to put on record that we need to move past this and towards a national regulator that is consistent with the realities of the 21st century, and we're not there yet.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Any other members wish to speak?

Hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill, do you wish to close?

Mr. Fawcett: Just the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 17 read a third time]

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 16 Peace Officer Amendment Act, 2009

[Adjourned debate March 12: Mr. Hehr]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I was hoping that there was going to be a response to some of the questions that my colleague the Official Opposition critic for the Solicitor General and Member for Calgary-Buffalo had put on the record.

This appears to be a very straightforward thing, but I've learned not to believe that things are as straightforward as they appear. What we have is one fairly narrow section being amended that basically is talking about insignia and markings and the use of the term "constable" or "special constable" in conjunction with permission from the minister. What's being added in is "without the prior approval of the Minister," and then it goes on to say that you can't use the term "constable" or "special constable" or use the insignia on symbols and uniforms and things like that.

According to the explanation that was given the last time this was debated, which was on March 12, a while ago, this was simply to save smaller centres from having to fall into line with requirements about presenting identically and having to change their insignia and things on their cars and the little tabs that are on their uniforms and what colour their stripes are and things like that.

But because the clause that's being amended also talks about the term "constable" or "special constable," it brought into play that whole discussion of terminology, which reminds me of another decision that government made that then government was looking at reversing some period of time later – that always causes me to say: well, why did you do it in the first place? – and that was the whole thing about front plates and not front plates. We used to have two plates on our vehicles in Alberta, front and back, and then the government changed that to only being on the back. There was then a bill that came forward – it must have been a private member's bill – that was going to replace the licence plates on the front of the vehicles again, and a debate ensued.

Really, the conundrum that is raised by this that I was hoping to get an answer about is the terminology again. We just aligned everybody not that long ago into calling all of our constables and special constables peace officers and tried to have everything line up that way. Now, given the opening of this particular clause, it makes me question whether we aren't going backwards and trying to reinstate all of this terminology that we just took away. The levels of authority that we have now are Alberta peace officers levels 1 and 2 and community peace officers levels 1 and 2.

Now, I think that the concern around the insignia and the markings has probably more to do with that community level of policing. I have to say that as a citizen it's getting a bit bewildering. I move through a lot of public spaces, and there are so many different uniforms and colours of stripes on the sides of pants and different hats and different titles, and also with that, of course, comes different powers of what they're enforcing.

I know that having different levels of law enforcement where they're differently empowered has worked very well in some situations. I'm thinking specifically of what were going to be community peace officers, I think, that the city of Edmonton deployed onto Winston Churchill Square because of the vandalism and kind of petty crime that they were having there. They were very pleased with the result. These were uniformed officers that were basically making their presence known in an unobtrusive way in that particular public space, and it worked really well for them. But I have to admit that as a citizen I'm starting to get bewildered by all of these different levels.

If this act is merely to make sure that smaller centres do not have to change all of their insignia and yet another version of coloured stripe on their trousers and yet a different hat, I would be grateful, but if it's going further than that and starting to work around, again, how we are going to title these law enforcement personnel, then I have more questions around this because I liked the move to peace officer. I think that was important. The specificity of language is important in the work that we do here. "Peace officer" says something very different than "law enforcement officer," and that was the question I was hoping was going to get answered.

You know, frankly, this can be dealt with in Committee of the Whole, so I'm happy to allow others to speak. I will wait to get an answer in Committee of the Whole, and I can address my concerns again there.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

The hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security to close debate.

Mr. Lindsay: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise today and speak in support of Bill 16, the Peace Officer Amendment Act, 2009. Under the Peace Officer Act auxiliary police service uniforms, titles, and insignias must be changed from constable to peace officer effective May 1, 2009. Bill 16 proposes to amend this provision to permit the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security to exempt certain police services from this requirement.

Mr. Speaker, this would relieve the exempted constable employers of the cost to make the necessary name change on items such as uniforms and insignia. It's important to note that this amendment in no way impacts the duties and responsibilities of the affected constables and peace officers. In this regard the legislation could be considered a matter of technicality.

One of the unintended circumstances of the Peace Officer Act, Mr. Speaker, is that the legislation as it is would force police agencies who employ auxiliary police officers, such as the RCMP, to unnecessarily change up the uniforms for, in regard to the RCMP, 300 auxiliary members in the province of Alberta, and that's really what this amendment is intended to correct. The RCMP's auxiliary program is a national program, and we don't want to set precedents here in Alberta.

That being said, Mr. Speaker, there are also a number of smaller communities, as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre pointed to, that we could look at if they're experiencing financial difficulties in regard to this particular legislation. For example, the Lacombe Police Service has, I believe, five members who they refer to as auxiliary members. Taber has two; Medicine Hat, approximately 19, I believe; the Blood tribe, maybe one or two; and Louis Bull, although it's now closed, did have one. So we could extend that to them, but primarily at this point in time I'm looking at the RCMP because it does create a bit of a problem for them.

I guess in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I ask for support for this legislation as it will provide flexibility and relief to law enforcement agencies who do not change their titles and insignias from constable to police officer.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 16 read a second time]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 10 Supportive Living Accommodation Licensing Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Chair, and good afternoon. I'm pleased to rise in Committee of the Whole to discuss Bill 10, the Supportive Living Accommodation Licensing Act. This bill, of course, recognizes the changing needs of seniors and persons with disabilities and the growth and complexities of the supportive living sector in Alberta. Thoughtful discussion and dialogue has resulted in the drafting of a very good act. Where possible, this act is aligned with the complaint process in Bill 24, the Adult Guardianship and Trustee Act, which received royal assent last December. During second reading of Bill 10 some comments and concerns were raised, and I would like to now speak to these matters and describe how they are addressed in the bill.

One comment was that there appeared to be too much leeway in the regulation regarding what is exempt from the application of the act. Having the ability to exempt classes, types, or categories of supportive living accommodations will help keep the legislation current and enable quick responses to changes in types of supportive living accommodations. This also allows for the opportunity to test pilot projects and new ways of delivering supportive living accommodation that is not presently captured under this legislation without reopening the act. This type of exemption would allow and encourage innovation that could have a positive impact on the needs of residents and would cover areas in the rapidly changing supportive living sector that are not currently addressed in the legislation. An example would be a group home operator who has come up with new or better ways or has adapted their practices to meet or exceed existing accreditation requirements for accommodations that are better suited to meeting the needs of their residents.

Another concern that was raised is about the power a complaints officer has in dealing with a complaint. The proposed act says in part that the complaints officer can accept the complaint but may not refer it to an investigator if the complaint is considered to be frivolous or vexatious such as a third-party complaint that cannot be verified or if the complaints officer has been able to resolve the complaint to the satisfaction of the person who made the complaint. While on the surface this seems to give the complaints officer a lot of flexibility, there is a safeguard also built in, which is that when the complaints officer decides not to refer a complaint, it is subject to appeal to the director.

The final question raised during second reading relates to the use of the words peace officer instead of police officer. The reason peace officer was used is because it is a more inclusive term than police officer and is commonly used throughout legislation. As outlined in section 2 of the Criminal Code, the term peace officer is defined as "a police officer, police constable, bailiff, constable, or other person employed for the preservation and maintenance of the public peace or for the service or execution of civil process."

Overall, this legislation is needed to help ensure compliance with provincial standards of accommodation and accommodation services in supportive living facilities and to place additional emphasis on areas that impact residents' security and safety. The new act gives the Ministry of Seniors and Community Supports the authority to carry out a full range of activities associated with supportive living facilities, to monitor compliance to accommodation standards, and to investigate complaints of noncompliance with the legislation.

Bill 10 replaces existing legislation that needs to be updated to reflect the changing needs of Albertans. It addresses the licensing needs of today, it provides the flexibility to address the evolving nature of the supportive living sector, it reflects the changing needs of residents, and it will help ensure the safety and security of residents in supportive living facilities. This also allows them to stay close to family and friends, their support systems.

Bill 10 also supports the province's continuing care strategy, aging in the right place, which provides more options for seniors and persons with disabilities to remain in their communities when they can no longer live independently due to increased personal care needs. The Supportive Living Accommodation Licensing Act is an important part of this province's commitment to assist those in need today while we prepare to support those in need in the future. It's about having legislation that reflects this government's priorities to promote strong and vibrant communities and to be there for our most vulnerable citizens.

I strongly urge you to support the passing of this important piece of legislation, Bill 10, the Supportive Living Accommodation Licensing Act. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I have to say that I am overall at this point glad to see the introduction of this legislation, the Supportive Living Accommodation Licensing Act.

Mr. MacDonald: Are you going to support it?

Ms Blakeman: Well, mostly I'm going to support it. I know my colleague is going to bring forward some amendments, and I will look forward to speaking to them.

We have a continuum of living facilities and care facilities for older and frail Albertans, but we have not necessarily, in my opinion, covered them adequately through legislation, and that includes legislation that would have monitoring and enforcement built in. When I was the seniors critic for the Official Opposition, I raised a number of those situations in the House.

One of the major concerns that we have continued to raise over the years is that not all kinds of accommodation were in fact covered by legislation, and with the legislation come standards and, one would hope, monitoring and enforcement. So I'm pleased to see that we are going to get more coverage, if I can put it that way. For example, the Social Care Facilities Licensing Act, around which this act is clearly intended to fill in some of the gaps, did not deal with seniors' lodges. I think my memory is that it also didn't cover things like group homes and sometimes what are called day homes for seniors. So we have come to the point where there are a number of possibilities, options, and even choices for older seniors and medically frail individuals for their accommodations.

Now, the dividing point here is always the difference between a housing or an accommodation set-up and care. I think that line has been quite blurred in the past. As I say, there were a number of gaps where certain kinds of accommodation just simply weren't licensed or, in the case of group homes, for example, licensed like crazy by the municipalities but not covered under the legislation that was offered by the province.

This particular act, Bill 10, the Supportive Living Accommodation Licensing Act, is picking up quite a bit of what I think was missing before. I have some very good privately operated and owned supportive living opportunities in my constituency. I also have some group homes, and I think there are a variety of other ways for, you know, seniors that are living independently in their own rental apartments or condominiums but also those that are in care.

I know that the government has really had a push, a direction, to move away from automatically assuming that anyone that can't live in their own home anymore or doesn't want to is going to end up in long-term care. I think for some people that's true, but I have to admit that the Minister of Health and Wellness has scared the bejesus out of me on a couple of occasions when he has talked about this attitude of: well, almost no one needs to go into long-term care; almost everybody can be looked after through some sort of supportive living accommodation. As the adult child of someone who is in long-term care and is quite frail, the thought that there could be a new regime in place in which that individual in my family is – what's the phrase they use? – recoded or redesignated to be in a facility that offered any less care than what they are receiving today really is quite scary to me as an individual who is responsible, ultimately, legally for a family member's care because I don't know where I would find the time. I just honestly do not know how I could possibly offer any kind of reasonable additional care to my family member. Not possible.

I think what we're witnessing here is a struggle in this province over: how do we offer some choices that are reasonably priced to aging individuals and medically frail people? Also, I think it's important to reassure that care facilities will still be available. Of course, for the government the care facilities have a health care component in them. Therefore, we talk about copayments. We talk about residents who are copayers in their care, and they are assessed a fee for accommodation, room and board, essentially. Then the government is also putting money into the facility that is covering their medical care, so the nurses that dispense medication, et cetera.

You say: okay; well, if we looked at supportive living, then, how is that health care component covered? Does the individual now have to pay for this? Dispensing of medication: do they pay a fee of $2 a day to have the nurse dispense the medication to them at the appropriate times in the appropriate dosages? I don't know, but it's the kind of thing that I would like to know both as an adult child of aging parents in this province but also as a legislator. I want to be able to reassure the number of seniors that live in my constituency, one, that there will be options for them that are affordable but, two, that if they need care, they will be able to get it, and it won't be at a cost to their dignity.

What do I mean when I say that? Well, I think one of the hardest things to deal with when you have somebody that goes into a long-term care situation is that the first thing that happens is that it's made pretty clear to you that your family member or friend is going to end up being diapered because there simply is not time for staff, especially for people that are frail, to move them onto the toilet, stay there with them so they don't get hurt, move them back off the toilet. So it's made pretty clear as soon as you get into a care facility that they are going to end up wearing diapers, which is, as you can imagine for any of us in here, not a very pleasant experience to look forward to. None of us can imagine ourselves being in that situation.

It's a pretty fast comeuppance when you see people in care facilities who were important civil servants, who were school principals, who were professionals that are well respected and award recipients coming to terms with the fact that they're going to end up being diapered, not because they're incontinent but because there isn't enough staff time to, as they put it, toilet them appropriately. In fact, that's exactly what happens. That, I would argue, is not a medical component but because they're in a long-term care facility. That's what happens. I wish it didn't, but it certainly does.

I have not had as much time as I'd like to spend reviewing the back and forth of legislation and reviewing what groups in the stakeholder community have had to say about legislation. We are in Committee of the Whole. When I have finished my comments today, I'm going to recommend that we adjourn the debate so that we can return to it and spend some more time on it.

I think there's great possibility in this, but I also think that there are a number of concerns that need to be aired and discussed around what's being considered in this. Essentially, it's meant to cover the environmental aspects of what's in these supportive living accommodations, so food standards and building codes and requirements. It's more with the environmental part of it and not with the care standards so much, so it's really about the building and the services therein.

The one thing I have noticed is some concern from those that work in this sector that they be included in any future development of like legislation or, in fact, in the development of regulations and the implementation of this act. The one that I've dealt with in the past was the Alberta Senior Citizens' Housing Association. There's expertise there about, you know, how things work well and what things don't work so well.

I have concerns about the way this government is going around consultation. What I'm seeing is a very, very, very general, broad consultation before legislation, when people don't really understand the specifics. In fact, they don't have a bill to look at, so they really don't have the specifics of what they're discussing. It's being discussed on a much more broad, general basis. Then the legislation comes in, it's passed, and that's it. There's no more consultation on the specifics because, well, they were consulted broadly before, and that's it. That's all the consultation that's going to take place.

Having made those comments, I will move adjournment of Bill 10 and look forward to continued debate on this bill at another time. Thank you.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 14

Carbon Capture and Storage Funding Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amend ments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Knight: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to be able to rise today and speak briefly with respect to Bill 14. Certainly, there have been a number of comments that are duly recorded in Hansard relative to this piece of legislation. Of course, I think the object is that CCS will at the end of the day transform our environment in Alberta and, certainly, have the added benefit of also transforming our economy to a degree.

The real question, I think, given the importance of energy to Alberta's future, is: what's next? I think what's next is addressed in carbon capture and storage. I think that we need to consider here a very delicate balance that we'll need to work with on a go-forward basis to continue developing our resources in the province of Alberta, and that is the balance between energy, environment, and the economy. It is quite a delicate balance.

The $2 billion commitment that we've set out in Bill 14 would allow, we believe, for three to five fairly large projects that have a potential to sequester about 5 million tonnes of CO₂, and we would want to see that commencing by 2015. Just out of interest, that would be equivalent to removing something in the neighbourhood of a million cars off Alberta roads. I think that the Minister of Transportation, of course, would be quite pleased. We'd probably nearly put him out of work. [interjection] I see I have some attention there now.

Mr. Chairman, the coal-fired electricity potential with respect to CCS is probably a major win for the province of Alberta and an opportunity for us to market some of this technology globally. Certainly, we think that this has an opportunity to make a tremendous and significant impact on global emissions. I think it's fair to say that globally coal-fired generation is most certainly not just being stabilized, but it's on the increase in many developing countries, and an opportunity to find ways to mitigate greenhouse gas emissions in those regions would certainly be welcome.

To look at what we're doing here at home and the opportunity that we see, the geography of Alberta is very, very well suited for carbon capture and storage. I think that from both the point of view of getting involved with enhanced oil recovery and the possibilities of enhanced gas recovery, we're very ideally situated with respect to carbon capture.

The other thing that I think is important is that the legislation, Bill 14, is a very good indicator that we are very motivated in the province of Alberta to make this happen. There have been a lot of suggestions that carbon capture and storage is unproven and so on, but I have to tell you that we know from experience both in Canada, some in Alberta, and other places around the world that carbon capture and storage is a technology that is being used, that has been to quite a degree, I think, developed. What we're looking at here, of course, Mr. Chairman, is an opportunity to take that technology and move it up a level to major opportunities for CO₂ sequestration and make sure, again, that we can prove that on a larger scale, on a go-forward these types of projects are beneficial.

CO₂ emissions, of course, come from a variety of sources. There's been a lot of talk in coffee shops and some indication in the media that this whole thing is, you know, not going to come to anything because there's such a focus on oil sands relative to CCS. Again, I think that focus has been a bit misleading, Mr. Chairman. We think that there are other opportunities, and we know that at the end of the day what we have to recognize is that the consumption of hydrocarbons is where the largest emissions are.

So we'll work with this front-end piece, with CO₂, with the carbon capture and storage. We think that there's a great opportunity here for Alberta to move forward with respect to this particular piece of legislation.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, according to Standing Order 4(3) the committee will now rise and report.

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports progress on the following bills: Bill 10 and Bill 14.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur with the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In light of the hour I would move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. on Monday.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 4:26 p.m. to Monday at 1:30 p.m.]

Bill Status Report for the 27th Legislature - 2nd Session (2009)

Activity to April 30, 2009

The Bill sponsor's name is in brackets following the Bill title. If it is a money Bill, ($) will appear between the title and the sponsor's name. [The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Welcome.

Let us pray. At the beginning of this week we ask for renewed strength in the awareness of our duty and privilege as members of the Legislature. We ask for the protection of this Assembly and also the province we are elected to serve. Amen.

Hon. members and ladies and gentlemen, we'll now be led in the singing of our national anthem by Mr. Paul Lorieau. I would invite all to participate in the language of one's choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's great today to introduce to you and through you a group of energetic students from the Darwell school in Whitecourt-St. Anne. They're joined today by Michael Warner and Darla Topping. At this time I'd ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Liepert: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me today to be able to introduce through you to members of this Assembly representatives of the Professional Association of Residents of Alberta. I know I'm probably going to get in trouble with you by saying this, but I'm going to say it anyway: these are the future Dr. Shermans of Alberta. I would ask that they stand as I introduce them. First, we have Dr. Matt McIsaac, Dr. Jillian Schwartz, and Dr. Diana Hong, who are representing the field of family medicine. From internal medicine are Dr. Seema Patel and Dr. Angeli Chopra. Representing plastic surgery are Dr. Peter Kwan and Dr. Adil Ladak. I would welcome as well Dr. Brock Debenham from radiation oncology, Dr. Riley Boyle from anaesthesia, Dr. Elsa Fiedrich from pediatrics, and Dr. Kenman Gan from ophthalmology. I would ask all of our guests to please stand and would ask members to give them the traditional welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness is in trouble with me, but I take consolation in knowing that I'm not the only one.

The hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. I'm very honoured to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly an exceptional group of Albertans, the Red Deer 18th Morrisroe Scout troop. They spent some time with the Minister of Municipal Affairs this morning, and he said that they're very articulate, intelligent, and committed. They're from Red Deer, Mr. Speaker.

This week, as you might know, is Emergency Preparedness Week, and this Scout troop is one of the first troops in Alberta to earn their emergency preparedness badge. In order to earn this badge, one must be trained in CPR, know how to use a defibrillator, and know how to prepare a 72-hour emergency kit. They've also been asked to provide first aid service during the upcoming Olympic torch relay. Congratulations. I'm very proud of them. Joining us in the members' gallery are Derrick Richards, the group commissioner and troop counsellor; Susan Scott, vice-chair and troop counsellor; Bruce Schollie, the Akela, which is the pack leader; Cody Richards, Scout patrol leader; Monica Scott, Scout patrol leader; John Scott, a Scout; and Evan Schollie, also a Cub Scout. As you can see, Mr. Speaker, Scouting is a family affair. They're now standing in the members' gallery. I'd ask them to receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children and Youth Services.

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a very special guest, Mr. Bradley Bostock. He is executive director of Child Find Alberta. Mr. Bostock is seated in the members' gallery and joins us today to kick off the Green Ribbon of Hope Campaign. The campaign runs through the month of May to build awareness regarding the issue of missing children and to educate about ways to safeguard children from predators. I'd like to ask our guest to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me today to rise and introduce to you and through you eight members of the Youth Advisory Panel and their chaperone. These eight youths are from all across the province, as far north as Gift Lake and as far south as Claresholm. The Youth Advisory Panel plays a critical role in providing the Youth Secretariat, of which I'm proud to be the chair, with a youth perspective in helping identify important issues for youth in Alberta. They're all in Edmonton volunteering for the Speak Out conference, which is an opportunity for Alberta's youth to share their experiences and ideas about education. The individuals are Brittany Ashley, Zaheed Damani, Cassie Flett, John Hampson, Fardoussa Omar, Brandon Stewart, Amy Yaremcio, Jesse Peever, and Jena Bober. They are seated in the members' gallery. I'd ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise today to introduce four guests from Red Deer regional hospital. They are Dr. Danga Sileikiene, Jennifer Hovila, Janice Kuefler, and Derek Harwood. They're concerned about the proposed centralization and privatization of gynecological cytology laboratory services, that directly affects the laboratories in Red Deer, Lethbridge, Medicine Hat, and University of Alberta hospitals. Today they are here to witness the presentation of a petition which was signed by many engaged citizens in their community and from regions around the province. I would now ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you today to the members of this Assembly my constituent and friend Mr. Jan Buterman and his partner, who really wishes she was a constituent but who for the moment will have to be happy living in Germany, Ms Nicole Koegel. Jan truly lives on the front lines of my constituency and is a champion for the Spruce Avenue community. Indeed, from Mr. Buterman's house you can see three other constituencies, which makes me all that much prouder that he chose to live in Edmonton-Calder. I would ask them to stand and receive the traditional warm greeting of the Assembly. Thank you.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

H1N1 Virus in Central Alberta Pig Herd

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to underscore the importance of relying on fact, not fear, in the midst of the H1N1 influenza outbreak. Over the weekend it was announced that a pig herd in central Alberta had contracted the illness from a farm worker who had recently returned from Mexico. As a result some countries are now unnecessarily restricting imports of pig and pork products. In fact, both the World Health Organization and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations agree that flu viruses do not affect the safety of pork and warned against imposing trade restrictions. The pigs, the family that lives on the farm, and the farm worker have recovered or are recovering.

I'd like to stress that there is no threat to our food supply. Pork and pork products are still safe to eat when handled properly and prepared properly, as always. You cannot catch the virus by consuming pork products.

I'd also like to commend the farmer who owns the pig herd. Due to the diligence of the farmer, his veterinarian, and the government's immediate response, precautionary measures were put in place to minimize the risk of the influenza spreading to other swine and people. The farm was quarantined, and no other farms are reporting herds with flu symptoms.

Agriculture and Rural Development has been working closely with industry and the federal government since the outbreak in people was reported, urging producers to be vigilant in their biosecurity measures, to restrict people from visiting their barns, especially if they've been to areas affected by the virus, and to report any suspected cases. Agriculture and Rural Development will continue to work with its counterparts to ensure that producers are vigilant in maintaining their biosecurity practices and support the efforts of the federal government to get borders reopened to Alberta pork.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

National Emergency Preparedness Week

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. May 3 to 9 is National Emergency Preparedness Week, as noted earlier by the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. Emergency Preparedness Week is a collaborative, province-wide effort that educates Albertans about their role in preparing for emergencies and disasters as well as encourages communities to work together during a crisis. Safety is everybody's responsibility. Planning and preparing for emergencies can significantly reduce the impact of an emergency or disaster and help Albertans recover more quickly.

We should all be prepared to address our basic needs for at least the first 72 hours of an emergency. Mr. Speaker, there are three simple steps that will better prepare Albertans to face a range of emergencies. The first is to know and assess the risks in your community or region. The second is to make a plan that will help you and your family know what to do. The third is to prepare an emergency kit that includes water, nonperishable food, a flashlight, extra batteries, candles, matches, and a first aid kit.

Partnerships are essential to providing the foundation that builds safe and strong communities in Alberta. The government of Alberta through the Alberta Emergency Management Agency is committed to helping individuals and families become better prepared to face a wide range of emergencies any time, anywhere. By working together with municipalities, First Nations, emergency services, volunteer organizations, the media, and individuals, we can help ensure the safety of Albertans when disasters threaten our communities.

I encourage all Albertans to take a few moments to learn how they can keep themselves and their families safe. Being prepared is not reserved to one week out of the year but is a year-round activity. Are you prepared? You can check out our website at www.aema.alberta.ca or my Twitter site at JonoMLA.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Public Education Parable

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The class of '44, a public education parable. Welcome back, grade 6ers, to day two of your graduating class of '44. We had a very eventful first day back at school yesterday. As you recall, we had just begun the genesis of our discussion of ancient civilizations when the fire bell rang, causing our mass exodus from the school. Once outside, Caretaker Leviticus called out the names and numbers until Principal Deuteronomy and Vice-principal Joshua judged that it was safe for us to return. Ruth led the way back into the school while twins First and Second Samuel held the outside doors, and the First and Second members of the Kings family monitored the inside doors.

Once back in the classroom we reviewed the drill carefully, chronicling what had gone right and wrong. Ezra and Nehemiah remarked how calmly, regally Esther had led the way while Job patiently followed behind. David, the proverbial optimist, noted that he wasn't afraid because he knew the drill. His ecclesiastical enthusiasm prompted Solomon to wisely remark that, in his opinion, our first fire drill was a real success. Isaiah and Jeremiah lamented that they thought it was their turn to hold the doors. Ezekiel and Daniel praised Hosea for his quick response in alerting the fire department. Amos and Obadiah had very little to add to the discussion. Jonah wailed that Micah, Nahum, and Zechariah had been talking instead of exiting the school quickly and quietly. However, none of his classmates swallowed his story. In conclusion, Malachi prophesied that tomorrow would be a new day and that if we didn't do better in the future, we might suffer the consequences.

Students, please now open your history books to chapter 1, ancient Greek gods and goddesses.

National Hospice Palliative Care Week

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This week is National Hospice Palliative Care Week in Canada. This one-week campaign not only focuses on raising awareness of hospice palliative care but is also a week to celebrate, recognize, and share the achievements of hospice palliative care and its care providers.

Hospice palliative care is a type of health care that aids in relieving suffering and improving the quality for those living and dying. Hospice palliative care provides care to patients and their families living with or at risk of developing a life-threatening illness, regardless of diagnosis, prognosis, or age. Palliative health care providers help patients prepare for and manage the dying process by addressing the needs, hopes, and fears of patients and their families, Mr. Speaker, as well as helping Albertans cope with loss and grief during illness and after death during the bereavement period. These services could not be provided without the support of the Canadian Hospice Palliative Support Association and their belief that all Albertans should have access to quality end-of-life care.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to take this opportunity to thank all those involved in National Hospice Palliative Care Week and to help celebrate, recognize, and share in the achievements of the hospice palliative care and all its health professionals.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Green Ribbon of Hope Campaign

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today many members of this House are wearing green ribbons, like this one, to commemorate Child Find Alberta's Green Ribbon of Hope campaign. This campaign was started 18 years ago in response to the abduction and murder of Ontario student Kirsten French. It raises awareness about the issue of missing and abducted children. The ribbon symbolizes the hope for the safe return of these children to their families.

Mr. Speaker, this is an issue that affects people across our country. In 2007 over 60,000 children were reported missing. Thanks to Child Find Alberta people in our province faced with this horrifying ordeal have somewhere to turn for help. These dedicated volunteers spend countless hours educating adults and children on how to prevent abductions and work hand in hand with law enforcement and other agencies to locate missing children. I commend their dedication to keeping children and youth from being victims of abduction, abuse, exploitation, and trafficking and providing strength and support to parents during a most trying time in their life.

This green ribbon is a symbol of hope to the families of missing and abducted children across our nation. Mr. Speaker, I invite all members of the Legislative Assembly to wear this green ribbon and draw awareness to this very important issue.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Online Campground Reservations

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Friday the Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation in partnership with the Minister of Service Alberta launched Alberta's new online campground reservation service. The sheer volume online and over the phone shows that Albertans want this service. There were more than 145,000 hits to the website in the first few hours, and the call centre has handled thousands of phone calls.

Mr. Speaker, more than 10,000 campsites have been reserved online or through the Service Alberta call centre so far. It is interesting also that on our opening day 23 per cent of the website hits were international, from the United States, France, and Switzerland. Despite the high volumes I'm told there are some spots available for this long weekend at Cypress Hills provincial park and other locations.

The new online service makes it easier for Albertans and visitors to make reservations in 25 popular provincial campgrounds. I know my constituents are pleased that two Bonnyville area campgrounds are included in the service this year: Moose Lake provincial park and Franchere Bay provincial recreation area, both great places to camp.

I understand there were some glitches, as you would expect with any new service. This is being monitored closely, and adjustments are being made where necessary.

Mr. Speaker, the government's investment in the SuperNet made it possible to take the Internet out to remote campground locations. I encourage all Albertans to use this service and to explore Alberta's beautiful campgrounds this summer.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Parental Choice in Education

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The proposed changes to the human rights act are an embarrassment. They show this government to be out of touch with Albertans and the modern world. The Alberta Teachers' Association has clearly stated that they do not support the move. The Sheldon Chumir foundation similarly has stated that it's against this bill. To the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit: why did the minister not listen to these groups in drafting the legislation?

Mr. Blackett: Well, Mr. Speaker, sometimes you have to make tough choices. There were lots of recommendations that were made to our department on this proposed legislation: some that we agreed with, some that we didn't agree with, some that I brought to our caucus and we supported, and some that we decided we would not.

I remember the day the Sheldon Chumir foundation released their report, and I spoke in response to it. The Leader of the Opposition at that time said that he would work with us to make this bill a successful one. There were things that we all agreed on that we should have. The inclusion of sexual orientation into this particular legislation was one that we agreed on and others.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Why did the minister let the right wing of his caucus prevail over his own knowledge and experience and the understanding of experts in this area?

Mr. Blackett: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's funny enough: the right wing of this caucus. Our caucus has had full, vigorous debate on this particular issue. The Sheldon Chumir foundation wanted us to take out publications and statements, and that, you know, from an organization I wouldn't deem to be right wing. But our caucus thought we wanted to make sure that we protected the rights and responsibilities of those visible minorities and those people that are new immigrants to this province. We can't agree with everything, and we shouldn't expect that the opposition would understand that.

Dr. Swann: Well, does this minister understand that the lack of consultation and thought on this policy has resulted in a bad bill that will lead to children being excluded from public schools on important issues like evolution, women's rights as well as trivial issues like what the Flat Earth Society might be promoting, compromising our public education system?

Mr. Blackett: Well, Mr. Speaker, I love to read fiction. I like to engage in it. But I would expect the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition would be able to read the bill, which clearly states: "subject-matter that deals explicitly with religion, sexuality or sexual orientation." Evolution is not explicitly religious. We're talking about the actual religion if you're talking about Catholicism, for instance, or Muslim. We're not talking about religious beliefs. We are not talking about religious content. In our school system in our curriculum as it stands today, there is very little in the way of a religious nature with respect to the subject matter.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. According to the Sheldon Chumir foundation the parental opt-out clause in the proposed human rights legislation is a "slippery slope to administrative and legal chaos." Teachers must have the freedom to teach our children how to think critically and with an open mind without fear of the consequences of archaic laws being forced upon them by the government. To the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit: will the minister confirm that section 11.1 of the proposed human rights legislation can be used to launch a human rights complaint against a teacher, principal, or school board?

Mr. Blackett: Well, Mr. Speaker, what is clear is that if a teacher follows the curriculum, which has very little that is of a contentious nature, and if the school board, as they have to do now under the School Act, notifies a parent of those contentious issues with respect to religion, sexuality, or sexual orientation, they have nothing to worry about.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what consequences has the minister identified regarding a chill effect for teachers who will now avoid spontaneous discussion or teaching opportunities for fear they might run afoul of various student opt-out instructions?

Mr. Blackett: Well, thankfully, most of our teachers, Mr. Speaker, in this province are reasonable people. Parents are reasonable people. We do not determine what the discussion in a classroom is. The Minister of Education and the school board determine what the curriculum is. We cannot control nor is our intent to control any discussion that arises in a classroom. That is for the teacher to lead, and there is nothing here in this legislation that deters them from doing their job.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. To the same minister: how do those outside of Alberta determine a standard of education to assess Alberta students when a student can opt out of any class or teaching module in math, biology, history, social studies, or whatever when their parents object on religious grounds? [interjections] It's factual.

Mr. Blackett: Well, Mr. Speaker, hopefully those people outside of the province won't be listening to the Member for Edmonton-Centre.

I'll tell you this: if they read the legislation, "subject-matter that deals explicitly with religion, sexuality or sexual orientation," I don't know where math fits into that. I don't know where English fits into that. I don't know where social studies fits into most of that. I don't know what school you went to, but the one I went to never had to deal with that subject matter.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While Bill 44 fails to differentiate between faith-based objections of conscience and opportunistic avoidance convenience, it expects classroom teachers to be able to do so. Parental rights devoid of parental responsibility are not simply unsound but unjust. If a parent considers a portion of Alberta's approved public curriculum objectionable, then the onus should be placed on the parent to seek out the publicly subsidized alternatives currently available, whether through home-, charter, or private schooling. To the minister: given that hours of instruction and preparation are contractually predetermined, where and how are objecting students going to be accommodated?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, in the same way that they're accommodated now. Under our current School Act and our mandated policies if parents object to religious instruction or instruction with respect to human sexuality, they are entitled to ask that their child be opted out of the class, either within the class or in another setting in the school, to take an alternate program at that time. It's the policy now. It's the policy that will continue.

Mr. Chase: How many additional teachers are you planning to hire to educate faith-based objectors within the universally accessible public system? How will their deployment be determined and their nonoffending curriculum developed?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is taking things to a ludicrous extreme. We currently have in this province an opportunity for parents who object to their child being included in instruction with respect to human sexuality to have those children opt out of that. We also have in the School Act, under section 50, an opportunity for parents to ask that their child be excluded from religious instruction. That's exactly the same process that will be continued. Parents will continue to be notified when those topics are up for discussion, and if they wish, they can exclude their children. It's not a problem now. It won't be a problem in the future.

Mr. Chase: Given that the mandate of public schools is to provide a first-rate education rather than a publicly subsidized sitting service, under what circumstances would a teacher or principal be empowered to call an objectionable parent to come pick up their child? In other words, how far backward are public schools under Bill 44 expected to bend over at the expense of all other children, their parents, and teachers to accommodate the wishes of faith-based objectors, whose rights to legitimate dissent are already covered under our existing School Act?

Mr. Hancock: The only thing objectionable that I found was in the way that question was formulated.

Mr. Speaker, as I've said, in Alberta we have a very strong curriculum. We expect teachers to teach that curriculum. In that curriculum from time to time – for example, in the junior high health program or in the CALM program in high school – there are topics of human sexuality, which have always been issues of concern to parents about how their children are instructed in those areas. Many parents want to know when that instruction happens, and they want to be able to know either that their child could be excluded from that or included. They're also allowed to talk to their child about values, about caring and loving relationships, and about the things around that. We would encourage parents to be involved in their children's education, to understand what's in the curriculum, and to have the opportunity, where they object, to have their child opt out.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Over the weekend the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit admitted that evolution was science, and he said that his government isn't arguing science. But, you know, despite all of the protestations from the other side about what they're not doing, we need to remember that it was the Premier himself who said that evolution would be optional if parents objected on religious grounds. This isn't a fantasy of the opposition; this comes from the Premier. So I want to ask the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit: have you and the Premier figured out why you're contradicting each other and why the message . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Blackett: Well, Mr. Speaker, I know one thing: I don't pretend to speak for the Premier.

What we have here is the legislation. It's clearly stated, and I refer to that. In the legislation that I brought forward: "subject-matter that deals explicitly with religion, sexuality or sexual orientation." If you have a question about what the Premier said, I suggest that you ask the Premier that question.

Mr. Mason: Well, I keep trying, Mr. Speaker.

The minister knows that those things are subject to interpretation. It is the interpretation of what is religion that is at stake here. Will he stand up here and settle this matter once and for all and say that evolution is not considered religious grounds and will not be enforced by this government and make sure that the act is amended to say that?

Mr. Blackett: Well, Mr. Speaker, I know my English is pretty good, and I did say: "subject-matter that deals . . . with religion." Evolution is not religion. Neither is math. Neither is English. I can't be more clear than that. Ask a court, ask anyone to determine where evolution becomes religion.

Mr. Mason: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Premier's interpretation and his minister's interpretation are clearly very different things. The question is: will you change this act, will you amend it to ensure that there can be no misinterpretation such as we've seen from your Premier, your leader?

Mr. Blackett: Mr. Speaker, as he alluded to last week, we haven't even had debate in second reading on this particular motion. We'll have a lot of chances to discuss it, and we'll see what comes out of that. I tell you what. Speaking of misinformation, I'd love for the opposition members to actually stick to the facts, to what's actually written here, not their flights of fancy and their ideas of fiction.

The Speaker: Of course, the question period is not the place to debate bills – we have ample opportunity for that – nor is it a place to seek legal interpretations, but we all know that, too.

The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

H1N1 Virus in Central Alberta Pig Herd

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over the weekend it was announced that the H1N1 flu virus had been discovered in a herd of pigs in Alberta. Unfortunately, a small number of countries are now either banning or restricting the import of pigs and pork products. My question is to the minister of agriculture. Can you provide us with an update on this situation?

Mr. Groeneveld: Mr. Speaker, it's my understanding that the worker and the family who live on the farm have recovered from the flu, but there have been unwarranted trade restrictions imposed. China has banned importing live pigs and pork from Alberta. Both the World Health Organization and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations agree that flu viruses do not affect the safety of pork and warned against imposing trade restrictions. To date there have not been any reports of illness in other pigs. The virus was contained in this one instance.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a livestock farmer myself – and I've raised pigs for many years, many thousands of them – I know that farmers have very strict biosecurity protocols to protect the health of their animals. My second question is for the same minister. Can you explain the biosecurity measures in the livestock industry and explain what they have in place?

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, Mr. Speaker, the pork industry in particular in Alberta has very proactive biosecurity measures in place that are standard procedure. This includes limiting visitors to the barn, using visitor logs, showering before and after entry into the barn, wearing special clothing inside the barn, using closed herds, and sourcing stock from reputable sources. In addition, flu in pigs is a notifiable disease under the Animal Health Act here in Alberta. Any suspected cases must be reported to the chief provincial veterinarian within 24 hours.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Prins: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. That sounds good to me. I'm going to be sure to put some pork chops or ham steaks on my barbecue this weekend, and I'd encourage all Albertans to do the same.

My final question to the same minister: what traceability measures does Alberta have in place to ensure that this one isolated incident does not spread further?

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, Mr. Speaker, in January we introduced new traceability measures, which included premises identification. It's become significant that we've done this now. Livestock producers were required to register their premises, which includes providing their legal land description, species that are raised there, and the maximum capacity of the operation. In cases like this, information is critical. As soon as we are notified of a possible animal disease like H1N1 in a herd, we are able to check our system and find out immediately what other livestock operations are in the area, what species of livestock are being raised, and the proximity of livestock to other farms' herds.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition, followed by the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Wait-list Registry

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Lack of answers on wait-list issues in the health system prompt further questions on how this government continues to fail Albertans in establishing the true status of wait-lists in the health care system. Albertans are being denied access to information that would tell them how quickly they can expect to be seen. This government has neglected to update the Alberta wait-list registry since September 2008. To the minister: why is the Alberta wait-list registry more than seven months out of date?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest: let's talk about something that is up to date. I would advise the Leader of the Opposition and all members of the House to go to the Alberta . . .

Mr. Mason: Just answer the question.

Mr. Liepert: I would advise the Leader of the Opposition and maybe the other fellow over there to go to the website of Alberta Health Services because on that website is their strategic plan for the next three years. It talks specifically about wait-lists and asks for public input.

Dr. Swann: Well, that's very good, Mr. Speaker. I'm sure public input is important, but when will the wait-lists, with an accurate picture of people's ability to access the system, be available?

Mr. Liepert: Well, if he'd check the website, Mr. Speaker, there are some specific numbers on there that I'm sure he'd find very interesting.

Dr. Swann: Will the minister comment on how we're going to be reporting the regional differences in access when the regions are gone?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think we're all Albertans, and our objective through Alberta Health Services is to ensure that we provide equitable health care to all Albertans. Now, this particular member and this particular party may want to favour one particular region over the other in this province. We don't do that, and that's the way we're going to proceed.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Spring Flooding

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This year's late heavy snowfall in southwest Alberta has many of my constituents thinking about spring floods. Every year spring storms flood Alberta's many rivers, which are already high due to snowmelt. Every year that rain and runoff flows through Alberta and into Saskatchewan, sending much more water across the border than the 50 per cent we are obligated to send. My first question to the Minister of Environment: what is this government doing to help harness the excess rain and runoff in the spring for productive use in the late summer and fall?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As you know, mankind has been trying to harness Mother Nature for thousands of years. I think that we find time and time again that our feeble attempts are sometimes acknowledged as such by Mother Nature and by the environment. That being said, we do have a series of dams, reservoirs throughout the province that we maintain and try to have the level in those dams reflect the risk of flooding that is based upon the snowpack in the mountains, and we're managing them in the same way this spring.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Oldman dam, just north of Pincher Creek, not only captures spring runoff and rain but helps regulate the flow of water during high stream flow, protecting downstream communities from the devastating effects of flooding. The first supplemental to the same minister. The benefits of dams are obvious. When will this government commit to building more?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I wish I could give a very simple and direct answer to that question – it would certainly make my life a lot easier – but unfortunately I can't. The cost related to dams is enormous, and there are consequences. It's undeniable that there are consequences, particularly downstream and to some degree the flooding that results behind the dam. We're constantly looking at opportunities to expand our dam infrastructure in the province, and we're also looking at some very promising opportunities for off-stream storage as well as traditional dams.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental to the same minister. While dams help control spring flow, it still brings the risk of floods. What is the government doing to ensure that Albertans are aware of potential flood situations during the annual flood season?

2:10

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can speak from personal experience that the damage that can be caused by floods is enormous. However, Albertans can rest assured that we continue to do 24/7 monitoring of not only the level of water that's in the rivers but also the snowpack, the rate of melt, and related weather systems that move through. We issue advisories, warnings, and they are not only posted online, but when they're severe enough, we'll intercede and make sure that as many people as possible have advance warning of dangers that may result.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Beef Marketing

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. The check-off for the sale of beef in Alberta is $3 a head, and currently it's nonrefundable. However, this government is planning to make this check-off refundable without allowing producers to exercise their democratic right to hold a plebiscite on the matter. My question is to the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development. Why is the minister not allowing producers to conduct a plebiscite and decide for themselves instead of imposing a decision on them?

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, Mr. Speaker, if just one producer wants to redirect his own money to support an association of his choice, he should have that freedom. It's not up to government to tell business owners what business association they must support with their own money. That gives these business owners the ability to choose for themselves. It certainly does. No matter the outcome, everyone loses in a plebiscite because it will only further divide a group that's already faced with the difficulty of trying to work together.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Well, thanks. I congratulate the minister on reading his notes so well.

My question to him now is: if allowing choice on this matter is so important, why was the minister so heavy handed in making ID mandatory for every beef producer in this province? Why the double standard, Mr. Minister?

Mr. Groeneveld: Mr. Speaker, they're two very separate issues. The age verification is mandatory. We're trying to move beef, particularly, into offshore markets. I've heard out there loud and clear that if you don't do that, you're not going to be here. So we moved ahead, and there was compliance, I believe, of 83 per cent, and I think that probably now we've got the stock in position where we can move ahead with this. Will it give us a market advantage? Stay tuned. We'll see how that goes in the next little bit.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Well, thanks. A pretty convenient double standard, Mr. Speaker.

As this minister knows, from Pollockville to Peace River Alberta's beef producers are angry, and they feel betrayed by this minister and this Premier. Will the minister tell the House which big feedlot operators are calling for this change, or is he afraid of revealing the names of the people who bankrolled this Premier's leadership campaign?

Mr. Groeneveld: Here we go with the innuendo again, Mr. Speaker. Why doesn't he come right out and say what he's thinking? I can guarantee this hon. member that there are a whole lot of people out there that want to have choice. It's not just feeders. There's a whole slug of them, so don't think that a 50-50 plebiscite is going to solve anything.

Domestic Worker Recruitment Fees

Mr. Benito: Mr. Speaker, a number of my constituents have expressed concerns about domestic workers, specifically nannies, being charged fees by recruiting companies. My question is to the Minister of Service Alberta. Are employment recruiting companies allowed to charge fees to domestic workers hoping to seek employment in our province?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government of Alberta wants to ensure that all workers in our province are treated with fairness and respect. Currently there is an exemption in Alberta's regulations that allows for nannies and domestic workers to be charged a fee by recruiting companies. As the Minister of Service Alberta I have the ability to change that exemption. I assure you all today that I will be removing that exemption as soon as possible.

Mr. Benito: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's certainly good news.

My first supplemental is to the same minister. Is the fee that these agencies are charging domestic workers something new?

Mrs. Klimchuk: Actually, Mr. Speaker, this exemption for domestic workers has been in place for decades, but there is no good reason for it to exist. It is already illegal for an employment agency to charge a fee for helping a person find work in all other Alberta sectors. We will be communicating this change with the employment agencies, and we'll work closely with our counterparts in Employment and Immigration and the federal government to ensure that employees, workers, and the employment agencies are well aware of their rights and obligations.

Mr. Benito: My last supplemental is to the same minister, Mr. Speaker. When will this exemption be removed?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am taking the steps to ensure that the regulation will be amended by June 1, and the change will take effect three months after. I believe this is a change that's necessary in creating further equality in Alberta's labour market. As Minister of Service Alberta I became aware of the situation when I first was appointed last year, and it's time to make sure it gets done.

Caribou Management

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, a recent federal report has noted that half of Canada's boreal caribou herds are in decline and could die off unless their habitat is better protected. To the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development: despite the caribou recovery plan having been in existence for approximately four years, why does the caribou population continue to be in critical danger?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Woodland caribou have been in decline across all of Canada, the provinces and the territories, including Alberta, for the last century. In the recent federal report referenced by the hon. Member for Calgary Buffalo, the data on Alberta, in fact, stood out precisely because we do the best job of all the provinces in actually tracking our caribou, having previous numbers and current numbers because we have a caribou recovery plan.

Mr. Hehr: Well, congratulations on the tracking of the numbers. Given that the province admitted last year that the land northwest of Edmonton and set aside for caribou protection was still subject to significant industrial development, why has greater action not been taken to protect these critical habitats?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, we are taking extensive and innovative actions to protect the habitat and to look after our sustainable caribou population. Again, the opposition likes to make it sound like you do one thing at a time in this province. The fact is that in most of northern Alberta, in addition to wildlife issues, you have forestry issues, oil and gas issues, native issues, and so forth. You have to strike a balance, and that's exactly what we're doing. The success of our integrated land management plan, which reduces the footprint of industry, and co-operation between forestry and oil and gas exploration has made a significant improvement in protecting caribou habitat.

Mr. Hehr: Well, I like to hear of all these wonderful things. Last week I was asking about the grizzlies, which appear to be in decline. This week I ask about the caribou, that continue to be in decline. Why, with all these efforts, are things continuing to decline? What are we going to do specifically in the interim between now and the land-use framework to protect these populations of animals that remain here?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to report that the Lower Athabasca Regional Advisory Council, which deals with the northeastern part of northern Alberta, will be moving forward on its advice. Part of their agenda, part of their guidance document is to look at new protected areas. I've seen the guidance documents, and I can predict with some confidence that there will be significant new protection for wildlife and forest in the northeast.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government's attempt to water down human rights under the guise of curriculum control has created a firestorm of controversy. Once again a lack of foresight has embarrassed our province. It's ridiculous to think that the teaching of evolution would ever be considered a violation of human rights, yet that's exactly what your plan will likely be interpreted to say. My question is to the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit. Why won't you clarify the issue right now and commit to removing any threat to teachers from your proposed changes to our human rights scheme?

Mr. Blackett: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have to agree with the hon. member that it's ridiculous to believe that evolution as part of our curriculum would be something that would be challenged.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, the School Act does not say that people can remove children from instruction on the equality of people from different races or genders. The minister is finally adding sexual orientation to the code, but, at the same time, he's allowing people to remove children from instruction on the equality of people with different sexual orientation. Does the minister think that parents should have the right to remove children from instruction about the equality of people from different races or genders? If not, why is he treating the GBLT community differently and creating a second tier of human rights in our province?

Mr. Blackett: Mr. Speaker, the opposition is all over the map, like, you know, the subject matter that deals explicitly with religion. I don't know what half of what she says has to do with this particular piece. We as a caucus, as a government strongly believe in human rights. We believe in family. We believe in a lot of things. We believe that Bill 44, when we get to actually debate it, will show exactly how we have looked at the best interests of Albertans and each and every group and will represent them to the best of our ability.

Ms Notley: Well, I suspect that the minister had trouble understanding the question because he doesn't understand the issue. Your proposed policy will clearly allow children to be removed from classes which discuss sexual orientation. Presumably, that includes where a teacher instructs that sexual orientation is a protected equality right under the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Why is the minister supporting a plan to limit the ability of teachers to talk about our human rights code to our Alberta children?

Mr. Blackett: Mr. Speaker, what we are doing is saying that, you know, the provisions are already given to our parents in the School Act. We will continue to do that. With respect to sexual orientation, they have that provision to opt out now. They will have that provision going forward.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Adult Guardianship and Trusteeship Legislation

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. There are fears among seniors that the Adult Guardianship and Trusteeship Act will allow for their rights to be taken away arbitrarily without their consideration or without the assistance of legal representation. My questions are to the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. Could you please inform this House about the real facts?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, I too have heard these misconceptions. I stand before you and all members of this Assembly to assure you that these claims are wrong. In fact, quite the opposite is true. I am more than willing to go on record and say that the Adult Guardianship and Trusteeship Act is good legislation. It provides more choices and more safeguards for Albertans who need help making decisions. The act is designed to respect an Albertan's right to make decisions for as long as possible and maintain their dignity in the process. It's a big improvement over the 30-year-old Dependent Adults Act legislation.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituents have told me that under the new act capacity assessors can enter seniors' homes to make determinations about their mental capacity without their consent. Again to the same minister: can you please explain the safeguards provided to individuals under the AGTA?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, first let me clarify that under the new AGTA adults are presumed capable unless determined otherwise by proper assessments. Any adult can refuse a capacity assessment, in which case the assessor will leave. Also, under the new act if anyone applies to the court to be a private guardian, the adult will be notified and given copies of all the documentation. The adult also has the right to legal representation. Seniors and vulnerable adults are more protected than ever under the new AGTA.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final supplement to the same minister: since this is new legislation, what are you doing to help our constituents understand it better?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, my ministry staff are currently conducting information sessions on the new AGTA in communities across the province. We've been running local ads to announce these meetings, and a list of all the sessions is posted on my ministry's website. I encourage anyone who has questions about the AGTA to attend one of these sessions or to contact the office of the public guardian.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge East, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Emergency Preparedness

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is Emergency Preparedness Week. Grass and brush fires outside of Edmonton, flood season around the corner, and the threat of H1N1 pandemic have all heightened Albertans' awareness of emergency preparedness. One of the initiatives that appears to have fallen off the public radar is the interdisciplinary institute for emergency preparedness that was part of last year's business plan. My question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. In 2008 the minister was committed to establishing the safety, security, and environmental institute. Given that the institute's funding was supposedly in place last year . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, the institute is being worked on. We are having discussions, and the progress is coming forward.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. I'll be just a tad more specific. How much money has been spent, what is the timeline for completion, and has this been budgeted for next year?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, it is in our budget with the Alberta Emergency Management Agency. We hope that our progress this year will bring forward the good work that the agency could do. I would say that it's in our budget year.

Ms Pastoor: Given that the proposed fiscal sustainability act will take away the $2.5 billion security blanket for disaster recovery, what is the minister's plan B if there are no funds left to deal with forest fires, floods, and other disasters, a very real possibility with this proposed legislation?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, we do not budget for disasters. Disasters are not things that are predicted. Every year we have different disasters, whether they be floods or storms. In 2005 the disasters cost approximately $165 million; last year it was approximately $40 million. This government has always supported Albertans in disasters and in emergencies.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Emergency Public Warning System

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today the Minister of Municipal Affairs announced that the province is investing in upgrading the emergency public warning system, and I'm pleased that he was able to meet with the Red Deer Morrisroe Scout group and advise them on it. That will certainly assist them in responding to an emergency. Can the minister elaborate and tell Albertans specifically why this is being done?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, Alberta has an outstanding public warning system. It is the first province-wide system of its kind. The system has served Albertans very well, but it is time to look at new technologies so we continue to lead the way. In specifics, we will increase the access to information by expanding our use of technology of satellite television, satellite radio, website alerts, reverse 911, cellphones, social media.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate that response. My second question is for the same minister. Can the minister tell us when he thinks this new system with all its new technology will be up and running?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, today is the first day of a process of building for the future. Today we issued a request for proposal, and the plan is to have the system in operation in approximately a year.

Mr. Speaker, during the upgrade of the process I want to assure Albertans that there is not going to be any disruption of the system we have in place. The system that we are bringing forward is going to provide additional access for all Albertans. The emergency public warning system will be there for Albertans for the future.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is for the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security. Your ministry is responsible for the Amber Alert. How will changes to the emergency public warning system affect the Amber Alert?

Mr. Lindsay: Mr. Speaker, the key to an effective Amber Alert program, obviously, is getting accurate information out to the public as soon as possible so that the public can be on the lookout for the child. These improvements that the hon. minister spoke about to the emergency public warning system will enhance the Amber Alert program used by police services in this province in high-risk cases of child abduction. The partnership with police has proven highly successful. Each of the seven Amber Alerts that has been initiated since the start-up in 2002 has concluded with the safe return of the child.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

2:30 Condominium Property Act Consultation

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The endless monitoring of condo problems by the Minister of Service Alberta is completely ineffective. Condo owners have to choose between difficult legal battles or leaving their homes because this government refuses to protect them. To the Minister of Service Alberta: how does the minister's monitoring do anything to help Albertans who have to leave their homes because they can no longer afford the condo repair bills?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to this situation, as I've indicated before, the Condominium Property Act is one of those acts that is under review and is going to be going through a very thorough review. It's a very complex piece of legislation; therefore, we need to make sure we do it right. I'm very aware of some of the tragic and unfortunate situations that are happening across Alberta, and that's why being informed of these situations is so important to me.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think that review is taking longer and longer while the crisis is hitting more and more Albertans every day. Since the minister refuses to change the legislation to help condo owners, how else will the minister assist condo owners who are forced to pay tens of thousands of dollars to repair the poor construction of their homes?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to note that I will be meeting with the Alberta Real Estate Association. I know that particular group has some excellent suggestions looking at solutions to some of these issues, whether it's condo fees or the reserve fee or the maintenance issue. We know that condos are aging in Alberta. We also know that with the boom in building there were situations where perhaps places were built that we need to look at and to change to enforce the rules better.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The situation is not improving as the number of legal cases involving condos, repairs, and management companies continue to rise, Minister. How can the minister justify her continued inaction on this issue?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, with respect to the Condominium Property Act, the review that will be going on in this next short while is really, really important. I am very aware of the many legal cases that are before the courts on this matter with respect to individual situations. This affects families. This is families having to move out for whatever reasons. This is why we need to look at this and make sure that those families are protected and to make sure that things like this don't happen again.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Knowledge Infrastructure Program Funding

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's postsecondary students are the future of our knowledge-based economy. Earlier today we got some good news when our government announced the shared funding agreement with the federal government to enhance the infrastructure of Alberta's postsecondary institutions. My first question is to the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology. It is nice to receive infrastructure funding, but how does this funding align with the provincial goals and priorities?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, today we did have the pleasure of having two of our federal ministers, Ms Ambrose and Mr. Goodyear, in Edmonton to announce a partnered funding of $350 million for postsecondaries here in the province of Alberta, of which $187 million is the provincial contribution to this project, the KIP, or knowledge infrastructure project. The federal contributions are going to enable us to enhance and advance the high-priority capital projects within the science and innovation system across the province. It's also important to note that these projects are going to support nearly 2,500 new jobs for Albertans in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question to the same minister: how were Alberta's universities and colleges selected for this program? What criteria was it based on?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, Campus Alberta, introduced in this House last year, developed a system of prioritization for Campus Alberta and all through the province based on the need identified through a provincial, pan-Alberta approach. I'm very, very pleased that all of our postsecondaries were online and on stream with what we were doing. The universities and the colleges and the technical institutes all have submitted to us their priority projects and their deferred maintenance and their science and innovation agenda, so we went through that list in consultation with the postsecondaries and came up with those high-priority projects.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question to the same minister. The federal government called this one-time funding. Is this the only announcement we can expect related to this program?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would love to see more announcements from the federal government on dollars coming to Alberta and certainly hope that there are a number of areas where they're going to be making do on some commitments. I think the balance of funding under the knowledge infrastructure program is going to be further announced this fall. The ministers gave us every indication that there is another phase to this project. It's a short-term, two-year program. We have to have shovel-ready projects, but they also have to be projects that in our mind align with the goals and the objectives of Campus Alberta and the science and innovation agenda of Campus Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. China, Ukraine, and South Korea have all banned Alberta pork as a result of the spreading H1N1 influenza. Alberta pigs, as I think we all know in this Assembly, have tested positive, but we also all know it has to be stressed that the influenza cannot be transferred to humans from the consumption of pork and that Alberta pork is safe to eat. My first question is to the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development. How is this minister working with Alberta pork producers to co-ordinate efforts and ensure that Alberta's pork exports are not further hurt by misconceptions about the H1N1 influenza?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It certainly is a good question because it sure is an issue for our pork producers out there today. I can guarantee the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview that from the very moment that swine flu was announced, we worked with the pork people on contacting all the producers, making sure their biosecurity was up to speed. I don't think we had to do that. I think they were there ahead of us. But it certainly is an issue, and we continue to work with them as we move through this.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thanks. Again to the same minister: does this minister recognize that in situations such as these industry councils such as Alberta Pork play an important role in protecting export markets?

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, of course they do, but we have to work together. Let's not lose sight of the fact that we have to work with the federal government. We have to work with CFIA. We have to have all our ducks in a row. We work with these people every day to make sure that those are the protocols that we have in place.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. We all realize that Alberta Beef Producers played a huge role in the BSE crisis. We probably expect the same from Alberta Pork. To the same minister: since making check-offs on pork refundable, which Bill 43 would do, weakens the pork industry at a time when it needs strength and unity to face a crisis, will the minister delay Bill 43 until all its effects can be thought through?

Mr. Groeneveld: Mr. Speaker, why was I not surprised with that question after the set-up from the last question? Maybe give me a little time to think about this.

Of course, what this will do for the pork industry, as the beef industry, as the other associations: they will have to become more accountable. They'll have to think out of the box. They'll probably have to come up with some new ideas to make sure that it works for all their producers, every one of them in there, and they will not lose any money in the check-off procedure.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Education Public Satisfaction Survey

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For Alberta to remain on the leading edge, we need to be constantly evaluating how our education system is performing. I understand that Alberta Education conducts surveys with random samples of students, parents, teachers, and school board members as well as the public to measure our overall satisfaction with the quality of the education system. This is important data as it complements the hard data we have such as test results, dropout and completion rates, and postsecondary transition rates. My questions are all for the Minister of Education. The surveys have shown that public satisfaction with Alberta's education system has been consistently lower than that of students, parents, teachers, and school board members. Can the minister explain why that is?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member is correct. The public's satisfaction is lower than that of those who are directly involved in the school system, and I think that, in fact, is the answer, that people who are directly involved with the school system get their information through the school system, either from school newsletters or from the schools directly, so they have a higher degree of association with the system, and it's encouraging to know that they have a higher degree of faith in the system. The public – and our surveys show this because we ask the questions – tends to get their information from the media; therefore, they have less satisfaction with the system.

Ms Woo-Paw: Does the ministry make adjustments or modifications to survey methodologies, questions, and respondent groups to address ongoing changes to the content of K to 12?

Mr. Hancock: Yes, Mr. Speaker, we do review the questions annually and make changes as appropriate. We want to make sure that the measures fit the goals of our business plan, that we're addressing the relevant needs of our stakeholder groups. For example, self-identified aboriginal high school students and their parents were added as respondent groups. Parents of students with severe special needs are surveyed as well. We break down the results for respondent groups by geographic region, for example, and in other areas. In addition, jurisdiction surveys are now available in 10 different languages to make sure that we can get a full response from all parents in the system.

Ms Woo-Paw: Does the ministry work with stakeholders in developing and updating the methodologies, contents, and scope of the provincial jurisdiction surveys?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, in fact, we do. We worked with stakeholders in developing the surveys in the first place back in 1995, and now we have an advisory group made up of school boards that work with us on the design implementation of the accountability pillar surveys to assess school jurisdiction performance. We receive advice and feedback on the choice and composition of groups to be surveyed, the general survey content such as the linkage between measures and survey questions, processes for survey administration, timelines, and feature enhancements. Yes, we have an advisory committee. We do take advice on what should be in the surveys and how they should support the accountability pillars.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that was 108 questions in responses today. In 30 seconds from now we'll move on with the Routine.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my distinct pleasure to be able to present a petition today regarding the issue of centralized cytology labs. The petition reads:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to introduce legislation to put a moratorium on the centralization of gynecological cytology laboratory services in the Province of Alberta.

The petition has 668 signatures.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Electoral Boundaries Commission Amendment Act, 2009

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce a bill on behalf of the Minister of Justice and Attorney General. I request leave to introduce Bill 45, the Electoral Boundaries Commission Amendment Act, 2009.

Under the Electoral Boundaries Commission Act a commission must be appointed to review existing electoral boundaries and make proposals for change where appropriate. The Electoral Boundaries Commission Act also requires the commission to submit a report that divides Alberta into 83 proposed electoral divisions. The amendments in Bill 45 will require an electoral boundaries commission to be established no later than July 31, 2009, and prepare a report dividing Alberta into 87 proposed electoral divisions. Bill 45 will help ensure the political representation reflects the changing population of the province and that these changes are in place in a timely fashion.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 45 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today which are directly related to the Calgary-Varsity constituency, which I have the honour of representing. The first is the 2nd Chapter of Light up the World, an event in memory of Captain Nichola Goddard, who would have celebrated her 29th birthday with her family on May 2 had she not been killed in action leading her troops into battle in Afghanistan. The money raised will benefit the people of Papua New Guinea.

My second tabling, from last Friday, is the opening of the smart new building for Smart Technologies in Varsity's research park. In addition to the fact that it is built to the LEED gold standard, viewed from above, it symbolically represents the capital letter E of education, which is key to Alberta's future.

My third tabling is the program celebrating the 75th anniversary of John Paul II Polish school in Calgary. Our Lady Queen of Peace church is located at 2111 Uxbridge Drive N.W. in Calgary-Varsity.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of letters opposing the delisting of gender reassignment surgery. The letters argue that the procedure is medically necessary, that the savings to the government are extremely small, and that delisting will likely lead to a costly legal challenge. The letters are written by Brendan Van Alstine, James Swanson, Michael Lepard, and Jamie-Lynn Garvin.

Orders of the Day

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 204 Provincial-Municipal Tax Sharing Act

[Debate adjourned April 27: Mr. Danyluk speaking]

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs to continue.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure to continue on with my presentation on Bill 204.

Mr. Speaker, as I've said before, strong communities are a priority for this government, and we are supporting them. However, the challenges facing Alberta's municipalities are complex. They are as wide ranging as the unique nature of municipalities themselves. What we are doing and what we will continue to do is talk to municipalities about the importance of sustainability, their challenge, and the possible solutions.

The Minister's Council on Municipal Sustainability played an important role to help develop long-term solutions to address these challenges. The council presented a report, we listened, and we took action on a number of the council's recommendations, including the creation of the municipal sustainability initiative, the creation of the Capital Region Board.

The board has now presented their long-range regional plan, which has been developed to benefit not only the citizens of the region but all of Alberta. We will continue to look at ways to promote greater communication, collaboration, and co-operation amongst municipalities.

While progress has been made, what is clear to me is that the issues facing municipalities are complex. They go beyond funding. That is why I see this bill as overly simplistic and inflexible, and I cannot support it.

Municipalities are diverse. Their challenges are diverse. The solutions need to and will be diverse. That is also why I will continue to discuss the issue of long-term sustainability with municipalities. Alberta and Albertans need strong municipalities. Albertans deserve strong and safe communities, and this government will continue to support them.

My top priority as the Minister of Municipal Affairs is to ensure that our province has those sustainable communities for Albertans to thrive in. This is a priority for our Premier, my ministry, and the government of Alberta today and into the future.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to join debate on Bill 204, the Provincial-Municipal Tax Sharing Act, brought forward by my colleague from Edmonton-Centre. I think it is a very timely bill. I think it addresses not only a timely and current but ongoing issue of real concern to municipalities big and small in the province of Alberta.

You know, Mr. Speaker, there is a difference between simple, as in straightforward, and simplistic, as in: tries to apply an easy answer to a complex problem. I do not believe that this bill is simplistic.

Indeed, I believe that the Minister of Municipal Affairs, in listening to his remarks just a moment ago and reviewing Hansard from a week ago, when he began to speak in debate on Bill 204, has gone to some length to come up with anything he could throw against the wall to object to this bill. On the one hand, he says that the municipal sustainability initiative provides operating money and that "the two large centres" – I guess he means Edmonton and Calgary – "had the opportunity to have some of their funding put into operating. Their decision was that they wanted all funding to come as capital, and that's exactly what we did."

On the other hand, he goes on to argue that there's this incredible autonomy that municipalities have under MSI to determine their local priorities, choose their projects to meet their citizens' needs. But then he says that MSI, unlike Bill 204, "includes measures to ensure that we are accountable to Alberta taxpayers for funds provided to municipalities." Then he goes on to say:

Projects [have to] meet program criteria designed to ensure that they will contribute to the long-term sustainability of Alberta communities. Municipalities must submit a long-term infrastructure plan as well as detailed information about each project to be funded through MSI.

He says further, "We are also developing an accountability framework to ensure that funds provided to municipalities are used to meet agreed-upon objectives." Then he slaps Bill 204 for not including any of these accountability measures. All Bill 204 would do is "provide a fixed proportion of tax revenue unconditionally." Well, it's a fixed proportion of tax revenue that would be reviewed on an annual basis, Mr. Speaker.

But I will agree with the minister that, yes, it is unconditional. That is the point. MSI is anything but enabling of municipal autonomy to make their own determinations. It is full of conditions and requirements and quid pro quos and strings. It has more strings attached to it than, you know, even a lot of the legislation that has come forward from this government. It is overwhelmingly, quite apart from what the municipalities choose, about the provision of funding for capital and for infrastructure. What we are saying with Bill 204, Mr. Speaker, simply and in a straightforward manner, is this. The cities and towns of Alberta need sustainable, predictable operating funding that generates enough funding to be able to meet their operational requirements year in and year out.

Over primarily the last 15 or 16 years, but it's been a trend that's been going on for, you know, probably several decades now, federal and provincial governments have been downloading responsibilities onto lower levels of government, whether that is the municipal government, whether that's school boards – this isn't really a form of government – even the volunteer sector. The responsibilities have been downloaded to people and organizations and corporations and governments below this level of government at the provincial level, yet we haven't been correspondingly downloading the revenue that we scoop up to these lower organizations – that sounds terribly pejorative the way I put it, but you get my point: the organizations beneath us on the governmental and community org chart, if you will – so that they can actually afford to pay for the responsibilities that we have asked them to undertake on our behalf or in place of what we used to do at the provincial level.

Mr. Speaker, if this hasn't been said before in debate on Bill 204, it surely will be said again, I would imagine. It needs to be said and reiterated and contemplated and thought about, and we need to wrap our heads around this. There is only one taxpayer. There are a number of levels of government clamouring to get their hands into that taxpayer's pocket, but municipalities are like the runt of the litter at lunchtime when it comes to being able to do that. Of all the taxes that are paid by a household in this province, 92 to 95 per cent go to the federal government and the government of Alberta. That leaves, depending on who's doing the calculation, just between 5 and 8 per cent of the taxes to go to the municipality.

But the municipalities increasingly are providing more services to increasingly larger populations, and the cost of providing those services continues to go up, whether it's collecting the garbage and the recycling, whether it is providing through family, community, and social services, you know, social programs, whether it is operating the inventory of social housing that exists, whether it's providing or having a hand in providing the support that we envision will come to the homeless under the Housing First models being advocated by the Calgary 10-year plan to end homelessness, the Edmonton plan to end homelessness, other municipalities' plans to end homelessness, and the overarching province of Alberta 10-year plan to end homelessness. You know, those services need to be provided at the local level, and they take local dollars to do it.

More than 80 per cent of us live in urban areas, Mr. Speaker, and we need the level of government. In fact, it is simply done this way on a daily basis that the level of government closest to us, the citizens, provides a very large part of the services that we use every day, and they need to be able to pay for that. Municipal sustainability initiative funding is going to capital projects and is not being used for operating expenses. Even if the minister had directed that the $50 million that MSI provides for operating be required to be spent that way by the cities, it wouldn't be enough.

Some quick calculations here, and I'll just give you the rationale for how we figured these numbers out. The operating shortfall for any municipality is difficult to determine because, of course, municipalities aren't allowed to have operating shortfalls, but they do in reality. We looked at the amounts that Edmonton and Calgary proposed to increase their property taxes for 2009. We then added the amount that the two cities took from their reserve funds, because you have to dip into your reserve funds to pay the bills that you can't otherwise afford to pay, and then we added in the amount that each city received in grants and subsidies. We understand the total of those numbers to be approximately the funding shortfall for each city's operating expenses.

For Edmonton we came up with a shortfall of $104 million. For Calgary we came up with a shortfall of $131 million. As you can see, $50 million divided two ways won't come close to addressing those operating shortfalls, let alone all the other cities and towns in the rest of Alberta where the other one-third, roughly, of the population lives. On the other hand, 2.5 per cent of the income tax that the province collected in 2008-2009, last year's provincial income taxes, recognizing, as we've discussed in estimates debates and so on, that that would be a lesser number in the year going forward to some extent, would be close to $310 million. We assume the similar ratios to those used to allocate MSI funding. That's 34 per cent, or $105 million, to Calgary; 25 per cent, or about $77 million, to Edmonton; 41 per cent, or $126 million, to the other municipalities.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there other participants? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for allowing me to speak in favour of Bill 204, Provincial-Municipal Tax Sharing Act. The purpose of Bill 204 is to ensure a predictable revenue stream for municipalities. The funding would go towards municipalities' operating expenses, which would lessen funding shortfalls for those operating expenses. The bill would allocate 2.5 per cent, roughly $300 million, of income taxes collected by the province to go back to the municipalities. This bill would allow for the percentage of income taxes that would be allocated to municipalities to be changed after one year. That indicates the flexibility built into Bill 204. It's extremely important that we're clear that we're not asking for a tax increase but relocating current tax revenues. That's extremely important. We're not saying: let's top up the taxes. As the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie previously mentioned, there is only one taxpayer, and given this global recession that we currently find ourselves within, that pocket is unfortunately shrinking.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie talked about the limitations of the municipal sustainability initiative, and that problem has to do with the whim of the provincial government. It takes sort of a patriarchal view that we will provide the municipalities with whatever we deem fit as opposed to consulting them and freeing them up to use money as needed. Now, to the province's credit they do provide money through the local gas tax. The municipalities do receive a portion of that, much of which, I'm sure, goes into the municipal sustainability initiative.

However, what we have seen in this province since 1994 and what has continued on up until last year is centralization of power controlled by the province. In 1994, under the guise of equivalency and efficiency, the government reduced the number of locally elected school boards. It removed the autonomy that school boards had through the collection of the educational portion of their property tax, which back in 1994 accounted for half of their revenue. We have seen this last year health boards reduced to one. Previously we had 17 regional health authorities taken down to nine and most recently to one. So what we see in this province is an eroding of the powers and potentials of municipally elected officials to govern as they were elected to do.

The municipalities regard the tax collection by the province as a type of cash cow. The province takes a considerably large portion of the income that a municipality generates and then returns a fraction of it in the form of grants, grants which frequently have fairly closely tied strings attached to them. What Bill 204, the Provincial-Municipal Tax Sharing Act, does is that it guarantees autonomy to municipalities. It guarantees that a portion of the income tax the residents pay to the province is returned to them, where services are most urgently needed.

Now, an argument this provincial government uses frequently is with regard to immigration to Alberta. We hear over and over again in this House that immigrants to Alberta do not bring with them their schools. They do not carry their hospitals or their recreational facilities or their fire halls on their backs. Therefore, it's through the largesse of the province that these services are provided. Well, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that that's a lot of baloney, for lack of a better word, because the people that immigrate to Alberta bring with them their revenue in the form of income tax. They bring with them their revenue in the form of the property taxes which they're charged. This isn't just largesse on the part of the province providing these services to the people freely, but what happens is that the province filters the services, and the municipalities and those living in the cities are expected to be extremely grateful for the generosity shown by the province. What Bill 204 says is that these people are entitled to their money, that where their services are provided is where their money should be spent.

Yes, in a democracy there is an expectation that we all share in the betterment of the province, in the betterment of the country; thus, we pay federal taxes and we pay municipal taxes and, of course, provincial taxes. But by the time the two upper levels of government have drawn their share, which the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie pointed out was in the area of 92 per cent, there's very little left for the front line, and the front line, of course, is the municipality. What Bill 204, the Provincial-Municipal Tax Sharing Act, does is that it guarantees the security to local municipalities. They know that whatever the tax rate is that is set by the province and by the federal government – you can do the math – 2.5 per cent will be returned to the municipalities if Bill 204 is adopted. That provides stability. It provides sustainability. It provides a degree of predictability to municipalities as opposed to the offerings by the province.

Now, the province did make a 10-year commitment through MSI, but what it hasn't taken into account is the global recessionary effects, so those percentages may be reduced again at the whim of the province, who is in the driver's seat on MSI funding. Also, as I've indicated before and as the other members from Calgary-Currie and from Edmonton-Centre have indicated, this sort of poor cousin placement of municipalities dependent on the largesse of the federal government and the provincial government takes them out of the direct ability to provide the services to their constituents.

I find it interesting that municipalities, for example, from an electoral governance basis, are able to look after a million individuals through their ward system, which is less than half of what provincial representation is required. So if we're looking potentially at reducing electoral expenses and looking at, for example, what aldermen have to do in terms of governance, then maybe we should be looking at reducing the number of constituencies within the cities. If federal MPs can have this larger representation and aldermen can have a larger representation, maybe in the interests of a smaller and more efficient government we should be viewing a reduction in electoral constituencies and truly reflecting the fact that two-thirds of Albertans live in the cities.

It is those two-thirds that would benefit most directly, of course, from Bill 204, the Provincial-Municipal Tax Sharing Act. That would not leave their rural friends and family out of the picture because the Provincial-Municipal Tax Sharing Act not only offers support to Calgary and Edmonton but to Medicine Hat, to Red Deer and Lethbridge, all the smaller municipalities. Let's not forget the terrific contribution of Fort McMurray that would be strengthened by the application of Bill 204, the Provincial-Municipal Tax Sharing Act.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, then Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy I was first on that list because I think I lost track throughout that as to who was next.

I appreciate the opportunity to rise today to speak to Bill 204, the Provincial-Municipal Tax Sharing Act in 2009. This was of interest to me as I have an alderman in Calgary who is a member of my board of directors, and I had a chance to discuss this with him amongst a few other people as well.

As the previous speakers have mentioned, this bill seeks to allocate two and a half per cent of personal and corporate income tax to Alberta's municipalities. It has received a bit of media attention. The first time I heard about it in the media was on April 2 from the Edmonton Sun, and interestingly enough there is a Facebook group that's been established. I see the Member for Calgary-Currie here and the Member for Calgary-Buffalo, I see an alderman in my area, and I also see a cousin of mine, actually, who's a member here, so I'll have to chat with him about that. He wears my colours. Don't worry. He very much wears my colours.

The Speaker: Having some relevancy with respect to the question at hand would be in order.

Mr. Denis: Oh. Yes, sir.

In essence, the finances would be collected to a provincial account known as the provincial-municipal tax sharing account. The relevancy earlier, Mr. Speaker, was that this was referenced, again, in Facebook. I think social media is a good thing.

I assume, Mr. Speaker, because it's not clear in the legislation, that these funds would be divvied up amongst our local governments. The rationale behind this legislation is that the dedicated funds would provide Alberta's local governments with additional sources of revenue that would be reliable, stable, and unconditional. The fact is that this government has continually demonstrated its commitment to the sustainability and development of Alberta's municipalities through many grant programs. Indeed, there are up to 80 different grants available to municipalities through 13 different ministries, all designed to support Alberta's communities.

Perhaps the sponsoring member felt as though there is a need to dedicate a specific amount of provincial revenue to support the growth municipalities have experienced in the past decade. However, Mr. Speaker, the municipal sustainability initiative, which I'll refer to as the MSI, was developed to address this growth. If municipalities need to undertake projects to meet demands related to this growth, they can apply and receive funds pursuant to the MSI. Projects can include building or improving roads, bridges, public transit, and water supply, treatment, and distribution systems.

Since 2007 a total of $900 million has been distributed through MSI, and this year's budget allocates an additional $400 million to MSI, which will again rise next year, to $1.2 billion. What's the total? That's $11 billion over 10 years, unprecedented throughout this nation. These increases are designed to support municipalities by providing equivalent funding when compared to the amount of money collected through the education property taxes. Suffice it to say, Mr. Speaker, that this government has supported and continues to support municipalities through these times of substantial growth, which leads me to the conclusion that Bill 204, however well intended, is both needless and redundant.

I think it is important to remind the sponsoring member of the other grants that this government offers to support municipalities. For example, Alberta Transportation offers the Alberta municipal infrastructure program, which specifically is designed to provide financial assistance to municipalities for infrastructure projects that maintain or enhance the economic, social, and cultural opportunity of a municipality. This includes capital projects such as roadways, waste water collection and treatment systems, cultural and recreational facilities, and solid waste management systems.

The government also offers the regional partnerships initiative, which focuses on promoting and fostering regional co-operation and cost savings by facilitating projects that involve three or four municipalities. There are two components to the regional partnership initiative, exploration and implementation. The exploration grant allows municipalities to evaluate the feasibility of a project such as amalgamating water services or developing a regional governance structure or business plan. If the exploration process suggests that the project will be beneficial, the implementation component of the regional partnerships initiative can assist municipalities with its implementation.

Mr. Speaker, I could go on to discuss many other programs that government offers to municipalities, but the reality is that there is substantial support for Alberta's municipalities to manage both growth-related and non growth-related capital and operational pressures. Furthermore, these municipal supports ensure openness and accountability and are a demonstration of this government's prudent financial management. It was not so long ago that members of the opposition were criticizing the government's spending patterns, suggesting we needed to reprioritize spending and reallocate finances.

In summary, I find myself somewhat confused as to how Bill 204 would save this government money or demonstrate a, quote, reprioritization. This government has already made our municipalities a priority, which is demonstrated by the many municipal grants and initiatives that I have outlined.

Furthermore, the funds that Bill 204 suggests that the government allocate to municipalities must come at the expense of other programs, and I look forward to hearing from the sponsoring member in her closing speech as to what provincial services she believes we should cut. Would she cut health care? Would she cut education? Would she cut any specific services? I'm looking forward to hearing that, Mr. Speaker.

Regardless, Mr. Speaker, Bill 204 is a redundant bill and therefore unnecessary. For these reasons, I'm unable to support it. I will table my references to the page.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to be able to rise to join in on this debate on this interesting piece of legislation proposed by the Member for Edmonton-Centre. In general, I believe it is the intention of our caucus to be supporting this bill. It's a bill that, as has been stated already, would allocate 2.5 per cent of income tax revenue into an account for municipalities, which would provide roughly $300 million more a year to municipalities.

As has been discussed already, this is not the only source of funding for municipalities. Indeed, there are a number of other sources of funding from the government for municipalities. But the key element to this bill and the proposal here, of course, is that this funding would be unconditional and would allow for long-term planning and would allow for support for operational funding and operational funding deficits. As all members of this House know, there do appear to be a number of municipalities who are reporting significant financial difficulty at this time. My understanding is that the number is roughly around 60 municipalities across the province who report these kinds of difficulties.

As we know, the biggest source of revenue for most municipalities is the property tax, but there is a limit with respect to how much revenue can be brought in through that mechanism. At the same time while that limit is in place, the municipalities themselves have a growing demand for services placed upon them not only from the federal government through its 15 years of downloading services onto municipalities but also through the provincial government and also through their own population, which, quite importantly, are becoming increasingly engaged in their municipal politics as that is, of course, the government which is closest to home, as it were.

A number of people think first to go to their municipality to demand a number of services, and that's not unreasonable in many cases. Of course, because the municipalities are, as it were, on the ground, they are often in the best position to provide leadership on the resolution of certain issues. You know, a perfect example of that is the housing issue. We've seen both the city of Edmonton and the city of Calgary lead the way in large part on the issue of dealing with housing and homelessness. I'm not sure that I necessarily agree that the processes that they've adopted are utterly the best, but there's no question that they are trying to make a commitment to address the issue, and we have the provincial government appearing to follow behind in that regard.

We have, for instance, talk about the need for homelessness strategies. I believe the city of Edmonton suggested we'd be looking at about $3 billion, and I believe the city of Calgary talked about $4.5 billion. Then, unfortunately, the provincial government has committed much less than that amount and even in claiming to fund that this year has taken every single dollar from other housing funds in order to support their so-called investment in this particular housing fund. In fact, we have sort of a follow the bouncing ball kind of process, where we ultimately find that the net investment in housing on the part of the provincial government hasn't gone up a single red cent. Ultimately, it will fall to the municipalities to shoulder that burden as they have been for some time.

That's just an example. I mean, that's certainly not the only example. Most of that funding doesn't come out of operational funds, but it's an example of how municipalities are taking on greater and greater roles in terms of the services that they provide to the cities. It's just an example of the circumstances which are leading to the situation where we have municipalities suffering operational deficits.

To go back a little bit to the municipal sustainability initiative, the NDP does support, in general, that fund. There are good things that come from that fund. We would like to see its allocation criteria amended somewhat so that it's not based on kilometres of local roads because we'd rather not see municipalities be encouraged to build yet more sprawling subdivisions with windy lanes that absolutely nobody without three GPS systems and two different maps and two navigators can get through. Rather, we'd like to see a denser type of development premised on the notion of enhanced public transportation. That's why we think the municipal sustainability initiative can be tweaked to make some improvements. Notwithstanding that, it is still conditional, and it still is premised on a 10-year duration. That doesn't provide the ability for unconditional operational funding which allows for planning that goes beyond that 10-year period.

That, of course, is the kind of thing that we would see provided to municipalities through the bill that we're looking at at this time. It's for this reason that we think that members of this House should consider supporting this bill. We need to look at the changing relationship between municipalities, the provincial government, and the federal government, we need to look at the changing demands that we place upon our municipalities, and we need to look at the very constrained set of financial resources at the disposal of municipalities, a system that was put in place when, I think, the expectations vis-à-vis municipalities were very different. We must then look at the whole issue of how that can be changed.

We know that municipalities, like other parts of government across the province, are suffering from a very, very significant infrastructure debt, one created by this province and the federal government but more by this province over the course of many years as they tried to hide their debt in things as opposed to off the books. That debt has not been addressed, notwithstanding the funding which had certainly started to kick in over the last couple of years or maybe even more than that. Nonetheless, because of the inflationary pressures at the time we know that municipalities are still struggling with tremendous infrastructure debt, and we think that this is a time for this kind of investment in particular to be considered and not dismissed. These are job-creating investments. We know that in the long term that is another objective which this government should be focusing itself towards, given the current economic situation that we're all experiencing.

As I said before, it's with these general reasons in mind that our caucus will be supporting this particular bill. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to speak in favour of Bill 204, which will go a long ways to solving maybe not all of the operating needs of municipalities, but I think it will pretty well solve most of the problems. This bill is a step in the right direction to ensure predictable funding for municipalities. This will provide funding for the municipalities just for operating expenses only, not for infrastructure. It will lessen the shortfalls in operating expenses that municipalities have from time to time.

This bill will allow the government to allocate 2.5 per cent, roughly $300 million, a year from the income tax the province collects to go toward municipalities. We're talking about all of the municipalities here. We want to be clear that, you know, this is not a tax increase. This bill will be reallocating the current revenues that the province collects in personal income taxes, and the money collected from the personal income taxes will go toward municipalities. That will be 2.5 per cent.

While the province has downloaded a number of responsibilities to the municipalities, municipalities lack the ability to generate enough revenue to meet the current operating costs. This bill will provide a stable revenue stream so that municipalities can better meet their current operating needs without having to increase property taxes or raid their reserve funds if they have any.

During the boom times there was lots of migration. It put lots of pressure on the municipalities to hire more police officers, more firefighters. They had to build more fire stations, and that put lots of pressure on the municipalities. They are limited in raising their taxes. Edmonton is an example of a municipality facing a shortfall of operating expenses. Expenditures rose by 7.2 per cent in 2009, but the revenues, excluding property taxes, increased only by 0.9 per cent. If a municipality is having difficulty in funding existing programs or funding the creation of new programs, they only have a couple of options. They can either raise the property taxes, or they can cut existing programs and defer future projects, or municipalities can tap into reserve funds they may have saved.

Although municipalities are not allowed to run deficits on their operating budgets, they have to adopt extreme measures to meet their funding shortfalls. Calgary raised property taxes 5.3 per cent. I think next year they're going to rise by 4.6 per cent. There was a big hue and cry. People were almost up in arms because the property taxes were going up and because that's hitting people hard, you know, in their pockets. In Edmonton they raised property taxes 3.6 per cent for 2009. Both Edmonton and Calgary couldn't raise enough taxes to meet their operating needs. They had to cut back on their existing programs and future projects. They had to even tap into their reserve funds.

Of all the taxes raised by the governments, 95 per cent goes to the provincial and federal governments. Only 5 per cent goes to the municipalities. I think the municipalities should get a larger share of household taxes, and this bill will achieve that by giving municipalities some share of the personal income taxes collected by the province. This 2.5 per cent figure was arrived at by taking into consideration the operating shortfall for all of the municipalities. It is difficult to put an exact number, but this figure will almost correct the shortfall the municipalities face.

We determined that 2.5 per cent of the income tax the province collected in 2008-2009 would be a good amount because in some sense approximately we added all those figures up. The municipalities, you know, the shortfall they took out of the reserve fund and all the other shortfalls they had, we added them all up, and that's the number we arrived at. It would be a reasonable number, 2.5 per cent, to reallocate income taxes to the municipalities.

This funding will help support upgrading needs of municipalities, but it would not solve all their financial difficulties. For example, we have not included the unfunded capital plan for either city nor the gap in infrastructure funding that has been identified. Considering that $1.3 billion is needed to fill Edmonton's infrastructure funding gap, the amount that would be allocated by this bill is not really extravagant. That's not really a big amount. This will only help the municipalities for their operating expenses.

There is also a mechanism within this bill that will allow for the 2.5 per cent to be changed one year after the fund is created. We decided on 2.5 per cent of income taxes to create the fund, which is a minimum amount because of the current tough economic times. Moreover, the fact that there's a mechanism that would alter the percentage allocated to the municipalities is a good response to the argument that 2.5 per cent would be too much or too onerous for an already cash-strapped province. As the economy slows down, maybe the municipality's operating expenses will come down, so this 2.5 per cent number can be changed.

Although there is a provincial and a municipal revenue sharing formula there, those unconditional grants account for less than 25 per cent of all provincial municipal grants, and some of the money has strings tied to it, that it cannot be used for operating expenses. The Alberta Municipal Government Act sees municipalities as little more than the provider of a few local services and gives municipalities few tools to raise their taxes, so that relationship doesn't work any more. It is time to see the municipalities in Alberta as an important level of government in their own right.

Strong municipalities are essential to Alberta's future. More than 80 per cent of Albertans live in urban areas. Our cities, towns, villages, and hamlets are the levels of government closest to us and provide service that we use every day. Local governments are in the best position to lead Alberta into the future, by developing a sustainable transportation system, improving our land use, and becoming our environment leaders. Lots of services have been downloaded, offloaded to the municipalities by the provincial government, and I think they need this funding to cover their operating expenses.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Dallas: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a pleasure to rise today and join in the debate on Bill 204, the Provincial-Municipal Tax Sharing Act, which, of course, has been brought forward by the Member for Edmonton-Centre. Bill 204 proposes to apportion 2.5 per cent of income tax revenue to a provincial-municipal tax-sharing account.

The preamble of this bill states that municipalities in Alberta require both stable and predictable funding. However, Mr. Speaker, this government provides significant long-term funding for municipalities through programs such as the municipal sustainability initiative, better known as the MSI. MSI is a program that in 2009 will provide municipalities with $400 million in funding. Not only that, but this 10-year commitment to funding will see an unprecedented amount allocated to municipalities. The MSI is one of many programs that are available to municipalities, such as the Alberta municipal infrastructure program, the gas tax fund, and the building Canada fund. This government supports all municipalities while recognizing their autonomy. Bill 204 is redundant as this government already has in place significant and long-term funding.

I would like to raise some concerns that I have with Bill 204, particularly how this new account will be funded and the impact that funding will have on all Albertans. Alberta prides itself on having one of the lowest tax structures in Canada, with a 10 per cent flat tax rate and no provincial sales tax. Mr. Speaker, income tax is one of the largest sources of revenue for both federal and provincial governments, accounting for over 30 per cent of all tax revenues. This past year personal income taxes accounted for approximately 22.3 per cent of provincial revenues, and corporate income tax accounted for 9.8 per cent.

The preamble states that "municipalities in Alberta require a stable and predictable level of funding from the Government to effectively plan and deliver services and programs." However, I do not see how this account could be considered predictable and stable, particularly since revenue from taxes fluctuates year to year. This fact seems to contradict the intent of this bill. Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure how the member for Edmonton-Centre can see this proposed account as being stable and predictable.

Revenue from income taxes is deposited into the province's general revenue fund. From there these funds are used by the government to pay for public programs such as health care, education, and infrastructure. Money is allocated from the general revenue fund to ministries based on need. For example, in 2008 Health and Wellness required 34 per cent of the year's budget. By allocating 2.5 per cent to the proposed provincial-municipal tax sharing account, 2.5 per cent will have to be cut from ministries. Not only that, but it will take away from programs that help every single Albertan. Ministries such as Health and Wellness and Education help each and every Albertan and have a direct impact on the lives of all Albertans, as do many other government programs.

Mr. Speaker, another point that I'd like to raise about Bill 204 is that it would require additional bureaucracy to manage the fund. Once again, this bill requires this government to spend more. I question why the Member for Edmonton-Centre is asking this government to spend money in a time when it may not be fiscally prudent to do so.

In addition to creating more bureaucracy, this bill also calls for the creation of a Legislature committee to convene every year and draft new legislation. The members opposite claim that this government would be more fiscally responsible; however, this bill would seem to contradict this statement.

The Member for Calgary-Currie stated recently in this House that "this government needs to get a handle on its spending." This statement stands in complete contradiction to this bill, as this bill is proposing additional government spending. It seems that these members cannot get all of these priorities straight. One minute they want us to stop spending, yet they introduce legislation requiring more spending.

A final and important note that I would like to make, Mr. Speaker, is that Bill 204 has all the appearances of a money bill, which a private member cannot bring forward. Certain sections try and get around this by creating further legislation; however, in all appearances this would be a money bill. Even with this provision of creating further legislation, this bill has requirements on the financial initiative of the government, thus making it a money bill. If passed, Bill 204 would clearly impact the government's ability to raise and spend money. Automatically dedicating revenue to municipalities is problematic as it reduces the government's ability to direct spending to its highest priorities and does not allow fiscal flexibility.

Ultimately, Mr. Speaker, I cannot support this bill, and I encourage other members to do the same. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise in support of Bill 204, the Provincial-Municipal Tax Sharing Act, as proposed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

I as one of the 80 per cent of Albertans who reside in our cities would appreciate this act as a form of creating for cities a consistent, stable flow of money that would go towards operating expenses. I think that's where some of the confusion is had by some of the government members who have already spoken. They continue to refer to the MSI funding, which is for capital costs and capital initiatives, that this Bill 204 is not dealing with; it's dealing with the operating funds.

Before I get into the intent of the bill, I don't really see that this is looking for an increase to what is already spent. What this is more looking for a consistent flow of money that is already created through the provincial coffers that is earmarked for our cities to provide the essential services that the cities provide. I think anyone who has been in Alberta for any number of years would reference that cities have become the front line of providing services to the people.

Also, anyone who has been here for any period of time has heard the impact of cuts to cities and that cities have been sort of left behind in being provided with funds. They've had services continually downloaded upon them by other levels of government, both federal and provincial. There's a strong argument that's presented by the AUMA and other organizations like that that references the fact that cities have had these responsibilities downloaded to them by other levels of government without having any provision of finances attached to them. I guess this bill would address some of that disparity and recognize that cities are major players in the Alberta landscape. They provide a significant service to the Alberta populace, and it is much needed.

On another note, although I will not concede that this is, in fact, an additional spending mechanism to be put forward, I think the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont asked where we'd begin cutting. I guess I'll list some of those that I see that could be cut that we've brought up from time to time. I will go through the exercise now because we were asked. I would note that my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Centre has many other things to comment on as I see her busy taking notes to answer on this bill, so I'll try to save her some time here.

One would be that we've put in an amendment this year to eliminate $33 million, I think, from Horse Racing Alberta that we would like to see gotten rid of. We've seen numerous hosting expenses that have been what we would consider above and beyond what would be necessary in these times of strain. Also, let's talk about some of the bonuses to senior-level civil servants who are already getting substantially rewarded.

Let's also think of future spending. Increasing the number of MLAs: I would suggest that, at least, the last thing Albertans need is four more MLAs. That's just my honest-to-goodness opinion. We can do with what we have in this House and, you know, find enough work for everyone. That's just my honest-to-goodness opinion.

So if you're looking at savings, there are some I listed for you. We can start from there. If the books ever get opened up more around here, I'm sure I could find a little more to go down and take the trimmings to. That's a start. I was asked for it; otherwise, I would've never brought it up. Since I was asked, I do try to respond from time to time.

If we look at other things, the municipalities, like I said, are an important part of our increasingly urban structure, where people are living, where people are stimulating our economy, and where it seems to be that much of the growth is occurring. I again would say that this is a necessary bill that would go a long way to ensuring that essential operating dollars are reaching the areas that need it the most. It would also allow cities to I guess decide for themselves what is important for them to do and important to their citizens and not be beholden to a senior level of government that may be doing things to appease a different agenda that they may be following that may not be the same agenda that the cities are wishing to follow.

Those are my comments, and I thank you for the time you've given me to speak in strong support of this bill. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other member who wishes to join the debate?

Seeing none, now I shall recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre to close the debate.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I was very pleased to welcome the participation of those that did participate, including the minister and the members for Calgary-Egmont and Red Deer-South. It was a very interesting exercise to shine the light on how well government members understand municipal funding and the current situation that many of the municipalities believe that they find themselves in. It was an excellent opportunity for me to start and in some cases continue a dialogue with the many fine municipalities in Alberta. That was a real opportunity for me, and I enjoyed it very much. I did correspond with several dozen municipalities, and I'm very grateful for that.

Just let me talk very briefly about the MSI funding, which I think every single member referenced. I set out to create a funding stream for municipalities that would be stable, predictable, and would not come with any strings attached, and this government is very fond of putting strings on any money that they give out, including the MSI funding.

The MSI funding is time limited. It's a 10-year program, which we're several years into, and it is focused on capital and infrastructure funding. The history of it came out of the tremendous infrastructure debt that the province created on behalf of the municipalities and left the municipalities to deal with. Those from Calgary will appreciate that history because it was their mayor who was most instrumental and very aggressive in pursuing the provincial government to come up with some funding money to be able to address that infrastructure debt. I think at one point the infrastructure debt in the province was estimated to be somewhere in the $8 billion mark – I'm sorry; there might be a zero on the end of that – so there was a lot to catch up on, and that's what that fund was meant to do, and it is doing it.

There was a very small component in that, I think about $50 million, that was available for operating money. In fact, by the time you divided that up amongst the municipalities, it was such a small amount of money that it was not going to make a significant difference in any one operating allocation for a given year, and it may have prevented their being able to complete some capital programs, so as the minister indicated, it all went to capital. Bill 204 was anticipating a fund of money that was directed only to operating money, no capital money, so MSI and what I was proposing in Bill 204 did not intersect. Bill 204 was – one more time I'll say it – intended for operating funding.

The minister worried about accountability, and I find that interesting. I take his point, but I think there are a number of accountability and auditing functions already in place there, as you would expect. Certainly, the government funds are audited as they go out. The municipalities are also audited, so the money as it comes into the municipalities is audited. We also have a legislative review that was built into the act. So there's quite a bit of accountability that is available there, more, in fact, than you sometimes see with other government programs.

It was meant to be a piece of legislation that dealt with the most pressing matter before the municipalities, and that was the operating gap that they were experiencing. So, no, I didn't get into a lot of other things, and I didn't make it really complicated. [interjection] I was trying to address one thing, and I just did address it. The Minister of Health appears to have missed his opportunity to speak, but I'm happy to talk with him afterwards. [interjection] Well, he's very exercised about it, whatever it is, but I'm sure he'll let me know afterwards.

It was my intention that the monies be distributed on a per capita basis, but I did not write that into the legislation at the time because if the legislation passed, I wanted there to be an additional debate on the best way – and that discussion should take place primarily with the municipalities – for that money to be distributed.

The Member for Calgary-Egmont talked about how the government provides 80 grants, but he includes in that things like lottery grant funding and, in fact, the federal government grants.

I encourage people to support Bill 204. It's a great move for our municipalities.

The Deputy Speaker: The chair now shall call the question on the bill.

[Motion for second reading of Bill 204 lost]

Bill 205

Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure (Third Party Advertising) Amendment Act, 2009

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my sincere pleasure to rise today and lead off second reading debate on Bill 205, the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure (Third Party Advertising) Amendment Act, 2009.

The goal of this bill is to place clear parameters around third-party political advertising during provincial elections. Mr. Speaker, democracy is an institution that all Albertans cherish. There are several fundamental principles that are essential to an open and democratic society. These include freedom of political expression and freedom of speech, where people are free to convey their views without undue censorship by government. There's also freedom of the press, where the news media is free to report on political happenings without political interference. It was with these democratic principles top of mind that Bill 205 was developed.

In addition to respecting fundamental democratic principles, Bill 205 recognizes the need to ensure that we have a fair and level playing field for all participants in the election marketplace of ideas. A level playing field alludes to the idea that there should be a consistent standard that all democratic participants must abide by. A level playing field means that the success and failure of the ideas put forward during an election should depend not on the size of a proponent's bank account but on the substance and merit of that idea.

I would like to go through some of the provisions of this bill to clearly illustrate how Bill 205 strikes a balance between respecting the rights of free speech, political expression, and free press with the need to keep our democratic playing field fair and level. First, this bill establishes a mechanism called the third-party election advertising account. All third parties would be required to establish such an account in order to run political advertisements during a provincial election. Contributions by donors to this account would be set at a fair limit of $30,000 during an election year and $15,000 in a nonelection year. These contribution limits correlate with the contribution limits the political parties are subjected to. The money raised from donors and placed in these accounts could then be spent by that third party during a provincial election.

This account mechanism provides for the advancement of interests and ideas based not on the wealth of a few but upon that idea's ability to attract popular support. In other words, if a third party can raise millions of dollars from thousands of Albertans to advance an idea, it can spend every last cent of that money raised on promoting that idea during an election. But if only a few wealthy organizations or individuals are proponents of an idea, although they are free to advocate that idea, their ability to use their large wealth to dominate the airwaves or newspapers during an election will be reasonably limited under this legislation.

All opinions and ideas from Albertans are part of our political process, even ideas that seem unpopular at first glance. I recall the words of John Stuart Mill, who stated, "If all mankind minus one were of one opinion . . . mankind would be no more justified in silencing that one person than he, if he had the power, would be justified in silencing mankind." Of course, we do limit speech that incites violence against identifiable minority groups. However, the generally accepted view of free speech in the free world is that no individual or group should be silenced except in the most extreme cases. Mr. Speaker, I want to be absolutely clear that I support this principle wholeheartedly, and in no way do the measures of this bill silence the people of Alberta. In fact, freedom of speech will be enhanced by this bill by giving all ideas and viewpoints a more equal opportunity to flourish within our open and democratic society.

Mr. Speaker, this bill would also require third parties to identify themselves on advertising and promotional materials. Identification is important in ensuring accurate communication between the third party and its targeted audience. When the electorate is adequately informed as to who is attempting to convey a message to them, they will be able to make a more educated judgment on the message itself. Thomas Jefferson understood the important connection between information and democracy when he once stated, "Whenever the people are well-informed, they can be trusted with their own government." Today accurate information is just as vital to our democratic system as it was in the past.

Another important aspect of this bill is the requirement that all third parties register with the Chief Electoral Officer if they have incurred or plan to incur political advertising expenses in excess of $1,000 during an election period. Bill 205 will also require a third party whose political advertising expenditures exceed $1,000 in an election year to submit a financial report to the Chief Electoral Officer. This financial report would disclose all advertising spending and the identities of the donors who contributed more than $375 to a party's election advertising account. This would be similar to the rules governing political parties, who also must disclose all election advertising spending and identified donors who contributed more than $375. Ultimately, this will achieve greater accountability surrounding third-party advertising and, again, provide the electorate with more information about who is financially pushing an idea.

While I will not go through every aspect of this proposed legislation, I want to emphasize that I believe this bill strikes the balance between enhancing democratic fundamentals while also achieving a more equitable and level playing field for third-party political advertising during election periods. It will, I believe, strengthen transparency and democracy for all Albertans, so I encourage all members of this House to support this bill.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Bill 205 isn't about freedom of speech; it's about controlling speech, stifling who is and who isn't able to speak. The government currently exercises undue promotional opportunities at the expense of the public taxpayer through its Public Affairs Bureau, which employs more staff than all other provincial and federal governments combined. The Premier ran on a campaign platform of transparency and accountability, yet the Premier refused to reveal where $163,000 of his campaign donations came from, and in this Bill 205 there is a proposition designed to prevent people from collecting that funding to express their own views.

This Bill 205 is aimed at unions, who last March 8 tried to influence the outcome of the way this government treats unionized employees in this province. Alberta is the least unionized province in Canada, yet there is a desire on the government's part to limit union membership even further and to basically limit their opportunities to vocalize their concerns, particularly during an election period. This has got nothing to do with increasing individual influence; it has to do with stifling union or collective influence. The government only wants those people they wish to hear from to have the opportunity to speak.

Now, I talked about the leadership campaign. We had a number of very creative ways in which Conservative leaders collected money. We had one individual who sold shares in himself for $10,000 a pop, but at least he provided and indicated in his returns each of the individuals who had sort of bought a share of his piece of the pie. The hon. minister for sustainable resources refused to provide any of the donors' names or backings that funded his campaign. Likewise, depending on who it was that ran in the last provincial campaign, we had dribs and drabs of revelation.

This particular bill wants to punish individuals who would dare collectively to oppose the direction the government is taking on any of a number of concerns. Now, you might think: well, this is sour grapes; why didn't the members of the trades put more money into the individual campaigns of the opposition? That is not the point. For example, if you take a look at my campaign finances, you are not going to find any significant donations from any collective group. What you will find is a hundred dollars here, $200 there, $50, $10 from individuals who felt that it was important to have a social conscience in this province. Obviously, there was a collective desire on the parts of the constituents who contributed to change the government.

Bill 205 is all about control. The government almost successfully received empathy in the last election because the Premier was portrayed in ads that were of a mocking nature. If anything the $2 million worth of ads at that time backfired. However, the fact that they didn't succeed was not enough. This Bill 205 is there to hit them with another hammer to further eliminate their opportunity to have a collective voice at a key time in Alberta's political undertakings.

We have seen in this province the lowest voter turnout in Canadian history in our last election, whereby only 41 per cent of eligible voters chose to participate. Of those 41 per cent a total of 21 per cent of eligible voters chose the current government. Voters are never wrong. They, through their freedom of choice, elected 72 members to this House; thus, the government is formed. What the individuals are worried about that they need to exercise even further power I don't understand. This government has had a rather easy ride when you look at the last 40 years.

The Speaker: I have to remind the hon. member that this is private members' day. This is a private member's bill. It's private members' day and a private member's bill.

Mr. Chase: Yes. I very much appreciate that qualification, Mr. Speaker. The private member in this case comes as one of the 72 members that was elected on March 3, 2008. What the member in proposing Bill 205, the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure (Third Party Advertising) Amendment Act, 2009, is putting forward is the idea of limiting the opportunities of collective organizations to speak with a collective voice. It is more example of the divide and conquer attitude which we have seen in recent times.

Peter Lougheed was a builder. He built schools. He built hospitals. He had a vision. Unfortunately, when he left, that vision left with him. Bill 205 is not about democracy. It is not about providing the public with a voice. It is not about allowing a collective cry to be raised. It's about stifling the opportunity to speak.

I appreciate, Mr. Speaker, the opportunity to debate Bill 205, the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure (Third Party Advertising) Amendment Act, 2009. As I say, I see it as a regressive bill. As opposed to promoting free speech, I see it attempting to limit it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to join the debate today on Bill 205, the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure (Third Party Advertising) Amendment Act, 2009. I particularly appreciated the comments from the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere relating to freedom of speech. In that vein, this bill was composed and brought forward by him, and I'd like to commend him for presenting a timely and effective piece of legislation.

Mr. Speaker, the goals of Bill 205 are rather straightforward. First off, Bill 205 would define clearly in the legislation the concept of third parties and third-party election advertising. Essentially, third parties would be defined as any person, trade union, corporation, or organization that seeks to influence an election other than a political party or a candidate. Likewise, third-party election advertising would be defined as political advertising that appears during an election and is placed by a third party. In addition, advertising would be any message conveyed to the general public through the use of newspapers, billboards, or through electronic media such as through television or the Internet. The definition for advertising would be standardized across the board as it would apply to political parties, to candidates, and to third-party interest groups.

Secondly, this bill proposes to establish donation limits on contributors supporting third-party election advertising accounts. Specifically, donors to third-party election advertising accounts would be limited to donations of no more than $15,000 in a nonelection calendar year and $30,000 in an election year. Currently the advantage of regulating political contributions at the provincial and federal levels are evident, and I feel it would benefit Albertans to extend this regulation to third-party advertising accounts. Furthermore, this Bill 205 would provide a framework of disclosure which would allow the transparency of third-party financial donation records.

The measures proposed in this bill are not only effective because of what they seek to accomplish but timely because they may help enhance the accountability by strengthening the role of the provincial Chief Electoral Officer. Now, Mr. Speaker, the provincial Chief Electoral Officer is an independent officer of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta and is responsible for ensuring the continued successful operation of provincial elections. In addition, the Chief Electoral Officer is also responsible for ensuring accountability and transparency for both political party campaigning and for advertising.

Mr. Speaker, under Bill 205 the provincial electoral officer would be given the mandate to ensure accountability of third-party advertising in the overall electoral process. An additional stipulation proposed by Bill 205, perhaps more specific towards third parties, is that all parties incurring election expenses would be required to register with the electoral officer. The advantages of this regulation are numerous. Perhaps the most advantageous aspect is the increased transparency of third parties, as I've mentioned. With this in place voters will know exactly who represents a third party and, thus, will be better educated to assess the third-party's message.

Accountability and voter information also tie directly into a clause requiring third parties to identify their election advertising account contributors, just like every one of us would in our election. Just as is the case with political parties, contributors to third-party election advertising accounts would also need to declare who is donating to their cause. Knowing who supports a third party can dramatically influence voters' perceptions, which, in turn, can help clarify their choices when casting a ballot.

Bill 205 would require that all campaign advertising bears the name of the third party that is behind the advertisement. This is already legislated for political parties, and it is intended to inform voters of the source of the advertisement. It puts everyone, Mr. Speaker, on an even keel. The reasoning behind this policy is that requiring advertisements to bear the name of the sponsor also extends a level of protection to candidates. These regulations can mitigate crude and confounding ads as they ensure that the ads cannot be distributed in anonymity. Voters would also know exactly who sponsored every advertisement, which, based on their perceptions of the sponsor group, might shape their opinions of the ad.

Another change that would enhance the accountability advocated by Bill 205 centres around the full disclosure of third-party election account spending. Currently political parties are already required to document and report the full value of their campaign expenditure, but the same is not true for third-party groups. Full financial disclosure has the same benefit as many of the other proposed measures. As I mentioned, it promotes transparency, which, in turn, gives voters the information they need to hold governments accountable.

The last speaker, the Member for Calgary-Varsity, has made some comments, and I have to respond to a couple, Mr. Speaker. This act, Bill 205, is not aimed at unions. It applies equally to corporations and to individuals. Furthermore, unions can raise money also from their own members, which is not prohibited by this piece of legislation. Requiring third parties to disclose campaign expenditures is in essence holding all of these groups accountable, be it a union, an individual, or a corporation. Everybody is treated the same. In turn, this accountability promotes good governance and good decision-making. Informed voters are the foundation of our province. To this end, providing voters with clear information is an essential component of any strong democracy.

It is an advantage for third parties to foster accountability within their organizations, and that is why, Mr. Speaker, I am strongly in support of Bill 205 and the role it plays in strengthening the accountability in our provincial elections. I must again give credit to the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere because Bill 205 actively reflects the growing importance of third parties and enhances their role in the electoral process. Accordingly, I will be voting in favour of Bill 205, and I strongly encourage all hon. members to join me in supporting this initiative.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to be able to rise to engage in this interesting debate, where I think people have different positions for the same reasons and the same positions for different reasons. It's all very kind of confusing to me in many ways. At the outset, I guess, I will probably surprise members opposite by saying that we will be voting in favour of this bill.

Mr. Liepert: That's because the dollars didn't go to you.

Ms Notley: Well, that may be true. They don't typically come to us, but that's part of the bigger issue. The issue here is that if there is any concern around this bill, it is that it does not go far enough.

I guess I will start with the statements made by the very last speaker, the Member for Calgary-Egmont, in that I would rather not see us enshrine and crystallize and promote the role of wealthy third parties in our electoral system regardless of which side of the spectrum they occupy. I think that historically the role of those third parties in most political systems, certainly outside of Alberta and also in the U.S., has resulted in some gross distortions of what has happened in the legislative process afterwards. In fact, what we do here is we represent individual voters and we represent the collective interests of individual voters, and the best way to do that is for us to communicate with and participate with individual voters in as open and transparent a way as possible.

This bill goes a certain measure in this regard because at least it opens the door to look inside these third-party organizations and to maintain some level of accountability for their financing as they engage in the electoral debate and participation and, ultimately, extensive advertising. So we're at least able to see who's funding these groups, how much money is going to these groups, and where that money comes from, and we're able to a very small amount limit it although not to a large amount.

These third parties, however, don't act like political parties, so you can't necessarily join one of these third parties. As a citizen you can't join the party and engage in an open, transparent process to influence how that third party might ultimately choose to spend its money, and that's different from how political parties function. That's why I separate out political parties and suggest that they should be the primary vehicle for people's participation. These rules tend to as well exclude charitable organizations. I understand the reason for that. Because of tax reasons they can't engage in this kind of thing. I don't agree with that, but that is, unfortunately, the way it is. Again, there's a certain profile of people that become active in those groups, and those folks don't get to participate in that more transparent debate either.

What we end up with then is we have third-party organizations that may or may not have a great deal of money – mostly ones that engage in this do – and now we have a little bit of insight into what it is they're doing. Most other jurisdictions have chosen to go in a completely different direction. The federal government, B.C., Manitoba, Quebec have chosen to go in the direction of banning third-party advertisement, and that doesn't matter whether you're talking about union groups or whether you're talking about the National Citizens' Coalition.

Speaking as somebody on the left of the spectrum, somebody who typically supports the objectives of the labour movement probably as much or more than anyone else in the House, I can tell you that historically across the country what has happened is that it has been significant lobby organizations that oppose those very objectives who spend great deals of money to impact the political debate through advertising. So it does tend to be, actually, those on the right side of the spectrum who have in the past been able to utilize the third-party mechanism as a way of influencing political debate during an election.

In my view, that is not helpful to the democratic process. In my view, people should be able to engage in politics, and it should not become a question of being able to buy votes, buy opinion, buy advertising space. Frankly, in Alberta we should have a much more comprehensive set of rules around our own election financing as candidates, as members of political parties, we should have much more substantial limits on how much we can spend as political parties, and we should have much more substantial rules on the maximum donation that we can receive, all of that designed to ensure it is the individual voter whose activity and whose engagement ultimately makes the day one way or the other at the end of the process and that it's not one person or a group of 20 people with $15,000 each who can decide a particular campaign in a particular riding.

Again, in most other jurisdictions we have much more significant limitations on election funding than we do in Alberta. That's where I, obviously, part ways with my colleagues because although this starts to apply the ever so lightly touched rules that we ourselves have to operate under to these third parties, it doesn't go anywhere near far enough. It should, frankly, ban third-party engagement altogether. It should then go hand in hand with the next step of very significantly limiting the way in which people who have the capacity to engage in the electoral process through the expenditure of money can impact that electoral process in a way that is different from those who would engage in it through the use of their time and their commitment and their ability to talk to other voters one-on-one.

That is how our elections should be decided. They shouldn't be bought. They shouldn't be bought by the governing party, they shouldn't be bought by opposition parties, and they shouldn't be bought by third parties. They should be won and lost by, heaven forbid that I suggest it, the merits of your ideas and each party's ability on a level playing field to engage voters. That's what it should look like. I know I sound very naive, but it's been done in other provinces, and there's no reason why it shouldn't be done here.

We all know that one particular political party in this province outspends the other parties about 4 to 1, in some cases more than that, and I don't think that makes for a healthy democratic system. Certainly, we know that we have the most unhealthy democratic system in the country when it comes to the level of voter participation, so we need to think about what changes we can make, and part of that process, I think, is leveling the playing field and giving the right back to individual citizens to make a difference in how elections turn out rather than people with the biggest chequebooks.

That's our position on this. This bill, needless to say, doesn't go anywhere close to where I would like it to go but at least opens the door somewhat so that people can have the ever so slightest idea what other third parties are out there engaging in the effort to influence where voters end up on election day. That is a very, very tentative and small first step towards a much larger journey that I think we need to take if we are going to bring, really, quality once again into our electoral system.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Berger: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak to Bill 205, the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure (Third Party Advertising) Amendment Act, 2009, brought forward by the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, and I want to thank him for this effort.

This bill is designed to clarify rules around third-party spending on political advertising during election campaigns. Some of this comes from the way in which this bill clearly defines what constitutes political advertising as well as who would be considered third-party sponsors and eligible donors. When coupled with the rules that would regulate contributions, we can see how Bill 205 would create a consistent, transparent, and fair mechanism that enhances free speech in Alberta. To a large extent this is because it reduces the ability of wealthy third parties or political parties to dominate the media and, therefore, the political discussion. In this way it not only leaves the door open for more ideas but also enables Albertans to participate in more direct ways by allowing them to support third parties that closely reflect their particular views and sensibilities.

Mr. Speaker, part of this bill's strength lies in the way it has been designed. It is crafted in such a way that it is comprehensive but at the same time targeted. In other words, it does not overreach but simply identifies a need and addresses it through directed and measured action.

More and more we are seeing other jurisdictions deal with the issues around money, influence, and political advertising and its effects on the greater political dialogue. One of the most recent and possibly most well known of these can be found in our neighbour to the south, the United States. On March 27, 2002, the Bipartisan Campaign Reform Act, perhaps better known as the McCain-Feingold act, was signed into law, bringing with it a number of substantial and technical changes to American campaign finance legislation. Ultimately, it was directed at restoring the credibility and effectiveness of what some suggested was an American federal electoral system unduly influenced by contributions from wealthy third parties.

In order to achieve this objective, the act is based on two related key elements. The first includes provisions which restrict and in some cases ban the receipt, solicitation, and use of nonfederal funds, referred to as soft money. This ban has met with considerable success due to the way in which it has managed to steer parties and elected officials away from soliciting large and in some cases unlimited donations from corporation, unions, and individuals. As well, parties themselves have increasingly taken up a more active role in the financing of presidential and congressional elections.

The other important element in McCain-Feingold, Mr. Speaker, was directed at restricting the influence of certain third parties by prohibiting labour organizations and corporations from financing electioneering communications, often referred to as issue ads. From a more technical standpoint the legislation defines this electioneering communication as any broadcast, cable, or satellite communication that fulfills each of the following conditions: first, the communication refers to a clearly identified candidate for federal office; second, it is publicly distributed shortly before an election for the office that that candidate is seeking; and finally, the communication is targeted to the relevant electorate.

There are some exceptions, however. This definition would not include communication that may appear within news stories and editorials or as part of a candidate debate or forum.

In addition, McCain-Feingold specifies who can make electioneering communications. It includes individuals, political committees, certain unincorporated organizations, and membership organizations, all of which require that they do not use corporate or labour funds to do so. There are additional rules and regulations that require those who do finance such communications to file disclosure reports. Ultimately, Mr. Speaker, there is general agreement in the United States that these measures have gone a long way to bring greater transparency and clarity to political communications.

However, McCain-Feingold has not been without its critics. Indeed, there are those who question perhaps not its intent but its reach. Some suggest that it actually works to suppress free speech while others claim that McCain-Feingold acts as a tool of censorship. However, this argument is largely theoretical and with little convincing qualitative or quantitative evidence to support it. When we look at relevant indicators such as the amount of dollars spent and the range of diversity of views within advertising, by all accounts McCain-Feingold has done nothing to limit or damage the operation of free speech. In fact, the way in which it has focused on providing better transparency and clarity around the rules of electioneering communications of third parties has allowed for greater access by some of those previously excluded. This is a celebration of free speech, not a silencer.

In the end it is fair to say that Bill 205 addresses the same kinds of challenges as McCain-Feingold. Certainly, our respective jurisdictions are different, and perhaps the scope of these challenges is deeper in the United States if for no other reason than its relative size, but the goal is the same. Ensuring the ability of voters and citizens to participate in their democratic system is always at the forefront of what governments do directly or indirectly, and the important values of free speech and equality are something this government has always been committed to upholding. I believe that Bill 205 would enhance these efforts and allow all Albertans to continue to be a part of the political dialogue. I therefore support its passage and encourage all other members to do the same.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there additional speakers? The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm rising to speak against Bill 205. This bill, I strongly believe, arose from the ad which was run in the last election, the Albertans for Change ad campaign, for which some unions claim they spent $2 million. That was on the no plan. This is where it came from, I believe. This bill does nothing but suppress freedom of speech during elections. I think that was a great ad. It brought lots of issues to the forefront. It was only strengthening the democratic process by bringing all the issues to the forefront. That is the best way, I think, to keep the electoral process strong in a way so that during an election, you know, Albertans can decide what is best for the province and what is best for all the electors. This bill does nothing more than suppress that freedom of speech.

Also, the B.C. government brought in a similar kind of bill, which was challenged in the courts. The government even conceded, you know, that freedom of speech was infringed on by that bill. Under the Charter of Rights I think that this bill is like opening a can of worms. It will be coming up for challenge if we pass this bill. This is nothing but, I think, problems later on, even after the bill is passed. I don't think that we should be restricting third-party advertising during elections. Everybody should have the right of free speech, and this is free speech during elections to bring all of the issues to the forefront. That's what was done during the Albertans for Change ad campaign. That brought lots of issues to the forefront. It was not an attack on anybody personally but an attack on the record of the government. Although all Albertans were made aware of the ad campaign, we know what kind of effect it had on Albertans. It brought the issues to the forefront.

Even the B.C. government lost that in the courts. The law was challenged, and the judge did not go with the government's vision on that. I strongly believe that we don't need this new law through Bill 205 because this is going to suppress the freedom of lots of Albertans. For those reasons I'm not supporting this bill. It's suppressing freedom of speech.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Other participants? The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will be brief. I just want to get a couple of points on the record about this particular bill, Bill 205, the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure (Third Party Advertising) Amendment Act, 2009. There's been some talk about how this will bring transparency and clarity to the issue of third-party advertising by requiring those advertisers to register with the Chief Electoral Officer in advance of any advertising campaign and mandate that they reveal where their money comes from and the way that it is spent and put some restrictions on the amount of money that any one person or organization can donate in a nonelection year or in an election year and so on and so forth and like that, which is all well and good except that there seems to be a fair amount of transparency and clarity, even if it is after the fact, around who the Albertans for Change were in the ad campaign that certainly seems to have sparked the need for this bill.

I mean, it is a private member's bill, Mr. Speaker, although the Premier mused not long after the last election that maybe we have to bring in some election reform to speak to this issue because the governing party was clearly upset with the no-plan sound bite and the no-plan campaign, although it clearly didn't do them any harm. It may in fact have done them some good. There may have been some blowback that got a few more of them elected than otherwise would have been the case. There's no secret, as I understand it, Mr. Speaker, as to who this Albertans for Change third-party association was or whom it included. It included the AFL, the building trades, the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees, the Health Sciences Association, and the United Nurses of Alberta. I think that's well known.

So I'm not really sure that there's a particularly crying, pressing need for this transparency and clarity that the government seems to be situationally concerned about. When they see a benefit to themselves, they're all for transparency and clarity, and when they see that transparency and clarity might reveal a little bit more about their operations than they would like to, well, then they're not nearly as eager to do that sort of thing. I question the need for this. It's not exactly a huge problem, either an acute or chronic problem, third-party advertising in Alberta elections. I suppose it might become so, but it hasn't become so yet, in my view.

I think my colleague from Calgary-McCall referenced the court challenge in British Columbia. You know, I would always urge that before we bring forward legislation in this House and approve it, we be sensitive to whether we are needlessly courting the possibility of a court challenge.

The last point that I want to make, Mr. Speaker, is basically this, and it goes to the participation in debate by the Member for Livingstone-Macleod, who raised the McCain-Feingold bill in the United States. Now, that's a very interesting concept and one that might very well apply to legislation like this if the government is not bringing it forward as government business but if it's to go forward in this House as private business. I've often talked about how we should rearrange things legislatively and procedurally so that there is more time for private business and more opportunity for those of us of any party who are not actually part of the government, that being the Premier and cabinet, to bring forward legislation, hopefully good, onto the floor of this House, work with members from all parties, negotiate our way through it, and make good law on the floor of the House much like they often do in state Legislatures, in the U.S. House of Representatives, and the U.S. Senate as well.

This brings us back to McCain-Feingold. McCain is a Republican, Feingold is a Democrat, and they worked together in a bipartisan way on the legislation that the Member for Livingstone-Macleod references. You know, I think I would have an easier time with this because, for one thing, I would have a sense that there are fewer axes, perhaps, being ground on the part of any individuals or any parties if we worked together collaboratively on a piece of legislation like this. Rather than one private member representing one party bringing it forward, I'd be a whole lot more inclined to support legislation like this or to give it some serious consideration if it was brought forward collaboratively by a Conservative and a Liberal and a New Democrat.

That's an approach we don't see in this House. In fact, we might even have to change the standing orders – I'm not sure, Mr. Speaker – in order to allow that to happen. But in legislation like this, where we are seeking to put limits and restrictions on the ability of third parties to enter the campaign, perhaps for the right reasons, perhaps for the wrong reasons, I'd be a whole lot more comfortable to see that kind of bill come forward with a Conservative and a Liberal and a New Democrat sponsor because, if for no other reason, then that allows the third parties who might be impacted by such legislation to hold all parties to account for having had private members who brought that legislation forward.

I think that would be fairer. I think that would get to better legislation. I think I might be able to support that. But, Mr. Speaker, I can't support this particular bill, and I will be voting against it at the appropriate time.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there additional speakers, or should I call on the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere to close the debate?

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to all the members who have participated in the debate on this bill. In closing, I would just like to highlight and remind the members that this legislation applies to everybody. It applies to individuals, it applies to corporations, unions, organizations, everybody equally. That is important.

It also treats them the same as political parties. We want to try to put third parties and political parties, with regard to election advertising, on the same playing field, and that's what this does. It increases transparency and accountability, levels the playing field, and it respects the fundamental principles of democracy that have been talked about today.

With that, I close the debate.

Motions Other than Government Motions

The Speaker: Clerk, just hold the clock for a second, please. We've now gone six minutes past the hour of 5 o'clock. Our standing orders indicate that at 5 o'clock sharp motions must be called. However, they're not to be called if, in fact, we have the procedure we've just gone through, a division. So we will start the time allocation for this motion now at six and a half minutes past the hour of 5 o'clock.

Please proceed, hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Aboriginal History and Culture Month

507. Ms Calahasen moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to recognize the month of June as aboriginal history and culture month in Alberta.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a great honour to sponsor Motion 507. Culture is an essential ingredient in a well-lived life. Culture is that which connects individuals to their communities, to their provinces, to their nations, and nations to the world. Culture describes who people are, what they value, what their customs are, how they spend their time, how they think about and treat each other, and, of course, where they come from. History determines our future and can be a lesson for future generations. The Oxford dictionary identifies it as a whole series of past events connected with someone or something or, as my elders described it to me in Cree, a forum of our ancestors talking to us of past activities, trials, and tribulations. It can provide a way to remember your good deeds and, yes, sacrifices our people have made during difficult times.

As an example, over 200 years ago many First Nations, Métis, and Inuit cultures existed in this country with many aboriginal nations with their own rules, mores, laws, customs, and traditions. History shows that much of the original aboriginal lifestyles has disappeared, and many aboriginal nations and cultures were decimated, indigenous languages lost, kinship relationships confused, and, yes, illnesses new to the original peoples were rampant.

Rare has it been for the aboriginal community to tell its story and its history, rarer yet to openly practise its faith. That is why this motion is being put forward to help promote and acknowledge First Nations, Métis, and Inuit peoples' culture and historical contributions in this province, because, Mr. Speaker, it is this province which has done many positive things for and with aboriginal Albertans.

As an example, Alberta was first to settle the land claims quickly and fairly. Alberta was first to have the native education policy recognizing the history of the people by using elders and aboriginal historians, and their work was then taught in the schools. The recognition of the language development of the many aboriginal nations in this province was also done. The establishment of the aboriginal health strategy; the developing of the aboriginal policy framework and the aboriginal policy initiative; establishing traditional land-use studies, mapping where the aboriginal peoples lived and where they practised their culture; the economic development partnerships that have been developed; completing more land claims; signing between our present Premier and the Minister of Aboriginal Relations with the grand chiefs for an MOU; the Métis settlements agreement signed and finally to be completed; the Métis nation framework to be implemented: I could go on, Mr. Speaker, but this government has a history of doing the right thing because we've had and continue to have great leaders.

The creation of an aboriginal history and culture month would be an opportunity for Albertans to learn about the experiences of aboriginal Canadians and the vital role this community has played throughout our shared history. The numerous generations of aboriginal peoples who have made the prairie provinces their home for thousands of years have a multifaceted and rich history. As an example, I'm of Cree descent. We have a lot of Métis who are also Métis-Cree. We also have Bloods. We also have Blackfoot people, and we have Inuit people. We also have people of the Chipewyan Nation. We have many, many different nations in this province. Approximately 188,000 people in Alberta identified themselves as aboriginal during the 2006 Canadian census. There are 46 First Nations and eight Métis settlements in Alberta with many different cultures and languages.

To recognize June as a commemorative month would help these 188,000 people and other Albertans in so many ways. First, the acknowledgement of First Nations, Métis, and Inuit peoples' historical contribution to this province and this country will be elevated. As well, their own histories could be written and preserved so that others could experience what they have. Second, acknowledgement of aboriginal peoples' culture would give the aboriginal community the ability to further showcase their cultural practices. Third, it would allow the numerous languages that we do have, as I described, to flourish.

Today I ask all members of this Assembly to support June as aboriginal history and culture month as my elders had so wished. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for West Yellowhead, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I rise in support of Motion 507, the idea of making June the aboriginal history and culture month in Alberta. As has previously been noted, June 21 is already National Aboriginal Day in Canada, so we would be in sort of a lockstep circumstance with celebrating First Nations achievements and culture.

I think that if there is such a thing as a second life, then at some point in a previous life I was connected with a First Nations background. Since a child I have been absolutely fascinated with First Nations culture, First Nations history. As a young child I was an avid reader and read anything I could get my hands on with regard to First Nations. Being a child of the late '40s and early '50s, the portrayal of First Nations was not very positive in the movies. Despite that portrayal, when we as young children played cowboys and Indians, I was always on the Indian side, and my side always won. Maybe it was somewhat revisionist history. I thought that the First Nations showed considerably more creativity and wisdom, both environmentally and in the way they preserved their culture, than the chaps with the white hats and the bandanas, who rode around on their horses, basically, with one single shot able to knock five First Nations people off their horses.

I also noted that in the '50s there were an awful lot of Mediterranean Apaches employed in Hollywood. It's only been recently that we have seen a true portrayal of First Nations and their actual stories in history.

It's very important that we recognize when we move from sort of history and that time period to the modern day that First Nations are the fastest growing segment of the population. The First Nations offer a tremendous contribution, not only to our western provinces and across Canada, but First Nations aboriginals offer a terrific lesson on life and the need to preserve Mother Earth, as the term is so often used. It's a lesson that we need to learn.

There are also tremendous lessons with regard to coexistence and also tremendous lessons with regard to how elders are treated and respected. First Nations had a terrific respect for individuals who were viewed as suffering. Potentially, we would view them as suffering from mental illness. These people in First Nations were regarded as having been specially touched, and as such they were treated. It was thought that some of these individuals had vision beyond that of the ordinary person.

Part of First Nations background is the idea of a spirit animal or a spirit bird, and fasting was an important part of First Nations celebrations regardless of the tribe. This was called a vision quest, and the idea was that by depriving yourself of sleep and sustenance, if you waited long enough, your spirit animal or spirit bird would come to you with a message, and that message would have important ramifications not only for your own personal survival but for that of the tribe of which you were a member. There was also a thought that as you progressed in life, it was appropriate that your name changed based on the accomplishments you made. So while you might have started out with a particular name, as you matured and as your accomplishments were noted, your name would change numerous times within the process.

One of the most significant First Nations encounters that I personally had was as a teacher when Douglas Cardinal, Alberta's very famous architect, spoke at a teachers' convention in Calgary. As I say, I already had a strong sense and appreciation of First Nations history, particularly in what we would refer to as the Victorian time period, but my enjoyment was prior to 1850, while there was still buffalo and sufficient game and the majority of western First Nations were nomads and followed the game.

At the teachers' convention I asked Douglas Cardinal what sort of First Nations wisdom, what philosophies inspired him in his architectural creations. He related the story of a church he designed in New Mexico. He had built the walls of the church without predetermining what the roof would look like, and as he was contemplating his work, he went out into the wilderness. He saw in a bush a spider's web, and that gave him the idea of the cross-cabing from which the roof was suspended.

I asked him: who would you suggest in terms of philosophers or elders that I could potentially research or draw inspiration from? He talked about a Sioux elder by the name of Black Elk. Black Elk was revered by the Sioux Nation as a man of great wisdom. Following having read The Sacred Pipe, Black Elk's first book, I was drawn to other pieces of literature by First Nations authors such as Lame Deer. One of the books, the historical references that I particularly enjoyed that talked about shamanism and spiritualism was entitled Mitakuye Oyasmin, which translated from Sioux simply means "we are all related."

It's that relationship that we share that makes Motion 507 particularly important. We have benefited from our contact with the First Nations. I wouldn't say that it was necessarily a reciprocal agreement because what we offered back, such as blankets covered with small pox, were some of the examples of genocide that occurred in early Canadian history. Canadian history may not appear to have been nearly as violent as what we saw below the Medicine Line in the United States, but we have our share of history which is hardly positive.

Recently Stephen Harper, our Prime Minister and our Calgary-based representative, made an apology to First Nations about the effects of residential schools, which were not simply limited to the first generation that was taken from their families but affected subsequent generations. At some point people will say, "Well, we've got to get on with it. We've got to stop apologizing and work with First Nations." But for us to progress further, we need to recognize beyond just a simple apology that what we did was a form of cultural genocide. First Nations individuals were not allowed to speak their language. They were not allowed to wear their hair in the traditional manner. They were not allowed to wear traditional clothing . . . [Mr. Chase's speaking time expired]

The Speaker: Hon. members, I have a long list of speakers this afternoon, and we have a very, very short amount of time. I'd encourage brevity, and I'll try and move everyone in.

Just to bring you up to date on some developing news, mid-afternoon today the government of Nova Scotia presented its budget. Shortly thereafter the government was defeated on a bill that would have allowed it to miss a debt payment. So the Premier of Nova Scotia must now meet with the Lieutenant Governor of Nova Scotia, and by all likelihood that province will be in election mode.

The hon. Member for West Yellowhead, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise in support of Motion 507, Alberta's Aboriginal History and Culture Month, as sponsored by my colleague from Lesser Slave Lake. The purpose of Motion 507 is to urge the government to recognize June as the month during which aboriginal history and culture would be officially recognized and celebrated. The commemorative month would also signify our province's acknowledgement of aboriginal peoples' present and historical contributions. This motion would also be an opportunity to demonstrate the Alberta government's respect for aboriginal history and culture and to further its commitment to encouraging aboriginal people to make a positive difference in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to read a few passages from the book People & Peaks of Willmore Wilderness Park: 1800s to mid-1900s. It's a book that was written in my riding.

The mountain men and women of the Mt. Robson, Jasper, Willmore and Kakwa areas had, and still have, exceptional abilities and knowledge. If one were to liken their aptitude in today's education system standards, they would be recognized with a PhD in bush knowledge. These trail people exercised refined skills in survival, tracking, hunting, horsemanship, trapping and fishing. An example of this is when one aboriginal elder showed me how to make a candle out of lard and a tea towel, when the candle supply was depleted. This simple technique afforded our camp two nights of light, which was superior to the candles we had previously been using. Survival in remote places took ingenuity and common sense . . .

In the early 1800s, the white man wanted to find natural corridors through the Canadian Rockies – so the search began. The Indians had been travelling through these natural passageways for generations. One of the first attempts to find a practical route to the Pacific Ocean was through what is now called Howse Pass. Although David Thompson has been credited with the first crossing of this Pass in 1807, his employer, the North West Company, had sent an advance party over the pass in 1806. This trail-blazing trip was made by Jacques (Jacco) Findlay, a man named MacMaster, and two others. They drew a sketch of their route, and upon their return to Rocky Mountain House, presented it to Thompson. This helped to guide Thompson on his first passage in 1807, during which he officially mapped the area. However, the pass was named after Joseph Howse, even though it was not until 1809 that he crossed for his employer, the Hudson's Bay Company . . .

The first reports of Iroquois in the Athabasca Valley were recorded in 1814, resulting in their bloodlines running deep in the veins of the area's indigenous people. The Wanyandies were some of the first Iroquois to come west. In fact, Vincent (Basa) Wanyandie landed a job with Henry John Moberly, a Hudson's Bay Factor at Jasper House. He was born in 1858 and was the son of Jean Baptiste Wanyandie . . . and the grandson of fur trader, Ignace Wanyandie, one of the first Iroquois who guided the first explorers west . . .

Some of the indigenous families, like the present-day Wanyandies, have striking features of the Iroquois. "Many of them stand over six feet, broad-shouldered and erect, big men with aquiline noses and strong features; while the Cree are short in stature, with round faces and snub noses. The Iroquois who came west were select men." The Rocky Mountain People, called the Aseniwuche Winewak, have long acknowledged their family ties with the Iroquois, Cree, Beaver, and Stoney.

Today such names as the Wanyandies, Joachims, Moberlys, Vinsons, Findlays, and Groats are still familiar names up and down the eastern slopes and continue to work and live off the land. Of note, the Findlay name, that is synonymous with the fur trade in and around Jasper and now Grande Cache, traces its Caucasian roots back to the royalty in Scotland.

Mr. Speaker, the Métis and the AWN people play an important role in the workings of West Yellowhead as they continue to teach the traditional ways to the people and to the youth as they try to keep their languages and cultures alive. The local Métis hold summer camps each year where they bring as many as 50 youth out into the bush on horseback, getting them away from Xboxes, TVs, and cellphones, to continue the traditional ways such as cooking gopher, which is a delicacy among the Cree.

On July 25, 2009, the Métis of Grande Cache will embark on a 14-day horse trip with 25 of their youth from Grande Cache to Jasper, following the routes taken by their forefathers, to celebrate a hundred years since this forced migration from Jasper to the valleys and peaks of the Grande Cache area.

We're all proud of our heritage, and it would be wrong for us to not acknowledge, identify, and celebrate the culture and accomplishments of aboriginal people to the opening up of this great country, this province, and, in particular, my riding of West Yellowhead.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the Minister of Aboriginal Relations, followed by the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to be able to rise in support of this motion to declare June aboriginal history month. It's my understanding that Saskatchewan has officially recognized aboriginal history month in June in both 2007 and 2008, yet it is not recognized every year quite as yet. In 2007 Jean Crowder, the NDP MP for Nanaimo-Cowichan, put forward a private member's motion to have June recognized as aboriginal history month, but the motion was unfortunately never debated.

Nonetheless, the objective which is sought here is one which I think all members of the House can agree on. Promotion of aboriginal history and culture is vital to a full understanding of what it means to be Albertan and Canadian. Aboriginal people knew this land and not only survived but often thrived here for thousands of years before the arrival of any Europeans. Those early European visitors required the help of aboriginals to survive. The early fur trade succeeded because of the skills of the aboriginal people and the trade networks that aboriginal people helped to develop.

Many years ago I had the pleasure of working at the historic site at historic Fort Dunvegan and often ran numbers of tours of people through that Alberta site and would have the opportunity to speak in part about the significant role played by our aboriginal people, including the Beaver Indians, when the fur traders were just beginning to make their way up through the Peace River.

Some of the most exciting places to visit in Alberta are already places associated with aboriginal history and culture. Writing-On-Stone national historic site, a provincial park since 1957, protects the largest concentration of North American Plains rock art. The preserve is accessed by guided tours only which allow park visitors to view over 50 rock art sites and enjoy many interpretive programs. Head-Smashed-In Buffalo Jump, of course, is the UNESCO world heritage site, and it's one of the world's oldest, largest, and best preserved buffalo jumps, bearing witness to the custom practised by North American Plains natives for nearly 6,000 years. The Ewan Moberly Homestead, I believe already mentioned, is in Jasper national park.

All Albertans are enriched by the role that aboriginal societies have played in the development of our province. It is really important that as we all, I suspect, vote to support this motion, we not let our celebration and desire to promote and appreciate aboriginal culture gloss over our ongoing need to respond to the needs of our aboriginal people with more justice than perhaps we have thus far. We have the ongoing inability to complete the negotiation of a fair Métis harvesting agreement. We have the ongoing concerns raised by aboriginal communities living downstream from the Fort McMurray area. We have what is probably one of the most tragic and embarrassing international situations with respect to the status of the Lubicon and our government's inability to resolve those issues.

None of these issues should be forgotten by us. But ultimately as our First Nations people move forward, while they may need our support in certain areas with respect to the kinds of decisions I've just discussed, it is they who will lead their own journey forward, and it is through this kind of process, where we acknowledge and celebrate aboriginal culture and aboriginal history, that we will be able to help provide the vehicle through which our aboriginal brothers and sisters will be able to move forward to provide and create many, many more centuries of history for all Albertans.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. members, I have eight speakers on my list. If you spoke two to three minutes, we'd get you all in.

The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Relations, followed by the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I also want to say a sincere thank you to the hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake, who championed this motion thus far and, hopefully, will champion it through to conclusion with support from all members of the House.

Mr. Speaker, I'll be brief in my comments. I simply want to indicate that I'm very supportive of this particular motion. We've already heard that the single fastest growing population by cultural identity, by group, is in fact the aboriginal population. We're very proud of the 225,000 aboriginal people in Alberta who self-identify as either First Nation, Métis, or Inuit. There are probably more that we could add to that number. Certainly, we'll be adding a lot more in the coming years.

This provides us with some great opportunities in so many areas. One of the greatest opportunities is in the area of economic development and in job training and skills training. I know that that is being pursued very aggressively. A motion such as this one, that officially serves to have the Assembly recognize the month of June as aboriginal history and culture month, merits our serious attention. Anything, in my view, that helps to promote the positive sides of aboriginals and the aboriginal way of life, that particular focus, is something that I am very much in favour of.

We're doing some of this promotion ourselves to help out on the education front, to help out on the economic development front, certainly to help out on the resource management and land management front. In fact, all of those issues, Mr. Speaker, will be part of the focus we're putting on aboriginal things, coincidentally, in the month of June with our international symposium, Gathering for Success. It'll be hosted in the lovely constituency of Banff-Cochrane on June 28, 29, and 30. A number of our colleagues will be there as well.

The other point I want to mention quickly, Mr. Speaker, is some of the new and exciting things that have been alluded to by the Member for Lesser Slave Lake such as the protocol agreement with First Nations in Alberta, such as our three-year interim agreement with the Métis settlements, such as our seven-year agreement that's just recently been signed with the Métis Nation of Alberta, and, of course, the first-ever aboriginal education summit that occurred between ministers of education, ministers of advanced education, and all ministers of aboriginal relations or aboriginal affairs from right across Canada, which was hosted in Saskatoon at the end of February.

There are many things that we can learn from aboriginal people, from their way of life, from their rich and diverse culture. Having a month dedicated to that will go a long way to helping it be fulfilled. I think it also bears mention, Mr. Speaker, that my ministry is proud to provide about $30,000 in annual funding for the support of National Aboriginal Day, which is traditionally held on the weekend of June 21. We're going to be hosting some events in that regard ourselves. We're looking forward to that.

My final couple of points are these. Mr. Speaker, as you know, the Education ministry a few years ago brought in aboriginal studies 10, aboriginal studies 20, aboriginal studies 30. I was very privileged to be the Minister of Education at that time. I'm happy to tell you that in just a few years of it being there, children in our schools today are learning more about aboriginal business here in the province of Alberta than ever before.

When I grew up, we knew a lot more about the Treaty of Versailles, which came about at the end of World War I in 1919, about the Treaties of Rome, which came about in 1958, all about the European Economic Community, and so on than did we learn, or did I ever know, about Treaty 6 or Treaty 7 or Treaty 8, which are less than an hour or two, three, four hours' drive from the city in which I live. So anything that helps focus on that is definitely worth supporting.

I'll just close by saying that I hope other members of the Assembly will also support this motion, and I thank the aboriginal community for supporting this and for supporting some of the many initiatives that we're bringing forward to indeed build more positive, more productive relationships with and for Métis, First Nation, and Inuit cultures that thrive here in the province of Alberta.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, then Edmonton-Meadowlark, then Calgary-Mackay.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today to support Motion 507 on aboriginal culture and history month. I would like to commend the hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake for bringing this motion forward because it's such an important topic for many Albertans. Motion 507 urges the government of Alberta to recognize June as the aboriginal history and culture month. I believe this is important to recognize the aboriginal community for its influential role it has played in our provincial history. This motion would be very meaningful for the people of my constituency. In Bonnyville-Cold Lake we have a large aboriginal population spread over five areas: Frog Lake, Cold Lake, Kehewin, Elizabeth settlement, and Fishing Lake settlement.

By proclaiming June as an aboriginal history and cultural month, it would help to improve the connection between our communities through the sharing of culture and traditions. This recognition would help to instill pride in aboriginal culture and ensure that traditions are passed on from generation to generation. Not only would Motion 507 improve the connection between communities, but it would help to strengthen the relationship between the aboriginal community and the government of Alberta.

June 21 has already been established as National Aboriginal Day, and Motion 507 would work to complement this. Mr. Speaker, establishing the aboriginal history and cultural month would be so meaningful to many Albertans, especially to many in my constituency. I would ask all members to please vote in favour of Motion 507 and recognize the important role that aboriginal culture plays in this province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, then Calgary-Mackay, then Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise in support of Motion 507, which is to declare June to be aboriginal history and culture month in Alberta. I will just start with saying that I think that for us people coming from India, there's a bond there between the natives, aboriginal people, and us, and we respectfully call them tae-ke. Tae-ke is the Indian word for uncle. The uncle, you know, the older brother of dad, is called tia. So, I mean, I think the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark will agree with me that when he was driving a cab and when I was driving a cab and we had a fare from the Tsuu T'ina reserve and when he asked me, "Where did you go for a fare?" I said, "I went to pick up a tae-ke." That means, you know, I went to pick up my uncle's sons and nephews, nieces. That's the word we use respectfully, tae-ke. So that correlates to us personally.

I'm glad that the Member for Lesser Slave Lake brought in this motion to recognize all the contributions made by the aboriginal and native people in Canada since June 21 is National Aboriginal Day, which the federal government recognized in 1996. National Aboriginal Day is to give Canadians the opportunity to show their appreciation and respect to aboriginal people and to recognize the unique achievements of aboriginal people through celebration although there are lots of issues still maybe to be resolved, like Lubicon issues and other land claim issues and limitations on hunting and fishing rights.

It's an ongoing primary concern for Alberta's aboriginal people. Aboriginal people see that these issues are infringing on their ability to participate in their own culture, and I think we should be working towards solving all those issues. All too often the focus is placed on the aboriginal community surrounding their socioeconomic problems instead of their positive contributions. We should be recognizing all the positive contributions made by our native brothers and sisters. I think it is long overdue, and I urge all the members of the Assembly to support this motion. I'm in favour of it, and we're all going to support it.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Thank you, sir.

Five speakers left. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today and speak to Motion 507, aboriginal history and culture month, proposed by the Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Mr. Speaker, on several occasions I've mentioned that the majority of Albertans and Canadians, me included, have immigrated from other provinces and distant countries; if not us, then our ancestors. I'd just like to tell you a couple of stories. On my first day in Canada I arrived as a six and a half year old, and I didn't speak English. I met this young fellow whose name was Shawn Baker. He looked like me. I assumed he was from India, and I started speaking the only tongue that I knew. He looked at me in a very peculiar fashion, and he took me to the other fellow who had the same skin complexion as I did who spoke my mother tongue. That's when I first came to learn of the aboriginal peoples of Canada.

The other story I'd like to share with you. The hon. member sitting next to me, the Member for Lesser Slave Lake: as fate would have it, my father-in-law actually taught the hon. member next to me 40 some-odd years ago as a social teacher in Peace River. His name is Mr. Singh. And this hon. member, my understanding is, is the first aboriginal woman elected in Canada, first aboriginal woman cabinet minister.

Many Canadians, Mr. Speaker, are recent immigrants encountering the beautiful seasonal prairie climate for the first time. Others have been enjoying life in Alberta for decades while more still are descendants of immigrant families who've been arriving for various reasons throughout the centuries, some in search of adventure and a new life, others escaping what are very difficult and hostile environments. No matter the category or duration of stay, the government of Alberta supports and encourages the presence of immigrants from across the world here in this country and this province.

The value of our positive contributions to Alberta's society is recognized and appreciated, but as we all should know, numerous organized communities were established here long before our arrival, before the formation of the province, and, yes, even before the influx of the European explorers, adventurers, and pioneers. In fact, the aboriginal peoples were living here and thriving here for thousands of years prior to the discovery of the so-called New World.

Alberta's First Nations have a rich and vibrant history and culture, and while relationships have been strained in the past, currently the government of Alberta and the province's First Nations enjoy a strong collaborative friendship based on mutual respect and honour. Aboriginal political culture is on display here in this building. Perhaps you've noticed that the first statue adorning the rotunda of this Legislature is that of Chief Crowfoot, leader of the Blackfoot confederation, who showed his bravery, prudence, and desire for peace by refusing to join the Northwest Rebellion in 1885.

Mr. Speaker, the government of Alberta recognizes June 21 as National Aboriginal Day. On this day all Albertans can celebrate the unique heritage and culture of First Nations, Métis, and Inuit peoples throughout the province of Alberta. However, the hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake has put forth a motion which I support wholeheartedly to designate the entire month of June for aboriginal history and culture.

This commemorative month would symbolize the province's acknowledgement of aboriginal peoples' historical, present, and future involvement in shaping Alberta's spirit. It would be a gesture of friendship between our government and our aboriginal peoples. By remembering aboriginal culture for an extended period, we can start changing misconceptions. We can develop a positive rapport and inspire our aboriginal youth, who can give whole communities new hope.

On behalf of my family, that has had the honour and privilege of landing on Canadian shores 103 years ago, I would like to thank our aboriginal peoples of Canada for the opportunity to live in the best province in the best country in the world.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Well, it's unfortunate, hon. member, that you cannot correct Hansard. There is no way in the world that your father-in-law taught the hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake 46 years ago. If she was studying social then, that would make her a minimum of 68. I know for a fact that she's no more than a day over 37, so I'll correct it for you for the record.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, then Edmonton-Calder, then Airdrie-Chestermere.

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will try to be fast. It is my pleasure to rise today to speak on Motion 507, sponsored by the hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake. Aboriginal Canadians hold a distinctive place within the social, political, and cultural fabric of Canada as well as a vital role in the historic, current, and future development of our communities and nation. Aboriginal Canadians have contributed in all aspects of development in the province of Alberta, and it's anticipated they will play an even greater role in the future social and economic growth of our province.

The aboriginal communities' path of development within the broader context of the Canadian fabric hasn't been a smooth one. It has in fact been one fraught with marginalization and exclusion and overcoming trial and tribulation with individual and collective perseverance and tenacity. The impact from centuries of systemic exclusion resulted in adverse outcomes for aboriginal people in health, education, justice, employment, social participation, and economic opportunities on this continent.

We know from research of the continual omission of a people from the vast facets of society such as our books and texts, various forms of communications media, positions of leadership in institutions of power. Without acknowledgement of the existence and impact of institutionalized or systemic barriers on people, it is almost inevitable for many of the marginalized to ascribe their place and circumstances as faults of their own doing, which then leads to the acceptance and internalization of the negative attributes into their lives and their communities.

I am pleased to note that our government's response to the needs and issues of aboriginal people is taking on a more systemic approach, which is absolutely critical as the problems impacting the people are structural. We have ministries responsible for education, health, advanced education, employment, and sustainable development not only to develop specific strategies and programs to address the specific needs and issues experienced by aboriginal people but also working across ministries to better co-ordinate efforts. Our government also has a stand-alone ministry to focus efforts and development in aboriginal relations.

Mr. Speaker, the proposed motion to urge the government to recognize the month of June as Alberta's aboriginal history and culture month would expand and enhance our government's current efforts to strengthen the capacity of the aboriginal people for greater engagement and participation in the social, economic, cultural, and political life in Alberta. I believe a dedicated aboriginal history and culture month would serve to enhance pride and belonging, especially for the younger population among aboriginal Canadians, resulting from the public's increased awareness and understanding and appreciation of the participation and contribution of aboriginal people.

A greater sense of belonging and safety will lead to higher participation by aboriginal people. Their engagement with society would be more meaningful and equitable due to improved overall social relations. Society will benefit from a heightened level of social cohesion in the long run. I envision tremendous opportunities for learning, celebration, and creative developments from this month. Aboriginal history and culture month could offer opportunities for business and literary as well as arts and cultural institutions to profile the participation, integration, and contribution of aboriginal Canadians.

There's opportunity to incorporate the recognition and celebration of aboriginal entrepreneurs, literary accomplishments, visual artists, groundbreakers, and outstanding achievement in areas of law, education, entertainment, research into the program during and around the month. These will enhance the diverse representation of the events and programs, and these events will also contribute to dispelling the misconceptions and stereotypes of our aboriginal Canadians.

The proposed aboriginal history and culture month can also serve as a platform for sharing community experiences and untold stories that would build better understanding. As an example, I have learned that when Chinese labourers were brought in to help build the Canadian railroad, they were left to die along the developing railroad when they became gravely ill or injured, and many times it was the aboriginal people who took them in and brought them back to health. I think human stories like this and historical relationships such as this are worth capturing and sharing.

Drummers from aboriginal communities and the Indian community, the Asian community, and African communities, and many others would be creating new beats and connections. I've tried this, and it's beautiful. I can see people from the aboriginal and nonaboriginal communities sharing and creating new forms of art, drama, and theatre and in the process contributing to creating a more vibrant cultural scene in Alberta and, hence, the support and participation of the arts in Alberta.

In closing, I believe the recognition of June as aboriginal history and culture month will enhance the social relations and cultural vibrancy of our province, which would benefit all Albertans of all backgrounds.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm speaking today in support of Motion 507, and I'll try and do it quickly to allow for other speakers. Our government is so proud of the cultural diversity amongst our caucus, which, I believe, truly reflects the cultural mosaic of our province.

The aboriginal peoples have a rich history in cultural traditions that are an important part of the diversity of our province. As the MLA for Drayton-Valley-Calmar I have been fortunate enough to work in close contact with many of the aboriginal people in my constituency in Hobbema and, in particular, the two bands of Ermineskin and Louis Bull. I have participated in several events and meetings in my capacity as MLA, and I must say I have learned a great deal about their way of life and their culture, and I certainly look forward to many more opportunities.

Motion 507 will give all Albertans an excellent opportunity to learn about the history and achievements of First Nations, Métis, and Inuit peoples. It would serve to educate future generations of Albertans about the history, culture, and positive contributions made to our great province by aboriginal peoples and leaders. The recognition and celebration of the contributions aboriginal people have made to our province and nation would be an important tool in showing our support for aboriginal youth and enabling them by giving them the confidence necessary to become actively engaged in their community. This could encourage more aboriginal peoples to break forth and to consider other areas that they may not have felt they would break into for careers. In fact, in my area we have been fortunate enough to have an aboriginal leader who was also elected to the House of Commons in the 1980s, Chief Wilton Littlechild.

I believe we need to not only embrace the unique history of the aboriginal people in our province but celebrate with aboriginal people around the province and, indeed, the country and educate future generations to overcome the challenges or obstacles aboriginal people have experienced and continue to face in our society largely as a result of ignorance.

I am in full support of this motion. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today to speak to Motion 507. Edmonton-Calder is the home to many aboriginal people, organizations, and schools, something which we're very proud of. In fact, the hon. Member for Drayton-Valley-Calmar once said, "It's all in Calder," and that seems particularly appropriate. We have the Métis Urban Housing Corporation, Métis Settlements General Council, the Métis Nation of Alberta, the Canadian Native Friendship Centre, the native elders community centre, Amiskwaciy Academy, and Prince Charles elementary school, which is in the Awasis program.

Declaring June as the aboriginal history and culture month will help us further not only the educational efforts in our constituencies but also our whole communities to teach all Albertans about the prominent role that aboriginal Albertans play in our province's rich history.

I would ask all members to please vote in favour of Motion 507 and to help promote awareness of the importance of aboriginal history and culture in Alberta. Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member, for your co-operation.

The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my sincere pleasure to rise and speak to Motion 507, Aboriginal History and Culture Month, as sponsored by my colleague the Member for Lesser Slave Lake. Motion 507 encourages the government of Alberta to recognize June as the month during which aboriginal history and culture would be officially recognized and celebrated. I would like to congratulate the hon. member for bringing this motion forward and bringing it to the attention of government.

Culture diversity is extremely important to Albertans. There are at least 188,000 aboriginal people and 46 First Nations groups in Alberta. Each of these groups boasts a different culture, language, and traditions. Mr. Speaker, aboriginal culture and values have played an important role in the development of Alberta, and aboriginals are proud people who have lived on the landscape of our province for thousands of years.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that an aboriginal history and culture month would have a number of benefits. It would help educate Albertans on the valuable role that aboriginal people have played in Canada. It would recognize that we the representatives of Albertans respect the value and contribution that aboriginal history and culture has had on Alberta, and it would demonstrate the Alberta government's commitment to encourage aboriginal people to make a positive difference.

It is for these reasons that I applaud the Member for Lesser Slave Lake for Motion 507, and I encourage all members of this House to do the same. Thank you.

The Speaker: Would additional members like to participate? The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to congratulate the hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake for bringing this great motion to the Assembly, and I just want to tell of my own experience. A few years ago I had the privilege of chairing the committee to review the Northland school district in the north. I went up there and I toured around and I visited many, many, many places there. At one particular place we were talking to a senior there, and she said to me that her priority is to protect the native, the aboriginal culture. She looked at me and said: you, young man, if you lose your Chinese culture here, you still have billions of people in China whereas if we lose it here, who else in the world do we have? I want to relate that message to all members here. It was a learning experience for me, and I support the hon. member's motion.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others, or should I call on the hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake to close the debate?

Ms Calahasen: Just a short minute, Mr. Speaker. I want to thank the Minister of Aboriginal Relations for coming in to speak to this motion and for all the great work that he's been doing on the Aboriginal Relations side. I'd like to thank all my colleagues from all sides of the House for their support on this motion. I really appreciate the knowledge that they have brought to the table. Thank you very, very much. I look forward to the vote.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 507 carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, given the hour I would move that we call it 6 p.m. and adjourn until 1:30 tomorrow afternoon.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:57 p.m. to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Welcome.

Let us pray. Grant us daily awareness of the precious gift of life which has been given to us. As Members of this Legislative Assembly we dedicate our lives anew to the service of our province and our country. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is truly my pleasure today on behalf of our Premier and yourself to introduce through you to all the members of the Assembly students participating in the Forum for Young Albertans program. We are joined today by 27 students from various high schools across Alberta.

The Forum for Young Albertans is a nonpartisan political learning opportunity for senior high school students from all over the province. The program provides a wide variety of experiences for participants, including insight into the judicial system, the role of the bureaucracy, the function of interest groups, and the legislative process. While interacting with decision-makers, our leaders of tomorrow gain valuable insight into the political system in Alberta.

These students have already met with some of the members of the Assembly and will be meeting with many more throughout the week. I would ask the students and chaperones, seated in the public gallery, to rise and please accept the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to welcome students from Caernarvon elementary school in Edmonton-Castle Downs as their MLA is unable to be here today. These 60 bright young grade 6 students along with parent helpers and teachers Susanne Venaas and Bobbi-Jo Hollingsworth and teacher helper Melissa Carlson have toured our Legislature to learn a lot about our building and the provincial government. I believe they are sitting in both galleries. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today we are fortunate to have a group of students from Horizon school in Olds. I met with them earlier, and they were very excited to go on a tour of this grand building and learn about its history. They're here this afternoon to learn how the Legislature works. We've got 10 students, and they're accompanied by six teachers/group leaders by the names of Lianne Manning, Doreen Mozak, Sarah Thompson, Marje Cheecho, Jackie Klein, and Anne Tuggle. I would ask all of them, students and leaders, to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance and Enterprise.

Ms Evans: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two groups to introduce today. The first group is a group of new employees from Finance and Enterprise who, as part of their orientation, are taking a tour of the Legislature: Jennifer Keats, Parminder Lytviak, Karen Chan, Mike Hartfield, Laurie Balfour, Carole Marson, Margaret-Anne Huynh, Gavin Hoekstra, Ronald Brochu, Tomas Nilsson, Diana L'Heureux, and Artem Barsukov. Would they please rise, and would the Assembly please give them a warm round of applause.

Mr. Speaker, we also had a real privilege today at the rural caucus at lunch to be graced with the presence of four mayors and councillors, who provided us their experience on the regional economic development authorities. With us this afternoon are Dale Barr, who is the mayor of Rimbey, who is part of Central Alberta Economic Partnership; Pamela Marriott, who is the mayor of Swan Hills, with the Grizzly Regional Economic Alliance; Jack O'Toole, councillor from Grande Prairie, Peace Region Economic Development Alliance; and Don Whittaker, councillor for the county of Vermilion River, with the Northeast Alberta Information Hub. They're seated in the public gallery. I'd ask that they rise and that you please acknowledge them here today.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour today to rise and introduce to you and through you to the hon. members of this Assembly some folks that have travelled down here from La Crête. They're a group of people that have spent countless hours working for the betterment of their community, focusing on the issue of health care delivery in that extreme remote region of northwestern Alberta. With us today are George and Eva Friesen and George and Mary Janzen. Accompanying them is Jerry Archibald, who is a consultant that they've engaged.

Mr. Speaker, they've done so much work on this project and they're so committed to their community and they're so concerned about the issue of health care that in my meeting with them today they didn't even mention highway 88 even though some of them drove down on highway 88 to get here. An oversight I'm sure, and I'll hear about it later.

I'd like to ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you Mr. Doug Drozd. Doug is a director of the Central Alberta Rural Electrification Association, and he was kind enough to buy several of us breakfast this morning. Doug, as you might guess, is not from my constituency; rather, he is expertly represented in this Assembly by yourself. I'd ask Doug to rise now and receive the traditional warm greeting of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise today to introduce guests from the Canadian Mental Health Association, Edmonton region, who are here to promote mental health awareness week and this year's theme: invest in yourself. For 55 years the Canadian Mental Health Association has been supporting the resilience and recovery of people experiencing mental illness. The CMHA is engaged with the community in education, advocacy, housing, community rehab, and supporting recovery for people living with mental illness. I would like to invite my colleagues in the Assembly to join me at the sunny side up breakfast at CMHA offices tomorrow at 7:30 a.m.

I would now ask that my guests rise as I call their names and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly: Brenda Wentzell, board member and chair of the social action committee; Dick Southworth, board member and chair of the fund development committee; Ione Challborn, executive director; and staff members Natasha Nicholson and Connie Benjamin. Also accompanying them are nine individuals involved in various CMHA programs. I would ask that the Assembly now join me in providing them with the traditional warm welcome.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Pochaiv Maple Leaf Safe House

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As an Albertan of Ukrainian descent and as chair of the Advisory Council on Alberta-Ukraine Relations I would like to speak briefly about the Pochaiv maple leaf safe house project, or World for Children, an organization that is very near and dear to my heart. The Pochaiv project has been operating in the village of Malechkovitchi, Ukraine, since February 2000. This project was created to address the issue of human trafficking and, more specifically, the growing trafficking of women in both Ukraine and in Alberta.

The Pochaiv safe house project is comprised of volunteers throughout Alberta who are dedicated to improving the lives of women affected by human trafficking. A safe house has been created where teens will be protected from human trafficking and sex slavery. A school is to be created nearby so that these teens can receive the education that they so dearly deserve. Other local service agencies like Youth Emergency Shelter and Crossroads Outreach also help to provide a brief transition for trafficked children, teens, and women from eastern Europe. The government of Alberta has given financial support to this project through the Wild Rose Foundation, but private donations from both Albertans and Canadians remain the largest source of funding for these activities.

The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Relations and I have personally visited the Pochaiv project in Ukraine. When I returned to Canada, I helped to raise $5,000 to help an orphanage buy a washer and dryer and, along with some of my former students from H.E. Bourgoin school in Bonnyville, have also sponsored a child in need.

I will be tabling two documents from this organization later this afternoon to help raise awareness about trafficking of women both in Ukraine and in Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

1:40 Lethbridge High Level Bridge Centennial

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and speak to this House about a subject near and dear to everyone in my hometown of Lethbridge. This year marks the 100th anniversary of the Lethbridge viaduct, better known as the High Level Bridge. Over the past century the bridge has become synonymous with Lethbridge and is the city's most remarkable landmark. The bridge is the longest and highest bridge of its kind in the world and was a true marvel of engineering when it was built at the turn of the century.

Mr. Speaker, the official centennial celebrations for the High Level Bridge began months ago, and they are definitely picking up steam as we head into spring. Member groups of the Allied Arts Council in Lethbridge have planned several commemorating events for the spring and summer to help local residents get in the spirit.

The Lethbridge Symphony Orchestra, for example, will finish up a series of concerts called Building Bridges. Another musical celebration, featuring the University of Lethbridge Global Drums and the Irish Dance Academy, will be hosted on May 9. In recognition of the bridge's significant contribution to the south, the Galt Museum will open an exhibit May 9 dedicated to the history of the bridge and the economic benefits. Later this summer the Allied Arts Council will host a number of exhibitions in honour of the bridge, including a temporary display in the river valley and a one-day festival is planned for September. The city of Lethbridge has even commissioned a piece of public art to be displayed north of the Galt Museum.

Mr. Speaker, the goal of these centennial events is to reflect the crucial role that the High Level Bridge has played and continues to play in defining Lethbridge's unique character.

As a special note, the grandfather of the Member for Livingstone-Macleod, Mr. Gus Malchow, was a riveter during the construction of this bridge.

I'd like to take the opportunity to invite all my colleagues and their constituents to come to Lethbridge this spring and summer and take in some of the celebrations to mark this milestone in the city's history.

I would also like to ask that my fellow members join me in congratulating the Allied Arts Council, CP Rail, and the great citizens of Lethbridge for their hard work in making the bridge's centennial year a memorable one. As my friend Suzanne Lint says: when you see the bridge, you know you're home.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Bitumen Upgrading

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Liberal caucus strongly believes that as much bitumen as possible should be upgraded right here in Alberta. Upgrading bitumen here ensures that we ship a more valuable product. It provides many profitable spinoff industries. It creates long-term, well-paid, full-time employment for thousands of Albertans. We cannot have our province become a strip mine for raw bitumen export.

We are impatient to see government action on this issue. Such action might involve bitumen royalties in kind used to boost the local upgrading market. It might involve other measures, too, if necessary. We're impatient because we're concerned by the increasing rate of bitumen exports to the United States. Pipeline companies are getting long-term contracts. New upgrading facilities are being built in Texas, Illinois, and Oklahoma. We here in Alberta are getting left behind.

What we need to do is clearly assess what proportion of bitumen can be upgraded here in Alberta. We need to look at the labour resources and limits, the environmental resources and limits, and the infrastructure resources and limits. When we know what we can upgrade here, we can get on with it. If there's too much production for Alberta's capacity, which at the top end of predictions would probably be the case, we would look first to our neighbours in Canada to pick up the surplus, thus building a broader coalition of national support for our oil sands industry.

We can do this. We can make it work. It will take determination and vision. But if we do it, we can look forward to an upgrading industry in Alberta that drives this province and this country to a prosperous future.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Smart Technologies Corporation

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to speak about an event last Friday attended by the hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology and the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow. Smart Technologies Corporation officially opened their new headquarters and research centre in Calgary. The building is a model of environmental initiatives and energy conservation. It produces 50 per cent less greenhouse gas emissions relative to a typical office building and has numerous leading environmental aspects. At over 211,000 square feet the building cost over $60 million to construct and is expected to become one of only nine office buildings in Canada to meet the leadership in energy and environmental design, or LEED, gold certification.

Mr. Speaker, the company is best known for the Smart interactive whiteboard, which it brought to market in 1991. From humble beginnings to the world's leading provider of interactive whiteboards and other technology products Smart is a great example of Alberta's ingenuity, innovation, and business development.

The company employs 750 people in Calgary and over 1,300 world-wide. It is the largest technology company in the province and a model for many others. Despite the current global economic climate Smart continues to hire to meet the needs of an expanding world-wide customer base and expects to add over a hundred full-time employees to its Calgary operations this year. In its fiscal year ended March 31, 2009, Smart grew revenue by approximately 35 per cent, and for the 2010 fiscal year the company expects to grow at or above the same rate.

I would like to recognize the leadership and the staff of Smart Technologies for their caring approach to the environment and their creation of an internationally significant technology business.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Food Allergy Awareness Week

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Food allergy week is being held May 10 to 16 across Canada and in Alberta. During this time the Food Allergy & Anaphylaxis Network is stepping up its efforts to educate Canadians and Albertans about allergens and how to reduce behaviour that puts a person at risk of a reaction. An allergic reaction occurs when the immune system responds to a substance like food, dust, moulds, or pollens that the body mistakenly identifies as harmful. Symptoms can vary from mild symptoms of an itchy rash to shortness of breath, wheezing, and swelling of the throat to severe symptoms, which are devastating, and severe anaphylactic reactions, which can and have resulted in death.

Mr. Speaker, the foods that account for the majority of food allergic reactions include various dairy, seafood, soy, wheat, and nut products. Other common causes of allergies include antibiotics, especially penicillin, and bee stings. It is estimated that approximately 6 per cent of young children and 3 to 4 per cent of adult Canadians suffer from food allergies. I'd like to remind Albertans to be careful when preparing food for any group event, and I strongly encourage my colleagues and everyone in this House to take action and prevent reactions throughout the coming year. Albertans need to know what they're eating, so please pay attention to food labels.

Treatment for allergies is simple. Number one, don't expose yourself to potential allergens that you know you're allergic to. Secondly, seek treatment for allergic reactions. That usually involves antihistamines. Lastly, if Albertans have had anaphylactic or severe reactions, they should have injectable adrenalin with them at all times.

I'd also like to take this opportunity to recognize the Food Allergy & Anaphylaxis Network for its dedication to saving and improving the lives of Canadians through their awareness and education programs.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Julie Mulligan

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to deliver one of the most significant member's statements I am sure I will ever make, and that is to say: welcome home, Julie Mulligan. I am sure that most Albertans joined with the community of Drayton Valley and Julie's husband and children and shared in their anxiety and fears for the nearly two weeks she was held by her kidnappers in Nigeria. The community of Drayton Valley, as its motto states, pulled together for Julie's husband, John, and their family but also came together to pray for her safety and to guide her return. Prayers and letters of support were received from around the world, and indeed prayers were offered at the recent Premier's prayer breakfast.

Julie is a personal friend of mine, and those two weeks were a tough time for all of us who knew her. Our prayers were answered with Julie's release on April 29. Amazingly, she was not physically hurt. I am so proud of my community, my province, and my country as all played a role in her safe return. I want to thank the local RCMP and the Solicitor General's office and all those involved in negotiating Julie's safe return.

Mr. Speaker, sometimes you get a second chance in life. In Drayton Valley we are very blessed to have Julie back home safe. To Julie, John, and family, you are an example of how quickly life can change and how fortunate you are and we all are to have a second chance to have Julie back in our lives and our community.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

H1N1 Influenza Virus

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The first severe Canadian case of H1N1 flu lies in an Edmonton hospital today. My information is that this is an elementary student, and this raises questions about what is being done, what is being communicated, and why parents, teachers, and the public are being kept in the dark about this. Minimizing panic is important at a time like this. Hiding information, as some administrations have found around the world, increases people's anxiety unnecessarily. To the minister: can the minister tell us why parents at the school and the public are being kept in the dark about this case?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think I've said on several occasions in this House that it is important that we all show leadership and don't make comments that could be seen as an overreaction. We have an outstanding chief medical officer of health, who is working with the federal Public Health Agency and other provincial governments. There is a strategy in place across Canada. The advice of the chief medical officer of health is that the information that has been made public is appropriate, and as I am sure the Leader of the Opposition would appreciate, in a situation like this we should be taking the best possible professional advice that we can get.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, several schools in B.C. and the United States have closed in the last week around cases of H1N1. Can the minister explain the guidelines for school closure in Alberta?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I won't say any more from a health standpoint. That was not the advice we were given by the chief medical officer of health. But I would ask the Minister of Education if he would choose to supplement.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, we've been in contact with the school board involved and also, of course, taking advice from the chief medical officer of health. Following that advice appropriately, the information that we were given is that this is not a circumstance where it is necessary to inform others in the school. At this point there is not an indication of risk.

Dr. Swann: Well, recently senior public health officers resigned from this government in protest of government policy that does not support their work in this province. Does the minister now see the downside of a weakened public health system?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I've said on several occasions that you can spend all your life looking in a rear-view mirror, or you can look out the windshield. We prefer to look ahead. We have made an outstanding choice in our new chief medical officer of health. He has shown through this particular set of circumstances very strong leadership. We have brought through in this particular session some significant amendments to the Public Health Act which strengthen that act, and I think we have an outstanding public health system moving forward.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Temporary Medical Tent

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Sick children being treated in a tent is something you'd expect in an impoverished country, but it's become the new normal at Edmonton's flagship University hospital, where in the last year over 2,500 sick and injured children have been treated in a tent because facilities are so crowded. The hurt yurt, as the staff have dubbed it, was to be replaced with a permanent structure starting this month. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: why was the construction project to replace this tent with a real building cancelled?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, as the member is well aware, we have some significant financial challenges facing the government. We have made some decisions around capital. That being said, as we move forward in this particular budget year, we want to ensure that we are getting full value for the capital that we have allocated. I am confident and optimistic that we are going to have the opportunity to see some projects proceed that may be proceeding at a rate that is less than what we had originally estimated, and at that time, if that does occur, we will review all of our capital initiatives that for financial reasons weren't able to go ahead in this particular year.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Well, Mr. Minister, sick children and their parents and families and an outraged staff are tired of the broken promises. How can this minister justify putting sick children in a tent while this government spends lavishly on expensive trips to Europe and drops millions on dinner parties and horse racing? Where are your priorities?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I think we need to be sure that appropriate information is communicated because there is so much incorrect information in the lead-up to that question. In this particular year this government is committing some 7 billion dollars to capital projects across this province. I think that on a per capita basis that is higher than anywhere else in Canada. Included in that is about a billion and a half for health facilities. In the last three to four years capital construction in health care has exceeded some 5 billion to 6 billion dollars, and I think that's a record this government is very proud of.

Dr. Taft: Well, the tent where sick and injured children have been treated now for over a year sits in the shadow of the Mazankowski Heart Institute. The Mazankowski, which is a year late in opening, got $36 million at the end of last year to finish office spaces while children will be shunted to a tent for years to come. To the same minister: since when did it become acceptable in Alberta to treat sick and injured children in a tent? How did we get to this?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, we have outstanding facilities in this province – I can name them all, but I think the member is well aware – several of them in his own constituency, too, and some of the leading-edge pediatric services in the world in this province. To suggest somehow that our children, our future, are not receiving the kind of health care that they need and desire is absolutely incorrect.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Provincial Electoral Divisions

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, Alberta needs four more MLAs about as much as a dog needs fleas. I already hear rumblings from the other side about how many seats will be added to this Legislature and their distribution. Can the Justice minister tell me why we're wasting taxpayers' dollars by adding four more seats?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I believe that the hon. member is referring to legislation that was tabled yesterday. There will be discussion in this House on that. What I would say is that what this government cares about for this province is effective representation across this province, and that's why we made the decision that we did.

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, this government goes to great lengths to stress their frugal, small-government approach. It's a front. To the Minister of Justice: why is it that Ontario and Quebec members of provincial Legislatures can handle more constituents per capita than Alberta MLAs?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, I think it's important to explain to the member that we all have different jobs in this world. There will be a commission that will be established. That commission will determine how best to make sure that Albertans are effectively represented. I think that if we look across this country, one of the things that we will find is that there are very different distributions of people in different parts of this country. We believe that for the people of Alberta this decision is the right decision.

Mr. Hehr: Well, Mr. Speaker, to the Justice minister again: as any increase to the Alberta population has happened in urban centres, why is it that this government will not just redraw the electoral map to reflect this change instead of adding four more seats primarily to rural ridings?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This again gives me the opportunity to have a little discussion about what everyone's job is. It is not the job of this government to redraw the boundaries; it is the job of the commission. The commission will decide how Albertans should be best and most effectively represented, and we will wait to hear their recommendations.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by the hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. The government proposes adding new human rights for Alberta children, including the right to not learn about sexuality, sexual orientation, or religion, which according to the Premier includes evolution. It's an interesting list, considering that it could have included the creation of rights for disabled students or protection against bullying. Obviously, someone has been urging this government to create this specific list of rights. Can the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit tell the House what groups have been urging the government to protect so-called parental rights?

Mr. Blackett: Well, Mr. Speaker, it'd be my pleasure. One such group was a group of Alberta faith leaders that I met with a little over a year ago. They include Bishop Fred Henry; Reverend Tim Seim, the president of the Alberta Church Executive Fellowship; Syed Soharwardy, the president of the Islamic Supreme Council of Canada; Reverend Glen Johnson, chair of Synod Council, Evangelical Lutheran Church in Canada; Kulwant Dhillon, adviser to president, Dashmesh Culture Centre, the Sikh temple; Majeed Ahmad, national vice-president, Ahmadiyya Muslim Community; Reverend Jonathan Gibson, chairman, Calgary and southern Alberta chapter, Anglican Essentials Canada . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Will the minister confirm that each one of those individuals and groups that he has named urged the government to create these categories of rights in the human rights act?

2:00

Mr. Blackett: Actually, Mr. Speaker, if you look at the Calgary Herald today, Bishop Fred Henry, the spokesman for the group, has said that they had met with us and that they were disappointed that we didn't go with further recommendations, not only parental rights, not as far as they wanted to go. They wanted us to amend many other such things, and our caucus, when we looked at it, decided that in the best interests of Albertans we would go forward with the parental rights portion of the human rights bill because we believe in parental rights, we believe in family values, and we believe in the best interests of Albertans.

Mr. Mason: That remains to be seen. However, the minister did not answer the question. He quoted from a newspaper article quoting one person, being Bishop Henry. The question I asked and that I would like an answer for is whether or not the minister is claiming that every one of those groups and individuals he named supports the changes that he is proposing.

Mr. Blackett: Mr. Speaker, I said that they don't support that because they believe that we didn't go far enough. Now, Bishop Henry has been on the record. I'd be glad to give those names. The hon. member can contact them and ask them himself if they believe in that or not.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

U.S. Tax Credit for Pulp Producers

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituency is home to the Alberta-Pacific pulp mill, and my constituents and other Albertans are concerned about the impact of an unfair tax credit for U.S. pulp producers to burn black liquor in their recovery boilers. One industry analyst indicated the potential tax credit for just one mill at one company could reach $240 million just this year alone. My questions are for the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Can he tell us why this U.S. tax policy is a threat to Alberta pulp mills?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, it's a very serious threat to Alberta and British Columbia pulp mills and the communities they support, and we're doing all we can to bring it to an end as soon as possible. Black liquor is a byproduct of making pulp, and in both Canada and the United States it's burned as an alternative and renewable fuel to generate power in these pulp mills. So far so good. But starting last fall U.S. tax policies began to provide subsidies to American producers if they put diesel fuel in with the black liquor. As the hon. member pointed out, these subsidies run $200 million to $300 million per mill up to $3 billion to $6 billion for the American industry over the next year. This incentive is encouraging U.S. companies to overproduce pulp, drive down prices, and Canadian mills and European mills can't compete against this type of unfair and perverse subsidy.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This certainly is a serious issue for Alberta pulp mills. I'd ask the minister: is this biofuel tax subsidy actually incenting a reduction in the use of fossil fuels?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. No, that's the absurdity of the whole policy. It's a policy fiasco. It's actually going into the U.S. mills who are already burning a renewable fuel, the black liquor, and paying them to add kerosene or diesel to it to qualify for this subsidy. It's an incredible waste of scarce environmental dollars. It's bad for the environment. It's bad for pulp markets. We're doing all we can to call public attention to this policy fiasco.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister tell us what he's doing to restore a level playing field for our Alberta pulp industry?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta is working with British Columbia to communicate the complete unacceptability of this subsidy. We're going through both official and unofficial channels. Officially the Alberta and British Columbia governments have communicated our concern to the Canadian government and through Ottawa to the U.S. government. We are also using Alberta's official representative in Washington, our former colleague Mr. Gary Mar. He's doing a very good job on this file. Informally we're working with organizations and industries in Canada, in the United States, and in Europe who are all opposed to this, and we're making progress. Senator John Kerry, usually not my favourite U.S. Senator, denounced this policy. He called it a licence to cheat, and many Senators are bringing motions to terminate this as soon as possible.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Alberta Health Services

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The CEO of Alberta Health Services wrote last week that there isn't enough money to balance the books this year, so more belt-tightening is needed, and the brakes have been put on staff recruitment. To the minister: is the Minister of Health and Wellness aware that the chief of Alberta Health Services is speaking of belt-tightening and putting the brakes on staff recruitment?

Mr. Liepert: I'm not aware of the particular document that the member refers to, but it would seem to me that if this particular CEO did what I believe he needs to do – that is, ensure that in our health care system we are spending our money wisely, as the Leader of the Opposition has referred to so many times – it would not surprise me that he would be seeking some efficiencies in the system, Mr. Speaker.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, this government has mismanaged our health care system so badly for so long that we now have children being treated in tents, we have a wait-list registry out of date for seven months, and it's now standard practice to wedge patients into a two-bed room with three beds. This is not a crisis; this is the new normal in Alberta's urban hospitals. Will the Minister of Health and Wellness tell us what further belt-tightening the CEO has in mind for Health Services?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I guess you could use the term "belt-tightening," or you could use the term "creating efficiencies within the system." Clearly, we have a situation where we had 12 different entities that have been merged into one. There's obviously going to be duplication of services. I'm sure that if the Leader of the Opposition is responsible, he would not expect that we would continue to duplicate services, and those are the kinds of reviews and decisions that will be forthcoming over the course of the next year.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, last week the minister said in this Assembly that there never was a hiring freeze at Alberta Health Services, but the memo, dated April 22, written by the vice-president of medical affairs said, and I quote: all recruitment efforts must cease until further notice. End quote. To the minister: since the minister had no idea that something as important as a written policy to freeze hiring had been issued, will the minister admit he has no understanding of what's going on in his department?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I think that if there's a lack of understanding, it's by the Leader of the Opposition. Frankly, I would have expected more from someone who has a background in the medical community. Let's be clear. The memo, which I haven't seen but that he continues to refer to, I believe was about a specific hiring around academic staff. First of all, I challenged the hon. leader last night in estimates. He alleged that we have recruited doctors, signed contracts with them, and then, if my memory serves me correctly, sent them home. I've challenged him to prove to me that that has happened. If he can't prove it to me, then I'm going to ask him to stand up in this House and apologize to Alberta Health Services for making a wide-ranging accusation that he cannot substantiate.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Wildfire Assistance

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. There were wildfires burning on the weekend in my constituency in Ma-Me-O Beach, Ermineskin and Louis Bull First Nations as well as currently in Strathcona county, Lamont county, and Bruderheim. Can the minister tell us how he is supporting and how his department is supporting these firefighting efforts and municipalities?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, the safety of the public is our priority and focus. Also, the Premier passes on his praise and gratitude to all of the voluntary firefighters doing such an excellent job in fighting these fires. The government of Alberta has activated its emergency operations centre. We are on-site and in direct contact with local officials that are affected, municipalities or First Nations. Alberta emergency management staff is helping co-ordinate resources to fight fires, and we will continue to provide resources and expertise to these communities.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Minister.

My next question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. What is the department's role in fighting wildfires in the province, and what is the department doing to assist communities in that role?

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The mandate of Sustainable Resource Development is to fight wildfires in the province's forest protection zone, the green zone which covers two-thirds of the province. So far already this season we have fought 216 fires covering 900 hectares in the green zone.

When capacity allows, when we have the equipment and fire-fighters available, we do help MDs and Indian reserves and Métis settlements to fight fires on their territories. In the case of the Lamont and Strathcona fires, SRD is providing support-team firefighters and bulldozers. They help us also put out fires on unoccupied Crown land, so it's a partnership that works well.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Wildfires don't respect municipal boundaries, and we've seen fires rage across rural municipalities onto First Nation reserves and vice versa. My question is for the Minister of Aboriginal Relations. Can he tell us what measures are in place to ensure that aboriginal communities are protected from the devastating effects of these fires?

Mr. Zwodzesky: Mr. Speaker, one of the most important measures in place today is the so-called mutual assistance agreement. Many First Nations, in fact most, do have a partnering agreement with their neighbouring municipalities and/or also in some cases with local industry to respond immediately to the kind of potential tragedies that the member has alluded to. In fact, that's exactly what happened this last weekend. The four bands at Hobbema collaborated with local fire departments, and they stopped the potential spread of a very tragic fire there.

Otherwise, educational safety about fires is also very prevalent right now.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The human rights act amendments are causing more problems than they're fixing. If parents have a concern now, it is dealt with by the school or the school board. If parents have a concern in the future, it will likely become an issue for the Human Rights Commission, with all the costs attendant on that since both the plaintiff and the defendant have to pay their own fees and hire lawyers, et cetera. My questions are to the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit. The minister avoided a direct answer yesterday, so I would try again for an answer today. Can section 11.1 of the proposed legislation be used to launch a human rights complaint against a teacher, a school, or a school board?

The Speaker: All hon. members should know that the question period is not the time for legal interpretation. Proceed.

Mr. Blackett: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'd say that if there is a part in the human rights act that pertains to an area that's covered under that legislation, then they would have an opportunity to present a case before them. Also, understand that the school board and the school system have provisions to deal with a lot of those issues. Just because a parent has a grievance with a school board does not mean that they have grounds for a case to the Human Rights Commission.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Back to the same minister. If a parent believes that there's been subject matter that deals explicitly with religion, sexuality, or sexual orientation, does section 11.1 empower that parent or guardian to bring a complaint before the Human Rights Commission?

Mr. Blackett: Well, it's a legal issue. It's cause for speculation. There is provision right now to have that remedied. The school board's responsibility will be to notify that parent, and the parent has that right to opt out. If there is a situation – and I fail to see where one would arise – they would not do that in a course because very few instances have ever happened with respect to that nature.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Back to the same minister. If the minister is so sure about the lack of problems, will the minister commit to covering all of the legal fees that will be incurred by teachers, school boards, and schools that emerge as a result of section 11.1?

Mr. Blackett: Mr. Speaker, reasonable people ask reasonable questions. The opposition member opposite obviously isn't one of those.

Ms Blakeman: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Blackett: Of course I would not subject my government to any such expense.

The Speaker: Okay. We have a point of order here as well.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Safe Communities Innovation Fund

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Crime and personal safety continue to be major concerns in Edmonton. Last month Maclean's magazine ranked our city as one of the most dangerous cities to live in in Canada. To the Minister of Justice and Attorney General: what are you doing to reduce crime in the capital city?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Redford: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think Edmonton is a great city for me to be able to spend time in, and I know that people that live here are very proud of it. Edmonton has a wonderful mayor and a wonderful chief of police, who are partners with us in our safe communities initiative. Our initiative has been able to respond to a number of the concerns that people in the community have had. We've been able to put more Crown prosecutors and more police on the streets. We have more support staff and more probation officers in place. We're now funding particular community initiatives. We believe that the community and the leaders in local communities want to and need to be part of our partnership, and we're happy to support them.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is to the same minister. With the announcement of the safe communities innovation fund Albertans can look forward to some grassroots approaches to crime prevention developed by individual communities. Can Edmonton expect to see any of these projects?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The safe communities innovation fund will fund 30 projects across the province in the next year that will each be three years in duration. We were very fortunate, the Solicitor General and I, on March 19 to be able to announce the first of those projects, which is two new crime councils that are being set up in Edmonton to address issues from graffiti to gang violence. The councils empower neighbourhoods that have been identified as having chronic crime issues to take back their community. Crime councils allow them to take an active role, to participate, to have discussion, and to do positive activities such as street fairs, which have been a great success. This joint project between the city of Edmonton and the Edmonton Police Service will be expanded into Castle Downs, Mill Woods, Clareview, and Avenue of Nations.

Mr. Elniski: My final supplemental is to the same minister. Can the minister explain how these projects funded by the safe communities initiative will remain sustainable? Short-term project funding is often the kiss of death for meaningful improvement.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That was a very important piece of the conversations that we had with community groups as they put forward proposals for this project. As I said, these are three-year initiatives. We have a commitment as a government to ensuring that what we do with our safe communities piece is not only short-term pieces that might address immediate challenges but also talk about how we change the way government and partnerships work together to deal with safe communities. So as we were funding and deciding what to fund, one of the things that we asked communities was: how do you expect to be able to make this project sustainable? We know that there are commitments from municipalities with respect to this. It's an ongoing commitment for our government as well.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Dr. Stephen Duckett, the CEO of Alberta Health Services, has posted on his blog a new document entitled Alberta Health Services: Strategic Direction 2009-2012. There's a quote here for the benefit of the health minister. "These priorities address goals established by the Government of Alberta and are aligned with Vision 2020." My first question is to the minister of health. Given that eliminating waste, duplication, and inappropriate care is one of the means of the strategic plan, can the minister please provide examples of waste, duplication, and inappropriate care currently within Alberta Health Services?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I'm not going to get specific, but I'll repeat what I said earlier. When you merge and amalgamate some 12 entities, you tend to have a number of people who have done the same job in each one of those entities. We want to ensure that our management and administration is streamlined and that the dollars that Alberta Health Services has to work with are almost exclusively directed to the front-line delivery.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the minister of health: given that on that blog Dr. Stephen Duckett has indicated there will be this week up to 100 managers from across the province laid off in the health care system, which managers has the minister of health instructed Dr. Duckett to lay off?

Mr. Liepert: None, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. That certainly is interesting. That's not what I heard.

Mr. Liepert: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MacDonald: Now, to the same minister: given that the strategic plan also indicates that there's going to be an increase in the ratio of licensed practical nurses to registered nurses, can the minister please tell us what the new ratio of licensed practical nurses to RNs will be after his plan is implemented by Dr. Stephen Duckett?

2:20

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, clearly that's a decision of the management of Alberta Health Services. They have a job to do, and they will do it. I don't give them any direction on what staff ratios should be, and the member knows that. He's having trouble finding things to criticize in Alberta Health and Wellness these days, and he's not doing a very good job at what he's found.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Child and Youth Advocate

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For years the NDP has been calling on this government to make the Child and Youth Advocate an independent officer of the Legislature. Alberta, as I've mentioned, is the only jurisdiction refusing to do this. This government's refusal to give the advocate position its own voice shows they are more concerned with censoring information than doing what's best for our children. To the minister of children and families: why won't you stop delaying and just make the advocate an independent officer of the Legislature?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As this member knows, we have over the last couple of months undertaken a review of the advocacy for children in the province and, in particular, how the advocate reports to Albertans and what other provinces are doing across the country. That work has been completed. I do have a copy, and we're just working on a government response to it. I hope to be releasing that information fairly soon.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, by January this government was reviewing the Child and Youth Advocate report to government. By March 15 the minister had that review, and she promised to make it available "in the next several weeks." Well, it's closing in on two months now, and we've heard nothing. When will the minister stop delaying, make this report public, and tell Albertans if she plans to let the Child and Youth Advocate off her leash?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Tarchuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, I would just reiterate that I'm not delaying the report. We are working on a government response, and I do hope to share that information soon. What I can assure both this member and Albertans is that we will make sure at the end of the day that we have a strong voice for children, that we have a very accountable advocacy system, and as well that we'll have reporting to Albertans that will be timely and make a lot of sense.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, the minister had the report in early March, and she said that she'd act on the report "quite quickly," and she said that she'd make it public. Well, we're still waiting, and if this is her version of quite quickly, I worry about those children who need her to act quite quickly when their safety is at stake. To the same minister: why have you failed to make this report public if not because you're reluctant to give up control of the advocate position and risk exposing further failures in your ministry?

Ms Tarchuk: Mr. Speaker, I would say the same thing and, as well, that the children are still being taken care of. Once again, the review was just called at the end of November. You're right: it has been in my hands for the last couple of weeks. I can tell you that it's very good information that they have come forward with, and we will have a government response shortly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Environmental Assessment Database

Mr. Vandermeer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a former home builder I know how important it is to understand the history of the land you are building on. The last thing my constituents and Albertans across the province want to find out is that the land they have just purchased has previously been contaminated. Many people don't know how to find this type of information, and for those that do, it is tedious, time-consuming work. My question is to the Minister of Environment. I understand your department launched an online database last week. Will this help my constituents and Albertans like them find out the environmental history of this piece of land?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a matter of fact, the member is absolutely correct. When I became Environment minister, I was quite frankly surprised to learn that Environment leads all departments in FOIP requests. The reason is that the vast majority of those FOIP requests are asking for information regarding environmental assessments on various pieces of land. It really is quite exciting that what previously has required as much as five weeks or more will now take five minutes to access online. It's a huge improvement.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Vandermeer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is to the same minister. My understanding is that the database houses documents relating to thousands of sites. Does this mean that all of these sites are contaminated?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, absolutely not. We have to emphasize that. What this database contains is all of the environmental assessments. Oftentimes environmental assessments are done that indicate that there is no contamination. Just because there is an environmental assessment on a particular piece of property should not be taken to mean that there was contamination. What it does mean is that the individual who is purchasing that property or interested in going onto the website can find out what the contents of that environmental assessment are.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Vandermeer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: in these tough economic times can you justify the cost of this new system to the taxpayers? How much are my constituents going to have to pay for the use of this system?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, there's no charge to access the system. It's done through the Internet. There were, obviously, some costs that were borne by my department in developing the system, but even there we used existing software that was already used in Service Alberta. So I think that this is truly an excellent opportunity to demonstrate how you can apply technology from affiliated fields, different fields, and actually work to the benefit of both government and the consumer.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Funding for Contingencies

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government is about to pass a $37 billion budget with no plan for savings to speak of and a budget which has eliminated the required contingency for public emergencies. Crossing your fingers and hoping there aren't any natural disasters is no way to run a province. But since this government still can't wrap its head around the need to save in the heritage fund, I guess asking them to save for natural disasters might be too much to hope for. To the minister of finance: how will the government pay for the forest fires that are forcing people from their homes just east of Edmonton?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance and Enterprise.

Ms Evans: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member is right. We removed the contingency amount from within the budget, and we will use the sustainability fund. There is $17 billion in the sustainability fund this year. We plan to use $4.7 billion to achieve our operational targets. If we need more and it's not available within the operating budgets, it certainly is within the purview of the minister to bring those forward with recommendations to Treasury Board, where we can examine them. Natural disasters, emergencies, pine beetles: all of these kinds of things will qualify for disaster funding, so we haven't reduced the opportunity. We've reduced the place where we allocate the funds to deliver that.

Mr. Taylor: Well, Mr. Speaker, what money specifically has been set aside to pay for unforeseen circumstances such as fires and floods and pine beetles and flu pandemics and whatever else could happen during the summer? What specific money is set aside, or is the money in the sustainability fund that would pay for those sorts of things just kind of in a big competition with everything else?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, that sustainability fund is still available. As I indicated, we certainly don't intend to spend all of it, all $17 billion, but $4.7 billion this year. If we have to, we will spend $100 million, $200 million, or whatever it takes to achieve the results of reducing the impact of emergencies for Albertans. There isn't a cap on that amount. Hopefully, we'll have to spend none of it. Hopefully, the dollars that are within existing operating budgets will cover it, but we are prepared for disasters. The theory behind the sustainability fund hasn't evaporated with this new Fiscal Responsibility Act.

Mr. Taylor: Hopefully, the sustainability fund won't evaporate over the next three or four years of deficit operating as well.

Will this government commit to a detailed savings plan, including a contingency for public emergencies, before it passes this budget?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, we will not commit to a detailed plan. We have outlined in broad terms the plan to save, first of all, to rebuild the sustainability fund. On this we are following the theory and the practical advice from several economists, who indicate that while you are spending your emergency savings is not the time to try to rebuild the savings account. We will leave the heritage fund intact. We will endeavour to hold the line on ministers' expenses within 1 per cent of their operating budgets.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

2:30 Temporary Foreign Workers

Mr. Benito: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I hear from permanent and temporary constituents who are concerned about layoffs. In particular, there is confusion over the rules for employers when temporary foreign workers and Albertans are employed. People have heard that there are rules about who can be laid off and who can't. My first question is to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Can you explain what the rules are for employers who have to lay off workers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The temporary foreign worker program is a federal program. It is employer driven, and the employer must show that no Albertans or Canadians are willing or are available to take on the jobs. The federal government does not have specific rules for who should be laid off. All workers in Canada have the same rights, and to lay off a worker based on national origin could be discriminating. If a business is struggling and layoffs are required, the decision as to who is laid off is up to the employer. It's strictly a business decision.

Mr. Benito: My second and final question is also to the same minister. In the case of layoffs what are the employers' obligations to the workers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Employers have obligations to all workers under the employment standards, workplace health and safety, and workers' compensation legislation. Layoffs are usually very, very difficult. We do have resources available to Albertans, including temporary foreign workers that are affected by job losses. Our first priority is the needs of Albertans, and we provide employment connections, information, training, and financial assistance. Temporary foreign workers can contact our advisory office through the helpline or in person in both Edmonton and Calgary.

The Speaker: The hon. member?

The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Protection of Children in Care

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Proposed changes to service delivery for child and family services in Edmonton will fund service providers to reach an outcome within a benchmark time frame, providing no extra funding if a case takes longer than the prescribed time to complete. Additional funding will only be provided if the case has been closed for six months and then reopened or if a new issue emerges. To the Minister of Children and Youth Services: what happens when the funding stops and a child is still in need of care?

Ms Tarchuk: Mr. Speaker, we would always provide services to a child in care or a family at risk. I'm not quite sure what the member is talking about, but I would suggest that he forward that information to me.

Mr. Chase: Internal documents from your ministry have raised this concern.

Does this change not risk acting as a disincentive with the potential result of a lesser quality for those cases which will take longer than the specified timeline?

Ms Tarchuk: Again, Mr. Speaker, we would never walk away from quality, so I would suggest that the member share with me whatever it is that he is talking about.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Why is funding not being provided to regions to adequately fund the successful completion of cases they have as opposed to being provided based on rigid timelines? What comes first, the dollar or the child?

Ms Tarchuk: Mr. Speaker, the child will always come first. We will always do what's in the best interest of the child. Once again I would just suggest that the member share that information with me.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

First Nations Development Fund

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First Nations in Alberta have experienced a tremendous windfall as a result of funds generated by on-reserve casinos. These funds have become a very important facilitator for numerous infrastructure, cultural, and community development projects on reserve. However, some First Nations in and around Calgary have expressed concerns which I would like to express to the Minister of Aboriginal Relations. Why was this fund moved to the Ministry of Aboriginal Relations from the AGLC ministry?

Mr. Zwodzesky: Mr. Speaker, the First Nations development fund does a tremendous amount of good work through the dollars we provide, about $100 million annually to the 47 First Nations in the province. The short answer to the question is that the aims and objectives of the First Nations development fund are very closely aligned with the aims and objectives of the newly created, stand-alone Ministry of Aboriginal Relations. For that reason it was felt better to administer it through this particular ministry, and so far it's working very well.

Ms Woo-Paw: FNDF is a flow-through program from First Nations casinos to First Nations projects. Why is your ministry asking for detailed information on FNDF applications?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, as with all programs administered by the government of Alberta, there's a need for a good balance between program effectiveness and program accountability and meeting and matching the needs of local community development projects or local economic development projects such as this particular fund is set up to administer. In short, we ask for a project description, we ask for a budget to see how it'll be accomplished, we require a band council resolution and the signing of an FNDF agreement. All of this was determined in consultation with the 47 First Nations, and we're adhering to what was determined years ago.

Ms Woo-Paw: How many times can one First Nation access the FNDF in any one year?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, access to the fund is actually governed in accordance with a fairly sophisticated formula which the government of Alberta negotiated with the First Nations host casinos and other First Nations in the province. That particular formula is available publicly. We have approximately 40 per cent of 70 per cent of the total revenues from government slots to distribute. We don't make it complicated at all. In fact, we've never refused an application. We have held up a few or requested that they be delayed to get more information in. But that's how the fund is administered.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Direct Energy Retail Marketing

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans need a government of action, not a government of monitoring. We are getting gouged on utility bills, but the Minister of Service Alberta and the Utilities Consumer Advocate do nothing to help us. My questions are to the Minister of Service Alberta. Why isn't the minister and the UCA taking real action to fix these problems?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to the Direct Energy issue, as indicated before, we have sent a number of warning letters in the past year, and the company has been very co-operative. However, the consumer has spoken. The consumer has indicated that we need to do more, and that's, indeed, what we're doing. That's what this undertaking is about, to make sure that we find out what's happening and that consumers are protected.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A hotline to the Utilities Consumer Advocate is not fixing the problem of a system that lets Albertans get charged too much. Why won't the minister simply change the contracting system to let Albertans get out of these unfair contracts?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to indicate that the Utilities Consumer Advocate, the team that works out of that office, do excellent work, and they certainly take calls to the call centre every day. Certainly, they should be commended for their work and the good work they are doing for Albertans.

With respect to the issue with Direct Energy, as we move forward to September 30, when we get to that point, if we're not happy with what has gone on, there are issues like director's orders, and there are a number of other initiatives we can take to solve these problems if we can't collaborate and fix it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think September 30 is too long. We need action right now. When can we expect the monitoring to end and real action to happen?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I indicated before, September 30 is the end date for this undertaking. I want to make it very clear that Direct Energy must always comply with the Fair Trading Act and the energy marketing regulations. This deadline is for implementing their action plan. There are very strict rules for door-to-door marketers on what they can and cannot do. The most simplistic answer with respect to contracts is that it's something that we have to look at, and that is what this undertaking is all about.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Carbon Monoxide Alarms

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Each year Albertans are affected by carbon monoxide poisoning, some tragically, and others are alerted to the threat by their home carbon monoxide alarm. My questions are to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. What are the requirements for carbon monoxide alarms in Alberta homes?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, carbon monoxide alarms are very much a valuable safety tool. The current building codes require these alarms to be in all new homes. That came into effect in September of 2007. The carbon monoxide alarms must be acceptable to the national quality standards of the Canadian safety code.

Mr. Sandhu: My second question is to the same minister. Can the minister tell us if the alarms are also required in existing homes or rental properties? Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I mentioned before, they are a very important safety tool. We recommend that owners of existing homes get carbon monoxide alarms as well. Buildings are subject to the codes in force when they are built. As such, safety codes are generally not retroactive. As to the other part of the question, rental properties are subject to the same codes as other homes.

The Speaker: The hon. member?

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that will conclude question period, then. That was 104 question and responses. We have two points of order arising out of it, that we'll deal with at the conclusion of the Routine.

In 30 seconds from now we will continue with the Routine.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Bill 46

Gunshot and Stab Wound Mandatory Disclosure Act

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to request leave to introduce Bill 46, the Gunshot and Stab Wound Mandatory Disclosure Act.

This act will make it mandatory for health care facilities and emergency medical technicians who treat gunshot or stab wounds to disclose to police the injured person's name, type of injury, and location of treatment. Bill 46 strikes a careful balance between patient privacy and public safety. Providing police with this important information helps them keep the public safe by preventing further violence, injuries, or death. It also gives health care professionals clarity regarding when disclosure is needed and when it is not.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 46 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that Bill 46 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. First, I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter from the Pochaiv maple leaf safe house project that I referred to earlier in my member's statement about human trafficking.

My second tabling, Mr. Speaker, is from the same organization. This document is an account of the human trafficking in Alberta panel that was aired on Alberta Primetime, Access TV, on April 27, 2009, at 7 p.m.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Just two quick tablings from my address with respect to Bill 204 yesterday, one dealing with the Edmonton Sun as referenced in my speech, another being a Facebook page dealing with that bill. I have five copies of each that I'll table with the page.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three letters to table today. These letters are from Kenneth Ross, a senior who has received effective pain relief from chiropractic treatment over his lifetime, as well as from David Gurnett and Marilyn Bulat, both of whom attest to the benefits they have received from chiropractic care. They've written to express their opposition to delisting chiropractic services.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. I am on behalf of my colleague the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, the Leader of the Opposition, tabling correspondence he has received from Marianne Hart, who is also extolling the wonderful effects that she has experienced through chiropractic care and asking the government to stop the madness and step up and be a voice for everyone. She does not want to see this service delisted.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of in this case 10 reports from long-term care workers indicating several specific problems on different shifts that were short-staffed. They indicate that some residents were left in bed far too long, received cold food because their meals were late, or were toileted too late.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Liepert, Minister of Health and Wellness, tabled during policy field committee consideration of the estimates of the Department of Health and Wellness on May 4, 2009, the Alberta Health Services strategic direction 2009-2012 consultation document and the health action plan annual report April 2009.

Also on behalf of the hon. Mr. Liepert, Minister of Health and Wellness, response to Written Question 10, asked for by Mr. Mason on April 6, 2009, and response to Written Question 13, asked for by Ms Notley on behalf of Mr. Mason on April 6, 2009.

Calendar of Special Events

The Speaker: Hon. members, before I get to the two points of order, it's now the 5th day of May. Normally, in the first opening days of any particular month I draw to the attention of all members what certain special weeks and special days occur in that particular month. May is the busiest month of the year.

May is Motorcycle and Bicycle Safety Awareness Month, Museum Month, Red Shield Appeal Month, Speech and Hearing Awareness Month, Cystic Fibrosis Awareness Month, Huntington Disease Awareness Month, Medic Alert Month, National Physiotherapy Month, Asian Heritage Month, Cerebral Palsy Awareness Month, Hemochromatosis Awareness Month. It's Leave a Legacy Month, Neurofibromatosis Awareness Month. It is also the time that the Green Ribbon of Hope campaign initiates itself.

April 25 to May 2 was National Immunization Awareness Week. April 26 to May 2 was Education Week in Alberta as it also was National Victims of Crime Awareness Week. April 27 to May 3 was International Astronomy Week. May 1 was Space Day. May 1 to May 7 is National Summer Safety Week. It's also Spinal Health Week. As all members will know, Saturday last, May 2, was World Naked Gardening Day. It was also International Astronomy Day.

Sunday, May 3, was World Laughter Day and World Press Freedom Day. May 3 was also the Annual Hike for Hospice Palliative Care.

May 3 to 9 is Emergency Preparedness Week. May 3 to 9 is also National Hospice Palliative Care Week. It's also International Composting Awareness Week, and it's also North American Occupational Health and Safety Week. May 4 was International Firefighters Day. The week of May 4 to 10 is National Mental Health Week. May 5 is World Asthma Day. May 5 is International Day of the Midwife. May 5 is Cinco de mayo. May 29 is International Day of United Nations Peacekeepers. May 31 is World No Tobacco Day as it is the World Partnership Walk as it is the Great Strides Walk for Cystic Fibrosis. May 31 to June 6 is Canadian Environment Week.

That's just a brief list.

On a point of order, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Point of Order

Parliamentary Language

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The citations I'm using today are 23(h), (i), and (j), Beauchesne 409, 410, 417, and Marleau and Montpetit 431. The point of order is referring to an exchange between myself and the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit during question period in which – and I'll have to paraphrase this because, as usual, we don't have the benefit of the Blues – the minister said that a reasonable person would ask a reasonable question. He specifically named me as the Member for Edmonton-Centre as obviously not a reasonable person, so it was a direct comment on me. It was not a sort of general opinion expressed of all members or just a statement that he'd made. It specifically mentioned me, and it was a direct assertion that I was out of order or unreasonable.

The question that had been asked for which he gave the response was on the minister's willingness to cover costs that would be incurred as a result of proposed legislation. The minister insinuated – again, I'll refer to 23(h), (i), and (j) – that I as an individual was unreasonable. When I check for what that definition might be, it's saying: expressing some belief, action, fact, or event – so to be unreasonable would be the opposite of that – mental powers concerned with forming conclusions or inferences, sound judgment, clear or logical, judicious, rational, sensible.

This, I argue, was deliberate, and I believe that it contravenes 23(h), (i), and (j) as well as Beauchesne 417. Beauchesne 417 is around the answering of questions and notes that "answers to questions should be as brief as possible, deal with the matter raised and should not provoke debate." Of course, when you start making statements that are casting aspersions and insinuating that someone has problems with mental capacity, that's likely to provoke debate, Mr. Speaker.

You know, with careful choice of words, if the minister chose to take issue with the question, fair enough. But just because he doesn't like the question, there should not be an open ability for him to bully the questioner or to cast aspersions upon my character or mental capacity. The question itself was in order and met the test of Beauchesne 409, 410. As I've mentioned, it did offend 417. Finally, under M and M on page 431, Replies to Oral Questions: "replies are to be as brief as possible, to deal with the subject matter raised and to be phrased in language that does not provoke disorder."

I would argue that the minister was certainly welcome to take issue with the question and to decide not to answer it if he so chose, but I think it was unreasonable to take it a step further and to use the kind of language that he used in connection with the person that was asking the question, that being this individual.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would argue that he has offended me and the House with that point of order.

Mr. Blackett: Well, Mr. Speaker, I used the word "unreasonable" in response to the question. I thought it was unreasonable that the member would think that the government would pay for the things that she was suggesting. Under Beauchesne's 488 when I look at it, it does not list the word "unreasonable" as unparliamentary language. Based on that and 417, talking about brevity, in this House I have seen many, many instances where brevity was not something that was coming from this hon. member.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Any additional on the point of order? We're going to have a citation, and we're going to be very specific. I'm not interested in opinions. I'm interested in dealing with the issue. The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Mr. Denis: Absolutely. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Just a couple of quick points. Beauchesne's 486(2) states that "an expression which is deemed to be unparliamentary today does not necessarily have to be deemed unparliamentary next week." That, to me, deals with intent. With respect to the minister's intent I would submit to this House that it was not malicious. He also did look at portions of unparliamentary language. As he mentioned, nowhere does it say that what he had mentioned is listed as unparliamentary language. I would also submit to this House that he did not mention a statement of fact but rather a statement of his own opinion. I did not pick up any malice there at all.

Those are my submissions, sir.

The Speaker: Are there others to participate? Hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, let's deal with a citation.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I would like to point out to the Speaker and to this House that the minister did not appear to have learned the lesson from Beauchesne's 28(g), (h), (i). He continued to pummel verbally the Member for Edmonton-Centre by again casting aspersions on her character, suggesting that, for example, she was long-winded or that she carried on overly important debate, in his opinion.

We are trying to create an atmosphere of decorum in this House. When it appears that the government is offended, they jump up very quickly to advocate on their behalf and say that they've been offended. It's a two-way street, Mr. Speaker, and I'm glad that you're the judge directing traffic. I look forward to your ruling.

The Speaker: Such statements of overfamiliarity, hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, do not put one in a better position. First of all, there is no such thing as the Beauchesne that you referred to. It could have been Standing Order 28. That's okay. We won't deal with that in a major way.

Look. Part of this is the result of an interpretation that I've given and an interpretation that we use in this House. We do some unique things in here. On Thursday of each week the Opposition House Leader rises and asks the government what might be on the Order Paper on a particular day. Somebody from the government, the Government House Leader, the Deputy Government House Leader, responds. We then print what is on the Order Paper for the business of the day.

It's customary that there not be debate in question period about legislation before the House. But the way it has been interpreted is that if the Order Paper says that a particular bill is to come up, then I presume all members in the Assembly would look at that. In this case on Wednesday, May 6, it says that Bill 44, I believe, which is the intended bill that was being discussed today, will come up tomorrow. It's pretty much fair game between the time at which the bill is introduced and the time it actually enters second reading to allow questions in question period with respect to this, which I have done consistently. Some members find this quite offensive. They think that as soon as you introduce the bill, that eliminates any opportunity in the question period to do that. That is not the case. So the subject matter is in fact fair game. But tomorrow, because the Order Paper basically says that on Wednesday, May 6, Bill 44 will be up, you'd be hard pressed to find myself to allow questions with respect to it in the question period because it's now identified to come up.

So we have questions. Okay. It's very, very clear that a series of questions came up today with respect to this particular bill, and on one occasion the chair intervened and basically said that if the question has to do with a legal opinion, it should not be raised. Now, from the chair's position – and the chair very attentively looked at the questions and heard the questions raised by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre – he's quite hard pressed not to believe that they were seeking legal interpretation of one sort or the other.

Just to refer for all members' attention, 408(1)(c) says a question should "not require an answer involving a legal opinion." It's repeated again in Beauchesne 409(1) and (3), and at Beauchesne 411(1) pretty much the same thing, that we should not be dealing with legal interpretations.

I suspect the hon. minister by the third question in was getting, well, frustrated is the word that I will use – it may not be at all; it may be the demeanor of the minister or what have you in attempting to find a response – at which point in time a question that could have been ruled out by another chair but not by this one was permitted today even though it went on to the question of interpretation. The hon. minister said, and this is what the Blues say: "Reasonable people ask reasonable questions. The opposition member opposite obviously isn't one of those." There's pretty clear intention in there to suggest that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre is not reasonable.

Well, while it may not be an appropriate response, it doesn't make it unparliamentary. However, while it may not necessarily constitute a point of order, I want to provide a reminder that I think that we can avoid a lot of these interpretation difficulties if we don't ask for legal interpretations at any time. Secondly, we try to avoid getting involved in debate. That's a submission made to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre and others and to the minister. Even though this may not necessarily be unparliamentary, I would ask the minister to exercise some care in how he addresses colleagues in this House. That's a statement to all members.

That matter is dealt with. We will now go on to the second one. The second one comes from the Minister of Health and Wellness.

Point of Order Allegations against a Member

Mr. Liepert: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise under Standing Order 23(h) and (i), which says:

A Member will be called to order by the Speaker if, in the Speaker's opinion, that Member . . .

(h) makes allegations against another Member;

(i) imputes false or unavowed motives to another Member.

Mr. Speaker, in question period today the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar asked me a question. I do not have the Blues in front of me, but it went something like this: what instructions did I as minister give to Alberta Health Services relative to individual layoffs? My answer was: none. The member then went on to preface his next supplementary with a comment something like: that's not what I heard.

Those comments by the member clearly allege that the information I provided to this House was somehow incorrect or that somehow I was misleading this Assembly. Now, there was a great fanfare made before this legislative session started by the Leader of the Opposition on how we needed to treat others within this House with respect. I would suggest that this member should be called to order, acknowledge that the information that I provided to this House in answer to his question was in fact the truth. Unless he has information he can table otherwise, I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that you rule that he withdraw those comments and apologize to this Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, did you wish to participate?

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Certainly, Mr. Speaker. I would stand and indicate that there is absolutely no point of order here. I am certainly entitled to my opinion. I'm entitled to do my research, as is the hon. minister of health. Now, the minister of health may be sensitive, but I would remind the minister and all members of this House that in question period I talked about the strategic direction that Alberta Health Services is going in. I talked specifically about a document that I suppose I could say was tabled on Dr. Duckett's Alberta Health Services blog. It's a public document, and it indicates clearly that the priorities of this strategic plan are priorities that address goals established by the government of Alberta, established by the ministry of health, and aligned with Vision 2020, which is a document that I have before me that came out in December of 2008.

So there is nothing untoward here. As a member of the opposition it is my job, it is my duty, it is my obligation to stand up and ask questions. These are very important matters, and if the minister is not interested in answering them, then he does not have to. But certainly I am entitled – in fact, I, again, have an obligation – to ask questions, and that's precisely what I was doing.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others to participate?

Shall we deal with this matter, then? Okay. This matter has been raised. The text, essentially, is the following. A question was raised about purported layoffs. The response from the hon. minister was, "None, Mr. Speaker." Then the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar said: "Thank you. That certainly is interesting. That's not what I heard." At which point in time the minister said, "Point of order, Mr. Speaker." That's the full gist of the text that we have in Hansard.

There is a citation in Beauchesne which has been used time and time again. It has been referred to time and time again by the chair in the past. It's under Acceptance of the Word of a Member, and it's Beauchesne 494.

It has been formally ruled by Speakers that statements [made] by Members respecting themselves and particularly within their own knowledge must be accepted. It is not unparliamentary temperately to criticize statements made by Members as being contrary to the facts; but no imputation of intentional falsehood is permissible. On rare occasions this may result in the House having to accept two contradictory accounts of the same incident.

We've heard explanation here with respect to this. It strikes me that if I look at these words, maybe some sensitivity, but I do not believe that in here I can find imputation of character assassination. So we're moving on.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 24

Animal Health Amendment Act, 2009

[Adjourned debate April 21: Mr. Griffiths]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright, Bill 24.

Mr. Griffiths: I was done.

The Speaker: Okay. Anybody else to participate? We're on Bill 24. The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright had 18 minutes left in his speaking time, but we'll recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview. Bill 24.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is an interesting bill to come up at this moment in history, when there's so much concern and interest about the H1N1 influenza, which everybody knows can be carried by humans, can be carried by swine, and there's at least a little bit of evidence of cross-infection not from the meat itself but from the live animals and, interestingly, from humans to animals, it appears. This bill, Bill 24, I imagine, if it were in place right now, would be probably being actively used or, certainly, actively examined to help manage the situation that we're facing in Alberta concerning the H1N1 virus and the isolation of a swine production facility as well as the isolation of a number of human beings.

One of the points I want to make with this bill – and I'm actually going to register a little bit of concern about process here; it may be that as things go along, I can be corrected on this – is that my reading of the bill is that it actually amends a piece of legislation that was enacted just a few months ago. Under the original version of the Animal Health Act, which Bill 24 will now amend, there presumably must have been a number of shortcomings because we have now in Bill 24, a mere five months after the original Animal Health Act was proclaimed and enacted, quite a hefty bunch of amendments.

I wouldn't have been surprised if there were a couple of minor corrections or adjustments, but Bill 24 presents us with some 25 pages or so of amendments to an act that has only been in place five months. It makes me wonder why that original act had so many problems in it. Was it drafted in a terrific hurry? Were there shortcomings in how it was drafted in that perhaps adequate thought wasn't given to it? Perhaps the proper stakeholders weren't consulted, or perhaps the government just wasn't up to the job of drafting a good piece of legislation. That's something I had looked for.

The other explanation is that the world has changed so quickly that this legislation had to come forward, but I'm hard pressed to think that that's the case. It would be something to hear explained in second or in committee why this has happened. The reason I would look for that explanation is so that we don't do it again, so that we figure out next time that a bill can actually last more than five months without getting so many amendments.

With that having been said on the process, I think that this is a bill that, from our understanding of it, is going to make sense. The effect of this will be to give the animal health system and in many ways the public health system a broader range of tools to act more quickly in times of crisis. It broadens things like the definition of animals and livestock, and it should make our system of protecting animal and human health that much more fleet footed and adaptable and comprehensive and responsive. The need for that is being demonstrated hour by hour as we're sitting through this session of the Legislature.

I'm sure all our thoughts are with the child who has been hospitalized with the H1N1 virus, and our thoughts would also be with his or her family. We all hope and pray that it doesn't go beyond this and that this doesn't turn into something much more serious. If it does, we may be using this legislation more quickly than we ever expected.

A handful of other comments on this bill, Mr. Speaker. As well as expanding the definition of animals and livestock, it addresses the definition of diseases. It amends and clarifies issues regarding food-producing animals that are being illegally fed nonrendered animal carcasses. It gives various powers to inspectors and clarifies those so that their role and responsibilities and authority are clarified. It addresses a few questions concerning the chief provincial veterinarian, who, I should note, took the time to meet with me and some of our staff to discuss this bill, and that was much appreciated.

Mr. Speaker, I think that this bill, while it raises some questions about the drafting of its predecessor, is a good bill, it's timely, and I expect it'll get the full support of the Official Opposition.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Other members to participate?

Shall I call on the hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright to conclude the debate?

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will address most of the questions that have been raised here in second reading in Committee of the Whole. I'd just like to remind members that given the current situation with animal health and the regulations that have been adopted, we have continued to consult with the industry in the adoption of the remaining regulations. Because of the regulations being written, some changes needed to be made to the bill. We've also had to in a couple of circumstances synchronize the wording to better comply with federal legislation, which continues to evolve as well.

I look forward to debate in Committee of the Whole. With that, I would call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 24 read a second time]

Bill 25

Teachers' Pension Plans Amendment Act, 2009

[Adjourned debate April 22: Mr. Snelgrove]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and join second reading debate on Bill 25, the Teachers' Pension Plans Amendment Act, 2009. I think there are a few people on this side of the House who would like to speak to this act, so I won't take a great long period of time. I'm going to speak very favourably to the act by and large. This bill will fully implement the teachers' unfunded pension liability agreement that was proposed by the government in November of 2007 and ratified by all 62 school boards on February 1, 2008. This bill will legally transfer the entire unfunded liability from pre-1992 to the government effective September 1 of this year and will incorporate changes to the payment and governance arrangements pertaining to the pre-1992 unfunded liability. We've dealt with a couple of previous bills put forward in the implementation of the pension agreement to deal with payment schedules and transferring the authority of payment to the management of the finance minister. This is going to complete the process, and it's the right thing to do.

The pre-1992 unfunded pension liability is up to about $7 billion. The teachers' portion of that was just a little over $2 billion. The very unfortunate and, I think, frankly, dangerous effect of allowing the teachers to continue being responsible for one-third of the unfunded liability was that teachers were paying ever-larger percentages of their pay back into their pension fund, about 12 per cent as opposed to around 7 or 8 per cent for teachers in most other provinces, and it was getting difficult to recruit and retain good teachers in the province of Alberta. Essentially, what we were asking our teachers to do in recent years was to fund the pension liability of previous teachers so that they were funding pensions for teachers already retired and would never see the benefit of the money that they were putting into this pension fund themselves.

As I said, Mr. Speaker, I think it was the right thing to do, a sensible thing to do, and it could be a brilliant thing to do, now that the government through this legislation wants and, if passed, will take over the pre-1992 unfunded liability in its entirety, if the government develops a good strategy for making that unfunded liability shrink in a timely fashion.

We're looking at $7 billion here. You know, there have been quite a few numbers kicked around going back to before the government announced plans to take over the unfunded pension liability. Some of those were announced by the Alberta Teachers' Association. Their projections were that the funding scheme in place under the 1992 pension agreement would have seen the unfunded liability increase each year until it topped out at about $14 billion, about double what it is today, in 2045, after which it will rapidly diminish until it is eliminated by 2060.

Of course, there are debt servicing costs involved with a debt like that as well. Again, according to the Teachers' Association, if you let it go to 2060 and pay it out according to the model in the 1992 agreement, the cost of that thing was going to be about $46 billion. So if we paid off the $7 billion in unfunded liability in one fell swoop today, we would save the taxpayers approximately $40 billion over the next 55 years.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I don't know if the finance minister – this is not something that we really talked about in finance estimates. If you look at the budget figures, I think you will find an unfunded teachers' pension plan liability line item in there. I'm sorry; I don't have the estimates right in front of me, but there is a line item in there that I think amounts to about $355 million, $356 million for this year. I see the finance minister is nodding her head in agreement, so I'm pretty close on the numbers anyway. My reading of that number, by the way, is that what's in the budget estimates for fiscal '09-10 is about one-third larger than the forecast and the estimate for fiscal '08-09, which suggests that what we're seeing in that figure is simply the effect of the government taking over the one-third of the unfunded liability that had been the teachers' responsibility.

Now, this is a bit of a stretch because I'm projecting, and perhaps the finance minister could give some clarification to this, if not now, then at committee as well. If I'm projecting here correctly, it would seem to indicate from a cursory glance at those numbers that although the government is prepared to take over the unfunded liability in total, it hasn't come up with a repayment strategy that's going to pay this thing down any faster.

Now, the finance minister and I and the President of the Treasury Board and I have had some fairly lengthy discussions and debate around the estimates thus far. We know what times are going to be like to some extent. We think we know, and we hope they're not going to be any worse than what they've forecasted for the coming fiscal year and the two planning years beyond that. We know what's being proposed to be done with the sustainability fund to turn that into a much bigger fund so that there's enough money to cover off the deficits that are anticipated over the next few fiscal years. Everybody is keeping their fingers crossed that this thing doesn't get any worse than it is and that we have a rather quick and rather sharp recovery. The minister and I have had some discussions about whether that's realistic or not. We shall see in the fullness of time. So I doubt very much that there's, you know, any place, any nook, any cranny where $7 billion happens to be hiding this year that the minister can take and simply dump into the plan.

But, again, the trick to making this work to the advantage of not only the teachers of Alberta and by extension the children of Alberta but to the taxpayers of Alberta is to get after this debt, this unfunded liability, which as of September 1 will be, if this legislation passes, part of the public debt. Get after it, and pay it down as quickly as possible. Really, in terms of details I suppose that at committee is the appropriate time to hear details of what the repayment plan will be. Although I leave it to the finance minister to decide when she wants to reveal that, I hope that she will. I hope that she will contribute to the discussion that way because I think that really is a key part of this legislation.

On paper it's a great bill. On paper it does the right thing. On paper it is going to create a situation which should make it far more attractive to recent graduates of education programs both in our own universities here in Alberta and universities all across the country, down into the United States, and around the world, for that matter, to want to come and be great teachers here because they know that they can focus on being great teachers and not have to worry about how much of their paycheque is going into these long-standing obligations. But there is that little matter of how fast we're going to pay back the debt. Other than that, though, I'm fully in support of it myself.

I know some of my colleagues want to speak to this. I suspect others from other parties do as well. So I'll take my seat now and look forward to further discussion at committee stage and response from the minister at some point.

Thank you.

Speaker's Ruling Members Absenting Themselves

The Speaker: Hon. members, before I recognize an additional member, it's not often that I will intervene with respect to this kind of a debate, but I do want to draw to all members' attention Standing Order 33, which deals with pecuniary interest. This is a bill that deals with pensions of a select group of people in the province of Alberta. There is benefit to be derived to those individuals as a result of this particular piece of legislation.

Pecuniary interest says the following:

33(1) No member is entitled to vote on any question in which the Member has a direct pecuniary interest, and the vote of any Member so interested will be disallowed.

(2) If a Member has a direct pecuniary interest in a matter to be voted on, the Member shall declare the interest to the Assembly and leave the Chamber before the vote is taken.

Now, one can extrapolate in here the whole question of debate with respect to this matter. It's whether or not it's self-serving for an hon. member who might benefit very directly from this either now or in the future to then participate in the debate as well as going the next step to voting.

This is a very serious matter. It's not often that I make this kind of comment. I make it here because of the very specific nature of the bill before the Assembly at this time and the dollar implication of it. I have to believe the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie has no pecuniary interest in this – neither he nor his direct spouse is an educator – but I do make this now. So I say this: I will not rule any member out. The members will be guided by their consciences as to how they choose to participate in this debate.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Debate Continued

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I very much appreciate the cautions provided by the Speaker. As a retired teacher, although I no longer contribute to the pension, I am a recipient of it, and that pension is adjusted on an annual basis. Therefore, when it comes to the vote, I'll make sure that I absent myself so as not to cause any confusion. However, the fact that I was a teacher in a former life I don't believe prevents me from speaking on behalf of Albertans.

The Speaker: Please, I want to make it very clear what I said. If there is a direct benefit to a member, the member goes forward with his own responsibility and caution. That's all I'm saying.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I'm pleased that you requalified it and left it to my conscience to decide. I don't believe that I have the personal persuasive powers to change the outcome one way or the other.

My comments are that this is sort of the implementation state of what was a very positive piece of legislation. I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that it was as positive for the government as it was for teachers, for students, and for parents across this province. I would like to think that the reasons for bringing forward this legislation were purely altruistic, but the reality is that by living up to the obligations that the province had basically dragged its heels on for a 30-year period, the government averted the potential of a province-wide strike. The government did the right thing by taking over the unfunded pension liability. It created labour peace for five years. It tied any increases in salary to the weekly average. It also made a connection not only for teachers through the agreement but for staff, including caretakers, so that anyone dealing with a support function within the education system would be considered under that same weekly average. That was a very positive undertaking.

3:30

As the Member for Calgary-Currie previously mentioned, the longer we deal with paying down this debt, the greater it becomes. In order to service the debt, the province is basically required to pay in the neighbourhood of about $83 million just to keep the debt from growing substantially larger. The interest continues to grow on that $7 billion figure.

Now, it's important to note that this government has decided to undertake a deficit of approximately $4.7 billion. When you add another 7 billion plus dollars of the unfunded liability, and then you add another $10 billion of public infrastructure deficit, at least $1.5 billion of which the Education minister agreed was the amount on defrayed infrastructure for schools, what you are seeing there alone, is $21 billion of debt. To that we need to add another $1.5 billion, at least, for other unfunded pension liabilities that the government has the responsibility for undertaking.

While this is very successful, it is important that the government come up with some type of savings plan which will allow it to keep up with its debt payments and also prevent our deficit/debt from growing. At this point, Mr. Speaker, we're almost back at the point of $23 billion in debt, which was reduced to a large extent on the backs of public employees.

I look forward to this bill being discussed further, Mr. Speaker, and I will take you up on your suggestion, and I will absent myself until after the vote has occurred. Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I congratulate the hon. member for wanting to absent himself from the vote, thereby acknowledging that he has a conflict of interest in the situation. Doesn't he find it somewhat untoward and self-serving to then participate in the debate? I'm shocked, hon. member, and perhaps you could answer that.

Mr. Chase: I'd be glad to answer that question. It doesn't affect my benefits whatsoever. This will affect the current employees, especially the young teachers who have been servicing this debt for years and years and years. It does not affect me monetarily. I do not benefit from this. Whether the government decided to pay off this pension or not, my pension is secure because of the good management of the Alberta Teachers' Association in terms of the pension fund. It may not be as successful as the Ontario teachers' fund, but it is managed, and I won't benefit from this. Also, it's important to point out that I was a teacher. I am now the elected representative of Calgary-Varsity constituency, approximately 35,000 to 40,000 members of which will be paying for this unfunded liability. If I were not to speak on behalf of my constituents, I would be abdicating my responsibility.

I hope that has clarified the concerns, but if any other individuals within the 29(2)(a) process would like further clarification, I'll be glad to do so. I'll stay around for that time.

Ms Evans: Well, it's a very good point in debate, Mr. Speaker, and I thank you very much for illuminating it so that we can all have a full understanding of it. There's conflict of interest in direct or indirect pecuniary interest, and there's always a wide-held perception by people that if you are still held as a member of the group that received, for whatever reason, a pension from the Alberta Teachers' Association, including my mother as a widow of a teacher who died many years ago, in some way you are still connected with the policy-making body that can affect or can benefit from the kinds of activity we're engaged in.

I, like the Member for Peace River, would have been interested in the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity's impression of that because while you continue to hold that right to receive monies from that group, there's certainly an inference, a perception that the benefit that accrues to the group as a whole – their opportunity to give X amount of dollars for COLA clauses in the future – is impacted somewhat by the decisions we're making today. It's that COLA and the establishment of that that I think would serve you well to remember and to be absent.

I am surprised that you hadn't chosen to before you spoke, but I'm glad to hear your intention to leave now, and I'm glad to note further that other members have absented themselves. I don't think anyone in this Legislative Assembly wants to do something that places into conflict or into question by the electorate en masse out there in Alberta that we try to do things in a very above board fashion.

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, I want to make some comments and then perhaps make a suggestion to members of the House.

The Speaker: Well, we are on Standing Order 29(2)(a), the question-and-comment period.

Mr. Renner: I want to make a motion, but I'll wait, perhaps, until other members who wish to participate at this stage have done so. Then I would like to make a motion with respect to the debate under way.

The Speaker: Well, we've just lost 15 seconds of the hon. member's time.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Based on the fact that your mother was a teacher and you stand to potentially inherit, does that not put you in a similar conflict of interest? It's a question of how far the conflict goes? If we had a brother or a sister or a mother . . .

Ms Evans: She's the widow of a teacher.

Mr. Chase: Okay. Well, I'm just saying that if there is a teacher connection in your family, then possibly – do you see what I'm saying? How extreme do you take the connection before you absent yourself?

The Speaker: Hon. members, we have now exhausted the time associated with that.

Hon. Deputy Government House Leader, I'm sorry. You have to help me. What do you mean "a motion"?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that there appears to be some concern among a number of members as to whether individuals are or are not in conflict, I would just like to move that we adjourn debate on this bill pending some clarification from the Ethics Commissioner so that we can all participate in good conscience or not as the case may be. There are a number of members who may find themselves in a similar position.

The Speaker: So the hon. member who basically has joined the debate is now adjourning the debate. He has now given his shot in the debate. Do I take it that if the Assembly agrees, the hon. Deputy Government House Leader will be contacting the Ethics Commissioner for a ruling in this regard, or is the expectation that the chair should?

Mr. Renner: I don't care who does it, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps it might be appropriate for the chair to do so.

The Speaker: The chair would be happy to do it anyway.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 33 Fiscal Responsibility Act

[Adjourned debate April 28: Ms Evans]

The Speaker: Hon. Minister of Finance and Enterprise, do you choose to continue?

Ms Evans: No.

The Speaker: Okay. The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, then.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is, again, an honour to get up and be able to join debate on Bill 33, the Fiscal Responsibility Act, in second reading. This is the bill that changes the rules around the legislated fiscal framework for the government in the province of Alberta. This is the bill that allows the government to run deficits. This is the bill that permits deficits if offset by transfers from the sustainability fund. This is the bill that reworks the sustainability fund sufficiently to allow it to have enough money in it to pay off those deficits for the next three or four fiscal years. This is the bill that anticipates that most of that money, in fact, will be needed to cover those operating deficits because it anticipates that we will be running operating deficits for the next three fiscal years, maybe four.

In fact, the budget anticipates that things might be worse than actually projected in that the budget refers to a $2 billion fiscal correction that could happen sometime during this fiscal year in time for next fiscal year if things don't start to recover in time. That, Mr. Speaker, would be necessary most likely because even with the way Bill 33 proposes to rework the sustainability fund, there wouldn't be enough money in that particular piggy bank to cover the deficits that we would run if a worst-case scenario than what the budget projects actually comes to pass.

How things have changed in the space of a year. Boy. Less than a year ago the finance minister was talking about the possibility that we would run an 8 and a half billion dollar surplus for fiscal '08-09. It didn't work out that way. By the way, I'm not blaming the finance minister for the fact that it didn't work out that way. I don't know what her math marks were like in school, but I'm not blaming her for getting the math wrong. This undoubtedly is a global economic meltdown, a global credit crisis, a global rhubarb patch that we've all driven the fiscal automobile into.

As Ann Landers used to say when she wrote that advice column that used to appear in the newspapers back in the day when people actually used to read newspapers by getting them delivered to their houses rather than just going online to get them: when the good Lord hands you lemons, make lemonade. We've been handed a lemon. Maybe we've been handed two lemons here, actually. We've been handed a whole bushel of lemons in terms of where the economy is going and has gone, and we've been handed another lemon in terms of Bill 33, I think.

Bill 33 permits deficits if offset by transfers from the sustainability fund. It continues to disallow borrowing for operating purposes while allowing borrowing for capital purposes and borrowing by self-supporting corporations. That was allowed and will continue to be allowed. In-year operating expense increases are limited to 1 per cent of budgeted total ministry operating expenses. Here's where we start getting into trouble, Mr. Speaker. The limitation on the amount of nonrenewable resource revenue that can be directly used for budget purposes: bye, bye. That one is gone. The sustainability fund is being expanded to include the assets of the capital account, the amounts set aside for carbon capture and storage, the amounts set aside for Green TRIP. Add it all together, and it comes up to about $17 billion.

You know what? The only control in here on what you can do with the money, other than you have to use it to offset operating deficits because borrowing to cover operating deficits would still be against the law, is that the balance in the sustainability fund cannot be an amount less than zero. So the sustainability fund can't run a deficit. Wow. Knock me over with a feather.

Mr. Speaker, I'm sorry. That is just not good enough. The $2.5 billion that was required to remain in the sustainability fund as a contingency for natural disasters, unforeseen emergencies: that's been eliminated. The notion of how we sustain the sustainability fund is just kind of vague and airy: well, you know, when the fiscal situation improves – we think that's going to happen in 2012-2013 – well, then when we're running surpluses, cash available from the surpluses will be saved in the sustainability fund until the fund's balance reaches $10 billion again.

This is essentially the first plank in the province's savings strategy, the province says. The province does not say what the second or third or fourth planks are. My goodness, Mr. Speaker. I have questioned the minister of finance, the minister responsible for Treasury Board, the Premier, anybody else over there whom I can question, repeatedly since budget day, as to what the other planks are. There are no other planks. This plank is sort of sticking out perpendicular to the side of the ship like, you know, it's a pirate ship, just inviting us to all walk off the plank and go splashing into the ocean of red ink.

There's no control anymore, and goodness knows, Mr. Speaker, there wasn't much control to begin with. Back in 2003 the government introduced Bill 2, the Financial Statutes Amendment Act, which included amendments to the Fiscal Responsibility Act as it existed then. Those amendments created the sustainability fund, which, by the way, was originally a Liberal idea. Those amendments also created the capital account.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

That bill also introduced a cap of $3.5 billion for how much nonrenewable resource revenue could be spent before having to be transferred into the sustainability fund. You know, when you get to 3.5 billion and 1 dollars, the $1 gets transferred into the sustainability fund and on like that. There was some understanding even then, in 2003, that we shouldn't spend all our capital, that that might be a good idea since once we get the money from the oil and gas that comes out of the ground – that oil and gas is gone, and if we spend the money that we made from that oil and gas, it's gone for all time, too.

So $3.5 billion initially. In 2004 the government amended the Fiscal Responsibility Act to increase the cap on spending nonrenewable resource revenue to $4 billion. In 2005 the government amended the fiscal responsibility act yet again to increase the cap to $4.75 billion. In 2006 the government amended the Fiscal Responsibility Act to increase the cap on spending nonrenewable resource revenue to $5.3 billion. And now it's gone altogether. Now it's just gone.

The government is removing the only legislative limit they had on spending all the resource revenue that they collect. In my view, in my opinion, they're taking a gamble by removing the $2.5 billion natural disaster contingency amount, too. There's nothing set aside for anything except it's all set aside to offset operating deficits that will be rung up this year and may continue to be rung up next year and the year after and – who knows? – the year after that. Because we've all seen it happen in this country often enough at the federal level, at the provincial level in this province, and at the provincial level in just about every other province, Mr. Speaker, we all know that once you start down the road of running operating deficits, it's a tough road to get off of. So we don't really know where we're going with all this.

In essence, Mr. Speaker, what we are saying with Bill 33 is that we're going to get our hands on every bit of money that we can in short-term savings, or short-term set-asides, in this province, we're going to lump it all together into one big emergency fund, and then we're going to start spending that emergency fund until, God willing and the creek don't rise, the economy starts to turn around or we run out of money in the emergency fund.

There is no plan to embark on a multilevel savings and investment strategy that involves replenishing some of these savings in the short term, that involves continuing to save short term to continue to have an emergency fund that involves investing for the long term, that involves the notion that if we were a family we'd be saying: "Okay. Dad's lost his job, and Mom is working part-time, but we've still got to save for the kids' college education someday, you know, 18, 19, 20 years down the road, and we'd better be trying to put a little something away for our retirement. Oh, yes, we also have to pay the mortgage. We can't afford a new roof, but we've got to patch the leaky spots in it, and stuff like that."

I mean, when you're a family and especially when you're a family of limited means, what we sometimes refer to as a SITCOM family – single income, two children, outrageous mortgage – the world doesn't care that you don't have all that much money or that this year is a little rougher than last year. You've still got to meet your current obligations, your monthly and daily expenses; you've got to pay down your debt.

We were just talking in Bill 25 about adding $7 billion to public debt, and rightly we should, in the unfunded teachers' pension liability, and you've got to save for the future. All this does is say: "Okay. Let's get our hands on every penny and dime and quarter and nickel that fell through the cushions of the couch, and let's look behind the fridge to see if the cat knocked any loonies back there. We're going to put it into a piggy bank. Then we're going to get a hammer, and we're going to smash the piggy bank, and we're going to start spending that money to meet our shortfall." That's not good enough. That's not nearly good enough.

There is no strategy here. There is just pure naked fear, as far as I'm concerned, pure naked terror coupled with hope that bears a passing resemblance to, you know, Saul's conversion on the road to Damascus, a hope for one of those "Aha" religious moments where we can suddenly go: "There, I've seen the sign. The economy is getting better. The recession is over. We're not as deep in the glue as we feared we might be." I wouldn't run my family's finances on a foundation that shaky. I know the Member for Edmonton-Riverview and the Member for Calgary-McCall wouldn't run their family's finances on a foundation that shaky. I suspect there are even a few members in the government that wouldn't run their family's finances on a foundation that shaky.

This great province of Alberta is a family of 3 and a half million people who rely on us not to mess it up, not to put it in the rhubarb, not to drive it off a cliff, to be prudent, to be visionary [interjection] and to ignore the hackles and the heckles and the chirping from the little sparrow from Calgary-West across the way there, and to do some responsible, prudent fiscal planning. [interjection] That was a good sparrow imitation, not as good as the Member for Calgary-West but not bad.

We're failing them in this. We're absolutely failing them in this. What the government seeks to do in Bill 33, Mr. Speaker, is give itself kind of an all-encompassing get out of jail free card that allows them to continue spending irresponsibly, to continue spending without having gone through any more of an exercise in value-for-money audit or seeking of efficiencies than the stated — they're looking for $215 million in savings over the next 12 months out of a $37 billion budget. I think they can do better than that, but that's all they're looking for.

This is not a government that is taking seriously the need to prioritize its planning and its spending and reallocate spending and investment so that the spending goes to the projects and programs that will benefit the people in the province of Alberta and the investment goes to long-term investments that will enrich the people in the province of Alberta and get us off this roller-coaster ride of volatile oil and gas resource revenue prices and amounts so that we can ride out the storm better in the future. This is a short-term, myopic solution to a problem that calls for some long-term vision. It just in no way, as far as I'm concerned, passes the test of good, prudent fiscal management.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that that's part of the reason why the voters of Calgary-Currie put me here, why the voters of the 82 other constituencies in this province put the rest of you here: to be prudent fiscal managers and good stewards of this province's wealth. We all, all of us who didn't come here post-1993, all of us sacrificed and suffered and went through pain, some more than others, when it became necessary to slay the deficit, balance the budget, and try and get this province out of debt. We owe it to the people of Alberta who were here then and to the people of Alberta who have come here since not to set them up for having to go through that again.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that this piece of legislation, Bill 33, as enabling legislation for this year's budget does exactly that. It sets us up to go down the road that we went down all through the '80s, really, and it sets us up to again have to come to grips in a way that we came to grips in the early '90s with the financial mess we had gotten ourselves into. We have time to do it differently. I hope that we have the collective will to do it differently. There's no way, in my mind, that this piece of legislation can go forward without significant amendments, and at the appropriate time we will be bringing forward amendments on this bill.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I think my time is just about up. I will take my seat and allow others to join the debate, perhaps even the sparrow from Calgary-West.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciated that. I appreciated the comments from the Member for Calgary-Currie. They were a good opening analysis. I wonder about the name of this act, frankly: the Fiscal Responsibility Act. I think that by the time we're done, it could have all kinds of names. It could be the fiscal non-responsibility act or the fiscal irresponsibility act or the fiscal cross your fingers act or who knows what? I'm sure it'll get more and more creative.

I cannot think of a bigger symbol of the hollow agenda of this government in the last 15 years than this particular piece of legislation. The simple fact of the matter is that through the 1990s, as natural gas prices were surging and natural resource revenues were climbing, it was actually pretty easy after the first couple of years of the so-called Klein revolution to run surpluses, and it was easy to stick with the original Fiscal Responsibility Act. It's only now, six months after the price of oil and gas drops, that suddenly the commitment to balanced budgets is out the window. Frankly, it makes we really wonder what that whole campaign to pay off the debt was really about. What was that really for? I think Albertans are increasingly aware that a mere two or three years after the mortgage was burned, we're going back into debt. What the heck is this about? If we're so readily prepared on such short notice to toss out that kind of discipline, then why did we put so much effort into the last 15 years?

In many ways I think, Mr. Speaker, a lot of what happened in the last 15 years, through the 1990s, was deeply misguided and deeply damaging. I think that every time I drive a road in Alberta that's in dismal disrepair because we deferred maintenance, and now we're having to spend substantially more to repair those roads. I think that every time I get a call from a constituent who has experienced 12- or 24-hour or even multiday waits in emergency rooms because they're short of staff and short of facilities. I think back to the moves in the 1990s to lay off over 10,000 health care workers and to reduce our training capacity for nurses and doctors and to sell two hospitals in Calgary, to blow up what was then the largest hospital in Calgary.

All of those things and so much more were undertaken in the name of balancing the budget and paying off the debt. Now this government has the nerve, six months after the price of oil and gas drops, to bring in legislation and say: "Forget all of that. That was all just then, and this is now. Just get over it. Forget your history. Forget all the blunders we've made, and stay with the program." Well, Mr. Speaker, I find that offensive. I find that demeaning. I find it insulting. Worst of all, I think it's a sign of extremely bad management on the part of this government.

What were all those cutbacks really about? What was the boom all about, folks? Think this through. Fifteen years of multibillion dollar surpluses and six months after natural resource prices drop, we're into this. Is this the best you people can do? Is this what you consider managing Alberta's wealth effectively? Because it sure isn't what I consider it. How could we be so exposed, after so much wealth has flowed through this treasury, to the forces of debt and cutback? How could we even be considering internal memos coming through from top medical people in the system putting freezes on recruitments? How could we be considering standing here today while children across the river, sick and injured children, are being treated in a tent? What the heck has gone on with you people in the last 15 years? Where have you taken Alberta, and how did you get us so exposed to a drop in oil and natural gas prices, Mr. Speaker?

This is, I think, a shocking betrayal of the hollow agenda of a government that is inept in managing public finances. Time and time again over the years we and the Alberta Chambers of Commerce, the Institute of Chartered Accountants, Canada West Foundation, Jack Mintz at the commission of this own government, and many others have said: get a savings plan in place. As the Member for Calgary-Currie has quite rightly pointed out, we're still waiting for any meaningful plan.

How is it that after all of that money the heritage fund is worth significantly less today than it was 20 years ago? If we were to adjust for the larger population and inflation, we'd find that it was worth far less today than 20 years ago. In those 20 years that have passed, we've pumped out literally hundreds of billions of dollars of nonrenewable resource wealth. It's gone. We have less savings in place than we did 20 years ago, and we're heading back into debt.

I think this is shameful. I think that there needs to be some serious soul-searching taking place among the members of this government about the long-term future of Alberta. There is no savings plan, and when we have the government's own report, written by Jack Mintz and a blue-ribbon panel with clearly a right-wing leaning – this is not some, you know, left-wing or even Liberal group of people; Jack Mintz and the others were hand-picked by the former finance minister. When they come up and they say, "What this government is doing is unsustainable," and this government and current minister of finance try to bury that report, release it on a day when it's going to get lost to the media, brush it aside, I think the long term of this province is actually in some serious jeopardy, and I think events in the world are going to overtake the carbon-based economy that's given Alberta its prosperity.

History, as I've said many times, is filled with examples of economies and societies that are based on commodities going boom and then going bust and never recovering. I'm afraid that we're beginning to see that play out. There will be some recovery, no doubt, but each recovery from here on in is going to be weaker and shallower and shorter than the previous one, and each downturn is going to be deeper and longer and harder to get out. As that downward wave continues, we're going to dig ourselves further and further into debt, and we do this led by a government that has no strategy. Debt is not on its own necessarily bad, Mr. Speaker, but it needs to be managed in the context of a bigger strategy. This government doesn't have a strategy, and it's shocking and dismal.

Mr. Speaker, I have an amendment to make to this piece of legislation. It's got the appropriate approval from Parliamentary Counsel. I'll take a moment to allow the pages to distribute it.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: If the hon. member proceeds on the amendment, we shall call it amendment A1.

Dr. Taft: I shall read it for the record. I move that the motion for second reading of Bill 33, Fiscal Responsibility Act, be amended by deleting all the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 33, the Fiscal Responsibility Act, be not now read a second time because the Assembly is of the view that the bill does not adequately protect current and future generations from the possibility of catastrophic natural or environmental disaster.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this motion is intended to point out and take at least a small step to addressing some of the shortcomings of this bill and to try to put it in the context of some kind of larger strategy. We are, in fact, day by day right now living through the makings of something that could be a natural disaster in the form of H1N1 flu. We don't know whether this is going to become a great pandemic or not. There are looming environmental crises with mountain pine beetle, with forest fires. There are fires burning in this province right now, and those could easily loom. We need to be responsible and set aside in effect a contingency fund so that there's some specific amount, some specific account that we can draw on in the case of a catastrophic natural or environmental disaster.

We need to do that for the long term. That's the very least that we could do in terms of a fiscal strategy. At the very least, we could take a little bit of all that incredible wealth that has flowed through the treasury and set it aside for all generations to come to say: well, this is at least a small bit we've done for you. This is in effect an insurance policy for this generation and all future generations in Alberta against unforeseen natural or environmental disasters.

Let's consider what those could be. Tornado. We all remember – well, maybe we don't. But many of us will remember the tornado in 1987 that caused hundreds of millions of dollars' damage in the Edmonton area and cost, I think, 27 people their lives. We know that there's flooding looming this spring. This also mentions very specifically environmental disaster because none of us really are that clear on what the environmental liabilities in places like the oil sands may end up being or in many, many, many other sites in this province where there has been oil and gas development, where there have been petrochemical plants, where there's been other activity that could create the equivalent to the Sydney tar ponds or Love Canal in New York, Mr. Speaker.

I would ask all members of the Assembly to give this some thought, to consider an amendment that at least puts a little bit of specific strategy and thought to how we're managing the incredible wealth here. As the Member for Calgary-Currie pointed out, as this bill is structured right now, there's a risk of an endless downward slope. If there isn't a recovery in the price of natural gas, for example, and if this turns out to be more like 1982 than 1992 where there's the better part of a decade of an economic slowdown, then we'll be here in three or four years having drained all the coffers and set virtually nothing aside.

I should remind members here about a little bit of history. In I believe it was 1982 there was the initial downturn, and there was for the first time in many years a significant deficit for the provincial government. Then there was a brief recovery for a couple of years, and then the real pain bit. I find myself wondering increasingly, Mr. Speaker, if we aren't in that first phase of what will become perhaps a decade-long or even longer slowdown.

I think that the real long-term risk for Alberta's economy is the development of new technologies on solar power and renewables that simply take away the market for Alberta's treasure and just eliminate global demand in the long term for our carbon. If that happens, we'll have nothing left. This amendment would create at least a small pool of money that would be there like an insurance fund forever and forever and forever. I would ask all members of this Assembly to support this amendment.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, before I recognize a member to speak, this is in fact a hoist amendment?

Dr. Taft: No, it's not. It's a reasoned amendment.

The Deputy Speaker: It's a reasoned amendment. Okay.

Then I would recognize the minister of finance to debate on the amendment.

Ms Evans: Thank you very much. Speaking to the amendment, when I view the words of the amendment, the amendment suggests that, in fact, Bill 33 not be read because it fails to "adequately protect current and future generations from the possibility of catastrophic natural or environmental disaster.” Well, there are several things we do to protect current and future generations.

The Minister of Municipal Affairs could argue that his planning for emergencies and disasters is part of the ways that this government by policy and practice and strategy prepare and safeguard future generations. The attitude that has been presented, however, is that perhaps we haven’t adequately put some money aside to prepare for these disasters. Well, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest there’s nowhere else in Canada where there is so much money in an emergency savings account to prepare for or to safeguard against any type of disaster. Nowhere else in North America do they have a $17 billion sustainability fund of which over the next three years the draw is less than $9 billion.

When we have identified a plan that shows the reduction in expenditure both from a value review of operations and a planned reduction of another $2 billion worth of expenditure, in my view Bill 33, this particular act, responsibly addresses not only how we cannot borrow for operating purposes and talks about many of the principles that were in the previous act, but it does more. It disentangles what had actually been happening between accounts management in government, that really engaged us in some very intricate, complex transactions. The act, in my view, is much more transparent than we’ve had in the past. It, in fact, identifies exactly how we’re spending money on three separate tracks: obviously on the operating budget, on the capital budget, and on those things we’re doing that are safeguarding our environment and our sustainability circumstances with Green TRIP and carbon capture and storage.

I urge defeat of this so that we can proceed with this Fiscal Responsibility Act as currently written because I believe that nowhere else in Canada, as I’ve said, are we as well prepared if we need financial resources to support ourselves against any kind of disaster.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. Speaking to the amendment, which I’m assuming is A1 unless I’m told otherwise, what the Member for Edmonton-Riverview is saying is that we need to have a definite fund set aside. The hon. minister of finance indicated that somehow we could avert this disaster or we could soften the effects of it, mitigate the effects by proper planning and relying on our existing savings fund. My answer would be that if we’d had proper planning, we’d have real savings, and we wouldn’t be drawing on a $4.7 billion deficit. If we’re going on past practice, the planning isn’t there, and I don’t see anything to indicate by legislation that we’ve seen to date this year that there’s a change in attitude.

What we have here is basically the grasshopper saying: “Well, you know, I’m going to dance all day while the sun shines, and I’m not going to worry about the winter. It’ll be taken care of.” Of course, whether we’re talking about the allegory, the lesson learned from that story, or we’re talking about Alberta’s reality, $17 billion, whatever we want to call that amount, is a tangible, finite resource. If we’re putting all our eggs into one basket and saying that this amount of money is going to tide us over and basically praying that the global recession is going to reverse and that the value of our oil and gas will instantly rise so that we can waste another boom circumstance and head into another bust, then, you know, what do they say with regard to insanity? It’s repeatedly carrying out the same action and expecting a different outcome.

We are fortunate that the government didn’t squander even more of what was left. We are fortunate that the government recognized the need for a sustainability fund. This was a Liberal idea. It was a stability fund that we proposed. We proposed putting a significantly larger amount of money into this to ward off concerns. Going back prior to March 3, 2008, we were saying that as much as all the surplus money that we were getting from oil and gas should be set aside. For example, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, who has a doctorate in financial management, recognized the fact that we could not continue to spend 23 per cent above what every other province spent, that we could not continue to rely on our one-trick pony of nonrenewable gas and oil, that we had to prepare for that future.

Now, Alaska is prepared for its future. Norway is the example of an absolutely fantastic preparation, where they no longer rely on their oil and gas. They can live off the proceeds that were gained on that oil and gas revenue. It will be depleted, but their savings fund won’t be. Compare what is in the area of $400 billion even after the financial losses to what we have left in our now combined stability fund and our rapidly depleted heritage trust fund, and you can see that we’re not prepared. We’re not prepared for everyday occurrences, never mind the emergencies that this amendment A1 is addressing.

If we do not get our financial house in order, we will not be prepared to deal with global warming. The Bow Glacier is rapidly reducing, so it’s not just a matter of dealing with the after-effects of floods or the prevention of floods. It’s dealing potentially with water shortages into the future, and we’re still waiting for that land-use framework to come into place to look after water management. Now, I believe it was three years ago when once-in-a-lifetime flooding occurred on the Highwood River twice in a two-week period, yet the government still allows builders to build below the flood plain and then after the fact bails them out with insurance, well, with taxpayers’ funding. What we’re asking for is to set aside a fund which is dedicated to emergencies.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview relayed concerns such as pine beetles and the devastating economic effect it could have and the need, therefore, to manage and mitigate, but also if our best-intended efforts for whatever reason are overcome by the infestation of beetles, then we’ve got to have something to fall back on.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview talked about reclamation. He referred to the tailings ponds in Fort McMurray and to the thousands, to which I’ll add, of orphaned wells which need to be reclaimed and are being sort of addressed at 10 cents on the dollar in terms of funding set aside by industry to cover that.

Take us into the future. The government seems in its communications to be heading towards the possibility of nuclear power. Well, look around the world at some of the circumstances that have happened in minor meltdowns in Ontario, then go to the States and Three Mile Island, and then go to Europe and talk about Chernobyl. If you are going to take people down that route and you’re not going to have an emergency fund to deal with the potentials – to deal with the radioactive material that has to be dealt with, to counteract the amount of water that would be used in the cooling requirements of that facility – if you don’t have a contingency fund or an insurance policy, you’re going blindly into the future without armour, without any kind of support.

This amendment says: get your fiscal house in order; set aside an insurance plan so that we can go forward with some sense of control. Right now spending by this government is out of control. They have no idea what to save, where to cut. The cuts that we’ve seen so far are to chiropractic services, to aboriginal suicide prevention services. We see a tripling of seniors’ single Blue Cross coverage. The hits are happening at the wrong spots, yet this government will be putting out $40 million worth of bonuses in June. It will be, as part of their budget, putting forward $35 million to horse racing. Why could some of that money not be the start of an insurance fund? That's what we're asking. We're asking for you to protect Albertans not only now but as a legacy in the future. Don't leave my grandchildren to clean up the mess that you are dealing with today by not having an insurance fund.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: On the amendment, the hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Oberle: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When last I checked, we were debating the Alberta government's response to the current economic crisis, and somehow during the course of this amendment we're now talking about tornados and forest fires, environmental or natural disasters. I find that a very curious twist.

More than that, Mr. Speaker, I've got to say that I am absolutely astounded by the hypocrisy of that party to stand in this House day after day after day and call for more spending and more spending and more spending. Even today the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview is complaining about our spending levels on health care. Then he stands up and launches this missile. I am absolutely astounded by the approach.

No government in North America is better prepared for the situation that we find ourselves in than the government of Alberta. If you look across this country now, where some of our fellow provinces are facing debts of $11,000 or more for every man, woman, and child in their constituency, today we have a surplus of that amount in Alberta, the only jurisdiction in North America, Mr. Speaker.

The Member for Calgary-Varsity doesn't seem to understand that paying off debt is in fact protecting his children and their future. They don't seem to understand that the heritage savings fund is, in fact, savings, that the sustainability account is savings, that the capital account is savings, and that other reserves – Mr. Speaker, the debate is juvenile.

For the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview to stand there and forecast his brilliant economic forecast that the recoveries in the future will be weaker and shorter, well, thank you for that. Mr. Speaker, his hindsight is always one hundred per cent. He has an uncanny ability to predict the past, but he didn't see this one coming. Where was he to save Albertans when this economic crisis descended upon us? We should be debating how a government responsibly reacts to the worst economic crisis since the 1930s, and this is what we get? Thanks very much.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

4:30

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I, too, stand in frustration in listening to the diatribe coming from the opposition benches today. I do not support this amendment. The member for Edmonton-Riverview has suggested that we need to protect current and future generations from the possibility of catastrophic natural or environmental disaster. I know that he and the member for Calgary-Currie have made quite a push in trying to increase our savings here in this province, yet they're not quite sure what we're saving for.

They talk about this 4 and a half billion dollar operating deficit. Quite frankly, if they looked at the government budget, this government is bringing in just as much revenue as it is spending on the operating side, and the deficit side of it is particularly on the amount of money that we're spending on infrastructure. That is a direct response in particular – and we're seeing this right across not just this country but the world – to the economic situation that we're in. We know that for every million dollars we invest in infrastructure, it directly supports approximately 140 jobs.

This particular member wants to talk about savings for a natural or environmental disaster that might happen sometime in the future, but I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that right now we have an economic situation that Albertans want us to deal with today. We have people that have lost their jobs, people that will potentially lose their jobs in the near future. It's this type of investment particularly in infrastructure that will result in us creating some of those jobs back and getting us through this current economic situation. To suggest that the only reason we save money is for catastrophic natural and environmental disasters is, I believe, irresponsible and actually quite narrow minded. I don't think Albertans support that, and that was very obvious about a year ago.

The other part that I did want to mention is that in debate on this bill and in particular on this amendment the Member for Edmonton-Riverview has really shown his narrow grasp of the current situation that we're in. He kept referring to the current situation as a drop in oil and gas prices. Mr. Speaker, that is not the current situation. Yes, we've seen a drop in oil and gas prices, but I don't believe that that is responsible for the current global economic situation. In fact, the current situation is much more complex than that, and we're not immune from that. That's why I will not be supporting this amendment.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: On the amendment the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Enough has been said against the amendment, but I'm standing here to support this amendment. We are talking about savings here. We are concerned about a major disaster maybe happening in the province.

I will take it back to 1981-82. I know the interest rates, you know, went sky high, through the roof, and we had the money to support Albertans with their mortgage payments. There were subsidies that were there for Albertans to save their homes. I've been through that time, Mr. Speaker, and we are talking about saving for a rainy day. We are not talking about spending all the money, whatever we have here. Had the government been prudent and frugal with the money, I think we could have handled this situation better than we are doing today.

I know that every time we stand up here and we talk about savings, we are blamed to be the spenders, spenders, spenders. For the last five years, year over year, spending has gone up 10 per cent. We didn't tie it to inflation and population growth, and $60 billion was gone just like that. I think the government has squandered an opportunity to save more for a rainy day.

In 1976, when the heritage trust fund was set up, you know, the government of the day had the vision to look into the future. Alaska and Norway set up their trust funds after we did, and look where they are today because they had this plan. They were saving for the rainy day, and they won't have to depend on nonrenewable resource income in the future. I think we are way, far, far behind those jurisdictions.

Alberta was the envy of everybody. The way we're going at it, I don't think we'll be the envy of the other provinces or other jurisdictions anymore. Within maybe a year or two we will be down where I cannot imagine being. This is not fearmongering, Mr. Speaker. We have been down that road before, and I thought we learned our lesson, but it seems like history is repeating itself again.

I think everybody should be supporting this amendment. We should start, you know, saving for the future, for the rainy day, for the disaster, whatever may come our way. For those reasons I will be supporting this amendment, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Do any other hon. members wish to speak on the amendment?

Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question.

[Motion on amendment to second reading of Bill 33 lost]

The Deputy Speaker: On the bill now, the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With this Fiscal Responsibility Act I think we are turning the clock back here. The Fiscal Responsibility Act was first presented in 1999 by the government of the day as a mechanism to reduce the provincial debt. The idea of the sustainability fund was originally put forward by the Leader of the Opposition as Bill 208, the Fiscal Stability Fund Calculation Act, in the fall of 2002, and that was hoisted by the government of the day. The object of the bill was to encourage the government to create a fiscal stability fund by calculating the positive effect that a fiscal stability fund would have on Alberta's financial affairs. The purpose of calculating the effect of the stability fund on the financial affairs of Alberta was to determine how the stability fund would assist in stabilizing the cyclical nature of Alberta's economy, which we are facing today again.

The stability fund would protect the sustainability of social programs and would improve the long-term fiscal planning framework of the government. That was the intent of the sustainability fund. The creation of the sustainability fund at the time would ensure that funding for health care, education, and children's services is not based on oil and gas revenues, an important first step in ensuring that funding for the priority programs and services is not based on oil and gas revenues but to have the savings in place so we can get the money coming from the savings to spend on those programs.

In 2003 the government introduced Bill 2, Financial Statutes Amendment Act, which included amendments to the Fiscal Responsibility Act. These amendments included the creation of the sustainability fund and the capital account. This bill also introduced a cap of $3.5 billion for how much nonrenewable resource revenue could be spent before having to be transferred into the sustainability fund. The bill also introduced a clause stating that $2.5 billion had to remain in the sustainability fund for emergencies and natural disasters, but with this new Fiscal Responsibility Act, Bill 33, I think we are just abolishing that section.

In 2004 the government amended the Fiscal Responsibility Act to increase the cap on spending nonrenewable resource revenue to $4 billion. In 2005 they changed it again to $4.75 billion. In 2006 the government amended the Fiscal Responsibility Act to increase the cap on spending nonrenewable resource revenue to $5.3 billion.

These annual increases in the limit on how much nonrenewable resource revenue could be spent highlight the lack of fiscal discipline this government has shown. Every year as spending requirements went up, so did the amount of money that could be spent. There was absolutely no attempt to keep spending of the nonrenewable resource revenues in check. In 2008 the act was amended again to allow for P3 borrowing for schools and postsecondary institutions and health care facilities. Mr. Speaker, every time there were changes made to the Fiscal Responsibility Act, the spending went up and up and up.

Now we are at a juncture again where we are going to change another bill, Bill 33, the Fiscal Responsibility Act. Under the original Fiscal Responsibility Act deficits were not permitted. The main goal behind the change to the Fiscal Responsibility Act is to allow the government to run a deficit of our capital spending and, I hear, operating spending, too, here and there, so I'm not really clear on this, you know. Maybe we will change this act again to go for operating spending again.

This change is required because there is a drop in oil and gas prices, and the recession has greatly impacted Alberta's revenue stream and its ability to maintain its $23 billion three-year capital spending plan. The deficit will only be permitted if offset by transfers from the expanded sustainability fund, and borrowing for operating purposes continues to be disallowed while borrowing for capital purposes and by self-supporting corporations continues to be allowed. In-year operating expense increases are limited to 1 per cent of the budget total of ministry operating expenses. The way I see it, with this Fiscal Responsibility Act I think we will have no money left in the sustainability fund.

We tried to deal with that with the amendment before brought forward by the Member for Edmonton-Riverview. I would like to move another amendment here on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

I'll take my seat.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, I heard you say "on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Riverview." The member already spoke, so the process would not allow it.

Mr. Kang: This is another amendment, A2. That's another amendment.

The Deputy Speaker: Is it your amendment or on behalf of?

Mr. Kang: Okay. On behalf of myself I'll move another amendment.

The Deputy Speaker: Well, I have to see the amendment. This is the amendment signed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, so procedure-wise this is not permissible because your hon. member already introduced an amendment.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Yes. Seeking clarification. This is a totally different amendment, and it's being moved on behalf of the hon. member by a different member. It's not a repeat of the first amendment. Is it being suggested that a person can sign their name to only one amendment within the process? That's the clarification I'm looking for.

The Deputy Speaker: According to our parliamentary rules, in second reading the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview already spoke once and introduced an amendment, so that is done for the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview. Anything you do on second reading – this is the second time, and it's not permissible. This amendment should have been signed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall to be valid.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Thank you for that clarification. Speaking to Bill 33 in general, obviously we will get our amendments in order and bring them forward again in discussion of Bill 33.

The point that we've tried to raise throughout our discussion on Bill 33 is the need to have a buffer, to have a backstop, to have a way of protecting ourselves when times are tough such as we're currently experiencing. But when those tough external economic times are compounded by emergent circumstances within our own province such as water shortages – the term that is frequently used is acts of God. Frequently, the acts result from the failure of man to prevent the potential of natural disasters occurring.

The Fiscal Responsibility Act, as other members before have indicated – the Member for Calgary-Currie and most recently the Member for Calgary-McCall – seems to be the equivalent of a government windshield washing blade during a rainstorm. Out of convenience it flips to the right and adds more money. Then it flips to the left and takes it away. There's no planning. It's all ad hoc, on the spot as opposed to long-term.

Now, we've talked about: why have a stability fund? Why have a sustainability fund? The government recognized that we had to have that padding, that circumstance that would tide us over. But what the government has and is basically gambling on is the idea that the global recession will magically end by the actions of other governments, that once the current stores of gas and oil run down, the price will return. It's all operating on kind of a wing and a prayer circumstance as opposed to sound economic policy.

The whole notion that, you know, six months ago it was illegal – throw in immoral, unreasonable – to consider going into debt, and then as sort of a parachute move you pull the rip cord and say, "I'm going down fast; I've got to do something," and that something turns into a $4.7 billion deficit and further borrowing against the stability and sustainability fund through P3 projects that continue to build up our debt for another 32 years in the case of schools and in the case of pre-established ring roads 30 years, should lead Albertans to wonder how their money is not only being managed now but into the future. This government has committed Albertans 30 years into the future into continuing to pay for a debt that they continue to build up at this time. If we don't get past our reliance on nonrenewable resources, if we don't invest in education, where we know a $1 investment produces a $3 return, then we're basically dooming not only our present but our future, too.

On this Fiscal Responsibility Act we've had members talking about what wonderful hindsight the Liberals have. Well, I remember a former minister of aboriginal affairs making the comment: trust the Liberals to think about the future. Unfortunately, that's where this government is at. It will make announcements that sound like large expenditures at one time when that money is spread over a three-year period, but when it comes to declaring the debt, we might hear about it on June 30 just before heading into a long weekend.

The government fails to recognize that you've got to have long-term planning. There's nothing magical or overly intellectual about that. If you don't plan, if you don't have a backup plan, then you're going to fail. I mean, I spent 34 years of my life teaching students that if there wasn't a consequence for the direction you took and you didn't appreciate that consequence, you were never going to arrive at the destination you had intended to go.

This government, as I say, makes its moves, its legislation on the fly, and it buries the actual rules of the game in its regulatory framework. It shares within its own cabinet and has these wonderful discussions while the rest of Albertans, including the opposition, are left completely in the dark. When members of the opposition suggest something that would be proactive, potentially preventative, we're ridiculed and accused of wanting to spend more.

What Bill 33 calls for is going further and further into debt. What we've been saying all along is that even in your darkest hours, you still have to save because there's no predicting where we're going to be next year, the following year, and the following year. The government is gambling that they're going to be able to just dip in to the tune of $4.7 billion this year, a little bit less, potentially, next year and the following year. They basically put all their chips onto the table with one tour of the roulette wheel, and if it lands on black 3, then everything is solved. If it doesn't, then you know the old expression about going to hell in a handbasket.

We've got to get past this ad hoc, we've got to think long term, and it's going to take a collegial, collaborative team approach to do so. So I would encourage members opposite that if you don't like the direction of the amendment that we proposed in terms of having an insurance plan in case of emergencies, then come up with a replacement of your own that you think is more productive. Don't simply reject out of hand. Instead of condemning, I would like to see some creating. That is what we have attempted to do today and will continue to do: provide Albertans with alternatives, provide them with thoughtful possibilities, look after their futures, and continually look forward, keeping in mind what has historically occurred so that we don't repeat the mistakes of history.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of questions and comments.

Seeing none, back on the bill.

Seeing that no other member wishes to debate, the chair shall now call the question.

Bill 34 Drug Program Act

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Liepert: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to move second reading of Bill 34, the Drug Program Act.

This bill, Mr. Speaker, creates the overall legislative structure necessary to implement the Alberta pharmaceutical strategy. It represents an important change in how government drug programs operate and will enhance access, improve patient outcomes, optimize resources, and achieve better value from drugs within Alberta's health system. I'm confident that all Albertans will benefit from the improvements to government drug programs that this bill makes possible.

The bill formally establishes a government drug program in legislation under which the minister may establish plans to meet the needs of the people of this province. I'd like to note that many other provincial jurisdictions already have such legislation that governs the operation of their government drug programs. These plans will provide coverage for seniors, for palliative care patients, for low-income Albertans, and for those who need specialized drugs like patients with rare diseases or cancer.

A plan will continue to be available for any Albertan under the age of 65 who wishes to join regardless of their medical history or drug therapy needs. Under this legislative authority government will unify the drug programs offered by several different ministries into one consolidated program. This measure will streamline and bring greater consistency to government drug coverage.

Under the bill specific program operation and administrative activities will be outlined by regulation. By including program operations in regulation, this government will be able to efficiently respond to health system changes, incorporate innovative new technologies, and address emerging drug therapy needs.

To help explain the provisions included in the strategy and in this proposed legislation, I'd like to provide you with some background on the strategy's creation. To support the development of the Alberta pharmaceutical strategy, consultations with stakeholders were undertaken in 2008. They included the professional colleges and associations, the pharmaceutical industry, seniors groups, patient representatives, business associations, and insurance companies. A report was issued that summarized key findings. Many of these findings are reflected in both the strategy and in this legislation. For example, we heard that the program should facilitate cost sharing among individuals, employers, and government. As such, the bill enables the minister to establish premiums, copayments, deductibles, and subsidy rates for members.

We also heard about the need for a way to assist patients who do not tolerate or benefit from standard drug therapy. I'm excited that this bill includes a provision for an independent consideration process for nonstandard drug therapy. I strongly believe that this new independent consideration process will facilitate access to appropriate care and provide better service to Albertans in need.

As well, Bill 34 provides for a drug approval process that will further strengthen accountability to taxpayers by focusing government spending on drugs that are shown to have value. The Expert Committee on Drug Evaluation and Therapeutics, which provides essential advice on drug therapies to the minister, will continue, and other expert panels will be established. These committees will provide the expertise necessary to address the complex issues involved with operating a government drug program. Moreover, as outlined in the Alberta pharmaceutical strategy, a public members committee will be introduced to provide a societal and ethical perspective in the drug approval process.

To support these and other key initiatives, Bill 34 includes a number of additional provisions. The bill allows the minister to have providers, who participate in the administration of the drug program, undertake certain activities such as providing important information to patients about the cost of their drugs or communicating information about the drug program's processes and rules.

This bill also includes inspection authority, which strengthens the government's capacity to audit and verify the accuracy and eligibility of paid benefits. These provisions enhance the government's ability to ensure accountability and financial responsibility for public funding under the drug program. In addition, the bill incorporates liability protection for the minister, his committees, and advisers so that drug listing and benefit decisions can be made in an open manner based on public interest without fear of challenges from pharmaceutical manufacturers or others with commercial interests.

Mr. Speaker, this bill demonstrates our recognition of the important role of drug therapies in our health system and signifies this government's continued commitment to invest in and make drug coverage available to all Albertans in need.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Dr. Taft: Did the minister move adjournment? No. Okay. I want to begin by noting that to our knowledge we weren't expecting this bill to be debated this afternoon, from our arrangement with the House leaders. However, we'll do the best that we can. Perhaps with the agreement of the Government House Leader I'll move adjournment.

Mr. Renner: We were to debate and adjourn, so you can adjourn debate.

Dr. Taft: Okay. Mr. Speaker, perhaps it's just a simple misunderstanding, so I'll move adjournment of this bill. Thank you.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Cao in the chair]

The Chair: The chair would like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 10 Supportive Living Accommodation Licensing Act

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. This bill addresses what will be and has been an area of real concern probably for all of us, certainly for many of us as MLAs. Undoubtedly we've received comments and complaints from constituents who have had concerns about supportive living and are feeling like things aren't quite the way they ought to be, so I hope that this bill addresses some of those concerns. I know that I've had concerns as an MLA, and I'm guessing that any number of other people have.

Given that we're in committee, I'd like to spend just a few minutes on some of the specifics of this bill and go through a section-by-section analysis. I'm going to start, Mr. Chairman, with the definitions. I've been trying to think through exactly how you capture what is a supportive living accommodation and what isn't and how you make it appropriate to capture under this act what you intend to capture and don't capture other things.

The definition right here under section 1(g) of supportive living accommodation says:

“Supportive living accommodation” means buildings or units in buildings that are intended for permanent residential living where an operator also provides or arranges for services in order to assist residents to live as independently as possible.

Now, that strikes me as very, very broad, and I guess that’s the basis that the bill is going to build on. What we’re talking about here is a building or units in a building intended for permanent residential living. Well, that could be an apartment, condominium, house, boarding house. It could be all kinds of things.

It says that there has to be an operator who provides or arranges for services – so the operator doesn’t actually have to provide anything – to assist residents to live as independently as possible. Again I have to wonder: what in the world does that really mean?

Then it goes on gradually to narrow that, Mr. Chairman, in section 2. It says it has to be “provided to 4 or more adults who are not related to the operator.” So right away if you have three people in a facility, then that’s not going to be covered under this bill, and I think that needs to be considered. We’re not trying to capture really small operations; for better or for worse, I’m not sure. I mean, I don’t see why it couldn’t be the case that three unrelated people living in a permanent facility and getting these services would also be protected, so perhaps the minister at some point will be able to address that.

Then it says that the operator has to provide or arrange for services “related to safety and security for the persons.” It doesn’t say what kind of services, so that could be something as simple as an alarm service in a building or, you know, a monitoring service at the front door. Is that all we’re limited to? Do we want to capture something as broad as that?

Then it says under 2(1)(c):

The operator provides, offers or arranges for

- (i) at least one meal per day, or not “and” but “or”
- (ii) housekeeping services.

It seems to me that we need to think this through here. Meals may not be provided. It may just be housekeeping services. Does that mean that we might end up capturing, you know, a rooming house where a weekly housekeeping service is provided? There may not be any meals, but there could be a security system at the front door and weekly housekeeping or weekly laundry, and that’s it. Are we meaning to capture those sorts of facilities under here? I think we want to think all that through. Some comments from the minister on that at some point would be helpful in debate.

Then the licensing requirements are laid out. I should point out that there are some exclusions under the application here. I’m under section 2.

This Act does not apply to

- (a) a nursing home under the Nursing Homes Act
- (b) an approved hospital . . .
- (c) a facility referred to in . . . the Social Care Facilities Licensing Act, or
- (d) a class, type or category of supportive living accommodation designated as exempt in accordance with the regulations, which is absolutely wide open and completely undefined.

So right away, Mr. Chairman, I’m going to be looking for some clarity from the government members. What are we capturing under this bill? Why have we set the minimum size? Why have we set some of the standards the way we’ve set them?

There are then the licensing provisions of the bill. Clearly, it says that a licence is required, which is reassuring. Then it goes on to explain the application for a licence or a person who is ineligible or how a licence may be refused or cancelled and that kind of thing, so I’m going to assume that that’s pretty straightforward.

Then we begin to get to some of the issues of how this legislation might be actually acted upon in section 5, which is titled Designation of Director. It says under 5(1) that “the Minister may designate a director for the purposes of this Act,” and then in 5(2), the director under this “may delegate to any person any of the duties imposed or powers conferred on the director under this Act.” So we’re setting up a standard sort of bureaucratic arrangement here to implement the act. We end up with a director under the act and then inspectors, which are addressed under section 6.

Then the role and responsibilities of the inspector to conduct inspections are under section 7. This is where I begin to have a few other questions, Mr. Chairman. Under Inspections it says here: “At the request of the director, for the purposes of ensuring compliance with this Act, the regulations, [or] an order,” inspections may be undertaken at any reasonable hour. It says: “An inspector may, with the permission of the operator . . . at any reasonable hour enter the supportive living accommodation.” I think we need to consider fully in this Assembly the issue of “with the permission of the operator.” Perhaps this is done after the fact or later in this legislation. How would the bill allow an inspector to enter a facility if there are serious concerns and the operator doesn’t want them to do that? What if the operator wants to enter at any hour? Maybe they want to enter at 3 in the morning for a particular reason. How is this legislation going to deal with that?

Frankly, one of my concerns with inspections under this bill and with the attitude towards inspections in some of the other fields is that the government typically gives notice that an inspection will be conducted unless there has been an explicit complaint. I think we need to consider that. I understand the pros and the cons, and I don’t think we should always be in a default position of giving notice of a routine inspection. Frankly, I don’t know why we wouldn’t once in a while just do a routine inspection without notice, just have the inspector walk in and see what it’s like when nobody is prepared for an inspection, see how clean the facility is, see how people are being treated, see if the security systems are actually enacted, see if the staff who are supposed to be there are actually there, and all those other things that should be in place every day but may not be unless an inspector is scheduled to come.

I have no doubt, Mr. Chairman, that from time to time – and I regret to say this – in some places there will be operators who inevitably are going to spruce up the facility because they know that tomorrow or next week the inspector is coming. So I would like to see provisions and an attitude from this government in this legislation and elsewhere that routine inspections can and do occur unannounced. I think that would improve the system at no extra cost, it would keep the system honest, and I think we would look after the residents of these facilities better. That’s one of my concerns here under section 7. The way section 7 is set up, at least initially, it looks like notice is going to be given of that inspection.

It says also in 7(2), “An inspector may enter the supportive living accommodation of a particular resident only with the permission of that resident or that resident’s legal representative.” Why are we doing that? Well, I suppose we’re doing that to respect privacy, but it also sets up a situation where for reasons of fear or for reasons of intimidation or for other untoward reasons people may not allow or invite an inspector into their facility when, in fact, they’d be served well by having that inspector come in.

It also says under 7(3) that an inspector may interview employees and residents of the accommodation, relatives, legal representatives, or “any other person who may have information relevant to the inspection.” Well, that’s a good provision. There should not be any particular limit on who the inspector may want to interview.

I would make the point at this moment, Mr. Chairman, that these inspectors, I hope, will be properly trained. It’s not clear in here, so far as I have yet seen, that the inspectors will be required to have a particular set of qualifications. Mr. Chairman, will the inspector be required to have any background in, let’s say, public health inspection or in health care or in police investigation or in anything else? What about interviewing skills? We clearly see here in section 7(3) that they’re allowed to interview virtually anybody who may have useful information. Well, that’s great, but I want to make sure that they also have the skills to conduct proper interviews.

5:30

If an inspector removes books, records, or other documents, they have to keep a record, and so on. That’s good. Under 7(5) when an inspector takes samples of any material, food, or equipment, the inspector shall give a receipt, and so on, and keep a record of that. That’s fine.

It goes on, then, under section 7(7):

If permission is refused or cannot be reasonably obtained under subsection (1) or if anyone prevents an inspector from exercising powers under subsection (1) or obstructs or hinders the inspector . . . a judge of the Court of Queen’s Bench may on the application of the inspector make any order.

In other words, it sounds here like if an inspection is blocked, the inspector has to go to court and get a judge to allow the inspection to occur. Well, I think there are some serious issues that need to be discussed there.

Maybe I’m misunderstanding, and maybe the minister or a government member will correct me in debate, but it seems to me here that if there’s a concern at a facility, if an inspector turns up and access is blocked – maybe the inspector even has turned up unannounced, but access is blocked – then the inspector has to go to court to get permission to conduct an inspection. Well, by the time they’ve gone to court and gone through all of that, the problems could be concealed, the place could be cleaned up, the mouldy old food that’s being served could be thrown out and replaced with new food, et cetera, et cetera.

So I am concerned here, Mr. Chairman, that the inspection process doesn’t have enough teeth. It doesn’t have enough muscle to really bite where it needs to bite. I think we need to discuss that and quite possibly consider an amendment as this bill proceeds.

Mr. Chairman, I know there are others here who wish to speak to this bill. I don’t want to monopolize all of the time. Being that we’re in committee, I know I can get up again, so I would like to give an opportunity to the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood or anywhere else to speak. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. As the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports I’m pleased to rise to debate the Supportive Living Accommodation Licensing Act. This legislation reflects the priorities of our government to increase the quality of life of seniors and persons with disabilities.

I feel very strongly that Bill 10 is needed legislation that reflects the growth and sophistication of the supportive living sector in Alberta. It’s legislation that recognizes the changing needs and complexities of seniors and persons with disabilities who want to live as independently as possible while having access to the accommodations and services that they need. This legislation will replace existing legislation for the licensing of supportive living accommodations in the province, and it will clearly define supportive living in legislation for the first time.

The Supportive Living Accommodation Licensing Act will also assist the Seniors and Community Supports ministry to achieve the mandate to improve the choice and availability of continuing care accommodations in the province. It will establish a licensing regime to assure quality accommodation and services relating to accommodation. It will enhance the safety and security of residents whether or not the facility is funded by the government. It will provide the ministry with the ability to respond quickly to change and improve the ministry’s ability to keep the standards up to date by meeting the changing needs of an evolving supportive living sector. It will establish a mechanism for addressing complaints and concerns about accommodations and services, and it will minimize licensing steps for operators with good track records and assist other operators to make changes where required so they are compliant to the legislation.

Mr. Chairman, we now do an inspection every single year. As the Member for Edmonton-Riverview mentioned, we give notice. That’s true; we give notice of the annual inspection. However, we also do random inspections when we feel it’s necessary. I want people to know that. Our inspectors are already well trained. We have done this inspection for over a year. You’ll see on our website. If you go to our website, you can look up every single facility in Alberta, and you can see whether it has been compliant or not. If it hasn’t been compliant and there’s been a complaint, you will also see that on the website if it hasn’t been resolved. I want you to know that that website is a very good tool for people to use to determine whether or not a facility is where they want to put a loved one, a friend, or themselves.

Under Bill 10 the province will also have the ability to take the required steps, including closing a facility, if an operator continues to not meet standards or when the residents’ safety is at risk.

As you can see, this is good legislation that will help seniors and persons with disabilities to live as independently as possible and to age in the right place. I urge all members to support Bill 10.

The Chair: The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I’d like to make a few comments with respect to this bill, Bill 10, the Supportive Living Accommodation Licensing Act. This is a bill which will legislate supportive living instead of having it fall under the Social Care Facilities Licensing Act, and it clarifies licensing requirements and strengthens investigation procedures.

Mr. Chairman, there are some positive things here. I want to agree with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview when he says that the inspections need to be random, regular, and unannounced. I think that that’s critical. In fact, when we had the long-term care report from the Auditor General, he indicated that people who do inspections of those facilities – and I think the same applies here – needed to be properly trained professional people and that they needed to make unannounced inspections, that the committee of volunteers led by a Conservative backbench member was just not up to the job, and it was a much more serious business and needed to be dealt with. I agree with respect to that point.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it’s probably a good thing that we have more regulation of supportive living, and in that sense I don’t have any difficulty supporting this bill. But I want to just indicate my very serious concern with the broader question which I think this fits into. Now, the minister has just spoken about the importance of making sure that people get the right care, and I agree with that. But what’s happening today is that hundreds of individuals require more care than they are getting and more care than they will get here.

The long-term care bed issue is a major issue, and it affects and impacts people in a variety of ways. One of the things that I want to see is some action on the part of government to limit or control or restrain or halt the conversion of long-term care beds into supportive living, and there's nothing in this act that really deals with that.

Here's what happens, Mr. Chairman, and it's happened in a number of places in our province, including at Hinton and several other places. You have long-term care facilities. Long-term care beds are expensive: people receive nursing care, they get their drugs for free, and there's a variety of services that are included in long-term care. You have patients in long-term care receiving these services and paying a fixed amount, and all of a sudden the operator decides for economic reasons to convert their facility or some of the beds from long-term care into assisted living or some other form. So you actually have people who are displaced who no longer get the care that they need and can no longer afford the additional services.

Part of the problem with this approach is its cost-plus basis. You pay a certain amount for beds, but if you need nursing care, you pay. If you need drugs, you pay. If you need additional services, you pay. There's a financial aspect and there's a care aspect that need to be dealt with. I think both of them deserve attention.

It's great to have additional licensing for supportive living, but we need to address the question of making sure that people who need long-term care beds can get them. Now, the minister of health has repeatedly said that the opposition wants to institutionalize people and put them in long-term care beds when they don't really need it, and I don't think that that's a fair statement, Mr. Chairman. I think the reality is that there are many people who actually need and need badly the services that they receive in long-term care beds but can't get them. They are in assisted living facilities. They are in supportive living facilities. They are in apartments. They are in their children's homes. They are in acute-care beds, in particular. Last night in the estimates I asked a question of the minister of health about that. In his own report it gives the number of people who are occupying acute-care beds that really need to be in long-term care beds. I think it's 500 or 600 people. Those people are occupying acute-care beds.

Of course, acute-care beds are much more expensive than long-term care beds, so there's a burden on the taxpayer, but it also means that there are not enough acute-care beds for throughput from emergency rooms. It's one of the key reasons, one of the fundamental reasons why we've seen a sharp rise in waiting room times in our hospitals. It's not that they can't intake the patients and treat them in the emergency rooms appropriately, but they have nowhere to put them when they've dealt with them. The acute-care beds are occupied by long-term care bed patients. So it affects a number of areas of our health care system and our seniors' support and housing network.

With respect to this bill it's fine that there is going to be greater regulation and higher fines and so on. I think that that is a very positive thing. But I do believe that if the government believes that this is the solution to the long-term care problem we have, they are sadly mistaken. I want to make sure that people who don't need long-term care beds or don't need to even be in an institution are not institutionalized. That's not the objective. The objective is to make sure that those who do need it have it available, and so far we haven't been able to do that.

The Conservative Party in the election promised about 600 new beds, but that was rescinded by the government's December 2008 continuing care strategy, which states that there won't be an increase in the number of long-term care beds over the next several years. Well, this contradicts some answers I got from the minister of health last night about construction of new long-term care beds. We're still trying to sort out exactly what the situation is.

We do know that the patients of an auxiliary hospital in Jasper, including some who were palliative, had their care changed to a designated assisted living situation. That meant, really, that they were only having housing provided when what they really need is continuing health care. In Hinton citizens are still fighting to reverse the decision of 2005 to convert their long-term care facilities into assisted living.

Mr. Chairman, I think that we need to have something – for example, a bill of rights or an ombudsman – for seniors in supportive living situations so that there are mechanisms to ensure that they're well cared for. Also, people in supportive living do not have tenancy protection. This bill contains a consequential amendment that exempts people in supportive living from the Residential Tenancies Act.

I have a few more things to say about the Alberta NDP action plan on long-term care, but I'm getting the "be quiet" signal from the Government House Leader. I don't really have to do what he says, but I did agree that I would move to adjourn debate even though I haven't quite gotten to the NDP action plan on long-term care. We may get back to that.

In the meantime, Mr. Chairman, in fulfillment of my agreement I will move that we adjourn debate on Bill 10.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 11

Fisheries (Alberta) Amendment Act, 2009

The Chair: Are there any questions, comments, or amendments to be offered on this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, and I'll swim upstream very fast. Bill 11, Fisheries (Alberta) Amendment Act, 2009, proposes more punitive penalties for fishery violations. The purpose is to equip the courts to include penalties that bind offenders to return fisheries back to a healthy state. The reason for this bill is tremendously sound because there are severe pressures in Alberta that affect fish populations. Alberta has only about 1,500 fish-bearing streams and 1,100 lakes, so careful management is needed to balance use by approximately 1,500 domestic, 200 commercial, and 300,000 anglers competing for these fish. That information comes from the Sustainable Resource Development fish conservation strategy for Alberta 2006 to 2010.

This is a great piece of legislation, and I suggest we call the vote on the legislation, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Seeing no other members who wish to debate on this bill, the chair shall now call the question.

[The clauses of Bill 11 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I move that the committee now rise and report Bill 11 and progress on Bill 10.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 11. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 10.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.
The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to thank all members for their co-operation in getting us through business this afternoon, and I move that we call it 6 o'clock and adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:50 p.m. to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon and welcome.

Let us pray. In our mind's eye let us see the awesome grandeur of the Rockies, the denseness of our forests, the fertility of our farmland, the splendour of our rivers, the richness of our resources, the energy of our people. Then let us rededicate ourselves as wise stewards of such bounty on behalf of all Albertans. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly Sine Chadi, a former member of the 1993 to '97 Legislative Assembly, the Member for Edmonton-Roper; Mr. Henry Mah, a wise elder from the Edmonton Chinese community as well as a member of the Order of Canada; as well, Dr. S.P. Singh, who is a retired professor from the University of Alberta and the president of the Indian societies of Edmonton as well as a humanitarian. I would ask my friends to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly some guests that are seated in your gallery: Consul Hou Danna from the Chinese Consulate General office in Calgary as well as Mr. Felix Guerrero, honorary consul general of the Philippines for southern Alberta. These guests are here today to join in the kickoff of Asian Heritage Month. They both play a key role in making the From Asian Shores to Alberta Prairies initiative a success. The Chinese consulate is donating 1,000 books to the regional library system.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the great honour to introduce to you and to members of the Legislature a group of Canadian Comprehensive Auditing Foundation fellows who are sitting in your gallery. They are participants in a nine-month international fellowship program based in Ontario, in Ottawa, and are visiting us today as part of the tour of western Canada.

Sponsored by the Canadian International Development Agency, the fellowship program is a collaboration between the office of the Auditor General of Alberta, the office of the Auditor General of Canada, and the Comprehensive Auditing Foundation. Our guests are from Ghana, Guyana, Kenya, St. Lucia, and Thailand, and two are from Vietnam. They are accompanied today by their hosts from the offices of the Auditor General of Canada and the Auditor General of Alberta. I would now ask all of our guests to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am thrilled to stand here today and introduce a very special class to you and through you to the Assembly. The grade 6 class from St. Anthony school in Drayton Valley along with their teacher Dawn McConnell and parent helpers Charlene Wojcicki and Sharon Davidson are in the members' gallery today. I would like to point out one student in particular who is very special to me, my youngest daughter, Courtney Siobhan, a politician in her own right. It is wonderful to have Courtney and her classmates and teacher and parent helpers here today. I am sure they thoroughly enjoyed their tour and a special stop at the Premier's office. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Boutilier: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce through you to members of the Assembly three grade 6 classes from Timberlea school in the oil sands capital of the world – you might have heard of it – Fort McMurray, Alberta. It's my pleasure to greet them, their bus driver, and their teachers. There are 82 of them here today. I'd like to ask them to rise and receive the very warm welcome of the Assembly. They're entering as we speak.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the government's first group of policy interns. They're co-ordinated by corporate human resources. The new policy internship program provides postsecondary graduate students interested in the field of public policy a unique opportunity to work side by side with seasoned policy professionals in government. This talented group will contribute to important policy initiatives that will impact Alberta.

The policy internship program is part of the government's workforce plan to attract and retain employees to ensure a bright and prosperous future for all Albertans. I can assure you that after meeting with this group, the future of our public service looks extremely positive. I would ask these interns in the members' gallery to please rise and accept the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology.

Mr. Horner: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise and introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a group of four people who donated some funds to a charity in St. Albert at the St. Albert Housing Society fundraising breakfast. We invited them to come here and have lunch and tour the Legislature. They did that, and we had a great chat at lunch today, talking about developments in St. Albert and the world economy and a number of technology innovations that we're doing. They're seated in the members' gallery this afternoon. I would ask that they stand as I call their names. They are Bob and Lori Holm and Paul and Adrina Falkowski. I'd ask all members to give them the warmest greetings of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to introduce to you and through you an old friend of mine, Bill Hunter.

He's seated in the public gallery. Bill is presently from Calgary. He's formerly from the Gulch. People might recognize that as Dinosaur park, Drumheller. Bill and I go back a long way, 50 years actually, to when we were survey partners at SAIT though it wasn't SAIT then. It was actually the Provincial Institute of Technology and Art in those days. Bill and a group of us went to school together, worked together, lived together, and partied together for many years. Bill is up here today meeting with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. I'd ask my colleagues in the Assembly to give Bill the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly six very special people from the constituency of Athabasca-Redwater who are also good friends and very involved community workers. They've come in today to have lunch with me and talk about a whole raft of subjects that are important to our constituency: Jack Dennett from Redwater, Noel Major from Athabasca, Bob and Mabel Dick from Athabasca, Deb Crosswell from Thorhild, and Carol Lund from Athabasca. I'd ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly some visitors from Calgary. They're here to join in the kickoff of Asian Heritage Month event earlier today. Some of them are seated in your gallery. We have Dr. Mayi Arcellana-Panlilio, a professor at the U of C and cochair of the Asian Heritage Foundation. She played a leadership role in raising $10,000 for the book donation this afternoon. Next to her we have Mr. Vladimir Panlilio, an engineer who volunteers with the foundation. He played a key role in preparing the big cheque for the donation today. Then we have Ms Tuyet Lam, a board member of the AHF and one of the most active members of Calgary's Vietnamese community. She was instrumental in raising $10,000 for the book project. Then seated in the gallery we have Ms Nancy Li, a student at the University of Calgary, who performed the beautiful Carmen piece for us this afternoon in the rotunda. Mr. Yang Li, professor at the University of Calgary, today played the special role of driver for Ms Nancy Li. We also have Mr. Ron Sheppard, chairman of the Parkland Regional library system, who was here earlier this afternoon to accept a donation from the Heritage Foundation for the purpose of purchasing multilingual books.

If you would allow me to finish another set of introductions. The Edmonton Multicultural Health Brokers Co-operative helped us to organize the lunch for this afternoon's event. This group together with the Edmonton public library is developing a formal partnership to engage immigrant and refugee communities in designing relevant programs and innovative collaborations. Seated in the members' gallery we have Ms Linda Williams, from the Edmonton public library, who co-chairs the committee. From the Multicultural Health Brokers Co-operative we have Ms Nasreen Omar, president of the board of directors; Ms Nhan Lu, vice-president of the board; Ms Tigist Dafla, board member; and Mrs Dormitorio, who is a Filipino member who has been working with the Mill Woods community library. I would like to ask members of the House to give them the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm just delighted to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the newest member of the constituency office team in the fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre. Joining me under the STEP program this summer is a young man named Jordan. I'll ask Jordan to stand. Jordan is a student at the University of Alberta. He is in the final year of his political science degree, which is why it's always a good idea to come and work in a constituency office. After many years of being on the outside looking in, he is interested in being on the other side. Please join me in welcoming Jordan Taft to the Alberta Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to introduce to you and through you sitting in the members' gallery Mr. Amarjeet Sohi. He's one of our local leaders from the city of Edmonton, city councillor from ward 6. He's also on safe communities and, I believe, one of the first Indo-Canadians elected to city council in Edmonton.

Also sitting in the gallery behind me is Mr. Ned Lee, president of the Lee association of Edmonton, as well as Mrs. Lai Chu Li Kong, vice-chair of the Edmonton Chinatown Multi-cultural Centre as well as chairman of the Edmonton Chinese library foundation. I would ask them all to rise so they can receive the traditional warm welcome of my friends in this Assembly.

Thank you.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Asian Heritage Month

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In 2002 May was officially designated as Asian Heritage Month in recognition of the important contributions of Asian Canadians to the settlement, growth, social, and cultural development of Canada. In addition, various groups have been organizing events to celebrate Asian Heritage Month in Alberta since 2001.

Asian Heritage Month engages people of all backgrounds through pan-Asian cultural events that foster awareness of the broad spectrum of Asian Canadians' social participation and cultural heritage. With your background, Mr. Speaker, in East Asian history, I'm sure that you can attest that Asian Heritage Month is all about culture and history. The presence of Asian Canadians in Alberta dates back many, many years, and currently Asian Canadians make up 15 per cent of the population in Alberta's two major cities.

Mr. Speaker, I'm proud to represent a province that is as culturally strong and diverse as Alberta. As you can see, we have one of the most if not the most diverse representative bodies in all of North America, and that is something to be proud of. I want to thank all those who immigrated here over the years for their contribution to the culture of Alberta, and I hope this culture continues to flourish.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater.

Wildfire Update

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Wildfires are burning in many communities across the province, and some of these fires are threatening homes and businesses. As I understand it, three homes were lost in my constituency alone yesterday. As we can all imagine, residents watching the flames can be filled with fear and anxiety.

On behalf of the Premier and every one of our caucus I want to recognize the tremendous efforts of the volunteer firefighters, who are working 24 hours a day to ensure the safety and security of the families who call these communities home. The services and support provided to the local residents is truly remarkable. Most of the firefighters battling these blazes are volunteers, making tremendous sacrifices and taking time away from their work and their families. Their selfless dedication is a true reflection of Albertans' willingness to support and protect their neighbours. I know of a Canadian soldier who just returned from Afghanistan, came home Thursday, changed his boots, and has been on the front line in Lamont fighting the fires since Sunday. Another volunteer has been on the scene full-time. He told his boss that the fires are where he had to be, and he didn't know when he would be back to work.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to acknowledge the efforts of all these volunteers, who selflessly go beyond the call of duty, working long hours and fighting exhaustion. Their efforts are nothing short of heroic. These brave individuals are supported by a range of agencies, including RCMP, Alberta Sustainable Resource Development, Alberta Emergency Management Agency, Service Alberta, volunteer organizations, and by their municipalities, neighbours, and communities. The efforts of everyone are truly invaluable in this time of crisis.

On behalf of the Premier, all of my colleagues, and the residents of these communities I want to extend a heartfelt thanks to everyone who was there and to those who are still there to ensure our communities and families are safe.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mental Health Services

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This morning I attended the Canadian Mental Health Association, Edmonton region, meet and greet breakfast. Since I'm already quite familiar with the decline in mental health services under this administration, the concerns of the people in attendance came as no surprise. But this administration needs to hear these concerns, pressingly so, and I'm passing them on today.

Since the indiscriminate closure of mental health beds in the province years ago, Albertans needing treatment for mental health problems have had few places to go. As a result, many Albertans with mental illness have wound up on the streets, plugging our emergency wards and hospital beds and simply struggling along as best they can, with a vastly reduced quality of life, at risk to themselves and to others.

While I acknowledge the renewed commitment to child mental health in this administration, we are simply providing inadequate services in this province. As citizens we have a solemn duty to take care of each other, especially our most vulnerable. Instead, this administration has abdicated its responsibility, with costly and tragic results. Again, Mr. Speaker, penny-wise, pound-foolish. In addition to the moral imperative, we see that homelessness, emergency care cost increases, family impacts, policing, lack of productivity far outweigh the costs of treatment in a properly funded system.

One message this morning rang out clearest of all: it's time to stop treating mental illness as a stigma and a poor second cousin within the health care system. The stigma of mental health is unacceptable and unjust to Albertans suffering from real medical problems. Education is needed, both in the public at large and for this administration. The Auditor General himself has said repeatedly that we are not meeting the mark, with incomplete standards and gaps in services.

I urge the administration to invest in mental health and assign it the priority it deserves. A healthy Alberta is possible when we make the appropriate commitments to mental health services.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Health System Restructuring

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government has finally admitted that their goal is to privatize health care. I was disappointed this week in estimates to hear the minister of health say: "It's about time we started running health care like a $7 billion business and not having it run by health care professionals. I'm not going to sit here and have a board of health... professionals running a $7 billion business." Thank you for making the Premier's intentions quite clear. To the minister: when did this government decide that health care was a business?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, this Leader of the Opposition can't figure out that when we are spending some 13 billion dollars of taxpayers' money, we should be running it like a business is run. What the hon. leader failed to mention in his preamble was the question that he asked, and the question was around something to the effect: why wasn't our new board made up of health care professionals? My response was: we have health care professionals who are involved in the delivery of the system, but when it comes to the governance model, we need to ensure that we have the best and brightest minds in the world.

Dr. Swann: So is this minister saying that there are no qualified health professionals in Alberta to sit on this board?

Mr. Liepert: I never said that at all, Mr. Speaker. What I said is that we have outstanding qualified health professionals who are doing outstanding work in delivering health care. It never hurts to have some outside views as to what works and what doesn't work. In many cases our board members have experience in other regions – in fact, in one case another country – to bring a different view to health care. If we want to stay with the same narrow, myopic view that the opposition parties have, we will always have a system that, quite frankly, at this stage is no longer sustainable if we don't make changes. It is not as accessible as it needs to be to meet the needs of Albertans and it is not effective and it is not efficient.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again the minister is launching out on a new experiment for the health care system. I would just like to ask the minister what evidence he has to shift now to a business model for health care delivery in Alberta.

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, let's be clear. This is not an experiment. This is the model that will be going forward to deliver health care in this province. Already there are successes out there. We had a three-hour debate in estimates the other night. I pointed out a number of success stories. He chooses to ignore those, and that's fine. But as I talk to Albertans in this province, they tell me consistently: you as government are on the right path, keep moving forward, and don't blink.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

H1N1 Influenza Virus Exposure

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, once again we're seeing evidence across the province that communications around influenza are somewhat smattered and inconsistent. One Calgary school, for example, has sent messages to their parents that influenza is affecting the school while schools in Edmonton are being kept out of information when there's a case of influenza. Could the minister clarify why there is already inconsistency and uncertainty and a sense of hiding information in Alberta around this new H1N1 influenza?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I'll answer that question on behalf of the Minister of Education. The process that we have taken right from day one is that if it is a school-aged child that has been identified as one that has tested positive for the influenza, the school board is notified. School boards are locally elected bodies. They have the right to make a decision in conjunction with the principal as to whether or not it is significant enough to inform the parents. Some have chosen, as I understand it, to communicate to parents; others may not have. But, surely, that's a decision that a locally elected school board can make.

Dr. Swann: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, the restructuring of the health system is creating unwarranted anxiety and breakdowns in communication. I'm hearing from a number of regions that they're looking to their health unit, some are looking to their medical officer, some are looking to the province, some are looking to their school board for direction. Are these medical decisions going to be made at the school board level, Mr. Minister?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, in the time that I've been in this Assembly, I'm not quite sure that I've heard a remark coming from someone with medical training that could be such an absurd comment. The Leader of the Opposition knows full well, he's been told consistently all week that the chief medical officer of health is the one that is leading this communications effort. It has been going exceedingly well, to plan. I guess what is irritating the Leader of the Opposition is that he has nothing controversial to grab onto, so he starts to invent things that he thinks he's heard out there from people in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. leader?

Dr. Swann: No further questions. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Stucco Exterior Wallcovering

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our caucus fought this government on the pine shakes scandal, standing up for homeowners' rights, but this government doesn't learn. Now homeowners are facing more costs as a result of bad building practices. What is a condo buyer to do? They trust this government to have effective standards, and this government has let them down again. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: why hasn't the government improved the building codes to stop this bad construction?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, this government has indeed improved the building codes. It has improved the building codes in regard to the high-intensity residential fires. We also did receive a handful of calls with complaints about building practices. From that we got the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs to do an investigation and consultation with key stakeholders, and that member has provided me with his recommendations.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What is the government going to do to support homeowners who are now out thousands and thousands of dollars because of the bad standard this government has allowed for years?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure exactly what bad standard he's talking about. We have the Safety Codes Council, that monitors the building codes and the safety codes of buildings in this province on a regular basis. They do an incredibly professional job. We as a government make sure that if there are situations or there are concerns or there are problems, we address them.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are thousands of homes which could rot because of the stucco covering linked to leaky walls. To the minister again. The minister has had months to get this done. Monitoring, reviewing, waiting: these are all specialities of this government. Unfortunately, action isn't. When can Albertans finally expect action on this issue?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, this is very interesting. We have one individual that brought forward a concern. The member opposite read it in the paper, and all of a sudden it's a concern for months. That particular concern that he's talking about was brought to my attention yesterday, and we are looking into it. I've asked my Safety Codes Council as well as the assistant deputy minister who is in charge to look into that concern. The question is not so much, as I know it right now, a question of product but a question of workmanship. We're looking into it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by the hon. Member for Strathcona.

Parental Choice in Education

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. This government has dismissed NDP assertions that allowing teachers to be hauled before the Human Rights Commission for teaching something that a parent doesn't like will hurt education in this province. "Absolutely ludicrous," said the Education minister. "Flights of fancy," said the culture minister. Well, parents, teachers, school superintendents, and school boards have all said that the NDP was right and the government was wrong. In light of this, is the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit willing to drop his attempt to enshrine so-called parental rights in the human rights system?

Speaker's Ruling Anticipation

The Speaker: Okay. Hon. members, yesterday I advised hon. members that we do have an Order Paper. This bill is up for debate this afternoon. I indicated that prior to the date in which the bill was up for debate, we'd allow questions in the question period, but we'll not use the time of the question period if that bill is up this afternoon. If you've got a short response, fine, but we're not going to spend three questions on something that's going to be debated this afternoon in this House.

Mr. Blackett: Mr. Speaker, we'll save the debate for this afternoon, but I've got a copy of the press release, and I don't see anywhere that they say that the New Democratic Party was right.

Mr. Mason: That's perhaps because the minister of culture can't read between the lines.

Groups representing Alberta's school councils, teachers, school superintendents, and elected school boards agree with Alberta's NDP that this government's policy will have a negative impact on the education of children. Given this view, coming from all sectors of the public education system, will the minister of culture admit that he is wrong and withdraw this ill-conceived policy before he does some real damage to Albertans' education system?

The Speaker: The hon. minister if you wish.

Mr. Blackett: We'll save the debate, Mr. Speaker, for this afternoon.

Mr. Mason: Well, Mr. Speaker, that was a question about policy.

Enshrining the rights of children not to learn about certain things in human rights is about as backward a step as there could be. It will not only make it harder for teachers to teach; it will make it harder for children to learn. Given that teachers, parents, superintendents, and public school boards have not been consulted, will the minister agree to withdraw these changes until the concerns of these groups have been addressed? Please answer the question.

The Speaker: No. That's not the way it works. We have rules that we follow. We're moving on.

The hon. Member for Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Wildfire Update

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Wildfires have been burning out of control in many Alberta communities. My question is for the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Can the minister please provide an update on the wildfire situation in Strathcona and Lamont counties?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Lamont county and Strathcona county both have fires that still aren't completely under control. Our agency has deployed its mobile command unit to assist the fighting of these fires. These counties have declared local states of disaster. The concern with these two counties is the two fires joining together because of the extensive-ness of the fire. There are residences that have been evacuated. We will continue to provide the resources and expertise to help these communities and their residents.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what's the status of the fire in Sturgeon?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, last night the fire in Sturgeon was very active, and it's now partially under control. They did declare a state of emergency yesterday, and several homes have been damaged and destroyed. The local emergency operations centre activated in your constituency in Morinville. The Alberta Emergency Management mobile unit has also been deployed for this fire. We have a reception centre for evacuees set up in Gibbons, and we're trying to co-ordinate the efforts and will continue to do so.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Also for the same minister. There have also been several recent fires in many other areas of the province. Could the minister give us an update on the status of those fires?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, yes, we did have approximately 20 fires that have been raging through Alberta. The fires in these areas have been reported to be contained or extinguished, and that is very much thanks to the continuing support and the assistance of volunteers and professionals. We continue to provide support and assistance also to the four First Nation communities in Hobbema as well as the Saddle Lake First Nation. We very much want to thank all of the agencies and the firefighters for the work that they are doing in battling these fires.

Provincial Electoral Divisions

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, at a time when government should be cautious about adding to the bottom line, this government is adding four more MLAs to this Legislature. A rough and ready calculation indicates this would cost taxpayers an additional $10 million over a four-year term. To the Justice minister. Albertans need four more MLAs like a dog needs fleas. Why are we saddling the taxpayers with these additional costs?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In my humble opinion, MLAs play a pretty important part in effectively representing Albertans. What we know about this province is that in the past five or six years we've experienced tremendous growth. We've had to make very difficult decisions. We've wanted to make sure that Albertans get great service, we want to make sure that Albertans are effectively represented, and we believe that an increase in the number of seats will allow that to happen.

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, this is just another example of this administration's big-government approach to governing Alberta. To the Justice minister: considering the economics and our current technological capabilities, can't we make do with 83 MLAs in this Assembly?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is a complicated business. This is something that's going to get to, I think, the fundamentals as to how we want to govern ourselves in this province. We think it's very important that as this province grows, we don't look in a parochial way or a backward way at how we've done things before. We think this province is growing and changing, it's diverse, and it needs to have effective representation. An increase in the number of seats will allow that to happen.

Mr. Hehr: Well, Mr. Speaker, without moving too far outside my own job description, I did notice that B.C. has a larger population and less MLAs. Why don't we follow their lead instead of following this big government approach to doing things?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We sit in this Assembly every day. We debate matters of important public policy. We think that it's important for Albertans to have a voice in this House. We think it's important as a government for people to be elected to this House and to be able to talk about public policy. We know from the opposition that they seem to have some difficulty with that and have some 1-800 number where they think people should be able to call in and ask questions. We think that that's an important piece of dialogue but that people should be elected to effectively represent Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Wildfire Assistance

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Unfortunately, this year my constituency is once again affected by wildfires. We know the volunteer firefighters are out there on the front lines working 24 hours a day doing a tremendous job to protect their neighbours and their communities and their municipalities. My question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Can the minister tell us how we as a government are supporting these firefighting efforts?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, I visited the fires last night, and I really want to pass on the appreciation of the government for the efforts of the volunteers. I talked to the Premier, and he's very concerned and will be heading to the sites when he does return. We have activated the Government Emergency Operations Centre to co-ordinate the response. We are on-scene with equipment and getting additional resources. We're partnering with municipalities, SRD, Service Alberta. Just as a point of interest, last night I talked to an individual who has not gone home since Sunday, and I asked him how he does it. He says: "You know, there's only one thing that motivates me. I know that they would support me the same if I was in the same situation."

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. He indicates that he was actually at the fires last night. While I can commend the minister and the Alberta Emergency Management Agency and the municipalities who are co-ordinating the efforts, we know that many of these firefighters are volunteers. Can he elaborate about the role that they are playing in these efforts?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would say, I guess, in short, that it's nothing short of heroic. We have individuals that are putting their lives on the line for communities and for their neighbourhoods. They are well trained and committed to serving, and we're doing everything we can to support them. Their neighbours are supporting the firefighters by providing food, by providing support. This is a community effort in time of disaster and emergency. This is when communities pull together to support each other.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. I know that his department gets engaged and is engaged in these firefighting efforts. Can the minister tell us what resources his department has committed to fighting these wildfires?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to start by thanking the Minister of Municipal Affairs for being on the front lines last night and being there with the volunteer fighters and the communities there that are fighting them and congratulate those people for their bravery. Our priority responsibility is in the green zone. We've had 217 fires in those areas already. Fortunately, at the moment we have spare capacity. With the fires at Strathcona and Lamont we've been able to send in 90 SRD firefighters to join the 100 volunteer fighters that are there. Plus, components of the Alberta air force are there, the air tanker and two helicopters plus several bulldozers. We've provided similar support in other areas of the province. So long as we have spare capacity, SRD is ready and willing to be there to help our communities.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Nursing Shortage

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As part of the implementation of Vision 2020, the government's latest scheme to increase the role of private operators in public health care – my first question is to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. What are the recruitment targets this year to address the critical shortage of all nurses here in Alberta?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, that's an excellent question. Our ministry is well aware of the shortages of health professionals in the province of Alberta. We are maintaining our efforts in recruiting and attracting individuals in that particular field from around the world. We will continue to hold various fairs across individual countries to bring additional support here.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: what is the ratio of registered nurses to licensed practical nurses recruitment by the department this year?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated, we have needs on both sides. I really don't have those numbers at my fingertips. I don't have those ratios there. Certainly, those numbers could mostly likely be made available if the hon. member wants them.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I'll take the hon. minister up on that. Certainly, Dr. Duckett is quite curious about what this ratio will be, according to his blog.

Now to the Minister of Health and Wellness. In 2008 there were 6 RNs per 1 LPN in the old Capital health region, according to their annual report. According to the annual report of the Calgary health region, there were 9 RNs to 1 LPN, and it was a 2 to 1 ratio in the old East Central region. What ratio is the province now going to implement for registered nurses and licensed practical nurses in your Vision 2020 scheme?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, you know, if life were as simple as what this hon. member tries to make it out to be, that everything could have ratios – what the Alberta Health Services management team is going to be doing is ensuring that all efforts are made to have the right care provider in the right place at the right time. That may be an LPN. It may be a registered nurse. In some cases it might be a combination with an aide. There is a whole variety of ways to ensure that we provide the health care that Albertans need.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Alberta Law Enforcement Response Team

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A recent public update on activities of the province-funded Alberta law enforcement response team shows that ALERT enforcement units are making good headway in preventing serious and violent crime. Two hundred and nineteen police officers and support personnel arrested 133 individuals over a period of three months. My constituents and all Albertans are encouraged by the results and hope that even more could be done. My question today is to the hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security. What I'm curious . . .

The Speaker: Well, you've now got the question. Time finished. It's the response time now.

Mr. Lindsay: Well, Mr. Speaker, what I will talk about is how effective the ALERT model has been in tackling serious and violent crime in our province. With an approach that emphasizes integration and co-ordination, the ALERT units target organized crime and gangs as well as online child exploitation in a very effective manner. These investigations do require substantial time and resources to gather intelligence information, identify targets, and gather enough evidence to make arrests. I'm confident that through the efforts of ALERT we'll continue to reduce the negative impacts of crime in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same hon. minister. You indicated that ALERT units are doing an effective job. Does that mean that we can expect the same results every quarter or more effectiveness using the same resources, more arrests, more drugs and guns seized, and more gang members taken off our streets?

Mr. Lindsay: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member that the great work of ALERT will continue. Again, our top priority in this province is to reduce crime so that Albertans are safe, and that means targeting and arresting those who have no respect for laws and use violence and intimidation. We will continue to do everything we can to bring those people to justice.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same hon. minister. My constituents are very glad that government continues to take strong action in combatting gangs and violent crimes. Will the changed ALERT model that you are considering put more police on our streets?

Mr. Lindsay: Mr. Speaker, ALERT has been up and running now for a couple of years, and, yes, we are looking at refining the model to make sure it operates more effectively. We are doing that, and we're sure that these changes will improve the efficiency of our police across the province.

Having said that, in regard to the comments about additional police, our Premier spoke about that numerous times. We will be adding four integrated gang units in April, made up of 67 members, to address ongoing gang and organized crime activities in the province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Lobbyists

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recent news out of Saskatchewan illustrates that they performed their due diligence when attempting to maintain a presence in Washington, DC. My questions would be to the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. The Alberta taxpayers are paying $40,000 a month for two high-priced lobbyists in Washington, DC, while the government of Saskatchewan just hired a former U.S. ambassador for less money. Why didn't this government hire David Wilkins for less money?

Mr. Stevens: Well, I was just meeting with Ambassador Wilkins yesterday, as a matter of fact. I think that Saskatchewan did an excellent job in selecting Ambassador Wilkins to represent their interests. I can tell you that Ambassador Wilkins is a good friend of Canada, a good friend of the west, and we're looking forward to working with Saskatchewan and Ambassador Wilkins in addressing the oil sands issues in the United States.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. Now, the Premier of Saskatchewan justified this $400,000 annual expense to the taxpayers of Saskatchewan by saying that it was a better deal than any other province was getting for similar service. In light of this development does the minister still feel that Albertans are getting the best value for their tax dollars?

Mr. Stevens: Well, Mr. Speaker, I must say that the Premier of Saskatchewan said what I, too, would say if I were in his situation. There is no doubt that Ambassador Wilkins will do a very good job for them. I must say this to the hon. member: I'm absolutely satisfied that we have outstanding assistance in terms of Ambassador Blanchard and Mr. Fraser and the firms that they represent.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. Albertans have been told to do more with less. Can the minister tell me why the Alberta government isn't operating in the same business mode? Would those contracts be reviewed?

Mr. Stevens: Well, Mr. Speaker, the contracts that we're talking about are one-year contracts. They started, as I recall, towards the end of March 2009. I'm sure that we will be reviewing those contracts as they expire sometime in terms of perhaps March 2010.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Anxious parents across Edmonton have been asking their children all week if any of their classmates have suddenly been absent. This is because they're worried about the H1N1 flu infection and want to protect their children. I'm a parent of young children, as are many members of this House, and when there's a chance that my kids have been exposed to a dangerous virus, I want to know the facts. To the minister of health: why are you denying parents the right to know whether their kids have been exposed to H1N1 in their school?

Mr. Liepert: I'd suggest that if the member wants to find out about issues at her school, she should call her school trustee.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, school boards are actually looking to the chief medical officer of health for direction on this one. As a parent I know parents are regularly warned by schools of less serious public health concerns such as school-specific outbreaks of lice and chicken pox. To the same minister: if parents can be told about an outbreak of lice in their school, why can't they be told about a serious incident like a severe H1N1 infection?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, the chief medical officer of health has been very clear. He said that we shouldn't overreact, that we shouldn't be closing schools. In the case of when there is a situation with a student, it's my understanding that the Department of Education does contact the school board. It's the school board's decision what information they want to hand out.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, so far all we have is chaos. School boards are cancelling trips to unrelated destinations all over the world. Meanwhile, parents can't be told if there's an H1N1 case in their own school. We need a clear policy that tells parents right away if a child in their school has H1N1. Why won't the minister of health commit to a policy that publicly identifies schools where this flu virus occurs so that parents can decide how best to protect their children?

Mr. Liepert: Well, I would suggest that the best way to protect your children is to tell them the truth and not overreact, Mr. Speaker. If there's a situation that the school board deems serious enough that it would require a school closure, they will make that decision. Clearly, to this stage that hasn't been the case, so I think the member is worrying needlessly.

Seniors' Benefit Program

Mr. Allred: Mr. Speaker, yesterday evening I hosted a forum in my constituency on health care and seniors' supports. I want to thank the hon. ministers of Health and Wellness and Seniors and Community Supports as well as my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Meadowlark for their participation. My questions today are to the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. A number of seniors at the forum expressed great concern about lack of government support for vulnerable seniors. Can the minister describe what she's doing to support seniors in need?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, this government is committed to supporting low-income seniors who are most in need. The proof is in the 2009 budget, which included a $48.6 million increase to seniors' programs. One of these programs is the Alberta seniors' benefit, or ASB program, which provides a monthly income supplement to approximately 138,000 seniors. The maximum monthly benefits have increased, and we expect another 6,000 seniors or so to be eligible when the qualifying income thresholds are increased in July. Our assistance to low- and moderate-income seniors also includes help with dental work.

Mr. Allred: My first supplemental is to the same minister. Some of the people at the forum expressed doubts about the government's commitment to providing care and housing options for aging Albertans. What is the minister doing to ensure that Albertans have the supports to spend their retirement years in their own homes and communities?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, seniors have told us that they want to live as independently as possible for as long as possible in their own homes in their own communities. To help seniors do this, Alberta Health and Wellness and my ministry have developed a continuing care program to help seniors age in the right place. This includes looking at home-care services and how to provide supports to help seniors remain in their homes longer. It also includes increasing the number of supportive care facilities, and my budget this year has another $50 million to help increase those numbers, and that's added onto the $119 million that I just announced a month ago for over 3,000 new supportive living units.

Mr. Allred: My final question is to the same minister. One of the issues I spoke about last night is the need for individuals to prepare for their own retirements. Since there's going to be a surge of baby boomers about to retire, what is the minister's department doing to prepare for the major demographic shifts that are about to occur?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, Alberta's population, like the rest of Canada's and, indeed, like the rest of the world's, is aging. Although nobody has found the fountain of youth yet, we are preparing for this demographic shift. This preparation includes the Demographic Planning Commission, which received over 10,000 survey responses on the Internet, and we spoke to over 100 stakeholder organizations. We are now combining the work of the commission with research and cross-ministry input to develop an aging population policy framework. This framework is intended to help government make decisions for Alberta's seniors population.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Protection of Persons in Care

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There have been far too many cases of mistreatment and abuse of seniors in Alberta. Files on cases of abuse and mistreatment go back years, and many people trying to help these seniors are running into dead end after dead end. Their concerns seem to go unheard. My questions are to the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. How is the minister working with other groups to resolve these problems of mistreatment and abuse? When can seniors expect better protection from this government?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, this government has very good legislation called Protection for Persons in Care Act. Under this legislation we investigate every single complaint that comes forward about abuse in any kind of supportive living facility. If the abuse is in a criminal form, those complaints will go to the police. We have inspections of facilities, and we have investigators going out and speaking to the people who are involved in the complaints of abuse.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Who is it that makes the decisions on whether a public inquiry goes forward on a case of abuse or mistreatment?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, we have a branch within our ministry that does investigate every complaint that comes forward. We have a director that decides in which direction an abuse complaint should head. We get lots of complaints about the food, which is one of the most common complaints that we hear from our supportive living facilities. Those cases are not investigated, but we do work with the facility operators to encourage better preparation of food. More serious complaints are investigated thoroughly.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. To the same minister. One particular case where decisions were made against a senior's wishes goes back over three years now with no action. Why are cases like this one sitting for years without any public inquiry when it's clear that there's a problem that needs to be addressed to better protect our vulnerable seniors? This is only one case.

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, I'm not aware of the situation that the member is speaking of; however, I would like to be aware of the situation, and if there is a problem, I would like to attend to it immediately. I would ask the member opposite to inform me of this situation so I can further investigate myself on why there is a holdup in taking action.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Physician Supply

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Reports of a hiring freeze affecting specialists who have received offers of employment here in Alberta have been circulating and continue to gain momentum. In Edmonton, home to one of the largest academic health centres in North America, this is cause for serious concern. My question is for the Minister of Health and Wellness. Minister, for clarity and for the record, are these reports true or are they not?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, clearly, there's been some attempt by certain people to distort the facts, let's say, because what we're talking about here, first of all, are academic specialists. They are not family doctors that are going to be locating elsewhere in the province. Just to clear up the record, I did speak with the CEO of Alberta Health Services, Dr. Duckett, and he confirms the following: not only has Alberta Health Services honoured the contracts of 16 physicians that were already in place, but it is also honouring verbal agreements with 25 other physicians; five physician positions are being advertised, and another 42 offers are proceeding within the existing budgets.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have only one supplementary question for the minister. Rumours have also been circulating, and reports in the media tell us that the incoming dean of the Faculty of Medicine and Dentistry at the University of Alberta would not have privileges with Alberta Health Services. Is this true or not, Mr. Minister?

Mr. Liepert: Well, again, I don't know who's spreading these rumours, but I have some suspicions, Mr. Speaker. I would just confirm for the record that we welcome to our city the new dean of Medicine and Dentistry at the University of Alberta, Dr. Philip Baker, and he will certainly have all the privileges required at the Royal Alexandra hospital.

While I'm on my feet, I wish dean Dr. Tom Marrie the best of success in his endeavours in Maritime Canada.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Nuclear Power

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. The public is increasingly skeptical about the government's consultation on building a nuclear power plant in Alberta. Among other things the consultation workbook completely avoids mentioning the very real problems that are plaguing the construction of new power plants. My question is to the Minister of Energy. Can the minister name a single nuclear power plant anywhere in North America or Europe under construction today or any time in the last 30 years that's on time or on budget?

The Speaker: If that's within government policy, go ahead.

Mr. Knight: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What I will tell the House and the people of the province of Alberta is that the government of Alberta is not constructing any type of nuclear facility anywhere.

Dr. Taft: Well, Mr. Speaker, let's pursue that line because I think that's a promising line. The nuclear lobby is aggressively pursuing $50 billion in government loan guarantees in the U.S. because without them nuclear power is not viable. To the Minister of Energy: will this minister rule out this government giving loan guarantees for developing nuclear power in Alberta? Can we just rule that out?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, thank you very much. The question, really, absolutely has no relevance to what's happening in the province of Alberta. We have not – not – given any loan guarantee to anybody to build any electrical generating facilities in the province of Alberta since I don't know when. I can tell you that right now under the structure that we have in the province of Alberta, electrical generation is a stand-alone market facility. We have no nickel in it, and we do not intend to have any.

Dr. Taft: Okay. I'm glad there won't be so much as a nickel of public money in there.

To the same minister. Another way that nuclear power companies want to put their financial risk on the public back is to begin charging customers when construction begins on the plant rather than when power generation comes online. That means customers pay for nuclear power for years before it's even generated. Again to the Minister of Energy: will the minister rule out any option from this government that would require customers in Alberta to pay for nuclear power before it actually comes online?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, it's very obvious that the member opposite hasn't spent one iota of time to actually take a look at the structure of generating in the province of Alberta. He wouldn't ask a question like that if he had a little idea about what it is that we actually are doing in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Seniors' Community Centres

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituency, Calgary-Mackay, is a relatively new, younger constituency. That said, the seniors population in my constituency is growing, and they are looking for ways to stay active in their community. My questions are to the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. Seniors' centres are an important venue for seniors in our communities. What options are available to support seniors' centres in Alberta?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, there are hundreds of seniors' community centres throughout Alberta, and they exist because of community volunteers that have come together to ensure the establishment of these facilities. There are currently a number of sources of funding for seniors' centres. I'm very proud that the province is able to support seniors' programs through family and community support services, which is 80 per cent provincially funded. There are also lottery-funded grant programs such as the community spirit program, the community facilities enhancement program, and the community initiatives program, and the federal government has the New Horizons for Seniors program, which provides grants of up to $25,000 . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member. I'm sure we'll get chapter 2 in the next question.

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you. Can the hon. minister inform the Assembly if her department works with community organizations to provide services and information to seniors?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I do have to put in chapter 2, and that's because this is a $25,000 grant that they're currently taking proposals for until June 12. I want our seniors' centres to know that.

To go back to the supplemental question, we have eight regional seniors' information services offices across Alberta helping seniors and their families access information on provincial programs and services. Staff from each of these offices are available to visit seniors' centres in their area to provide information sessions on various topics.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you. My final question is to the same minister. Are there avenues through her department for seniors to become aware of the services and programs available in their communities?

Mrs. Jablonski: There are. Mr. Speaker, I just want you to know that seniors' centres are very important to everyone in Alberta. They provide lots of opportunities for our seniors. I could further discuss this with our representative from Calgary-Mackay.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

High-speed Rail Link

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Transportation received a publicly funded report on high-speed rail in Alberta over a year ago. To date the public has seen or heard nothing from the government about that report. To the Minister of Transportation: why is the government refusing to release the report on high-speed rail? What have you got to hide, Mr. Minister?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, absolutely, I have nothing to hide. I will say that I agree: we've had the report for a long time. My department has been analyzing the report. I ask them every once in a while: what makes you guys so slow in there anyway? They're not coming back, but we are analyzing the report. As soon as we have real, real, true analysis in the proper form, we'll be letting the hon. member know.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think the minister should put the entire department on the report so we could speed things up.

To the minister again: what is so controversial about this report that the government won't release a single page of it even under a freedom of information request?

Mr. Ouellette: I don't know anything about the freedom of information request, Mr. Speaker. That's handled, as you know, by officials in the department. I don't think there's absolutely anything that could be hidden in there. It's a report where we're trying to find out what the actual ridership would be and if it would pay back investment if we built high-speed rail. There could be nothing to hide there. We're just waiting to be able to make sure that we analyze it properly to release the proper information to the paying public.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think the minister has been sitting on it for a year. It's about time you should release it, Mr. Minister.

To the minister again. The minister has been sitting on this report for over a year: I repeat it again. Maybe he hasn't even read it, maybe only once, twice, thrice. Give us a date. When will Albertans get the opportunity to see that report, Mr. Minister?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I agree. I'm not the guy that's analyzing the report. We have professionals in the department to do that work. I've never sat on the report either. I will say, though, that this is going to be a fairly complex report. This is really about: what will it do with the expanded population that we have in Alberta? Will it take pressure off the busiest highway at times in Canada, let alone just western Canada? Will this help with lowering greenhouse gases? What expense will it be to do all that? All of that is very complex, and it's being analyzed. [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Student Loans

Mr. Elniski: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I feel a little bit like I drew the short straw on that one.

Lately I've been receiving a lot of feedback from students regarding student loan eligibility for postsecondary education. My first question is to the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology. It's my understanding that an unmarried student is allowed to earn up to $800 per month before it affects the size of their student loan. However, for a married student their spouse's income is included in the eligibility calculation, and they're only allowed to earn a $200 exemption. Why are these program eligibility calculations not the same?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Absolutely, it's this government's intent to ensure that all students have an affordable and accessible framework. The part-time earning exemption of $800 per month applies to all students, both single and married. Reducing spousal contributions is one of the initiatives that was identified in the affordability framework for consideration for budgets in the future. Certainly, in the big picture married students really only make up about 10 per cent of the total student numbers that are applying for student assistance.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My only supplemental is to the same minister. What is the government doing to ensure that married students, who often have greater obligations such as mortgage debt, receive equitable treatment in the calculation of student loan eligibility?

Mr. Horner: We certainly recognize, Mr. Speaker, the obligations of married students and take into consideration that they have higher day-to-day costs, including mortgages in some cases. The standard monthly living allowance for married students with no children is $1,873 compared to the single student, who is eligible for up to $941. For married students with children an additional living allowance of $449 per month is provided for each child. As I mentioned in my previous response, support to married students is part of the ongoing analysis that we have within the affordability framework. Hopefully, depending upon budget considerations, in the future we'll be able to add to that wonderful package of items in student finance that does make this one of the most affordable places to take postsecondary education.

The Speaker: That was 102 questions and responses today, hon. members.

Statement by the Speaker

Members Absenting Themselves

The Speaker: Hon. members, yesterday in the House in the afternoon at the start of second reading debate on Bill 25, the Teachers' Pension Plans Amendment Act, 2009, it was the decision of the House that advice should be sought from the Ethics Commissioner with respect to potential conflicts of interest among members in their participation on this particular bill, and the conclusion was that the chair should contact the Ethics Commissioner and seek advice from the Ethics Commissioner. A few minutes ago I received such advice of the Ethics Commissioner, and I believe it's of prudent nature and benefit that all members of the House hear this advice. I intend now to read the advice into the record.

For the benefit of all members, it's a letter dated May 6, 2009, addressed to me as Speaker of the Legislative Assembly. It arrived in my office at 1:47 this afternoon. It says:

Dear Mr. Speaker:

Re: General Advice pursuant to section 44 of the Conflicts of Interest Act Re Bill 25, the Teachers' Pension Plans Amendment Act, 2009

Thank you for bringing to my attention the debate which occurred in the Legislative Assembly on May 5 at Second Reading on Bill 25. I took note of your comments to all Members and the subsequent debate on the Bill.

Although Standing Order 33(2) requires a Member to declare a pecuniary interest and withdraw before voting on a matter, section 2(2) of the Conflicts of Interest Act goes further. It says:

(2) Where a matter for decision in which a Member has reasonable grounds to believe that the Member, the Member's minor or adult child or a person directly associated with the Member has a private interest is before a meeting of the Executive Council or a committee of the Executive Council or the Legislative Assembly or a committee appointed by resolution of the Legislative Assembly, the Member must, if present at the meeting, declare that interest and must withdraw from the meeting without voting on or participating in the consideration of the matter.

The letter goes on:

It is my understanding that this Bill relates to the Memorandum of Agreement of November 2007 under which the Government of Alberta agreed to pay the teachers' portion of the pre-1992 unfunded pension liability. As a result of this agreement, persons currently in the teaching profession will directly benefit as a result of reduced pension deductions from their individual paycheques. It is my further understanding that Teachers' Retirement Fund recipients will not be affected by this legislation in terms of an increase or decrease to their pension cheque.

Under the Conflicts of Interest Act, a "private interest" is not defined. The Act states what a "private interest" is not. It is not an interest in a matter that is of general application or one that affects a person as one of a broad class of the public.

Based on my preliminary review of the Bill, the Alberta Hansard excerpt from May 5 with respect to the Second Reading debate on the Bill, and the Conflicts of Interest Act, it is my advice that in certain circumstances, Members of the Legislative Assembly may have a private interest in Bill 25 and those Members would have to declare that interest and withdraw from the proceedings without taking part in or voting on the matter.

I have considered the matter under three basic scenarios: a Member who has retired from the teaching profession; a Member who is on a leave of absence from a teaching position or who may or may not return to the teaching profession; and a Member who has a spouse, adult interdependent partner, or minor or adult child who is a teacher.

1. Members who have retired from teaching

It is my advice that Members who have retired from the teaching profession – whether or not they are currently receiving a pension cheque – will not benefit from this legislation. It is my view that the general application exception applies since the pension plan itself affects all persons who have rights in that plan. The fact that the pension plan may be adjusted on an annual basis is also, in my opinion, a matter of general application. Members in this category may participate and vote on this matter.

2. Members who hold a teaching licence and who have not retired. There are subsections in here.

- (a) If a Member holds a teaching licence but has resigned from their position with their school or school board, it is my advice that this is a matter of general application and those Members may participate in the debate. Since they are not currently contributing to the pension plan – whether or not they intend to return to teaching – there is no immediate direct financial benefit and it is my opinion that it is a matter of general application. Members in this category may participate and vote on this matter.
- (b) If a Member is on a leave of absence but has not yet resigned from a teaching position, it is my opinion that there is a private interest since the Member is technically still an employee of that school or school board. Until such time as the Member is removed from the payroll, it is my opinion that the Member may benefit from this legislation. That Member would have a private interest and must declare that interest and withdraw from the proceedings without participating in the debate or voting on the matter.
- (c) If a Member has a teaching licence and is still teaching in any capacity (since the Conflicts of Interest Act does not restrict Private Members from having outside employment provided it does not conflict with their public responsibilities), that Member would have a private interest and must declare that interest and withdraw from the proceedings without participating in the debate or voting on the matter.

The third category of identification.

3. Direct associates or children who are teachers

If a Member's spouse, adult interdependent partner, minor or adult child is a teacher, then it is my opinion that there is a private interest. While the benefits that will result from this legislation will apply to all persons making pension contributions, it is a subset of the larger population of those persons who have rights in the pension plan. Since there is an immediate financial benefit to these persons, it is my view that a private interest exists. Members who have direct associates or children currently in the teaching profession must declare that interest and withdraw from participating in the debate or voting on the matter.

The Ethics Commissioner goes on.

I have advised that a private interest exists, in part, because I am mindful of the preamble to the Conflicts of Interest Act that sets a high standard of conduct for Members to ensure that the public can be confident that Members are acting in the public interest and not to further their private interests.

This advice has been prepared on short notice and it may be that arguments could have been made that in all cases described above, the matter is not one of private interest but one of general application. I would recommend that in future, my Office be consulted prior to such legislation being introduced so that we can get a thorough briefing on the intent and effects of such legislation.

Yours very truly,

Neil R. Wilkinson

Ethics Commissioner

It's now in the Hansard, and in a few moments from now I'll also table copies of this that the members will be able to obtain within minutes of the closing of the Routine.

We're now going to continue but in 30 seconds only.

Mental Health Services

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The face of mental illness is different for everyone. As a boy growing up in a small Ontario town home to a provincial psychiatric hospital, mental illness took the form of strange people wandering our downtown streets, carrying on conversations with invisible companions, and whom we were warned to avoid at all costs.

These were, in fact, patients suffering from chronic mental illness, and for many the hospital had been their home for over 20 years. Early in my career I participated in the development of strategies to deinstitutionalize this same patient population. Hundreds of psychiatric beds were closed, and psychosocial and vocational programs were established in central locations. We waited for the patients to magically show up, ready to be integrated into mainstream society.

That was 25 years ago, Mr. Speaker, and fortunately things have changed. We have seen an extraordinary rise in patient and family support movements. Research has provided us with incredible advances in knowledge about the brain and new medications, and while there is still much more to be done, our mental health services, especially those provided in the community, have improved significantly. Many of us take great pride in the fact that Alberta is now home to the Canadian Mental Health Commission. As former Senator Michael Kirby describes so well in his 2006 landmark report, mental health has come "out of the shadows at last."

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, there is still one thing that hasn't changed enough, and that is the enduring stigma which surrounds mental illness. Too few of us know its burden on our society, how to spot signs of mental illness among our family, friends, and colleagues, and how to appropriately intervene. More to the point, we are afraid or somehow feel it inappropriate to talk about these issues. As a result, many, including our youth, do not seek help when they need it most.

Mr. Speaker, if there is one thing I observed during debates in this Assembly, it is that there is a deep and abiding concern on all sides of this House for the issue of mental health in our society. As we observe Mental Health Week 2009, it is my hope that members of the 27th Legislature will accept the challenge of defeating the stigma that plagues us.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Shandy Wogan

Ms. Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The little school that could has produced one of many of my constituency's great minds. I'm talking about a grade 9 student who attends the Red Earth Creek school, approximately 450 kilometres north of Edmonton. As little as 10 years ago this school did not exist. However, the parents and people of Red Earth moved mountains to get a school for their children, and from the looks of it it's paying off in Shandy Wogan.

This grade 9 student is a brilliant, determined, and passionate young woman, which is evident in her recent accomplishments. Shandy won the best-in-fair trophy, the award of excellence in health and science trophy, and a gold medal for the life sciences at the Peace Country Regional Science Fair on March 19, the first for a student of Red Earth Creek. These awards were for the study that Shandy undertook studying the effects of energy drinks on teenagers. As a result of these honours, she has won the right to attend the Canada-wide Science Fair, held in Winnipeg May 9 to 17.

Science is a passion for Shandy. This passion has been cultivated by her mother, who gives her every opportunity to expand her learning not only through school but through attending conferences and visiting museums. In fact, last year Shandy participated in her first science fair, where she studied human memory by using a pig's brain, dissecting it to identify the regions of the brain. Amazingly, she did not win that one, but that didn't and won't stop her.

Shandy aspires to be a doctor, and I have no doubt that with the perseverance and hard work she has shown, she will achieve this dream. Shandy is one of the young, brilliant minds who are the future of our province, and I have no doubt that we will be hearing more about Shandy in the future.

All the best to you, Shandy, at the Canada-wide Science Fair in Winnipeg from May 9 to 17.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Alberta Forest Week

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our theme for Alberta Forest Week is Something to Celebrate. To celebrate this special week, we need to acknowledge the value we receive from our forests. They provide us with clean air and water, homes for fish and wildlife, abundant recreational opportunities, and community sustainability. Forests cover 60 per cent of the Alberta land mass that drapes across our province like a giant green shawl. Forestry is the principal livelihood of approximately 50 communities in Alberta, employing 44,000 people and generating $10 billion in annual revenue. Healthy forests are the foundation of all the values we receive from our forests, whether it's wildlife habitat or recreation or jobs.

Alberta is home to some of the world's best sustainable forest management practices. The Alberta government is committed to carefully managing Alberta's forests for the widest possible range of values and for the greatest benefits to Albertans today and in the future. Our forests are sustainable. The cut we allow does not exceed what the forest can grow each year. Alberta also invests in science and research to find better ways to manage our forests for maximum benefit.

Mr. Speaker, our forests are renewable and will be an enduring symbol of our sustainable land legacy. Our forests will be a safe home for wildlife. Our practices will safeguard our water supplies, support our communities, offer many recreational opportunities, and will continue to be loved and enjoyed by our children and grandchildren. Our sustainable forest management is a success story that provides economic, social, and ecological benefits to Albertans, Canadians, and the world. Alberta is determined to see our forests thrive on our landscapes through wise stewardship now and in the future.

Thank you.

Statement by the Speaker

Television Camera on the Chamber Floor

The Speaker: Hon. members, before we go on, I've received several notes from hon. members inquiring as to why there is a television camera on the floor of the Legislative Assembly. We have a policy, that we've had in place for a great number of years now, that from time to time members of the media by way of electronic devices, television cameras, seek permission to be planted on the floors of the Legislative Assembly. We have a code of rules that applies to it, including a dress code, including what they can shoot and what they cannot shoot.

Such a request was made today, to have a camera on the floor in anticipation of the debate with respect to Bill 44. The camera will only be operative when the debate on Bill 44 goes forward if it goes forward today. There are very strict rules that the only person that the camera will look to is the person who is speaking. There is no general panning of the Assembly or anything else and no visual taken of anyone else.

Should there be a violation of the rule that we have, I'll tell you what happened a number of years ago when there was a violation of such a rule. Permission was sought by representatives of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. Permission was granted. The rules were violated. I banned the CBC from this building for a year. They went to court; they lost. They went to court; they lost. They decided it wasn't worth it.

Decisions of this Assembly are made by the members of this Assembly through the Speaker's chair, so there'll be no violation today, I'm sure. Everything will be done quite accordingly, and there'll be no intimidation, harassment, or anything else associated with this. If members object to this, kindly convey your thoughts to me with respect to this matter, and we'll review the policy that we have for the future, but I believe that everything will be quite fine. The camera will only be focused on the individual speaking.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I wanted to table a copy of correspondence that I've received in my office, which is a commentary from Leslie Carlyle on Bill 44 that notes that she felt very strongly that had she not been taught about human sexuality through the Edmonton public school board, she would not have known that she could escape a sexual abuser, and she feels very strongly that the government should consider that allowing section 11.1 may prevent other children from finding out about the same thing and being able to protect themselves.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Are there others?

Hon. members, I indicated earlier today that I'd received a letter from the office of the Ethics Commissioner with regard to general advice pursuant to section 44 of the Conflicts of Interest Act regarding Bill 25, the Teachers' Pension Plans Amendment Act, 2009. I'm tabling with the Assembly now the appropriate copies. If members wish to get a copy of the actual letter, they can do so; otherwise, it will be printed in Hansard for the benefit of all.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Knight, Minister of Energy, responses to questions raised by Dr. Taft, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview; Mr. Mason, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood; and Ms Blakeman, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, on April 29, 2009, Department of Energy main estimates debate.

On behalf of the hon. Mr. Liepert, Minister of Health and Wellness, responses to Written Question 12 and return to order of the Assembly MR1, both asked for by Mr. Mason on April 6, 2009.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Cao in the chair]

The Chair: The Committee of the Whole shall now come to order.

Bill 33 Fiscal Responsibility Act

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Bill 33 is a bill that I have been waiting for some time to get a few comments on the record about. This was initially, I recall, introduced to the Assembly the same day we dealt with the budget, and it may have been overlooked. It certainly is a bill that is going to change how this government operates. They have indicated, to my knowledge, that it is a bill that reflects the times, and we are not to worry about this in any way.

Now, when we look at Alberta's fiscal framework and we look at what has gone on in the past, of course, we've had some rather different laws going back to 1993 about debt and deficits and the fiscal framework and the rules and the limitations the government places on itself for budgeting purposes. These restrictions and limitations are very similar to what one would compare to a teenager with an allowance. Sometimes this government doesn't know what to do with a lot of the extra money that they acquire.

The hon. Member for West Yellowhead is grinning over there, but it's not a grinning matter. It was only, Mr. Chairman, six months ago that the provincial finance minister was beaming that we were going to have this $8 billion to $12 billion surplus. The world changed rather quickly last fall, and the budget in this province does not reflect that change. But Bill 33 is certainly an interesting initiative.

Now, Bill 33 has seen many, many different forms, Mr. Chairman. Going back to 1993, it was the Deficit Elimination Act, then the Balanced Budget and Debt Retirement Act. It was revised again in 1999, and it became the Fiscal Responsibility Act. This act, the Fiscal Responsibility Act, was substantially amended in 2003 based on recommendations of the financial management commission. There were a series of frameworks there.

- Balanced budget requirements.
- Prohibitions on debt, especially for operating purposes.
- Mechanisms to deal with revenue volatility. Examples include: budgeting based on 90% of forecast resource and corporate income tax revenue; using only $5.3 billion in resource revenue for budget purposes; establishing the Sustainability Fund.

Another good idea from this side of the House.

- Requiring an economic cushion or contingency allowance to be set aside.
- Limiting use of in-year increases to budgeted revenue.
- In-year limitations on spending increases.

As I said earlier, the fiscal and economic situation during this budget year, according to the government, necessitates changes to the framework. Now, it goes on to say in the fiscal plan, Mr. Chairman, that the framework in place in 2008-09 was mainly intended to provide limitations during times of revenue growth. It provided relief from the limitations when events occurred during the year, such as emergencies and disasters, or when revenue declined from the budget.

The whole issue of emergencies and disasters is certainly an interesting one, and one would only have to look at the Alberta Gazette to see how frequently that line was used.

Now, according to the government, the framework has become complex, requiring intricate transfers between funds, and has become less transparent. I couldn't agree with that statement any more than I already have. I'm pleased to see that this government recognizes that it has transparency issues. It's not sincere, in my view, in its effort to address them, but at least it recognizes it's got a problem.

This new bill, Bill 33, or the latest version of this bill, provides for a much simpler fiscal framework, and according to the government, it contains limitations but enhances flexibility, the economic Slinky that it is.

Dr. Taft: Economic Slinky?

Mr. MacDonald: It is an economic Slinky, this legislation, because of the flexibility that's needed by this government at this time. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview is very interested about the economic Slinky that is this bill.

It is the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview who was one of many who alerted, Mr. Chairman, taxpayers in this province to the fact that this was a crazy-spending government. They weren't prudent financially. They didn't balance the spending with savings like they should have. Now the only fortunate thing we have, of course, is the stability fund, which was an idea that the government adopted just in time, that cookie jar that is available to the hon. President of the Treasury Board during this very difficult economic period.

When we look at this flexibility, we have to consider the past fiscal framework and what it did. Now, deficits are only permitted under the new Fiscal Responsibility Act if funds are available in the sustainability fund to offset them. Under debt, according to the fiscal plan, the new Fiscal Responsibility Act maintains the requirement that the debt retirement account has to be equal or be greater than any accumulated debt. There are two words in here that are very important, Mr. Chairman: as defined. We're talking about accumulated debt as defined. This is where we get into the Slinky going down the spiral staircase. It never falls away or moves off the centre of that staircase as it goes around the corner because of the ability to draft legislation that only the President of the Treasury Board has.

This in combination with the requirement that deficits are only permitted if they can be funded from the sustainability fund means the government is not permitted to borrow money for operating purposes. According to the fiscal plan, the government can borrow only

- for capital investment in government-owned assets;
- to support capital projects that are owned by school boards, post-secondary institutions and health authorities.

Correct me if I'm wrong, but that would certainly include the 3P projects.

The government can only borrow

- as required by self-supporting corporations such as Agriculture Financial Services Corporation, Alberta Treasury Branches and Alberta Capital Finance Authority.

I think to say that these corporations are self-supporting is a bit of a stretch.

Of course, it was interesting that we dealt a little bit with this earlier, after question period, with the letter from the Ethics Commissioner.

- to pay back funds owed by the pre-1992 Teachers' Pension Plan to the post-1992 Teachers' Pension Plan.

Now, we talk about the sustainability fund here and controls on in-year operating expenses and nonrenewable resource revenue and financial reporting standards. These proposals, as I understand it, concern budget limitations. As I understand it, the year-end annual report will continue to report in accordance with the Canadian generally accepted accounting principles for the public sector. The main differences in this are going to be pension liabilities and the SUCH sector.

With pension liabilities, according to what I'm reading in the budget documents, this bill will continue to exclude the change in unfunded pension liabilities of the government of Alberta from expense. The annual report will report any increases in pension liabilities as an expense. I find that quite interesting.

Now, the SUCH sector. That includes schools, universities, colleges, hospitals. Similarly, this bill's rules, as I understand it, do not account for the inclusion of Crown-controlled SUCH sector entities – school boards, universities, colleges, and health authorities – into the government reporting entity. The annual report currently reports the change in equity of the SUCH sector as a single revenue item, modified equity. Public sector accounting standards will require reporting, and it goes on.

Whenever we're discussing this, we need to have a look not only at the balance sheet of the province, the fiscal summary. When we look at pension liabilities, if they are to be excluded under this bill, we have to look at what pension obligations were in 2008. They're listed, Mr. Chairman, as a liability on the balance sheet. Pension obligations were $7.8 billion. This estimate, this budget year, 2010, they have climbed by over $3 billion to $10.9 billion, and in the next two years they are estimated to be over $12 billion. These are the pension obligations.

Now, why would we be excluding them in this bill, Mr. Chairman? I know there is a new provision in this bill, and that would be, if we go to the definitions section, under 1(a)(i)(E): "any amounts raised for the purpose of paying to the post-1992 fund all or any portion of the amounts determined by the Minister of Finance and Enterprise to be owing in accordance with the Teachers' Pension Plan Act." This, according to my research, is a new tweak to the act, and that would, in the post-1992 fund, increase by $184 million.

Now, other definitions are similar to what was used under the old act because we've got to remember that this act, if it becomes law, is deemed to have come into force on April 1, 2009.

That's only one portion of the unfunded pension liability, but these liabilities are significant, and they're adding up. I know that when I went through the annual report of the minister of finance, there were some significant changes in some of the numbers in the various pensions that report to the public through the hon. minister's annual report. I don't know if that's the reason why there is this $3 billion increase or not. Perhaps at some point in the debate we can have an answer provided by the ministers opposite.

When we look also at debt servicing costs and we look at the fiscal plan tables, this is why we've got to be so careful with this bill. I'm not going to go into the Agriculture Financial Services Corporation's debt servicing costs, but I am going to have a look at the ones under Education, and they're listed here as financing costs for the Alberta schools alternative procurement, the P3s. It's interesting to note that the Minister of Education, the Minister of Infrastructure, and the entire government seem to be cooling off in their admiration for 3Ps. They never were a good deal. Never were a good deal.

When you look at the business plan of, let's choose for example Edmonton school district 7, the Edmonton public board, on their wish list they claim they can construct a school for $11 million. If you average out what's going on with the 3Ps that were moved ahead last year, it's over $33 million. I know it's a longer period of time, but, wow, that's quite a difference in unit cost.

I don't think taxpayers in this case have been served by this fascination with 3Ps. Once again, it's an issue of ideology over economic common sense. The financing costs for the Alberta schools alternative procurement 2010-11, the debt servicing costs, are $17 million. The following year, the target – and these are targets, Mr. Chairman – is $22 million, or $5 million more. In two years it's $39 million in debt servicing costs.

We look at debt servicing costs for Finance and Enterprise and general government. That's a real broad category. That's going up as well from $112 million to $170 million two years later. This is according to the hon. minister's own documents. Transportation: financing costs for government-owned capital plans. I thought at one time the government, with these 3P projects, was not to be involved in financing whatsoever, but here we find in the budget documents that there are financing costs. In the years that we know, for Education they're increasing and also for Transportation. Now, in 2009-10 it is estimated that the financing costs for the 3Ps are $21 million. Two years later they're going to double. The financing costs are going to be $40 million. With this bill I believe definition (C) under 1(a) provides the government the scope to handle this.

Mr. Snelgrove: You've lost your audience.

Mr. MacDonald: Never had them to start with, hon. member. Never had them to start with. Perhaps if the hon. members across the way were paying attention, we could save a few million dollars of the taxpayers' money.

This government, I'm telling you, hon. member, some of their spending habits . . .

An Hon. Member: Are they a Slinky, too?

Mr. MacDonald: Well, they're not like an economic Slinky. I would compare them to the gentleman who was on cable television advertising those ShamWows. I don't know if ShamWows is the plural. I'm sure the Minister of Transportation, if he was interested, could moonlight at a home and garden show and make himself a very good living. I'm confident of that. He could sell ShamWow by the square metre. I bet he could sell 10 square metres per presentation. People would be cutting them up and using them in their RVs and in their tents and to dry off their pets, Mr. Chairman.

Dr. Brown: Do they work? Have you got one?

Mr. MacDonald: No, I don't have a ShamWow, but maybe he could sell me one. He's very anxious to sell me on these 3P projects, and I'm not buying that. No way.

Also, with Bill 33 – and I was distracted there; I apologize, Mr. Chairman – one of the consequential amendments in here, where the Auditor General Act is amended by repealing section . . . [Mr. MacDonald's speaking time expired] Thank you.

Mr. Snelgrove: I guess we're not supposed to sleep in here unless we're standing up and talking. You know, it's interesting that the hon. member says, "the bill as I understand it" and then clearly goes on to show that he doesn't understand it. He's completely disconnected with what this bill is actually trying to do and going to do and his revisionist theory of history and his gloom and doom into the future.

Mr. Chairman, it's really simple. The situation that countries or provinces, not just ours, find themselves in changes. It has and will probably continue to change. I think we could all be pretty sure that this won't be the last time that the province has to rethink and reassess its position on how it handles its money.

I think most people, certainly the people in this government, understand that sometime, maybe in a year, maybe in two years, maybe in three years – it may be longer – when the economic situation turns around, we will continue to lead and be one of the most stable and prosperous entities in the world. We will continue to use the tools that evolve in the communities of finance to invest and to make better use of our money.

This government took very bold steps a few decades ago. It, like many other provinces, had bought into the theory that deficit financing was somehow okay and that you could continue to spend your way into prosperity. By some extremely solid leadership at the time, Premier Klein and his government said: "Enough. Let's take Alberta and put it on a footing where it is completely steering its own boat. We don't want to put ourselves in the same position that many provinces and countries have gotten themselves where they've loaned out all of the opportunities they've got for very little gain."

The chairman would remember that when we entered into debt reduction in this province, we had roughly the same debt as the province of British Columbia. This province took steps to quit spending more than it was taking in, to pay off the debt, to be very open about it. And you know what? Albertans bought into it completely and said: you're right; for this time in Alberta, for the future we need to make sure that Albertans control their finances. No other province took those steps, and now British Columbia is looking at a 40-plus billion dollar debt. Are the people in British Columbia better off than we are? Is their standard of living improved because they've accumulated and continued to grow this much more debt? Are they better off because they're paying $4 billion a year in interest? Our good friends in Quebec: are they better off because they're paying – well, we're paying for them – just under $8 billion a year in interest payments?

It's okay, I guess, if you have no conscience and you want to continue to live off other people and you don't intend to tackle your debt and your obligations and the country will continue to take from those who work hard and earn it and have the good fortune to be sitting on top of oil. But the attitude of Albertans has been far more important in how we've become prosperous than oil. We could have taken the same step that many other parties or provinces would do – don't worry about your debt – and spent our way into this glorious, wonderful position they found themselves in: hundreds and hundreds and hundreds of billions of dollars in debt. Not just the direct government debt. Many other provinces have burdened their Crown corporations with debt of untold, unaccountable billions of dollars.

When the consolidated financial accounting comes into place, Mr. Chairman, it's not this province that's going to adopt or reject that thing. We have been doing it for a year, and we are ready to go to consolidated accounting. Most other provinces are terrified of having to open their books, where it's in the cupboard and where the cupboard is bare. When we bring our consolidated assets together, it's going to show Albertans that we have accumulated even more with our other interests – more – probably assets to the tune in excess of $12 billion to $14 billion and a cash difference of probably $4 billion. Some other provinces, Mr. Chairman, are going to show enormous liabilities and very little assets.

The hon. member would like to suggest somehow that this is a Slinky or whatever his goofy term was around doing this. This is about saying, actually, for the situation we're in today: "We have been prudent enough to put some money into a savings account. We have been wise enough to begin investing in infrastructure, which is as good an investment as you can get, the investment in our universities, our colleges, our roads, hospitals, and schools, to a rate that far exceeds any other state or province's wildest dreams per capita." We've been building diligently. We've been taking the wealth that's being generated from not only our oil and gas sector but from the other industries in Alberta that pay taxes, too, and we've been building an environment where business wants to come from around the world and locate, one, for stability and certainty because they know the business climate is fair; two, because they know that we're not going to have the same issues as the other provinces, that one of these days they're going to have to start paying their bills.

It is no different, Mr. Speaker, the overall debt, than is the completely irresponsible position that they would like to take, that there is no problem with health care spending. I think in our estimates the hon. leader of the third party said: "What's the big deal? Just borrow some money this year. You don't have to make tough choices."

Ms Evans: He didn't say that.

Mr. Snelgrove: Yes, he did. "Just borrow." I said: "Well, that's great. We're borrowing for capital." He's borrowing for operational, so you borrow this year to run your health system for another six months, seven months. Well, then you would just borrow some more, and sooner or later, even if you have a most limited education and no calculator, you would figure out – maybe 20 years, maybe 30 years, maybe after I'm gone – that you have to quit spending more than you're making. You can't have one department in government spending at three or four times the rate of growth and not start to severely hamper all the other departments in the government in doing the very important work they do.

I had, I would look back and say, the unfortunate opportunity to ask the Saskatchewan Health minister of a few years ago when he thought Saskatchewan might think there was a problem in health care spending. When it became 60 per cent of their budget? When it became 70 per cent? When it gobbled 80 per cent of their budget? Or when, in fact, it was eating 110 per cent of their income and they were just borrowing? His answer was very NDP-like. He said, "You so-and-so Albertans are all about money." I said, "Thank goodness you're not in finance." But that's the attitude of those who don't want to see the truth or the reality that there is an accounting day sooner or later.

So you can sit in here and you can make all the excuses why we don't need to tackle these tough problems, why we should continue to indulge in whatever flight of fancy they would like to do, but sooner or later you're either paying interest until you can no longer take that much out of your ongoing operational dollars to pay interest, or you quit building your infrastructure. We would have an operating surplus if we didn't build anything. Maybe that's the approach they would like: quit building schools, quit building roads, quit building hospitals, balance your books, put everybody at home and create a social program for them so they don't have to work. Federal governments did that for years in the Maritimes. What did that do? Quite honestly, sitting on the dock and waiting for the fish to come back wouldn't work in Alberta. I can assure you, Mr.

Chairman, that in 200 or 300 or 400 years when the oil runs out in the north, Albertans won't sit up there on the end of the oil rig waiting for the oil to come back. By then we will have gone on to far more current things.

One thing about this government is that we're already planning for the future because we think we're living in the future here in Alberta. Reinvesting in the nanotechnology sector, the genomics, realigning our research and our development departments, building one of the foremost health care systems probably in North America – in Canada, for sure – not only for the everyday patient but for research, sustainable research. One of the things we're going to be able to sustain our health care on, Mr. Chairman, is that if you get a cure for cancer, you save a lot of money. When you start to find out what's causing MS, what's causing all these horrible afflictions that take the people that we love, when we figure out how to fix that, we're going to go a long ways to fixing health care.

Yes, it does take money sometimes to save money. I know that. Sometimes you have to change the way you allocate your dollars to get where you're trying to go. What the Fiscal Responsibility Act worked for in the '90s was a spending problem. It got put back in. With the opportunity, then, to create the heritage savings account, we would say: "Okay. That's for the future." Very clearly we've said that that is the future and that that will stay there, and when we're back in a position to continue to invest in not only that but the other incredibly important endowments that we've got, when we're ready to say that our infrastructure spending is at an appropriate amount and we've caught up on the backlog of some of the maintenance, then we'll be better situated than any other country you can possibly think of that has the standard of compassion and the standard of living that we have here in Alberta.

You know, Mr. Chairman, the group of interns I introduced in here before question period very much resemble this caucus. They are from all over the world – one from Germany, from all over Canada – very, very ethnically diverse, very bright ambitious children, young men and women, wanting to come to Alberta because they see it as still the land of opportunity.

It's a little frustrating. When the sky finally falls for those over there and they'll have their happy dance in the rotunda, the sky will land on one of the most prosperous, well-planned-out, well-thought-out governments in the country. It will land on a health care system that's second to none. The sky is going to fall on an education system that is teaching students far ahead of most everywhere else. It's going to land on a diversified and prosperous agricultural sector and an energy sector that's not only meeting or exceeding all the environmental challenges that are thrown at us but leading in it. We will be the province that gets to sustainable energy. It won't be the ones that are down there clamouring for closing the oil sands. It will be the wealth the oil sands generates that allows us to reinvest in more experiments. It will be the clean coal industry that reinvests.

You can shut them all. You can pretend it's over. "Alberta was here once. We don't know what happened to it, but when the sky fell on us, it was so cloudy that we wandered aimlessly over to Saskatchewan, then maybe into Manitoba to find the despair that we so love." That's okay, and I'll give them a ride to the border. I'm happy to. You know, they won't know what they've left, but they'll know when they get where they're going what the people of Alberta have long known, that they've been governed by a party that has adapted and evolved over time and continues to meet and exceed what the people of Alberta believe their province is able to do.

This is a change, yes. It's a change that says that we are in the middle of an economic situation that we do not control, but we can control our spending. We can start to put forward a very real understanding for the people of Alberta so that they, too, can see where this government is going to be in two, three, and four years and on. No other province publishes a second-year budget. Ours is a three-year budget, Mr. Chairman, and it shows people exactly where we are going.

One of the CEOs of Marathon Oil that I met before Christmas said that in their business sometimes you've got to budget for the worst and hope for the best. Mr. Chairman, that's what we have to do. We have to know it can stay worse for quite some time. It can get worse than it is now, and it can get better quicker than we know. The one thing that I know is that the people who really, really are able to tell us why it didn't happen aren't really able to tell us right now when it's going to happen.

The opposition put it up and say: well, if oil is here, this is what we'd do. Magically, they never have to worry about that. In the same day, Mr. Chairman, sometimes in the same question, they're going to save more or they're going to spend more. I don't know. There's only one dollar. It's divided up very clearly in our budget where the priorities that we see are. Our priorities have been put on health, education, and our seniors and on continuing to build the infrastructure that enables industry to prosper and want to locate here.

They can take this bill, Mr. Chairman, and they can make it out to be whatever bogeyman, whatever Slinky toy they want it to be. The fact of the matter is that we were prudent enough to establish a capital fund, a sustainability fund, a fund to go forward with carbon capture and sequestration, and several other saving things that are enormously important to Albertans. Now we're saying: "We told you when we put this in that it was for a rainy day. We hoped it would never come." I admit that a year ago at this time I did not expect to be back here a year later saying that things changed. They did.

Thank goodness our Premier and the finance minister had the foresight to say: we'd better put a little in the cookie jar because we don't want to touch the heritage fund. This bill just simply says that we put it there for a reason. Our bookkeeping, our accounting systems are different. If we have to acknowledge it differently, we will. We have never tried to stay away from the consolidated financial accounting. The Auditor General has consistently and for quite some time given this province a very unqualified financial statement and, as a matter of fact, often uses the Alberta government's accounting practices as an example to the rest of Canada.

We have nothing to hide. We are proud Albertans. We are proud of what has happened in the past. We know that with what we've done, we have a solid future. They can make whatever analogies or allegations they want to about what this bill means, but what it means for my kids and for me is a smarter, stronger future far before anyone else will come out of this downturn, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciated the comments from the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, the President of the Treasury Board. It's good to have some passionate debate in here. He made a very strong case against debt in the first several minutes of his comments, laying the groundwork, in his mind, but in some ways also laying the case against the very piece of legislation we've got in here.

Debt is not always evil. We understand that. In fact, the aggressive, over-the-top campaign to pay off the debt in the last 15 years I think has had a lot of negative consequences, as I said yesterday. Now we're listening to the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster change the government's policy and as President of the Treasury Board even steer the government's policy on this. It makes me wonder what his predecessor the former Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, Dr. Steve West, would say and how he might weigh in on this particular bill. [interjections] Not surprisingly, I'm getting comments that he said: don't listen to the opposition. I guess that was taken to heart, wasn't it?

I want to address a couple of things that were said in debate on this bill yesterday. One was a comment from the Member for Peace River talking about hypocrisy on our side. He couldn't believe the hypocrisy on our side in sometimes arguing for spending, sometimes arguing for savings, cuts, and that sort of thing. I think the President of the Treasury Board holds the same position. I think it's important to put some context around that.

What we have in Alberta are easily the most dramatic swings in public expenditures of any provincial government in the country. In 1986, '87, '88, in fact all through the 1980s Alberta was the highest spending province per person in the country. We were spending 20, 25 per cent higher than the average, and it was not sustainable. What we had, then, by the middle '90s after this bloodbath of government cuts was the lowest spending government per capita in the country, and that wasn't sustainable either. We went from the highest spenders in the mid-80s to the lowest spenders in the mid-90s. On the way down all kinds of people kept saying: "Stop the cuts. Stop the cuts. You've got to spend something on training your nurses and your doctors, and you've got to keep your schools open and maintain your roads." But, oh no. The drop kept going until we were absolutely at the bottom. By the middle '90s we had gone in one decade from the highest spending to the lowest spending. We're now back up to the highest spending again, and this isn't sustainable either.

What we're arguing for and why we're questioning this piece of legislation, Mr. Chairman, is for some long-term stability. Sure, when we're at the lowest in the country, we urge the government to spend more, and when we're at the highest in the country, we're urging the government to be more prudent, to have a long-term strategy. I think that explains to some extent, whether the members across the way accept it or not, why sometimes we're arguing for spending and sometimes we're arguing for savings. We are on a wild roller-coaster ride on the fiscal side of this government, and we want to get off the roller coaster and onto some nice, steady cruising.

Also, I want to reflect for a moment on a comment made yesterday in debate on this bill by the Member for Calgary-North Hill. I'm looking at Hansard from yesterday, page 977. He accused us. He said, "They're not quite sure what we're saving for." Well, actually, we have a very clear reason to save, Mr. Chairman, and I wish this government would listen to us on this. I wish they would listen to the Alberta Chambers of Commerce, the Institute of Chartered Accountants, the Canada West Foundation, and especially Jack Mintz, who was commissioned by this very government to give them advice on saving. The reason to save is because we have an enormous gap between what we're spending as a province and what we're bringing in. We're covering that gap through oil and gas royalties, but as those royalties decline, we need another source of income. So the reason to save in the long term is to create an enormous pool of capital that will offset the declining income from royalties.

Mr. Mintz's report is absolutely clear, and I would ask every MLA in this Assembly to take a few minutes to read that report. Their analysis, which was based on the government's own figures, suggests that if we don't start saving aggressively now, we will end up either having to cut spending by 40 per cent or increasing taxes by 40 per cent or some combination of the two. What we're doing right now is not sustainable. That's why we need to save. That's what we've been arguing for a long time. Most Albertans get it. I wish the President of the Treasury Board and the finance minister would get with that program as well because then we could all look forward to a more certain future for this province.

Mr. Chairman, I'm going to propose an amendment to this bill, so I'll take a minute to have it distributed, and then we can discuss the amendment. Thank you.

The Chair: This amendment is now known as A1.

Hon. member, please continue on A1.

Dr. Taft: Okay. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The amendment, made on behalf of the Member for Calgary-Varsity, reads as follows: that Bill 33, Fiscal Responsibility Act, be amended in section 3 by adding the following after subsection (6).

- (7) Subject to section 2, if the net assets of the Alberta Sustainability Fund exceed $2,500,000,000, the excess or any portion of it may be allocated by the Treasury Board from the Alberta Sustainability Fund.

Now, the Alberta sustainability fund, Mr. Chairman, has a history that's notable. It's notable because it was sort of the little brother of the idea of a big, big sustainability fund, and it was brought forward by the previous Member for Lethbridge-East, Dr. Ken Nicol, who is an agricultural economist, when he was Leader of the Official Opposition. Then the idea was actually voted down as a private member's bill but readopted by government and brought into place.

The effect of this amendment, Mr. Chairman, is to guarantee a certain minimum balance in the Alberta sustainability fund. What this would do is it would add a clause after subsection (6) of section 3 that says that if the net assets of the Alberta sustainability fund exceed 2 and a half billion dollars, the excess may be allocated from that fund.

All we're saying here is nothing too radical. We're kind of taking the sustainability fund back to its original form, which is to just keep a minimum amount in the sustainability fund. We think that's a good idea. We think it's prudent. We think it avoids draining things down to zero. It's just a kind of prudent fiscal management that helps this government stay on the straight and narrow and maybe even get us off this roller coaster boom-and-bust economic ride.

I hope people have had a chance to look at the amendment, and I'll encourage and listen for debate. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on amendment A1.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, Mr. Chairman, amendment A1. I will mark that on my sheet. Certainly, I would like to thank the hon. member for proposing this to the House. I think it's a sound idea during these times. To have a 2 and a half billion dollar amount, as the hon. member described it, as a minimum is certainly prudent. We know where the majority of our government revenue comes from, and we know the volatility that surrounds that revenue stream. Whether we're looking at personal income tax, whether we're looking at corporate income tax, whether we're looking at royalties from conventional crude oil, royalties from synthetic crude, or our natural gas royalties, there is significant volatility.

I would like to point out, Mr. Chairman, and I will use this as an example, that the anticipated revenue the government plans on getting this year from the sale of Crown leases, bonuses and sale of Crown leases – I don't want to use that word "bonus" – is estimated to be $631 million, which is significantly less than last year for obvious reasons. But in the three sales that I'm aware of that have occurred so far in this fiscal year, we have realized in bonuses and sales $6.6 million. That is a far cry and that's so much less than what the government has targeted. Now, that is just an example of the volatility and the assumptions and the sensitivities that this budget relies on.

For us with Bill 33 to have this $2.5 billion set aside for emergencies of any type is significant. I'm not convinced; taxpayers are certainly not convinced. In fact, I met with a group yesterday who are very, very concerned about the direction this government is going in. Now, members across the way may not take issue with that. But the individuals I talked to, one ran a small business, one was an MBA working for a major accounting firm, the other ran a medium-sized business whose activity had been significantly reduced since the new year. When that individual tells me that their activity has been reduced, one can only assume that the amount they pay in taxes, whether they're individual taxes or the taxes of their corporation, is going to be less.

The one benefit to those changes in taxes, as I understand it, is that there will be a significant increase in the transfer from the federal government. Earlier, members across the way were making a lot of noise and suggestions that the federal government could come up with an additional $700 million. I noticed that in the robust times we have just gone through, our Canada transfer was reduced from what they had anticipated by $700 million. So if there's a silver lining to a storm cloud, it's the fact that with our changes in economic activity there will be a significant increase in the transfer from the federal government. If there is, hopefully, it will be spent wisely, very wisely, by the President of the Treasury Board and those that sit on the board with him.

When we look at this amendment, it's a very sound amendment. As I said before, we know the volatility of our resource revenue stream. We know how the economy is affecting our tax revenues, whether they be personal or corporate income tax. So to have this minimum bank balance, I guess you could call it, I would really encourage hon. members to consider amendment A1.

At this time, Mr. Chairman, I would like to adjourn debate on Bill 33. Thank you.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Chair, if it's appropriate, I would move that the committee now rise and report progress.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 33. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 27

Alberta Research and Innovation Act

[Adjourned debate April 22: Mr. Horner]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, with Bill 27 I would like to, first off, express my gratitude to the minister. Earlier in April the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology was kind enough to sit down with myself. He had a few of his staff, very capable individuals, with him, and we had quite a pleasant discussion around this bill. I must say that I appreciated that. I thought about what the hon. minister had said regarding this bill. It's going to enable the government to implement a framework which restructures provincially funded research and innovation organizations by merging 10 existing entities into five new entities: one advisory body and four board-governed provincial corporations.

It sounds fine when you think of the idea that if Bill 27 was to become law, we would sort of have an increased incentive for research and development to occur in this province. The hon. minister, I think – and he'll correct me if I'm wrong, I'm sure – his hope, Mr. Speaker, was to have the Alberta region become a northern version of the Silicon Valley in California, with a lot of research and development and businesses being attracted by the ideas that are being developed and the application of those to the free market. It seemed like a very sound idea, and it may be.

Now, when we talk about the money that would sort of be pooled if this restructuring was to occur, it's a significant amount of money. My research indicates that this would be well in excess of $2.5 million, including endowment funds. Certainly, when we look at the Alberta Agricultural Research Institute – and I got this information from the 2007-08 annual reports, Mr. Speaker – it's $4.9 million. Alberta Energy Research Institute is a $10 million amount. Alberta Forestry Research Institute is a $3.9 million amount. The Alberta Information and Communications Technology Institute is a $2.8 million amount. Alberta Life Sciences Institute is $27.5 million. As I understand it, these five entities operate under the Alberta Science and Research Authority. The amounts are total dollars invested in projects by each institution. Now, with the Alberta Research Council, there's a revenue stream here, a total of $85.1 million, and iCORE, which is a transfer from Advanced Education and Technology, is 11 and a half million dollars. That's a total of $145 million. Of course, we've got the big endowment funds. The Alberta heritage foundation for medical research is over $1.5 billion, the Alberta heritage foundation for science and engineering research at $838 million. So it's a significant amount of money.

You know, there's a certain responsibility with that kind of money. I had thought: well, this is a very good bill. But after I read the Auditor General's report, which also came out in April 2009, the Auditor General had a lot of things to say about some of the organizations, some of the institutions that are under the care and management of the Ministry of Advanced Education and Technology.

Now, we had a discussion about this at Public Accounts this morning, and I was anticipating quite a detailed discussion among the members and the Auditor General regarding these specific recommendations, but the members had other issues which they wanted to discuss with the Auditor. When we look at this latest report and we look at this bill and we look at the intentions of the department, I believe we should exercise some caution here. At this time I don't have confidence – maybe in the future I will – that the department will manage these significant amounts. I know I'm going to be told it's an outside board and that it's at arm's length, but the minister and the cabinet, as far as I'm concerned, still call the shots because of their ability to provide the appointments through order in council.

Now, when we look at what the Auditor is flagging, the Auditor is talking about increased fraud risk at some institutions, and he talks specifically about Bow Valley College, an investigation of an alleged fraud. He talks about significant internal control weaknesses at Grant MacEwan College.

Mr. Horner: It's not relevant.

Mr. MacDonald: Oh, yes. I'm sorry, hon. minister. You may not feel it's relevant, but these are all entities that are under, as far as I'm concerned, your direct control. They are an example of how some institutions, not all but some institutions, under your control have been operating. With this bill, if this bill were to become law, there would be a significant increase in the pooled funds, and there will be less control of this by the Legislative Assembly. This arm's-length authority at this time – I'm sorry – I can't go for when I look at what the Auditor General has flagged, not only for us in this Assembly but for taxpayers.

Now, the Auditor indicates that management and the audit committee need good information. Management needs timely, relevant, and accurate financial information to run an institution. Management provides summarized financial information to an institution's audit committee to allow it to effectively oversee and objectively assess the institution's overall performance. Meanwhile with Bill 27 here we're having this arm's-length operation. Now may not be the time for such an initiative. With Bow Valley College we already talked about that. The Auditor also mentions Medicine Hat College and suggests we could "improve its financial reporting to its Board by including – at least quarterly – complete statements of operations, financial position, and changes in net assets."

Grant MacEwan:

To improve the accuracy of financial reports to management and its Audit Committee, Grant MacEwan College should improve its capital asset processes by:

- documenting its assessment of the appropriate accounting treatment for costs for construction and renovation projects.
- improving its processes to code and record transactions accurately the first time.

Grande Prairie Regional College, also under the hon. minister's watch, implemented a similar recommendation to improve its financial reporting. It's good to see that they've listened to the Auditor, and hopefully the minister has been very firm in giving direction that the Auditor certainly be listened to and that his recommendations be implemented. The Alberta College of Art and Design, it is noted here, has not yet implemented a similar recommendation from the Auditor's report from last year.

Mr. Speaker, you can see why I am reluctant to give a ringing endorsement to this proposal. If one was to look at the Auditor's findings and recommendations like a report card, one of your children coming home with a report card, and there were a couple of Cs on it and there was a B and there was only one A, well, I don't think you would give the child a bigger or an expanded allowance.

That's sort of what the direction is here with Bill 27. I've outlined, you know, the consolidation of these funds and the total amount of money, and I'm not satisfied at this time that Advanced Education and Technology will be able to, whether it's close at hand or at arm's length, ensure that the interests of the taxpayer will be first and foremost.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House.

Mr. Lund: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure to have the opportunity to join in the debate on Bill 27, the Alberta Research and Innovation Act. In listening very attentively to the hon. member that just spoke, I can see where he has been quoting things that have happened in the past and may be close to being accurate. However, this is looking into the future.

I'm very excited about the potential of Bill 27 and what it will do as far as research in the province. The bill seeks to encourage a more integrated and aligned approach to research and innovation in order to ensure the province's continued economic prosperity. Furthermore, Bill 27 would support the Premier's vision of a diversified economy by encouraging the growth of new industries through technology commercialization.

I would like to thank the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology as well as his department for the forward-looking thinking this piece of legislation demonstrates. In light of the current global economic uncertainty, making our publicly funded research and innovation activities effective as well as efficient is of paramount concern. When you look at the structure and the openness and the outcome type of setting that this bill creates, I believe that it will attract many more dollars to research, private dollars and not just government dollars.

Recognizing this, the government has developed the roles and mandates framework for Alberta's provincially funded research and innovation system. The framework seeks to reconfigure the province's research and innovation structure to reduce its complexity as well as to provide improved access and transparency for all participants. It is important to note that this framework was developed with extensive stakeholder consultation in order to make certain it would benefit this valuable part of our economy.

Bill 27 would provide a legislative model for the implementation of this important framework and would allow Alberta to further develop a highly qualified and skilled workforce and to build on our world-class postsecondary institutions. Further to this, it would allow Alberta to attract highly qualified individuals from abroad to advance and develop our research and innovation activities. This would be achieved in part by having a focused, integrated, and aligned research and innovation environment and would help to ensure Alberta's continuing competitive advantage.

The government has shown tremendous leadership in developing a research and innovation structure that reduced redundancies and promotes continued growth in the research and innovation industry. Furthermore, the roles and mandates framework would encourage improved access and transparency for all participants in the industry – Mr. Speaker, if one looks at the business model for the department, we see that this fits right in with goal 3 and goal 4 of the business plan from the department – and it is designed with a governance structure that helps to ensure the responsibilities are made very clear.

Further to this, Bill 27 would allow for the creation of research and innovation entities. These entities would focus on research and innovation in very specific areas, which could include bioindustries, energy and environment, health, and commercial development. The Minister of Advanced Education and Technology would be responsible for any provincial research and innovation entity created through the regulations. Further to this, the funding model would provide the minister the authority to approve each entity's plan and budgets. This would allow the minister to provide direction and to direct funds that meet the government of Alberta's research and innovation priorities.

The success of the proposed framework would be achieved in part by ensuring the collaboration and co-ordination between the new provincial entities and the government of Alberta ministries. The proposed structure for Alberta's government-funded research and innovation sector would include the establishment of an Alberta research and innovation authority. This body would provide advice to the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology pertaining to the strategy and to policy as well as long-term planning. In addition, the bill would create two advisory committees, the Alberta research and innovation committee and the cross-government portfolio advisory committee. The Alberta research and innovation committee would advise the minister with respect to items pertaining to the co-ordination, mandates, and activities of the research and innovation entities whereas the cross-government portfolio advisory committee would provide advice and recommendations pertaining to the funding of the new created provincial entities.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation provides the necessary legislative model to implement the roles and responsibilities framework of Alberta's provincially funded research and innovation system. To this end Bill 27 would ensure the continued effectiveness and efficiency of Alberta's research and innovation activities, and it would further encourage the development and growth of this valuable industry.

Mr. Speaker, one of the things that we have found with the current situation is that we are lacking the openness, the ability to make sure that research is actually being done in areas that really do mean a difference to our economy. Of course, when you're looking for outside money to go along with the government's money, when that money comes in, you're pretty much assured that it's going to be for a project that is going to fit into the improvement of our economy.

One of the issues as well that has been a problem all along: there may be a major development that occurs, but commercializing it hasn't happened in Alberta. It moves outside. Bill 27 will create another entity that will help very much in the commercialization, which is extremely important. Really, we're missing out as a province on some of these things that have been discovered. The research has been done for them only to have it move outside of the province and outside of the country in a lot of cases in order to get the money and the ability to commercialize it.

I would really urge all the people in the Legislature to support this bill. If you have difficulty understanding it, then get a briefing on it and get to understand it. In my opinion, this is a major, major step forward. It'll do nothing but good for the province of Alberta.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I actually have quite a bit to say on this bill, but I'm just going to try and keep my comments fairly brief in my opportunity to speak in second reading to Bill 27, the Alberta Research and Innovation Act. I was aware that this act was coming some time ago because I started to have people approach me at public events saying: "We're really concerned. This bill is coming that is going to roll all of the research foundations together. We have real concerns about the effect that that's going to have." As I started to look over the possibilities, I've come to the conclusion that really this is about the politicization of government-funded research. I think that is a monumental step backwards.

The reason why, Mr. Speaker, is that every now and then this province does something right, something really right. What they did really right here was to create the Alberta heritage fund for medical research and a number of other similarly configured and funded research foundations in Alberta. The uniqueness and the success of what we've seen through the Alberta heritage fund for medical research really inspired me because a couple of years ago – I guess it was the 2004 election – the Alberta Liberals had developed a whole policy about endowment funds as a way of saving and as a way of taking our nonrenewable resource revenue and driving it, directing it into something that would be of benefit to Albertans for many years to come, that that nonrenewable resource revenue would pay off for us for a long, long time.

The model that I looked at as I gave my input to the development of that policy was the Alberta heritage fund for medical research because what they did right here was that they had an independent and peer-respected board that made decisions. They put a good chunk of money into it. That was back in Peter Lougheed's day. Then the previous Premier put another chunk of money towards it. They have managed their finances very well, but they were definitely seen by the scientific and medical research community as arm's length.

What started to happen is that we created an economic cluster with that medical research foundation, so we started to get other pockets of activity that came to Alberta and came to the Edmonton area because of the work that was being funded through the Alberta heritage fund for medical research. It's odd to think of that as an economic cluster or an economic driver. I don't know. I'm not satisfied, exactly, with that wording of things, but it's the best wording I can come up with at this point to describe what I was seeing.

We were attracting researchers and scientists from across the world because we were giving out serious money. I mean, there's a level of grants that's considered pretty small potatoes, and then there's the kind of middling stuff, and then there's the serious money. If you're a top scientist, researcher in the world, you go where there's big money. We had not a lot of big-money grants to give out, but we had enough to give out some big-money grants.

They attracted some really impressive people here. As they came here, well, of course, they brought their families with them. If I may make a broad, generalized statement, their family members were no academic slouches. We ended up with a whole new group of people moving into Alberta just because we gained the benefit of the researchers and the scientists coming. Then we also ended up with these sort of ancillary businesses that started to spring up to support the research that was being done. So it was a really good model.

Now, what I'm seeing is that this government, as I often note with this government, has not looked far enough into what could be the unintended consequences. I hope these would be unintended consequences because I'd be very unhappy to learn that the government intended to do what I'm about to describe.

What I'm seeing is that this is the politicization, the control of these research foundations. I thought: "Who would come up with such a wacky idea? Why would any group of people decide to do this to something that worked so well?" Guess what? You know, we learn a lot from our families. What I discovered as I started to look around was that these members had looked to their federal cousins and, in fact, are following what we've already seen that their federal Conservative cousins have set up in controlling and politicizing the government-funded research grants on the federal level.

What would be the consequences of this? I started to think: "Okay. Well, if we end up with a politicized and a controlled fund to support scientists and researchers, is it going to reverse what we had? Are we going to stop getting the really, really A-level, gold-plated, prizewinning, blue-ribbon scientists and researchers that we've been able to attract to Alberta? Does that start to reverse itself?" The answer, I think, is yes. From my inquiries to people that are around in this sector, I'm being told that there is no indication that there will even be a competition this fall for new positions and that recruitment and replacement is essentially sliding to a halt.

You can understand why that would happen. If there's uncertainty, everybody tends to stop. We see that around election cycles. You know, we get six months out from an election cycle, and everything starts to sort of slow down in the departments because nobody knows who's going to be their political master, and they don't want to make big moves that they're going to get criticized for. Everybody just slows down until they know what's going to happen. We are definitely seeing that here.

I'm hearing that, indeed, there's a real question about the independence of the board to make the tough decisions that they have been able to make, that has been a critical piece of the success of that particular foundation that I'm highlighting. I mean, there's a very definitive time-sensitive consequence to all of this because they have an independent review every five years by international experts. [interjection] I don't know. I don't think the minister is going to be so happy about what could be coming out of that one. You can jig that. You know, you can have the right people in place and put them in place for the five years, you get your passing check mark, and then you pull the whole thing apart. That's certainly quite possible, and I've seen that happen in other situations. But it's darn hard to rebuild the next time you're coming around to that five-year review.

That's what I see has happened, and I've taken quite a bit of time already to describe it. I'll be very interested in reviewing a sort of sectional analysis and reviewing some more of the information I've been able to dig up about this when I'm able to speak in Committee of the Whole.

At this point I know there's some interest in moving on, so, Mr. Speaker, I would move adjournment of Bill 27 at this point.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 28 Energy Statutes Amendment Act, 2009

[Adjourned debate April 22: Mr. McFarland]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This bill, the Energy Statutes Amendment Act, 2009, I think has some things to commend it. I look forward to an extensive discussion in committee. The bitumen royalty in kind mechanism that it proposes I think is worth a serious look. We've discussed that with the minister, and we've done some thinking through on that ourselves. There will be, undoubtedly, some questions around the orphan well funding, the extra $30 million, I believe, this allocates for orphan wells and larger sites than that. But our general sense of this is that this is a bill that probably needs to make its way through.

So I call the question on Bill 28. [interjection] No. Sorry. I misspoke. Some day I would like to call the question on Bill 28 – that's what I meant to say – but not right now. I'll take my seat, and I think others may want to speak.

Thank you.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much to the Member for Edmonton-Riverview for introducing my opportunity to speak very briefly to this bill in second reading. I've not had a chance to look through it in a great deal of detail, so I, too, look forward to the opportunity to discuss it further in third reading.

However, in first review of it, we do have some concerns with respect to the objectives being sought through this bill and the many amendments that it makes. It does appear to include a number of provisions for removing the need for an order in council and the subsequent report to the Legislature of same where permits and licences are being amended either in the coal sector or in the oil and gas sector by, in some cases, the ERCB or otherwise.

This is a concern because it's part of an ongoing pattern with this government to move more stuff from legislation to regulation and then more stuff from regulation to policy, and the more that's done, the less we're able to keep track of how things are and the less opportunity we have to debate it. Of course, that's particularly interesting as the nature of the changes are no longer considered regulatory. It will of course have some implications in relation to the upcoming Bill 36 and the legal nature of certain provisions that will be created through the operation of that act. So I think that there are some pretty significant consequences to this.

Generally speaking, this is an act that is designed to support the government's energy strategy that was released in December. Without getting into a great deal of detail, our caucus has a significant number of concerns with respect to that strategy as it was introduced, the first of which is that, like many other things that we've talked about over the last several months, it lacks detail. Also, in terms of the detail that we do have, it is a strategy that is premised on the notion that the primary focus of our economic development, our innovation efforts, our postsecondary education system, and our approach to renewable energy – it assumes that the fossil fuel industry is the primary vehicle for all good fortune in the province for at least 30 years. It very clearly trivializes the role that government needs to play with respect to the development of a renewable sector much, much sooner than 30 years from now. So, frankly, any piece of legislation that supports that very vague but concerning provincial energy strategy is one about which we also have concerns.

This bill will also of course allow for the notion of bitumen being received as an in-kind royalty. Although our caucus has talked at great length for some time now about the need for the province to take more clear action to compel bitumen to be upgraded in the province to create more jobs here, it's not our view that this is the mechanism that is most fair to Albertans, who are the owners of the resource. In fact, we need to be increasing the amount of money we get from these companies, and we need to be limiting the amount of bitumen that ultimately can be sent down the ever-growing number of pipelines which are being built as we speak. Of course, as we know, while the economy is slowing down, one thing that's not slowing down is the efforts being made to expand the capacity of our southern neighbours to receive our bitumen and process it there.

I think there's a lot more debate that needs to be had on this bill and the overall strategy that the government tends to adopt to the extent that there is any strategy inherent, ultimately, in how our energy resources are developed and managed for the benefit of Albertans. I'm not sure that there is, but if there is any, we certainly need to have a greater discussion on that, so I look forward to the opportunity to hear more from the government about how this bill supports their strategy and what the details are around that strategy.

I look forward at that time to having further discussion about our response to all of that.

I thank the Assembly for giving me the opportunity to speak to this bill in second reading. I assume we will now call the question.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other member wish to speak?

Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 28 read a second time]

Bill 44

Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Amendment Act, 2009

[Adjourned debate April 29: Mr. Blackett]

The Deputy Speaker: Like the Speaker said earlier, we have a cameraman here to film those who speak today.

I would like to recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very glad for the opportunity to rise in second reading and speak as the Official Opposition critic for the Liberal caucus to Bill 44, the Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Amendment Act, 2009. This is certainly expected to be a controversial bill, mostly because the government started into this, I think, for a good reason, to correct some administrative process and procedural problems with the way the Human Rights Commission was actually operating. As they should and, in fact, should have, in 1998 they were going to have the act opened to add in the definition of sexual orientation under the prohibited grounds of discrimination under our Human Rights Act. Then I don't know what happened, but they started to clean out the fridge and added a whole bunch of other things in here that are certainly going to make for an interesting debate.

So let me say right from the get-go that I and a number of the people that I represent and many others that are not my constituents are very glad to see the inclusion of sexual orientation under prohibited grounds of discrimination. This has been a long-running embarrassment and sore thorn in our side in the way we look at ourselves and in the way others look at us in Alberta. As a result of a case that started here in Alberta with the Delwin Vriend case, the Supreme Court ruled that we must include, we must extend protection to those who have been discriminated against on the grounds of sexual orientation, particularly as it applies in employment, housing, and access to government programs and services.

The Supreme Court at the time was actually pretty prescient and kind of thought they might have some trouble with this government, and they insisted that not only would they tell the government that they needed to do this, but they would actually insist that the legislation be read as though the grounds were actually written in, and in fact that has happened in the last period of time. Those who approached the Human Rights Commission with a complaint around discrimination based on sexual orientation have in fact had their cases taken up by our commission here in Alberta. But for those that didn't know and went and got the act out and read it, there was nothing in there to tell them that they, in fact, had protection under those prohibited grounds – nothing – because it had not actually been written into our act.

So thank you for finally putting that into the act. It was long past time, but I'm still glad that you did it. It should be there. I think it's a real indicator of our Canadian society and Albertan society that we do understand and value that there is a diversity of people and that it's important to us as citizens that we offer protection to people from discrimination and, further than that, we take a step further in that we offer the services of the Human Rights Commission on their behalf for that.

There are also a number of administrative matters that are being dealt with in this act, and that's things like the name. When the act got changed a while back, they added citizenship and multiculturalism, so what had been the Alberta Human Rights Act now became the Alberta Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Act, which also sort of made it a bit confusing about what was actually going on and who was supposed to be served by this legislation. So this is proposing that there be some clarity and removes the references to citizenship and multiculturalism.

As we led up to this bill being tabled in the House, the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit was very active in the media, and so were many others in trying to figure out what was going to be in the legislation. Part of the questions at the time were: who did you consult? Who did you actually talk to about what was going to go into this act? At various times we got various answers from the minister, a whole long list of people that were consulted, although others have come back to me since then and said: boy, if that was a consultation, never seen it done that way before. I think that there is some question there about whether groups actually were asked what they wanted to see in the act and what they didn't and whether in fact there was a two-way communication there.

One of the groups that the minister repeatedly referred to was the Sheldon Chumir foundation for ethics. Of course, we're very proud in the Liberal caucus that Sheldon Chumir was an elected member in our caucus for many years in this Assembly, has been a great citizen for Alberta, and has given us a great example and, in fact, a great legacy with the ethics foundation that carries his name. The foundation did a very thorough consultation, and the minister seemed very happy to take that consultation as his own.

It was interesting reviewing what the Sheldon Chumir foundation actually recommended happen with the review, opening up, and amending of the human rights act and what the minister took and what he didn't take. They did in fact recommend some things like changing the name. They made a number of recommendations about how the commission actually worked, and there have been some suggestions on streamlining that administrative process, clarifying the functions, renaming the commissioners as tribunal-less, severing the position of the executive director on the government side, who's actually the same person as the director of the commission – those were actually the same individual, so you could argue that there was a conflict of interest there – enabling a paper review, enabling the chief of the commission and the tribunals to delegate reviews and appoint panels, restrictions limiting the director's authority. The government has done a number of those things. So let me give credit to the government for what it has done right.

Here's the rub. You know, in 12 years in this Assembly, Mr. Speaker, I don't know that there have been very many bills that I could just jump behind and say: yahoo; let's go lock, stock, and barrel. This government always seems to like to present a difficulty. Usually where I start to have trouble is in examining both the intended and the unintended consequences of the legislation that they propose. Here we have a number of things that I am very eager to support in the legislation, and that is complicated by the other things that the government has included in this legislation. Of course, number one under that is section 11.1. That appears in the bill as the bill's section 9, but it's amending section 11.1 of the actual act. It's essentially allowing a parental opt-out.

Now, let me be clear here – and most people would have already heard this – that we already have a system in Alberta through the School Act where parents can ask to be notified when certain subjects or issues come up in a teaching classroom situation, and they can give written notification to request that their child is given an alternate instruction module and is not engaged in the classroom instruction for those particular subjects. So we already had a process in place. But what this act does, Bill 44, is it actually takes something that, as we know, is operational now and falls under the School Act and drops it into the middle of the human rights act. So, one, that's an inappropriate place to have it. I'm just going to read this so everyone knows what I'm talking about. Section 11.1(1) says:

A board as defined in the School Act shall provide notice to a parent or guardian of a student where courses of study, educational programs or instructional materials, or instruction or exercises, prescribed under that Act include subject-matter that deals explicitly with religion, sexuality or sexual orientation.

A school is now under some requirement, if this act passes, to identify again to parents what might be considered – and I listed all those things – essentially, subject matter that deals explicitly with religion, sexuality, or sexual orientation. Then you start to get into a description of how you consider the word “religion.” How is that going to be defined? Who does the defining of that? I don't understand why the government waded into this one, but I've been told repeatedly, and I guess we'll hear from other speakers, that this was a compromise, that it was a political compromise. In order to get the sexual orientation written into the act, this was the political compromise. This section would be inserted to satisfy what some other members of the caucus wish to have. Okay? That's what I'm told. We have lots of opportunity for others to talk about this.

It goes on, and in section (2) it talks about:

Where a teacher or other person providing instruction, teaching a course of study or educational program or using the instructional materials referred to in [the previous section] receives a written request signed by a parent or guardian of a student that the student be excluded from the instruction, course of study, educational program or use of instructional materials, the teacher or other person shall in accordance with the request . . . and without academic penalty permit the student . . .

And it goes on to say, basically, to either leave the classroom or be given something else to do while they sit in the class.

The problem that arises out of this is: what do you do about teaching and instructional opportunities – what they call teachable moments – that arise in the normal give-and-take of a classroom day? What is a teacher supposed to do? Do they stop teaching completely, not take advantage of the opportunity to explore something, a particular issue, because it might be interpreted by some parent or guardian as being subject matter that is dealing explicitly with religion, sexuality, or sexual orientation? How do you make that call in the middle of your teaching day?

Alternatively, the teachers under the School Act are actually given instructions about how to engage students and to take that opportunity, to seize upon those opportunities to find a way to help students come to – and I'm going to quote here. This is from the Sheldon Chumir document. Article 26(2) stipulates that education is to “promote understanding, tolerance and friendship among all nations, racial or religious groups.”

They say:

It is difficult to see how withdrawing children from material which one religious group finds objectionable gives those students the tools to come to understand, tolerate or find friendship with people who differ from them on religious or other grounds.

Excellent point.

There's a situation being created with this legislation that, one, puts a tremendous burden on the teacher in the classroom, avoids opportunities that are amazing opportunities to teach students how to move forward in our increasingly diverse world. Further to that, following up on my questions to the minister, a number of questions in question period in this House, it's clear that that section can be used by parents and guardians to bring a human rights case against a teacher, a school, a principal, a school board based on the situation that's described there. So now we have a situation. How about that for putting a chill on instruction and on a teacher?

Mr. MacDonald: Who would pay for the legal fees?

Ms Blakeman: Well, it's a good question. Human rights is not a simple process anymore. It's quite complex. You do end up with both sides often incurring a number of fees, including legal fees. So what kind of a chill do we put on our teachers to say: “Whoa. Be careful. Any time anything comes up that could be construed as being explicitly religious, sexual, or around sexual orientation, don't go there, or you could have a human rights case brought against you, which will cost you time and money.”

When I tried to press the minister responsible and say: “Okay. Well, if you're so sure this isn't going to happen, are you going to pick up the legal fees for any teacher that this happens to?” “Oh, well, it's not going to happen,” he said. This is part of, I hope, the unintended consequences but, I suspect, intended consequences of what's in section 11.1

Certainly, the school boards have reacted fairly vehemently around that and there have been joint media releases from the Alberta School Boards Association, the Alberta Teachers' Association – I'm sorry; I don't even know all these initials here – the College of Alberta School Superintendents, and the Alberta School Councils' Association. They are talking about the chilling effect that legislation will have in the classrooms, the onus on the school to now send out even more notification to parents of how and when a controversial issue might be caught up. But isn't that exactly what we need? When there's a controversial issue, don't we need all of those students to be talking and thinking about this so they come to some kind of understanding about the society that we have and that we can move forward in?

The government has spent – I don't know how much – $25 million rebranding this province's image. I'm constantly being told: it's all about Alberta's diversity. Really? Well, I guess it's about Alberta's diversity but minus anything that might have to do with a subject matter that's explicitly religious, sexual, or around sexual orientation. How is that more diverse? How is that moving forward, you know, in this new millennium of ours? It's not. It's taking us backwards. For some reason this caucus has decided on a political compromise that is literally one step forward and at least one step back and, I think many will argue, more than one step back. Obviously, I don't approve of that section.

There is a lot of information that is out there now, and I really encourage people that are listening to this on the video streaming or reading Hansard to follow up with this.

A couple of other points I want to make before my time is over here on a couple of things that were not included in this that I think should have been. One of the issues is that there is no mention of gender identity. The definition of that and the understanding of where gender identity sits in our culture is a complex one and is hard for some people to deal with, but that doesn't mean that we shouldn't deal with it. We should. The funding for gender reassignment surgery has now been cut by the minister of health, so there's even less support and understanding. Maybe these two things are linked and are consequential or sequential and are deliberate actions by the government. I don't know. But we have no recognition of gender identity in this act. I think this was an opportunity to add it in, and it should be added in. We don't get these human rights acts opened up very often, and we should do the right work when we have the opportunity.

The Sheldon Chumir foundation had recommended as well – and I'll just read recommendation 12 – that aboriginal heritage “be added as an expressly illegal ground of discrimination in the Alberta human rights legislation.” They develop a very solid argument about that, appearing on pages 29 and 30 of the document that they released, Toward Equal Opportunity for all Albertans: Recommendations for Improvement of the Alberta Human Rights Commission.

The other issue that was not included and I think should have been is the concept of workplace bullying. The government seemed to have had a fairly firm grasp of childhood bullying, schoolyard bullying. The concepts are the same; they're just happening between older groups of people. They have programs that they run in their children's services section. They had a whole summit or one of those things they have – a round-table, a summit, a forum, a consultation, stakeholder something or other – that was chaired by the now minister of finance, the then minister of children's services, which was an excellent and very far-ranging exploration of the issues that are affecting children, especially around violence. Bullying is considered an issue of violence, especially for children.

So here we have an opportunity to add that into the human rights act. I get a lot of complaints in my office around that issue. There is no mechanism for people to take an issue like a workplace bullying issue to the Human Rights Commission because it's not protected grounds.

Also, very curious, suggested by the Sheldon Chumir again and not in this act – and I'm looking forward to the debate from government members as to why that choice was made – is the recommendation that we revert to the 1996 wording around hate propaganda and dissemination of material that encourages or may incite hatred towards an identifiable group. It was not put into this legislation, and I'm very interested to hear why the choice was made to not do that. I'll tell you that the media and a number of others strongly encouraged it.

Thank you for the opportunity, Mr. Speaker. I look forward to a vigorous debate.

The Deputy Speaker: The chair has received indication from the hon. members for Airdrie-Chestermere, Edmonton-Strathcona, Calgary-Nose Hill, and Calgary-Egmont to speak.

The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to stand in this House today and speak to Bill 44, the Alberta Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Amendment Act, 2009. It's quite a mouthful. I wish to address what I believe is one of the most positive and meaningful advances for human rights that this province and this country has seen in many years. I refer to section 11.1 of this proposed legislation, or, as it is better known, the parental rights clause. This section, in accordance with article 26(3) of the United Nations universal declaration of human rights enshrines as a human right a parent's right to choose whether or not their child shall be taught controversial subject matter that may offend their family's most personal and closely held beliefs. Specifically, this refers to curriculum that explicitly teaches religion, sexuality, or sexual orientation.

Mr. Speaker, I want to applaud the minister and the Premier for making the inclusion of this parental rights provision possible, but I also want to express the pride that I feel in being a member of this government caucus. Although the members of this government caucus are as diverse in opinion as the communities and people that they represent, I can say without reservation that we all understand that there is no institution, program, or initiative, government-led or otherwise, that is more essential to the future prosperity of this province than our committed parents and strong families.

Too often, Mr. Speaker, we allow the fluid and fuzzy boundaries of political correctness to cloud our political discourse surrounding what is truly critical to bettering our society. We have no shortage of government programs and solutions for every conceivable criminal activity, every health challenge, every mental health issue, every instance of poverty and hardship, and, indeed, many of these government programs and initiatives are important and must be continued. However, facts are stubborn things, and the facts are that the most effective antidotes against crime, poverty, and virtually any other social ill are caring parents working together to build loving, safe, and financially stable homes where their children are able to learn and grow into contributing members of society.

Mr. Speaker, the day that we lose sight of this truth, the day that we undermine the central and critical role of parents and family in the fabric of our society is the first day of the decline of this province and of this country. Committed and thoughtful parenting is the key to positively shaping the lives of our next generation for the better, and there is no more effective parental arrangement than a committed mother and father working side by side for the benefit of their child. There is an absolutely overwhelming body of social science evidence demonstrating beyond any reasonable doubt that children living in traditional intact families – a mom, a dad, and a child – when compared to any other family arrangement are on average less likely to be suspended from school, less likely to use illegal drugs and other harmful substances, less likely to commit minor property crime, less likely to engage in violent behaviour and violent crime, and are less likely to be the victims of various kinds of abuse. They are, on the other hand, more likely to graduate high school and go on to university and more likely to earn more income.

As we all know, not all families remain intact. Tragedy and misfortune are part of the human experience, and marriage breakups are not uncommon. Such circumstances are not easy for anyone involved, especially children, but when these instances do occur, how can anyone overlook the need for the heroic efforts of single parents, grandparents, step-parents, adoptive parents, and foster parents in picking up the pieces and guiding the involved children through what is for them a time of much confusion, heartache, and oftentimes financial difficulty? In these difficult circumstances it is the sacrifice and devotion of these parents that is all that stands between a child having a fighting chance at success in life and an almost complete guarantee of failure.

I personally think of the orphanage in China that my adopted baby sister came to our family from. My heart breaks when I think that had my parents not stepped forward to fill that parental gap, the happy little girl with the bright future that I know and love today would never have known safety and security and would never have known parental love. The fact is that she would likely have been consigned to a life of poverty, loneliness, and unspeakable choices.

Parenting matters. There is no position, there's no career, there's no job that matters more to the life of a child. By extension, there is no job that is more important to our society. Government programs no matter how effectively implemented, teachers no matter how well qualified, social workers no matter how well intended are simply unable to replace the role of parents in the life of a child. Why is this so? Well, simply put, it is due to the unique and special bond that exists between a parent and child that allows a parent to know their child better than anyone else possibly could.

My wife, Anita, and I have four boys. There's no one in this world that cares for those boys more than we do. There's no one that understands those boys better than we do. We know how each one learns and what motivates them. We know what values they live by because we taught them those values. In fact, we can already see some of the challenges that they will inevitably have to face, and we are preparing them to meet those challenges. There is no educational course of study that could possibly teach any individual what Anita and I know about our sons. Because we know them so well and because their welfare is the only agenda our feelings for them will permit, does it not follow that we as parents are in by far the best position to determine what is and is not in their best interest?

Now, we have laws that ensure that there is a basic standard of care that any parent or guardian must adhere to, and these laws are very important to maintain, of course. However, these laws merely attempt to guarantee that each child will be given a blank canvas upon which to paint his life's work. The first small brush strokes of that painting are best guided by the steady hand of a caring and experienced parent in the hopes that that child one day can be taught to paint a masterpiece. Hopefully, these first few critical brush strokes include a parent instilling in their child the first understandings of a value-based system of morality and ethics to promote and reinforce healthy and positive decision-making.

Oftentimes this system of time-honoured virtues is based on a specific religion. Other times it's based on traditional societal values or natural law or just good, old-fashioned common sense. Whatever the source of that value system, it is often very sensitive and personal to both the parent and the child, and so it should be. What use is a system of values that cannot or is unable to positively mould behaviour in any meaningful way? I would ask: if we expect, as we should, parents to teach their children positive values on which each child can build a successful future, should we not as a society respect the right of a parent to teach those values in the home without having them explicitly countered in our schools without parental consent? I say that we do owe parents that respect. I say that we owe children that respect.

Now, of course, lines must be drawn. Logistically it is impossible to burden our education system with the necessity to cater to every possible parental educational preference. However, is it not reasonable to commit to the parents of this province that with regard to their and their child's most personal and sensitive core beliefs, it is they, the parents, that will have the final say as to whether and how such subjects are taught to their children? I would submit that it is not only reasonable for parents to expect this; I would submit that it is their human right to expect this.

Mr. Speaker, that is what this proposed parental rights provision is all about. It is about recognizing the unmatched bond of commitment that exists between a parent and child, it is about affirming that it is within this relationship that a moral code of conduct is most appropriately taught, and it is about guaranteeing for each parent that it is they and no one else who will be ultimately responsible for what values are taught to their child.

It has been well said that the people we influence in a positive way constitute the real and lasting monuments of our lives. For most of us the people we are best positioned and best equipped to influence in a positive way are our children. Mr. Speaker, the day this bill becomes law will mark a special day for this province and for this country. It is a victory for human rights, it is a victory for parents and children, it is a victory for this province, and it is something that we can all be very proud of.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: We have five minutes for comments and questions. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much. The hon. member quoted the United Nations universal declaration of human rights. I would like to know why with this particular piece of legislation the hon. member feels that it applies, yet it does not apply whenever we're dealing with issues around children's services or issues around migratory workers who come to work in Alberta's farms and factories.

Mr. Anderson: I fail to see how we got from parental rights in child education to children's services. I don't know what the member is speaking about, what specific policy he may be speaking about. I would be happy to discuss that with him, but he'll have to be a little bit more specific on what in the world he is talking about.

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I just want to say that in this Assembly we have heard many outstanding comments from members. Every now and then you take a set of those comments home from Hansard and publish them for your community. I will be proud to do that with the comments made by Airdrie-Chestermere today, well acquitted and clearly identifying why his community is so proud of his representation.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. I could feel the passion and the eloquence in the comments from the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere though it doesn't mean I necessarily agree with him. My question to the point is: why does the member feel that the ability of a parent to take their child out of a classroom needs to be put into the human rights legislation when it's already in the School Act? Why this extra step?

Mr. Anderson: Well, it's partly symbolic. There's no doubt about that. It's about recognizing the special relationship that exists between a parent and child. But it is also practical. If I look to our neighbours in British Columbia, there is no doubt that right now there is a movement under way to take that very right that parents have in British Columbia away from them so that they cannot opt their children out of these specific courses. So I think that it's important to enshrine that in this legislation.

It's important that we as Albertans don't look at this as a step backward. It certainly is not. I mean, I respect the Member for Edmonton-Centre's comments about us being a diverse province, and I agree with her. It is just absolutely important that we show that principle to all Albertans and to all Canadians. But are we not diverse enough, are we not tolerant enough that we can allow for a parent that has a different viewpoint on the way their religion might be taught in school or with regard to an issue that is very sensitive around sexuality and such? Are we not diverse enough, are we not comfortable enough in our own skin that there's room in our society for those types of people, or are we so worried about hurting people's feelings and being politically correct that we would effectively stamp on that person's closely held personal beliefs? I think that we are big enough and we are diverse enough and we are tolerant enough to accept the rights of all members of society, whether we agree with them or not. So that's why I think that it's important to have this in the legislation.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the hon. member: what extra resources will be needed in public schools to enforce the amendment to the School Act?

Mr. Anderson: Well, I would say that that's a better question, of course, for the Minister of Education, but my guess would be: not very much if at all. As is stated, it is right now government policy, School Act policy, Department of Education policy that parents can opt can their kids out. The only difference is now parents will have to be notified in advance of those few tiny subjects, say a course in religious curriculum and such. They will be notified and have a chance to opt out of that. That's the only difference.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, now we are back to the bill, and I have a list of people who indicated to me that they wish to speak on the bill: the members for Edmonton-Strathcona, Calgary-Nose Hill, Edmonton-Gold Bar, Calgary-Egmont, Edmonton-Riverview, Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to be able to finally have an opportunity to speak at more length about this issue. I won't go so far as to say that I'm pleased at the opportunity because I think that the fact that this bill is coming into this House today is, in my view, very disturbing to me as a member of this Assembly, and in some ways, you know, I'm quite sad today, actually, that I need to be in the House outlining the significant concerns that exist around elements of this piece of legislation.

What should be a time for a significant portion of Albertans to celebrate a long-awaited symbolic recognition of their equality has instead turned into this debate, which, in my view, undermines the impression of Albertans to the rest of the world, undermines our own collective commitment to education and to diversity and to a full, thoughtful discussion of things, and ultimately undermines the very new right which we are in the process of being about to recognize.

Let me just talk a little bit about that. Obviously, the key issue with respect to this bill is section 11, and that's, of course, the part of the bill that would allow parents to have their children opt out of instruction that deals explicitly with religion, sexuality, or sexual orientation. It is this particular section which, in my view, represents a very dark day in the history of this province.

Let me talk first about the issue with respect to religion. Now, I respect the right of parents to choose what religious instruction their children will or will not receive. Personally, I would prefer to see a system where all children were given a very neutral survey course on what different types of religion look like. That's my personal belief of what would represent the most enlightened approach to educating my children. But I understand that my belief is not everyone's belief, and I appreciate that some people feel very strongly that they don't want their children's religious instruction that they receive at home and their beliefs – it goes beyond just instruction – to be challenged in the school setting, and that's fine.

Section 50 of the School Act deals with that issue. It deals with that already. The School Act talks about education. The School Act talks about parents' rights in relation to their children's education. The School Act talks about that whole milieu. It is not necessary to put that provision into the human rights code. The human rights code is not a document designed to undermine the very rights which are included in the human rights code. It is not a document designed to, as the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere talked about, bow to every different person's version of what is politically correct today or tomorrow or the next day. It is a set of rights that we presumably all agree all people have. So I'm very concerned about muddying the waters with a statement that we are prepared to undermine some of those rights in certain circumstances.

Now, I'll talk a little bit about how it is I believe we're doing that, but I want to just stay for a moment on the issue of religious instruction. One of the problems with putting this into the human rights code and taking it out of the School Act is that you make it a human right, and with that comes a whole slew of legal consequences and implications. It allows for a broad range of interpretive efforts to be applied to it. What we're putting in it right now could be amended through a great deal of litigation in the future, and because it's an active right which is found in the code, it will be treated differently than what's in the School Act, which is essentially an administrative provision.

Right now in our schools what theoretically happens is if religious instruction – and, of course, the School Act only talks about religious instruction. The School Act does not allow parents to pull their kids because somebody talks about the dreaded sexual orientation. Let's just say for a moment we're talking about the issue of religion. If religion is brought up, the family needs to get notice. Well, that's fine. What does the notice ultimately look like? At the beginning of the year, can the school board say: from time to time in grade 12 the social studies curriculum will call on the teacher to engage in discussions that will cover issues that may cover religion, that may cover theories of evolution, that may cover philosophical discussions that have implications for certain religions, which may cover the concept of, for instance, gender equity and gender equality? If they give that notice, is that enough? Can the parent then simply provide the notice to the teacher, and then every time those issues come up in the teaching moments that we've talked so much about, the teacher just says to the child: you have the option now to leave the room because we're talking about these issues. Is that the way it would work?

Well, now that it's in the human rights code, it is entirely possible that the parents would be able to go and say: "Well, this right that you're giving me is meaningless if it's administered this way, so in fact what you need to do is give me notice every time it's going to happen. You've got to give me dates. You've got to give me content. You've got to give me written curriculum because otherwise this right that you've now given me in the human rights code of my province is meaningless." That's what happens when you put it in the code. So then suddenly we create chaos.

Alternatively they can turn around and say: "You've given me this right, but in my exercising this right, my child has to now sit in the hall playing with his DS or something like that. In effect my child is being discriminated against now because I cannot crystalize or act upon my right that is in the code without otherwise adversely impacting my child by making him or her sit in the hall. Therefore, you've breached my right, so you need to actually come up with a whole new way to teach my child during the time that that education's going on."

With all of these things, this is not trying to create a panic. This is not trying to blow it up beyond what it is. It's not. This is the kind of thing that happens when you put a new right into the human rights code, and let's just be clear: this is a new right that we are putting into the human rights code. There is no other human rights code in the country that has this right embedded in the code. It is embedded elsewhere, not in the human rights code. This is the kind of chaos that we will create.

Then, of course, the other thing is that under the School Act it is not necessarily the case that the teacher would become the subject, a respondent in a human rights commission hearing. The teacher would not necessarily become compelled to defend their course of study, defend the way in which the particular issue came up in the class. They wouldn't under the School Act. They will now, another consequence of putting it into the human rights code.

Again, for the member opposite, this is not a symbolic change. This is a substantive change. It is a change that is going to significantly limit the way teachers approach their job in the classroom. I have numerous friends who are high school teachers, who are high school social studies teachers, who are high school English teachers, who are high school science teachers. The teaching moment is a critical way in which they engage their students in critical debate in order to bring about a truly meaningful education. That process will be limited by this substantive provision which is now, for the first time in the history of this country, proposed as a human rights provision.

In short, what we are going to do is we are going to not just protect the rights of that one child to have certain things kept away from them in the school setting, but also while we do it, we are setting up a system that for every other child whose parent does want them to get a balanced education, to hear both sides of every story, to engage in a thoughtful debate, those children's rights will ultimately be impeded because of the natural chilling effect that will arise from this being an element of the human rights code.

I don't have a lot of time left yet, so I want to go on to the issue of where I think we are in effect creating a second tier, a second-class set of human rights in our human rights code. Once again, I believe we are leading the way in the country in our efforts to create a set of second-class human rights. Without this act being in place, thanks to the Supreme Court of Canada, gay and lesbian Albertans enjoy the same protection under the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms as gay and lesbian people across the rest of the country. That's because, as we all know, the Supreme Court of Canada insists that the right to protection from discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation is in effect read into our code.

Of course, we were hoping to actually have it written into the code to create a symbolic victory. Unfortunately, now what we're doing is that we are saying: we're going to write it in there, but then we're going to treat it just a little bit differently. In our human rights code we say that people cannot be discriminated against on the basis of their race, on the basis of their colour, on the basis of their gender. This is a long list of prohibited grounds. We are now about to add sexual orientation in writing to that list of prohibited grounds. Of course, as we know, it has already been read in there by the courts, but we're going to actually put it in writing. Yay for us.

Then, through section 11, we're going to treat that prohibited ground differently from all the other prohibited grounds because some people think that parents need to have the right to recognize the personal and sensitive core beliefs that they need to massage and parent their kids with. Apparently, we as parents need to be able to shelter our children from one of the prohibited grounds in the human rights code of this province. We're not giving parents the opportunity to exclude their children from instruction on other races. We're not giving parents the legal opportunity to exclude their children from instruction on other cultures. We are not giving parents the legal opportunity to exclude their children from instruction on other genders. But we are going to give parents the legal opportunity to exclude their children from discussion about sexual orientation. What that says to me is that we are treating it differently.

While the Supreme Court of Canada had told us we couldn't treat it differently, now we are going to say: we are treating it differently. That is why I am so offended by this piece of legislation. After 11 years of ignoring the Supreme Court of Canada's direction that we write in that sexual orientation is a prohibited ground for discrimination, we're going to write it in, and then we're going to qualify it, and we're going to treat them differently from other minorities within the province. To me that is deeply, deeply disturbing, and I think we should be very, very embarrassed.

Now, at the end of the day, you know, there has been lots of talk about: oh, well, the School Act already allows them to do that.

Well, as I say, the School Act talks about religious and patriotic instruction, and the school policy talks about sexuality. But this is not about sexuality. This is about some people are disabled, some people are brown, some people are women, some people are gay. That's all it is. Our children should learn that they should all be treated equally, and our schools should not under any circumstances refrain from telling all kids that because if it's in our human rights code, presumably we believe it too.

That is where we are left with all of this. As I have said, it is very, very concerning to me that we are embarking upon a path to, first of all, limit the breadth of discussion and intellectual curiosity within our schools through a mechanism that will put a chilling effect on our teachers and at the same time create a second tier of human rights in the province.

The Deputy Speaker: We have five minutes for comments and questions to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Seeing none, now I would like to recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak on the subject of Bill 44, the Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Amendment Act, 2009. This bill would ban discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation, as dictated by our Supreme Court of Canada in the Vriend decision, it would also streamline the procedures under which the act is administered, and it also includes a provision on parental rights. Section 9 of Bill 44 states that a board as defined in the School Act shall provide notice to a parent or guardian of a student where courses of study, educational programs or instructional materials, or instruction or exercises, prescribed under that Act include subject-matter that deals explicitly with religion, sexuality or sexual orientation.

Parents would have the option, if they so chose, to have their children moved from the classroom or not participate while those topics were being discussed or covered. This section is intended to protect parents' choice to not expose their children to religious or moral beliefs that are contradictory to their own belief system. It is a right that is presently found in more or less the same manner in our School Act.

Mr. Speaker, the meaning of section 9 of the bill and its possible ramifications for teaching various classroom subjects has been the topic of much conjecture, surmise, speculation, and so on in the public, in the press, and by members of the opposition during question period in this House. The conjecture has centred around the fact that some could interpret the so-called parental rights clause in such a manner that a student might be excused from the teaching of various aspects of history or biology or evolution.

The rhetoric has been inflammatory in the extreme. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood asked: "Will Holocaust deniers be able to claim religious grounds to prevent their children from learning about the Holocaust?" The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity asked: "What is the justification for allowing our universal public education system to be held hostage by the social conservatives?" The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona asked: "Why has the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit proposed policy that allows a parent who believes in the subordination of women on religious grounds to interfere with a young girl learning about her democratic rights?" A comparison has also been made to the so-called Scopes monkey trial of the teacher, John Scopes, who defied a Tennessee law banning the teaching of evolution.

Mr. Speaker, in my respectful submission, all of this is hyperbolic conjecture and nonsense. There is nothing in this bill that prohibits the teaching of evolution or which puts it within the ambit of dealing explicitly with religion. The Minister of Culture and Community Spirit, the sponsor of the bill, stood in this House during question period and refuted the narrow view of that clause. Mr. Speaker, if the hypothetical ramifications of this provision as posited by members of the opposition and certain members of the press were justified, I can say without hesitation, without equivocation that I would not be supporting it. If it allowed parents or students to opt out of a curriculum dealing with evolution or biological sciences, I could not vote for this. If it denied all students the opportunity of learning about the Holocaust or any part of world history, I would not vote for it either.

5:30

Mr. Speaker, as a former professor of biology I'd like to make a few remarks and some comments about evolution. The theory of evolution is quite simply an integral part of biology, the science of life. Life sciences are of great value to our society. They should be taught as part of the curriculum in all Alberta schools to all students.

The theory of evolution was elaborated by Charles Darwin in his publication On the Origin of Species by Means of Natural Selection in the year 1859, 150 years ago. He and his contemporary Alfred Russel Wallace identified the driving force behind evolution, natural selection. Darwin observed that within a population of living organisms of the same species, individual variability of traits occurs. Darwin believed that the offspring derived characteristics from each of their parents and that this variability of traits could give the possessor either an advantage or a disadvantage in survival and in reproduction in a particular environment. Of course, the exact mechanisms of genetics and the structure of DNA would not be known for a hundred years after Darwin.

Mr. Speaker, it would not be an exaggeration to say that the theory of evolution is central to the understanding of all biological sciences, and biological sciences touch our lives and our society in a myriad of ways, including, to name just a few, animal and plant genetics, livestock breeding, crop improvements, pest control, human health, food safety, medicine, antibiotics and other pharmaceuticals, vaccination, and disease control.

Evolution is often referred to as a theory, Mr. Speaker, but it is not simply an unproven, hypothetical theory as we might use that term in everyday parlance. When somebody dies violently, we might have a theory or a supposition as to the cause of death or a theory as to who caused the death, but when we speak of a theory in science, we mean something more substantive, that is testable.

The theory of evolution is based on scientific principles. It has been observed and tested repeatedly in both natural and laboratory settings and has been found to be sound, reliable, and repeatable. The process of evolution has been demonstrated and revealed by research in diverse fields, including paleontology, geology, taxonomy, biogeography, animal behaviour, and especially by genetics and the ability to read the genome of man and other living creatures.

With advances in technology and our ability to read the genetic code of viruses, we are now able for the first time to see evolution occurring virtually in real time as genetic sequences in influenza viruses change slightly from one population to the next. Flu viruses, with their rapid replication, quickly mutate their form into another strain. This happens frequently and makes tracking of specific strains of viruses extremely important. This is the reason why, when we get our flu vaccine every year, there are usually three new strains of flu covered in our vaccine. Scientists have observed the prevalence and the spread of new flu strains in the spring and are able to prepare vaccinations based on their genetic makeup for the following fall flu season. The H1N1 flu outbreak is now currently being examined in laboratories around the world on a case-by-case basis to see how the virus is mutating and evolving. This information is invaluable to public health authorities, vaccine manufacturers, and health care providers. Mr. Speaker, it is for reasons such as these that biological sciences need to be taught to all students in all Alberta schools.

Mr. Speaker, I want to expand on why I believe the discussion of biological sciences in general and evolution in particular does not properly infringe on anyone's religion. I agree with His Holiness Pope Pius XII, who stated many years ago that there is no opposition between evolution and the doctrine of faith about man and his vocation.

There is no doubt that historically there was conflict between science and religion. The case of Galileo Galilei was a famous case where religious leaders were responsible for the persecution which occurred against a man who sought the truth, in that case the truth of the universe as proposed by Copernicus, that the Earth revolved around the sun. Happily, however, with very few exceptions the great religions have reconciled themselves to the fact that matters of science and the pursuit of truth do not in any way hinder the fundamental teachings of faith and religion.

Mr. Speaker, there is a distinct difference between faith and reason. Faith is the province of religion. Reason is the province of science. His Holiness Pope John Paul II agreed with this distinction himself and explored this in his encyclical of September 1998, Fides et Ratio. Reason is bound by laws and observations. The divorce of reason and faith is summed up by Immanuel Kant in his work Critique of Pure Reason, where he stated that reason is used for understanding of the world, that we are entirely dependent on our senses and our observations. Faith is very different. There is no need for any laws or any observations to justify what has happened. Knowledge of things that are unobservable and transcend our world cannot be proved by reason and science, only by philosophy or faith.

Mr. Speaker, the Earth and all the creatures in it were not created in six days, and the world is not 6,000 years old. We know these facts through science, that the myriad of living things on this planet evolved over a period of over 3 billion years. We know through science that the Earth is approximately 4.54 billion years old. These facts are based on reason, on the search for knowledge and truth. But nothing in these facts derogates from the wisdom of the teachings of the Old Testament, which deal with matters of faith. As Bishop Fred Henry of Calgary recently stated in an article, teachings in the opening chapters of Genesis cannot be read as literal statements of scientific fact. He states that "the sacred stories are not 'history' as we normally use the term." The purpose of them is to teach religious truths, not science.

As the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit has stated, this bill will serve to reinforce a right that was already available to Alberta families and already in practice in our classrooms. If a parent does not wish their child to take part in a specific piece of the curriculum or in a class, they have the option to opt out and not participate in the discussion where it explicitly deals with religion or sexuality. I emphasize the word "explicitly." It does not say tangentially, peripherally, or consequentially. Mr. Speaker, let us not descend, as some have, into wild speculation, hypotheses, or conjectures as to how the words "deals explicitly with religion" might be interpreted.

I am confident in supporting Bill 44 that this new section 11.1 as proposed in section 9 of the bill will not affect the teaching of biological sciences in Alberta classrooms. We should be confident that the Alberta Human Rights and Citizenship Commission and individual commissioners will do their job, that they will exercise sound judgment and proper legal interpretation when complaints are brought to it regarding this legislation. I am confident that the Alberta Human Rights and Citizenship Commission will exercise a sound interpretation of the section and will not interpret the section to the broad manner posited by some critics of this bill. I urge hon. members to read Bill 44 carefully with a view to confirming our understanding that this legislation will not in any way affect the education or teaching of biological sciences or of evolution to Alberta students.

At this point, Mr. Speaker, I would move adjournment of the debate on this bill.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 34 Drug Program Act

[Adjourned debate May 5: Dr. Taft]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. A pleasure to rise and speak to second reading of Bill 34, the Drug Program Act, which provides a legislative mandate to establish and operate a provincial drug program and sets out the regulations for the minister to regulate and administer that program, a very interesting piece of legislation that has some real opportunities and real positive features to it that I think will benefit many Albertans. There are also some real concerns about it and how it will be implemented.

It does establish a provincial drug program and consolidates a number of different drug programs, and we see that as very positive and efficient in the interests of Albertans. It's absolutely essential that we get a clear plan with administrative clarification, qualifications for membership, and what benefits accrue to what parties. It's clear the plan is optional, and this also is a good feature but has some ramifications for those seniors who have been receiving the benefits of the present Blue Cross program and are now no longer in that position to receive it as a free service to their seniors' position.

As indicated in previous press releases, 60 per cent of seniors will receive either free prescription drugs or pay less, and this is a positive, progressive initiative for many in our society, I believe, and we applaud that. The recent changes that the minister has announced relate to the move to base the premium on income, taxable income instead of gross income. That, too, is a positive measure that I think reflects a lot of the public wishes and the seniors' groups, who have responded to this in a very vigorous way, many of whom we've heard from.

As I indicated, it's consolidating the drug benefit programs of Health and Wellness, Children and Youth Services, Employment and Immigration, Seniors and Community Supports, Solicitor General and Public Security, and these changes will most likely bring all of these under one set of administrative rules and eligibility criteria that are obviously in the public good and in the interest of more efficiency.

It also opens the door to what we have been suggesting for years, which is bulk purchasing and, in fact, an interprovincial co-operation to benefit all Albertans with reduced costs. We think this also is a very positive dimension to this bill.

We do have some concerns about it, of course, not the least of which is that we are reintroducing a bureaucracy now and a means test in which not only are we going to have to ask for personal data, financial data on seniors, but we are going to be judging on that basis who can pay and who cannot regardless of their illness status or their wellness status, I'd guess you'd say. Indeed, some so-called middle-income individuals are the most seriously ill in our society and will of course have to pay much more significantly than some others. That's a serious concern for some people; I'm not saying for all. But it does raise the question about whether a means-based system purely and simply is appropriate if we're really trying to be, as I would say, equitable and fair about the system.

To us, Mr. Speaker, there are some key principles that should be involved in any kind of public program. That has to do with fairness, it has to do with consistency, and that has to do with universality as much as possible in our health care system, particularly for people who are chronically ill and who already have out-of-pocket expenses relating to those chronic illnesses or disabilities.

Several of the concerns that we have I can itemize here, and they have to do with, as I mentioned, those with chronic and expensive illnesses being penalized most and carrying the heaviest burden of both sickness and now costs.

The second is that it's discriminatory. It focuses on seniors as a select group, indeed a group that has the most sickness, as opposed to being a universal principle to apply to all citizens in terms of their ability to pay. I guess one might ask MLAs whether they'd be willing to be part of a program that would take up to 5 per cent of their taxable income before the program would kick in to pay for drugs. I wonder how many MLAs would be willing to fit into that program.

A third concern is that the income disparity is already adjusted for by taxation. We, of course, feel that to be really progressive, a policy should be tied to income. This is a partial attachment to income, but again it doesn't address the fact that the burden of illness is in the last few decades of life and that the burden of expense, then, will fall to seniors, albeit some who are well-off seniors. We think that can be tweaked a little bit, and I'll be introducing an amendment in the next phase of this debate.

A fourth issue has to do with the invasion of privacy and the concerns that many seniors have that they now will be scrutinized, perhaps having to defend and debate and discuss and appeal decisions around their bills. This raises some concerns, especially for seniors who are struggling with understanding some of these terms.

It has also blindsided seniors in a way that they were not prepared for, especially during this time. Planning for their retirement, they are hit with both this new pharmacy plan and a Blue Cross program that's suddenly changing, doubling and tripling in the next two years . . .

Mr. MacDonald: What about power bills?

Dr. Swann: . . . in addition to, as my hon. colleague is saying, power bills that may well be increasing as a result of changes in our rebate program and the deregulation that we've coped with for the last few years as well as a 40 per cent loss in their investment income, in the main. This is a time when we should be looking at seniors in a special way. I believe and our party believes that the seniors who built this province should not be inordinately burdened not only with increasing illness but increasing payments that they were not planning for.

Finally, it does seem unfair that we are rationalizing a system based fundamentally on age. Why should we focus this particular approach to drug coverage and drug payments primarily on the age of the citizen? So for these concerns and others we'll hopefully get support for a couple of amendments to come in the next phase.

In terms of the changes to Alberta Blue Cross coverage, we also have some serious doubt that this has been managed in the public interest. We look at the proposal to double and then triple the monthly premium for families over the next two years and have to ask the question: why is it suddenly important to make such huge jumps in premiums? If this has been mismanaged in the past few years such that the program has not kept up with the cost of living and other issues, costs of drugs, then why has it been neglected for so many years? Now we're being faced with such a dramatic increase in Blue Cross coverage.

Another question has to do with why, as a government service providing for the public, we would be trying to integrate or harmonize a publicly funded program with the private sector. Clearly, this is designed to make drug accessibility and availability easier for those Albertans that need it. We're now setting up a system where essentially we're saying that it's a free and open game where private drug companies are in direct competition with what was supposed to be a public benefit program. Clearly, with the extra administrative costs of this income-based system, we're again going to be dealing with a big bureaucracy, and we're going to be spending on a bigger government when we're all wanting to trim government, wanting to make it more efficient and actually delivering more for less.

So those are some serious concerns raised by seniors and small-business owners who have said that this will not serve their interests as they share the costs of Blue Cross premiums with their employees. Seniors, as I've indicated, used to receive Blue Cross for free and only had to copay a maximum of $35 per prescription. This is going to be a challenge for a number of them.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, the drug benefits program for rare diseases is clearly a positive direction. We support that. The drug approval process currently through an expert committee on drug evaluation and therapeutics advising the health minister: excellent progress and very much supportable. The bulk purchasing, as I mentioned, is a very positive decision that's going to assist all Albertans in receiving better access to drugs, especially if it's an interprovincial purchase program. We could be leaders in that area. I look forward to that.

I also support the stimulus for pharmacists to take a greater role in prescribing, reducing the demand on physicians where it's appropriate and where it's supervised by a physician. I think that's very appropriate to be refilling prescriptions and making simple diagnoses and providing basic drugs to people. That will decrease costs in the system and improve access for Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, those conclude my remarks, and I would move that we adjourn debate on Bill 34.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's been a very exciting afternoon of illustrious debate. We want to thank all members for their participation today. Since it is almost 6 o'clock, I would move that we, in fact, call it 6 o'clock and adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:52 p.m. to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Let us keep ever mindful of the special and unique opportunity we have to work for our constituents and our province, and in that work let us find strength and wisdom. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure this afternoon to introduce to you and through you a group of students all the way from Medicine Hat. The students are from Crestwood school in Medicine Hat. This is about the 20th or more time consecutively that the grade 6 students at Crestwood school from Medicine Hat have come up and joined us here at the Legislature. I'm very, very pleased with the commitment of the teachers and the parents to give the students that opportunity. Joining the students – and they're seated in both the public and the members' galleries – are Principal David George; Vice-principal Al Tisnic; teachers Maria Thompson, Wade Lawson, Darcy Nielson, Wendy Smid, and Kathy Western; along with parent helpers Paula Tessier, Nelda Davis, and Diane Foster. This is an outstanding group of young students, and I'm proud to introduce them to this Legislature. I'd ask that they all rise and receive a warm welcome from all members of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of our Assembly a special school from Vulcan, Alberta. They've been up a number of times before, not this same group, but I want all the members to pay special attention. The teacher asked, out of respect for the Legislature, that the boys wear ties – I thought they were with a little hockey team – and the girls are all dressed up very nicely. These kids are from Prairieview elementary school along with teachers Ms Vanda Ruffli, who grew up around Westbank, B.C., and Ms Heather McBride, who's from around Rumsey, she tells me; education assistants Mrs. Terry Lanktree from Vulcan and Mrs. Kay Ellis from Vulcan; along with parent drivers Mr. Brian Connors and Mr. Clarke Williams. I would ask that they rise and be extended the warm welcome of our Assembly, please. Thanks for coming.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the members of the Education Advisory Committee. This is a group of dedicated educators who volunteer their time to provide pedagogical and curricular expertise in support of all school programming offered by the Legislative Assembly Office: Glenda Bistrow from St. Paul, David Bryce from Edmonton, Catherine Cole from Edmonton, Linda Couillard-L'Abbé from Peace River, Wally Diefenthaler from Edmonton, Rick Homan from Lethbridge, Carol Anne Konkin from Edmonton, Susan MacKay from Calgary, and Corvin Uhrbach from Lacombe. They are seated in your gallery. I would like to ask that all our guests rise and receive the most warm welcome from our Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly members of the Alberta Student Executive Council, or ASEC. This organization represents postsecondary students in our province and has done so for over 27 years under the name of ACTISEC. Much like Alberta's postsecondary system, the organization is evolving to better meet the needs of the students in our great province. They're holding their first annual leadership conference under the new name of ASEC and will be electing the new leaders of their organizations this week in Edmonton. Representing over 120,000 postsecondary education students in Alberta from four of the six sectors in our six-sector model, they are an excellent stakeholder group, ensuring that front-line student issues are clearly communicated to government.

Mr. Speaker, we have over 40 guests in both galleries, but I would only like to name the outgoing executive committee, who I've had the pleasure of working with this past year: Matt Koczur, Lisi Monro, Marie Barnes, Stephen Griffith, Brent Constantin, Adam Boechler. Also, the new executive director is Carol Neuman. The current executive director, Adam Boechler, is leaving after two years of very great work, and I would commend him on that. These student leaders are in both galleries. I would like to ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Walking Away Hunger Campaign

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a great privilege today to rise and speak about an initiative that I was involved in starting some four years ago. This is the Walking Away Hunger campaign. My reasoning to start this initiative was (a) to help the Calgary Inter-faith Food Bank and (b) to get young people to serve. When you get people to serve, they bring out their best, and they experience their best. When someone experiences their best, they're less likely to do anything negative.

It's with great pride that I announce today that this past weekend was the conclusion of our campaign for this year. The young folks raised $25,829.63 in cash and over $12,200 worth of actual food. That brings our collective total for four years to $130,029.63.

Mr. Speaker, this is an initiative that involves young people and schools from all different backgrounds, that is organized and co-ordinated by Sikh Youth Calgary. I applaud them, and, most importantly, I thank them for stepping up and keeping this initiative going since my time is now devoted elsewhere.

I'd ask all members to show their appreciation of these members, who are watching and listening on TV right now. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

MS Walk

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Earlier this week you mentioned that May is Multiple Sclerosis Awareness Month. It is an honour for me to rise this afternoon to recognize the MS Society of Canada and their annual MS Walk campaign.

Mr. Speaker, I'm wearing a red lanyard. These have been distributed to all members of this Assembly. I'd ask them to wear this today, if they're so inclined, in observance of this month.

Multiple sclerosis is the most common neurological disease affecting young adults in Canada, with between 55,000 and 75,000 Canadians having been diagnosed with MS, 11,000 of those in Alberta. That number is growing by an estimated three people today.

Mr. Speaker, my family is no exception. My aunt Mora Hauk was diagnosed with MS in her early 20s. She has a very severe case, and we just had some very bad news about her health this week. No one needs to face MS alone, and I'm thankful that my aunt has had her husband, Jamie Beckstead, and my mother, Marguerite Denis, to care for her every day.

There is some good news about MS, Mr. Speaker. Researchers are developing new and better treatments with the ultimate goal of finding a cure for MS. Every year the MS Society of Canada helps organize the MS Walk in order to raise money for this research. The MS Walk involves over 60,000 volunteers in 160 communities across Canada. Last year the MS Walk campaign helped raise $12 million towards research.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank every volunteer that has worked tirelessly in support of the MS walks that have already been held but particularly Crystal Phillips and Jamie Ivey, who brought this walk to my attention this year. I remind everyone that there are still many opportunities to get involved by walking or sponsoring a participant in the Edmonton MS Walk on May 31, the Calgary one on June 7, and others that can be easily found at www.mssociety.ca.

Mr. Speaker, I encourage all of my colleagues and fellow Albertans to support the MS Walk and help cure a disease that afflicts my family along with tens of thousands of other Canadian families.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Provincial Budget

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier and his ministers have mishandled one of their most important responsibilities, to craft a budget that both prepares Alberta to meet today's challenges and lays the foundation for a prosperous tomorrow. This budget and the changes to the so-called Fiscal Responsibility Act that will enable this budget remove any legislative means of saving. The cap on oil and gas revenues that can be used for budget purposes: gone. The $2.5 billion held in reserve to deal with natural disasters: gone. In essence, once the act passes, the government will be able to spend every penny they have, and once this budget passes, they will start doing exactly that.

One of the guiding principles of responsible government should be that we govern not only for ourselves but for the benefit of future generations. A consistent and enduring refusal to commit to any kind of legislated savings strategy is not the position of a responsible government. For years opposition parties, media, think tanks, and citizens have been calling on this government to save more of its nonrenewable resource revenues, but this government has failed Albertans: no fiscal responsibility, no plan for the future, just a wish and a prayer that another oil boom will dig them out of the hole just one more time.

On top of all this, Mr. Speaker, the government expects the Official Opposition to debate this budget on behalf of Albertans without the benefit of critical information about that budget. Out of all the requests we made for written responses to questions we raised during the ministry-by-ministry estimates debates, only one ministry has bothered to deliver on the promise they all made that they would provide those answers before today's vote.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans deserve better.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Parental Choice in Education

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is a dark day for Alberta's public educators and for our children. This government, through Bill 44, has said that it needs to use the Human Rights Commission to keep teachers in line. This has a chilling effect on teachers who are attempting to address issues that may arise in the classroom that might be deemed publicly sensitive and that might promote critical inquiry on the part of the students. Quite frankly, it undermines the very fabric of our public education system, which strives to stimulate dialogue, inspire, and educate our children so that they might become engaged participants in a healthy and vibrant society.

Never should a public school teacher be at risk of persecution, prosecution, or penalty for engaging students in critical debate in our public schools. If such a thing were to happen, Alberta would stand to be embarrassed among developed jurisdictions for stifling education, scientific methodology, and the very creativity of the youth we hold so dear. Yet this government proposes amendments to the Human Rights Commission legislation that threaten to do just this.

In this country and in this province parents have already got the right to raise their children as they see fit and to instill in them the spiritual and cultural values they hold dear. No government can prevent that, nor should they even try. By the same token, no government should threaten our educators with violating human rights legislation for teaching controversial issues and for allowing students to draw their own conclusions.

Mr. Speaker, this government's priorities are dangerously off course. A child's right to an objective, open education in the public school system and a teacher's right to provide that education without fear of retribution is a goal that all of us, and especially our provincial government, should consistently pursue.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Paving Health Pathways Strategy

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour to rise today and speak about paving health pathways, the health services strategy that was announced by Alberta Education on April 30, 2009. This pilot project will develop a number of high school courses designed to help Alberta students to explore careers in health services. This project is backed by a three-year, $12 million funding commitment by the government of Alberta. Students in these 10 pilot jurisdictions will have a greater opportunity to explore the world of work, gain insight into possible health services careers, and work toward postsecondary certification while still in high school.

The Edmonton Catholic separate school district, with a school in my constituency of Edmonton-Ellerslie, offers health care aide, sports medicine, medical sciences, and prehospital care programs. Other available programs include emergency responder and licensed practical nurse programs. The program will be phased in starting this fall.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that this program will provide great benefit to high school students by providing them with real-life education.

At this time I would like to recognize Alberta Education, Alberta school boards, teachers, and parents for providing pathways to jobs in health for Alberta's high school students.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Climate Change and Emissions Management Corporation

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today to recognize the creation of the Climate Change and Emissions Management Corporation. It is an important step on the road we are travelling in Alberta when it comes to fighting climate change. As we know, technology is the foundation for our government's climate change strategy. It will provide the keys to unlocking the door to a more carbon-friendly future by allowing significant and meaningful greenhouse gas emissions reductions, and it will reaffirm Alberta's commitment to being a responsible global energy producer.

The Climate Change and Emissions Management Act created the continent's only emissions reduction program that is operating and achieving real results. We are taking another leap forward with the creation of the Climate Change and Emissions Management Corporation, which will be led by, I'm happy to say, Mr. Eric Newell. His experience with industry and serving the interests of Albertans will give the corporation the guidance it needs to take the money collected from industry as part of complying with our climate change regulations and leverage it into significant emission reductions here in Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. According to Standing Order 30 I would like to now give oral notice that at the appropriate time I'll be raising the following issues under Standing Order 30, which is, of course, the emergency debate provision.

That the ordinary business of the Legislative Assembly be adjourned to discuss a matter of urgent public importance; namely, the failure to provide written responses to questions posed during debate on the 2009-10 main estimates obstructs opposition members of the Legislative Assembly in their review and evaluation of the budget, preventing them from making a fully informed decision on the vote.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise pursuant to Standing Order 34(3) to advise the House that on Monday, May 11, 2009, Motion for a Return 25 will be dealt with.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of 10 reports from long-term care workers indicating specific problems on shifts that were short-staffed. These indicate that staff did not have sufficient time to provide effective care to residents with dementia.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Are there others under tablings?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to table these five copies of my responses to the questions raised during Alberta Transportation's estimates in Committee of Supply on April 20, 2009.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Hancock: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the appropriate number of copies of answers to questions raised in Committee of Supply for the benefit of the House.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Hayden, Minister of Infrastructure, responses to questions raised by Mr. Mason, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, and Mr. MacDonald, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, on April 21, 2009, in the Department of Infrastructure main estimates debate.

On behalf of the hon. Ms Redford, Minister of Justice and Attorney General, response to written questions 9, 16, and 17, all asked for by Ms Notley on April 6, 2009.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Budget Debate Process

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This year we've experienced a budget process that is fundamentally flawed and violates basic requirements of openness, timeliness, and accountability to us as the opposition and to Albertans. After the delay in even seeing the budget, we are debating as the Official Opposition separate ministries at up to $160 million a minute. This government failed to provide written responses, as promised in debate, to allow the opposition to represent the public interest. To the President of the Treasury Board: why have most of the ministries except Energy failed to provide written responses?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, I would allow the hon. leader to ask the ministers, but, as I think he's heard, most of them are tabling the responses.

The other thing, Mr. Speaker, that should be pointed out: anyone in Alberta can go to Hansard, and they can go and review the questions that were asked while we were undergoing budget deliberations. If the hon. leader thinks it's appropriate with two or three or five minutes left in a committee meeting to put on the record 30 or 40 or 50 asinine questions and expect written answers in a few days, then they have a little different opinion of the budget.

An Hon. Member: Point of order.

The Speaker: A point of order.

The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. How can this government sit there and claim that this is a fair, accountable budgeting process when it withholds required information by the opposition and all Albertans in doing our job?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, we spent approximately 60 hours on the budget. We've created an opportunity now where we can deal with two departments a night, where the opposition has the opportunity to focus on the areas they feel important, too. The departments are critically aware of how important it is to get accurate information back when it's asked for. Sometimes the information asked for is very complicated. Sometimes the numbers are very detailed and need to be extrapolated from the bigger budget numbers. The departments work diligently to try and respond to questions as soon as they can.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will this government commit to delaying this budget vote until the opposition does receive the written responses so that we can do our job on behalf of Albertans and give sufficient time to review the information so that we can represent these interests appropriately?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, the process has gone on since the introduction of the budget here about a month ago. It has taken the same time or track that we have had for years, where the budget gets a very full vetting both by members of the government and members of the opposition. The general public can certainly go to some of the Liberal caucus rooms – why they can't be debated. I've just underlined the ones that say that we don't spend enough and the ones that say that we spend too much, and it's coming out out of balance.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mental Health Services

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, mental illness is a prevalent problem within our health system, but unfortunately it's put on the back burner by this government. Many people who are homeless suffer from mental illness, yet this government continues to fail the very efficient voluntary agencies that are working with the mentally ill and now struggling to cope with reduced resources at a time of actual increased demand. To the minister of health: how will the minister support the underfunded nonprofit sector in their work with the homeless and the hard-to-house as they struggle with increased demand from mental illness?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition was at a very enjoyable breakfast yesterday put on by the Mental Health Association; so were a number of colleagues in this Assembly. In speaking with my colleagues who were meeting with various people involved both at the volunteer and the professional levels within mental health at yesterday's breakfast, it was very clear that the people that are actually delivering the service and are volunteering for the service are incredibly happy and pleased with the initiatives that this government has taken in the area of mental health. The only one I heard that wasn't was the Leader of the Opposition.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, they are very committed and dedicated people, and they're very frustrated people also. As the Canadian Mental Health Association, Edmonton region, stated to me, they are struggling with nearly a hundred individuals whom they cannot house, and they lack resources to help. Mr. Minister, what support and reallocation will your ministry provide to the Edmonton region of the Canadian Mental Health Association?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, if the Leader of the Opposition had been taking some time in looking through our budget documents, it would be very clear as to what we are committing to in this particular year for mental health. In addition to that, we have through our safe communities work made a number of announcements. There is an announcement tomorrow in Calgary, and I extend an invitation to the hon. leader to show up. In addition to that, one of the initiatives in our health action plan was the introduction of a children's mental health plan. So we've got a number of initiatives that we've taken around mental health that have been very progressive.

Dr. Swann: Well, as the Auditor General has said, Mr. Speaker, properly addressing mental health would reduce suffering and keep many people out of hospital and out of the justice system, saving money. Why is the minister not showing leadership in mental health service delivery which would offer significant cost reductions to the health care system?

Mr. Liepert: In fact, Mr. Speaker, that's exactly what we're doing. Our announcement tomorrow is a joint announcement by the Justice minister and myself relative to a number of beds in the Calgary region. It's through our safe communities task force, where we've got a number of departments working together because we recognize that mental health just isn't health. It involves the Justice department, the Solicitor General's department, a number of departments of government. It's an initiative that's working very well.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Definition of Religion

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The current human rights legislation forbids discrimination on the basis of religion, yet what constitutes religion or religious belief has been the topic of debate for thousands of years. My questions are to the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit. For the purposes of the Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Act what is the definition of religion the government is using?

Mr. Blackett: Well, Mr. Speaker, in terms of a definition, we don't have a definition that we're using. We're referring to the curriculum that the Department of Education is using and what they determine religious instruction is with respect to the curriculum.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. Again to the same minister. A dictionary definition of religion is "the belief in and worship of a superhuman controlling power" or "a particular system of faith and worship." So for the purposes of the Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Act are all religions equal? For example, if Christianity and Islam count as religions, does Wicca or Falun Gong?

Mr. Blackett: Mr. Speaker, religious beliefs are already in the human rights legislation as a protective ground, but for the purpose of the parental rights piece, section 11.1, we are talking about religion as an area of study. We do not care which religion is more important than another. We treat them all equally because in this province, as far as I can remember, we treat people equally.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. Back to the same minister: for the purposes of government policy what is the difference between a religion and a cult, and by what criteria does the government determine this?

Mr. Blackett: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's a spurious comment. It has no relevance to what we're talking about with respect to Bill 44 and the parental rights amendment. What we're talking about is religious content as it appears in the boundaries of the curriculum of the school boards, nothing more, nothing less.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Taser Deaths

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Sadly, this morning we learned that the RCMP have deployed a taser, resulting in another person's death, this time an Albertan. Last night the Mounties were called to investigate a complaint of an injured man causing a disturbance in Brooks and ended up using a taser on him. Grant William Prentice is the fifth Albertan to die after being tasered by police. Enough is enough. Why won't the Solicitor General ban taser use in Alberta when it's clear that tasers kill?

Mr. Lindsay: Mr. Speaker, the incident the hon. member is speaking about is a tragic incident that occurred last night in Brooks. That being said, the taser has been utilized in this province probably at least 2,500 times in the last four or five years. There's been no evidence at all to indicate that any of those incidents have resulted in the death of anybody. In fact, we have evidence to indicate that they've saved probably hundreds of lives over that period of time.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. In 2004 Ronald Perry was tasered by Edmonton police and died. In 2005 Alesandro Fiocco was tasered by Edmonton police and died. In 2006 Jason Doan was tasered by Red Deer RCMP and later died. Last year Trevor Grimolfson was tasered by Edmonton police and died. Why won't the Solicitor General ban these lethal weapons in Alberta?

2:00

Mr. Lindsay: Again, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member has any evidence at all that taser use contributed to those deaths, bring it forward, because the medical reports that we have do not indicate that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. In 2007 when the RCMP tasered Robert Dziekanski to death in the Vancouver airport, I called on this government to review taser use in Alberta. No such review was done, and I think we're past that now anyway. The families of these victims are outraged that their loved ones continued to be killed by police using tasers. Why won't the Solicitor General follow Newfoundland's lead and ban tasers in Alberta?

Mr. Lindsay: Again, Mr. Speaker, I don't know why this hon. member doesn't do something responsible and reasonable and provide evidence that these particular instruments are causing death instead of spreading innuendo and misinformation.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Building Construction Review

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. There have been recent reports in the media and some calls in my constituency of Edmonton-Ellerslie about homes that are experiencing leaks and mould due to problems with the building structure. My questions are to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Can the minister tell us if he's aware of these concerns and what he is doing about them?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, yes, Mr. Speaker, we are. Because of some of the concerns that we did receive, a handful of concerns, I asked my parliamentary assistant to do a review, and this last summer he met with homeowners, consulted with stakeholders, municipalities, also builders, and examined ways to ensure that the quality of construction in new homes is examined. The builders and designers and homeowners are responsible to ensure that homes comply with these building codes.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental to the same minister: can the minister tell us when we can expect a response to these reviews?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, we did and do realize that this is very important, and that's why we did the consultation. We wanted to be proactive. Alberta's building codes are strong. We are looking at the issue in its entirety, and we feel that it's very important to do a very good, thorough review.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There have been recent media reports about a specific exterior system causing this mould. Could the minister indicate if this was addressed in his review?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, let me be clear that these are two separate issues. I was recently made aware of the concerns regarding this specific product. I understand that the Safety Codes Council has been approached. We'll hear a presentation from an individual, and that is our first indication. We don't know what the presentation will be about. Our review looked broadly, going back, at how to maintain the quality of construction practices in Alberta.

I need to say that we are confident that the homes in Alberta are built to code, and we want to ensure that Albertans continue to have confidence in the construction industry.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Religious Content in Education

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over the millennia innumerable wars have been fought over the separation of church and state, but now this government has blurred that separation and threatens to turn Alberta classrooms into the next battleground. To the Minister of Education: how can you expect teachers to know which lessons would be objectionable on religious grounds when your colleagues cannot even agree on what would be considered religious subject matter?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I don't expect teachers at all to take a look at each and every part of the curriculum through any form of religious lens whatsoever. The curriculum they're teaching is mandated. They're required to teach the curriculum that we provide to them. What the hon. member is obviously referring to is a bill that is coming up for debate later on today, possibly, and certainly has been before the House that is talking about a potential for opting out of instruction about religion. I think the House can be very clear and teachers can be very clear what we mean about instruction about religion. About religion is about the faiths that we know and the faiths that people practise. That's not about using religion to correct the curriculum. It's about instruction about religion.

Mr. Chase: Why is the minister imposing an unreasonable burden on Alberta teachers by requiring them to send out consent forms in advance of the countless situations that could be considered objectionable?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I'm really pleased that the hon. member is helping to clear this up because we are not requiring teachers to send out notices to parents about things that people might consider objectionable in the curriculum. What we're asking is what they're required to do now: to send out notice when they're teaching about human sexuality so that parents can participate in the education of their children on something that is very important to them and their families. With respect to religion the School Act currently provides for an exemption where there's religious instruction. The new provision will provide for instruction about religion – not about anything else; instruction about religion – and notifying parents in the same way that they do now with respect to human sexuality. It's not a burden, and it certainly shouldn't freeze up discussion in the class on any other topic.

Mr. Chase: How do you justify turning secular public schools into opt-out Sunday schools when taxpayer-subsidized home-schooling, charter, and private school options exist?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, the only time that religion would come up that I'm aware of in a public school curriculum is if a teacher decided to teach a module, for example, on comparative religions. Science is not about religion. Social studies is not about religion. Math is not about religion. Certainly, literature is not about religion. They all may have some issues that cover religious topics in them. This act is about teaching about religion, and there's nothing in the curriculum now that I'm aware of which requires teaching about religion. But if a module came up where a teacher wanted to bring, for example, comparative religions into the social studies curriculum, then, and only then, would they be required to provide notice to parents and let them know what is included in that curriculum.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Bullying Prevention

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Bullying behaviour is unacceptable any time, anywhere, and at any age. Preventing bullying starts with each one of us. Unfortunately, bullying happens all too often and even sometimes here in the Legislature. Yesterday a student from my constituency was featured on Oprah, telling his story about being bullied. I'm sure there are many other students across the province who are being targeted each and every day as well. My first question is to the Minister of Education. Can the minister tell us what government is doing to ensure that bullying prevention is being taken seriously?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. This is, in fact, a very, very important topic across Alberta. I think in surveys it's shown that about 49 per cent of Alberta youth indicate that they feel that they have been bullied, and 58 per cent of Alberta youth say that they've seen bullying taking place, so this is a very important topic. We do, in fact, with my colleague the Minister of Children and Youth Services have a joint ministry approach to bullying. There are websites called bullyfreealberta.ca and b-free.ca that Albertans can go on, and those websites are visited a significant amount of times. We have a task force. We have employees who are specifically tasked with dealing with bullying in schools and providing materials to schools. Of course, school boards also have a responsibility to make sure that schools are safe and caring places.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. Oprah has offered up a student program to the school to help stop bullying behaviours, and I'm happy to say that the school and the division have accepted that offer. Can the minister tell me how this program will effectively address bullying in conjunction with the provincial initiatives?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, I'd say that I always appreciate when people bring the topic of bullying into the public domain for discussion because I think it's very important that we have that discussion, that we have that discussion in public, that we raise the awareness that this isn't about the old days and what we had to brace in the schoolyards. This is a real issue for real students driving some students even to the point of committing suicide. So it's an extremely important issue. The reality is that there's no one single answer. The program that Oprah is promoting may be one part of the solution, but there are many, many ways that we can help bring awareness and deal with the issue.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you. Finally, the last question to the same minister. If we're going to stop bullying, we need to get to the heart of where our students live, learn, and play. Is the government's bullying prevention strategy doing enough to reach all Albertans and make sure they are getting the message?

2:10

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I indicated, we do have the websites, and there is good indication that we are reaching people. There have been 4.3 million hits on that website since May 2006. To date about 1,100 people have called the 24/7 toll-free bullying helpline for assistance. We've reprinted and updated our information materials, which have been sought after in high demand by schools, community groups, and associations. We have an Alberta Prevention of Bullying Youth Committee, whose advice has been sought. In fact, employees of our department travel to schools around the province to promote bullying prevention and to provide materials and advice to schools.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A home is the biggest investment one makes, and some condo owners may have to walk away from their investment because of unmanageable repair bills. Condo owners cannot afford to wait for this administration to conduct a lengthy review with no guarantee of action. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: what is the minister doing today to help condo owners who have repair bills, big ones, due to shoddy workmanship?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier, there has been a concern raised by a handful of individuals, mostly single-home dwellers. We did bring forward a consultation process with the parliamentary assistant. That process has come to me. I have brought it to my department, that is looking at the recommendations or the comments that came forward, and we are looking at solutions if there need to be.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is not the first time this issue has been raised. The Calgary Region Home Builders Association was advising about stucco application problems almost three years ago. Why is the minister only now looking into these standards?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, we have very good codes in Alberta. The Safety Codes Council reviews the codes on a regular basis. When the concerns came forward to our ministry, we initiated the consultation with the condo associations, with individual home builders, with municipalities. We do have recommendations that have come forward, and we are dealing with it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It has been three years. No action so far. To the Minister of Service Alberta: why is the minister denying protection to condo owners by her continued inaction on this issue?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, just following up the minister's comments, with respect to the Condominium Property Act, as I've indicated before, this piece of legislation is going to be under review. The review process has begun. The complexity of this particular act is evident today with the issues that Albertans are facing, and that's why looking at this particular angle and working with the Minister of Municipal Affairs, we have to look at this and do the right thing.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt Ste. Anne, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Highway Traffic Enforcement

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last fall a pilot project between the RCMP and the sheriffs was brought to my constituency in Whitecourt-Ste. Anne. You know, the police presence out on provincial highways has just been outstanding. My questions are all to the Solicitor General. Can the minister tell this Assembly how this program is working and if the pilot project will become a permanent project in Whitecourt-Ste. Anne?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member speaks about a program that's working very well in Alberta. We've always had great co-operation between the RCMP and the sheriffs. We put in place four pilots this spring: one in Olds, one in Wetaskiwin, one in Airdrie, and one in this member's constituency of Whitecourt-Ste. Anne. They work very well together. In the Whitecourt area the joint forces issued 2,500 violations. Over 1,600 of them have been for speeding and 880 of them for other violations.

Mr. VanderBurg: To the same minister. I understand as well that there have been some charges laid for speed limits that have been exceeded, like over 200 kilometres an hour. I wonder if you could advise us: do these people just get a 24-hour suspension, or are their licences taken away for a longer period of time?

Mr. Lindsay: Mr. Speaker, as the legislation is today, when there's evidence that somebody has been drinking and driving and there may not be enough evidence here for an impaired-driving conviction, the officer, including our sheriffs, have the ability for a 24-hour suspension. However, Mr. Speaker, I'm getting feedback that sometimes they're pulling over the same people more than once, so I will be speaking to the Minister of Transportation to review that, as other provinces are doing. They're putting more stringent penalties in place for subsequent actions when the same number is picked up.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can guarantee you that it's not an old blue Dodge going over 200 kilometres down that highway. I am very upset that we continually give a 24-hour suspension to these same people going over 200 time after time after time. We have to get tougher on this issue, and I want to know from the minister if he can act on this very quickly.

Mr. Lindsay: Well, just so we're not confused, Mr. Speaker, when somebody is travelling over 40 kilometres over the speed limit, they do have to make a court appearance. However, when that same person has also been consuming alcohol, that's another matter, and that's where the 24-hour suspensions come in. I will be talking to the Transportation minister to look at making some more stringent penalties in that regard.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Worker Recruitment Hosting Expenses

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last fall during the worst financial meltdown in generations the Minister of Employment and Immigration spent over $25,000 in New York, Chicago, and Washington, DC, on hosting expenses to recruit workers to Alberta. These events were all by invitation only, another example of elitist Conservatives. To the Minister of Employment and Immigration: how can the government justify spending over $25,000 in hosting expenses to recruit workers when so many Albertans here in Alberta at the very same time were losing their jobs?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member indicates or seems to leave the impression that I was there on those particular trips, and

I want to make it clear to the Assembly that I did not participate in those particular trips. However, we do have staff that do some of the fairs and will go into very strategic markets to identify individuals that we are very short of here. Specifically, we are targeting individuals in the health professions, and we will spend the money necessary to attract individuals that we are short of in the province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's interesting now that there's a freeze or the brakes are on hiring. The department took their travelling road show across the Atlantic to Britain last fall, spending an additional $15,000 on hosting expenses while thousands of Albertans were lining up for EI, if they could get it at all. Where is the value in this expenditure for Alberta taxpayers? To the same minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, we're monitoring the labour market very, very closely. While I admit that we are in a much more balanced labour situation, it's always important to develop our workforce. We are targeting, first and foremost – and I've always said that in this House – Albertans and Canadians. Having said that, there are still areas of shortages, and those are the areas that we're putting emphasis on.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister. The government seems more interested in supporting overseas catering companies and doing very little for unemployed Albertans. Why is it necessary to spend all this money abroad when so many Albertans here at home are losing their jobs?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, first and foremost, as I have indicated, Albertans and Canadians have every opportunity to participate in the Alberta labour force, and we do encourage that. We work with them. Those that lose their jobs have all of the resources available through our ministry to try to match them with other jobs, and we'll continue to do that. If there are some holes that need to be filled, we'll also work in those areas.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's new home warranty program is deficient, and this government knows it. Instead of demanding better from builders, they're passing the buck onto unsuspecting homeowners. A top engineer with CMHC has already written two reports about shoddy workmanship leading to mouldy buildings, and we know that a lot of homes were built in a hurry during the boom. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: why is he letting fly-by-night contractors get away with building faulty homes, that are costing people tens of thousands of dollars to repair just a few years after they were built?

2:20

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, let me make it very clear that our ministry has not received any complaints about the product that the hon. member is talking about. The Safety Codes Council has not received any complaints. The individual that the member is talking about I do believe has asked for a meeting. There is no indication on that proposal for a meeting with the Safety Codes Council of what it could be about. If there are issues and there are concerns, our ministry and the Safety Codes Council look at them immediately.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Canadian condominium association has been telling this government for some time to make new home warranties mandatory and to extend them beyond the first year of ownership, but this minister has ignored them. Given the crisis that we had with pine shakes and the billion dollar condo crisis that affected tens of thousands of B.C. homeowners, how can this government go on ignoring this problem?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, this government is not ignoring those concerns or those requests. That is why I asked my parliamentary assistant to meet and have consultations with the condominium association, with homeowners, with municipalities, with the Safety Codes Council, to look at those issues and try to find a solution if one is necessary. As I said before, those recommendations have come to me. I have sent them to my department, and they are looking at them. I'm sure I will have recommendations very shortly.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, while there are years of studies and examinations and consultations and hand holding, buildings are rotting. Now, single-year warranties for new homes are ridiculous. We all know that major construction problems in new detached homes and condos take years to crop up, and what's more ridiculous is that for condo owners the new home warranty timeline applies to the entire building, not just their unit. So the warranty has already expired before some people even move in. When will the minister stop consulting, stop examining, stop hand holding, and instead take a lesson from B.C. and Ontario and insist that home builders provide better, longer home warranties for new owners?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, I will say one thing. Maybe a little bit different from the member of the third party, we don't operate on a whim of a newspaper article. We have some of the strongest safety codes in this country, and the comparison with British Columbia is completely different because their safety codes that were in place were not of the same calibre as ours.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Stock Market Rally

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Stock markets have begun to rally of late, with the TSX rising by nearly 375 points on Monday. This could be taken as a sign the economy is beginning to recover. Now, on this side of the House we all knew it was eventually coming but are pleasantly surprised that it seems to have started so soon. My first question to the Minister of Finance and Enterprise: what impact will this market rise have on the province's economy?

Ms Evans: Thank you very much. Mr. Speaker, I think that people have been watching the markets much more closely of late. We've heard the head of the U.S. Federal Reserve say that the U.S. could be out of their recession in the latter part of this year. We've heard the same prediction from the Bank of Canada. The surge on Monday, interestingly enough, was quite buoyant for many seeing those stocks increase, but we take it as nothing more than a few days of good news. Today, you'll notice, they're down 262 points, so we have to watch that we don't get too excited when we get these increases.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is also to this minister. Will this improve the province's fiscal situation in the near future?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, we certainly hope so, and we hope to see more on the increase side. I'd like to take this opportunity to remind everybody in the Assembly that we have $17 billion in an emergency fund that will help us bridge the storm. We're using it wisely. This year when we spend roughly $4.7 billion out of that fund, we'll be able to sustain many of the programs that Albertans want. I think that's a good-news story in itself.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the minister again. What effect will the stock market rally have on the heritage trust fund, and when will the next report be coming out?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, again, the heritage fund is our long-term savings account. We're very prudent in our management of that account. That account is not intended to be used as emergency savings. We hope to see increases. Many people will know, if they've taken a look at their most recent RSPs, that some of the stocks have gone up and had some rally since last year. We expect that when we get a first-quarter report on the heritage fund, we'll see some of that reflected in that report as well.

Fundraising Dinner Sales Committee

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, some of the names on the list of the sales committee for the Premier's dinner here in Edmonton, a partisan political fundraiser, make for interesting reading. Two of those names, Dave Broda and John Logan, are vice-chairs of the Surface Rights Board. To the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development: how is the Surface Rights Board independently governed when its vice-chairs are fundraisers for the governing political party?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, this is a standard practice of the opposition to try to tarnish the reputation of good Albertans, one of whom actually served in this Assembly. There are a variety of backgrounds of members on that board, and they're doing a good job.

Mr. Hehr: Well, I'm not trying to tarnish anyone's reputation here. What I'd just like to inquire about is: what kind of code and conflicts-of-interest provisions are there that would say that people on the Surface Rights Board should be fundraisers for a political party at Premier events?

Dr. Morton: Well, Mr. Speaker, the opposition obviously doesn't understand a lot about a variety of human rights, one of them called freedom of association. If somebody wants to be a member of a political party, they can be a member of a political party.

Mr. Hehr: I understand being a member of a political party full well. I just don't understand what kind of conflict-of-interest rules or regulations exist with your Surface Rights Board when they can be chief fundraisers for political events.

Dr. Morton: Now we're back to plan 1, which is innuendo, tarnishing the reputation of individuals. I'm tired of these kinds of questions.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Integrated Ambulance Services

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituents in St. Albert are hearing rumours that due to ambulance service moving under the purview of Alberta Health Services, city council has had to hire more fire and ambulance workers and that this, in turn, will result in higher taxes for the city of St. Albert. Can the Minister of Health and Wellness please explain this situation?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't want to comment on rumours, but let me state the fact. The fact is that prior to April 1 of this year the provincial government paid 60 per cent of ambulance costs, and municipalities paid 40 per cent. As of April 1 the provincial government through Alberta Health Services is paying 100 per cent of the cost of ambulance services. I fail to see how our picking up 40 per cent of the municipalities' cost somehow would increase their property taxes.

Mr. Allred: Mr. Speaker, my next question is also for the same minister. Since the minister has said that the province is providing all of the funding for ambulance service, how is it possible that St. Albert's costs could rise? Were fire costs previously buried in the EMS budget?

Mr. Liepert: Well, I don't know that I'd want to go that far, Mr. Speaker. I'd let the member and others make their own presumptions. All I know is that the changeover to EMS and the signing on of municipalities, if they chose to remain in an integrated service, has gone very well. In fact, in flipping through the clippings in the weekly newspapers, I happened to see where many of the mayors and councillors have been very pleased with it. I know that the mayor of Airdrie, as an example, has been a strong proponent of an integrated service. Her comments couldn't have been more complimentary about how this has worked well in their favour.

Mr. Allred: Mr. Speaker, my final question. Again to the minister: can the Minister of Health and Wellness provide a couple of tangible examples of how this transition of ambulance services from municipalities to Alberta Health Services will benefit Albertans?

Mr. Liepert: Well, we have several instances already identified that show that having a centralized dispatch service and one province-wide ambulance service has created efficiencies. I know, as an example, it was told to me that a patient was transferred from Olds to Red Deer, and the dispatch happened to pick up at the same time that another patient had to go from Red Deer to Olds, so that ambulance was used both ways. In the past you'd have had one ambulance passing the other on the highway.

We've got a number of other instances that have been related to me, and I'd be happy at some point in time, maybe by written answer, to let all members know of some of these examples.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Medically Necessary Abortions

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just an hour or two ago there was a large, well-organized pro-life, antiabortion protest on the steps of the Legislature. The Minister of Sustainable Resource Development spoke to the cheering crowds and urged them on. Now, given that the Minister of Health and Wellness has indicated that there could be 50 or so services delisted, my question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Is there any consideration being given by this government to delist public funding for medically necessary abortions?

Mr. Liepert: No, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. Well, given the very recent delisting of gender correction surgery by this government, I'm going to repeat this question for the minister. Will the Minister of Health and Wellness guarantee that this government plans to respect the law of the land, including the Supreme Court ruling, and continue to fund medically necessary abortions?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, we've been very clear in this House that we plan to follow the principles of the Canada Health Act. I'm not sure if the member is familiar with those particular principles. I'd ask him to read up on it, and then we'll ensure that we follow those.

Dr. Taft: Yeah, I am pretty familiar with those, actually, Mr. Speaker.

Again to the same minister: will any delisting of any medically necessary services being considered by this government be taken to a policy field committee before implementation?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, we can use whatever terminology we want, but clearly there are a number of programs and services that were offered in the past through the regional health authorities that the Alberta Health Services Board has to take a look at and ensure that there's not duplication of services, that they're services, within the budget constraints that they have, that they can continue to meet. That's the job of Alberta Health Services. I've got the utmost confidence that they'll do their job.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

High School Graduation

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One avenue in helping create a culture of innovation amongst our youth is to promote early high school graduation. When students reach the high school level and have flexibility in their course load, they have the potential to graduate early. To the Minister of Education: has the minister considered any incentives for early high school graduation?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Although we think of high school in traditional three-year terms, we are not actually organized on a time basis. It's organized on a credit basis. As soon as a student gets 100 credits, they can graduate. We have many students who take summer school courses. We have many students who try and accelerate their programs. As I say, there's no specific reason why a student has to be in high school for three years.

With respect to incentives to complete early, no, I don't believe we have any on a provincial-wide basis, nor are we contemplating such.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first and only supplemental: on the flip side, can the Minister of Education tell us what flexibility the education system has in allowing students to stay an extra year if they cannot finish high school in three years?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, in our business plan the members will see that we have targets which report on graduation within three and five years, I believe. That's to recognize the fact that while, as I just mentioned, some students want to accelerate their programs, in other cases students need a longer period of time to graduate. We want to emphasize that the outcome that we're looking for is graduation, is completion of high school. Therefore, whether a student wants to do it quickly and can do it quickly or whether it take a little bit more time – and some of the jurisdictions, for example, offer particular schools to encourage that – we have online learning; we have all sorts of processes for students to graduate in the manner which they find most appropriate for them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Workplace Health and Safety

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Department of Employment and Immigration has recently updated the occupational health and safety code for 2009. Changes were made to confined spaces, cranes, hoists, and lifting devices, powered mobile equipment, and other devices. However, what is most notable is what hasn't changed with OH and S laws here in the province. To the Minister of Employment and Immigration: why were these updates done to provide more protection around the areas mentioned above but not to make joint work-site health and safety committees mandatory on each and every job site in Alberta where 20 or more people are employed?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, the member is right. The occupational health and safety code 2009 was enacted on April 2, 2009, and the version of the occupational health and safety code needs to be complied with on or before July 1 of 2009. We go through a very regular extensive public consultation in order to keep our codes up to standards, and the mandatory safety committees have never been part of the discussion as to the changes to the occupational health and safety code.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That public consultation is on a one-way street.

Again to the same minister: why are investigation reports of accidents not admissible as evidence in a trial, a public inquiry, or fatality inquiry?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, the member opposite has asked that question a number of times. The reports are exactly that. They are reports, and the individuals that make up those reports are usually the ones that will testify in person and indicate the background and the information that they had used towards the report, so generally in court those reports are not admissible.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Again to the same minister: will the minister please consider making changes to allow these reports to be admissible as evidence in trials and inquiries, reports which are key in investigating not only work-site accidents but also, unfortunately, fatalities?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure that I'm the proper minister to be asking. I would suspect that this is a question for Justice to respond to and to determine the definition of reports or when they can be used and when they cannot be used.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

High School Curriculum

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently I've been talking to a number of young people in my constituency and throughout the province in my role as chair of the Youth Secretariat. They've expressed concerns to me about the relevance of high school curriculum, specifically math and career and life management. All my questions are to the Minister of Education. Can the minister share with this Assembly how his department evaluates the relevancy and effectiveness of the CALM curriculum?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, the CALM curriculum was designed to help students with questions and concerns that come up as part of life and planning for the future. It includes topics relevant to students' lives with outcomes organized around personal choices, resources, finances, and career and life choices. We regularly update curriculum, and as part of that process we're currently updating the CALM curriculum. Recent research about learning and teaching and the needs of students in society, continuity among programs, et cetera, are included when we do update the curriculum. We'll be consulting with stakeholders on that. One of the things the hon. member might be interested to note: there's a recent push, for example, to include things like financial literacy.

Mr. Fawcett: Actually, Mr. Speaker, that's very good to hear.

Grade 12 math, particularly math 30 pure and applied, provides a significant amount of pressure and stress on a large portion of students, and a majority of them have a difficult time seeing the relevance between this curriculum and their future career or educational pursuits. Quite frankly, calculus math has very little applicability to most careers and postsecondary courses. To the minister: how is the current math high school curriculum determined?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, a timely question because the math curriculum has been under revision, and a new math curriculum will be in place beginning September 2010. The new curriculum will have three streams. The first course sequence will replace pure mathematics and will provide students with the mathematics they need for those postsecondary programs that require intensive math skills, an in-depth study of math. The second sequence will replace applied math and will provide students with the knowledge, skills, and entry to those postsecondaries that require some math but not the high-intensity math. Then a third stream for those students who also will need math but at a lesser level. So we've revised the program. It will be implemented September 2010.

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The minister must have seen my last question because he just answered it.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that was 108 questions less one response, so that would be 107 questions and responses today.

In a few seconds from now we'll continue the Routine.

Projected Government Business

The Speaker: The Official Opposition House Leader.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. According to Standing Order 7(6) could I ask the Government House Leader to please share with us the projected government business for the week commencing the 11th of May, which would make it the 12th of May for the first day of government business.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, I'd be happy to do so. Pending passage this afternoon of Government Motion 15, it may be anticipated that if necessary we would sit evenings as well as afternoons.

In projected government business I would propose for Tuesday, May 12, in the afternoon for second reading Bill 27, Alberta Research and Innovation Act; Bill 36, Alberta Land Stewardship Act; Bill 43, Marketing of Agricultural Products Amendment Act, 2009 (No. 2); Bill 44, Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Amendment Act, 2009; Bill 45, Electoral Boundaries Commission Amendment Act, 2009; and Bill 47, Appropriation Act; and as per the Order Paper. In the evening for second reading Bill 25, Teachers' Pension Plans Amendment Act, 2009; Bill 37, Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2009; Bill 38, Tourism Levy Amendment Act, 2009; Bill 39, Tobacco Tax Amendment Act, 2009; Bill 40, Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2009; and in Committee of the Whole bills 10, 12, 13, 14, 16, and 33 and as per the Order Paper.

For Wednesday, May 13, in the afternoon for second reading Bill 20, Civil Enforcement Amendment Act, 2009; Bill 23, Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2009; and Bill 26, the Wildlife Amendment Act, 2009. In committee bills 24, 25, 27, 28, 37, 38, 39, 40, 43, and 47, the Appropriation Act, and as per the Order Paper. In the evening at 7:30 under Committee of the Whole Bill 44, Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Amendment Act, 2009; Bill 45, the Electoral Boundaries Commission Amendment Act, 2009; and as per the Order Paper.

For Thursday, May 14, in the afternoon for second reading Bill 35; third reading on bills 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 16, 24, 25, 27, 28, 33, 37, 38, 39, 40, and 47.

Statement by the Speaker

Television Cameras on the Chamber Floor

The Speaker: Hon. members, yesterday in the House I provided erroneous information with respect to the CBC in an incident which occurred in 2000. At page 997 of Hansard I said, "I banned the CBC from this building for a year. They went to court; they lost. They went to court; they lost." The correct statement should have been: "I can confirm that CBC video cameras will not be permitted on the floor of the Legislature Chamber for the balance of the calendar year."

Further, the matter did not proceed to court; hence, the case could not have been lost if it did not go to court. I want to clarify this matter in the public record so that there'll be no misunderstanding either now or in the future, and I further wish to apologize to the House and the CBC for providing this incorrect information on May 6, 2009, in the Alberta Legislative Assembly. Corrective disciplinary action will be taken upon myself.

I also received a number of notes from members yesterday, but I indicated that we do have a protocol that allows for cameras to come onto the floor of the Legislative Assembly. It's a very detailed protocol. There are certain rules and conditions. The request made yesterday was by one carrier of the CBC to attend at one point in the activities. The CBC will decide who they choose to film and who they choose not to film. It will not be upon the direction of the chair or the Speaker. There is one location for these cameras. It just happens to be to the left of me in that one corner, so there's no interference whatsoever from the chair with respect to anyone coming or going. They have a protocol simply to film the person who's speaking at the time and not to pan.

Now we have, first of all, a point of order. The hon. Official Opposition House Leader.

Point of Order Insulting Language

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. If you would allow me to argue this point of order on behalf of my leader, I would appreciate it. Thank you very much. This is referring to an exchange between the President of the Treasury Board and the Leader of the Official Opposition in the early part of question period. I would like to use as a citation 23(j), which is specific to using abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder, which in fact it did. I can compliment the President of the Treasury Board on his effectiveness.

The issue that is on point, Mr. Speaker, was – and I'm going to have to paraphrase because, as always, we don't have the benefit of the Blues. I'm sure the Speaker does, but I don't. The President of the Treasury Board was making an assertion that opposition members were asking asinine questions and also loading 30, 50, or 70 questions in the last few minutes of debate. I don't think even the Member for Calgary-Varsity could speak fast enough to load 70 questions into the last 10 minutes, so I'm not going to deal with that one.

But the use of the word "asinine" in reflection upon members of the Official Opposition and the questions they were asking, some of which I might add, Mr. Speaker, were on behalf of Albertans who had contacted us through our website, so in fact the President of the Treasury Board was casting the net very wide by in fact calling some members of the Alberta citizenry asinine for asking questions – just because questions are difficult for the President of the Treasury Board or embarrassing for the government or even put the government in a different light and catch them in a compromising position, I think for the member to say that opposition members are asking asinine questions is abusive.

The President of the Treasury Board is a smart man. He has a very wide vocabulary. He has a choice of many words that he could be using. So he may not like the questions that have been asked, but he definitely offends the intent behind Standing Order 23(j) and, I might add, M and M page 431 under Replies to Oral Questions. If I may quote part of it: "Replies are to be as brief as possible, to deal with the subject matter raised and to be phrased in language that does not provoke disorder." Again, my congratulations to the President of the Treasury Board for having provoked disorder.

You know, I understand that the President of the Treasury Board is a passionate individual. I can certainly understand that, but I would argue that he went a tad too far in describing members of the Official Opposition and the questions that they ask as being asinine, and I would ask him at this point to withdraw the comment. We would certainly be happy to accept an apology from him.

Thank you.

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, I have to admit I was caught a little bit by surprise today. In fact, I thought the opposition had forgotten all about me over here, so I was so pleased that they asked me a question that I came out of my slumber in too much of a rapid ascent.

I truly do not ever wish to bring any disrespect to this Chamber. As to the terminology around "asinine," I guess appropriately I should have used the proper dictionary description of having or showing little sense. But I think that may too stretch what may upset the hon. member. In the fact that we do have a lot of business to do here today – and a lot of it is serious business – I would like to apologize to not only the hon. leader but to all hon. members. I appreciate the latitude that we have in here, and I don't want to abuse that. I do appreciate the opportunity to debate them in a meaningful way. Sometimes we need to stretch it.

Mr. Speaker, I also apologize to you for taking up the time of your Assembly.

2:50

The Speaker: Well, I think that's very honourable, but we're going to go one step further. I'm going to go out and buy a thesaurus and deliver it to the hon. President of the Treasury Board so that he can find alternate words to use in the future.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Are you asking if I'll accept the apology?

The Speaker: No. I assume that everybody did. We're on to your point of order now.

Ms Blakeman: I'm sorry; I don't have an additional point of order. I have a Standing Order 30.

The Speaker: Sorry. Standing Order 30.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I've got a lot on my plate, and I just didn't need more.

Request for Emergency Debate

Budget Debate Process

Ms Blakeman: Pursuant to Standing Order 30 I would like to move a motion.

Be it resolved that the ordinary business of the Legislative Assembly be adjourned to discuss a matter of urgent public importance; namely, the failure to provide written responses to questions posed during debate on the 2009-10 main estimates obstructs opposition Members of the Legislative Assembly in their review and evaluation of the budget, preventing them from making a fully informed decision on the vote.

I am aware that the motion has already been distributed in hard copy.

What brings us to this point today, Mr. Speaker, is the fact that during the estimates process 24 departments were involved in scrutiny by the opposition members and others. A number of questions were not able to be answered at the time. We have documented at least 10 instances where ministers agreed to provide written responses to the questions that we had asked. In fact, as of yesterday, the day before the votes are to take place, we had received responses from the Minister of Energy. Just today I've had some correspondence from the minister of finance, who I think did attempt to supply answers. I don't think it actually got to the individual she was trying to get it to, that being our finance critic, but she did try. A total of 3 out of the 10 that we identified in Hansard as promising responses were in fact tabled either yesterday or today. We're still far short.

Our ability to make a decision and vote on behalf of all Albertans, filling our role as the Official Opposition, has been severely compromised. That's the crux of the debate today. It's our belief that the government's failure to provide adequate written responses for the information we requested during the estimates process places severe limitations on informed debate and jeopardizes our ability to accurately assess the budget.

Let me talk about urgency because that's what we're here to argue. This is the first year, Mr. Speaker, that we have not received a significant number of responses for answers that were not able to be given during the regular debate. In fact, I often commented on the promptness of the former minister from the constituency of Drumheller with her alacrity in providing written responses to the questions that had not been answered during her debates. We even at one point had a standing order, which was then numbered 59.05(1), that the vote not be held until answers had been tabled. Now, that standing order was in fact removed by the committee examining the standing orders, a committee that has a government majority, I might note.

We have a situation where there is no requirement on the government to provide those written responses, but there's certainly an expectation that we would receive it. As I said, in Hansard is recorded the ministers' agreement to that in a number of cases.

Mr. Speaker, today is the last day of the estimates process. These amounts are to be voted on in the Committee of Supply. I'm going to work my way through some of the tests that are generally used in assessing Standing Order 30. Marleau and Montpetit in 584 ask that it be specific, and I think I have been very specific. Our concern and the request for an emergency debate is because we have not been able to receive answers to questions that were outstanding from the estimates debates. It is urgent and important and, I would argue, requires urgent consideration.

M and M 585 asks that it be immediately relevant and of attention and concern throughout the province. Well, certainly, the budget and the vote on the budget is of concern to the province, a particular concern to a number of projects to be able to move forward or not. This is not a chronic issue, which is one of the tests under M and M. As I say, prior to this year we even had it in standing orders, but it had not been an issue. One or two departments might have been remiss, particularly the ones that were immediately prior to the vote, but not most of them. I mean, at best we got four responses out of 24 ministries, Mr. Speaker, so this was more of a wholesale abdication from providing us with the answers we were looking for.

Referring to the parameters set out in Beauchesne 387 to 398 on emergency debates, 387 and 389 are indicating that the primary issue is the urgency of the debate and whether there has been opportunity for debate under the rules and provisions of the House. Well, yes, Mr. Speaker. But this is about the information being provided in time for us to analyze and go forward on a vote, and that time has not been given to us.

What are the other opportunities? What else would we have to do to try and get that information? Do we have time to do it before the vote, which is scheduled for this afternoon? We have no time to go through a FOIP process at this point. As the Speaker well knows, once a written question or a motion for a return is on the Order Paper, there is a three-week delay, so that is not a possibility for us to try and get this information through some other source since it wasn't supplied prior to today. We have very limited caucus research support. You know, again, the government has been careful to deny our request for that, certainly, through their membership on the committees that would have been able to grant us additional funds for that support. So our ability to go out and try and somehow find these answers between when we realized yesterday we weren't going to get the answers and our ability to vote on the budget today is severely compromised. So it's urgent, and we have no other opportunity to recoup and reassemble ourselves to do this.

The Speaker has set a test on the 28th of February of '06 in which he talks about other opportunities for a member of the Assembly to discuss this matter, and in fact I've just set out that it's not so much about the discussion; it's about the receipt of the information for us to be able to go forward and make a decision on a vote. But, further to that, the appropriation bill next week limits us in a way that we can't have a further discussion on it. There is nothing that compels the ministers to respond to any questions we might have if we were able to dig up the information and go back and say: "Well, here's the answer. Can you respond to me now?" There's nothing that compels the minister to respond. Our opportunity to seek that information has passed.

This is a genuine emergency. The budget debate is this afternoon. I would argue that when we look at that test set out by the Speaker, this is both the earliest opportunity for caucus to raise this issue and ask for an emergency debate but also the final opportunity for us to do that. The vote has been scheduled for this afternoon, Mr. Speaker.

I believe I have met the tests that are required here. We are talking about budget debates, so the usual test that would apply to an opportunity to debate a bill doesn't come into consideration here, and I've already talked about that the opportunity for debate in appropriation does not compel ministers to respond to us at all. Most times they don't, as a matter of fact. I think we have been put in a position by the government – I don't know if it was deliberate, but it was certainly effective – where the members of the opposition are here today without the information that they need to be able to proceed, and I would ask that we suspend the ordinary business of the day and allow for that emergency debate. Perhaps we'll be able to get some of the answers that we're lacking before a vote is finally called.

Thank you very much for the opportunity to present that.

3:00

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 30(2) states the following:

The Member may briefly state the arguments in favour of the request for leave and the Speaker may allow such debate as he or she considers relevant to the question of urgency of debate and shall then rule on whether or not the request for leave is in order.

There are several words in here that are quite subjective: "may briefly state" and "may allow."

Are there additional members who would like to participate?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, very briefly, there is no valid argument to be made that the ordinary course of business, which this afternoon happens to be voting on the estimates, for the most part, be suspended in order to debate the failure, as the Opposition House Leader puts it, to answer questions. First of all, there is no parliamentary requirement that all of the opposition's questions be answered before a vote is taken on any bill or any subject matter. That would be a very strange practice indeed.

There was in this Assembly for one year under a trial set of procedures that we had for estimates a standing order that said that answers should be filed if a commitment was made in estimates in Committee of Supply and that answers should be responded to within two weeks of that department's estimates having come up. That was a temporary standing order. That standing order no longer exists.

There is no standing order, there is no rule or procedure which requires, in fact, that written answers to questions be tabled. Certainly, in the past in Committee of Supply we have and I as House leader have encouraged the answering of questions just as a matter of practice. In fact, that exists with our new procedure this year with the estimates being heard before the policy field committees. But there is nothing in parliamentary procedure, law, or requirement that says that all the information that the opposition might want to have or asked for at any given time on any bill or subject matter before the House must be provided before they're required to go to a vote on that, and it would be most unusual if that was required in this circumstance today.

So if there's not a requirement for that, then the fact that the vote's coming up and there's some urgency to deal with this issue before the vote, the urgency matter, doesn't override the fact that there's no precedent, no requirement for what they're actually asking for to be done. Therefore, there's no urgency to debate it at this time. Just because we're having a vote, why would we usurp the normal procedure of the House in order to debate something that's never been the practice of the House other than for a very short period of time under some temporary rules?

The Speaker: Are there additional speakers that want to participate? Okay. The Leader of the Official Opposition, then the Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne, and then perhaps we can move on.

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise on this as a point of confidence, really, as opposition leader, as representing the accountability of a government that's spending $37 billion. I find it very difficult in good conscience to say to Albertans that we can support a budget where a large number of questions remain unanswered. In my particular department we were debating $160 million a minute. It's very difficult to get the kinds of detail and understanding of where money is going, what kind of impacts it's having, why changes were made from one year to the next. Those are the kinds of questions that Albertans are asking me, especially professionals who have had many suggestions for improving the health care system over the last decade.

It's a very difficult position that we find ourselves in, the major responsibility of the opposition, and being fundamentally unable to say with confidence that we have reviewed the budget, that we have seen the decisions and the priorities of this government and could in some way endorse the past 12 months of spending or the plans for the future.

I think it's unfair to expect an opposition of nine members, indeed, to stand up and support a budget where we have had a very substantial number of reasonable questions, not asinine questions, actually, and have had no answers on a number of these, leaving us very vulnerable to criticism both within our caucus and by the public. I hope other members will support a few days at least of delay and further discussion and opportunity to raise some of these important issues that have to be clarified in the interest of the public.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne on this Standing Order 30, please.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over the past five weeks I had the opportunity to chair the estimates in Public Safety and Services. You know, the ministers having from 230 to 270 exchanges during the three-hour period I found was very productive. Many times I could have raised the point that questions that were brought up weren't on the budget. They were on policy. They were on other issues and even referred to question period.

I don't really feel that the comments raised by the members opposite are valid. I think there was plenty of time. There were very good answers, and there were very good questions, like the opposition leader stated. There was ample time and good exchanges. What I experienced over the five weeks was that there were valid exchanges of questions and answers, and I don't believe that we need to deliberate longer on our estimates.

Thank you, sir.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Regarding Standing Order 30 I would like to remind the previous speaker and all members of the Assembly that the opposition, when they go before a field policy committee, regardless of which department it is and which policy field committee, they're restricted and limited by the clock in the questions that they can ask. Regardless of how many questions they have, regardless of the size of the budget, whether it's in hundreds of thousands of dollars or hundreds of millions of dollars, the Official Opposition – and this is the whole point of this Standing Order 30 – does not have enough time to scrutinize the budget on behalf of the taxpayers of this province. We have 60 minutes at the start of the committee, and then we wait like everyone else to have our questions answered. We have detailed questions on the budget. Many of the government members, the hon. member is correct, have policy questions, but the Official Opposition tried to deal with each line item.

Thank you.

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I just want to use a little bit of an example. I think there were four questions unanswered in mine, two from the third party and two from the Official Opposition, and I tabled them today. I think the Official Opposition ones, if I remember correctly, I gave them the answers, but they said: could you supply that to me in writing so I have a copy of it? They got the answers verbally there and wanted them supplied in writing. That's what I've done.

In the eight years that I've been in this House, I can't remember once through the eight budgets that our budget was supported by the Official Opposition. Their job is to criticize us. Let's move on with things.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just to set the record straight, in previous years we have pulled out certain budgets for further discussion, but in the end the budgets were passed, and we were part of that passing. Let's not rewrite history.

Secondly, anyone who has been in the committee of services debate with me knows how hard and how fast I try to get issues on the table. I use the format of the full 10 minutes so that I can ask and put on the record as many questions as I possibly can. Last night I think I achieved the highest speed humanly possible, and I was pleased to have an hon. member who is a former emergency doc in his background sitting beside me in case I passed out from lack of oxygen.

The point I'm making, Mr. Speaker, is that I was able to ask about 15 pages' worth of very important questions on Children and Youth Services. I still had at least five pages to go. These questions were very directed. They were specific. I cited page and reference number from the pages of the ministries that I talked to. I do appreciate that there were opportunities to have some of those questions answered, and it would probably be unrealistic of me to think that the hon. Minister of Children and Youth Services could have provided written responses for me today. But as a former teacher, the fact that I received the responses for the Education debate from weeks previously on my desk today, where I have no opportunity to go over the information and make an accurate judgment on the budget, I would give this paper a failing grade, as I'm sure you would in my circumstance.

If we are going to do Albertans justice in debating a multibillion-dollar budget, then the time allotted for the opposition, which is in total 40 minutes out of that three-hour period when you break it down into 10 minute slots, isn't doing Albertans any type of justice. It's not holding the government accountable, and contrary to what the Minister of Transportation suggested, the job of the opposition is not simply to oppose. It's to provide viable alternatives, to require accountability. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, in the time allotted that was impossible to do.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others?

Hon. members, the chair has listened attentively to the arguments put forward on this Standing Order 30 application, and I would like to thank the members – there were quite a number today – who actually participated in this debate.

I've already written into the record what Standing Order 30 says about the brief statements and the role of the chair then to rule on whether or not the request for leave is in order. If the chair were to find this request in order, then the question would be put to the Assembly as to whether the debate on the urgent matter should proceed, and if 15 or more members were to rise in support of this motion, then the emergency debate would proceed. Again, first the chair must rule on whether the request is in order, and it is in order. The application was received at 10:14 this morning. We know what the motion basically says.

To be in order, Standing Order 30(7) requires that the matter proposed for discussion "must relate to a genuine emergency, calling for immediate and urgent consideration." Several members have referred to Marleau and Montpetit, but I would like to refer members to pages 586 to 588 of Marleau and Montpetit's House of Commons Procedure and Practice and Beauchesne's paragraph 390.

One of the criteria that the Speaker must consider is whether the matter could be brought before the House by some other means. Marleau and Montpetit at page 587 outlines that. It's also important to note that Standing Order 30 applications cannot be used as a mechanism to debate the interpretation of a standing order. Once again Marleau and Montpetit at page 588 will provide further reference.

Both the Government House Leader and the Official Opposition House Leader did refer to some recent history surrounding our standing orders. In 2007 there was in place a temporary standing order, 59.05, as has been identified, which required members of Executive Council to table answers to questions raised in Committee of Supply within two weeks, and such answers were to be tabled prior to the vote on the main estimates. That requirement was in place for one session of this Legislature.

Hearing the debate today and looking at the motion today and looking at the circumstances today, the chair is hard pressed to find that this issue relates to a genuine emergency for several reasons. A Standing Order 30 application is not the appropriate means to debate matters concerning the administration of this House, and there are other opportunities for this issue to be brought before the Assembly or to be considered by the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing.

As all members of this Assembly are aware, the current standing orders were a product of the work of an all-party committee of this Assembly and were the subject of debate in this Assembly last fall. One can look at Alberta Hansard, November 27, 2008, pages 2112 to 2121. It would appear that during the committee's deliberations last year and during the debate on the amendments to the standing orders would have been the appropriate times to discuss a requirement to table responses to questions raised during estimates consideration. Any member could have initiated such a discussion by moving an amendment on point.

Accordingly, the chair does not find the request for leave in order under the Assembly's rules, and the question will not be put.

Orders of the Day

Government Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Committee Membership Change

14. Mr. Hancock moved:

Be it resolved that Mr. MacDonald be appointed to the Standing Committee on the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund to fill a vacancy.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The House will recall that sometime earlier this spring session a certain member resigned from the Heritage Savings Trust Fund Committee. Under the provisions of the act, I believe it is, that provides for the membership of that committee, it provides that a certain number of members from the government caucus be appointed and a certain number of members from the opposition caucus. Accordingly, it's appropriate to propose a member from the opposition caucus to fill the vacancy that was created by the resignation of an opposition member. As there is not a member from the third party available to fill that vacancy, we have requested the Official Opposition to provide a nominee. They have, and it is the member I referenced. I would ask the House to support the motion.

The Speaker: This is a debatable motion. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Regarding Government Motion 14 I consider it a privilege to sit on the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund Committee. I have served on this committee before. It is an issue of great interest in the constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar, not only the history of the heritage savings trust fund but also the amount of money that's there now. I have many interesting discussions not only in the constituency office but at the Capilano Mall with constituents regarding the heritage savings trust fund and the direction we're going. I would be very pleased to sit on this committee again.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've had the privilege of serving with the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar now for this is the third term. When this vacancy became available, we considered it in caucus, and the member, despite his heavy workload, including chairing Public Accounts and serving on any number of other committees, volunteered with enthusiasm for the position. I think he will fill the position extremely well. He's got a remarkable mind in many ways, we'd all agree . . . [interjection] I was going to finish that by saying that he's got a remarkable mind for numbers and details, and I think he'll do an admirable job. I would urge all members to support this motion. I can see that the President of Treasury Board is enthusiastic. I'm glad to support this.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise to support the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar's nomination to this committee. I won't speak to his remarkable mind, but I will say that I have served with the hon. member, and I remember that he served with great ability. I'm pleased that he's willing to serve. I'm willing to support his nomination.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to rise and speak in support of the motion to appoint the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. I know he's got a remarkable mind. People have remarked on his mind from time to time. I think he's a person of exceptional ability and integrity. I regret that we don't have the staff support to continue on all of the committees that are in the House. I think that the hon. member would be a fine member of the committee.

The Speaker: Should the hon. Government House Leader close the debate, or shall I just call the question on the motion?

Mr. Hancock: Question, please.

[Government Motion 14 carried unanimously]

3:20 Evening Sitings

15. Mr. Hancock moved:

Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 4(1) the Assembly shall meet on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday evenings for consideration of government business for the remainder of the 2009 spring sitting, unless on motion by the Government House Leader made before 6 p.m., which may be made orally and without notice, the Assembly is adjourned to the following sitting day.

The Speaker: Under Standing Order 4(1) this motion is not debatable, so I call the question.

[Government Motion 15 carried]

Committee of Supply

[Mr. Cao in the chair]

The Chair: The chair shall now call the Committee of Supply to order.

Hon. members, as most of you are aware, this is the first time in the history of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta where consideration of proposed main estimates of the general revenue fund and lottery fund and business plans of various ministries was done almost entirely by policy field committees. The exception, of course, is the estimates and business plan for Executive Council, which were considered by the Committee of Supply on April 15, 2009.

We are now on the last leg of this historical journey, where these estimates must now be voted on. Prior to beginning, I thought it would be useful to outline how the process will unfold this afternoon. The Committee of Supply will first call on the chairs or deputy chairs of the policy field committees to report on their meetings with the various departments under their mandate: standing orders 59.01(7) and 59.03(4). Members are reminded that no vote is required when these reports are presented.

The committee will then proceed to vote on the amendments introduced during the policy field committee meetings, and please note that these votes shall be taken without debate or amendment: Standing Order 59.03(1)(a).

The vote on the estimates of the Legislative Assembly as approved by the Special Standing Committee on Members' Services and the estimates of the officers of the Legislature shall then take place, also to be decided without debate or amendment: Standing Order 59.03(5).

Following that, pursuant to Standing Order 59.03(1) the committee will then proceed with a single vote on the main estimates. Please note that if the vote has not concluded prior to the normal adjournment hour, the process will continue until all matters have been voted upon. At that time the committee will immediately rise and report.

Committee Reports

The Chair: I would now invite the chair of the Standing Committee on Community Services to present his committee's report.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. As chairman of the Standing Committee on Community Services and pursuant to standing orders 59.01(7) and 59.03(4) I am pleased to report that your committee has reviewed the 2009-2010 proposed estimates and business plans for the following departments: Department of Culture and Community Spirit, Department of Education, Department of Housing and Urban Affairs, Department of Municipal Affairs, and the Department of Tourism, Parks and Recreation.

I would also like to table amendments to the estimates of the following departments that were introduced during our meetings for the Committee of Supply's consideration: one in the Department of Culture and Community Spirit, one amendment in the Department of Housing and Urban Affairs, one in the Department of Municipal Affairs, and two in the Department of Tourism, Parks and Recreation.

The Chair: Thank you.

I would now call on the chair of the Standing Committee on the Economy to present his committee's report.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. As chair of the Standing Committee on the Economy and pursuant to standing orders 59.01(7) and 59.03(4) I am pleased to report that your committee has reviewed the 2009-2010 proposed estimates and business plans for the following departments: Advanced Education and Technology, Employment and Immigration, Finance and Enterprise, Infrastructure, Transportation.

I would also like to table amendments to the estimates of the following departments that were introduced during our meetings for the Committee of Supply's consideration: for the Department of Advanced Education and Technology, three; for the Department of Employment and Immigration, one; for the Department of Finance and Enterprise, three; for the Department of Infrastructure, one; and for the Department of Transportation, two.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you.

Now the deputy chair of the Standing Committee on Health.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Chair. As the deputy chair and on behalf of the chair of the Standing Committee on Health and pursuant to standing orders 59.01(7) and 59.03(4) I'm pleased to report that your committee has reviewed the 2009-2010 proposed estimates and business plans for the following departments: Children and Youth Services, Health and Wellness, Seniors and Community Supports.

I would also like to table amendments to the estimates of the following departments that were introduced during our meetings for the Committee of Supply's consideration: Department of Health and Wellness, one; Department of Seniors and Community Supports, one.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you.

I would now call on the chair of the Standing Committee on Public Safety and Services.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Chair. As chair of the Standing Committee on Public Safety and Services and pursuant to standing orders 59.01(7) and 59.03(4) I'm pleased to report that your committee has reviewed the 2009-2010 proposed estimates and business plans for the following departments: Aboriginal Relations, Justice, Service Alberta, Solicitor General and Public Security, Treasury Board.

I would also like to table amendments to the estimates of the following departments that were introduced during our meetings for the Committee of Supply's consideration: Department of Justice, one; Department of Solicitor General and Public Security, one; Department of Treasury Board, one.

Further, Mr. Chairman, I'd like to thank all members that participated in our committee both from the opposition and from government and, as well, the staff from Hansard, the security officials, and our able committee clerk, Jody Rempel, for the excellent service given during those estimates.

Thank you, sir.

The Chair: Thank you.

Then for the last one here I would like to call on the deputy chair of the Standing Committee on Resources and Environment.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. As the deputy chair and acting on behalf of the chair for the Standing Committee on Resources and Environment and pursuant to standing orders 59.01(7) and 59.03(4) I'm pleased to report that the committee has reviewed the 2009-10 proposed estimates and business plans for the following departments: Agriculture and Rural Development, Energy, Environment, International and Intergovernmental Relations, Sustainable Resource Development.

I would also like to table amendments to the estimates of the following departments that were introduced during the meetings for the Committee of Supply's consideration: one for the Department of Environment, one for the Department of International and Intergovernmental Relations, and one for the Department of Sustainable Resource Development.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, chairs.

3:30 Vote on Main Estimates 2009-10

The Chair: The next item in our business is to vote on the amendments introduced during the policy field committee meetings. There are a total of 25 amendments, and they are numbered A1 to A25. 4:10 Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 44 Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Amendment Act, 2009

[Adjourned debate May 6: Dr. Brown]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and participate in the debate on Bill 44, the Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Amendment Act, 2009. I sat with interest, and I listened to the speeches from various members yesterday afternoon. It certainly was an interesting discussion and debate.

I listened to all sides in this discussion, and from what I have learned, Mr. Speaker, Bill 44 is a political compromise between the progressives and the conservatives in the government caucus. I would be very interested in hearing more on the public record of the internal debate that went on on Bill 44 in the government caucus. Certainly, it must have been an interesting discussion because we see the progressives and then we see the conservatives and we see this bill which, in my view, is a political compromise between both of those groups. I don't think the citizens of this province are further ahead in any way with this compromise.

Now, this bill writes sexual orientation into legislation and once and for all indicates and points out that it is no longer tolerable that we can discriminate in any way, shape, or form based on sexual orientation. It makes other administrative changes to separate the role of the executive director of human rights within the department from the director position with the Human Rights Commission as both were the same person. Certainly, the section 11 that is added includes a parental opt-out that will allow parents to remove their children from any teaching course or lesson or instruction that deals with religion, sexuality, or sexual orientation. Teachers are required to provide notice of these topics in writing to parents so that the parents can decide to remove their children from the discussion.

With this legislation we've also got to remember what's not in it and should be in it. It ignores the recommendation from the Sheldon Chumir foundation to remove the hate crime freedom of speech in section 3 of the legislation as it currently stands. When we look at this and we review Hansard on the record again, Mr. Speaker, it's interesting that the UN convention was quoted and discussed yesterday. Certainly, hon. members are correct in quoting the United Nations universal declaration of human rights, but it's interesting that the government seems to be shopping or picking and choosing which issues they want the declaration of human rights from the United Nations to apply to and which issues they do not want it to apply to or issues that they ignore.

I'm dealing specifically with the issue around migratory workers or workers that may be coming here as temporary workers. The United Nations has some issues not only in this country but throughout the world as to how those workers are treated, and the government conveniently ignores those standards whenever we're dealing with workers, whether they're on farms or whether they're in factories. Certainly, also in children's services – and this has been brought up many times by many different members as to how the UN declaration on human rights could perhaps be considered when we're drafting rules and regulations regarding the treatment of children under the care of the government. I found that quite interesting, not unusual because, again, this is a government that picks and chooses and selects when they want to provide certain information to voters.

Now, the Alberta Liberals have been calling on the government to write sexual orientation into the human rights act as an illegal ground of discrimination. We've been asking for that in the House for years. Hon. members have brought up the fact that it was the courts; it was the judicial system that finally forced this reluctant government to come forward with that.

Ms Blakeman: They went around them and just wrote it in.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, that's right. The courts did write it in to become law. That is the part of this legislation that I think is long overdue.

But I cannot understand the parental opt-out section. Certainly, this is going to create a legal and an administrative mess for teachers and the Human Rights Commission. It's going to threaten, in my view, the quality of public education in Alberta if teachers are forced to censor themselves. I believe that this section has to be removed in its entirety from this legislation. There is no need for this, to start with. When we look at the current School Act, there's no need. There's absolutely no need to have this section in here.

When we look at section 11, I'm not going to discuss in any further detail because hon. members before me have, but I'm going to note that in subsection (1) under the act we must "include subject-matter that deals explicitly with religion, sexuality or sexual orientation." That was discussed yesterday. When we talk about sub (2) "the teacher or other person shall in accordance with the request of the parent or guardian and without academic penalty permit the student" to do a number of things, either leave the classroom on a temporary basis or remain in the classroom without taking part in the instruction. How is this going to work? I asked yesterday for the resources that will be provided to school boards and to schools and to the classroom to enforce this. What extra resources will be needed?

We look at Edmonton public, and we look at the site-based budgeting that goes on, that principals and teachers and other staff may set that budget with the co-ordination of the central office. How are they to know, if this bill becomes law, that these options will be exercised by a parent or guardian? How is this all going to work? Who is going to provide the resources to ensure that it will work? Certainly if this amendment becomes law, there is going to be quite a long list of parents or guardians that are going to take exception to some of what may be studied in these classrooms. How are teachers going to deal with this?

Science. The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill gave quite an interesting presentation yesterday afternoon while we were discussing Bill 44, which, in my view, rejects the importance of science. The hour before that we discussed Bill 27, which is a legislative initiative to enhance, as the hon. minister has indicated, our position in research and development within the scientific community in the world. When we talk about Bill 27, I certainly have my issues around it, but I recognize the diligence and the interest the minister has in promoting research and technology in this province and what it would mean to all of us.

Then I find it quite ironic, Mr. Speaker, that an hour later we're into this bill that essentially could allow people to argue that dinosaurs did not exist or, if they did exist, they were wandering around Drumheller at the same time the pyramids were being built in Egypt. This bill will certainly add to a lot of confusion. It is totally unnecessary. Parents already, as I said, have the option. They can opt their children out of sex education if they so wish. Biology and the science of evolution are likely to attract religious objections. The government knows this. Evolution is not the only area that could trigger such objections. As I said, what about the discussions of dinosaurs and other things that occur in nature?

Mr. Mason: Where did the oil come from?

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood asks the question: where did oil come from? A lot of the guys I know in the oil patch call it dinosaur juice. That's what they call crude oil. It's quite interesting that some reject the whole idea of the creationist view of natural history. It can be strict. It can be rigid. Charles Darwin and his ideas can be certainly called into question. The teaching of other sciences such as astronomy could also be impacted if this amendment were to become law.

Now, here's what others have said about this parental opt-out section. This is from the Sheldon Chumir foundation. They point out that if the parental opt-out clause is legislated or becomes law, they have this question: would the Human Rights Commission be obliged to respond to concerns – phone calls, letters, and the like – from parents? How are we going to do all this? Again, what resources are going to be available? What's the formal process here?

Teachers. It was described yesterday as a chill, and it certainly will be that for teachers.

With this legislation, Mr. Speaker, if it's to become law, we're going to enshrine a right under the human rights act in one section and, in my view, take it away in another. I think that is unacceptable.

Again, in conclusion, I would remind members of this Assembly to please think about what we're doing here with this bill. It's not right. It never was right. There's no need for this legislation. I can understand where the government caucus is coming from. There must have been a political row over there, and this is a political compromise, again, between the progressives and the conservatives in the government caucus. It is not acceptable. I think it's going to lead to chaos and confusion and further erosion of our public school system. There are other avenues that already exist in the School Act for parents to take. Please vote this down.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, if no one wants to use the five-minute question period, I would like to recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark on the bill.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move to adjourn debate on Bill 44, the Alberta Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Amendment Act, 2009.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. on Monday.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 4:26 p.m. to Monday at 1:30 p.m.]

Bill Status Report for the 27th Legislature - 2nd Session (2009)

Activity to May 07, 2009

The Bill sponsor's name is in brackets following the Bill title. If it is a money Bill, ($) will appear between the title and the sponsor's name. Numbers following each Reading refer to Hansard pages where the text of debates is found; dates for each Reading are in brackets following the page numbers. Bills numbered 200 or higher are Private Members' Public Bills. Bills with lower numbers are Government Bills. Bills numbered Pr1, etc., are Private Bills.

*An asterisk beside a Bill number indicates an amendment was passed to that Bill; the Committee line shows the precise date of the amendment.

The date a Bill comes into force is indicated in square brackets after the date of Royal Assent. If it comes into force "on proclamation," "with exceptions," or "on various dates," please contact Legislative Counsel for details at (780) 427-2217. [The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Welcome back.

Let us pray. We confidently ask for strength and encouragement in our service to others. We ask for wisdom to guide us in making good laws and good decisions for the present and the future of Alberta. Amen.

Hon. members and ladies and gentlemen, we'll now be led in the singing of our national anthem by Mr. Paul Lorieau. Please feel free to join in in the language of your choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly His Excellency Pedro Moitinho de Almeida, ambassador of the Portuguese Republic. Accompanying His Excellency is Mr. Carlos de Sousa Amaro, consul general from Vancouver, and Mr. Aurélio Carmo Fernandes, honorary consul from here in Edmonton. I was honoured to host a special luncheon today in honour of His Excellency's first visit to Alberta.

Alberta and Portugal have a solid trading relationship, and the Portuguese community plays a prominent role in our province. We value the hard work and dedication of the Portuguese community in enriching our province. Their work helps increase the quality of life in our province and helps build stronger communities and a stronger Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, I would ask that the delegation rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today it's a great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislature very special guests, students from Mundare school. I just took a picture with them. They're excited, well behaved, and spending an interesting afternoon here in the Legislature. They are accompanied by teacher Robin Derow and parent helpers Lisa McNeely and Michele Zurborg. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: The young people from Mundare should also know that today is the birthday of their Member of the Legislative Assembly.

The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to members of this House 65 constituents, visitors from Gibbons school. We have three grade 6 classes here, and they are led by their two teachers, Ms Colleen Lowe and Miss Amy Jensen, and are accompanied by parent helpers Mrs. Niki Smyth, who's actually a councillor at the town of Gibbons, as well as Cory Smyth, Sherida Allison, Becky Sturm, Sandra Welsh, Stephanie Thimer, and Shiela Fediow. I had the pleasure to meet them and take a picture on the steps, and they took part in the mock Legislature this morning. I just want to welcome them and ask them to rise and please receive the warm welcome of this Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I indeed have a great privilege to introduce two people to you and through you to members of the Assembly. One of them is my sister, who is here from Eugene, Oregon. She was the oldest in our family – so if I become out of control or unruly, she probably didn't do the task she was left to do that my mother left her – my sister Peggy. With her is my mother, Margaret. It's just maybe a little more special because of yesterday being Mother's Day. For those of us that had the opportunity to spend some time with our mothers, those of us that are lucky enough to still have them, on behalf of all of the Assembly to all the mothers of Alberta: let's give them a genuine welcome through my mother to them. [applause]

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I have the privilege of introducing to you and through you to Members of the Legislative Assembly members of my staff from the workforce supports division. These are the people who work behind the scenes, supporting Albertans to upgrade their skills, make informed career choices, and get jobs. They create the policies around the skills investment, career services, and partnerships that help Albertans succeed in the workforce. I appreciate their commitment, dedication, and the high standard of work they consistently produce in support of all Albertans. I would ask that our guests stand as I introduce them: D'Arcy Claypool, Beryl Keller, Donna Bruce, Jaclyn Denman, Linda Willis, Shirley Meakin, Melissa Sliter, Denise Gazloff, Caroline Maran, Cindy Kleinmeyer, Synora Thomas, Azmina Walji, Annya Masse, Emma Abdelmaseh. I would ask all of the members of the Assembly to give these guests a very warm welcome to our Legislature.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. I have a special introduction today. Every year I am so impressed with the calibre of applicants for summer STEP positions. Edmonton-Riverview has been most fortunate again this year. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Rebecca Kos, who is seated in the public gallery. Do you want to stand up, please, Rebecca? She's entering her third year at the University of Alberta this coming September in the Faculty of Business, with a major in accounting and a minor in business law. I might need her services in the future.

Who knows? In her free time her interests include a variety of sports, including swimming and tennis, as well as singing and theatre. We're very fortunate to have her talent and enthusiasm in our office, and I'd like all members to please give her a warm welcome. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to introduce to you and through you today to the members of the Assembly seven members of the Kingsway Business Association. These members represent approximately 300 organizations in my constituency and are here today to show their support for the Edmonton City Centre Airport. I'll be discussing more about the KBA in a member's statement this afternoon. For now I would like to introduce board chair Mary Anne Stanway, Paul Gervais, Bob McEwen, Kathy Hall, George Marine, Don Koziak, and Karon Kosof. I'd ask them all to rise and please receive the traditional warm greeting of the Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Lesser Slave Regional Fire Service

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When destruction hits our homes, our roads, our communities, when a disaster strikes and leaves us immobilized, when we are filled with fear and unable to help ourselves, or when an accident occurs and we are in need of help, the brave and selfless firefighter is there to come to our aid. The late author Kurt Vonnegut said: "I can think of no more stirring symbol of man's humanity to man than a fire engine." That resembles the members of the Lesser Slave regional fire service, who are heroes to many in our community because they embody skill, training, compassion, and commitment, and they help many, many people in need.

There is one individual, however, who has received recognition for his outstanding efforts. This past December, just five days before Christmas, a woman from Slave Lake drove into town to pick up her daughter. On the way home their truck hit a patch of ice and flipped upside down. As you know, Mr. Speaker, in my constituency it's a long way to the hospital. Jamie Coutts, volunteer firefighter and acting fire chief of Lesser Slave regional fire service, who lived nearby, was able to reach the accident scene within minutes, before other firefighters arrived, and saved two lives that day. He received commendation from the Minister of Municipal Affairs for his actions on behalf of his team.

When I asked him if I could use the names of the other firefighters who came to help he said: "Oh, no. Don't even mention my name. Names aren't necessary. Firefighting is the ultimate team effort." However, today on behalf of the family I do want to thank Jamie Coutts, who we call the man of the hour, who worked hard to save the two people. I'd also like to thank the Lesser Slave regional fire service for their service and commitment to their community. Keep up the great work.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Anniversary of Canada-Israel Diplomatic Relations

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of myself, my colleague from Edmonton-Mill Creek, and all Members of the Legislative Assembly I rise to recognize the 60th anniversary of diplomatic relations between Canada and Israel. Canada recognized the state of Israel upon its founding in 1948 and established formal diplomatic relations on May 11, 1949.

Over the last 60 years Canada and Israel have deepened this relationship through strong political, economic, cultural, and social ties. Alberta's Jewish community of 14,000 has been important to the development of these relationships, acting as a bridge between our two countries. In a world that faces many challenges, let us celebrate this 60th anniversary of relations and our commitment to continuing positive ties between Canada and Israel.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Calgary Airport Runway

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituents and I are very concerned about the Calgary Airport Authority's plan to construct a fourth runway. We understand that the new runway is needed to serve Calgary's growing airport traffic, but we are opposed to how the authority's plan will not only segregate northeast Calgary from the airport but will affect 200,000 residents living on the east side. To construct a new runway, the city must close down Barlow Trail north of McKnight Boulevard. This will sever the northeast from the only link it has to the Calgary International Airport. Worse yet, there are no plans to build a new link between the northeast and the airport despite the fact that the northeast is the city's fastest growing quadrant.

Through the airport, the northeast is Calgary's gateway to the entire world. To maintain this position, the city needs adequate transportation infrastructure. To address this issue, my constituents have proposed that a tunnel be built under the new runway. The tunnel has been endorsed not only by the communities in my riding but by the city of Calgary and by the communities in the ridings of Calgary-Cross, Calgary-East, Calgary-North Hill, and Calgary-Montrose, whose members are seated on the government benches. I'm sure that communities in the other ridings of members opposite will also agree.

Mr. Speaker, this transportation artery is necessary to maintain the economic vitality of the whole city of Calgary. The price we would pay now is far smaller than the costs that would come later if we do nothing now. Without this link to the airport, Calgarians will see more pink slips, more business closures, a worsening quality of life for their families, and continuous transportation delays. This administration should accept the recommendations of Calgarians and ensure that the tunnel is built. It is the right thing to do for not only Calgary's future prosperity but also Alberta's.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Kingsway Business Association

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Edmonton Kingsway revitalization zone, or BRZ, was established by the city of Edmonton by bylaw in November of 1987. The Kingsway Business Association is an organization comprised of board members that represent both the large and small businesses in the region. The KBA has continually worked towards making Edmonton Kingsway the preferred place to shop, play, fly, and stay.

The major goals of this nonprofit organization are to continue to enhance the projects for Edmonton Kingsway and to support efforts to promote the long-term viability of the Edmonton City Centre Airport. Again, the debate about the City Centre Airport is one that affects many people in Alberta. The status of this airport is integral to organizations like the KBA because they are trying to make Edmonton Kingsway into a destination, and without an active airport this would be very difficult. The KBA is also concerned about the future of the airport, and frankly so am I. The ongoing debate needs to address the issues with the city and key stakeholders to ensure that the best interests of the capital region are met.

It is important to keep the dialogue going and to pay close attention to the wisdom and concerns voiced by organizations like the Kingsway Business Association.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

National Mining Week

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to recognize National Mining Week, which was first celebrated in 1996, acknowledging the importance of the Canadian mining industry to the economic development of Canada and Alberta. I've spent over 35 years in the mining sector, 30 of them in coal. The coal mining community has played a significant role in the early and current development of the province.

Over 1,800 mines are known to have operated in Alberta and were first mined to supply domestic heating needs. Lethbridge had its first coal mine in 1882, while the first mine in Edmonton was 1883. Some of the earliest mining in Alberta was within the now Banff national park. The Crowsnest Pass in southern Alberta was also developed as a coal mining centre to supply coal to the CPR. A similar role was established in west-central Alberta for an area known as the Coal Branch in my constituency, an area just south of Hinton. A number of mines and towns developed to supply coal to the Grand Trunk and the Canadian National railways. The towns of Nordegg and Grande Cache both were developed for the purpose of coal mining.

Early coal mining established the first major trade corridors between Alberta and British Columbia, the historic Coal Branch segment of the Canadian National Railway. The trade and transport of goods between these two provinces has grown in size and diversity today from the beginnings of the Coal Branch railway. In 1964, Mr. Speaker, Great Canadian Oil Sands, now Suncor, started mining oil sands to produce crude bitumen when Fort McMurray was a small trading post. Commodities mined in Alberta include oil sands, coal, limestone, salt, shale, dimension stone, ammonite shell, sandstone, sand, and gravel.

Today mining is a high-tech industry, and many aspects of modern mining are controlled by computers. There are 15 major mines and quarries in Alberta: 11 coal and oil sands mines and four major quarries. Coal and oil sands mining contributes approximately 3.1 per cent, or $3.3 billion, to the provincial economy. The minerals industry, excluding oil and gas, is estimated to directly employ about 10,000 people in Alberta. Communities that have a significant dependence for their livelihoods on mining include Fort McMurray, Hinton, Edson, Grande Cache, Forestburg, Hanna, and Wabamun to name a few.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that all members of this House join me in recognizing National Mining Week.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Foreign Workers

Mr. Benito: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Recently I was fortunate enough to attend a symposium on immigration laws and employment called Meet the Filipino Foreign Workers. It was sponsored by Iglesia ni Cristo, also known as Church of Christ, south side local, with approval and blessings from their head office in Manila, Philippines. The Asian Christian Cultural Association of Alberta Centre was filled to its capacity with noted guests, representatives, stakeholders, and interested members of the public.

This invaluable and informative session brought together those with backgrounds in immigration law, legal rights, and employment standards to share information on foreign workers. I would like to thank the Philippine labour attaché, based in Vancouver, representatives from the employment standards, and the Alberta immigrant nominee program along with immigration law experts for attending the symposium.

One topic that was brought forward to both employers and employees attending was the fact that the employer retains the discretion for layoffs, not the government. Their decision should not be based on country of origin. Rather, the decision should be based on what is best for the business, its customers, and its employees. Laying off people must be a difficult decision for any employer. I would like to acknowledge those companies who choose to retain individuals based on the skills they bring, the contributions they make to the workforce, not on their country of origin.

I would like also to acknowledge the hard-working Albertans, Canadians, and individuals who have left other countries to contribute to the success of this province. Whether you are a short-term or a long-term resident, your hard work is appreciated by this government and will continue to play a positive role in Alberta's bright future.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Parental Choice in Education

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The parental opt-out clause being proposed by the Alberta human rights legislation has become an international embarrassment. Under the influence of minority right-wing groups this government has threatened our public education system and not considered the implications of Bill 44 on the teachers. This government had a chance to rid itself of the image of being backward and out of touch with the rest of the world, but it failed. To the Premier: why did the Premier allow such a controversial section to be included in what could have been a very progressive piece of legislation?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I really do take exception to another elected member of this House calling this province backward, especially this Assembly, when we look at the number of people who have been elected to this Assembly from so many different religious backgrounds, ethnic backgrounds, coming from so many different countries, looking to this province for opportunity, and who have really found it.

I want to be very clear on this matter, very clear. Bill 44 confirms the existing situation – existing situation – that exists in policy, to opt out of religious instruction and sex education. It does not give parents the right to opt out of other instruction on religious grounds. All I ask is: please read the bill.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier has stated – and I was present at the time – that students could be pulled from class on issues around evolution while the culture minister has said explicitly that they could not. Will the Premier clarify: which is the correct answer?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier, it's very clear in the bill, and again I'm asking all Albertans to read the bill. You know, every time these issues are raised in the House, that's fine. It's good for debate. But at least debate on correct information.

The other fact is that recently in a poll done by Maclean's magazine, which I think probably is a little, you know, left of centre – I'm being very gracious to them – has said that Alberta, this great province of Alberta, is even more tolerant or accepting of people than our neighbouring province of British Columbia. I think that is a very positive statement for all Albertans.

Dr. Swann: Well, again, Mr. Premier, will you answer the question? Can students be removed from class on discussions of evolution? Yes or no?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, let me read into the record again that Bill 44 confirms the existing situation to opt out of religious instruction and sex education. It does not give parents the right to opt out of other instruction on religious grounds.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Alberta Health Services Capital Reserve

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the news release accompanying the budget, there was a statement regarding the three-year capital plan for health, mentioning a $1.5 billion cash reserve for Alberta Health Services; however, there's no mention of how or when this $1.5 billion cash reserve will be spent. To the Premier: can the Premier explain how Alberta Health Services is expected to run a deficit this last fiscal year yet have $1.5 billion listed as capital reserve on hand?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the province of Alberta in our accounting practices has to separate capital dollars away from operational dollars. That is the law. That's the way we do our accounting based on generally accepted accounting principles. We split it in terms of capital, you know, long-term investment, and operational, which would be the daily expenses of health. Whether it be heart surgery, cancer treatment, those are operational. Capital will be the new hospitals, the equipment in the hospitals, anything that is a long-term expenditure on infrastructure.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, why are there so many health facilities on hold, including Stollery children's, Medicine Hat, and Grande Prairie hospitals, when Alberta is sitting on a $1.5 billion reserve?

Mr. Stelmach: I'll have the minister responsible reply to that specific question.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [interjections] We made it quite clear when we identified the financial plan for this year's budget – and last time I looked, I was still finance minister – that the amount of money that was already provided to the various health authorities, $1.5 billion, that wasn't spent over a number of years would be in fact lapsed to Alberta Health Services for expenditure and follow-up on over and above the amount of money that's in this year's budget for new capital expenditure, so it's the reserve from years past.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Swann: Thank you. To the health minister: can the health minister detail how much of and where the $1.5 billion capital reserve will be spent?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think the Leader of the Opposition has to recognize that the $1.5 billion in reserve is already committed dollars. What we had over the past couple of years – and I'm sure he'd recognize this – was a heated economy, and it was an issue of construction projects not proceeding as quickly as they had been budgeted for, and thereby there were cash reserves. So this isn't new money; this is money that has already been allocated for projects that could not be put out to the construction provider because they hadn't yet got to a process where they could take that money.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Marketing of Agricultural Products

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Bill 43 is dissolving this Premier's credibility in the red meat sector. It's widely perceived as a favour from the Premier to the secret donors who backed his leadership campaign. To the Premier: will the Premier admit that Bill 43 will hurt the smaller players in the beef industry and, in fact, is a serious blow to the pork, lamb, and potato producers while it's a huge benefit to the giant feedlots that backed his leadership campaign?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, this line of questioning occurred before. It's funny; he calls it secret, yet everybody seems to know – he knows at least – who contributed to everybody's campaign. I suppose the next time there's a question that comes up on royalties, it will be significant to mention that that party received considerably more from one major oil company than the whole Progressive Conservative Party. So, you know, if you want to play games, we can play games.

In terms of the red meat industry, we've come to a crucial point, and that is: how do we gain access to markets around the world excluding the United States? I just came back from Switzerland. For the first time we had Alberta beef served in Switzerland. Switzerland is not part of the European Union, but through Switzerland hopefully we can reach out and access markets in the major centres because we cannot depend on one market, and that is the United States. They've shut us out a number of times, and we can't do that anymore for the sake of all our producers.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I'm sure the people watching know the Premier didn't answer my question at all. The same people and companies who were widely reported to have backed the Premier's leadership bid with important but undisclosed resources also turn up on the board of ATB, on various PC donor lists, and in the last couple of years have received millions of dollars in government grants. Some of these are also expected to benefit handsomely from Bill 43. Will the Premier follow best practice – that's all we're asking here – clear the air on Bill 43, and finally disclose the list of secret donors to his leadership campaign? Here's the opportunity.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I can go back and pull the files in terms of who contributed to the campaign and who didn't. This has got nothing to do with who contributed either to my campaign or to individual campaigns of any member of this House. I am sure that there are some people on the other side of the House that received donations from other beef producers.

However, set that aside and concentrate on how we are going to gain access in other markets around the world. That is the critical issue. This bill is referring to the check-off that producers pay, whether it be pork, potatoes, also beef. We're meeting with the industry. We're giving them a year to adjust. The bill is fair, it's going through the House, and this is looking to the future of this industry.

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I can assure the Premier that all the members on this side of the Assembly have fully disclosed all donations. I wish the Premier would do the same.

My question to him is: out of respect to the large majority of beef, pork, lamb, and potato producers in this province, who I'm sure his office is hearing from, will the Premier put Bill 43 on hold?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, as the Premier of the province and also as one that is responsible for the welfare, the general direction that the meat industry has to take in this province of Alberta, I stand committed to the bill. We've got to move forward, take the politics out of it, and start positioning this province as open to markets around the world.

This is something I learnt coming back from Switzerland. We have the best traceability in Canada and, indeed, in North America, in fact to rival many other countries, yet we cannot gain access to the European Union because other countries are beating us that don't even have anywhere near the traceability. Now we have ensure that we do whatever we can to position ourselves through our world trade ambassadors to make sure that our needs are heard, that we work with all the industry, the red-meat industry, to build those markets. We can't depend on the Americans because they already showed us how they're dealing with us under COOL.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Those are some pretty long answers.

New Home Warranty

Mr. Mason: My question is to the Premier. An increasing number of homes in Alberta are mouldy wrecks just a few years after being built. Many new-home owners have to dole out thousands of dollars to fix problems from the exterior insulation and finish system within just a year or two of taking possession. Will the Premier commit today to ensuring that builders take responsibility for their shoddy workmanship by extending the homeowner warranty on building envelopes to five years?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the whole situation came up just about a week ago, and the government, through the Ministry of Municipal Affairs, is working with other ministers, looking at this issue of building code and will be able to report back to Albertans at a later date.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, this is just the tip of the iceberg. Currently builders are only required to take responsibility for the work for the first year of home ownership. In the case of condos the clock begins the moment the first owner takes possession, meaning the last owner to move in may have no warranty whatsoever. Engineers and other experts are calling on the government to require builders to back up their work for five years. Will the Premier commit today to protecting new-home owners by giving them a reasonable sense of security and introduce a five-year warranty on new-home exteriors?

Mr. Stelmach: As I said, I'll take the whole question under advisement because this is a matter that we do take seriously as a government. We'll thoroughly investigate and bring the information forward.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, we've seen how much the pine shake fiasco cost Albertans just a few years ago, and we know that leaky condos in B.C. cost homeowners billions of dollars. Here we go again, Mr. Speaker. Again home and condo owners are left holding the bag because this government doesn't protect them. Will the Premier commit today to ensuring that Alberta homeowners will not be stuck with costly repairs in one or two years' time, or will he once again leave them soaking wet?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, as I said, we're reviewing all of the information, looking at the evidence that's coming forward, and we will be making the appropriate decision based on the best evidence brought forward.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Anthony Henday Drive Interchanges

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I feel like it's Christmas. I was very pleased to attend the Edmonton ring road announcement this morning for the start of the Lessard Road and the Callingwood Road interchanges. These ring road interchanges have moved forward thanks to the commitment of the Premier, the minister, and all my caucus colleagues for investing in Alberta's highway network. This is exciting news for my constituents, who have been concerned about the growing amount of traffic congestion in Edmonton's southwest. My question is to the Minister of Transportation. How quickly can these interchanges be completed and open to traffic?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm very pleased to say that my department is going to tender the Lessard Road and Callingwood Road intersections in the next week or two. That means that construction will begin this summer on these interchanges and that they will be complete by the fall of 2011. In fact, in 2011 that whole west side will be better because that's when we will also be opening the Stony Plain Road and Anthony Henday northwest, the 21 kilometres of it. It'll be great for northwest Edmonton.

Mr. Xiao: Again to the same minister. Thanks to the announcement today there is only one traffic signal left on the ring road. When will the minister commit to building the final interchange at Cameron Heights Drive and remove all the traffic signals on Anthony Henday Drive?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, as you know, our Premier has set a goal of having all the ring roads done in Edmonton by 2015. When the Premier has a goal, I'm going to work my little buns off to make sure that that goal is achieved and that whole, entire side will be free flow by that time. I will say that we're going ahead right now with the design work on that interchange.

Mr. Xiao: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, I really appreciate that statement. To the same minister again: can the minister describe how the April 28 open house was advertised for the Anthony Henday Drive interchanges at Cameron Heights Drive and Rabbit Hill Road?

Thanks.

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, the open house was advertised in a number of ways. We had roadway signs at six different locations to advertise to motorists about the open house. We also sent out notices to the residents in the communities and advertised with the local community leagues. In addition, we advertised for the open house in the Edmonton Examiner and the Edmonton Sun.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Funding for Teachers' Collective Agreements

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While this government can change legislation at the drop of a hat to run a deficit when it can't balance its budget, school boards are prevented by law from running deficits. School boards are entirely dependent on the government's commitment to fund the salary increases promised as part of the five-year collective agreement. Without this financial commitment boards will be forced to significantly cut people and programs. To the Minister of Education: are school boards expected to spend whatever amounts they have managed to set aside for future projects in their surplus accounts before the government will provide the increased funding for collective agreements?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, we've made the commitment to fully fund the teacher agreement that was entered into, that's provided this great period of stability in the education system, and we will adhere to that commitment. We provided funding in the budget to make sure that school boards had the funding that they needed to finance their remaining collective agreements. It's a little bit tighter for them because of the change that Statistics Canada made to their average weekly earnings index calculation, but those agreements the school boards made, they need to deal with. As I said before, we've made an agreement to talk with the ATA and the Alberta School Boards Association about how we deal with the change in the way the average weekly earnings are calculated.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. The minister stated in the budget debate that teachers' salaries are "not the school board's problem." Why, therefore, are Edmonton public schools expressing concerns about significant layoffs if the funding, $21 million worth, is in place? Where in the budget is this money guaranteed or accounted for?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, there's no indication at all at the moment that there's any additional money required, so of course it's not in the budget or guaranteed or accounted for. What we did say is that we would meet the funding requirement to implement the teachers' agreement, and we committed to that. At the time the budget went to bed, the number that was known was 4.8 per cent, and we've budgeted for that. We have in place an understanding with the Alberta Teachers' Association and with the Alberta School Boards Association that we need to discuss whether there needs to be a change to the way the average weekly earnings index is calculated. Stats Canada has changed the way they've calculated it, but that's a subject of discussion for us as we go forward.

Mr. Chase: Unfortunately, while these calculations are being made, thousands of teachers are facing potential layoffs, and a lot of those teachers are the young ones in temporary and first-year contracts. Having failed to reach the K to 3 class size targets, are these targets now going to be abandoned to make up for the funding shortfall in teachers' wages?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, there is no funding shortfall for teachers' wages. I don't know how many times I have to say this to the hon. member or to people out there. The commitment that this government made to school boards is that we would fund the teachers' agreement, and we will fund the teachers' agreement. The question is: what's the amount? We've said to school boards: budget on the basis that whatever the amount is, we've undertaken to fund it. We have to determine what that amount is, but there should be no school board across this province that is either laying off or terminating contracts for teachers on the basis that they're not funded for their salaries because they are funded for their salaries, and they will be funded for their salaries.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Federal Infrastructure Funding

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In January the federal government announced over $12 billion in economic infrastructure stimulus. My constituents were particularly interested to know that $4 billion of that over two years was going to restore aging infrastructure. My first question is to the hon. President of the Treasury Board. Could he give us an update on whether Alberta has received its share of the federal stimulus package this year?

Mr. Snelgrove: No, Mr. Speaker, we haven't received our share of the budget. We have been working very, very diligently with the people from both Minister Merrifield's and Minister Baird's offices to try and get the agreement in place. We have been working on the specific projects that have been identified by the different departments in the Alberta government and some of the projects that our federal cousins have put forward. I would say that it's a work in progress, but I would expect the agreement in principle is very close.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is to the hon. President of the Treasury Board. I noticed that when this budget was delivered, there were a number of strings and conditions as far as sharing of funding and what projects might or might not get funded. Could you please indicate whether this is impacting the amount of money that Alberta will be receiving, particularly since Alberta has spent significant amounts of money in infrastructure and to municipalities in the MSI funding?

Mr. Snelgrove: Well, Mr. Speaker, it is problematic in the way that Alberta has built over the past few years and continues to build infrastructure at a very rapid pace. The departments, quite honestly, have gotten very efficient and very good at understanding, organizing, and putting forward these projects. While it's a train moving very quickly, where the federal government is trying to feed some of the hopper cars with some money and help us out, we haven't been waiting. We have been trying to live up to the intent of their stimulus package, which is to get Albertans and, indeed, all Canadians working. That's what we're trying to do, but it's a work in progress.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With the announcement of this economic stimulus money, is this changing any of the infrastructure priorities in Alberta to be able to receive this money from the federal government?

Mr. Snelgrove: Well, yes, it does in a way in that it moves some of the projects that we were going to be unable to do up in line in the queue. It also allows the federal government to partner up in some of the projects that may be staged and otherwise would have taken years to complete. So it's kind of a method of putting together where they're comfortable with their participation in some of the staging, where they're comfortable in participating in some of the ongoing maintenance, like they announced last week with our universities and colleges. We found, Mr. Speaker, that by sitting down with the different departments, identifying where we are in the go-forward with the projects, we're able to determine how it suits our capital budget.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Automobile Insurance

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let's talk car insurance today. Using data from the Insurance Bureau of Canada, the Canadian Bar Association has found that the surge in auto insurance claims in New Brunswick had little to do with the increase in premiums and that there is no correlation between claims and the actual average premium. These findings completely contradict the reasoning that this government has been using for fighting its own legal battles to keep the minor injury cap in place. To the Minister of Justice and Attorney General: how much money has the government spent in legal fees appealing the provincial court's ruling against the minor injury cap in Alberta?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, I think that the government of Alberta's position is that this is an important piece of public policy. I know that there are governments across this country who are looking to what the government of Alberta is doing with respect to this. We are looking forward to the result, and we expect the Court of Appeal to make a decision shortly.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I guess I will continue to look forward to an answer someday to my question.

To the minister of finance: will the minister be using the information found in the New Brunswick study to reform the government's auto insurance policy on minor injury caps?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance and Enterprise.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the Minister of Justice has identified, this issue is before the courts. We have not had any comment, and it would be inappropriate for me to comment further at this time.

Mr. Taylor: Quite a few answers in a few weeks' time, by the sound of things, Mr. Speaker.

Rather than continuing to spend taxpayers' dollars fighting legal battles on the side of insurance companies, will the minister of finance fight on the side of Albertans and introduce public auto insurance?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, we've had conversations about that issue in this House before. We've identified, for example, the billions of dollars that other governments have spent in ways that are abusing taxpayers' dollars to cover auto insurance. I believe that all Albertans are well served by the existing plan that we have in place. We hope it continues.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

WorldSkills Calgary 2009

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The provincial skills competition starts tomorrow in Edmonton, and the WorldSkills competition is about four months away. With over 1,000 competitors from 51 countries and an expected 150,000 spectators this is a huge event. However, WorldSkills is expected to cost taxpayers $21 million. My questions are to the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology. What is the economic benefit of this competition to the city of Calgary and this province?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's a very good question because it is taxpayers' dollars that we're putting out. We expect, based on some economic analysis that was done pre-event sponsored by the WorldSkills competition, that we'll more than double our investment in returns to both the economy and to the city as well as to the province. Really, this is about much more than just the money. This is about training our young Albertans for careers in the trades and in skills competition. It's about providing learning opportunities. It's about highlighting the employers who share in the training of these young people. This is a great event for Alberta. It will help showcase Alberta around the world.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is to the same minister. There are so many talented tradespeople in this province. What criteria are used to select these individuals who represent their provinces and country, for that matter, for the world competition?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, we have several competitions throughout the province that are ongoing. It's similar to any other competition: you work your way through the playoffs, if you will. Those students are going to be the ones that will be showcased in the competition.

Really, what we're trying to do is inspire all of our youth who would look to or maybe not look to consider a career in the trades by way of this competition. In fact, my colleague the hon. Minister of Education is also supporting this WorldSkills competition, making it possible for an estimated 54,000 students to attend.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the same minister. Canada lags behind when it comes to world trade competitions. What are we doing to help our tradespeople to perform better on the world stage?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, Alberta has a tremendous commitment to skills training. In fact, although we may have 10 per cent of Canada's population, we train close to 20 per cent of Canada's tradespeople. That alone suggests to Canadians that we take this very, very seriously. We're going to show a very strong support for WorldSkills. It's one of the reasons why it's here. We agree that we want to raise the bar as far as our skills training goes and, again, highlight these careers that are available for young Albertans.

Protection of Freedom of Expression

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, the lack of any thought into Bill 44, not only with the inclusion of the parental opt-out clause but with the exclusion of extending protection for freedom of speech in this province, and the fact that section 3 of the act, which deals with freedom of speech, is not being amended back to the pre-1996 wording are just other examples of how this government has failed in its attempt to revitalize human rights in Alberta. To the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit: why has this minister chosen not to protect freedom of speech in Alberta?

2:20

Mr. Blackett: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't think free speech actually needs to be defended in Alberta. We have free speech every day. We have it in this Legislature. We have it in our schools. We have it in our homes. We have it in our communities. We're doing nothing different. We have some concerns with respect to the recommendations for section 3 because we feel, our Progressive Conservative government, that we have to make sure that those individuals who are discriminated against, that the Human Rights Commission is supposed to protect, are protected against hate crimes. We're not convinced that the provisions in the Canadian Criminal Code actually protect those. That's the opposition's response. That's who they forget they should be representing. We represent all Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As the parental opt-out clause has led to unintended consequences that the government didn't even think about, how will this government deal with the unintended consequences of denying freedom of speech to Albertans such as complaints being filed with the commission about honestly held beliefs or cartoons about religion?

Mr. Blackett: Mr. Speaker, I look at excerpts from Hansard. The hon. member asked this question on April 16: "What is [your] position on amending the Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Act to write in sexual orientation?" Again on May 21: "Can the minister tell me why race and disability are currently enumerated grounds but not sexual orientation?"

Ms Blakeman: What's your point?

Mr. Blackett: The point is that in the last 13 months the hon. member's opposition party never ever mentioned the words "freedom of speech." Their cause célèbre was the inclusion of sexual orientation. That's all they ever talked about. We in this caucus, sir, have delivered a bill that encompasses all the beliefs of Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's kind of nice that the hon. minister did accept our recommendations for including sexual orientation.

What the big print giveth, the small print taketh away sometimes, I've been warned. Will the minister commit to amending Bill 44 by returning to the pre-1996 wording of section 3, as recommended by the Sheldon Chumir foundation?

Mr. Blackett: Mr. Speaker, when our caucus is assured that visible minorities or people in our aboriginal communities can walk around freely without the fear of being exposed unduly to discrimination with respect to hate crimes and that the Criminal Code will not have a test that's so exorbitant that we cannot get a charge laid or a conviction made because of it, then we'll look at that. It's our responsibility as a government to make sure that we take care of the less fortunate.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Peace River.

Groundwater Monitoring

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. According to a national scientific report released today by the Council of Canadian Academies, our groundwater is being increasingly threatened by contamination and misuse. We don't know how much we have, where it is, or how it's being used. What is this government's answer? Cut the budget for groundwater monitoring by 50 per cent. To the Minister of Environment: how can the minister justify cutting the budget at the very time scientists are telling us that we aren't doing enough and that we need to do much better to protect our groundwater?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, the member is absolutely right: this Council of Canadian Academies came out with a report today. But this is a report that applies to all of Canada, and it's a generalization, that generally speaking, there is insufficient background information available with respect to groundwater. What this member has not acknowledged is that Alberta is far ahead of most other jurisdictions, and we've already begun and have a huge wealth of information and are committed to continuing to develop the information.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, according to the report, the oil sands region is in jeopardy. The experts there say that our environmental impact assessments are inadequate, that we can't measure the factors that impact tailings ponds leakage, and the government's regulators do not have the expertise or the resources they need to evaluate industry's groundwater studies. That's what the report says about Alberta, yet this government is planning to cut the budget for monitoring in half. To the minister: why won't he admit that the problems identified in this report are only going to get worse in the face of his current budget cuts?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, this member was at committee the night that we discussed our budget. She knows perfectly well that the reductions in monitoring of groundwater have nothing to do with the industrial areas. The commitment was made, and I think I made it abundantly clear – she can check the record – that there are no reductions scheduled with respect to groundwater monitoring in the industrial areas. The area where we slowed up our groundwater monitoring is in the development of new information, where we have moved from annual reporting to in some cases biennial reporting. So the question is not accurate.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, overall the budget is being cut in half. Now this report suggests that the single most important factor in managing our water resources is knowledge. We need accurate and timely reporting, follow-up on water quality compliance, and insurance that contaminated sites are cleaned up. This ain't gonna happen with a budget that's being cut in half. Will the Minister of Environment explain to ordinary Albertans why he feels comfortable gambling with the resources we all count on by cutting the funds necessary to monitor them?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, one of the key objectives of this government is to implement cumulative effects environmental management tools. Cumulative effects environmental management tools deal with outcomes. This member is mired in the past. This member is mired in recording history and not looking at the reality that we are concentrating and are putting all of our focus on: the future. We have determined that it is in the best interests of the environment and in the best interests of Albertans for us to focus on the future to ensure that we have the necessary legislation and policies in place, to have the cumulative effects legislative regime in place.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Forest Industry Sustainability

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last Thursday the government released its response to the recommendations contained in the Forest Industry Sustainability Committee's final report. The government was unable to offer direct financial support to the industry, so the response focuses on government policies and practices. My question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. How will addressing government policies and practices help the industry?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to begin by acknowledging the debt that we all owe to the hon. Member for Peace River, who was the chair of the committee that wrote the report. An excellent report it was.

I'm also happy to report that we accepted 90 per cent, 43 of the 49 recommendations made in that report. These recommendations will provide new government policies and initiatives that will create a more competitive and more efficient forestry industry. We think that, for example, changes in the tenure system that allow flexibility and divisibility will help forestry companies decide how and when to develop fibre in a way that works for them.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At the risk of sounding like Chip 'n Dale, I'll thank the minister for appointing me to the committee.

To the same minister: could he inform this House as to what is being done now to help the industry in the short term?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd remind the hon. member that his committee was asked to make recommendations for the long-term sustainability of the industry and not for the short term. In fact, we are doing a number of things that do address short-term concerns. The nine-point bioenergy plan, which forestry companies participate in, has provided $238 million in grants over five years. We're providing money to FPInnovations, which does research and product innovation and market research for forestry companies, and this year the community development trust fund is providing $10 million for worker retraining and retention in resource communities, again including forestry communities.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Finally, to the same minister: how long will it take for the industry to feel the benefit of government changes today?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, there are certain factors that influence the industry: the macro factors that we cannot control, and then there are things that we can control inside. The macro factors – the collapse of the U.S. housing market, the rise in the exchange rate on the loonie, the global recession credit crunch – are the big things that are hurting the industry. We can't control those, but we are taking some of the initiatives and policies I alluded to earlier that will make a difference this year. If the macro factors don't get worse, I believe that our initiatives will begin to show improvements this year.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Air Quality

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta government's air quality measurement doesn't just suck; it wheezes. Last week downtown Edmonton was covered by a smoky haze from the brush fires near Fort Saskatchewan, yet the government's air quality instruments continued to measure "good" for that period, which is a testament to Alberta's poor air quality standards. My questions are to the Minister of Environment. How can the ministry have instruments which measure air quality as good when the smoke is so bad that we can all smell it, see it, and breathe it?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, the gauge that is used to determine the air quality index is a combination of a number of different measurements, most of which have to do with identified pollutants. What the member is referring to was the result, as we all know, of fires that were in the region and relates to particulate matter. Particulate matter, yes, is part of the air quality index, but the instruments that we use are checking for a number of other contaminants like ozone and SO₂.

Ms Blakeman: Well, particulates have the most serious effect on asthmatics.

Back to the same minister. The minister says that the government is outcome focused. What outcome, aside from smoky air, is the government implementing that's an improvement on the national air quality index?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, I guess the member suggests that I should have been out there putting out the fires. By the way, we were. My colleague from SRD had a number of people that were out working and helping with fighting those fires. The fact of the matter is that we are focused on ensuring that we have a system in place that measures the kinds of pollutants that will be a true determination of the strength of our regulatory system in ensuring that our industrial emissions in this province remain within acceptable limits.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Back to the same minister. Maybe I can help you out a bit. In the past the minister has said that the reason that Alberta doesn't participate in the national air quality index is that Alberta's circumstances are unique. I'm wondering what unique circumstance Alberta could possibly have that means we measure smoky air as good quality.

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, the issue that the member refers to is that we have in place an air quality index that is a component of a number of measurements, most of which relate to industrial emissions of one kind or another. We're focused on ensuring that we can adequately measure the amount of volatile organic compounds that are in the air, the amount of NOx, nitrogen dioxide, that is in the air, which then results in smog. At the end of the day, we feel that given the circumstances in Alberta, given the fact that we've got a high concentration of industrial emissions, it makes more sense for us to concentrate on those areas.

Workforce Employment Services

Ms Woo-Paw: Mr. Speaker, my first question is to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Over the past few months we have seen many Albertans lose their jobs. My constituents would like to know: what is the government doing to assist Albertans affected by the current economic slowdown?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our staff responds to layoffs they hear about through the media and through my particular office. Our staff reach out to those that are affected and offer free career services, including career planning, employment retraining programs, and connections to local employers who are hiring. I would emphasize that there are still employers who are hiring. Whether it is by posting jobs over our free website or holding recruitment events in our offices, we are helping employers find the people they need.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question is also to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. These employment services seem well intentioned, but how are they actually helping anyone?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, our staff are helping hundreds of Albertans get back to work every day. I want to show one example, and that was the closure of the General Electric Money call centre in Edmonton. Our Employment and Immigration staff delivered presentations to the affected staff about our services. They organized job fairs for 120 GE Money employees, with 19 employers talking to them. To date 97 former GE Money staff have had interviews, and more than 50 have new jobs.

The Speaker: Hon. member, is that okay?

The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Ministerial and Senior Official Vehicle Fleet

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The ministerial and senior vehicle allowance is a very generous perk. Despite repeated requests, the Minister of Service Alberta has failed to bring in guidelines that would make the use of that perk more responsible to the environment. In budget debates the minister said that some vehicles in the total government fleet were hybrids but did not talk specifically about the $40,000 perk that ministers and deputy ministers get. To the Minister of Service Alberta: why hasn't the minister acted to put environmental responsibility as a requirement on these ministerial and senior official vehicles?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to the fleet that Service Alberta runs and with respect to the fleet of executive and ministerial vehicles, they are two very separate items. Most certainly, it is up to the individual choice of the ministers to decide if they choose to take a vehicle.

With respect to the fleet, with respect to the whole issue of hybrid vehicles, I am pleased to say that we are up to 50 hybrid vehicles in the fleet, and we are moving forward on a number of those.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is a perk of the job, and the minister could very easily put a requirement on it for environmental responsibility. This is not a hard change. We aren't talking about many vehicles here, but the minister seems to need years of consultation. We are talking about the ministerial and senior vehicle staff only. When will the consultation end and responsible decision-making begin, Minister?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, it will certainly not be years of consultation. In this whole area, again, in looking at whether it's a hybrid vehicle and the uses for it in different parts of Alberta, that's a number one concern. Again, I've said it before: we are not going to just merely do something just because it looks good. It has to actually work, and it has to be a good use of taxpayers' dollars with respect to the service fleet.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since the minister has been taking so long to think about these changes, there must be a draft proposal for fuel efficiency standards. What are they?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Another approach that we do take within the fleet is vehicles that are more efficient with respect to gas mileage, linking that with the hybrid vehicles. There are a whole number of areas that we have been working on with the Department of Environment, and we are hopeful that we're going to be moving ahead on some very innovative directions, so you can certainly look forward to that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Energy Efficiency Rebates

Mr. Webber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I did some door-knocking on the weekend and had some pretty good chats with some constituents of mine. In talking to them, a number of them are interested in making some energy efficiency improvements to their homes. I learned that some of these types of purchases are slightly more expensive than standard purchases. It's not cheap to replace a furnace or a hot water tank. I know that we have a rebate program in place here in Alberta, but I wonder if it's enough of an incentive in these difficult economic times. My question is to the Minister of Environment: are Albertans taking you up on this offer, or are these purchases still out of reach?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As you know, about a month ago we announced about $36 million in energy efficiency rebates to consumers. I'm very pleased to report that to date over 3,000 Albertans have filed applications for these programs. I think that's an indication that Albertans recognize that it's a wise investment despite the tough economic times that we find ourselves in. Rebates are engaging Albertans. It's giving them an opportunity to appreciate that everyone has a role to play and that there are opportunities to save money. More importantly, I think it creates some economic stimulus as well.

Mr. Webber: My first supplemental to the same minister. With over 3,000 applicants in one month, Mr. Minister, that's really quite excellent. The program seems very popular. But just what type of environmental difference is this making?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, a key plank in our climate change strategy is energy efficiency. We've often talked in this House about carbon capture and storage and all of the other technologies that are associated, but this is an opportunity for individual Albertans to play a role. Overall, we have forecast a 24 million tonne reduction in CO₂ as a result of energy efficiency. This particular program, when it's fully subscribed, should be responsible for about a million tonnes, or 200,000 cars off the road. Overall, that's 200 megatonnes by 2050, and 24 megatonnes of that will come through energy conservation and efficiency.

Mr. Webber: My final question to the same minister: with the $36 million government investment in this initiative, is that enough? Is the minister considering expanding the program any time soon?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think this is one of those programs where you could truly say that there will never be enough. We could always expand this program. In my humble opinion, it's not enough, and I think that we should be expanding the program. Will we expand the program? I guess that question really has to be addressed to the President of Treasury Board. But the fact of the matter is that as we're able to accommodate within a reasonable fiscal agenda, it certainly is my intention to continue to argue that programs like this are doing what they need to do and should be expanded over time.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that was 94 questions and responses today. In 30 seconds from now we'll continue the Routine.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Bill 47 Appropriation Act, 2009

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 47, the Appropriation Act, 2009. This being a money bill, His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, from the delivery of the budget back on April 7, 2009, by the Minister of Finance and Enterprise, five all-party standing committees of the Legislative Assembly have spent some 72 hours reviewing and debating the budget. Very clearly, this budget represents the values and priorities of Albertans and during these uncertain economic times presents a clear and positive way forward for all the citizens of Alberta.

[Motion carried; Bill 47 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Bill 48 Crown's Right of Recovery Act

Mr. Liepert: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to rise and introduce first reading of Bill 48, the Crown's Right of Recovery Act.

Currently the province's authority to recover health care costs resulting from wrongful acts or omissions is contained within the Hospitals Act. This bill is proposing that separate legislation be created specifically for this authority because it covers more than simply hospital costs. Developing distinct legislation will enable the government to enhance the effectiveness of the cost-recovery process, provide authority to recover health care treatment costs from convicted criminals when that person suffered an injury while committing an offence, and enable the province to seek to recover health care costs caused by the wrongful acts of tobacco manufacturers. This is important legislation because, Mr. Speaker, Alberta taxpayers should not be responsible for health care costs resulting from wrongful acts or omissions.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 48 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation.

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table with the Assembly five copies of our written responses to questions raised by the opposition during the debate on Tourism, Parks and Recreation estimates on April 21.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of my colleague the Leader of the Official Opposition and the Member for Calgary-Mountain View I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of correspondence to the Liberal caucus from Steve Schembri, who is writing to express his dismay, shock, and disbelief with the direction the government has taken the Alberta drilling industry.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have one tabling today, and it's the Qualitative Research Findings: Branding Alberta Message Testing Groups, January 2009. This is the focus group organized by Harris/Decima in various locations throughout Alberta and throughout the country and, I believe, across North America. It is noteworthy on page 10, hon. members, the photograph of the young couple in Northumberland in England. This is certainly not Sylvan Lake. It's not Slave Lake. It's a foreign photograph. It's interesting, to say the least, how the government once again tried to pull the wool over the eyes of Alberta taxpayers.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I have a couple of tablings today. First off, I have letters from University of Alberta students Wayne Stelte, Ashlie Pratt, and Danielle Edge, all expressing their concern with the monopoly on ticket sales in Alberta and the lack of consumer protection.

Second, I want to present a letter from Alberta senior Tine Steen-Dekker and a second letter signed by 59 Albertans. They are all participants in the Edmonton General hospital's get fit program, which is designed to help seniors stay active and independent. They're writing because they're opposed to the cancellation of the program scheduled for the end of this month.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings. First, I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a summary of a report from the Council of Canadian Academies titled Sustainable Management of Groundwater in Canada, which I referred to in my questions today.

Secondly, I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of 10 reports from long-term care workers indicating specific problems on shifts that were short-staffed. These indicate that some residents were left in bed until late in the day, did not receive any care until after lunch, and also that some lifting that required two staff members was done by only one.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Ms Evans, Minister of Finance and Enterprise, responses to questions raised by Mr. Taylor, hon. Member for Calgary-Currie; Dr. Taft, hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview; and Mr. Weadick, hon. Member for Lethbridge-West, on April 22, 2009, Department of Finance and Enterprise main estimates debate.

On behalf of the hon. Mr. Liepert, Minister of Health and Wellness, return to order of the Assembly MR 7 and MR 20, both asked for by Mr. Mason on April 6, 2009.

On behalf of the hon. Mr. Horner, Minister of Advanced Education and Technology, responses to questions raised by Mr. MacDonald, hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, and Dr. Taft, hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, on April 28, 2009, department of advanced education main estimates debate.

Orders of the Day

Motions for Returns

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Lottery Fund Grant Announcements

M25. Ms Blakeman moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of all invitations sent to opposition Members of the Legislative Assembly for lottery fund grant announcements in the constituencies they represent and any photographs of these members taken at the events in question.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The history behind this particular motion for a return is that there have been lottery grant programs in Alberta, which, I will add and underline, are much valued by the NGO and voluntary sector. These have been in place for a significant period of time, not always in the exact configuration that they are today, but there have been grant programs that are disbursing lottery funds out to the NGO and voluntary sector based on criteria established by the government for some time.

For the same period of time, Mr. Speaker, the government has used the distribution of the cheques that go along with these various grants as a photo opportunity. Often we see those sort of door-sized cartoon cheques or photo op cheques that are handed out with everybody gathered around them, and the photo appears in the newspaper. We actually even got to a point in the last term where backbenchers' names were appearing on these big photo op cheques as though the individual backbencher had written the cheque out of their own account to give to a particular not-for-profit. When the Liberal opposition brought that to the attention of the government, eventually the Premier ordered that that practice was to stop, but a few months went by, and we're back to having the big cartoon cheques given away at the photo op again.

Recently we've had other examples of government MLAs that are writing in public documents that they have certain pots of money or money that is assigned to them or available to them. I've heard of two sets of money, one was $750,000 and the other one was more than that, several million dollars, I think, depending on what the status is that they hold in the particular caucus.

But the truth is, Mr. Speaker, that we don't know. We get little glimpses of this, little pieces of this, but what we know in the Official Opposition is that we're never asked to hand out the cheque to groups that are in our constituency that receive the money, and we're not in the photo that goes out to the media. It's pretty carefully done by government to enhance government although this is supposed to be lottery money that often the local MLA, including the members of the Official Opposition and the third-party opposition, has supported and lobbied for and even written letters in support of.

We have examples of government MLAs saying that they have pots of money that they are responsible for giving out. We've even brought forward examples of government MLAs showing control over the grant amounts and over the timing of the grant amounts. That example was Foothills-Rocky View and their neighbouring constituency, Banff-Cochrane. That was $1.5 million and $1.5 million, for a combined $3 million. So I guess that answers my colleague's question.

The government, when we've raised these issues, likes to refute this by saying: well, look at all the money that goes to the constituency in Edmonton-Centre; that disproves everything you've been saying. It actually doesn't, Mr. Speaker, because we've been saying that government MLAs have access to a pot of money that we don't, and saying that Edmonton-Centre agencies are getting money doesn't mean that I have any access to it. I'm certainly not invited to the photo op, and I don't get to put my name on the cheque. So I thought: well, you know, let's find out about this.

Just let me point out that Edmonton-Centre is home to the major arts facilities in the city that we all share in and enjoy, and frankly they should have that support. They are a reflection of our city and of our province. There also are major NGOs, our larger NGOs: Catholic Social Services, United Way, Big Brothers Big Sisters. Any number of large helping agencies also tend to be centred in the downtown core because that's where people are clustered, looking for those services.

As I said, we haven't been invited to these cheque handouts and the photo ops although the government says that somehow all things are equal, so I thought I'd ask, Mr. Speaker. I took advantage of the parliamentary process that's available with motions for a return and put it on the Order Paper some three weeks ago.

Now, timing is everything, Mr. Speaker, because on Thursday, just a mere two business days before this particular issue was going to come up in the Assembly today, the Liberal caucus got an invitation from staff in the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit's office 45 minutes before an event, inviting the Liberal MLAs to go to a cheque handout. I thought: well, that's really interesting except that the minister knew or should have known that, in fact, all of the Liberal opposition MLAs were going to be at a media conference 15 minutes before this started.

I say "should have known" because with the number of resources that are available to these government MLAs and particularly the minister through the Public Affairs Bureau, surely somebody checked to see if there was going to be any conflict with the minister's 11:45 media conference, anything around that time like, say, oh, an 11:30 a.m. media conference that was being hosted by the Liberal caucus. That media notice had gone out at 8:38 that morning, so a fair amount of notice had been given. It was certainly available for the minister and his staff, and being the excellent staff that I know them to be, I'm sure they checked, and they knew that we would all be standing in a little row in the basement of the Legislative Assembly doing our own media conference and that the likelihood that we would make it to fulfill the minister's obligation was slim to none aside from the fact that we'd actually been issued this invitation 45 minutes before the event was to take place. So even at that, that was pretty tight timing to have a number of MLAs reschedule things and be able to make it to this.

I suppose, strictly speaking – and I'll be really interested to see. I bet you money that that is going to end up being used as proof that the ministry is open and had always been willing to extend an invitation. But the timing of it certainly is very interesting. In my head I'm sort of classifying that as an attempt to race through the yellow light of the timing that is set by the motion for a return coming up. Unfortunately, because we had already scheduled something and there was public knowledge about our media conference, the minister got caught by the equivalent of a red-light camera.

I have moved that motion for a return. It is on the Order Paper. It is asking for copies of invitations and any photographs of our members that were taken at the events in question. I look forward to the minister's response to Motion for a Return 25.

Thank you.

Mr. Blackett: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member loves to come up with these conspiracy theories, but the fact remains that all these lottery-funded programs, community investment programs, are government of Alberta programs. Last I checked, it was a Progressive Conservative government in Alberta, not the Legislative Assembly of Alberta, that administers these programs. We believe strongly that we should have an opportunity to have those individuals, those volunteer groups, those organizations who raised a lot of money, and those sponsors have recognition for that. So we have events, we invite the media to them, those volunteers get some recognition, and they're all very, very thankful.

In response and without a lot of preamble, the government is prepared to accept Motion for a Return 25 with amendments. I wish to propose an amendment to Motion for a Return 25 that would add a time frame to the request. Without a specific time frame this request is simply too broad. In addition, the Ministry of Culture and Community Spirit is only just over a year old. With that in mind, I propose that the motion be amended to read:

Copies of all invitations sent to opposition Members of the Legislative Assembly for lottery fund grant announcements in the constituencies they represent from the date of inception of the ministry on March 12, 2008, to March 31, 2009, and any photographs of these members taken at the events in question.

Prior to 11 a.m. today, Mr. Speaker, I did share the proposed amendment to the motion for a return with the Member for Edmonton-Centre as per parliamentary procedures. I now request that the proposed amendment to Motion for a Return 25 be circulated to all members. I see that it appears on their desks.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: On the amendment the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Indeed. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to respond to this amendment because I think there's a concept here. I recognize that we are dealing with a minister who has not been in place for a very long period of time. Nonetheless, there is quite a bit of paid staff and a great deal of experience from his colleagues in the House here that could have assisted him with this.

As I mentioned, these grant programs have been in existence for some time. They have been in other ministries at various times, but there certainly is a long history of these particular grant programs. I'll specify the community facility enhancement program and the community initiatives program, which was formerly the community lottery boards' money. Then when the lottery boards were disbanded, that money was rolled over into the community initiatives program, and the media at the time was quite clear in connecting those two, so I will connect them as well.

So here we have a minister who is saying: well, I'm only going to talk about this stuff from when my ministry was created and I was the minister for it. I would argue that that's inappropriate, Mr. Speaker. We have the parliamentary precedent ahead of us that's pretty clear, and I'll point you towards section 428(11) of Beauchesne – let me just dig that out for you – which acknowledges under the section on written questions that, you know, there's a long list of things which should and should not be done. It does acknowledge under the (II) section: “seek from an ex-Minister information with regard to transactions during that person’s term of office.” That is always the standing rule in this Assembly.

For example, I cannot ask the current Minister of Environment what he did in his previous ministry of Municipal Affairs. That would be inappropriate. But, certainly, it would be expected that I could ask this minister something about policy that had been developed in the Ministry of Environment four and five years ago, when he was not minister. There is an expectation of institutional memory and institutional responsibility. As a matter of fact, it’s called ministerial responsibility. Ministers are expected to know this. They are supported by the staff, that give unbiased information to them. So to somehow say, “Well, no; I can only talk to you about what has happened in this ministry when I was minister” flies in the face of some fairly weighty tomes on parliamentary process here, that clearly say that the minister is responsible for the department they’re in and for all of the department they’re in back in history, not starting the day they took over.

If the Speaker would like, I also have references from M and M that I can dig out.

The Speaker: That’s not required.

Ms Blakeman: Okay.

The Speaker: It is a point of ministerial responsibility that you go back in the department, as the hon. member has said. This is the debate now on a motion, please remember.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you so much. You are always so kind to me, Mr. Speaker.

So would I accept this motion? No. What I see in this amendment is an attempt – and I don’t know if this is true or not – to get out from answering the question that is a long-running issue in this Assembly. That is that the government members are given access to money that the rest of the members in this Assembly are not and that they are able to take advantage of that, some of them with very generous timing very close to election campaigns in ways that will advance their election likelihood, and that’s just wrong, plain old wrong.

Will I accept this amendment from the minister, attempting to amend my motion for a return, which was asking for information? Now, if he’d said, “This is too wide open; you can only go back five years” or one term or something, but to tie it specifically to when he took over that ministry I don’t think is appropriate. I think it does fly in the face of the parliamentary precedent that we have under the concept of ministerial responsibility.

So I would urge my colleagues in the Assembly to not support the amendment to curtail the time period in which the information should be handed over to me, the person requesting it. Thank you so much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much. I’m pleased to participate in the debate on Motion for a Return 25, as proposed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, in particular the amendment as proposed by the hon. Minister of Cultural and Community Spirit. I don’t understand how this amendment could be presented to the Legislative Assembly, restricting and limiting this request to the period of time through March 12, 2008, until March 31, 2009. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre is quite right.

I would remind the hon. member that the lottery funds are disbursed from the Department of the Solicitor General and Public Security. They have been for some time, to my knowledge. When you look at some of the programs that were available in the past, particularly in the run-up to the election, there was a lot of money spent, in excess, I would say, comfortably of $400 million, in the Culture and Community Spirit program, specifically to programs which, if we were to accept this amended program, we would have no idea if any of us ever got an invitation or, if we did, if there was a photograph taken. I have no recollection of ever being invited. Now, I’m busy, I may have missed some of this, but I can’t think of ever being invited, Mr. Speaker.

If we look at the major community facilities program of $140 million, which this year has been eliminated or omitted from the budget for obvious reasons, and if we go back to 2007-08 and take this amendment to Motion for a Return 25 as it’s worded, we would have no information on that major program. That’s $140 million. After the big 72-seat majority is acquired, that’s conveniently eliminated.

Now, there are major fairs and exhibitions. Going back two years, they have a $53 million allocation. It’s dropped to $23 million in this budget year. We would have no record – we would be excluded – of the information regarding the lists and the invites and whatnot that the hon. member is seeking.

In conclusion, in the run-up to the provincial election there was significant money, millions and millions of dollars, spent through the lottery program, through various constituencies. I’m not saying that it’s good or that it’s bad. The fact is that you only have to look at the annual reports, and the AGLC is in the Solicitor General’s department, not in the hon. minister’s department.

Ms Blakeman: CFEP is in his department.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. That is correct.

But the money flows from the hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security through to various organizations. For the hon. member’s request we need all of the information, not just part of it. So much money was spent in the immediate past from the dates that the hon. minister is talking about here that I think we need to go back and get all of the invitations, not just the ones from the 12th . . .

Ms Blakeman: There aren’t any.

Mr. MacDonald: There are none?

Ms Blakeman: You didn’t get any. I didn’t get any. I don’t think there are any.

Mr. MacDonald: I didn’t get any, no. No, I did not. But I might have missed them. I don’t know. Certainly, I would like to point that out.

Thank you.

The Speaker: If you can direct your thoughts through the chair, he’s kind of interested.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I give the hon. Minister of Culture and Community Spirit credit for being so direct in his approach. While he’s only been the minister and elected since March 3, 2008, he’s quickly felt the sense of entitlement that this government has had for the last 40 years. He doesn’t have to get up to speed. He was running, and he’s there already.

Now, regardless of whether we receive the motion as amended or the original motion for a return, we know what the result is, Mr. Speaker: a big fat zero. The government has the feeling that it is their money that they are passing out to the constituencies regardless of whether they were elected to represent those constituencies. It's not taxpayers' money, Mr. Speaker. It's something that they have stroked the golden goose, got the golden egg, exchanged it at the money market, and now out of their goodness – note the Premier's signature on the bottom of the cheque – it's theirs to do as they wish because they're the government. Well, guess what? It's the taxpayers' money. It's lottery money that has been earned from constituents throughout the province.

Mr. Speaker, I have no problem with the minister leaving money behind and maybe a silver bullet like the Lone Ranger in Calgary-Varsity, for example, as he did in January, when he provided $10,000 for a community rink, which I'm very much in support of, but until I saw the minister's smiling face in the Calgary-Varsity newsletter, Varsity Acres – Varsity Voice is the name of the document – I had no understanding that this wonderful generosity of the lottery grants had been awarded to the constituents of Calgary-Varsity. Now, I'm very pleased that they received it. I would have even been more pleased if the minister had indicated that something that I had lobbied for and supported my constituents for some time in the receipt of finally arrived.

This business of the government believing that it is their money and therefore they can do with it what they like – and then we have this amended motion, which basically does the Orwellian thing of trying to erase history, the whole business of he who controls the past controls the future. Well, here's another example. Get out the large daub of whiteout. However, in this case it doesn't really matter because we weren't invited, we've never been invited, and if this government continues in power, we probably never will be.

Ms Blakeman: Well, let's find out. Maybe they've got something.

Mr. Chase: As the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre says: well, let's find out. Maybe the invitation that was through Canada Post is in the mail, and somehow the Pony Express never made it to our constituency offices.

It's ridiculous that the government thinks that lottery money is their own sole possession to dole out as they wish to try and undermine the constituencies of those members who are not government members. We're all elected to do our jobs, to represent our constituents to the best of our abilities, and when the government throws arguments: well, do you want us to take back the grant? Of course not. We just want to be considered as the elected members of being worthy, whether we're elected as opposition or not, to be a part of that celebration, which to date has not occurred.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Others?

[Motion on amendment carried]

The Speaker: We're back now to the debate on the motion as amended. Anyone want to discuss further?

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, do you wish to conclude debate, or should I just call the question?

Ms Blakeman: Well, I am interested to see what we're going to get here, Mr. Speaker, because I think we've been pretty clear, and we've tried over a number of years to raise this issue. This just does not pass the test. I don't think it passed the ethical test, that the government is helping itself to a funding source which it then uses to advance its own cause. I don't think that passes an ethical test. I don't think it passes a moral test. Certainly, the responses I've had from people that have read my comments in this House around this issue go: "We had no idea that was going on. This is not right." They feel that the government is using this as a slush fund, and it's inappropriate.

Let me be really clear here, Mr. Speaker. I don't think anybody in this House would say that the groups don't deserve this money. I think they do. I think it's the manner in which the government chooses to control the amounts that the groups are getting, the timing that they're getting it, and the way that it's being handed out. It's meant to aggrandize the government members, and it's inappropriate.

I think the final test is the mom test, and I don't think it's passing the mom test either. I think that what is contemplated here is sneaky and underhanded. It's meant to deceive. It's meant to make the constituents that live in constituencies that have a nongovernment member believe that their member isn't working hard for them. I know that's wrong. I think it is wrong. It doesn't pass any of those tests. The bottom line is that what the government is doing here is inappropriate.

I'm going to continue to raise this issue. Why I put this motion for a return there was to get them to step up and show us these invitations. At one point it was heckled back to me in response to one of my questions: oh, we've invited you guys before. Really? Let's see it. If it's on the level of what we got out of this minister's office on Thursday, I think that's going to tell us a whole bunch. If we end up with other invitations that got lost in the mail or that never got there or were delivered after the event happened, that's going to tell us a whole bunch more about how the government is handling the distribution of these lottery-based funds through the grant programs.

Just as a final point, I think it's disrespectful. It disrespects the number of people who chose to vote in someone who wasn't a government member. I think that's where it's disrespectful, Mr. Speaker. I look forward to receiving the information about the invitations that were given to us. I will see where it goes from there.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion for a Return 25 as amended lost]

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 203

Local Authorities Election (Finance and Contribution Disclosure) Amendment Act, 2009

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to rise and open Committee of the Whole debate on Bill 203, the local authorities election amendment act. I would like to thank my colleagues from both sides of this House for sharing their thoughts and concerns during second reading. I would also like to quickly review the primary components of Bill 203.

This bill was designed to be a unifying piece of legislation that would provide clear and fair local election regulations for campaign finances that would be consistent province-wide. It would mirror rules that already apply in provincial elections and would be similar to legislation already enacted in Ontario, B.C., and Quebec. It has four main elements. First, it would apply a $5,000 limit on contributions from any one individual, corporation, trade union, or employee organization. This limit was designed to ensure that all Albertans regardless of personal wealth were able to play a meaningful role in the electoral process.

Second, Bill 203 would require all candidates to file disclosure statements with the municipality following the conclusion of an election. These statements would be made publicly available and must include the names and addresses of those contributors who donate more than $100 to a candidate as well as record the total dollar value of all contributions $100 or less. Mr. Chairman, disclosure statements ensure public confidence and can also protect candidates from insinuations or outright accusations of undue influence.

Third, Bill 203 would provide clear guidelines for the handling of surplus campaign funds following an election. Candidates who record surplus campaign funds exceeding $500 would be required to pay the amount of that surplus to the municipality to be held in trust for the candidate for their use in the following election. Should the candidate choose not to run in the subsequent election, the surplus funds held in trust may be directed to a registered charity by that candidate. These measures protect the contributor and ensure that contributions are used for their intended purpose, the municipal election campaign of the candidate.

Fourth, finally, Bill 203 clearly identifies who is eligible and ineligible to donate to a municipal campaign. The list of prohibited organizations is mirrored from the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act with a few minor relevant alterations, including prohibiting donations from municipally owned corporations and nonprofits who have received recent municipal grants.

These provisions are designed to build upon the commendable efforts of municipalities across Alberta and ensure that all Albertans can expect the same level of transparency, fairness, and accountability in their municipal and provincial elections regardless of where they live.

Mr. Chairman, I'd like to take this opportunity to address some of the specific questions brought forward by my hon. colleagues during second reading. I thank the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs for his question regarding whether I had thought to extend Bill 203 to include school division trustees or trustee elections. I would like to state that no provision in Bill 203 precludes such a regulation from being explored or implemented in the future, but because Bill 203 is a private member's bill, I believe it's important for it to have a narrow scope of focus. This is to ensure proper consultation as well as thorough debate and, possibly most important, to maximize its chance of success. Since this is the case, I did not include them within the scope of this bill at this time. I believe that extending its measures to school trustee elections could be a worthy item for discussion at a future date.

Another important question raised by the hon. members for Edmonton-Strathcona and Edmonton-Gold Bar relates to a key provision of Bill 203, the proposed contribution limit of $5,000. As members of this Assembly we are aware that Alberta's Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act establishes contribution limits to political parties, constituency associations, and registered candidates during and between election campaign periods. Section 17(1) limits contributions to local constituency associations to $1,000 in a year that is not an election year. Furthermore, it limits contributions to a registered candidate during an election year to $2,000. Mr. Chairman, this means that over a three- to four-year term the maximum any donor can contribute to any one provincial candidate's campaign is approximately $5,000. The $5,000 limit was set, again, to mirror the opportunities that currently exist for a provincial candidate. It was selected after consultation with the AUMA and the AAMD and C as well as widespread discussion with some of my many members of caucus who have valuable municipal experience.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona questioned why contributions are higher for provincial candidates. They are not. As I have described, they are consistent with each other and were set through careful consultation but certainly could be adjusted, if warranted, in the future.

Another question brought forward by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall and others relates to the matter of making contributions tax deductible. Mr. Chairman, I believe this is a notable suggestion. No provision of Bill 203 precludes such a measure from being explored or implemented in the future. Once again, this relates to keeping the scope of this private member's bill focused on aspects that are achievable in the short term. We also would need serious consultation on who would fund such a tax credit. This potential tax credit is an idea that would need more in-depth consideration and wider consultation with stakeholders and affected ministries. I prefer to propose that the four essential elements of the bill proceed first.

The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East addressed the matter of surplus funds and whether those funds would be available should a candidate or councillor choose to run for election at another level of government. Section 147.05(4) of Bill 203 requires candidates who choose not to run in a future municipal election to direct surplus funds left over from the prior election to a registered charitable organization as defined by section 149.1(1) of the Canada Income Tax Act, or it will become revenue for the local municipality. A candidate may only use prior held surplus funds under the condition that he or she chooses to run in the subsequent municipal election. Therefore, a candidate who chooses to run for office in another level of government may not use surplus funds held from a prior municipal election campaign.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, I would like to address questions that a number of hon. members raised in regard to trade unions. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity suggested that Bill 203 disenfranchises members of particular unions. Furthermore, the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East questioned whether members of a union in addition to their organization could contribute to a municipal candidate. I'd like to state that Bill 203 was designed to ensure that all contributors – be they individuals, trade unions, corporations, employee organizations – are treated fairly and equally. To this end, it mirrors existing legislation governing provincial elections.

In conclusion, I'd like to address a particular concern raised by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. The member suggested that trade unions and corporations were being treated differently under Bill 203 due to their respective definitions. She noted that whereas section 147.01 deems all locals of a trade union to be one trade union, no such restriction exists for corporations and those corporations associated with it. I would like to assure the hon. member that it was the intention of Bill 203 to mirror the provincial legislation in this regard.

As such, I'm pleased to move an amendment to Bill 203 that will address this potential discrepancy. Its language is identical to existing provisions within Alberta's Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act with respect to corporate donors. This amendment essentially says that for the purpose of the contribution limit of $5,000 all corporations associated with each other are treated as one corporation.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I look forward to debate on Bill 203 and the proposed amendment and thank all the hon. members for their careful consideration.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, this will be amendment A1. We'll just pause for a moment to make sure that it's passed out.

Hon. members, we'll be debating amendment A1. Any members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you for the opportunity. As I indicated when Bill 203 first came up, I am in support of this piece of legislation, and I thank the hon. mover of the bill, the Member for Athabasca-Redwater. I also support the clarification provided in his amendment. I believe that in previous debate I pointed out that the idea of limiting the influence, whether it be of corporations or unions or individuals, is something that came out of the Liberal government under Prime Minister Jean Chrétien.

The purpose of the amendment and its clarification spells out just exactly that. For example, take CUPE. It has various locals, but the entire organization would only be allowed a certain amount. Likewise, there are several subcompanies within a larger company that previously could potentially have given donations within their subcompany status, whereas this particular amendment, A1, clarifies that. Therefore, I'm very much in support of it.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. On the amendment. This amendment is in section 3 of the proposed Bill 203. Certainly, if I'm to understand this correctly, it is changing the definition of a corporation in the federal Income Tax Act. I still have questions, and I can understand where the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona is coming from because of the existing definition for trade unions.

The hon. member submitting this amendment suggested that this would level the playing field. Now, one has to look at the definition of corporations associated with section 256 of the Income Tax Act. That is certainly interesting. Section 256(1) of the Income Tax Act of Canada shall read as though the words "at any time in the year" were struck out.

3:30

Now, are we capturing associated corporations with this definition as I understand it? When we compare this to a trade union, Mr. Chairman, we would be looking at – let's pick the AUPE as an example – where for the purposes of this Bill 203 all locals of a trade union in Alberta are deemed to be in one trade union. So there would be lots of locals of the AUPE scattered throughout the province, but they're to be deemed by this legislation to be captured in the same definition, as I understand that.

Now, if I understand correctly, the definition of associated corporations here in the Income Tax Act is that

For the purposes of this Act, one corporation is associated with another in a taxation year if, at any time in the year,

- (a) one of the corporations controlled, directly or indirectly in any manner whatever, the other;
- (b) both of the corporations were controlled, directly or indirectly in any manner whatever, by the same person or group of persons; and it goes on and on.

There's also section 256(1.1), the definition of a specified class, and 256(1.2). Under this amendment, as I understand this, they would all be applicable, would they not? Perhaps I can get an answer to that from the hon. member before we proceed any further, Mr. Chairman.

Thanks.

The Deputy Chair: Do any other members wish to speak? Are you ready for the question on the amendment?

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I had directed a question to the hon. member, and I was hoping to get a response before we go any further.

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Chairman, I thank the hon. member for his question. The amendment and the Income Tax Act of Canada are fairly clear. As I stated in the introduction to the amendment, the amendment is brought forward to mirror exactly what we have in our Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act. It has always been the intent of this bill that it would not create a greater burden on municipal elections than we have on ourselves at the provincial elections. So what we've done is take the exact language right out of the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act and plopped that into this bill. The member is correct in that the intent of this is that every corporation that's associated with each other would be considered one corporation for the purpose of contributions, just like every union local associated with each other would be considered one entity for the purpose of a donation.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. I appreciate that response from the hon. member. Now, I don't know how this legislation or even this amendment, Mr. Chairman, can be policed. There is a shortage of resources as it is at Elections Alberta. The former Elections Alberta CEO, or Chief Electoral Officer, certainly indicated on the public record and suggested that there is a Wild West of accounting here with contributions. There are very few rules.

I would like to know how the hon. member plans to enforce this amendment if it is to become law. How is this going to work in light of the very disappointing statements from an individual who was in charge of not only this act but Elections Alberta for a period of three-plus years? That individual had very little confidence that the system worked. Now that we are providing this amendment to this legislation – we will see where it goes in the House – how, precisely, is this going to work?

Thank you.

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Chair, the question on who is going to police this amendment and the bill itself, for that matter, is a good question, but there aren't a lot of resources required to police this. This is going to be policed essentially by the public. This is just a disclosure for the public. Once these things are made public and accessible by the public, then, of course, if we see some serious violations, it would be up to the prosecutor's office to decide whether they would move forward on those. The intent is not to create a whole mechanism to police this. This is just about proper disclosure to the public.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity on the amendment.

Mr. Chase: Yes. Thank you. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has raised an important concern. This is a terrific amendment, A1. I'm very supportive of it. I'm supportive of the bill, as I've previously indicated. But there were 18 infractions that were pointed out as a result of the last provincial election, and the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo continuously approached the hon. Minister of Justice about looking into the 18 infractions. Therefore, with potential infractions that occur in the future, even though we're trying to tighten up the regulations and bring them into line with provincial legislation, what assurances can be provided that the intent of this terrific amendment will actually be able to be governed and followed up not only by Elections Alberta, which, as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar indicated, brought up over 150 concerns that needed to be dealt with, never mind the 18 infractions?

I would look forward to an explanation of how, going beyond this terrific amendment, we can actually make sure that it gets legislated and enforced. How will the rules be changed to make sure that the rules that previously weren't followed are now more closely followed as a result of this improved legislation?

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak on the amendment?

If not, I will call the question on the amendment.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Deputy Chair: On the bill as amended, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Whenever we debate any, you know, private member's bill in this Assembly, we have to be mindful of two rather significant pieces of legislation that have passed the Assembly here in the last number of years, and both of them – I don't know who in the government has been reluctant to proclaim them. I'm not going to suggest for a minute it's the President of the Treasury Board because I know he likes tax cuts as well as the next person.

The first bill that I would bring to the Assembly's attention is a private member's bill that was passed. The former Member for Strathcona had a bill, and it was a good bill, to give tradespersons a break when they were first buying their tools or upgrading their tools. It was a tax credit. Many people, including this hon. member and even many government members, thought that this bill had become law and started to talk about it and encourage taxpayers to access this. Some auto or heavy-duty mechanics spend thousands of dollars annually. Some of them have $35,000, $45,000 worth of tools that they take with them daily in their work. They thought that this was going to be a tax credit. But the government has refused to do anything about it.

Now, the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, of course, last year had proposed a tax credit for individuals who were active, or exercising.

3:40

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, we're talking about the bill.

Mr. MacDonald: I'm certainly talking about that. You bet I am. Yes, Mr. Chairman.

Now, when we look at what the Member for Calgary-Lougheed had suggested, it has not been passed into law. It's even mentioned in this year's fiscal plan, that for whatever reason we can't afford that tax credit.

So there are two examples, two recent examples, of private members' business getting the nod from the Legislative Assembly, from all members regardless of which party affiliation, and the bill not becoming a law of the province.

This legislation I have many questions about. I'm not so sure about this legislation. Certainly, I would like to see restrictions and limitations put on campaign donations. In my view, Mr. Chairman, if your name is not on the voters list, you can't donate. If it is on the voters list, you cannot donate, in my view, any more than $500. That certainly would eliminate trade unions. That would eliminate all corporations from making contributions. One only has to look at the disclosure statements of any political party to see that at certain times there is significant interest by respective or interested parties in donating money.

One group that I notice lately is very, very anxious to donate money, not to this party and certainly not to the New Democrats but to the government party, is outfits that are promoting the atomic reactors. All of a sudden in the last two to three years I see where they've become very generous to the Progressive Conservative Party. Never heard from them in the past that I could recall, but lately they seem to be very generous, and they seem to be very anxious to go to Premier's dinners and hear what the Premier has to say and pay a significant amount of money for that privilege.

Good records and good disclosure records are very important. I don't think we have the resources nor the political will to enforce this, for starters. I can appreciate where the hon. member is certainly coming from. When we look at the prosecutions that have been ignored by officials from Justice, I can see why the former Chief Electoral Officer was so frustrated. He investigated, made suggestions, thought that prosecutions would proceed through the system and that innocence or guilt would be determined. That didn't happen. That didn't happen for whatever reason, whether it's with the Ministry of Justice or with the RCMP up by Kingsway Avenue. No charges were ever laid. I had an issue in our constituency of people toting around a ballot box in the election from room to room in a series of seniors' apartments.

So there are issues, and I can see why members would be skeptical of this bill. It's a good idea, but do we have the ability to enforce this, Mr. Chairman? That is the question that we must determine before we vote on this. Why the different tiers – this still puzzles me – regarding donations and campaign amounts? We know there's a different donation level at the provincial level, whether it's $15,000 or $30,000 during a campaign period, and that can be divided up between a party and the party's respective candidates. Why would there be two sets of rules, as I understand it, one for us whenever we ask for money as either an individual candidate or a political party and people who are running in supposedly a local authorities election? Like, why the two standards here?

Now, I would be interested at this point, Mr. Chairman, to also get an explanation of the campaign period. My understanding of the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act is that in this act there are different rules for the campaign period. Is that because the act that governs local elections is different than the Election Act for the province? I suspect that has something to do with it, but I'm not sure. If I could have that clarified, I would be really grateful. I'm also interested in – and it's something that I support – the campaign surpluses and the distribution of those surpluses if an individual candidate does not run at a future time.

Other than that and the questions I had, I had a few discussions with various labour groups regarding this legislation. Some, such as the Health Sciences Association of Alberta, are not allowed to make donations to political parties. Others that do make donations thought that the fact that they would be lumped together as one union regardless of how many local unions they had throughout the province was an act to restrict and limit their ability. They may want to support some of their members who seek office at the municipal level, and they thought this would restrict and limit their ability to support their members.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I would like to thank the hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater for his initiative here and his diligence in responding to our questions and concerns. I really appreciate that. Thanks.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It is my pleasure to rise today to discuss Bill 203, the Local Authorities Election (Finance and Contribution Disclosure) Amendment Act, 2009. Again, I'd like to congratulate my good friend and colleague the hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater for bringing forward such a timely and well-written, well-drafted piece of legislation.

Mr. Chairman, I am pleased that this bill has advanced to this stage of the legislative process as it allows me the opportunity to specifically address an important section of Bill 203, section 147.03, which relates to the management of campaign financing. This section defines guidelines to improve upon our fair and open municipal electoral system, especially with provisions (a), (b), and (c) regarding campaign accounts. Indeed, these provisions aim to strengthen the documentation of financial activities throughout a municipal election campaign. As elected officials the members of this Assembly are well aware of the necessary guidelines and regulations for provincial elections. We understand their purpose in ensuring a fair and reasonable democratic process.

The provisions under section 147.03 encourage an open process and allow for those who have contributed resources, financial or otherwise, to know that there are checks and balances in place. To elaborate further, section 147.03, provision (a), establishes that "a campaign account is opened at a financial institution for the purposes of the election campaign and in the name of the candidate's election campaign." The opening of a campaign account at an accredited financial institution ensures that a responsible mechanism for recording the deposits and withdrawals of a campaign fund is established. Additionally, opening an account in the name of the candidate works to ensure that candidates and their campaign organizers are directing electoral contributions to the person for whom they are intended.

Those involved with political campaigns will acknowledge how important it is to have a legitimate method for documenting and recording financial activities. This method of responsible documentation is supported in section 147.03(1)(b) as it states that a candidate shall ensure "all contributions of money are deposited into the campaign account." All these provisions work to support more accountable election campaigns and the responsible use of political contributions.

There have been recent examples in other jurisdictions in which a lack of such guidelines has allowed individuals to use political contributions in a way that we would find inappropriate. I would like to note one story of an elected U.S. official who took advantage of the absence of clear campaign disclosure laws. After losing an election campaign, this individual was able to keep a campaign account active. This, then, enabled the former Senator to use funds that had been contributed in good faith for his previous election bids at his own discretion. In this particular case the individual, who was no longer an elected official, used his campaign funds to lobby with an influential government relations firm. His leftover campaign funds were used to campaign to members of Congress and presidential candidates and to pay family members excessively high wages for accounting services.

While these practices are not common, nor have they been deemed illegal, amazingly enough, in this particular circumstance they exemplify the potential for questionable conduct if guidelines are not established for the use of campaign accounts. Mr. Chairman, it is reasonable to assume that those individuals who donated to this Senator's campaign had intended for their money to be used for election purposes only and not be retained and allotted for alternative purposes later on.

This brings me to the next important provision of section 147.03, provision (1)(c), which reads as follows: "money in the campaign account shall only be used for the payment of campaign expenses." With this clause we are setting a standard for appropriate financial operations of campaigns. If stipulations are absent, it can again potentially lead to practices in which campaign contributions are misused. Campaign account guidelines support adequate documentation of the amount of campaign money received and spent. This will only enhance the accuracy of financial statements and ensure that Alberta's municipal election laws align more closely with other jurisdictions.

For example, in the United States the Federal Election Commission rules prohibit campaign funds from being used for personal uses. We have also legislated similar guidelines for provincial elections, requiring the chief financial officer of a registered party, constituency association, or candidate to ensure contributions are placed in a depository on record with the Chief Electoral Officer.

I believe these are appropriate and necessary practices, and I am encouraged that we are proposing these steps for all of Alberta's municipalities in order to improve the operations and accounting of municipal election campaigns. These improvements will support and complement election rules and guidelines already implemented in many of Alberta's cities, counties, towns, and villages. This legislation is, again, another example of this government's commitment to assessing areas where we can work to strengthen elections in Alberta and improve the health of our democracy. Under the direction of the hon. Premier our government remains committed to governing with integrity and transparency, so we will continue to assess areas where we as a government can implement democratic reforms that will work to support an open and transparent regulated election system.

Bill 203 proposes changes to the current Local Authorities Election Act that I believe are essential to improving municipal election campaigns. As such, I am proud and honoured to give my full and enthusiastic support for Bill 203 and wholeheartedly encourage my colleagues to join me in doing so.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Again, I appreciate the fact that the hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater has worked so hard to bring a degree of consistency into electoral reform in Alberta. I appreciate the fact that in the A1 amendment, for example, the hon. creator of the bill, the hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater, referenced federal regulation as a precedent. I think federal electoral regulations, actually, are one step up in terms of the tightness of the regulations from our provincial, but I think that provincial regulations are several steps above the current circumstance with regard to municipal financing. I guess we've got to start somewhere, and this is kind of the middle ground. As such, I support it.

I share some of the concerns that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Goldwater – Gold Bar; the American references earlier were distracting me. Barry Goldwater from Edmonton-Gold Bar. Okay. It is important that transparency and accountability, especially during the electoral process, be first in mind, and I'm hopeful that we'll be able to come up with the transparent regulations behind the enforcement of this Bill 203, Local Authorities Election (Finance and Contribution Disclosure) Amendment Act, 2009.

In my own personal circumstance I've been very fortunate in the last two elections, 2004 and again in 2008, to have my daughter's mother-in-law be my chief financial officer. She, with her background in finance, does everything with such a fine-tooth comb that it would be impossible to find any omissions, never mind violations. It's that type of accuracy and transparency that will improve the municipal electoral system.

I am hopeful that this bill will not only go forward but will be enforced at whichever time the next municipal election will occur. I guess that's about two years from this October. There have been discussions in terms of bringing municipal elections in line with provincial elections in the sense that instead of the three-year period, you know, also having municipal elections be along the same four-year approximate cycle. But this legislation at least provides that groundwork.

I very much like the provisions with regard to the money after the campaign either going to a charitable institution of choice or directly to the city's finances. I think that way we have a sense that this money is going to benefit a wider array of individuals or the city itself rather than the individual who is elected.

I also am in support of Bill 203. I would like to mention the fact that the people who supported me in the last two elections were very aware of the machine that I was facing. In both cases while the amount I was able to raise was dwarfed by that of my Conservative competitors, a spending of 3 to 1 by comparison in both 2004 and 2008, people saw beyond the dollars and looked at the product. What this is doing is making it less dependent on how well you can fund raise and more dependent on the services you provide. As a result, it makes it a much more level playing field for all involved, and I appreciate, again, the Member for Athabasca-Redwater with Bill 203 levelling the playing field so that anyone who has a good idea or foresight, strength of character is not disabled by an individual's corporate or union or influential considerations.

Again, thank you, hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater, for bringing forward this particular bill and allowing the best individual, whether they be man or woman, to proceed without undue influence in their pursuit of democratic representation. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's my sincere pleasure to rise today and join the Committee of the Whole debate on Bill 203, the Local Authorities Election (Finance and Contribution Disclosure) Amendment Act, 2009, brought forward by the hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater. I congratulate the member on this bill. Bill 203 is an important piece of legislation that will have a resounding benefit for the municipal elections process in Alberta, and I thank the member for sponsoring it.

For the purpose of this Committee of the Whole debate I would like to draw attention to section 147.04(1). This section is instrumental in achieving the transparency that Bill 203 seeks to promote for municipal elections in Alberta. First, section 147.04(1) specifies that a candidate must file their disclosure statements in a prescribed form by March 1 following the election, and in the case of a by-election disclosure statements must be filed no more than 120 days following the by-election date. These reporting deadlines are a vital component to Bill 203. It ensures that all candidates operate under the same timeline requirements, thereby promoting fairness in the process. In addition, these deadlines ensure that campaign disclosure statements are all readily available at an expected time for review by anyone who wishes to access them.

While it is important that campaign disclosure statements are timely and accessible, it is also important that they contain the proper information about election campaign finances. I know that that matters to the members of this House. Thus section 147.04(1) also specifies what is to be included in those statements. First, as per item (a) the aggregate amount of all individual contributions not exceeding $100 must be reported. For these contributions, Mr. Chairman, the identities of contributors do not need to be reported. While a number of contributions of a hundred dollars or less can add up, these smaller amounts are generally not of overbearing concern, and since there is typically no concentrated source for these amounts of money, they will be forgone. Rather, it is likely a number of individuals and separate entities; this is a distinction from a large contribution from one person or corporate entity.

As per item (1)(b) of the same section, Mr. Chairman, both the amount contributed and the contributor's name and address are to be reported if their contribution or the aggregate amount of multiple contributions exceeds $100 during the campaign period. In many ways this requirement is the pillar of Bill 203. The transparency that Bill 203 promotes is largely dependent on the disclosure of large contribution amounts and the identity of the contributors. With this information being clear and accessible within a predefined time frame, voters will ultimately have a broader range of information, which they can use to make an informed decision when they go to the polls, about the candidates that are running for office. Moreover, this increased transparency will also help candidates, insulating them from misinformed accusations of misconduct, which we are wont to hear at some point, and allowing their campaign to demonstrate and document practices of accountability and openness, which matters to this government.

Mr. Chairman, with the reporting requirements set out in section 147.04(1), I am confident that Bill 203 will be of great value to the democratic process in Alberta's municipalities. The transparency that would accommodate the reporting requirement could go a long way in the minds of voters, ultimately increasing confidence amongst the electorate.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, the last item in section 147.04(1), item (c), specifies that the prescribed forms for disclosure statements must also specify a list of campaign expenses. This is intended to promote accountability by demonstrating that the contributions collected are being used for the intended purpose and for the reason that they were raised in the first place. This strengthens not only the electorate's confidence but also the confidence of contributors. I would expect that if contributors can be reassured that their dollars are being used for the purposes that they intended – that is, to directly fund their preferred candidate's campaign – then they can continue to contribute in the future, and that's an important part of democracy. Moreover, this sort of environment, one of accountability and transparency, should promote others to contribute, those perhaps who would not otherwise be inclined to support a municipal election campaign.

Mr. Chairman, Bill 203's intent is to promote accountability and transparency in the municipal election process across Alberta. Section 147.04(1) is instrumental in achieving this as it specifies the requirements for campaign finance disclosure statements, including deadlines and reporting requirements. Indeed, some municipalities have already led the way in implementing various campaign finance disclosure requirements. Bill 203 and section 147.04(1) in particular will help standardize such requirements for all municipalities. It provides a clear framework within which municipal election campaigns can file disclosure statements so as to make this information more open and accessible. These provisions will benefit both candidates in municipal elections and municipalities overall.

To conclude, I fully support this bill and believe that its measures, specifically the ones I've emphasized, are instrumental to the long-term success of Alberta's municipal election process.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's a pleasure to rise in support of Bill 203. I brought some concerns before. One of them was addressed by the hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater. That was to make these donations tax deductible.

I agree with the Member for Calgary-Elbow. I think donations under a hundred dollars should all be reported. I would like to take it a step further. I think all contributions should be payable by cheque only so there's a track record of who contributes to these campaign funds. This bill will make municipal elections more transparent and candidates more accountable.

This way, you know, everybody can contribute $99, and we won't know who contributed to the campaign fund. We will only know how much money was collected. I think it's leaving a little bit of room for abuse the way the bill stands right now. I think we should go all the way and look at the bill thoroughly and correct everything once and for all so that we won't have to go back to do another sweep at the bill to fix it.

Overall, you know, it's a good bill. I support it, but I think we should get into the nitty-gritty of things. Then we should fix all those little loopholes which may be left by passing this bill.

With those comments, I still support the bill, but I think we should, you know, comb it a little more thoroughly and fix it. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It is a pleasure to rise in the House today to participate in the Committee of the Whole debate on Bill 203, the Local Authorities Election (Finance and Contribution Disclosure) Amendment Act, 2009. This bill is designed to ensure accountability and transparency for Alberta's municipal elections by regulating the size of campaign contributions, by creating a clear directive for surplus funds, and by ensuring full public disclosure of campaign finances.

Mr. Chairman, an integral part of Bill 203 is section 147.02 as it establishes limitations on contributions to municipal campaigns. The last two parts of this section, part (4) and part (5), are of particular importance as they define the consequences of a contravention of these rules. Mr. Chairman, section 147.02(4) reads, "A corporation, trade union or employee organization that contravenes this section is guilty of an offence and liable to a fine of not more than $10 000." Additionally, part (5) reads, "A person who contravenes this section is guilty of an offence and liable to a fine of up to $5000."

The contribution limitation rules to which these two parts refer are parts (1), (2), and (3) of section 147.02. These three parts specifically ensure that donors do not contribute more than $5,000 in any campaign period, that the candidate who contributes to his own campaign is considered a donor and is subject to the same $5,000 limitation, and ensures that those who donate are, in fact, eligible to do so under the act.

Parts (4) and (5) ensure that these provisions can be enforced and therefore are imperative to Bill 203's effectiveness. In essence, they ensure that individuals or groups of individuals will not have undue influence over candidates. Part (4) establishes a $10,000 penalty for any corporation, trade union, or employee organization that contravenes the contribution limitation. Bill 203's definition of a trade union is aligned with Alberta's Labour Relations Code, the Public Service Employee Relations Act, and the Canada Labour Code. It therefore includes any organization of employees that has a written constitution, rules, or bylaws and has as one of its objectives the regulation of relations between employers and employees and holds bargaining rights for employees in Alberta.

Mr. Chairman, some employee organizations are not actually designated as trade unions. However, Bill 203 includes these groups as well, referring to them as employee organizations and defines one of them as an organization that is not designated as a trade union but that bargains collectively for employees in Alberta. Together these definitions ensure that all employee groups are accounted for under Bill 203.

Furthermore, because part (4) is inclusive of corporations, it ensures that all organizations representing employees as well as incorporated businesses and not-for-profit organizations are accounted for in legislation. Ultimately, section 147.02 enables these entities to continue to support the municipal electoral process through contribution, while part (4) makes certain that these donations do not exceed a certain amount. If any of these entities do in fact exceed the $5,000 donation limit, the legislation is clear that they are guilty of an offence and liable to a fine of up to $10,000.

Part (5) of section 147.02, Mr. Chairman, is similar to part (4), except it pertains to persons or individuals as opposed to corporations or groups that represent employees. Part (5), therefore, ensures that persons, as they are defined in the act, are limited to contributions of $5,000. Because the legislative definition of a person under Bill 203 includes a candidate or any other individual, this part makes certain that no one single person can make an excessive donation to a municipal campaign. Furthermore, the definition of a person under Bill 203 also includes "an organization other than a corporation, employee organization or trade union." Therefore, part (5) ensures enforceability of contribution limitations for unincorporated organizations and other groups who may choose to donate to a campaign. It is clear under Bill 203 that if any of these persons or organizations do contribute to a municipal campaign in excess of the $5,000 contribution limit, they are guilty of an offence and liable to a fine of up to $5,000.

Altogether, Mr. Chairman, the wording of section 147.02 strikes a balance that secures the ability of these entities to remain engaged in municipal politics while making certain that donations are a reasonable size and do not exceed $5,000. This is true specifically for parts (4) and (5), which establish penalties for entities that contravene this section and ultimately ensure compliance with this act.

Mr. Chairman, Bill 203 is a positive step in maintaining fairness, transparency, and accountability in the election process for Alberta municipalities. I therefore stand before the Assembly to support Bill 203 and commend the hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater for his hard work and diligence in bringing forward this legislation.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, do you wish to speak?

Ms Notley: No.

The Deputy Chair: Then I'll call the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. It's an honour to rise today and join the Committee of the Whole debate on Bill 203, the Local Authorities Election (Finance and Contribution Disclosure) Amendment Act, 2009. We've heard some good speakers today, and this legislation, I submit to you, would ensure province-wide transparency and accountability measures for municipal elections. I'd like to commend the hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater for bringing forward this thoughtful and constructive piece of legislation. I think he has done a very excellent job on this.

As legislators we must ensure that elections at all levels of government are conducted with the highest degree of transparency and accountability. Specifically, I would like to discuss section 147.05 of this bill. This section provides clear guidelines for municipal governments and candidates as to the usage of surplus campaign funds following an election. Some people have asked me: why do we need to do this municipally? Well, the difference is that federally or with our Assembly you have party structures that can hold the money and can take it then to the next election. Obviously, we don't have that municipally. I don't think, actually, that there's anything that prohibits parties, but they're not formally associated in this province.

Section 147.05(1) requires candidates who disclose statements to show a surplus exceeding $500 to pay the excess amount to the municipality. This subsection is essential in ensuring the effectiveness of Bill 203 as it provides a clear directive for the handling of surplus funds totalling more than $500.

Section 147.05(2), conversely, outlines the responsibilities of the municipality following the receipt of surplus funds from the candidate. Bill 203 directs municipalities to hold the money in trust for the candidate at a financial institution. In this way, Mr. Chair, Bill 203 protects the candidate by ensuring that his or her surplus funds will be held in a responsible manner. Thus candidates may have full confidence in this legislation and the municipal government for which they choose to run for office. In addition, it protects municipalities by providing them with strict guidelines on where to direct the funds. Municipalities may have full confidence that the surplus funds will be held and safeguarded at a major financial institution as protected by the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation.

Mr. Chairman, Bill 203 also provides clear direction as to when candidates may collect funds that have been held in trust. I would draw the attention of this Assembly to section 147.05(3), which reads:

If the person in respect of whom the money is held under subsection (2) files nomination papers to be a candidate in the next general election or in a by-election called before that time, the municipality shall pay the money and interest calculated at the rate prescribed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council to the candidate for use in that election.

With interest rates these days it's probably only a few cents, but they could rise in the future.

Mr. Chairman, this provision is important for several reasons. First, it provides municipalities and municipal candidates specific guidelines as to when surplus monies from a prior election may be used in the future. It is clearly indicated that surplus funds may only be returned to a candidate should they choose to file nomination papers and run in the subsequent municipal election. Indeed, if this provision was not clearly stated, it would be unclear as to when the candidates would be eligible to get surplus funds from a prior election.

Second, subsection (3) clearly states that the money shall be returned to the candidate with interest at a rate determined by the Lieutenant Governor in Council, as I mentioned. Essentially, Mr. Chair, subsection (3) provides clear direction to the municipality on when to return surplus funds collected from the last election. These funds may only be returned to the candidate should they, again, file nomination papers for the next subsequent election. Should they fail to do so, section 147.05(4) ensures that the candidate can direct the municipality to donate surplus funds to a registered charitable organization.

Mr. Chairman, public confidence in municipal elections is essential to ensuring strong communities, and I'm proud to say that numerous municipalities have spearheaded strong campaign finance legislation. Bill 203 proposes to build upon their efforts and to provide a single uniform set of regulations for all municipalities in Alberta. I believe that the regulation of surplus funds is essential to ensuring accountability on behalf of municipal candidates and those who contribute to their campaigns.

As I mentioned earlier, in a different level of government, if you are running for MLA or MP, you'd run into a situation where your constituency or riding association could hold any surplus funds for use in the mid term or leading up to the next election. Again, though, unlike in provinces like British Columbia and Quebec, which have party structures through municipal candidates, fortunately or unfortunately, we don't have that in Alberta. It isn't prohibited by the Local Authorities Election Act, but it isn't a common practice as well.

Many of my constituents have mentioned to me in the past that they're worried about certain candidates having these surplus funds with no accountability, with no transparency as to where these monies go. They don't even know how much these people have in these accounts. This bill would actually change that, Mr. Speaker.

It's also critical that any proposed legislation should clearly outline the roles and responsibilities for both candidates and municipal governments, specifically in the handling of funds following an election, and section 147.05 does just that. The subsection clarifies circumstances in which municipalities may return the funds to the candidate. In this way, Bill 203 ensures that contributions are used for their intended purpose, thus ensuring accountability on behalf of the contributor.

Mr. Chair, the hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater is to be congratulated on bringing forward this unifying piece of legislation. It's not the first in this country, and I hope it's not the last.

I do want to add a couple of other items as time may allow. I did post on my Twitter earlier what people are saying about this. A gentleman in my constituency named Mike Kuipers talks about democracy belonging to the people, not to the highest bidder. I couldn't agree more. Another individual, Michael Cust, says: campaign finance law is a way to protect incumbents and limit free speech; the only laws surrounding campaign finance should be slim to none. I would submit to Mr. Cust on my Twitter that this isn't a way of protecting incumbents. Rather, it encourages new candidates and encourages more accountability for the funds that the incumbents actually have. A gentleman named Brock also says that reasonable limits to seek and make sure that the average voter remains a factor in elections are worth debate. I agree.

In that respect, I ask all members to support Bill 203. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's my pleasure to rise and join the Committee of the Whole debate on Bill 203, Local Authorities Election (Finance and Contribution Disclosure) Amendment Act, 2009, as proposed by the hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater. I would like to thank and congratulate the member for this timely and well-thought-out piece of legislation.

While this bill includes a number of notable sections, I would like to draw the Assembly's attention to section 147.02(1). This section states that "campaign contributions by any person, corporation, trade union or employee organization to a candidate shall not exceed $5000 in any campaign period." This campaign contribution limit proposed by section 147.02(1) would offer a number of positive benefits to Alberta's municipal electoral system.

I believe the benefits of this section can be highlighted in three specific areas. First, section 147.02(1) would limit an individual's or group's ability to exercise undue influence through significant financial contributions as their donations would be limited to a regulated maximum of $5,000. Indeed, given this maximum, Albertans would have greater confidence in the fairness of the electoral process in this province's municipal elections. Moreover, it would help to prevent unwarranted accusations of excessive or undue influence by those who have made significant financial contributions to a municipal campaign. With this in mind, section 147.02(1) would help protect members of the community who would traditionally donate sums greater than the proposed regulated amount. In addition, it would protect candidates and elected officials from being accused of forwarding an initiative because of individuals or groups who had donated significant funds to the campaign.

Second, Mr. Chairman, section 147.02(1) would help to create a more equal electoral playing field for both the electorate and those seeking office. This level playing field would be created in part by reducing the financial influence individuals or groups can have on municipal campaigns and, by extension, the election. Given this, those who may not have the means to donate significant financial sums to a campaign may find the value of their contributions having a greater influence on the direction of the election. This greater influence would be the result of the increased value of their small donations relative to those limited by the regulated campaign contribution maximum.

Further to this, individuals may be more willing to participate in a municipal election if they believe their contributions, financial or otherwise, would have an enhanced impact on the outcome. Ultimately, Mr. Chairman, Albertans would be more likely to volunteer their time or resources if at the end of the day it could have a significant impact on the results of an election. Regardless of their financial means, section 147.02(1) would give Albertans confidence in the fact that their actions and financial contributions would play an important role in who is elected to municipal office.

Third, section 147.02(1) could help to improve voter turnout in Alberta's municipal elections and encourage more Albertans to run for office. Individuals who have traditionally relied on a small number of significant donations to fund their election campaigns would now have to solicit funds from a broader segment of the electorate. Given this, candidates would have to broaden their appeal by forwarding policies that have a greater impact on a municipality's residents. Ultimately, this broader solicitation would result in more members of the local community becoming engaged in municipal elections. In turn, this further engagement would lead to more Albertans casting their votes in municipal elections.

Mr. Chairman, the level playing field that section 147.02(1) would create would also increase the number of candidates in municipal elections. Individuals might be more inclined to run in a municipal election if they believed they had a more equal opportunity to win. Section 147.02 would reduce the influence the larger financial contributions could have on the outcome of a municipal election. Potential candidates who do not have an established fundraising base would find themselves on a more equal fundraising plan with those who do.

Mr. Chairman, section 147.02(1) offers a profound measure to further Alberta's municipal democratic process. This section would encourage greater participation from the electorate and would protect individuals and groups from allegations of undue influence.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for allowing me to speak on this section and to encourage my colleagues to vote in favour of this bill.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise today and join the Committee of the Whole debate on Bill 203, Local Authorities Election (Finance and Contribution Disclosure) Amendment Act, 2009. I would like to commend the hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater for bringing forward these valuable amendments.

As a newly elected official I was impressed by the thorough and open process with respect to election fundraising and campaign expenditures. My understanding is that we would lose this honourable position in this House if we didn't file our statements.

Mr. Chairman, while I believe the hon. member proposes a number of important amendments, I would like to focus my comments this afternoon on the merits of section 147.09, which is titled Disqualification in Relation to Disclosure Statements. This section relates to elected councillors and reads as follows:

In addition to any other penalty under this Act, if a person who is declared elected as a councillor

- (a) fails to file a disclosure statement required under section 147.04 before the end of the late filing period provided under section 147.07, and
- (b) has not been relieved from this obligation by a court order under section 147.08, then the person ceases to hold office as a councillor, and the seat is deemed to be vacant.

Mr. Chairman, I believe this language clearly details what is expected of an elected councillor regarding the disclosure of their election finances and contributions and what the penalties are for noncompliance. Section 147.09 details the consequences that someone elected as a councillor would face if he or she failed to file required disclosure statements. It clearly states that as a penalty for failing to file a disclosure statement, an elected councillor will lose his or her position, and the seat will be considered vacant. Mr. Chairman, I believe it is important to emphasize that section 147.09 applies to people who are elected as councillors, not simply all candidates seeking office.

As I'm sure my colleagues in this Assembly would agree, it is a tremendous honour to be an elected official. However, it is a privilege that is not without conditions. One of those conditions is that elected officials are held accountable to the people for their actions. Therefore, by revealing their campaign period financing, newly elected or re-elected officials are engaging in an act of transparency that justifies the faith that voters have placed in them. As I've previously mentioned, elected officials at the provincial level are subject to legislation that mandates the disclosure of their election finances and contributions, and for the sake of transparency and accountability I see no reason why municipally elected councilors should not be subject to similar legislation.

Disclosure statements are important documents, Mr. Chairman. They promote voter confidence by assuring them that their elected representatives' campaigns are straightforward, open, and transparent. They also help protect the elected candidates. When an elected candidate's campaign finances and contributions record is accessible to the general public, the possibility of unwarranted allegations is greatly decreased. Disclosure statements are also important documents in the pursuit of transparency and accountability because they publicly document an elected candidate's campaign expenses and contributions. Firstly, disclosure statements must set out the total amount of campaign contributions received during the campaign period not exceeding $100 per contributor; secondly, if an individual's total contributions during the campaign period exceed $100, they must detail the total amount contributed together with the contributor's name and address; and thirdly, they must detail campaign expenses.

Holding any office in this beautiful province is a privilege, Mr. Chairman. Without section 147.09 if a municipally elected councilor failed to file the required disclosure statements or was not relieved of this obligation, as per section 147.08 he or she would not be held accountable by the voting public until the next election, nearly three years away. Section 147.09 ensures that election finances and contributions are revealed at the beginning of a municipally elected candidate's term, similar to what is required of the provincially elected officials. Simply put, this bill demands the same accountability of municipally elected officials as this government does of provincially elected officials.

This province understands the importance of ensuring that Albertans seeking political office are transparent in their actions and held accountable for their election finances and contributions. That is why provincial candidates fall under Alberta's Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act, which details the requirements for the disclosure of election finances and contributions and prescribes penalties for failure to comply with those requirements. I believe it is reasonable for Albertans to expect accountability and transparency from their provincially elected officials, and I also believe it is reasonable for Albertans to expect the same from their elected representatives at the municipal level.

Mr. Chairman, Bill 203 was designed to build on the good work that many municipalities have already undertaken to ensure accountability in campaign finances. In its spirit Bill 203 seeks to mirror legislation that currently provides provincial election campaign finance contribution and expense disclosure at the municipal level to ensure consistency throughout Alberta, and I believe that this is a worthwhile endeavour.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I would like to declare my support for Bill 203 and urge all members of the Assembly do the same. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's an honour to rise today and join the Committee of the Whole debate on Bill 203, the Local Authorities Election (Finance and Contribution Disclosure) Amendment Act, 2009. I thank the hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater for bringing forward this important piece of legislation. Bill 203 seeks to provide campaign finance standards for municipal election campaigns which would be comparable to those already in place at the provincial level.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to draw the Assembly's attention to a section of the proposed legislation that I find particularly important, section 147.03(1). Subsections (i) and (j) of this legislation address measures to deal with contributions that contravene this act. I would like to discuss section 147.03(1)(i), that states that "a campaign contribution received in contravention of this Act is returned to the contributor as soon as possible after the candidate becomes aware of the contravention." This measure is important to ensure that all contributions received are legal. It will require a process of validation for contributions which previously was not necessary for many local election campaigns.

Furthermore, requiring that all contributions received are validated would build confidence in municipal elections. For example, Bill 203 sets out a contribution limit of $5,000 for any campaign period. This limit is specifically included in this bill to reduce the ability of individuals or groups from influencing political campaigns or, by extension, the outcome of an election through large financial contributions. This measure provides individuals and groups a greater ability to equally contribute to the electoral process.

Furthermore, this limit prevents municipal campaigns from receiving excessive donations from a select few individuals or entities. Section 147.03(1)(i) is essential to enforcing the contribution limit by requiring excessive donations to be returned to the donor. It sets a clear directive that is to be followed by all municipal campaigns in Alberta.

However, a situation could occur where a contribution that contravenes this act is anonymous. This is why Bill 203 also prohibits any anonymous contributions to candidates. Section 147.03(1)(j) clearly states that "an anonymous campaign contribution or a campaign contribution not returned to the contributor under clause (i) is paid to the secretary for the municipality in which the election is held." Mr. Chairman, it is possible that an anonymous donation originated from outside of Alberta, which is prohibited under this act. By requiring that all anonymous contributions are to be paid to the municipality, any contribution that contravenes this act would not benefit the candidate.

Furthermore, having all anonymous contributions directed to a single entity would ensure that all candidates know exactly how to deal with contributions that are invalid. Moreover, since it's municipalities that fund municipal elections, it is appropriate that these anonymous contributions are returned to the municipality so that they may be used to help pay for the municipality's municipal election expenses. Overall this measure is important to help ensure fairness in municipal election campaigns by providing all candidates a directive to follow regarding anonymous contributions.

Mr. Chairman, the measures in sections 147.03(1)(i) and (j) benefit both the candidate and the contributor. These measures will ensure that all undue influence either from excessive contributions or from contributions by prohibited donors will not interfere in a campaign. Contributors to municipal elections will benefit as these rules would apply to all donors, enhancing the ability for them to equally participate in a municipal campaign by donating to the candidate of their choice. This standard may in the end encourage more people to contribute to a municipal election. Candidates seeking municipal office will also benefit from these measures as all candidates would be required to abide by the same standards.

Mr. Chairman, the measures set out in this bill ensure that all municipal candidates play by the same rules, ensuring that any undue influence, whether from anonymous contributions or that are in excess of $5,000, are eliminated from municipal campaigns. By establishing these standards, both the candidate and the contributor mutually benefit from both clarity and a level playing field that would evolve from limited contributions and clarifying eligible donors. Sections 147.03(1)(i) and (j) are very important measures that will strengthen municipal elections by establishing a proper process for dealing with contributions that contravene this act.

I would again like to thank the hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater for this important piece of legislation. I encourage all hon. members on both sides of the House to vote in favour of Bill 203.

Thanks for the opportunity to discuss this.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Webber: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I am pleased to rise today and join the Committee of the Whole debate on Bill 203, the Local Authorities Election (Finance and Contribution Disclosure) Amendment Act, 2009. This act, as you know, was brought forward by my hon. colleague from Athabasca-Redwater, and I'd like to thank him for bringing forward this timely piece of legislation for our consideration.

Hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater, from the bottom of my heart I thank you sincerely.

Anyway, Mr. Chairman, I'd like to draw the Assembly's attention to a section of the proposed legislation that I find particularly enlightening. Section 147.02(3) was created to clarify who can and who cannot make a financial contribution to a municipal election campaign. Specifically, this section reads:

No prohibited organization, person normally resident outside Alberta or trade union or employee organization other than a trade union or employee organization as defined in this Part shall make any campaign contributions to a candidate.

Section 147.02(3) clearly lists the three groups or bodies not eligible to donate to municipal campaigns.

The first of these are prohibited organizations, which are defined by the act in section 147.01(g) and include municipalities, corporations controlled by a municipality, a nonprofit organization that has received municipal grants, a provincial corporation, a Métis settlement, a school board, a postsecondary organization, or a corporation that does not carry out business in Alberta. Institutions such as publicly supported nonprofit groups and provincial corporations operate using funds derived from the taxpayer. Essentially section 147.02(3) restricts organizations from using public funds to support political campaigns. It just makes sense, Mr. Chairman. It's a no-brainer. Organizations using public funds should not be supporting political campaigns.

In addition, organizations such as school boards and municipally controlled corporations are intricately tied to the administration of a municipality. It might be in the interests of these organizations to support a candidate who addresses their positions or goals. Furthermore, while voting according to self-interest is one of the guiding principles of democracy, there could be a conflict of interest or the appearance of a conflict of interest in cases where public institutions support political campaigns.

Now, the second group restricted from contributing to municipal political campaigns is trade unions or employee organizations which are not defined by the act. To this end, a trade union is defined by section 147.01(h) which states that:

"trade union" means a trade union as defined by the Labour Relations Code, the Public Service Employee Relations Act or the Canada Labour Code (Canada) and that holds bargaining rights for employees in Alberta.

Furthermore, section 147.01(e) defines an employee organization as "any organization other than a trade union that bargains collectively for any employees in Alberta." The trade unions and employee organizations defined by the act are only those that carry out their operations within Alberta on behalf of Alberta workers.

Mr. Chair, section 147.01(1) clarifies the definition of corporations and those corporations associated with them. To this end it reads:

(2) Corporations that are associated with one another under section 256 of the Income Tax Act (Canada) shall be considered as a single corporation for the purposes of this Part . . . subsection 256(1) of the Income Tax Act (Canada) shall be read as though the words "at any time in the year" were struck out.

(3) Nothing done or omitted to be done by a corporation is a contravention of this Part solely because that corporation subsequently becomes associated with any other corporation.

These provisions ensure that corporations associated with one another may only make a single contribution, similar to how locals of a union are considered one donor.

To be clear, Mr. Chairman, section 147.02(3) limits municipal election contributions from trade unions or employee organizations to those unions and organizations that conduct business within Alberta. Prohibiting contributions from organizations outside of the province helps to ensure that municipal elections are only supported by groups directly tied to the municipality. As well, this restriction could build confidence in voters as it would create a framework that ensures that their elections are not unduly influenced by outside groups.

Preventing undue influence from outside groups is also the reasoning behind the third restricted group proposed by section 147.02(3). As defined by this section, people normally residing outside Alberta are not permitted to contribute to a municipal election campaign. Essentially, this means that people residing outside the province would not be able to donate to candidates in Alberta's municipal elections. These restrictions are advantageous in circumstances where an outside group might benefit by having an issue debated at a local level. The issue might not be at the forefront of local debate or important to local residents, but outside groups might use financial support to sway candidates' platforms, thus prioritizing the issue. Therefore, an issue that may not be in the interest of the local population could infringe on an election campaign and take away from more pressing local concerns.

Mr. Chairman, this section recognizes that Alberta's elections should be conducted to meet the interests of Albertans. Realistically, however, outside influence can never be completely removed from an election campaign, nor should it. Outside ideas and proposals may actually add to the debate of local municipal campaigns, and I feel as though any proposal aimed at eliminating this exchange would have negative consequences.

From this, perhaps the most enlightening aspect about section 147.02(3) is not that it tries to control outside influence but that it attempts to restrict undue outside influence. With the restrictions defined by this section in place, non-Alberta residents would not be able to donate to municipal campaigns. They would, however, be able to influence an election through ideas. Mr. Chairman, this would create a scenario where residents could be confident knowing that they were getting the best of two worlds. On the one hand, they would be confident knowing that their candidates were protected from undue outside financial influence while, on the other hand, they would know that they were still able to benefit from outside ideas and opinions.

The benefits of section 147.02(3) are clear, Mr. Chairman. First, this section limits contributions from publicly funded or supported organizations and, secondly, restricts donations from persons or groups residing outside of Alberta.

In closing, I would like to again thank the hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater for this well-thought-out piece of legislation, and I commend him for the foresight evident in section 147.02(3).

Thank you for allowing me to rise here today and speak on this important section. I look forward to the remainder of the debate.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to join the debate and add a few comments within the amount of time we have left on Bill 203, the Local Authorities Election (Finance and Contribution Disclosure) Amendment Act, 2009. I, too, want to add my commendations to the hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater for his efforts in bringing this forward.

Mr. Chairman, today I'd like to discuss section 147.04 and, specifically, subsections (4) and (5). Section 147.04 is a portion of the bill that addresses campaign disclosure statements. Now, prior to subsection (4), section 147.04 outlines directions for both candidates and the municipality such as when candidates must file their disclosure statements, what those statements should contain, when to file a supplementary statement, if necessary, and what the municipality should do with the disclosure statements.

Mr. Chairman, section 147.04, specifically subsection (3), states that the municipality must make the documents available to the public during regular business hours. It's essential for transparency and public accountability. This bill expects the same of the candidates. Likewise, subsections (4) and (5) promote transparency and public accountability.

Let me start with subsection (4), which reads:

If a candidate's total amount of campaign contributions or campaign expenses exceeds $10,000 for a campaign period, the candidate's disclosure statements required under this section must be audited in accordance with generally accepted auditing standards.

Mr. Chairman, it's already been established that every candidate must detail his or her campaign contributions and campaign expenses in the disclosure statement, including the identity of all donors contributing more than a hundred dollars within the campaign period, so it should not be an onerous task to have that statement audited. There is no unreasonable burden being placed on the candidate through this requirement. In meeting the requirements for the disclosure statement, a candidate's finances should be ready and organized for an auditor. Likely no additional efforts would be required.

The subsection further outlines that statements must be audited in accordance with generally accepted auditing standards. Now, these standards, Mr. Chairman, ensure that the statement is consistent and accurate and that information is adequately disclosed. In complying with those standards, an auditor must have adequate technical training and proficiency, maintain independence, and take due professional care. It is implied, Mr. Chairman, that as in provincial campaign finance disclosures, any costs incurred through the auditing process are covered by the candidate in question.

Subsection (4) also sets out clear guidelines for when these audits are required. They are required when either contributions or expenses exceed $10,000. This is a reasonable monetary limit, Mr. Chairman, and mirrors similar legislation already in place in Ontario. Presumably, some campaigns are very small, and therefore professional services aren't required to evaluate the accompanying disclosure statements. With larger campaigns, however, the use of a professional auditor guarantees public accountability. This provision protects both candidates and the public. Candidates are protected from unwarranted allegations of misconduct and possible resulting litigation while public confidence in the candidates is assured through the transparency and the openness of the process. In this way, by demanding disclosure statements, making those statements public, and ensuring that large statements are subject to an independent audit, voter confidence in the honesty, accuracy, and integrity of the election financing is preserved and enhanced.

I'm just cognizant of the time, Mr. Chairman. Just maybe to conclude, subsection (5) ensures that municipalities can determine whether they like candidates to have their disclosure statements audited when the amount of the contribution and expenses is less than $10,000. There could be any number of reasons why municipalities might decide to make use of section 147.04(5), but that is at their discretion. What concerns us today are the amendments proposed in this bill to allow municipalities to have that choice while still giving voters the comfort and assurance of a transparent election process at the municipal level.

For these reasons, Mr. Chairman, I am fully in support of Bill 203, and I would encourage all my colleagues in the Assembly to give their support as well.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, are you ready for the question on Bill 203, Local Authorities Election (Finance and Contribution Disclosure) Amendment Act, 2009?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 203 as amended agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? It's carried.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I move that the committee rise and report this bill.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 203. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the close proximity to 5 o'clock, I would like to seek the unanimous consent of the Assembly that we now move to private members' motions to allow the next bill to have an opportunity to have the full time allocation when it comes forward for second reading.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Motions Other than Government Motions

Innovation in Education

508. Mr. Bhullar moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to develop a policy framework to ensure our kindergarten to grade 12 education system is innovative and competency based by exploring incentives to encourage early graduation and by promoting real-world learning opportunities and programs that help engage elementary students facing difficulties.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise today and open debate on Motion 508. This is really about fostering a culture of innovation in our province. A culture of innovation is one that must start from the very foundation of our society, and the very foundation of our society is our young people, our young people who today are the learners, who tomorrow are the workers and contributors, and who the day after shall be the leaders of our province. It's with that hope of inspiring a culture of innovation where our young people are driven, are inspired to be the problem solvers in our world that I put forward this motion.

Further, Mr. Speaker, at this time there is a dialogue series taking place in our province called Inspiring Education, where the Minister of Education is seeking dialogue and input from Albertans on where our system should be in 20 years, what the educated Albertan looks like 20 years from now. My motion also has an aim to promote this dialogue so that Albertans engage and really look far out to see what the educated Albertan 20 years from now needs to look like.

Mr. Speaker, I specifically want to see discussion on shifting from a model that focuses on completion to a model that focuses on competency. To have a culture of innovation, you must have a system based on competency. Our students, as I said, need to be proactive, and that deals with the first aspect of the motion, creating a system that will allow for and promote early graduation from high school. Now, this is not about getting students through high school sooner so they can merely enter the workforce. This specific part of the motion aims to get young people driven, driven to be responsible and accountable for their own progress in life.

So a grade 9 student, Mr. Speaker, can look and say, "You know, I want to complete high school, and I want to do well so I can go on to law school" or "I want to go on to study nanotechnology." This promotes their being able to complete high school sooner and gives them some incentives to do so.

The purpose, as I said, behind this is to get young people to be accountable and to be driven because to have an innovative culture, you have to have young people that are accountable for their own lives and driven to achieve and driven to contribute. This can be done, Mr. Speaker, by taking summer courses or passing up on some electives. The end result would have students graduating early, earlier than their peers, and going on to postsecondary earlier or, should they choose, the workforce earlier. The bottom line is that they have an opportunity to do so already in our system, and providing some incentives to do so, I think, would be very positive.

Mr. Speaker, the next part of my motion deals with creating real-world learning opportunities. This, the real-world learning opportunities, focuses not just on work opportunities but also postsecondary opportunities. What I'm proposing here is that a student in high school should have the ability to work towards, perhaps, some sort of postsecondary certification while in high school, have some of their electives count towards postsecondary education, allow students to be engaged in the workforce. This is a way of connecting our high school system with the real world and, in turn, having a group of students that leave our high school system already connected and integrated with the world as opposed to walking out of high school and then being hit flat on with the so-called real world.

Mr. Speaker, this particular part of the motion also has potential to really engage high school students that may not be engaged with traditional teaching methods. If there's a student who, you know, doesn't quite connect with just sitting in class and learning and maybe wants some sort of opportunities where they feel that they're learning something real and practical, this would provide them with that opportunity. It's a matter and a way of engaging students that may not be engaged today.

We have such programs today, Mr. Speaker, like the RAP program, that allow students to earn their high school diploma while obtaining on-the-job training. We can further these programs. We can apply the same concept to many other areas outside of just the apprenticeships and the trades. We should apply this concept to the finance world, to the justice world. Give students an opportunity to connect with the real world while they're in high school. This motion recognizes the importance of these projects and merely seeks to expand on them.

One very exciting program, Mr. Speaker, that I've recently learned of is a program at SAIT, the Southern Alberta Institute of Technology, the career pathways pharmacy technician retail program. Now this is very, very exciting; 30 students will receive their high school diploma along with a SAIT certificate. So while these students work on their high school diploma, they're also getting recognition and certification as a retail pharmacy technician. This empowers them to work in this particular field right after high school. There is massive demand, I'm told, on the part of students to enrol in this program.

Students get this. Students want this. The student of today wants this. They want to be able to engage in the real world sooner and quicker. The student of today is more engaged in the issues of the day, Mr. Speaker. Some of the most challenging dialogues I have in my constituency are with high school students because they long for more involvement in the real world.

I'm told that this specific program at SAIT has more schools joining it. Three more schools are joining up with this program. There are, as I said, far more applicants than positions available. This particular program, Mr. Speaker, is the first of its kind, and I think that this particular model can be applied to many other careers that we perhaps have shortages in or wherever feasible. This, I propose, will also help with our high school completion rates. I think that providing these real-world opportunities will keep more students engaged in their high school system, that it will make them want to complete it.

Finally, Mr. Speaker – I'm told I've got a minute left – the third component encourages the government to further support elementary students facing challenges. Now, challenges are plentiful. As study after study will show, it's in those early years that a child's love for education is either built or not. I am a strong proponent of finding ways and mechanisms to help young students in elementary school really engage with education. If they come from a household that perhaps is not as engaged in education or doesn't value it as much, or maybe they come from a household where they are not encouraged to be educated or they get no support per se with respect to education, well, maybe in our school system there are some ways for us to engage those young people at an early age to build in them a love for learning, an understanding that education is empowerment, so they can achieve and do great things.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. While I appreciate the mover's intent with Motion 508 and while I support components of it, I'm not convinced that this is the vehicle to achieve the end result desired. Looking at Alberta high school completion rates, in 2002-2003 the number of students who finished within a three-year period, which is the expectation – grades 10, 11, 12 done once; this resource is from the Ministry of Education – was 67.8 per cent. In the most recent statistics that has only moved up to 71 per cent. So we have approximately 30 per cent of our students still failing to complete senior high school within a three-year period.

It improves somewhat when we get to those who hang around for a fourth year. In 2002-2003 the number of individuals who finally finished high school after sticking around for the extra year was 72 per cent, and currently it's 76 per cent taking four years. Now, if a student was to spend a fifth year, or an extra two years, in high school, things improve somewhat. In 2002-2003 the rate of completion after five years of high school was 75 per cent, and in 2006-2007, 79.5 per cent.

I understand why the hon. member is wanting to improve the system. But there are other factors that have to be taken into account. I agree with the hon. member that making education more relevant is one of those ways, but relevancy doesn't necessarily happen or go hand in hand with speed of completion.

Now, the hon. member mentioned some very good programs; for example, CTS programs that give you sort of a hands-on experience early on. Those CTS credits earned in junior high can be applied to senior high, so after a fashion there is a speeding circumstance built up within the program. I agree with the idea that if you have sufficient space on your timetable, it would be nice to see CTS high school level courses apply to postsecondary possibilities. That part I support.

I also support the idea of the RAP program, where students get first-hand experience working with builders or architects or plumbers or electricians. They get that hands-on, supervised equivalent of an early apprenticeship program. That program already exists within the high schools. I know that a number of high schools have businesses that support them and encourage their students to build the home and even go so far in terms of fundraising as to provide the school with a portion of the sale of the home to indicate how well the students involved in the project did in terms of completing and working side by side with experienced carpenters or experienced electricians. So we already have some wonderful circumstances within the program.

I've always had concerns about parts of the British system, the 11 plus program, where, basically, at a very tender age students were streamed as to their end product, where they would eventually graduate. I believe that high school should be more than just a training ground for future potentials. I also agree, for example, that engineers should have at least a 201 English equivalent or a humanities equivalent. What I don't want to see happening is the equivalent of an Aldous Huxley brave new world, where you put in a certain incubated series of sperm and egg and, depending on how fast you twirl your test tube, you create a khaki worker or a red extreme worker or a yellow professor or a blue Smurf.

What I'm getting at is that I believe there has to be a well-rounded education. I agree that there's a need to improve our current system. In terms of dealing with our current situation, challenging an exam already exists, for example, in language proficiency. If a student has had an opportunity to, you know, live in Quebec for some time or they've travelled to Europe, they can challenge the exam and get the credit for it already. That frees them up for other pursuits. We've talked about the work experience programs and so on.

In order for Motion 508 to be successful at all three levels, the government would have to support – and I'm saying financially support – early intervention programs. When a child is identified as early as age three with having a learning disability, then an opportunity for the parent to seek extra support in the form of learning and special programs would be extremely important. But this government for the last six years has refused – for example, in terms of creating a strong foundation – to fund optional full-day kindergarten for those parents who would like to give their child that not necessarily a head start but a keep-up circumstance. The government has not even considered the recommendation of half-day junior kindergarten.

If we're talking about creating a greater strength and understanding and literacy and numeracy early on in the system, then there's going to have to be an expenditure. The government is going to have to at some point live up to its K to 3 teacher-pupil ratios of 1 to 17, which they are so far from achieving that, unfortunately, this idea that's being put forward under Motion 508, K to 12 education, is still in our current circumstance a bit of a pipe dream.

In terms of making education relevant, education is more than academics. It's more than trades. It also involves options and extracurricular such as leadership programs. It might involve students in business experiments. It might involve them in giving them an opportunity to participate in sports beyond the grade 10 level at high school. I'm not saying to make it compulsory, but I'm saying: offer students the widest variety of a menu to choose from as opposed to trying to rush them through the current system. We need to support children to a much greater extent early on than we currently do.

I know from junior high teaching experience that students are looking for more than just, as I say, academics. They are looking for opportunities. One of the programs that I thoroughly enjoyed was along the lines of a CTS program, but what it did was that it encouraged leadership, and students had an opportunity to select where they wanted to contribute. For some students it was a matter of going across the parking lot from F.E. Osborne junior high over to Marion Carson elementary, where they would mentor and work with younger children. Some other students chose to be part of the school's recycling program. I didn't judge as to where they should go. The only limitations were the number of spaces available.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to spend a few moments and add to the debate on Motion 508, which urges the government to develop a policy framework to ensure that our K to 12 education system is innovative and competency based by exploring incentives to encourage early graduation, promoting real-world learning opportunities and programs that help engage elementary students facing difficulties.

First, I would like to commend the hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose for bringing this ambitious motion forward. I support this motion because I believe it is good for all students to have more options in their education. This motion proposes several options for high school students, from early graduation to workforce training and postsecondary learning opportunities.

Mr. Speaker, I see a high school diploma as a starting point for individuals, not a finishing point. For an increasing number of students this means going to postsecondary institutions, but for a significant portion of Alberta's high school students this means learning a trade. Because of this, I would like to focus on the part of Motion 508 that deals with promoting real-world learning opportunities. This portion addresses one of this government's goals, which is to enhance value-added activities, increase innovation, and build a skilled workforce to improve the long-term sustainability of Alberta's economy.

The registered apprenticeship program does just that. It allows students the opportunity to begin apprenticing while still in high school, which can go a long way to building a skilled workforce. When I went to school, the focus was always on mathematics, social studies, language arts, and science. Although these core subjects are very important, Mr. Speaker, everybody has different interests and different skill sets.

Before being elected last March, I served as a RAP co-ordinator for Edmonton public schools at J. Percy Page high school. There I had the pleasure of seeing first-hand the impacts that real-world learning can have on young people's lives. I have seen students who had never cared much for school enrolled in mechanics or carpentry courses, for example, and have seen their whole lives and attitudes turn around. Mr. Speaker, these students found themselves something that they were passionate about. School was no longer a daily chore for these students but a chance to create a vision for their future, a future that includes education.

The other major benefit for the students who participate in the registered apprenticeship program is the ability for these students to earn while they learn. Many students can be lured away from high school with the prospects of earning some money, but with programs such as RAP students can work and earn money while gaining credits towards high school graduation. This can be a major motivator in keeping Alberta's youth in school.

Mr. Speaker, Motion 508 encourages the continuation and growth of programs that offer real-world learning opportunities, such as RAP. Students, schools, and teachers can continue to benefit greatly from this program and other skills like it. In addition, if these programs continue to grow, it will help raise high school completion rates, foster a more skilled workforce, introduce students to something they feel passionately about, and motivate them towards lifelong learning.

Therefore, I wholeheartedly support this motion and look forward to listening to the rest of the debate. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Webber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and speak to Motion 508, which urges the government to encourage real-world learning options for Alberta students. Specifically, this motion proposes to encourage early graduation programs, to develop and support real-world training, and to extend additional supports to elementary students facing difficulties. While all three of these proposals are valuable and worthy of debate in their own right, today I'd like to focus my comments on early graduation programs.

Now, Mr. Speaker, current graduation requirements dictate that in order for a student to earn a high school diploma, they need to meet certain criteria, obviously. For example, they must have 100 course credits, and they must complete several core course requirements such as social studies, math, English, and science. There are no stipulations, however, on how quickly a student can achieve these requirements. Therefore, it is possible for a student to graduate in two or two and a half years if they take summer courses and schedule their time effectively.

I feel that it is important to clarify that Motion 508 will not change graduation requirements. Motion 508 proposes to urge the government to develop programs to encourage students to consider the benefits of early graduation. Mr. Speaker, these benefits are numerous. For example, a student who graduates in two years rather than three will be able to enter a postsecondary institution or the workforce at an earlier date than their classmates. Essentially, as a reward for their hard work and planning while in high school, these industrious students will have one extra year to get ahead both financially and academically. Another potential benefit that could be associated with an early graduation program is that it empowers students to take a more proactive role in their learning.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I went to a very unique high school way back when, way back in 1975 – I think that was the year – before some of my colleagues here were even born. I went to Bishop Carroll high school in Calgary. It was a very unique program, a self-study program. There were no classes. There were no lectures at the school. We all worked independently. We would collect a unit or two, and we would work on these units, and when we completed the required work and the required reading from these units, then we would write the test.

Ms Redford: Then you'd get a green slip.

Mr. Webber: And we'd get a green slip, yes. My colleague obviously experienced Bishop Carroll high school as well. Is that correct?

Ms Redford: Yes.

Mr. Webber: I did not know that. Well, a fellow alumni.

I'm sorry, Mr. Speaker. Anyway, I guess what I have to say with regard to Bishop Carroll was that it empowered me to take a proactive role in my learning. I wanted to finish high school early. I wanted to get out into the workforce and make some money. I had a lot of extracurricular activities that were quite expensive. I had a girlfriend at the time. She was very high maintenance, so I had to make some additional dollars there. Plus, you know, I played sports, and I had a car I had to pay for, so I had to get out of high school early. This is what drove me to want to finish high school early.

Now, early graduation requires long-term planning, goal setting, and dedication, and by encouraging students to graduate early, these important life skills could be further developed. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, I did not have the dedication or the drive to finish early, but I did finish. I want to make it clear that I did finish. It took me three and a half years to finish high school. You know, I have to admit, though, that I had a lot of extracurricular activities. I did get my matriculation also, so I was quite proud of that.

Mr. Speaker, I feel as though the potential benefits of early graduation programs warrant further investigation and study, so I will be standing in support of Motion 508. I thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose for bringing this motion forward, and I encourage all members to join with me.

With that, I look forward to the remainder of the debate. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to stand up today to speak to Motion 508, and I want to commend the Member for Calgary-Montrose for bringing this forward. I believe it's at an opportune time with the dialogue that the Minister of Education is having with Albertans regarding the future of our education system. The passion that the hon. member has about this particular issue was very obvious, and that passion goes back years. I know that even before being in this Assembly, the hon. member and myself had many discussions about areas where we could improve our education system, both for the individual as well as for our society at large.

I wanted to start off my portion of speaking today with a quote from an excerpt – I was just doing some research on this topic – from the dean of the Rotman School of Management at the University of Toronto. It comes from Contribution to Memos to the Prime Minister: What Canada Could Be in the 21st Century, 2001. He says:

Government needs to put a premium on education at all levels, from pre-school to post-graduate. But more of the same and increased spending alone won't cut it. We need a profound values shift and a radical reinvention if we are to lead the world in the creation of the most valued commodity in the coming century: knowledge assets . . .

Creating the best education system in the world won't be easy. Globalization, the rise of technology, and a greater emphasis on the autonomy of the individual mean we need to think about education in new ways. In the new millennium, the world will be an increasingly interconnected place. We need to look at education holistically – as a total system with continuity through all levels. Right now, we are doing the opposite . . .

The fundamental educational experience of our students now is that they learn in silos, right from kindergarten, a stale curriculum that does not connect to the society in which students actually live and function.

I think that the issue that this gentleman has laid out – his name is Roger L. Martin. Again, he's the dean at the Rotman School of Management. I believe that this motion specifically addresses this issue.

I also want to indicate that one of my favourite quotes that I've heard is from a Canadian journalist, publisher, and producer, Gwynne Dyer, and he says:

Our intelligence tends to produce technological and social change at a rate faster than our institutions and emotions can cope with . . . Innovation is cumulative and the rate of change accelerates. We therefore find ourselves continually trying to accommodate new realities within inappropriate existing institutions, and trying to think about those new realities in traditional but sometimes dangerously irrelevant terms.

5:30

Now, I heard the Member for Calgary-Varsity get up and speak to this motion, and clearly he was not in favour. For someone who claims to belong to a progressive party, I believe that he's speaking in very dangerous and irrelevant terms when it comes to education in our society today. Quite frankly, he represents a position that does not serve our economy, our society, in the empowerment of individual people. I believe this motion gets to that.

In doing some further research to this issue, I came across another website. I can't remember what exactly it was called. It referred to an individual that started doing some consulting work in this particular area. He was somebody whose high school years were a disaster, walked away from high school at the age of 18. What he learned was "the ability to educate myself made it possible to break through society imposed barriers and be the person I dreamed of being." What this motion does, I believe, is allow individuals to take control of their own destiny, of their own talents, of their own dreams and plan for that and be rewarded for that. I commend the hon. member for bringing this up.

I talked about sometimes dangerous or irrelevant institutions. We talk about lifelong learning. Everybody from academics to teachers to politicians to bureaucrats to industry talk about lifelong learning, yet we continue to be siloed in these K to 12 and postsecondary institutions. Mr. Speaker, if lifelong learning is truly the mantra and truly the concept that we need to go towards, I would suggest that what we need to do is start to break down those silo barriers. In fact, those barriers were created, I believe, to serve a post Industrial Revolution society, not the society and economy that we're in today. I believe that this motion certainly attempts to break down those barriers by allowing high school students to set their own direction and graduate based on the competencies that they learn and to move on, whether it's to further education or work, based on those competencies, not based on some uniform formula that some bureaucrat or some educator dreams up.

The other point that I think this really stresses is the importance of other opportunities for learning, particularly work-related opportunities. I've got these examples that I'd like to bring forward. We talk about, you know, speed of graduation or whatever. First of all, my girlfriend graduated from the University of Lethbridge with a bachelor of commerce degree. It's normally a four-year degree, Mr. Speaker. She graduated in three and a half years. Not only did she graduate in three and a half years, she did three co-op work terms: one as an internship down in Chicago, one where she actually worked with the Ministry of Advanced Education and Technology right here in Edmonton, and one with the Lethbridge Hurricanes hockey team. Just talking with her about our general education system, she explained to me that those were the real learning opportunities. In fact, the coursework that she took at the University of Lethbridge probably had less applicability to her current roles and jobs than the work experience that she had.

Mr. Speaker, I faced very similar experiences. I graduated from the University of Calgary with a degree in political science. One of my former professors is here. As good as the classes were that he taught, I really didn't start to learn about the political process and being involved in the community until I got a job as a summer student in the hon. Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs' constituency office, which happened to be in the community that I grew up in. It's these opportunities that we need to provide, a more formal mechanism to allow high school and university students to become involved. If there's one thing that this motion could really do, it's promote those types of opportunities.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I would urge all members to adopt this motion and encourage the ministers of Education and Advanced Education to use this motion and the debate on this motion as part of the policy framework that will result from the Inspiring Education dialogue with Albertans.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today and speak to Motion 508, encourage real-world learning opportunities, sponsored by my colleague the Member for Calgary-Montrose. Motion 508 urges the government to explore incentives which allow for early graduation, promote real-world learning opportunities, and focus on disengaged elementary students.

Elementary education is a critical part of a child's growth and development because they learn fundamental academic and social skills which will serve as a foundation for future learning. Motion 508 proposes that we need to support more flexible and responsive programs in order to achieve equal outcomes for elementary students who face multiple challenges. To this end, it is important that we identify children who are facing difficulties at an early age. This may require greater co-operation and co-ordination between education, social services, and health organizations. Population or demographic analysis should be used along with school performance and student test results to determine the level of teacher and resource allocation as well as overall program design, including critical hours and extracurricular programming.

Some of the remedial and enrichment programs that have been proposed from various researchers include programs geared towards specific types of intelligence, preschool programs for the financially disadvantaged, weekend schools for ESL students or other students in need of remedial support, and incorporation of mother tongues in educational instruction, just to name a few.

Our school systems may also need to assess whether existing innovative and special programs such as arts-focused programs, sports schools, and other similar programs are accessible to all students, including those whose parents do not have the capacity and resources to provide additional support to their children. We know that even having just one significant person in a child's life can make a whole world of difference in the development of the child, so mentoring programs and friendship support are equally important to the learning outcomes of children who face additional challenges in life.

Mr. Speaker, some of the school systems have explored the development of an equity policy, but the process seldom, if ever, comes to fruition. Public discourse on an examination of the challenges to establish clear direction and commitment to address equal learning outcomes for disadvantaged students through policy would yield additional insights on taking a more systemic approach to address the comprehensive learning needs of children.

Alberta has an exceptional education system, and our challenge is to ensure that this excellent system will work for all students that possess the potential to learn and become productive citizens despite having additional challenges. As our society continues to become more knowledge-based, it is critical that we continue to improve programs for students with unique needs and additional challenges and grant each student the specific assistance that they may need.

Motion 508 will enhance the culture of knowledge and the culture of innovation in Alberta and continue to promote lifelong learning. It is for these reasons that I applaud the Member for Calgary-Montrose for Motion 508, and I encourage all members of this House to support this motion.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This motion would have high school programs geared towards encouraging students to finish high school as quickly as possible to join the workforce. The perception is that, you know, we are just creating this production line here. We put the students through the schools very, very quickly, without the understanding of their education, and just send them into the workforce.

Talking about early graduation, this motion would see innovation in school systems that would encourage students to graduate early, but what is the motivation for getting the high school students to graduate early? The real issue is that not enough Alberta students are graduating at all. British Columbia, for instance, and Saskatchewan report higher high school completion rates than Alberta. In British Columbia the dropout rate has declined 44 per cent, from 13.3 per cent to 7 and a half per cent. Saskatchewan's declined 34 per cent, from 16.3 per cent to 10.7 per cent, whereas in Alberta the decline is 24 per cent, from 15.8 per cent to 12 per cent. So still the dropout rate is higher. I think we should be looking at that to encourage students not to drop out of school early. In B.C. the overall high school completion rate for aboriginal students was 80.4 per cent in 2006-07. In Alberta the completion rate is 48.4 per cent. Instead of putting them faster through school, I think we should be looking into the reasons why this current rate of completion is so low.

For instance, in Calgary northeast for English as a second language, you know, I don't think we can speed up the process for those students to go through high school faster. If English is not their first language, then I think we should be putting more resources into those schools for teaching English.

Then we were talking about early elementary school programs. There's currently an early childhood development mapping project, which is province-wide, which provides a program for children as young as two and a half years old. Children who have disabilities and delays can be eligible for up to three years of funding. The problems with ECS include that many students are not identified as delayed, so they do not access ECS programming. We need better access to early diagnostic testing. Some students are not protected by all of the provisions of the School Act.

Another great way to help engage students with difficulties is to feed them. School lunch programs have been shown to help students not only show up at school but also to perform better on their achievement tests. One out of every 10 live in poverty in Alberta, so we should be looking after those children so that they can better access the education system.

Those are the concerns I have. I think we should be addressing those concerns before we speed them through the high school system. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to give some further commentary on Motion 508, dealing with real-world learning, as presented by the hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose. In particular, I appreciate the opportunity to talk about education, coming from a long line of teachers in my family.

As proposed, Motion 508 would further highlight the government's support for developing innovative educational opportunities in several areas. As the hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose mentioned, this motion has three major components. First, it proposes the government explore incentives to encourage early graduation; second, the motion encourages the promotion of real-world learning opportunities; and finally, it promotes programs that help engage elementary students who are facing difficulties.

Mr. Speaker, all of these ideas are important enough to foster a culture of innovation, and although I support all facets of this motion, I want to discuss and focus on the exploration of incentives to encourage early graduation. The reason I find this particularly interesting is that it provides students with more options reflecting the modern reality of education, and more options, of course, mean greater ability to control your own future.

I know that accelerated education is already available for Alberta students so long as the requisite number of credits and the core courses are completed, but this motion goes further than simply allowing early graduation and suggests that these incentives should be used in order to further encourage early graduation.

Now, Mr. Speaker, being a Conservative, I'm a firm believer in individualism. People work and learn at different rates, and the option should be there for students who are ambitious and bright to graduate early and to move on to the next part of their lives, again the modern reality of education. This motion introduces a way that early graduation could become more widespread and sought after by students. Scholarship-style incentives would also reward students who work hard and have the talent necessary for early graduation. I know that at least a few advanced students coasted through high school because there was little extra incentive for them to apply themselves to the fullest. We don't want to inadvertently encourage underachievement in that respect either. If an incentive is created to encourage these students to work towards their full potential, there's a good chance that a culture of innovation would be further developed in our province and in our high schools.

Who knows what our brightest young minds might be able to accomplish in such an environment, Mr. Speaker? I would submit to this House that the possibilities are indeed limitless. In addition to the benefits for the students who qualify for early graduation, there are also benefits for the schools and for other students. The students who would most likely apply for early graduation are students that need less attention and instruction. However, the majority of students would still be going through high school in the conventional manner. Early graduation of the advanced students would free up class space, would allow teachers to spend more time with the individuals that need more instruction. This concentration of resources could lead to a better educational experience for all of Alberta's students.

One opportunity that I did also want to share is, again, on the modern reality of education. Usually in the past you'd finish high school at 17 or 18. You'd go on to either university, technical school, or to whatever vocation you wanted to pursue. I remember that when I started law school, I was 21 years old, and I remember that there were many people who had actually in fact finished masters degrees, had different careers. One even had a PhD. Many even had families as well. The modern reality of education is that there are many different people at many different stages of their life that will seek higher education, but on the other end as well there are also many different types of students who would benefit from this motion in an accelerated program. For this reason I do support Motion 508.

The Member for Calgary-Varsity made some comment earlier about parents knowing best. I don't remember exactly what it was, but I definitely do think, too, that I was very happy to hear that he does believe that parents do have an important value in their children's education.

For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I do support Motion 508, and I look forward to listening to the rest of the debate if there is any at this hour. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wish to speak?

The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose to close debate.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank all members for their participation in this debate. Really quickly, members opposite brought up a series of concerns that they have with the education system. However, they show a reluctance to look at something new and something innovative. My friends, the world has complex problems, and to solve them, we must think outside the box and try something new, whether that be in education or whatever else. This motion merely says: let's think outside the box.

It's not meant for every student to be plugged along in high school quicker; it's meant for the innovators. Mr. Speaker, if I may, just one quick example of an innovator, the sort of student I'm speaking of here. Harsimar is, I believe, 14 years old. At the age of 14 he has established a business whereby he has contractors overseas that develop very sophisticated websites. So a 14-year-old kid here has the potential to start an international business. Now, that is the sort of student that should have incentives on the part of government to say: "Go out there and be innovative. Go out there and achieve everything you can, and we as a system will support you. We will not hinder you with rules that don't add to your progression." That's an example of the sort of individual here that will lead our province and our nation to great things.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I move that we close debate and vote on the motion.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 508 carried]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the hour I move that we do now adjourn until 1:30 tomorrow afternoon.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:50 p.m. to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Welcome.

Let us pray. Author of all wisdom, knowledge, and understanding, we ask for guidance in order that truth and justice may prevail in all of our judgments. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Chair of Committees.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly a delegation from the Ports-to-Plains Trade Corridor Alliance, who are seated in your gallery. Ports-to-Plains is an umbrella organization for a nine-state trade corridor that stretches from Texas to the Canadian border. It was instrumental in hosting the first Texas-Alberta summit last December, in which our Premier had the pleasure of participating.

Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to inform all members that the purpose of the delegation's visit is because Alberta will be the first Canadian jurisdiction to join the alliance. With us today – and I would ask them to rise as I mention their names – are the hon. Tom Martin, the Ports-to-Plains board vice-chair and the mayor of Lubbock, Texas; Mr. Michael Reeves, the president of Ports-to-Plains; Mr. Joe Kiely, vice-president of Ports-to-Plains and assistant town manager for Limon, Colorado; Ms. Duffy Hinkle, vice-president of Ports-to-Plains; and also Mr. Scott Flukinger, who is policy adviser to Ports-to-Plains. I've heard this comment from both sides, whether I've been in Texas or been in Alberta: they're just like us. I'd ask members to provide the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's great today to rise and introduce some special guests. We have 25 visitors from the Rich Valley school. They are led by teachers June Crowther and Cheryl Ruthenburg and parent helpers Janet Veltman and Harvey Hove. You'll see them stand in their red shirts. That has nothing to do with their political affiliation. I'd ask them to stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly today a grade 6 class from l'école Plamondon. We have 25 students visiting today along with two teachers, Twila Moore and Christina Frasier, and two parent chaperones, Marianne Ludington and Linda McDougall. They are very excited to be here today. They took part in a tour of the Legislature, participated in a mock sitting of the Legislature, and now are here to sit in the galleries of this Assembly. They are seated in the public gallery, and I would ask them to please rise and accept the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today with two introductions. My first introduction on behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs is 28 visitors from Katherine Therrien school in the Edmonton-Castle Downs constituency. With them today are teachers Mrs. Joanne Friedt and Mrs. Jena-Lea Bang and parent helper Ms. Alicia Saunders. I would ask them all to rise now and receive the traditional warm greeting of the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, my second introduction to you and through you to members of this Assembly is five people from the Go Green Eco Expo, an event that took place this year on April 4. The expo, which is sponsored by Newcap Radio, focuses on ways that Albertans can reduce the impact on their environment and start to promote green living in vibrant and healthy communities. I'll be discussing more about the eco expo in a member's statement later this afternoon. For now I would like to introduce – and I don't see them in the members' gallery, so I presume they're in the public gallery – Miss Colleen Yukes, Ms. Elissa Scott, Mrs. Maureen Tash, Mr. Randy Lemay, and Mr. Ross Hawse. I would ask all of these individuals to rise and receive the traditional warm greeting of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly a group of 11 enthusiastic and bright young Albertans from the Grande Prairie-Wapiti constituency. Visiting the Legislature today to learn about how government works are students from the Living Springs Christian school in Hythe. They're accompanied by their teacher, Mr. Tony Isaac, and parent helpers Mr. Duane Isaac, Mrs. Geraldine Isaac, Mrs. Mary Jo Isaac, Mr. Kelly Isaac, Mrs. Christa Isaac, Mr. Lowell Wohlgemuth, and Mrs. Laureen Wohlgemuth. I would ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, it's my great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two constituents of Calgary-Nose Hill, John and Jeanne Barclay. They're also joined by Jeanne's sister, Brenda Etherington, and by John and Jeanne's daughter, Jennifer Redondo, who's also a resident of Calgary-Nose Hill, and their son Rob Barclay from Calgary. Today they were here in the Legislature to present a set of books, The War Illustrated, to our Legislature Library in memory of Mrs. Hilda Buckett and Mr. and Mrs. Robert and Audrey Etherington. All of my guests are seated in the Speaker's gallery, and I would ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Ms. Woo-Paw: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Mr. Bill Ryans, a constituent of Calgary-Mackay and veteran of the Canadian air force. He enlisted in 1943 as a radio operator. Mr. Ryans played a key role in the donation of The War Illustrated 10-volume collection to the Legislature Library earlier today. Mr. Ryans is seated in your gallery. I would ask Mr. Ryans to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance and Enterprise.

Ms. Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a distinct pleasure today to introduce two separate groups. One, from Calgary, is wives and life partners of members of the World Presidents' Organization. This group is called the Bella Forum Group. They are here today with their co-ordinator, Sandy Kellam. Dr. Ruth Taylor, Beverly Berkhold, Carole Brawn, Shirley Glen, Dolores Killick, Elizabeth Yuill, Ann Sparks, and Midge Travis are seated in the public gallery, and I would ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The second group live both in my constituency and in the constituency of my hon. friend from Strathcona. They are library board members, and among them are Muriel Abdurahman, chair of the Strathcona County Library Board and former MLA in this Assembly; Ernie Jurkat, vice-chair of the Strathcona County Library Board; Roxy Shulha-McKay, Strathcona library board member along with library board members and directors Colin Vann; Judy Schultz, famous for her writing; and Sharon Siga. Jason Gariepy, from Strathcona county council, is also a member of the board along with Joan MacDonald, a board member for the past four years and trustee for area 7. They would like to thank the MLA for Lac La Biche-St. Paul and the MLA Committee on the Future of Public Library Service for the work they've done for libraries.

The Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security.

Mr. Lindsay: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This week is Crime Prevention Week. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly three Albertans seated in the public gallery who are making their neighbourhoods and communities safer by taking ownership and responsibility for crime prevention. They are among six recipients of this year's Solicitor General and Public Security crime prevention awards. With us today is Lori Andrew, who is a chairperson of the McMahon Business Association of Calgary, which works with the Calgary Police Service and the community to deal with crime in Calgary's Motel Village area. Also with us is Chris Hayduk, an Edmonton police officer who started a program that helps prevent crime by encouraging people to meet their neighbours and participate in community activities. Also, we have Maria Orydzuk, a producer with CTV who has raised awareness about crime prevention and other social issues. I would also like to recognize three other award recipients who are not able to be here today: Clarence Nelson of the Beaumont citizens on patrol and constables Allan Devolin and Garret Swihart, both Calgary police members who work with youth involved with gang activity or at risk of becoming involved in gang activity. Mr. Speaker, with your permission I would ask Lori, Chris, and Maria to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, it's also my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two very important people from my constituency office in Stony Plain: Lorna Wolodko, my constituency manager; and Mychele Freund, our STEP student this year. They both do outstanding work appreciated by the constituents as well as myself. With your permission I would ask Lorna and Mychele to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you two very special individuals from Alberta's Association of Agricultural Societies: Tim Carson, the president for Alberta; and Lisa Hardy, the executive director. They're in town today talking to many individuals about some great strategies they have for strengthening economies in rural Alberta. I just want to thank them and commend them for their efforts and all the efforts of the ag societies across the province. I'd ask Tim and Lisa to please rise so that we can give the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for allowing me to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly our Quebec-Alberta student employment exchange student, Julie Chartrand. Julie is part of a program with 37 students who are sponsored by Alberta Employment and Immigration. Thank you for that. We're looking forward to her working as a research analyst with the Alberta Liberal caucus through until August. Julie lives in Montreal, and she has her bachelor of international economy from the University of Montreal and her master's degree in international business from HEC Montréal. Julie is standing, so please join me in giving her a warm welcome to the Alberta Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all hon. members of this Assembly four special guests this afternoon. Today, of course, is International Nursing Day, and I'm honoured to have these individuals with us from the United Nurses of Alberta. As front-line workers the nurses here today are concerned about the changes they see being made to our health care system and fear a return to the brutal and punishing cuts made in the early 1990s. Our guests are in the public gallery, and I would now ask each of our guests to rise as I introduce them. The first is Marg Hayne, president of the UNA local 33 for nine years. She has worked at the Royal Alexandra hospital for over 31 years. Our second guest is Deb Adams-Druar, president of the UNA local 196, and she has been a registered nurse for over 12 years. A third guest is Cari Noelck, treasurer of United Nurses Association local 33, and she has been an RN for 13 years and an operating room nurse for 10 of those 13 years. Also with them is Collette Mattson, vice-president of the UNA local 33. Collette has been a nurse for 28 years at the Royal Alexandra hospital, 26 of those years in labour and delivery. I see that they've already risen. Please give them a warm and traditional welcome to our Legislative Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. National Nursing Week is a time to recognize the incredible commitment and caring of our nearly 25,000 registered nurses in Alberta's health care system. Today I'm very pleased to rise and introduce three guests from the United Nurses of Alberta. They are Heather Smith, president of the United Nurses of Alberta; Bev Dick, first vice-president; and Jane Sustrik, second vice-president. Nurses are the single largest group of health care professionals and are responsible for much of the direct care of people who really need it in our health care system. Nurses are also some of the strongest advocates for our public health care system, which is universal and serves all Albertans. We're very pleased today to introduce these leaders in our nursing community. I would now ask that my guests rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise today to introduce Ray White as my guest in the Assembly. Ray represents approximately 600 health care aides and support workers through the United Steelworkers and six long-term care facilities in Alberta. Ray and the workers that he represents are concerned that the government is denying those who are in long-term care their dignity. Over the last number of months employees have been documenting care issues arising from short-staffing. I applaud my guest's efforts to bring to the attention of all Albertans the need to have a staff-to-resident ratio in order to care for Alberta's seniors. I would now ask that my guest, Ray White, rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there others?

Well, it's also my pleasure to introduce to you the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, who's celebrating an anniversary today, the anniversary of her arrival into this world just a few years ago.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Chair of Committees.

Ports-to-Plains Trade Corridor

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Canada became a nation in 1867. At that time the majority of goods were traded across Canada from east and west. This was also the case in the United States. Trade in Canada and North America is no longer east and west; it's north and south. The United States is our largest market and customer. The partners of the Pacific Northwest Economic Region recognize this and are an example of how we can work together on both sides of the border. We must develop trade corridors that transcend boundaries and work with other member jurisdictions to find our common interests and increase trade.

Alberta's trade is not limited to the western states but, rather, to the central and southern states as well as Mexico. The cargo traffic also uses United States highway systems other than the Canamex. Mr. Speaker, the Ports-to-Plains trade corridor connects the states of North and South Dakota, Wyoming, Colorado, Oklahoma, New Mexico, Texas, and even Mexico. Colorado, Oklahoma, Texas, and Mexico are some of Alberta's top customer states. That's why I'm so pleased to know that Alberta has recognized the importance of this partnership and has joined the Ports-to-Plains coalition. Regional economic development alliances along the east side of Alberta may look to partner with this coalition as well and could be Ports-to-Plains north.

There will be economic growth potential for all of Alberta, including Port Alberta, which will have the Edmonton area acting as a hub for trade through the western seaport of Prince Rupert and on to the United States. The most pivotal in all of this is an additional 24-hour commercial port of entry for Alberta at Wild Horse, in the southeast corner of our province.

Mr. Speaker, a trade corridor which has a defined customer and seller base in three countries in North America is truly a continental trade corridor. I look forward to all the possibilities as we embark on this initiative, things like eliminating or amending trade barriers in agriculture, forestry, and our oil industry. The understanding of these member jurisdictions has been very positive as we together approach Ottawa and Washington for recognition and consideration of our positions regarding the aforementioned industries.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Oil Sands Royalties

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. The only public source of detailed information on royalties comes from corporate filings. I want to read a quote to the Premier from the latest filing from Canadian Oil Sands Trust, just out in the last few days. That's the largest shareholder in Syncrude. "In the first quarter of 2009, Crown royalties decreased to $4 million, or $0.48 per barrel, from $131 million, or $14.57 per barrel, in the comparable 2008 quarter." Won't the Premier admit that a royalty of 48 cents a barrel is a giveaway?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I'm not aware of the section or what he's quoting from, but we'll have a look at it and respond to that particular quote later.

I can tell you that the new royalty regime that's in place shares risk and also reward. As prices go up, the Alberta citizens, that own the resource, will get a higher royalty rate. As prices decrease, which they have significantly, below the $45 a barrel mark, producers have seen a break in the size of their royalty.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thanks. Well, we all know the prices of oil and bitumen have dropped. The same report shows that in the first quarter of this year Syncrude's selling price was down 45 per cent from the same quarter last year, but their royalty dropped 95 per cent. These days the government is virtually giving away the oil sands. How does the Premier justify giving Syncrude a 95 per cent royalty cut?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the new royalty rate, as I said earlier, reflects the change in policy: the higher the price the greater the return; the lower the price the less royalty paid to Albertans by all conventional oil and gas and also oil sands producers.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. The people of Alberta should think about this: a citizen of Alberta earns more from returning two empty pop bottles than this government gets from an entire barrel of bitumen in royalties. Can the Premier tell us of anywhere in the world where oil companies pay a lower royalty than Alberta?

Mr. Snelgrove: There's something that needs to be made very clear. One of the commitments the Premier made and we made as a government was to keep as many Albertans working as we could. It is just unbelievable that the people over there can stand up and talk about how we have to spend money, we have to get people working, and when we keep people working, with a royalty that reflects the risk and reward, now they don't understand that. They want to shut the oil companies down, too, until oil prices go up and we can get a bigger share. So send everybody home and return their empty bottles. That's what he's worried about?

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Well, for years under the former Premier the government set a target percentage for royalty collection. Under this Premier those targets were eliminated. More than a year ago the Minister of Energy said they'd be setting targets in a few weeks. Well, we're still waiting. To the Premier: is this why his government failed so badly to set royalty targets, because they don't want people to know we're getting less than 50 cents a barrel?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I recall the day we announced the new royalty framework in Calgary. The hon. member, who was, I believe, the leader of the party at that time, now relegated to the third role, scampered out the back end and down the street with the media chasing him because he would not take a position. Why not take a position then? If you thought the royalty rate was too low . . .

Dr. Taft: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Stelmach: . . . stand in front of the people and state your position. But sitting on the fence: you know what it does.

Dr. Taft: Clearly, the Premier is getting pretty uncomfortable here, Mr. Speaker. In fact, the whole government is getting twitchy. They don't like to hear about this, do they? This government keeps its own backbenchers in the dark. Time and again we have to turn to corporate filings to get basic information on government royalties. To the Premier: why won't this government disclose royalty information to citizens in the same way corporations disclose to shareholders?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, let's clarify an issue here that's in front of us and is absolutely being misrepresented to the people of the province of Alberta. First of all, this member is speaking about a Crown agreement, a Crown agreement, by the way, that we all agreed we would not break. They weren't in favour of breaking any Crown agreements. We renegotiated the Crown agreements. The essence of the royalty paid now under Crown agreements with respect to integrated players is revenue minus costs. Revenues are very low; costs still remain very high. There is a narrow margin, and that's what we're collecting royalty on. It's a snapshot that will correct itself in the short term.

Dr. Taft: Well, Mr. Speaker, let's remember that Syncrude was built with enormous assistance from the people of Alberta, ranging from huge direct investment and hundreds of millions of dollars in research funds to massive tax and royalty writeoffs. Most of Syncrude's capital was invested years ago and decades ago and long since deducted from taxes in royalties. To the Premier: is this what the Premier meant, 48 cents a barrel, when he spoke of getting a fair share for Albertans?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. minister explained, the current situation, the world oil prices, very, very high costs of operation – you know, again, I know he's going to stand up on another point of order, but that is the group that wanted to shut down the oil sands completely, shut her down.

Dr. Taft: Point of order.

Mr. Stelmach: See? I don't even have a crystal ball. It must be very uncomfortable on that side.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Definition of Human Sexuality

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Oxford dictionary has several definitions of sexuality, one of which being the quality of being sexual or possessing sex and another being the appearance distinctive of sex. Any living organism can fit into these definitions, making the teaching of biology without referring to sexuality quite a difficult prospect. To the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit: what definition of sexuality is the government using to guide its policy development?

Mr. Blackett: Well, Mr. Speaker, if that's the best that they've got, then we'll go with that. The definition that we rely on is one that everybody would rely on, and the teachers who have common sense and those school boards that have common sense and have done such a great job in teaching our children know what the difference is. They know when they've broached that line. We don't have to define it. Human sexuality is what we've referred to. If we had to make that more explicit to them, we could do that, but that's what we're talking about. We're talking about sexual education.

Ms Blakeman: Gee, if it was so easy, why couldn't they do it?

Back to the same minister: what information has been chosen by the government to guide their decision on using the term "sexuality"?

Mr. Blackett: Common sense. Parents ask you to have common sense and respect their right to have an influence on their children's education. That's what it is. So we took three simple areas: sexuality, sexual orientation, and I forget the other one right now, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Okay. Then we'll move on.

The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I'll try the Minister of Education, then. As the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit has stated, what is considered religious – that would be the part you couldn't remember – is determined through the curriculum. Can the minister explain how the curriculum will determine what is considered sexuality?

Mr. Hancock: Well, I think, Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit very clearly explained – and I think anybody who deals with this understands – in the mandated policy that we have now, it clearly talks about letting parents know when you're teaching sexuality. What that refers to, of course, is sex education. Now, we're not really worried about the sex education of frogs or of buffalo. What we're really talking about is human sexuality, and anybody who's involved in the process of education knows that and understands that. Notices are sent home to parents when children are taught in the grades 7, 8, and 9 health curriculum or in the CALM curriculum in high school about human sexuality.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by the hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

H1N1 Influenza Virus in Pig Herd

Mr. Mason: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Arnold Van Ginkel, the hog farmer whose herd was infected with the H1N1 virus, has done everything right. When his pigs began showing symptoms of illness, he contacted his veterinarian. His vet called the Canadian Food Inspection Agency, and the herd was quarantined. Now nobody will return his call. Mr. Van Ginkel and his family are facing imminent financial ruin because the government cannot decide what to do. My question is to the Premier. Why won't the Premier commit to providing compensation for the Van Ginkels, who face losing their farm because they did the right thing?

2:00

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the member is totally wrong in his statement, saying that nobody returned his calls. That's another example of misinformation, just outright misinformation. In fact, as we speak, there are federal government officials and provincial officials on the farm working with the farmer and also looking at the whole layout of the farming operation. We don't know if this is farrow to finish or if it's just the finishing barn. We've dealt with the overcrowding. In a farrow to finish operation or finishing operation you have so many hogs fed to market, you know, roughly 240 pounds. They've got to go to market. They couldn't go to market, so we of course bought those culled hogs. We destroyed them, made sure they weren't part of the food chain.

To say that calls were not returned is totally wrong.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, perhaps it's misinformation like when I said that the Premier said that evolution might be optional under Bill 44. Maybe that's the kind of misinformation it is.

The Van Ginkels are only the first of many farmers that are about to face financial ruin because this government has failed to manage the crisis. Why won't the Premier stand up for Alberta's hog farmers and put a plan in place to ensure that they can get through the current crisis without losing their farms?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, yesterday I took part in a conference call with all of the provinces and territories represented. We took the initiative as the province of Alberta to get our colleagues together and discuss a plan, working with the federal government, working with our WTO ambassadors, and working with the Canadian Food Inspection Agency to make sure that we get the correct information out. It makes it much more difficult when a member in this House gets up and gives misinformation about a very, very important issue. This is the livelihood of hundreds of Alberta pork producers.

Mr. Mason: That's exactly my point, Mr. Speaker. What pork producers really need is a policy in place to deal with urgent issues as they arise. Officials from Alberta Pork told us that this government had no clear plan of action when emergencies that threaten an entire industry arise. To the Premier: why has this government allowed H1N1 to escalate into a crisis that threatens hundreds of Alberta's farm families?

Mr. Stelmach: I hope all Albertans heard that very clearly. That's just an example of misinformation, fearmongering. That's the kind of issue we're working against right in this Assembly. Just to gain a few votes. Well, he's going to lose a heck of a lot of votes because nobody out there in rural Alberta is going to support this kind of misinformation, again putting more pressure on a marketplace that's already rejecting pork sales based on lack of scientific evidence.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

H1N1 Influenza Virus in Humans

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. By now most people know that the northern Alberta woman who died recently and tested positive for the H1N1 influenza virus was from my constituency.

Her family and friends have been concerned about this information. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: could he please illuminate to my constituents if his department has determined the cause of death of this very important lady?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, last week there was extensive coverage of the unfortunate situation involving the member's constituent. At that time the chief medical officer of health did indicate that the deceased had tested positive for the H1N1 virus. However, there's no further information I can add at this time. Further tests are continuing.

Ms Calahasen: Then if there is no further information, can the minister please tell this Assembly of the go-forward plans of any pandemic operations that are going to occur?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, we're fortunate in this province and, I think, world-wide that this particular influenza . . . [interjection] You know, when I went to school, we moved those from the back of the classroom up to the front, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. minister has the floor.

Mr. Liepert: We are gearing down because, clearly, on a daily basis the numbers of those who are testing positive have continued to decline. The operations centre will start to wind down this week. Fortunately, this has been a very mild case of the influenza.

Ms Calahasen: Mr. Speaker, I know my constituents are really concerned. As you know, anything that happens in our community is very important. There's been criticism in the media about the lack of information provided to the public by the chief medical officer of health. To the Minister of Health and Wellness again: what is the chief medical officer of health doing to properly inform the public about H1N1 and limit the spread of this virus?

Mr. Liepert: Well, I think it was unfortunate last week – I know a couple of members of this Assembly were publicly stating that somehow the chief medical officer of health was suppressing information. That is just so much falsehood. In fact, I went today to the opposition's favourite research body, the Edmonton Journal, and they have a poll on the Journal website where the question was: "What do you think of the media's coverage of the swine-flu outbreak?" Their words, not mine. Mr. Speaker, 2.87 per cent of those polled said it was insufficient; 6.17 per cent said it was responsible; 9.18 per cent said it was adequate; 10.19 per cent said, "Ask me when it's over"; and 71.5 per cent said it was panic inducing.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Advocate for Seniors

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many seniors are continuing to contact me to say that they still feel that they do not have an appropriate avenue to register their very real concerns. One solution for Alberta seniors would be to establish an independent seniors' advocate. My question is to the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. Can the minister tell me whether there are any plans to create an independent seniors' advocate?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish that I could stand here today and say that seniors in Alberta do not suffer from abuse, but I would just be dreaming. They do. We have four avenues of services that are available to seniors to help them with any complaints that they might have. First of all, if it was criminal in nature, the police should be notified right away. We have a division of Seniors and Community Supports that is an investigative unit called the Protection of Persons in Care Act. We have a bill on the floor right now concerning that. We also have the ministry and our seniors' information line. We have the Seniors Advisory Council as well.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. I agree that there are many things out there, but the seniors still really sincerely believe that they need a go-to person that really has specific understanding and knowledge of the issues that they face. Is the minister planning at this time or are there any conversations about creating this office?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, I strongly feel that seniors are well represented through my ministry. We have a seniors' information line. We have the Protection of Persons in Care Act. We also have an independent Alberta Ombudsman, who will investigate immediately. At this time of fiscal constraint I think it would be irresponsible to duplicate these services.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. Unfortunately, that's not how the seniors feel. They feel that if Alberta has a Child and Youth Advocate, seniors want the same rights to advocacy as the children have. How can we justify not having one for them?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, I do know that our seniors have a concern in this area because there is abuse that happens. We all have a responsibility to report abuse. The reporting of abuse can be done directly to my ministry. We have a separate arm that will investigate these complaints. We also have the Alberta Ombudsman, who will investigate these complaints. I feel that we have a sufficient number of services to help seniors who may be suffering from abuse.

Deerfoot Trail Traffic Congestion

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, every day Calgary motorists are fighting increased traffic congestion on the Deerfoot Trail, which is not only highway 2 but the main north-south artery for traffic within the city of Calgary. Deerfoot Trail is presently carrying traffic far beyond its designed capacity, and some days, even outside rush hour, traffic is reduced to a crawl. My questions are for the Minister of Transportation. Will the minister take some action to reduce the congestion on Deerfoot Trail?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is correct in that the Deerfoot operates way beyond the designed capacity in a number of locations. We recognize that some portions of Deerfoot have far more vehicles than the road was designed to handle. Deerfoot was designed to handle about a hundred thousand cars a day, and in a lot of areas it's handling 160,000 cars a day. The fact that the road still operates that far above design capacity is a testament to how well that road actually was built and designed. The Alberta government has invested $200 million and . . .

2:10

The Speaker: Is that right?

The hon. member.

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, it's often difficult for residents of Beddington Heights in my constituency to merge onto Beddington Trail and also to access the Beddington Heights community from northbound and southbound Deerfoot Trail. What can be done to improve that situation and give greater access for residents of Beddington Heights?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm very pleased to tell this hon. member that something is being done to improve the access in that area. We are looking at adding a lane later this year to southbound Deerfoot Trail between Beddington Trail and 64th Avenue. With the help of my hon. colleague from the Treasury Board we could possibly even use some building Canada funds, and that would get the project started later this year and completed sometime in 2010.

Dr. Brown: Well, that's very good news for the residents of Calgary-Nose Hill. I wonder, in view of the high rate of accidents in that particular location and along the north end of Deerfoot Trail, what measures his department is taking to decrease the rate of accidents and to increase traffic safety in that area.

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, we recently completed a traffic safety review on Deerfoot Trail. We're putting the final touches on that report right now, and I assure the member that we will look very closely at the report's recommendations and put whatever measures are practical into place that make some sense. But reducing collisions is a shared responsibility. My department has a responsibility to provide a high-standard roadway, but drivers have a responsibility to drive safely and be courteous to one another. You can't have one without the other.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Health Services Budget for Nurses

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In April the Alberta government ordered the chief executive officer of Alberta Health Services to cut his budget by over $500 million. My first question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Will these budget cuts reduce the role of registered nurses in the public health care system here in Alberta?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure where the member is getting his information, but in the budget for this fiscal year the budget for Alberta Health Services actually increased by $500 million.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Again to the same minister: what will the new reduced budget do for the ratio between licensed practical nurses and registered nurses?

Mr. Liepert: Well, there's one budget, and it has increased by a half a billion dollars from what Alberta Health Services had for operating funds last year. I'm not sure what terminology the member is using, and I don't understand the question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MacDonald: The question is clear. This government has told the chief executive officer of Alberta Health to cut the budget by half a billion dollars, or $500 million. Now, again, how will the planning work when you're trying to expand the scope of practice for some health care professionals and reduce the scope of practice for other ones? How exactly is this going to work?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, there's a vote on the Appropriation Act, I think, later today or this week. Maybe the member should read it before he votes on it because he will see clearly that the funding for Alberta Health Services is increasing by $550 million for operating over last year.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Carbon Emissions from Coal

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The federal Minister of the Environment has recently been in the media talking about the possibility of decommissioning traditional coal-fired electrical generating plants as part of the federal climate change plan. As we all know, Alberta relies heavily on these plants to produce our electricity. To the Minister of Environment: with, first, the Obama administration and now, it appears, the federal government moving in new directions related to climate change policy, what effect will this have on Alberta's policy?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, as the member knows, I'm sure, Alberta already has a mandatory emission reduction program that's backed by law. Now, that being said, I think it's important that we understand, and whatever these discussions lead to, recognize that in Alberta it's the application of technology that is the key to success for us to be able to reduce our emissions. The other thing that's very key to us is that we don't want to leave stranded assets in place. We don't want to arbitrarily cut off the life of a plant before its economic life has expired.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is to the Minister of Energy. Obviously, the federal policy being discussed could have an impact on our communities where the coal industry is operating, including those in my constituency, but it could also impact electricity consumers in Alberta. Can he advise what impact such a policy would have on Alberta's electricity market?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, a very important issue for Albertans. Sixty per cent of Alberta's electricity, of course, currently comes from coal-fired generators. We're working in concert with the federal government to try to understand the details of the program that they will come forward with. We want to be sure that any policy that does come forward from the federal government doesn't penalize this province and cause an issue where there are undue costs passed on to consumers. Alberta's newest coal-fired plants use some of the best technology in the world and, in fact, have substantially lower emissions than the older coal plants that they're speaking about.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Energy again. The federal Minister of the Environment referred to the potential application of carbon capture and storage in addressing emissions from coal-fired electricity plants. Is this something being considered under the province's carbon capture and storage program?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, in a word, yes. We do have enormous coal reserves in the province of Alberta, and they're relatively economic. We have other sources as well that we're working with: wind, solar, biomass. But we have not given up on coal just yet. We think that by exploring carbon capture and storage, both in postcombustion and by gasifying coal, we can capture emissions that would normally be attributable to coal plants and meet or expand our economic and environmental goals by doing so.

Fundraising Dinner Sales Committee

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, the sales committee list for the Premier's dinner in Edmonton includes a number of Tory glitterati, many of whom are on government agencies, boards, and commissions, earning hefty salaries over $100,000. Last week the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development dodged some very simple questions, which I'd like to pose again today because Albertans deserve accountability. What conflict-of-interest provisions are in place for members of agencies, boards, and commissions such as the Surface Rights Board regarding political fundraising for a governing political party?

The Speaker: Hon. minister, if that falls in your area of competency, go ahead.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recycling questions from last week. Things must be getting bad over there.

As I said last week, all of these appointments are screened for competency first, but there is an ethics check. Any possible conflicts of interest must be identified prior to appointment, and as in the public service, if anything comes before one of these boards and there is a conflict of interest, the member has to excuse himself.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I guess my follow-up question is: do the conflict-of-interest guidelines as currently drafted allow for members who sit on the Surface Rights Board to then fund raise for the governing political party?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, the party opposite obviously isn't very successful at fundraising or winning elections. There is quite a difference between buying a ticket to attend a fundraising event and going out and doing active fundraising. I'll remind the hon. member that there's this thing called freedom of association. Just because you're active in the government, you don't have to resign from political life.

Mr. Hehr: I absolutely love the freedom of association and, I think, so do most Canadians. But people on the sales committee for the Edmonton Premier's dinner also sit on a board, the Surface Rights Board. If they're involved in sitting on the board and selling tickets for the Premier's dinner, do you guys see a conflict of interest here at all?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I'll repeat myself again. If a specific conflict of interest comes up between a matter that's before the board and a member of the board, the member is obliged to identify that and excuse himself.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Staffing of Long-term Care Centres

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In January the United Steelworkers and the NDP caucus highlighted nearly 300 worker reports showing that seniors are receiving substandard treatment in long-term care because of chronic understaffing. Seniors, who've worked hard their whole lives for the privileges that we enjoy today, deserve better than to be treated like this. Since the session began, our caucus has been tabling these reports, and there are more coming in. To the minister of health: will the health minister commit today to legislating an appropriate staff-to-patient ratio to ensure that Alberta's seniors are treated with the dignity they deserve?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, we are working with the operators of long-term care facilities in this province to ensure that the care that our long-term residents receive is of a standard that would be expected in this province. There have been some issues raised over the years. They've been dealt with and continue to be dealt with if they're raised. We need to ensure that the residents of our long-term care facilities receive, as I say, the care that they expect to have.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, the reports in question have been provided to the minister, and they document numerous degrading circumstances to which seniors have been exposed. They're not fed on time, they're not bathed regularly, dressing changes are delayed, and they've been left untoileted for hours on end. This is happening because facilities aren't putting enough workers on shift to deal with the workload. Back to the minister: why does the minister refuse to take action to ensure that long-term care centres can and must ensure adequate staffing to treat seniors with the care, respect, and dignity they deserve?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, the member is making some allegations that I'm not going to concur with. There are instances where staffing shortages have been a challenge, I guess is the best way I can put it, with our long-term care operators. As this member would recognize, workforce challenges in health care have been quite evident for some time. We have a workforce strategy to try to meet some of these issues, and we'll continue to do so.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There was an important announcement made today that really affects the constituency of Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I'm sorry. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona still has one additional question.

Ms Notley: Thank you. It seems I have to work a little harder for this one today.

Instead of coming up with new and creative ways to allow private operators to charge more fees for fewer services, why not focus on your obligation to treat seniors with the dignity they deserve in the settings they require? When it comes to long-term care, the solution is easy: more beds and legislate an adequate staff-to-patient ratio in care centres. To the minister of health again: chronic understaffing is hurting seniors, so why won't he do what needs to be done and regulate effective minimum staffing levels?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, the member, I think, has just showed her lack of knowledge about this particular issue. There are no fees for services when it comes to health care. In long-term care Alberta Health and Wellness provides the care. There are no fees for health care. If the member wants to ask the minister of seniors about accommodation rates, there are fees for accommodation rates. Ask about accommodation rates. But there are no fees for health care.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Timber Harvesting and Reforestation Certification

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta announced today that the province's timber harvesting and reforestation monitoring program has been certified as meeting world-class quality management standards, which is very important to my constituency. My questions are all for the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. This accomplishment is huge. We should be shooting off the fireworks. Where are the reports on this from the Auditor General? Where are the reports from your ministry? Why aren't we shooting off the fireworks?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I want to begin by reminding the hon. member that setting off fireworks in the forest during the fire season requires a permit.

This was a very significant announcement today, recognition from the international standards organization that our forest monitoring system meets international standards. It wasn't in the Auditor General's report because while the Auditor General was checking this, our application was under consideration. The Auditor General, however, did reference it and noted, "We believe this quality control system will bring the necessary rigour to make monitoring for compliance effective when fully implemented." That quality control system is now in place.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, that's fine, Mr. Speaker, but when I go home this weekend, I guess our companies are going to ask me what the ISO certification will do to make better timber harvesting and reforestation monitoring in this province. To the minister: what can I say to them?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne can report that the ISO certification means that our program does meet international standards. It will assure Albertans that their forest resources remain healthy and sustainable, that they are monitored, mandatory replanting at two years, checked again at eight and again at 14 years to make sure that they're growing, 3,500 inspections a year. We've said for a long time that our monitoring of harvesting and replanting is among the best in the world. With this certification we can now prove it.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, that's fine, and I understand that the ISO certification will do that. What other steps possibly could be taken within your ministry to strengthen the reforestation monitoring and help communities like Whitecourt, that are forest-dependent, remain sustainable?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The ISO standard includes a commitment to continuous improvement. In fact, our program framework does include both internal and external audit processes. This system of self-checks, accountability, and continual improvement ensures that the program will get better with time. No other province in Canada has this ISO certification. Once again Alberta leads the way in Canada.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Access to Medical Services

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In a few minutes I will table a letter from a constituent of mine to the minister of health providing a first-person account of the kind of hell that the sick all too routinely experience these days when they have to go to the hospital in Calgary. John Witwicki's medical emergency was a rapid heartbeat, supraventricular tachycardia. For that, he spent seven and a half hours in a hallway under the care of three EMS staff, 12 hours in emergency waiting to be admitted, and four days in a ward waiting for tests. To the minister. John is aware of your long-term plans. He and I both want to know what you're going to do right now to solve the problems you have right now.

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, what we're going to do is exactly what we've been doing for the last year, and that is to put in place a governance model that is going to run this system more efficiently and more effectively. We've brought in one of the leading CEOs in the world to run the system. If this hon. member has a suggestion on how we can turn it around overnight, I'd like to hear it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I quote from John's letter. "Sitting rooms provided for patient comfort and rehabilitation are off limits because they are occupied with patients and beds. All rooms are in a co-ed mode with eight of us sharing the same toilet facility." I ask the minister: does he find this situation tolerable? Would he subject his wife to that?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I've said from day one that we want to work to improve access to the health care system because it is not adequate. I've also suggested to the hon. member here that if he has a suggestion on how we can turn this around overnight, I'd like to hear from him. All I hear from him is criticism. Let's hear some suggestions.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again I will ask on John's behalf: "How much longer do the citizens of Calgary have to tolerate these conditions?"

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, ask him if this is a spending day or a savings day. One of the things that we could do is commit here today to spend a whole bunch more money, as I've tried to point out to the member to his right, who still can't figure out $500 million more versus $500 million less. We have increased the operating budget this year for Alberta Health Services by some 7.7 per cent. I've met with the CEO, and that particular gentleman has said: we are going to work within that target, and we are going to improve this system. I would suggest that's doing a whole lot more than this individual is, sitting here crying about a situation that we're fixing.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Wind Power Generation

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A number of locations in my constituency have been identified as possible sites for the siting of wind turbines for electricity generation. This has raised a number of concerns among local residents. My questions are to the Minister of Energy. Who is responsible for the siting and setback provisions of these turbines? Is it the province, or is it the local municipalities?

2:30

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, in fact, it's both. The siting relative to wind turbines is under the purview of the Alberta Utilities Commission, and they do follow some quite strict guidelines related to noise control around the sitings. The AUC's rules on noise control include some requirements related to turbine sitings. A facility may not produce more than 50 decibels of noise during the day at any nearby residence which is one and one-half kilometres or closer and no more than 40 decibels at night. The setbacks from these eloquent structures . . .

The Speaker: We'll probably get it the next time.

Mr. Marz: To the same minister: could the minister explain what regulations are governing the setback distance from neighbouring residences and from neighbouring property lines?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, the situation is that they will vary according to municipalities. There's a convention in the wind powered generation industry that suggests that any residences should be at a distance away from a turbine of at least four times the height of the structure. As an example, an 80 metre turbine structure would be required to be sited 320 metres away from the nearest residence. Some municipal bylaws support this convention, and Alberta Transportation, interestingly enough, also has a role to play. They require that turbines be at least 300 metres from the nearest road.

Mr. Marz: To the same minister again, Mr. Speaker: has the minister's department conducted any studies as to any potential health risks? If not, have they accessed any studies done in other jurisdictions, and what are the results of those studies?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, at this point in time we have limited information relative to wind turbines and their effect or possible effect on health. All types of generation, including those that are categorized as clean and renewable, have both pros and cons, and we do work in the system to be sure that none of these things are detrimental to health. The AUC takes social, environmental, and economic factors into consideration when these facilities are in fact applied for and sited.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Condominium Property Act Consultation

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government claims that they are serious about protecting the rights of condo owners, but all they do is claim ignorance and monitor a problem that was known and written about by the Calgary Home Builders' Association three years ago. To the Minister of Service Alberta: what notification has the minister been giving to condo owners since first learning of this problem?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Well thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I indicated last week, I had an excellent meeting with the Alberta Real Estate Association to begin the dialogue about the Condominium Property Act. This is really important moving forward and hearing from owners. We hear on a regular basis on our consumer line about situations that Albertans are experiencing. Working with the Department of Municipal Affairs and some of the other departments, we know that we can look at that and solve some problems.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think those are excellent meetings. They won't cut it. This government should be protecting consumers, but it is failing to do that. To the minister again: why is there no consumer alert on Service Alberta's website that would help protect condo buyers?

Mrs. Klimchuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, with respect to the Condominium Property Act the major thing is that there are rules within the act about solving disputes. There's also mediation included in this legislation to make it easier and less costly for owners to get these kinds of disputes resolved. Most certainly, there is information for owners to start the process. When owners take the step and decide to pursue the other course of action, legal action, well, that's something that becomes their choice as well.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. During the past weeks of monitoring leaky condos, who has the minister consulted during this time?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Well thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Municipal Affairs has spoken on that matter as well with respect to leaky condos. With the Condominium Property Act, again, this particular legislation deals with condominiums, how they run their boards and all those matters. That does not preclude information, working with the minister to make sure that we look at all angles to protect consumers and help them make the best choices.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Knowledge Infrastructure Program Funding

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week Albertans learned through this House about a shared postsecondary infrastructure project funding agreement between the federal government and our provincial government. Albertans continue to tell me that every single one of our postsecondary institutions is important and that they would be upset if this funding went to only select and certain institutions. My first question is to the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology. Can the Minister tell us exactly how the money will be distributed amongst Alberta's universities and colleges?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The shared funding agreement of almost $350 million that was announced last week, $187 million of which was provincial funding, supports high-priority capital maintenance and renewal projects throughout the province. We have a very eloquent structure of a knowledge-based economy and a framework that we're going to be putting forward in front of this House right now. In order to make that happen, we have to ensure that the deferred maintenance across the system is taken care of. Under the federal-provincial program approximately 70 per cent went to universities, 30 per cent went to the colleges. They were selected based on talking to the individual institutions and Campus Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is to the same minister. I often hear from constituents about the need for more student spaces at new facilities, so I hope the minister can please explain why the funding is focused on deferred maintenance rather than on the construction of new institutions.

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, over the last couple of years we've taken a very strategic approach to the construction of new facilities and new spaces in the province. Colleagues may recall discussions last year in this Legislature around the Campus Alberta framework, where we talked about individual access plans from each institution and a projection of the number of spaces that we're going to need and those that we're going to build. But as important to that is ensuring that the facilities that we have today can fill the needs for tomorrow and that the students of today can have an adequate facility to work in and learn in.

Mr. Rodney: My final question is to the same minister. I've heard the claim that the funding is to reach across Alberta, so to speak. Can the minister please explain how the funding will be distributed throughout the different regions across the province?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, I guess one of the things that we could look at is how we develop our strategic priorities around the capital that we put into the postsecondary system in the province. That starts with, as I said, the individual access plans for each of the institutions, coupled with a projection working with other departments within the government, so Health and Wellness, Employment and Immigration. We got together and decided the workforce strategies of those departments, then projected out the number of jobs in those various categories that we might need, the vocations that we might be looking at, the apprenticeship training that we might be looking at. We made a determination then in the various locations or campuses around the province, all 28 of them, and said: "Where do we need those spaces? Where do we need deferred maintenance projects to be undertaken? Where do we need value-added into those institutions?" That's how we made those determinations.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

School Construction and Renovation

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Rural Alberta's aging schools desperately need upgrading, and there's very limited funding for modernization projects. Some rural school boards have simply resubmitted last year's three-year capital plan because none of their requests were approved. Requests this year for modernization projects total $1.5 billion, yet there's no new funding. To the Minister of Education: given that construction costs have decreased due to the economic slowdown, why is the minister not taking this opportunity to invest in rural schools?

Mr. Hancock: Well, primarily, Mr. Speaker, because I didn't get any extra money in my budget.

Mr. Chase: Considering that the Wild Rose school board only requested one capital project last year because their request did not align with the province's building plan, how many capital projects are deflected even before the approval process begins, due to, and I quote, differing principles?

Mr. Hancock: Well, I wouldn't have any idea of what the reference to differing principles is, but I can tell the hon. member that we have in excess of 60 school boards in the province, not to mention the charter school boards. I can tell you that each of those school boards files on an annual basis a capital plan which identifies their top priority with respect to new construction and their top priority with respect to modernization, and deferred maintenance comes after that. So new, primary maintenance, and deferred maintenance issues. Some of them have, it will surprise the hon. member to know, more than one new project or renewal project and certainly many deferred maintenance projects. It would not surprise him to know that there are not 66 new projects every year, nor are there 66 renewal projects every year, so obviously some of those projects are going to go on to the next year's. It's not surprising, then, that they would come back in next year's plan.

Mr. Chase: Well, the devil is in the details, and I guess that rather than 66 maybe the answer is with 666.

Given that a 1949 written-off section of Iron Ridge elementary was brought back into service to meet the province's class size initiative, what is the minister doing to ensure that the province's principles – they're your principles – align with the capital pressures school boards face?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, we work very diligently with school boards across the province to make sure that those areas that have the most essential needs have those needs dealt with. That's why we're spending approximately $760 million this year; I think it's closer to $1.4 billion over the next three years in new and renewed schools across the province. Does that deal with every single issue? No. Does it deal with the critical issues? I believe it does. We work with school boards all the time to make sure they have the places where they need them for their students and that schools are safe places for students to go.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that was 102 questions and responses today. In 30 seconds from now we will continue the routine.

Members' Statements (continued)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Cerebral Palsy Association in Alberta

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Friday, May 8, 2009, I had the pleasure of attending the Life without Limits Gala hosted each year by the Cerebral Palsy Association in Alberta. The event featured Josh Blue, the renowned winner of NBC's Last Comic Standing. It was a lot of fun and included lots of laughs.

The CPAA is a great organization that collaborates with community agencies and organizations to advocate on behalf of individuals with cerebral palsy and other disabilities. They are a leader in delivering programs and services, educating the public, and providing information on treatments and resources relating to cerebral palsy in Alberta. They have a dedicated staff under the leadership of their executive director, Ms Janice Bushfield, and passionate volunteers and supporters.

Given the strength of the organization, it's easy to see how the May 8 event was so much fun. The success behind the event included the entire CPAA staff, that went above and beyond their normal workload. Also, I'd like to recognize the help of Allergan Botox and Alberta Beverage Container Recycling Corporation for their support of the event. On top of CPAA staff volunteers Brant Hurlburt, Kelly Jennings, and Steve Burak also donated their time and services to make this event truly successful.

I know that in my home city of Calgary the Cerebral Palsy Association in Alberta is hosting an open house on May 21 from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. This will be another excellent opportunity for Albertans to familiarize themselves with the important work the CPAA does, to get a tour of their facilities, meet the staff, and check out their multisensory and music therapy rooms. I've heard there is something for everyone.

The Cerebral Palsy Association in Alberta is an organization that does very worthwhile work in our province. I was thrilled to support them by attending their Life without Limits Gala and by rising in the House today to recognize their commitment to Albertans with cerebral palsy.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

National Nursing Week

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In recognition of many of our guests today and some of my dearest friends and the thousands of nurses across this province it gives me great pleasure to rise today to salute nurses during National Nursing Week, which runs May 11 to 17. Special events are being held throughout our province to honour nurses this week, and May 12 is International Nursing Day. It is celebrated around the world every May 12, the birthdate of Florence Nightingale, the founder of modern nursing.

Mr. Speaker, this year's theme for National Nursing Week is Nursing: You Can't Live without It. Let me say definitively that, no, we can't live without nurses. Nurses play a vital role in our health care system and the life of every Albertan. These dedicated health care professionals provide care where and when it is needed. Nurses deliver quality health care each and every day and make the well-being and safety of their patients a top priority. They are a key part of the strong health care delivery system we have in the province of Alberta.

National Nursing Week is an opportunity for us to show our appreciation for the contribution nurses make to health care and our communities. Mr. Speaker, I'm sure that I speak for all Albertans when I say thank you to all Alberta's nurses. I encourage everyone to salute the nurses in their communities as we give special recognition to the importance of the nursing profession during National Nursing Week.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Lyn Radford
Madiha Mueen

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We've often heard it said: volunteers don't get paid, not because they're worthless but because they're priceless. Last Wednesday Red Deer's four Rotary clubs, the city of Red Deer, and friends of the community acknowledged two exceptional citizens and priceless volunteers at their annual spring gala. I would like to take this opportunity to recognize the Red Deer citizen of the year, Lyn Radford, and the young citizen of the year, Madiha Mueen.

Ms Radford has been the driving force with a number of projects in Red Deer and is well known for her work on opening the Red Deer gymnastics centre and chairing the Alberta Summer Games in 2006. She also chairs Red Deer's Olympic torch committee, the Red Deer Curling Club capital campaign, and serves on the Red Deer College Board of Governors, to name only a few, and all that while raising four children.

Eighteen-year-old Madiha received the young citizen of the year award for her outstanding volunteer work with the leadership program at Hunting Hills high school, pennies for paws, the Red Deer regional hospital centre, and the list goes on.

Their names will be added to a list of past recipients on the base of the clock tower at the old courthouse in Red Deer. I'm proud to say that Red Deer is known for its spirit of volunteerism, helping others in our community and around the world. Mr. Speaker, these individuals have made their community proud and are inspirational role models for all of us. I would like all the members of this Assembly to join me in recognizing the accomplishments of these two outstanding citizens.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Go Green Eco Expo

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I indicated in my introduction today, Newcap Radio sponsored the first Go Green Eco Expo in Edmonton on April 4. The event was held in the Butterdome, which surprisingly is not in Edmonton-Calder. The main purpose of the expo was to spread awareness about environmental sustainability in Alberta and to promote those businesses that supply sustainable products and services such as organic health and body care products.

Newcap and the organizers of the event also wanted to educate Albertans on minor lifestyle adjustments that they can make to become more environmentally responsible in their everyday lives. Now more than ever our province needs to make the environment and conservation a top priority. Expos like this help bring awareness to the general public in fun and creative ways, like recycled leather flooring. I have to admit that I thought all leather was recycled once it had come off the cow, but I learned that there are other purposes. They had open discussion, presentations, and a number of very interesting points of view. It was $10 very well spent, Mr. Speaker.

The 43 exhibitors at this expo drew nearly a thousand people, a number that they hope to improve on in next year's expo. The organizers of this exhibition that are here today have received tremendous feedback and support for their cause, and this is only the beginning. If you would like some more information on the Go Green Eco Expo, please visit their website at www.gogreenecoexpo.com.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The visitors, hon. member?

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. They had actually been introduced before and had moved over to this side of the galleries, but I'll introduce them again. Thank you, sir.

Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly . . .

Ms Calahasen: Three beautiful women.

Mr. Elniski: . . . three beautiful women. Thank you. I'd like to introduce . . .

Dr. Sherman: Three smart women.

Mr. Elniski: . . . three smart women. Thank you, sir. I'd like to introduce Colleen Yukes, Ms Elissa Scott, and Mrs. Maureen Tash of the Go Green Eco Expo.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

2:50

Rosie Templeton

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize a special young Albertan. Last weekend the 52nd annual 4-H selections program was held in Olds. I'm pleased to also acknowledge that my friend and colleague the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills presented to Rosie Templeton of Coaldale, who among 90 of the province's top 4-H members received the province's highest honour, the 2009 Premier's award.

Rosie is a seven-year 4-H veteran and a member of the Ready-made 4-H Beef Club and the South Country Judging Club. Most recently Rosie was named 2009 provincial public-speaking champion and regional judging champion. As the Premier's award winner Rosie's passion for the 4-H program will serve her well as she represents 4-H on a provincial level.

In addition to the Premier's award announcement, 41 senior-aged members were chosen to represent 4-H at major educational programs throughout Canada and the United States during the 2009-2010 year. Fourteen 4-H ambassadors were also selected to promote 4-H and youth involvement in Alberta over the next two years.

The longest running youth organization in our province is 4-H. By following the 4-H motto, Learn to Do by Doing, members take part in activities that meet their interests, increase their knowledge, and develop their life skills. Our government is proud to support this important program for our province's youth.

It might be of note to Rosie and the other recipients that our Premier was also leader of the Andrew 4-H Beef Club, Mr. Speaker, and he was also district president of the 4-H Council.

I wish to acknowledge the youth and adult leaders who support the work of 4-H across Alberta and congratulate each and every one.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table today the responses from Service Alberta on the consideration of the main estimates with respect to the budget.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will now table five copies of the letter from constituent John Witwicki that I referred to in question period.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of 10 reports from long-term care workers indicating specific problems on shifts that were short-staffed. These indicate that the meals were served late, rooms were not properly cleaned, and residents were woken early so that staff could finish their work.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table a letter dated April 10, 2009, from a constituent, Lorian Kennedy. Lorian Kennedy is writing to express anger and disgust at the Conservative government's decision to delist gender reassignment surgery.

Thank you.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk Assistant: I wish to advise the House that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Stevens, Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations, response to a question raised by Mr. Mason, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, on April 14, 2009, in Department of International and Intergovernmental Relations main estimates debate.

The Speaker: On a purported point of order, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Point of Order

Allegations against a Member

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise in reference to 23(h), which refers to making allegations against another member. There were, in fact, two points of order.

The Speaker: Deal with the first one first.

Dr. Taft: Okay. One of them, Mr. Speaker: in the exchange with the Premier, the Premier made an allegation which he's repeated a number of times. We've gone through this a couple of times. It's an allegation to the effect that the Official Opposition wanted to shut down the oil sands.

The Speaker: I think that's point number two.

Dr. Taft: Okay. Sorry. Then the other one, Mr. Speaker, was a description from the Premier of a news conference in Calgary in which he described me as scurrying away, or he used some colourful language like that. The fact of the matter is that we were blocked from access to that news conference. This I remember very vividly. It was at the McDougall Centre. We got in the door, and the security blocked our access. They refused to allow us in even though we identified ourselves. All through that period the news conference was conducted, and it was only at the very end, after it was over, that we were allowed access. Of course, at that point I didn't have the information to respond, so that's why I walked out.

I found the Premier's statements to be false and abusive, and he made allegations and descriptions of me that I think were not only untrue but insulting, and the facts clearly were otherwise. As I say, I was there with staff. We were barred from McDougall Centre for that news conference until the news conference was effectively over.

I would ask just for the honourable thing, which would be for somebody on that side to recognize those facts and withdraw the Premier's statements.

Thanks.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member obviously has a version of events; the Premier has a version of events: two differing versions. But the reality is this. There was a news conference. I think people agree with that. The Official Opposition leader left without making comment. Whether he left without making comment because he didn't have any comment to make, whether he left without making comment because he didn't have any knowledge of the subject, whether he left without making comment because he didn't know what to say is not really the Premier's concern or my concern. The fact of the matter, as he has indicated, is that he left without comment. That actually indicates exactly what the Premier said, and that is that at the time when he could have made comment, he left without making comment. It's a different version of events but no point of order.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity on this point of order.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The access to the McDougall Centre is part of the concern that has been brought up in this point of order. I have written to the Premier expressing concern about similar situations when I also have been denied access to the McDougall Centre, which is the equivalent of the Legislative Assembly and its grounds in Calgary. For a person to be expected to comment on something as important as the royalty issues, you have to be there and present and welcome to be a part of the whole discussion. Expecting someone to make an off-the-cuff comment based on no previous information is not acceptable.

The other part of the unacceptable nature of, basically, the insult that was suggested is that somehow like a shadow in the night the hon. former leader of the Alberta Liberal caucus scurried away like some deer in the headlights. That was not the case. We believe in research; we believe in being informed before we enter into a discussion. We didn't have that opportunity because the Premier through, unfortunately, his minion in the McDougall Centre prevented access, just as has happened with the health discussions at Government House. Until we have an opportunity to fully participate, how can we possibly answer questions?

The Speaker: The hon. President of the Treasury Board on this purported point of order.

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, yes. On the point that somehow in here we have to be careful about allegations, many on that side have a right to stand up and be indignant. That hon. member does not. Yesterday he twice talked about the Premier as someone who is passing a bill as a favour to secret donors around his leadership, undisclosed resources, who have shown up on various boards – I'm paraphrasing; the quote is in Hansard – and have received millions of dollars in grants, that some have also expected to benefit hand-somely. Those are not only past the point of what honourable should get to; those make very serious allegations, that I think the Premier showed tremendous calm in ignoring. Then based on whether it's scurry or slurry or sneak or "My reputation has been hurt by an allegation" – you shouldn't throw rocks if you live in a very, very glassy house. Should there be rules about making allegations? I agree. But it should start right there first.

3:00

The Speaker: Are there others, or should I bring this matter to a head?

Dr. Taft: Well, I just . . .

The Speaker: No. We've already had one participation. This is not a debate.

The chair would like to point out Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules & Forms at 494, acceptance of the word of a member.

It has been formally ruled by Speakers that statements by Members respecting themselves and particularly within their own knowledge must be accepted. It is not unparliamentary temperately to criticize statements made by Members as being contrary to the facts; but no imputation of intentional falsehood is permissible. On rare occasions this may result in the House having to accept two contradictory accounts of the same incident.

I would further refer all hon. members to the House of Commons Procedure and Practice, page 433.

The Speaker ensures that replies adhere to the dictates of order, decorum and parliamentary language. The Speaker, however, is not responsible for the quality or content of replies to questions. In most instances, when a point of order or a question of privilege has been raised in regard to a response to an oral question, the Speaker has ruled that the matter is a disagreement among Members over the facts surrounding the issue. As such, these matters are more a question of debate and do not constitute a breach of the rules or of privilege.

This is not a point of order.

Second application. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Point of Order Allegations against Members

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For the second issue I also cite 23(h), (i), and in this case as well (j), but particularly (h) and (i). This has to do with statements from the Premier alleging that the opposition wanted to shut down the oil sands or shut down the oil industry totally. Despite the comments of the President of the Treasury Board I actually try to stick to the facts in my questions. As an example, I will gladly back up every statement I made yesterday in my questions with facts. I can table the documents, and I can show the Gazettes. I can indicate, you know, where all that information came from.

The fact of the matter is, Mr. Speaker, that we've never said that we should shut down the oil sands or shut down the oil industry. I think that's an allegation and a twisting of the facts that's unjustified and unworthy of this Assembly. The Premier persists in repeating it, and I think that's most regrettable.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, this is obviously a difference of viewpoint but also not a point of order under the citations given because those citations refer to allegations against a member. As you've said repeatedly, an allegation against a whole caucus does not constitute an allegation against a member. Suggesting that the Alberta Liberal Party didn't have a policy on oil royalties or suggesting that the effect of whatever position the Alberta Liberal Party took would be to shut down the oil sands is a validly held position given any logical research of the positions that they've held, but it's not an allegation against a member.

You know, over the course of the discussions of royalty review the Liberal opposition has taken many positions, but they've never really had a position that I can discern on royalties. One of the things that they had suggested – for example, when we did come up with the royalty regime, they accused us of trying to tear up the agreements with Suncor and Syncrude. Then shortly after that, a few months after that, the hon. member comes forward and says that we should have known better than to allow Suncor and Syncrude to invoke the bitumen royalty option, which was in the earlier agreement, that somehow we should have torn up the agreement at that stage. I mean, it's not hard to discern when you read some of the material that comes out in question period, some of the material that's shown on their website – did I just admit that I sometimes read their website? I should not have done that. It's not hard to discern that they either don't have a position or they have an inconsistent position or have positions which would have the effect of shutting down the oil sands, all of which, I agree, is a matter of interpretation, none of which is an allegation against a member.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. The hon. Government House Leader is entitled to be concerned about newly developed information with regard to royalties, but for him to suggest that the hon. Premier simply had a difference of opinion – how many times, Mr. Speaker, would you have allowed a student in your class to repeat misinformation before some type of disciplinary action was taken? What we have here is that circumstance. We have an individual across the way continuing to pass out information suggesting that the Liberal caucus wants to shut down the oil sands. We're on the record as asking for sustainable development. We're on the record as expressing environmental concerns. We're on the record announcing concerns that Albertans aren't getting a fair share for the resource they own.

But never – and I feel like this is a déjà entendu circumstance because I've said this before, and the Premier hasn't seemed to have got the lesson yet. We have never suggested shutting down the oil sands. To draw out any kind of conclusion that would suggest that somehow we're opposed to a major development in this province – it has some difficulties, obviously, with emissions and with tailings ponds, granted, but this is a major source of income now and into the future, and it has to be sustainably managed. To suggest that the Liberal caucus is opposed to development in the oil sands, Mr. Speaker, that's pure bunk, and if I had the Premier in my class, after school he would be writing out: I will not say that the Alberta Liberals are opposed to sustainable development in the oil sands. He would have to write it out a hundred times.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood on this purported point of order.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, I want to sort of preface my comments by saying that like the Minister of Education I, too, have noted some inconsistencies from time to time with respect to Liberal positions on certain issues. However, the Premier has clearly alleged – and he has not only alleged it with respect to the Liberals but also with us – that they want to shut down the oil sands. Nothing could be further from the truth. Quite frankly, I consider that to be real fearmongering because many, many thousands of Albertans' jobs depend on that. So for the Premier to repeatedly make those assertions, which I believe he knows are not correct, in my view constitutes the breach that has been identified by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

The Speaker: Well, that's all very nice, but unfortunately points of order and points of privilege have to deal with accusations against individual members of the House, not groups or other parties. If the hon. members would like to read the rules once again, Beauchesne 494 and Marleau and Montpetit at page 433, all of these matters deal with allegations against individual members. The Blues basically say: "You know, again, I know he's going to stand up with another point of order, but that is the group that wanted to shut down the oil sands completely." Those are the words of the Premier of the province of Alberta.

We've had this matter raised in the House before. We've dealt with it before, and we're dealing with it today in the same way we dealt with it before.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 47

Appropriation Act, 2009

The Speaker: Hon. members, before I call on the hon. President of the Treasury Board, this bill must be dealt with by 10:15 this evening.

The hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today to move second reading of Bill 47, Appropriation Act, 2009.

I can just anticipate, after question period, that we'll have a very lively debate on many of the bills for the rest of the day, and I look forward to it.

3:10

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you. I would hate to disappoint the hon. President of the Treasury Board, so here goes. Mr. Speaker, as you know and as the House knows, last Thursday when we voted the estimates on Budget 2009, the Alberta Liberal caucus voted against those estimates. We voted against those estimates because we do not feel that the budget that has been brought in this year for fiscal '09-10, for the fiscal year coming, given the financial, fiscal, and economic circumstances in which we find ourselves in this province and, indeed, across the world, is a responsible budget for the people and the province of Alberta. We could not very well vote against the estimates on Thursday and then turn around and support the Appropriation Act, Bill 47, this time around, and certainly we will not be doing that.

I want to go on record, before we go any further, as being very, very clear that the Alberta Liberal caucus supports and endorses the tireless efforts of the employees of the government of Alberta to carry out the jobs and the tasks that are assigned to them by their political masters, to do their jobs to the best of their abilities, to uphold their oaths as public servants, and to carry on the business of the public sector in the province of Alberta for the benefit of the people of this great province of ours.

However, their political masters have seriously lost their way. We are being asked to support a bill – and I'm sure that at some point, whether it's the President of the Treasury Board or whoever, someone on the government benches opposite will say: "Well, you know, if you vote against the bill, you're voting against the employees of the government of Alberta; you're voting not to pay these people. What have you got against these hard-working civil servants?" Well, we have nothing against these hard-working civil servants, but they need a better budget to work with than this one. This one does not cut it.

Dr. Brown: Too much or not enough?

Mr. Taylor: The Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, Mr. Speaker, just said, "Too much or not enough?" I find this line of reasoning, this either/or line of reasoning that the Conservatives, the government and its backbenchers, who are here primarily to prop up the Lieutenant Governor in Council, continuously parrot very interesting. They can't seem to wrap their collective heads – and I know it's a struggle for them – around the notion of whether this is a spending day or a savings day. You know, it's both, or it should be both. It's got to be both. It's both a spending day and a savings day and a paying your bills day and a paying your debts day and an investing for the future day. It has to be all of those things, virtually, if not every day of the week then certainly every week of the year and every month of the fiscal year. You've got to do all those things together.

As I pointed out before to the President of the Treasury Board one day in question period – I don't remember which day it was – it's kind of like walking and chewing gum at the same time. You know, you've got to do more than one thing. It's very simple, Mr. Speaker, and we'll take it back down to the level of the average, ordinary family in the province of Alberta. The average, ordinary family in the province of Alberta has to do all those things because it has bills to pay. It has a mortgage payment to meet. It has a Visa bill or a MasterCard bill to make a payment on or, hopefully, pay in full every month. It has kids who are going to go to university or college some day and has to save for them. It has two adults, both of whom are probably working, who have to save for their own retirement because pension plans ain't what they used to be. It has all those things, all those responsibilities, and it has to meet all those responsibilities pretty much simultaneously.

This budget on so many levels – on so many levels – fails to do that. It fails to do that. The best it does is pledge to not keep increasing spending this fiscal year as much as it has in past fiscal years and to put a little bit here and a little bit there back into the sustainability fund once we stop running deficits in the province of Alberta. This budget projects deficits not only this year but next year and the year after that as well. And who knows beyond that?

I mean, those of us who have been in this province longer than since the last boom that just ended started can remember back to a time when the Conservative government of Alberta started running deficits. Yes, the circumstances are somewhat different, Mr. Speaker, today. I realize this. They're still prevented by law from borrowing money to go into deficit unless they're borrowing money from their own sustainability fund. You know, that's an improvement over the old days, but we remember when deficit spending started not only in the province of Alberta but in every province in the nation, in the nation itself. We went on this orgy of year after year after year spending more as governments than we took in until pretty soon we individually and collectively had debts, provincial and national debts, in the billions upon billions of dollars.

In this province we had a provincial debt and an ongoing deficit that to get under control, to end, to balance the budget, to eliminate the deficit and start to pay down the debt put us in a very difficult position that hurt a lot of Albertans, hurt us all in some ways. All of us had to sacrifice. I think my colleagues on the benches opposite would agree that we'd all prefer if we didn't have to go through that again. But, Mr. Speaker, this budget so utterly fails to address the consequences of running consecutive deficits that it threatens to put us right back into that position.

Now, true enough, when and if Bill 33, the Fiscal Responsibility Act, passes this House – and I'm sure "if" is merely a theoretical construct – you know, we'll have a new, allegedly improved sustainability fund of about $17 billion combining all the loonies and toonies between the cushions in the couches and the money we got from taking the pop bottles back to the bottle depot and all the rest of that, and we'll be able to use that money to cover off these deficits for a while. But ultimately, if we don't have a plan going forward other than for hope and prayer that the price of oil and the price of gas go back up and somehow the world comes out of this recession, that $17 billion is going to be gone, and there is no plan B. There's only this sort of quasi-commitment that, you know, when we do and if we do get to the point where we're running surpluses again, we'll start putting an undetermined amount of money back into the sustainability fund at an undetermined schedule of making deposits until someday in that grand and glorious future when my grandchildren have grey hair, we'll have $10 billion in the fund again.

That's not good enough, Mr. Speaker. There's no long-term savings and investment strategy in this budget, no desire to commit to one. There's no real plan to replenish our short-term savings. There's no prioritization of programs that work for Alberta. There are no plans to reallocate funding or spending to programs that work for Albertans. They're just isn't anything in here that gives me confidence that this budget protects the fortunes and futures of the people of Alberta.

So, Mr. Speaker, I would like to move an amendment at this point to Bill 47, the Appropriation Act, 2009. I'll give a moment to the pages to distribute this.

The Speaker: Yes. We'll wait for this. It's not that normal at second reading, but we'll have it circulated quickly, please, pages. Distribute them so everybody can work.

Hon. member, please proceed with your amendment.

3:20

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will read the amendment into the record. I move that the motion for second reading of Bill 47, the Appropriation Act, 2009, be amended by deleting all the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 47, the Appropriation Act, 2009, be not now read a second time because the Assembly is of the view that the bill does not provide a long-term savings and investment strategy, set adequate priorities, or reallocate spending to sufficiently protect the futures and fortunes of Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, I think I set up the reasoning behind this reasoned amendment in debate before I moved the amendment, so there's really not a whole lot else that I feel I need to say about this. I realize that I've now changed the debate on Bill 47 at second reading to a debate on the amendment, but having gotten my point across, I hope, I think, I will take my seat now and let others join the debate.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we are now on the amendment. The amendment is before everybody. That is the gist and the purpose for the debate. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview on the amendment.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Specific to, well, what is a reasoned amendment, always, of course, the budget is one of the most important debates in a spring sitting. I think this year it's particularly important because we have an unprecedented, or at least unprecedented in 14 years, deficit. I also think that there's an extremely important discussion to be had. I only wish the government were leading this discussion in the way that the discussion about balancing the budget was lead by the government in the early 1990s. The government has the tools at its hands to address directly what is proposed in this amendment. I think it's very important to notice in the amendment the specific referral to the fact that there is not currently in this budget a long-term savings and investment strategy. That's what I want to focus my comments on for a couple of minutes.

This very government – well, I should say, I guess, the preceding government, when the minister of finance was the member then for Strathmore-Brooks, Dr. Lyle Oberg. At that time he commissioned a special report, which I only wish every member of this Assembly had studied. It's come to be known informally as the Mintz report. The title is Preserving Prosperity: Challenging Alberta to Save. It was written by a committee of several people, chaired by Jack Mintz, which was given the name of the Alberta Financial Investment and Planning Advisory Commission. They came out with startlingly important conclusions. For those of us who want to spend the rest of our lives in Alberta, who want to see Alberta prosper for lifetimes to come, I don't think there's a more important document than this one. I think it's very important, for understanding why this amendment is so vital, to read a handful of excerpts from this report.

This is from the executive summary of a report commissioned by this government, chaired by a fellow who is known as a very, at least, small "c" conservative, a right-wing, market-driven economist, Jack Mintz. The other people on it were Harry Buddle, Daniel Halyk, Judith Romanchuk, and David Weyant. Here are a handful of points from the executive summary on why we need an Alberta long-term savings and investment strategy. I quote from page 3 of the report.

Alberta is at a critical point in its history. The province's economy has consistently outpaced the rest of Canada. We enjoy the tremendous benefits of the lowest income taxes in the country, no sales tax, the highest per capita spending on health care in the country and an education system that outranks some of the best in the world . . . These advantages make Alberta a very prosperous place today.

[some applause] I'll be interested if there's still applause because I quote from the next paragraph of the report.

At the same time, warning signs should be heeded.

Mr. Speaker, this amendment is a warning sign. If nothing else, at least this debate should serve as a warning sign because the report found, and I quote again from page 3:

To a very great extent, the level of spending and the low taxes we enjoy today are the direct result of our abundance of resource wealth. Alberta's aging population and the expected lack of growth in resource revenues suggest that it will be difficult for Alberta to preserve our current prosperity for present and future generations. In fact,

And I emphasize this. In fact, wrote the Mintz commission, if action is not taken now, Albertans could face a substantial tax hike by 2030.

Mr. Speaker, the amendment moved by the hon. MLA for Calgary-Currie proposes action now. That's exactly what this is about. This amendment is exactly about the need to respect and take seriously what the Mintz commission wrote and advised and what this government has chosen so determinedly not to act on.

I'll skip a few paragraphs here, but I think it's important to drive home some key points. I quote again from the report.

To put it in clear terms, Alberta's non-renewable resources should provide significant benefits not just to Albertans today, but also for our children and grandchildren. When Alberta sells its resources . . .

And, parenthetically, Mr. Speaker, given question period today, I must say that I believe we're selling the resources much too cheaply. I return to the report.

... it has given up wealth that can either be spent today or saved for the future. When our stock of non-renewable resources dwindles, Alberta's economy will need to rely only on its people – not its natural resources – to create wealth.

It goes on. Then it says, Mr. Speaker, what I think is a remarkable statement, a dramatic statement for a government report written by a committee of economists. I quote again a government-commissioned report.

Alberta should not look like a ghost town in the next century when the resources are depleted.

Mr. Speaker, that's a very, very significant warning. We stand here debating a budget that puts Alberta back into, effectively, a deficit for the first time in 15 years a mere eight months after the price of oil and natural gas began to collapse. We had 14 or 15 years of consecutive multibillion dollar surpluses, and a mere eight months after natural resource revenues drop, we're back into deficit. We're having to squeeze public services, and we're having to consider raising taxes. Those are the kinds of warning signs that should be heeded, that Jack Mintz warns about.

In fact, if you go to the trouble of interviewing Mr. Mintz, which I would urge all government MLAs to do – please sit down with this guy; please listen to what he says – he warns that in the foreseeable future, the next two decades, Alberta is either going to have to raise taxes 40 per cent or lower spending 40 per cent or do some combination of the two. Using the government's own forecasts on revenues, there's no way other than going into massive debt, which will drive us into destruction.

I'm again quoting from the Mintz report. "To achieve those objectives, this report recommends," and there are several recommendations. I won't read them all, but this could not be more important, Mr. Speaker, number one: "setting a bold target of achieving $100 billion in net financial assets in a reinvigorated Alberta Heritage Fund by 2030." Now, that would be apart from pension assets.

I can already hear some of the cabinet ministers saying: well, we already have $70 billion in AIMCo. In fact, most of that is tied up in pension liabilities. We want to see that target. We want to see some strategy. We understand that times are tight right now, but where is the strategy when times get better? Where is the symbolic gesture that we could use now, even if it's a small symbol, to say: okay; no matter how tight, we've got to commit to the future. Mr. Speaker, there's no sign of that in this budget as presented. What's so frustrating is that when we raise the issue with government members, it just gets laughed off or shrugged off. I hope – I hope – that this caucus of Tory MLAs gets the message through to this government that a savings strategy is crucial.

The report goes on to recommend, and I'm quoting from page 4 here: "saving a fixed percentage of Alberta's total revenues each year as part of the budget." Then the third item: "establishing a clear and specific purpose – to preserve and enhance Alberta's prosperity for the benefit of current and future generations – and changing the name of the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund to the Alberta Heritage Fund."

Let's stop using this term "rainy-day fund" for the Alberta heritage savings trust fund. I've argued for quite some time, Jack Mintz has argued, many others have argued that we should look at that effectively like a RIF, effectively like an income fund. While governments don't retire, Legislatures don't retire, there is an equivalent sort of moment looming for Alberta as an economy. That moment is when our nonrenewable resource revenues deplete to an insignificant level.

The warning signs could not be more clear. Alberta was once a significant player in conventional oil production. That "once" was in the early 1970s. Peak conventional oil production was 35 years ago. Today Alberta's conventional oil production is minor. Alberta's natural gas production, which has been immense in the last 15 years, is dropping 4 per cent a year now, peaked some years ago and is inevitably declining. The oil sands, for all their enormous size, bring forward immense complications of their own, and they will not generate the royalty income that our conventional resources have generated so well.

Let's get past this rainy-day idea. Let's imagine the day coming when royalty revenues are not significant anymore and we need to turn somewhere else. That's the day we need to plan for by establishing the kind of heritage fund that the Mintz report recommends, Mr. Speaker. That's the kind of strategy that's envisioned in this amendment and that is completely lacking from this budget.

Mr. Speaker, I don't need to drive – well, I will need to drive this message home more. I can't drive it home any more right now. But I think it's vital. I can see that some of the government MLAs are actually listening. They don't need to listen to me. They can listen to their own advisers. They can listen to the Alberta Chambers of Commerce. They can listen to the Institute of Chartered Accountants. They can listen to the Canada West Foundation. Please, people, please put in place a long-term, disciplined savings strategy for this province.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available, that provides five minutes for questions and comments.

On the amendment.

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, on the amendment. The problem they seem to have is that they're stuck somewhere between yesterday and fantasyland. I think it's nice that they decided to switch their previous position on many of our civil servants, who they soundly thrashed in here about their bonuses. Over 6,000 of them had to sit here and listen to how unworthy they were that they would be on a bonus system. I'm glad to see they finally may have realized that these are hard-working people and that bonuses were part of their salary. But I don't expect that they will recover a lot of their other arguments.

Let's just talk about what this amendment is trying to say. By referring to a paper that was produced in a very different time – and I wish they would have come out and said: what we would like you to do is save by taking money from these areas, take money out of ongoing areas of the budget that we're dealing with. That's what our debate is in here now, the budget of this year, for the coming year, and the two out-years. Tell us how much they would like us to take out of the programs we deliver. Given that around 76 per cent of the money we spend is in the areas of health, education, advanced education, and seniors, to have a significant change so that you could take money out of these hospitals right now, take money out of these schools right now, take money out of these seniors' facilities right now and put it in the bank so that a couple of hundred years from now, when our oil is gone, we'll have a lot of money in the bank.

Earlier today you listen to the question that comes: you should have more people in these facilities; we've got to spend more money on health care, a $500 million increase. That wasn't quite enough; that's a cutback. But we've got to save ourselves into prosperity. You know, maybe in the dictionary there is confusion between a magician and a politician, but we can't magically just wave our little wand and wave a report and say: if you just wish hard enough, if you hope and click your heels, you can spend more on everything, and you can still have money that we can put in the bank.

And this will be our platform: don't deal with anything specific. Oh, they can pull some communications budgets out of here, and they could pull some hosting budgets out of there, and they can add it all up to about a day and a half of health care and say: "See? See what we mean? You've got to get tough on these departments. You university people, you need not sit around and talk with the minister and have lunch. That's a waste of money. And you don't need to communicate what's going on in Alberta around the world because those communication dollars are wasted anyhow."

It's easier to get bad news if you stand up here and misrepresent what's really going on. That's like free communications. They'll pick up the stuff they really like – some very unfortunate birds in a tar pond, in an oil pond, or whatever the heck you want to call it pond – and we can spread that all around the world for free just about if we stand on the steps here and repeat it enough. We can focus on every negative thing we can find in Alberta. That's free. We don't know why, we don't understand why your government would think it's important to spend money on communications to actually show the world the level of environmental commitment we've made here and the progress that has come directly from Alberta companies and Alberta attitude. Somehow, by selling our resources, whether it's coal or oil or natural gas, selling those resources and investing them in some of the most world-class facilities – medical, educational, experimental, and research – somehow that would be better: just put the money in the bank.

They talk about building an economy. We couldn't agree more except we actually know how to do it far better than just pretend, heels click, the money is in the bank, we're all rich. You have to build the universities, you have to build the hospitals, and you have to run them. You have to pay the people that run them for you a decent salary, and you have to compete not only with our neighbours but around the world. We went through a very interesting economic time, where prices rose significantly around the world, yet because of the resource wealth we've got, we were able to maintain and actually grow. We continued to invest in infrastructure, including what we said.

We've provided more benefits. My mother was sitting here a few days ago. She gets angry when she's told continually how hard things are for her. Eighty-two years old, and she's still coming here to shop and will tell you unequivocally that they could never have imagined what their parents went through to help build this province, and now it seems like they have to be given everything, glasses and teeth and a little help here and a little help there, as if somehow the 60 or 70 years of hard work were just good luck, and now the government needs to make sure we're looked after. They're slightly insulted that they're treated like that. That's a little bit different.

For the hon. members to suggest that the Mintz report would somehow be our salvation – Mr. Speaker, can you imagine? You would know now how lopsided transfer payments are from Alberta to Ottawa to fund a lot of programs that other provinces have in place to try to look after the people that they're representing and that they have the responsibility to care for. Without getting caught up in exact details, we all know that it's into the hundreds of billions of dollars that Alberta has allowed, encouraged, participated in for the wealth creation of this country.

So let's take that, what we've got left, and let's put it in the bank. Alberta could. We're going to shut down schools and hospitals and all the stuff that they won't say, but if they get it, they'll have to do it. We'll put this money in the bank. Who do you suppose is going to pay when the other provinces – Mr. Speaker, Quebec has some $140 billion in acknowledged debt, $7.5 billion to $8 billion a year interest payments. Ontario is even worse than that and has billions of dollars in Crown corporations. When the consolidated financial statements are finally adopted by the other provinces, probably next year, it's even going to portray the wealth that Alberta has far greater in comparison to what you would imagine now.

Just think politically, Mr. Speaker, regardless of what party might do it, to become the only province in the country with wealth, with a great big fund. You let your roads deteriorate, you've quit building hospitals, but you've got this big cash. Cash is king. We've got money. Do you think the rest of the country, the rest of the provinces, given the system we live in, are going to sit back and say, "Oh, good for you"? I don't think so.

Mr. Speaker, there is a balance between living in yesterday and hoping for the future. Then there is recognizing what we're in today. There's no question that it's far harder to approach the coming years given the uncertainty and having to deal with the incredibly difficult choices that we're going to have to make as a province. But we have always done it. We have talked with Albertans, and whether they'd like to admit it or not, this province recognizes that times change and political reality changes with it or it disappears. You can sing the songs of the past, and you can harp on solutions that may have worked then.

There may be a future where Alberta has billions of dollars in the bank. I quite honestly believe that it will happen. Our days are going to return quicker than any other province, probably quicker than anywhere else in North America, possibly in the world. As our resources are developed, we're going to be ready, more prepared to have the infrastructure, more prepared to understand what it means to reinvest in research, in the medical sciences. The knowledge-based economy and the value-added economy that we're working for is out there, but it's coming here because of the political stability and the common sense that have gone into both our taxation and our spending priorities.

You know what? I hope we adjourn this session soon. I hope, personally, that the hon. members spend the entire summer and all of next year – as a matter of fact, I hope they spend the next two and a half years – out around Alberta telling them exactly what they want to do because then I won't have to campaign one day, not one day, when you tell them, "We believe that we're going to have to cut all of the programs for Albertans because some guy that used to lead us got this brilliant idea that we'd be far better off with a bunch of money in the bank." That's what I hope they do. I hope they spend two and a half years spreading the word. I might even be able to find their website – I'm not good at this, but I'm trying – and I'm going to send them some money, and I hope they put it to good use, get out there and tell Albertans: we're going to save our way into prosperity. That's the Liberal way.

The Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I must congratulate the President of the Treasury Board for his impassioned speech. You know what? We disagree. I respect that disagreement, and I frankly enjoyed the vigour of his presentation.

I just want to put three quick points to the President of the Treasury Board. The first one is about British Columbia. I know we'll hear all about the debt and all this kind of thing. Just on pure spending, if you compare per capita spending in Alberta with per capita spending in B.C., Alberta spends, the most recent figures, 28 per cent higher. Alberta spends 23 per cent higher than the national average, 28 per cent higher per person than B.C. does. Yet when I go to B.C., the roads are good, they run a ferry system, they're building the Olympics, they've got a pharmacare program, and UBC consistently outranks U of A. So our point on this side is that surely – surely – there is some value for money that can be squeezed out of the provincial spending. That would be the first point. And the people with access to that information are the government.

My second point. As the Member for Calgary-Currie has often said, this is not either/or. Most or all of us have families, and we manage at the same time to do a number of things financially if we're going to have long-term prosperity. First of all, we need to pay the bills. We do have to pay the rent. We have to buy the groceries and so on. Secondly, we need to pay our debts, a mortgage, whatever that may be. Third, any one of us here, if we're doing a good job of planning for the future, is saving. We put something aside even in the lean years in the RRSP. We put something aside for our kids' college education. This is not an either/or proposition. This is a both/and. It's exactly the same kind of balance that successful families achieve in their own lives. We're looking for that same kind of balance from this government.

So the first two key points: let's try to get the kind of value for money that the B.C. government delivers. Let's try to get that from our dollars here in Alberta. Secondly, don't look at this as either/or. This is just like good, long-term domestic financial planning. Third, I agree with the President of the Treasury Board that there has to be some strategy around the politics of Confederation, and we don't necessarily want to have a giant, juicy target of, you know, half a trillion dollars or something, but there are ways around that: endowing the postsecondary institutions so that maybe the day comes when we don't actually need to provide any provincial tax revenue to them because the endowments are so large, like the world's great universities already enjoy. And there are other ways around that.

I enjoyed the comments from the President of the Treasury Board, but I've got to tell you that they deeply worry me because there is such an entrenched resistance to the very thing that this Mintz report and this amendment are about. I guess I fear, from my own perspective, for the future of Alberta in the same kind of way, apparently, that the President of the Treasury Board does but on completely different perspectives.

The Speaker: President of the Treasury Board, did you want to comment?

Mr. Snelgrove: I think that was a comment.

The Speaker: That was a comment, but it could have been a question too.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

3:50

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Speaking very specifically to the amendment . . .

The Speaker: I'm sorry. We're still on the Q and C section. If you have a question, you proceed.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, no. I hadn't realized we were still on that section.

The Speaker: Does anybody else have a question or comment?

There being none, then I'll recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity to participate in the debate on the amendment.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Speaking very specifically to the amendment, the idea of having a savings plan is hardly new. Joseph recommended a savings plan to King David a millennium ago. He predicted that there would be seven good years, followed by seven years of famine. As a result, during those seven good years he built up the granaries; he created the food supplies. The idea of providing savings and setting aside during the good years is nothing new. That needed to be established.

Now, the either/or part of the discussion. The hon. President of the Treasury Board with regard to savings said: well, how can you save and still fulfill the needs of Albertans at the same time? Where does this problem occur? I'll take this problem back to 1994. Stupid moves. Stupid moves followed by inaction. We closed down, blew up hospitals in Calgary. We drove away the professionals who staffed them. Now 15 later we're trying to entice them back. How can you do both? Well, if you had done both, we wouldn't be in this position we are right now because we would have had a savings plan. We wouldn't have had to be going overseas to recruit temporary foreign workers, especially in areas of medicine, because they would still be here had we not driven them away. So inaction, stupid action, and then failure to look into the future sufficiently beyond the next paycheque.

This government and the Premier in terms of savings and investment declared full speed ahead in the development of the oil sands. What was the result? Inflation. What was the result? A lack of workforce in the rest of the province because this one area was so overheated that the costs and the lost jobs and the drain were felt throughout the province. How can we save? By doing things at a sustainable pace, by thinking of that next step as opposed to just strictly living for the moment.

With regard to the comment about the 6,000 individuals and our lack of support or our wavering support for civil servants, the reality is that very few of that number of convenience, 6,000, saw the $40 million. It was the deputy ministers and the higher individuals within the chain of command that received the majority of that $40 million, so don't be telling me that it somehow found its way, dribbled down to the civil servants who do the actual front-line work.

With regard to savings, how can we accomplish savings? Well, how is it that Alaska is able to accomplish it? How is it that Norway, who started so long after Premier Peter Lougheed initiated the idea of a heritage trust fund, was able to run with it and set aside savings that we can't seem to do here in this province or that the government seems unwilling to do?

Again with regard to savings and monetary procedures, all we hear is the old, worn-out phrase: tax-and-spend Liberals. Well, we're talking about saving Liberals, a savings account, and we've proposed this for some time. When the Alberta Liberals are more fiscally conservative than the so-called Progressive Conservatives, then there is something to be worried about in this province as to who should be running the government.

With regard to individuals who have indicated a savings plan, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview indicated Jack Mintz. I'd like to add on such luminaries as the Canada West Foundation. I'd like to talk about the Canadian Taxpayers Federation. How about the Canadian Federation of Independent Business? Let's throw in Preston Manning. Let's throw in Peter Lougheed. These are all individuals that are hardly noted for Liberal tendencies who have recommended the need for establishing a savings fund, and they didn't say: well, we'll wait till oil goes up to $160 a barrel. They recommended those savings when oil was back at the $10 a barrel level. So the idea of a savings plan isn't new.

With regard to savings plans in the 2004 lead-up to the election we said that while we still had a surplus, we needed to set aside 30 per cent of any surplus dollars and with that create a university endowment fund: 35 per cent of that 30 would go to it. We said 25 per cent for infrastructure. We wanted to set aside 5 per cent for culture and arts development. We were looking at the various aspects that an endowment fund, as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview pointed out, would be necessary to offset our dependency on nonrenewable resources.

In 2008 leading up to the election, based on the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview's economic background, a doctorate from England, he said: we've got to set aside 30 per cent not just of surplus revenue but 30 per cent of every nonrenewable dollar that we get because the clouds are coming, and if we don't set up a savings plan now, we're in for deep trouble. Unfortunately, this government chose to take us deeper into trouble with a $4.7 billion deficit, no savings plan. We owe $8.6 billion on the unfunded liability, which should have been addressed years ago. Had it been addressed years ago, we wouldn't be at this point. Savings and wise investments are absolutely essential.

In the last five years this government has lost over $5 billion from the heritage trust fund due to questionable investments. We have experienced poor investments in asset-backed commercial paper. I do believe that AIMCo, however long the arm's length is, will be the agency to make the wise investments, knowing how well the Ontario teachers' fund did with the individual at the head. I know that this government doesn't feel very strongly about the recommendations that its Auditor General makes and suggests that the Auditor General drifts from money management into policy, but he's argued the savings point.

What we're saying through this amendment is that savings and investment have to happen at the same time as wise expenditures. Control inflation; you don't have the problem.

I know that the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo would like to share his wisdom on this matter. He's a young man, and he's got longer to save for than I do, so I will sit down and save the House some time.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

No participants? Then I'll call on the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill to participate.

Dr. Brown: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It certainly is a wonderful thing to be in the opposition and have the opportunity to criticize without coming up with any concrete propositions as to what they might do with the budget. The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie was up a few minutes ago talking about his amendment, and he inferred that one might trim and spend and save all in the same day. Therein lies the rub. We hear all the time that we're not spending enough in certain areas. We hear that we're spending too much in certain areas. We hear that we should be saving at the same time. We're talking about an amendment which talks about the fact that this Appropriation Act in 2009 does not provide a long-term savings and investment strategy. This is an appropriation bill. It talks about what we're going to spend in the fiscal year 2009-2010.

I would like to know from the opposition – I hope someone will get up and address the issue – how much they would save this year given the fact that we have the budget and the economy where it is right now. I'd like to know how much they'd save this year. I would also like to know where they would cut in order to save that particular amount of money.

They also talk about setting adequate priorities and reallocating spending to "sufficiently protect the futures and fortunes of Albertans." If there was ever a nebulous statement, there it is. What are those adequate priorities? How would they reallocate? Where would they spend more, and where would they cut? Let's see some specifics regarding this. Let's see them go on the record and not just say that we need to spend smarter. I hear that term all the time, that we have to spend smarter. That means, presumably, that you have to cut somewhere and that you have to spend more in other ways.

So let's see where the rubber hits the road. I'd like to hear some specifics from the opposition. When they're putting forth an amendment here that talks in very general terms, let's see where it's going.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Are there questions? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar first.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much. The previous speaker was talking about concrete solutions. I believe those were the precise words. When this party, the Official Opposition, suggested originally to the government that we initiate a stability fund or a stabilization fund to provide a cookie jar whenever it was necessary to have a substantial amount set aside because of the volatility of oil and gas prices, does the hon. member, number one, not consider that to be a concrete solution when the Provincial Treasurer and the President of the Treasury Board and the Premier and the bloated cabinet were so anxious to use that money and so grateful to have it set aside? Is that not an example of a concrete solution from this side of the House?

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill if you wish.

Dr. Brown: I think there was a stability fund, and the reason that the government has some flexibility is because there was that saving, so it is there. I think that you've just answered the question on what the government ought to have done, and we did it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to ask the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill: if he's looking for places to cut, would he not consider the suggestion, which has come from our party and, I think, has also come from the Official Opposition, that the elimination of the subsidy for horse racing in our province might be a good place to start?

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, if you wish.

Dr. Brown: Well, I think that this has been discussed. I'm here to support the budget as it is written right now.

With respect to the horse racing I think that it's been adequately explained in this House many, many times that there is no subsidy on horse racing. What the horse-racing industry gets back is a portion of what's taken in on their own facilities with respect to the slot machines and the VLTs that are located on those premises. Without the horse-racing industry there wouldn't be any revenue, so there is a net gain, in fact, to the province of Alberta from those facilities.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Certainly, to clarify for the hon. member, the Official Opposition brought the stability fund forward twice. Both times it was rejected, and fortunately it was finally accepted by the government.

Now, if we're looking for a cost saving, the previous Premier reduced the size of cabinet at one point. Does the hon. member consider the size of the cabinet now, in light of these difficult economic times, to be suitable, or should we reduce the size of cabinet perhaps by 20 per cent to save a few dollars?

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, do you wish to, or should we see additional questions first?

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, I would move that we adjourn debate on this matter.

The Speaker: We can't adjourn debate during the Q and C period.

Mr. Mason: I'd just like to remind the Member for Calgary-Nose Hill – he wasn't here at the time – that what happened was that facilities like Northlands and the Stampede board were taking far more than the cut that they were allowed on their gambling sheets, and the Auditor General caught them and found it out. What happened is that they had to reduce their take to the same take that any casino might charge on the gambling machines, and they got an agreement from the government to provide a subsidy to make up the difference. That's how it came about.

The Speaker: Additional comments or questions with respect to this matter? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Again, Mr. Speaker, to the hon. member: does the hon. member consider in these economic times, which are quite difficult – and we do have a shortage of money – the cabinet too big, too small, or just right, like Goldilocks?

The Speaker: Hon. member, if you wish?
The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you. I'd like to contribute to that last point: is it too big or too small, or is it just right, like Goldilocks? I think it's way too big. I agree with the hon. member. It's much too large.

The Speaker: Additional comments or questions with respect to this matter?

Hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, you cannot adjourn the debate because you finished the debate without adjourning it.

The next member up is the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have really enjoyed, actually, listening to many of the people who have spoken today, especially the former Leader of the Opposition, Edmonton-Riverview. I enjoyed listening to the hon. President of the Treasury Board speak with passion, too, on the direction of Alberta and what he sees as a future for our province. I believe they were both speaking towards, hopefully, a bright future for our citizens, one that looks responsibly towards future generations.

I think that if I could sum up sort of the two positions without having the clarity, one position would say that we've got to keep some of that and keep looking out for the future, and one position might be: let's invest it all now and put it to work now or not put it to work now, maybe just spend it all now on a variety of different things. If I look at those positions, I would say that it is much wiser of us, which is the nature of this amendment, to develop a long-term savings plan that we can really get behind here. Although I agree that it is a very difficult financial time here in Alberta, nevertheless it's time we get on with this thing.

For the last 40 years, in fact for the time this government has been in power and, in fact, for my entire life Alberta has taken in significantly more money than any other province and, I would go so far as to say, any other jurisdiction in the world per capita. Now, I could be corrected on that, but that is what I have been led to believe, and since I am not corrected, I'll stand by that.

One of the comments continually made by the hon. President of the Treasury Board is that we have world-class facilities, world-class this, world-class that, yada yada yada. That's fair enough. You look around, I guess, the western world. People would say: "Yeah, Alberta has got similar stuff to what we have here. They have similar health care facilities. They have similar universities. They have similar police forces. They have similar justice departments." But by no means are we number one. One would think that if someone had brought in the most money per capita for a governing body with the people involved, we would have the best, and that simply doesn't happen.

If you look at relative reports coming out in this country alone, we look at health care reports that say that we're roughly in the middle of the pack. You look at policing numbers. You know, we're short on policing numbers. You look at wait times for our accused to get to trial. They're longer than average. You look at our roads, all of that stuff. [interjection] Well, then I'll be corrected later on.

Nevertheless, these things are all average when we look across Canada. How can we sit here and say that we are providing value for the dollar for what our current citizens are getting when we're spending more than other areas and all these reports come back and say that we're doing an average job? I find it difficult to reconcile those two points, and if someone can do that for me, well, then maybe I'll be better served and wiser the next time I rise to speak in this honourable House.

Now, if we go to a long-term savings plan, there's no doubt we can continue to, I guess, snow through our abundance of natural resource revenue in the next 40 years like we've done in the last 40 years, during the life of this government, which is essentially what we've done. We've snowed through that revenue, and yes, we do have average stuff when we compare to the rest of the western world. Kudos. Great. We've got average stuff for having the most revenue.

Hopefully, over the future, having this savings fund, maybe it will force us to get some financial discipline. We will say that we're going to put some of this resource money away, and I'd say that the 30 per cent figure that we ran on in the last election is a reasonable amount. I don't know the exact amount suggested by the Mintz report. But it should be in and around that figure. It should be a responsible figure for us to go forward, or else, as the Mintz report says, we are going to be in a dangerous situation come 40 or 50 years from now.

Dr. Brown: Would you do that this year?

Mr. Hehr: Why not start this year? If not this year, hon. member, when? Next year? Fair enough. We've got to at least start with some nominal figure and say: we're going to start. Okay? We came up with, I think, the number of $50 million, and by no means is that: "You can sound the bugles from the mountaintop. Oh, my goodness. They are really going forward on this." Nonetheless, it would be a start. I think that if we came up with some number, that this year we're going to do X, that we're going to devote X amount to doing this in the future, it's some recognition that we have a problem of snowing through petroleum revenues whenever they come in. To be honest, as Albertans we don't pay for anything we use anymore. We just simply snow through it all in one generation like we've done.

I think this savings plan will recognize the fact that we owe something to future generations that will want to live here. Alberta will not become a ghost town, but I believe it will if we keep spending at the rate we are and not recognizing that this is sort of a one-time, I guess, opportunity to really set us up for the future. Well, you know, maybe lightning strikes twice, but I don't necessarily see that happening. Our advantage here is that oil. What we can do to sustain that advantage long term is to have a long-term savings plan.

Those are my points, and I thank you for the opportunity to allow me to speak on this issue, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Question? Comment?

Additional speakers? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to address the amendment as well as the bill.

The Speaker: Well, we're on the amendment now.

Mr. Mason: I know, Mr. Speaker, but I think that for various reasons I will not have the opportunity.

The Speaker: Sorry.

Mr. Mason: That doesn't count?

The Speaker: No, that doesn't count. Okay? We're on the amendment now, and the bill will be debated in its true form after the amendment is dealt with. The hon. member is a Member of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta. We'll go on this afternoon to 6 o'clock. The House will reconvene tonight at 7:30. The hon. member may have ample opportunity between now and 10:15, when the vote is called.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I recognize that your job is to enforce the rules.

The Speaker: Pretty much.

Mr. Mason: Yeah, pretty much. Sometimes we may not, you know, like the rules all that well, but I get it.

On the amendment, which is that it be not now read a second time because the Assembly is of the view that the bill does not provide a long-term savings and investment strategy, set adequate priorities, or reallocate spending to sufficiently protect the futures and fortunes of Albertans.

My response to this, Mr. Speaker, is that I'm not entirely onside with all three of those reasons. I want to address particularly the one where I have some difficulties. Maybe I disagree or maybe it's just a more nuanced approach, but certainly I don't think the bill sets priorities adequately. I think there, indeed, could be some reallocation of spending, which just goes hand in hand with setting priorities differently.

It's the question of long-term savings and investment that I have a bit of an issue with. I know that that's the Liberal Party's position. They think we should be building up a giant fund and that this, in fact, should get us through difficult times and ensure a steady flow of revenue. Now, I think it's fair to say that we should have more savings through the heritage savings trust fund. In particular, the idea of spending the interest each time keeps the fund from growing. I would support that. I would ask hon. members what happens in an economic recession, as we've seen, and particularly when there's a major downturn in investment markets and in the stock market. We see, in fact, that those countries that depend on these funds have taken massive, massive losses. I think that the implications have not been carefully enough considered.

What we proposed, I think, is a little different. This also addresses the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill's comment: where would the opposition cut? The real question that has to be dealt with with respect to this, Mr. Speaker, is on the revenue side. We heard today that Alberta is getting less than 50 cents a barrel in royalties on oil. This has been an issue that we have raised in the past, particularly when oil prices were extremely high. If a barrel of oil is trading at $38 a barrel and we're getting 50 cents, then that really amounts to a minimal, minimal amount of revenue. The royalty system has to come into the discussion around savings and priorities because we are letting billions of dollars slip through our fingers that rightly belong to the people of Alberta.

The question of a tax on bitumen that was put forward by the government's own task force was rejected. The Premier called it a wellhead tax and said that it smacked of the NEP. The result was that as the two large operations in the tar sands, Syncrude and Suncor, switched to a bitumen basis for calculating their royalties, they managed to reduce the amount of royalties that they were paying to the province very, very dramatically because the government had an ideological aversion to what the Premier called a wellhead tax on bitumen.

We've seen a huge drop just in the last year in revenue that we obtain from the tar sands from two operations that were identified by Pedro van Meurs, an internationally respected consultant on oil and gas royalties, as two of the most profitable enterprises on the face of the planet. They managed to cut in half their contribution to the province that has nurtured them and helped create them. So the government has not addressed that through its attempts to renegotiate the agreements.

The other aspect that I'd like to talk about, Mr. Speaker, is the whole question of corporate income tax. When I was first elected, I attended a luncheon of the Edmonton Chamber of Commerce, and the guest speaker was the then Provincial Treasurer, Dr. Steve West. Dr. West, in his speech to the Edmonton Chamber of Commerce, announced that they would be reducing the corporate income tax rate in this province from 15 per cent to 8 per cent over a period of time. He claimed that there was lots of competition from places like Ontario and other provinces that were reducing their corporate income tax. We felt that that was completely unnecessary because this is paid on profits of corporations. It's not paid by companies that are like General Motors and losing lots of money. They don't pay any of this tax. It's based on the profits of the corporations, so there's no real reason to reduce the tax in that fashion.

Now, the government has proceeded along that line with our opposition fairly continuously opposing it. They're now at about a 10 per cent effective rate on corporate taxes, so they've cut corporate taxes by a third. At the time when they made the last cut, of course, the corporations in Alberta were setting record profits, multibillion dollar profits for EnCana and Nexen and all sorts of corporations that were making enough profits in one year to run a small country, but we were reducing our take.

So the revenue side, the proportion of the economy, the GDP that is available to government to meet the priorities of the people of the province, has been steadily shrinking as a result of this government's policies. The result is that we have a crisis in health care. According to the health minister, it's unsustainable. Well, the fact of the matter is that the economy has grown, the population has grown, and health care spending needs to keep pace with it, but in fact the government doesn't have the resources to do that because of policy decisions that they've made.

Mr. Speaker, I think that this budget doesn't reflect that. I think there are a number of problems with the budget that would lead me, on balance, to favour the amendment even though I disagree with the Liberal policy of having massive savings in cash and investments. Our preference is to create a $20 billion green energy fund to transform the economy, make investments in research and development, and basically restructure our province's energy economy based on renewable energy before we get to the point where we can no longer sell our oil internationally because of climate change issues.

But I want to indicate that we felt this budget should have had a greater stimulus to keep people working. We think the government's projections in this budget are not sufficient. They're assuming that the economic recession will be shallow and of short duration, and the number of people who have been laid off has already well exceeded the figure used by the finance minister when she tabled her budget.

There's $215 million in unallocated cuts. If the government's projections are not met, and I don't think they will be, they will have to find another $2 billion of cuts. Eliminating the Wild Rose Foundation has been a really tough blow for the volunteer sector.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I'm really serious. We have to abide by the amendment we're playing with.

Mr. Mason: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was trying to give other reasons why I would support the amendment, but I'll try to be a little bit more on task. Thank you for that.

So in terms of this amendment, the real question, I think, why I'm prepared to support this, is the failure to set adequate priorities, which is clearly part of this amendment. I don't think that the government has shown any signs that it's prepared to make up the shortfall in mental health services. I don't think the government has shown that it is setting adequate priorities with respect to long-term care beds, which play a key role not only in protecting seniors and making sure that they're well taken care of in their final years but which play a key role in solving the problem with the crisis in emergency room waiting times. If you can't move people out of emergency rooms into acute-care beds because they're occupied by long-term care patients, then you've got a real serious problem.

Mr. Speaker, there are lots of reasons why I believe that this government has not set appropriate priorities for our province in this budget. Although I'm not entirely in agreement with the Liberal opposition with respect to the need for massive savings, I do think, on balance, I am prepared to support this amendment that we not now read the budget a second time.

There's one last point I want to make in terms of setting adequate priorities and reallocating spending, and that is the over a billion dollars in deficit from the health authorities, which the government knows about but is not included in this budget, which means that the deficit is much larger than the government is prepared to admit to the people of Alberta. There's something fundamentally wrong with a budget that doesn't include all of the liabilities of the government in the coming year. That's another reason why I believe that we should support this amendment.

Mr. Speaker, that concludes my comments. I'm sorry for having strayed from the true path, but I will attempt to adhere to that in the future. Thank you very much for your patience.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Well, I'll be very brief, Mr. Speaker. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood said that he didn't entirely agree with the Liberal savings plan. The Member for Calgary-Buffalo said that even in the face of this recession that we're dealing with right now, he would proceed with the plan, which I take it is that 30 per cent of the nonrenewable resource revenues would be put into savings. By my calculation a third of $10.7 billion, roughly, is $3.2 billion, which would have to come from somewhere. It would probably be roughly 30 per cent of the health care budget or 60 per cent of the education budget. Does he agree with the Liberal proposal to keep socking away money when we need to spend it in this recession?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Thanks to the hon. member for that point, but I cannot be held accountable for a Liberal economic policy. Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, Q and C.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I listened with interest to the hon. member's remarks. The hon. member talked about a $20 billion green energy fund. My question would be this: if this $20 billion green fund was to become a reality, would there be any money from that fund allocated for carbon capture and storage projects?

Thank you.

Mr. Mason: Thank you for that question, hon. member. No. The fund would be divided in three parts. A billion dollar revolving fund to help homeowners, small businesses, and farmers as well as various government buildings to do complete retrofits in order to reduce their energy costs – and the savings could then replenish the fund; that's why we'd call it a revolving fund – would be one component.

Another component would be major investments in research and development. We would create a second Alberta Research Council but one focused entirely on renewable energy in order to make Alberta the centre and the leader in the country in terms of research and development and commercialization of renewable energy technology.

Thirdly, we would get involved in actually building and operating renewable energy projects, doing joint ventures with other provinces, the federal government, or possibly even with the private sector, and that would be how we would deal with it.

In terms of carbon capture and storage, hon. member, we think that if there's merit and value in carbon capture and storage, it is the people who are producing the massive amounts of CO₂ that needs to be captured that really ought to be the ones who are making that investment rather than the people of Alberta. We wouldn't completely reject that direction, even though it's a temporary solution, simply of land-filling, essentially, the carbon instead of reducing it, but if there is some temporary merit in doing that, then, by all means, those who are producing the CO₂ should proceed and should pay.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General, you wanted to be in on the Q and C?

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A quick question. I was listening to the hon. member's comments. What I gathered, generally, was that the hon. member would like to spend more on some very specific projects, which he spoke very eloquently about. He also referred to continuing to increase health care spending. As I understand the gist of his comments, he will be supporting the amendment because the government does not have a long-term savings plan. So I would like him to reconcile the two. If you're supporting the amendment, how do you reconcile that with spending more?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I think the minister misheard me. That's the part of the motion that I have some difficulty with, this idea that we should have these massive investments in the creation of some massive savings plan. I think it's much better to invest in transforming our economy into a renewable, energy-based economy rather than putting a whole bunch of money in the stock market, where periodically we would take a bath.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member in his presentation this afternoon on the amendment made reference to the term "tar sands," I observed, in my constituency of Fort McMurray, the oil sands capital of the world, of which I'm very proud. I wanted to share with the hon. member: did he know that the 100,000 people in my community refer to the tar sands as oil sands sweet blend? Now, it has been referred . . .

The Speaker: Thank you very much. Unfortunately, the time is expired for this moment.

Now, we're still on the amendment. Are there additional speakers?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment lost]

The Speaker: We're back to the discussion on the bill. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I'd like to call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 47 read a second time]

Bill 27

Alberta Research and Innovation Act

[Adjourned debate May 6: Ms Blakeman]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak to Bill 27, the Alberta Research and Innovation Act, with some very genuine concerns, and the more I study this bill, the more deeply concerned

I become. I think we all understand the importance of research and innovation and the importance in every society of public support for that function. The simple fact of the matter is that private, for-profit interests do not in any great amounts support fundamental research, basic research, into issues simply because the timelines are so long and the risks are so high.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

If you're doing basic research, you don't really know where it's going to take you, whether it will lead to anything that can be commercialized, whether it will lead to any clear results at all. That doesn't mean it isn't important. It's the foundation for applied research, commercialization and so on. Certainly, there are companies in the world that do support basic research, but I think everybody paying attention in Canada, the United States, the western world, India, China, wherever you go, understands that there's a very significant role of the public sector in supporting research.

Alberta has a pretty good track record in this. The Alberta Research Council was established many, many decades ago, and the University of Alberta was established now over a hundred years ago. They have both had long legacies in research. In fact, the Alberta Research Council was kind of a spinoff, as I recall, of the University of Alberta, and it was in part to help in the very early days, some 70 years ago or so, in research into the oil sands, or the tar sands, whichever you want to call them.

Alberta has a long history in supporting research, and that history was advanced significantly in the late 1970s by some decisions of the government of the day to establish, in particular, the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research, which has created, I think it's fair to say, an international, even a global reputation for backing good research. Since that time, more recently using roughly the same model as the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research, we've seen parallel research funds set up on sciences, on engineering, precious little on anything relating to the liberal arts, but hope springs eternal, and maybe that'll come some day.

That's all background, Mr. Speaker, for this bill. I lay out that background because I think research is important, I think that public support for research is vital, and frankly I think that the future of this province depends on our success in areas like this. I have said this many, many times, that 50 years from now I don't believe that Alberta is going to have an oil and gas economy. I think if we're flourishing, it will be because of advances that none of us can foresee. So I'm a big supporter of public funding for research, and in the last two general elections, at least for us in the Alberta Liberals, increasing public support for research has been a core part of our platform.

All of that is background, and with that, you might think that I would be delighted with Bill 27. But I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the more I consider this bill and the more I look at the background documents to it, the deeper are my concerns. What we foresee in this bill is a terrific centralization of control, a centralization of control over Alberta's research sector. I guess I shouldn't be surprised. I'm not a lifelong Liberal actually, but maybe my principles are lifelong that way because the liberal in me, the small "l" liberal and the big "L" Liberal, is pretty unnerved by the tendency of this government in many, many sectors to centralize.

In the last year we've seen nothing less than a breathtaking centralization of control over the health system. All the regional health authorities were dissolved; the Alberta Cancer Board, which was a wonderfully respected organization, dissolved; AADAC, dissolved. All brought into one central system. We've certainly seen a centralization of the school boards over the last 15 years. We see a centralization in all kinds of areas, and it's now to the point where the Premier issues mandate letters to his ministers and is expected to follow all the way down the line. Of course, there's a logic to that, Mr. Speaker, but I think when it's carried too far, it becomes a misguided logic. I actually am a small "I" liberal in the sense of believing in the liberties of people, believing in the importance of freedom and freethinking and believing in the long term that society's interests are best served when people are able to think freely and to act freely.

Certainly, there are clear economic foundations and philosophical foundations recognizing that there are limits to freedom and that there are areas in economics where as a society and even as individuals we're better off to have a fairly centralized system or to have a non market-based system. But when it comes to ideas, Mr. Speaker, I think freedom is absolutely vital, and my concern with this bill is that this leads to a curtailment of freedom; this leads to a centralization of control that is actually quite alarming.

I would urge all members, as they look at this piece of legislation, to read some of the background documents that are connected to it. I draw their attention, for example, to a document dated November 4, 2008, just six months ago: Alberta Education and Technology, Roles and Mandates Framework for Alberta's Provincially Funded Research and Innovation System. The subtitle is Focusing and Accelerating Innovation.

Mr. Speaker, I think there's a genuine risk that this bill will actually do the exact opposite of what it's intended to achieve. As you read through the document, you can see that what this does is ultimately centralize control over ideas and research and innovation in the hands of a very few people, and that span of control is immense. It will span research into medical issues. It'll span research into engineering issues. It'll span research into biological and life sciences issues and a whole host of other areas.

If you actually turn to page 6 of this roles and mandates framework, put out by the government six months ago, you come to a paragraph subtitled Clear, Long Term Vision. I want to read this into the record, Mr. Speaker, so I'm going to quote this entire paragraph. It's only one long sentence.

Clear, long term vision: Alberta's provincially funded research and innovation system has a long term vision (as set by the Premier) . . .

I want to emphasize that: as set by the Premier.

. . . which focuses and aligns the work of each component of the system and ensures all stakeholders are working towards the same goal.

I don't want to be overdramatic here, Mr. Speaker, but that's a frightening sentence. What this erects is a system of control focused in the hands explicitly of the Premier. It's a kind of totalitarianism of ideas, and I'm not prone to that sort of language unnecessarily. But what the heck is going on here when we are bringing in a piece of legislation that overtly is built on a sentence that says that Alberta's provincially funded research and innovation system has a long-term vision as set by the Premier? I don't care if the Premier is the current one, the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, or the next one, maybe the Member for Foothills-Rocky View, or it might be the Member for Calgary-Buffalo. Who knows? I think it's wrong and dangerous to have the hands of one person controlling such a span of research funding. Now, there will be those who would say that I'm being alarmist. There will be those who'd say: "Well, it's only the Premier in name, and everybody knows the Premier takes advice. It'll really be the Lieutenant Governor in Council, or it'll be stakeholders." Whatever. It's down here, Mr. Speaker, in black and white.

The paragraph before that isn't really much more reassuring. Again I'm on page 6 of the November document put out by Alberta Advanced Education and Technology. I'm going to read it into the record as well.

Government Leadership: The Government of Alberta develop value added and knowledge based industries that support the diversification of the Alberta economy, utilizing research and innovation as key building blocks in turning this commitment into action. The Government of Alberta shows leadership by ensuring the stakeholders are clear about their roles, mandates and linkages within the research and innovation system.

Again, Mr. Speaker, any thinking person, any person with genuine experience in how innovation and research work should be deeply concerned about that.

Let's just take apart that sentence for a brief moment. It starts off by saying, "The Government of Alberta develop value added and knowledge based industries." Well, let's ask ourselves: is that what we want a government to be doing? Do we want the government to develop industries? Isn't that taking us right back to where we were 20 years ago when we had a government developing industries, investing in MagCan, magnesium refinement, south of Calgary and in Gainers and in NovAtel? And it seems to me there was a laser research company, GSR, General Systems Research, something to that effect. Are we turning the clock back to that point? Are we actually saying here – and we are – that the government of Alberta develop? It doesn't say invest in research that will stimulate the development, or it doesn't say will partner in development. There's no equivocation here at all: "The Government of Alberta develop value added and knowledge based industries." That's the path to ruin.

You know what I find happening? The feeling that's developing for me, Mr. Speaker, is that we're back to the very same mindset of the mid-80s when we had a government beginning to get us into debt and deficit, a government beginning to get us into the business of being in business, a government playing all kinds of games, that ultimately led us into a crisis and wasted staggering billions of dollars.

That's just the first phrase of that sentence. Then we have the classic Alberta clause all of us have used: "support the diversification of the Alberta economy." Well, of course, we all want to support the diversification of the Alberta economy, but my personal view is that this isn't the way to do it. But then the sentence continues: "utilizing research and innovation as key building blocks in turning this commitment into action." If we look at this seriously, "The Government of Alberta develop value added and knowledge based industries . . . utilizing research and innovation as key building blocks in turning this commitment into action."

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, we have five minutes for questions and comments. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I was listening with great interest to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview. I realize that the time expired. I'm so interested. Could you please proceed?

4:50

Dr. Taft: I would be thrilled to proceed. I just want to continue on this one paragraph, Mr. Speaker.

We have the government of Alberta developing value-added and knowledge-based industries utilizing research and innovation as key building blocks in turning this commitment into action. I cannot imagine a more interventionist statement from this government or any other government this side, maybe, of Beijing. I don't know where. We have here a mandate and a government document about to be supported in legislation that just sweeps away all the lessons that so much of the world has learned in the last 20 years, that innovation comes up from the bottom, that innovation is something that percolates, that innovation happens in unexpected ways, and that government should not be in the business of business. Here we have government lock, stock, and barrel getting right back into the business of business.

Now, I know time is short at this point, but I just want to go through the last sentence of that paragraph I read into the record: "The Government of Alberta shows leadership by ensuring the stakeholders are clear about their roles, mandates and linkages within the research and innovation system." Listen to this. The government of Alberta ensures the stakeholders – in other words, those doing the research – are clear about their roles. What are we doing here? Do we have somebody at the beck and call of the Premier or somebody in some senior civil servant's office saying: your role is to research X and lead to innovation, and your role is to research Y, and somebody else's role is to research Z. Mr. Speaker, it's not how innovation works. It doesn't come from the top down.

I cannot imagine a more heavy-handed, interventionist, anticreative approach to research and innovation than what's being proposed in this framework. And I can hear all the arguments that'll come back: "Well, do you want chaos?" You know what? Chaos is a lot more creative than what's being proposed here. "Do you want people confused about their roles and their mandates?" Well, if we're talking about innovation, sometimes that's exactly what it takes. We need fermentation. We need the kinds of things that the hard lessons of other places should have taught us and our own history should have taught us. We need a creative class, and we don't get a creative class by the Premier giving mandate letters out to match his vision and then giving the orders down with clear roles and mandates to all these researchers. That ain't gonna work. That ain't gonna work, Mr. Speaker.

We've turned the clock back here. We're putting way too much control in the hands of far too few people. It's politically and culturally frightening, and it's economically backwards. It's intellectually misguided, at least. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that if we're out there trying to attract the best and the brightest to this province, if we want the best and the brightest youth to stay here, and they have to deal with a system that tells them, "Well, the senior bureaucrat says your role is this," they're going to go somewhere else. They're going to go to a place where they're given the creative mandate and the resources to say, "Think, experiment, innovate, and come back to us and see what you've got."

You know, the lessons of history are so clear. Nobody told Albert Einstein: go out, Mr. Einstein, and innovate something on physics, and report back. That's not how it works. Nobody told Steve Jobs: go out, Steve, and invent the personal computer. You know how he did that? He did that in his garage as a 19-year-old. On and on it goes.

This is nuts. This is misguided craziness, Mr. Speaker, so you can bet we're not going to support this. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and join debate on Bill 27, the Alberta Research and Innovation Act. Research and innovation are integral to the growth of many sectors across the province, and it is important that this government leads the way in research excellence. The purpose of this act is to promote and support the strategic and effective use of provincial resources to help meet the government's research and innovation priorities.

Mr. Speaker, the roles and mandates of all provincially funded research bodies have undergone extensive evaluation over the past year. As a result, a roles and mandates framework for Alberta's provincially funded research and innovation system has been created. This new framework reconfigures the current research and innovation system. It is designed to reduce complexity, facilitate access and transparency, and ensure that resources are used effectively.

I would like to highlight the structure of the new research and innovation framework in Alberta, including the new research authority committees and research entities. First, the Alberta research and innovation authority will provide advice and recommendations on research and innovation matters to the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology in areas such as strategy, policy and long-term planning, identification of strategic opportunities in research and innovation, and monitoring of overall performance.

The act will clarify the duties of the Alberta research and innovation authority and help support the roles and mandates framework. It will also reflect recommendations made by an international review panel of the Alberta Science and Research Authority in 2007. In addition, Mr. Speaker, the minister will be able to make regulations relating to the Alberta Science and Research Authority, allowing for adjustments as the research and innovation system evolves.

Mr. Speaker, the Alberta Research and Innovation Act will create two advisory committees similar to the Campus Alberta Strategic Directions Committee, established within the Post-secondary Learning Act. The first of these, the Alberta research and innovation committee, will provide advice to the minister relating to the coordination of mandates and roles and activities and initiatives of the provincial research entities that will be established under the act. This committee will link the provincial entities and assist the minister in aligning the framework's priorities.

The second committee created, Mr. Speaker, will be the cross-government portfolio advisory committee. This committee will provide advice and recommendations on funding matters related to the new provincial entities created under the act. This advisory committee will provide an opportunity for ministries interested in research and innovation to review research plans and provide advice to the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology.

Mr. Speaker, the Research and Innovation Act will provide a legislative structure for the implementation of the roles and mandates framework and will establish a number of new provincial research and innovation entities. These entities will have clear roles and mandates and will be consolidated from existing organizations funded by the government of Alberta. Ultimately, these new provincial entities will build on the success of the current research and innovation groups.

Four research entities are currently being contemplated and will focus on research and innovation matters in the areas of bioindustries, focused on strategic agriculture, forestry, and other life sciences; energy and the environment, focused on strategic energy and the environment; health, focused on strategic health; and commercial development, focused on assisting companies and entrepreneurs through technical support and enhancement through technology commercialization. Existing entities and their functions will be merged and/or reorganized to support a more aligned and integrated research and innovation framework.

Mr. Speaker, existing entities that will merge or reorganize include the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research, the Alberta Agricultural Research Institute, the Alberta Life Sciences Institute, the Alberta Energy Research Institute, the Alberta Research Council, and iCORE. These entities and the others that fall under the current research structure had significant impacts on the province. However, by merging and reorganizing them, it will increase their effectiveness and efficiency.

The Alberta Research and Innovation Act simplifies the process for both creating new provincial entities and dissolving them as the need may arise, which as a result builds responsiveness into the system. Additionally, it allows for flexibility in both broad structure and corporate objectives, which will allow them to better meet the needs of the system and its participants. These new provincial entities will provide opportunities for government ministries to achieve their research and innovation objectives with defined outcomes. This act will provide the model for the implementation of the roles and mandates framework that will in turn help foster a diversified economy. Additionally, the Alberta Research and Innovation Act will support the development of a research and innovation environment that is focused, integrated, and aligned.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like at this point to just mention that there have been some members in the House that have spoken about rumours in the Assembly such that there will be no fall competition for the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research funding and comments questioning our commitment to our scientific foundation. There has been absolutely no announcement toward that end. Alberta is building upon an excellent science base, and we continue to be a jurisdiction where researchers want to come because of the excellent people and infrastructure already in place. It is a detriment to all of the excellent scientists and researchers we have in Alberta to imply otherwise.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 27 is about making our world-class research and innovation system stronger and even more attractive to researchers both here and internationally. I strongly support Bill 27, and I urge all members to do the same.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: We have five minutes for comments or questions. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Yes. Thank you. To the Member for Calgary-Montrose: does he genuinely believe that a highly centralized research-financing organization like this, with ultimately very explicit, clear political control in the hands of the Premier and cabinet, is the best way to stimulate innovation? Does he think that that's how innovation erupted in California or in, you know, the Boston area or anywhere else? Is that really what he believes? If it is, could he give me some evidence to support it?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [interjections] Well, you know, it makes it a bit difficult to hear when you have hecklers on the other side who constantly speak about the need for government to be a mechanism of effectiveness. On any given day in question period or whatever other mechanism they have in this Assembly, members opposite speak about spending, and members opposite speak about saving. We realize that there is great potential for us to be international leaders in research and innovation. We are international leaders on many fronts already. Now the time is upon us when we can better align our system so that we are more effective, so that instead of having a wide range of organizations each doing their own little pieces, we can be more effective and co-ordinated with provincial resources. Provincial resources are, obviously, not infinite. I mean, the province, just like any family or any business, has a defined amount of resources that we can put into any given area.

What we're trying to do is make sure that we get the best possible return by being strategic and by being more aligned, to make sure that we've identified areas where we feel that we will be international leaders, Mr. Speaker, in research, whether that be in the bioindustries, energy and the environment, or health. I mean, Alberta today is recognized as being a foremost producer of research in these areas and commercializing these technologies here in our province. One only needs to look at our nanotechnology research. It is an international leader. There are so many exciting things coming out of Alberta in our research and innovation system.

Mr. Speaker, aligning our system so that the overall priorities of society, of government can be more aligned ensures that we really are strategic and that we're best using our resources to produce results that will perhaps help us in health care and help us in solving the problems of modern disease and help to ensure that we bring those solutions to market in Alberta as well.

I think that for far too long we've had a system that has done very well in the respective areas. There's absolutely no doubt that we have organizations and institutes that have done tremendous, tremendous, tremendous work and provided Alberta with a wonderful reputation internationally for the research they've done. Now, Mr. Speaker, it's time to rise up and go to a new level. That's what we're speaking about here. It's time to step up and go from A to B and show everybody internationally that Alberta is the place where the brightest minds come together with the support of such a progressive government.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I want to very quickly go from the nanny state, as recommended by Calgary-Montrose, a total, centralized control, to nanotechnology. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview pointed out the wonderful contributions and the origins of research through the University of Alberta, that's celebrating its hundredth year. I want to very quickly wave a flag in the direction of the University of Calgary, that was formerly under the auspices of the University of Alberta. We have been doing wonderful work for 42 years as an independent institution.

With regard to the nanotechnology reference that I made, the surgical arm, the robotic arm that is so precise and can be controlled from thousands of miles away in terms of doing surgery, is just one of the phenomenal inventions that has come out of the University of Calgary, no doubt collaborating with the University of Alberta.

One of the fantastic research organizations associated with the University of Calgary is the institute for sustainable environment and economy. Experiential learning gets thrown in there once in a while as well. This institute is responsible for terrific developments. It is working in terms of projects on sequestration. It's working on converting electrical-generated wind power into a compressed form of energy which can then be brought on demand and added to the grid.

I want to point out that right across from the university we have a wonderful research park with facilities such as Alastair Ross. Most recently we celebrated the opening of the new Smart Technologies.

I believe that the majority of the government's investment should be directed towards our own postsecondary institutions. There's no doubt that innovation and technology are going to lead us into the future and take us from our current dependency on nonrenewable resources, so while we have the nonrenewable resources, let's use the money as investments in our postsecondary systems.

With that, I would like to call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 27 read a second time]

Bill 45
Electoral Boundaries Commission
Amendment Act, 2009

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today to move second reading of Bill 45, the Electoral Boundaries Commission Amendment Act, 2009.

This legislation will help government keep pace with Alberta's growing and changing population. Under the Electoral Boundaries Commission Act an Electoral Boundaries Commission must be appointed to review existing electoral boundaries and make proposals for change where appropriate. Right now the act requires an Electoral Boundaries Commission to be appointed no earlier than March 25, 2010. Amendments in Bill 45 will move up the date to establish a commission to no later than July 31, 2009.

The commission has a year to conduct public hearings and do its research, and then it must provide a report to the Speaker with recommendations as to where electoral boundaries should be located. Mr. Speaker, this time frame will not change. Regardless of changes to the legislation, the commission has one year to report. Appointing the commission earlier will, however, allow the commission's recommendations to be reviewed, debated, and adjusted by this Legislative Assembly well in advance of the next provincial election.

The Electoral Boundaries Commission Act also requires the commission to submit a report that divides Alberta currently into 83 proposed electoral divisions. Bill 45 will direct the commission to divide Alberta into 87 proposed electoral divisions. This increase of four divisions recognizes that Alberta's population has increased by more than 1 million people since the last time the number of electoral divisions was changed. Mr. Speaker, I have to say that I was quite surprised to see that that was almost 20 years ago. Alberta has changed an awful lot since then. The amendment will help ensure that Albertans from all areas of the province are being represented in this House fairly, equitably, and effectively.

Mr. Speaker, the amendments in Bill 45 will also expand the information that the commission can use in its population calculations. The commission will be able to consider more recent population information along with Statistics Canada census information in its population calculations if the commission feels the information is reliable and helpful.

The final amendment, Mr. Speaker, relates to what have been referred to as special electoral districts. Generally speaking, the Electoral Boundaries Commission Act says that the population of a proposed electoral division must not vary from the provincial average by more than 25 per cent. However, to recognize that some parts of our province are particularly remote or may be sparsely populated, something our caucus is quite familiar with, the act allows for there to be a maximum of four electoral districts with a population of as much as 50 per cent below the average. To be eligible as a special electoral district, the proposed electoral district must meet certain criteria that are listed in the act, 3 out of a list of 5 criteria, Mr. Speaker. One factor that the commission may consider in determining whether to propose the creation of one of these special electoral districts relates to the size of towns in that area. For that factor Bill 45 increases the maximum size of a town in a special electoral district from 4,000 to 8,000 people. This also recognizes that the size of some of Alberta's small towns, even in remote and sparsely populated areas, may have increased over the last few years. Changes to the Electoral Boundaries Commission will help to ensure that political representation reflects the changing population of the province and that these changes are put in place in a timely and responsible fashion.

I'd also like to add, Mr. Speaker, that one point that is part of the current act and will continue to be part of the act after these amendments is that the commission will be supported by the office of the Chief Electoral Officer, so there is dialogue between the Chief Electoral Officer and the commission with respect to the planning of the boundaries.

I encourage all of my hon. colleagues to support Bill 45, and I look forward to hearing and participating in the debate. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a privilege to rise and speak to Bill 45, the Electoral Boundaries Commission Amendment Act, 2009. If you look through that, much of the object of the act, as explained by the hon. Minister of Justice, was that we are essentially changing the Electoral Boundaries Commission Act to reflect that they are adding four more seats to this province's democratic Legislature. I guess that, on its face, is the most obvious move. There are also some other things which I will speak to later on the act.

If we look at that first move, which is to increase the number of MLAs currently sitting in this Legislature, I guess one can say that, well, yes, Alberta has increased by, I believe the hon. minister said, a million people since the last time this act was drawn up some time ago. But I guess if you look at it more, what's happened in that time since the electoral act was redrawn, what has happened sort of outside the framework of the adding of those million people, what has really happened in society has been the advent of our ability to communicate, to be able to talk to one another with computer technology. Whether it's cellular phone technology or other types of technology, it allows us to communicate in a much more effective fashion than we at one time did.

For instance, you know, I just stepped out of here about 15 minutes ago, called my constituency office. They told me that a gentleman had called into the office and wanted to talk to me about X. I actually called that guy back, and lo and behold, no one missed me in that time I was gone.

Mr. MacDonald: I did.

Mr. Hehr: Well, yes. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar may have missed me.

But what I think that story points out is that, yes, we haven't only added a significant amount of population, but we've added such a different component to our technology that there is simply no need for an addition of four more MLAs to this House for that primary reason, that we simply can do the work ourselves.

For instance, it's not only because it's my constituency of Calgary-Buffalo, but I would suggest that I have a fairly busy constituency office. In Calgary-Buffalo I have a large percentage of people who are not only renters but people who would be considered far below the average, I guess, wage earning here in Alberta. I think if you also look in Calgary-Buffalo, we also have a significant number of recent immigrants who have come into the province. They live right downtown in Calgary.

Often, if you look at these two groups, although they're not the only ones who've used services of their MLA – other groups do, too – they use their MLAs probably disproportionately more than other groups. If I can handle the number of, I guess, people who come into my office and, I believe, effectively serve them – I believe that if you talk to them, they are effectively served by me and the hiring of two staff members – well, then I think it's fair enough that, you know, we can all do it. In fact, if we got added a few more constituents to my riding, I would feel safe in saying that we could handle their needs, too, at my office. I don't know. Maybe some other members would like to speak about their constituency offices. Maybe they're coming unglued at the hinges, but I would doubt that that is the case.

Anyways, my point is that if we look back to what debates were just happening, I guess the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill was asking: what would you guys cut from the budget? Well, here's one thing I wouldn't add to the budget, okay? Here's one thing I wouldn't add to the budget: another four MLAs to come here and, I guess – although we do do important jobs. I'm not minimizing what we do here. It is important and all of that stuff. Nevertheless, if you want to know what I would cut, that's a little more difficult because you don't open up the books. But I wouldn't add this.

You know why? Just some simple math tells me. I looked at the Legislative Assembly Offices, and it costs, I believe – and someone can correct me – $53 million or $51 million a year for us 83 members to sit in here. If you divide that number by, I believe, all 83 of us, times it by four years, you'll get roughly $10 million for four MLAs to sit here for an average of a four-year term. If you look at that, I don't think that's an expense that the state or the Legislature, the people of Alberta need to undertake at this time. It's simply unnecessary.

I'd like us to all roll up our sleeves and do a little more work here and handle a few more calls, maybe, instead of buying a pin for someone to go on a trip to, say, some foreign jurisdiction and hand out Alberta pins that maybe some members are paying for out of their offices – I don't know – or some other things like that, maybe one less silent auction item. Don't get me wrong; I've provided a silent auction item as well from time to time. But all I'm saying is that it's just that we can all do a little more work in our constituency associations, possibly hire another person, and handle everyone's concerns. I don't think we need another four MLAs.

In fact, the hon. leader of our party, the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, has been so bold as to suggest that we need another four MLAs like we need a hole in the head. That's not really language you would use, but he did use it.

An Hon. Member: Shocking.

Mr. Hehr: Shocking, yes. If you talk about shocking, that was actually shocking when that was said. I believe I said we need another four MLAs like a dog needs more fleas. Actually, when I went home to discuss this with my father, he said: well, the Legislature needs another four MLAs like the hon. Member for Calgary-

Buffalo needs a doughnut. I thought that was a little bit mean of my father, but he can be like that sometimes. Nonetheless, I think the point is being made. There are lots of these things – we can keep on going – that are kind of funny and euphemisms for, I guess, things people don't need or what Alberta citizens don't need at this time. What they don't need is a greater expense for maybe what we can all do here more efficiently by the use of technology and that sort of stuff.

Moving on to, I guess, some other portions of the bill, I was encouraged to hear that the commission when it's established can use even more updated information from the 2006 census. I don't know if that information will be available or out there, but I think that's another recognition that maybe there is technology out there that will allow us to find out what the true population of Alberta is and where people are located in this province and allow us to do even a more up-to-date finding out how many people need to be here.

I think there is one question, and I might as well ask it now. It'll probably go back to my office, or possibly the hon. Minister of Justice is here right now, and she could probably answer this later on or possibly even later today or something like that. I know we're allowed to have now four, I believe, ridings outside of 50 per cent of the population. I believe that's what that is.

Mr. MacDonald: It's 25 per cent.

Mr. Hehr: No. I believe this amendment has changed it now to be 50 per cent of the people. If we just take a couple of seconds, I'll grab that. I believe it says four ridings outside of 50 per cent of what the average is. I believe this is a change from what it used to be, from being 25 per cent outside of the riding. If that has been a change – and I'm not sure if it is – if the hon. Minister of Justice could explain how it differs from what was there before. I do have some possible concerns about that. If that could be addressed, maybe those concerns could be relieved.

Nonetheless, I think this is one of those bills that will probably address some of the things that have changed in Alberta society. Primarily, we are no longer a rural society. Most of our people have gone to the cities or outlying areas of cities, bedroom communities, that sort of thing. We're no longer an agricultural or rural-based society. I think this Electoral Boundaries Commission will have a lot of work to do in recognizing that the vast majority of our citizens are living in cities. I believe probably 70 per cent, possibly 71 per cent at this time. The electoral map has to reflect that. I think this Assembly should reflect that. I think some of the decisions we make in here will be significantly impacted by a more realistic drawing of an electoral map that actually reflects where our population resides.

I look forward to this commission being drawn, hopefully, recognizing some of those things. Going back to my first point, let's recognize that we are in a time of constraint. I will most likely be putting forward an amendment later on, just to give the hon. members of the government a heads-up, so they can maybe think about this, that maybe this commission can do their job with redrawing the electoral map if there are only 83 members in it. I think that's something to think about. Let's show them that we can roll up our own sleeves here in difficult times and take some more calls. Let's get the Alberta SuperNet up and working in different places and all that stuff.

Nevertheless, I think those are my comments, and of course I'll have more at different time periods. I appreciate being given the opportunity to speak. I may go have a doughnut right now.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. member who wishes to speak? The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright on the bill.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo's comments. I hadn't really planned on speaking to this, but I do have to point out a few observations. I know that the hon. member talked about the cities being where the population resides, but there has to be some consideration given sometimes at some point to where our food resides and where our oil and gas reside and where all the people who produce those things that get funneled into the city reside. I know that the majority of the population continues to urbanize – the whole globe continues to urbanize – but somewhere we have got to establish a balance.

I know that technology will provide some of those solutions. I mean, for some reason some of the newspapers in this province keep commenting on how well I utilize technology to talk to constituents. I don't know that I'm the best one, but I do the best I can. But you have to understand that in rural Alberta, Mr. Speaker, people don't just want to see you on a video screen or over the phone. Every one of my constituents, all 34,000 that live there, don't call me Mr. Griffiths; they call me Doug. They ask me how my wife and kids are doing. They ask me, you know, how my garden is growing and how the lawn is growing. They talk to me as though I'm a member of each and every one of the communities.

You have to understand that in my constituency of Battle River-Wainwright, Mr. Speaker, there are 32 different communities, there are five different county and MD councils, and then there are all the elected school boards that I have to represent. All of these people are only represented by me. It's not an urban centre, where there are two school boards or one city council that is represented by 20 urban MLAs. This is 43 different elected bodies combined that are only represented by me, and every single one of them expects to see me every couple of months to sit down and talk about the issues, not over the phone but right there, face to face. On top of that, in each of those 32 communities there are parades, there are fairs, there are rodeos, there are all the graduations, there are all the fundraising events plus every other event that goes on that for some reason everybody always expects me to be there for.

There are typically only two opinions, Mr. Speaker, in my constituency. Either people come up and say, "I can't believe you can actually maintain a presence regularly in each of your 32 communities and get around to see the councils and attend all of those events," or people don't understand that I have all of the constituency issues to deal with. We're up here, two hours from my constituency, with all of the committee work, the parliamentary assistant duties that I have, and the time that we spend in this Legislature, and they wonder how I can even make it. Or, as I said, because they don't understand how many committee meetings we have, how much work goes into the budget, how much time we actually spend up here, they ask me: why aren't you attending every single thing?

I actually had one of my constituents come up to me at a fundraising event in one of the larger communities in my constituency, walked up to me and said: you weren't at the graduation ceremony; why weren't you? She was very upset. I said: well, between my parliamentary assistant duties, the committee duties that I have, the time we spend in the Legislature, the fact that we've been working on the budget, the fact that I have 32 communities to represent, and I try to sometimes squeeze in some time with my wife and sons, I may not have had an event that Saturday night, but I might have chosen, actually, to put my two boys to bed after I gave them a bath and kissed them goodnight. She looked aghast. She suddenly realized that she had no idea about the amount of work that goes on up here, how much time we spend up here.

Mr. Speaker, I've talked to a lot of people in my constituency. We spend time historically in this province and across western Canada talking about how in the eastern provinces we sometimes think that Ontario and Quebec or Ottawa and Toronto are the centre of the universe. They have so much of the population, and we don't get a voice out here, where we produce so much of the natural resources. I've suggested that perhaps we should take the 83 MLAs and divide them in half and have half of them always based on population and half of them on sort of a grid cut out of the province. It doesn't matter whether four people live there and all the oil is there or a hundred thousand people are there and there's no oil there, it never changes. So we'd have balance in this House between the regions where our resources are and people work hard to produce them and where the population lives. We've complained a lot in this province, across western Canada, about how we face the same situation and we need a triple-E Senate in Canada, but we don't model it here in the province.

I know that people talk about equal representation, one person, one vote or one person, one representative, so that we all should represent about 40,000 people. But, Mr. Speaker, somewhere within the consideration of the courts and within this Assembly there has got to be consideration given for fair representation, where 21 MLAs in the city who represent one city council, two school boards, and one health authority, who may have a lot of work – I'm not saying that they don't have a lot of work – have to be balanced with an MLA that lives in rural Alberta, where it takes two hours to go from one corner of the constituency to the other, and has 32 communities to represent, 43 different elected bodies. There has to be some consideration, some balance given to that.

Although I would still like to see deeper democratic discussions had about whether or not we could split the House between 42 MLAs based on population and 41 based on regions or maybe split into two Houses – I don't know – some really deep, back to the very beginning philosophical discussions about democracy, there is no way that I would not support something that will add more MLAs to make sure that rural MLAs aren't taxed more with more communities, more disparity, and less voice in this House.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: We have five minutes for comments and questions. The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, I thank the hon. member for his questions. I'll make some brief comments, and then maybe he can answer sort of from my comments and generalize where I'm going.

I heard his comments on the fact that something has to represent where our oil comes from and where our wheat comes from and all that sort of stuff. But the simple fact of the matter is: that stuff doesn't vote. That stuff is not what we represent. We don't represent oil that comes out of the ground. We don't represent wheat. We represent people, okay? Those are the people who cast their ballots and who actually go to the polls and actually talk to an MLA. It's called representation by population, and that is the primary goal along with effective representation. I do know that that is a portion of it, but I think that you can do effective representation. And that's what we owe our citizens: effective representation.

I don't know if you have to be at every graduation. I'm not at every graduation in my community although I think people know I get around to a fairly significant number of events in my community and don't say that I'm not able to be seen on the streets. There are certain things that have to, I guess, come first, and I believe effective representation can be given to the technology devices that are available, that people have an ability to get a hold of you and that you can be accountable through these things. Just simply put, that's sort of where my feelings are.

I guess we all have our own feelings on this. People are in my office all the time who can't speak the language. We go our extra mile to try and help this, that, and the other thing, so I know the challenges.

Anyways, I'm starting to ramble. I'll pass it on as just sort of a general comment, plus I'll give you a chance to comment back.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Griffiths: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wasn't meaning – and I'm sure the member understands – that his job is easier than mine because I have different groups to represent or so many different communities. But there tend to be different mindsets that occur in the city as opposed to rural Alberta.

One of the great principles of democracy that we always discuss is that you have to prevent a tyranny of the majority. Democracy is great. Democracy is fundamental. But somewhere when you have a vote of 51 per cent or 80 per cent for something and 49 per cent or 20 per cent opposed – democracy has to be a fundamental principle, but you cannot allow 80 per cent of the population to dominate 20 per cent of the population because you could undermine the very fabric of the democracy if you don't prevent a tyranny of the majority.

I meet people in the city who sometimes talk about the environment. It's very important to them. It's very important to rural Albertans, too. But there are fundamentally different ideas about what protecting the environment means to rural Albertans and urban Albertans. I have a cousin in the city of Calgary who talks a lot about the environment and the need to shut down the oil sands, not realizing that this isn't just providing oil and gas; it's providing plastics and diapers and so many other fundamental things in our lives. Rural Albertans have a different understanding. They're not destroying the environment by growing wheat. So if you suddenly give too much influence and power to urban Alberta to the detriment of rural Alberta, where it doesn't have a fair and balanced voice, you could wind up undermining all that very success that you're trying to achieve.

I appreciate the member's one person, one vote and that those resources don't vote, but somewhere, Mr. Speaker, you have to make sure that those voices are significant enough and balanced enough against the majority so that you prevent a tyranny. Thank you.

Mr. Chase: Just within the five minute period I want to put it on the record that over here we know all about tyranny of the majority. Beyond a doubt. In terms of responsibility, try being an opposition member and having a number of portfolios. I realize that we're not in the position of the NDs, but there's a struggle involved. I just wondered if part of the solution that you might envisage would be a form of proportional representation.

Mr. Griffiths: I know that time is short. Very briefly, it really depends on how it's formulated because right now the 34,000 people in my constituency come to me knowing that I represent them.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview on the bill.

Dr. Taft: On the bill, yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to take advantage of the Minister of Justice being here. I regret to say I missed some of her introductory comments because I was just in a commitment outside. I will keep my comments fairly brief.

I listened with sympathy to the comments from the Member for Battle River-Wainwright, and I know that's a huge, spread out, sparsely populated constituency. It is a complicated issue. I do think there is a case to be made, actually, for fewer seats. I sometimes wonder why there needs to be 83 of us here and if a lot of things government gets into perhaps unnecessarily or just because there are make-work projects for MLAs, but I won't prolong that.

I know it's limited debate, but if I were to take my seat and open the opportunity under 29(2)(a) for the Minister of Justice to just go through again – I think she might have done this once before – the variations from the mean that are proposed here, plus or minus 25 per cent, minus 50 per cent, that sort of thing. I know that will probably come up in committee, but can the minister take a moment to elucidate the approach of this bill on that particular issue? No? I don't read sign language, but I take it that was a no. At the next stage. Okay. All right. I just thought we could be innovative under 29(2)(a).

Well, I acknowledge this is an important bill. It affects every one of us. There's a good chance that any number of us won't have constituencies to represent after this commission is done its work. I must say it's a concern of mine. I'm concerned that Edmonton-Riverview will actually get dismantled through this process because of political reasons. However, I'll wait and see. It could happen. It was attempted last time. I should get it on the record that all the submissions last time around concerning my constituency from the Progressive Conservative constituency associations in southwest Edmonton advocated dismantling Edmonton-Riverview, and I think there'll be an even stronger move to that next time.

Anyways, Mr. Speaker, I won't prolong the debate in terms of fewer seats, but I actually think it would be a really refreshing idea to consider. I think we all get carried away with the importance of our jobs. We're all busy. We could all go 24 hours a day because we all know that people expect us at their graduations, or there are homeless people, there are receptions, there are 100th birthday parties, all of that stuff. But at some point we just have to say: enough. City councillors do it with far larger populations. Members of Parliament do it with far larger populations. I think that would be an interesting debate. I wouldn't win it, so I won't prolong it. I do, however, hope that we can keep the number of MLAs to 83 because I actually don't think we need to be adding more politicians to the social-political fabric of Alberta.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: We have five minutes for questions and comment. The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I listened to the comments from the opposition and from the government side of the House with interest. I wanted to first say that I think that the nature of what we do in this House, even though we all probably as members have a different take on it, inherently comes from an understanding and an abiding faith that what our constituents have elected us to do is to represent them.

I have to say, Mr. Speaker, that from the work I have done and I think other people have done in this House, not only in their current careers in life but in terms of work around the world, I truly do believe that there is no replacement for standing face to face with someone and listening to what their concerns might be. I know that there is much celebration of technology and much celebration of finding other ways to do things, but it has always been to me in my life experience and the case in my life that it is very difficult to substitute that direct conversation because people will share things with you in person that they will not share with you by e-mail or by phone.

I believe that it is a fundamental piece of what we have to do in this House, all kidding aside as to how many people represent us or whether we may or may not think that people effectively represent in some joking manner. But when you're standing face to face with someone and you're seeing where they live and how they live and what their day was like and what it's going to be like tomorrow, there is nothing that can replace that. So I would ask the member under 29(2)(a) to perhaps comment on that.

With respect to the 25 per cent question which has come up – and there have been some queries about that – there was reference in my opening comments to 25 per cent and 50 per cent. The 25 per cent reference was with respect to no constituency in the province having either more or less than 25 per cent of the mean average of people in a constituency so that you don't see tremendous deviations in that, with the exception of the special electoral districts, which do have a set of criteria attached to the legislation that would allow for exceptions beyond 25 per cent. So I hope that that may clarify to some extent, because two 25s add up to 50, so people sometimes confuse the issues. They are actually separate issues, and it's about ensuring consistency across the province with that one exception, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. On the bill, Mr. Speaker?

The Deputy Speaker: In the time available, for questions and comment.

Mr. MacDonald: No. I just wish to participate in the debate, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: All right. Does anybody wish to join the questions and comments? We still have one or two minutes.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on the bill.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, Bill 45 is interesting. We could wait before we proceed with this commission, but for reasons known to themselves, the government has decided that now is the time. With this bill, of course, we are proposing another boundaries commission to be established no later than the middle of the summer. We're going to have the five-member commission prepare recommendations to divide our province into 87 proposed provincial electoral divisions, an increase of four divisions, or four constituencies.

Well, certainly, I have listened to the discussion to date. Since we increased the size of the Legislative Assembly to 83 seats, there has been a significant change in how information is exchanged whether it's between individuals or between an elected representative and their constituency. There has been significant improvement. Some days when I look at my e-mail and there are dozens and dozens of emails, I doubt that, but overall the electronic age has certainly made it much easier for each and every representative to have a dialogue with their constituents. For that reason and that reason alone I don't think it's necessary that we increase the size of the Legislative Assembly by four seats.

I certainly think that there should be a fair redistribution. The hon. member across the way talked about urban, rural areas, and there are sparsely populated areas. We all know that Alberta was one of the areas of Canada that was slow to urbanize, or change from rural to urban. Now we see the dramatic growth in Edmonton and Calgary, Grande Prairie, Medicine Hat . . .

Dr. Taft: Red Deer.

Mr. MacDonald: . . . Red Deer, Lethbridge, Fort McMurray, and it's only logical that we would see a redistribution of the electoral map. I don't think it is necessary to add four additional seats.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, as it was correctly pointed out by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, was looking for some efficiencies and looking for ways that we could perhaps save a few dollars. Well, that's one of them. We may have to look at this. Certainly, a way we could save money is by maintaining the present number of MLAs in the Assembly.

We all know that Edmonton was a loser in the last boundaries commission. It was astonishing to think that a central part of Edmonton would lose its representation. No one is saying that Calgary should not have gotten additional seats. The dramatic population growth was there, and it was evident. Calgary had to get an increase in representation.

This gets to my point where one of the basic principles of democracy is representation by population, Mr. Speaker. Where the population is is where the representatives are. Rural areas, sure, they have unique circumstances, but so does the constituency of Edmonton-Riverview, so does the constituency of Calgary-Varsity. Both of them have large postsecondary institutions. Actually, Calgary-Varsity has less than Edmonton-Riverview, but they are unique. Calgary-Buffalo is a downtown, urban constituency with a lot of issues around new Canadians. There are issues around homelessness. There are issues around the care centres that are to provide for people who are, unfortunately, in circumstances that do not allow them to participate in the job market. Edmonton-Gold Bar. A complete section of our constituency deals with file after file after file on social services and access to affordable housing, access to adequate medical care, access to homeless shelters. Each and every area and each and every neighbourhood has interests that should be looked after by their respective representative.

When you look at the basic principle of representation by population, a commission is going to have to make some tough decisions. I think we are going to have to look at Fort McMurray and the whole Wood Buffalo region. I'm not saying that the hon. member that's elected there is too busy, but there's been a dramatic increase in the population there, and I'm confident there will be in the next few years, so that has to be reflected in the new map.

I know, again, that Alberta's population has increased by more than 1 million since the last time the constituencies were changed or increased. We're looking at 23 years, I believe, since that was done, Mr. Speaker. In that 23-year period we have gone from a computer the size of a truck, even larger, to one that the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill can just pack up in 30 seconds and away he goes. So that's how much the information age has changed. I think the information age allows us with larger constituencies to represent them effectively.

Now, I don't know whether we're looking at increasing the number of seats to 87 to see if we can avoid a court challenge. I was surprised after the last boundary redistribution that there was not a court challenge because we are not in balance. There is not a balance by the principle of representation by population. If this proposal becomes law and the boundary commission is struck and it makes its recommendations, then by this time next year we'll have a good idea as to what they are. If there is still what I think is an imbalance between rural representation and urban representation, then I think there will be well-meaning, concerned citizens who will consider taking this matter through the courts.

Mr. Speaker, the proposed bill contains the legislative means to allow the commission process to start so that they can meet the deadlines that have been outlined. This is in section 2. Section 3 of the proposed act, which would amend the current section 12, allows the commission to rely on several forms of census that they would be unable to use, as I understand it, under the current act. The new statistical data relied upon would incorporate municipal statistical information, which is gathered with greater frequency, and would allow the commission to have a more up-to-date perspective of conditions on the ground in each constituency in the province. I think that's a fine idea.

In fact, I was driving just before dark last night out in Edmonton-Sherwood Park. I shouldn't say Edmonton-Sherwood Park – not until we get that Bill 36 passed; then it will be Edmonton-Sherwood Park – but the Sherwood Park neighbourhood. I saw the sign that alerted citizens to the census. They had two ways that they could participate in the census. They could wait until someone came to their door, or they could do it on the Internet, another example of how the Internet has changed our lives. Having this census information is really important . . .

The Deputy Speaker: The chair hesitates to interrupt the hon. member, but it's 6 o'clock, so the House stands adjourned until 7:30 p.m.

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 25

Teachers' Pension Plans Amendment Act, 2009

[Adjourned debate May 5: Mr. Renner]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise in second reading on Bill 25, the Teachers' Pension Plans Amendment Act, 2009. I just wanted to make a couple of comments on this bill. I do have a number of younger teachers that live in my fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre because I tend to have a number of young professionals who are living in all of the many wonderful apartments and condominiums in my constituency, and they're actually really good about keeping in touch with me.

This question of the unfunded liability has been around for a long time. Actually, Mr. Speaker, because I am the daughter of two teachers, I've been listening to the discussion of this unfunded liability for most of my life. My parents, my father in particular, were very concerned about the fact that it was unfunded from way back when. Now, both of my parents are long retired. Actually, they retired prior to 1992, so they're really not captured in this.

What the younger teachers in my constituency have approached me to say is: "How is this fair? I could go to B.C. or Saskatchewan or Manitoba, and I would be paying a considerably smaller percentage of my salary towards a secure pension for when I retire as a teacher." But here in Alberta, as young teachers, they feel that they are having to pay for the sins of their fathers, if I may be allowed to paraphrase a little bit. They were pretty unhappy about that, but they're still going to do it because they need and want that pension. I think they work hard for it. It was certainly an issue that needed to be addressed.

I don't want to say that it was considered okay at the time because I think certain financial people and economists and people like my father would have argued even, you know, back in the '50s, '60s, '70s, '80s that having an unfunded liability was a bad idea, but it was certainly allowed, and lots of pension plans were unfunded. As people retired, the money would get shifted over to the account to pay their pension. But as we grow into maturity as a province, we have a larger workforce, and we have to compete nationally and internationally for good teachers. One of the things that we have the ability and the opportunity to achieve here is an excellent education system. It's important that we have excellent teachers to help us and support us in that. That competition factor started to come into play plus the economic issue of having an unfunded liability.

This has come about through a series of smart moves and stumbles and bumbles, but we got here, which is good. We did arrive at an agreement. Essentially, what the government got was an assurance of labour stability from the teachers for a period of five years. The teachers got both the government paying in for their unfunded liability portion and the government picking up the teachers' pre-1992 unfunded portion. Both sides were at fault here, Mr. Speaker, and I should point this out although I think it's argued that the government was at fault for longer, so their unfunded liability went on for longer than the teachers' did.

We clearly have had a downturn in our economy, and I'm wondering if I can get someone on the government side to talk now or maybe at the beginning of Committee of the Whole about how this additional funding commitment is going to be managed given the pressures on the budget during these times. We have less revenue coming in. In most cases our costs, our expenses continue. They haven't necessarily increased unless we're talking about infrastructure costs. How long is this repayment expected to take, and what will be the total cost to the taxpayers in the end run of funding this?

Attached to that – and I'm not doing a sectional analysis here, of course, Mr. Speaker; that would be left for Committee of the Whole – as I peruse the bill, I notice that there are sections that are talking about taking money from the general revenue fund and advancing it to enable the school boards to make the payments on these pre '92 benefits. I'd like it clarified what the schedule is for those transfers, for that advance of money, and how much money is going to be advanced to allow those payments to be made.

Just a couple of fairly small questions about this. There's a long timeline of how we got to be here. Well, I don't need to go into all the unhappiness that happened around this. I think all sides seem fairly happy with the arrangements now. I don't think I would have made the same deal because I'm a little worried about that, about what the government will do in four and a half years' time or four years' time that could make the teachers pretty unhappy, and they'll just have to suck it up because they agreed to a five-year period of stability in those labour negotiations. So just a couple of questions about the payments and the payment schedule and what the total amounts would be.

Overall, this seems to have made my teachers happier, and it makes me happier as a legislator and as an Albertan. I think that more than any other resource that we have, education is going to keep us prosperous and healthy long into the future, long past any oil reserves, long past any gas reserves, long past coal or any of the renewable resources. That knowledge-based economy is us, and as long as we keep our people healthy and we have an excellent education system that people have access to, we should excel and be able to compete across the world. That's what this bill should allow us to do. It's going to allow us to compete for teachers. It should keep the teachers that we have here happier. We are looking at a period of labour peace, so this should be a happy, good-news bill. I hope it is, and I just look forward to answers to my questions.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is exactly right on. I don't think anybody can guarantee her right now how long it will take to actually contribute to the pension fund so that it becomes self-sustaining. Till then, we will take money out of general revenue to meet the commitments of the pension fund.

It really does depend on how quickly our economy turns around. I know she knows that a lot of pension funds are scrambling right now to try and get themselves back into a funded position. I think that nearly everyone in North America will probably find themselves in some kind of position. For this particular bill, though – as she said, you know, the devil is in the details – it just simply acknowledges that we will be responsible as a government for that portion, and we will contribute to the ongoing costs on a yearly basis until we're able to fund the pension and kind of let it go.

So the hon. member is right in her concerns. They are the concerns we share. I don't know how quickly we'll be able to accommodate it. I don't know how soon we'll have the money to contribute or what form it could take to fund the pension. I know she's saying: now, what does he mean? I'll talk to her about it because there are some ideas that I think the teachers and Albertans would really support, but that's not really in this bill. It's just simply acknowledging our commitment to that debt.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. member wish to speak on the bill?

Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question.

Bill 37

Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2009

[Adjourned debate April 28: Mr. Johnson]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to join second reading debate on Bill 37, the Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2009. This is an act that normally gets amended pretty much every year, a little tweak here, a little minor adjustment there. I think that's pretty much what we're looking at there, so I'm not going to dwell on this for any time at all.

I must admit that I raised a bit of an eyebrow on one particular change in here, that having to do with the Alberta royalty tax credit program, in that we're amending that section in the act to legitimize a bunch of claims that have been made in the oil and gas industry based on a wrong approach or a wrong interpretation by the industry as to what the laws were so that we had all kinds of oil and gas companies inadvertently breaking our own tax laws. We've said: well, rather than go after them to get the tax credit money back, even though the royalty tax credit doesn't exist anymore, we're going to make this amendment to absolve everybody of those past sins. It's a little bit like, you know, two wrongs making a right or that two wrongs don't make a right but three lefts do. I don't know. In any event, I raised an eyebrow, but it's not a deal breaker.

Other than that, we are basically looking at just some housekeeping changes that parallel changes in federal law and a couple of amendments made in Quebec. Some Alberta scientific research and experimental development tax credit issues that were introduced in Budget 2008 are to be resolved in this bill. That may bear a little more discussion in committee. I don't know. We'll see when we get to committee.

Certainly, in principle I don't think we have any problem whatsoever with Bill 37. I don't know if others want to get in on the debate or not, but I'm pretty sure that in pretty short order, Mr. Speaker, we can call the question on this one.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, you wish to speak on the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've just got a couple of comments. I think this bill is very timely the way things are going. Just a quick comment. Is there any money owing by the corporations? Do we need to make this amendment now to seize the bank accounts of the corporations? That's the only comment that I want to make.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Anyone else wish to speak on the bill?

Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 37 read a second time]

Bill 38

Tourism Levy Amendment Act, 2009

[Adjourned debate April 28: Mr. VanderBurg]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. I rise to join second reading debate on Bill 38, the Tourism Levy Amendment Act, 2009. This really seeks to do two things: figure out when we do and when we don't get our share of the 4 per cent tourism levy in hotels where reward points are involved. The other issue is: do we get our 4 per cent when a reservation has been made, a deposit put down, and then the reservation is cancelled?

I think what this does is attempt to standardize everything across the industry so that if rewards points are deemed to have a certain dollar value, in fact, if money changes hands so that the rewards points company actually pays the hotel operator a portion of the room rate in that case, then the tourism levy applies. If it's comped, complimentary, then there is no tourism levy. The same thing goes on the deposits and the cancellations. If the reservation fee is refunded, we don't get anything; if there's a cancellation fee, we do. It's just, basically, that the province getting its 4 per cent of whatever money changes hands. Seems pretty straightforward.

On that basis, Mr. Speaker, again, I have nothing at second reading stage to complain about. We may get into a little more examination of some of the specific details in committee, but again maybe not. We'll have to see. Certainly, at this point I'm pleased to let this bill proceed.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, on the bill.

Ms. Notley: I also rise in order to join the debate on Bill 38, the Tourism Levy Amendment Act. As has already been pointed out by the Member for Calgary-Currie, this appears to be a primarily administrative piece of legislation that would focus on clarifying the circumstances under which the 4 per cent levy is paid, where accommodation, as mentioned, is paid for using reward points. Of course, this clarification appears to be a valuable one and one that would be to everyone's benefit.

As well, it does appear also to make changes that are not dissimilar from those which have been made in other acts with respect to the ability to collect against an account which is jointly held. Again, this appears to be a case where in the past these types of accounts couldn't be accessed where they were jointly held. This is not a matter that we would have significant difficulty with.

With that in mind, at this point, anyway, we have tentative support of the bill, and we'll look into additional implications in third reading to determine whether there are any concerns that arise upon that level of scrutiny.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do appreciate the understanding and the co-operation given by the members opposite. I just wanted to stand and give my appreciation to both of them.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 38 read a second time]

Bill 39
Tobacco Tax Amendment Act, 2009

[Adjourned debate April 28: Mr. Weadick]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Again, Mr. Speaker, thank you. Bill 39, the Tobacco Tax Amendment Act, 2009, is, I guess, a little more involved than the previous two bills we've just dealt with in second reading. It's a little more than administrative. I mean, we do have a problem here, or so the government contends, with the issue of tobacco smuggling and the illicit sale of tobacco and illicit importation of tobacco becoming a growing problem in the province of Alberta. In part the Tobacco Tax Amendment Act seeks to deal with that.

Of course, it enables the higher tax on smokes announced in the budget. It also brings in some amendments that should more effectively prohibit unwanted activity by strengthening prohibitions and clarifying their application. Again, it brings in the ability to seize joint bank accounts where that applies, which pretty much just makes this uniform with other taxation acts on our books in Alberta. It broadens some seizure powers, and it doubles fines and triples civil penalties for unlawful possession for sale of tax-free tobacco or tobacco on which tax has not been paid.

There are a couple of other things as well. A late filing penalty will be imposed, and it enhances requirements for tax collectors to make their reporting obligations more transparent. It will provide greater access to books and records. I was going to say a better and easier paper trail although, actually, it does that by encouraging the migration over to electronic record keeping and making sure that once somebody has made the move to electronic record keeping, they can't go back to the old paper voucher system, which I think is a good idea as well.

I don't think that second reading is necessarily the appropriate place to ask this, but I do think that when we get to committee study on this bill, I would like to hear some detailed description from the minister of finance or the sponsor of the bill as to the extent and nature of the problem of tobacco smuggling and the illicit sale and importation and possession of tobacco in the province of Alberta. We have long been, of course, under the impression that cross-border tobacco smuggling and various other illegal activities having to do with cigarettes and other tobacco products were a huge problem back east where the borders of Quebec and Ontario and New York state all converge.

Maybe I just haven't been paying attention, being a reformed smoker of many, many years now who has gotten to the point where I don't even get cravings anymore. I really don't pay too much attention to what's going on in the world of big tobacco or the world of tobacco generally, but I must say it caught me a bit by surprise when during briefing, we were told that there is a significantly, from the impression that I was left with, increased amount of law-breaking going on around tobacco.

There is, of course, a lot of money to be made off tobacco, and the province, of course, wants to make as much money off tobacco as it can while tobacco is a legal product. I note that an additional $70 million in revenue should be collected each year now that we've bumped up the tax on smokes. Unless all smokers actually make a New Year's resolution to quit and stick to it next year, you can't help but say that that's a fairly stable and predictable source of revenue. In these economic times you have to concede that that's not necessarily a negative as far as the provincial treasury is concerned. Increased taxes on tobacco are also an effective deterrent on smoking but may possibly be contributing to the increase in illegal activities around tobacco as well.

I'm looking forward to a discussion about that at committee stage. For now, in principal, no problem with this bill. I'll take my seat, Mr. Speaker, and allow others to join the debate if they wish.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker, for allowing me to join in the second reading debate of Bill 39, the Tobacco Tax Amendment Act, 2009. I'll start out by saying that I am so glad I'm not a smoker anymore. Holy mackerel, it's expensive to be a smoker now. There's that sin tax that should, I hope, be working as a deterrent, as a disincentive to people.

Mr. Taylor: What did they cost when you quit?

Ms Blakeman: I think it was, like, $40 a carton or maybe $44 a carton, which makes that seem like a very long time ago, Mr. Speaker.

We are now generating almost a billion dollars – $915 million is the projected revenue from tobacco tax in this budget year of '09-10, 6.2 per cent of total government revenue. So this is not an insignificant amount of money that it's raising. I mean, I know that our gambling revenues are sort of $1.3 billion or $1.5 billion, and that, I think, is a significant amount of money. So this is a fair chunk of change we're getting from this. One can only hope that eventually the amount of tax that we make off of this goes down because there are fewer people smoking. I will admit that it hasn't been long enough for me. I slow down as I leave buildings, walk very slowly, inhale deeply as I move through the crowds, but that's about the extent of my participation in smoking these days.

I'm a little curious about the decision to put right into this act the ability to seize property. Now, clearly, homes, domiciles are exempted from this because the language that's being used is "other than a dwelling house," which is very odd language, but I'm assuming that that's meaning a personal residence. It is allowing it if officers believe that there's a contravention or that the vehicle or the premises have been used for activities that contravene this act. They can enter and search, people have to help them with information, and an officer who believes there has been a contravention can seize that thing, which would be a vehicle or premises, I'm assuming. They have to immediately take it to a provincial court judge with an affidavit, and if they don't, they have to return that thing to the person. I'm thinking: wow.

Is this legislation in line with similar legislation across the country? That's the first question. The second question is: how many times has that sort of seizure power been used in other provinces? If I could get some idea on a per capita basis, you know, because Ontario is significantly larger than we are, so if they've seized somebody's car 10 times, then I would expect a rate for us would be significantly less than that.

I guess where I'm a bit curious here is that my first memory of legislation that started to talk about seizure around something that wasn't sort of big-time Criminal Code activity was around seizing johns' cars. That, to my eye at the time, was a unique solution by a community trying to deal with an invasion of their neighbourhood and them trying to get a handle on that activity that was really disrupting their community. The seizure of the cars and also the john school was a way of those communities actually dealing with something.

Since then it just strikes me that almost every time I turn around, there is a seizure power that is being considered in an act, and here I see it again. I'm curious as to whether this is now another made-in-Alberta solution or whether this is following a trend that we see across North America. If it is, how common is that trend? How many times a year do we see a successful seizure of a vehicle or premises in connection with a contravention of a provincial tobacco tax law?

My colleagues are clearly supportive of this bill, and there don't seem to be a lot of people who want to get up and speak about it, but it is starting to strike me as strange that we so often default to the idea of property seizure now. I don't think it really serves much as a disincentive, but my colleagues opposite are welcome to get up and argue that with me. It seems to be sort of a back door or quick route to police being able to get their hands on evidence that they wouldn't be able to get if they had to go sort of a longer route. So I'm just interested in how common this is becoming and what kind of comparisons the government can supply to me about this kind of activity.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall on the bill.

8:00

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and speak on Bill 39. I think I agree with everything in the bill here, but I don't see any money being spent on smokers who kick the habit. I don't see it in here. So I'm just looking for the answer for that only, if there is any money put aside for the smokers who kick the habit, through Alberta health or whatever department.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. member wish to speak on the bill? Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question.

Oh, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. Please stand up.

Ms Notley: I am truly having one of those days where apparently no one in the Speaker's chair can see this far down the Assembly. [interjections] Maybe that's it. I need higher heels, right?

Anyway, it's a pleasure to be able to rise to join in the debate on this bill. My remarks are not entirely dissimilar from those that have already been put forward. Generally speaking, those parts of the bill that talk about taxation and increasing taxes on cigarettes and cigars are something that our caucus supports completely. Frankly, separate and apart from the degree to which this is a revenue generator for government, we know that increasing the cost of smoking does, in fact, bring down the number of people that smoke, that there is no question that you can see a direct linkage between taxes going up and the number of people smoking dropping a little bit or the amount that they smoke dropping a little bit. That's important because there is no question that this is probably one of the most problematic public health issues that we have in our province and in our country, and anything we can do to reduce the frequency of people smoking is a good thing.

Like other speakers I have to say that I, too, was once a smoker, and I have to say that it was the combination of cost and the increasing inconvenience of smoking that ultimately drove me to making everybody around me miserable for several months while I got to the point of being able to go without smoking. So that's all good.

I do, however, have a couple of concerns that I will be seeking to hear more information from the government on as it relates to points that have already been identified with respect to, again, the authority of the police around people that they suspect may have breached the act. Again, there does seem to be a theme of where we are really moving pretty fast and furious on every element of being able to push to the maximum and perhaps beyond the maximum the degree to which we are violating fundamental rights and freedoms in the country.

I'm a little concerned about that portion of the act that removes or changes the standard under which the officer can engage in search and seizure without a warrant. Previously it used to be reasonable and probable grounds; now it appears to be just reasonable grounds. I'm not sure if that is a change that arises from legal developments such that the "and probable" is no longer given meaning anyway or whether we are in fact lowering the standard of knowledge that the officer needs to have prior to searching and seizing without a warrant, a warrant, of course, being one of those things that typically has been seen as a safeguard against extensive abuse of state authority. So that's the first thing.

Of course, the other thing, again, talks about where there is a warrant, the whole ability to seize property, you know, regardless of where the ultimate adjudication is with respect to guilt or innocence of a party. Again, this is part of a growing trend that we see. So I basically want to hear more information about these issues, the degree to which they're replicated in other jurisdictions, what types of enforcement changes they would bring about, and what promises they're trying to remedy. Those are sort of the three key things I would want to hear more about in terms of why it is that we need to embark upon what is otherwise a steady walk towards diluting some fundamental rights. Those are my concerns on that.

Certainly, with respect to the issue of the taxes I just have to say that that is not really something that we can object to because to the extent that we can reduce or discourage people from purchasing cigarettes, you know, more power to you.

So that's our preliminary view of this piece of legislation in second reading, and I look forward to the opportunity to engage in a more detailed discussion as the bill makes its way through the Assembly. Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 39 read a second time]

Bill 40

Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2009

[Adjourned debate April 28: Dr. Brown]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, I'm weighing in on this one largely because as the finance critic I'm supposed to, but I think the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill pretty much summed up what this bill will do when he moved second reading of it. It will align the eligibility for the Alberta tuition credit with the eligibility for the federal tuition credit. That is necessary.

It also does some fancy math that the Member for Calgary-Nose Hill claimed the other day, when he was moving second reading, that he understood. I'm going to need to go and have a coffee with him afterwards because I don't. But, then, math was never my strong suit. It makes some minor calculation changes to the dividend tax credit to ensure that Alberta's dividend tax credit rate for dividends taxed at the general corporate rate remains at 10 per cent in 2010 and beyond regardless of whether the federal percentage changes a little bit or not. In principle, yeah, I support that.

Frankly, I've got nothing to complain about. I want the President of the Treasury Board to note that, that the Member for Calgary-Currie right now, at this very moment has nothing to complain about. But in a few minutes I will. I'll take my seat.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 40 read a second time]

8:10 Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Cao in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 33
Fiscal Responsibility Act

The Chair: We have amendment A1, which was moved on May 6. Does any hon. member have questions or comments on amendment A1? The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. We're speaking to amendment A1, which was moved by my colleague from Calgary-Varsity, that Bill 33, the Fiscal Responsibility Act, be amended in section 3 by adding the following after subsection (6):

- (7) Subject to section 2, if the net assets of the Alberta Sustainability Fund exceed $2 500 000 000, the excess or any portion of it may be allocated by the Treasury Board from the Alberta Sustainability Fund.

Mr. Chair, this is, I think, a fairly straightforward amendment to put back into the sustainability fund a requirement that it had before this particular bill came along seeking to change it, and that's the requirement to hold back in the fund an amount of money, a minimum balance that is there for emergencies, for natural disasters, you know, for unforeseen circumstances of that nature.

The old section required that a minimum balance of $2.5 billion be retained in the fund before any allocations from it could be made for balance sheet improvements. I know that the Member for Calgary-Varsity felt that that was a very good idea. I concur. It is an absolutely essential idea, in my opinion, that we require that the sustainability fund have that minimum balance in there at all times. We've been fortunate so far this year. No, we've been damn lucky so far this year.

Much of the province has been absolutely dry as a bone, yet we haven't had a major fire, not taking away from the impact that the fires in Sturgeon county and that area had on the people living in the immediate vicinity. But we have not had a fire go wildly out of control on us yet and burn over great swaths of territory, nor have we had any significant flooding that left damage totals in the hundreds of millions or billions of dollars, nor have we been in a position – and I'm keeping my fingers crossed that we're not going to get into this position – where the H1N1 flu went fully pandemic on us. It's been a heck of a blow to the pork-producing industry – there's no question about that – and that could get worse. I hope it doesn't, but it could. It has not had nearly as significant an impact on human health as we have all feared the next pandemic might. We've been very fortunate there as well.

With what has happened in terms of the H1N1 virus's impact on our pork producers, on the basis of what H1N1 did to wake up the world or reacquaint the world with the possibility of a very serious flu pandemic, with the fires that we had northeast of Edmonton last week, those examples specifically, I think we've dodged some bullets. They should be timely reminders to all of us in here that we do have a responsibility to be able to step up to the plate when a state of emergency occurs, when there is a disaster or a catastrophe that we didn't foresee, that we didn't see coming.

That's why the $2.5 billion was held in there as a minimum holdback in the sustainability fund, that through this bill, Bill 33, we are about to change. You never know. You never know when something bad is going to strike, when the lightning bolt is going to come down from on high and leave behind enough damage that you need ready access to a big pot of money to help out a lot of people who have been left in very dire straits.

Now, I would expect that the counterargument on the other side is going to be: "But, Mr. Chair, when we get through with Bill 33, when we get through with the new Fiscal Responsibility Act, we will have taken the existing sustainability fund and rolled the capital account into it and rolled the money set aside for Green TRIP and the money set aside for carbon capture and storage into that as well. You put it all together, and you come up with $17 billion. We know we're only going to run, at least we hope we're only going to run, a deficit of $4.7 billion this year. We're projecting deficits next year and the year after, and we're not so sure about the year after that, but we really don't think, or we really hope and pray, that we're not going to take this big, new, improved sustainability fund down to zero. So the Member for Calgary-Currie is, if not exactly fearmongering at this point, overstating the case, exaggerating the threat." Yada yada yada. Well, maybe I am and maybe I'm not.

The point to setting aside $2.5 billion that cannot be touched, that cannot be spent, that cannot be moved by the President of the Treasury Board or by Treasury Board out of the sustainability fund into general revenues or anywhere else, for that matter, is to make sure that if and when the unforeseen happens, we're reasonably, prudently ready for it. I mean, nobody can say whether the state of emergency is going to cost us $2.5 million or $2.5 billion or $25 billion. You can use the laws of probability and suggest that the odds that it will cost us much more than $2.5 billion in any given fiscal year are pretty slim. So it's a good, prudent figure, I think, to start with and to set aside.

We could be caught, quite figuratively, quite metaphorically, with our collective pants down on this one if we don't amend Bill 33 to set aside the first $2.5 billion as an emergency fund, if you will. That's why I would urge that this House pass amendment A1. I think that it's key to our being able as a province to handle the unforeseen and unplanned-for disasters and emergencies that do from time to time befall any jurisdiction.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Any other hon. member with to speak on amendment A1? The hon. President of the Treasury Board on A1.

Mr. Snelgrove: If we were to accept this, Mr. Chairman, it would virtually sterilize 2 and a half billion dollars. If you're going to maintain a minimum amount in a fund, then you might as well take that fund and invest it in a bank. So it's redundant.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre on amendment A1.

Ms Blakeman: Well, I always appreciate the President of the Treasury Board because he just cuts right to the chase. I appreciate that. I appreciate the fact that he cuts right to the chase. I'll try to do the same thing although I'm not as good at it as the President of the Treasury Board.

I think our issue with this is that the money that has now been deemed to be the stability fund does not consider those expenses that we see come up every single year and then actually are accounted for in this government's budgeting process through supplementary supply, and that is those expenses that tend to come up as so-called public emergencies. It tends to be stuff like fighting forest fires, for which there's a small amount put into the budget. Then there's always an understanding – and I'll place quotation marks around that – that the final amount, the total bill, would be organized through supplementary supply and monies put into that account or into that vote line to cover the final amount. We just think that that money should not be reliant on a supplementary supply process, that you should be able to pull from the sustainability fund.

Second to that, we are getting close enough now – happily, it doesn't seem like it's going to overwhelm us – with the H1N1 flu that our brains are starting to comprehend that we could have a day come in Alberta where we're facing a genuine public emergency for which we would need to have funds available. I think that's another reason for earmarking these funds.

Finally, of course, we have ongoing First Nations negotiations and also legal suits that eventually do get settled, and money would have to be available there. So we're anticipating a couple of things.

The President of the Treasury Board says: well, this money is sterilized. Well, yeah, it is because it would have to be held there in anticipation of need according to some of the scenarios I've outlined. But, frankly, if you don't set that money aside, then you are in big trouble when you actually need it because – guess what? – it's not sterilized. It's not there. It took me a bit longer to get around to that point, but I hope I made it.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I urge my colleagues to support this amendment.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wish to speak on the amendment?

Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question on the amendment.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Chair: We shall go back to the bill. The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you. Mr. Chairman, my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Centre would like to speak to the bill. Can I take my seat and allow her to go ahead of me? I am about to propose another amendment.

The Chair: Yeah. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I did not get an opportunity to speak to Bill 33 in second, and I would like to put some comments on the record at this point. I think that next to the Municipal Government Act this piece of legislation is the most amended piece of legislation that I have seen in my years in this Assembly. At the time that the version I was familiar with was introduced, it didn't pass a credibility test with me. Then, sure enough, almost every single year it has come back and been amended in some way, shape, or form, so it lost all credibility with me. When you stand up and say, "We're going to pass a piece of legislation that says that we can't run a deficit," it was great showboating. It was great branding. That's what it was, a branding exercise for the government to prove that they're government.

Some of the people that were in cabinet at the time they did this had been in cabinet at the time they racked up enormous deficits and finally a huge debt. Well, they were going to get on top of this. They were going to prove to the world – what was the phrase they used all the time? – that that was then and this is now, that they were a totally different group of people. No, they weren't, but it was a way of rebranding themselves and saying: "Okay. We're in charge. We're on top of this."

Boy, it's interesting looking back on this now. They were essentially saying: "We're on top of this. We're going to pass a law that we cannot run a deficit." Oh, yeah, great. Well, that sure lasted.

Every time they gave themselves an amount of money that could be set aside in whatever kind of a fund, the next year they just brought in an amending piece of legislation and changed the amount. So where's the restraint in that? Where was the holdback in that? Where was the amazing fiscal responsibility in that? You just had a majority. The next year you brought in another amending act, changed the numbers, and away you went. It didn't have meaning, and it didn't have credibility.

I actually had the library pull some of the information for me on all the different sorts of variations on this. In fact, in the beginning we had the Deficit Elimination Act. That was May of 1993. It repealed the Spending Control Act. In 1993 the government repealed the Spending Control Act, brought in the Deficit Elimination Act. They amended that a series of times. In '99 they repealed the Balanced Budget and Debt Retirement Act and the Deficit Elimination Act so that they could have the Fiscal Responsibility Act, which was brought in in March of 1999, which is the one that I'm clearly remembering.

Then there have been a series of amendments and changes of total amounts in this act, and here we are again looking at it. If you go to the back page, oh, look at that: the Fiscal Responsibility Act of 2000 is repealed in its entirety, and you're just going to call it Bill 33, the Fiscal Responsibility Act. That's an even more interesting sleight of hand because you no longer even admit that it's replacing a previous act. You just repeal the previous act by the same name and bring in a new act by the same name, and everybody thinks you're brilliant except me because I have a long memory about these things, which must just be a real curse to you guys. I can remember sitting in here watching the then Treasurer of the day waxing eloquent about how this showed what amazing fiscal managers the government was. I thought: "Well, what a bunch of hooley. There's nothing in here that actually makes the government restrain itself." And, in fact, it didn't.

When I started in '97, the budget that came in that very first year I was elected was $17 billion, and there were 18 or 19 ministries. Then it was just more money, more money, bigger ministries. Nobody ever got thrown out of cabinet. They just created more cabinet positions and more ministries until at the height of it there were, I think, 27 ministries, and I think there might have also been a minister without portfolio at that time. It got as high as – what was it? – $38 billion, and that's before we ended up with supplementary supply budgets added onto that.

So fiscal responsibility is just not happening here. There's a lot of talk about it, there's a lot of branding about it, and I've got to admit that you guys are really good at the PR. You are really good. I mean, $25 million in rebranding yourself. You've spent that many, many, many times over in the years I've been here. I think it's been one of your most successful ones ever in that people actually believe that you are fiscally responsible, and you're not. You just keep changing the numbers in the acts. That's one of my observations on this bill.

I'm sorry. Just let me give credit where credit is due here on the whole sustainability act. I sat here in 2002 when the previous Member for Lethbridge-East introduced a private member's bill. This gentleman is an economist. He knew his stuff. He introduced the Fiscal Stability Fund Calculation Act – my goodness, what a cumbersome name – but we always called it the stability fund. The government pooh-poohed this, oh, hooted with derision absolutely, what a stupid idea, and turned around very quickly and brought in their own version of the sustainability act.

You know, being a Liberal in Alberta, I'm pretty used to the government hooting with derision at our ideas and six months later bringing it forward as a government bill. Fair enough. But I think it's important to give credit where credit is due to Mr. Nicol, who was then the Member for Lethbridge-East. He really was the first person, at least that I'm aware of, that talked about a fiscal stability fund that would set money aside to act as a cushion for when there was a downturn in the economy.

It wasn't the heritage fund. It wasn't to be confused with that, but it was to stabilize a pitch and heave in our economy. It was set up with some pretty specific criteria around how it would work. It was meant to ensure that we still had funding available for health care and children's services and education. Actually, it was intended at that time that it had nothing to do with oil and gas reserves. I think it really was an innovative act for its time, and it still is.

In 2003 we had the government introducing their version of it, which was the Financial Statutes Amendment Act, and that did create the sustainability fund that we know now and that capital account. Here it is: cap of $3.5 billion. Then in 2004 they amended it to increase the cap to $4 billion. In 2005 they amended it again to increase the cap to $4.75 billion. In 2006 – you start to get a feel for why I'm a little cynical here, Mr. Chairman? Anyway, in 2006 amended it again to increase it to $5.3 billion. So, I mean, there was no fiscal discipline here. They just changed the numbers every single year: 2003, '04, '05, and '06. Then in 2008 it was amended again to allow borrowing for P3 schools – what an insult – postsecondary institutions, and health facilities.

I just really have a hard time taking any of this seriously. You know, as legislators we have to take the finances of the province seriously, but this was a joke. It's just not any kind of fiscal responsibility at all. We continue to take a nonrenewable resource revenue right out of the ground and use it immediately for operational expenses. We are spending what should be our future savings but certainly future revenue, and we're spending it right now. It's not even going into a bank. It's getting spent instantly in the same year. So I think that there really are some fiscal restraint problems that this province has. We're into our first year now where the government is actually pulling down and using that sustainability fund. We'll see what happens and how much fiscal restraint we can get if this recession continues and we end up having to develop a second restraint budget in the '10-11 year.

What's the last piece I wanted to mention? Oh yeah. You know, what I've seen since I've been actively involved in Alberta politics – and I'll say that's from 1993 although I was working for the advisory council prior to that – was that the government cut stupid in the mid-90s, then they spent stupid, now I think we're going into another period where we're going to cut stupid, and maybe we already have cut stupid. I find it really frustrating when there's lots of evidence, you know, that prevention measures and allocation and prioritization of expenditures save us money in the short and the long term. I admit to getting very frustrated with, literally, the pitch and heave of this government's finances. I can't support this. I have real trouble even taking it seriously.

Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman.

Ms Notley: It's a pleasure to be able to rise and join in debate on Bill 33, the Fiscal Responsibility Act, or the so-called Fiscal Responsibility Act. This is an interesting piece of legislation because, of course, it's one that really is part of sort of a long history of political posturing and positioning vis-à-vis the critical campaign components that this government has run on in the past, not so much anymore but in the past. It really is one of those political tools and communication tools, the whole notion of fiscal responsibility. The fact that, you know, we have an act that claims we run our finances in a certain way but then, as needed, we go back to the act and we change the act really puts the question mark, shall I say, to the seriousness with which the act is meant to be taken in the first place.

Now, it would probably come as no surprise that I've never actually been a big fan of legislated bans on deficits come hell or high water because I think, frankly, that that's reflective often of thoughtless governance. It is sometimes the case that deficits are required. It really becomes a question of intelligently weighing your longer term obligations and your longer term priorities and your longer term revenue streams and your shorter term priorities and your shorter term revenue streams. It's a complicated assessment, and the act itself was one of those politically cheap sort of right-wing things that happened in the '90s that, you know, were very popular in the day. This is sort of a continuation of that, when, of course, the need to come in today and change it and probably next year change it again, the year after change it again, just starts to show how much of a political tool and communications piece it really is as opposed to being any sort of serious guide for financial management.

Having said that, there are certain circumstances within which, certainly, our caucus would actually support and perhaps even advocate a deficit, although those are rare. I will go so far as to say that I think the fact that we're at the position now that we have to change this act has, really, quite a lot to do with how this government has managed our finances over the last few years in particular.

I speak in particular to the fact that we are not and have not in the past adequately promoted or enhanced the government's revenue stream. We have collected and continue to collect a pittance in royalties. There has been study after study after study showing that we could have collected anywhere from 60 per cent more than what we collected over the last few years to 10 times more, depending on how you structured it. In any event, there's no question that the history of this province with respect to the very irresponsible way we've approached the collection of royalties on what is, ultimately, a public resource is an unfortunate one, and it is one that's indicative of thoughtless governance. Unfortunately, it leaves us in the position where we are now, not having enough revenue in order to avoid going into deficit. Frankly, I also think that there have in the past been lost opportunities because of our flat income tax structure. Again, there are ways in which revenue can be addressed which are fair and would keep Alberta very competitive. These kinds of things have not been considered by this government in the past, so now we're at the point where we're looking at an operating deficit.

I think it's important to understand that if you go back to the '90s, when the government played its very political card and ran on their deficit elimination platform, it was at that time more than just a communications strategy and a political ploy because, of course, at that time Albertans paid. They paid with their jobs. They paid with their homes. They paid with their families. They paid with their services. They paid with the infrastructure debt that we now have. They paid in order to eliminate the deficit. Now here we are casually playing around with this legislation without, I think, real regard to the kind of impact that this government's mismanagement had in the past.

One of our concerns about where the government is going with respect to the budget and the need to go into the sustainability fund and where they're going in the future and the fact that they're currently planning to ultimately try to find about $1.3 billion in savings is that we are still in some ways playing the same kind of game. We are imposing a very artificially low level on the borrowing limits for infrastructure in order to use annual revenue to build capital infrastructure. Most people will argue and accept that borrowing for infrastructure and spreading the cost of that over many years is a very economically sound and reasonable approach to managing your finances. Of course, the benefit of that capital infrastructure is provided to Albertans over the years that you are paying for it, yet what we have right now is a budget that is premised on the idea of paying for an unnecessarily high level of infrastructure out of this year's revenue. From that, we're then going to be told that we need to find potentially up to $1.3 billion in cuts.

Again, the government is playing some games here in terms of whether or not they really are trying to create jobs, whether or not they really are trying to stay the course. You know, we talked, certainly, a couple of days ago about the significant cuts, for instance, to the Environment ministry and key parts of that. Once again, that is dealing with, to use business terms, an asset which has long-term consequences and implications to Albertans. So we're making cuts on one hand. We're getting rid of the prohibition on deficit funding theoretically because we want to build a jobs budget, but in fact we're insisting on paying for capital infrastructure out of this year's annual revenue when we don't need to, which, of course, means that we're not really going for a jobs budget because we could do a lot better in that regard.

It really seems to me like there are a lot of mixed messages in all of this. It really doesn't reflect either sound financial management, a focus on planning for the future, nor a focus on job creation. That's our overall concern. This bill, of course, plays a role in those many misplaced priorities and, again, as we say, continues to be a little bit almost of an irrelevance because the government is clearly prepared, you know, to pass this bill, say it has a rule, rely on this rule when people suggest that they could be doing different things, and then change the rule when they need to change the rule. It's really just a tool in the communications tool box. I would suggest that in the long run it's not anywhere nearly as relevant as they will undoubtedly try to tell us it is in the future or have in the past.

With those few comments, I will look forward to further debate on any further amendments as they come forward. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie on Bill 33.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Actually, I would like to propose another amendment to Bill 33. I will pass the motion to the page and give the pages a couple of minutes to circulate the amendment.

The Chair: This amendment shall be known as amendment A2. The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie moved on behalf of the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity. Is that correct?

Mr. Taylor: Yes. I will move this on his behalf, Mr. Chairman. Are you ready for me to . . .

The Chair: Yes. Please continue.

Mr. Taylor: We have time?

The Chair: Yes.

Mr. Taylor: We're ready to go? Okay. On behalf of the Member for Calgary-Varsity I move that Bill 33, the Fiscal Responsibility Act, be amended as follows: A. Section 1 is amended by adding the following after clause (g):

- (g.1) "non-renewable resource revenue for fiscal policy purposes" in respect of a fiscal year means the lesser of
 - (i) $3 000 000 000, and
 - (ii) the average of the following:
 - (A) the forecast non-renewable resource revenue for the previous fiscal year, and
 - (B) the actual non-renewable resource revenue for each of the 2 fiscal years preceding the fiscal year referred to in paragraph (A).

B. Section 3(3) is amended by striking out "and" at the end of clause (a) and adding the following after clause (a):

- (a.1) if for a fiscal year actual non-renewable resource revenue exceeds non-renewable resource revenue for fiscal policy purposes, the difference must be allocated to the Alberta Sustainability Fund, and.

At that point, Mr. Chairman, we return to the wording of the bill as we have it in front of us in Bill 33, the Fiscal Responsibility Act.

Now, the reasoning for this is perhaps more straightforward than the legalistic language appears as I read it into the record. It is simply this: Bill 33 puts only one meaningful restriction on the government's ability to spend the entire sustainability fund, and that is that the balance of the sustainability fund can't be less than zero. Wow. That's discipline. You can't actually take your rainy day fund and put it into the red while you're using it to pay off the government deficit because the government is already in the red.

Look. It's not the deficit per se that gets my knickers in a twist, Mr. Chairman. I understand. The economy went into the rhubarb with very little warning whatsoever. It happened to us. It happened to every other province in the nation. It happened to the nation. It happened to our big number one trading partner to the south of us. In fact, it happened so hard there, although not all that fast; I mean, we saw it coming down there. A lot of us up here in Canada thought it wasn't going to affect us until suddenly we woke up one day, and it did. It hit the Americans so hard that it took everybody in the world if not down, then at least back several steps with it.

This is a global recession. This has been a global economic crisis. The level to which it's been a crisis does vary from country to country, from jurisdiction to jurisdiction, from province to province. We're lucky we are where we are, but that's hardly the point. Government fiscal policy should be driven by more than luck. That's part of the argument that we're making here, that without these amendments, really, this new Fiscal Responsibility Act, Bill 33, doesn't seek to drive fiscal policy by much more than luck.

The deficit per se for fiscal '09-10, I've got to tell you, doesn't bother me any more than it would bother me, as long as I was going about it prudently, to have to dip into the Taylor family line of credit to borrow some money for whatever legitimate purpose. Certainly, you know, there is a legitimacy over the short term to having to dip into something to cover your shortfall. We have something to dip into to cover our shortfall called the sustainability fund. In that sense, as they say in Romeo and Juliet, "There art thou happy." But the key here is prudence and sustainability and planning and that sort of thing.

While I have no problem with our going into deficit for fiscal '09-10, I start to get a little bit twitchy when we start planning to continue to be in deficit in '10-11, '11-12, maybe '12-13, maybe not. We kind of hope everything will have turned around by '12-13. That again is fiscal policy based on luck, fiscal planning based on luck.

I get a little twitchy when we want to set up this big, new, improved megasustainability fund, all $17 billion worth. Look, it doesn't make any difference to me, really, whether we roll in the capital account and the money is set aside for Green TRIP and carbon capture and storage and, oh, whatever else we're putting in there. We're putting a couple of other little things in there as well. Whether we roll it all into one big megasustainability fund or whether we've got the sustainability fund and the other thing is still hived off doing other things doesn't really matter. What matters is not whether we have $17 billion worth of cushion. What matters is: what are we doing to try and make sure that we don't have to spend it all? Okay? What are we doing to make sure that we're spending as little of the sustainability fund as we possibly can so there's money in the rainy-day fund for the next rainy day because, sure as shootin', there will be another rainy day once this one is over and done with.

What this amendment does, Mr. Chairman, is that it seeks to impose some discipline on the government – it's guaranteed that they'll vote against it, but one can try; one can hope – by saying: "You know what? You can't spend every 48 cents that you get on every barrel of oil sands bitumen." We talked about that earlier in question period today, a royalty of less than 50 cents a barrel. Now, there are other situations where the royalties are higher, I'm sure. But the point here is that we want to impose some discipline and say to the government: "You cannot spend everything you've got. You cannot spend all of our nonrenewable resource revenue. You have to save some of it. You have to get into the savings habit."

Earlier this afternoon the Treasury Board president went on about, you know – and I hear this frequently from that side of the House – this notion that if you're going to save any money, then you can't spend any money. That's essentially what he said. You can either save it or you can spend it; you can't do both. That is just wrong, Mr. Chairman. That is just patently wrong. Individuals, families, corporations, other governments in other jurisdictions, anybody who has to run a budget for a calendar year or a fiscal year is regularly faced with the need to do both those things at the same time: spend and save.

In a tight time like this nobody is expecting you to save as much as we were expecting you to save when you had more money coming in than you knew what to do with. Still you managed to bleep it all away or bleep a lot of it away. But a savings strategy, getting into the savings habit, says that even when times are tight, you have to develop the self-discipline to set aside a little bit of it. Every pay, put that away. Don't touch that. Don't spend that. Find a way to live within your means. That comes back to what we were talking about earlier this afternoon when we were debating Bill 47, the estimates bill. What's the term I'm looking for?

Ms Blakeman: Appropriation.

Mr. Taylor: The Appropriation Act. Thank you.

If you've got to live within your means, and you've got to set some aside for savings, some modest amount that you're contributing on a regular basis so that you're in the habit for when times get better and you can save more, then in that part that talks about living within your means, you have to make some choices. You have to set some priorities, and then you have to reallocate the money that you do have to spend. Mr. Chairman, this government still has a lot of money to spend. That includes money it can access in the sustainability fund. Within that envelope, within that context you've got to reallocate to the things that you determined were your priorities.

Back to the amendment. The amendment basically says that you have to set aside some money, any nonrenewable resource revenue collected over the amount defined as nonrenewable resource revenue for fiscal policy purposes. Okay? So the nonrenewable resource revenue for fiscal policy purposes is the stuff you can spend however you want, for whatever purpose you want. You can draw down against that to cover off your deficit. You can blow it on something fun. I don't know what governments do that is fun, but they do manage to blow it anyway. You can do whatever you want with that. Okay?

Any nonrenewable resource revenue collected over that amount – and remember, you can only collect that nonrenewable resource revenue once. That barrel of oil only comes your way once. You only get the royalty on that barrel of oil one time, and then you have to wait for the next barrel of oil to get your next piece of royalty, and so on and so forth. Once that barrel of oil has left your hands, left your jurisdiction, been turned into however many litres of gasoline you can get out of a barrel of oil and pumped into the tank of a cabinet minister's sport utility vehicle, you can't make any more money off that. You get your one shot at it, and you had better be somewhat responsible and somewhat fiscally prudent about that.

Any amount collected over the amount defined as a nonrenewable resource revenue for fiscal policy purposes is to be transferred into the sustainability fund. My hon. colleague from the fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre's skepticism about the Fiscal Responsibility Act down through the history of its life and its various incarnations notwithstanding, right from the get-go, at least in theory this government has recognized that you need to have a cap on how much nonrenewable resource revenue you can spend before having to transfer the rest of it into the sustainability fund. That cap started out at 3 and a half billion dollars way back in 2003. It inched up to $4 billion the next year, $4.75 billion the year after that, $5.3 billion in 2006.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I'm saying that we need to roll it back to $3 billion. That's the cap. That's the lesser of $3 billion and the average of the following as it's spelled out in the Fiscal Responsibility Act. That says that any amount of nonrenewable resource revenue collected over that amount has to go into the sustainability fund.

The government has said that once it's done drawing down the money it needs from the sustainability fund to cover off successive years of deficits, then it's going to start putting money back into the fund, and it will put money back into the fund until it's got it back up to $10 billion, which as a grand statement of principle is pretty good. But, of course, what's utterly missing from that is any kind of detailed plan or strategy or timetable to get to that target of $10 billion. It's kind of like, well, you know, we think, God willing and the creek don't rise, that we'll be back in the black in 2012-13.

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

At that point we'll start looking at the possibility of maybe, you know, if we've got a little bit of extra money and we can't think what else to do with it, we'll put it into the sustainability fund. Then – I don't know – five, six years later we'll put another quarter billion dollars in there and so on and so forth. So I might still be alive by the time they get it up to $10 billion, but I wouldn't count on it – I wouldn't count on it – not with their lack of commitment to a timeline for that target, not with their history of fiscal irresponsibility, not when past behaviour is the best predictor of future performance.

That's why I moved this on behalf of my colleague from Calgary-Varsity. That is why I have moved this amendment A2. I think that otherwise it is fairly self-explanatory.

I'll take my seat now and let others have a crack at debate on amendment A2.

Mr. Snelgrove: I would just suggest, Mr. Chairman, that the length of an argument doesn't contribute anything to the strength of an argument. I read through the amendment many times, and I was very puzzled because the hon. member that spoke is normally very clear and to the point. Then I got down to the original sponsor of the amendment, and it made a little more sense to me why it was written in kind of a mumbo-jumbo, let's get there somehow. It doesn't rhyme, and they haven't used Biblical characters in it; however, it's a long list.

Mr. Chairman, I don't think for a minute that the hon. member and most people aren't on the same page when it says that we need to be responsible for the finances of this province of Alberta. When we have the opportunity to make wise investments, be they cash in savings or things like the heritage fund or, I believe, even into investments that can contribute to our positive building of our province, we will. Rewriting, whatever they're trying to do here, isn't the way to do it. It's about a willpower that says: we'll get there. We were getting there. We were doing quite well.

This amendment is really not a positive step to the future for clear and transparent finances for the province of Alberta, so I would encourage our hon. members to give a pass on this also.

The Deputy Chair: Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Deputy Chair: Back to Bill 33. The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Mr. Chairman, thanks for giving me the opportunity to speak on Bill 33. Under the original Fiscal Responsibility Act deficits were not permitted, and the main goal behind the changes to the Fiscal Responsibility Act is to allow the government to run a deficit for capital spending. This change is required because there's a drop in oil and gas prices and the recession has greatly impacted Alberta's revenue stream and its ability to maintain its $23 billion three-year capital spending projects.

The new FRA maintains the requirement that the debt retirement account has to be equal to or greater than any accumulated debt as defined. This in combination with the requirement that deficits are only permitted if they can be funded from the sustainability fund means that the government is not permitted to borrow for operating purposes. The government can only borrow now for capital investment in government-owned assets; to support capital projects that are owned by the school boards, postsecondary institutions, and health authorities; as required by self-supporting corporations such as Agriculture Financial Services, Alberta Treasury Branches, and Alberta Capital Finance Authority; to pay back the funds owed by the pre-1992 teachers' pension plan to the post-1992 teachers' pension plan. That deficit, that liability for the teachers' pension fund, has even increased by $2 billion, from $6.6 billion to $8.6 billion.

The sustainability fund is being expanded to include assets of the former capital account and the amounts set aside from year-end 2008-09 results for carbon capture and storage and Green TRIP. The limitation on the amount of nonrenewable resource revenue that can be directed for budget purposes is eliminated. The 2 and a half billion dollars that was required to remain in the sustainability fund as a contingency for natural disasters has been eliminated. So the limit on nonrenewable resource revenue that can be spent is gone. There's no legislation on annual spending increases and no commitment to savings other than vague statements to top up the sustainability fund to $10 billion if surplus dollars become available. This bill just lets the government spend every penny they have, and this move makes them less fiscally responsible than they were before.

This government had been talking about fiscal responsibility all along. I think we are just going in circles. We were fiscally responsible for a few years. Then all of a sudden things go the other way, and then, you know, we spend the little bit of money we've saved. Then we go for cutbacks. Then we pay the deficit again, pay the debt, and that cycle never seems to end.

The only limit now on deficits and drawing from the sustainability fund is that the fund can't be drawn below what's in the account, meaning that government can spend every penny in the sustainability fund and can spend every penny of nonrenewable resource revenue without any of it having to be put into the sustainability fund. While the Treasury Board had the authority to transfer funds out of the sustainability fund, there was at least in principle a limitation on how much that could be done.

The justification used for this is to improve flexibility as the previous legislation was too complex. The Fiscal Responsibility Act is actually quite short and specific, so calling it complex seems like a bit of a reach. This Fiscal Responsibility Act has been changed almost every year – every year – and in 2006 the government amended the Fiscal Responsibility Act to increase the cap on spending nonrenewable resource revenues to $5.3 billion. Then they amended it to allow P3 borrowing for schools and postsecondary institutions and health care facilities. Now, I think, that cap is gone, so there are big concerns.

There was also a clause that stated that 2 and a half billion dollars had to remain in the sustainability fund as a contingency fund for natural disasters, and I think we are facing a few of them. Luckily, I hope, we won't get to that point, but what are we to do if this swine flu virus catches on and our pork industry is devastated by this? What if we have floods? What if we have fires? What if we have other natural disasters? What are we to do if we go and spend all the money we have in the sustainability fund and there's nothing put aside for a rainy day?

For those reasons, Mr. Chairman, I cannot support Bill 33, the Fiscal Responsibility Act. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak?

Are you ready for the question on Bill 33, the Fiscal Responsibility Act?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 33 agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

Bill 14

Carbon Capture and Storage Funding Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments or questions or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chair. I spoke to this bill fairly extensively in second reading, and the concept and the intent of this bill is really one of necessity. It's one of the ways that we can be responsible for our share of the greenhouse gases, particularly the energy that is generated by our coal industry. It's a concept responsible to the rest of the province, but still the first responsibility is to the citizens of this province, because they own the resources, on whose behalf these greenhouse gases are produced.

I believe the amendment, that I am going to ask the pages to pass out at this time, will actually help address that problem in terms of the responsibility that I think is owed to the citizens of this province.

The Deputy Chair: We'll pause for a moment until the amendment has been distributed. Hon. members, this is amendment A1, that the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East is moving on behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Ms Pastoor: Yes. Thank you. I am presenting this on behalf of my colleague from Edmonton-Riverview. I would move on his behalf that Bill 14, the Carbon Capture and Storage Funding Act, be amended by renumbering section 4 as section 4(1) and adding the following after subsection (1):

- (2) In addition to the report required under subsection (1), the Minister of Energy shall, within 15 months of the date this Act comes into force and annually after that, prepare a report that evaluates the carbon capture storage projects funded under this Act in comparison to other carbon reduction strategies to determine the economic and environmental viability of the projects undertaken.
- (3) When complete, the report prepared by the Minister of Energy under subsection (2) shall be presented in the Legislative Assembly if it is then sitting or if it is not sitting within 15 days of the next sitting of the Assembly.
- (4) Within 15 days of the report being presented in the Assembly pursuant to subsection (3), a member of the Executive Council must introduce a motion in the Assembly to refer the report to a committee of the Assembly for review and recommendations.

I think that if my hon. colleagues have read this, it is very clear what the object of these amendments is. Really, as I've said, the bill itself is good and necessary; however, I do miss the part where, in fact, it's responsible to the people of this province. We have to be accountable. I think they have the right to know, when we're spending money on any kind of a project, if it is worthwhile. The only way you know that is if going in, when you create the project, you create the time frame for the evaluation and then have a report, and of course that report has to be public.

I think that these amendments would meet that obligation, and I believe that the citizens of this province would be appreciative of it. Although there are many words, it really isn't asking for that much. All we're asking for is that a report is evaluated, there's a time frame put on it, and then when that report comes back, it goes to a committee that could review it and perhaps come up with recommendations based on the evaluation that comes forward out of that report.

With that, Mr. Chair, I will take my seat and look forward to any other comments that may be made on these amendments.

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Chairman, if this were five or six years from now and the projects that were applying for this money were running, the hon. member would know that a lot of the money that was set aside was to monitor and to work in a very scientific way so that we do know the opportunities there are for carbon capture and storage. Within 15 months from now any kind of a reporting structure will have nothing to report. These facilities aren't going to be built.

Down the road we're not going to keep what is produced from this carbon capture work a secret. We actually believe that we may be able to sell this technology from it all over the world, so keeping it a secret will be the last thing we want to do.

It is not just about carbon capture and storage. It's also about enhanced oil recovery. Once again, Mr. Chairman, we will be more than happy to be able to come back and report to Albertans and the world how we're able to enhance or increase our oil reserves possibly by as much as half a billion barrels of conventional oil. There's no intention here to keep the results of this secret.

Given the timelines of this amendment it really is five or six years or possibly more premature. I would hope that hon. members would all agree to that.

Ms Blakeman: Well, Mr. Chairman, surprisingly, shockingly, I don't agree with the President of the Treasury Board. I know. I can tell that I've ruined his evening. [interjection] Yeah. Are any of our physician MLAs on duty here? I think I've caused some sort of tachycardia.

Really, what we've got with this amendment is a requirement for a report evaluating where we have got to with the various projects. That report would come to the Legislative Assembly and would then be referred to a committee of the Assembly for review and recommendations. I disagree with the president. There's no expectation here that it's reporting on any kind of final project. It's saying: where are we 15 months from now?

Frankly, where we were 15 months ago on carbon capture and storage was a very different place than where we are today. For example, there was a lot of talk from the government about how this was really going to make a big difference for greenhouse gas emissions in the oil sands. Well, now we know that not one of the oil sands players is even going to submit a proposal. They've had media conferences. They've announced that they're not even going to submit a proposal to be considered for carbon capture and storage projects. Well, that's a big difference from where we were 15 months ago.

The fact is that carbon capture and storage is really targeted and is expected to be most effective around coal-generated stations for electricity. But 15 months down the road that information could be quite different. What we're dealing with 15 months from now could be quite different from where we are today. I think we can see that these timelines do become important.

The second issue I have is that I understand that the government says: "You know, we're not going to hide this. If we have a success with carbon capture and storage, we want the world to know, so it won't be a problem requiring us to report." But you know what, Mr. Chairman? There is a difference about requiring this government to report and when the government decides to say something on its own or to spend $25 million on a branding campaign or to release some other glossy brochure. There's a difference between a legislative requirement that a report is tabled in this Assembly and the government deciding when it wants to talk about something on its own, with or without $25 million and a campaign slogan that no one can remember that goes along with it and pictures of children running around on a beach in England. You know, there is a big difference in those things.

Mr. Anderson: Freedom to Create, Spirit to Achieve.

Ms Blakeman: Mr. Chairman, there is someone in this Assembly that can remember it, so this is a golden moment. Someone in this Assembly can remember the $25 million slogan, and, fingers on your buzzers, the prize is going to go to the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere. There we go. It's a wonderful moment. Now I'm going to go back to talking about the amendment. Thank you for that nice little break, Airdrie-Chestermere. Good for you for remembering that slogan, the only person in the House that could.

I think this is reasonable, and I think it's important that we do require that there actually is a legislative timeline for when a report comes before this Assembly because God bless this government, but they don't always follow through on things that they say. I know that there are lots of reasons as to why they don't follow through on things they've said they're going to do: times change, you know, things work or they don't work. But running on a legislative requirement and running on the government's own timeline are two different things.

While I appreciate that the President of the Treasury Board said that if they had something to talk about, they'd be delighted to talk about it, I would still like to see the report in front of the House. Frankly, if it's bad news, they're not going to talk about it, and we do need to know in this House.

The first report is required 15 months from now. That's not to say that there aren't subsequent reports, perhaps on an annual, biannual basis, that there is an expectation of a report between the House. Although with the first report we are not likely to have anything out of the ground – well, that's not fair. There could be, but it's not likely we're going to have, you know, bricks and mortar that we could be talking about for these projects. But for the next round of reporting, yes, I think there would be an expectation that there's something out of the ground that we could be talking about.

Star Trek is in all the news. What is the Star Trek saying about new frontiers?

Mr. Taylor: To boldly go where no one has gone before.

Ms Blakeman: To boldly go where no one has gone before. There you go. Thank you. Oh, we're very good with the quotes today.

Mr. Taylor: You're sitting next to a nerd.

Ms Blakeman: Okay. Ten points to the Member for Calgary-Currie on that one.

Truly, we are moving into the unknown, and I have some caution around the government putting all their eggs in the one basket because I just keep getting a vision of a great big huge ostrich egg in a basket, and if it cracks or breaks, we're in big trouble here, or one tool in a tool box, you know, because if you open that tool box and there's one tool in the bottom, and if it's not working, you're hooped. You need more than one tool in that tool box. You need more than one egg and even one kind of egg in your egg basket. So I think we need to keep tabs on this. We need to check on it on a regular basis, and we need to revise our plans if it's not working. We've already had changes, at least according to what the government press releases were saying, that we didn't anticipate like the complete withdrawal of the oil sands companies from participating in any of these projects. Who could have foreseen that 15 months ago?

Once again, I know it's heartbreaking, and I'm so sorry to disappoint the President of the Treasury Board again this evening, but I disagree with him on this amendment. I think it is worthy of support, and I would urge everyone in the Assembly to do that.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Yes. Thank you. I'd just like to make a couple more comments, Mr. Chair. I don't think that this is nearly as complicated as the President of the Treasury would make out. I'll try to break it down to a very simple kind of analogy. Every year at income tax time I'm sure we all sit down and re-evaluate: where was I, and where am I now? That doesn't mean that I'm lost somewhere. It means that I'm looking at what my goal was a year ago. Am I actually progressing, or do I have to re-evaluate and perhaps make adjustments to it? All it is is a quick picture of what's happening. I don't think that that is a very onerous task or a very onerous thing to ask of the government for almost any project but especially this one that we're talking about right now. Really, until things get going, but right from the very get-go, all it is is a picture of whether progress is being made and if it's going in the right direction and doesn't need an adjustment. Quite simple.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's my pleasure to speak in favour of the amendment. Two billion dollars is a lot of money, and this amendment is merely asking for a progress report on the CCS. This is just to evaluate, you know, where we are 15 months from when the act comes into force, and then 15 months thereafter. Do we have to make any changes to what we are doing? Are we achieving the desired result we need from the CCS? This is just merely a progress report on the carbon capture and storage program.

This will make everything more transparent and more accountable, so I think all the members should support this amendment. It's merely asking for a progress report. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Are you ready for the question? The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Webber: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Surprisingly and shockingly, I do not agree with the amendments to this bill. I'm looking at the bill here right now, and I look at the reporting, and I see that, you know, "The Minister of Energy shall report in the Ministry's annual report on the progress of carbon capture and storage projects funded under this Act." Now, the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East wants to amend this by, you know, having a report done and having another committee put in place for review and recommendations. I'm sick and tired, Mr. Chair, of all the studying and all the committees we have to put together in order to pursue this project.

The Carbon Capture and Storage Development Council was put in place, Mr. Chair, back on April 24 of 2008, and I was a proud member of this council, working along with a number of industry experts, amazing individuals. We had people such as our chair, Mr. Jim Carter, who is a former president of Syncrude Canada, a very respected man in the industry. We had Don Lowry from EPCOR. We had representatives from Nexen and Suncor; Bill Andrew from Penn West, a hell of a nice guy and also a heck of a nice guy – I apologize, Mr. Chair – and also very knowledgeable about the industry; Dave Collyer with Shell Canada, now with CAPP, a very impressive individual. [interjections] Excuse me, hon. member. Mr. Chair, I'm trying to speak here. You're a little bit distracting. Thank you.

I guess my point is, Mr. Chair, that this development council put together a plan, a plan for Alberta to move ahead with this carbon capture and storage, and they did a wonderful job. We have an excellent plan. We've got $2 billion now committed to carbon capture and storage, so let's just get on with it.

I'm tired of these amendments to these bills. We've got a perfectly good bill here with the reporting, which to me is sufficient. We shall report annually on the progress of these projects. I can't imagine seeing any sequestration in that time period, 15 months from now. It's going to take time to build these projects. Our goal is to sequester five megatonnes of CO₂ per year in the ground by 2015. Fifteen months from now we're still going to be in the construction phase, in my opinion.

So let's just get on with this. We've dragged this on too long. Let's end the games here with these amendments. Let's pass this bill. I don't support the amendment, and I ask my colleagues to just vote against this amendment.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Deputy Chair: On the bill, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you. It's a pleasure to be able to rise and speak to this bill in Committee of the Whole. Well, I have to say that one element of this bill that was identified by the previous amendment certainly is its brevity and the complete lack of direction in the bill, the complete lack of criteria, the complete lack of oversight. This bill basically says that the Minister of Energy may spend $2 billion as he may or may not see fit to possibly achieve something that may or may not ultimately work out for us. I mean, if you had to sort of summarize this bill, that's how you'd summarize it. To the extent that the member was trying to add a little bit of clarity and a little bit more direction to the bill, I applaud her. Unfortunately, in my view, there is just so much more that is wrong with this bill that, frankly, cannot be corrected by an additional report.

Where to start? Carbon capture and storage is one possible tool in the tool box that we all need to embrace in order to address the very, very significant environmental risks that face Albertans and Canadians and, frankly, the world. But it is simply one tool in the tool box. The question of whether or not you open the tool box and you spend $2 billion on that particular tool is one that is a little bit more complicated to answer than simply saying: hey, this could work; let's try it. That, I would suggest, is an incredibly irresponsible way to embark upon a process of spending $2 billion.

Even people who agree that carbon capture and storage might be a tool also agree that it is a tool that must be polluter paid, or there must be a certain amount of commitment on the part of industry to at least cofund these initiatives. We have in Bill 14 the authority about to be given to the Minister of Energy to spend however much money he may choose on whichever recipient he may choose, who may or may not match one dollar of taxpayer funds, to initiate some carbon capture and storage research, investigation, implementation, whichever it may be. That's the first point.

We know that across the world there have been a number of different projects initiated with respect to carbon capture and storage. Quite frankly, the majority of them have either been greatly delayed or abandoned because of the incredible cost to the public and the unwillingness of industry to step up and pay their portion. We know that that is the experience in Europe, in the States, across the world. We know that there's a tremendous uncertainty with respect to this and that there is a tremendous cost, yet this government, that claims to be great financial managers, is putting no protection in this bill for Alberta taxpayers on how much it is that industry needs to commit in order to become eligible for funding through this mechanism. None. So that's one thing that we have some very serious concerns about.

Another concern is the criteria under which this money will be shovelled off the back of a truck – I mean, given to various and sundry industries. Again, the government itself has talked about criteria that they would develop and that they would try to adhere to. At one point, I remember, in some release somewhere there was talk about: oh, well, you know, we're going to try and identify the industrial player whose adoption of this strategy would bring about the biggest impact, the biggest reduction in greenhouse gas emissions, and of course we want to prioritize those who will be able to have it up and running by 2015. By 2015? Are you serious? I mean, every expert on carbon capture and storage will tell you that the earliest that you're going to see this have any sort of serious impact is 2030. So the government's own documents are premised on a wing and a prayer.

You know, again, $2 billion: let's close our eyes, cross our fingers, just throw it up in the air, and see where the wind blows it.

Mr. Snelgrove: Now, I'd vote for that.

Ms Notley: Well, indeed, I believe that's kind of how you functioned up to this point, so more of the same.

I would suggest that this very, very slim two-page bill, if we were really serious about making this work and if we were really serious about owing anything to taxpayers in terms of financial responsibility, ought to set out in the act the criteria under which we would give this money to industry. Again, two pages: the Minister of Energy will as he sees fit give money to whoever might possibly ask for it. So that's another concern we have.

A third concern we have is that, you know, the crossing of the fingers and the closing of the eyes and the humming when anyone hears anything that might suggest that this won't work: should those strategies work and we do ultimately find some success in this, this, to me, should be an investment on behalf of Alberta taxpayers, not a subsidization by Alberta taxpayers of industry. Once again, this bill should be talking about ensuring that for that money handed out, there should be some investment interest that taxpayers receive back for that. But the bill is completely oblivious to that issue, no plans to ensure any sort of investment or ownership or equity interest in any positive outcome that might possibly come from the strategy. Again, big if, very big if, major wing and a prayer here, but should something come from this strategy, we will get no ownership interests in it. We'll just pay for it and then give it away. So that's another concern.

Yet another concern about this, of course, that should be considered which is not, which was actually touched on by the Member for Lethbridge-East's amendment, is this idea of relative efficacy, relative value of the strategies that are being employed to address the environmental challenges that we face. That's where this whole idea of assessing how the outcomes to date of the carbon capture and storage investment would be measured against the other strategies that might be available. I mentioned this briefly here. I touched on this briefly in second reading.

The fact of the matter is that we don't have to choose to focus our hopes on the results of 1 out of 19 studies to suggest that this could work with respect to many other strategies geared towards reducing greenhouse gas emissions. Quite the opposite. I could find you 150 peer-reviewed studies that will tell you that the quickest way to reduce greenhouse gas emissions is to spend $2 billion on retrofitting. You'll create jobs, and you will reduce our greenhouse gas emissions significantly, far more than this could ever hope to. But are we talking about spending the money on that? No.

The Minister of Environment recently announced a very small retrofitting plan. I can't remember exactly what it was. Perhaps he could tell me. It may have been in the $10 million, $50 million, $100 million range. I can't remember which it was. But the point is that it is a small, small portion of what we really need to be investing if we're really serious about using retrofitting as a mechanism to reduce our greenhouse gas emissions. We should be serious about this because that is one of the areas where we know — the research shows — it works. But we're not doing that. We're not creating jobs. We're not doing that. We're shovelling money off the back of a truck to give to whoever manages to put together a good proposal.

The problem is that, clearly, because we're not putting a billion dollars into green retrofitting, this bill represents lost opportunity. It's not just: "Oh, what the heck. We've got all the money in the world. Let's throw $2 billion at carbon capture and storage. If it works, it works; if it doesn't, it doesn't." No, no, no. For every dollar that we put in this, we're clearly not putting it into much more effective strategies. Again, this represents tremendous lost opportunity both in terms of reducing our greenhouse gas emissions and creating jobs.

Another reason why this is a concern is because there's nothing in this talking about criteria that would relate to the obligation to ensure that any initiatives with respect to carbon capture and storage must ensure that we have an answer for safe disposal of the carbon which is theoretically captured and stored. The key is that we cannot just store it. We have to dispose of it, and we have to find a way to dispose of it that is sustainable and secure for the future.

The problem with this, even the name of the bill, carbon capture and storage, is that this is all premised on the notion of just creating a great big storehouse of CO₂, and we actually don't have complete research yet on what the implications of that are to our environment. It's not black and white. It's not there yet. It's yet one of a number of question marks that remain with this strategy.

Another thing with respect to this, of course, is that as this rolls out, if it rolls out in any kind of remotely effective way, which is, again, a big question mark, it has to be accompanied by substantive, very clear monitoring obligations. Once again, the bill is completely devoid of any discussion about monitoring. What we do know is that while we talk about creating a $2 billion fund to put forward carbon capture and storage, we are at the same time cutting monitoring in the Ministry of Environment in other areas. I would think that if you're talking about putting this kind of taxpayer investment in here, we should be stipulating within the bill the kind of monitoring that would be associated with the receipt of that kind of taxpayers' dollars, but again silence, complete silence on this issue within this bill.

Another thing, again, is a problem with, frankly, this whole strategy. The members opposite go on at much length about the many possibilities that exist through enhanced oil recovery. Again a question mark. It is possibly an effective strategy. We don't know for sure. What we do know is that in order to use enhanced oil recovery, we ultimately use more energy, so we are actually embarking on a process that is going to increase our energy use by 30 per cent. Enhanced oil recovery as a mechanism of disposing of carbon will actually increase quite dramatically our energy use. Is this a wise way to move towards reducing our greenhouse gas emissions and, ultimately, reducing our energy use when we know that reduction is the absolute most effective way to deal with these environmental concerns? No. We're going in exactly the wrong direction.

Ultimately, this is what we're talking about doing, and there are, you know, just a whole bunch of reasons why this is a poorly constructed bill. The idea in principle has some merit, but this bill is a permission to government to roll the dice with a huge amount of taxpayer dollars on a strategy which we know is not by any means the best way to address the problem. It is irresponsible from a financial point of view, it is irresponsible from an environmental protection point of view, it is irresponsible from a job creation point of view, it is irresponsible from a governance point of view because there are simply no rules in this bill.

Frankly, there is no amendment to this bill because it would have to be rewritten from scratch, and it would have to be substantially reconsidered. As it exists now, frankly, it is a very, very expensive PR stunt that government doesn't know will work or not work, and certainly taxpayers have no way of knowing if it will work or not work. It is a very unfortunate and unwise initiative on the part of this government. There is simply no way to save it. We cannot support this bill.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? It's carried.

Bill 10

Supportive Living Accommodation Licensing Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm delighted to stand up and support this bill. I also commend the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. I've had the opportunity to work fairly closely with her on this. I also believe that this bill is a result of some of the work that was done on the MLA task force about four years ago. I had what I called an adjunct report to go with that because I didn't feel that it was a minority report. All I wanted was timelines and to augment and help the report from the MLA task force move quicker.

It is a good bill. Many of the things that we found on that task force, many of the things that we brought forward are in this bill: the provincial standards that we wanted and had been asking for for so long so that they were the same across the province. Also, it didn't matter who was delivering the service; the standards had to be the same.

There will be a very strong monitoring program put in place with this. It will be on an annual basis, and the facilities will know that this review is coming up. Although I personally don't think that's probably the best way to do it, there is the ability to do random checks if there are complaints, so that's a very positive thing. Having been in the industry, I know that sometimes, also for inspections of schools, if you're ready, everything is up and shiny perfect, so it doesn't always give the true picture.

One of the things I sort of had a problem with was the fact that they used the words "peace officer" and not "police officer." I really believe that if something is suspected to be a criminal offence, it must go to the police and not to the peace officers.

Generally, this is a good document. The standards are in place, there's a way to monitor those standards, and there's also a way to be able to respond to complaints, and I think that that will go a long way to helping people when they have complaints. At least they feel that now there is an avenue for them to be listened to. Sometimes it's just complaints about the food, which is probably 90 per cent, I think, of the complaints on the housing side of it, but food is probably one of the most important things in these homes where people live. We have any number of diabetics, and certainly those numbers are improving, and they do require a special diet. We also have many, many, many seniors who do not have good oral health. In fact, many don't have teeth or teeth that fit, and it's too late to go back and try and perhaps do implants or things that would help seniors be able to eat properly.

All in all, Mr. Chair, I am pleased to support this bill.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman, for the opportunity to speak in Committee of the Whole to Bill 10, the Supportive Living Accommodation Licensing Act. I'm going to support this because this is something that the Liberal opposition has raised and asked for a lot in the past. The previous version of the act didn't include seniors' lodges and some other kinds of seniors' housing under the monitoring and licensing sections. This does recognize different kinds of housing, brings more of it under an act which can be monitored and licensed. This bill really deals more with sort of the environmental aspects of supportive living licensing and has less to do with the actual accommodations and sort of direct assistance to individuals, which, I think, is where I've been concentrating my efforts.

You know, it's an interesting time because I think some of the government's innovations around this are right. We should be offering more choice. We should be offering different levels of support to people according to what they need. I think what really frightens people – it certainly frightened me – was what seems to be a fairly rigid approach that the government is taking to reclassify seniors who are currently in care and from the outside appears to be classifying them to a less care-driven form of accommodation. Somebody that's been in long-term care is redesignated to be into a designated assisted living complex.

While there are people that are very happy in that and should be in that level of care, I think it really frightens people who have relatives or who may be themselves in long-term care that they'd somehow sort of get punted out of that and that there would be an expectation that there's an increased level of family support for that. Oh, I did talk about this before because the same phrase came to mind: it scares the bejesus out of me. I don't know how I would find more time in my week to give more direct care to the relatives that I have that are in long-term care. If they weren't getting the level and intensity of support they were getting and I was somehow expected to pick up the loose ends on this because they've been reclassified to a different kind of living, I would be really personally very stressed by that, both in time but also in financial resources because I'd have to end up paying somebody to offer this additional assistance. I mean, my God, it's 10 o'clock, and I'm standing in the Assembly. I just wouldn't have the personal resources to put that additional time into caring for my relative.

The graduated level of care that the government is anticipating here probably is appropriate as we look at an aging population. But the government is pretty single-minded – perhaps I could even say bloody-minded – in moving people and redesignating or reclassifying or recoding. I can't remember the exact language the government uses. I know that in southern Alberta in some cases they've had entire facilities that have been reclassified. I find it a little hard to believe that every single person in a long-term care facility was, presto chango, reclassified into someone capable of doing all right in a designated assisted living facility. I really find that very hard to believe.

I've strayed a little bit, Mr. Chairman, and I apologize for that. This bill is really dealing with the bricks-and-mortar side of those facilities and allowing better monitoring and enforcement, which, you know, I've been very keen on. I'm on the record a lot saying that, one, you've got to have the standards, two, you've got to have the monitoring to make sure that those standards are being met, and three, you've got to have the enforcement so that if they're not being met, the boom comes down and there are consequences for that. Particularly, owners and operators of facilities need to understand the consequences because these are frail people that in many cases do not have the wherewithal to demand support for themselves or adequate care for themselves. They really can be quite dependent on others.

Given that we are getting increased levels of monitoring and licensing under this, I am happy to support this bill in Committee of the Whole. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you. This bill, as I think I said before, is one of those bills that, you know, is sort of dressed up like a good-news thing, but because it is being used as a vehicle for a different objective, it actually is more problematic than one might first see on the surface. It does expand the application of regulations to certain types of facilities and in that respect is good. It ultimately takes matters that were previously regulations and puts them into legislation, and that is good.

There are certain specific elements of it that are a little concerning. For instance, right now licences for supportive living accommodations are only issued for one year, and this bill would actually allow that term to be extended to up to three years. The ministry says that they plan to have a policy where you're only eligible for a licence with a three-year term if you've already shown two years of compliant behaviour. Then they said that periodic spot checks would still be done throughout the three-year term. My concern about that, though, is that, frankly, I'm not convinced that the spot checks or the monitoring is as comprehensive as it should be, so I have some concerns about that.

In fact, in the House today but also in estimates debate with the minister for seniors we had some discussion around how short-staffing concerns had been addressed by the ministry. Those short-staffing concerns had impacts for both the health care side of the job being done – in this case it was long-term care – and the accommodation side of, in this case, long-term care. Notwithstanding that 300 reports of significant compromises in care, which might actually overflow in some cases to accommodation, had been made – and they had certainly been made to the minister of health, not to the minister of seniors. In fact, the minister herself indicated that that ministry worked quite closely with the ministry of health in terms of these kinds of issues because often there was an overlap in terms of the kind of complaints that they received. Yet seven months after these 300 complaints were provided to the ministry of health, there had been no follow-up inspections as a result of those 300 complaints. That indicates to me that there are some shortcomings in inspections and the frequency of inspections. For that reason, I would have some concern about moving licensing from one year to three years. It seems to me that there are greater opportunities for places to fall through the cracks and for people to go a longer period of time without seniors having the basic standards met that should be.

I'm also concerned about the notion of inspectors not being able to do spot checks without first being announced because, of course, anyone in the industry will let you know that when that happens, many issues are often addressed between the time that notice is given and the inspection is completed. Again, this raises some concerns about the effectiveness of our inspection process. Those are a part of the concern.

There is also a concern just in terms of specifics. In the new bill the director may cancel a licence if the operator is breaking a specific rule in some way. In the old act there was also a greater discretion, where a director could suspend or cancel a licence where a licence holder was "not providing proper care to a person accommodated or cared for in the licence holder's social care facility." Another way they could do it would be if "the premises described in the licence have become unfit or unsuitable for the purpose authorized by the licence." So a much broader range under which a licence might be suspended than currently exists in this bill. That is another concern that we have.

Ultimately, though – and this has been touched on already – the real sort of dark side of this bill, if you will, is that it will be used as a mechanism for suggesting the government's plan to replace long-term care beds with beds in other, less comprehensive settings. This bill will facilitate that and facilitate their ability to say that that's a reasonable approach. There's no question that there are definitely cases where seniors would rather not be in a long-term care facility, nor should they be. Where the problem arises is where we know that we have at least 1,500 seniors in the province of Alberta who have been assessed as needing long-term care under the Nursing Homes Act, not some other version of supportive living with less support, yet we have the government making the decision to not build any more long-term care beds to address those needs. So we have a deficit, and we have the government instead making the decision that somehow that assistance and support to seniors can be provided in assisted living or designated assisted living or some lower care facility.

The fact of the matter is that for some of those people that's simply not true. That population is going to grow. The number of seniors needing some other supportive living will also grow. Absolutely. So, by all means, you know, expand supportive living. But to expand it at the expense of expanding long-term care is just such poor planning. It's going to have very clear and direct implications for our health care system, and it's going to hurt seniors.

On October 22 of last year the minister claimed in the House that the extended care, long-term care facility in Lethbridge that was going to be closed was being, quote, replaced by a designated assisted living centre. That's not replacement; that's a downgrade in quality.

On October 30, 2008, the patients in an auxiliary hospital in Jasper, including some who were palliative, had their care changed to a designated assisted living situation. This means that they're only having their housing provided when what they really need is much more comprehensive, ongoing health care. Likewise, citizens in Hinton are still fighting to reverse a February 2005 conversion of their long-term care facility into assisted living.

Assisted living simply is not appropriate for people who no longer have the cognitive ability to negotiate their own care needs or for those that are palliative, yet that appears to be what the plan is for many of these people under the government's continuing care strategy.

Under the Nursing Homes Act the minister of health, in theory, should he use it, has the authority to make regulations stipulating staffing ratios. Now, frankly, that hasn't happened in any kind of effective way, but the authority is there. The same authority is not provided under this piece of legislation, and there's no other place where it might be provided because the health care side is under nursing homes, and these aren't nursing homes. Again, less government oversight, more opportunity for money to be taken from seniors and, ultimately, greater compromises in health care of both seniors as well as all Albertans.

I think that the other concerns that we have about this bill were already raised in second reading. It just needs to be clearly outlined that this strategy is one that is doomed to failure, and there will be a number of unfortunate situations that arise before the government is compelled to admit that this is a failing strategy that is letting down Alberta's seniors. Ultimately, it will be. While in theory this bill upgrades a few things, really, it doesn't do anywhere near what it should do for the type of people that this government intends to have use these facilities. That is why we have some very serious concerns about this bill and the direction that it facilitates.

Thank you.

Bill 12

Surface Rights Amendment Act, 2009

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a great pleasure to speak on Bill 12, brought by the Member for Livingstone-Macleod. The intent of the bill is to simplify the process the board uses to resolve disputes and to implement more informal, flexible forms of dispute resolution mechanisms. Amendments are included to allow the board more efficient processes to manage its workload, but there are no amendments to deal with the actual competency of the decisions made. It's just procedural in nature.

The design of the bill is intended to deal with administrative procedures, in effect to streamline them in order to more expeditiously resolve surface rights disputes. The amendments to the act are on the procedure side and are aimed at making the process aspects of the Surface Rights Board more efficient. The previous Surface Rights Act contained many procedural, prescriptive inclusions that made the process of dispute resolution onerous and led to delays in compensation judgments. The new amendments will allow more flexibility for the board to expedite the proceedings.

This is in the best interests of landowners as long as the amendments are fair. It is not in their interests to be involved in these disputes for an extended period of time because it costs them lots of money and lots of anxiety and the procedure takes a lot longer. As the statistics over the past few years have shown, the SRB is hearing more and more cases. This makes it a necessity to find a process to deal with more hearings and resolve them fairly for landowners and resource companies.

I raised some concerns last time I spoke on the bill. As long as those concerns are addressed, I think we can support this bill. This is a very important bill as it relates to the compensation for landowners who have resource activity on their land, and any changes to it must be carefully considered. Like I said, I had concerns that I raised before, like giving too much power to just one board member and the appeal process and those kinds of issues. Any changes must be carefully considered and must achieve an optimal balance between the rights of owners and the rights of the operators.

With that, I think I'll conclude. Those concerns should be addressed. I think that's about it for me, Mr. Chairman. As long as the bill is balanced, I think we have no problems supporting it.

Thank you.

Ms Notley: I'll be brief. Probably to nobody's great surprise, we do actually have some concerns with this bill. I did review them in second reading, but the bottom line is this: in the most general of ways this bill is going to dilute the administrative processes, the rules around an administrative tribunal. That never is a good thing. There are already opportunities for negotiation, and what this does is allow for a tremendous amount of discretion on the part of the tribunal to move parties into negotiating processes, often when the parties are greatly imbalanced in terms of their power. While negotiation can be an excellent mechanism and a tremendously positive strategy for resolving issues, there must always be a way to come out of it if it's not working.

If you look at other administrative tribunals – and I'll take, for example, the Labour Relations Board – there are a number of different avenues through which parties can mediate settlements of issues, and that's totally reasonable. That's totally reasonable. But you can't set something up where, in fact, you are removing from someone the right to have an in-person hearing. That's essentially what this legislation does. It is removing from the parties the right to have in-person hearings. It is a significant dilution of their natural justice rights, and it is an informalization of an administrative tribunal, which, some might argue, has already struggled to fairly balance the needs between two parties who have very, very different levels of power when they come to the table.

For that reason, the stated objective of finding a way to deal with the backlog and coming up with better ways to negotiate: that's all fine, but you cannot do that by removing people's rights to a fair, open, in-person hearing, and that's what this bill is doing. So we can't support it for that reason.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to briefly address this amendment. The bill as proposed will enhance the Surface Rights Board's service delivery and streamline the processes for users and give better and more timely service. It removes a number of statute-imposed procedural impediments and implements procedural changes only. It does not in any way affect either the compensation payable to the landowner or occupant for surface entry or any other substantive right of the parties. By providing for flexible procedures, the board can better and more easily respond to the needs of the parties appearing before it, and this will enhance service delivery to those who require the services of the Surface Rights Board. For example, the existing provisions requiring a certain number of board members to perform certain tasks will be eliminated, and provisions mandating certain processes such as hearings or inquiries will be repealed to enable and encourage dispute resolution conferences and permit those processes to occur quickly.

The amendment also repeals provisions that are not necessary either because they are implicitly within the board's jurisdiction – for example, setting staff duties – or more reasonably would fit within the rules of practice. So this will again streamline the board's processes.

I would like to specifically address the provisions of section 12 of the bill, which amends section 28 of the existing act. Section 12 would improve the way the board functions by obviating the necessity of holding what would be unnecessary inquiries or hearings. The landowner would still have a right to seek a termination order under section 28(1) of the Surface Rights Act. We are not denying this right of landowners to terminate access for unused portions of the right of entry orders. All that is being sought here is to streamline the process and to provide a speedier service by getting rid of the legislative requirement for an inquiry. Termination orders are used when operators have ceased using the right of entry or part of it or where an operator has failed to avail themselves of a right to enter within a period of two months. This is really an administrative function, and that should not require a hearing to proceed. This is one of the outdated provisions of the Surface Rights Act that prevents the board from operating as responsively as it could.

In 2008 the Surface Rights Board issued 40 full termination orders and decisions and 16 partial terminations. One could only imagine the time and expense and the inconvenience of having all of those go to a hearing when all that is being asked is a right of entry termination by the landowner himself. Getting rid of these unnecessary inquiries through the amended section is a way to promote efficiency. It's a way to cut red tape and to simplify the procedures and cut costs.

I would urge all hon. members to support the bill in its present form. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Bill 16

Peace Officer Amendment Act, 2009

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Yeah. I mean, I don't what we'd do if we weren't here to drag this out. We do have a concern about Bill 16. The amendment that was initially brought in was designed to ensure that peace officers were not in a position where they would be using the term "constable" or "special constable." Now, you know, we've heard just very recently about some unfortunate but still highly public and very problematic uses of force by the police. Whether they are or are not justified, the fact of the matter is that there is an agreement on the part of citizens that they will allow themselves to be policed by people who have met the requirements and conditions to be a police officer. Sometimes that means that those people actually give up certain rights that they wouldn't allow just an average person on the street to take from them. But that's sort of the consensus. That's the deal that we make when we, you know, agree to be policed.

There is a reason why police don't just sort of walk in off the street and become police officers the next day. There are criteria that they have to meet. There are standards of behaviour that they have to meet. So our concern is that although this appears to be a very, you know, administrative little thing – oh, people are having to spend a little bit too much money on uniforms – the concern is that in the long term you'll have peace officers who are appearing to be constables, and that is something that ought not to be happening. That's the concern that we have about this.

The fact of the matter is that when the bill first came in, I believe there was a three-year grace period between when the legislation was passed and when these parts of the act are proclaimed. I just don't know how hard it is to take a little label off a uniform. It seems to me to be a bit much that we're coming back to the Legislature to say that it's okay for peace officers to be called constables because we can't change the uniforms in three years.

I am concerned about this, so just because that's what we do, we'll probably not be supporting this bill. Thank you.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Guide us all in our deliberations and debate that we may determine courses of action which will be to the enduring benefit of our province of Alberta. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a group of grade 7 students from l'école Broxton Park school in Spruce Grove. They missed last year as grade 6 students, so they came this year as grade 7 students and were able to participate in your mock Legislature. I might add that, talking to them on the steps before the picture, they told me that their bill was school uniforms, and it passed, so it's interesting that a number of the schools are doing that. They are accompanied by teacher Mrs. Fran Korpela and parent helpers Mrs. Lauri MacKinnon and Mrs. Shauna Specht. I believe they are seated in the members' gallery. I would ask that these bright, young students from Spruce Grove rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of our Legislative Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure for me to introduce to you and through you to all members here two very special guests, who are seated in the members' gallery. The first is my STEP student for the summer, Mr. Alykhan Rajan, who is in his second year at the University of Alberta. He'll be graduating with expertise in science and in commerce. We want to welcome him and thank him for the work he's going to do.

Second is my trusted and faithful constituency manager, without whom I'd be totally lost, Judi Kendall, who, by the way, is also the president of the Fort Edmonton historical board.

Please rise and receive the warm welcome of our Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's also a pleasure for me to rise today and introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly staff from the Workers' Compensation Board, government relations office. WCB Alberta is an independent, employer-funded organization that provides cost-effective disability and liability insurance. Workers' Compensation compensates injured workers for lost income, health care, and other costs related to a work-related injury. The staff in this office respond to inquiries from ministers responsible for WCB and the MLAs' inquiries on behalf of workers. They provide a very important service in responding to the inquiries and concerns of all Albertans. I would ask our guests to stand as I introduce them: Ron Helmholt, Ashley Croden, Keri Grainger, Kathleen Ruelling, and Sarah McEwen. I'm honoured to welcome them here today, and I would ask all of the members of this Assembly to give them the warm, traditional welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure today that I rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two good friends of mine, both strong Conservatives, who are sitting in the public gallery. Firstly, Kyle Franz, who is a PhD student at Queen's University in Kingston, where he expects to finish his PhD in 2011. He's a native of Brooks and a former president of the PC Youth of Alberta. I once served on his executive. He plans to come to Alberta once he has completed.

Secondly, I'm pleased to introduce my STEP student, Matt Gelinas, who is originally from Calgary. He is a fourth-year political science student at the University of Calgary. He is a former staffer of the Prime Minister's office. Despite him having poor judgment in being a fan of the Saskatchewan Roughriders, he is one of the best campaign workers that I've ever seen.

I'd ask that they both please stand up and get the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Barb and Don Oatway from Airdrie. Barb is currently battling a serious form of cancer, and her courage in doing so has been inspirational. I'm happy to report that she is currently in remission. They are up here to witness the tabling of a petition that Mrs. Oatway has organized, which we will get to later on this afternoon. I would ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly six special guests sitting in the public gallery. Mr. Balvir Boparai is a well-known pop singer in the Punjab state of India. Mr. Boparai is in Canada to promote the Punjabi culture in our beautiful nation, Canada. Balvir escaped from the Indian summer. You can see the colour of his skin. Along with him are other members of the Sikh community: Mr. Malkit Singh Panesar, Mr. Kirpal Singh Padam, Mr. Kuldip Singh Chana, Mr. Balbir Singh Chana, Mr. Avtar Singh Deol. I would like to ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a very special group of people. We have four of the 10 buffalo gals joining us in the public gallery today.

First of all, I'd like to introduce to you Conni Massing. Conni, would you rise. Conni is a playwright, a television and film screenwriter, and currently the writer-in-residence at the Edmonton Stanley Milner library.

Next, Stephen Heatley, who many of you would recognize as the artistic director for Theatre Network in the '80s and '90s. We've lost him to British Columbia. He is now a professor of acting and directing at the University of British Columbia.

Richard Stuart is one of the very few but very precious full-time staff members at the Edmonton Folk Festival. He is their administrator.

Finally, Brian Deedrick, who many of you will recognize as the amazing, beloved, and, well, yes, artistic director of the Edmonton Opera.

Please rise again and accept the warm welcome of the Alberta Legislature.

The Speaker: Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition, do you have an introduction?

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today we have with us a very special guest in the public gallery. Mr. Al Kiffiak wrote a letter to me in February expressing his outrage at the unjust policy changes proposed for seniors' health care. Mr. Kiffiak is appalled by the government's plan to put the quality of life of seniors in jeopardy by making it more expensive to acquire prescriptions. Mr. Kiffiak is here today to show this government that seniors deserve better and to witness the tabling of his letter. I'll ask Mr. Kiffiak to rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Canadian Home Builders' Association SAM Awards

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to recognize the Canadian Home Builders' Association, Calgary region, and the recent successes of their 22nd annual sales and marketing, SAM, awards ceremonies. The SAM awards recognize the highest levels of innovation and achievement in single- and multifamily home designs, development, renovation, new products, marketing, and sales, to name a few. Sixty-one awards were presented to members who exemplify the industry's best of 2008. For the first time points were awarded to new homes which were rated and qualified as bronze, silver, gold, or platinum under the Built Green program criteria.

Mr. Speaker, Built Green is an industry-driven, voluntary program that promotes green building practices to reduce the impact that building has on the environment. It benefits the homebuyer, the community, and the environment and is an opportunity for everyone to choose a green future. This program was the vision of the CHBA Calgary region member builders and has grown quickly to become a national program, which continually raises the bar of environmental responsibility.

Both the Built Green and the SAM award programs are prime examples of how one of Alberta's major industries strives to better itself and self-directs for positive advancements to the benefit of all Albertans.

I would like to ask all our members here to join me in congratulating the SAM award finalists and recipients and in thanking the house builders in Alberta for providing Albertans with housing of high quality.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Lori Irvine
William Smolak

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to congratulate two Alberta teachers who received an award for their dedication to high school students. The Hilton Mierau award of excellence in off-campus learning is a new award offered by Careers: the Next Generation. It honours educators who go above and beyond their duties to give students the opportunity to connect learning to work. The recipients are Lori Irvine and William Smolak.

Lori has taught at Lindsay Thurber comprehensive high school in Red Deer for 18 years and has been off-campus co-ordinator for the past four years. Her innovative approach to off-campus learning includes using video conferencing to connect students with specialists in different occupations.

William left retirement five years ago to provide a new focus for the off-campus education program at the Vegreville composite high school. He has partnered Vegreville composite with over 40 businesses in the community that accept students for work placements.

Mr. Speaker, these teachers truly understand the value of off-campus education programs, which reinforce and extend and motivate students' learning.

I also want to recognize the work of Careers: the Next Generation, an industry-driven partnership dedicated to developing the careers of Alberta youth. I applaud the efforts of individuals like Lori and William, who make off-campus learning an engaging and successful experience for Alberta students.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Buffalo Gals

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I welcome to the Legislative Assembly a group of western Canadians known collectively and affectionately as the buffalo gals: Conni Massing, Richard Stuart, Brian Deedrick, and Stephen Heatley. Missing from the group here are Bob White, Kevin McGugan, Patti Pon, Bob Erkamp, Tyler Irvine, and Norma Lock.

Now, I've asked them to join me today to celebrate the announcement by Brindle and Glass books that next year they will be publishing Conni's book about the buffalo gals and their Alberta adventures, tentatively entitled Buffalo Jerky.

Who and what are the buffalo gals? Well, you get a sense of them by reading about them in this month's Legacy magazine, where Conni has an article entitled the Torrington Eight, which I highly recommend. Essentially, this is a group of 10 western Canadians who explore Alberta: Alberta off the beaten tracks, Alberta by theme, Alberta by region. I think the genesis of this was the annual adventure that Conni and some friends took years ago doing the stamp around Alberta project, where you could travel to different locations in Alberta and get a stamp in your passport book. Now, for 10 years this group of friends, all employed more or less in the theatre, have done what few of us do: they choose the theme or the location, they do the research, they jump in the van and explore Alberta for a weekend every June. I've always been insanely jealous of the fun and adventures that they have and of the stories that they tell. Now, as of next year we can all enjoy these stories.

Thank you for coming to the Legislature, buffalo gals, and allowing me to show you off to all of my legislative colleagues and for showing us a way to have a fun time and celebrate our wonderful province. Enjoy this year's tour.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

World Day for Cultural Diversity for Dialogue and Development

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to commemorate a special day for Albertans of every culture and background, World Day for Cultural Diversity for Dialogue and Development. In November 2001 the United Nations adopted the universal declaration on cultural diversity, which designated May 21 as a day to deepen our understanding of the values of cultural diversity and to learn to live together better. World day recognizes the pivotal relationship between culture and development and the role that communication technologies play in that relationship. Through dialogue and mutual respect Albertans of all cultures and faiths can help contribute to the great task of building a stronger, better world for future generations.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to be part of such a diverse and dynamic group in this Assembly. Together, Albertans of all cultures have contributed to making our great province a beacon of hope and achievement on the world stage. I am also very, very proud to serve as the Member for Edmonton-McClung, a culturally diverse constituency that continually inspires me every day.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

International Day of Families

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The United Nations has designated this Friday, May 15, as the International Day of Families. My wife, Jennifer, my son, Dawson, and even our puppy, Mac-Gyver, will definitely celebrate the day, and I encourage all Albertans to do the same.

Healthy, supportive families are key to building a strong province, and that's why it's so important for individuals, communities, and government to work together to ensure that families enjoy the support they need to reach their full potential and build a successful future for all. Our government provides numerous programs and services that contribute to building strong families, including family and community support services; parent link centres; services for foster and adoptive parents; support for quality child care; an education system that is second to none; high-quality, accessible health services; supports for seniors and people with disabilities; and so much more.

Mr. Speaker, successful families continue to be our priority, and we're proud of Alberta's diverse and thriving families, who provide children and youth with the foundation they need to become successful adults.

I'd like to thank my family for making me feel on top of the world every day. I'd like to encourage all Albertans to commemorate the International Day of Families on Friday and perhaps every day, and I'd like to congratulate everyone associated with each of our related ministries for their invaluable contributions to our province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, today is also a very special anniversary for the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed. Ten years ago today he became one of the very small number of human beings who had the opportunity to view the world from 29,035 feet above sea level, the summit of Mount Everest.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Crime Prevention Awards

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This week is Crime Prevention Week, a time for all Albertans to make crime prevention a priority and work together towards a common goal of safe and secure communities.

When a neighbourhood experiences a problem with crime and residents become frustrated, it's important to remember that sometimes all it takes to fix a problem is one person with an idea and drive. That person gets others involved. Everyone is looking out for one another, and great things happen. We saw some excellent examples of this last week at the annual Solicitor General and Public Security crime prevention awards. Six Albertans who are stepping up to make a difference were honoured for their involvement with preventing crime in their communities. Earlier this week we had the honour of meeting three of these award recipients when they were introduced in this Assembly. It's inspiring to see the good that happens when ordinary people take ownership and responsibility for crime reduction in their backyards and neighbourhoods.

Mr. Speaker, individuals and community organizations are key partners with police and government in the fight against crime. Every day there are new examples of the excellent job police in Alberta do in preventing and investigating crime across the province. Government is doing its part by implementing key recommendations of the safe communities task force such as adding 300 new police positions, hiring 110 new probation officers, new Crown prosecutors, as well as launching a new program that targets the 15 per cent of offenders who commit 60 per cent of the crimes. We are also developing a gang crime suppression strategy that focuses on intervention, prevention, and enforcement, and a gang summit will be held in June.

Mr. Speaker, this week and throughout the entire year I encourage every Albertan to visit the government website at www.crimeprevention.gov.ab.ca for crime prevention information and suggestions they can use today to help keep their communities safe.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Royal Alexandra Hospital Surgery Reductions

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Royal Alexandra hospital, one of the largest and busiest in the province, is having to cut elective surgery by 15 per cent, thus cutting needed operating rooms that were finally running at full capacity. To the minister: how much has the minister told the Alberta Health Services Board to cut in the health system? How many dollars are we looking at this year?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, like on so many occasions with this particular member – most recently I recall him talking about a physician hiring freeze. There was no physician hiring freeze. In this particular case I recognize that the leader is back to his favourite research arm, and that particular research arm is reporting a situation that, quite frankly, is not correct. I asked the CEO, in fact, earlier this week because I expected the question to come earlier, but because it hadn't been made public in the Edmonton Journal, I guess that's why – I'll answer the second question.

Dr. Swann: Well, perhaps the minister would enlighten us, then. What is the plan for the Royal Alexandra hospital's surgical services?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, what has occurred at the Royal

Alexandra hospital is that in the first quarter of this year they did increase their workload, and they incurred a significant amount of overtime costs. The CEO of Alberta Health Services has a budget that he is attempting to work within, so what he has done by way of a letter – and I would like to at the appropriate time today table five copies of the letter. The letter states very clearly that he has instructed this particular facility to maintain the level of operating surgeries at the same level as at the end of 2008, so there is no reduction.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, there's clearly a playing with words here. My understanding is that the surgical suites finally got up to full function in the last couple of months. They've been short of staff, short of space. They've finally gotten up to optimal functioning, and now this minister is saying that they're being asked to return to last year's rates. Well, those rates were surely not optimal. How does the minister explain this disparity?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, you know, I've heard from this particular leader talking about smart spending in health care, about one day saving, the next day spending. What we've done is we've brought in a budget that is before this Legislature. Our particular budget has increased by about 4.9 per cent. The Alberta Health Services budget has increased 7.7 per cent within that operating budget, which, by the way, is $500 million more than last year. The CEO is attempting to prioritize where those dollars go, and that is a decision that that board and that CEO will make.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Parental Choice in Education

Dr. Swann: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. The National Center for Science Education in the United States stated that opt-out policies are a mistake because of the burdens imposed on teachers, the disruption caused to the educational process, and the damage opt-out clauses cause to the reputation of public institutions. While reputable groups continue to protest against opt-outs, this administration's mind has already been made up by fringe religious groups. To the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit: which organizations were consulted during the policy development on the parental opt-out? We already know that Alberta's teachers were ignored, so who is influencing this government?

Mr. Blackett: Mr. Speaker, the people that influence this government are Albertans. There are 3 and a half million of those, and we proudly stand up for them. I met just recently, yesterday, with the Minister of Education, and we had a discussion with representatives of various school boards. We all agree on one thing: the system that works now works perfectly well. If you have a problem with the curriculum, you go to your teachers; you go to your principal; you go to your school boards. There's nothing that we have here in Bill 44 that will change that, sir.

Dr. Swann: Well, if it was fine before, why are we changing it, Mr. Minister?

The parental opt-out will drive away the best and brightest teachers in Alberta, who will not tolerate the conditions this government is creating. Why has the government threatened our public education by imposing such a burden on teachers that many will actually leave for more progressive jurisdictions?

Mr. Blackett: Well, Mr. Speaker, thank the Lord that our teachers are much more sensible than that. They know that they are in one of the best education systems in the world and one of the best provinces, the best countries in the world, full stop. We're not assailing anyone. We are not undermining anyone. The only people who are undermining the integrity of the educators in the teaching profession are the ones that continuously fearmonger, and they happen to be on the other side of the House.

Dr. Swann: Why has the government ignored the rights of parents who do not want their children's education disrupted or compromised by the religious views of others?

Mr. Blackett: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, I couldn't agree more. We're not compromising anybody because of the religious views of others. Religious views have no purview in what we're discussing. With respect to parent rights we're talking about notification and an opt-out clause on the grounds of religion, sexual orientation, and human sexuality. No more, no less.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Oil Sands Royalties

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday we revealed that a major oil sands company is paying 48 cents a barrel in royalties, at least for the first three months of the year. That's a 95 per cent drop in their royalty payments. The government justifies this by saying that royalties are much higher when prices go up, and they are. But the government capped its royalty rate increases at $120 a barrel. To the Minister of Energy: since the government is sharing in the risks at the bottom of the price cycle, will it lift the $120 cap at the top of the cycle?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Most certainly, with all of the discussion around royalty and the collection of royalty that we've had in the last while, I think it would be interesting to establish just where it is that certain members actually find themselves seated because there is a suggestion now by an hon. member that we should do something about raising royalties at this particular point in time. This same individual not that long ago – I believe he was the leader of a party at that time – said something like: you don't want to kill the golden goose; Albertans depend on this industry.

Dr. Taft: And so they do, so it needs to be well managed, Mr. Speaker.

Alberta's small and mid-sized conventional oil and gas companies are struggling like never before. Since the government has given a 95 per cent royalty break to a very profitable giant oil sands company, to the Minister of Energy: what does he say to the conventional industry, which is under such stress?

Mr. Knight: You know, Mr. Speaker, that's a very interesting question. Quite simply, it's obvious again that the member opposite has not been paying any attention at all to what we're doing. Transitional rates are in place to help exactly the type of people that he's talking about. Besides that, we now have a drilling incentive in place, $200 a metre, 5 per cent royalty on the first 100,000 barrels of production from a new well. We're doing all of that and more.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. I'm sure the conventional producers are quite delighted.

My question is to the President of the Treasury Board. This government plans to take in 50 per cent more from gambling than from all oil sands royalties combined. Fifty per cent more from gambling than from the second-largest oil reserve on the planet. To the President of the Treasury Board: why is this government depending more on gambling revenue than on all oil sands revenues combined? What kind of priority is that?

Mr. Snelgrove: You know, I guess it would be akin to having something change in the world, and all of a sudden all of the cards and slot machines are gone, and we don't have casinos anymore. Then I would be getting twice as much money from parking tickets as I am from casinos, and that would be something we've orchestrated. The world oil industry collapsed. There was a framework in place to manage that. So where the oil royalties are coming from now – yes, we'd like to have more. But the structure in the AGLC around casinos and gaming has stayed very consistent, and that is Albertans doing what they enjoy doing.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Health System Restructuring

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Wait times in Edmonton and Calgary emergency rooms are approaching 24 hours. Now the government is cancelling 15 per cent of elective surgeries at Edmonton's Royal Alexandra hospital. Wait times for hip and knee replacements and cataract surgery will go through the roof. My question is to the health minister. Why have you again failed Albertans, leaving them waiting in pain and darkness because you've cancelled their surgeries?

2:00

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, nobody has cancelled anybody's surgeries. It's been very clear that urgent care and urgent surgeries will be proceeding as they always have. There is a budget – and I know this particular member knows nothing about budgeting. He wouldn't know how to live within a budget if it were placed in front of him. What we are trying to do with Alberta Health Services is ensure that for the first time in many years we are going to live within our budget, and that is what the Alberta Health Services Board is planning to do.

Mr. Mason: Cutting costs at the expense of surgeries that allow people to see and walk without pain is heartless and cruel. To the health minister: with a $13 billion budget why on earth can't you and your government provide basic health care for Albertans who need it?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, despite the fact that they only want to provide basic health care, we are providing excellent health care in Alberta. Ask anyone who's been in the health care system. There are situations, however, where we have to ensure that we live within our means. We have a budget before this House, which I believe the Legislature will most likely approve, and we're going to live within that budget.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, you tell that to somebody who's been waiting in an emergency room for 24 hours.

It's clear that the Progressive Conservatives cannot be trusted with our health care system. They are so beholden to private interests that they keep trying to wreck public health care. To the health minister: given that the current demolition derby was completely absent from the PC platform in the last election, will you call off your dogs and fully restore our public health care system until you actually get a public mandate to change it?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, we had a mandate about a year and a half ago, I believe. Also, I think there was a party that ran in a neighbouring province of ours last night that campaigned on a similar kind of theme, and I think we all know the results.

Gangs and Organized Crime

Mr. Dallas: Mr. Speaker, police agencies throughout the province have made it clear that gangs and organized crime have become a prevalent threat to the safety and security of Albertans. This government has responded with initiatives that are helping police and communities gain an upper hand on criminals. These initiatives include the western Canada gang and organized crime conference, which was hosted in Calgary two weeks ago by Criminal Intelligence Service Alberta, a part of the Alberta law enforcement response team. My questions are to the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security. What is being done to make sure that police services in Alberta can co-ordinate their fight against organized crime and gang crime?

Mr. Lindsay: Mr. Speaker, this government is committed to ensuring an integrated and co-ordinated response by policing agencies as they keep Albertans safe from gangs and organized crime. One such initiative is the Alberta law enforcement response team, which recently hosted the western Canada gang and organized crime conference. The conference brought together more than 450 experts in criminal intelligence to share best practices in gang crime suppression. This conference also gave us the opportunity to share details of Alberta's gang crime suppression initiative and solicit feedback from experts in the field.

Mr. Dallas: To the same minister: it's interesting to learn a bit about the conference, but how exactly would this type of conference support Alberta's fight against gangs and organized crime?

Mr. Lindsay: Again, Mr. Speaker, crime knows no boundaries. Integration and collaboration amongst police and communities is the key to success in our fight against gangs. Conferences such as this are critical to ensuring that our response to gangs and crimes is co-ordinated effectively across provincial boundaries. They provide valuable information regarding emerging trends about gang culture and related criminal activity in both Canada and the United States. They also give intelligence officers, police, and probation officers another opportunity to network, share information on techniques to combat gang violence.

Mr. Dallas: To the same minister: well, sharing is great, but did we come up with some solutions to gang crime as a result of this conference?

Mr. Lindsay: Mr. Speaker, this conference confirmed that Alberta is very much on the right track when it comes to fighting gangs and organized crime. We're moving to better integrate and align police responses to gang crime by building on the current ALERT model, which is proving very successful in fighting organized crime and Internet crime. Premier Stelmach's commitment to add 300 new police officers over three years is also significantly increasing police resources in the province.

The Speaker: You know, you made a faux pas.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Seniors' Pharmaceutical Plan

Dr. Swann: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. The government's new plan for seniors' pharmaceutical coverage has missed the point. Selectively targeting sick seniors for drug costs is discriminatory and un-Albertan. To the minister of health: will the minister commit to further review this legislation to address the concerns seniors have brought forward? You have not completed your work, sir.

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, we have listened to seniors in Alberta, and we have announced a revised seniors' drug plan that will take effect on July 1, 2010, whereby some 60 per cent of Alberta's seniors will be better off than they are today. Under that plan 80 per cent of seniors' drug costs will continue to be picked up by government.

Dr. Swann: Will the minister also admit that single seniors who earn between $12,000 and $21,000, considered relatively low income in this province, are actually worse off under the revised plan as opposed to the first draft of his plan?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, there's something wrong with the member's math because that particular senior today is paying 30 per cent of a prescription up to a maximum of $25. Under the new plan that same individual will be paying 20 per cent of the cost of a prescription up to a maximum of $15. So I'd ask him how he sees that as being worse off.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What plans does the minister have for the seniors who need life-saving medications and find the costs beyond their reach?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to have heard the answer to my question. Obviously, he didn't review the question before he read it because he knows it's wrong.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Income Support Training

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have received many concerns about the duration policy for funded learners under the Alberta Works income support policy of 1995. One of the concerns is that the training period changed from 40 to 30 months. If students require further training after the 30-month period, they then have to wait for four years to receive more training and more dollars. My question is to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. What purpose does this serve for those people who need to get more education?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, prior to 2006 a learner under Alberta

Works or income support could take funded training up to a lifetime – and I emphasize lifetime – maximum of 40 months. After that, they were no longer eligible for any funding. But in 2006 we changed that policy to allow students to take funded training for a period of 30 months. The significant change is that they can come back after a period of four years and receive more funds for additional training. This policy strikes a balance between being accountable to our taxpayers and getting people the adequate training to succeed in the workforce.

Ms Calahasen: Mr. Speaker, if students fail or don't complete a program, they have to wait another four years before they can return to training. I know that when I went to school, I was not perfect. I did not receive the perfect marks. If I failed at least one course, I wasn't kicked out of school, nor was I told that I couldn't access funding. To the same minister. This is really a harsh policy and a harsh penalty. Why would we continue to support this outdated policy?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our department is committed to the success of students. Our staff and students work together on a service plan that sets the direction and goals that they have on their coursework. Students must also be accountable and responsible for their studies in the program that they've registered in. Our staff can intervene on behalf of a student if that student is experiencing difficulties. We can change courses, and it is possible to have that organized. Students who fail a course may take the course on a part-time basis.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's really great to hear, but when a student doesn't follow through and complete their courses on time, they are not provided with further funding for at least another four years, as I indicated. My question is to the same minister. How is this helping the students, especially in depressed areas, and the Alberta taxpayer, as he indicated, if they are forced to go back to SFI, if that's all they've got? What course of action can they take?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, students who don't complete their course in the required time are considered to have left that particular course. They have left their service plan. I agree that they have to wait the four years to be eligible for funded training again, but under really extremely extraordinary circumstances individuals may be funded for training again before the four-year period has elapsed. We want to confirm to those individuals that in both the school situation or in the workforce they have individual responsibilities that they should adhere to.

2:10 Mandatory Disclosure of Gunshot and Stab Wounds

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, the province's vision of reducing crime is contained in the safe communities task force, and having recently reviewed the document, I could not find anywhere therein the enlisting of health care professionals to act as surrogate detectives for our police forces. To the Minister of Justice: can you tell me how having health care professionals provide information about individuals' gunshot or stab wounds, most of which are self-inflicted, helps our communities get to the root cause of crime?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The great thing about the province's safe communities plan is that we had a great task force, that put together 31 recommendations under the leadership of an hon. member in this House. We are not restricted, in our view, to those 31 recommendations. We believe that this policy is a way forward for all people in Alberta to feel better in their communities and for us to partner with them in the context of building safe communities.

I will answer the second part of the question once I get asked the second part.

Mr. Hehr: In addictions court an accused must plead guilty as a precondition to entry into the program. To the Justice minister: with the proposed approach why would an accused plead guilty to a substantive offence if they might be then liable for associated medical costs?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In terms of the partnership that we have with Albertans, we believe it's important for everyone to understand that they have an obligation to be part of building a safer community. We believe that it's very important for everyone who's involved in the medical system, who already has an obligation with respect to the reporting of child abuse, to also be involved in helping police and helping the community to find out what's going on in the community to get to the root causes of crime.

With respect to our approach to addiction treatment it's very important that we understand that people who are coming to court can with the help of social workers, Crown prosecutors, and their own defence counsel acknowledge that they need help, and we're there to provide programs that will help them.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you for that answer. Mr. Speaker, I guess a lot of times the people in our criminal justice system are both victims of crime and criminals themselves, and they often need treatment for addictions and mental health issues. Turning to medical professionals and health care facilities and agents of the state: well, these are diverging goals. Can the health minister tell me who from the Alberta medical community was consulted in these policy developments?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I can tell you who was consulted. It was Albertans, and they're fed up with crime. Despite the fact that this member tries to portray himself as some kind of a crime fighter, I'd like to see him support this bill for once and actually show that he is a crime fighter.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

No-zero Grading Policy

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are for the Minister of Education. Many schools have adopted a no-zero grading policy, and some members of the public view this practice as unreasonable and potentially damaging to students who find that the real world isn't quite so forgiving of below-standard performance. If we're to assure the postsecondary schools and employers of the calibre of our students, will the Minister of Education establish a province-wide grading policy?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, obviously assessment is a very important part of the education process, and teachers are the professionals in the classroom that have to work with students to make sure that they can help those students find their passions, help those students succeed. The question of a no-zero policy is one that's adopted from school to school. There's been discussion about it across the country. But, in effect, it doesn't really matter whether a student gets zero or five or 10 or 15. The issue is: how does a teacher engage with a student in the classroom to encourage them to do their best and to maximize their potential?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Quest: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Public debate is valued by Albertans, but on matters of grades or on reporting to students and their parents, the ministry will have to take a leadership role. Will the Ministry of Education be doing that?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I said, really, when it comes to classroom performance and assessment of learning, assessment for learning, those processes, where the province is interested in assessment of the system to see whether the system is serving Albertans well and serving our students well. When it comes to the assessment of students with respect to progress, that is the role of the professional teacher in the classroom and the policies that are adopted by a school and a school board to ensure that students are encouraged to learn and succeed.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. Parents have expressed concern that a no-zero grading policy gives them too little to go on. With this type of grading system, can the minister advise how parents are supposed to know how well their child is performing in school?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, the no-zero policy, as I understand it, as it's implemented in various jurisdictions and schools, essentially would deal with specific assignment processes and with a mark on a report card. What's really important is that parents engage on an ongoing basis. With the wonders of technology now we see more and more schools going on a school zone reporting process so that parents can actually log on and find out whether their students have completed assignments, what progress their students are making, and how they're participating. Again, we would encourage parents to engage at parent-teacher interviews with teachers with respect to the progress of their children. It's not simply a mark on a report card that matters. It's the ongoing process of learning, encouraging success, and making sure that parents are involved in that process.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Municipal Government Board Appeals

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over the last few years the number of appeals before the Municipal Government Board has absolutely skyrocketed. This administration's solution to reducing the board's workload is to take away a private owner's right of appeal. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Presently local boards are made up of local officials. How will the minister guarantee property owners a fair and independent hearing when they cannot appeal the decision to the provincial board itself?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, that particular bill is in front of the House, but I can suggest to you that we are not taking away any appeal opportunities for individuals. In fact, if you would read the bill, it enhances opportunities for individuals to acquire information that individuals need from municipalities. The appeal process is no different than a planning process. The first process is at the local level. I can explain more on the second go-around.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. I can't believe that. The minister probably read my mind.

Given that with the proposed changes a property owner can only appeal a point of law to the Court of Queen's Bench and those costs can be very prohibitive, how will these concerns of independence and fairness be addressed under that prohibitive action?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, presently and in the new bill the contents are exactly the same: the only way that you can appeal a point of law is through the courts. It's no different now. It's not going to be any different in the future.

Ms Pastoor: But there was that one step in between where they could go to the province. If the changes are made, Alberta will be the only province with a one-level appeal system whose boards are locally appointed. Why has the minister taken the drastic measures? Instead of improving the current system, it's been rejigged, and there's one less step.

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, presently an individual can go to the local appeal process. They also have the opportunity to go on to the Municipal Government Board. What does take place in a lot of situations is that the individuals hijack the first appeal process and go directly to the Municipal Government Board. These are local decisions. The only decisions that are going to be made at the local level are residential and farmland.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.
