Legislative Assembly of Alberta

3 p.m.

Tuesday, February 10, 2009

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order! All rise, please.

[The Clerk read the Royal Proclamation dated January 28, 2009, summoning the Members of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to convene on this date]

The Clerk: Please be seated.

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order! Order! Mr. Speaker.

[Preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, the Speaker, accompanied by the officers of the Assembly, entered the Chamber and took the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon, and welcome.

Almighty God, author of all wisdom, knowledge, and understanding, we ask Your blessings on all here present. We ask Your guidance in order that truth and justice may prevail in all of our judgments for the benefit of all Albertans. Amen.

Ladies and gentlemen and hon. members, I would now invite Mr. Paul Lorieau to lead us in the singing of our national anthem, and I would invite all to join in in the language of their choice.

Hon. Members and Guests:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Well done. Please be seated.

Entrance of the Lieutenant Governor

[The Premier, the Clerk, and the Sergeant-at-Arms left the Chamber to attend the Lieutenant Governor]

[The Mace was draped]

The Speaker: Ladies and gentlemen and hon. members, the history of Alberta does not recall an occasion when two Premiers from other Canadian provinces have been present for the presentation of Alberta's Speech from the Throne. Today two Premiers, both the 31st in the history of their respective provinces, are with us.

Premier Shawn Graham was elected as Premier of New Brunswick on September 18, 2006, and his government holds 32 of 55 seats in the New Brunswick Legislative Assembly. Premier Graham, would you please rise and receive the welcome of all present.

Premier Robert W.J. Ghiz was elected Premier of Prince Edward Island on May 28, 2007, and his government holds 24 of 27 seats in the Prince Edward Island Legislative Assembly. Premier Ghiz, would you please rise and receive the welcome of all present.

Hon. members, the Royal Canadian Artillery Band will now play a brief musical interlude, the details of which are included in everyone's program. The RCA Band, Canada's oldest regular army band, was formed in Quebec City in 1879. It was subsequently stationed in Montreal and Halifax. It has seen service in both world wars and in Korea and has travelled across Canada and beyond our borders. Reconstituted in Edmonton in 1997, the band is today under the direction of Captain David Shaw, who is in the Speaker's gallery.

[The Sergeant-at-Arms knocked on the main doors of the Chamber three times. The Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms opened the doors, and the Sergeant-at-Arms entered]

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Ladies and gentlemen, all rise, please.

Mr. Speaker, His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor awaits.

The Speaker: Sergeant-at-Arms, admit His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor.

[A fanfare of trumpets sounded]

[Preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, His Honour the Lieutenant Governor of Alberta, Norman L. Kwong, CM, AOE, and Mrs. Kwong, their party, the Premier, and the Clerk entered the Chamber. His Honour took his place upon the throne]

His Honour: Ladies and gentlemen, please be seated.

This is my fifth year delivering the Speech from the Throne, and it occurs to me that I've never taken the opportunity to thank all the members of the Assembly for the kindness and support that you've shown my wife and me throughout this term. Serving as Lieutenant Governor is really one of the best jobs in the province because it's a chance to quarterback and coach a championship Alberta team that does a wonderful job of governing our province and a chance to give back to a place that I'm incredibly proud to call home. So from both myself and my wife, Mary, thank you all for your support.

I was also going to thank the Premier for making this year's speech shorter, but he didn't, so I'll get right to it.

I would like to extend a special welcome to our guests from Canada's east coast: the Hon. Shawn Graham, Premier of New Brunswick; the Hon. Robert Ghiz, Premier of Prince Edward Island; and the Hon. Jack Keir, New Brunswick Minister of Energy. Premier Graham, Premier Ghiz, and Minister Keir, we're most pleased to have you join us not only in our province but also here in this House, where the business of the people of Alberta is conducted.

Speech from the Throne

His Honour: Ladies and gentlemen, welcome to the Second Session of the 27th Alberta Legislature. Today it is my honour to deliver the Speech from the Throne as it is my honour to serve this province and its people as Lieutenant Governor.

Facing the Future with Confidence

Ours is a beautiful and blessed province. It has always attracted people of courage and determination, dreamers who saw opportunity here and worked together to realize all the possibilities our land offers. Together the people of this province have faced many challenges over the past century. Tough times bring out the best in Albertans. We always pull together and emerge from adversity even stronger than before. In tough times we have learned the value of self-reliance and hard work, the need to plan and prepare for the future, and what it means to stand together as a community that looks after its most vulnerable members.

These lessons will guide Alberta as it faces yet another challenge, the global economic uncertainty that is unfolding all around us. Our province is not immune from the turmoil. Far from it. Alberta will face its share of challenges, and government needs to make prudent and realistic decisions to ensure it delivers the things Albertans need at an affordable cost.

But despite the volatile economic times Albertans can face the future with confidence and optimism. We will do what we have always done: adapt, set goals for the future, and move forward in confident pursuit of those goals. Prudent fiscal management has positioned Alberta well. Our province is debt free and has more than $7 billion set aside in the sustainability fund to help protect core programs from roller-coaster revenues. Tax changes, including the elimination of health care premiums this year, will save Albertans and Alberta businesses over $1 billion annually, putting extra money in the economy, a welcome stimulus at a critical time.

These actions are part of your government's economic vision, steps that were taken long before the economic downturn began. They will serve Albertans well by helping our province weather the downturn and positioning our province to be ahead of the curve of the next growth cycle.

Our plan as we navigate through these uncertain times will focus on protecting Albertans and the things that matter most to them while preparing the way for growth to resume as quickly as possible. Our commitment to core programs such as health and education will remain strong, and we will continue to implement the strategic capital plan and other long-term initiatives that form our investment in the future to ensure that Albertans will have the infrastructure and services they need for a return to sustained growth and an increasingly diverse economy.

Creating Opportunity

As a trading province Alberta's future economic success will be built on our ability to compete in a world marketplace. Your government will protect and nurture the business conditions that will allow Alberta companies and entrepreneurs to thrive in markets here at home and around the globe. It will also continue to aggressively promote Alberta products nationally and internationally and bolster Alberta's reputation as a place that welcomes those who want to live, work, invest, and trade with us.

Alberta has advocated strongly for the elimination of interprovincial trade barriers and led by example with our agreement with British Columbia to improve competitiveness and bolster the national economy. Removing these barriers will make Canada more competitive and a more desirable place to invest.

Alberta is also developing a comprehensive new strategy to strengthen international relations with long-time economic partners and identify new markets for Alberta. Of course, our biggest international partner is also Canada's closest friend, neighbour, and ally, the United States. We will build positive relations with the new U.S. administration and support our healthy trading relationship. We will continue to help the U.S. meet its need for a stable and secure supply of energy to power a return to prosperity, and we will demonstrate our commitment to developing our resources in an environmentally responsible way.

Foundations of Our Economy: Energy

Alberta is blessed with world-class energy resources. These have provided broad, sustained wealth creation for Albertans, and they offer long-term energy security for Canada and North America. The royalty changes introduced by government at the beginning of this year set the stage for a renewed partnership between industry and Albertans, the owners of our resources. It is a partnership in which both the rewards and the risks of this volatile industry are more equitably shared.

As outlined in Alberta's first-ever provincial energy strategy, opportunities for further value-added development in Alberta will be pursued in the oil, gas, and petrochemicals industries. This will include a review of Alberta's competitiveness in the energy sector, comprising everything from the cost of materials to the efficiency and effectiveness of regulatory regimes. The goal is to ensure that Alberta continues to attract investment that diversifies the economy, creates good jobs for Albertans, and provides revenues to pay for important programs and services.

The aboriginal consultation policy and guidelines on land management and resource development will be reviewed this year with input from First Nations and industry to ensure the approach to consultation is beneficial to all Albertans.

One area of significant government focus is the oil sands, North America's most promising source of energy for decades to come. While global economic uncertainty has slowed the pace of oil sands development, there is no doubt that this abundant resource will play a key role in building long-term economic growth and energy security for Alberta and Canada. Consumers and businesses around the world will be looking for fossil fuels for generations to come, even as the search for alternatives intensifies. Our goal must be to provide the energy the world needs with an environmental footprint that grows lighter and lighter over time.

Your government will release and implement a comprehensive plan that will responsibly manage the economic, environmental, social, and infrastructure impacts and opportunities of oil sands development. The plan will set out strategies to optimize economic growth in the oil sands while reducing their environmental impact. It will increase co-ordination across all levels of government and stakeholders in developing the oil sands responsibly and enhance accountability in the management of the oil sands. It will foster innovation in science and technology that can solve the unique challenges of oil sands development. There will continue to be an increased emphasis on planning in high-growth communities in the oil sands regions.

With these improvements in mind we must recognize that no leading source of energy today and no source of fossil fuel comes without some environmental consequence. Our goal must be nothing less than to partner with our customers in meeting their energy needs and honouring our mutual commitment to protect the planet for future generations.

Forestry

Our province is blessed with forests that provide social, economic, and environmental benefits for Albertans: protect watersheds, provide fish and wildlife habitat and recreational opportunities, and support industries, jobs, and communities.

Forest companies and the communities they serve have been hit hard by global economic uncertainty, the slowdown of the U.S. housing market, and ongoing business challenges. The Alberta government is working with the province's forestry sector to implement recommendations from the Forest Industry Sustainability Committee's interim report to improve global competitiveness, increase value-added opportunities, and pursue the evolving bioindustry.

Programs to promote healthier forests will include the healthy pine strategy to manage the spread of the mountain pine beetle, use strategic harvesting to diversify the age of the timber, and lessen the risk of catastrophic wildfire and insect infestations.

Agriculture

Alberta's agriculture and agrifood industries are key economic drivers of our province. However, Alberta's livestock industry continues to deal with many challenges that threaten its sustainability. Your government is working closely with all sectors to implement the Alberta livestock and meat strategy, a long-term plan that will lay the foundation for a profitable and competitive future.

Alberta has already provided significant support to this valuable industry, more than any other jurisdiction across the country. It is important that we uphold the reputation of Alberta beef, pork, and other meat and livestock products as the best in the world. To do this, we must meet the demands of our customers for food safety, public safety, and animal health and welfare.

Building for Tomorrow

Modern, well-maintained infrastructure plays a vital role in our province's economic success and in supporting the high quality of life Albertans enjoy. Infrastructure projects support essential services and represent important economic activity that encourages employment and business across the province.

Unlike many jurisdictions that are going into deficit with infrastructure stimulus packages, Alberta has more than $6 billion in its capital account to continue an aggressive infrastructure program that began years ago. Your government will follow through on its commitment to make significant investments in hospitals, schools, and other public infrastructure to strengthen our communities and help municipalities address growth pressures.

In today's economic environment, now more than ever, this means investing strategically and building responsibly. Keeping a close eye on project scope and budgets, we will work with stakeholders to ensure that facilities are appropriate for the needs of the community and delivered in a timely, cost-effective, and efficient manner.

Showing Environmental Leadership

Albertans live in one of the most spectacular, diverse, beautiful, and healthy natural environments in the world. Generations of Albertans have grown up with an appreciation of and respect for the environment. Our province is a place of many blessings, including landscapes that are both extremely productive and incredibly beautiful.

With the increasing demand for resources felt from all corners of the globe, Alberta's landscapes face increasing pressure for habitat protection, housing, recreation, jobs, and economic growth. To address these pressures, Alberta is pioneering planning tools and new environmental management approaches that consider our province's landscapes across entire regions. The land-use framework will help promote environmental priorities alongside social and economic goals. Cumulative effects management, already being used in Alberta's Industrial Heartland northeast of Edmonton, will be applied next to the oil sands area in conjunction with the land-use framework.

A Plan for Parks

Among Albertans' most cherished spaces are our province's parks and protected areas. Like the rest of the province these areas are also impacted by a growing population and increased use. A new plan for parks will be introduced this year to ensure the long-term sustainability of our natural landscapes, enhance recreational opportunities, and help to improve the quality of life for Albertans. We want to ensure that Alberta's parks inspire people to discover, enjoy, and value the natural world.

Clean Water, Air, and Land

In 2003 Alberta's water for life strategy became North America's most comprehensive water management strategy. Five years later this province has changed: more people, more buildings, more business, and more demands on our water resources. The renewed water for life strategy addresses those changes and provides clear direction for addressing some of the water challenges facing our province. It will ensure that Alberta's precious water resources are the focus of thoughtful, long-term planning and stewardship.

Your government will redouble efforts to ensure that as we meet the needs of energy consumers here and around the world, we provide them with products that are made with environmental care. We will maintain a long-term focus to invest in clean, low-carbon technology, reduce emissions from industry, and support energy-wise choices for consumers.

Alberta pioneered North America's first regulatory system to reduce industrial greenhouse gas emissions. Our system has already generated more than 2 and a half million tonnes of real reductions, but this is only a first step to regulate and reduce emissions. We will continue to learn from our actions, adapt, and grow, and we will continue to work with the federal government to support a cohesive national framework to limit greenhouse gas emissions and do our part as a responsible, sustainable North American energy leader.

This spring the government of Alberta will introduce legislation to facilitate the development of technologies that will help not just Alberta but countries around the world meet the challenge of climate change. The carbon capture and storage implementation act will establish a $2 billion investment in carbon capture and storage. Funding for between three and five projects will be announced this year, resulting in greenhouse gas emission reductions of up to 5 million tonnes annually in Alberta, the equivalent of taking a third of Alberta's vehicles off the road. Even more importantly, these initial projects will set the stage for technological developments that will make carbon capture and storage, real reductions in greenhouse gas emissions, possible in other jurisdictions, including those whose emissions are substantially larger than Alberta's.

Albertans want to do their part to conserve and be energy efficient. Your government will develop an energy efficiency policy framework to help Albertans be wise energy consumers. A consumer rebate program will be introduced to encourage individual actions and energy-wise decisions.

People Thriving in a Skilled Workforce

Inspiring Education

The freedom to create our own future and achieve our dreams so often rests on our enthusiasm for education. This year we will reach out to Albertans to explore their hopes, dreams, and aspirations for their children and learn how we can enable each child to reach his or her full potential. This conversation, called Inspiring Education, will create a long-term vision for K to 12 education in Alberta and develop better ways to offer educational opportunities to our children.

An Environment Where Innovation Flourishes

Your government will help innovation flourish in Alberta. Our province's international reputation is increasingly linked to our commitment to technology as Alberta becomes known as one of the world's preferred destinations for turning ideas into value-added products and services. New technologies will set the pace of our competitive success and will both harness and fuel our imaginations. We must be prepared to compete with and win against the best in the world when it comes to matching education, capital, and ingenuity to make better products, solve bigger problems, and create a better quality of life.

The Alberta research and innovation act, to be introduced this session, will strengthen and align the entire research and innovation system to help Alberta researchers and entrepreneurs, especially new entrepreneurs, better realize their potential as creators of world-class discoveries and products.

As part of Alberta's action plan for bringing technology to market, entrepreneurs will have access to a new suite of innovation services this year, including more efforts to help spur new product development and match young talent with experienced technology development advisers. A new connector service will help bring companies and international partners together with the many outstanding innovators and organizations in the province, and the Alberta Enterprise Corporation will encourage and leverage international investment.

Our new Campus Alberta philosophy will help nurture this culture of innovation by expanding young minds through our exceptional postsecondary institutions. A revised funding approach will better align resources with learner and labour market demand, focusing on areas that support Alberta's strategic advantage and long-term plan to win in the next generation economy. Alberta's outstanding education system and trades and technology excellence will be showcased to the world at the September WorldSkills competition in Calgary.

Adapting to a Changing Business Environment

Alberta's labour force has a long history of adapting to a changing business environment. Working from the past success of the building and educating tomorrow's workforce strategy, government will set the future direction for investing in our workforce. We will develop a long-term strategy that will look ahead, anticipate growth, and take the steps needed to ensure that Alberta has the talents and skills to create value-added activity, increase innovation, and expand and diversify the Alberta economy.

Your government is also committed to working with First Nations and Métis leaders on a government-to-government basis to increase labour market participation and economic opportunity. This summer the government of Alberta in partnership with Treaty 7 First Nations will present a first-of-its-kind international symposium that will bring together aboriginal and business communities to share and encourage indigenous economic development strategies. The event, called Gathering for Success, will feature over 500 community, business, and aboriginal leaders and high-profile speakers from around the world.

A Healthy Approach

Your government recognizes that Albertans want and deserve an excellent health care system that will be strong and sustainable for the future. Alberta has developed a forward-looking five-part plan for health called Vision 2020. This plan is about meeting the needs of individual patients, their families, and communities in a way that recognizes the role of all Albertans in maintaining their health and improving the way health services are organized, delivered, and used. Under Vision 2020 a primary health care strategy will be introduced to promote the use of interdisciplinary health teams and more flexible workforce arrangements. The strategy will also focus on recruitment and retention of the health workforce needed to deliver high-quality and accessible care.

Rural health care will be enhanced through the integration of ambulance and emergency medical services with other parts of the provincial health system effective April 1, 2009. This will result in improved access to high-quality care in rural areas.

Your government will pursue a three-year action plan on children's mental health, a partnership among government, schools, and communities that will support services and resources for optimal mental health and well-being.

A new drug programs benefit act will be introduced during this session to support the Alberta pharmaceutical strategy. It will make drug coverage more accessible and affordable for lower income Alberta seniors and other vulnerable persons.

The Public Health Amendment Act, also to be introduced this session, will lay a solid foundation for improving public health by strengthening the role and authority of the chief medical officer of health in protecting and promoting Albertans' health.

A health research strategy will be developed and implemented to guide Alberta's investment in health research and ensure that research focuses on innovation and improving health service efficiency and effectiveness.

Strong Communities

Alberta, as we know, is made up of vibrant, inclusive communities, places of opportunity, culture, and belonging where families and children are supported, where the vulnerable are cared for, and where people feel safe. Strong and sustainable municipalities are a key ingredient of strong communities. To foster strong communities throughout the province, your government will provide significant funding to Alberta municipalities through programs like the municipal sustainability initiative.

A Culture of Creativity

Nurturing a culture of creativity and inclusiveness in our province will give Albertans the edge we need to remain competitive with other jurisdictions in Canada and around the world for residents and visitors alike. Last year Alberta hosted its first-ever Arts Day, with events held in communities across the province to celebrate the arts in all its forms. This year the celebration will be expanded to a three-day event called Arts Days, between September 18 and 20. A province-wide campaign will also be launched to promote Alberta's creativity and artistic excellence.

Supporting Children and Families

Your government will support children and families through improvements in high-quality, accessible, and affordable child care options. The government of Alberta has made a commitment to support the creation of 14,000 new child care spaces in our province by 2011, and it is well on the way to reaching that goal. More than 5,500 spaces have been created so far.

This year accreditation will be extended to out of school child care programs to raise the standard of care these programs provide. Accreditation will provide operators with access to grants and wage top-ups to help recruit, retain, and develop staff. It will also help families find quality care for their school-aged children.

Helping Albertans through Tough Times

Your government recognizes that economic uncertainty is putting pressure on Albertans, and some are worried about their futures. We will be there to help Albertans through tough times.

Alberta will deliver on its commitment to develop 11,000 affordable housing units by providing capital funding assistance to municipalities, nonprofit organizations, and the private sector. With more than 5,600 affordable housing units supported since 2007, we are on track to meet this goal.

Alberta Works programs provide a hand up to employment, and these programs will become both more visible and more important in the year ahead. People with barriers to employment will receive information, advice, and assistance. People facing layoffs will receive help in identifying their options, looking for work, or moving into other careers. People wanting to take occupational upgrading will get help to learn new skills for a changing workforce, and new Albertans will be supported as they settle into community life and move into the workforce.

Supporting Seniors and Persons with Disabilities

Your government recognizes and appreciates the contributions seniors have made and continue to make to our province. Alberta will ensure that seniors who need support, persons with disabilities, and others who are vulnerable or in need are well cared for.

Alberta will continue to pursue its new continuing care strategy to help Albertans to age in the right place by increasing access to home care and providing more choice in supportive living options. It will upgrade the physical and functional condition of long-term care facilities. We are committed to improving quality, supply, and client choice in the continuing care system.

This session the supportive living accommodation licensing act will be introduced. This updated legislation will improve the quality of care and monitoring of standards in supportive living facilities.

The Protection for Persons in Care Amendment Act will also be introduced to better protect adults who receive care and support services from government-funded agencies from abuse by improving prevention, monitoring, and follow-up when abuse has been reported.

Bill 1, Protecting the Jobs of Those Who Serve

Albertans value the tremendous sacrifices Canadian military personnel make to protect our freedoms. Along with leaving family and friends when they are called into active service, those in the reserves also leave their civilian jobs. Your government believes those who defend our security should have job security so they can continue to support their families.

We are privileged to have three members of the Canadian Forces reserves with us today: Corporal Tyler Myroniuk of the Loyal Edmonton Regiment, Corporal Nathan Goisnard of 41 Combat Engineer Regiment, and Master Corporal Kevin Fensom of the King's Own Calgary Regiment.

In order to ensure that they and other Alberta reservists are properly protected under the Employment Standards Code, the government will introduce the Employment Standards Amendment Act to provide job-protected leave. The legislation would require the reinstatement of a reservist into the position he or she held prior to the leave or into a comparable position.

Safe Communities

The government of Alberta will push forward on its commitment to strong communities. We will continue to advance initiatives that respond to and build on the recommendations of the safe communities task force. In the year ahead safe communities initiatives will focus on families in crisis, mental health services, immigrant support programs, and addiction and recovery projects.

A new framework for law enforcement will be developed to ensure equitable police funding across the province, improve service delivery, and enhance police governance. Negotiations with the federal government will continue to ensure that the RCMP remains our provincial police service.

Your government is taking a hard look at the impact organized crime is having on Alberta, including the tremendous pressure it puts on the police and the courts. Alberta will host a gang summit this year to address the problem of gangs and gang activity and the impact on our justice system. Your government will introduce a legislative package to disrupt and dismantle organized crime activity. It will include amendments to the Gaming and Liquor Act to give police another tool to help bar owners and staff deal with gang activity. It will also consider tightening the rules around vehicle modification methods used by gang members such as armour-plating and installing bulletproof glass and surveillance cameras.

A key aspect of the work Alberta is doing requires changing legislation at a federal level. Alberta will continue to take the lead in advocating for changes to federal laws to ensure that those who commit serious crimes, including youth, do serious time.

Conclusion

These are certainly challenging times, but Albertans can and should face the future with confidence. Your government remains committed to implementing its plan to support a bright and prosperous future. That plan builds on the steps Albertans and their government have already taken to put our province on a sound footing. It's a plan that goes beyond weathering the current global economic storm to build a springboard to sustainable, diversified long-term growth. It's a plan for education and employment, public health, strong communities, and a culture of innovation. It is a plan that will position Alberta as a committed partner in providing consumers here in Canada and around the world with the energy they need while respecting the environmental values we all share.

Your government will undertake these actions knowing that even in tough times, especially in tough times, it is essential to keep investing in our province and its future. We must continue to welcome people to Alberta to pursue their dreams and build our communities. We must continue to share Alberta's story with people around the world.

Government must do these things, all the while recognizing that its role, while important, is limited. As always, the real authors of our province's success, those who will carry our province forward to an even greater future, are hard-working and innovative Albertans. It is Alberta's people that make our province unique: people who are dynamic and genuine, optimistic and open-minded, people who share the freedom to create and the spirit to achieve. It is Albertans who have made our province great, and together we will continue to build our province for those who will inherit this land that we love.

Thank you, ladies and gentlemen, and may God bless you all.

God bless Alberta.

God bless Canada.

God save the Queen.

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order! All rise, please.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I would now invite Mr. Paul Lorieau to lead us in the singing of God Save The Queen. Please remain standing at the conclusion.

Hon. Members and Guests:

God save our gracious Queen, long live our noble Queen,
 God save The Queen!
 Send her victorious,
 happy and glorious,
 long to reign over us;
 God save The Queen!

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order!

[Preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, Their Honours, their party, and the Premier left the Chamber as a fanfare of trumpets sounded]

The Speaker: Please be seated.

The Speaker: Hon. members, on December 13, 2008, the Alberta Liberal Party announced that the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View had been elected its new leader. On December 15, 2008, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview advised me in writing that he was resigning his position as Leader of the Official Opposition effective that date and further requested that the newly elected leader of the Liberal Party of Alberta, the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, be recognized as the Leader of the Official Opposition. Please join me in thanking the Member for Edmonton-Riverview for his service as Leader of the Official Opposition. [applause]

As of this day the Chamber recognizes the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View as the Leader of the Official Opposition in the Legislative Assembly of Alberta. The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View becomes the 29th different person in Alberta's history to serve in that capacity and Alberta's 30th Leader of the Official Opposition. One person served twice, at two different times. That is the reason for the difference in the numbers. To the new hon. Leader of the Official Opposition, congratulations and welcome.

[The Premier returned to the Chamber]

Tablings

The Speaker: Hon. members, I have the honour to table a copy of the Speech from the Throne graciously given by His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Bill 1Employment Standards (Reservist Leave) Amendment Act, 2009

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans have a deep respect – a deep respect – for all those who serve our country in Canada's armed forces. They help during times of emergency, they protect our borders, and they serve abroad to bring safety and preserve freedom around the world. For reservists this is a calling pursued by those who are otherwise civilians and who have careers outside the military. The need for regular training and the call to active service sometimes require absences from nonmilitary careers. We value the contributions that these brave people make and think it is only fair that they have jobs to return to when their service to Canada is done.

Mr. Speaker, therefore I request leave to introduce Bill 1, the Employment Standards (Reservist Leave) Amendment Act, 2009.

This amendment will provide Canadian Forces reservists in Alberta with unpaid, job-protected leave while they're away from their civilian jobs serving our country. In addition, reservists will be entitled to leave of up to 20 days each calendar year for training. The government of Alberta already offers these provisions for reservists who are members of the Alberta public service. If passed, this bill would ensure that all Alberta reservists will have similar protections in place, and they will know that they can continue to provide for their families by having jobs to come home to.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 1 read a first time]

Motions

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I now move that the speech of His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor to this Assembly be taken into consideration Wednesday, February 11, 2009.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that the Assembly do now adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 4:01 p.m. to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Welcome back.

Let us pray. Grant that we the members of our province's Legislature fulfill our office with honesty and integrity. May our first concern be for the good of all of our citizens. Let us be guided by these principles in our deliberations this day and every day. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What a great pleasure it is to introduce to you and through you some of Alberta's very brightest students who are here today from my constituency, from the wonderful Donnan elementary school. There are two classroom groups here visiting us today with their teachers and group leaders Ms Fiona White, Mr. Larry Goodwin, Mrs. Donna Machinski, Mrs. Claire Titus, Mr. Cory Packard, Miss Danielle Belanger, Miss Tennille Oppen, Mrs. Nadine Oszytko, Mrs. Jacque Verenka, and Mrs. Melinda Robertson. I would ask all of the students, their teachers, and their helpers to please rise, and why don't the rest of us greet them with a warm welcome. Thank you for coming.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me as well to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly 29 grade 6 students from Westbrook elementary school located in my constituency of Edmonton-Whitemud. Accompanying the students is their teacher, Chantel Oswald, along with parent helpers Mrs. Shelley Richmond and Mr. Rami Bader. All of the grade 6 students from this class have been currently participating in the School at the Legislature program in this school year.

Mr. Speaker, I recently had the privilege of visiting Westbrook school and speaking with four classes of grade 6 students, and I can assure you that they ask the best questions on all of the relevant current issues. They raised excellent questions. They're very engaged. The School at the Legislature program is doing well for these students.

My guests are seated in the members' gallery, Mr. Speaker, and I'd ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: I suspect that the answers were of equal quality.

The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have one very special introduction this afternoon. It is a great pleasure today for me to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly Mr. Hunter Wight. Many members will likely know Hunter from his role at Mount Royal College as vice-president of external relations, which happens to be in my constituency of Calgary-Elbow. I'd ask all members to join me in extending the warm welcome of this Assembly to Mr. Wight.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly two very important people from Covenant Health: Mr. Patrick Dumelie, president and CEO, and Dr. John Brennan, board chair. They're here today to raise awareness for the World Day of the Sick, which occurs every year on February 11. This day acts as a reminder to Catholics to ensure that people in need have special quality access to health care. It is also created to promote reflection and appreciation of the importance of each volunteer and individual effort to heal the sick.

On Monday, February 9, I attended an event at St. Joseph's Basilica for Covenant Health celebrating their missioning. Over 400 people attended this event, including the hon. Premier and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

I would like to thank Covenant Health for their work in spreading their message and their awareness and ask these two gentlemen to rise to receive the traditional warm greeting of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you very much. I'd like to take this opportunity to introduce to you and through you to all the members of this Assembly a fine young man from Lethbridge, Alberta, Mr. Luke Malcolm. He's a student at the University of Lethbridge, lives in my riding, is very involved in politics and all sorts of good things on campus and in the community. He's studying finance and political science and finishes his degree this year. I'd like to pass on a warm welcome to Luke if he'd just rise, please.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'd like to introduce to you and through you definitely the most beautiful person in this Assembly: my girlfriend, Ashley Millar. As many of the members know, in this job you need to have a strong support system, and Ashley has been with me since – we actually had our first date a year and a half ago today. She wanted to come and see what we actually do here. I would like the Assembly to give her the traditional warm welcome of this House.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce a friend and supporter in my constituency office, Mr. Marcel Durand, president of the constituency, in fact a great, thoughtful, and committed person for democracy and for the future of this province. I'd ask him to stand and receive the welcome of this Assembly.

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly my constituency assistant from my Calgary-West constituency. Laura Wells is in the gallery, and I'd ask that she rise and receive the applause of the members.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Alberta Initiative for School Improvement

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This past week Albertan innovation proved second to none as educators came together to showcase new ideas for improving student learning. On February 9 and 10 teachers, school administrators, school board trustees, parents, and community members participated in the eighth annual Alberta initiative for school improvement, or AISI, conference. The conference showcased over 50 creative, locally tailored projects developed by school jurisdictions from across Alberta. These projects ranged from focusing on technology and literacy to at-risk students and high school completion.

The 2009 AISI conference was a great success. Over 800 people attended, including government and school representatives from Alberta-accredited schools in Macau and Hong Kong, who came to experience the outstanding work of our schools. The 2009 conference marked the end of AISI cycle 3, and school jurisdictions are now in the planning process for cycle 4. AISI has become an important part of maintaining Alberta's position as a leader in learning. It has changed the way the education system works to improve student learning and achievement.

Mr. Speaker, I'm thrilled to have the opportunity to recognize all the partners in AISI and all those involved in this year's conference. Their commitment and dedication to AISI is the reason this initiative is such a success and has such a positive impact on student learning in our great province.

Thank you.

Charles Darwin's Birthday Bicentennial

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, February 12 marks the bicentennial of the birth of a remarkable naturalist and scientist, Charles Darwin. Charles Robert Darwin was born in the small English town of Shrewsbury in 1809. In 1831 as a 22-year old Cambridge graduate he set sail on a five-year voyage on His Majesty's Ship the Beagle, a voyage which gave him new insights into the nature of living things and which would change the course of biological sciences forever.

On this voyage Darwin's keen observations led him to notice relationships of fossil species and living species of animals. On the Galapagos Islands he noted that each island in the small archipelago was inhabited by tortoises with different-shape shells and by closely related finches, differentiated by the dimensions of their bills. These and many other observations led Darwin to discover natural selection as the fundamental force in the evolution of species. Darwin knew that these ideas would challenge the religious dogma of those days, and he did not publish his conclusions until 1858 when a contemporary biologist, Alfred Russel Wallace, was independently developing the same ideas.

In 1859 he published his most famous book, On the Origin of Species by Means of Natural Selection. This epic-making work quickly sold out, went through five more editions, and at the time was both violently attacked and energetically defended but in the end was almost universally accepted by the scientific world. Since his death his ideas have been vindicated by modern fields of science, including paleontology, taxonomy, biogeography, animal behaviour, and especially by genetics and the ability to read the genome of man and other living creatures.

Charles Darwin died on April 19, 1882, and was buried in Westminster Abbey, where he reposes amongst the greatest minds of the English-speaking world.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Voter Participation

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Voter apathy continues to be a big concern not only to me but to many Albertans. In fact, I have received correspondence from several constituents expressing their concern regarding voter apathy, particularly among younger Albertans, and they have suggested a number of ways to help make the electoral process more inclusive, from the creation of a citizens' assembly on electoral reform to the introduction of proportional representation.

It is well known that in the last election only 41 per cent of eligible Albertans cast their ballots. This is certainly a challenge that is complex yet important to the future of this province. It's tempting to look for quick-fix solutions, but we must take a more balanced, steady, and ultimately conciliatory approach to this challenge. We must do whatever we can to encourage young people to become involved in communities and in the election of governments even if that means looking at new and innovative ideas within our current government and democratic processes.

However, Mr. Speaker, I also challenge more young people to take the lead and be the first of their friends and peers to become involved in what I consider to be the purest and most fundamental democratic institution in our political system. The concept of political parties is a mechanism to mobilize similar-minded individuals in the form of a formal electoral coalition, and I mean formal electoral coalition, not an unelected coalition, which we were recently exposed to. I would encourage the many young people in Alberta that are frustrated to get involved in these institutions. It is this action that I believe will have the greatest impact on the future of this province. With both sides working together, more of Alberta's young people will see the value in investing in the mechanisms of government and democracy that will help ensure future success for all Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

International Disability Film Festival

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week I had the opportunity to take part in the eighth annual Picture This international disability awards festival. Picture This is Canada's first and biggest international disability film festival. It promotes films that focus on any area of disability culture as well as films on any subject that are produced, directed, or written by a person with a disability. The basic idea is to create a greater understanding of the culture of people with disabilities. It is also an excellent opportunity for the cultural community in Calgary to connect with others around the world and to promote an international understanding of these issues.

This excellent festival is organized by the Calgary Scope Society, a nonprofit organization that has been improving the lives of persons with developmental disabilities in the Calgary area for over 25 years. I was thrilled with this gala evening, and I'm sure the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports, whom I was pleased to see in attendance, also appreciated this amazing event. It was held at La Joie de Vivre, a wonderful, accessible venue, and I thank the hosts for their hard work and help.

Supporting these kinds of initiatives, events that are both fun and worthwhile, is one of the things I enjoy most about representing downtown Calgary. Furthermore, projects that raise awareness about the challenges and experience of individuals with disabilities in Calgary, in our province, and, in fact, around the world are an important part of building inclusive communities. This event helps us all recognize the true strength of our diverse cultures, and I want to congratulate all the filmmakers for their sterling efforts. Each one has made a significant contribution to our artistic heritage.

Picture This also tours in Edmonton, Red Deer, Lethbridge, and rural Alberta, so I strongly encourage Albertans to watch for it. You'll have a great experience.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

EarthRenew Manure Processing Facility

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak of an important and exciting bioenergy innovation taking place in my riding of Strathmore-Brooks. As Albertans are doing their part to reduce greenhouse gases, an Alberta-based company is taking the lead in environmental stewardship in our agriculture sector. One week ago today I attended the official opening of EarthRenew's Strathmore 1, the first agricultural waste processing plant of its kind in the world. Strathmore 1 is located at Cattleland Feedyards and is owned and operated by EarthRenew, a privately funded Calgary-based company that continues to grow throughout North America with new facilities under construction in western Canada, California, and the U.S. Midwest.

An industrial gas-powered turbine cooks cattle waste – feedlot manure, the proverbial – to 530 degrees, in the process killing all weed seeds and pathogens while preserving the all-natural organic matter. Organic matter fertilizer is a product used to increase yields for organic and our conventional farming. The output from the efficient gas-powered turbine generates enough electricity for approximately 3,000 homes and recaptures 80 per cent of the fuel used for the further process.

EarthRenew's Strathmore 1 employs 20 staff, and in total this operation expects to invest about $3 million this year in labour and supplies in the Strathmore economy. In addition, this plant achieves a substantial reduction in carbon emissions, up to 100,000 tonnes per year, by processing the proverbial.

This green, cutting-edge technology illustrates the innovation and entrepreneurial spirit so important to Alberta's success. I look forward to further application of this technology in other areas of our province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

John Kucera

Mr. Rodney: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This past weekend John Kucera of Calgary skied his way into the history books. He became the first Canadian man to win the downhill gold medal at the world alpine championships in Val d'Isère, France. John started second and crossed the finish line after a breathtaking and nearly flawless two minutes, seven and one one-hundredth seconds. He then had to wait patiently while each of the world's best downhillers tried and failed to beat his time. Kucera's tight line down the mountain was the difference between him and his closest competitor, who was only .04 seconds behind.

John was born in Calgary to parents who had recently immigrated from the Czech Republic. In order to fund his skiing, they took out a second mortgage on their home, and was it ever worth it. The young Kucera made his World Cup debut at age 20 on home snow in Lake Louise in November 2004, and just two years later at the very same location he won his first World Cup GS. John's most recent win comes exactly one year before the opening of the Vancouver-Whistler Olympics and the games' first medal event, coincidentally the men's downhill.

The path to the podium starts in this province, Mr. Speaker. Our Alberta government has committed nearly a hundred million dollars to renew Olympic legacy facilities at Canada Olympic Park and the Canmore Nordic Centre. Funding also supports the building of Canada's first centre of sports excellence, and Canada's Sports Hall of Fame will soon call the city of Calgary home, with the government of Alberta as an integral partner. Because of these provincial projects and efforts like those of John Kucera, I believe that Canadians will win Olympic gold on Canadian soil for the first time next year.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Lobbyists Amendment Act, 2009

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to request leave to introduce Bill 2, the Lobbyists Amendment Act, 2009.

The Lobbyists Act prohibits individuals from providing paid advice to government at the same time and on the same issue as they are paid to lobby government. Amendments in Bill 2 will strengthen and clarify the application of this prohibition against a dual role. Amendments will also limit the concept of associated persons, so spouses are not included, and will add to the list of individuals who are considered to be public office holders. Along with some housekeeping amendments Bill 2 also gives the Ethics Commissioner authority to disclose information when necessary to enforce administrative penalties. Bill 2 will enhance the functioning and enforceability of the Lobbyists Act and ensure it meets the needs of Albertans.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Global Economic Downturn

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are six months into one of the worst economic downturns in our history. Albertans are anxious about their jobs, investments, and opportunities, looking for leadership – clear, strong leadership – on the economic woes that are hitting Albertans hard. In the last two months we've seen 20,000 jobs lost. To the Premier: why hasn't the government acted decisively to support these people, getting them back to work as soon as possible?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, first of all, allow me to congratulate the newly elected Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Speaker, I also wish to express feeling toward those that have lost their jobs in the province of Alberta. That's why we've articulated a three-point plan to ensure that we move very decisively during this difficult period. Part of that, of course, is tightening our belt during these economic times, looking at our spending. We will continue to invest in people and infrastructure and make sure that our economy is ready to bounce back when things improve. Most importantly, we will draw down on the emergency savings that we've set aside especially for times like these.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that just last week the Premier announced tax credits for parts of the oil and gas sector, will he take immediate similar action with other struggling sectors in the province?

Mr. Stelmach: With respect to any tax credit announcements, there weren't any. I made a commitment at the very same speech that the hon. leader was at to work with the oil and gas industry. They're in a credit crunch. They cannot access capital, and that translates to significant job losses not only in Calgary, not only in Edmonton but in every small community in this province right down to the tire shop, down to the motel and the restaurant. That's why we're working with the oil industry to make sure that we provide the right environment for them to move ahead and create jobs in Alberta.

Dr. Swann: Many thousands recently laid off and many thousands more who feel increasingly fearful and vulnerable need to see action today. They need certainty. When can they expect real action from this government?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we've taken action. Part of that is the fact that we're the only jurisdiction that I know of in North America that actually has cash set aside for situations like this, so that's really good planning on our part. Secondly, we're committed, as I said before, to investing in people programs: retraining, making sure that we have the skills necessary as we come out of this recession, that we have the people in place to fill the many job vacancies that will be here. In terms of specifics, other ministers can give all of the specifics with respect to the programs we have.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Health Care Spending

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At a point where this government needs to show confidence and sound, responsible leadership, the Ministry of Health and Wellness is projecting a $1.3 billion deficit. To the Premier: how can the Premier account for this to Albertans?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, as far as the accounting of last year's expenses, that goes to the Public Accounts Committee, and they'll review that. But I just want to clearly state to Albertans that we are committed to publicly funded health care in this province, and we're committed to the principles of the Canada Health Act.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, we're talking about sound fiscal management of our health system. It's very clear that there has been no plan or foresight in our health reforms. Does the Premier himself or the minister take responsibility for this astonishing financial fiasco?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the current budget in health is over $13 billion. That's about $36 million a day. I've asked the minister to work with our health care providers – the doctors, the nurses, the professionals – to come together and put on the table opportunities to gain efficiencies, improve access, improve quality of care in this province. I think there's a lot of money. Let's make sure that we're getting the best value for the dollar that's there. We have to improve programs. We'll certainly do that, but overall I'm looking to health care providers to join us, because we're in this together, and deliver a plan that will build those three objectives that I talked about.

Dr. Swann: Does the Premier believe he has the confidence of Albertans in relation to a related critical service Albertans have come to stake their lives upon? I'm referring to the restructuring plan for the ambulance system. How much is that going to cost?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, in working with municipalities, our health minister is working towards, of course, the government taking over these services and is working very hard. To the specifics, the minister can answer that directly.

The Speaker: The hon. minister to supplement.

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I think what we need to do is not look at the transfer of governance and funding for ambulance as a cost but an improvement in efficiencies. We have already budgeted – it's in the budget that was passed in this House last year – the allocation for the transfer of ambulance services. As I say, I think we need to look at this as part of efficiencies.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Provincial Budget Release

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. People the world over are scared by this fast and deepening recession, and they're looking to their governments for leadership, leadership that will make people feel confident again. This government continues to dither and delay the budget and won't provide Albertans with a date for its release. British Columbia and Saskatchewan already have release dates for their budgets. To the Minister of Finance and Enterprise: when will the minister be releasing her budget?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, as everybody in this Assembly knows, the date of budget release is something that we do not announce until we're prepared to come forward with a budget and table it for Albertans. That should not breed any disrespect or lack of confidence among Albertans. That, in fact, should state quite clearly, as the Premier has articulated, that we look first at the federal budget, that we're watching very closely what the Americans, who are our largest market for exports, are doing, what the outcomes are from a number of the issues that we have been working on resolving both with Canada and with other governments. We're monitoring very carefully on a daily basis exactly what's happening in the most volatile time in our history for the economy.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that cities, universities, schools, hospitals, and for that matter a lot of private businesses and not-for-profits are impeded in their own planning as they wait for this government to release its budget, will the minister admit that any further delays will only worsen the situation and commit to releasing the budget this month?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I will not commit to releasing the budget this month. I think our Premier has articulated the three-point plan we're working on. Those kinds of assurances of reduced spending, of looking at our budget prudently, of looking at what the other circumstances are as we look over the global economy and the things that I've just cited should give Albertans the confidence that we're acting responsibly. Our throne speech yesterday and the people in this Assembly that want to speak to it will I think convey the confidence we feel in Albertans for the outcomes that will follow with or without that budget within the next couple of months.

Mr. Taylor: Within the next couple of months, Mr. Speaker? Given that briefly two years ago this government did commit to releasing its budget in February, two weeks following the throne speech, and last year that got delayed because the election got in the way, is the minister proposing to this House this year that she's going to wait until the recession is out of the way?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, obviously, the member opposite knows exactly what every Albertan no doubt knows, and that is that last year in July we had $147 oil. Last year in August we were anticipating that we would have much higher surpluses than were obvious and have continued to be obvious over this period of time. I think that Albertans, being sensible people, will want us to get the story as right as possible in this budget rather than rush it.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Around the world governments of all political stripes are recognizing that we face the greatest economic threat since the Dirty Thirties. These governments are making major commitments to restart their economies and put their people back to work. This is happening everywhere, Mr. Speaker, everywhere except in Alberta. Why has this Premier, almost alone among political leaders, ignored the rising storm and left Alberta families to fend for themselves?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the big difference between the province of Alberta and the other jurisdictions is that we are not going to put the next generation back in debt. Those are his friends. That's not prudent budgeting on behalf of this government, so we're not going to follow the advice of that individual or any other government. We will do our own budget based on the most recent evidence we have both from the federal government and from the United States, and we're going to make a budget that ensures that we don't again put the next generation in debt.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, while upgrader after upgrader gets cancelled in Alberta's Industrial Heartland, those in the U.S. are still building. Entirely dependent on Alberta bitumen these U.S. projects are stealing Alberta jobs. It's a crime, and this government is driving the getaway car. Why won't this Premier keep his promise to end the export of unprocessed bitumen together with thousands of Alberta jobs down that pipeline?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I made a commitment some time ago in terms of upgrading our resources in Alberta. As a government we remain committed, and we will very soon be communicating the plan in terms of how we're going to add value to our resources. It's not only in the oil sands but forestry and agriculture, by the way, where we've taken just a monumental step, the only jurisdiction, I believe, in Canada to take the leadership we have in agriculture and selling that product around the world.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This government is a deer in the headlights. Faced with looming economic disaster, it doesn't know which way to turn. This economic crisis is like an 18-wheeler bearing down on Albertans. Will this Premier give his head a shake and take immediate measures to create real jobs before Alberta families become roadkill?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I don't know why it's so difficult to get through to some on that side of the House that we're the only jurisdiction in North America that is debt free and the only jurisdiction to have cash in hand to help deal with this critical global recession. There is no other jurisdiction. Let's use the resources wisely and not allow it to drop through our fingers. We have time to budget prudently. We will. We'll do whatever we can on our part to make sure that we take care of all Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Employment Supports

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Hardly a day goes by when we don't hear about another company laying off its workers. My question is to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. What is the government doing to create new jobs in this province?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Although we are seeing some increases in unemployment, we know that Alberta's labour market will remain quite strong for many years to come. With unemployment rates around the 4 per cent level, at least statistically that's still a very, very tight labour market. Individuals need to move around the province to be able to find additional opportunities. As the hon. member knows, it's really not the government's role to create new jobs, but it is our role to create the environment in which the private sector might create jobs.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The fact remains that there are people who are out of work, including many from Edmonton. What are you doing to support them?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To help those who are not working, my department helps workers find other jobs now or train for jobs in the future. We connect the unemployed people with employers through proactive workforce adjustment strategies such as recruitment fairs. Just today, for example, we're connecting potential workers with Wilco Industries. They are looking for workers in one of our Edmonton offices. We assist the unemployed with career planning, some job searching skills, resumé preparation, and job interview skills.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question to the same minister: are you taking any specific steps to support our most vulnerable citizens or underrepresented groups in the workforce?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, yes is the answer. Very specifically, we are offering training partnerships between employers and aboriginal people, for instance. As an example, that includes our aboriginal training to employment programs, which has now more than 50 projects on the go. We do support people with disabilities in their quest for training and employment by providing them with supports such as assisted services and technologies. We support immigrants by assessing how their foreign qualifications compare to Alberta standards. We'll also still be offering some summer employment programs to give our young people meaningful employment opportunities.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Pharmaceutical Benefit for Seniors

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With the economic times that we are facing, middle fixed-income seniors feel that they're under attack because of the government's proposed changes to the pharmaceutical coverage for seniors in Alberta. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: does the minister admit that the proposed plan for seniors' pharmaceutical coverage is flawed and will disadvantage seniors on fixed middle incomes when they have seen a significant decrease through no fault of their own in their RRSPs?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, the pharmaceutical strategy that was announced last fall clearly is part of aligning the health system. All of the government assistance programs – and let's ensure that we understand that this is a government assistance program; this is not something that is covered under the Canada Health Act – are aligned with income. What we have done is simply move the seniors' pharmaceutical plan to align with other government programs.

Ms Pastoor: Will the minister admit to Alberta seniors that many of them are going to be paying significantly more for their needed medications as compared to their former prescription plan and other provinces?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, the fact is that some 50 to 60 per cent of seniors will actually pay less, and in many cases many seniors will not have to pay anything for their prescription drug plan. We can look at it as a half empty glass or a one-third empty glass as the member may be looking at it; I look at it as a benefit to those senior citizens who do need the assistance.

Ms Pastoor: For those on middle fixed incomes would the minister consider raising the threshold so that more seniors would qualify for the zero per cent deductions?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, there's no question that since the program was designed and announced, we have seen quite a different situation relative to income in the environment we live in today. I have asked our folks to take a look at all aspects of the drug program. Let's keep in mind that nothing has changed; the implementation date is January of 2010. We want to ensure that we've got it right. If there is a situation that has changed since that time, we want to re-examine it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Infrastructure Spending

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The global economy is in the midst of an uphill climb. Alberta is in a better position than most jurisdictions, but we are not immune to the current economic pressures. There has been a lot of talk about stimulus packages and job losses. My question is for the Minister of Transportation. What is his department doing to counteract these economic pressures and help to stimulate the Alberta economy?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, as you know, Alberta's three-year capital plan is more than $23 billion – $23 billion – and as Minister of Transportation my job is to build the roads and other projects that Alberta needs. My department will be tendering projects and moving ahead with those jobs this year. As a government we believe it's important to continue investing in our highway network, and that's exactly what we're going to do.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Infrastructure: can the minister comment on what Alberta Infrastructure is doing despite the global economic downturn to stimulate infrastructure investment in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. High levels of infrastructure investment are more important today than they've ever been before. We as a government will continue to be a leader in stimulating the economy with these activities in Alberta. Alberta currently spends two to three times per capita that of any other province or territory in our nation and arguably more than anywhere else in North America. Our current three-year capital plan includes $5 billion for municipalities for their infrastructure support, $3.3 billion for health facilities and equipment support, $1.6 billion for schools, and the list goes on and on. We continue to invest at top levels to help Albertans.

Mrs. McQueen: Finally, Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Transportation: can the minister elaborate on what initiatives will support construction activities in local communities?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, right now we're working with the federal government and municipalities to move ahead with much-needed projects. Last month along with the federal government we announced the building Canada communities component. That program has already invested more than $76 million towards 22 municipal infrastructure projects throughout the province. The funding will help all smaller communities throughout Alberta meet their pressing infrastructure needs, support economic growth, and help stimulate the economy, and then all these communities can still apply up until March 15 for much-needed programs for them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Swan Hills Treatment Centre

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Albertans have learned two things since the fall session: one, that even large companies like Nortel fail and, two, this government consistently fails to require that enough money is held in reclamation funds to pay for the cost of the cleanup. My questions are to the Minister of Environment. Given the example of the Swan Hills waste treatment plant costing $71 million to clean up, double the amount set aside, what action is the government taking to boost other reclamation funding to realistic levels so that the cost of future cleanups are covered and not borne by the taxpayer?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, it's important to consider when you look at reclamation not only the cost of the actual reclamation itself but the requirement that the taxpayer be responsible for the entire costs should it be necessary. The member is pointing out a worst-case scenario, where we have a situation where the taxpayer is ultimately responsible, but at the same time there are a number of other sites throughout the province that remain and will continue to be the responsibility of the owner of those sites, and in those cases it's a different situation.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Back to the same minister. Well, given that if a company, whether it's an oil sands developer, a coal mine, or a gravel pit, collapses, fails, goes bankrupt, goes under, their promissory note isn't worth very much, why doesn't the government ensure that enough cash is held so that any liability for cleanup does not revert back to the public? An IOU from a failed company is worth nothing, and it all defaults back to the taxpayer.

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's like everything else that we do in Environment: it's a balancing act. It is necessary for us to hold security, and we do hold security. We hold a significant amount of security, whether it be in cash or whether it be in irrevocable lines of credit that are backed up by banks. We have been working with industry to ensure that that level that we hold is appropriate and is adequate, and I can assure the member that there are ongoing discussions as we speak on ways that we can improve that program.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. Back to the same minister. The annual report of the security fund states that for all the oil sands $645 million is held for reclamation, all in the form of guaranties, little IOUs, pieces of paper. Is the government telling us that these IOUs are sufficient to cover the cost of cleanup for the entire oil sands? Really, Mr. Minister?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, let's be clear. These are not IOUs. These are irrevocable lines of credit. These are notes that the province holds that are secured by the bank, not by the individual companies. To answer the member's question, we believe that we hold adequate security to ensure that we protect the public in case of long-term disaster from a financial perspective.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Temporary Foreign Workers

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In light of the downturn in our economy many employers and workers are confused about the requirements and options for temporary foreign workers and Canadian workers. My first question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Is there still a need for temporary foreign workers when layoffs are happening?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our labour market is definitely changing, and we recognize that layoffs are happening in some businesses while others are still looking for people. The temporary foreign worker program is a federally run program, and it's based on employers identifying and providing a need for workers in very specific occupations. Temporary foreign workers still have a very, very important role to play in our workforce, but as employer needs change, so will the number of temporary foreign workers coming in.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is to the same minister. If temporary foreign workers still have a role in our workforce alongside Canadians, how does the treatment differ?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We recognize that all workers make very valuable contributions to this province, including our temporary foreign workers, and these temporary foreign workers have the same rights as any other worker. They are all provided for and protected under a number of pieces of legislation that we have. Presently we've got ads that are running, campaigns to raise the awareness of temporary foreign workers' rights in the workplace. Employers and workers can find a lot more on our website.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the same minister. What support does the government provide to temporary foreign workers who are having their hours cut back or losing their jobs?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, we are hearing of that more and more. I want to indicate that temporary foreign workers can remain in Canada for the duration of their work permit and apply for work with other employers with federal hiring permits, or staff can assist in making those connections and in helping foreign workers move from one job to the other. If they cannot find work, one of the options is that they can return to their home country.

Environmental Charges against Syncrude

Mr. Hehr: Today, Mr. Speaker, I hope to appeal to the Justice minister to take the necessary steps to protect Alberta's wildlife and its habitat. Specifically, I was going to discuss section 155 of the Alberta environmental protection act. My math tells me that a $500,000 fine is 1,000 bucks a duck. Seeing that this is a multibillion-dollar industry, does the hon. minister figure that this maximum fine is an effective deterrent?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I believe that although the hon. member has addressed that question to me, this falls under the policy area of the Minister of Environment.

The Speaker: The hon member has the floor.

Mr. Hehr: Okay. Anyway, I was asking about section 155 and the maximum penalty allowed under there, which is $500,000. Do you think this is an effective mechanism for actually keeping this industry from being negligent?

The Speaker: Hon. minister, the purpose of question period is not to solicit personal opinions.

Mr. Renner: As the member knows, the amount of fine that's assessed is the responsibility of the courts. I want to remind this member that this case is before the courts.

As to the legislation itself and the policy with respect to fines I do believe that we have adequate penalties within our legislation to ensure that we can hold polluters responsible. Let's not forget, Mr. Speaker, that there are two sides that need to be taken into account. One is the actual penalty itself, and one is the effects that these kinds of incidents have on the customers' and the public's perception of the way these companies do business.

Mr. Hehr: To the Minister of Environment: can you honestly tell me that a $500,000 fine to an industry that is making billions of dollars in profits is adequate to actually keep these guys in check?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, using that kind of logic, one would say that a hundred dollar speeding ticket issued to an NHL hockey player has no effect. I would suggest that we don't at this point in Alberta adjust our fines to the level of income. This is a piece of legislation that applies to all members of the public, and a $500,000 fine is a lot of money in my books.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Job Creation

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday at the same time that this government was delivering a throne speech full of vague platitudes, Millar Western laid off nearly 140 workers and warned them that more cuts were coming. This pulp and lumber company has been in business for more than a century, and this government has no strategy to help them with their workers. The only specific thing this government offered to people like these losing their jobs was Alberta Works counselling. To the minister of employment: why have you failed these workers and left them struggling to feed their families?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Mr. Goudreau: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The announcement certainly was made yesterday. We do as a government extend our greatest sympathy to the people who have lost their jobs because of these closures and to their families as well. We understand that the facility closures are a business decision based on market conditions and long-term corporate strategy. We have been working with and have contacted people from Millar Western, and we are just assessing now and actually are working and seeing what we can do to help the staff cope.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, in January we lost 5,700 jobs in Alberta. Instead of creating jobs, government is telling the unemployed that it's going to make welfare more visible. What Albertans need are real, long-term jobs because, believe me, Alberta's future generations will have debt if the only thing this government can offer their parents is resumé-writing courses. To the same minister: will you push investment and stimulus spending that creates jobs at living wages instead of merely putting up more signs in our welfare offices?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, a couple of things. One is that in January of this year we, in fact, had 23,000 more people working in the province of Alberta than we had a year ago in January. Although our numbers in unemployment are increasing, I need to remind the hon. member that our unemployment levels at present stand at 4.4 per cent, and although we're heading in the wrong direction, that is still considered a very, very tight employment situation. As I indicated, we still have a lot of companies looking for people.

Ms Notley: Well, interestingly, this morning, Mr. Speaker, Grande Cache Coal gave walking papers to 100 employees, so clearly that's not one of those companies. Globally, meanwhile, at least $650 billion has been committed by governments to stimulus spending that will create real jobs. Even this government's federal cousins were forced to pledge $12 billion for job-stimulating infrastructure, yet not one new job creation initiative was discussed yesterday by this government. To the same minister: do you really believe that all these laid-off workers need are directions to the nearest welfare office, and if not, why is that all that your government is offering?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, my responsibility as minister responsible for Employment and Immigration is to help people that are in need. We provide employment and training supports. We help with basic living and basic costs if that's what's required. We'll cover some of their household costs. We'll even support health benefits. We'll do everything to try to transition those individuals from having lost their jobs into finding a new position.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

RCMP Traffic Enforcement Duties

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recent media reports have suggested that the province is toying with ideas of pulling the RCMP from traffic duty on Alberta highways. The RCMP has had a long history in this province and serves my constituents in Whitecourt-St. Anne very well. I'd like to clarify these media reports when I go home this weekend. My questions are all to the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security. Is the minister planning to replace the RCMP's traffic services with Alberta sheriffs?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lindsay: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The short answer to that question is no, absolutely not. What we are doing is testing four different service delivery models for traffic enforcement over a six-month period. This will help us to evaluate what works best on Alberta's highways to ensure that those motorists remain safe. The RCMP will always have a role in traffic enforcement on Alberta highways, and they are in full support of these pilots.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. Again, pilot projects are being announced throughout this province about some good working relationships between sheriffs and RCMP, but again my constituents in Whitecourt-St. Anne keep saying to me: is this the first step to replace the RCMP? Is this the first step, Mr. Minister?

Mr. Lindsay: Mr. Speaker, I've said it many times, and I'll say it again: we are not replacing the RCMP as Alberta's provincial police force. We are proud to have them as our police force. The RCMP are a very highly skilled force, which helps ensure safe and secure communities for all Albertans. The RCMP and our traffic sheriffs, however, regularly participate in joint forces traffic operations with local police services and other government ministries. This pilot is a good example of the excellent co-operation between the RCMP and our traffic sheriffs.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, again to the same minister. The traffic pilot projects are being done in some cases to enhance the services, but in other cases media reports said that it's there only because of a cost-saving measure. Is this true or not?

Mr. Lindsay: Again, Mr. Speaker, these pilots are not about cost savings at all. What they are about is ensuring our highways are safe for all Albertans to travel on. Accidents on our highways cost over 450 lives last year and billions of dollars worth of expenses to our medical system. These pilots are aimed at improving our highway safety for all Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater.

Public-private Partnerships for School Construction

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The first contract for P3 schools was negotiated at the height of the boom, when materials and labour were at their most expensive. The government has claimed that P3s will save over a hundred million dollars, but those figures were made assuming inflated construction costs. Trustees, taxpayers, and opposition parties have no idea what the real cost of these schools will be over the contract's 32-year lifespan. To the Minister of Infrastructure: why won't the minister release documents showing the price tag for the construction and proposed 32-year maintenance of the first 18 P3 schools?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On our government web page we set out the conditions for payment throughout the contract. There is proprietary information that's contained within the agreements. The last agreement that we did saved Alberta taxpayers $118 million, to be exact, based on comparative studies that are checked by third parties. It would disadvantage Albertans, the taxpayers, the people that are paying for this, to release information that would take the people that give us the best deals in the province out of the game.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. The minister is treating taxpayers like mushrooms under a load of we all know what. The contracts have already been signed. The competition is over. There is no need to hide the details. Given the current economic downturn and the lengthy delays in construction does the Minister of Infrastructure still claim that these schools are being built faster and cheaper than they would have been through traditional methods?

Mr. Hayden: Mr. Speaker, absolutely.

Mr. Chase: Table the documents. So far it's all chat, and we all know what that's worth.

Given that the costs of labour and materials have fallen, will the government reconsider using P3 financing for its second phase of building 14 schools?

Mr. Hayden: Mr. Speaker, our government will take a look at every innovative way to provide infrastructure to Albertans, including P3s and everything else. Those things that work best for Albertans to deliver to Albertans in an effective, efficient, time-sensitive manner those facilities that they need: that's what we'll use, sir.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

2:30 Air and Water Quality of Industrial Development

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday during the throne speech we heard that this government is committed to develop energy with environmental care, and we've heard that an oil sands strategy is coming, but we also have areas of the province that are involved in upgrading and processing the crude. My question is to the Minister of Environment. My constituents want to know what action your department takes in the Industrial Heartland to ensure residents are not forced to live with dirty air because they live close to industrial development.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As you know, some time ago we announced that we would establish through policy and legislation eventually overall emissions targets and thresholds that would be applied through a process of cumulative effect management in the Industrial Heartland. Just last month we finalized the targets for SO₂ and NO_x. Those targets are now in place. It will be up to industry working in partnership with Environment to ensure that we're able to expand the industrial activity within that region but still live within those predetermined caps for air emissions.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. Water is also clearly a priority as water for life was profiled in the throne speech yesterday. Can you tell my constituents what your department does to monitor the quality of our rivers, specifically water being returned from industry to the North Saskatchewan and the Athabasca?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, like we have ambient air quality monitoring as it affects the overall quality of air, we also do similar kinds of monitoring on the overall quality of water in the river. There are really two levels of monitoring. One is at the site of the discharge, be it city of Edmonton municipal discharge or industrial discharge, to ensure that that discharge is within the allocations that have been determined in their approval. Then the other is to have ongoing monitoring in the river itself to ensure that we're maintaining the quality of water within the river.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister. Some of my constituents echo that the water for life strategy is not just an environmental document but also an economic one. They've heard that a large majority of the North Saskatchewan's water flow has been allocated, yet a very minor percentage is actually being used. Can the minister tell us why that is and how your department is working to ensure that a situation like this does not become a barrier to new opportunities for economic development?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's not uncommon. In years past when water licences were issued, there really wasn't a lot of need to be concerned with whether or not the exact amount of allocation that was required was within that licence, and in fact for administrative ease I suspect that licences were issued that exceeded the amount to allow for expansion over time. At this point in time we're looking at things a little differently, so one of the things that we need to work on over the next period of time is a better accounting of the water that's actually being used. That will be very much a part of our go-forward strategy as we discuss water allocation policies.

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, on Monday evening on CBC radio I heard our hon. Justice minister discussing section 155 of the Alberta environmental protection act and the $500,000 fine plus additional things judges may or may not do under the act. My math tells me that a $500,000 fine is a thousand bucks a duck. Can the minister tell me whether this fine plus any additional things judges may or may not do is reasonable to protect Alberta citizens under the act?

The Speaker: Well, I'm going to repeat that personal opinion is not the purpose of question period.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I submit that this question has been asked and answered.

Mr. Hehr: So, basically, is the hon. minister telling us that she'll share her opinions with CBC radio and will not answer this question in this House right now?

The Speaker: The hon. minister?
The hon. member.

Mr. Hehr: Fair enough. I'm done on this questioning if those are the answers we're going to receive.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Ambulance Services

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions today are for the Minister of Health and Wellness. As part of the restructuring of the health care system communities have been given the option as to whether or not they would like to transfer their delivery of ambulance services over to provincial health services, the Alberta Health Services Board, as of April 1. The Camrose ambulance service, I believe, was one of the first to choose that option. I sense that there's some anxiety developing over whether or not everybody's going to be ready for the transfer on April 1. I'm wondering if the minister can advise as to whether or not this transfer of ambulance services can be ready by April 1.

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, the plan to transfer ambulance services is on track for April 1. As you know, we passed the Emergency Health Services Act in this House last fall, which set out the regulatory framework for the new model. Alberta Health Services will shortly be rolling out the dispatch plan, and that consolidates dispatch to three services from the current 10 or 12. So, yes, it is on track.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Olson: Thank you. If I can maybe be a little more specific about what the concerns are for the local municipalities there. Knowing that they may be ending the service, they're having to terminate contracts. They are not able to budget for delivery of those services. So I'm just wondering if there's a contingency plan in place for who will pay for that if we're not ready on April 1.

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, let's be very clear that come April 1, if there is a municipality where there has been difficulty reaching agreement, whether they want to get out of the business or whether they want to contract with Alberta Health Services, there will be no interruption in patient care. A municipality will have to make a decision whether they're staying in the business or they're not, keeping in mind that on April 1 funding for municipalities is going to be covered 100 per cent by the province on the basis that we have contracts in place.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Olson: Thank you. I have a question about STARS. I think we'd all agree that STARS air ambulance is an integral part of the EMS team in Alberta, particularly from a rural point of view. I'm just wondering if the minister can share with us any information on the status of STARS in terms of how it will be supported during the transition and after.

Mr. Liepert: Well, I think it's important, Mr. Speaker, that while each one of us has our favourite providers, if you might, and STARS is probably a favourite provider of many in this Assembly, we have a number of air ambulance service contracts. STARS is no different than any of the other providers that have contracts with Alberta Health Services. They all provide a very integral part of ambulance provision. What we want to do initially is ensure that we get the ground ambulance right, and then we move on to discussions relative to the remainder of the services that are available.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that over 20,000 Albertans have lost their jobs recently – as a matter of fact, 140 forestry workers in and around Whitecourt were laid off yesterday – my first question is to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Why is the government of Alberta continuing to go abroad and recruit temporary foreign workers to this province?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think we need to recognize that although there are certainly people being laid off, those individuals as Albertans will always have first priority in terms of getting a job in this province. We automatically want to make sure that our priority goes to Albertans first, then Canadians and those people who are normally not necessarily represented in the workforce, including some of our aboriginal communities. Having said that, there are still some people out there and some jobs that remain unfilled, and we depend on the expertise and help of temporary foreign workers to fill those.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: how can this government recruit more temporary foreign workers when steelworkers in Edmonton are being laid off, construction workers across the province are being laid off, forestry workers in Whitecourt are being laid off? Why are you undermining the job market here by recruiting more temporary foreign workers?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, I have to reiterate that the temporary foreign worker program is a federal program and not a provincial program. But the important thing to keep in mind is that before a temporary foreign worker position is approved, the employers have to go through a very stringent process of advertising and trying to find Canadians to fill those particular jobs. Only when those cannot happen can they be allowed to bring in a temporary foreign worker.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I remind the hon. minister that he is the Minister of Employment and Immigration. You're in this up to your eyeballs. Again, will the government terminate the temporary foreign worker program now, allow the workers that are here on the temporary foreign worker program to finish the time left on their visa? Considering the large number of Albertans that have been laid off, and these Albertans include landed immigrants, why don't you protect landed immigrants and citizens of this country when they need job protection from you?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, people from around the world are welcome in Alberta. Shutting the door to temporary foreign workers and immigration is not always the way to respond to economic challenges. This province was built by immigrants. Immigration will continue to be our future source of economic growth and population growth, and we want them here.

An Hon. Member: Don't treat them like second-class citizens.

Mr. Goudreau: We don't. They have the same rights.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we're going to return to the Routine with Introduction of Bills.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

The proposed legislation gives government the renewed authority to monitor for compliance to the accommodation standards and investigate complaints from residents, their families, or the general public. This act also clarifies what a supportive living setting is and when an operator requires a licence to operate such a facility. The Supportive Living Accommodation Licensing Act gives residents the opportunity to age in the right place, to stay in their communities, close to their family and friends, their best support system.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 10 read a first time]

The proposed amendments are entirely procedural and do not address other matters such as compensation.

Thank you.

Tabling Returns and Reports

Mr. Groeneveld: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased today to table responses to questions raised during debate of supplementary estimates on November 26, 2008.

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a number of tablings today, one series from a Dorene Rew lamenting Alberta taxpayers being hung on the hook for pay to ousted health executives; another from a Mr. Ali Amini relating the dissatisfaction with the way officials and licensing bodies are treating foreign-trained physicians; another on the revamp of the seniors' drug program from a J. Faminoff; and another set of tablings from Allan and Rose Marie Dahlen, again relating to the seniors' drug legislation.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of two news releases which relate to my questions today. One is from Millar Western Forest Products, dated February 10, announcing the layoff of 138 workers. The other is from Grande Cache Coal Corporation with today's date, announcing that 100 workers have been laid off.

My second tabling is the appropriate number of copies of six reports from long-term care workers indicating specific instances of shifts that were short-staffed. One of these workers reports that in spite of taking only two five-minute breaks, there was still not enough time to get all the residents out of bed for breakfast and lunch.

Thank you.

The Speaker: I have three tablings today. Pursuant to section 39(3) of the Legislative Assembly Act the chair wishes to table with the Assembly five copies of the following Members' Services orders: Members' Services Committee order 1/09, Executive Council salaries, No. 4, which came into force on February 4; Members' Services Committee order 2/09, members' allowances amendment order, which came into force on February 4; Members' Services Committee order 3/09, members' committee allowances amendment order, which came into force on February 4; Members' Services Committee order 4/09, members' allowances amendment order, which will come into force on April 1; and Members' Services Committee order 5/09, constituency services amendment order, which will come into force on April 1. All of those either have come into effect or will come into effect in the year 2009.

The chair is also pleased to table five copies of a brochure produced by the Legislative Assembly of Alberta entitled Page Biographies, Legislative Assembly of Alberta, 27th Legislature, Second Session, Spring 2009. This outlines the current and new pages that we have.

Pursuant to section 4(2) of the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act the chair is pleased to table with the Assembly the annual report of the Chief Electoral Officer for the calendar year 2007. The report includes the office's financial statements as at March 31, 2008.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Hancock, Minister of Education, school jurisdictions' audited financial statements for the year ended August 31, 2007, sections 1, 2, and 3.

On behalf of the hon. Mr. Goudreau, Minister of Employment and Immigration, pursuant to the Regulated Accounting Profession Act the Certified Management Accountants of Alberta 2008 annual report; pursuant to the Veterinary Profession Act the Alberta Veterinary Medical Association 2008 annual report; pursuant to the Land Surveyors Act the Alberta Land Surveyors' Association report of proceedings of the 99th annual general meeting.

On behalf of the hon. Mr. Danyluk, Minister of Municipal Affairs, a letter dated January 6, 2009, from the hon. Mr. Danyluk, Minister of Municipal Affairs, to Ms Pastoor, the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, responding to questions raised during debate on Bill 51, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act (No. 2), regarding the tank site remediation program.

On behalf of the hon. Ms Evans, Minister of Finance and Enterprise, pursuant to the provincial judges and masters in chambers registered and unregistered pension plans regulation the provincial judges and masters in chambers registered and unregistered pension plans annual report for the year ended March 31, 2008.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 7(7) now kicks in.

Orders of the Day

Government Motions

Committee Membership Changes

2. Mr. Zwozdesky moved on behalf of Mr. Hancock:
Be it resolved that the following changes to the following standing committees be approved.
 - (a) Special Standing Committee on Members' Services: that Mr. Fawcett replace Mr. Rodney, that Mr. Rogers replace Mr. Snelgrove;
 - (b) Standing Committee on Private Bills: that Mr. Bhardwaj replace Mr. Xiao, that Mr. Rodney replace Mr. Fawcett, that Dr. Taft replace Dr. Swann;
 - (c) Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing: that Mr. Mitzel replace Mr. Bhardwaj;
 - (d) Standing Committee on the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund: that Mr. Campbell replace Mr. Olson;
 - (e) Standing Committee on Public Accounts: that Mr. Quest replace Mr. Griffiths as deputy chair, that Mr. Olson replace Mr. Griffiths;
 - (f) Standing Committee on Community Services: that Mr. Doerksen replace Mr. Rodney as chair;
 - (g) Standing Committee on the Economy: that Mr. Campbell replace Mr. Allred as chair, that Dr. Taft replace Ms Blakeman;
 - (h) Standing Committee on Resources and Environment: that Ms Blakeman replace Dr. Swann as deputy chair;
 - (i) Standing Committee on Health: that Dr. Taft replace Dr. Swann.

The Speaker: Hon. members, this is a debatable motion. I have a question for the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. Yesterday I received from the hon. member and the hon. member's colleague two letters indicating they wanted to resign from committees. As I understand it, the motion now put forward by the Deputy Government House Leader does not contain those two changes. Now, a letter was sent from my office and conveyed to the Government House Leader with respect to that. I understand as well, though, that this motion was already on the Order Paper. So there's a question of either having to deal with this matter now or of coming back to it another day. An additional motion would have to be made. Right now we just have the one in front of us.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I'm sorry. I have not yet received a copy of those particular letters, but with the concurrence of the House we could certainly bring this back at a later time.

The Speaker: That is a possibility. Do you want to proceed with the current motion as it is now and bring the subsequent matter back later?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Yes, please.

The Speaker: The motion in front of us is debatable. No participants, then? Okay.

[Government Motion 2 carried]

The Speaker: Before we move on, might we just interrupt the ordinary routine to revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

The Speaker: Hon. Deputy Speaker, you sent me a note that you have guests.

Mr. Cao: Yes, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to rise and introduce to you and through you to this Assembly the three representatives of TUXIS Parliament of Alberta who are visiting the Legislature today. The TUXIS Parliament is a nonprofit youth parliament open to Alberta youth between the ages of 15 and 21. It provides youth with an opportunity to improve public speaking ability, to become capable leaders, and to learn about the workings of parliamentary procedure. Natasha Soles and Kelsey Earle are currently members of the group, and Benjamyn McKay is a member of the alumni society. Now, I was wondering which gallery they were sitting in. I would like to ask the Assembly to give them a traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: Leader of the Official Opposition, you have some very special guests.

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To you and through you to the House I want to introduce my mother, my sister, and two cousins who are here today to see my inaugural speech: my mother, Margaret Swann, a graduate of McKay Avenue school in the early days in Edmonton – she lives in Calgary now with most of my family – Susan Saracini, a sister, who lives in Calgary; Gary and Loris Webb, Edmontonians and supporters. I would ask them to stand up, and we'll give them a warm traditional welcome to the Legislature.

Consideration of His Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mr. Johnston moved that an humble address be presented to His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To His Honour the Honourable Norman L. Kwong, CM, AOE, Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to move acceptance of the Speech from the Throne, and it is an honour to do it on behalf of the constituents of Calgary-Hays. I know my constituents will be very pleased with the direction our government is taking. For the fifth year in a row His Honour the Lieutenant Governor delivered the Speech from the Throne with eloquence and style. His words were not only touching but inspired us. His Honour showed us a picture of the Alberta that we all want to achieve and be a part of.

In the speech we saw an Alberta that is dedicated to building local, national, and international relationships, driving its innovation to higher levels, and leading in environmental management. We also saw a province that will continue to take care of its most vulnerable, a province that supports its communities, strengthens its education system, and leads an efficient and effective health care system. This is an Alberta that I'm pleased to be part of. The Speech from the Throne provided us with a map of how we will achieve this Alberta over the months to come.

But, Mr. Speaker, the speech struck me because it showed us how we are going to excel during these uncertain times. If we follow the plan set out in the Speech from the Throne, we can triumph over any possible barriers ahead. It is apparent that only Albertans can look at today's economic uncertainty and see the path to prosperity. Looking back to remember all the steps we took to ensure a stronger today is a good reminder that it takes a solid plan and discipline to secure a safe tomorrow.

Indeed, with a long-term plan as was outlined in the Speech from the Throne, anything is possible. If we are dedicated enough, we can not only get through anything, but we can shine as we come out of it. If there is anyone who is going to overcome the challenges ahead of us, it is Alberta. That is the essence of what it is to be Albertan. Not only do we work hard to meet our goals, attain greatness, and enhance our lifestyles, but we go above and beyond to achieve more than is expected from us. We create opportunities out of adversity.

Eliminating the deficit was no easy feat. We all had to make sacrifices, but we knew why we were doing it. We stuck to it, and we achieved our goal and are better off for it. Today we sit a little more comfortably because of the sacrifices we made in the past. We are one step ahead of the game. Now we can continue to save for the future and cut taxes like the health care premium to make a little more room in our wallets.

We know that every penny counts, so our government will continue to be efficient with taxpayer dollars. Funds will be used responsibly to reach as many Albertans who need it. Albertans can continue to count on receiving value for their hard-earned money. It is because of careful planning that we are able to head into the times ahead with a positive outlook. We have a strong foundation that is going to ease us through the months to come. Albertans can breathe a little easier because of their government's prudence and foresight.

Because of the fiscal discipline that permeates all decisions that this government makes, we are able to develop new technology, enhance the security of all Albertans, and continue to take care of those who need it most. These are the things that matter to Albertans. We will continue to plan for the future by investing in our people, our infrastructure, and our innovative technologies so that we can continue our tradition of being a leader. This government knows where Alberta's strengths are. The Speech from the Throne showed us that these strengths will increase as we continue to work on them and improve them. We will continue to aim for perfection in our leading industries. We will continue to focus on innovation in the energy sector, technology, and on our most valuable resource, our people.

Through new initiatives like Inspiring Education, which I am looking forward to bringing back to my constituency, we will make Alberta's education system as accessible and inviting as possible. All students will be able to flourish and find their passion. Once young Albertans have grown through the first level of their education, they will be able to look forward to the next step. Our outstanding postsecondary institutions, honed by Campus Alberta, will specialize their skills so that they can be among the most competitive in the world. The future looks bright.

We know that the way to become the best is to focus on our strengths, so Albertans have worked to develop our natural resources responsibly, and for that reason we are world renowned. We have earned the status of a safe and secure producer of energy. We will continue to profit from that place in the world. We will compete in the global market for our place. We will promote our products and their advantages through the relationships that our government has been building. We will grow and break down any barriers. As a result, our careers will continue to prosper.

We were blessed with natural resources, but what separates us from the rest is how we work with them. Alberta develops partnerships to grow expertise in the energy sector. This has allowed us to develop our resources and meet the global demand for energy. Through the partnerships we have created, we can be confident that our resources are being extracted with state-of-the-art methods and in the most environmentally conscious way.

Our resources and innovations will continue to be competitive around the world as our government will pursue the promotion of our goods. Continuing to build on our successes and innovation will help us continue our strong standing on the global stage. The relationships we build with our resource partners on the international market will ensure that our economy continues to prosper. The world has already started to learn about our environmental focus and leadership. Our innovation is showing the world how it is possible to have clean water, air, and land while supplying the world with forestry, agriculture, and energy commodities.

As has been laid out in yesterday's speech, the government of Alberta will continue to work to maintain the high quality way of life we enjoy as Albertans. Programs and services will continue to be among the best available. Our highest standard will be upheld. Thanks to the past investments we have made in infrastructure, we can now rest assured that the ones we love are receiving the best care in our world-class hospitals. I recently experienced our hospitals first-hand when I spent the day at the Peter Lougheed hospital as a patient. I was very impressed with the level of care I received from all of the providers involved. Calgary-Hays is looking forward to being home to the new south hospital, a ring road, and already we have new schools being built. These investments are vital and truly enhance our quality of life.

Mr. Speaker, we have the tools and resources, but it is the spirit of Alberta that has made the most of them. It is our people who have brought our province to a level of excellence. We will continue to attract the best people to come work and live in Alberta to sustain our growth and drive our development. No matter what the future holds, it is our people who will make the difference. It is our initiative that will sustain us.

Our continued dedication to enhancing the quality of life of Albertans is put into action in Bill 1, the Employment Standards (Reservist Leave) Amendment Act, 2009. Bill 1 will protect those who protect us. Many Albertans leave their friends and family behind to serve their country. Some of these people are soldiers by career. They are employed by the Canadian Forces on a full-time basis. However, there are soldiers who have regular civilian jobs and volunteer with the Canadian Forces on a part-time basis. These reservists are only called upon when the Canadian Forces are in need of help.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta is proud to be home to 25,000 reservists, who at times have had to leave their family and their careers to assist the Canadian Forces. Reservists expand, sustain, and support Canada's forces in times of need. They play a vital role in operations abroad and in emergency situations within Canada. Locally, reservists have been called upon in Alberta to help extinguish our forest fires, and they were able to supplement our forces and give them relief. They must be given the flexibility to leave work in these sorts of challenging situations.

As the Canadian Forces mission to Afghanistan has been extended, more and more reservists are required. Reservists are needed to create stability and peace in countries which face turmoil. These brave men and women build much-needed infrastructure, protect innocent civilians from extremists, and help build strong relationships to ensure that diplomatic progress is maintained. While they leave Alberta to achieve this, there have been occasions when reservists have come back to Canada only to find that their jobs are no longer there, that they have been filled by someone else. Needless to say, this is a disheartening reality.

Bill 1 will change that situation. The legislation will ensure that service to one's country and bravery are rewarded. Those who dedicate themselves to peace should not have to choose between a career and serving our country. We should encourage them in any way possible.

The legislation will make sure that the transition from a conflict zone to Alberta is as smooth as possible. Bill 1 will amend the Employment Standards Code to establish unpaid job protection leave for the reservists who take part in military activities and operations. When reservists have shown their dedication to a job by spending 26 consecutive weeks with an employer, they will be able to take a protected leave. They will be able to pick up where they left off, and they will be able to continue achieving their career goals. They won't have to worry about career growth and paths when they are considering whether or not to volunteer to be a reservist.

According to the Canadian Forces there are currently over 400 primary reserves personnel serving on peacekeeping and humanitarian missions. These people are crucial to the proper functioning of the Canadian Forces operations. Bill 1 will help the Canadian Forces maintain the reputation of having the best and brightest soldiers and will allow soldiers to get the proper training they need to face difficult situations.

While reservists usually train during their time off work, on weekends and on holidays, they also need two weeks of full-time service a year to keep their qualifications current. Bill 1 will allow this to happen much easier. Whether they get deployed to a Canadian Forces operation abroad, help with an emergency in Canada, or take part in crucial training, their jobs will be here for them when they get back to Alberta. Therefore, if reservists leave their family, they can rest assured that when they come back from the call of duty, they will be able to provide for their loved ones in the same way they once did. Job security is not a burden that reservists should have to bear on their shoulders when they are in the service of their country.

Further, Bill 1 will help reservists get back to their home lives a little easier. They will simply be able to continue in a job that they are good at and comfortable in. This will help provide some sense of continuity for reservists and their families. As a former soldier I realize how important it is to have reservists to augment the Canadian Forces numbers. They allow our military to successfully complete their missions.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Premier for bringing this legislation forward. I know that Bill 1 will make a world of difference in the lives of reservists and their loved ones. Bill 1 makes it possible to balance life and duty. I am honoured to be part of a government that is so focused on the needs of its people. Our dedication to fiscal prudence and growth development will serve us well. Based on the Speech from the Throne, it is clear that all aspects of our economy and our lives have been considered to make sure that Albertans' lives are as seamless as possible during this time of uncertainty. Albertans can look forward to a healthy, happy, and prosperous future thanks to the strong leadership of our government, and I look forward to the days ahead and the accomplishments to come.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is truly an honour and a privilege to rise in the House today to second the motion to accept the Speech from the Throne. It's hard to believe that almost an entire year has passed since I sat in this House to give my first throne speech as a Member of this Legislative Assembly. I felt tremendously honoured to be elected by the constituents of Drayton Valley-Calmar as part of one of the strongest governments this province has ever seen, and every day I continue to be very proud to serve my constituents.

Again I felt privileged when I was asked to take on the role of parliamentary assistant for Environment. I can tell you that I am enjoying this role very much, working with the exceptional team headed by the hon. Minister of Environment. It is indeed a pleasure to work on the environmental issues and challenges facing Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, the Premier inviting me to second the Speech from the Throne is among those great honours. I stand here today very proud to represent my constituents and my province. Reminiscing about this time last year reminds me of the excitement I felt in anticipation of what was to come and the challenge I would face as a new MLA. In many ways this new session is no different. I still look forward to what is to come.

As we all know, there have been significant changes in the past year, bringing along with them new and unique challenges. With all of the challenges in the global economic climate we as Albertans, Canadians, and global citizens will experience new pressures. Our government is aware of this and is harnessing its innovative skills and thinking ahead and is finding solutions. Mr. Speaker, my cup is always half full. That is how I tackle challenges, by thoughtfully considering what we need to do but also exploring what opportunities exist in meeting our challenges. It is important to ensure that the decisions we make today will indeed consider the impacts on the future as well.

In light of these changes and challenges we face, the Alberta government has created a plan to protect Albertans and what matters most to them. In the 2008 budget the hon. minister of finance announced that health care premiums would be eliminated for all Albertans, and as of January 1, 2009, we carried through on this promise. This tax change is just one example of measures taken by our government to stimulate the economy, saving Albertans and businesses alike over $1 billion annually. Our government was taking measures like this long before the economic downturn began to prepare us for when times are tougher.

As we heard yesterday in the Speech from the Throne, the government's plan is inclusive of all Albertans. It is clear that Alberta's unique qualities are protected, our resources are valued, and most importantly, that our people, from our youngest to our eldest, are cared for. For our youngest and families the throne speech reiterated a goal of 14,000 new child care spaces by the year 2011, and the province is well on its way. My own community of Drayton Valley has taken part in this initiative through the development of an early childhood development centre. This is an excellent example of how communities work to meet the needs of children and families in collaboration with the province. It was a privilege to have the hon. Premier, Mrs. Stelmach, and the hon. Minister of Children and Youth Services attend the grand opening of the centre. I know that the children and families present were thrilled to have them in attendance on that very special day.

Our commitment to Alberta's youth and families continues with the Department of Education and the launch of Inspiring Education, which gives Albertans the unique opportunity to shape the future of education in our province. Now is the time for Albertans of all ages to express their vision for the future of education in our province so that we can ensure that it indeed reflects their hopes and their dreams.

In addition to children and youth, Mr. Speaker, the throne speech also recognizes our seniors, the significant place they hold in our society and our communities and the importance of ensuring that they have the opportunity to live comfortably and to age in their place of choice. The ministers of Seniors and Community Supports and Health and Wellness recently rolled out comprehensive continuing care standards which ensure that quality services are delivered across the entire system, including home living, supportive living, and facility living.

Overall, Mr. Speaker, in continuing to pursue Alberta's continuing care strategy, the government is working to ensure that seniors have a strong voice in planning their future, enabling them to preserve their independence and quality of life. Having this choice is so important for our seniors in all geographical areas of our province. As a rural MLA it is extremely important for me to have those choices available to my seniors in Drayton Valley-Calmar and throughout the province. I know that as we make decisions affecting our seniors, I keep my mom, 87 years young, who is living in continuing care, and all seniors in my constituency close to mind. They and others like them have helped mould our province into the wonderful place it is today. It is our duty to ensure that we make our decisions with this mind, to be forever grateful for what they have done and continue to do today to build our communities and our province.

In ensuring quality and service for our youngest to our eldest, the throne speech delivers with a focused commitment to advanced education. Albertans will have the opportunity to pursue their learning and career goals through Campus Alberta, a vision encompassing all of our province's postsecondary institutions, ultimately providing Albertans with lifelong learning opportunities. Through this framework Albertans can pursue their career goals within the province. In my constituency an educational consortium helps to deliver these educational opportunities. This ensures that my constituents can receive their education in the location of their choice. Many of my constituents are happy to remain at home in rural Alberta, and the consortium allows them to do this.

Investments in education will keep Alberta on the cutting edge of science and ingenuity, increasing our intellectual capital and driving our business sector. Mr. Speaker, we heard in the throne speech that there is a plan to protect our business sector as well. An example of a measure already undertaken by our government to boost Alberta's economy is the trade, investment, and labour mobility agreement. This agreement eliminates trade barriers between Alberta and British Columbia, allowing for nearly seamless access to labour, transportation, and energy between the two provinces.

This government is dedicated to maintaining strong ties with our biggest trading partner, the United States, as our province and our country welcomes the new administration, but it will be very important for us to continue to broaden the number of trading partners we have. This government will work hard to ensure that open communication and support mutually benefit business deals with all of our trading partners.

In the marketing of Alberta's energy the government has developed a plan to ensure responsible and sustainable prosperity for the province's future. The provincial energy strategy works towards the goal of providing energy while at the same time minimizing the impact on the environment. In addition to harnessing technology, the development of renewable energy, the strategy encourages the responsible and prudent use of current energy sources. Further, this government is working to reduce the impact of current emissions through the announcement of a $2 billion investment in carbon capture and storage.

With these initiatives Alberta is demonstrating an ardent commitment to protecting our energy and the environment, two of our greatest assets. Mr. Speaker, the pristine beauty of our environment and landscapes are legendary. The commitments made in relation to the energy sector are complemented by initiatives to further protect our environment. The newly developed land-use framework will help to ensure that the uniqueness of Alberta's many different ecosystems is preserved. A renewed water for life strategy will make certain that we are conscious of our water as a resource and that we have a plan to protect it in the long term.

The Speech from the Throne also addressed Alberta's parks, promising the release of a new plan that will ensure the sustainability of these areas, enhance recreational opportunities, and continue to attract many individuals to our province both as tourists and as residents.

Mr. Speaker, our communities are vibrant and are continually becoming stronger and more secure. Recent initiatives such as the enactment of the Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act demonstrates this government's commitment to community safety.

We also believe that it is extremely important to continue to invest in infrastructure throughout our province to position us well once we emerge from this economic downturn. It is our belief that an important part of our continued economic success will be intimately tied to our investments in our province's infrastructure. Not only does this create jobs at a time when it is incredibly important, but it also improves the quality of life of all Albertans.

Many other jurisdictions in Canada and, indeed, around the world are going into massive deficits in order to finance their projects. However, Alberta is ahead of the curve and has allocated more than $6 billion as part of the capital account. These investments will improve our hospitals, schools, and other public infrastructure to help address the needs of our province as we meet the challenges of a booming, growing, and changing population, ultimately encouraging individuals to stay in Alberta. We recognize the unique challenges the economy places on our infrastructure growth plans, and as such we will ensure that funds disbursed are delivered efficiently and in an effective manner, providing the best dollar value for Albertans. Taking care of our infrastructure will ensure that we are ready for the opportunities that the future will bring.

Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, when I heard the hon. Lieutenant Governor say that tough times bring out the best in Albertans because we pull together through adversity and emerge with strength, it struck me on such a personal level as I was deeply touched by these words. My own community's motto is Pulling Together, and it drives our sense of community. Our businesses, volunteer groups, and associations enrich my region's quality of life based on this very motto. It has seen us through thick and thin. Not only is pulling together what Albertans do, but it is clear that this government will help provide the structure and opportunity for us to do just that. It is the people that make the area so rich. Their can-do attitude is what makes my constituency such a wonderful place to live, work, and raise a family.

With Bill 1 we as Albertans can continue to show our support to the reservists who make great sacrifices to protect our freedoms by supporting them through job security while they are on leave.

Mr. Speaker, I saw all Albertans reflected yesterday in the throne speech, from our youngest to our eldest to our volunteers, from the businessman to the developer, from the oil sands in the north to our beautiful parks, the importance of our agriculture and forestry industries, and our emerging bioeconomy.

This government has a plan that will keep Alberta in its leadership role despite the global economic climate. It's true that we're not immune, but we are still very fortunate. We will continue to do what we have always done: we will adapt to the realities of our situation, set goals for the future, and move forward in pursuing these goals. Our priority, as always, is to protect Albertans and what matters to them most. As the hon. Lieutenant Governor said yesterday, we remain committed to core programs that Albertans value deeply, such as health and education.

Albertans are not immune to the financial situation around the world, and we understand that Albertans are worried about their futures. We have made a promise to protect Albertans in these tough times, a promise we will keep. We are debt free, and we have over $7 billion set aside in the sustainability fund to help protect our core programs. We have low unemployment and low income and corporate taxes.

The strong fiscal management we have shown and the difficult decisions made in the past have positioned Alberta well. This has not happened by mistake, Mr. Speaker. It is because of great leadership that ensured that money was set aside in good times to be there when Albertans need it. I for one as a new MLA am grateful to the leaders who had the vision to pay down our debt and to put these savings funds in place.

Our decisions may still be tough, but they will be made easier because of the vision for the future. Mr. Speaker, our plan is a holistic, comprehensive approach for Alberta and includes measures to protect what matters to Albertans. With an ardent commitment to protecting our environment, we will successfully market Alberta's energy to an environmentally conscious world, and we will ensure that our forestry and agricultural industries continue to be supported and valued and that new and emerging opportunities in value-added and bioeconomies will be supported.

By providing Albertans with quality service and opportunities from childhood through to retirement, not only are we securing a high quality of life for current Albertans, but we are attracting many new ones who, too, are so called and will be so proud to call Alberta home.

Overall this plan allows Albertans to face our future with a great deal of confidence. It gives us hope, opportunity, and a vision of where Alberta and Albertans are headed. It embraces the many opportunities our great province has to offer, and it speaks to and is grateful for all Albertans' pulling together to make this the best place in the world to live, work, play, retire, and educate and raise our families. There is no place in the world like Alberta, and it is because of the wonderful spirit and the can-do attitude of Albertans.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank His Honour the Lieutenant Governor for the confidence and certainty in his delivery of the Speech from the Throne and in the manner in which he serves our province.

Thank you.

The Speaker: As I call on the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition, the hon. leader under our rules has up to 90 minutes to participate. At the conclusion there is an offering of a five-minute question-and-answer response.

It's my great pleasure to introduce the new leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition in the province of Alberta. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today in the House to respond to the Speech from the Throne as Leader of the Official Opposition and an immensely proud, lifelong Albertan. My privilege and duty today is to challenge the government's flawed premises and outdated assumptions as outlined in yesterday's Speech from the Throne.

With no disrespect I offer an alternative vision of our future, a future of a great province with unparalleled opportunity and potential. I acknowledge good ideas within the speech, but it fails to answer the questions most Albertans are asking. Where are we going? What is the long-term vision to a better and a different future, a future that even now is being written by profound economic, environmental, and social realities, a future that we must step forward to guide or be left behind as other civilizations have been? Other societies have anticipated this future. They have already seen the dangers and the opportunities, and they are taking action now. Several European nations over the past 15 years have wisely chosen to develop their resources more carefully, to save more prudently, and to determine environmental limits and live within them, and they are living well.

Change is possible. Change can work even for Alberta. Albertans know that we need a change, that the treadmill of boom and bust and dependence on a single unsustainable industry is getting us nowhere fast. We're running in place, burning energy without moving forward, when we should be conserving and reusing renewable forms of energy and exporting our product to the rest of the world. We need to get off the treadmill and start running in the real world, charting our own course, one based on a sustainable energy policy, a diverse economy, and finding a new pride and hope in leading the way.

Albertans are sophisticated, educated above the average in Canada. They want a more thoughtful approach to government based on good science, including the new science of systems, sustainability, and careful planning that includes the long-term future of our children and their children. Albertans are discouraged not by the excellent science in Alberta but by the lack of careful analysis of options and the corresponding lack of openness to new ideas that have come to characterize this government. Our approach to energy, the environment, health care, and education must begin with an end goal in sight. For me, that goal is simple. Begin with health as the fundamental principle on which we build all of our systems: healthy persons in healthy relationships in healthy communities in healthy environments.

The primary purpose of government must be to serve the long-term public interests. This cannot be defined merely as gross domestic product or jobs alone. We are failing growing numbers of Albertans who are not reaping the rewards of Alberta's promise: the young mother in my neighbourhood in a coffee shop that works two jobs to earn enough to take care of her children; the young engineer working for a local oil company who wants to be proud of his work but feels he cannot; an elderly woman, a personal friend, who feels abandoned because of her complex health needs and now avoids the health care system until an emergency happens; the mother of a mentally disabled boy who presented her story on the steps of the Legislature last fall about her continuing battle – eight years, in fact – for decent care for her son; and the ranchers in the southwest slopes who believe they've lost their basic rights as owners to influence development decisions affecting not only their livelihoods but their groundwater and their landscapes for the future. We need to keep Alberta's promise for all these people and so many others. The promise is so demanding, yet it is possible if we manage well, if we manage differently.

It has become very clear, however, that our society cannot fulfill Alberta's promise without a dramatic turnaround, a fundamental change of course, a new way of looking at our purpose as government, that includes engaging people as citizens to co-create the conditions for healthy people in healthy communities. The government's throne speech reveals no such turnaround. It is a prescription for more of the same: a dependence upon resource extraction at breakneck speed, an education system too focused on training for that sector, a reactive health care system that treats people after they break down, and social supports that fail to respect both the workers and the citizens trying to get help. Most troubling of all is the lack of substantial commitment to cherishing, protecting, and restoring our environment: the land, the water, the air that sustain our lives and our very business opportunities.

Albertans from all over this province from every walk of life are telling me they are losing trust in the ability or the willingness of their politicians to do their job, to understand and defend and enhance the public interests long term. Albertans want politicians to take the mantle of leadership very seriously. They want leaders who will ask tough questions of themselves, leaders who are capable of flexibility, co-operation, and imagination. They want leaders who will listen to citizens not just for politeness' sake but because their voices actually influence public policy. Albertans want leaders who do the hard work of measuring progress with the best scientific tools available and who are willing to change course when the evidence demands it. Examples include our growing mental health problems, our lack of savings in this province over the last 15 years, our unmanaged oil sands development.

These are extremely challenging times. I don't minimize this. They demand honesty and transparency about what government policies are working and what are not and our willingness to redress those. We must speak frankly and respectfully of what we've learned or failed to learn from the past and how government must do things differently to protect future generations and ensure our continued prosperity.

It's now even more urgent that we rise above partisan differences and seek the public good in our debates and our committee work. I commend the Premier's decision to form all-party committees in the last two years. We know they can do good work. Now let us ensure they address the most compelling and vital issues of our day, making the best public policy possible.

Public trust is at an all-time low, as illustrated in the last provincial election. With it, public participation has been reduced because of the loss of a sense of responsibility. We all must take responsibility for that. This is not rocket science. When people do not feel they have influence, they get depressed, and they give up. That's what, I'm afraid, I see today.

We can rebuild trust in the political process by being open about what we think and being open to new ideas. We can build trust through talking frankly about what we've learned and how we will do things differently to protect future generations. Perhaps most fundamentally, we could build trust by walking the talk. As many of our mothers taught us, say what you mean, mean what you say, and follow through.

For many decades now Albertans have had it pretty good. Our vast oil and gas wealth have allowed us to build remarkable programs and infrastructure. Really, these are world class. I would not deny that. We have strong programs in science and technology, including the emerging field of nanotechnology. We can be proud of groundbreaking medical innovation. I commend the government for increasing the number of medical graduates in the last few years. We have a world-class arts and culture sector. We have a good life here, and much of it is owed to the wealth we have created through the oil and gas sector. But it would be unwise to assume that we can continue to depend on an industry, one industry, to keep Alberta prosperous forever. We need to prepare for a healthier, more diverse legacy for tomorrow's children, an Alberta in which a bust in the oil and gas sector does not lead inevitably to recession in the province. We could be so much more than the world's gas station.

The Easter Islanders of history, the Mayans, the Romans are among civilizations that self-destructed because of lack of vision, loss of honest, critical thinking, and environmental overreach. Ronald Wright describes these problems in his thoughtful, eloquent little book A Short History of Progress.

I quote Ronald Wright. Things are moving so fast that inaction itself is one of the biggest mistakes. The 10,000-year human experiment of the settled life will stand or fall by what we do and don't do now. The reform that is needed is not anti-capitalist; it's not anti-American; it's not even deep environmentalist. It is simply the transition from short-term thinking to long-term thinking, from recklessness and excess to moderation and a precautionary principle.

I continue the quote. The great advantage we have, our best chance for avoiding the fate of past societies, is that we know about these past societies. We can see how and why they went wrong. Homo sapiens has the information to know itself for what it is, an ice age hunter only half-evolved towards intelligence, clever but seldom wise. We are now at the stage when the Easter Islanders could still have halted the senseless cutting of their last trees and the failure to plant the seeds out of reach of rats. We have the tools and the means to share resources, clean up pollution, dispense basic health care and birth control, and set economic limits in line with natural limits. If we don't do these now, we may prosper, but we will never be able to do them when times get hard. Our fate will twist out of our hands. And this new century will not grow very old before we enter an age of chaos and collapse that will dwarf the dark ages of the past. Now is our last chance to get the future right. End of quote.

While trees were the engine of development on Easter Island, a resource that their civilization exhausted through shortsightedness to its demise, our island, if I can put it that way, called Alberta has oil as its engine of development. But for how long? At least the trees were renewable. Oil and gas clearly are not. How much greater our responsibility to lead on the single greatest threat to health and the economy on the planet: climate change.

My response to the Speech from the Throne is directed at fellow members in this House and to all Albertans. I'm very aware that we have many caring, bright, and competent people on all sides of the House. Today I'm asking all of us and all Albertans outside these walls to let go of our defensiveness over the change we need to make and consider the options for our province, our people, our future.

Many Albertans believe there's nothing wrong, that the status quo is good enough. I do not and cannot accept this judgment. Consider the realities that we face. The oil cannot last forever. We know that. Our present approach to fossil fuel development is not serving progressively the long-term interests of people and the environment. It's not even serving industry. We have failed them in terms of their international reputation and the way we've allowed it to develop.

We know the industry is a cyclic industry. When public programs depend so heavily on oil and gas revenue, they become vulnerable with every downturn in the industry. Our schools and hospitals, roads and water treatment plants, our care for seniors and Albertans with disabilities: all of these fundamental elements of society are threatened because we have for too long depended on one industry, oil and gas, to pay the lion's share of our bills. And now, at a time of economic decline and a war on carbon, we are hurting our number one industry, losing reputation and international markets. In some respects we have not treated that industry fairly, just as we have not been fair to future generations. We need to help all Albertans, including the oil and gas sector, to see, explore, understand, and adapt to new realities.

We have spent virtually all the nonrenewable resource wealth that has come out of the ground in the last 16 years. Instead of saving and living off the interest from this wealth, as Norway has done and other oil producing countries, we've been left very vulnerable to this unguided growth. To compound this challenge, we've accumulated a huge environmental debt. Thousands of contaminated sites and well sites have not been reclaimed, some for over 50 years. Many of these will fall to the public purse to reclaim instead of being remediated by those who created the damage. This is a crime, literally. If I were leading, we would not be leaving this legacy to future generations.

If we as a people are serious about building a better Alberta for our children and theirs, then we must take responsibility for that future. We must take back our lives from the market. The task of envisioning and shaping is ours and ours alone. When did we stop believing in the future? When did we give up on a better future, on the need for change? Every parent, worker, artist, farmer, student, teacher, entrepreneur, scientist, truck driver, social worker, police officer, community organizer, and public servant: all of us are in this together. The clock is ticking, and tomorrow is rushing towards us. Will we be prepared? Will the foundations for a better tomorrow be in place? Plan we must and seriously, especially those of us who have taken it upon ourselves to lead. Every member of this Assembly has stood before Albertans and said, in effect: place your trust in me. Now we need to earn that trust. Few gifts are as precious.

Several months ago I had the privilege of having my grandsons stay overnight with us. They're aged two and three. In the middle of the night I heard one of them rustling around and realized that I'd better go and find out what was going on. I found him wandering around in a different room and carried him back to his bed. Without a word we lay there in the dark. Suddenly his hand reached out and grabbed my face, and he spent several minutes making sure that I was the person he thought I was. After several minutes of exploring and ensuring and reassuring himself, he turned back to sleep. Without words my grandson was asking me: "Are you there for me? Will you be there for me? Are you taking care of things for my future?"

Thoughtful Albertans, including elected representatives, asked similar questions about Alberta's promise. Are we being good stewards for the future? Will future generations enjoy the opportunities we have had today? How committed are we to ending poverty and homelessness, to diversifying our economy for continuing prosperity? Will our children's children face a diminished future with fewer opportunities, less hope, less democracy, less freedom?

Without a turnaround in thinking and behaving our long-term prospects are uncertain. I would say they are dim. Please do not dismiss this as partisan, radical rhetoric. I believe this at a deep level.

My experiences here and in a number of other countries around the world over 35 years, as well as the calls of much brighter leaders than I, demand decisive, courageous leadership at this time. We must conserve and shepherd our resources better. Other jurisdictions have taken on the challenge. They are moving towards a more sustainable future, they are living within their means, and they are creating the culture and organizational infrastructure required to see and shape the future. It's time for Alberta not only to join the parade but to earn the right to lead.

I'm one of the more fortunate Albertans. Born in Taber, raised in Calgary in a secure and loving middle-class family, I had opportunities to travel, play many sports, labour on the farms of southwestern Alberta, and even spend a couple of summers in a gas plant. I studied music, took up the guitar, which I still enjoy today, and singing. I continue to marvel at the great opportunities and the great artists of Alberta. Perhaps above all I grew to love this place. I want it to be there, as you do, for our children's children: the pristine mountains, the rivers and lakes, the incredible natural capital that we have taken in some ways so for granted.

My family worked hard, valued honesty and community service. These values steered me towards my eventual career in medicine. But even as I was growing up, I couldn't help but notice that while many people in Alberta thrived, others suffered injustice and lost opportunities because of family or financial circumstances beyond their control. For these people Alberta's promise was and in some cases continues to be unfulfilled. Back then I didn't see the connection between politics and health, between politics and success, but I did begin to see how all of us as citizens are responsible for taking care of each other. My security depends on the people around me feeling secure. Health work, like politics, is really about creating the conditions for health and security individually, collectively.

In the mid-1970s I practised medicine in South Africa in mission hospitals with my future wife and partner, Laureen Ross. There I began to understand the connections between politics and health. It was a difficult, first-hand education in the politics of discrimination and exclusion. With my eyes and ears and hands I felt the impact on the black people of South Africa, their limited opportunities and, in fact, their shortened lifespans. I watched many of them, mostly children, die from preventable causes. They lacked the most basic elements of life: food, clean water, sanitation, education, and access to basic health care. That's when I learned the difference between good politics and bad politics.

I returned to Alberta deeply affected by my experience, married, and began my family in Pincher Creek, Alberta, as a family physician. But the lessons of Africa remained. I paid close attention to how children's family experience, their education opportunities, and their environment either helped or weakened their chances for success, their chances for health, their opportunities or chances for injury or illness or addiction. Long ago I gave up blaming people for their problems. We are all responsible for each other.

Too many people are not benefiting from Alberta's promise: Albertans with disabilities, single parents, seniors on fixed incomes, homeless Albertans, Alberta's First Nations. Even middle-class families pressured by the lack of affordable child care and care for their aging parents struggle with combinations of health problems, overwork, stress, and a degrading environment. Now many of our citizens are worried about whether they'll have a job or not. Again, I'm not blaming. We are all responsible. Together let's find a way to reduce the pain.

There is still an abundance of hope and opportunity in Alberta. Perhaps the greatest lesson of my work in South Africa was that positive change is possible even when things seem hopeless. Black South Africans won their freedom and continue to move forward. Nelson Mandela continues to symbolize hope and courage to move hope to action.

A responsible government, a responsible society does not take a hands-off approach to business, to the environment, or to increasing social problems. We need a different approach, a hands-on, hands-together approach, treating each other as partners in this great new enterprise of Alberta in the 21st century, in the evolution of our society into something healthier, more compassionate, more sustainable.

I have fundamental disagreements with the Premier and his government's direction though I still respect their service. I respect their humanity. As Leader of the Official Opposition I have a duty to present an alternative vision of the future, which I share with you: we work together in the public interest, or we all go down and sacrifice future generations. The Good Book says: a people without vision perish. Perhaps historians of the future will say of this time: markets without moral guidance collapse. Surely, we are experiencing this reality today.

Albertans do not support the idea that wealth is the true measure of a life or a province. Albertans tell me they seek leadership that walks the talk, honours life, and guides the market to serve people and the planet. Yesterday's throne speech talked of a positive future without a sense of what it will take to take us there. Along with our friends to the south we need to pull together in ways we have not seen since our great-grandfathers settled here. We need to give people not more political fast food, you know: it feels good now, but you pay for it later. We need to give Albertans the hard truth that we cannot have it all. We cannot have unlimited growth and pristine environments. We cannot have genuine progress without genuine sacrifice. We cannot have the lowest taxes in the country and the best public services in the land.

People need hope; they don't need false hope. We need markets; we don't need blind faith in the markets. We need a larger goal than our gross domestic product and our bank accounts. Our fondest dream must be healthy people in healthy communities and a plan to get there. Government alone cannot deliver these. We can, if we work together, help create the best conditions for health in all of its dimensions: physical, mental, social, economic, and environmental.

As our forefathers knew too well, a vision alone without hard work, sacrifice, creativity, and a shared sense of moral purpose will not result in change. These values are alive and well in our families. I've heard them expressed in this House on all sides, and now we have to translate that into action not only here but in our communities and in our workplaces. For example, the single mother who manages to scrimp and save and achieve her bachelor of arts in social work. After several years working on behalf of the disadvantaged, she realized that she couldn't survive on her salary and has been forced to take other work. Another example is a First Nations man who confronted his broken childhood and alcohol addiction and became not only a small businessman but ultimately the chief of his band. Two courageous farm workers injured at work without compensation who have rallied other vulnerable farm workers to demand basic standards for health, safety, and compensation. These people and so many others would gladly support a longer term vision and a plan for the future of their fellow Albertans.

Our vision includes four elements. Firstly, a statement of principle: health must be the goal. As a physician I know what good health is. It's hard to define, but I think each of us knows when we are experiencing health as a result of many, many factors. As a politician I want to work in a government that recognizes and addresses all of the factors needed to create a healthy Alberta.

As for health care, the system itself, we need to take a step back and ask: what is the system supposed to do? Health care is fundamentally a relationship, a relationship of trust based on also the best of science to provide quality of care, access to care, and reasonable benefit for the cost. Therefore, we must measure changes that we make to that system on the basis of how they affect quality, how they affect access, how they affect the cost-effectiveness. That means we must set goals. We must gather evidence, examine it carefully, and listen to the professionals who are working in the system. We must work in the trenches with the vulnerable citizens who are experiencing the system and learn from what they are saying to us. We must be prepared to make the practical changes needed to improve the quality, the access, and the affordability. Professionals and institutions are important, but equally vital are trust, openness, flexibility, and the willingness to develop solid plans with a follow-through monitoring system that makes the necessary changes.

I applaud the government's progress on increasing the health workforce by increasing the number of spaces in our postsecondary institutions, doctors and nurses and the expanding role that they've been given. We should pay more attention to the family physician and expanding nursing practice as well as public health and prevention, which can pay back $7 for every dollar we spend in prevention. We should develop more specialized surgical centres, which deliver superior treatment with reduced costs by focusing on specific procedures.

We need stronger mental health care, especially at these times of increased stress. We need to help with issues such as homelessness, domestic violence, and depression, among the highest in the country. We must look at those indicators and see the writing on the wall. We have to change the way we are addressing the long-term health of Albertans, and we must remember the old wisdom: better to spend wisely on prevention than to pour dollars into expensive cures after the fact.

Our second principle has to do with freedom for responsible business to thrive. It's a crucial element of our vision. My father worked in the oil patch. I know the contributions he and his business made to Alberta. Alberta is built on the backs of hard work and entrepreneurial spirit. Business will be our most important partner in the crucial future we're entering, especially the work of diversifying our economy. The focus must be on improving our green technology, research and development, and moving away from our dependence on fossil fuels. Many more jobs than will be available for resource extraction can be created with a green economy, long-term jobs, renewable jobs.

Innovation and entrepreneurship are essential to fuel our journey, but they are not enough. We must create the conditions for all Albertans to participate and thrive and create wealth responsibly; that is, within limits, within rules that serve the long-term public interest. Business must be accountable to the community and to the future. Government's role is to ensure that business is accountable. When power determines success rather than fairness and morality, people lose hope and they drop out. They at least drop out of the political process where, increasingly, we need their input. Again, government must ensure that higher values than profits determine our development agenda.

Because of the importance of business to Alberta's prosperity and social development, we need to systematically review and reduce unnecessary red tape, those rules and regulations that do not provide better products or services or more accountable business. Business needs certainty. It needs a return on investment. It's up to government to ensure that we are not standing in the way of reasonable, responsible business. Business is an important partner, and with business we must play fair.

When it comes to climate change, the most serious threat of our time, most businesses want to do their part. We need to show leadership. We need to, with them and with Ottawa and with our neighbours to the south, harmonize our targets and timelines for emissions. We should also consider within that context a cap and trade system that moves beyond Alberta, new building code regulations, and public transit investments. We need to send a strong message to the private sector and to all Albertans that all of us are part of the problem; we are all part of the solution. Leadership is desperately needed now. We should be leading the world, not dragging our feet and catching up. A fair, consistent set of rules and standards from government gives business the freedom to thrive.

Our third principle as part of a vision for Alberta is a smart, hard-working government. The fundamental purpose of government is to manage and distribute resources in the long-term public interest. The complexity, however, of our lives and development demands a much higher level of knowledge and analysis than we have in history. It requires the best science balanced with grounded practitioners and infused with public values. Good public policy, healthy public policy looks beyond immediate gain or loss to the long-term implications for a secure and prosperous future. This includes consistent support for our most vulnerable: seniors, disabled, and the low-income. We have yet to live up to that moral imperative.

Effective, efficient programs and services arise from careful plans developed with a clear understanding of the issues. Alberta's embarrassment of oil and gas riches has made it far too easy for government to throw money at problems. That's not smart management, and it's not sustainable. Money does not solve problems; people do. We have spent virtually all of our nonrenewable resource revenues in the past 15 years. That is not smart.

For more effective and efficient government we must have openness and accountability of decisions and spending. We must move beyond closed-door meetings and decisions that fail the test of transparency. How can we be more focused on understanding and respecting each other and less focused, too, on scoring political points? The all-party committees, as I've said, are a welcome addition to a more constructive process in policy-making. Question period is a time for tough questions. How can we make it more productive?

In the end our work will be measured in terms of whether people are inspired, engaged, and empowered to work for healthier communities. We will never have the resources and services our growing population may need if we are not fundamentally contributing to caring, respectful, and secure communities. Clearly, that has to start here.

Finally, our fourth pillar in our vision: our promise to Albertans must include a fairness to future generations. For too long we have embraced short-term goals, cut programs in bad times and spent heavily in good times, the very reverse of what prudent economists and advisers have done in the last 50 years. We cannot do this again. This shortsightedness is an abdication of this generation's duty to the next to provide a lasting legacy for our children and our grandchildren that all of us will be proud of. The next generation has the same desire for prosperity as we, the same need for clean air, water, and land, the same fundamental right to a vibrant democracy, the same urge to live and grow and learn to reach their full potential as citizens.

As soon as feasible we must implement a savings plan that's serious and an investment strategy for future generations. We must set aside a portion of nonrenewable resource revenue. That remains a key part of the Alberta Liberal philosophy even in these most challenging of times. The changing economic reality means that we cannot save as much as we would like, but the fact remains that oil and gas are running out, and we must turn some of that temporary wealth into sustainable income. We must invest in our future. Every dollar of nonrenewable resource wealth we save today means revenue for our future, sustainable revenue our grandchildren's children can count on.

The situation we find ourselves in today is precisely the kind of predicament my immediate predecessor, the Member for Edmonton-Riverview, wanted to avoid. That's why he aggressively championed the need for a savings plan for Alberta since his time in the Legislature, one that would have left us with billions of dollars in savings and investment for the future, allowing us to live off the interest.

Our current economic challenges in the context of climate change, then, compel us to move quickly to green our economy. We have suggested the creation of a Premier's council on a green economy. Very complex. We need the best of minds provincially, nationally, and internationally to help us move on this agenda. We need to diversify energy and reduce our environmental footprint. It can be a win-win-win for energy, the economy, and the environment. Such a plan will require our best minds from every sector: industry, academia, government, and nonprofit organizations. We need these minds to move us into a postcarbon future, where everything from urban planning to public transportation, housing, electricity, and especially water management must be handled differently. We know too much to be carrying on with business as usual.

In conclusion, it's time for courageous and visionary leadership that renews public trust, that builds a sense of confidence and hope in the future. Many people I meet these days are anxious about the future for themselves and for their children. They want to see a larger vision of the Alberta they have dreamed of. They want a leader with commitments to new energy and technology, research and new jobs, and a commitment to a lasting quality of life.

Over and above our fiscal responsibility to future generations is that response to climate change. No matter how many billions of dollars we manage to save in our heritage fund, that wealth will be useless if we fail to protect the environment. If we do nothing, climate change will imperil our water supply, our food security. It will put our entire society at risk. It will impact tourism. It is already impacting forestry and agriculture. Our emissions threaten our fellow Canadians, indeed the planet.

We are not the bad guys, but we must take responsibility for our share of the problem. Let's work with industry to set targets and develop technology that will lead to real reductions in emissions, not intensity reductions, which our present targets are about. As I noted earlier, let's start a serious commitment to building green infrastructure and reduce our overall dependence on fossil fuels.

We have a duty to ensure that Alberta's promise can be kept for our grandchildren. We have embraced one way of thinking for the last 40 years. It's time to change course, to pursue aggressively the approaches that will meet tomorrow's challenges. The great philosopher Wayne Gretzky said: I don't go where the puck is; I go where the puck is going to be. We need to think like that.

A new approach is necessary for the continued health and prosperity of our people, and together we can restore hope and purpose. Together Albertans of all cultures and ideologies, including Conservatives and Liberals and New Democrats, can work as one to realize Alberta's vast untapped and endangered potential. Together Albertans can refresh and reinvigorate not only the political landscape and discourse; we can refresh and invigorate our economy, our public institutions, and our relationships with the rest of Canada. Only by working together will we move forward and build a better Alberta that we can be proud of.

We have challenges. They must be met, and for us the government, this is the greatest gift we can give to our society. No one is going to meet the challenges for us, not solely us under the dome. We need to engage every citizen of Alberta in this great enterprise. When we recognize the enormity of this task, we cannot but be humbled and, hopefully, open to listening to each other more fully and finding a better way together.

I know that many Albertans believe that change is impossible. They've given up. I've met them at the doors. I don't feel that way at all, and I know most of you don't either. I believe that change is inevitable. The question is whether we will take charge of change or that change will take charge of us. I know Albertans. I know how they will put themselves out to build a better tomorrow. They will make sacrifices for the sake of family, friends. Even for strangers we make sacrifices. We are Albertans, after all.

In my work and in my travels from South Africa to the Philippines, from Nepal to Iraq to Africa, I've seen the depths of human misery. I've also seen the heights of nobility and heroism. Human beings can accomplish miracles. Albertans can and will transform ourselves from a people living from boom to bust to a healthy, interdependent, innovative, and sustainable society.

The Alberta Liberal caucus stands firmly with the people of Alberta and is here to put this government on notice. If it is not prepared to enter the 21st century with some humility, courage, and a bigger vision for us and for our children's children, then do not expect to be government next time. Easter Island is a symbol we understand, and it is rousing conscious Albertans to action. Albertans may be discouraged, they may be cynical about politics and politicians, but they are not impotent, and they are not stupid. After discouragement comes anger, and with anger comes empowered men, women, and children who will not be intimidated by the trappings of power. They are increasingly prepared to speak the truth to power and to take back control of their future if we are not prepared to lead.

Alberta Liberals are here for all Alberta, and we will leave no one behind. That is the promise of Alberta, and that is our promise to Albertans. Fellow legislators, fellow Albertans, in the name of sanity and humanity let us move forward together.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Mr. Vandermeer: Mr. Speaker, I just have a simple question for the new hon. Leader of the Opposition. You talk about that we should have more of a savings plan. In order to save more, that means we need to spend less. So if you were Premier, I would like to know where you would cut. Would that be in education? In health care? Seniors? The homeless? The Calgary ring road? Children's services? I'd like you to be specific, and I don't want you to give us any political fast food. You have a long list that would require more spending, yet on the other hand you say that we need to save more. Can you explain that to me and be really specific where we would save?

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm not sure it's about spending more; it's about spending smarter. We are spending 23 per cent more than any other jurisdiction in Canada for government services today. How much do we know about the impacts of that spending, especially in the health care system? How is it that we had a $1.3 billion overspending in the last year? Where is that money going? How is it that we were in such a rush to pay off the financial debt of this province that we were willing to take on a massive environmental debt and a social debt? Those are the kinds of smart business decisions that I think Albertans expect, that we spend during down times like this; we save during boom times. We have not seen that kind of leadership, and Albertans want that. That's what I'm hearing.

The Speaker: Additional questions? The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I noticed probably about three-quarters of the way through the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition's speech that he mentioned something about the embarrassment of riches with oil and gas revenue and that the current government was just throwing money at problems and that money does not solve problems; people do. Does that symbolize a change in direction in your caucus in that we will not be hearing questions about spending money on the various programs in almost every single department that we have in our province?

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, I think the question really should be: how are we spending our wealth? How much do we know about how the dollars are translating into better outcomes for families, better health, better business opportunities and generating the kind of sustainable energy resource that we say we need? That is the focus, really, of what our caucus will be challenging the government on: not spending more, spending smarter.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to respond here. I've always felt that this member's heart is in the right place even though we may not agree on every issue. He mentioned a couple of times about spending smarter. I guess I would echo the concerns of my friend the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, and I would ask again where he would cut if he were Premier or where he would tax more, what types of taxes he would introduce.

Dr. Swann: I think one of the key questions that is behind this question is: when will we see a more transparent government that will allow us to see more details about why the money is being spent so heavily in the health care system with so little result? What's happening to the P3s? What is the actual short-term benefit and the longer term cost to the public purse? Our investment in the environment: what is the investment per saving of water and air? Let's start putting some indicators out there and giving us access to the details of where the money is actually going and how you are actually measuring the results of the spending.

As far as tax is concerned, clearly a progressive tax would actually move us towards a much more fair opportunity for managing within our limited means and not being so dependent on fossil fuels. Why are we adding taxes to the Blue Cross program and to seniors' drug programs when what they're really doing is . . .

The Speaker: I'm sorry to interrupt, but I think we've now exhausted that portion of the agenda.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, did you wish to be recognized?

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of Alberta's NDP I'm very pleased to respond to His Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech from the Throne and the government's plans for the coming session. Our province's economy is quickly headed downhill, but this government's answer is business as usual. Yesterday's speech begged Albertans to have confidence in this government but offered them nowhere to find it. There appears to be absolutely nothing in this government's plan about refocusing our economy on renewable energy, a fundamental change Alberta needs if we are to keep from falling into the abyss of a prolonged recession. They refuse to follow the example being set by other countries around the world. The Conservatives are sleepwalking towards disaster, and their arrogance threatens to take thousands of working Albertans down with them.

This Speech from the Throne ignores the global transition to economies based on renewable energies. Alberta is at a crossroads, and everyday Albertans are looking for leadership from their government. While virtually every other jurisdiction in the world is announcing stimulus packages to help people face the inevitable job losses that are coming, this government announced nothing. Instead, it remains steadfast in its naive hope that the market will take care of itself.

Mr. Speaker, that's what has got us into this mess in the first place, and I'm sure that it won't help us get out. We are set to take in significantly reduced revenues from the oil and gas sector, from business taxes, and from personal income taxes as unemployment continues to rise, yet this government insists that Alberta is cushioned from this downturn. The government insists it will not consider any new ideas. The Premier has said that his plan is to stay the course. Those words are reminiscent of former U.S. President George W. Bush, whose disastrous environmental policies this government has slavishly followed for the last eight years. We are in a new era, and we must change our course if we do not wish to be left behind. The free ride on greenhouse gas emissions that the Conservatives were given during the Bush years is over. It's time to plan ahead for a new economy, for new jobs for Albertans based on renewable energies that we can show to the world.

Working Albertans will not stand by idly as this government continues its path towards economic ruin. We do not believe that we can just wait for things to right themselves. It is a time to change our course, to create an Alberta whose fortunes are sustainable well into the future. To that end, Mr. Speaker, Alberta's NDP caucus has identified three areas of focus, all of which will serve to represent the interests of regular Albertans and their families.

First, we will fight to protect real jobs and show that thousands of long-term jobs, real jobs, can be created by investing in forward-looking industries that are based on sustainable business practices, technological innovation, and environmental stewardship. Second, we will continue to expose this government's secret health care agenda to delist and privatize health services. We will counter the myth they try to peddle to the people of this province about the unsustainability of the public system. Finally, Mr. Speaker, we'll pull back the curtains on this government's so-called environmental plan.

It's clear that behind the closed doors of government there is no desire or initiative to clean up the tar sands or the tar ponds. As each day passes without a real plan, the tar sands become a growing liability to our province. Unless this government commits to change, what was once a story of 500 dead ducks will soon become the story of 50,000 unemployed Albertans. Mr. Speaker, investment in education, publicly funded infrastructure, and a green economy all create more jobs per dollar than investments in handouts to the oil and gas industry. Albertans are already facing record job losses because of the slowdown in the oil and gas sector. Most plans to build upgraders and new extraction sites in Alberta have been mothballed or cancelled. The results are increasingly regular announcements of job layoffs, and it is government's role to step in and offer alternatives for Alberta's families.

An obvious starting point would be the reduction and eventual elimination of the sale of unrefined bitumen from this province. This government is actually working with American oil companies to allow unprocessed bitumen to continue to flow to the United States and along with it thousands of construction and long-term jobs. Even the Premier likened the sale of unprocessed bitumen to scraping the topsoil from the farm and selling it, and he promised to end the practice, a promise he has since ignored.

It has become clear that the world's future economic basis needs a transition from fossil fuels to renewable energies. Mr. Speaker, about a year ago Barack Obama said: the question is not if a renewable energy economy will thrive in the future; it's where. Alberta as the energy capital of Canada should be leading the transition and ensuring that jobs that go with the transition are here, in this province. However, this government remains fixated on the status quo. This lack of foresight will have tremendous impact on our future wealth as a province. This environmental foot-dragging threatens to deny Alberta a seat at the table when it comes to negotiating sustainable energy agreements with the United States. Real job creation comes from innovation and government support of new technologies that will serve an economy based on renewable energy.

The $2 billion corporate handout government has earmarked for carbon capture and sequestration should be redirected towards small businesses to develop green technologies. This money would create thousands of full-time jobs and help Alberta position itself to become the hub of a North American green energy economy.

Investment in other sectors, like child care and agriculture, also creates jobs and stimulates a sagging economy. Working Alberta families need more affordable child care spaces. While the government claims to have created a number of new spaces, what they don't tell us is how many have been lost and what the costs to families are. What we don't need is more doublespeak and misinformation from this tired old government.

Mr. Speaker, farming families have been the backbone of our province since it was founded, but they are virtually ignored in this throne speech. We need a government that puts family farms ahead of big packing plants and agribusiness. We need to stop subsidizing big corporations and invest in local producers. That's how you stimulate an economy and keep Albertans working.

Publicly funded universal health care is one of Canada's international hallmarks. It is, in my view, the greatest gift from our party to the people of Canada. Ordinary Canadians and Albertans rely on the services our health care system provides. Albertans don't want to pay for private health insurance. They do not want to be forced to forgo necessary medical treatment for fear of huge bills, and they certainly do not want to be placed in a position where they have to choose between buying the drugs they need or paying the rent.

What Albertans do want, Mr. Speaker, is a health care system that is fully funded, accessible in both urban and rural communities, and properly staffed. They deserve to know that the truth is that such a system is not only affordable but is also sustainable now and into the future. Unfortunately, we are continuously being sold a bill a goods by a government that is morally and intellectually bankrupt. They try to tell us that a system such as this is an impossible dream. They're wrong. We will continue the fight for universal health care that everyday Albertans want.

Upon his election this Premier promised Albertans a more transparent and accountable government, but nothing has changed. The government has yet to demonstrate how the establishment of a superboard benefits ordinary Albertans. Mr. Speaker, it eliminates the last vestiges of local control over the health care system. The truth is that study after study has proven that investment in public health care services creates more jobs and saves more lives than private health care, and it does so for much less money. Until this government starts listening to Albertans and stops promoting U.S. style health care, Alberta's NDP will continue to fight for publicly funded, publicly delivered health care that meets the needs of all Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, finally, reclaiming our environment and setting a better example of environmental stewardship on the world stage is essential to any plan aimed at stimulating our economy and preparing it for the transition to sustainability. Prior to the recent election of President Barack Obama the Alberta government took advantage of an eight-year free ride under the disastrous environmental policies of the Bush administration. President Obama has made it clear that those days are over.

Alberta must quickly change its course, or it will be isolated and left behind. There is growing discontent throughout the world, including in the United States, about Alberta's lack of environmental protection for the tar sands. Alberta has a black eye that can be seen from space, and it is now putting working Albertans' jobs at risk. The Obama administration has committed $55 billion for the development of green technology, which is four times the per capita amount that Canada has promised. This government has a lot of catching up to do, and the time to start is now, in this session.

Mr. Speaker, the NDP's green strategy promotes several initiatives that would set a new course for repairing Alberta's environment and preparing for its future. Immediate funding for home retrofits would not only save homeowners money, create jobs in the construction, service, and retail sectors, but it would also reduce Albertans' environmental footprint. Our green energy strategy calls for the establishment of a fund to provide interest-free loans and grants to individuals, groups, and municipalities that make energy-conscious choices.

Most importantly, Mr. Speaker, this government must rewrite legislation to include appropriate penalties, not mere slaps on the wrist, for polluting industries. Too often we have seen instances in which companies continue to pollute the air and water and put wildlife and human health at risk because they know the current legislation is weak and the consequences of violations insignificant.

Mr. Speaker, I want to just take a moment to speak about Bill 1. The men and women who bravely serve on our behalf in the Canadian armed forces deserve our greatest respect and honour. It seems obvious that we should protect the jobs of reservists who have been called up to serve on our behalf. Yet after nearly six years, perhaps seven years, of fighting in Afghanistan, Alberta has dragged its feet on this issue and is the last province in the country to bring forward legislation to protect reservists' jobs. I think we can do better. We should have done better for those people who are willing to serve.

Our province faces greater challenges today than it ever has, and it's clear by their delays that this government has no idea of what is needed to address the looming recession. We are concerned by government's constant references to the delisting and privatization of health care services and by their ongoing failure to take the issue of environmental protection seriously. The actions of this government show that they have absolutely no commitment to end their unsustainable dependency on fossil fuels or to shield Alberta's families from this recession.

Mr. Speaker, this has become perhaps the most secretive government in Canada despite clear assurances to that effect over the last year, including the last throne speech. Alberta's NDP will continue to demand openness from this government regarding its plans for health care, we will insist that it take responsibility for its environmental record, and we will fight to protect jobs against a government that would prefer to increase the welfare rolls.

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of everyday Albertans, who deserve better and demand more, Alberta's NDP will be voting against this throne speech.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

I fail to see anyone wanting to participate, so I shall proceed and recognize the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise and respond to the Speech from the Throne. First, I want to thank the government for a good, comprehensive look at our present and our future. The themes identified in the speech given by His Honour the Lieutenant Governor, Norman Kwong, emphasized just how great a province Alberta is and how fortunate we are to be able to call ourselves Albertans. Over the last 100 years thousands of people in waves and at different times throughout the century have left their respective homelands and migrated here to start new lives. I cannot imagine the thoughts and fears these people must have felt in those early days when they made decisions to leave their families in some cases and everything familiar and travel into the unknown. All they knew was that this was a land of opportunity.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

I remember my grandfather and grandmother coming here from the steppes of Russia, and I remember the stories he told me of what it was like when he arrived here, homesteaded, and started to raise a family. I also remember that he, like others I knew, were often reluctant to talk much about their life in the old country. He only spoke of a couple of instances that confirmed their resolve to emigrate to the new world. One story had to do with an attempt to assassinate one of the members of the Russian monarchy as they were travelling in a parade in the city of St. Petersburg. Mr. Speaker, my grandfather, instead, focused on his life here in Canada and here in Alberta. His absolute, unwavering intent was to be Canadian and Albertan. He talked about how he had to work to be a part of the community, to work together in order to make it through those early years.

I grew up listening to my grandfather and watching and learning from my father as I was constantly reminded of how they lived through the Dirty Thirties and how they had to tighten their belts and make do. I was forever reminded of the importance of saving for a time when things might not be so good and these savings would be needed in order to make it through the tough times.

Mr. Speaker, living through those tough times had a very strong impact on their lives. My family was very reluctant to spend any money they didn't have. My dad only went into debt for a short time if he was positive he could pay that debt off and at the same time acquire something necessary for his farm, like a new tractor to replace the worn one or a piece of machinery that made farming more efficient. At the same time, we didn't do without as we grew up. I think it gave us a greater appreciation of what we had. I thank my dad now for being that way, even though when I was small, I was envious of some of the things kids my age had.

No one predicted the Dirty Thirties, at least not to the extent they were. Likewise, this global recession was not predicted even as short as six months ago. We as Albertans have learned from our grandfathers and our fathers, and I feel so fortunate that our government put savings away just in case. This is indeed going to help us, as was mentioned in the throne speech, weather the downturn, and it will indeed position us as a province to come out ahead of the curve when the economy does turn around again, and it surely will, just like the second half of the last century did. Alberta led the country in so many ways just last year, and we will lead the pack again.

Mr. Speaker, as I travelled to various state capitals in the Pacific Northwest this last month, I was constantly reminded of perhaps where we would be if we had not saved for this rainy day. Of the jurisdictions I had an opportunity to visit, only one other has the same opportunity as Alberta. Alaska also has a savings account set aside for such a possibility. They are also, like us, the only other jurisdiction who will be able to move forward without making devastating cuts to their budgets. They, like us, are tightening their belts and moving on.

I'm constantly reminded of the poem If by Rudyard Kipling and a couple of lines from it, which I paraphrase.

If you can keep your head when all about you
Are losing theirs and blaming it on you . . .
Or watch the things you gave your life to, broken,
And stoop and build 'em up with worn-out tools . . .
If you can fill the unforgiving minute
With sixty seconds' worth of distance run,
Yours is the Earth and everything that's in it.

Mr. Speaker, over the last while there's been so much discussion and negative reaction as to where Alberta has gone in these past years, but I can only say that I am proud and thankful for what we have done and where we have gone. As I mentioned, we are in an enviable position. This comes with leadership, with leadership and common sense, something that also comes from our forefathers. We have a great deal of opportunity to improve the successes we have with our economic future. As Alberta is an exporting jurisdiction, our opportunities for the future do hinge, as was outlined in the throne speech, on ensuring that we increase our ability to trade and compete in the world marketplace. I believe that we've been doing a much-needed job not only for North Americans but also our trading partners globally as to the safety of our agricultural products and the environmental responsibility we take with all our energy resources.

As the present Alberta lead for the Pacific Northwest Economic Region I'm fortunate to be a part of an organization that is focused on just that: supporting and enhancing our already healthy trade relationship with our largest trading partner, the United States. There's a good reason why the world's second-largest energy producer, Alberta, is right next door to the world's largest energy customer, the United States, and we are good neighbours and allies. As we go forward, it only makes good sense to improve that relationship and to streamline the efficiency of trading back and forth between our jurisdictions and to increase the security and safety of such trade as well. That is why I believe that it is vital that we improve our ability to do this.

I'm speaking about the fact that at present Alberta does such a high volume of trade with the United States, all funneled through only one 24-hour commercial port of entry at Coutts-Sweet Grass. To improve this element, it's imperative that another similar port be established at Wild Horse at the southeast corner of our province. I'm encouraged that the Alberta government is fully supportive of this and continues to urge the federal government in Ottawa to implement this as soon as possible.

Mr. Speaker, the new provincial energy strategy is a work that's long overdue. Natural gas plays from southeast Alberta have made up the largest percentage of royalty revenues for Alberta for many, many years. This area will be a major player for many years to come. Southern Alberta is also an area that has the best potential for wind energy anywhere in North America. Perhaps that's why many of us from there also walk with a permanent lean to the west. I don't know.

The opportunity for alternative energy production is enhanced by the world concern for more green energy, and I believe Alberta is poised to be a major player in not only wind energy but solar as well, with Medicine Hat as the sunniest city in Canada.

As was mentioned in the throne speech, agriculture and agrifood industries are large economic drivers. I'm proud to be an Albertan and proud to be an agriculture producer. Our forefathers who migrated here and homesteaded here proved that agriculture is an important mainstay in our economy. They settled this land and made it what it is today. I look forward to the future with the support that our government is showing in the agricultural industry.

Mr. Speaker, as I drive through all parts of Alberta, it's easy to see how much development and activity is going on. You can't help but notice all the development in and around our two major cities, Calgary and Edmonton. Medicine Hat, which hit 60,000 in population last year, has now also come of age and has moved ahead with a great deal of development, both residential and commercial. The big box stores that have gone up this last year are providing service options and employment opportunities that previously could only be had in the big cities.

I also look forward to the redevelopment and expansion of the Medicine Hat regional hospital, which was announced last year. In my mind, the priority is there, and I'm waiting for the shovel to be put in the ground. Likewise, the small expansion that was announced over three years ago for the Bow Island hospital in my constituency is one that has to be started and completed.

Mr. Speaker, there are perhaps two main reasons that people move to Alberta: jobs and opportunity. It's the best place to live, work, and raise a family. The reason they stay here is because it's the most beautiful land in Canada. I'm encouraged by our government's approach to our land, namely the land-use framework, which will allow everyone, no matter who they are or from what walk of life, to pursue their respective interests and enjoy and share our land but not to the detriment of any others' interests.

Mr. Speaker, water or the future limitations and lack of it is perhaps the biggest single issue facing where I live in southern Alberta. The water for life strategy, championed by my predecessor, Dr. Lorne Taylor, from Cypress-Medicine Hat, has set the stage for addressing Alberta's water challenges. With the new watershed advisory committees I'm very hopeful that good water management will sustain us in southern Alberta long into the future. Quite frankly, water or the lack thereof is the limiting factor for growth. I'm aware of and fully supportive of the needs of our environment as well as our economy.

Innovation and technology are great to talk about. Even if I don't understand most of it – and I'm sure I'm not alone – I believe it must be embraced. As an example, you don't need to show me how the new computers or the BlackBerrys work. I don't need to know that and wouldn't understand anyway. Just show me how to use them, and I'll make them a part of my life. I find it amazing that the things that were considered science fiction not so many years ago are now so commonplace. I often wonder what my grandfather or father would think of things like cellphones and nanotechnology.

Speaking of technology, I'm pleased that our government saw fit to support the Canadian Centre for Unmanned Vehicle Systems, which is located in Medicine Hat in southeast Alberta. The innovation and technology breakthroughs that are coming from our universities and colleges regarding such things as nanotechnology and artificial intelligence will make the companies that now utilize this centre better able to expand their developments, provide the incentives for more companies to locate here, and be the leading edge in world markets in the future.

Mr. Speaker, our population is aging, and it's estimated that a full 25 per cent or more will be seniors by the year 2020. A commitment to build so many affordable housing units and to also be able to offer options for housing is also encouraging. I may need one of those types of units myself in the future. I'm glad we recognize our seniors, the people with disabilities, and those most vulnerable.

I'm also pleased that our government is committed to keeping the RCMP as the official police force for Alberta. At the same time, the implementation of the Alberta sheriff program to supplement is a bonus that is definitely helping improve safety on our highways. I do drive a lot of miles on Alberta highways in a year, and I did speed. I'll admit it. I was strongly encouraged to slow down, and I've done so, and I think I'm a much safer driver now. I set out on each trip just a little earlier.

Mr. Speaker, many will say that we are in the most challenging time of our lives, and I tend to agree. As I look through all we have done and all we have before us to do, I think I can say that we as Albertans still have that spirit that we inherited from our ancestors, and we're up to the task. As my grandfather and my dad used to say when they talked about the Depression of the Dirty Thirties, you just have to tighten up your belt and work hard with a continuity of purpose. Or as in the words of Rudyard Kipling, "If you can fill the unforgiving minute with sixty seconds' worth of distance run, yours is the Earth and everything that's in it."

Thank you, Mr. Premier. Thank you, Alberta. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of question and comment. Would any hon. member like to take that five minutes?

Seeing none, I would like to recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to rise in this House today to offer my response to the Speech from the Throne. As you and this House are aware, this is my second opportunity to listen to a Speech from the Throne delivered by this government. Again, much like the first one, it was chock full of references to this government's past glories, alleged and otherwise, and it at least in rhetoric seemed sure of the wisdom of its present course. In fact, when I left the throne speech yesterday afternoon, I thought for a second that as a member of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition I could take the rest of the session off as once again the Progressive Conservative government has this province firmly going in the right direction, and the past decisions of this government have left this province of Alberta as a modern-day equivalent of Shangri-La.

Now, for those of you who don't know, Shangri-La is a fictional place described in a 1933 novel by James Hilton. In the book Shangri-La is a mystical, harmonious valley gently guided from a lamasery enclosed in the west end of the Kunlun Mountains. Shangri-La has become synonymous with an earthly paradise but particularly a Himalayan utopia, a permanently happy place isolated from the outside world.

To be honest, I left the throne speech a little shaken up. Have I gotten it all wrong? Does this government really have everything under control as indicated in the throne speech? Like a good little student of history I went back over the last number of years to throne speeches in the past, and guess what? I feel better now. I really have not gotten it all wrong. You know why? Those throne speeches were full of the same colourful language, juicy sound bites, and false bravado that this one had.

They contained statements like: Alberta will never go into debt again. Or how about this one: protecting our environment is job one of this government. How about this: we have an exciting plan for health care. That was in the throne speech back when the now-infamous Bill 11 was introduced. That exciting plan was to move Albertans to private health care. After reading those throne speeches, I can only conclude that historically Conservatives' throne speeches are either replete with mere platitudes or that this government does not really follow through on what it lays out at the beginning of the new legislative year.

With this being the case, I took a more critical look at yesterday's throne speech, and now it seems to me more of the same, a bunch of sound bites attempting to hide the fact that the government is unsure of where it has been and equally unsure of where it wants to go. At its core this is a government with no true vision of what Alberta should be and, more importantly, what Alberta could be. It's a government that doesn't appear to have a plan.

Let's just come clean here for a second: we didn't have a plan for the boom. That was and, in fact, has been admitted. Unfortunately, it now appears that with some tough times facing us, it is equally true that we do not have a plan for the bust either. Despite the flowery language in the throne speech Alberta is no Shangri-La, though ironically yesterday's throne speech was a nice piece of fiction.

Let's talk about how Alberta really is. As we are all aware, currently and going back for some time much of Alberta's good fortune is a product of our abundant supply of fossil fuel resources. Truly, this has been manna from heaven. Fossil fuels have allowed us to become a have province since 1947. During the past 10 years no other provincial government has brought in near the per capita revenue stream that Alberta has. This abundance has in turn led to the fact that last year Alberta spent approximately 23 per cent more per capita than Ontario did. Pretty astonishing for the belt-tightening, conservative province we allegedly are.

These statistics highlight how much resource we bring in and then spend. With this spending one would think Albertans could expect that our infrastructure, hospitals, public education system, for example, should be heads and tails above other provinces. Looking at these statistics, we should expect that Alberta would have the lowest wait times in emergency rooms, that we have shown leadership on the environment and made tough decisions on green investments to diversify our economy, that per capita our cities were adequately policed. They would assume that in Alberta no child went to school hungry.

However, that is not the case. Alberta is in the middle of the pack when it comes to hospital wait times. Environmental groups do not applaud us for our vision of protecting our water, forests, or air. Compare Calgary's and Edmonton's policing per capita numbers, and they are dramatically lower than for other large cities in Canada. Estimates are that 70,000 children in Alberta go to school hungry every day. Given all this, it's a fair question for people to ask: are we getting value for our hard-earned tax dollars? I can only say that from my perspective the answer is no. We are spending, but we are not investing.

I am even going to go out on a limb and tell you the reason why. Economists will tell you that economies are cyclical, that economies have a pulse and beat of their own. Sometimes they perform well; sometimes they falter. When economies are performing well, goods, services, labour, and the like are all more expensive. When economies falter, these goods, services, and labour become less expensive. Yes, I remember that from economics 201.

Now, given that this is how things work and given that governments can choose to spend money, that can and does influence these economic cycles, I am of the belief that government should do more of its spending when the economy is not doing well and less of it when it is booming. Call me crazy, but this makes sense. Governments all over the world, in fact our own Conservative government in Ottawa, have now returned to this philosophy.

I hope I won't get any of my right-wing friends in this House too upset by using the term "Keynesian economics," but that's essentially what it is. However, instead of following this basic principle, the Progressive Conservative government in Alberta has insisted on doing things backwards. Time and time again this government spends itself silly in the boom cycle of the economy. Just take a look at our spending over the last five years.

Now, we all know why this happened. The spending was done in a frantic effort to erase the mistake of Klein-era cuts. Where does this leave us now? Well, I guess it leaves us back at the beginning. We are now at a point where we can rectify this spending glitch. If I were in this government, I would try to do more of my spending when the economic cycle called for prudent investment and spend less when the economy was performing well and costs were high. Like all things this current economic situation will pass. However, what I am hoping has also passed is this government's haphazard manner of spending money at the wrong times in economic cycles.

In other words, like Keynesians say, government should spend money when necessary and save money when times are good.

Please do not interpret what I just said as a licence to simply go throw money around willy-nilly in this current downturn. As noted, we already spend 23 per cent more per capita than Ontario. I am not suggesting that we need to increase this, but here's what I am saying: given these economic times, we may find Albertans looking for work, and if this turns out to be the case, this gives us possible opportunities. We can do some things if this government shows some leadership.

Just as an example, we could bolster our long-term economic health by keeping more of our oil and gas wealth here at home. Right now we ship countless tonnes of unprocessed bitumen to the United States for upgrading. We could add thousands of well-paying jobs to our economy by building more upgraders here in Alberta and selling upgraded oil rather than raw bitumen. This brings more money to Alberta, money we can use to upgrade our infrastructure, improve public programs, and keep taxes low. The second thing I think is important is that we build more upgraders in Alberta.

As a general manner of course we have to do better on our green economy. We can do this by building more wind farms, capturing carbon, creating new building codes, requiring environmentally friendly office towers and factories, investing in public transit, and creating opportunities for every citizen and industry to reduce, reuse, and recycle. Alberta is home to some of the world's most brilliant entrepreneurs and corporations. We could make a fortune on green technology. Better yet, if we invest in green technology and become leaders in this field, we can export that technology to the world, enhancing our prosperity, protecting our environment, and creating jobs at the same time.

The third priority in my eyes if those opportunities are created is to possibly speed up our 10-year plan to end homelessness. Albertans need homes, tradespeople need work, and there's no time like the present to deliver on our commitment to end homelessness here in Alberta.

As time is short and I've gone on far too long already, I'd like to add that now also may be the time to bolster our police forces. Currently when we crunch the numbers, our cities' police forces are not adequately staffed. Edmonton and Calgary are in the middle of a gang war. Organized crime is active and thriving in our province. One way we can fight this is by acknowledging the fact that Alberta's major cities are just that: major cities. We need well-supported police forces large enough to address this reality. Our citizens deserve adequately funded police services, and they deserve safe communities.

These would be my priorities. I think they're priorities for many Albertans who simply want jobs, good health care, a place to call home, a healthy environment, and an assurance that their tax dollars are being invested wisely. Call it a common-sense Shangri-La.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's always my great honour to represent my constituency of Calgary-Fort. Today it is my great pleasure to rise and respond to the Speech from the Throne given by His Honour the Lieutenant Governor. Facing the Future with Confidence was the theme in the speech that His Honour delivered, and it is truly confidence that will help us persevere through this uncertain economic time.

My constituency of Calgary-Fort is made up of hard-working citizens. Many of them are my neighbours and friends. A number of them have living and working experiences in many parts of the world. My constituents, like every one of us, strive to have a place to call their home, to make their living, and to raise their family. We all want a safe and prosperous Alberta.

The large Calgary Foothills industrial park in my constituency is the home of many businesses and manufacturers. They have been helping to create wealth for Albertan workers and for the public coffers through their products and services, which are for Canadian consumption and many export markets. Like all Albertans they are most concerned with the current state of the global economy. I know they fear for their job stability and worry about the well-being of their family and about what the future holds.

Calgary-Fort is an industrious and diverse community that will benefit from the public investment that the province is continuing to make in Albertans now and for the future. As with all the communities across the province it will benefit from the investments in infrastructure, education, health care, and most of all from the investment in safe communities. By showing our government's leadership and confidence during this global economic downturn cycle, my constituents will be able to take full advantage of the investments being made in them by the province.

My constituents need assistance in job transition and retraining. My business constituents need supporting measures for their problems with cash flow and credit availability. I'm very pleased that our government pays attention to and invests in this area. This investment will lead us through the challenging times and launch us in the coming cycle of growth.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta has faced many hardships in the past and has always persevered and come out stronger than before. I have confidence that we will once again rise above today's challenges and be triumphant because we Albertans have the freedom to create and the spirit to achieve. The Alberta government has a comprehensive plan that will lead us through this challenging time and will continue to make our Alberta the best place to live and work, a place of hopes and dreams.

It is important that we continue to invest in our province. A key investment being made is in new technologies and research and development projects. Research and development attracts talent and investment in our province, helping us to become a leader on the world stage. I'm excited to see new ideas and new discoveries that will be found in places such as the Calgary University Research Park, where I had the privilege of working for a number of years, and the Edmonton Research Park just south of here.

Businesses conduct advanced research in every field, such as medicine technology, biotechnology, telecommunications, software, and petroleum. By continued investment in research and new technology, we are protecting Albertans and also preparing our launch into the next growth of the economic cycle.

Mr. Speaker, as we move forward, we need to act with what I call the 4-E principle: acting in an ethical, economical, efficient, and effective manner. Within this 4-E principle is a need to invest in a way that achieves a big bang for the public buck, the need to do what is right for our citizens, and the need to build and invest in a responsible way.

I applaud the investments that have been outlined in the Speech from the Throne. One investment that particularly stands out to me, Mr. Speaker, is the government's commitment to military reservists. The Canadian Legion plays a large role in the Calgary-Fort constituency. Many reservists call Calgary-Fort their home. I have built a close relationship with the veterans and current reservists and cadets. I respect and admire their dedication to the security of our country and of our province. In the past I have made suggestions for some ideas to honour and appreciate our military men and women, such as naming the Alberta veterans highway, creating scholarships for cadets, and accepting training and skills in the military as equivalent qualifications in civilian jobs.

I'm very pleased that the government is taking initiatives along this line. Bill 1, introduced this spring, will amend the employment standards act, protecting the jobs of those who serve our country. With this the government will be recognizing the invaluable contribution that Canadian military reservists make to ensure Canadian security at home and abroad. It will ensure that reservists who work in Alberta will be able to return to their prior employer upon return from their deployment. With this bill the government is showing respect for these reservists and their families, and they duly deserve that. Like all Albertans they are most concerned with the state of the economy as well.

I have been very passionate about the cause of reservists for many years as they are true heroes. They leave their families behind to defend our freedoms and help to make the world a better place. By providing job security, we can help the transition back to civilian life and provide peace of mind for the reservists and their families.

Mr. Speaker, it's my great honour to be here today responding to the Speech from the Throne. I believe that the government has outlined a plan that will help this province and all Albertans to cope with the current uncertainty and launch ourselves in the next growth economic cycle. I look forward to the implementation of the government plan ensuring Alberta's continued success and a productive spring session. Let's work together, making Alberta a place ample with freedom to create and a strong spirit to achieve. That is Fortis et Liber.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

I'll recognize, then, the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Whether I consider yesterday's throne speech from my point of view as the grateful husband of Heather, my very tolerant, hard-working, loving, and supporting wife of 40 years; whether from our shared roles as parents of an incredible daughter, Christina, and backed by her extremely devoted, hard-working husband, Vivek, both of whom are in turn very fortunate to have the support of his caring parents, Sothi and Achu, which all together provide Christina the luxury of being able to choose to stay at home to raise our two incredible preschool grandsons, Kiran and Rohan, upon whom the Alberta sun rises and sets, a fact to which my father, Bryce, will attest to any and all interested parties; whether I view the throne speech from the dutiful perspective of the twice-elected Member of the Legislative Assembly representing Calgary-Varsity, which is home to a large number of seniors, students, AISH recipients, persons with disabilities either physical or intellectual, their aging parents or care providers struggling to keep their home or a high-rented roof over their heads, who are the first to feel the recessionary effects; whether in my role as the official Alberta provincial opposition critic for Education, Children and Youth Services, and Tourism, Parks and Recreation; as a five-year member of the Public Accounts committee; or in my more recent role as a member of the all-party Standing Committee on Community Services, I am disappointed with the thin gruel the throne speech contains and the more sustaining meaty chunks that it is missing.

The throne speech is the latest in a long line of missed opportunities by a passive, noninterventionist government without a plan which has squandered its opportunity to govern a province rich in both human and natural resources. Some members of this government have watched from the sidelines. Others have aimlessly ridden the boom and bust roller coaster that has twice rolled over this province within their 38-year governance mandate. With the first economic downturn of the 1980s the Alberta government's excuse or scapegoat was the national energy policy, which was not only vilified as being responsible for lost jobs in Alberta, but it was apparently also the sole cause for sky-high mortgage rates across Canada and hitherto inexplicable global misfortunes. After more than 25 years of dragging this skeletal blame from under the bed as the cause for everything that ails Alberta from the past to the present, it is time for this government to bury the bones and look into the mirror for more localized explanations of our current conundrum, explanations which were as absent from yesterday's throne speech as were solutions.

This government's backpedalling prowess, its denial of fiscal reality, its ongoing inability to sustainably manage both Alberta's renewable and nonrenewable resources, its attempts to cover up or divert attention from its failures are rapidly losing the confidence of the majority of Albertans: 79 per cent of eligible voters rejected the March 3 menu that this government was offering. That massive March 3, 2008, rejection occurred when times were good for the majority of Albertans, when the government's apparent challenge was how fast it could spend the $147 a barrel that each of millions of barrels of oil was bringing in.

The 1980s bumper sticker "Please, God, if I get another oil boom, I promise not . . ." was a faded memory although the NEP sticker of the same period dusted off by Alberta's Premier was sufficient to scare the remaining 21 per cent of eligible voters with Tory-blue blood flowing through their veins to give him an amazing majority in the form of 72 seats this past March. I wonder how many of those individuals, many of which now find themselves unemployed for either the first or the second bust time, were impressed by what they saw on their TVs yesterday as they sat at home contemplating how this throne speech would improve their re-employment chances. They were probably also wondering whether, if they were eligible for employment insurance, it would tide them over for the next two months while the Alberta government holds them ransom by withholding the budget.

It is said that if we don't learn from our historical mistakes, we are doomed to repeat them. The fact that this government adopted the concept of creating the Liberal stability fund, which they renamed the sustainability fund, will with its $6 billion and change buy both itself and Albertans a little time.

Unfortunately, other Alberta provincial Liberal plans, which included inflation-proofing the heritage savings trust fund, Peter Lougheed's marvellous invention, were ignored by this government. Instead of building up the fund when times were good, especially when we experienced surpluses, which has been the case for the past 15 years, this government drew down the account. This government made poor investments. This government decreed that only one-third of surplus dollars would go to the fund.

Had this government heeded the advice of contributing to the fund annually when the Liberals recommended setting aside the equivalent of 10 per cent of all oil and gas revenue, not just one-third of the surplus, the fund would have grown to the point where interest alone would have replaced our financial dependence on nonrenewable traditional oil and gas revenue. Another 10 per cent of oil and gas revenue set aside as we recommended would have established a postsecondary endowment fund to promote intellectual research, leading in part to much-needed economic diversification. The remaining 10 per cent of oil and gas revenue, if set aside as recommended, could have established a fund to catch up on deferred infrastructure projects and create a sustainable endowment fund for promoting arts and culture.

These Alberta Liberal fiscal strategies, unfortunately, were ignored by this government, who as recently as last fall believed that Alberta was insulated from the global recession. My esteemed colleague the Member for Edmonton-Riverview, the past leader of the Alberta provincial Liberal Party, who received his doctorate in economics, foresaw the signs of a potential economic downfall more than a year ago. Realizing that a more dramatic savings plan was needed, he suggested that a full 30 per cent of all oil and gas revenue be dedicated to the heritage trust fund. The government rejected his foresight, as it has previous Liberal fiscal and democratic recommendations.

While hindsight is 20/20, foresight is considerably more challenging. The first step in overcoming a problem begins with the admission that you have one. There is no doubt that Alberta has problems. Currently 40 per cent of Albertans are considered functionally illiterate. A fall 2008 Statistics Canada figure revealed that over 77,000 Alberta children were living below the poverty line. Given our current recession, unless the government intervenes quickly and efficiently, that number of vulnerable children will grow dramatically. Last year 19,000 women, many with children, sought refuge from abusive relationships but were turned away from women's shelters in Alberta. With the additional pressures of recession family stress will grow.

Last year this government ignored the plea from Inn from the Cold organization, which supports homeless families, for funding its downtown shelter. The primary reason for rejection was the proposed location although the government offered no other alternatives or support. The Inn from the Cold asked for a $3 million government grant, which at that time was turned down. Fortunately, an anonymous philanthropist provided an interest-free loan, which means fewer families will have to move from church basement to church basement each night.

If this government is serious about a sustainable future, then it needs to start by protecting children, reducing poverty, and increasing educational opportunities. Currently programs like Breakfast for Learning, which receives no government funding, and Meals on Wheels, which through its duck soup program provides lunches for a very few fortunate schools and receives limited funding, are trying to bridge the crevasse left by this government's inaction. Due to the Calgary community's generosity and credit Breakfast for Learning reaches 50,000 disadvantaged Calgary children each year.

Despite continuing to be Canada's wealthiest province per capita, based primarily on our nonrenewable resources rather than government economic stewardship, one-third to one-quarter of high school students drop out with very costly results. One-quarter of eligible Alberta university students who have the required grades and can afford the inflated tuition are turned away due to lack of space. The government must begin to view education as a preventative measure, as a proactive investment, rather than as a fiscal liability. The best way to start is by establishing programs which identify children with learning disabilities before they arrive at school. The government has yet to live up to its Learning Commission's recommendations to fund optional full-day kindergarten or half-day junior kindergarten for children at risk. If the government is serious about addressing the dropout problem in high school, then it needs to take proactive preschool measures.

Putting a greater emphasis on not only protecting but nurturing children would reap tremendous benefits in the future. Currently front-line children and youth workers are struggling under unmanageable caseloads. The recent deaths of two young children in the custody of the province tragically testify to the province's failure to protect children, to support families, whether birth or through fostering. Children's caregivers, especially those looking after children with disabilities, are particularly vulnerable. The worth, the strength of a government is based on how well it protects the most vulnerable, which include children, seniors, and the disabled. The plight of the most vulnerable Albertans was again not addressed by this throne speech. Albertans deserve better. It is our elected duty to deliver.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Then the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, and after that I'll recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour to rise today on behalf of the constituents of Edmonton-Calder to address this Assembly in response to the Speech from the Throne. When I learned last March that I was the MLA for Edmonton-Calder, I knew this government was going to do great things for the people of Alberta, and I wanted to be part of that greatness. Indeed, it seems that people in Atlantic Canada want to be part of it as well.

Mr. Speaker, I am a man of my constituency with roots that go back to my time in high school. Having most recently lived there for nearly a decade, my constituents appreciate that being a resident of Calder makes the issues personal and close to home. I take these issues very personally, and I am proud to know that our government and our Premier do as well. I would like to thank the hon. Premier for introducing Bill 1 into the House this session. It is a bill that is extremely important to the members of the Loyal Edmonton Regiment. The Loyal Eddies are an integral part of Edmonton-Calder constituency and deserve the protection of Bill 1.

I find reassurance in the fortunate position that Alberta has in the global economy. Prudent fiscal management has allowed our province to be debt free. This has permitted the government to set aside over $7 billion in the sustainability fund. No other jurisdiction has actually done what Alberta has. Even though the market growth has slowed, we are better off here than in provinces with deficits, debts, and unsustainable programs. I feel confident in this government's ability to convert long-term savings into long-term growth. It will ensure that our position in the global economy remains unscathed and will create opportunities when Albertans need them most.

Mr. Speaker, this plan will allow Alberta to continue to build our communities responsibly. Maintaining Alberta's infrastructure and strategically building new projects will strengthen the connections in and outside of each community. Edmonton-Calder is the centre for rail, air, and road transportation in the Edmonton area. We like the sounds of propellers, locomotives, and trucks because if these sounds are missing in Calder, everyone is in trouble. This government's vision and commitment to infrastructure will keep the planes, trains, and automobiles of Edmonton-Calder busy moving the goods and services that everyone needs.

The expansion of the Anthony Henday is an exciting development not only for my constituency but all of Alberta. Strategic building like this has led to the creation of another major artery in Edmonton. Dispersing traffic over several major arteries will increase the safety of all Albertans on the roads. As a long-time member of the Canadian Society of Safety Engineering I value the importance of safety on the roads, in the household, and in the workplace.

As a government it is our job to ensure the safety of Albertans. By committing to increase Edmonton's police force by 300 officers over the next three years, we have proven that safety is a fundamental priority in our communities. Crime prevention is also an important aspect of this commitment. It is crucial that we keep gangs off our streets, ensuring the safety of our honest, hard-working Albertans.

By creating spaces for addiction and recovery services, we can help to improve the lives of those affected by drugs and alcohol. Several months ago I attended a meeting in the Sherbrooke community hall. Residents of the Sherbrooke community were concerned about the George Spady Centre opening a recovery house to give people with a troubled past a safe place to stay while preparing to enter the rehabilitation process. I attended this meeting out of concern for both parties.

At the end of the evening the George Spady Centre was welcomed by the community because the residents saw that the folks who were in that centre needed a safe place to live. They saw that they needed a hand up and that they needed a place to be where they would not be punished just for being different. Mr. Speaker, I saw the true compassion of my constituents that night. Ensuring the safety of every member of the community, not only for themselves, was a huge step forward for the folks in Sherbrooke.

This unconditional support is something that our government does for Albertans and is something that we must continue to do: to provide a safety net and support for each person in our province no matter how big or how small. In Edmonton-Calder one of the largest groups in need of this particular support is seniors. As the demographic of Alberta changes, there will be more seniors in need of support from this government. Seniors are a vital part of this province, and it is crucial that we continue to care for them by creating legislation and policies that will improve their standard of living.

The drug program benefit act is an example of a way that the province can provide continuing support to lower income seniors, and I know that many of the seniors in my constituency are particularly grateful for the support of this program. I have told the seniors in Edmonton-Calder's five major centres – Shepherd's Care, Rosslyn lodge, Venta Care, Extencicare, and Rosedale – that this province is fighting for their interests and, Mr. Speaker, I am fighting for the interests of Edmonton-Calder seniors.

We're all fighting for the strength of this province to improve the quality of life for those living here. While the current uncertainty in the global markets challenges us, it does not threaten us. Our province has always been a global leader in developing industry, and today is no different. This government is committed to continuing to build industry and provide jobs for Albertans. Nothing will change. We continue to be a major player in the world market.

As a member of both the Forest Industry Sustainability Committee and the Alberta Forestry Research Institute I know that there will continue to be challenges in Alberta's forestry sector. I was very sad to learn this week, Mr. Speaker, that my former employer, Millar Western Forest Products, the largest Alberta-owned forest products company, had been forced to reduce shifts in both of its facilities. This decision had to do with market demand, I might add. The forestry sector in Alberta is in trouble and must now face the challenge of constantly reinventing itself.

From nanotechnology to the development of modular floor materials for Sea-Cans, development is progressing. So from those things that are very, very small to those things that are very, very large, we must never forget that lumber is still the only building material that grows back. As this industry continues to advance, I am proud to say that this government will continue to find new ways to reduce its footprint on the environment. Carbon capture is an incredible technology developed just to do this. We need to continue to ensure that future Albertans are left with the same rich, resourceful, and beautiful province that we have today.

Our advancing industries entice hard-working people to move to Alberta, and this is something we can continually be thankful for, but as our province grows, we must continue to ensure that services are provided to Albertans. We must continue to increase the accessibility of health care, education, affordable housing, and other vital needs and services. This year has seen a lot of change in the structure of Alberta Health, and these changes were designed to increase the accessibility of health care for all Albertans. The elimination of health care premiums is an example of the commitment to increased accessibility.

The same is true of education. Alberta's schools and postsecondary institutions are amongst the best in North America, and Edmonton-Calder is home to a great many schools. Particularly, we're proud of NAIT. NAIT is a remarkable institution that teaches people to succeed in industry and in the trades. By ensuring that postsecondary education remains affordable, we can be confident that future generations will take advantage of the opportunities. We can be assured that students will get the best education possible and will utilize this to become the future leaders of our province.

Another area we must strive to maintain affordability and accessibility to is housing. As a member of the capital region I'm well aware of the growing pressures of urban sprawl and the increasing costs of living in the city. Affordable housing is an issue that the people of Edmonton-Calder are quite familiar with, and I am proud to say that our government is continually providing additional living spaces for those who cannot afford a home of their own and providing means for Albertans who aspire to home ownership.

Now more than ever we must continue to work together to provide the support and the strength that the people of Alberta need. Having learned to play and work as a member of a team for my entire life, I value strength in numbers and the strength of unity. The strength of unity has always guided Alberta through uncertain times, and it will continue to do so today.

On behalf of my constituency I trust my elected peers to be fair and honourable stewards of the public purse, to take action to help and to protect those in need of our assistance, and to continue to make Alberta the most desirable place to live in Canada.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. member, then, for Calgary-Egmont.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my sincere privilege to rise today to respond to the Speech from the Throne, delivered by His Honour the Lieutenant Governor of Alberta.

Like many others I am an immigrant but from another province. Many times when I meet people, one of my first questions is where they came from. The fact that so many people have moved to our province of their own choice and volition and want to be here makes for a very incredibly positive environment. This is not a new development in my generation, Mr. Speaker. From our earliest history individuals have banded together to work for common goals to help those in need and to stand together to preserve and improve upon the safety and the well-being of others.

Mr. Speaker, I believe the historic success of this great province of ours can be attributed to many factors, an important one being the strength and courage of our people and another being our commitment to sound financial management, that this government clearly follows. This management has enabled us to eliminate health care premiums, which will save Albertans over $1 billion annually starting on January 1 of this year. This step was taken long before the global economic downturn began. Many other jurisdictions are going into debt with infrastructure stimulus packages, but fortunately we have more than $6 billion in our capital account for this purpose.

Moving to another topic, Mr. Speaker, I'm also encouraged that the throne speech was not silent on seniors, many of whom live in my constituency of Calgary-Egmont. The Protection for Persons in Care Amendment Act will be introduced this session with the goal of better protecting our seniors from elder abuse, which sadly often comes from members of the senior's own family. As someone with grandparents aged 91 and 92 living in Calgary, I recognize the importance of this legislation for our seniors.

Mr. Speaker, I must also mention Bill 1, the Employment Standards (Reservist Leave) Amendment Act, 2009, which will provide job-protected leave for military reservists in Alberta. My father served in the military. I know the sacrifice that our servicemen and -women make for our country, and I'm proud to support our troops through this initiative.

Mr. Speaker, I've addressed several issues briefly, but now we should talk about a particular threat facing Calgary-Egmont and, in fact, all of our province, that being crime. My constituency includes several inner-city communities as well as some suburban areas. I first moved to this constituency when I came to Alberta, and I often remember my first day there; it was May 29. It's a great area in which many people were shocked by three murders on New Year's Day not too far from where I live. Far from the downtown core, it was on 94th Avenue.

Crime and, in particular, gang violence is not an issue localized to the downtown core or to particular neighbourhoods, Mr. Speaker. It affects every one of us regardless of our gender, race, colour, creed, religion, socioeconomic status, the location of our residence, or any other personal factor we may have. Make no mistake: gang violence in particular poses a serious threat today. Gangs operate in an atmosphere of violence and intimidation and are a stain on the fabric of this great province of ours.

Even if you are not a direct victim of crime, I ask you, Mr. Speaker, to consider the cost to society. Consider the cost of fraud to businesses that is passed on to consumers through higher prices, fees, or interest rates. Consider the danger gang violence poses to police and others. Consider the pressure all crime places on our court systems. Consider that it is our tax dollars that fund these operations. This simply cannot be allowed to get out of control. I put to this Assembly that people who have nothing but disregard for law and order in our society simply belong behind bars. Last night I was speaking to a Member of Parliament in Ottawa, and I'm pleased that this message also resonates there as well.

I have nothing but the utmost respect for our police services in this province. In fact, I'm friends with several of them in Calgary. Along these lines I'm happy to see our continued commitment to enforcement. Last year this government announced a province-wide increase of 300 police officers, many of whom were directly assigned to the role of targeting gang activity. Since police officers are on the front lines defending our communities from crime, funding and supporting them is the greatest step we can do to combat gang activity in our province. I applaud this government's previous actions for targeting crime and commend its forward-thinking and modern strategy to continue commitment to safe, strong, and secure communities, Mr. Speaker.

But there is more to be done now and in the future. There is another equation upon how we must work as a government, and that's tackling the financial proceeds of crime. During the previous session, Mr. Speaker, I was proud to support Bill 50, the Victims Restitution and Compensation Payment Act. This piece of legislation was specifically crafted to hit criminals where it hurts, in their wallets. Bill 50 now allows courts to seize and sell any property or asset that was used during the crime, including items such as vehicles, cash, or even houses, the proceeds of which go to the victims of crime fund. By targeting the things that criminals value most, the impetus for most crime being money, we are sending a clear message that criminals and criminal behaviour will not be tolerated in our communities.

In this way, Mr. Speaker, I find it most uplifting that in the Lieutenant Governor's speech is the continued commitment that this government has to preserving the safety of our society. Along these lines I look forward to the opportunity to support further legislation aimed at halting gang activity, including forthcoming amendments to the Gaming and Liquor Act as well as regulations assessing vehicle modifications made primarily for gang-related purposes such as bulletproof windows on a car.

It is almost impossible, Mr. Speaker, to talk about crime without mentioning the illegal drug trade, and I recognize that the purchase of illegal drugs fuels crime and that the fewer people who consume these substances, the less money is in the hands of organized crime. That's why as a member of this Assembly I'm proud to support the Alberta Adolescent Recovery Centre, located in Calgary-Egmont, where I have attended. I also know there are other supporters here. I saw the Member for Calgary-Glenmore there this summer as well as the previous Member for Calgary-Egmont, Mr. Denis Herard, who introduced me to the centre. This centre has graduated over 400 people that have suffered from substance abuse addictions. Along these lines it is noteworthy that the safe communities initiative includes support for programs for addiction recovery projects, something that goes hand in hand with crime.

Mr. Speaker, we must also not forget that it's not just today's people who benefit from getting a handle on crime in our province. This came to mind last Friday, when I had the pleasurable occasion to speak to Ms Dawn McGuckin's grade 6 class at St. Matthew school in Calgary-Egmont. By getting a handle on crime, it hit me that this generation will also benefit.

Mr. Speaker, I built my dream in Alberta, and I often think of what a privilege it is to be an Albertan and a member of this Assembly. As His Honour said yesterday, "We must continue to welcome people to Alberta to pursue their dreams and build our communities." My vision of this province is one where future generations can walk the same streets today in pride and free from fear. I know our government shares this vision, and I'm pleased to support this throne speech.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To my hon. colleague. It's been nearly a year since you've been elected. What one insight of humanity would you say that you have really uncovered in this past year?

Mr. Denis: That's quite a broad question. I want to thank the Member for Calgary-Montrose. One thing that I've realized is how much this Assembly and everything we do, regardless of our partisan affiliation, actually affects people outside this Chamber, whether or not they know or appreciate it. All of us regardless of our partisan stripes should realize just the gravity of our actions in this province.

The Speaker: Additional questions? Participants?

Then the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great honour to rise today on behalf of the constituents of Bonnyville-Cold Lake to address this Assembly in response to the Speech from the Throne. This past year the government has been working very hard to meet the needs of Albertans, and I've been working very hard to ensure that the constituents of Bonnyville-Cold Lake remain a priority of this government.

For the last three decades I've called my constituency home. I raised two children there. I helped raise other people's children there. As a former teacher in Bonnyville I know that it truly takes a village to raise a child, and in this case it takes a province. It takes a province to provide the services that each resident is in need of, it takes a province to encourage the growth and development of its population, and it takes a province to provide opportunities for all. Mr. Speaker, this government has done all of these things for Albertans, and it's imperative that it continue to do so.

I can identify the issues that are of concern to my constituents, and I'm confident that our government is able to make these concerns a priority. The uncertainty of the global economy is not only a concern for the people of my constituency but for all Albertans. It is my hope that this government's action plan will act to preserve the state of industry and help to continue to experience growth in and outside the province.

Mr. Speaker, my constituency is a major hub of industry in Alberta. There are major oil production facilities in Bonnyville-Cold Lake: Shell, Husky, CNRL, EnCana, Imperial Oil, and Devon. It is home to an overwhelming majority of workers from these companies. In my constituency we count on industry, and industry counts on us. It is a codependent relationship of growth, and this relationship is crucial to the future development of Bonnyville-Cold Lake. The major issue that gravely affects my constituency is how this industry is affecting our land, the land that farmers need to grow our food and herd our cattle, the land that farmers need to provide for their families and ours. I am glad that we are taking the necessary steps forward to protect and maintain the family farm.

As a rural population the people of Bonnyville-Cold Lake rely on these resources to generate revenues, revenues that we can put back into the constituency to provide the services that our residents need each day. We need industry, but we do not want to see our beautiful landscape fade away. I am confident that this government has taken these interests to heart and will continue.

Over the last few years government has developed several ways of reducing our impact on the environment. Carbon capture technology is the most dominant. Through my position as co-chair of the Alberta Energy Research Institute I believe that research is a very important part of this progress. It is needed to develop new and innovative ways to not only extract resources but to reduce the impact of this extraction on our environment. This preservation of land is a fundamental priority for the people of my constituency and for all Albertans. It is important for us to give future generations an opportunity to experience the beauty of Alberta. Mr. Speaker, opportunity is something we value tremendously in this province. It's something that we are very fortunate to have a lot of. It attracts people from all over the world who are in search of a better quality of life.

The First Nations and Métis settlements in Bonnyville-Cold Lake are in need of this opportunity. A few months ago two constituents approached me about supporting a business proposal that they had created for their community. They wanted to start up an agency that would train First Nation and Métis people in Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

They would help them develop the skills necessary to become more active in the Alberta workforce. Mr. Speaker, it was an incredible idea. It would give this community a means to take advantage of the opportunities available to them. It's ideas like this that make Alberta unique. This government has always been there to provide support and encourage growth within our community, and it must continue.

In Bonnyville-Cold Lake another group that needs our support is the seniors. They make up a large part of our constituency. A few weeks ago the hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports came to visit the Cold Lake seniors. They were so appreciative of this opportunity to express their thoughts and concerns to the hon. minister. Providing seniors with the attention and care they need makes a world of difference to them. This government is committed to meet the needs of our province's seniors by improving quality and choice in a continuing care system.

We must also increase accessibility to essential services like health care for this growing part of our population. As a rural area we need to forge better connection between our residents and major care facilities like hospitals. This can be done by enhancing the emergency medical service in rural areas, which our government plans to do. There are two hospitals in my area, one in Bonnyville and one in Cold Lake. My constituents need to be able to get to one of them quickly in a life-or-death situation. We also have a problem with retention and recruitment of medical staff. It's imperative that we continue to improve the connection between our population and the services they need. Accessibility for all Albertans needs to be a major initiative of this government.

As a teacher for over three decades I know that our educational system requires this very same accessibility. Creating dialogue between students and teachers and parents will help to do this. It'll give kids the same opportunity that I had to receive a great education. The great education will help them establish a clear direction in life, inspire each student to meet their full potential. With increasing innovations in education, more doors are opening up for students to take advantage of. For this I applaud our education system. It is my hope that this province and government will continue to support students by providing this opportunity and choice to them.

Mr. Speaker, all of these groups – seniors, students, industry workers, farmers, Métis, First Nation people, and many others – are part of my constituency, my community. It is a home to many diverse groups of people with different cultural backgrounds: French, Ukrainian, First Nations, Métis. As a woman of Ukrainian ancestry I believe that culture is a huge part of who you are and how you interact with others. It is important for our government to foster this culture through participation in events like Arts Days. These events bring communities together to create strong, vibrant municipalities, and these sustainable municipalities are needed to create strong, vibrant communities.

Cold Lake is experiencing difficulties maintaining its sustainability. It is such a diverse population in need of different services and support from this government. I'm committed to improving this sustainability because communities like Cold Lake are everything to Albertans. My community is everything to me, and I will continue to fight for it in any way that I can to ensure that their needs are being met each and every day, to ensure that they have every opportunity available to them.

Mr. Speaker, this government, this province, is a part of a community, and when this community is challenged, we must stick together to ensure stability, growth, and sustainability.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Are there additional participants this afternoon?

If not, I'll recognize the hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What an inspiring first day of great debate in this House on many, many valuable points that we should all reflect on. That having been said, I would move that the Assembly now stand adjourned until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:54 p.m. to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Give to each member of this Legislature a strong and abiding sense of the great responsibilities laid upon us. Give us a deep and thorough understanding of the needs of the people we serve. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance and Enterprise.

Ms Evans: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. What a thrill it is today to introduce two French immersion classes from Campbelltown elementary school, which in fact is the first elementary school that was erected in Sherwood Park, in my constituency. The enthusiastic students today and visitors, including four parents, number 38. Thirty-eight are here with us. Teachers Annick Jean and Tandy Wilson are accompanied by four ladies, four moms, along with the class: Jennifer Kennett, Sandra Prior, Tanja Nelson, Sharon Midbo, and the wonderful students of Campbelltown elementary. What a bright class they are. I'd ask them to please rise so that we can show them the proper salute of the Legislative Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to introduce to you and through you five postsecondary students from right here in Edmonton, four from Grant MacEwan and one from the University of Alberta. Their names are Laura Young, Timothy Smith, Jacquie Lycka, Daniel Larson, and Jon Mastel. They were gracious enough to join us for lunch and really had a lot of questions on what we're doing in Alberta around the environment and greening our economy. I'd really like to have them welcomed here with the traditional warm welcome from this House. Rise, guys.

Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: The hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Oil Sands Development Strategy

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise and advise the Assembly that the government today announced a bold and visionary plan to guide the future development of the Alberta oil sands regions. The release of Responsible Actions: A Plan for Alberta's Oil Sands represents a significant milestone in achieving a comprehensive and co-ordinated approach in the continued development of this world-class resource. It is a part of a province-wide public policy framework that supports our plan for a growing and greener economy built around the Premier's commitment to deliver safe and livable communities for families and clear and realistic regulations for industry.

This vision looks ahead 20 years while taking into account the environmental, social, and economic impacts and opportunities of the oil sands. It reflects increased co-ordination across all levels of government and with stakeholders and signals enhanced accountability in the management of this resource. Our strategy will work towards improving the quality of life of our oil sands communities and encourage innovation in science and technology. It will strengthen environmental stewardship and foster relationships with community organizations and the aboriginal communities.

Mr. Speaker, this strategy builds on the continuous efforts undertaken since development first commenced in the oil sands regions. It recognizes that, certainly, just like the challenges of development were very different 30 years ago, factors impacting development may change considerably in the years and decades ahead. This is a clear and realistic road map to the future. It will guide us in optimizing economic growth while reducing environmental impacts. It will increase co-ordination across all levels of government and stakeholders in developing this resource responsibly and enhance accountability. It will foster innovations that can solve the unique challenges of the oil sands development, and it will continue this government's emphasis on planning in high-growth communities in the oil sands regions.

With these improvements in mind we recognize that no major source of energy today comes without consequences. Our goal must be nothing less than to partner with our customers in meeting their energy needs while honouring our mutual commitment to protect our environment for future generations. I don't suggest that it will be easy. There will be some who will oppose this way forward, but we have faith in Albertans. The people of this province have faced together many challenges over the past century, and through tough times Albertans have learned the value of self-reliance, hard work, the need to plan and prepare for the future, and above all what it means to stand together.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to offer my thanks to everyone who worked on this plan for their efforts on behalf of Albertans. I am confident that through these responsible actions we can position our province for success in developing this unique resource, making the foundation for a prosperous and sustainable future.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My pleasure to rise to the ministerial statement and acknowledge that this is the industry of the province. It's been the engine of our development. It has been an important part of the history and even the culture of Alberta. It has been one of the most controversial energy sources since I became a member of this Legislature.

Clearly, we have to learn from the past 50 years that the lack of planning has had a tremendous impact not only on this province and on this country but on this industry's reputation internationally. A plan is always welcome. A plan should have clear objectives, clear timelines, a clear budget, a clear set of outcomes. How else can we evaluate what a plan is to achieve?

Albertans have sought and demanded management of their oil sands. Former Premier Peter Lougheed has weighed in on the issue repeatedly over the last decade asking for leadership, asking for a plan, asking to include the social, the environmental, as well as the economic issues. We don't yet see a plan here, Mr. Speaker, and Albertans are reminded of the 1999 document through SREM that sounded awfully similar. So we yet wait in hope of seeing a concrete plan of action that respects First Nations issues, long-term water needs in the area, a commitment to climate change globally, and a different way of developing energy in this province. The industry itself waits in hope of seeing their reputation restored by a more sustainable and thoughtfully paced development in the oil sands.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, I suspect you'll be requesting an opportunity for your colleague to participate in this ministerial statement.

Ms Notley: That is absolutely correct.

The Speaker: That would require unanimous consent, so I'll ask just one question. Does any member object to providing an opportunity to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood to participate?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you also to members of the Assembly. The strategy document, Responsible Actions: A Plan for Alberta's Oil Sands, that was released this morning by the hon. President of the Treasury Board is thin gruel indeed. Contrary to what the minister has told the House, I believe that this document is neither bold nor visionary. In fact, it represents more business as usual from this government.

There are six strategies identified at the beginning of the document, and I'd like to address some of them because I think it is a case of attempting to close the barn door after a number of horses have already escaped. First of all, the document talks about the development of the tar sands in an environmentally responsible way. It's a bit late for that, Mr. Speaker, given the government's rejection of hard caps on CO₂ and their failure to clean up the tailings ponds. The second one talks about healthy communities. Tent cities and cancer in Fort Chipewyan do not represent healthy communities. Number 4, proactive aboriginal consultation, is another horse that has left the barn. There are broken relationships with aboriginal groups, and their concerns around their own health have been ignored. Finally, it talks about developing long-term value for our resources. This flies in the face of the government's policy with respect to the export of unprocessed bitumen from this province and the job losses that it entails.

Mr. Speaker, we have called for a long time for a comprehensive plan for the development of the tar sands. This document, in fact, does not represent that type of plan and represents, as I said, simply more business as usual. Nothing has changed, and nothing will.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, you rose just as the Clerk rose.

Mr. Boutilier: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to ask for unanimous consent to be able to speak also, as a member who calls Fort McMurray his home, about the oil sands strategy as a member's statement.

The Speaker: Hon. member, this would require unanimous consent of the Assembly. I'll ask the question. Is there any member who would object to providing the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo an opportunity to respond? If so, please say no.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to all members of the government party as well as across the way. I came to Alberta 31 years ago from a farm in a small, rural community in Nova Scotia and have called Fort McMurray my home for the past 31 years. I've had the honour and privilege of serving those residents in the community of Fort McMurray and then the Wood Buffalo region as a city councillor, as their mayor, and of course now for almost the past 13 years as their MLA.

In Fort McMurray we pride ourselves on the fact that we call it home. We believe that there are many people across Canada and around the world and even here in Alberta who don't quite understand Fort McMurray. I want to say today that I thank each and every one of the members from all political parties who have taken the time to visit our home over the past number of years because of their interest in the oil sands but also their interest in so much that is going on world-wide relative to the oil sands. I also want to say that it's time, a challenge for all of us in terms of the fact that we have a plan.

I want to share this with you. Three years ago at the time when I was a member of the government and Minister of Environment, I went to the then Premier and asked him if I could intervene at an Energy and Utilities Board meeting, and I said I would resign as the minister to represent the citizens of my community as their MLA. He granted me that right, and I did. I shared with them at this EUB intervention the feelings of what citizens were saying.

At the time the Premier of the day made a comment that he didn't have a plan, and that really reflected what was taking place in Fort McMurray. I just want to say today that my wife and I are proud to have a 20-month old son. We breathe the air every day in Fort McMurray. We enjoy the river. There is much work to be done, but I believe that the actual plan that was talked about today is really about a road map of the future. It has to be a living, breathing document that will have to be amended, will have to be changed, but it is an important step in the right direction from three years ago when the government admitted that at the time it didn't have a plan.

This is a plan. Let us embrace it. Let us eliminate the rhetoric. Let us work together from all corners because at the end of the day the name-calling doesn't really matter. Let's not disenfranchise each other. Even more important than politics, let us do what is right for Albertans and for the people in Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, that we call our home.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Calgary-Montrose Block Watch Programs

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I stand to recognize some people who have been instrumental in keeping Calgary-Montrose a safe and vibrant community. These are individuals that are willing to fight for their neighbourhood, so much so that they are willing to devote their own time to ensure that criminals are aware that illegal activity is not welcome in their community.

Mary Ryan is one of these people. As president of the Marlborough Park Block Watch her work with other residents and community partners has resulted in previously crime-ridden homes being vacated and kept clean, free of drugs and other illegal, illicit materials. Mary and her husband have even cut the lawns of residences so that they give the appearance of a vibrant community, and they have helped create a vibrant community. If she sees graffiti, she takes it off. If she sees garbage, she picks it up. Her proactive work has prevented these places from becoming crime-ridden once again.

Mary's dedication and success has inspired others in the community to become involved in the Block Watch program. Elaine Gordillo has been a similar leader in her community of Abbeydale. Mr. Speaker, while some people might find it easier to ignore crime's presence or pass the responsibility on to someone else, Mary and Elaine have shown that they will not ignore crime. Rather, they will be proactive about keeping their communities safe and vibrant.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am grateful to have such constituents.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

National Anthem

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm a very proud Canadian and a very proud Albertan, and I'm very proud to sing O Canada in this Assembly every Monday. To me our national anthem stands for many of the great things about Canada: the beauty of our country, our principles of justice and democracy, the bravery of Canadian troops, who are willing to sacrifice their lives to preserve freedom.

I was very dismayed to learn that a principal in New Brunswick has discontinued the singing of O Canada prior to classes in his school. Some people claim that the lyrics to our national anthem are unfitting, are unsuitable, and they can contravene the rights of some. Nothing could be further from the truth. Canadian children should be encouraged to celebrate our country's values and pay tribute to the strength and vitality of our democracy. To ban O Canada, in my mind, is not only poor judgment; it's also disrespectful to those who have fought and worked so hard to make our great country what it is today.

I'm looking forward to joining my colleagues in celebration of our Canadian spirit in the Assembly again by singing O Canada. Our national anthem is a reminder of what Canada is, what it stands for, what it means to be a proud Canadian, and what it means to be free.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Statement of Appreciation

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to thank you, my colleagues on both sides of this House, and all the staff who extended their best wishes of good health to me during these past few months. I'm pleased to be back. [applause] Thank you.

I'm pleased to be back in the Legislature, and I wish to extend my sincere thanks to all of you who sent flowers, cards, chocolates as well as your prayers during these trying times.

I also want to thank the dedicated health professionals who saw to it that I'm able to fight another day here in the Legislature. Your individual and collective efforts were truly remarkable.

I also want to thank my beautiful wife, family, and friends for their love and support. These times would have been far more difficult without their help and compassion. It was great to have my grandchildren's love and warm smiles during the cold days of Christmas. My friends from Calgary-McCall and across Canada phoned me on many occasions with words of encouragement and support, for which I'm grateful.

I also wish to thank the constituents of Calgary-McCall who sent their best wishes to my office, and I look forward to meeting you at the doors this spring during my 2009 outreach campaign. With a strong and revitalized heart I am ready to resume my responsibility as your MLA and shadow minister for transportation and government services. My office staff have advised me of the pressures of layoffs, the need for increased social assistance pressures, the Calgary airport tunnel, the health and educational concerns of my constituents, and the impact of crime and gang violence in our communities. With these issues in mind I look forward to representing the constituents of Calgary-McCall.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition.

Oil Sands Development Strategy

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today the government released what it called Responsible Actions: A Plan for Alberta's Oil Sands. This report contains not one timeline and not a single costing. It is cosmetic rather than effective. To the Premier: how can the Premier call this a plan?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, Alberta is blessed with world-class energy resources — it really is a blessing — and I can assure this House and all Albertans that we'll continue to develop those resources responsibly to ensure that the next generation enjoys the benefits of that development, ensure that we protect our air, land, and water. We're going to do that by working with other Albertans, including the companies that are involved, and with those other interest groups that have input into the plan for the oil sands.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Premier again: how will Albertans know if the government has passed or failed without measures of success?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, one thing I can tell you that is done, especially in the community of Fort McMurray, is monitoring of air quality 24 hours a day, 365 days a year. Ninety-eight per cent of the time the air quality in Fort McMurray is better than in any Canadian major city. That's one measurement. There's also the monitoring of water: since the early '70s, when the oil sands development began, daily monitoring of the quality of water in the Athabasca River. Once again, these are done by third-party individuals rather than government. That's the kind of openness and transparency we have with Albertans.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, after so many years of unmanaged development this document is profoundly disappointing. Is this all Albertans can expect to see for oil sands planning? When will we get something with real teeth?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, one of the first things that we did, with the support of Albertans, was to move a considerable amount of money into Fort McMurray, and that was not only into infrastructure, but it was supporting social programs. It increased the monthly allowance for teachers and nurses and doctors.

We also worked closely with the community of Fort McMurray to make sure all the services were there, to increase as more people moved into the community, and we continue to do that. The mayor is working very well with the ministers responsible, and I can see nothing but good things. The initial investment was 450 some million dollars and, again, the commitment of over a billion dollars for four-laning highway 63. That's a major commitment in dollars.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The oil sands image is under fire across the world and with it Alberta's key economic engine. This is a serious issue and demands real action. The glossy vision document released today, Responsible Actions, fails to adequately address the key issues affecting Albertans and Canada. To the Premier. Albertans have seen many vision plans come and go; for example, the wetland plan of 2005, which still has seen no action to date. How can Albertans believe that something is going to happen?

Mr. Stelmach: Well, they have our word as a government that we're going to proceed with the plan. At the next election Albertans will check-mark; they'll measure our performance and also our commitment to the environment of this province.

For the purpose of Albertans watching here today, I did have a meeting with the hon. Leader of the Opposition. We had a very nice chat over – well, he had some water; I had some tea. We had a good discussion. I said: you know, I want to work together. We're in this together. I'm glad that he has recognized the importance of the oil sands not only to the future economic security of Alberta but to all of Canada. That's why we're going to work through all of these challenges together. As I said, it's all for the good of Canada as well.

Dr. Swann: Well, I was pleased to see, Mr. Speaker, that this document addresses the issue of groundwater risk. This is 50 years into the development. I would like to ask the Premier: when will the groundwater issues be settled?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, there has been a lot of advancement on the use of groundwater in the oil sands. Consumption has been reduced dramatically per barrel. Also, with the new technology coming forward, we're looking at how we can use CCS, carbon capture and storage, to extract resources, again, environmentally responsibly. That's why on behalf of all Albertans we're very strong proponents of whatever policy our federal government reaches with the American government. We have the money to invest in technology in this province, and we can share that technology with those other countries that are producing a considerable amount of greenhouse gas emissions and help them clean up the atmosphere around the whole globe.

Dr. Swann: Will the Premier admit that a plan to deal with the economic, social, and environmental issues relating to the oil sands was tabled in 1999 through the SREM program, sustainable resources and environment management plan, and received unanimous consent in the House seven years earlier, 1992? Will you or will you not manage the oil sands in the long-term public interest of Albertans?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, as I said before, we have made tremendous progress in the management of the oil sands. We have to remember that in the early '70s there were many detractors from the project that said: well, the resources are much too remote, and it'll take much too much money to extract the resources, so it'll never, ever go ahead. Yet there were those entrepreneurs, Albertans who put their money forward, invested a tremendous amount of money into research and technology. Now not only Albertans benefit from that investment but all Canadians. That's important.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Seniors' Pharmaceutical Plan

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government has more consultation work to do. Many seniors have contacted myself and expressed that they believe that serious changes need to be done to the seniors' pharmaceutical plan. Seniors have worked and budgeted for their retirement only to have the government change the rules that they had planned on. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: will the minister admit that the seniors who will be hardest hit by this change will not be low-income or high-income but the middle fixed-income seniors?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I stand by what I said yesterday, that some 50 to 60 per cent of Alberta's seniors will be better off with the proposed pharmaceutical program. In fact, many of them will pay absolutely nothing under the new program. This hon. member needs to ask seniors in her constituency who are on a very low income, who are struggling today because they have to pay a percentage of their prescriptions every time they go to the drugstore. Have her ask that question.

Ms Pastoor: That isn't actually who I was speaking about. I think I made it clear that low-income seniors will be looked after.

It's well known that living on your own can be almost twice as expensive compared to living as a couple. Does the minister agree that this plan could unfairly place a larger burden upon single seniors, most of whom could well be widows?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think the member should have a discussion with her new leader because we continually hear from the Leader of the Opposition that this government should be saving more and spending less. I think what the member is suggesting is that we cover all drugs for all seniors, and quite frankly that is not the policy of this government and, furthermore, hardly affordable.

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Actually, what I was suggesting is perhaps revisiting as you had indicated that perhaps you will do in your remarks from yesterday.

Will the minister commit to changing the pharmaceutical coverage for seniors to really reflect their contribution to Alberta and the economic circumstances that they face today?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, as with any government program when it's announced, we want to ensure that before we implement it, it is right. We have had significant input from seniors, suggesting things that they feel may not be fair. I have asked my department to take all of this input from MLAs, individuals that have written to me, and others to ensure that we have it right. We have until January 1, 2010, to ensure that what we're bringing forward is in the best interest of Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Albertans have been urging this government to start managing the tar sands properly for decades. The President of the Treasury Board released a sham PR document today that has the words "responsible" and "plan" in the title, but that's where it ends. The real title should be Look Busy: Obama's Coming and We're in Trouble. This question is to the Premier. Why won't you level with Albertans and admit that this so-called plan is just window dressing to placate world opinion?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, as I've said before, what was made public today was a very responsible environmental and production plan for the oil sands. I reaffirm the position we've taken as government on behalf of all Albertans, that this is of mutual benefit to Albertans to develop their resources responsibly but, as well, ensure that future generations enjoy the benefit of this resource. It is a blessing. Let's work together to ensure that we develop it responsibly, and we will have a kind of quality of life that we can offer to the next generation as well.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, I know it does have "responsible" in the title, but that doesn't make it so.

Plans set directions, and it's even more obvious today that this government has none. Page 26 of the report talks about leveraging bitumen to develop value-added, upgraded products, yet the same page says that you will encourage more pipelines to new markets. What's missing is a commitment to stop pipelines from shipping our raw bitumen out of the country. To the Premier: why did your leadership campaign promise this if you have no intention of doing it?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we are committed to adding more value to bitumen in the province of Alberta. It is long-term jobs, and quite frankly it's a wealth creator that will pay for many of the programs we enjoy. What I don't understand from the leader is that he first said Obama doesn't want the oil, yet the President is accepting the oil. I'm not quite sure where this oil has been going if it's leaving Alberta. Again, we have to work together to resolve some of the issues, to improve the image. We're doing that with the industry. We're doing that through focus groups not only in Alberta but in Canada and other countries because we do need a significant investment from other jurisdictions to help grow the oil sands. On the other hand, it's very difficult to do when in this very same room, in this Legislature day in and day out they keep trying to drag down the province through those kinds of comments.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When this government shows a clear commitment to cleaning up the tar sands, capping emissions, and making sure that our jobs stay in Alberta, then he can count on our support. Until then, no.

Mr. Speaker, it's impossible to enforce measures when there are no means to enforce them in the report. My question is again to the Premier. Why don't you set meaningful goals, such as cleaning up the tailings ponds in a relatively short period of time or putting hard caps on CO₂ emissions, with clear performance measures in place so your government can be held accountable for its performance?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, again I just saw a complete disconnect from reality. There are 3 and a half million people in the province of Alberta. He wants Albertans – Albertans – to shoulder all of the blame, whatever it is, for greenhouse gas emissions and not look to the fact that 75 per cent of the emissions coming out of the States are coming from coal-fired generation. He wants us to pay for it? I don't think so. Let's get serious about this ongoing problem.

The other thing – sorry, Mr. Speaker, to get going on this. However, let's invest in technology. Taking money out of the province, sending it to other countries in a kind of a wealth transfer – oh, by the way, giving the exchange . . . [interjection] Just selling the credits – remember, it's got to go through some authority – not able to even set the level of those credits. We're going to give it to the same bandits that put us into this economic recession? That's what he wants.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to say that today our government released a document called Responsible Actions: A Plan for Alberta's Oil Sands. My first question is to the President of the Treasury Board. Can the minister advise the Assembly what impact this plan will have on oil sands development?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, the oil sands development that's under way has been ongoing for 40 years. The oil sands development, in all fairness, is really just getting started. What we need to send is a message to the other provinces that are at that trade show today from all across this country. They're looking for business in Alberta. To the people in Wisconsin building the shovels and the people in Mexico building the Terex trucks, that count on responsible decisions from Alberta, this document says that we're going to develop this resource responsibly. Regardless of who wants to hang banners in Ottawa or Washington, it's our resource. It will be done responsibly environmentally. These provinces are here to share in that end of things.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, that's great news.

My next question is to the Minister of Finance and Enterprise. Given the current economic situation and deferral of so many energy projects, are continued oil sands developments still viable?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, as cited by the hon. President of the Treasury Board, at least 600 visitors from all across North America believe so. They were there last night at the trade show and at the national buyer-seller forum to take part in some $15 billion worth of maintenance activity, maybe as much as $18 billion worth of maintenance activity that will be happening in the oil sands even as we have this business of slowing down because of the world economy. Many of the industries that were present were really captured by the thought that speakers like Mr. Southern expressed to them: this is a time to hold onto your dreams, to vision what can be, to work towards those targets. And they're so engaged.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you. My final question is to the same minister. Given the importance of the oil sands and energy resources, what measures is government taking to ensure that Albertans are receiving optimal value for them?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, in December my colleague the Minister of Energy released the provincial energy strategy, which cited the first ever bitumen royalty in kind policy, which will be the sponsor of much of the value-added refining and upgrading, which will in fact be part and parcel of the extension of the new Alberta frontier of economic development. So what have we started? We've started a way to manufacture and to follow through on the promise of our Premier to take bitumen to a whole new level, to be the manufacturing centre for pharmaceuticals, chemicals, and many other commodities that are needed right in Alberta and in Canada.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater.

Provincial Budget Release

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the finance minister stated that the budget will not be released this month and that the minister did not feel that delaying the budget would “breed any disrespect or lack of confidence among Albertans.” Well, many Albertans are upset with the delay, and the only way to instill confidence, in my opinion, is to be honest with people about what’s going on. I will ask the Minister of Finance and Enterprise again: when will she release the budget?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, there’s been a grand tradition of not announcing the date for the budget until one is prepared to table the budget and is fully apprised of it. I think our Premier spoke quite eloquently to the fact that we were waiting for, first of all, the federal budget, which came later than we anticipated, in January, that we’re waiting to see where we’re at with the American public under the new President in terms of all of the planning and the kinds of impacts it might have on our energy sector. In many parts of Canada the third leg of the tax stool, if you will, is a provincial sales tax. Here we are heavily dependent on that third leg being the revenue from energy resources. Isn’t it responsible for all Albertans to know what we expect those to be? That, in effect, is the best reason for not tabling a budget today.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, I’m wondering which of those three legs the minister has to stand on, quite frankly.

Since she herself has experienced the constraints of waiting for the federal budget before she could complete her own – and I don’t know if she’s even started yet – why is she now putting those same constraints on cities, towns, rural municipalities, universities, nonprofit and other private-sector companies, school boards unless there’s something to hide or at least avoid as long as possible?

Ms Evans: You know, Mr. Speaker, I think our Premier has established a tone of mutual respect in this Assembly, and I think that’s an important and very valued commodity. We respect that people out there are waiting for budget targets, but it’s not unusual for people in the kind of economy that we’re faced with today to take a second look at budget, to take a look at spending targets, to take a look at all of those revenue streams that might feed into the budget. It hasn’t stopped anything. In fact, not one Albertan has written to me to say: table the budget today; table the budget tomorrow. The only place I’m hearing it is from the opposition and in questions from the media. We will table it in due course when we’re ready.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, that is probably because they’re too busy standing in line at the bank to pay their bills.

Can the minister explain why, in a time when markets are responding to people’s fears over uncertainty, this government continues to perpetuate that uncertainty by refusing to provide any details on the release of the budget?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, throughout the fall we’ve been engaged in business planning processes. Every minister and every MLA has consulted with people in their sectors, in their communities, in their constituencies. They have determined what the policies and priorities are. I think it’s been clear that we won’t spend as much, no doubt, this year as we did last year in some capacities. We are looking very carefully at expenditures, at revenue streams. We’re trying to get it right. When oil prices change by $16 U.S. per barrel per day, isn’t that reason to pause and reflect on how we can do it as well as possible? We’re releasing the information that Albertans need today. When we’re ready tomorrow, we’ll release the more detailed coverage.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Highway Construction in the Oil Sands

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For the Minister of Transportation. The economic growth of Alberta’s oil sands region is dependent on the ability of goods to get to Albertans living in those areas of the province. It’s equally important that Albertans are able to travel safely on the highways and the roads in those regions. My question: what is your department doing to ensure that Albertans and Alberta businesses have the safe roads that they need in the oil sands regions?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, as we speak and from last year on, we’ve got more than $600 million of road projects going on in the oil sands region near Fort McMurray. Among other things, that included the first 16 kilometres of twinning that opened last fall south of Fort McMurray, from highway 69 to south of highway 881, at a cost of about $53 million. We also did the initial grading work on major interchanges on highway 63 at Thickwood Boulevard and Confederation Way, an estimated cost of about $300 million. Construction also continues on the $127 million five-lane bridge across the Athabasca River. We also opened 17 kilometres of highway 63 twinning north of Fort McMurray last year at a cost of $80 million.

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: these projects may be addressing the immediate transportation concerns in the region, but can the minister highlight any initiatives his department is pursuing to make certain that future transportation needs are met in a timely and effective manner?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, we’ve got road projects planned throughout the regions, also with Peace River, Cold Lake, Wood Buffalo, and beyond that. For example, we’re in the initial planning stages for a future east-west connector road that would connect Fort McMurray to the northeast with Peace River in northwestern Alberta. We realize the north is our future. These are the kind of long-range planning projects that we’re looking at now to meet our future transportation needs within the Wood Buffalo region.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. Safety on Alberta’s roads is imperative with my constituents, particularly highway 63, and with the recent rash of accidents there, it is a big concern. With the negative stigma that’s currently placed on that highway, what’s the minister planning to ensure that Albertans are safe when travelling that particular highway and highways to and from the oil sands?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, as you know, safety is a very, very high concern within our ministry. One of the most important safety improvements to the oil sands region that we’ve done is pave highway 881, which allows another alternative safe route. We’ve also increased our highway maintenance and the number of snow-plows that are working on highway 63. The provincial sheriffs and the RCMP officers have also increased enforcement along highway 63 to keep speeds down. Last month in one day they gave out 255 tickets. I'd please urge everyone to drive safely, pay attention, use defensive driving, and drive according to the conditions.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Carbon Emissions Reduction

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. U.S. President Obama has campaigned and been elected on an energy plan weighted toward reducing carbon emissions and investing heavily in renewables and a green economy, and this new reality has serious consequences for Alberta. My questions are to the Minister of Environment. The President and the Prime Minister are beginning the process of a North American cap and trade system. Is Alberta planning to take its usual tactic and opt out of a national system to reduce emissions?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to report to the member that Alberta, in fact, is working with the federal government and is very much looking forward to our opportunity to engage with the new U.S. administration to talk about the need for a North American strategy with respect to climate change. We have to have a North American strategy because Alberta simply can't go it alone.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Well, thank you very much. Again to the same minister. Given that the Americans expect specifics and will not just accept a $25 million PR plan . . .

Mr. Mason: Or talk.

Ms Blakeman: . . . or talk, is the minister telling us that he's going to expand the Alberta cap and trade program into a national system, or is this just a general discussion? What exactly are you going to do to reduce absolute carbon emissions?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, in the member's preamble she referred to the need for investment in technology, and she identified exactly what the strategy needs to be for Alberta. We need to have a system that allows for investment in the technology here in Alberta, and how that fits into any kind of a cap and trade system really remains to be seen. Clearly, the Premier has indicated already today that we're not interested in a scheme that is going to be taking funds and flowing funds out of Alberta and not allowing us to make that much-needed investment in technology. We're looking for an opportunity for Alberta to be part of a North America-wide scheme. We're looking for an opportunity for Alberta to invest in the technology that allows us not only to solve the problems for Alberta but for North America.

Ms Blakeman: Okay. To the same minister: given that the oil sands have come under international scrutiny for their impact on the environment, what specific actions besides carbon capture, which so far is the only tool in your tool box, can the government use to improve environmental sustainability?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, apparently the member wasn't around when I talked about the fact that in the first six months of our emissions management program we've already identified 2 and a half million tonnes in savings in related activity. But specific to the oil sands, because apparently she wants to concentrate on the oil sands, there are a number of opportunities for reductions in CO₂ that don't involve cap and trade, one of which is the emerging new technology for in situ production that is starting to find alternatives to steam-assisted gravity drainage. We're looking at ways of significantly reducing the amount of water, which in turn reduces the amount of steam, which in turn reduces the amount of heat that's required. So there's one very good example of how technology will change and the future will be different from what we do today.

Mrs. Sarich: Mr. Speaker, the land-use framework was released in December of 2008, and the plan for Alberta's oil sands has just been released. My questions are for the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. In an effort to create a greater level of understanding for Albertans, what is the connection between the plan for Alberta's oil sands and the land-use framework?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The oil sands plan is a welcome addition to our government's policy development process. It joins nicely with the energy strategy and the land-use framework, and the common denominator and the foundation for all three of those plans is that no decisions will be made about energy development without taking into consideration not just the economic consequences but also the environmental consequences and the consequences for Albertans and their communities. The land-use framework is about greening our growth, not stopping it. In the current recession striking that balance is important. The oil sands plan strikes that balance, and I'll take this opportunity to thank the minister and the others who contributed to that oil sands plan for striking the right balance.

Mrs. Sarich: Mr. Speaker, my second question is to the same minister. Today the opposition leaders appear to be concerned about monitoring and enforcement issues. Are these related to the oil sands plan or the land-use framework?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to answer that question. The land-use plan and particularly the regional plan will in fact be the implementation mechanism for the oil sands strategy. Its focus is obviously more than just oil sands; it's the rest of the lower Athabasca.

But I get the impression that the new Leader of the Opposition – I congratulate him – and also the old leader of the third party, who we congratulate on that, are not keeping up with things. They are concerned about tailings ponds. Well, didn't they read last week that the Energy Resources Conservation Board has just set out strict new guidelines going into the future about reduction of tailings ponds? The leader of the third party complaining about emissions: what other jurisdiction in North America, what state, what province, has actual caps and penalties for exceeding those caps? Only the province of Alberta and only because of this government.

Mrs. Sarich: Mr. Speaker, my final question is to the same minister. How will the government ensure that the goals and strategies identified in the plan for oil sands are being met through the lower Athabasca regional plan?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I'm happy to report that the regional advisory committee for the lower Athabasca has not only been established and appointed; they had their first meeting in Edmonton last week. I met with them for dinner and spoke with them. I stressed the importance of their work, not just for their local communities but for the entire province and now in the recession for all of Canada, and I told them that the oil sands plan would be available in the near future. It's come even more quickly than I thought. I told them it would have to be an important information piece to inform their deliberation. Will that happen? I'm very confident it will. The chair of that regional advisory committee is Ms Heather Kennedy. Heather Kennedy played a key role in the development of the oil sands plan. The pieces fit together nicely.

Enforcement of Environmental Laws

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Justice minister did not want to discuss the enforcement and prosecution of Alberta law in this House although word on the street is that she has been musing about creative sentencing regarding environmental violations. But as today is another day, I will try again. Will Alberta Justice commit to amending the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act so that fines adequate to prevent industry negligence are levied regardless of whether the courts employ a tailored sentence or not?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I said yesterday in this House – and I did at that time defer to my hon. colleague the Minister of Environment – I believe that question has been asked and answered.

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Environment. Yesterday you said that current measures are adequate to hold polluters accountable and that one deterrent was that any incidents negatively affect the customers' and the public's perception of the way these companies do business. So I ask: what about the perception of Alberta's soft environmental rules?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, for anyone to suggest that Alberta has soft environmental rules, they're clearly not paying attention to what's going on here. The day that this incident occurred, the government responded immediately, began an investigation. The investigation has been under way – an investigation that I might point out had up to two years to come to a conclusion and came to a conclusion after eight months – came to the conclusion that there was reason to lay charges. Charges were laid. We take these incidents very seriously in this province.

Mr. Hehr: Well, anyone who could have concluded after one day with 500 dead ducks that something went wrong, so congratulations.

The federal government recently spoke about plans to introduce legislation that would significantly increase penalties into the multimillion dollar range for large companies that commit environmental crimes. Does the Minister of Environment support such an initiative?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, this minister respects the law. Apparently, this member, who purports to be a lawyer, doesn't respect the law because in the law of the land in Alberta you need evidence before you lay charges, you need evidence to win a case, and you need evidence before you find someone guilty of a charge.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Oil Sands Tailings Ponds

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government's new directive for managing tailings in the tar sands is ridiculous. It outlines a plan for oil companies to come up with a plan to create a future plan unless, of course, they later amend the plan at which point the plan would be re-planned and a new plan would be created to see how the plan could be planned for the future. To the Minister of Environment: isn't it obvious that you're putting your friends in big oil before Alberta's environmental future when all your ministry does is make plans to make more plans?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, technology is constantly changing, and it would be pure folly on our part if we were to assume that the rules that were in place last year would be appropriate next year given the fact that technology is constantly changing. The objective that we have in Alberta Environment is to ensure that we push industry to the maximum, we push industry to improve the outcomes, to improve the standards, and above all to protect the environment.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, the ERCB admits that oil companies have done next to nothing over the last three decades to reduce tailings and reclaim tar ponds notwithstanding their promises to the contrary. How are they penalized for this? They're given more time to come up with plans for new tailings and absolutely no directive to clean up the old ones. To the Minister of Environment: how much longer will Albertans wait and how many more animals will be killed and how many more plans will be made before your ministry forces oil companies to clean up their 40-year-old toxic waste there now?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, the preamble is absolutely loaded with incorrect information. I won't use unparliamentary language because I'm sure the member didn't mean to be unparliamentary, but the fact of the matter is that she's just misinformed. There is a 40-year history of operation in that area, and for anyone to suggest that there have been no advances during that 40 years or that nothing has taken place over 40 years, they're either intentionally trying to mislead Albertans or they are terribly misinformed. The fact is that there are tailings ponds that are in their very final stages of being retired. There will be many more to come.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm just quoting from the ERCB's own press release, where they said that very little has been done and promises were broken by the oil companies.

Every day the tar sands create enough tailings to fill 720 Olympic-sized pools. Astronauts can see the tar ponds from space, and the rest of the world can see them on Google Earth. Your so-called plan completely fails to address the environmental disaster that has taken place over the last 40 years. To the Minister of Environment: if you can't clean up the current tar ponds, can you at least come clean with Albertans and admit that you're moving full speed ahead on tar sands development with no plan to undo the current ponds?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, it's exactly the current tailings ponds that I'm talking about. If the member would care to know the facts, she would learn that at two of the original projects that are under way, there are significant advances in retirement of ponds. In fact, I believe it's Suncor that is in the final stages. Within the next 12 months or thereabouts the original pond will be completely covered over, and revegetation will be under way. So, again, misinformed or just not caring to learn the facts.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Prins: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I was very pleased along with many, I would believe most, Albertans to see the President of the Treasury Board release the oil sands strategic plan early today. Now, of course, the real work begins in implementing these important recommendations. My questions today are to the Minister of Energy. What role will his ministry have in implementing the recommendations of the Responsible Actions strategy?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, very clearly this is a government-wide plan. It's no different from the climate change strategy or our provincial energy strategy or, for that matter, our government's fiscal policy. Although there is one department that leads the initiative, we're all working together to coordinate our efforts and deliver results. My department and I have been involved in this strategy as it was developed, and as we move forward, we will remain at the table to help implement the recommendations.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Energy minister: given that he just released the provincial energy strategy less than two months ago, how would he respond to suggestions that we're seeing a lot of talk and not enough action when it comes to the oil sands file?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, let's not underestimate the power of the talk that is in both the oil sands and the provincial energy strategies. These documents set bold new directions and a long-term vision with specific deliverables for oil sands development in our province. At the same time, we're seeing real action such as the recent tailings ponds initiative from the ERCB, as has been mentioned, which proves that Alberta can do long-term planning and also make progress now.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Prins: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. The Responsible Actions report refers to well-defined and stable regulatory structures as a key success factor. Again to the Minister of Energy: given the criticism that we may have heard about how the Energy Resources Conservation Board handles oil sands applications, what is he prepared to do to ensure the plan is successful?

Mr. Knight: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, I believe, as do the board and members in the ERCB, that there's always room for improvement, and we continue to work with the ERCB to ensure that we're successful. That said, it's important to take a close look at how the ERCB has handled oil sands applications, particularly in recent years. They have included stringent conditions in approvals that respond to environmental protection, public infrastructure, impact on communities: all important issues. That is the ERCB operating as it should and considering the public interest.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Temporary Foreign Workers

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta workers in the construction industry and in the transportation industry are, unfortunately, getting laid off. My first question is to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Why is the government going ahead to recruit foreign workers in these industries in these recruitment drives that are going on abroad when we have willing and able Albertans who are unemployed and would like the first chance at these jobs?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I indicated in the House yesterday, before temporary foreign workers are brought in to fill certain positions, the employer must advertise right across Canada to assure himself or herself that no Canadian can fill that particular position. It's only after that that they will receive a permit from the federal government to bring in temporary foreign workers to fill those particular positions.

Mr. MacDonald: Again to the same minister, Mr. Speaker: given that last month alone 129,000 Canadians and landed immigrants joined the rolls of the unemployed, why is the government now going to Essen and Leipzig, Germany, in early March, recruiting workers in the construction, hospitality, and transportation industries, when so many people not only in Alberta but across this country are unemployed?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, we need to reiterate the fact that our priorities are to Albertans first and to make sure that any Albertan that wants to work and is capable of working in a particular occupation will have that option. We also want to make sure that Canadians have the option of filling whatever jobs are available in the province of Alberta. But we need to also remind ourselves that we need to be very prudent and very flexible so that our short-term requirements will not impact our very long-term goals of making sure that we've got enough people with the right skills in the right places when we do need them.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister. Your priority is to drive down wages not only in this province but across the country.

Given that the total value of residential, industrial, and commercial building permits in this province is down over 35 per cent between November 2007 and November 2008, why are you going at this time to Germany to recruit more construction workers?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure that we're out in Germany recruiting construction workers. We're out there recognizing that we're very, very focused on responding to the needs in Alberta where we have experienced some shortages.

If I can use an example, in the health field we are still recruiting people to come in and fill the voids, that we all feel is necessary. We constantly hear of need for additional workers in our long-term care facilities, as an example, so we are targeting some of those individuals. The demographic work that is done across the world indicates whether there are people that might fit those needs, and those are the groups that we're targeting.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A key goal of the oil sands strategy released earlier today is ensuring that we're developing the oil sands resources in an environmentally responsible way. My questions are to the Minister of Environment. With over 40 years of development already under way why are you just now looking at putting rules in place to make sure these giant mines get cleaned up?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, as I've already pointed out earlier this afternoon, we're not putting new rules in place. The rules have always been there. What we're doing is recognizing that those rules can be stronger, and we're committing to make them stronger. We're putting in place a system we've identified as progressive reclamation that says that as new areas are opened up, the previous areas need to be closed in. That's how we believe we can increase and speed up the process.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what kind of consequences will companies face if they don't clean up as they move forward?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, the most obvious is that we hold all the cards. We're the ones that make the approvals and issue the licences. If the expectations that we set down are not met, we simply don't issue the licences and grant the approvals. We have a number of other tools in our box that we're prepared to use as well.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: how will these new rules ensure that tailings ponds get cleaned up in a timely manner?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, one of the things that we envision in the area of progressive reclamation is putting benchmarks in place. The opposition members and other critics of oil sands development often point out to say: well, with no reclamation certificates obviously no reclamation is under way. Clearly, these are long-term projects, so one of the things we need to do is establish benchmarks and say, "After five years this is where you are; after 10 years this is where you should be; after 15 years this is where you should be," because clearly these guys just don't get it over here.

Graduated Drivers' Licences

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For some time now constituents have raised concerns about the number of drivers on graduated licences between the ages of 16 and 18 involved in serious accidents on Alberta roads. This is an important safety concern. To the Minister of Transportation: will the minister commit to revoking the graduated licence of anyone caught exceeding the posted speed limit by 30 kilometres an hour or more?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, with the stats we've done, we've found our graduated driver's licence program has been working very well for new drivers to Alberta, not just young drivers but anyone who hasn't driven for two years in Alberta. We're in the process right now of completely doing a full review: do we need to make changes or not to the graduated driver's licence? When that review comes in, I tell the hon. member that I will gladly let him know, share the information on what we should do or whether we will leave it the way it is.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are talking about young drivers here.

To the minister again: will the minister commit to restrictions on anyone holding a graduated driver's licence if they have more than three speeding offences under the 30-kilometre-per-hour ceiling under this probationary driving term?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, on our graduated driver's licence they couldn't even get three speeding tickets or they'd automatically lose their licence. They're only allowed seven points under the graduated driver's licence.

Mr. Kang: So will they lose their driver's licence if they get seven demerits? That's what you're telling us, sir?

To the minister again, Mr. Speaker. Changes to the graduated licence program have been talked about forever. When will we finally see some action on this?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, it couldn't be forever. The graduated driver's licence has only been in effect for a few years in Alberta.

I think we have a great system with our graduated driver's licence, and safety is a huge concern. Yes, the people he is speaking about are our most vulnerable and create the most accidents right now. That's why we have a graduated driver's licence, and that's why we're reviewing it.

The Speaker: That was 90 questions and answers today compared to the 102 yesterday. We're going to move on very quickly because we have a standing order rule about 3 o'clock.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Outstanding Calgary-Mackay Constituents

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize the achievements of some outstanding Calgarians and Calgary-Mackay constituents.

Children and youth under 19 make up about 30 per cent of Calgary-Mackay's population. Eighteen-year-old Calgary-Mackay constituent Jane Wu has earned Canada's top teen philanthropist in Canada's first national contest in December 2008. As a volunteer since she was 12, Jane has logged thousands of volunteer hours, including serving as chair of the Calgary Youth Foundation and co-chair of the Mayor's Youth Council. She has helped to raise tens of thousands of dollars for projects like opening doors rental subsidies for youth, a program which makes schools, churches, and community halls cheaper to rent for organized activities. Jane also received the Alberta great kids award and Calgary immigrant of distinction's youth scholarship in 2008. I am certain we'll be hearing more about this remarkable young Albertan in the years to come.

Ten days ago Alberta celebrated a golden moment when Kurtis Wenzel, a grade 12 student athlete at the Calgary board of education's National Sports School, won Canada's first gold medal in the youth men's 7.5 K sprint at the youth and junior world biathlon championships at the Canmore Nordic Centre. This is traditionally a sport dominated by the Europeans, and winning gold is quite a coup for Canada and Alberta.

Then members of Calgary's Hung Mon Athletic Club brought home one gold and one silver medal from the world cultural sports competition held in Korea.

Last but certainly not the least, Ms Sandra Rhodes, principal of Sir William Van Horne high school of the Calgary board of education, is the only Albertan who won Canada's outstanding principal award. Her partnerships with the community and parents as well as successful change and innovation have resulted in improved student achievement.

Mr. Speaker, it's my honour to have this opportunity to recognize and celebrate the accomplishments of these outstanding Albertans today. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Fetal Alcohol Spectrum Disorder

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Six hundred and fifty people are gathering in Edmonton over the next two days to learn about innovative strategies for the prevention and treatment of fetal alcohol spectrum disorder, or FASD. Over 23,000 Albertans have FASD. The social and economic impacts of the disorder directly or indirectly touch every Albertan.

That's why our government is funding community-based supports, research, education, and awareness programs to keep more babies from being born with this completely preventable disability. A cross-ministry team of nine ministries has developed and is taking action on a 10-year strategic plan for FASD. We're beginning to see the results, but we know that there is much more work to be done. The Alberta FASD Conference is just one of the ways government, community organizations, educators, health professionals, and families are working together to promote healthy lifestyles during pregnancy and give hope to those affected by FASD and their caregivers.

Mr. Speaker, I encourage all Albertans to learn more about the role they can play helping people in our communities who are affected by FASD and supporting the FASD 10-year plan by visiting the website www.fasd-cmc.alberta.ca. By working together our province will continue being a world leader in supporting people and families affected by FASD.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Delisting of Health Services

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Every now and again individual Tory MLAs slip and give Albertans a glimpse into this government's secretive agenda for health care. Last week the Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace mused to reporters about delisting health services that everyday Albertans need. Clearly, he spoke out of turn. The Premier's spin doctors quickly swooped in to distance themselves from his comments.

We've seen them try this song and dance before. During the devastating Klein cuts of the 1990s the government delisted eye exams, wart removal, and local anaesthetic for dental procedures, all to shave a mere tenth of a percentage point from the health budget. What happened? Private companies began selling insurance for the delisted services. The fee for eye exams rose 17 per cent in the first year. Lower income families were gouged, and the government looked the other way.

Last summer the government looked the other way again as the Copeman clinic opened in Calgary, providing medical services to those who are wealthy. Those who can afford it get premium health care services while regular folks wait in longer lines at greater expense to the taxpayer.

This government continually spins the yarn that our health care system is unsustainable and that it must change. However, study after study shows public health delivery of health care is affordable when properly prioritized. Poll after poll shows that Albertans want no part in the slow dismantling of the services that they rely upon. My party's most important contribution to our Canadian way of life is a public health care system that is accessible to every Albertan and every Canadian in spite of what his or her income might be. Mr. Speaker, it's the envy of the world. We will not allow this government or any other to take it away, and we'll fight against any incremental attack that this government has planned behind closed doors.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children and Youth Services.

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table the Social Care Facilities Review Committee's annual report for 2007-08. The report includes feedback the committee received during visits to daycares, women's shelters, group homes, and other facilities and is very invaluable in ensuring the provision of quality, appropriate services to Albertans. I'd also like to take a second to thank the committee and express appreciation to those who took the time to share their views.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation.

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today we're one year from the opening of the 2010 Olympic Games. As minister responsible for the Alberta Olympic and Paralympic Secretariat I'm pleased to table the appropriate number of copies of the Alberta Celebrates Vancouver 2010 supplement that was included in today's Edmonton Journal and Calgary Herald. This supplement highlights our own Olympic legacy and informs Albertans about the various pre-Olympic events and also introduces and profiles some of Alberta's athletes, who we'll be watching and cheering for next February.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is in regard to the questions that I asked the hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration earlier in question period. This is from the Employment and Immigration website, and it is a calendar of events indicating that on March 3 the Alberta government will be in Essen and on March 5 in Leipzig, Germany, to recruit construction and transportation workers.

The second tabling I have is a letter that I have received from Alberta Culture and Community Spirit dated December 9, 2008. It is a follow-up from questions that were asked by members of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts on November 5, 2008. I would encourage all hon. members of the Assembly to please have a good look at this. It explains where some of our tax dollars are being spent.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of 10 reports from long-term care workers indicating specific instances of shifts that were short-staffed. One of these reports states that some residents did not get their breakfast until mid-morning, and care that should have been done in the morning was not completed until the afternoon.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the chair will table in the House today the appropriate number of copies of two letters dated February 10, 2009, from the members for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood and Edmonton-Strathcona advising my office of the resignation of the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood from the Standing Committee on the Economy and the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona from the Standing Committee on the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund and the Standing Committee on Public Safety and Services effective February 12, 2009. However, I do believe that it requires a motion of the Assembly to in fact put this into place, and one would look forward to that.

Projected Government Business

The Speaker: The Official Opposition House Leader.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. According to Standing Order 7(6) I would ask the Government House Leader to please share with the Assembly the projected government business for the week beginning February 17, which is Tuesday because Monday is Family Day and a statutory holiday.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, it's my anticipation that we'll spend the bulk of Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday next week in response to the Speech from the Throne. On Tuesday afternoon day 2 of throne speech reply and under Government Bills and Orders potentially second reading of bills 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5 could be brought forward.

On Wednesday we would proceed again with throne speech reply, and for second reading bills 2, 3, 4, and 5 would be available, and perhaps Bill 1 might be in committee.

Thursday, February 19, again predominantly in throne speech reply, but we might anticipate second reading on bills 4 and 5, committee on bills 2 and 3, and potentially third reading of Bill 1.

The Speaker: This particular message is essentially to three members: the hon. Government House Leader, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. As events transpired this afternoon, I received a series of seven notes with respect to a matter which, I think, after reading all the seven notes becomes very self-explanatory. So what I will do is later on this afternoon simply make a copy of the seven notes, numbered in the order in which they arrived here, I'll give you all a copy of it, and you can unravel the mystery over the weekend.

Consideration of His Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mr. Johnston moved that an humble address be presented to His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To His Honour the Honourable Norman L. Kwong, CM, AOE, Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Debate adjourned February 11]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of my constituents in Edmonton-Rutherford I am very pleased to join other hon. members in replying to the Speech from the Throne delivered by His Honour the Lieutenant Governor. Not unlike other speakers that preceded me, my focus is on the opportunities I see for my constituents as a result of the direction government has set out for the province and the legislative agenda for the coming session.

Seniors and others living on fixed incomes look for reassurance, Mr. Speaker, that government will protect them through difficult times. Postsecondary students are concerned about future career prospects. Families worry about the impact of potential job loss. Small businesses wonder how they will fare in the face of reduced consumer spending. So when I consider the throne speech, I look for evidence that the government is providing meaningful hope that families and communities will emerge not only intact but stronger from the economic circumstances we find ourselves in today. I submit that His Honour has made a very strong case in this regard.

We can begin by looking at the base we're starting from. Albertans have built the strongest balance sheet of any government in North America. We have no provincial debt, a strong investment portfolio, and more than $13 billion in the sustainability fund and capital accounts to cushion us from deficit and sustain investment for future growth. We have the upper hand on taxes, with personal, corporate, and fuel tax rates among the lowest in the country. The elimination of health care premiums means Albertans and their employers have an additional $1 billion to invest in savings, education, recreation, or other priorities. And let's not forget for a minute, Mr. Speaker, that we are in the midst of implementing a capital plan worth no less than $22 billion over three years. As His Honour illustrated, prudent economic leadership, innovation, and most importantly the hard work and perseverance of Albertans have prepared this province to succeed in virtually any economic market.

For small businesses in my constituency, Mr. Speaker, one of the greatest sources of hope is the Alberta-British Columbia trade, investment, and labour mobility agreement, known as TILMA. In addition to increasing the size of the marketplace in which small businesses operate, the agreement makes it easier to source skilled labour, attract investment capital, and in several sectors can be expected to reduce the costs of goods and services Albertans use every day. Alberta has established many strong and reliable trading partners internationally, that will ensure our province can rely on a broad range of trade and investment relationships. Indeed, global demand as well as the United States' urgent need for a stable and secure supply of energy present unique opportunities with respect to how we deploy and develop our most abundant natural resource.

The Alberta energy strategy outlines a clear path to position Alberta and Canada as global leaders in the supply of clean energy from both existing and alternative sources. It addresses improved innovation through increased investment in research, development, demonstration, and deployment of energy technology. Perhaps the best example of late, Mr. Speaker, is this government's commitment to an investment of $2 billion in the development of carbon capture and storage technology. This has tremendous potential to significantly reduce not only our own greenhouse gas emissions, but, as I think was acknowledged a few times in the House today, it's especially important in helping to reduce the greenhouse gas emissions of developing countries.

In addition to adding value and increasing revenue from traditional resources, His Honour's speech highlights the very significant progress Alberta continues to make in diversifying our revenue stream. The development and nurturing of knowledge-based companies is critical to Alberta's ongoing success in the new global economy. A prime example of this attitude in action is the Alberta action plan for bringing new technology to market. As members will know, Mr. Speaker, the plan assists Alberta entrepreneurs in developing their ideas and creating products for consumer use. It builds on the strength of advanced technology we have developed in sectors like clean energy, information and communications, life sciences, and nanotechnology, using a wide range of co-ordinated actions that take place in the early stages of technological development, where the help often means the most.

As an example, small technology companies are now eligible for access to vouchers worth between $10,000 and $50,000 in order to help get their ideas and products to market. In addition, the Alberta scientific research and experimental development tax credit benefits all businesses in sectors that conduct research. The credit is worth 10 per cent of a company's eligible expenditures up to $4 million for a maximum credit of $400,000. This will be refundable for all companies.

For my constituents, Mr. Speaker, they need look no further than the capital region, home to one of the largest academic health centres in North America. Here in Edmonton researchers, clinicians, and educators are building knowledge capital that will form the foundation for Alberta's future economy. The upcoming health research strategy announced in the throne speech will guide Alberta's investment in health research and ensure that the knowledge that we're developing here at home links to measurable improvements in our public health care system.

Mr. Speaker, seniors in my constituency were also pleased to learn that Alberta's continuing care strategy will improve health and personal care service options for seniors and persons with disabilities by enhancing supports that enable them to live independently within the community. To many of my constituents that is the highest priority of all. The increased availability of home care, more supportive living options, and upgrades to long-term care are all very welcome news.

Not only is the government of Alberta providing essential social programs, but it's also protecting Albertans where it matters most, in their own communities. Mr. Speaker, last month I hosted a public forum on crime and safe communities in my constituency of Edmonton-Rutherford. The expert panel included two members of cabinet, the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security and also the hon. Attorney General and Minister of Justice. But much more than highlighting the government's safe communities initiative, such as the Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act and the safe communities innovation fund, it was really the discussion that followed the presentations which impressed me most.

I say this because individuals and community groups who attended the forum left the hall not talking about where they wanted government to invest more money or how they wanted government to change programs. They left speaking and planning about how to use the components of the safe communities initiative to facilitate their work collaboratively in our schools and our neighbourhoods to improve community safety. They left believing, Mr. Speaker, that government had provided them with the tools and empowered them to determine their own solutions and to implement them with appropriate assistance. One way Albertans can get involved in initiatives such as this is through the safe communities innovation fund, a $60 million fund which has been announced and is available for local organizations to pilot projects designed to improve community safety in their areas.

Mr. Speaker, in closing, I believe it was Napoleon Bonaparte who said that a leader is a dealer in hope. His Honour's address provides an inspiring mix of hope, realism, and confidence and a commitment to creating opportunities for the future, that we as members of the House can choose to model or not as we work through these uncertain times with our constituents.

Alberta's financial fundamentals are sound, the political will to adapt to the future is there, and most importantly the resilience and determination of Albertans is stronger than ever before. Let's make the most of it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available if anyone wishes to comment.

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to be able to join the debate today regarding this government's throne speech, ably delivered in the House by the hon. Lieutenant Governor on Tuesday. Unfortunately, while the delivery of the throne speech was able, the construction and substance of this government's blueprint is a deep disappointment to everyday Albertans concerned about the turbulent economic times we are entering.

There are four major problems with the government's stated approach to Alberta's future. Firstly, it doesn't acknowledge the serious implications of the current economic climate for Alberta's families and provides no vision for Albertans faced with the prospect of missing mortgage payments and struggling to provide for their kids. Secondly, it's premised on an outdated and backward-looking approach to building Alberta's economy. Thirdly, it maintains Alberta's position as the jurisdiction with the most ineffective environmental protection scheme in the developed world. Finally, it misses the opportunity to transition our province toward a truly renewable and green future. Any one of these flaws on its own is a matter of grave concern to ordinary Albertans. Combined they leave Alberta families with no hope that they will be able to ride out the economic storm we are entering.

This government seems to believe that if they don't talk about it, maybe it just won't happen. They acknowledge in words that Alberta is not immune to the economic crisis that the world finds itself in, but they do absolutely nothing to mitigate the circumstances. Mr. Speaker, Alberta had 5,700 job losses in January alone. In the two days since this session opened, we had 240 more workers given pink slips, with nothing more than expressions of regret from the Premier. Of course, those are only the ones that happened to be reported in the media. These men and women don't need the government's sympathy; they need a transition strategy. They need to know that their government has a plan to get them back to work in jobs that will provide for their families, that will not force them to look outside of Alberta for work or to have to rely on the social safety net or, as mentioned, resumé-writing classes.

Mr. Speaker, every forecast is that the situation is going to get worse before it gets better. Now, I'm not suggesting that we alone can stop the global economic downturn, but I am suggesting that if we don't admit that we have a problem and begin to use every available resource to address it, then the impacts of a bad situation will be far, far worse.

Mr. Speaker, the old ideas upon which the Tories are relying are the worst of their old ideas. The government plans to invest everything we have into maintaining Alberta's role as the nonrenewable fossil fuel dealer for the American oil addiction. Nowhere is this more clear than in the government's provincial energy strategy released last December, a document that clearly informed Tuesday's throne speech.

This government's strategy is flawed in a number of ways. For one, it assumes that Alberta will benefit from the U.S. administration's desire to gain independence from overseas oil importers, but at the same time it fails to discuss at all the risk that the U.S. will abandon Alberta's future oil exports on the basis of environmental costs. What this government refuses to recognize is that our biggest customer for our major retail item is not as sure that it wants it anymore. Mr. Speaker, even McDonald's was forced to sell salads when the market for Big Mac sales dropped off. The U.S. has said that they may not want our oil if it comes with a huge environmental price tag and will be working towards a system that demands less. All environmental arguments aside, this should put fear into the heart of the President of the Treasury Board.

This government's plan is for nonrenewable fossil fuel exports to be the primary focus of our investment strategies at least to 2040. Let me read directly from the provincial energy strategy, page 15:

For Alberta in the coming 30 years, no other activities will have the scale or impact of energy development. Agriculture and other sectors are important to Alberta and diversification is good for us, but energy's impact is pervasive. It is, and will be, our province's dominant economic engine.

Clearly, Mr. Speaker, inherent in this statement is the dismissal of the concept of meaningful economic diversification strategies.

Not only are diversification strategies being ignored, but the government plans to focus the education of Albertans to support this unsustainable vision. On page 17 of the Alberta energy strategy the government writes:

The energy sector has endured periods where it was not among students' top choices when it came to choosing careers. This is unfortunate and must be addressed given that Alberta's future will be shaped around energy. We need to bring more people into the industry at all levels in order to fully tap the opportunities in years to come [through our education system].

In short what this says is that this government wants to spend taxpayers' dollars educating young Albertans to take on a career in an industry with no long-term sustainability because that's what their friends in big oil want. What about what's best for Albertans and, in particular, for the young people of Alberta?

To further support this fossil fuel energy future they are seeking, they want Albertans to also consider adopting a reliance on nuclear energy. The environmental costs, the safety costs, and the exorbitant costs to taxpayers can't be defended. As well, they fail to note that the world's supply of uranium is set to run out a mere 10 years past their current planning window. In short, this government's vision is to have Albertans become even more dependent on an unsustainable economic plan. They are not only without vision; they have handed out blindfolds to their caucus with matching earplugs.

Now, the third concern we have is that the throne speech seeks in several places to characterize Alberta's efforts of protecting the environment as somehow "showing environmental leadership." Mr. Speaker, this is simply not true. Our environmental protection efforts are an insult to current Albertans and are the true debt this government will leave to future generations. As discussed today in the Legislature, we have no clear, identifiable, enforceable plan to clean up the current tar ponds. We have a greenhouse gas emission control strategy which is laughable when compared to the federal scheme, which is itself a black eye for Canada on the international stage. We have a regulatory scheme premised on self-policing and self-reporting, and we have a penalty scheme which has no deterrent effect and which might even turn into a tax writeoff for the affected corporations if creative sentencing becomes an element. Make no mistake: in the same way we are now paying for the infrastructure deficit left by this Premier's predecessor, this government's irresponsible environmental stewardship will be the debt that our children and grandchildren will have to pay.

Finally, the throne speech is bereft of new ideas or initiatives to face the growing challenges about to confront Albertans. Indeed, by my calculation the only component of the throne speech that had not already been announced to the public and/or discussed in this Legislature was the creation of a two-day arts festival in September. Art is good, but unfortunately the throne speech missed a very important opportunity of our time, and that is the opportunity to make an investment of resources, technology, and most importantly, political will into an economy based on renewable energy.

Again I quote from excerpts of the provincial energy strategy. It says that this government only recognized the potential for renewable energy to become part of our mix some time "this century," and doesn't believe it could replace fossil fuels "any time soon." Well, I have a news flash for them: renewable energy plays a significant part of energy use and production in a number of developed countries now. It is deeply disappointing to see the government so shockingly out of touch with this fact.

A recent report released by the Pembina Institute shows how it's possible, if we start now, to entirely replace coal from our electricity energy mix within 20 years. They aren't proposing some sort of knee-jerk, all-or-nothing, get-it-done-yesterday approach but, rather, a measured phase-in of renewable energies, but it is phase-in that has to start now with investment now. They believe in a full transition that can be made in 20 years, well before the end of the 40-year window that this government is looking at. Yet none of the inspiring and exciting opportunities that were identified in that report have found their way into the government's plans for the future.

By the way, Mr. Speaker, anyone who is in tune with the conversation throughout the world knows that we aren't going to have a choice in the matter. The world is demanding that we do our part to clean up the environment, and sooner rather than later we will have an economy that is based on renewable energy. The question is: do we wait until we're forced into it, or will we be leading the way?

Now, the added benefit to an investment in the transition to a green economy, of course, is the massive job creation that comes along with it. In an economic climate where layoff announcements are becoming commonplace, wouldn't investment in real jobs that will take us into the future be a no-brainer? For instance, a recent U.S. study showed that the U.S. solar industry had the potential to create almost half a million jobs in that country by 2016, and these were in comparison to the 79,000 jobs in coal mining and the 136,000 jobs in oil and gas extraction.

The combination of no new ideas and their stubborn reliance on fossil fuels to the exclusion of all else means that this government insists on proceeding with what will likely go down in history as perhaps one of the biggest boondoggles ever: their $2 billion investment in carbon capture and storage, slash, giving lots of money to their friends in oil and gas. Now, this plan was referenced in the Pembina report, but in so doing, it was clearly shown to be the most expensive option of those being considered, and this is within the context of most experts acknowledging that the effectiveness and the sustainability of the technology is not yet proven. At a time when money is short, the lost opportunity this scheme represents to Albertans is a cost that grows at exponential rates.

Mr. Speaker, the government's plan for Alberta as outlined in Tuesday's throne speech is very disturbing. It shows no innovative thinking, relies on the very, quote, the market will take care of us, unquote, economic principle that caused the downturn, and fails to take advantage of obvious opportunities that are under our noses; that is, when it recognizes that there is any problem whatsoever.

I fear that if this is all we have to offer, Mr. Speaker, everyday Albertans are in for a much rougher ride over the next several years than they need to be. All around us governments are acting to help people through their tough times. They are investing in new economies and creating real jobs for people so that they can make sure that their families' needs are met. The only hope this government offers, however, is that oil prices will rebound. Well, we've all seen how unreliable the markets can be, and it's foolhardy to rely on them for our answer.

Regular Albertans are looking for government leadership, and I suggest that it is time this government showed some. Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to ask the member a question. During the 1990s there was an NDP government in Saskatchewan. This government allowed oil production around the Estevan-Weyburn area to keep on going. In fact, that's how it balanced its budget largely. I'm wondering how she feels about her own party's development of oil and gas when it is in power?

Ms Notley: I have no difficulty with the development of oil and gas, but they were not developing in the tar sands, and they were not doing that development to the exclusion of the rest of their economy. I would also point to Manitoba, where they have the greatest level of nonrenewable energy production ongoing.

Ultimately, it's a question of dealing with what we're faced with now, and what we're faced with now in 2009 is much different than what all of us were faced with in the mid-90s. There are threats to our environment. There is no tar pond the size of the city of Saskatoon in Saskatchewan, but there is one in Alberta. I would suggest that probably if the NDP had to deal with a tar pond the size of the city of Saskatoon in Saskatchewan, they probably would have, but it hasn't been done here. We need to move forward dealing with the real, long-term environmental costs that our current strategy is creating because they are liabilities. On a balance sheet they are real and they will cost us and we will pay for them. The longer we wait, the more expensive it will become. So it's irresponsible to suggest that it's not an issue. That's my short answer.

The Speaker: Others?

Then the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Despite what I just heard, I still rise today with a renewed sense of optimism, vigour, and pride. I have pride in having the distinguished pleasure of representing the hard-working and industrious citizens of Calgary-North Hill. I have the pride of working with a diverse, passionate, and dedicated caucus, whose discussions and deliberations of the most challenging issues in our province today are done on behalf of their constituents with tenacity and humility, all along being mindful of a role as being good stewards for this great province for younger generations.

Our Premier is a man of extraordinary vision, someone who fails to fall into the trap of regressive thinking during challenging times. He is a steady hand at the wheel of the ship in turbulent times. When others retreat, he has the optimism to search for the light at the end of the tunnel, the beacon of hope that all Albertans aspire to. He has the dogged determination to push forward to establish this province's place in the new world paradigm when the negativity of others is enough to stop progress dead in its tracks.

On February 10, this past Tuesday, Mr. Speaker, people from across the world and this great country, including the hon. Premiers from P.E.I. and Nova Scotia, were exposed to the blueprint of this extraordinary vision, a foundation of moving forward that rests on the pillars of confidence, optimism, and strength. As always, His Honour the Lieutenant Governor delivered this vision with humour, dignity, compassion, and conviction, exemplifying what it means to be Albertan.

The new Leader of the Official Opposition is a very intelligent and compassionate man. Yesterday we were exposed to his different hallucination, which was full of pessimism, negativity, and uninspiring and unconstructive rhetoric. For an intelligent individual I find it puzzling that he referred to the current global economic situation as simply a need to prepare for a healthier, more diverse legacy for tomorrow's children, an Alberta in which a bust in the oil and gas sector does not lead inevitably to recession in the province. We could be so much more than the world's gas station.

I'm so disappointed on behalf of all Albertans and on behalf of my constituents that he thinks of Alberta as the world's gas station.

For a compassionate individual I also found his antihope message depressing and frustrating, and I think we've heard more of that today. His comments: "Our long-term prospects are uncertain. I would say they are dim. Please do not dismiss this as partisan, radical rhetoric. I believe this at a very deep level." Now, I would suggest to all members of the opposition that just the mere mention of the name "Obama" doesn't necessarily mean that you bring hope to all Albertans.

Then he went on to say: "We cannot have unlimited growth and pristine environments. We cannot have genuine progress without genuine sacrifice. We cannot have the lowest taxes in the country and the best public services in the land." I would suggest that we can and that we will if we work together. That's the attitude that Albertans want to see in their government, and it is in stark contrast to the Premier's Speech from the Throne that was delivered by the hon. Lieutenant Governor on February 10. Take the first few paragraphs of the throne speech, and we'll see that contrast, phrases that reference individual Albertans as dreamers who see opportunity here, that talk about the collective Albertans that "will emerge from adversity even stronger than before" and that "face the future with confidence and optimism."

Well, I do understand the challenges and trials that have emerged over the last few months, and I express my sincere condolences to those that have been negatively affected by the global economic crisis here in Alberta and right across the world. While expressing this sorrow, I do so with great gratitude and appreciation. I will not apologize for the success of this province. Our wealth and security is not a circumstance of dumb luck. Such an assertion is an insult to the people of this great province, to my constituents, who have secured a bright future for this province through hard work, innovation, and sacrifice.

As we move forward in these uncertain times, we must face the challenges with unwavering confidence, a confidence that over the last 15 years of sacrifice and prudent investment has placed Alberta in the enviable position of being able to stay the course through tough decisions and sacrifices of all Albertans right across this great province in the 1990s. This was done by a vision and desire to create an Alberta where we don't have to sacrifice the wealth and opportunity of future generations to deal with the issues of the day. The current environment is proof that these decisions were tough but necessary. Where other jurisdictions are struggling to balance their budgets and provide services to citizens, debt service payments can have a real limiting effect.

In the last 15 years, particularly over the last several years, this government has been investing substantially in the infrastructure that Albertans demand. The current capital plan supports $22.2 billion in capital spending, an average of $7.4 billion per year, which is three times the average of Canadian provinces. In 2008-2009 this province, this government will spend over $8.7 billion, or about $2,460 per person, on capital projects, compared to just a paltry $726 throughout the rest of Canada. While other governments are finally talking about infrastructure investment under the guise of economic stimulus, this government has been doing it because Albertans demanded it and because it's the right thing to do. Not only has this government made tough, prudent decisions and invested in infrastructure; this government has also been saving for the future. The sustainability fund helps protect government programs and infrastructure spending plans from unexpected drops in revenue, costs of emergencies and disasters, which sits at $7 billion.

Now, I know that many Albertans today are very thankful for such a fund. The capital account, which currently sits at approximately $6 billion, has allowed us to continue with our capital infrastructure plans. Again, at times when government revenue is not as stable and not as certain, we can continue on with our plans and not have to go into debt like so many jurisdictions, putting the burden of today's decisions on future generations.

The heritage savings trust fund: to provide prudent stewardship of the savings from Alberta's nonrenewable resources by providing the greatest financial returns on those savings for current and future generations of Albertans. As of September the value of this fund was $15.8 billion, which is down from the end of last fiscal year, but as we know, there are some current challenges with some of our financial markets, and that's to be expected. This fund is not to be looked at over six-month periods. This is a long-term investment fund that will be there to benefit future generations of Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, I stand here today to suggest that we are in a position to take advantage of the opportunities that we have as a result of past prudence in investment, and our Premier has laid out a vision for this: to place Alberta as a leader in Canada and across the world. This is a relatively new world, a new world of increased trade and investment, of the liberalization of trade and investment, an increased concern for the environment, and an increased focus on securing energy for quality of life and economic sustainability and growth.

Mr. Speaker, over the Christmas holidays I decided to do some reading and exercising at the same time. You might not be able to tell, but I did. I picked up the November issue of Policy Options from the Institute for Research on Public Policy. It was a postmortem on the federal election, and in one of the articles Charles McMillan, a professor of international business at York University, made these comments about globalization and in reference to the past federal election. He said:

Even a casual perusal of party platforms during the last election shows that most politicians are thinking in terms of the late 1980s or 1990s. Critical 21st-century issues such as education and training as a lifelong pursuit, broadband and Internet access, excelling in new environmental and energy technologies, demographics and immigration policies, and cultivating Canadian companies in trade and high technology so they can sell in overseas markets were not on the political radar screen.

Mr. Speaker, I stand here today to suggest that our Premier must have read this before he developed the Speech from the Throne and the blueprint for this year's legislative agenda because I believe that in the Speech from the Throne he addressed all of these issues, putting Alberta into the 21st century and into this new world, where we can be leaders, where people are looking to us. One could easily make the argument that the current economic situation is a natural consequence of this shifting new-world paradigm, a reality check to ensure that our decisions are prudent and account for the long-term sustainability of our fundamental natural, economic, and governance systems in society.

This current situation calls out for leadership, and through the vision of our Premier our province is stepping up to the plate. Our Premier has delivered a vision where we don't talk about the economy, the environment, energy in silos, where these are parallel issues that affect all Albertans, all Canadians, and everybody right across the world. He has set out an aggressive agenda to deal with breaking down trade barriers through the trade, investment, and labour mobility act. Such policies are examples of where this country and this world can go to break down the barriers to make quality of life for individuals that want to trade or practise their own profession in different parts of not just this country but the world.

Personally I have been fortunate to represent this great province at the Pacific Northwest Economic Region table. I had the great fortune to travel to both the state capitals in Oregon and Washington, and the message was clear that people see Alberta as an opportunity, a beacon of hope in this current economic situation. They see Alberta as someone to partner with. Our message is clear to them that we're going to do this in a way that's responsible to all citizens and to the environment.

On the environment part our Premier has shown great leadership, and to anyone who wants to argue that Alberta is not a leader in this field, I would suggest otherwise. The $2 billion investment into carbon capture and storage is something that is unprecedented across the globe. [Mr. Fawcett's speaking time expired]

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you. I was just wondering if the hon.

member could finish what he was saying there. I was listening very intently, and I missed that last little bit. If he could just complete that for me, I'd appreciate it.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you. I appreciate that. I know that the Member for Lethbridge-West knows that I'm never at a loss for words.

I was just saying that this government has taken significant initiative on the environmental side. Carbon capture and storage: unprecedented investment. The regulatory system of capping greenhouse gas emissions for large industrial emitters: again, not one jurisdiction on this continent has done that. That's leadership, folks, and anybody who says otherwise must be dreaming. I don't know. I just don't get it.

You look at some of the energy strategies that have come forward: the recently released report on oil sands development, the provincial energy strategy. Weaving through all of those is the ability that we as Albertans can effect change through action, through harvesting our energy resources and making sure that they're valuable for others across this great globe in a way that's responsible and environmentally friendly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to thank my friend the Member for Calgary-North Hill – I got it right this time – for such an invigorating speech, but I wanted to ask him one question. Like him, I represent a largely inner-city constituency in Calgary. I'm wondering what he thinks about the government's safe communities plan and plan to deal with crime in our cities.

Mr. Fawcett: I think it's a very good plan. I think it's a comprehensive plan that deals with some of the major challenges around organized crime, that uses a number of tools. What I particularly like most about this government's plan is that it invests money in developing community-based solutions. I believe, unlike other members of this Assembly, that the government can't be everything to everybody and that security and safety in our own communities rests mainly as a responsibility in the hands of the people that live in those communities. We will do our part as a government, I believe, to support them in doing that. I think that if we can use what tools are at our disposal to assist them, we have a great strategy for making sure that people feel comfortable and safe.

The Speaker: Others?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-West and then the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to be able to rise and respond for the 13th time to the throne speech. I want to say what a gift I think this is and how much I view my ability to represent the people of Edmonton-Centre as a great honour and also a great gift. It's a job that I enjoy doing, particularly because of the constituents that I represent.

Now, I am very fortunate in being able to represent the fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre, which, in fact, has the Legislature Building as part of it. We have some wonderful infrastructure in this constituency: a baseball park, the downtown area, Grant MacEwan College. We've got the beginning of the LRT; please, dear God, we get more of it. There are a number of wonderful places to visit in this constituency: the arts district, various recreational opportunities through the river valley park system. But, really, for me the most joyous part of it is representing the individuals that live here.

I, as always, have consulted my constituents through a variety of means to solicit their views on what they wanted me to bring forward and look for in the throne speech but also to speak about in response to the throne speech. I've had an additional honour in that being named a deputy leader, I've heard from people outside of my constituency and from across Alberta that also wanted me to talk about some things.

If we may, Mr. Speaker, I'm just going to back off to the 10,000-foot level and speak more generally about some of the issues that people have identified as being really key. I have to say that jockeying for first position are the environment, particularly water, and the economy. In fact, I think that's appropriate because the two things are very much tied together in this province. That is our legacy: trying to find that balance between where we put an emphasis on economic development versus our incredible natural environment.

I have been very amused and have taken great delight in listening to the last couple of days' worth of responses to the throne speech and listening to a number of the members on the government side talking about the fabulous sustainability fund. I recognize that most of these members are new to the Assembly, but I cannot tell you the immense satisfaction I take in knowing that, in fact, this was an idea that was developed and brought forward by the then Leader of the Official Opposition, Dr. Ken Nicol. At the time the proposition that we brought forward as part of our Official Opposition position was met with hoots and howls of derision, snorts of disdain. "Oh, my goodness; what a stupid idea," they all said. And here we are years later with newly minted backbenchers crowing in delight of exactly that idea.

Now, granted, there is a significant difference, Mr. Speaker. We called it a stability fund, and the current government calls it a sustainability fund. I'll admit that that's a significant difference. Aside from that, it's the Liberal idea, lock, stock, and barrel. You're welcome to go and check it out in any of our documents from the time. So I take some delight in that.

The second thing that I keep hearing about as I hear my hon. members on the opposite side make their responses to the throne speech is the plan, the great plans for the future that they see inside of the throne speech. Again, another idea brought forward, pounded forward every day by members of the Official Opposition. Where was the plan? Exactly what was the plan? Where were the performance measurements? How did we measure this? Day after day after day after day. Again, howls of derision, snorts of disdain. How dare we? If I've got the quote right, "Only a Liberal would want to plan" was the insult that was thrown back at us. Indeed, only a Liberal would want to plan. So I thank you very much for the accolades that have come our way indirectly from the members of the backbench when they talk about how impressed they are with the plan.

The environment and the economy. You know, one of the other things I've noticed is in some cases a sort of petulant demand from some of my hon. members opposite that the Liberals insist on telling everybody exactly what it is that we would cut from the budget. If we can't do that, then we should just put up or shut up, and since we can't put up, then the obvious should follow. An interesting idea, but I would have expected a bit more support, then, from those very same members for our proposal that was brought forward in Members' Services to get additional funding to help us do research because, to be honest with you, we're a little short-staffed on that side of things.

Two things I would like to improve but am unable to do so at the time. One is research support to help us be able to go through things like the budget documents and pick out those kinds of numbers or those particular programs that we felt should go on a list of things to be reviewed and perhaps cut or eliminated. More than that, I'd like to get more information. I've been watching budget documents for 13 years now, and I have to say there's less information available in budget documents today than there was 10 or 12 or 15 years ago. I went back to '92-93, and the amount of information that was available in those budget documents is significantly more than what's available to us today. So when there's a demand and a little stamping of feet that they want to know exactly what programs we'd like to cut, I'd like to help them, but frankly that's very difficult to do. Perhaps they'd like to work on my behalf and correct those two oversights. We have seven research support staff now to do 24 ministries and five policy field committees, so that's a heck of a lot of work.

A couple of other pieces around the economy. I think it's important to point out – and I represent a lot of small businesspeople in downtown Edmonton – how important it is to recognize those small businesses as major drivers of our economy. We do tend to look at those monolithic structures, those huge organizations, but still in Alberta and across Canada it's small- and medium-sized businesses that really provide most of the jobs for people.

I urge the government to go back and look, to try – they had a red tape commission, and once again we never heard what came out of it. I never saw what was being reduced or done. [interjection] Well, yeah, supposedly that was a plan, but it's a plan that doesn't exist if you don't share it with the rest of the people. So I'm wondering again what is being done and what is in this throne speech for my small businesspeople and small businesspeople across the province.

We are at a really interesting point in Alberta here. We have an economic entity in the oil sands. Various deals have been struck over the years to have an exchange of money that comes back to Albertans to compensate them for the use of and access to their assets, but I also think that increasingly people feel that there needs to be much stronger environmental protection. It's a challenge to us. I remember a friend once talking about the war on carbon and the fact that it's not so much that our oil and gas reserves will run out – they will. They just get more expensive to produce and get out of the ground. But it's not so much that. The war on carbon is about other people saying that they don't want it anymore. And we may move faster than we expected to a point where that oil and gas, a nonrenewable natural resource, may not be as much of a significant force in our budget as it is today.

I think we need to look very strongly at developing a greener economy and investing in other forms of renewable energy as quickly as possible. We continue to make the same mistake over and over and over again. Peter Lougheed nailed it: we have to diversify our economy. That was 35 years ago that he said that, and frankly we haven't gone very far down the road to diversify that economy. So that is a continuing concern for me.

Perhaps a tightening of economic times will encourage us to be more creative and to look toward investing in some of the renewable energy resources that we can produce here. I'm looking at these tougher economic times and that whole debate about: run a deficit, don't run a deficit, cut, don't cut. What has come back to me from the people that have contacted me is that we need to be careful to maintain an investment in certain things. What's the criteria on that? I think the criteria is: if we don't invest in this now and continue to invest in this given entity, will we be in better or worse shape when we come out of this economic recession? I think the areas that we need to continue to invest in include infrastructure for two reasons. One, because it is a stimulus for the economy; it is jobs for our citizens. Also, we need that infrastructure when we come out of this. If we don't continue to invest in it and to have bridges and public transportation and municipal buildings ready, we will truly be in a challenging place when the economy starts to pick up on us and we the government have not been able to provide that infrastructure that we need to really move forward. So infrastructure is one.

Health, clearly. For those of us that have dealt with these issues recently, if you don't have health, you have nothing. All the money in the world means nothing to you if you are ill or dying. It means nothing. We really have a pressure upon us to provide our citizens with the best possible health care.

Beyond that, I think we need to have the discussion with our citizens and encourage them to have the discussion about what kind of health care. How far? What is the continuum of health care that they expect us to provide? There are trade-offs involved in that. You can't expect citizens to be happy with the result that's handed to them if they didn't get to be involved in the discussion, and I think we need to have a discussion. When I watch some of the public discussions they have in Holland, I'm amazed. I mean, they actually had a public discussion that went on for several years on euthanasia and came to a decision on it. That's their societal expectation, that's what they've set down as a policy, and they all bought into it. Pretty brave. I wish we could get closer to that because I think that in some ways we set ourselves up in that we don't allow the citizens to have that discussion about exactly how much health care is enough.

I would also challenge the minister of health, as I have before, rather than saying "This is how much money we're going to spend on health care; make everybody healthy for that amount of money," to say "How healthy do we want people to be? What are the benchmarks that we want to hit? What kind of delivery of programs are acceptable to us?" and then fund to that. That also includes that discussion with the citizens; that's a part of that.

I think we have to continue to invest in education and in children. No question. I would also argue that investment in the arts – okay, it's near and dear to my heart, so sue me, but I think an investment in arts and culture continues to have a considerable payback. We know it's between $3 and $7 for every dollar invested.

I think that there's also a role of government to provide what no corporation will provide unless there's a profit that comes out of it. That's areas like protection of vulnerable people; housing, particularly around mental illnesses services and programming; seniors; and AISH. One of the people that contacted me was really concerned because her son is on AISH. She's experiencing a situation where AISH will subsidize this fellow for a bus pass but they won't subsidize him for a DATS pass. Well, lots of people on AISH require a DATS pass, so this is an interesting discrimination. I would ask the government to look to this, and I'll also provide additional documentation to the relevant minister. Honestly, that's one of the areas that needs to be looked at. [Ms Blakeman's speaking time expired]

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was just wanting to learn more about what the views of the Member for Edmonton-Centre are on the throne speech.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. One of the other areas that I have had a significant amount of correspondence on – and if I have, everybody has – is around seniors' unhappiness with the plans for changes in pharmaceuticals and in long-term care and assisted living. I've had a lot of correspondence, and people have phoned me on it. There is a real sense there that middle-income seniors, particularly on a fixed middle income, are being dinged in a way that they did not expect. They feel it's unfair and it's a breaking of that contract with them of what they expected to be available to them when they retired.

Let's face it. I mean, the government has always looked after truly vulnerable, disadvantaged, bottom of the heap, absolutely no- or little-income seniors. They always have. This is now adding to it a small number of other seniors that are equally low income. But, you know, my mother has a teacher's pension. She would get covered and be paying full freight on this one for a fairly small teacher's pension, and she's some 20 years into it. So this is a real concern for seniors.

I think the other issue that is of real interest and concern here is the relationship with the municipalities. I am bringing forward Bill 204 later in the session, which I hope will provoke a discussion – well, I know it will provoke something – about how we fund municipalities. I'm asking the government to consider allocating a portion of income and corporate tax directly to the municipalities for them to use in their operating funding because they're being expected to carry a lot of the load, and they do not have access to the same amount of funding in order to do that.

I'd also like to see the status of Edmonton as the capital city upheld. I know that when a lot of my colleagues from the government side were elected in Edmonton, somehow Edmonton was to be highlighted again. I would argue that that's happening less and less. Increasingly press conferences and big announcements happen just about anywhere but Edmonton, and this is the capital city. The Legislature Building is here in the fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre, and I think that the respect that is due this institution and this building should be upheld.

I've had a lot of feedback on that from people, as well as on the Legislature Grounds renewal themselves, which is a project that has now, I think, been tried 12 times, three times to my knowledge. We have an opportunity here to create a real jewel of a building and of a Legislature grounds, and I hope that the members will support the plan when it comes forward. It could be quite fabulous, and I hope it will be, but thus far all other attempts have failed because it didn't have the support of the very members that are elected to sit in this House.

Those are some of the issues that I wanted to raise in addition. Thank you for the question, Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

The final issue is around support and stabilization for the not-for-profit associations, that we depend on so much to deliver many of the programs that government, in fact, is legislated to provide. At this point they need some stabilization. They need contracts to be written with cost-of-living increases in them and some sort of wage parity for their staff.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Other questions?

Then I'll recognize the hon. Member for Lethbridge-West, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for this opportunity to address the Chamber and express my commitments to the plan for Alberta set forth by His Honour the Lieutenant Governor in his Speech from the Throne on Tuesday. Over the past year I have appreciated the opportunity to serve the citizens of Lethbridge in this Assembly, work with our great Premier and this wonderful group of colleagues that I have here.

I can't help but think back to a year ago, when oil prices were at a record high and our economy was white hot. Of course, we know now what a difference a year can make in light of the global uncertainty. Oil prices have dropped lower than anyone could have predicted, but our future remains bright under the steady direction of this government. Mr. Speaker, while we are not immune to the impacts of the global economic conditions, Alberta is still the envy of much of the world. Today we're seen as an example of how smart policy and wealth management can weather an economic storm and even take advantage of the downturn. Thanks to policies put in place by this government years ago to eliminate our net debt and thanks to our unswerving commitment to saving and reinvesting Alberta's wealth, we are in a perfect position for continued prosperity in today's global economy.

Mr. Speaker, it is evident in His Honour's Speech from the Throne that this government is committed to marketing our energy resources to economies around the world while at the same time continuing to expand and diversify our economy. I believe my hometown of Lethbridge is a perfect example of the diversity that can strengthen our economy. As you know, Lethbridge is less dependent on the energy sector than most cities in Alberta. We are known as an agricultural city serving farm communities from Pincher Creek to Taber, north to Claresholm, and all the way to the U.S. border. We are the irrigation capital of Canada and are committed to farmers, livestock producers, and the food processors who turn it all into the food we can eat every day.

I was pleased at this government's continuing support of these areas as a priority in the Speech from the Throne, particularly the livestock and meat strategy, but Lethbridge is much more than just a farm town. Light manufacturing is the foundation of our industrial sector. We are also home to a thriving retail and hospitality sector. Lethbridge is the hub of shopping and entertainment for many rural areas surrounding the city. As a small businessman myself I know that small business is the engine that drives southern Alberta and the entire Alberta economy. Support for and from this sector will be critical to Lethbridge and Alberta's continued prosperity. We rely on small business and Lethbridge alone to generate 8,000 jobs, and small business in turn relies on us to buy locally. As Lethbridge Chamber of Commerce's Dennis Hatt put it last fall, as long as everyone continues to spend locally, Lethbridge and Alberta will make it through these tough times relatively unscathed.

Lethbridge is also world renowned as a hub of advanced education and research, which I believe is another driving force behind our diverse economy in Lethbridge and Alberta. I'd be willing to bet that my city has more PhDs per capita than any other city in Alberta. University of Lethbridge president Bill Cade likes to refer to Lethbridge as a smart city, and I agree one hundred per cent. We're home to two world-class agricultural research centres and two excellent postsecondary institutions. It's no exaggeration to say that U of L is a leader in the areas of behavioural neuroscience, water conservation, and much more. At the same time, Mr. Speaker, Lethbridge College is taking a lead in wind power. The school recently became the first institution in North America to offer wind turbine technician training in addition to its many other programs.

Obviously, this is the kind of work referred to in the research and innovation act mentioned in His Honour's speech, and I believe this government will continue to support that attitude of staying on the cutting edge. Research and postsecondary education will continue to provide Albertans with local opportunities to advance their skills and remain competitive in today's economy, and I expect both the U of L and Lethbridge College to see increased enrolment over the coming semesters.

Mr. Speaker, I'm sure my constituents were also encouraged by the promotion of the arts in Alberta. Lethbridge may not be a big city, but we have a thriving arts community that would be the envy of a city twice our size. I know that many of these folks, particularly on the city's allied arts council, will be impressed with the government's efforts to boost arts across Alberta.

As a senior-friendly community, Mr. Speaker, Lethbridge has also been a leader in seniors' care, and I'm encouraged by the Supportive Living Accommodation Licensing Act put forward in His Honour's speech. I firmly believe that we must continue to do everything that we can to give Alberta seniors a level of care they deserve when it's needed and where it's needed, and long-term sustainable support for seniors' drop-in centres is critical to their long-term viability. I'm proud that some of the initiatives being considered by Alberta Health Services are based on models developed in my home area.

Mr. Speaker, I was also encouraged to see this government's commitment to continue with infrastructure projects throughout Alberta. There is the obvious benefit of job creation, but at the same time we can use this opportunity to update aging structures and build much-needed new ones at a time when costs are lower and prepare for future growth, which we know will come. In Lethbridge I know that a number of infrastructure projects are eagerly awaited, including building new schools and renovating the old ones.

Mr. Speaker, this is truly an historic time in Alberta. We're facing our first economic challenge since wiping out the debt and creating our sustainability fund, and we are being put to the test. Global economic conditions are putting incredible pressure on Canada and Alberta, but I have every confidence that this government's policies – past, present, and future – will allow us not only to survive global uncertainty but to thrive in it. I believe that this government will continue to be innovative and think outside the box in our quest to maintain that excellent quality of life we enjoy here in Alberta, and I believe the can-do attitude that built this province from the ground up will continue to sustain us as it always has in the past. To repeat something I said last year in my maiden speech – and I believe it even more relevant today – when all Albertans work together towards a common goal, there is nothing we can't accomplish.

Mr. Speaker, I believe the perfect example of that attitude is Lethbridge's own High Level Bridge. As many of you know, it's the highest and longest bridge of its kind in the world. When it was built, at the turn of the century, it was a true marvel of both engineering and sheer willpower, built by brave folks who understood the value of what they were doing. There were no guarantees about the future of that bridge, but those men and women understood that it needed to be built. This year Lethbridge is celebrating the hundredth anniversary of that High Level Bridge with a number of community events, including conferences, tournaments, and community parties. I doubt that the folks who built that bridge could have possibly imagined that their handiwork would not only be standing today but would still be used for its original purpose: to speed trains across the expanse of the Oldman River and increase the efficiency of the railroad.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to take this opportunity to invite the members of this House and everyone in Alberta to make Lethbridge a destination this year, see this great steel monument of innovation, iron will, and hard work. When they see it, I hope they will take some time to ask themselves this question: if Albertans could build something like this a hundred years ago with only the tools available at the time, with all our resources and ingenuity what incredible feats could we accomplish today for our future generations?

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciated the discussion going on today, wide-ranging issues. I wanted to start with an issue that I've not heard raised in this Assembly before but that I think is appropriate to raise when we're discussing a throne speech, and it goes to the structure of our government. Now, my comments are not in any way meant as a reflection on the performance of the Lieutenant Governor or the Governor General or the Royal Family or anything like that. Frankly, I think it's time for us to begin a discussion of whether we want to continue in this country under the form of a constitutional monarchy, that leads to the process through which we actually have a throne speech. I'm just beginning to open this up to get people to think about it before I shift to other comments.

Through my life I've always been a loyal and supportive monarchist, so up until the last year the idea of a Speech from the Throne was to me not only something to debate and something to look at the government's agenda but also was a sort of charming and delightful and functional process of our government. In the past year I've found myself actually questioning the wisdom of our country continuing to be governed under the Queen of England. I suppose a year ago I would have been surprised to even hear myself say this, but I am increasingly coming to the mind that we need to replace the monarchy with some other form of government if we are to actually fulfill our destiny as a nation.

I think that having a Speech from the Throne, i.e. from Her Majesty's representative, continues somehow to reflect and inject a sense of colonialism into our society and into this Chamber. I think that we're at a point in our nation's history that we should open the debate again about whether it isn't time for us to move beyond being a constitutional monarchy and move towards having a structure of government in which the monarchy in Britain is replaced by something that's actually Canadian. I think that would be an important psychological step for our fulfilling our destiny as a nation. So I open up a little discussion there, which may or may not go anywhere.

I was disappointed in the contents of the throne speech. I don't think that'll be a great surprise to anybody. I am concerned that the government is not showing any great foresight in terms of anticipating where we need to be going. I am concerned, when I go through the throne speech, that this government is not taking the necessary steps to secure the long-term future of this province.

I'm going to start by just talking briefly about spending. This is an issue that I've raised many times. I actually began raising this concern, I think, when I was first elected as an MLA. It was certainly a consistent theme when I was Leader of the Opposition, and it will remain that way because I believe it. We as a Legislative Assembly year after year approve budgets and approve the plans laid out in the throne speech that in the long term are not sustainable. Last fall we had the Premier of the province saying in this Assembly that we have the highest spending, lowest taxing government in Canada. He said it with great pride, and he's right, but there's a problem with that. That's going to catch up to us, Mr. Speaker. There's just no way around it. If we don't begin addressing those issues, there's going to be a very, very rude awakening for the people of Alberta and for future members of this Assembly.

I was particularly disappointed in the throne speech when there was absolutely no mention of what I think was the most important document to come out of government in the last year, and that was the Mintz report. I thought, in fact, that the whole handling of the Mintz report was indicative of this government's bad attitude toward addressing the fundamentals of Alberta's sustainability. I don't know how many members of this Assembly have read the Mintz report, but everybody should. You should read it carefully because it lays out in very careful detail and very thorough analysis the fact that this spending and tax regime that we have in this province is not going to work, that if we continue to spend and proceed in the way we are, there is a foreseeable point, as the Mintz report points out, where there will need to be a 40 per cent increase in taxes in Alberta. It's not going to work, Mr. Speaker, and there is nothing in the throne speech to give me any sense that that issue is being addressed.

When I look at the spending and behaviour patterns of this government compared to other provinces, I'm left astonished. We are spending – and the Premier freely admits it – far higher than other provinces. We're spending, I believe, 23 per cent higher than the average of other provinces. It's even more astonishing when you compare to other have provinces. You go to British Columbia; we are spending 28 per cent per capita higher than British Columbia. Now, it'll all get thrown back at me: well, where would you cut? You know, talking out of both sides of my mouth because we want to have strong public health care and good education and so on. But my point is this: where's the management of this money?

You go to B.C., and – you know what? – B.C.'s highways are actually pretty good. You look at the rankings of universities, and the UBC consistently ranks higher than any of Alberta's universities. You look at their provincial parks. You know what? They're a heck of a lot nicer than ours. You look at their environmental standards. You look at things like B.C.'s pharmacare program: considerably more comprehensive than Alberta's. They deliver public auto insurance. They actually own their own electrical company. They manage to do all of that at a standard that across the board is comparable to Alberta's – some places a little higher, some places a little lower – but they do it spending 28 per cent less per citizen. That raises a really big question: where's the value-for-money issue in this throne speech? It doesn't exist. It's like it hasn't dawned on the members of this government that we need to pay closer attention to how we're spending money.

There's a Chinese proverb, Mr. Speaker, that goes something like this: "Govern a great nation as you would cook a small fish." I think it's worth thinking about that for a minute. It tells you that the best way to govern a great nation is to pay close attention to the tiniest details. Cooking a small fish. Those are about the only kind I've ever caught in my life. I'm going ice fishing this coming weekend; maybe I'll have better luck.

Cooking a small fish, you know, you've got to attend to it every minute. You've got to attend to every detail. That's the whole point here. We need a government that has value for money front and centre. We're spending more than we need to. The only people who have real access to this information are the people sitting in the government benches, and it doesn't even appear in the throne speech.

We've heard comments today about how wonderful the government's strategy for savings is. I think that's delusional. If you want to see an effective strategy for savings, of course, Norway is always brought forward. Look at Alaska. Look at a number of countries in the Middle East. You can even look at Russia. They all have more effective strategies for savings than Alberta.

In fact, if you want to ask yourself, "How good is our strategy for savings?" just compare the value of the heritage fund today to what it was 20 years ago. The only long-term savings vehicle we have in this province is the heritage fund. If we have a good strategy for savings, surely you would think that the value of the heritage fund would be increasing. Or even go back to the time, Mr. Speaker, when you were first elected, and go back to the time when the Premier of Alberta was Don Getty. You know what? You'll find that the heritage fund was worth more then than it is today.

Now, we have a sustainability fund, which is a great idea. It's open to some abuse as a slush fund, that I'm not keen on, but at least the sustainability fund is there. That will secure us through this year. There's the capital fund, which is pretty well fully allocated. But the harsh reality is that if we don't get a lot more serious, if we don't take a hard-core value-for-money audit of everything this government does, we're spending our way to a disaster. It's not sustainable. The government's own report, the Mintz report, proves that. I was disappointed and deeply troubled, in fact, that that issue isn't addressed anywhere. There doesn't even seem to be a consciousness of it anywhere on the government benches.

I think, as well, we need to look at how the government moves with booms and busts of the resource cycle. This is a time to be investing in capital expenditure. I think that countercyclical spending is good. We've not done that historically. I'd like to see something more explicit laid out in the throne speech to address that. The fact is that these booms and busts that we go through in Alberta are wasteful. All you need to do is go back 20 years. I can show people the figures for this. You go back to 1986. What was the highest spending government per person in Canada? Well, no surprise there; it was the Alberta government. The year that Peter Lougheed handed the torch to Don Getty, he handed Don Getty the most expensive government in Canada: 1986.

Well, Mr. Getty began cutting, and we all know that Mr. Klein, the next Premier, cut more drastically. So we went from the biggest spending government in the country in 1986 to 1996, when we were spending the lowest per person in the country. We weren't sustaining our infrastructure, and we weren't training the doctors and nurses. We found that that was unsustainable. Move forward to 2006, and who is the biggest spending government in the country again? Us, this government here.

Those kinds of swings are incredibly wasteful. They're wasteful in terms of infrastructure. They're wasteful in terms of the human resources that make a society work. That kind of swinging should be brought to an end. I hope that this government understands that.

Where do we find ourselves now when we surf on these booms and busts and when we don't have a long-term savings strategy? Well, we find ourselves terribly exposed to international swings in oil and gas prices. We're at a point a mere few months after the price of oil dropped and the price of gas dropped. What are we doing? Well, there's a freeze on hiring new cancer treatment doctors, for example. There's a freeze on hiring new positions at the university. We're actually looking at a serious retrenching here. Where was the strategy to protect us from those swings in the value of world petroleum prices? It wasn't there, and we need one, Mr. Speaker.

There is a way to respond to that, and that is to have a long-term strategy to build up the heritage fund to a point where it can generate enough investment income to offset the royalties that come from oil and gas. It's absolutely doable. All kinds of groups have demonstrated that, but somehow this government doesn't get it. I would have been thrilled, Mr. Speaker, to have seen a throne speech that addressed those kinds of issues, a throne speech that said: we are going to review our spending carefully, and we are going to put in place a long-term savings strategy so that the next time the price of petroleum drops, we don't care because we've saved enough to have investment income that offsets it.

Mr. Speaker, I could go on at length, but I'm out of time. I hope I've given some food for thought to the members of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. God bless technology. I was able to listen to the member on the Tannoy, and I'm wondering if he can just expand on the last series of points that he was making.

Thank you.

Dr. Taft: Sure. I'd be thrilled to. I love this 29(2)(a). I was a skeptic of it at one time, but it's actually quite useful.

I think, really, what I wanted to complete saying was just a little bit about a vision of where we could be going, Mr. Speaker, if we had a different kind of strategy. If we had a long-term strategy to build up a savings account to earn enough investment to offset royalties, that would be a huge step forward.

At the same time we need to understand that we have to invest in other resources of this society, the people and the infrastructure. I would have loved to have seen in the throne speech a plan for an endowment for postsecondary education so that we could actually turn Calgary and Edmonton and Lethbridge and Red Deer and every place in this province with a college or a technical school – Grande Prairie, Vermilion, and on and on – into bigger centres of excellence and invest in the one thing that we can be sure will secure the long-term prosperity and vibrancy of Alberta, and that's education. As it is right now, our universities and colleges and technical schools are having to tighten down the hatches because in the last few months the price of oil dropped. It doesn't make sense, and that's not a way to secure our future. We should work to ensure that our postsecondary institutions are independent of those pressures.

We also, of course, will need to attend to the vulnerable at this time. I was working near the front lines of that sector in the 1980s, when the bottom fell out of the economy, and I expect we're going to see this similar pattern in the next year, which is a huge increase in unemployment in Alberta, and that ripples through to family members, to children, to seniors. We need to as a government of conscience make sure that the vulnerable are well taken care of.

I'd suggest that we can rearrange a few priorities, which I questioned last fall. For example, why the heck are we channelling money to golf courses, to semi-private golf courses, or to drag racing strips or to horse racing or to a whole bunch of other things when there are much more severe needs? I think the public would agree with me and would probably get behind any member of this Assembly who says: "You know what? Let the people who drag race their cars pay their own bills. We're going to make sure that seniors who are needy or hungry kids going to school are looked after. That's a core business of government. Supporting golf courses and drag races and so on is not."

Those are a few of my comments, Mr. Speaker, and that's what I would have liked to have seen in the throne speech. Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others with a question? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. One of the concepts that is coming around again is the idea of intergenerational debt. I heard that mentioned in the throne speech, and it's certainly something we heard a lot from the former Premier. Yet I had always found that in the choices that were made by that government, they shifted the debt onto the next generation instantaneously, mostly by affecting postsecondary students in the amount of their tuition fees and the entire set-up of the way their loans were working, the fact that they had to get more commercial loans. Do you see a transfer of debt intergenerationally continuing to happen or happening anew?

Dr. Taft: That was a complicated question, but I think it comes down to understanding that education is an investment not just for the students who are going to university or college or a school but for us as a society. Having a well-educated citizenry is absolutely crucial to being a developed society. If we take that attitude, then we understand that this as an investment, and we don't want to burden the future generation with debt for that investment when we're the ones ourselves who are reaping its benefits. I think we need to be very alert to issues of intergenerational debt transfer, whether it's on education or whether it's in the environment or whether it's on finances.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, before I call on the hon. Minister of Infrastructure, might I just convey thanks to the hon. Minister of Infrastructure for coming into this Assembly between Christmas and New Year's and climbing up there on his big ladders and replacing all the light bulbs. I think they're all functioning today.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and given my fear of heights it was quite a task.

Mr. Speaker, I'm so pleased to be able to rise and respond to the Speech from the Throne today. I feel that even though the time has been shortened and this, in fact, also is my maiden speech, I could have passed off until next week to have done it, but I think it's important to Albertans that we finish today on a very strong and very hopeful note because that's exactly what Albertans are known for, and that's exactly what has been spelled out in our Speech from the Throne. So I'm going to take the few minutes that I have and speak a little bit about that.

The wisdom that I've seen in the Speech from the Throne speaks strongly to me, and it speaks strongly to the people of Drumheller-Stettler. My family has had a long history in that area. Next year we will celebrate the hundredth birthday of our farm. I am so proud of the things that have taken place in this province because of the leadership and because of the wisdom that have been shown throughout the years and that have been shown again in the Speech from the Throne and the directions that we've been taking. My grandson Luke this past year travelled with me on the tractor to go out and look after our livestock, and my grandson Luke is the sixth generation of my family to have done so on our property.

The area and the people of Drumheller-Stettler have so many things to celebrate because of the advantages that this province has brought to them, and this goes way back. I carry a reminder to let me know our place in this world and the significance of the things that we do but also to try and refocus that we have to do the positive things and that it's a big world and that many things have happened and that there have been many challenges that were faced. One of the things that I carry with me is a piece of petrified wood from the Drumheller Valley. One hundred and fifty million years ago it was a tree. At the time that this piece of petrified wood was a tree, tyrannosaurus rex travelled in the valley in Drumheller. Scientists nowadays say that it was a meteorite strike that, in fact, sent them to their extinction, which puts into perspective the difficulties that we face today. Mr. Speaker, I don't find them to be difficulties; I find them to be challenges. As we've gone through time, at about the time the dinosaurs disappeared, the great wealth this province has in the oil industry appeared, and we today are enjoying that.

In my constituency we contribute greatly to that wealth in the province, and the people in my area appreciate it. My constituency is 420 kilometres across, and at the time that I was elected, I represented 28 elected bodies within my constituency. These people have given me a wonderful amount of insight into the things that they would like me to bring forward. They're very free with the information that they give you and with their opinions. Some of my colleagues in this room have relatives down there, and they could attest to that.

They go by a lot of things that they've thought about in the past, and one of the things that I'm always reminded of when I represent them is that they love the area that they're in, and they were the first environmentalists. The reason that we have people clamouring right now to save this pristine environment is because these people have been the environmentalists that saved that pristine environment over the last hundred years, and I thank them for it. Were it not for them, we would have nothing to protect, Mr. Speaker.

It was an anonymous poet that wrote this, but one of my constituents gave it to me many, many years ago to hang on the wall. The poem goes:

Sweet, clean air from east to west
And room to go and come.
I loved my fellow man the best
When he was scattered some.

They still believe that out there, Mr. Speaker. They like their open spaces, they like the pristine environment, and they like living in Alberta.

The Lieutenant Governor closed with: "It is Alberta's people that make our province unique: people who are dynamic and genuine, optimistic and open-minded, people who share the freedom to create and the spirit to achieve." Mr. Speaker, that's what an Albertan is. That's what an Albertan has always been. With that type of guidance and the type of guidance and the groundwork that have been laid out in the Speech from the Throne, Albertans need not fear the future no matter what they hear from some people.

They need to celebrate the past, celebrate the future, and prepare for it because what's happening right now, Mr. Speaker, is a correction globally. As we come out of the correction, because of the good decisions that have been made in the province and this groundwork that's been laid before us, we will come out of this stronger than we have ever come out before, with opportunities for my grandson that no other generation has ever seen. I am extremely optimistic and know and have confidence in the people of Alberta to make the right decisions, to do the right things so that we go forward stronger than we ever have in the past.

The leadership that's been shown has shown so many results, and I've seen them within my community. As I look back through history, right back to a rather significant archaeological dig that was done on my property, I will talk about one other spot in history that I find extremely interesting. Six thousand years ago there was a volcanic eruption in a similar area to where Mount St. Helens took place. As the archaeologists work around the province, they hit an ash layer as they went down, and that ash layer signifies 6,000 years ago. Aboriginal peoples made their living off the land right where I live on the farm going back what they consider to be about 10,000 years ago, so approximately three times as long ago as when the pyramids were created.

This province has in the past, as it does right now, provided the things that people needed. We've seen so many changes. We've seen new approaches. At the time that my great-grandfather and my great-grandmother and my grandfather came to Alberta and homesteaded and went out where there were no trails and used oxen to drag the wagon out into the area, there were no trees where I live right now. Back in the days before the homesteaders came in, the aboriginal people used fire to bring the buffalo back. When the grasses grew old and needed renewal, they actually set strategic fires to burn the grasses away to bring back the green grasses so that the buffalo came to them instead of them trying to search them out.

The Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member. The hon. member should know that he'll be recognized next. He still has seven minutes and 50 seconds to participate in the Speech from the Throne if he so chooses, but the House now stands adjourned until next Tuesday afternoon at 1:30.

[The Assembly adjourned at 4:30 p.m. to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, February 17, 2009

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon and welcome back. I would ask all hon. members to remain standing after prayers so that we may pay tribute to former colleagues who passed away in recent days.

Let us pray. As we commence proceedings today in this Assembly, we ask for divine guidance so that our words and deeds may bring to all people of this great province hope, prosperity, and a vision for the future. Amen.

Mrs. Alice Hanson

May 6, 1927, to February 7, 2009

The Speaker: Hon. members, on February 7, 2009, Mrs. Alice Ann Hanson, former Member of the Legislative Assembly, passed away. Alice Hanson was first elected in the election held June 15, 1993, and served until March 10, 1997. During her years of service she represented the constituency of Edmonton-Highlands-Beverly for the Alberta Liberal Party. During her term of office Alice Hanson served on several select standing committees on Public Accounts, Public Affairs, and Private Bills.

Mr. Nick Dushenski

September 4, 1920, to February 13, 2009

The Speaker: Mr. Nick Dushenski, former Member of the Legislative Assembly, passed away on February 13, 2009, at the age of 88 years. Mr. Dushenski was first elected in the election held August 5, 1952, and served until May 9, 1959. During his years of service he represented the constituency of Willingdon for the Co-operative Commonwealth Federation, or CCF, Party. During his term of office Nick Dushenski served on several select standing committees on Agriculture, Colonization, Immigration and Education; Law Amendments; Municipal Law; Public Accounts; Privileges and Elections; and Railways, Telephones and Irrigation.

With our admiration and respect there is gratitude to members of their families, who shared the burdens of public office. Family members of Alice Hanson are with us today in the Speaker's gallery. Our prayers are with them. In a moment of silent prayer I ask you to remember hon. members Mrs. Alice Hanson and Mr. Nick Dushenski as you may have known them. Rest eternal grant unto them, O Lord, and let light perpetual shine upon them. Amen.

I would now invite Mr. Paul Lorieau to lead us in the singing of our national anthem. I would invite all to join in in the language of one's choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: Hon. members, it's an honour for me to rise today to introduce to you guests who are seated in the Speaker's gallery. These guests are family members of our former colleague Alice Hanson. Son Chris Hanson and his spouse, Laura Kemp-Hanson, are joined by their daughter Sabrina and her partner, Trent Wilkie. I would ask you all to receive the warm welcome and the sympathies of this House on the passing of your mother.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to introduce to you and through you my friend and constituent the hon. Brent Rathgeber, MP for Edmonton-St. Albert, and his partner, Ms Katrina Black. Mr. Rathgeber is a member of the federal justice committee, and knowing that he is a law and order guy, I look forward to his support for Saskatchewan Yorkton-Melville MP Garry Breitkreuz's private member's bill to scrap the decade-old long gun registry. I would invite Brent and Katrina to rise and receive the traditional warm greeting of the Assembly.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you a group of students from Meyonohk elementary school in my constituency of Edmonton-Ellerslie. These students are participating in the School at the Legislature program this week. I had the privilege of meeting them during the reading week in September and as well in the rotunda just before the session. I would now ask the students, teachers Mr. David Fairfield and Miss Melissa Griswold, and parents Pauline So and Mrs. Gloria Goldthorpe to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance and Enterprise.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What a thrill today to introduce 10 of Sherwood Park's finest, the Divine Divas, the Red Hat ladies that have joined us today in the members' gallery. Their names are Marie Rossi, Carole Eastaugh, Maxine Richardson, Ingrid Brisebois, Juanita Brisebois, Gail Matheson, Judy Neuman, Eve Cockle, Shirley Hingley, and Norma Aksenchuk. Would they please rise, and would we all please now give them the warm welcome they deserve.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly my constituent Mr. Ken Jones. Mr. Jones is not only a good supporter of myself and the community; he also has the distinguished honour of being the deputy fire chief and manager for Strathcona county. Mr. Jones has just today been presented with the Alberta emergency services medal from the hon. Cindy Ady, Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation and long-time friend. It's a great honour. We're all very appreciative of the great services that Mr. Jones has provided our province. He's seated in the public gallery, and I would ask that he rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today. First, I'd like to introduce to you and through you 10 visitors from the Central Lions senior citizens' association. Central Lions is a newly renovated facility that carries a unique variety of services and activities for seniors throughout Edmonton, and I just happen to be fortunate enough for it to be within my constituency. I would ask the group to please stand and receive the traditional greeting of the Assembly.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Mr. Mike Hoffman. Mr. Hoffman is manager of resuscitation education for the Heart and Stroke Foundation of Alberta, NWT & Nunavut. The Heart and Stroke Foundation is responsible for quality assurance in ensuring the reduction of incidents relating to cardiovascular disease through the provision and continued development of emergency care. Mr. Hoffman is a resident of Viking, Alberta. I'd ask him to stand and please receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a very dedicated group of citizens, mostly from the Turner Valley-Black Diamond area, who have come to the Assembly today to bring their concerns about an overdue cleanup of the Turner Valley gas plant. As I call your name, would you please rise: Judyann Niemi, Sandra McCrone, Bonnie Commandeur, Julie Walker, Hedda Zahner, Sheryl Watson, Bob Niemi, Linda Abrams, and George Wallace, who is also a town councillor from Turner Valley. The group has been organized and headed by Roxanne Walsh. They're standing. If you would please give them the usual warm welcome to the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to rise and introduce to you and through you a very special person who has been like a brother to me, my cousin Michael Donovan. He's here in the members' gallery. He's president of Donovan Creative Communications, a very successful company here in Edmonton. I'm happy he came to join me for lunch even though I had to pay. I'd ask him to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly the owners, investors, and operators of Green Power Solutions Inc. GPS electricity strives to create new, renewable electricity resources using, quite literally, horsepower. This product has applications for residential farm and business uses. I'd now ask my guests Sukhbir Bachhal, Frank Ignacio, and Jaspal Kalher to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly nine people from the Spirit of Edmonton. This group made history by recreating historic flights in an open cockpit biplane to celebrate 100 years of flight in Alberta. If you've been watching these historic re-creation flights, you'll know that there are few people as dedicated to their cause as these are: two in particular, Mr. Tom Hinderks, my friend, constituent, and pilot; and Mr. Curtis Peters, copilot. However, these two could not have done it alone. Seven other people made this historic celebration possible: Dr. Rod Macleod, Art Breier, Ed Doucette, Dave Heathcote, Bram Tilroe, Greg Mockford, and Nikki Cox. I'll be expanding more upon their roles in this in my member's statement this afternoon. I would ask all of them to please rise and receive the traditional warm greetings of this Assembly.

Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Culture and Community Spirit.

Black History Month

Mr. Blackett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour and privilege to stand up in front of this House to talk about Black History Month. As you know, February is Black History Month in Canada and the United States of America. Many people talk with pride about the new President of the United States and the fact that he is the first African-American to hold that office, but Canada has its own rich heritage and traditions with respect to black history as does as Alberta.

A motion was established back in 1995 by the hon. Jean Augustine to create Black History Month as a way of recognizing the contributions that were made by black Canadians in Canada. They're more than escaped slaves and athletes and entertainers. Black Canadians have been explorers, translators, soldiers, scholars, entrepreneurs, community leaders, and, indeed, politicians from a time long before Confederation. Alberta's black pioneer heritage dates back to the mid 19th century, when several black pioneers found jobs in the untamed west. By the turn of the 20th century hundreds of individuals, many accompanied by their families, left their homes in Oklahoma and other nearby states to begin a new life in Canada. Anxious to purchase affordable homesteads offered by the government of Canada and desperate to escape a life of racial strife and discrimination, Alberta's black pioneers travelled north to Manitoba and eventually settled in scattered homesteads throughout northern Alberta.

The rich heritage includes black Americans who established farming communities like Amber Valley, where Samuel and Beulah Carothers brought with them their eight children. Having crossed the Canadian border at Emerson, Manitoba, they continued by train to Edmonton. From Edmonton the family along with several others formed a mule train and travelled another hundred miles to Athabasca Landing, where they blazed a trail to Pine Creek, later known as Amber Valley.

In Breton, where there is now a museum that was built in 1948, there were similar tales, also in Wildwood and Campsie. A heroic figure like southern Alberta rancher John Ware, if you can imagine back to the turn of the 19th century, was actually so revered that a thousand people turned out for his funeral, and many of us would love to be able to do the same today. Our own Jarome Iginla became the first black player in the National Hockey League to be a captain of an NHL team.

Like Alberta's many ethnic and racial groups, black Albertans have carved their unique place in Alberta's history with persistence and courage. I'm proud to be able to stand up here as the first black minister and to be able to read a ministerial statement on Black History Month. It is also a privilege to be here with the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, who was the first black MLA in this House. Like many of these people, Mr. Speaker, I understand what it's like because I moved to Alberta eight and a half years ago to look for a better life for my family. Even though I wasn't running away from racial discrimination, I knew it was a great opportunity to raise my family. We will work hard as members of this Legislature to ensure that future generations of Albertans, having learned the lessons that we have through our black history and the history of many other ethnic groups, strive to make sure that we continue to support the diversity and economic well-being of all Albertans.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure indeed to rise in response to the minister's statement on Black History Month. If I may take this as an opportune moment to congratulate him on his wonderful accomplishment as our first black minister in cabinet.

The minister is correct in noting that the history of black people in Canada is multidimensional. It's a fascinating, sometimes tragic but ultimately uplifting story that continues to this day. As we celebrate the halfway point of Black History Month, we should take special note of the Alberta communities most directly shaped by black Canadians, places like Amber Valley, Breton, Wildwood, and Campsie, all started primarily by groups of black immigrants, many of whom left those communities to fight for Canada in the First World War and who later left those tiny communities hoping to find new opportunities in Alberta's big cities. Black Albertans certainly took full advantage of those opportunities. They have become our teachers, health care professionals, skilled trades, engineers, and community leaders, including, as already mentioned, the Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, who was once the mayor of the city of Leduc. They are entrepreneurs, scientists, lawyers, and artists.

In fact, one of Alberta's black artists is Patricia Darbasie, and I would encourage anyone interested in Alberta's black heritage to check out her play Ribbon, a one-woman show she wrote, performed, and directed. Ribbon explores the experiences of black pioneers who left the United States to settle in Amber Valley. Originally performed in 2005, Ribbon is going to make a comeback to the stage this year.

Black History Month is a time for all of us to reflect on how race, culture, religion, and sexual orientation can sometimes still divide us, even in these relatively enlightened times. We have had black mayors, a black minister. One day we will have a black Premier and Prime Minister, and another day, a little further in the future, such an event won't even be remarkable at all, just another citizen stepping up to serve the people.

Black history teaches us that bitter winters or economic downturns are impartial. They are challenges we must face together as one people united in our efforts to build a better future for our children. Black, white, or red; straight, gay, or transgendered; Christian, Muslim, or atheist; Liberal, Conservative, or socialist: we are all Albertans making history together.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, I am thinking that you're probably rising to see if permission would be granted by the Assembly to allow your colleague to participate. Hon. members, we're going to need unanimous consent for two things. One is to allow the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood to participate and, more importantly, to allow us to waive Standing Order 7(1.1), which says that the question period shall start at 1:50. I'm going to ask one question together with the same intent: is anyone opposed? If so, say no.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to all members of the House. I'm pleased to have this opportunity to speak about Black History Month. The history of Canada that many of us learned in school had little to say about the contributions of Canadians of African and Caribbean origin, and the world history we learned was really European history. We did not learn much about Africa or its diaspora.

More recently historians have worked to uncover the stories of black Canadians. Through such research we can learn about the black Loyalist settlement in Nova Scotia and men such as John Ware, who played an important part in the early days of ranching in Alberta. We also know other prominent Canadians such as Clarence Miller, better known as "Big" Miller, who was an internationally renowned jazz artist from Edmonton. I had the honour, Mr. Speaker, of meeting Mr. Miller one evening at a black history event a number of years ago, and also I know that the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon was a regular attendee and has been honoured there as well.

There's much yet to be learned about the experiences of black Canadians as communities, as immigrants, as professional businesspeople and artists, and that's an area of history in which we need to know more about Canadians of all origins. That level of history is more difficult to uncover than the lives of notable individuals, but it is an aspect of history that we need to study if we are truly to understand the values that shape our communities. We all benefit from the attention paid this month to the history of black Canadians. It leads to a better understanding for all of us about the world we live in and share with all the peoples of the world.

Thank you very much.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Peter Lougheed Centre Renovations

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's health care system is in turmoil, and the minister of health is not making a positive contribution to the situation. The minister stated this weekend, and I quote: he is sick and tired of people whining about not enough health care facilities. End quote. My first question to the Premier: does the Premier stand behind the minister's comments?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I stand behind the decisions of this government to invest more than 50 per cent of the total capital fund into one city – and that's the city of Calgary – over the last four years, since 2004. That has been a substantial investment in health care facilities. We're continuing to invest more right across the province of Alberta, if at least once the hon. member would get up and at least acknowledge that in terms of the investment that went in, and we'll continue to do whatever we can to reinvest dollars across Alberta into health care.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When people have genuine concerns with a health care system, a health care system in turmoil, they have a right to be listened to and have their concerns addressed. Will the Premier tell Albertans who they should contact, then, if this minister dismisses unwelcome feedback?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the minister of health does not dismiss unwelcome feedback. In fact, he's been travelling the province corner to corner listening to Albertans to see how we can improve the quality of care, access to health care. You've got to remember that we're spending $13 billion annually – that's about $36 million a day – and we have to ensure that we constantly work together to improve the system.

In terms of the comments made, the minister can reply to that member in the next question.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Does the minister of health consider it unreasonable for citizens to demand that capital projects be delivered on time, on budget?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's exactly what we're doing. This government committed some 222 million dollars to completely build out three floors of the expansion at the Peter Lougheed hospital. We will be completing that project at the end of August. At that time an additional 140 beds will be on stream in the city of Calgary, and that is in addition to all of the other projects that the Premier just mentioned.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Health Services in the Calgary Region

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many areas in Alberta – Calgary, Fort Saskatchewan, Grande Prairie – are expressing concerns over proposed delays and lack of funding for hospitals and health services. Communities, both urban and rural, are unsure about the state not only of existing services but planned facilities. To the minister: why will the minister not commit to full completion of the Lougheed expansion when Calgary is already facing capacity limits?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I've stated several times in this Legislature that we are in the process of reviewing our overall capital plan for health care. I anticipate that that review will be completed sometime around the delivery of our budget. As the member is obviously well aware, there are significant cost escalations that have occurred in health care projects in this province, and we need to ensure that we are prudent with taxpayers' dollars before committing any additional funds.

Dr. Swann: Will the minister at least commit to a 2011 completion of the south Calgary hospital?

Mr. Liepert: No, Mr. Speaker, I cannot at this time.*

Dr. Swann: The town of Cochrane is facing the distinct possibility of losing radiology services. Why will the minister not support the town of Cochrane in ensuring continuing radiology services there?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, that comment is not warranted. This government supports all Albertans in the achievement of equitable health care. What has happened in Cochrane is that there was a private – a private – provider of diagnostic services who has determined that it no longer was cost-effective to operate that facility. We have through the publicly funded health care system plenty of diagnostic facilities in the surrounding area, and the residents of Cochrane will be served very well.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Returning Officer Appointments

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. This past Friday in testimony to the Legislative Offices Committee the Chief Electoral Officer painted a disturbing picture – and I urge everybody to read the Hansard – of the run-up to the last election. He testified that he asked the government for a list of returning officers but was ignored for months. When he finally did get a response, it wasn't from the Premier or a minister but a political operative from the Progressive Conservative Party. My question is to the Premier. Why did the government hand off the selection of returning officers to a PC Party official?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, first of all, for that hon. member to ask the question in the House – I thought he was the one that was going to send the Chief Electoral Officer to be reviewed by the Auditor General because he was all upset with the operation of the Chief Electoral Officer. So kind of ironical.

Anyway, when this issue came up about appointing returning officers, even though the Chief Electoral Officer is an officer of the Legislature, not of the Premier's office or anybody here – he's an officer of the Legislature – I said: if the Chief Electoral Officer wants to appoint returning officers, go ahead; please take that responsibility. I said that not once but twice. He still hasn't – I don't know – picked up on it, but I guess it's an issue for him.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: will the Premier, then, make an irrevocable commitment in this Legislature today, now, to change the legislation so that the appointment of returning officers is in legislation, put directly and solely in the hands of the Chief Electoral Officer? Will you make that commitment here and now?

2:00

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, as I said, the Chief Electoral Officer is an officer of the Legislative Assembly, and all of the recommendations that come forward from the Chief Electoral Officer through the legislative reporting process will come forward to government. We'll scrutinize every one because they are important, because we constantly want to improve democracy in the province of Alberta. We'll take all of the suggestions that come forward, scrutinize them. If it requires legislation, it comes here to the floor of the Assembly at the most appropriate time.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. I hope everyone noted the Premier did not stick to his commitment.

My last question is again to the Premier. Given that a PC member, who left Friday's meeting early, stated unequivocally that the Chief Electoral Officer's contract would not be renewed, has the government directed its members to terminate the Chief Electoral Officer's job because he spoke out about the role of the PC Party in appointing returning officers?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, again, I don't make the decision on the employment of the Chief Electoral Officer. He has a contract. That contract was agreed to by the Legislative Offices Committee of this Assembly. He's responsible and answers to the Legislative Offices Committee. Both sides of the House nominate members to that committee; they make that decision.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, very much in the same vein my questions are to the Premier. The last election in this province was a shambles. Nearly a quarter of Albertans were left off the voters list, disorganization was everywhere, and irregularities were widespread. It's clear that the Tory patronage system and the government's failure to provide lists of local returning officers until the last minute are to blame. The question to the Premier: instead of blaming scapegoats, why won't the Premier take responsibility and end control of Alberta's election machinery by the Tory party and do it right now?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, during the last election the Chief Electoral Officer received the names of nominees for the position. He interviewed each and every one of them. He had refused some of the nominations. He might have hired new people as returning officers on his own. That process was in place, and I believe he must have been following that process in preparing for the election.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I don't know who the Premier is kidding. It's well known that the government was repeatedly asked to supply lists and failed to do so until the last minute, so the Chief Electoral Officer was unable to organize an enumeration because the Tory party didn't supply the names until the last minute. Having just conducted a leadership contest, the PC Party did not need a new voters list to identify its support, putting the other parties at a very large disadvantage. Will the Premier admit that this government sabotaged the enumeration to give his party an advantage in the last election?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the member makes, actually, a very serious allegation in this House, and I would ask him to reconsider what he just said. First of all, you know, he can play politics to a degree because he has the immunity of this House, but if he's saying that some list that I had in my possession of those people that bought memberships in the PC Party to vote for me obstructed the succeeding election, I can't put those two together. I'd have him reconsider what he just said because we're treading on very serious ground here.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the Premier commit to ensuring free and fair elections in Alberta by ensuring that legislation is changed so that it is the Chief Electoral Officer that is responsible for appointing local returning officers and do it now?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I've said it at least twice, perhaps three times. When the issue first came up, I said – for whatever reason, it was like the government preventing it. I said to the Chief Electoral Officer: if you want the responsibility, go ahead; take it off our hands. Especially when, you know, you're trying to find people to work, to dedicate months to this particular role for the Chief Electoral Officer, it does take a considerable amount of sacrifice on behalf of those that do sign up. It is a very important responsibility. To tell you the truth, it was difficult to find people to do that, but we did. We worked with the Chief Electoral Officer. He interviewed all the people, made sure that they were trained well, and they did the job extremely well in this last election.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East, followed by the hon. member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Peter Lougheed Centre serves the fastest growing quadrant of the city of Calgary. In 2005 this government allocated $222 million to fund the expansion of this facility. However, it appears that the funding is insufficient for the completion of this project. The residents of northeast Calgary are concerned that this noncompletion will affect the quality of the services that they will be receiving. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: when can we expect funding to come through so that northeast residents can access the quality services that they deserve?

Mr. Liepert: Well, first of all, there was inaccuracy in the preamble, Mr. Speaker. This government committed $222 million to complete the project, which was the completion of three floors in the expansion of the Peter Lougheed Centre. I want to also ensure that the hon. member doesn't leave the impression that somehow residents of northeast Calgary are not receiving quality health care. The Peter Lougheed hospital has been in existence for some – I don't know – 15, 20 years now, and what this expansion will do is add another 140 beds.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Three of the six floors of the expansion appear to be unfunded. If a project is incomplete, then the services will be inadequate. In the throne speech Albertans heard that there is $6 billion in the capital account allotted to infrastructure plans, including hospitals. To the same minister: will any of these funds be allocated for the completion of the Calgary Peter Lougheed Centre?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think I answered that question earlier in question period. I cannot project what will be in the budget that will be introduced in this House.

However, I think it is very important to recognize what has been committed to health care in the city of Calgary in the last four years. Let me read this list: the South Calgary health campus, $1.4 billion; the McCaig tower at the Foothills medical centre, $389 million; the east addition to the Peter Lougheed Centre, $247 million; the Highwood Tower expansion at the Rockyview general hospital, $227 million; the Sheldon Chumir health centre in downtown Calgary, $95 million. I'll finish it in the next answer, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. The first floor is supposed to be the busy emergency room within the hospital as well as provide access to the other already developed floors. However, it is sitting as an empty shell. Can the minister commit to providing funding for the first floor in the very immediate future for at least a partial operation of the expansion?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, there is somehow an impression left that emergency services are not being provided today at the Peter Lougheed hospital, and that is not correct. The Peter Lougheed hospital has had emergency services since the day it opened. Is the emergency facility in the right place? Maybe not. But as we will soon find out when the minister of finance brings forward a budget, much to the amazement of our friends in the opposition the money flow has stopped.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Alberta Adolescent Recovery Centre

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's children and youth are the most valuable and amongst our most vulnerable members of society. I'm sure that the minister charged with the protection of children and youth in Alberta has been informed of the disturbing allegations of abuse raised by CBC's The Fifth Estate program this past Friday concerning the Alberta Adolescent Recovery Centre, AARC, in Calgary. To the minister: if AARC is, in fact, a recipient of government funding for the treatment of drug- and alcohol-addicted children and youth in Alberta, how many hundreds of thousands of public dollars has this private institute received?

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I did see the story that you are referring to, and I have to say that it is concerning to hear those kinds of allegations. It's certainly my job to encourage people to come forward with their allegations of abuse. I also want to say that I've heard from many families who have used AARC after terrible years and have seen some great success. I think the most important thing is that in terms of AARC my department does not have any capabilities or mandate to license nonresidential addiction treatment centres, so you may want to direct your questions to health.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The end does not justify the means.

Again to the minister: please explain if and how AARC, a recipient of public funding, is licensed and monitored to ensure that children and youth are safe and assure us that public dollars are actually helping, not harming, children and youth. If you're not able to provide those answers, I would pass it to the minister of health.

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I'll answer that question. The Department of Health and Wellness through the former AADAC agency does provide funding to AARC. It receives about $300,000 annually. The service is accredited by the Canadian Accreditation Council of Human Services.

I didn't have the opportunity to see the particular production, but I can tell you that you can talk to many people who have gone through the program in Calgary, and I'm not so sure that they would necessarily agree with this Mother Corp program out of Toronto.

Mr. Chase: I think you should be looking in the mirror at your own accountability rather than the public broadcaster.

Will the Minister of Health and Wellness, whose superboard has taken over for the Alberta Alcohol and Drug Abuse Commission, reveal to Albertans what other unlicensed and unmonitored programs his ministry funds with public dollars?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I think what is important here is that the member, who happens to be from Calgary, jumps on every opportunity he can to criticize that city and the volunteers who do outstanding work in that city. I will leave it up to him to not stand in this House and make these comments. Go back to Calgary, go to the AARC facility and make those comments in the AARC facility. He's pretty brave when he stands here, Mr. Speaker. I challenge him to go right to Calgary, to the AARC facility, and make those comments.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Summer Temporary Employment Program

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Given the current economic situation the youth in my constituency have expressed concerns about job prospects this upcoming summer. My questions are to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. What is your department doing to increase the chances of these youths finding employment this summer?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're making the summer temporary employment program even bigger and better this year. We've added more resources, and more jobs will be supported. The increase will be 450 new positions over last year. I know that last year we didn't have enough positions to cover all the demand, so we have added more positions this year. We provide $7 an hour to help not-for-profit employers top up their STEP employees' wages.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My supplement to the same minister: what kind of job experience can young Albertans expect to gain from a STEP employer?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, STEP positions offer a tremendously wide range of jobs, from university researchers in the areas of science, the environment, and medicine to caseworkers in criminal, civil, and family law as well as even tourism ambassadors or heritage interpreters with not-for-profit museums. These jobs provide summer experiences for young people that might lead to long-term careers.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the same minister. What is the benefit of this program to Alberta employers?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, in addition to the wage subsidy, STEP helps employers find very enthusiastic workers with fresh ideas, some new perspectives. The program can also result in an employer finding a future full-time employee. So this is win-win for both employers and employees.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Oil Sands Development Strategy

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. One thing that can be said for this government is that they like drafting strategies. But they always forget one key component: actual implementation. The oil sands strategy is a complicated matrix and one of so many plans that have been released that no one is sure exactly how it all fits together. My questions are to the President of the Treasury Board. Given that over the years we've seen the SREM commitment, the Radke report, water for life, the energy strategy, and the land-use framework, what's new with the oil sands strategy? Particularly, which takes precedence to provide maximum protection for the environment?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, it's very clear and has been very clear that in this government Environment takes responsibility to ensure that we manage our environment appropriately. The land-use framework merely identifies all the players that are involved in the development of the oil sands as a whole. The responsibility for funding for infrastructure remains with Transportation, land use with SRD, health issues with the health minister. This simply is the organization that brings them all focused on one path.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again to the same minister. Given that oil sands production is targeted to reach 3 million barrels per day by 2015 and lease sales currently cover 65,000 square kilometres, with more in the pipeline, can the minister tell us if any of these new strategies apply retroactively; in other words, to what's already in the pipeline or only to new projects?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, the land-use framework applies to what we're doing going forward. It just doesn't make sense to say that 20 per cent is the right number to set aside. Go find out what the biodiversity is that we need to protect and then implement it as we go forward. We can't change the past, but we can learn from it. The Department of Environment working with the Department of Energy has identified that we're going to change how we deal with tailings ponds. That's a go-forward. We can spend time dwelling in the past or use this document and go forward.

Ms Blakeman: Back to the same minister. Given that government has already rejected calls from CEMA to suspend new lease sales in sensitive areas, thereby establishing conservation offsets, why is the government including the same recommendation in the new oil sands strategy? You've already said no to it once. Now you're going to say yes to it when you propose it? Explain how that works.

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, I'm not exactly sure if the hon. member means that you get more done by listening to people who aren't very positive or sure about what they want or who are more negative. Or do you sit down with people who would like to see balanced, environmentally responsible progress, like industry, like the municipalities, like the environmental groups that want to work to make it better? We don't put all of the report onto a single entity. It's not an industry report. It's not an environment report. It's an all-encompassing report.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness. This past weekend, as we know, there were several reports about construction at the Peter Lougheed Centre. Many of the reports indicated that Calgary was somehow being shortchanged. Can the minister explain to my constituents and to Calgarians the rationale for only completing three of the floors at the Peter Lougheed Centre?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, this will probably give me an opportune time to let Calgarians know what else we've invested in this city in the last five to eight years. I remind the hon. member that we just a few years ago opened the new Alberta Children's hospital, which cost taxpayers $241 million. There's the south diagnostic treatment centre, at $10 million; the Okotoks community health centre, at $10 million; the Wing Kei centre, at 4 and a half million dollars. I could go on, but it's all documented in government budget documents. I guess all I can say is that we will make decisions as a caucus. The decisions on capital planning in this government will not be made by contractors and columnists.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. I'd like to shed more light on this issue rather than heat. I'm just wondering if this is standard practice. What criteria are used to determine whether a facility is fully built out or not?

Mr. Liepert: Under the previous regional health authorities, Mr. Speaker, each regional health authority provided us with their three-year capital plan, and then it was aggregated across the province and then budgeted for. We've been working closely with Alberta Health Services to ensure that the capital we do invest meets the way we need to deliver health care in the 21st century, and that is an ongoing process. In this particular case, as I've mentioned previously in question period, 140 beds will come on stream at the end of August.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the hon. President of the Treasury Board. Alberta has invested significantly in capital infrastructure over the past several years to a tune of approximately three times over the average of most Canadian provinces. Many of these capital projects are seen as one-time investments, but in reality capital projects have ongoing operational costs. To the hon. President of the Treasury Board: before capital infrastructure projects are approved and funded, does the government assess the long-term operational costs of the project?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, yes, we do. Have we done a good enough job in the past of identifying all of the costs that go with institutions? Probably not, and the difference is extreme. If it's a replacement hospital, for example, you may save money in operational costs from better heating and better efficiencies, so there may not be as great a cost. If it's a new hospital or a teaching hospital or a specialized hospital, like Mazankowski, or one with research components, the operating costs, obviously, are higher. We try to put as much of the information as we have into the equation so that the departments can budget on a go-forward basis for new capital projects.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Turner Valley Gas Plant

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 1988 the Alberta government bought the Turner Valley gas plant for its historical significance. However, they have ignored the very real problem of the plant contaminating water sources. Citizens have had to struggle with the government to take real action for years, and they are here today looking for answers. My questions are to the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit. Government documents state that the ministry has accepted responsibility for the historical preservation of the site and also responsibility for the cleanup, so why has the government abdicated its responsibility to ensure proper cleanup of the site to residential parkland standards?

Mr. Blackett: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member has mentioned, we did take responsibility under Culture and Community Spirit for remediation of the site. We spent over $11 million to ensure that there was a membrane and a boundary put in to make sure that no contaminants were exposed to the Sheep River. We have remediated the site in parts to residential standards and in some to industrial standards. The residential standards are for those areas that people will be walking through. It hasn't been determined what we're going to do with the site in its complexity. Right now, until we make a decision, we're not going to go and spend an untold amount of dollars to make sure that we remediate that to a residential site if it's not prudent.

Ms Blakeman: Well, back to the same minister: how long are these residents expected to wait while the department figures all of this out? When are you going to make a decision and implement an actual plan that will help the people living there?

Mr. Blackett: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's amazing. The hon. member should know that right now we're in tough economic times not only in Canada but throughout the world. It's prudent right now to see where we're going forward as a government to determine what our priorities are on expenditures. We have made sure that the site is safe and that the site is contained. When we are in a position to be able to go forward, if we're able to go forward, then we'll make that decision.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much. Well, my next question, then, will be to the Minister of Energy. How on earth, if the government cannot even clean up one little historical site after 21 years, can anybody believe that the government would be capable of cleaning up the oil sands or a tailings pond or a strip mine or an abandoned well or anything else? How can we possibly take you seriously when you can't even clean up one little historical site?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, Albertans can see the difference between a plan that the Alberta government has put together cross ministry – SRD, Environment, Energy, and others in this government – to address environmental issues that we have relative to our production. Albertans can see the difference between a positive plan like that and some rhetoric that's hyped by somebody that wants to create an issue that isn't there.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This weekend when the minister of health was criticized for failing to complete upgrades to the Peter Lougheed Centre in Calgary, he petulantly replied that he was, quote, sick and tired of his, quote, whining constituents. Actually, it's Calgarians who should be sick and tired. This minister is failing them, and when they called him on it, he acted like a bully.

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

Ms Notley: His name-calling is an embarrassment to every other member of this government. To the minister of health: why won't you apologize for calling Albertans whiners?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I recognize that the member lives in Edmonton so probably didn't have the opportunity to read the quote as it was. In fairness, the hon. Leader of the Opposition, who is also a resident of Calgary, actually got the quote correct. Quite frankly, I'm not even going to respond to the question.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think it's pretty clear that Albertans were called whiners by this minister. The Peter Lougheed Centre expansion project has turned into this health minister's personal bridge to nowhere. It's an empty shell: no ground floor, no upper floors, no permanent emergency room, and no capacity to deliver the essential health services expected from an upgraded hospital. As I noted, when he was questioned, he called people whiners. To the minister of health: why won't you accept responsibility and apologize to these Albertans?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, you know, maybe the member needs to take a look at how some of those questions are asked and determine who I may have been referring to and who I may have not been referring to. What I was referring to was not the vast majority of Calgarians who recognize and appreciate the investment we have made in that particular city in health care. It certainly wasn't the 60,000 constituents of mine, which she alleged that I claimed were whiners. You know, we have a couple sitting over in the corner right there, and they're doing a good job of it right now.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, my next question is to the Premier. His minister just implied that the only people who might deserve an apology are those who agree with this government's proposals and that those who might actually say that they need more in health care deserve to be called whiners. Will the Premier ask his minister to apologize to the Albertans that this minister called whiners for raising legitimate concerns about health care?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the member is a lawyer, I guess, by profession. You and I can read the same thing, but if we're both lawyers, we have different interpretations. I thought I'd get a laugh out of that, but I guess not.

You know, how much time of the Assembly is spent here actually debating what was said, what wasn't said, what did you mean? The fact is that the original plan called for six storeys. The first three storeys to provide 140 beds: that'll be completed this year. The other three: while the crane is at the hospital, rather than dismantling it and bringing it back later, we shelled in another three floors for future expansion. That to me, Mr. Speaker, is a very good capital plan.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Victims Restitution and Compensation Legislation

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm not a whiner, but I do have a question today. Albertans are growing increasingly concerned about gang-related violence in their communities. In Calgary alone there have been several shootings since the beginning of this year linked to organized crime, including one that claimed the life of an innocent bystander in my constituency. My first question is to the Minister of Justice. We are all very proud of the passing of Bill 50 last session, but how will Alberta's new Victims Restitution and Compensation Payment Amendment Act address the growing problem of gang activity?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased today to stand here and provide some information to the House with respect to the Victims Restitution and Compensation Payment Amendment Act. This legislation, of course, was a tremendous success for this House, which supported it unanimously. It was a co-operative effort between chiefs of police, Crown prosecutors, and people in the community, who know that drugs are a problem. Drugs lead to a great deal of violence. Anything we can do to try to help the police to stop this activity from taking place and to pre-empt criminal activity is going to be a success for this province, and that is what we've done.

Mr. Denis: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. How does this legislation differ from powers already available to police and prosecutors pursuant to the Criminal Code?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is important legislation because what we did last year as part of our safe communities initiatives was sit down with police officers, and police officers told us that while the Criminal Code did give them some powers, they needed to be able to pre-empt this criminal activity. They know what's going on on the streets, and they need to be able to stop criminals who they anticipate will also get involved in violent crime. This legislation has allowed them to do that. Since it was proclaimed, on the 16th of December, we've had tremendous success in seizing property, all sorts of property, and it's stopped people who are committing crimes from profiting from their business.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Denis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A final question to the same minister: is this simply legislation on paper, or is this being put into action?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We've had tremendous success with this legislation. We've strengthened the civil forfeiture office in Calgary and in Edmonton. We've dedicated special prosecutors to this activity. We've provided resources to police agencies in the major cities. We've made sure that the police have the resources that they need to seize property. We have been able to seize a tremendous amount of property, and over the next couple of weeks we'll be able to announce exactly how successful this has been in dollar values.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Third-quarter Fiscal Update

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last summer, when the surplus was projected to be 8 and a half billion dollars, the finance minister said, and I quote, you don't wear the bearskin till you've shot the bear, end quote, as a rebuke to those who were demanding that the government plan for the future by reducing spending and increasing savings. Well, the bear is alive and well as I speak. The minister took aim, fired, and missed her target by a mile. To the minister of finance: since the minister is so concerned with getting the story right, as she puts it, before announcing the budget date – and that's good; budgets shouldn't start with the words "once upon a time" – when will the third-quarter update be released to at least give Albertans some idea of where our economic future is headed?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, the third-quarter update, as it always does, will come at the end of this month, and in due course we'll publicize the date and the time.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When will the minister be announcing the savings plan that the Mintz report stated was necessary in order to avoid huge tax increases in the years to come?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, in the future, again, I will make sure that the hon. member gets adequate information so he's aware of when we will talk further about our response to the investment and savings strategy.

Mr. Taylor: Gosh, Mr. Speaker, is that going to be, like, a private conversation, or is she going to share it with the people of Alberta?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, we always publicize the dates. I thought that perhaps the hon. member was concerned that he might miss it, so I'd be very pleased to just make sure that he gets a call to let him know.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Adult Guardianship and Trusteeship Legislation

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In December 2008 the new Adult Guardianship and Trusteeship Act received royal assent. Despite extensive public hearings by the Standing Committee on Health and a report that was tabled in the House with recommendations that were accepted by government, I continue to hear from constituents expressing concerns that the legislation removes the right of represented individuals to make their own decisions. My question is to the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. Are my constituents' concerns well founded?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, I would like to set the record straight. The Adult Guardianship and Trusteeship Act is a very good piece of legislation. It is designed to enhance the protection of Albertans who are not able to make their own decisions. The act was created in the best interest of those who need it most, focusing on a least-intrusive approach to respecting Albertans' right to make decisions for themselves for as long as possible. This act increases the choices available to people who need help making decisions, providing a continuum of choices. The AGTA presumes adults are capable of making their own decisions until proven otherwise.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister for that. An additional concern of my constituents is that the legislation did not go far enough to address the potential abuse – physical, financial, and otherwise – of elderly Albertans and persons with disabilities. To the minister: what measure specifically is her department taking to address this issue?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, the abuse of vulnerable citizens is a huge concern of this government, and we are taking real, measurable steps to continue to protect them through three new pieces of legislation. The new Adult Guardianship and Trusteeship Act makes improvements by requiring more safeguards to protect assisted or represented adults, the new Supportive Living Accommodation Licensing Act will help ensure that Albertans receive quality accommodation and services and requires operators to adhere to the accommodation standards, and the Protection for Persons in Care Act will continue to ensure the safety of all Albertans in care.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A final question to the same minister. The final and most frequent concern my constituents express pertains to capacity assessment and the question of criteria and who specifically will be permitted to perform capacity assessment. The legislation left this issue to regulation. I'd like to ask the minister if she'd advise the House what progress her department's making to enhance the capacity assessment process?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, the new AGTA provides for a more standardized capacity assessment model, that includes informing the adult about the purpose of the assessment and their rights to refuse to participate if they wish. The capacity assessor meets with the adult and conducts an in-depth interview after ensuring that a medical evaluation has been conducted. In addition, training is being provided to capacity assessors, and guidelines will be publicly available to further standardize and enhance the capacity assessment process. Once the new AGTA is declared later this year, it will replace the 30-year-old Dependent Adults Act.

Taser Use by Law Enforcement Personnel

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, recent survey data from the University of California showed a sixfold increase in deaths among detainees during the first year after California police departments deployed tasers. The RCMP recently toughened guidelines to restrict deployment of tasers unless there is an immediate danger to an officer or a member of the public. Will the Solicitor General commit to imposing these same standards for Alberta enforcement agencies?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lindsay: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to inform the hon. member and all members of this House and all Albertans that Alberta already has some of the strictest guidelines regarding the use of tasers, certainly in North America. We will continue to review those, and if there's a need to change them, we will. That being said, they're doing the job.

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, last month the minister reported that 100 X26 tasers could be tested per week at a cost of $15,000. Can the minister inform Albertans how many of the remaining 300 tasers have been tested?

Mr. Lindsay: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated a couple of weeks ago, we have tested the first hundred of the 340 tasers that are the X26 model. We're reviewing the results of that first 100 that have been tested, and when that review is completed, we will decide what course of action to take to test the remainder.

Mr. Hehr: Well, given the University of California study and given the fact that these X26 tasers could be firing outside of range, wouldn't it be more prudent for the Solicitor General to simply pull these tasers off the street and commit to not putting them on the street until they are tested?

Mr. Lindsay: Mr. Speaker, again, when we made the decision to allow those 340 tasers to remain in active use, we balanced that against the risk of somebody getting a jolt that would exceed 50,000 volts. When you weigh that against the fact that in Alberta since 2005 that particular instrument has been used 2,300 times, there have been two deaths that have been associated with the use of that instrument. That being said, there are probably hundreds of lives that have been saved because the only alternative in a number of these instances would have been lethal force.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Livestock and Meat Strategy

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last spring the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development announced a new direction to facilitate the sustained success of our livestock and meat industry when he announced the Alberta livestock and meat strategy. This strategy was met with reservation from several of my constituents. To the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: is there now broad support for the strategy, and can my constituents be assured that the industry-wide consultation is going on?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I certainly am confident in saying that, yes, there is support through Alberta's livestock and meat industry, and it continues to grow. It certainly is growing with support from the federal government. The industry's involvement is absolutely critical to creating a more profitable future. A number of industry advisory committees have been formed to ensure that industry input is there for us as we move forward. I also met with a group of producers from the hon. member's constituency last week to discuss exactly these problems.

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of the greatest concerns for my constituents is the mandatory component of age verification. To the same minister: is industry still concerned about this component, and why is it so critical that livestock be age verified?

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, Mr. Speaker, industry clearly demonstrated its support for the initiative. Earlier this month we announced that more than 83 per cent of the calf crop, or about 1.5 million calves, has now been age verified. Key markets, including many of the Asian countries, now insist that all animals be age verified. We now will have a critical mass for the offshore markets as they become available. The federal government has recently secured an agreement in principle for the sale of age-verified beef in Hong Kong, so we have to be able to provide assurances to these markets on food safety and traceability.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you. Many primary producers feel that the responsibility to age verify rests completely on their shoulders, yet it's the upstream industry players like feedlots and packing plants that reap the benefits and the premium. To the same minister: is there an unfair balance here? What's the benefit that cow-calf producers will see when they age verify their beef?

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is absolutely right: cow-calf producers are the ones that are age verifying their animals. But everyone in the value chain will reap the benefits of this, including the cow-calf producers. As I said before, 83 per cent of the calves are now age verified. Age verification will and already has allowed some new markets to open. Increased market access means more demand for the products and increased profits, and it means a future for our industry. The status quo just was not working.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Recruitment of Foreign Workers

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Last week in this House we asked the Minister of Employment and Immigration about a proposed trip to Germany to recruit workers to this country. We find out that the only firm from Alberta that is interested in attending at this time is from Edmonton, and they are trying to recruit five cabinetmakers. My first question is to the minister. How much is this trip to recruit these five cabinetmakers going to cost the taxpayers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't have the exact details of how much it's going to cost us. I want to mention to the member that Alberta has been working with the German government on recruitment since the year 2000. Over the years – and that comes and goes – we've had as many as 40 employers from across Canada participate in the job fair. This year we've got less, and we anticipate that these will vary from year to year.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Again to the same minister, Mr. Speaker: given that Service Canada on their jobfutures.ca website advertises current conditions for cabinetmakers as having limited work prospects because the hourly wages are below the average and the unemployment rate is 10 per cent, above the 2004 average of 7 per cent, when there are limited job opportunities for cabinetmakers now, why are you spending tax dollars recruiting cabinetmakers in Germany? It doesn't make sense.

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, I want to reiterate the fact that in order to get a federal permit to hire a foreign worker, a Canadian company needs to show that it has made every effort to find workers locally. Participants, certainly, are down in the fair that we are going to in Germany, and it's sort of a reflection of what's happening. But those individuals are short five cabinetmakers, so they are going over to find them.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There's no doubt in this hon. member's mind that the Premier certainly needs a good cabinetmaker because the present composition over there is a little bit lax, including the hon. member in that department. You're certainly not doing your work.

Before you scheduled that visit to Germany, to Essen and Leipzig, why did you not look at Service Canada's outline and see that we do not need any cabinetmakers from abroad because of the current conditions, as advertised on the Service Canada website?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, the Canada job fair is a partnership that we have between the governments of Germany and Alberta and with many other provinces in Canada. Germany will identify areas where they've got surplus workers; we identify areas where we've got a lack of workers. The employer participating does pay a fee to be there to offset costs. Generally our travel costs, if I remember, tend to be around the $4,000 mark to send a few of our employees over there to do that. That is what we're doing in Germany at this stage.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that was 102 questions and responses. In 30 seconds from now I'll call upon the first of six to participate in Members' Statements.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Spirit of Edmonton Flight

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The year 2009 is the 100th anniversary of aviation in Alberta. The Alberta aviation heritage museum, located in the City Centre Airport in the Edmonton-Calder constituency, has taken on a fascinating project to honour our aviation heritage. They have re-created both the first airmail flight from Winnipeg to Edmonton and, most recently, the diphtheria vaccine flight to Fort Vermilion, which I understand we will be hearing more about in a moment.

Many of us have flown in small, enclosed aircraft in the winter; none, I suspect, have flown in an open cockpit biplane at 20 below zero. When you take the wind chill from the propeller into account, it is absolutely remarkable that the aircrew were able to survive the journey. It explains, too, why my friend Tom chose to sit in the back.

This tells us a lot about aviation enthusiasts in Edmonton today and in the past, and it tells us that they are extremely dedicated to their cause. It also tells us a great deal about the value people place on being able to make aviation a public event. International media attention was paid to that tiny airplane and those two intrepid pilots. The community kicked in the money, the van, the repairs, and the fuel.

Mr. Speaker, it is no accident that Edmonton-Calder should be home to the Spirit of Edmonton. Aviation is key to my constituency and to this province, so it is great to see nine people celebrate this province's rich history and engaging Albertans in this celebration. They are truly connecting Alberta's past with its future, and I thank them for doing so.

The Speaker: As the flight went north to Peace River, I'm going to call on the hon. Member for Peace River.

Spirit of Edmonton Flight

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This past week I had the honour to visit the community of Fort Vermilion and partake in the re-creation of the mercy flight. It marks a series of events that began in December of 1928, when Mr. Bert Logan, the Hudson's Bay Company factor, was taken ill in the community of Little Red River. His wife, who was a nurse, recognized what she thought were the symptoms of diphtheria and, greatly alarmed, dispatched Billy and Bobby Gray to drive a team of horses up the river to Fort Vermilion. It took three days. They had to probe the ice ahead of the horses to make sure the river would bear the weight. They returned, another three-day trip, with Dr. Hamman, who confirmed the diagnosis of diphtheria. Three days back again to the village of Fort Vermilion, where Dr. Hamman dispatched Joe Lafleur and William Lambert to drive a dog team up the river to Peace River, a 12-day journey, all of which occurred in 30 and 40 below weather.

Once the Peace River authorities were alerted, they contacted authorities in Edmonton. Pilots Wop May and Vic Horner were dispatched in an open cockpit biplane and flew with no instruments, no maps up to the community of Fort Vermilion with stops in McLennan and Peace River, an unbelievable feat, Mr. Speaker, re-created by two of the gentlemen sitting in the gallery opposite in just phenomenal conditions of brutal turbulence and cold weather just this past week.

Mr. Speaker, it's quite a remarkable series of events marked by the feats of remarkable people. It's remarkable in one instance in that it's the first use of aircraft in Canada for a medical emergency and, of course, the first time that the Edmonton City Centre Airport was used in a medical emergency.

We in the north have come since that event to rely on the Edmonton City Centre Airport, and medevac flights from the north are a crucial part of our health care infrastructure. We'd sure like to see it continue, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Heart Month

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. February is more than Valentine's Day and Family Day; it's Heart Month. During this month organizations like the Heart and Stroke Foundation focus on raising awareness of heart disease and informing Albertans of the risks and warning signs associated with heart disease.

A heart attack is caused by the interruption of blood flow to the heart. A stroke is caused by the interruption of flow to the brain or the rupture of blood vessels in the brain. It's estimated that 70,000 Canadians have heart attacks and 50,000 have strokes each year.

Today our children are at greater risk of developing heart disease. Youth obesity rates are increasing while activity levels are decreasing. In Alberta about 22 per cent of children and youth are overweight or obese. Kids as young as six are being diagnosed with high blood pressure and type 2 diabetes. This can be prevented by having a healthy diet and a more active lifestyle.

The government of Alberta supports the Heart and Stroke Foundation by encouraging Albertans to stay healthy, make wise nutritional choices, and maintain an active lifestyle.

Please join me in congratulating the Heart and Stroke Foundation of Alberta, NWT & Nunavut for raising awareness of heart disease and stroke and for the contributions they have made towards achieving their goal of eliminating death and disability from heart disease and stroke, and a special thank you again, Mr. Speaker, to Mr. Mike Hoffman, who was in here earlier today.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

West Edmonton Skateboard Park

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was honoured to participate in an announcement last week regarding funding for the west Edmonton skateboard park. Our government, through the major community facilities program, is providing a matching grant of $415,000 to help with the construction of this park. Now, this might seem like your average funding announcement, but this project is a testimony to the strength and the spirit of our communities and to what can be accomplished when we work together. It's an example that we all have the power to make a difference no matter how old we are.

The idea behind this skateboard park came from some teenagers in my constituency of Edmonton-McClung. These young people saw a need for kids to have a safe place to skateboard. They went door to door to raise money. They got not one but four community leagues interested and involved: the Callingwood-Lyburn Community League, the Lessard community league, the Willowby Community League, and the Westridge/Wolf Willow community league. That sparked interest from the city of Edmonton and our government.

Mr. Speaker, these young people had a dream, and they have worked hard to see it realized. People of all ages will benefit from their efforts when the park opens this summer. I'm delighted our government has been able to help support the communities of west Edmonton and add to our quality of life through this important community investment program.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Volunteer Community Policing Patrols

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. So many of us go to sleep at night unaware of the many services that protect our safety. These services also protect us from crime. We forget the hard work 24 hours a day that the police service, sometimes under dangerous and stressful conditions, accomplishes. The police across the province are assisted in their duties by many volunteers, who help with community-based policing by providing extra eyes and ears for crime prevention.

The Ottewell community patrol in Edmonton-Gold Bar was one of the first volunteer community patrols. It started in 1993. In April 2008 the patrol changed its name to the Southeast Central Community Patrol to better represent the southeast-central neighbourhoods of the fine city of Edmonton.

In the last 15 years the Southeast Central Community Patrol can take credit for many things, including 39 warrants executed, 105 arrests confirmed, 566 patrols completed, 2,352 suspicious persons reported, over 31,000 hours volunteered, and over 293,000 kilometres driven protecting our communities. The volunteers continue to patrol 15 communities and 14 industrial areas in southeast Edmonton. The volunteer patrol welcomes new members who are willing to contribute time, energy, and their own vehicles and gas expenses in exchange for the satisfaction of helping the Edmonton Police Service keep our neighbourhoods safer.

Community patrols across the province, Mr. Speaker, need more volunteers. Interested citizens over 18 years old need only contact their local police to apply. I would urge all hon. members of this Legislature to consider a tax credit for citizens who volunteer for community crime prevention patrols. This provincial tax credit could really help community patrols recruit needed volunteers.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

National Homelessness Conference

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to let you and other members of the Assembly know that tomorrow the University of Calgary is hosting the second annual National Homelessness Conference, which will bring together 800 of Canada's leading experts in the field of homelessness. This three-day conference will provide an opportunity for policy-makers, researchers, service providers, and people experiencing homelessness to come together and share research, ideas, and best practices.

Mr. Speaker, I'm looking forward to attending this important conference along with the MLA from Red Deer-North, and I'm pleased to inform the House that the Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs is a keynote speaker at the conference and is participating in the panel discussion on policies and issues related to homelessness. Several members of the Alberta Secretariat for Action on Homelessness, including Dr. Gayla Rogers, dean of the Faculty of Social Work and my former professor at the U of C, and Mr. Larry Scarbeau, executive director of the Alberta secretariat, will deliver presentations at the conference.

Homelessness, Mr. Speaker, is a matter of great concern for Albertans. We know that there are ranges of factors both structural and personal which can result in someone being homeless. We also know that managing homelessness through a network of emergency shelters will not break the homeless cycle for people. As the number of homeless people increases across the country, so does the cost to communities and governments to care for these individuals. Many of Alberta's municipalities and Alberta governments have been developing 10-year plans to end homelessness as we know it today in our province. This is important work, and I commend the Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs and hundreds of Albertans who have contributed thousands of hours to resolving homelessness.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta is a province built by inspiration, hard work, and communities caring for friends, family, and neighbours. Alberta is moving aggressively to end homelessness. I would like to ask the Assembly to join me in wishing all organizers and delegates a very successful conference.

Thank you.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My guests in the public gallery have waited a long time. I am very pleased to present on their behalf a petition with some 2,130 names on it. Most of the signatures are from people living in Turner Valley, Black Diamond, and Okotoks, all very fine places in southern Alberta. These members are petitioning the Legislative Assembly to urge the government "to ensure that sources of contamination at the Turner Valley Gas Plant site are properly identified and the site is remediated and reclaimed in accordance with Alberta Environment's standards for residential and parkland land use." Thank you very much for all your hard work.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of nine reports from long-term care workers indicating specific instances of shifts that were short staffed, including one report which shows residents were served their breakfast late and cold because of the lack of staff that day.

3:00

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a tabling today. This is from earlier in question period. It's from jobfutures.ca. It's the current conditions for employment for cabinetmakers.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we're now up against Standing Order 7(7): "at 3 p.m. the items in the ordinary daily routine will be deemed to be concluded and the Speaker shall notify the Assembly." However, there's one aspect that we have to deal with, and that has to do with points of order and points of privilege. The chair will exercise the authority given to him under Standing Order 2 to call on the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness to deal with the point of order he wanted to raise.

Point of Order Factual Accuracy

Mr. Liepert: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise under Standing Order 23(h): a Member will be called to order by the Speaker if that member "makes allegations against another Member."

Earlier today in question period the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona stated:

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This weekend when the minister of health was criticized for failing to complete upgrades to the Peter Lougheed Centre in Calgary, he petulantly replied that he was, quote, sick and tired of his, quote, whining constituents.

Like all members in this Assembly and, I would hope, the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, I take my constituents very seriously, and I take what they say very seriously. Under no circumstances did I make that quote.

I would expect that this member, with the legal training that she has, would have verified those accusations before uttering them. In fact, I would like to table five copies of a Calgary Herald article which seems to have been the main research document for the two opposition parties today for question period. In it I am quoted as saying that I'm sick and tired of people whining about not enough health care facilities in this city.

Unless this member can provide me with additional quotes that I didn't make but may have been alleged to have made, I would ask that she withdraw those comments. I would even suggest that she might be apologizing to me rather than me apologizing to her.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wasn't aware that this was coming up.

The Speaker: I'm sorry, hon. member. You were aware because the hon. minister raised it during the question period.

Ms Notley: Sorry. I must have missed it then, Mr. Speaker. Nonetheless, I will say this much in looking over my questions, that I may have forgotten to say "end quote." I noticed that when I was responding to Hansard's request. In my question what I'd meant to say was, "quote, sick and tired, end quote," then subsequently say, "quote, whining, end quote." To the extent that I was not clear on that, I apologize to the House and to the minister. I will say, however, that as far as I'm concerned, for the minister of health all Albertans are constituents with respect to that. To the extent that there was a misunderstanding with respect to my meaning, I'm sorry for that. I think that's the extent of what I have to say.

The Speaker: Our tradition is that when an apology is offered, it is accepted, and we move on.

Consideration of His Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mr. Johnston moved that an humble address be presented to His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To His Honour the Honourable Norman L. Kwong, CM, AOE, Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Debate adjourned February 12: Mr. Hayden speaking]

The Speaker: Hon. Minister of Infrastructure, as I recall, you had nearly eight minutes.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate this opportunity to respond to the Speech from the Throne. For the constituents of Drumheller-Stettler I believe many wonderful things have happened in this province. I think we are at a point again where it is time to celebrate. The Speech from the Throne gives direction that's proven to work and has put us in the enviable position of being the best positioned jurisdiction in North America to enter into the situation that we face today.

Mr. Speaker, this global economic correction that's taking place will without question affect Albertans, but the preparation that this government has taken on will put us in a better position and a better situation with respect to how we come out of the global economic crisis and the opportunities that it brings forward. We're talking about a situation where there will be opportunities for Albertans. Absolutely there will be difficulties that we have to face, but with the type of quality direction that we have, I know we'll do very well.

On Thursday I spoke about the history of the province and a bit of the history in my constituency and the fact that next year my family will be celebrating 100 years on the family farm. I get a great deal of advice and a great deal of direction from my constituents. This year I will be attending 14 celebrations of centennial farm awards, and those folks have been through the tough times.

I mentioned previously that we've seen tough times, and I went back in history last week to talk a bit about it. Of course, the toughest time would've been the meteorite hit when we lost the dinosaurs in Drumheller-Stettler. It pales in comparison to what we're dealing with today.

When I go back in the history of our constituency and our province, my family arrived at about the time that our province was formed. At that time the prairies in our area had no tree cover because of a practice that the native North Americans used in burning off the grass to bring the buffalo back. There was not habitat for the biodiversity that we have nowadays. It's greatly improved.

Our health care system. Throughout the years, with the direction that this province has taken, we've seen Albertans' life expectancies increase dramatically.

We've seen unbelievable opportunities, Mr. Speaker, for education, of which my family have been beneficiaries.

We've seen difficulties in our area. When I look back at our history and the times of the First World War and the actions that the provincial government took coming through that, I think that today we're faced with similar challenges. We have had other challenges on top of that. As you travel throughout the community and hear the history, in 1918 there were many Albertans that we lost to the flu pandemic.

I say these things, Mr. Speaker, to put into perspective what we're faced with today. We have a very rich abundance of opportunities in our province with our energy, with our agriculture, those being our two largest industries, and, of course, with the tourism possibilities. I think that going forward, I would like to say that this is a defining moment. The direction that the Speech from the Throne has given us gives us an opportunity to position Albertans for better prosperity than they've ever seen before.

We will, Mr. Speaker, be judged by history, by the decisions that we make going forward. The positive and progressive approaches that we're taking are going to create opportunities for Albertans, and I suggest that we will be remembered for those. I think that we are blessed with new ideas from some of our members, new ways of looking at things. I quote our Edmonton-Meadowlark representative as an example that helps us with health and how we look at health, where he says that being 75 or 85 is not a health condition; it's a condition of health. Albertans have always been good about looking after their most vulnerable. I expect we will continue to do that. I know Albertans are concerned about that.

I ask everyone in the House to work towards the solutions that are going to be necessary for us to come out of this global economic correction in better shape than we went into it. I believe that those that are negative and disruptive in this process will be remembered only as a speed bump on the road to prosperity.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a great honour and privilege to rise today on behalf of the constituents of Calgary-McCall to respond to the Speech from the Throne. Calgary-McCall is a diverse constituency, home to many families, retired and working seniors, businesspeople, blue-collar workers, and new immigrants.

Many constituents in Calgary-McCall have language, social, and cultural issues and are the first ones to be affected by any downturn in the economy. Since the global economic downturn began, countless citizens of Calgary-McCall are under tremendous stress from the pressures of job loss. Unfortunately, these stresses can and do lead to an increase in family tensions, violence, alcohol consumption, and related drug abuse. The economic crisis is having a huge impact on the daily lives of my constituents. Single mothers are worried. How are they going to put food on the table? Fathers are worried about next month's mortgage payments. The children of these families are confused and frightened by the events happening in their homes and those of their friends. For many children in my constituency these are very tough times indeed.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans have seen significant portions of their retirement savings disappear overnight. Albertans living on fixed incomes are finding it harder and harder to make ends meet. They must make impossible choices: buy food or prescriptions, pay the rent or buy gasoline.

The Speech from the Throne makes many promises, but it is short on details. It outlines a blurry vision for the future at a time when Albertans are demanding clarity from their leaders. It is like saying, "Don't worry; be happy; everything is going to be okay," with soft, tropical music playing in the background. Mr. Speaker, wishful thinking alone won't solve the economic problems Albertans face today. The government has failed to create and enact a long-term strategic plan to address the challenges facing Albertans of the present and the future.

Mr. Speaker, I do commend the government for recognizing the tremendous sacrifices made by the Canadian military personnel to protect not only our freedom but the freedoms of those who are worlds away. The Employment Standards (Reservist Leave) Amendment Act, 2009, to protect and provide job protection leave for our reservists is long overdue, and I congratulate the government for correcting this oversight.

I came to Canada from India in September 1970 and arrived in Calgary in that December. My family and I are proud to call Calgary home. Since coming to Alberta, I lived through both boom and bust. Countless Albertans lost so much during those busts. Many walked away from their homes because they could no longer afford them. I remember the new subdivision of Falconridge, which is in my constituency. It came to be known as Foreclosure Ridge while the subdivision of Abbeydale was called Abandonale.

Mr. Speaker, without a long-term plan for our future Albertans could very well face even harder times. At least the government of the day had the wisdom to set up the heritage trust fund. There was a glimmer of understanding that oil and gas would not last forever, but that understanding seems to have disappeared. The heritage fund is stagnant, and we have spent over 90 per cent of our nonrenewable resource revenues, saving only the smallest fraction of nonrenewable wealth. Indeed, the global liquidity and credit crisis has caused the fund to lose $873 million in 2008 and 2009, a further example of this government's lack of financial oversight and accountability.

Mr. Speaker, for years the Official Opposition has strongly recommended that government save aggressively for the future. Our calls for action were ignored by this government. What a lost opportunity. Had this government saved aggressively, the interest from the heritage fund investments would have eventually replaced declining oil and gas revenues. Future generations will rightly criticize us for not planning for their needs.

During the 1981-82 session we heard that nothing was going to happen in Alberta. I remember those comforting claims very well, but we were the hardest hit. That's why this government's similar claim troubles me again. There's a feeling out there today that an economic meltdown in Alberta is unlikely. I believe this false sense of security could hurt Albertans again. Far better to be prudent, to plan for the worst, to plan for the future.

Mr. Speaker, we don't know the full extent of job losses or when the layoffs will stop. I had a constituent come to my office on Friday, and he told me that the company he was working for had over 1,000 employees not long ago, but there are only 100 employees left working today, and their future is also uncertain.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans paid a big price when this government slashed public programs and infrastructure in order to balance the budget and pay down the debt. With the cutbacks our education suffered. We lost hospitals, doctors, and nurses. The government created a massive infrastructure deficit and a record $1.3 billion health care deficit now. These are all consequences of this government's utter failure to plan for the long term.

The former Premier even admitted that he didn't have a plan for Alberta's growth. Albertans are living with the consequences of that failure. Albertans are waiting for hours in the emergency rooms of our hospitals. Rural Albertans are losing their local hospitals. The government does not have a financial plan or budget to complete the extension of the Peter Lougheed hospital, a facility desperately needed in Calgary's northeast. Albertans are losing their jobs, losing their homes, bankruptcies are going up, and the demands for social assistance will continue to rise.

Mr. Speaker, since oil prices are below $40 a barrel and natural gas is hovering around $4 a gigajoule, there's going to be a much bigger shortfall in nonrenewable resource revenues than this government budgeted for. Just last year the finance minister boasted about the potential for an 8 and a half billion dollar surplus. Who knows what kind of surplus we will see this year if any?

With businesses cutting back, with job losses occurring across the province, there may also be a shortfall in personal and corporate taxes. Will this send the government into deficit? Albertans are desperate to know, but this government seems reluctant to bring a budget forward. We need to know now what this government is thinking. Does this government intend to use the savings of the sustainability fund and the capital fund as part of their stimulus package? What happens when that money is gone and Albertans still have a huge infrastructure gap to fill?

Mr. Speaker, in the Speech from the Throne this government said that all the projects will continue as planned. If that is true, why is one very badly needed emergency room at the Peter Lougheed hospital being put on hold? Now we hear that the top two or three floors will not be completed. Why is Cochrane going to lose their X-ray clinic? Why are some P3 school building projects in question? How many more vital projects across Alberta will face a similar fate?

This government has to learn to be proactive, not reactive. They have to come up with a long-term plan to free Alberta from these boom-and-bust cycles. The need for safe streets, a strong education system, and sustainable public health care never goes away. We will always have these expenses, and the government needs to plan to pay for them.

Mr. Speaker, the so-called Alberta advantage, one that never extended to all Albertans, has been turned into a series of foggy plans by this government without the necessary detail as to how they will assist Albertans. As the shadow minister for Transportation and for Service Alberta I urge the government to ensure that the budget contains provisions to build the necessary roads and transportation infrastructures across our cities and rural Alberta. Alberta citizens and businesses need those vital public infrastructure projects to continue.

Now is the time for legislators to work harder and smarter for the citizens of Alberta in this time of economic uncertainty. My constituents support my work in this House, and I will continue to speak out on their behalf with a revitalized heart and strong commitment to all Albertans to improve their quality of life.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Then I will call on the hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security, to be followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Lindsay: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and respond to the Speech from the Throne, delivered on February 10 by His Honour the Honourable Norman Kwong, our Lieutenant Governor, and may I say what a great job he does representing our Queen here in Alberta. It was with great pride that I listened to the progressive plans of this government as it steers our province through very difficult economic times.

Mr. Speaker, I want to elaborate on our government's plans to ensure that our communities and our homes remain safe for all Albertans. All Albertans are concerned about their safety, and we have taken and continue to take action to deal with gangs and organized crime. Our plans in regard to how we're going to tackle gangs and organized crime start with a number of initiatives brought forward with the safe community recommendations.

In regard to more police, since last April we've already added more than 300 police, already fulfilling our Premier's commitment to bolster policing ranks. However, we are still planning on adding a hundred more in the next two years. I will say that these additional police officers also include four integrated gang enforcement units, operating across our province, comprised of 83 officers.

We also launched the safer communities and neighbourhoods investigative units, where we use civil legislation to shut down properties such as drug houses and gang dens. Presently we have two teams who are doing those duties, Mr. Speaker, and we hope to have more in the near future.

We're also targeting prolific offenders, those 15 per cent of criminals who are responsible for approximately 60 per cent of the crime. Again, we will be targeting 60 individuals, and they're going to be given every opportunity to contribute to society, but again if they decide to continue their ways and take from society, they will find themselves back behind bars, Mr. Speaker.

But we're not stopping there. We passed legislation last fall to allow police to seize instruments of crime. Bill 50, the victims of crime restitution act, allows our police to seize property and goods used or intended to be used in criminal acts acquired through criminal activities. That's a great new tool for our police officers, Mr. Speaker. This government is also committed to continue to target gangs and organized crime by any and all means possible.

I will bring forward Gaming and Liquor Act amendments, hopefully this session, to give police, again, more tools to deal with gang members in our licensed establishments. We have plans being made to tighten rules around vehicle modifications such as armour-plating, which is becoming prevalent among gang members, including such things as bulletproof glass, surveillance cameras. These vehicles, as I mentioned, are being used by gangs in our province. We're also looking at methods to make it illegal for gang members to wear body armour, Mr. Speaker, armour that gives them a false sense of security and also increases the danger to our public. We're also asking our federal counterparts to help us in any way they can in those regards.

Crimes and criminal activity are more sophisticated. Criminals are operating in other jurisdictions while victimizing Albertans through Internet crimes. Gang violence is occurring in broad daylight with tragic consequences. Our police are doing a great job to deal with this issue, but more needs to be done.

My department is leading the development of a new comprehensive law enforcement framework, a framework that will look at service delivery, funding, and governance. Service delivery is critical. We need increased integration and collaboration between policing jurisdictions. We've got to make sure we have the right people doing the right job, and there is a need to operate more effectively and efficiently. Enhancing integrated law enforcement teams operating across our province can more effectively target, disrupt, and dismantle organized crime operations. We will also hear from stakeholders during consultations this month about equitable funding for police, and through this new framework we will also engage communities to address issues of governance and oversight that will also help set local policing priorities.

My ministry is also co-leading a gang suppression initiative as part of our ongoing efforts to tackle gang problems. A number of government departments as well as police are looking at strategies involving enforcement, prevention, intervention, and awareness in regard to this. We also need to take a multifaceted approach to tackle gang issues. We can't just arrest our way out of this problem, Mr. Speaker. We need to do other initiatives as well. We will also be holding a gang summit later on this summer to validate what is being proposed through the initiative and will bring forward a report to this government at the conclusion.

Mr. Speaker, there's no quick fix to these problems. However, this government is committed to working with law enforcement and communities to turn the tide on gangs. We have made safe communities a priority, and we will continue to follow the road map we have developed while looking at new and innovative ways to achieve our goal.

Part of our commitment is to continue to negotiate a new contract to retain the RCMP as our provincial police force. The RCMP have a long and proud history in Alberta, and we expect that to continue. There's probably no other police force that is as well trained as the RCMP. We also anticipate and expect the great co-operation and collaboration that exists today between our RCMP and our sheriffs. The four pilot projects with our traffic sheriffs will look at the most effective model to deliver traffic enforcement services on Alberta highways. This pilot is all about making our highways safer, reducing the carnage and the 450 deaths we see every year on our roadways.

Some other things that we're doing, Mr. Speaker. Over the next two years we will be adding 110 new probation officers to better supervise those offenders who are in our communities and also to give them the support that they need to turn their lives around. Two new sheriffs teams are apprehending people out on outstanding warrants and doing an outstanding job on that and, again, bringing some of those dangerous offenders to justice. We also have sheriffs supporting police by performing surveillance activities, and these activities free up our police to focus on more serious crimes.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, this government is committed to ensuring our communities remain safe. The $470 million that we've committed to the safe communities task force recommendations is evidence of that. We are committed, we will stay the course, and we will make Alberta a better place.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available should there be questions.

There being none, then I'll call on the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and participate in the discussion this afternoon on the Speech from the Throne, delivered February 10 by His Honour the Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta. I certainly listened with interest and thought last week that this is a rather lengthy document, but one shouldn't conclude that because it's long, it's detailed and is providing us with a blueprint to this year's activities by the government. When you look at this document, you have to be careful because it's what's not in it that one should be concerned about.

However, there are some things, I must say, that I'm very pleased the government has accomplished. One of those is, of course, the tax cut that was initiated in January of 2009, and I'm speaking directly, Mr. Speaker, to the elimination of the Alberta health care premiums. That was a tax cut at a time when individual families were paying their share of the Alberta health care premium. It is also a time when many businesses who pick up that contribution on their payroll, whether it be monthly or twice a month, certainly appreciate that billion dollar tax cut. School boards, certainly, that use a portion of that money to pay for their employees on their paycheques, appreciate that. Hospital boards appreciate that. Many municipalities who have been kind enough to pick up that portion of the health care premium for their eligible employees appreciate that as well. That has been a long time coming, and I think it is a very good measure at this time of economic uncertainty. People need all the support they can get.

Now, on some of the bills that were discussed in the Speech from the Throne, it's going to be interesting to follow their debate through this Assembly: the Post-secondary Learning Amendment Act, 2009, from the hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology, the Feeder Associations Guarantee Act, the carbon capture and storage fund act. We're talking about the establishment of a $2 billion fund committed to commercial-scale carbon capture and storage.

I had the opportunity two weeks ago of attending a luncheon where an engineer outlined how this could and will work. I have after study and, certainly, listening with keen interest to the presentation found that this is a major part of our solution in this province to increased CO₂ emissions.

Now, we are also going to deal with the Alberta public agencies governance act, and this is going to come, I believe, from the Premier's office. This proposed legislation will improve transparency and accountability and promote good governance of the province's agencies, boards, and commissions. I find this so interesting in light of the fact that this document, well before it became a proposed statute or a drafted statute, was used in the memorandum of understanding which set up our super health board, when we fired the nine regional health authorities, and changed how AADAC, changed how the Mental Health Board would operate. That document, this public agencies governance framework, was used, oddly enough, in the drafting of the memorandum of understanding that gave the minister of health such ultimate power over how public health care is delivered in this province. So it's going to be interesting to see how that is explained by the hon. members across the way.

Certainly, we're also going to see some necessary changes to other statutes. We're going to have, yet again, another look at TILMA. One piece of legislation that interests me is the Supportive Living Accommodation Licensing Act from the hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. That legislation has been discussed and talked about at length, and it's going to be interesting to see how seniors across the province feel about this proposed bill. Certainly, the previous bill, Bill 24 from the past session of this Legislative Assembly, has gotten significant interest from many seniors who question the direction all of us have taken with that legislation. It will be interesting to see how that legislation works out.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Speaker, certainly, I look at various sections of this, and I want to get to page 9, which is the government's outline of where we're going with public health care in this province. I'm concerned. The constituents of Edmonton-Gold Bar are concerned. We're not satisfied to date with the answers that have been provided by this government. Now, earlier today in question period the hon. Premier was talking about the budget and the fact that we spend I think $36 million a day was the quote and that we have a $13 billion budget.

Absolutely, those numbers would be correct, but I know the Minister of Energy over there would never, never contemplate making any substantial changes without doing a cost-benefit analysis. Yet this government, the minister of health under the Premier's leadership, changed how we operate health care delivery in this province without a cost-benefit analysis. We received this admission in Public Accounts last spring from the deputy minister, who has since resigned and gone on to a high-paying job with Alberta Health Services as a senior executive. The deputy minister at that time admitted that there was no cost-benefit analysis done to see how this new health ministry, this one board would work, how we would fire nine boards and create one board and that this was going to control costs and improve services at the same time.

No reasonable person that I know would restructure any organization, let alone a $13 billion health budget, without a cost-benefit analysis, yet this government went ahead with this, and we know what the consequences are, Mr. Speaker. The consequences are that we're a further $1.3 billion in the hole with Alberta Health's budget. I was astonished to read the papers before Christmas and see that the Premier in a year-end interview acknowledged that this was the case. One point three billion dollars, and we still see emergency room lineups. We still have hospitals that are understaffed. In fact, we have the Mazankowski centre in Edmonton that, well, is not in darkness, but certainly it's going to be September at least of this year, I'm told, before it's going to be accepting patients.

Ms Pastoor: But it's costing a fortune to keep the lights on.

Mr. MacDonald: It would cost a lot of money, hon. member, to keep that facility just sort of at a low idle.

I must say that the constituents from Edmonton-Gold Bar are not satisfied. They expressed their opinion at a town hall meeting we held before the session started. They're not satisfied with this government's directions regarding public health care. They don't have confidence in the minister of health. They certainly do not. I'm disappointed to say that, but they do not in the direction that we're going in.

They also have issues around how we're nickelling and diming seniors and that we're shifting the burden onto middle-income seniors. Now, these are individuals who worked hard all their lives, saved money, enough money, they thought, for their retirement, and they see one of the biggest financial meltdowns in their working lives, probably the biggest. It's probably bigger than 1980 through 1982, Mr. Speaker. When you look at the costs that they have on their monthly utility bills – I want to get to that in minute – and you look at their reduced investment income, now is not the time to hit them with increased pharmaceutical costs. But this is exactly what our government, unfortunately, has done, and I have to get on the record as stating that the solid majority of seniors who have contacted our constituency office in Edmonton-Gold Bar are totally dissatisfied with what the government has implemented here.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I'm curious. When I came here for the throne speech, I opened my desk drawer, and inside I saw a red candle, a very small candle. There are no matches in here. I would suspect that the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie has got some in his pocket. But I got this little candle here, and I was puzzled as to what it was for. I quietly sat here. I looked over at the government benches, and I was almost going to send the Minister of Energy a note because I'm certain that the hon. Minister of Energy is responsible for the candle because he is worried. He's not sleeping at night because our electricity system is teetering on the brink.

In fact, in the month of January – the same thing occurred in December – we had two energy emergency alerts just about supertime, 5:30 I think it was, not two days in succession but certainly two days within the same calendar week, where we essentially didn't have enough electricity to meet our demand. I would just like to be on the record as saying that I sincerely appreciate the candle that the Minister of Energy left for me in my desk. I'm sure he must be worried that we're going to lose all power in the Legislative Assembly and be in the darkness. That must be the purpose of the candle, and I appreciate that. It's a sign of his significant concern about electricity deregulation.

Now, we have to ask again: why are Albertans paying so much for electricity? Electricity consumers in Alberta on average during 2008 paid over 9 cents per kilowatt for electricity. This is the wholesale price adding transmission and distribution costs. This is double the actual cost of generation for 2008. Total cost means the return on investment, fair profit, administration, depreciation, and fuel. Four or 5 cents per kilowatt may not seem very much for each household to pay, $25 to $30 per month for the average electricity consumer, but it is $25 or $30 out of a family budget for which the consumer gets absolutely nothing, and it's totally unnecessary.

We should have left our system the way it was. I remind all hon. members of this House again that the promise was made by the government that if only we would be patient and wait, we would see the benefits of deregulation. Has Wall Street seen the benefits of deregulation? No. Have the consumers of electricity in Alberta seen the benefits of deregulation? No.

We should be very concerned about this. These are some of the questions that have been provided to me regarding this issue, and I'm very pleased to get them on the record. I'm pleased that the Minister of Energy is taking such an active interest in the deregulation of our power supply. Now, why is the wholesale price of electricity being established by the generating companies in a price-fixing auction system rather than in a fair, transparent, and efficient producer-consumer market? I would like to get, through the course of discussion on our throne speech, an answer to that question, Mr. Speaker. Again, why are Alberta electricity consumers subsidizing the cost of fuel for oil sands production? [Mr. MacDonald's speaking time expired] I'm very sorry, Mr. Speaker, but I cede the floor.

The Deputy Speaker: We now have five minutes for comments and questions. Anybody? The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thought the speech was quite interesting to listen to. I have only one question, and that's with respect to the candle that you were referring to in your speech. I don't know if you recall that you would have received that candle in November from fellow members of the Legislature in celebration of the Festival of Lights. I wonder if you recall that.

Mr. MacDonald: No, I do not. As a matter of fact, my desk was completely cleaned out between November and now. I don't know why, but it was completely cleaned out, and this is something that was put back in there. I only assumed that it was from the Minister of Energy because of his concern over power deregulation and potential blackouts.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In light of the fact that I've just received some notification from EPCOR that once again they're increasing the administration side of their bill and that, in fact, I will now be paying probably $40 a month for electricity that I don't even use because I've turned it off in my country home, I wonder if we could get my hon. colleague to make a comment on the oil and gas that he was speaking about and just how we address this business of actually paying more for administration costs for a commodity that we're not even using or receiving.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate that question. Why are Alberta electricity consumers paying higher costs, costs that just seem to go up and up and up, and there seems to be more costly add-ons to the bill while there are windfall profits to EPCOR, Enmax, and other generators? I think we need to have a look at how we provide electricity and the middlemen or the middle persons or the ones with their hand out with all these costly add-ons that have nothing to do with electricity. In fact, on some of the power bills that constituents take into our office, the administrative costs are more than the actual charges for electricity. This has got to stop.

We have a low-cost power plan that is on our website that I'm going to once again ask the government members to have a look at and consider adopting as policy. We do know that the stabilization fund that, thank goodness, we have – and there's close to $7 billion in it – is another fine idea from this side of the House. We have no objections if our low-cost power plan was to be adopted by the government because it would be yet another example of the members on this side of the House coming forward with positive contributions to public policy in this province.

Now, I have no idea where we would be if the government finally had recognized that it was spending far too much and saving very little when they adopted the stabilization, or stability, fund. Whatever you want to call it, it's the same thing. Now we have this money set aside. I hope it will be enough, Mr. Speaker, but it may not be.

When you look at some of the financial reports that have been issued recently, in fact, one from a financial company in Calgary, ARC Financial, indicates – and this is from the third week in January – that in Alberta the government is likely to realize $5 billion less in royalties in 2009 as compared to 2008. Combine that with our corporate income tax, which is certainly going to be reduced from the targets that were estimated in the budget for this fiscal year. If we look at what was estimated for personal income tax, that's going to be significantly less. If we look at land sales and what's going to be gained from the sale of oil and gas leases, we're going to be down a lot of money.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my privilege to rise today as the representative of the constituents of Calgary-Mackay to respond to the Speech from the Throne delivered by His Honour the Lieutenant Governor Norman Kwong. The Speech from the Throne for the Second Session of the 27th Legislature was set within a rapidly changed context, both locally and internationally. The speech focused around the government's intention to protect Albertans and the things that mean the most to them. These include conditions and economic opportunities through maintaining and enhancing our competitiveness at national as well as international levels.

Albertans are not only blessed with an enviable level of resources; we are also blessed with the comfort of knowing that we'll face our share of the challenges anchored with firm foundations set by well-defined policy and program frameworks such as the provincial energy strategy, the royalty framework, the aboriginal consultation policy and guidelines, the plan for Alberta's oil sands, the forestry industry sustainability report, and the Alberta livestock and meat strategy. The prudent measures exercised by this government in the past will now enable us to continue our infrastructure program, which would encourage economic activity as well as address the needs of a growing and changing province, again with a well-defined, long-range plan with designated funds. These directional and strategic blueprints combined with responsive pro-implementation programs will help position the people and industries of Alberta well when the economy recovers.

Mr. Speaker, constituents of Calgary-Mackay have told me that the environment is an area that warrants greater attention and protection. I'm very pleased our government clearly recognizes this and responds to our citizens' expressions by putting in new environmental management approaches, renewing Alberta's water for life strategy, establishing the carbon capture and storage implementation act, introducing a plan for parks, and implementing the land-use framework.

Mr. Speaker, as I had stated in my maiden speech last year, Calgary-Mackay is a young constituency, with most of its community still between 10 to 18 years old. It has a population almost 30 per cent made up of children and youth under 19 years of age, 30 per cent immigrants, and pockets of households living in poverty. Constituents of Calgary-Mackay have to travel above the average distance for health services. There aren't community-based social services within the riding currently. The government's commitment to supporting health and educational programs and services is immensely important to the citizens of Calgary-Mackay.

Mr. Speaker, I had organized a visioning and consultation session with invited Mackay stakeholders and constituents on February 6 this year. It comes as no surprise that health care and education were issues the participants felt strongly about. Participants identified that while responses from fire, police, and emergency are excellent, they also felt that access to health services and the allocation of health care resources are issues that call for greater attention and discussion. Supports for quality education and the need for more schools was another hot topic. While participants recognize and appreciate that the schools in the riding are new, strong facilities with future potential, the growth and need for space is fast outgrowing supply. Keeping our citizenry informed as the government continues with health reform and engaging the citizens to partake in formulating the future vision for our educational system through the Inspiring Education conversation will be strong focus areas for the Mackay constituency office in the coming year.

Participants in the Calgary visioning and consultation session included representatives from police services, public libraries, school systems, city transportation, housing developments, service organizations like Block Watch, family resource services, the food bank, seniors, and immigrant-serving agencies.

In terms of desire to change, changes, and people's hopes for the future of their communities, the group discussed the importance of infrastructure to quality of life in our communities. While there is a variety of infrastructure in our communities, the most prominently discussed was the need to improve social infrastructure and improve community cohesion. Some of the specific recommendations included increasing housing affordability, increasing capacity for community services, ensuring easy access to community services, more child care facilities, taking preventative measures for social isolation, greater focus on social and economic issues for the working poor, and developing true wraparound services where the community is involved in the process.

A great deal of time was spent on the issue of community standards. Participants felt that there has been an eroding of shared community values and standards in previous years or decades. The group felt that the quality of life in our community has been negatively affected by these trends. Some of the important issues discussed included diminished connections among citizens and communities and that these issues of community standards are multigenerational and multifaceted matters. As a community and a society we need to re-establish how to live and work together, especially in light of the increasing diversity of our communities, which is evidenced in Calgary-Mackay.

Our government's continued commitment to fostering strong communities through the Ministry of Municipal Affairs, support for child care, employment, and housing programs, and the declared dedication to looking after the most vulnerable members will enable a wide spectrum of Albertans to face the future with a greater sense of security. Our government's pledge to build on the recommendations of the safe communities task force is another aspect of building strong communities. Premier Stelmach's leadership and commitment to cross-ministry collaborations and the Ministry of Justice's dedication to creating safer and more vibrant communities through comprehensive approaches that range from prevention to intervention and through legislative changes to address root causes are much welcomed by the constituents of Calgary-Mackay.

A key theme that emerged from the Calgary-Mackay community session was connections, strengthening connections at the family as well as community level, Mr. Speaker. Participants recognized the importance of taking a holistic approach to solving the issues of our communities. Many of the issues that were deemed important were connected to one another. It was the view that ultimately the improvement of our communities requires a collective effort and that new ways of establishing connections amongst elected officials, citizens, institutions, and organizations is the most effective way to do this. This belief and desire for building connections and strengthening our collective efforts, when supported and transformed into actions, would be a firm basis for the creation of strong social capital amongst our citizens, hence stronger, more vibrant, and healthier communities.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that the throne speech communicated the government's focus and commitment to ensuring that core programs and services will be there for Albertans, that our vulnerable citizens will be cared for, that our government has been strengthening our legislative groundwork to provide direction for principled developments and to help ensure that our economic fundamentals remain strong so that all Albertans can face the future with confidence.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of comments or questions. Any hon. member?

Seeing none, I would recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mrs. Sarich: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the constituents of Edmonton-Decore it is truly an honour and a privilege to rise today to join other hon. members to provide a response to the Speech from the Throne, delivered by His Honour the Lieutenant Governor on February 10, 2009. The Speech from the Throne is regarded as a foundational document in that it sets the direction for the actions of our government in the coming year. While this is the main function, I believe that it serves other purposes as well. I believe that it prompts all of us as Members of the Legislative Assembly to reflect on the big picture. It compels us to look back at where we have been and also to look forward to where we want to be. It is a two-way road, and in light of some of the changes in the world economy I believe that it is more important than ever to look both ways.

Mr. Speaker, generations of men and women, young and old when they arrived on the lands of our great province, remind us that their stories and destinies were not prewritten. Those who live in this province know that Alberta has endured tough times in the past and has consistently found ways to rise to the challenge and to build the foundation of a province that continues to be the envy of many. The Speech from the Throne gave more than the sense of this, too, shall pass and emphasized that Albertans will again rise to the challenge.

There are reasons for a thoughtful optimism in regard to our province and its prospects based largely on leadership. Our province's leadership in the past has provided us many of the unprecedented opportunities that we have in the present. Previous provincial governments had a vision for Alberta, one that would eventually include eliminating the debt and saving for the future. As we heard in the throne speech, Alberta has $7 billion in the sustainability fund and another $6 billion in the capital account.

Mr. Speaker, just as the actions of the leaders in Alberta's past have made a difference in our present, our actions today will shape our future. As a recent publication articulated, we must be thoughtful in our attempt to determine the changing landscapes of the next Alberta. Indeed, now is a time of enormous opportunity. To paraphrase British Prime Minister Benjamin Disraeli, the secret of success is to be ready for an opportunity when it comes. Increasingly, success in the modern world economy is based on factors related to our people, their level of education, their work ethic, but above all their creativity, ingenuity, imagination, and the ability to be innovative. The areas that do best in developing, nurturing, and harnessing what writer Richard Florida called the creative class will be the areas that have the best chance to capitalize on and optimize the opportunities presented by this changing new context.

Mr. Speaker, how do we create the new conditions in our modern economy that will allow the growth of these much-needed innovation-based approaches, creativity, and entrepreneurship in the energy industry, the health care sector, the arts, science and technology, and in all areas of the economy and our communities? Much of the answer lies in a determined, comprehensive, and unrelenting commitment to supporting lifelong learning in all of its forms to enrich the lives of all Albertans. Our children, youth, and adults all have their own gifts, talents, and enormous potential. As a government we must continue to play a role to create, promote, and support their lifelong learning.

This past fall we launched Inspiring Education: A Dialogue with Albertans, which in 2009 will engage Albertans in a dialogue about how education in our province can help tomorrow's children and youth find their passions and prepare for success. This is just one way that the Alberta government will be crossing boundaries to ensure that we are thorough in collecting a diversity of viewpoints and perspectives to help us create a new vision for K to 12 education and a policy framework that will guide the ministry and inform legislation.

Mr. Speaker, the government is also supporting Alberta students with their endeavours through our postsecondary education system. The continued development of Campus Alberta provides opportunities for any Albertan to find the right fit and pursue higher education. Campus Alberta allows for learning opportunities to be flexible in design, allowing alternatives to classroom learning such as online learning and workplace learning, helping to improve geographical barriers. This facilitates the pursuit of a career at any age or location by a method that is best suited to the individual. Campus Alberta is inclusive of all of the province's unique postsecondary schools. This kind of development increases the number of options that Alberta students have and reflects the government's ability to adapt to the new realities of educational flexibility.

In August of 2008 $73 million in funding was provided to create student spaces in universities, colleges, and technical institutes across the province. This will allow for more students to attend Alberta's postsecondary schools in the coming years. Mr. Speaker, these initiatives demonstrate the government's commitment to learning opportunities and to a strong investment in Alberta's intellectual and social capital. As Albertans continue to utilize these opportunities, the growth of our educated and skilled workforce will help our communities be creative and innovative as we compete in the world economy.

Mr. Speaker, if success is based on the confluence of social and human capital, our devotion to harness its development must be paramount. In order to do so, we must take the broadest possible approach to fostering value-driven learning in all of its forms. In this regard we should follow the lead of the Canadian Council on Learning, which has been instrumental in promoting a broadly based view that includes UNESCO's four pillars of learning: learning to know, learning to do, learning to be, and learning to live together. It's developing the full potential of every citizen in each of these four areas that will allow us to succeed in these challenging times. I've said before that the greatest wealth this province has is generated by the diverse and talented contributions of all the people. Each day, year-round Albertans make a piece of history by inspiring today, seizing tomorrow, and building a brighter future for all to enjoy.

Above all, Mr. Speaker, the government must work in systematic and smart ways to shape our future by mobilizing the collective knowledge base of the people in our province and provide the inspiration and tools to meet and strive beyond the expectations of the shifting world realities. This means making investments to better support and stimulate creativity, ingenuity, and the ability to be innovative in approaches. These are some of the new skills and talents that are necessary to rebuild momentum and to sustain our competitive advantage – growth, quality of life, prosperity – and, more importantly, are needed to revitalize our communities and society.

These activities also mean building on a foundation that recognizes that our province's growing diversity is not a problem to be overcome but, rather, is the source of our greatest strength. It is precisely this diversity of culture, experience, ideas, and insights that will provide the basis for the new thinking, the innovative ideas, and the imaginative entrepreneurialism that is so badly needed in a hypercompetitive and uncertain world. Nowhere is this diversity of untapped talent more evident than our growing numbers of new Canadians. Let's remember that they are the ones who took a chance and left their old situations behind; Mr. Speaker, that is the bravest kind of entrepreneurialism.

Our important task is to create the kind of conditions where their courage and talents can meaningfully contribute to supporting their families, communities, and our province. Our job as legislators is to recognize this untapped potential in our people, support it, nurture it in smart ways, and then let the gifts and talents of our diverse people and communities do the rest.

Mr. Speaker, the Speech from the Throne rightly talked about leadership, leadership to make a difference in times that are indeed troubling and challenging but also stimulating and exciting in terms of huge opportunities that await those people in places that can provide the right solutions here. If we take the long view and continue to make wise investments, support our people and organizations in their efforts, and focus on developing the enormous potential that is in our families and communities, Alberta will be one of the few places in the world that will continue to be in the vanguard, resilient and leading the way.

Despite these uncertain times we are in the midst of a fundamental, long-term transformation, and our province's future is not prewritten. It is ours to chart and to define. Albertans have always looked forward, not back, and surprised the world with a far different motivation. Albertans are a people with unparalleled vision and wisdom coupled with determination and confidence in their abilities to shape a preferred future for our province. I'm looking forward to being actively involved in the changing landscapes of the next Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: There is five minutes for comments and questions if any other member would like to take that.

Seeing none, now I will recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Benito: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to rise today and respond to the Speech from the Throne delivered by His Honour the Lieutenant Governor on February 10, 2009. When listening to the throne speech, I was inspired by the way in which it envisions Alberta's future. Indeed, the speech reflected optimism, determination, and in true Alberta form the value of standing together to protect our future.

These are uncertain economic times, to be sure, but it is important now more than ever that as a government we maintain our prudence, our pragmatism, and our commitment to sound and responsible fiscal management and also that we remain optimistic about the times ahead. There are many reasons to be optimistic. Our unemployment rate in Alberta currently sits at 4.4 per cent, much lower than the national average of 7 per cent and very near the 5 per cent benchmark that indicates a balanced labour market.

In addition to this, Mr. Speaker, the job market in our province is regarded as still among the best in North America, all of which continues to provide Albertans with opportunities to be the champions of their own success. I can speak about this opportunity first-hand. I first arrived here in this great province in 1982 with no more than $100 in my pocket, and after years of hard work and determination I now have the privilege of being a Member of the Legislative Assembly for the constituency of Edmonton-Mill Woods.

These opportunities are an attractive prospect in my native land, the Philippines. In fact, on average, 75 per cent of Filipino foreign workers decide to come to Alberta. In 2007 alone this meant that 6,000 Filipinos decided to call Alberta their new home.

In my constituency of Edmonton-Mill Woods immigration is one of the most emerging, important issues. Mr. Speaker, immigrants continue to play a significant role in Alberta, and our province's ability to continue to expand our growth lies not only in maintaining our current international relationships but also in cultivating new ones. Indeed, it is one of the best investments that we can make.

In fact, in the Speech from the Throne the Lieutenant Governor alluded to this government's commitment to investing and securing Alberta's future growth. As we consider what this growth will mean for our province, there will surely be a need for skilled and hard-working Albertans. In this way there's a unique role for foreign-trained workers to be part of the solution. Mr. Speaker, it is estimated that Alberta may need as many as 95,000 international workers in the next 10 years to meet our growing labour demands. We continue to welcome immigrants to Alberta to pursue their dreams, help build our communities, and share in the advantages that this province has to offer.

I was glad to hear that the Alberta government will continue its commitment to building and developing Alberta's workforce and supporting innovation in all areas of the province's labour market, all of which helps us continue to adapt to the changing business environment and grow with it. This includes capitalizing on the success of the building and educating tomorrow's workforce strategy, a key initiative that was highlighted in last week's throne speech. In many ways this 10-year provincial strategy sets the future direction for investment in Alberta's workforce. It is based on extensive consultation with business and industry, professional and labour organizations, education and training providers, and also aboriginal people. Most importantly, it recognizes that Alberta's people are the driving force in sustaining the province's continued economic growth and quality of life. This makes investment in people one of the most important priorities for this government.

Ultimately, continued success for Alberta in the global economy requires an ongoing commitment to developing the knowledge and skills of our workforce, ensuring that all Albertans have access to learning and training opportunities. Indeed, the building and educating tomorrow's workforce strategy is one of the supporting pillars of Alberta's 20-year strategic plan, which has as one of its goals to support the development of immigrant Albertans and the attraction and retention of immigrants in Alberta.

This includes helping new immigrants with some of the challenges they may face when finding jobs that fully utilize their existing skills and experience. In this way this government recognizes that Alberta's immigrants may have unique education and training requirements that need to be addressed in order to help them achieve their full potential within both the labour market and society at large. All Albertans, including immigrants already here in Alberta, should have the opportunity to develop their knowledge, skills, and talents, and the Alberta government remains committed to these tasks.

To this end, the building and educating tomorrow's workforce strategy has identified a number of priority actions in this area. This includes developing partnerships with other government ministries and stakeholders to recognize the credentials, competencies, and prior learning and work experience of immigrants as well as continuing to promote Alberta as a destination of choice for international immigrants and showcasing the opportunities that can only be found here.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, since the strategy's implementation a number of actions have been taken by this government, and they have made great strides in this very good area. This includes a Canada-Alberta working group that was established that not only reviewed many of the current processes in place but also took an active role by delivering regional seminars around hiring foreign workers. It also helped establish an Alberta temporary foreign workforce hotline to respond to inquiries by employers and foreign nationals. In addition, the off-campus work permit program for international students was also created in 2006, making it easier for non-Canadian students to apply for work permits which now allow them to work off campus while they complete their studies.

Perhaps one of the most significant actions in this recent implementation was the recent trade, investment, and labour mobility agreement, or TILMA, signed with British Columbia, which will allow for, among other things, a greater movement of our skilled workers across the provincial boundaries. Taken together, these and other steps will continue to help and support new immigrants as they move into the workforce and settle in Alberta's communities.

Mr. Speaker, as the throne speech revealed, communities remain at the forefront of the government's plan for the future. Maintaining safe, strong, and sustainable communities has played a key role in Alberta's development over time, and they remain vital to the province's future. Programs like the municipal sustainability initiative were in fact created to help municipalities address growth-related challenges and support long-term sustainability. In 2007 alone municipalities received a total of $400 million to support them in their efforts to ensure the level of service delivery Albertans have come to expect.

The things that I have identified are only part of the comprehensive and exciting plans for Alberta's future. They will continue to impact and enhance the lives of Albertans in real and positive ways. Whether we are Albertans by birth or we have come to this great province from another part of the world, we face this future together with optimism and hope. To me the Speech from the Throne confirms that the Alberta advantage remains alive and well, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of comments or questions.

Seeing none, I would like to recognize the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs, followed by the hon. Minister of Culture and Community Spirit.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Hope, encouragement, and the future: these are the messages outlined in this year's Speech from the Throne. The speech included plans to help Albertans meet the challenges of tough times and lay a foundation for future growth. The government of Alberta recognizes that times of economic uncertainty put pressure on Albertans. We understand these challenges and are committed to working with Albertans to provide the necessary leadership to support them through such times.

In times like these Albertans turn to their neighbours and communities for support, so it goes without saying that our communities must be strong now more than ever. The Premier has stated his firm belief that strong municipalities are the key ingredient to strong communities. This shapes my ministry in everything we do. Alberta is blessed to be made up of vibrant, inclusive communities. They are truly places to be envied. They are places of opportunity, culture, and belonging, places where citizens are supported and cared for and feel safe. Above all, they are places that Albertans can be proud to call home.

To foster these strong communities throughout the province, the government of Alberta remains committed to supporting municipalities through the municipal sustainability initiative. This initiative delivers on the Premier's commitment to build strong communities.

The funding is having a real impact to help our communities plan for the future. Throughout our great province Albertans are enjoying the benefits of the municipal sustainability initiative. They are seeing new roads, recreation facilities, fire halls, and libraries. I need to emphasize the critical role that libraries play in the well-being of our communities. Especially in tough times, they are connectors to new jobs and help new generations of Albertans become literate.

In addition to promoting strong communities, my ministry is committed to ensuring that Albertans are safe and secure. New building and fire codes are being finalized that reach a balance between safety, affordability, and technically sound practices. These will buy time, when there is a fire, for people to get out of their homes and for firefighters to respond. We also know that training first responders is a critical component to our emergency response system. We need and we will support these volunteers, who play such an important role in keeping our communities safe.

Albertans will always need strong communities and will continue to look to them for support. My top priority is to ensure that we have sustainable municipalities in which strong communities can thrive. This is a priority for our Premier, for my ministry, and for the government of Alberta today and into the future.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of comments and questions.

Seeing none, the hon. Minister of Culture and Community Spirit.

Mr. Blackett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to take this opportunity to speak about the throne speech as well. Our government under the leadership of our Premier has committed to forging ahead in the best interest of Albertans. We will look forward to taking on the challenges that we face and that the world faces now with the economic downturn, but under the leadership of our Premier we've made plans to deal with some of these.

We've got a $7 billion sustainability fund and $6 billion in capital. While many in this Legislature would dismiss that as some sort of luck, there is no other jurisdiction in North America that has that type of benefit, and there's no other jurisdiction that had foreseen that there could be problems and had planned for them. Anybody who tells you they did otherwise is just looking in hindsight.

We have a couple of things that we have to do, that we focused on in our department, to help with the initiatives that are outlined by the throne speech. Alberta Arts Days, expanding that – and I'll talk to that in a minute – but most importantly, I think, from our perspective is that we look at what our department represents. Culture and Community Spirit is the quality of life that all Albertans enjoy. It's the fabric of who we are and what we are, where we've been and where we're going. We show that through our interpretive centres and museums and historic sites.

We look at that through how we support our not-for-profit and voluntary sector through the ANVSI, or the Alberta nonprofit, voluntary sector initiative, where we're going to work with other ministries to ensure that we put our resources and our abilities together to work on behalf of Albertans and the 19,000 not-for-profit-sector organizations in this province that assist those in need, less fortunate, and in need of special care. We recognize the fact that most of those organizations do so with the ability to do that in a more cost-effective manner than government could ever do.

We also have responsibility in the strong and safe communities, and I fervently believe that any safe community has to be a strong community first. I've had the pleasure of visiting over 65 communities across the province – hamlets, villages, towns, small cities, and large cities – and I can tell you that the spirit of Albertans is alive and well. That's what will carry us through this. It's not just the money that we have set aside. It's the indomitable fighting spirit of Albertans, who always give more per capita than anyone else, who take care of the less fortunate with their time and money more than any other jurisdiction in Canada.

We have several programs that will help with that. We have our major community facilities program, which has provided over $280 million over the last two years. That helps with the enhancement and construction of community facilities from rec centres to rinks, hospices, Ronald McDonald House, humane society, skateboard parks for youth, drug and alcohol addiction centres, and the like. You can see, Mr. Speaker, that those are the fundamental units that we have in our communities. It's not just Edmonton and Calgary; it's rural Alberta.

I've learned a great lesson from there: it's about collaboration. Our programs are grant programs with matching dollars. That means that the government gives a hand up, not a handout. We contributed through the major community facilities program $280 million, but that means that Albertans have put up at least that much. In fact, we've got requests now for $484 million and programs of $196 billion in infrastructure. That is a stimulus, not something that was designed out of fright, not something designed out of reaction. That's something that this government through my predecessor, now the hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration, had initiated under the direction of the Premier.

We will continue to fund programs. We will work with the Minister of Justice and my seven other colleagues to collaborate on programs and utilization of dollars. Many times we hear that there's 480 some-odd million dollars that we've put towards safe communities. In fact, if you look at the collaboration between Health, Children's Services, Housing and Urban Affairs, Seniors and Community Supports, and Municipal Affairs, there is probably well over a billion dollars that we spend on safe communities. It takes the efforts of all of us to be able to do that. Our Premier has a vision to encourage that, and he has the support of the cabinet and our caucus to make that happen.

Lastly, I'll touch on Alberta Arts Days. Even though that was the one item that was mentioned in our budget, our government is no less committed to arts than it was before. It was our Premier's vision to create the first department or ministry of culture in over 20 years and put money towards that: $36 million towards the Alberta Foundation for the Arts and money also for the implementation of the Premier's Council on Arts and Culture. And we've just begun. We're taking an inventory of what we have across the province and looking at where we're deficient. We're integrating programs such as MCFP and the community facilities enhancement program and CIP along with AFA money. In fact, we've spent probably well over $46 million on arts and culture through either capital or programming, and I would probably put us per capita on a third ranking in the country.

Arts Days. Arts Day last year on September 6 was enjoyed by 30 different communities across the province from Westlock to Fort McMurray, Whitecourt, I think Lac La Biche, Wetaskiwin, Camrose, High River, Calgary, Edmonton, St. Albert, a great cross-section of big and small. What it wasn't was just a celebration of what we told the communities Albertans were all about with respect to arts. It was an example of totality, what those communities believed it to be. They got involved, just as rural Alberta always does or small communities do, and they decided themselves that they wanted to show pride in the area in which they live. They showed that Alberta has an interest in arts that's pervasive across the country. It didn't require dollars from the province. It was just to showcase their pride in their own artists, whether visual arts or literary arts or performing arts. Art is something that's different for everybody, and that's what it showed.

What we're going to do this year is enhance that by moving from one day to three days. In the three days with the help of the Minister of Education we're going to try to engage every K to 12 student across this province. We are going to have each one of them on that Friday, September 18, either write a poem, read a book, write a story, draw a picture, do a piece of sculpture, engage in a play, a musical performance, or a physical recreational sporting activity because we envision that arts and culture is inclusive of sports and recreation. We don't want to minimize ourselves or exclude anybody, so we're going to do that.

The other two days will be opportunities, again, for the communities to show what Alberta has to showcase in terms of arts and culture. I'm quite confident that we will have several hundred communities and a thousand different activities. If the responses from the different municipalities are any indication, it should be great. Now the Canada Council for the Arts and different arts organizations in different provinces around the country want to come to Alberta – yes, Mr. Speaker, Alberta – to ask us how we did it. Again Alberta will take the lead. I tell you that before this Premier it's been a long time since anybody used "leader" and "Alberta" and "arts" in the same sentence.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Five minutes allowed for comments and questions. The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if I could ask the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit to comment on exactly how sports and recreation fits in under arts and culture and what the difference is in terms of the dollars. You did mention it, and I thought perhaps it should be out of a different department.

Mr. Blackett: Well, in Spirit of Alberta, our cultural policy, we defined the goals as including arts, culture, recreation, and sport. When we talked about the four things, creating access for all Albertans irrespective of geography or irrespective of their socioeconomic status, we talked about building capacity in the community. In rural Alberta especially you can't differentiate because that hockey rink may be where you have to use one of the rooms for a rehearsal. The community halls have multipurpose facilities, so you can't just say that it's a sports facility and not a cultural facility, not a community facility; they're all integrated as one.

In terms of the actual dollars, when I mentioned $50 million, that's a portion out of CFEP and MCFP. Sporting organizations take another envelope out of that, and there's obviously funding through Tourism, Parks and Recreation. It's just that we thought that when the cultural policy was created, it was to be inclusive of all of those because there is much overlap. We thought that there's more benefit in trying to be inclusive than in trying to separate the two.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Yes. Thank you. I certainly appreciate that answer, but it's not so much facilities I was thinking of in terms of where the dollars actually are separated because there is nothing that can beat 40 hockey moms as opposed to five moms who may want their daughters to learn pottery. I just find that sometimes the dollars between the sports and the actual arts aren't levelled out, I guess, in the way that I think that they should be. The squeaky wheel gets the oil.

Mr. Blackett: Well, I'll tell you one thing: I'm a hockey dad, I'm a soccer dad, and I love the arts. I love theatre. I love all of those things, and I don't see any difference in one or the other. Applications come to our department under CFEP or CIP or MCFP; our CLOs don't discriminate for those. Now, there are sporting dollars, and there are AFA dollars, but in terms of the other portion of it I think there are enough dollars to go around. Everybody would love more money, but I don't think there's anybody in the arts community that would say that we're not stepping up and taking care of those interests. If they want to have pottery, there's an opportunity to have pottery. In any one of those instances where they don't, I'd love to hear about it and see what we can do about that.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Well, thanks. Now the minister's got me a little puzzled because he's been quite clear that he believes that sports and recreation is part of his understanding as the minister of culture and arts – sorry, let me be correct: arts. If he's including sports and recreation under his department, then what is the Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation funding exactly?

Mr. Blackett: I'm not talking about organized sports. I'm talking about recreational activities, whether it's in a playground or in a community environment. If that's puzzling to you, well, if you looked at the cultural policy – and it's been tabled in this House – it clearly states that recreation and sport is inclusive of that. My main priority, obviously, is arts and culture. I'm not trying to replace the minister responsible for sport by any sense of the imagination. I'm just saying that when there are communities and there are dollars and we look at facilities and helping with those and programs with those, there's a lot of overlap.

When we created our Premier's Advisory Council on Arts and Culture, you will notice that Diane Jones Konihowski, a well-known pentathlete, a former Olympic champion, a big advocate for sport, and John Short, who is another big advocate for sport, are included in that. That's not by accident; that was by design, and I don't see that there is any contradiction there. We're not talking about any organized programs. We're talking about recreation that happens naturally.

Ms Blakeman: But the minister is talking about using funding from a department that's called culture to fund recreational groups but evidently not organized recreational groups. [Ms Blakeman's speaking time expired] I'll have to let this go for the time being.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Listening to the members opposite, you quickly realize that every silver lining has a cloud, doesn't it? Which takes me to my comments on the Speech from the Throne. Olivier Blanchard writes in the most recent issue of the Economist: "Crises feed uncertainty. And uncertainty affects behaviour, which feeds the crisis." That's what I'm hearing a lot of. Sometimes when I'm listening to some of the comments and responses to the Speech from the Throne from the aisle opposite, I'm wondering if they have heard the very same speech that I have heard.

Indeed, there are certain and sudden shifts in the economic markets throughout the world, not only in Alberta, contrary to what some would have us believe, but when you look at Alberta in the context of the world, when you look at Alberta in the context of Canada, North America, the European Union, you soon realize that, as we always have known, Alberta is in a very privileged position indeed. Things may not be as economically sound or blessed as they have been perhaps a year from now, but again, putting it in relative terms, Alberta is doing quite well.

Let's just take a look at the Speech from the Throne. Mr. Speaker, I would challenge you today to look at any budget of any G-8 country, which includes Canada, frankly at any budget of any European country or Asian developed country and see the spending on a per capita basis that Alberta is doing on infrastructure. To bring it down to a more human level, as a member representing the riding of Edmonton-Castle Downs, I don't recall as many dollars being spent in my riding on infrastructure as I'm seeing right now, at this very moment.

As a matter of fact, it's almost to the point where it's inconvenient for residents of Castle Downs because we have roads dug up. We are having a highway put in. We're having various provincial and municipal structures being built at the same time, which is unprecedented. Now, these structures not only will serve Albertans for many years to come, but what they also do is provide valuable jobs. They provide jobs to Edmontonians, to Albertans of various sorts, skilled and unskilled work that is going to keep Albertans employed for many years to come as these are not short-term but long-term projects.

Mr. Speaker, not only are these large structures being put in, but I can tell you right now that just in my riding of Edmonton-Castle Downs three separate playgrounds are being built. One might say: Well, what's the big deal, a playground? But it is a big deal because that's what makes our community stronger; that's what keeps our kids fit. And playgrounds no longer are little frivolous pieces of infrastructure because they all cost somewhere in the neighbourhood of $1 million each, and a large portion of this funding, direct and indirect because some is via the municipality, is provided by this government. Again, many governments have already cut out any such spending, which would be considered frivolous by others, yet in Alberta we're enjoying this.

Now, looking at jobs, as a consequence of this investment in Alberta but also as a result of some wise decisions made by Alberta businesses, our unemployment rate, Mr. Speaker, is relatively very low. I don't think there is another province or state in the United States or country in Europe that can boast having such a low unemployment rate as Alberta does. What that means is that in conjunction with the Alberta government Alberta businesses have made some wise decisions and are able to weather the economic storm that the rest of the world is facing at this time.

As a matter of fact, I have had the honour and the privilege of travelling the province over the last few weeks and meeting with many, many foreign workers, skilled and unskilled workers. I know that there are employers still looking for employees in certain parts of the province. They simply can't find either Albertans or Canadians to fill those positions, and they are still seeking workers from outside of Canada. What's really encouraging, Mr. Speaker, is that when you sit down and you speak with these foreign workers, you quickly find out that even though they are here on a very limited visa only to work, by a preponderance a majority of them want to stay here in Canada.

Now, that's a good report card because this is from individuals who have skills, skills that we value, who come from another part of the world, so they can compare Alberta to another jurisdiction, and they would rather move their entire family and their lives here to Alberta because comparably they find Alberta a good place to be at and would like to build their futures here in Alberta. Mr. Speaker, that's something that I'm not hearing from the other side of the aisle, and I think we should be talking more about that because we should be positive at this time.

Also, when I travelled throughout the province meeting with not only foreign workers but community members that welcomed them, what I have learned is that by and large Alberta is a very welcoming community. Foreigners still are attracted to this province. They know about this province, and it is a province of choice not only to foreigners but to other Canadians, Mr. Speaker. We still have a positive growth of other Canadians coming to Alberta as opposed to leaving Alberta. Now, that's something that we should be looking at because that is the measuring stick by which we should be measured.

Mr. Speaker, if you were to take the time and speak to mayors and reeves and other elected officials in municipalities, I take comfort in knowing from them that even though of course they have needs, and if you ask them, "Do you get enough money?" the answer will always be no, that means they're doing their job. Their job is to advocate for their respective jurisdictions as much as they can. But if you look at our provincial spending for municipalities, again, on a per capita basis I don't think that there is any other jurisdiction in Alberta or perhaps even the United States that spends more money on municipalities and the services that municipalities can in turn provide to their residents. This is something that we can boast about at this point, and no other jurisdiction really can. [interjections] I know, Mr. Speaker, that my being positive is having some adverse effect on the Member for Edmonton-Centre, but please bear with me and try to stomach a little bit more positive news. You will have a chance to ask me negative questions later.

You know, listening to the other side of the aisle, I always try to keep track in my calendar: is it a spending day or saving day? Walking into the Chamber, one never knows because up until recently there were very many spending days: more money for this, more money for that. You know very well, Mr. Speaker, that no matter how much money the government would allocate to an expenditure, it would never be enough. But then there was a shift, and we were being advised and the President of the Treasury Board and our minister of finance were being advised: "Enough spending. Save money. We're getting into a critical area." But in question period – Mr. Speaker, you can mark your calendar – today was a spending day. Today we can spend more money.

But you can't run a government like this, and the Speech from the Throne was very clear on that, that the government of Alberta will strike a balance between saving and spending. We will make sure that we don't spend borrowed money. We recently had a federal budget, Mr. Speaker, and I must tell you with some degree of dismay that many of the packages put in place right now to stabilize the Canadian economy are packages made out of borrowed money. Either you and I will pay those dollars back in the future or our kids will, but they are made out of borrowed money.

When you look at the Speech from the Throne and, I imagine, the subsequent budget, we will not be spending borrowed money. We will be spending money that we have set aside exactly for the situation that we are dealing with right now. Again, if we were to listen to advice from the aisle opposite, we would right now be spending borrowed money. I think we can be positive on that front, Mr. Speaker, as well. [interjections] The chirping goes on, Mr. Speaker, but you will give, I imagine, the opposition their time.

Mr. Speaker, if you listen to the Speech from the Throne, also, there is some very, very good planning for the future. As you know, our Premier has shown leadership in striking the TILMA agreement with British Columbia. No longer does a welder welding a pipeline to the B.C. border have to stop and drop his tools, and a new welder picks up on the other side of the border. Now we recognize that our welders, electricians, and other professionals can practise their trades across the border. They don't all of a sudden magically lose their skills when they cross the border.

Now, as you know, our Premier is a leader on this front and is encouraging such movement of labour and goods and mobility of materials from east to west throughout Canada. This will make Canada a stronger place to do business in, a stronger place to trade with, and definitely will make Canada an attractive place to invest when we achieve a measurably larger degree of labour and goods mobility throughout the province.

Also, Mr. Speaker, Alberta has been always very aggressive in attracting and forging new markets. Even though we have a partner to the south who has been a long-term, trusted partner in trade and in many other alliances, Alberta realizes that there is a world outside of North America. We have been very active in attracting investment from foreign parts of the world and marketing Alberta's products – be they agriculture, timber, and carbon fuels – throughout the world. The speech makes it very clear that we will be on the forefront of promoting Alberta throughout the world, and we shall continue doing that.

Mr. Speaker, those are some of the positive highlights from the Speech from the Throne. This is how I heard the Speech from the Throne. I can tell you that I am very confident in the Premier and the leadership of our cabinet and our caucus members, that we will be able to get through this difficult economic time in much better shape than any other jurisdiction on this continent and throughout the world. I know that Albertans can focus on their lives and can rest assured that if there is a government in this land that will get them through this hard time, this will be the government under the leadership of this Premier.

Thank you.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to move to adjourn the debate at this point.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, there are guests in the Assembly. Could we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

The Deputy Speaker: The Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a real great pleasure for me to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly an Alberta government employee who has served the last 27 years as a reservist with the Canadian Forces. Major Chris Chodan serves with the Loyal Edmonton Regiment and recently completed a six-month tour of duty in Afghanistan. He's a proud member of our military, and I'm honoured to have him as a member of our communications branch. I would ask all members to offer our most warm welcome to Major Chris Chodan.

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 1 Employment Standards (Reservist Leave) Amendment Act, 2009

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration on behalf of the hon. Premier.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and move second reading of Bill 1, the Employment Standards (Reservist Leave) Amendment Act, 2009.

I'm sure all members of this Assembly agree that Canada's reserve forces are an important part of Canada's national heritage. The primary function of our reserves is to augment, sustain, and support the regular forces.

In recent years, Mr. Speaker, reservists have made substantial contributions to Canada's international efforts and domestic relief operations. I've just introduced Major Chris Chodan, who's been in the reserves for 27 years and recently returned from a tour of duty in Afghanistan. I did spend a few hours a couple of weeks ago with him, when he shared his experiences overseas. I appreciated the fact that, you know, he was willing to talk to me about his experiences. I'm very proud and very honoured to say that Chris is an employee of my department and one of 2,500 reservists in Alberta.

Across the country there are over 9,500 reservists on full-time employment within the Canadian Forces. Since the year 2000 more than 4,600 reservists, including Major Chodan, have been deployed for Canadian Forces operations in Afghanistan, Bosnia, Croatia, Haiti, and other international hot spots.

At home reservists have contributed in numerous ways over the years. They have assisted during search and rescue operations and forest fires right here in Alberta. They responded to public needs following severe snowstorms in British Columbia, aided during the flood relief operations in Quebec and Manitoba, the ice storms in eastern Canada, Swissair flight 111 crash recovery operations, and a host of other situations. Thousands were standing by in the event of disruptions following the year 2000 rollover. Mr. Speaker, in addition, reservists often help at or participate in cultural events, parades, festivals, and other public events in communities across Canada.

Our proposed legislation gives us the flexibility to extend the scope of reservist leave to cover one-off events as required. For example, there's a good possibility that reservists may be required for security at the 2010 Winter Olympics in Vancouver.

Service in the reserve forces is voluntary and is for an indefinite period of service. Reserve forces units are located in hundreds of communities across Canada, including Major Chodan's Loyal Edmonton Regiment here in Edmonton and nine other units in Calgary, Lethbridge, Medicine Hat, and Red Deer. Those who are in the reserves receive valuable trade and technical training, they receive leadership skills, they receive access to educational programs, and of course they feel satisfaction from serving their country.

Primary reservists usually train on evenings and weekends; however, most of them need two weeks of full-time service every year to keep their qualifications current. From time to time they also need to attend courses to prepare for operational missions. That's why this bill is recommending 20 days of unpaid annual leave. This would be over and above the amount of vacation a reservist receives through an employer. In discussion with the Canadian Forces Liaison Council we're told this should be an adequate period of time for a reservist to receive the annual training they need to keep their skills current. In comparison, the government of Canada allows up to 15 days of leave for annual training. Manitoba and Saskatchewan provide leave for training but don't cap the number of days.

Of course, the other large component of Bill 1 is proposing an indefinite period of unpaid leave to serve either overseas or here at home for domestic emergencies. Major Chodan's leave began one year prior to his six-month tour of duty in Afghanistan. In this case that's the amount required for active military training, training that could very well mean life or death while on tour. Some provinces place a cap on the amount of time a reservist can be away on leave. New Brunswick's, for example, is 18 months, including any training that might be required. While a year and a half should be enough time for reservist leave, the Canadian Forces Liaison Council tells us there could be extenuating circumstances in any given mission. It's not likely, but it could happen, and I for one would hate to see a reservist lose his or her job here at home while serving our country abroad.

These proposed amendments strike a balance that we believe is fair for both the employer and the reservist, and we believe these amendments, if passed, stand to be among the most comprehensive in the country. Members of our military, whether they're with the regular forces or the reserves, have long been willing to make tremendous sacrifices. These sacrifices over a great number of decades provide us with the freedom of democracy, the very freedom that we exercise in this House each and every day. These proposed amendments are a small way of extending our gratitude along with the gratitude of all Albertans and are, quite simply, the right thing to do.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise and participate in the debate on Bill 1, the Employment Standards (Reservist Leave) Amendment Act, 2009. Certainly, it is time that this province presented to this Assembly legislation of this nature. If you look at the background of reservists in this country, not only have they been part of our military history, but also we forget that sometimes many of these individuals help out in time of domestic need. Whether it be an ice storm or a forest fire or any other emergency, including plane crashes, reservists come forward.

Certainly, I think this has been recognized in this bill. As I understand it in section 53, anyone who has completed 26 consecutive weeks of employment is eligible for this proposed leave. Not only is it to possibly have a deployment with our armed forces outside Canada in military operations but also operations within Canada relating, as I said earlier, to an emergency, annual training of up to three weeks in one given year, or any activity that is going to be set out through the regulations.

Now, I too have had on occasion an opportunity to meet and discuss issues with Major Chris Chodan, and certainly that individual is a fine example of many of the citizens not only in Alberta but across the country who are members of our reserve forces. I've had an opportunity in the past to be a participant along with the major in Remembrance Day services at a couple of locations, one, to be specific, the McNally high school in Edmonton-Gold Bar. The gentleman's sense of duty and the sense of duty that is obviously coming forward from all reservists is reflected in this bill.

When we look at this bill, we can't forget and we have to be mindful that we've seen other provinces, we've seen the federal government enact similar legislation in recent years. Again, it is a pleasure to support this bill at this time in Alberta. Our reservists deserve job protection, and this bill will set out to do just that.

Now, during this economic time if one was contemplating helping out in the effort in Afghanistan, knowing that this legislation was in this province may make the decision easier for some of those individuals. The decision may be easy, but certainly the job is tough. Whether it be on an active war front, like Afghanistan is, or in a peacekeeping measure, those are very, very difficult jobs. They're tough jobs, and I admire the men and women of this country who are willing to step forward and do those jobs.

Now, with that, Mr. Speaker, I will conclude by saying that this is a bill that I think we, hopefully, will pass in this Legislative Assembly. I think it is reflective of the times. I'm glad the government has come forward with it, and I look forward to further discussion from all hon. members of the Assembly. Please, this is a good bill, and I hope it has speedy passage through the Assembly. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great satisfaction to have the opportunity to speak to Bill 1, the Employment Standards (Reservist Leave) Amendment Act, 2009. This is really about ensuring that the men and women who protect our country and our province have their jobs to return home to. I fully support the commitment of reservists to the integrity, security, safety of our homeland, Canada, and peacekeeping in the world. I have always felt strongly about this, and I'm grateful that its recognition has now come as Bill 1, sponsored by our Premier for Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, earlier in the legislative process I submitted two motions for this 2009 session. The first is Motion 516, which urges the government to amend the Employment Standards Code to ensure that reservists who work in Alberta are reinstated to their civilian positions, earnings, and other benefits for the duration of time they serve on active duty in the Canadian armed forces. I'm very pleased that Bill 1 captured the very essence of the motion. This is a salute that we can give to all men and women who serve in the Canadian military to protect our wonderful province and our beautiful country.

Mr. Speaker, I also submitted Motion 599, which urges the government to recognize the qualifications, skills, knowledge, and personal development that a soldier receives while in the Canadian armed forces as job training, work experience, skill certification for comparable civilian employment. Now, annual training is necessary to update a reservist's knowledge and skills and is generally required in order for a reservist to be eligible for deployment. It only makes sense that if service people obtain skills or qualifications during their military duty, they be applicable to civilian occupations. Practising a trade or knowledge of operating heavy equipment, management of logistics, planning, and various engineering skills are a few examples. The cross-recognition of training and certification would allow employees to put their skills to use in the civilian workforce.

This would also allow employers to benefit from the knowledge that their reservist employee is bringing. In return this would also help compensate the employers for allowing reservists time off from civilian work to serve and train in the military. This is something that I also feel very passionate about, and I hope that there would be some consideration towards it, if not during this session, perhaps at some point in the near future.

From what I understand, in most cases an employer must reinstate a reservist to the same or an alternate position of a comparable nature without reduction in the grid of earnings or other benefits. This is the sense of security that these fine people and their families need and truly deserve.

Mr. Speaker, a number of years ago I proposed the increase in parental leave that parents can now take. Like parents caring for their child on parental leave, military reservists care for their country on military reserve leaves. There are approximately 500 reservists in Calgary. I'm confident that these reservists and their employers are in full support of Bill 1. This is a significant step in the right direction to protecting our families, friends, and neighbours who in turn protect us.

As I have spent time in many other countries, I have witnessed first-hand places in the world that don't have the opportunity to observe the freedom and the security we enjoy in Canada. I'm very proud to be a Canadian. I'm even prouder to be an Albertan. This is why I speak so passionately about this. I give my full support to Bill 1, and I recommend Bill 1 for your full support and voting for the bill in the coming stages.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for anyone who wishes to comment.

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much. Thank you for the opportunity to rise and speak with respect to Bill 1 and also to rise in support of this piece of legislation. We believe in the NDP caucus that we must do everything that we can to support the good people who make the types of sacrifices that our reservists make and also the sacrifices that their families make when they sign up to serve their country. It is a great testament to their commitment to both their community and to the country in which we all live.

The only real significant point that I want to make beyond the fact that this is a much-needed piece of legislation is that it is a bit disappointing to see how late it came. We are, of course, the second-last jurisdiction in the country to enact this legislation, and it's a bit unfortunate that our reservists had to wait this long. Notwithstanding that fact, we do know that it is absolutely an important addition to the range of supports that we can provide to people who make the choice to serve their community in this way.

We know that roughly 50 per cent of reservists currently hold civilian jobs and that it is very difficult for them to fully engage in that volunteer activity if constantly trying to balance the demands of work. So where possible and where there are more specific duties that can attract leaves, that's a good thing. It's a good thing that they can take the time to provide their service, knowing that in so doing they come back to a secure workplace and a job that remains theirs without any type of compromise.

This is also, as already has been mentioned, a benefit to employers because our employers can benefit from the training that they may receive and from the experience that they may receive through their voluntary efforts. I hope that employers in Alberta will recognize and appreciate that fact. There have been some concerns at different times raised that the leave might actually result in employers being more hesitant to hire reservists if they feel that they may at certain points have to provide leaves. However, I know that that, of course, would be something that would be illegal, and I hope that the Ministry of Employment and Immigration in enforcing this statute and the protection that it provides to reservists will be vigilant in ensuring that the rights of our reservists are protected and maintained through this legislation.

That is really the extent of what we want to say except, again, to congratulate the government in bringing this forward and to advise that we will be supporting the passage of this bill. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for anyone for comments or questions for five minutes.

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise to speak to Bill 1, the Employment Standards (Reservist Leave) Amendment Act, 2009, one that ensures that those with civilian jobs who leave to serve our country or attend domestic emergencies have a job to return to.

These proposed revisions before us remind me of a saying that goes something like: if you don't want to stand behind our forces, then feel free to stand in front of them. Well, Mr. Speaker, I have no desire to stand in front of our forces, and frankly even standing behind them, I'm fairly easy to spot. However, stand behind them I will. That's why I'm very pleased and proud to support these amendments. It only makes sense that if our military reservists leave their families, leave their homes, put their careers on hold, they have a job to return to. Due to the extension of the Afghanistan mission Albertans who are reservists will continue to be deployed, and we need them to know just how much we support them.

The only caveat I can think of, especially while we're in the midst of these challenging economic times, is that an employer might be in the midst of a downsizing, and there may not be a position to return to. I understand – and perhaps the minister can correct me if I'm wrong – that an employer cannot terminate employment with a reservist once the leave is under way. However, if the employer suspends or terminates business, then clearly there is no position for the reservist upon his return, but then there wouldn't be anyway. There are provisions that the reservist does have hiring priority if the business starts up again within 12 months after the end of the leave, and I think that's pretty fair.

I'm also in favour of these provisions applying to domestic emergencies as well as to operations outside the country. Reservists are essential when it comes to assisting in massive fires, floods, ice storms, and other natural disasters. Fortunately, we don't require the domestic emergency reservists here at home very often – and we should be thankful for that – but it is nice to know that they're here if we need them.

The government will have the ability to authorize other reasons for leave depending upon what happens in the future. I think it's very good that we don't tie our hands in this regard. For example, it could be that reservists are asked to provide security for the Winter Olympics in Vancouver next year. By leaving these options open, the government may decide to include this event or any other event in reservist leave.

If these proposed amendments are passed, Alberta will be the final jurisdiction in this country to adopt reservist leave. In preparing for these amendments, we have studied what other provinces and the federal government have done. We've talked with the Canadian Forces Liaison Council and active members of the Canadian Forces to receive their input. We can adopt what could very well be one of the most comprehensive and effective pieces of legislation in all of the country.

Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to see that these provisions will also apply to reservists who are rangers. Rangers provide a military presence in remote, isolated, and coastal communities of Canada. There are rangers in several Alberta communities, including Fort Vermilion, Grande Cache, High Level, Peace River, and Valleyview.

I understand that there may be some concern from Alberta business over having to find a cover-off while a reservist employee is away on a mission or training, but from my previous experience with human resources I can tell you that any concern is not likely over the six months or year or year and a half that a reservist might be away. In many respects it's managed similar to the way that vacation and maternity leaves are covered.

The concern will likely be over the 20 days of leave a reservist is entitled to in each calendar year for the purposes of his annual training. This, of course, is over and above any vacation that they might usually receive. Many managers will tell you that backfilling for that short period of time is not an easy task, and I would guess that many companies, depending upon their size and resources, will just divide any extra workload amongst others while the reservist is away.

I don't think that the concern is going to be widespread. I have not heard from any business in Edmonton-Calder, and I'm just bringing it up as a point to consider. The bottom line is that if a reservist is making the selfless sacrifice to defend my freedom abroad or to assist in an emergency here at home, I want the reservist to be as well trained as possible. If that means we need to cover off for a couple of extra weeks, then that's the least that we can provide.

I'd also like to provide a dimension on how this proposed reservist leave will benefit Alberta families. It's one thing for spouses and children to say goodbye to a loved one who might not be back for quite some time, but it's quite another for the same family to have to concern themselves with whether their husband or wife is coming back home to the same securities that come with a regular pay-cheque. I know that the government of Alberta, through its agreement with the AUPE, already provides its employees with some form of leave for military service. If Bill 1 is passed, reservist leave will extend for all Alberta employees who are under provincial jurisdiction.

As a former volunteer firefighter I can't begin to tell you how proud I am of our reservists, those who dedicate a good part of their lives to the betterment of this country, to a more peaceful world, and to a safer society. Providing job protection for this service is common sense, and I for one do not hesitate to throw my support behind Bill 1. It is a very important bill for the Edmonton-Calder constituency as the home of the Loyal Edmonton Regiment. I would encourage all of my legislative colleagues, regardless of where you sit in this House, to support this bill.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for any questions or comments.

Hearing none, the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, would like to add my voice to the support for this bill. It has been a while in coming, but at least it's finally here, and we in Alberta will be able to recognize the contribution that our military personnel give to this country.

One of the reasons that I feel quite strongly about this is because I have within the last year and a half made the acquaintance of a young woman who is in our reserves and who has actually served two terms in Afghanistan, both of which were outside of the wire. I think we all know that that requires just that extra little bit. I do recall spending time with her when she was going back to Afghanistan for her second tour and the great apprehension that she had going back knowing again full well that she probably would be outside of the wire. It wasn't necessarily based on fear, but it really was based on the experiences that she had had, and there were a couple of close calls. How could we possibly not expect her to do that?

One of the things that we talked about was jobs. I knew what she did as a job. It was a federal job. She said that she had enough to worry about when she was over there and didn't want to have to worry about coming home and not knowing if she would have a job or how she was going to get her bills paid. It's always stuck in my mind, and this is why I believe that this bill is so important.

I'm sure that we're all aware of the equipment that they wear. They've got helmets and goggles and flak jackets and equipment over and above and on top of that and on top of their uniforms and under their uniforms. Quite frankly, I don't know how they move with all of that heavy equipment on plus their guns and their protective equipment. She has very, very long blond hair, and one of the things that she sort of was allowed was that she could let her hair show outside of her helmet. She said that when she walked down the street for the first time on her second return, the women and children would yell her name because they recognized her hair. She realized why she was there: because she spent most of her time outside of the wire with women and children, bringing them in, a lot of negotiations, just working towards having them protect her and trust her. There was a sense that our troops were being protected in a fashion by the people that they served. It didn't always work that way, of course, but they did feel that the people they worked with closely really did appreciate what they were doing and did want their safety.

I'd just like to make a few other comments. In no way do I want them to diminish the positive effect that this bill would have, but I would just like to add perhaps a little more to the discussion. I believe that we should also recognize the sacrifices that will be made by our employers. Certainly, we can speak about Alberta employers. They often lose educated and experienced staff for very lengthy periods of time, in particular those personnel that are officers.

Our employers are very aware of the importance of the activity and feel an obligation to be a small part in the protection of our freedom and that of others in other parts of the world. Certainly, they protect our way of life. I wonder if perhaps there might be some way that we could publicly thank our employers – maybe a website or a newspaper notification, something along that line – and, in particular, small business owners, who may feel and probably would feel a disruption in their business as they release their very valued employees and ensure that our military personnel will have jobs upon their return. We should support our small businesses because it really could be our indirect, small part that we would work towards, that we would pay towards, that we would support towards the people who fight for our freedom.

I trust that the bureaucratic process will be very quick in implementing this bill. I know that there has been some lagging with some of the other Bill 1s that have been brought forward, and I would hate to see any lagging of any kind. I would like to see this bill passed – we probably know it will be passed fairly quickly, I would assume – and I would like to see that bureaucratic process being put into place so that right away our military reservists, rangers, that have been mentioned, will feel protected and know that when they come home, they will have a job. By having that job, they will know that they are valued in what they do to protect our freedom.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of questions and comments.

Seeing none, are there any other members who wish to speak?

The hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration on behalf of the hon. Premier to close debate.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I first want to thank Major Chris Chodan, who is here this afternoon representing all of our reservists. It's individuals like him that allowed us to bring Bill 1 forward. I also want to acknowledge the kind comments that I received from our government members as well as the comments received from the opposition.

With that, I want to call the question in support of Bill 1, the Employment Standards (Reservist Leave) Amendment Act, 2009.

[Motion carried; Bill 1 read a second time]

Lobbyists Amendment Act, 2009

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations on behalf of the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Stevens: Yes. Thanks, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise this afternoon to move for second reading Bill 2 on behalf of the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General and to make a few comments about the Lobbyists Amendment Act, which is, of course, Bill 2.

Lobbying is a legitimate activity, and it is more important for Albertans to see that lobbying activities are being conducted openly. The bill deals with strengthening the prohibition against a dual role. The Lobbyists Act prohibits individuals from providing paid advice to government at the same time and on the same issue as they are paid to lobby government. This prohibition against a dual role is essentially a conflict-of-interest provision and is intended to ensure the objectivity of advice given to government. Originally this prohibition applied to associates. Not only was an individual prohibited from holding these two roles, but two individuals associated with each other could not do so.

During debate in Committee of the Whole last year many members agreed that spouses should not be considered associates. Following this debate, an amendment was proposed and passed. With the passage of this amendment the concept of associate was deleted from the prohibition, and a loophole was inadvertently created. For example, a person who lobbies under his or her own name would not be prohibited from providing paid advice to government under a corporate identity. Amendments in Bill 2 will close this loophole. Amendments in Bill 2 also give effect to the intent reflected in debate and limit the concept of associate so that spouses are not included.

The proposed amendments in Bill 2 will also make it clear that this prohibition applies to individuals who are paid to lobby on behalf of organizations regardless of their obligation to register as an organization lobbyist. Without this amendment an individual who is not required to register because the threshold of 100 hours per year has not been met could argue that the prohibition does not apply. Bill 2 will make it clear that an individual must comply with the prohibition even when the threshold has not been met. These amendments will provide clarity for lobbyists and will increase compliance and aid enforcement activities.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 2 also contains changes to the definition of public office holder. Public office holders currently include all MLAs, their staff, and department employees and employees, officers, directors, and members of prescribed provincial entities. A revised definition includes individuals who are appointed to government committees.

Bill 2 also deals with the office of the Ethics Commissioner. Mr. Speaker, the Lobbyists Amendment Act will provide the Ethics

Commissioner with authority to disclose information when necessary to enforce administrative penalties. In addition, the Lobbyists Amendment Act will provide that the registrar, after conducting an investigation, will prepare a report of the investigation.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 2 also deals with appeals from administrative penalties. Amendments are proposed to allow an existing body to hear appeals from administrative penalties instead of establishing a new body to hear appeals. Bill 2 also contains a number of relatively minor housekeeping changes, including clarifying language and correcting cross-references.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, the proposed amendments in Bill 2 will strengthen and clarify the application of this prohibition against a dual role, limit the concept of associated persons so that spouses are not included, will add to the list of individuals who are considered to be public office holders, allow an existing body to hear appeals from administrative penalties, give the Ethics Commissioner authority to disclose information when necessary to enforce administrative penalties, give the registrar the ability to prepare reports of investigations, and address a number of housekeeping matters.

Mr. Speaker, with the passage of Bill 2 the Lobbyists Act will better meet the needs of Albertans.

At this time I would move that we adjourn debate on Bill 2. Thank you.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's been a good afternoon of progress, and on that note I would move that we now call it 6 p.m. and adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:28 p.m. to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Mr. William (Bill) Mack

April 1, 1924, to February 17, 2009

The Speaker: On February 17, 2009, Mr. William (Bill) L. Mack, former Member of the Legislative Assembly, passed away. Bill Mack was first elected in the election held March 14, 1979, and served until November 1, 1982. During his years of service he represented the constituency of Edmonton-Belmont for the Progressive Conservative Party. During his term of office Bill Mack served on several committees: standing committees on Public Affairs; Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing; Offices of the Auditor General and the Ombudsman; the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund Act; and Legislative Offices.

With our admiration and respect there is gratitude to members of his family who shared the burdens of public office. Our prayers are with them. In a moment of silent prayer I ask you to remember hon. Member Mr. William (Bill) Mack as you have known him. Rest eternal grant unto him, O Lord, and let light perpetual shine upon him. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

Mr. Blackett: Mr. Speaker, I rise to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly His Excellency Rafet Akgunay, ambassador of the Republic of Turkey, and his wife, Mrs. Akgunay. This is the ambassador's first visit to Alberta. We are very pleased to welcome him and his wife to our beautiful province.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta and Turkey have a strong connection through our trade and through our people. Our two-way trade is valued at about $75 million annually. The Turkish community is a vibrant part of Alberta's dynamic cultural mosaic.

Mr. Speaker, I'd ask that His Excellency and Mrs. Akgunay please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development.

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted today to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly a very talented and successful young Albertan, Myranda Stewart of Strathmore. Myranda was chosen from among 90 of the province's top 4-H members as the 2008 Premier's award winner, the highest accolade in the 4-H program.

Myranda has been a member of 4-H for several years, specifically the Cheadle 4-H club, where she held several executive positions. Her community involvement and exceptional leadership skills as district key member have earned her this great honour. In addition to her duties as the Premier's award recipient Myranda is currently serving as a 4-H ambassador promoting the opportunities available through 4-H. Highlighting her year as the 2008 Premier's award winner, Myranda is here visiting us today and to meet the Premier.

Mr. Speaker, I have had the pleasure of listening to this young girl speak, and I'm quite pleased that she's not down here on the floor speaking, or there might be 83 of us that might not look to be the best speakers in the world. She's very exceptional. Myranda is seated in your gallery with her parents, Michelle and Darcy; her sister Kaity, who can give the best hugs in the world; and her brother Colten. I now ask that they rise to receive the usual warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and to introduce two people from very different parts of my life that I'm very happy to see here today. It is first of all a great pleasure of mine to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Mrs. Sharon Robins, who I know as my Auntie Sharon. Of course, I've known her since I was born. It was a great pleasure to see her today and a great surprise. She is a woman who has had an accomplished career as a senior manager in the department of municipal government and was a senior manager in emergency preparedness for the province of Alberta. I'd ask her to rise today and receive the warm welcome of this House.

With your indulgence, Mr. Speaker, the second person that I'd like introduce today is a very good friend of mine, who I've known throughout much of my life overseas. His name is Mr. David Ennis. He is a lawyer who has spent a number of years in interesting places, as I have, such as Sarajevo, Bosnia and Herzegovina, and Afghanistan. I think his greatest claim to fame is that he is a very profound legislative drafter who helped me in drafting the first electoral law in Afghanistan in 2005. I'd ask him to rise today and receive the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour for me to rise today and introduce to you and to all members of the Assembly some of our members of the Department of Energy in the province of Alberta. I don't have to remind you that it's all about energy. These good folks know that as well. We have as guests today Margaret Winters, Chandra Kanta, Lori Kutschinski, Patricia Gannon, Anas Khan, Beverly Smith, Sherry Harder, Larisa Wozna, Lorna Villeneuve, Eleanor Wang, Vida Ramos, and Mila Jucutan. I would ask them to please rise and have the members give them the warm welcome that they deserve.

Ms Evans: Well, not to be outdone by my colleague, Mr. Speaker, you know, we're wonderfully blessed to have people in Finance to look after all of the wonderful attributes of Energy. Well, not all of them perhaps but at least some of them. Ashleigh Campbell, representing strategic and business services; from tax and revenue administration Benjamin Evans, Brynne Anderson, Christopher Sharpe, and Kehui Auyong. I hope I have pronounced that properly. We also have from risk management and insurance Maria Ramirez, Kelly York, and Guy Forest. I'd ask them to please rise and for us to extend our warmest welcome to them all.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is with great pleasure that I rise today and introduce to you and through you a group of students from Holy Family school in my constituency of Edmonton-Ellerslie. These students are part of a group called O Ambassadors, who raise funds for development projects in developing countries and increase awareness of global issues at their school. I would like to thank the education assistant, Ranée Laporte, for her leadership on this project as well as Marlene Lecky Perron, teacher at Holy Family school, and two parent volunteers, Anne McClintock and Sharlynn Clark, for helping the students joining us this afternoon. I'd ask that teachers, parents, and students seated in the members' gallery please receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to introduce to you and through you Mr. Mark Zemp from Raymond, Alberta. Mark has raised his family in Raymond and owns an insurance and registry business there. He's in Edmonton today on business in his capacity as president of the insurance agents' association of Alberta. I would ask Mark to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my privilege today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly one of my constituents. Jacqueline Biollo is married to a member of our armed forces. She's the mother of two exceptional children. She serves as a town councillor for the town of Beaumont, and she is the executive director of Seniors United Now. She is seated in the members' gallery. I would ask that she rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a great honour for me to rise and introduce to you and through to members of this Assembly a number of seniors and friends and family with us today from the Canadian Association of Retired Persons, Elder Advocates of Alberta, Public Interest Alberta, Seniors Helping Seniors, the Seniors' Action Liaison Team, Seniors United Now, and Friends of Medicare, every one of these Albertans deeply concerned by the health issues directly impacting seniors, including prescription drug costs, the availability of quality long-term care, emergency care, and more. I would ask them to rise in the House now and be welcomed by the Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party in the House.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly Mahamad Accord, executive director of the Alberta Somali Community Center. The Alberta Somali Community Center is a broad-based, nonprofit organization that enjoys very strong community support and is well respected by other service providers as well as by funders. The centre was established in 2007 in response to a large influx of Somali newcomers to Alberta. The vision of the Alberta Somali Community Center is to integrate the Alberta Somali community fully into Canadian life by removing barriers and to build bridges between the Somali community and mainstream Canadian culture. I would ask that Mr. Accord now rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly five students representing the students of Newton Place, a University of Alberta residence. In the past three years the students of Newton Place have experienced a 27 per cent increase in their rent. Their rent is far above what student loan regulations provide. Affordable housing is desperately needed. I'd now ask that my guests rise as I call their names to receive the traditional warm welcome from this Assembly: Nicholas Boers, Stephanie Au-Yeung, Usha Hemraz, Amanda Nelson, and Xiye Wang.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

O Ambassadors

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great honour to rise today and speak about the O Ambassadors group who have joined us this afternoon from the Holy Family school in my constituency of Edmonton-Ellerslie. Over 2,000 schools in North America are contributing to the O Ambassadors. This program helps to raise awareness and funds to support the United Nations' millennium development goals. These four goals focus on important issues such as poverty, hunger, education, and sustainable development. I had the honour and privilege of attending their fundraiser on January 30 along with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods. I'm proud to report that the group here today has raised $5,939 to date. The group is working towards a goal of $8,500 in order to build a school in Southeast Asia. Furthermore, any extra money will go towards textbooks, teachers' salaries, and clean water.

Today, Mr. Speaker, I would like to acknowledge the O Ambassadors from the Holy Family school and from all over North America for their selfless work in helping to create opportunities for students in developing nations. Thank you to all the teachers, organizers, parent volunteers, and students who contributed to the work to make this program a success. Your work is inspirational to all Albertans.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted to provide an update to hon. members on the activities of the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities. Last fall we undertook a recruitment process, which saw nine new members appointed to the council. The personal and professional accomplishments of these new members and the diversity of their expertise made for a very impressive table at the council's three-day strategic planning session last month.

Joining the six returning members are Dan Bojarski of St. Brides, a certified industrial technologist with experience in hiring employees across a range of disabilities; Bryce Clarke of Ardrossan, a member of the Edmonton Police Service; Dr. John Latter, head of the division of physical medicine and rehabilitation at the University of Calgary; Brad Robertson of Calgary, who brings the perspective of persons with developmental disabilities; Amber Skoog of Stirling, who lives with reduced vision and works as an alternate format editor at Lethbridge College; Kuen Tang of Edmonton, an active volunteer and the first student with quadriplegia to graduate from the University of Alberta's bachelor of education program; Pamela Wagner of Medicine Hat, who offers an employer perspective through her work with REDI Enterprises Society; Tammy Winder from Lethbridge, a parent who brings over 20 years of experience working with people with mental illness; and Carmen Wyton from St. Albert, the president and CEO of Special Olympics Alberta. Mr. Speaker, as deputy chair of the council it is an honour to work with such a distinguished group of Albertans.

Looking ahead, we see opportunities for our team to provide advice and leadership in areas such as enhancing employment opportunities throughout the Alberta economy and ensuring standards are in place for best practices in universal design.

Mr. Speaker, I look forward to providing a further update on council's strategic plan when it's finalized and, more importantly, to working in earnest with all members of this House on its implementation.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Adult Guardianship and Trusteeship Act

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to bring to the attention of this Assembly the significance of the Adult Guardianship and Trusteeship Act, or Bill 24, which received royal assent in December. The new act arose from a process of extensive public consultation as well as thorough legislative review involving both sides of the House and received strong support.

The Adult Guardianship and Trusteeship Act is progressive legislation that balances individual rights with assessment of capacity and replaces the 30-year-old Dependent Adults Act. There is no question that adult Albertans who require assistance to make personal decisions will benefit from this legislation. The act is designed to help people remain as independent as possible as long as possible. It provides more choices and safeguards to protect Albertans who can no longer make all their decisions.

Importantly, the act is designed to enhance the protection of Albertans who are not in a position to make decisions for themselves. It increases the choices available to people who need assistance in making personal decisions by providing a continuum of decision-making authorization to more formal, court-ordered guardianship. Guardianship will be used when other least-intrusive options have been tried and not been successful or the adult's incapacity to making decisions is more long term and permanent.

The new act makes significant improvements in the protection of vulnerable adults. The new legislation provides more safeguards to protect assisted and represented adults while providing more protective and investigative measures when there is concern about their safety. The act presumes adults are capable of making their own decisions unless determined otherwise through proper assessment.

The act provides for a more standardized capacity assessment model, which includes informing the adult about the purpose of assessment. The capacity assessor meets with the adult and conducts an in-depth interview after ensuring that the medical evaluation has been conducted to rule out temporary or reversible cause of incapacity.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Seniors' Pharmaceutical Plan

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Medications are essential and a daily cost for seniors. Money spent on medications to keep seniors healthy, like controlling blood pressure and diabetes, can be considered money saved through preventing both complications and hospitalization. They are protecting health and saving health dollars. My questions are to the Premier. Will the Premier admit that the new pharmaceutical plan is a further tax added to seniors?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, our government cares deeply about seniors. We know that our seniors are looking at their investments that have diminished dramatically over the last number of months. We're working together with all ministers to ensure that we maintain one of the best programs for seniors in the country of Canada, from long-term care to various housing options to home care, and we'll continue to provide those resources to our seniors.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Why is the government using total income and not net income for determining seniors' annual income and as a basis for their expenses for health care?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the minister of health has all of the details on the program. I want to mention to the House and to the seniors that are present here today and many that are watching that those who cannot afford to pay for badly needed drugs, we'll have a program in place that they can apply for assistance to make sure that no Albertan, senior or younger person, can't get the drugs that they need for improving their health.

Dr. Swann: My final question to the Premier: will the Premier admit that this is his own policy and not that of the minister of health, to charge seniors more for their pharmaceuticals?

Mr. Stelmach: This is a government policy. It had considerable input into formation of the policy, all towards maintaining the badly needed services tied to health to, we know, a senior population that will be increasing dramatically over the next number of years. I mean, I'm part of the baby boomer generation, or getting there. I know I look much younger. This is what we're working towards: make sure that it's sustainable, that we provide the best services, and to ensure that the next generation can also have the same kind of quality of life that we're enjoying in Alberta today.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My next questions are for the minister of health. We have a minister of health who believes that, quote, there should not be a sense of entitlement when you turn 65, end quote, and who dismisses the legitimate concerns of Albertans as whining. This attitude in a cabinet minister is extremely disappointing. To the minister: does the minister admit that by using income from 2008 we seriously underestimate the income seniors will be facing in 2009?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, as the Premier has mentioned and I stated in the House earlier to a question, the economic situation in the world has changed since we brought this policy through. The policy is still the right policy, but we've had a number of seniors raise issues such as the one the hon. leader has raised relative to: are some of the mechanics, if I could, right relative to what line of income? We're taking a look at all of those situations, and we'll make a determination as we go forward.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What is the minister's explanation for removing premium-free Blue Cross coverage for seniors, a plan that's been in place for over a decade?

Mr. Liepert: First of all, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is not correct. Currently, today, every senior pays 30 per cent of their prescription costs up to a maximum of $25 no matter how poor or how wealthy seniors are. I think this is a perfect time for this question because on the news this morning we had a situation where General Motors and Chrysler are back at the table for more money. We have Air Canada on the verge of going into bankruptcy. All of these companies fundamentally have problems with their business models.

Now, if we take that into health care, Mr. Speaker, we have to change the fundamental business model of health care certainly in this province and, I believe, in this country because – I'll finish this story in my answer to the next question.

Dr. Swann: Well, it's indeed revealing that the minister of health sees health care as a business. That says a lot about what we're headed for in the next decade in health care, Mr. Speaker.

How does the minister justify it? The largest jump in Blue Cross premiums occurs when a person turns 65.

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I'll complete my story. This has nothing to do with business. This is about comparing where we are in health care. So let's take a fundamental business model in health care today. I tell you, if General Motors and Chrysler go broke, we can still buy a Toyota car. If Air Canada goes into bankruptcy, we can fly WestJet. But if publicly funded health care, which this government stands on, goes broke, as some of these members would like to see it go, we will have exactly what they don't want to have: American-style health care. So we want to change the fundamentals to preserve the publicly funded health care in this province.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Long-term Care

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Seniors and often their families are concerned about their ability to find a long-term care bed when they need it, and the government's continuing care strategy has done little to reassure our Alberta seniors. My questions would be to the Premier. Mr. Premier, I too look a little younger than I am. Does the Premier feel that the first-bed policy for long-term care placement, that allows seniors to be moved from family, friends, and community, is a fair way to treat our frail Albertans?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I do agree with the member that she is very young looking. Never get caught in that debate; I can tell you that.

The hon. member raises a good question. Without a doubt, long-term care rates in Alberta compared to other jurisdictions are lower. However, I do know, representing a rural constituency where sometimes when a person suffers some catastrophic event – perhaps a stroke or they fall in their home; something happens – where husband and wife now are separated for a period of time, where they're put in a long-term care situation, perhaps not in the very same community for a period of time, a few miles away, that it is difficult for the senior that's at home. The spouse possibly doesn't have a driver's licence. How do you visit? You depend on family, or you depend on that home-care nurse. I know that situation. We understand that situation very, very well. That's why we're increasing the number of long-term care beds.

Also, let's give seniors choice in terms of assisted living, additional home care, all of those different models, rather than for whatever reason always institutionalizing our seniors. That's not a quality life.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do agree with the Premier that warehousing seniors is really not where we want to go.

My next question would be to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Would the minister commit to remove the first-bed policy, which is still going on today, as part of the continuing care strategy so that seniors can age and live out their lives in the right place?

Mr. Liepert: Well, I guess my answer would be that I would hope that we could provide the options that we wouldn't need this policy. If we had the appropriate options, that seniors had the choice, we wouldn't need that particular option. But keep in mind that if we were to remove that option today, we would be in many cases doing exactly what our opposition folks keep telling us they don't want to see in health care, and that's jumping the queue. If there is no facility available in this town and there isn't going to be one for 10 years, we need to ensure that if that senior needs care, it's provided within a region. You can't have it both ways, Mr. Speaker.

Ms Pastoor: Actually, I think you can have it both ways.

My next question would be to the same minister. Does the minister consider it fair that by allowing seniors' facilities to charge for increased services, low-income seniors may not receive the necessary care that they require; in other words, sort of a two-tier service within the same facility?

Mr. Liepert: Well, I guess we have choices and options that seniors make every day when they enter facilities. In some cases it's assisted daily living, that provides a certain level of service, and you pay in some cases more in some facilities than others. Is this government going to move to a system whereby everybody gets treated exactly the same and government funds everything? The answer is no.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party in the House, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Chief Electoral Officer

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This evening the axe hovers over the head of Alberta's Chief Electoral Officer. He stands charged with the capital crime of embarrassing the government, specifically that the accused pointed out that partisan appointments of those who run Alberta elections are inappropriate, unfair, and undemocratic. To the Premier: will you drop the charges against the accused and table legislation this session to end Tory patronage control of Alberta's electoral system?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member asked a similar question. Again I repeat to the hon. member that the person he's talking about is an officer of this Legislature. He's not employed by the Premier of Alberta. I don't assess his performance. The committee assesses his performance, and it's up to the committee, which has representation from all three parties.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, the accused, being the Chief Electoral Officer of the province of Alberta, stands further charged with the crime of embarrassing the government by pointing out that the government has systematically failed to prosecute charges brought under the act by him. The question is to the Premier. Will you drop the charges against the accused and tell Albertans why your Justice minister has failed to prosecute these violations of the Alberta Election Act?

Mr. Stelmach: Well, first of all, just listening to the question, he's got most Albertans baffled because he doesn't know who is being charged with what, I would think. It got me a bit baffled as well.

Anyway, if he's imputing motives to the Minister of Justice, saying that she did something inappropriately, not pursuing the charges because a Crown prosecutor says that we should, that's a different story. If he has evidence of that, get up in the House and say that with the protection of the immunity of the House.

But to go back to yesterday, saying that because I was elected Premier and that Albertans who wanted to vote for the leader of the Progressive Conservative Party bought a membership, voted, and then he tried to put that together and say that somehow that created a difficult situation for the next election – you know, I had calls yesterday from people wondering: where is this guy coming from? What voters list? We don't go through the voters list for election of a leader of a party. I'm sure the Liberals didn't do that, and if you did, you can tell us that. Well, I don't know when you're coming up for re-election, but I'm sure you're not going to grab the Alberta list and go through an election. I mean, he's got everybody baffled, but if he's got hard evidence of impropriety, get up in the House and say it.

Mr. Mason: I certainly have the Premier baffled, Mr. Speaker.

The accused stands charged with the crime of embarrassing the government by pointing out that 25 per cent of Albertans were not on the voters list in the last election because the government could not provide the required nominees for deputy returning officers in a timely fashion. Will the Premier drop the charges against the accused and give the Chief Electoral Officer the authority and resources he needs to run an effective, well-organized, and nonpartisan election campaign?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the budget is agreed upon by the Assembly, by the committee, not by the Premier.

Secondly, there were issues raised by at least two parties, that being the opposition, and I know that we had some issues that we wanted to talk about, but to say in this House that somehow as a Premier or as a government we manipulated the election is just pure junk. In fact, maybe – well, no. I won't make any comment because I don't want to dig the hole deeper than what this guy is digging for himself.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

South Calgary Health Campus

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituents in Calgary-Hays have been waiting for some time now for the completion of the south Calgary health campus. My questions are all to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Why is the south Calgary health campus being built in phases when the need for a new health facility in the area is so great?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to clarify an answer that I gave yesterday in the House to the hon. Leader of the Opposition. He had me so worked up about the expansion at the Peter Lougheed that I didn't hear his question properly.

Mr. Mason: What a surprise.

Mr. Liepert: I was probably being interrupted by the leader of the third party, and I couldn't hear him. In fact, actually, the leader of the third party could take some lessons from the Liberal opposition, who have been behaving very appropriately in this House, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: And at that point in time we'll move on.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: when will each of the phases be completed?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I'll finish the rest of the story. Yesterday the hon. Leader of the Opposition asked me: "Will the minister at least commit to a 2011 completion of the south Calgary hospital?" My response was: "No, Mr. Speaker, I cannot at this time." As I said, I had mistakenly thought that he had asked me about the third phase of the Peter Lougheed hospital.

That being said, I cannot commit that it will be completed on time; 2011 is a long time away. But what I can say, Mr. Speaker, is that we have allocated a billion and a quarter dollars to this particular hospital. It is on schedule, on budget. I see no reason why it shouldn't be completed in 2011.* That's the first phase.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question: what services will be provided by the south Calgary health campus when phase 1 opens?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, phase 1 of the south Calgary campus will be a full acute facility which would have some 260 beds, an emergency department, intensive care units, 11 operating rooms – I could go on and on. I just want to reiterate that phase 1 of the south Calgary campus is part of some $2 billion, $3 billion, $4 billion worth of health care projects that are either just completed, under way, or about to be completed in the next couple of years in the city of Calgary, which is some 50 per cent of our allocation of health care capital dollars.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater.

Turner Valley Gas Plant

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday in the House the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit, who is responsible for the Turner Valley gas plant historical site, told us that because of tough economic times “we’re not going to . . . spend an untold amount of dollars to make sure that we remediate.” The message that I got is that Albertans should just stop whining if a contaminated site is affecting their water. My question is to the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit. Is the minister saying that in the upcoming budget there will be a decrease or an elimination in reclamation funding; in other words, no cash for cleanups?

Mr. Blackett: Well, Mr. Speaker, as everybody in this House knows, I have no idea what is in the next budget. That’s the privy of the minister of finance, and we’ll be informed in due course.

As far as reclamation, there is money being spent there. What I said is that we have remediated that site to an industrial standard. There will never be residential activity on that site; there’s an operating gas plant adjacent to it. The site has been remediated to a residential area from where there are walking paths to the individual buildings. At this time it’s prudent for us to take a look at our financial position. If we are going to go forward with further remediation or further expansion or an interpretive centre adjacent to that site, we’ll do so in due course.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again to the same minister so that I can clarify: given that the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act states that where a substance that is causing or has caused an adverse effect is released into the environment, the person responsible, that being the minister representing the department, shall – not may but shall – take all responsible measures to repair, remedy, and confine the effects of the substance, is the minister saying that he won’t follow the act?

Mr. Blackett: Well, Mr. Speaker, I’m saying that we have done, indeed, all of those things. We have confined the site, we have remediated the site, we have enclosed a membrane, and we have made sure that there was no danger of contamination going to the Sheep River. There’s no seepage of contaminants into the groundwater. It is a site that’s remediated, and it could be used today, if we so choose, in a manner that is appropriate.

Ms Blakeman: I don’t think the 2,000 petitioners believe that.

My next question is to the Minister of Energy. Given that the minister responded to an issue raised by these same 2,000 people by saying that it’s an issue that isn’t there – and that’s in quotes – is the minister denying the seriousness of a contamination for which Alberta Health had issued a directive that pregnant women and children should be restricted from the site?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, with respect to the issuance of a directive around citizens that may or may not find it to their benefit to visit different industrial sites around the province of Alberta, I would suggest that there are probably a number of places that certain individuals may find it uncomfortable and perhaps not in their best interest to visit.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Carbon Capture and Storage

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the CBC interviewed President Barack Obama. The President is obviously better informed on Alberta’s energy production than our CBC anchor, who misleadingly referred to the oil sands as tar sands. Informed Canadians note that this area might easily be called the job sands. Equally as impressive, the President agrees with Alberta and believes in the viability of carbon capture and storage. To the Minister of Energy. Alberta’s carbon capture and storage funding was announced in July. Can the minister advise when we’d expect to see these projects move forward?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I was very pleased, of course, with President Obama’s support for carbon capture and storage. I think that this is a thoughtful leader that’s looking for real solutions. We have one. We have carbon capture and storage moving ahead. What this does, in my opinion, is that it adds another very strong voice to the many voices around the world who now recognize that Alberta is a leader in carbon capture and storage technology. We’ll move ahead in the very short coming months and get our programs in place.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Much is made of the carbon emissions from the job sands development. My question is to the same minister. Can the minister tell us what the potential reduction in oil sands emissions could be from carbon capture and storage?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, I think that it’s important for us all to understand that when you look at the oil sands specifically, that’s not necessarily the largest emission of CO₂ in the province of Alberta. Coal-fired electrical generation is actually the largest emission. That said, there are significant opportunities for us to reduce emissions from oil sands and other areas in the province of Alberta, particularly on the oil sands issue with respect to upgrading and refining and the ability for us to capture CO₂ in those locations.

Mr. Johnson: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: if Alberta taxpayers share in the cost of construction, infrastructure, research, costs for these large carbon capture and storage projects, will they also share in the rewards once these projects are operating and potentially generating revenue streams?

Mr. Knight: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, most certainly, when we look at the situation that we have in Alberta, we are very blessed with the resources in Alberta that help build this province, but also we’re blessed with geology that allows us to store CO₂. In certain circumstances enhanced oil recovery projects from CO₂ sequestration do result in a very large benefit to Albertans with respect to additional production of conventional reserves, which leads to wealth generation and also additional royalty collected.

Prosecutions under the Election Act

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, today I’m hoping for some answers regarding allegations that 19 electoral violations were ignored by the Minister of Justice. This might be of help to the Chief Electoral Officer, too, since it seems that he may lose his job for doing it too well. Will the Justice minister tell Albertans why Alberta Justice refused to adequately prosecute 19 violations of the Alberta Election Act as recommended for prosecution by the Chief Electoral Officer?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think the Premier has made it very clear that we treat any concern expressed by the Chief Electoral Officer seriously. Our responsibility is always to determine – and this is a very important thing for people that, perhaps, aren't lawyers to understand. When we are prosecuting, we have two things that we must consider: one is what is in the public interest and, secondly, whether or not there is a reasonable likelihood of conviction. This is a fundamental principle of fair justice. It is at the core of what the Crown prosecution service does. It is part of their work on a daily basis. It is the difference between fair prosecution and persecution.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you for that answer, but do not these violations of the Election Act and the fact that the Chief Electoral Officer said they should be prosecuted lead us to believe in this House that the protection of democracy needs these violations prosecuted to the fullest extent of the law?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, in our very complicated system we all have jobs to do. One of the things that the Chief Electoral Officer must do is see whether or not people have followed the rules. One of the things that the Department of Justice must do and which prosecutors must do in the Department of Justice is determine whether or not in absolutely every circumstance it is in the best interests of the public to prosecute. Part of the consideration for that is whether or not there is a reasonable likelihood of conviction.

Mr. Hehr: Do you not deem it to be in the public's best interest that we prosecute election violations regardless of a conviction or not?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, I believe that it is in the public's best interest to ensure that we have a transparent electoral system. We have that system. I also believe that it is within our jurisdiction as the Department of Justice to make decisions about what we need to prosecute to ensure that people are living in a democracy and living in a safe and secure community. The decision was made by prosecutors in the Department of Justice that in some cases it is not necessary to prosecute. It is only necessary to ensure that the behaviour does not happen again, and that is what we did.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Climate Change Policy

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are for the Minister of Environment. The minister has just returned from the Canadian Council of Ministers of the Environment meeting in Whitehorse where, it appears, climate change and the policy relating thereto was a major topic of discussion. Can the minister advise the House whether the meeting dealt with Canada's position in preparation for President Obama's visit to Canada tomorrow?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, I can assure this member and all members of the House that this meeting was planned well in advance of our finding out that the President was going to be coming to Ottawa tomorrow. I think it also should be said that, quite naturally, given the fact that the President is coming, that was a topic of some discussion. We talked about issues related to climate change and our policy respecting climate change. We also talked about other things, such as the tripartite air framework that we're working on and a national strategy for our waste water and effluent. This is an ongoing, regularly scheduled meeting of Environment ministers.

Dr. Brown: Given that climate change was the topic of discussion, can the minister explain Canada's and Alberta's position on the North American policy, particularly since we have expressed in the past that we are against a cap-and-trade system?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'd prefer to talk and discuss not so much what we are against but what we're for. That was the subject of discussion at that meeting. That was the subject of discussion of President Obama in his interview last night. We're looking for a North America-wide regulatory system that will allow the much-needed technology that is recognized by both the U.S. and Canada to develop our energy in a responsible way by the implementation of technology. Whatever that regulatory regime is, we will be doing our utmost to work with the Americans to bring it about.

Dr. Brown: Can the minister advise whether there was any discussion about Alberta being able to influence the upcoming Conference of the Parties negotiations in Copenhagen?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, that particular issue was the subject of much discussion at the meeting. To be frank, in the past the involvement of the provinces at the Conference of the Parties has been very limited. All ministers, myself included, were very much enthused and encouraged by the comments of Minister Prentice when he indicated that the provinces will be very much part of the development of the Canadian position at the conference in Copenhagen. We put together and agreed to a process of developmental meetings at the officials level, leading to a number of meetings of ministers so that when we get to Copenhagen next December, we will indeed have a Canadian team at that event.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

2:20 Returning Officer Appointments

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. From June to October 2007 the Chief Electoral Officer wrote repeatedly to the government asking for local returning officer nominees, and the government never even replied. Eventually the PC Party gave him a list of names heavily biased, of course, with PC Party members. My question is to the Deputy Premier, who was intimately involved in this process. How does he justify to this Assembly a policy in which written requests from an officer of this Assembly are ignored and a key responsibility for an election is handed over to a political party?

Mr. Stevens: Well, Mr. Speaker, I must admit that I was here during that time period, but I don't recall the specifics of the question. What I do however remember is that following the election, the hon. member who has asked this question was sufficiently distressed with the circumstances surrounding the election that I think he called for an investigation into the conduct of the officer. So I do note that you weren't particularly pleased with what was going on.

Dr. Taft: You know, Mr. Speaker, that was about as pathetic a response on a serious issue as this Assembly has ever seen. You should be ashamed of yourself.

Again to the same Deputy Premier. When he finally got a list of 83 names, the Chief Electoral Officer discovered that only one person, 1 out of 83, had been contacted to see if they were interested in the position. How does this minister defend such a pathetic performance on such a crucial matter?

Mr. Stevens: Well, part of the difficulty I'm having in defending anything, Mr. Speaker, is that I don't have specifics of the particular event that the hon. member is asking about. It's incredibly difficult for me to respond to something that I don't at this particular point in time have any recollection of.

Dr. Taft: Ignorance is no defence, Mr. Speaker. This is shocking. This is a matter of profound public policy importance. This minister was intimately involved. He was the minister responsible. He is now the Deputy Premier.

Will the Deputy Premier tell this Assembly – maybe he can get his memory cells going – who it was in the PC Party he asked to provide names to the Chief Electoral Officer? If he won't tell us, why won't he tell us?

Mr. Stevens: Well, Mr. Speaker, what I can say about this hon. member is that ignorance is not a problem when it comes to asking questions in this House. That certainly is true.

I can tell you that I do not answer questions that I don't have a factual basis to answer, and that is the situation I find myself in. The hon. member can say that I should know the answer, and perhaps I should, but I don't know the answer, hon. member, so I can't provide you with one.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Student Housing

Ms. Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The University of Alberta south campus student residence appears to have been mothballed. Meanwhile, students are facing rent increase after rent increase. U of A residence rates went up 10 per cent in 2007, almost 9 per cent last year, and 8 per cent this year. That's almost a 30 per cent rent increase in three years. Postsecondary students deserve accessible, affordable, safe places to live. To the minister of advanced education: why won't you fight for a new undergrad residence at the U of A so students can study and sleep knowing that they'll be able afford to live there next semester, too?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, indeed, we are working with the university and with CAUS and the University of Alberta Students' Union on a number of different proposals: one being the south campus, one being the east village, and a number of other proposals which I'm currently working on with the executive of the University of Alberta. So I don't know where the hon. member is getting her information.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms. Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. From the students.

My understanding is that you've got a couple of grad residences online, but there's absolutely nothing in the works for the undergrad residence. Students get $429 a month from student loans to cover rent, but a suite at the U of A residence goes for almost $700 a month, and that's $700 for a building that recently had broken elevators and was infested with bedbugs. As a result, students are working at several jobs and taking on crippling debt to make ends meet. To the same minister: how could you let student costs balloon in the boom but offer no help to students who were and still are struggling to make ends meet?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I would put the student financial assistance that we provide in this province up against any province in the country. The facts are the facts, and simply that is the truth. The University of Alberta and our department have been working on additions to student residences, and the hon. member is correct on deferred maintenance issues as it relates to that. We guarantee the funds for the loans for student residences, but we do not fund the student residences themselves. The institutions do that as a business case, and we're working with them on several different business cases right now.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms. Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The fact is the fact that, basically, students receive about $300 less a month than they need to get a simple place to live. These days in Alberta the average undergrad student takes six years to complete a four-year degree because they can't afford to study full-time. We know that students who go into debt more than $10,000 per year have only a 20 per cent chance of completing their degree. Postsecondary students are suffering because this government is putting corporate tax breaks before public education. To the same minister: why won't you commit today to providing real affordable housing for students at the U of A campus, including the south campus residence?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I look after Campus Alberta. I don't as a rule look after the individual campuses and the individual day-to-day operations of those institutions. The University of Alberta has a board, a chair, a provost, a president, and an entire senate that look after the day-to-day operations of the university campus and, as well, the actual infrastructure that's on that. We work with them, and we are working with them today and will continue to work with them throughout Campus Alberta. Accessible, affordable education is a priority of this government.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Tourism Marketing Opportunities

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This past weekend the Whitecourt Trailblazers Snowmobile Club and the Alberta Snowmobile Association held their annual jamboree in Whitecourt. Whitecourt and area hosted thousands of riders and guests from throughout the province, from Canada, and from the United States and filled our hotel rooms and restaurants. My question is to the Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation. Does your ministry value events like this that happen outside the better-known zones like Jasper and Banff?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The answer to the hon. member is: yes, we do. We were pleased to be able to partner with the Whitecourt Trailblazers and other area businesses to support this event to the tune of about $40,000, and with that commitment we understand from the early economic returns that it was close to a $4 million return to this community. As he said, 1,350 rooms were let. We think that's marketing money well spent, and we're doing our best to keep people travelling throughout the province of Alberta even in these uncertain economic times.

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, I thank the minister for the support given by the ministry. She mentioned the economics of these kinds of event. During unsettled economic circumstances in the global economy what are you doing to entice people to travel and, more importantly, entice them to communities like mine, that have been hit hard by the economic downturn?

Mrs. Ady: Well, the Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne makes a really good point. Because of the great work of the tourism industry and also Travel Alberta we've really been not doing so bad. When it comes to direct entries, we're faring better than other provinces around us. We're into what I'll call the second year of the Stay campaign, where we encourage Albertans to travel in Alberta and to enjoy this province. We think it's been going very well. It's kept us in a pretty good, solid position compared to others. When we look at last year, at 2008, we think the Stay campaign projected about another 40,000 visits, worth about $17 million in income, to the province.

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, I'm glad the minister mentioned the Stay program. Over the weekend the hundreds of volunteers expressed an interest to me about an expanded trail system. We need to expand that product here in our province in order to keep people in Alberta. What is the minister doing to expand our trail network in this province?

Mrs. Ady: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm happy to report that we have been hard at work on the trail system. I've asked the hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater to chair the Recreation Corridors Coordinating Committee, and they're busy at work trying to find goals that create a sustainable network of trails in the province. I know they've had their first meeting, and they're looking for best ways to achieve the goals. We've got hundreds of thousands of Albertans that want out on these trails. They want to recreate in the province of Alberta.

I'm also working together with the minister of sustainable resources on this to help ensure that trails used in Alberta are sustainable and responsible, both public and in parkland.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Little Bow.

Submetering for Energy Use

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Service Alberta's written responses to the questions asked on submetering last spring showed that instead of taking action, she's leaving it to the landlords to make their own business decisions. This is simply unacceptable. To the Minister of Service Alberta: when will the minister be introducing legislation on submetering to protect renters?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to protecting renters, Service Alberta has a number of programs in place. One of the best ones is the residential tenancies dispute services program, which is a wonderful place for tenants and landlords to come together to solve problems, whether it's relating to rent or things like that. So Service Alberta is very much engaged in protecting renters and making sure renters know that rental increases are only allowed to be given once a year. We are always looking at and wanting to hear back from Albertans on issues they are concerned about.

Mr. Kang: We are talking about unregulated metering, Mr. Speaker. We are not talking about rents. Again to the minister: why is the minister allowing submetering to continue unregulated? Where is the protection for renters while they wait?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to the whole issue of submetering, I am concerned about that issue, as is the hon. member. I have instructed my department to look at that issue and how it relates to the renter. It is federal and provincial jurisdictions, so we are currently looking at that area. I have written a letter to Minister Tony Clement on this issue just to indicate that some of the measurement standards are regulated federally, and we should be looking at those jointly.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When will we get the response on that? Given that the minister wrote that regulations weren't a necessity because landlords have their own incentives to keep costs low, why are the needs of landlords put before renters who are forced to pay submetering charges without protection?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think the whole issue of submetering has positives and negatives in that it does encourage renters to be more aware of the costs of energy and those kinds of areas but balances that with respect to landlords being able to give the right information to the tenant so they know what they're getting into. As I said, that's something that I am looking into as we speak, and I'm currently working on developing a tipsheet for consumers so that they know what they're going into when they are faced with this choice.

Abandoned Gas Lines on Deeded Land

Mr. McFarland: Mr. Speaker, recent questions at my constituency office and at a southern Alberta mayors and reeves meeting have been around abandoned pipelines, gas lines, and the associated federal and provincial regulations. My question today is to the Minister of Energy, and I would like him to give me an answer to the question that was asked most frequently. In the event that an oil or gas pipeline is abandoned on deeded land, Minister, what is the landowner's liability?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, thank you very much. Certainly, the patience of the hon. member is appreciated. With respect to provincial legislation around abandonments even after a pipeline in Alberta is abandoned under provincial regulation and an order is issued, the licensee is responsible for the pipeline, and under no circumstance does this responsibility transfer to a landowner.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The second question, that I thought was a most pertinent one: what is the landowner's responsibility and involvement in the abandoned line on deeded land when it's abandoned and going to be reclaimed?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, if a licensee of a pipeline seeks an abandonment order, it must be done through the ERCB. Certainly, there is usually a hearing involved, particularly when there's a directly affected landowner, and the landowners must be notified in advance. At a hearing a landowner would be able to rise and present his concerns with respect to the abandonment process, and the ERCB is required to take these concerns into account.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you. My final question along the same line, Minister: does the original agreement made between a landowner and the resource company with respect to the compensation get altered in the event of an abandonment?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, again, the answer to that question would be: under normal circumstances, no, unless the leaseholder and the landowner had agreed previously that on abandonment the contract would expire. The contract would have terms in it relative to the length of the contract and when the contract would be terminated. Just because the line is abandoned doesn't mean that the contract is null and void. The contract would be in place until such a time as these terms of the contract are completed.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Strathcona.

Alberta Adolescent Recovery Centre

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday, when questioned about her ministry's responsibility to protect addicted children and youth, the minister flipped the concern to the minister of health, who first blamed CBC for reporting allegations of abuse at the Alberta Adolescent Recovery Centre in Calgary. The health minister then, rather than responding to my questions, accused me of not being supportive of Calgarians, whose concerns I raised. To either minister: whose ministry has the primary responsibility for protecting Alberta's children and youth?

Ms Tarchuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'll reiterate my messaging from yesterday, which is that I will always – and it's my role – encourage people that if they know of children that are being mistreated or abused, they report to me, and I and our ministry will make sure that there is immediate follow-up investigation. I can also say again that we do not license addiction treatment facilities, so anything that has to do with those services I would direct to the minister of health.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Rather than a passive approach of "call me," how about you calling them?

Has either minister begun an investigation into the allegations of abuse raised by the CBC's The Fifth Estate or their accountability to taxpayers for the annual grants of $300,000 to this facility?

Mr. Liepert: This is the second day in a row that this particular member has raised unfounded allegations. If there is a specific allegation, he owes it to call the police. Report it to the police. That's their job. If he doesn't have it, I would suggest that he quit raising it and quit smearing the reputation of an organization in Calgary that is doing outstanding volunteer work.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the ministers, will the Premier remove the cloud of doubt hanging over this facility, over their government's duty to protect the physical and mental well-being of children, and over their fiscal responsibility to Albertans by conducting a public inquiry?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, the only cloud is raised by this member, and it's got a hole in it bigger than the hole in the ozone layer. He continues to raise allegations, has no facts to back it up. All he has is some trash journalism by the CBC out of Toronto.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Door-to-door Sales of Energy Contracts

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. People in my constituency tell me that door-to-door salespeople have come to their homes and used questionable tactics to promote and sell energy contracts. Can the Minister of Service Alberta inform the House on what is and isn't allowed when selling energy contracts and how Albertans can be aware of these regulations?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Salespeople who do come to Albertans' homes must abide by the energy marketing regulation. It has specific requirements as to when they can access homes; that is, between the hours of 9 a.m. and 8 p.m. The regulation is very clear, and we do take action if the requirements are not followed. We also have detailed information on the Service Alberta website and the Utilities Consumer Advocate website about the regulations so that Albertans are informed of what door-to-door energy salespeople can do.

Mr. Quest: My first supplemental to the same minister: what options are in place for consumers if they sign an energy contract with a door-to-door salesperson and then change their mind after the salesperson has left?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The best thing Albertans should do is to consider their options very carefully and do their homework before signing an energy contract. However, in the event that someone does change their mind, they have 10 days to cancel the contract and provide notice to the retailer. The contract can be cancelled even if the 10 days have passed, depending on situations. Consumers can call our department, and we're very happy to help them through the process.

Mr. Quest: My final supplementary to the same minister: what has the office of the Utilities Consumer Advocate done to inform Albertans about what to be aware of when signing an energy contract?

Mrs. Klimchuk: The good work of the Utilities Consumer Advocate and their staff is that they have been very active about informing consumers about door-to-door salespeople. We have calls that come to a call centre, we have good website information, and as well we take calls from consumers. We also successfully mediate disputes, and we work closely with the retailers to ensure they're meeting our regulations. The bottom line is that there are good protections in place, and we will enforce them as well.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that was 96 questions and responses. In 30 seconds from now I'm going to call upon the first of several hon. members to continue with members' statements.

Diamonds and Denim Sweetheart Gala

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, on Valentine's Day I attended the third annual Diamonds and Denim Sweetheart Gala in Red Deer, a fundraiser to support the vital programs and services of the Canadian Paraplegic Association, Alberta. Alberta businesses, including Mitchell & Jewell of Red Deer, were very generous in supporting the fundraising auction. I was also pleased to see the Member for Red Deer-South and the hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports at the event. Marlin Styner, the chair of the Premier's council on disability, and his wife, Diane, were also present. I would also like to point out the hard work of Paulette Vanoosterom and her amazing group of volunteers, who organized this gala evening.

The Canadian Paraplegic Association, Alberta, helps ensure that Albertans with disabilities have the help and support they need to address their specific issues, giving them a chance to reach their full potential as human beings and active citizens. As an Albertan with a disability I can tell you that I am very grateful to have had such wonderful resources and terrific people to draw upon.

I have served on the CPA board for nine years, and I can tell you from personal experience that I have seen remarkable progress Albertans with disabilities have made in that time. Don't get me wrong. We still have a long way to go when it comes to improving accessibility and availability of opportunity, but many positive steps forward have been made thanks in great part to the folks working at CPA and their generous supporters.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank Paulette and her amazing group of volunteers once again and to offer a shout-out to the fine Albertans who gave generously at the fundraiser.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Norma Bastidas

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a great privilege for me to rise today to share an incredible story of an Albertan who is an inspiration for us all. Norma Bastidas lives in southwest Calgary, and she's a single mother of two. Now, her 14-year-old son suffers from cone-rod dystrophy. It's a progressive condition that often results in significant vision loss. Rather than waiting for someone else to do something about this, Norma has taken it upon herself to search to the ends of the earth for a cure.

Along with Operation Eyesight Universal, the Foundation Fighting Blindness, and the Canadian National Institute for the Blind she has launched an initiative to help combat vision loss. Norma is an ultramarathon runner, and to bring attention to a cause that affects more than 160 million people, she will literally run all over the world. Norma will compete in seven ultramarathons on seven continents in seven months, seven-on-seven-in-seven. She will run 1,400 kilometres through some of the most hostile environments: the thick jungles of Brazil, the subzero temperatures of Antarctica, and the hottest deserts on the planet.

When she completes her journey, the 777 Run for Sight, she will be the first person in history to do so. It won't be easy, Mr. Speaker. Ultramarathons are one of the toughest challenges in sports. The first race alone is equal to running up and down Mount Everest. In this effort Norma will express how lucky we are to have the gift of sight and how we need to share our good fortune with others who need support in dealing with vision loss. The project will focus on helping to find the causes and ultimately the cure for inherited retinal diseases that cause vision loss. Twenty-five years ago finding a cure for retinal dystrophies was considered impossible, but today research has led to promising treatments to prevent and in some cases even restore vision. People can follow along on normabastidas.com in her quest for $100,000.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Labour Mobility of Land Surveyors

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my privilege to rise today and relate one of the first of many success stories to come from the trade, investment, and labour mobility agreement, commonly referred to by its acronym, TILMA. The Alberta Land Surveyors' Association and the Association of British Columbia Land Surveyors have recently announced that the first Alberta land surveyor to apply under the new TILMA rules has completed and passed the jurisdictional examination for British Columbia and will be commissioned as a British Columbia land surveyor at the annual general meeting of the Association of B.C. Land Surveyors being held next week in Vancouver. Congratulations go out to Richard Nixon, Alberta land surveyor from Fort St. John, B.C.

Both associations signed an agreement on April 26 of last year that provides for the labour mobility of their members as of January 1 of this year. This agreement complies with the trade, investment, and labour mobility agreement of the two provinces. Under this agreement, Mr. Speaker, a land surveyor in good standing in one association may apply to become a land surveyor in the other association and will have to write a nonmaterial jurisdictional examination. By writing and passing this nonmaterial examination, the land surveyor will prove that he or she is knowledgeable in the statutes, regulations, and survey practices of the other province. Once completed, the land surveyor will be sworn in as a commissioned land surveyor in the other jurisdiction. This revised process for entry will ensure compliance with both provinces' labour mobility requirements in a fair and transparent process for land surveyors in each province. The two associations are looking forward to working together in this new relationship to share ideas and projects to save time and resources in ongoing activities.

The Alberta Land Surveyors' Association and the Association of British Columbia Land Surveyors are the self-governing professional associations established by provincial legislation. The associations regulate the practice of land surveying for the protection of the public and the administration of the profession.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Bill 15

Dunvegan Hydro Development Act

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to request leave to introduce Bill 15, being the Dunvegan Hydro Development Act.

Mr. Speaker, on December 22, 2008, an independent joint review panel determined that the Dunvegan hydroelectric project, a 100-megawatt run-of-the-river hydroelectric project on the Peace River is in the public interest. Our own Hydro and Electric Energy Act requires that a bill be prepared in order to authorize a construction order for the hydro development. Passage of Bill 15 would authorize the Alberta Utilities Commission to make an order for the construction and operation of Glacier Power Ltd.'s Dunvegan hydroelectric project. While this act meets our legislative requirements to grant the appropriate authority to the Alberta Utilities Commission, it does not remove any of the regulatory duties of that body.

Mr. Speaker, this is a good-news story. Renewable energy production already accounts for 13 per cent of Alberta's total electricity generation. This project will add to that total.

[Motion carried; Bill 15 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that Bill 15 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security.

2:50

Bill 16 Peace Officer Amendment Act, 2009

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to request leave to introduce Bill 16, the Peace Officer Amendment Act, 2009.

Mr. Speaker, effective May 1, 2009, the Peace Officer Act will restrict the use of terms and symbols used to represent auxiliary or volunteer police officers to differentiate them from sworn police officers. An unintended consequence is that auxiliary policing programs are required to make changes to their uniforms and insignia, incurring extra costs. The proposed amendment would allow police services to ask for an exemption to this section of the act so that similar uniforms and titles can be used within the same police service when both auxiliary and police constables attend scenes together. Making the amendment now ensures police services or auxiliary police programs don't incur these additional costs.

Bill 17 Securities Amendment Act, 2009

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I request leave to introduce Bill 17, the Securities Amendment Act, 2009.

Alberta and all the provinces and territories in Canada with the exception of Ontario have made a commitment to ongoing reform and harmonization of our securities regulation under the 2004 provincial-territorial memorandum of understanding regarding securities regulation. Bill 17 builds on this work, Mr. Speaker, and Alberta has taken a leadership role to further modernize, harmonize, and streamline Alberta securities law.

Mr. Speaker, thank you. I look forward to the further debate and discussion on this issue as we move forward.

[Motion carried; Bill 17 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that Bill 17 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Bill 201 Traffic Safety (Vehicles with Unlawfully Possessed Firearms) Amendment Act, 2009

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce private member's Bill 201, the Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2009.

The purpose of this amendment is to stem the tide of gang and gun violence in our towns and cities. These additions to the Traffic Safety Act will make it an offence to drive on a highway in a motor vehicle in which there is an unlawfully possessed firearm. Provided that the police officer has reasonable grounds to believe an offence has been committed, they may request the surrender of the driver's licence and detain the vehicle. The licence suspension is for a 24-hour period, and the vehicle is impounded for the same length of time. At this time the government may use new legislation provisions to rescind the individual's driver's licence for up to one year and fine the individual up to $25,000.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank the table officers, members of our staff, and everyone who aided in the creation of Bill 201 for their assistance. Thank you very much.

[Motion carried; Bill 201 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and to table a list of 150 students from J.C. Charyk school in Hanna in the constituency of Drumheller-Stettler. These students have written this Assembly asking for a prohibition on the sale of flavoured tobacco products in Alberta. I just briefly have a quote here that they indicate is from a U.S. smokeless tobacco executive: "Cherry Skoal is for someone who likes the taste of candy, if you know what I'm saying." I have five copies here which I will pass to the Clerk. I think we should congratulate these students on their initiative in writing our Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This past Saturday, Valentine's Day, the hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, the MLA for Calgary-Mountain View, and I participated in the first annual march to honour the lives of more than a hundred Alberta women murdered or missing over the last 10 years. Among the names of the women remembered were: Sharene Oswald, Jane and Kathryn Johnson, Mary Jane Serloin, Barbara Eyapaise, Starr Solway and her daughter Daniha, Christine Ackabee, Annette Leger, Elaine Krauscher, Sheila Ritchie, Joanne Shover, and Shauna Vanderbosch.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of my colleague the Leader of the Official Opposition I have two tablings today. The first is a letter from Paul Hawirko, who notes that he's approaching his 80th birthday and has been moved to write a letter expressing his concern, which he sees as an assault on the drug coverage benefits available to seniors in Alberta. He would like to see that changed.

The second tabling on behalf of the Leader of the Official Opposition is from Wayne Hampton, who resides in Lacombe, who is also expressing his vehement opposition to the proposed changes in the Alberta government's pharmaceutical strategy.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of 10 reports from long-term care workers indicating specific instances of shifts that were short-staffed. One of these reports shows that because of short-staffing residents missed baths, were fed late, and were not toileted when needed.

The second tabling, Mr. Speaker, is the appropriate number of copies of 105 letters from residents of Newton Place, a University of Alberta residence, which relates to my questions today. The letters highlight the lack of affordable housing for U of A students.

Thank you.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Goudreau, Minister of Employment and Immigration, pursuant to the Architects Act the Alberta Association of Architects annual report, 2007.

Orders of the Day Government Motions

3. Mr. Hancock moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly do resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, when called, to consider certain bills on the Order Paper.

The Speaker: Hon. members, neither motions 3 nor 4 are debatable. I'll call the question on the motion put forward by the hon. Government House Leader.

[Government Motion 3 carried]

4. Mr. Hancock moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly do resolve itself into Committee of Supply, when called, to consider supply to be granted to Her Majesty.

[Government Motion 4 carried]

Consideration of His Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mr. Johnston moved that an humble address be presented to His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To His Honour the Honourable Norman L. Kwong, CM, AOE, Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Adjourned debate February 17: Mr. Lukaszuk]

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, do you wish to continue?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, just a couple of words in summation to what I had the pleasure of saying yesterday on the speech. It is very important that we as leaders in this Assembly focus on the positives that are happening in the province of Alberta. If we as elected officials representing our constituents in this Chamber cannot focus on the positive and cannot underline what great work not only this government but this Chamber as a whole and all Albertans have done and how far ahead we are of all jurisdictions, it would be very difficult to expect that of Albertans in turn.

Mr. Speaker, we're at a time right now when we need to pull together and when we need to show the strength of Alberta and when we need to forge new markets and when we need to market Alberta in foreign markets. The world is watching us. If we're here knocking down the work of this government, if we're here knocking down, in turn, the work of Albertans, I am not sure what kind of a picture we are painting in front of the rest of this world. Hence, I suggest to you and through you to all members of this Assembly that when discussing the Speech from the Throne, we should perhaps focus on the realities and less on the partisan objectives and highlight the positives and the opportunities that exist in this province because it is indeed a province like no other in this country and like no other state further south of us.

The Speech from the Throne definitely is meant to inspire Albertans, it's meant to boost our economy, and it's meant to show all Albertans and the world that this province is open for business, that this province is going to develop its natural resources in a very responsible way, that this province is going to take care of those who need assistance but will not do any of that frivolously. This province will continue with a very sound small "c" conservative fiscal plan, and this province will be probably, if not definitely, the first one to rebound from this economic turmoil that we're in.

Mr. Speaker, with this, I will close my comments and tell you that I have confidence in all members in this chamber and in this government that we will lead Alberta through this turbulent but also challenging time full of opportunities.

Thank you.

3:00

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Minister of Environment.

Mr. Renner: Thank you. I'm very pleased to rise today to respond to the Speech from the Throne, delivered by His Honour on February 10. Mr. Speaker, let me say that it's my pleasure to respond to the speech both as a proud Albertan and as the Environment minister.

In these uncertain times when we face so many unknowns, what we do know for sure is that this government remains committed to managing the environment for now and for our future. Albertans take great pride in our land, our ecosystems, and our natural resources. It transcends government, communities, and the economy. Our love of the land is as Albertan as this building or cowboys or, indeed, free spirit. It's simply a part of who we are.

Managing our impact on the land is very much what my department is all about. One of the phrases used in the speech resonated strongly with me; I think it really captured what Alberta Environment is all about. His Honour talked about conducting business with an environmental footprint that grows lighter and lighter over time. Mr. Speaker, I couldn't agree more.

Everything we do has some impact. Every change we go through, economic or otherwise, has some impact. We recognize that Alberta has changed. The province is growing. More people, more demand for Alberta resources means that our proverbial footprint is larger. It's the reality of today's Alberta. Society as a whole will dictate the size of the foot. It's really beyond the scope of any government or any industry. What we can control, however, Mr. Speaker, is how deep that footprint goes. Alberta Environment is doing just that. Albertans have told us that this is what they want.

As I said before, we share a common pride for the natural beauty of Alberta and the diversity of our environment. Albertans value a high quality of life. Some people may think it's a choice between one and the other. We know that both can be achieved by finding the right balance, and we know that Albertans demand both from us. Don't get me wrong, Mr. Speaker. Finding this balance is a continuous work in progress. We don't have all of the answers in the Ministry of Environment. We never have had, and frankly we never will. But we are focusing our efforts to get better every day and to make sure that with every step we take, we move further and further down the right path. Albertans would accept nothing less.

Albertans want to know that someone is considering all the impacts of a development when making decisions, so we are and in a way we have never done before. Alberta is pioneering new tools and approaches that will determine what our environment can handle and how we manage within those limits. This approach takes us beyond project-by-project planning. It considers all sectors that exist on a landscape: residential, agricultural, industrial, and commercial. At the same time it balances these sectors with what is required to maintain an ecosystem. Ecosystems, Mr. Speaker, are interconnected, and so should be our planning.

Our air emissions will be capped to ensure that air emissions remain safe and that our air remains safe to breathe. Water withdrawals will be limited to protect aquatic systems. Land disturbances will be minimized by putting the right developments in the right places. Just as importantly, all of us will know what these thresholds are. We can ensure that we live and work within these limits.

The cumulative effects approach is already in place in the Industrial Heartland. Our ministry is taking what we are learning in the heartland and will be applying it throughout the rest of the province. Much of our ministry's work on cumulative effects is happening behind the scenes, changing the internal processes and policy reviews to ensure that we align the department to this new approach. We're examining our own environmental impact assessment process to determine how we can reimagine it to fit under cumulative effects planning.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans want to take action against climate change, and they want us to show that we are part of the global solution, so we will continue to refine our greenhouse gas emission regulations, which are already the first of its kind in North America. We've always said that we have much more to do in this area, and we're going to act on that commitment.

Alberta is in a unique role as a global energy supplier. We have the ability to produce energy the world demands, but with that we are also the largest emitter of greenhouse gases in Canada. So Albertans have a challenge ahead of us. We're ready and willing to do our part, but climate change is not just Alberta's issue; it belongs to everyone who drives a car, heats a home, or buys consumer goods. Any climate change strategy must reflect this reality. It must take steps to limit emissions at all points in the fossil fuel life cycle, not just the production side. This is why we'll continue to focus on reducing the emissions that come from the production of energy in Alberta, especially those that come from the oil sands, while also taking action to promote wise energy use, such as the consumer incentive program that we will be introducing and announcing soon.

We've made great strides, but this is a race that's just getting started, Mr. Speaker, and we know we have much more to do. Technology investment is priority one. It provides long-term solutions to how we can reduce emissions and make energy production more efficient. An investment in technology development here at home is also an investment in jobs in our economy. It shows the rest of the world that we take our responsibility as a global energy supplier seriously.

Decisions that will soon be made on how to invest the $2 billion earmarked for carbon capture and storage will be announced. While carbon capture and storage alone will not solve the world's greenhouse gas emission issue, it's a critical and important tool in our tool box. It has the support of the United Nations Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change and, as we heard last night, the Obama administration. This is where we have much to offer. Frankly, I think we have the most to offer, Mr. Speaker, not only to make real, lasting emission reductions in Alberta but to take what we learn in the coming years and share this valuable knowledge with others. For a province of 3 and a half million people to commit this significant amount of dollars is a tremendous commitment to the world, particularly in times like these.

This year will be an important one for climate change policy in North America. President Obama is meeting our Prime Minister tomorrow. Climate change will certainly be on the agenda, and speculation persists that Canada will be looking for some sort of free pass for the oil sands. Let me be clear, Mr. Speaker, to you and to all Albertans that Canada and Alberta are not looking for a free pass. The oil sands do not receive a free pass from our own regulatory system, and we don't expect one from a North American system.

What we do want, Mr. Speaker, is a common North American system that respects jurisdictional differences and efforts under way. We expect our $2 billion commitment to CCS to be recognized. So, too, would be our regulatory system that directed and led to real emissions, a price on carbon, and an offset credit market. A system that works for one place does not necessarily work for another. Each province and each state has its own challenges and its own means to find solutions, and everybody has a set of experience and expertise to bring to the table. But it can be one that shares the same common outcome: real, lasting emission reductions. For Alberta this means that money generated by an emission regulatory system should stay here where it can nurture the greatest change.

Let me talk for a few moments, Mr. Speaker, about water. Albertans want to know that there will be enough water in the future for people, for ecosystems, and for the economy. It is by far the greatest environmental concern for many Albertans. Living on the prairies, Albertans realize how important the supply of fresh water is. Like other natural resources water must be managed appropriately.

In 2003 we introduced water for life. At the time it was a groundbreaking framework for a province in the northern hemisphere. In five years it has accomplished much. Our knowledge of Alberta's water systems has increased dramatically. We've forged many partnerships with on-the-ground organizations across the province. We've made safe drinking water even safer. But with every accomplishment another challenge arises, so we are implementing the renewed water for life strategy. We're going to look at important and, in many ways, challenging questions about how we allocate and use this valuable resource. Priorities coming forward will include continuing to find ways to support regional drinking water and waste water solutions, managing and understanding the health of our aquatic ecosystems, and building our water monitoring and evaluation public reporting through the Water Information Centre so that Albertans know the state of their water.

Renewed water for life is also setting the stage for dealing with two converging fundamental truths about water in Alberta: on one hand, our growing population and an economy that continues to put upward pressure on the demand for water; on the other hand, Mr. Speaker, scientists agree that a warming climate in Alberta will probably mean less supply available in the future. These converging themes are taking our water management planning in new directions. Alberta will ensure that we have the right system to manage the balance with these realities. We have a system that has served us well, but it's time that we take a hard look and ask ourselves if it will still serve us into the future.

More than anything else, Mr. Speaker, Albertans want balance. They want a robust economy but not at the expense of the environment. They want confidence that the land they love will be the land that they pass on to future generations. That is our goal, and it's a goal that I am very proud to be part of meeting.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciated the comments from the minister. I think the minister knows that on this side we share the vision, or at least we have the vision of developing the oil sands but in a sustainable, sensible manner. I'm sure the minister has that same vision.

My question is particular to oil sands development and habitat protection. The plan released the other day – I don't have a copy in front of me – what was it called? Responsible directions or something, you know, the big plan released the other day that talks specifically about committing to habitat protection and to working with groups like CEMA.

Now, CEMA last year made a recommendation, endorsed by industry and environmentalists, to set aside, protect from development some areas in the oil sands region. Despite a strong, comprehensive recommendation the government denied that. So I see a gap between the commitment to CEMA that the minister talks about and the commitment to habitat protection and the actual actions of this government which overrule the recommendations of CEMA. I'd be interested if the minister can tell us how this government is moving. Is it for CEMA or against CEMA?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think it's clear. It's important to understand that what is so fundamentally important about the oil sands strategy, in addition to what is specifically within it, is that this strategy provides the framework for a number of different ministries throughout government to work together, to have the framework to know that no longer is it acceptable for Environment to head off in one direction, Energy in another direction, and SRD, for example, in a third direction. This is the document that brings it all together.

To specifically address the member's question, we have before us the land-use framework, which is under the direction of the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development, referred to in the oil sands strategy document. That process has within its own regulatory regime and within its own process right as we speak a board that has been struck to talk about land-use issues in the lower Athabasca. That will, among many other things, be the way that the issue that the member refers to can be addressed. At the same time Alberta Environment will be talking about issues related to water, groundwater, ecosystems around water. We can guide and bring what we need from a scientific, environmental point of view by way of advice into that regional planning.

That's, I think, what the member and what Albertans have to understand is so monumental in bringing forward this overall strategy: not specifically what's in the strategy but what the strategy brings to the planning process. It brings a commitment on the part of government and the tools necessary so that we have cross-government initiatives, cross-government planning. This is a government of Alberta planning document, not an Alberta Environment or an SRD document. This is across all departments. That's what I'm looking forward to working on.

The Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is still available. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I have three questions for the minister. You mentioned water for life, which is a legacy of former Minister Taylor, which I very much appreciate. What percentage of aquifer mapping have we accomplished to date? That's my first question.

Also, the government and the opposition have different views about capping intensity versus capping overall emissions. The government has committed $2 billion toward sequestration. What practical steps have been taken to ensure that that process begins?

Then just a fairly simple question as number three. Is Sustainable Resource Development the quarterback for all ministries in balancing resource, environmental, and economic issues? Are they the chief ministry?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, I thought I just made myself clear.

The Speaker: Well, I'm sorry, hon. member, but the time apportionment has now left us.

Hon. Minister of Energy, did you wish to participate?

Mr. Knight: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I do wish to participate. I'm very pleased to take the opportunity today to respond to the throne speech. As His Honour the Honourable Lieutenant Governor made very clear in his speech, I believe that this is a speech for our times. Alberta is not immune from the global economic slowdown and the challenges facing all sectors of the economy. Now more than ever Alberta needs a plan to help our province respond to the challenges of today while positioning us to succeed during the year to come. I believe that the tone and direction are not only in the throne speech but also in the provincial energy strategy, which was released last December.

His Honour indicated in the throne speech that our goal must be to provide the energy the world needs – the energy the world needs – with an environmental footprint that grows lighter and lighter over time. Mr. Speaker, the energy strategy puts us on a path to do exactly that. As the Energy minister I'd like to focus for a couple of minutes on a couple of the things that are in the energy strategy.

First, as was clearly outlined in the throne speech, our goal over the coming year will be to ensure that our province remains a competitive and secure place to invest and do business. We will maintain the high quality of life that Albertans have come to expect, and that will depend in large part on the continued responsible development of energy resources. Mr. Speaker, we've heard a lot of comments, often from across the way, that criticize the way that this province addresses these issues. I think it's very important to look a little more closely at the plans and at exactly what we have put in place.

As you know, to name a few, the plan that we have relative to responsible development includes air quality – first in legislation, first in regulation – a working model that has reduced 2.6 million tonnes of emissions into Alberta's atmosphere. Water for life and the new water for life: a plan that's working today to decrease the amount of fresh water and brackish water used in energy industries and in other industries in the province. The latest land-use framework and the oil sands strategy, with mandates to assist developers, overarched by the energy strategy, will last this province for three decades of solid, responsible development. Mr. Speaker, all of these policies will work together to ensure that Alberta's energy resources are developed in a way that pays close attention to the impact on individuals and our environment.

When we talk about the environment, the biggest challenge, of course, that we have in the immediate future are greenhouse gas emissions and climate change. We strongly believe that we can mitigate these impacts with the advancement of what we would like to call the science of solutions, carbon capture and storage being one of them, another key topic that was mentioned in the throne speech. As you know, Mr. Speaker, this government has committed $2 billion to carbon capture and storage to develop three to five large projects. Keep in mind that the province of Alberta, about 3.2 million people, committed $2 billion to CCS projects. The President of the United States has recently indicated that they will commit $2.5 billion to projects for carbon capture and storage development. That represents a $2.5 billion investment for about 350 million people. The province of Alberta will justly be seen as a global leader with respect to this issue.

In short order, Mr. Speaker, we believe that we will have legislation to formally commit to the funding, and we have a development council currently finalizing research with respect to the issue. Make no mistake: Alberta is on the international radar, and this throne speech sends a strong, clear message to those audiences.

Again, Mr. Speaker, we're very, very pleased to hear the President's comments and particularly his recognition of the enormous benefit that carbon capture and storage can have on a global problem. To me it's further proof that Alberta is on the right path. We've seen a lot of rhetoric about our province directed toward the President in recent weeks, but his comments make it clear to me that he's a thoughtful leader interested in real solutions.

I was also pleased to see his comments relative to clean coal because, as you know, Mr. Speaker, the use of technology to sustain our economies, which, of course, is a key focus of the provincial energy strategy, deals with coal as well. This message is so important now, especially during a time of economic slowdown. Now is the time to find ways to sustain our province's economy. How will we do that? We will do that by moving forward with the key outcomes of the provincial energy strategy. We will pursue clean energy production. That doesn't only mean seeing enhancements in things like renewable energy, including projects like the hydro legislation being considered before the House. More importantly, clean energy production means finding better ways to produce our vast energy resources and ways that we can market these improvements to other jurisdictions. It means exploring clean coal technology, bioenergy, gasification, in situ development, and so on.

We will also focus, Mr. Speaker, on wise energy use, something that is referenced in the throne speech and which I along with the Environment minister are dedicated to working on for the benefit of all Albertans and, we think, Canadians and people around the world. By securing the outcomes from this work, we believe that we will sustain Alberta's future. Make no mistake: I believe that energy remains the driver of this province, and if we can find solutions to enable our province to develop resources in an environmentally responsible way, we will continue to have a steady stream of revenue and economic activity and wealth generation that will benefit Alberta for years to come.

Mr. Speaker, thank you very much for the opportunity.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Again, I appreciate the minister participating in this discussion and responding to the throne speech. He alluded, indirectly at least, to some of the differences of views on both sides of the Assembly, but I think in important ways there are common desires as well. The minister used the phrase, referring to the throne speech, about Alberta having the energy the world needs. Fair enough. I like to look at this from a different perspective, which is not thinking about Alberta having to deliver the energy the world needs but healthy development that Alberta needs. I think that's what the government should be about.

My question, just elaborating on that, to the Minister of Energy is just concerning royalties. There has been an awful lot of debate around royalties in the last couple of years, and we've all had an earful or several earfuls on this one. Is the minister satisfied that the people of Alberta are now in a position to get the best value for the bitumen that's being produced from the oil sands through the royalty system? Is the royalty system as it is now – it has settled down – delivering the best possible value for the people of Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister if you wish.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, the question is, I think, quite pointed and, I would suggest to you, very easy for me to answer because the short answer to the question is absolutely. A few of the issues around what we've done recently in my opinion enhanced the opportunity for Albertans with respect to their participation and their ownership of the resource.

I would point to one, just to answer the hon. member's question, and that is bitumen royalty in kind. I think that as we look out over the next decade and we look at the opportunity that Albertans will have relative to bitumen royalty in kind, what this does in fact is put Albertans as citizens of this province in control of someplace in the range of 20 to 25 per cent of bitumen production over time. As these projects mature, move into their second phase of the royalty structure, we're talking here about hundreds of thousands of barrels of bitumen production on a daily basis that will be handled by the province of Alberta for the people. So do I believe that we moved in the right direction? Absolutely, Mr. Speaker. I certainly do.

The Speaker: Others? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. In his response to the Speech from the Throne the hon. Leader of the Opposition, the MLA for Calgary-Mountain View, made the point that Alberta is more than the world's gas station. I would question the minister as to our priorities. Are our human resources more important, or do they take first place over our nonrenewable resources? I would specifically give the example of the small town of Tomahawk, where sour gas is being drilled within the emergency evacuation zone because of the ERCB's approval to drill for this sour gas. We need to have a balance, obviously, between economics, environment, and human resources. Could you attempt to answer the question: should Alberta's first priority be our human resource served by our nonrenewable resource, or is the tail wagging the dog in this case?

3:30

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, my first response to that particular bit of rambling, I might say, is that I actually have a 12 gauge at home that spreads wider than that, but I'm not sure how much wider. Nevertheless, there were a number of questions in there. I don't know which one it is that I'm actually supposed to address.

Mr. Speaker, I'll start with the first one relative to Alberta being the world's gas pump. I would suggest to the hon. member that Alberta doesn't even produce enough gas for our own requirements, never mind the world's, so, you know, I'm not sure what the thrust of that was.

Mr. Speaker, relative to the development of the energy industry in the province of Alberta, we have in the province of Alberta . . .

The Speaker: Alas, hon. minister, the time has expired.

The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Allred: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise as the Member for St. Albert to speak in favour of the Speech from the Throne given by His Honour the Lieutenant Governor. As we commence the second session of the 27th Legislature, it is essential that this government continue on its steady course. We must invest in our province and its people while maintaining fiscal prudence in our spending.

Mr. Speaker, I think the Speech from the Throne demonstrates the importance of this balance as we push forward. With a number of planned projects and investments across the province and a variety of important interests we must continue to be mindful of the short- and long-term implications of our funding decisions. Some of these projects that I'm particularly mindful of are projects like the northwest section of the Anthony Henday ring road and the P3 funding for our new schools. These are projects that are required to serve the needs of the growing capital region, and St. Albert is certainly supportive of both projects.

Alberta is well positioned financially compared to many jurisdictions, but we must not take our good fortune for granted. We must invest strategically in infrastructure and other capital projects to secure the prosperity of our province for many years to come, and we must acknowledge the hard work of Albertans in building our great province.

Mr. Speaker, during the last election campaign there was a lot said about plans, particularly in the negative, that the Premier did not have a plan. This Speech from the Throne clearly demonstrates that the Premier does have a plan, in fact a lot of plans, a lot of good plans. There are plans for health care, such as Vision 20/20, plans to end homelessness, the provincial energy strategy, the climate change strategy, water for life, and the land-use framework, to name a few. As well, last week the President of the Treasury Board released a plan for Alberta's oil sands. This brings me back to the days of Great Canadian Oil Sands in 1963, when I did the original topographic survey and was witness to that area prior to any development.

Today one of things that particularly irks me is the frequent reference to dirty oil by members on my far left and short-sighted environmental groups. Mr. Speaker, that gooey substance is not dirty oil; it is, in fact, oily dirt, and it has been there as part of the landscape around the Athabasca River and beyond for centuries. In fact, in 1783 the explorer Peter Pond was led by natives to the place where they gathered this gooey substance to waterproof their canoes.

It is only in the past 50 years that we have learned how to capture it and upgrade it into a viable, marketable commercial product.

Mr. Speaker, this oily dirt plays a significant role in the future of this province, and we need to continue to improve our methods of extraction and upgrading, taking into consideration any potential environmental impacts. We can and we will improve our techniques through proper planning, taking into consideration all relevant factors. The Speech from the Throne addresses both the economic and the environmental considerations relevant to the Athabasca oil sands, Alberta's most important natural resource, that will sustain our province and our economy in the years ahead of us.

I'd now like to turn to another issue that is of concern in my constituency and I'm sure in many others, and that is the concern of seniors. Seniors have in many cases lived here their whole lives. We also have families who have firm roots in this province and are spreading their branches today, growing a strong and enthusiastic new generation of Albertans ready to embrace the many challenges on the horizon. Mr. Speaker, seniors must be able to maintain a fair standard of living. We must remember that seniors are becoming a larger portion of the population, especially with so many baby boomers on the verge of retirement. However, we must keep in mind the needs of all Albertans and avoid prioritizing one group at the expense of another. Therefore, we must be mindful of our spending to ensure efficient use of our money for seniors while we also invest in our younger generations and build on the opportunities for Alberta's future.

I recently read a book by Sherry Cooper, the chief economist for the Bank of Montreal, called The New Retirement, which talks about the growing number of baby boomer retirees, that will peak by the year 2025. This is not necessarily a new revelation. Her analysis reminded me of another book, Boom, Bust, & Echo by David Foot, which was written some 10 years ago and described the very same phenomena. Ms Cooper, however, takes the analysis one step further and describes the effects of this wave of retirees on the labour and financial markets and talks about what this new retirement will look like to both retirees and society in general. I find her points especially relevant to our economic situation today. With the increasing potential for seniors to live longer and enjoy more prosperous times, some interesting challenges arise that we must consider carefully in Alberta as our baby boomers retire. As I said, issues for seniors are amongst the most common concerns I hear from my constituents in St. Albert, so I think that an innovative analysis like Cooper has made in her book can provide insight that will be very useful for our province.

While seniors certainly deserve great facilities and great health care as they move along in age, we must ensure that our programs are well planned and our spending commitments do not unduly constrain our spending priorities in the future. Young people just starting out in the workforce, for example, will be the support base for years to come. Today we have 10 workers for every retiree. In another 10 to 15 years we will have only five workers supporting that same retiree. These young people will contribute significantly to the prosperity we so thankfully enjoy, and in turn we must support their opportunities and recognize that we will be relying on the younger generation to support us in the future. This is why it is so important to be balanced in our approach, Mr. Speaker. We must maintain an ethic of care for our seniors while also acknowledging our responsibilities to future generations.

Mr. Speaker, the Speech from the Throne has indicated that our expenditures must reflect these priorities, and we must ensure that we do not put the next generation back in debt. The matters related to seniors in the Speech from the Throne, such as Supportive Living Accommodation Licensing Act and the Protection for Persons in Care Amendment Act, are some of the necessary government measures that ensure the well-being of seniors, so I will be pleased to support them.

The throne speech also talked about a strong and sustainable health care system. Providing adequate health care is another important priority. People are living longer, and new medical technology allows people to live longer, more productive, and healthier lives. Unfortunately, advances in medical technology never seem to bring the cost of health care down, unlike technological advances in other fields of endeavour. I am confident that we can improve service delivery through innovative thinking and efficient management of technology.

One area, Mr. Speaker, where we can reduce the cost of health care is through the promotion of wellness and prevention. We must do everything we can to ensure wellness from an early age, developing good nutritional habits and keeping fit with proper exercise to prevent those illnesses that creep up on us as we age. The catch health program, for example, is one we can all participate in. It can be fun and need not be expensive.

Health information is also important, Mr. Speaker. Bill 52, the Health Information Amendment Act, 2008, is one such example of this government's commitment to enhanced service delivery and research through accurate and complete electronic records and improved information flow. Accurate and current health histories are so important these days for a number of reasons. Should we have a mishap while on vacation, for example, it is essential that our health records be available for medical treatment in an emergency. Medical information can also be a boon to tracking and detecting disease that is geographically related. With up-to-date medical data and geographic information systems we will be able to monitor and detect the outbreak and spread of disease and catch epidemics in their infancy. I fully agree with the intent of this bill, but the privacy concerns must be adequately addressed. By working with stakeholders such as the Alberta Medical Association and other health care practitioners, we can ensure continued improvements for a patient-focused health care system.

The Speech from the Throne emphasized the need for us to have a plan that allows us to maintain our course in the current global climate and to build a springboard for sustainable, diversified, long-term growth. This is our commitment to all Albertans. Programs such as the affordable housing and Alberta Works programs mentioned in the throne speech will help ensure the long-term sustainability of success for individual Albertans. Mr. Speaker, I'm glad to see in the throne speech that the government is committed to effective social spending along with a renewed commitment to fiscal prudence as called for in the Mintz report. It is critical that the long term remains a priority.

Mr. Speaker, it is evident from the throne speech that our government's priorities go beyond our finances, recognizing the ever-important role of our military. I am proud to call many military personnel my constituents, including my oldest son, who recently retired from the military after 20 years. It is through their great sacrifice that we are able to assemble here today in peace and debate the Speech from the Throne. In return for their great sacrifice we must support them and help them in any way we can. This is why Bill 1, Employment Standards (Reservist Leave) Amendment Act, 2009, which was highlighted in the Speech from the Throne, is something I'm very proud to support.

This bill will ensure that a reservist will be reinstated into the position he or she held prior to their leave or into a comparable position at their civilian jobs whenever possible when they return.

A reservist's challenges do not cease when they come home. Their civilian job should not have to be another sacrifice while serving this country. Mr. Speaker, we must remember that reservists are often called out not just for overseas duties, but they also stand on guard in the event of natural disasters or other emergency situations.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to support the Speech from the Throne. The items presented in this speech demonstrate diligence, balance, and support for those who need that support. I'm confident that the vision laid out in the Speech from the Throne will make sure that Alberta continues to be well situated for years to come.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of comments or questions. Does any hon. member want to take that?

Seeing none, now I would recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great honour to rise today and respond to the Speech from the Throne delivered by His Honour the Lieutenant Governor Norman Kwong. There's no question that Albertans face global economic uncertainty, and I'm proud that this government has presented a bold, future-oriented vision to address this challenge.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that the very strength and the foundation of our economy comes from the success of small businesses and entrepreneurs, and I'm pleased that the throne speech acknowledged the importance of providing an environment where they may continue to thrive. I'm confident that we will accomplish this goal by maintaining competitive taxes, building the infrastructure that will facilitate growth, educating our youth, and fostering research and development.

Due to the prudent fiscal management of this government Albertans and Alberta businesses currently enjoy the lowest taxes in Canada. Furthermore, the elimination of health care premiums this year will save Alberta families up to $1,056 and up to $528 for individuals. This timely and substantive tax relief will no doubt provide a welcome stimulus to our economy.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, I'm very proud of this government's continuing commitment to building infrastructure that provides jobs and ensures our high standards of living and facilitates our economic growth. A major component of this infrastructure strategy is the municipal sustainability initiative. This initiative, a 10-year program, was designed to provide long-term, predictable funding for capital projects identified by municipal councils. Under the program guidelines this can include roadways, bridges, railway, or light rail transit infrastructure. In 2007, when the program launched, $400 million was provided to municipalities, and funding increased it to $500 million in the 2008 fiscal year. This funding is scheduled to increase to $1.4 billion per fiscal year by 2010.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans are reaping the benefits of this program. Edmonton alone is scheduled to receive $2.2 billion over the next two years. Projects have included waste management facilities and recreation facilities. As a proud Edmontonian I'm enthusiastic about the possibilities infrastructure provides for citizens and businesses. For example, the ongoing construction of the Anthony Henday ring road will connect all corners of our great city, allowing for free flow of goods and services. I commend this government and our Premier for their forward-thinking commitment to building the infrastructure that will ensure our place as an economic leader in this country.

Mr. Speaker, we must continue to ensure that Albertans are the best educated and skilled workers in the world. By doing so, Alberta will continue to be a beacon for investment while attracting the best and the brightest to lead the industries of the future. To this end I am enthusiastic that this government announced a new initiative called Inspiring Education, that will look at ways to develop educational opportunities for children. In addition, the government intends to work with our world-class postsecondary institutions to prepare young Albertans for the next generation economy. We will do this by implementing a new funding formula that will align our resources in areas that support market labour demands and future opportunities.

This government will also work to provide the tools for our educated workforce to harness their entrepreneurial spirit. The Alberta research and innovation act will strengthen and align the entire research and innovation system to better assist aspiring entrepreneurs in realizing their dreams.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to serve in a government that had laid forth a bold strategy that will keep our economy on the right track in these uncertain times while embracing future opportunities. By providing a world-class education, low taxes, investing in infrastructure, research, and development, we will continue to promote the entrepreneurial spirit that will keep Alberta strong and free.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: There are five minutes for comments and questions.

Seeing none, I now recognize the hon. Member for Strathcona.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to respond to the Speech from the Throne delivered by His Honour the Lieutenant Governor a few days ago. Listening to the Speech from the Throne, I was reminded yet again how from humble beginnings this great province has grown into the best place on earth to live, work, and play. Alberta has always been a place of opportunity, drawing in people from across the country and the world.

In October 1966 my father, a veterinarian, arrived from the U.K. He heard from a friend that Alberta was an amazing place in which to settle. My father was persuaded by his optimism and moved our family to a place where he could fulfill his dreams for a better life for all of us. At the time I was two years old, so my recollection is a little fuzzy. My father partnered in his first practice in Calgary at the Macleod Trail Animal Hospital, and a few years later he moved to open three practices in the Edmonton area, two in Edmonton and one later in Ardrossan.

Alberta is a land of opportunity, where skilled people can achieve their dreams in a strong business climate. My father's story is a true example of this. Growing up, my father taught me that with hard work and planning anything is possible. This inspired me to set my own personal goals and take advantage of the opportunities Alberta has to offer.

As we're all aware, the economic climate in Alberta varies, and this is why our government has applied a prudent and long-term approach to spending and saving. As stated in the throne speech, more than $35 billion has been saved, over $7 billion of which is part of the sustainability fund to protect Albertans from temporary drops in energy revenues. In addition to prudent saving, our government also remains committed to our core programs and services, such as health, education, infrastructure, and environment. These programs are important to all Albertans, and our government will not abandon them because of a short-term drop in revenues.

Alberta is well positioned because of its commitment to planning and saving, and we are prepared to face the future with confidence and optimism. It's important in a time when the world is facing economic uncertainty that our decisions not be made out of fear but instead through a commitment to a well-thought-out vision for the future. Our government will rise above this current challenge and will continue to position Alberta as an economically stable and prosperous province. As His Honour highlighted, this stability will come by continuing to create an environment which allows business to thrive.

As part of this stability, however, rests our commitment to the environment. To this end we are prepared to invest $2 billion for three to five carbon capture and storage projects. This investment will reduce 5 million tonnes of greenhouse gas emissions, the equivalent of taking a third of Alberta's vehicles off the road.

Alberta will be on the cutting edge of technology, making us the envy of other jurisdictions and further securing our position as an innovation leader. I strongly believe carbon capture and storage is more efficient than a cap and trade system, which entails a transfer of wealth to a certain degree, and I'm unconvinced this will solve the problem of reducing emissions. Our government is prepared to move forward to invest in and develop new technologies. This willingness will make Alberta more competitive and allow us to compete and excel on the international stage. Furthermore, these advances will no doubt lead to a better quality of life for Albertans in generations to come.

Our government has also committed to moving forward with an aggressive investment into our current and future infrastructure projects. Infrastructure has always been part of our long-term strategy in planning for our future. I'm proud one of these new infrastructure projects includes a new hospital in Sherwood Park that will serve my riding of Strathcona. Mr. Speaker, the Strathcona community hospital will open with plans for 72 acute-care beds and has been designed to allow for the eventual addition of 36 more. In addition, 80 per cent of these beds will be in private patient rooms, which will help not only reduce the risk of infection but will ensure patient privacy. Furthermore, this facility will link to a health services centre which provides services such as community rehabilitation and mental health support. This further demonstrates how our government is committed to ensuring that all Albertans have adequate health care now and in the future.

In addition, our investment strategy includes a multibillion-dollar savings account which funds infrastructure and other capital projects for both the provincial and local governments.

In the Speech from the Throne the Lieutenant Governor clearly highlighted our commitment to taking care of our most vulnerable. Seniors have long contributed to Albertans' prosperity, and we should take the time to step back and honour them for their hard work and integrity. Our government is committed to providing long-term care facilities as part of the continuing care strategy. The critical objective of this strategy centres on the goal of building and improving infrastructure. As part of this the government has pledged to refurbish over 7,000 long-term care beds by 2015 and support the development of 1,225 supportive living spaces. This government's dedication to our seniors further highlights the important role they play in shaping and guiding this great province.

It's our responsibility as members of this House to build upon the legacy they have left to us, and perhaps this responsibility is best exemplified through our commitment to the environment. It is imperative that our government works to ensure Albertans have access to an abundant and safe water supply. Our water for life strategy is North America's most comprehensive water management plan, and it focuses on improving our water efficiency, productivity, and management practices.

Albertans can continue to be proud of the many qualities that draw people to our province. We understand that Albertans are facing uncertain economic times and will look to our government for leadership and assistance. Rest assured that Alberta is well positioned to face the challenges of today due to prudent financial planning. My father instilled this in me with the values of hard work, planning, innovation, and optimism, values that helped me become president of my own General Motors dealership at 31. I'm proud to say that I see these same qualities in our government.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: There are five minutes for comments or questions.

Mr. Chase: I did not have the opportunity to watch the full Obama interview last night on CBC, but my understanding is that the United States government has set aside approximately 2 and a half billion dollars for their entire multimillion population for sequestration. The only example we have of sequestration is the Weyburn field in Saskatchewan, which receives CO₂ from North Dakota. Do you have through your government connections significant faith in the sequestration process that it warrants $2 billion of government funding, which has yet to be matched by industry?

Mr. Quest: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm not, obviously, intimately familiar with the technical side, but I have great faith in the technology. I have great faith in this province and the very skilled and technically capable people in this province. If it can be done on a small scale in Saskatchewan, it can absolutely be done on a large scale in Alberta.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My question to my hon. colleague would be: do you really feel that the number of beds that you mentioned are going to be adequate in the future in Sherwood Park to cover that large area? Out of those number of beds – I realize that they are acute – there will be a number of seniors in those beds. Do you have adequate beds to be able to move those seniors forward? I guess my main question would be: do you really feel that those numbers that you quoted are going to be adequate for the future?

Mr. Quest: Yes. Strathcona, of course, is part of the greater capital region, so it probably fits into some larger plans. In my constituency in the eastern part of Sherwood Park there are a number of private and semiprivate and subsidized facilities that are also under construction right now. The population in my own constituency is a bit younger than the average in Alberta, so, yes, I believe that certainly in my own constituency there will be adequate long-term care.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. members?

Seeing none, I would now recognize the hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to take a little bit different tack in responding to the Speech from the Throne. I'd like to pay tribute to the gentleman who gave the speech because in many ways the hon. Lieutenant Governor is so symbolic of many things in Alberta. What an honour for all of us to be in the Chamber and hear the speech from that man. The last statement in the speech said: "It is Alberta's people that make our province unique: people who are dynamic and genuine, optimistic and open-minded." I doubt that there's anyone in this province who doesn't believe that the Hon. Norman Kwong suits that to a T.

He was born in Calgary in 1929, one of six children, to parents who emigrated from Taishan, China, to open and operate a grocery store. He's been married to his lovely wife, Mary, for 48 years. They have four sons and five grandchildren.

What I can safely say in the confines of this House is that if he has made any mistakes in his life, it was probably back in 1948 when he joined the Calgary Stampeders. Mr. Speaker, Alberta as a young province made some mistakes, too, so I can clearly see that it's possible. In doing so, he became the first Chinese Canadian to play in the Canadian Football League and later the youngest to win the Grey Cup. In total he won four cups with Calgary and Edmonton after he was traded here in 1951. [interjection] You know, it's not a real surprise that a lot of good things happened in this province in the '50s.

An Hon. Member: When were you born?

Mr. Snelgrove: I'm just not trying to fool you.

You know, known across Canada as the China Clipper, he rushed for over 9,000 yards, averaged 5.2 yards per carry. It does make you wonder why they needed anybody else on the football team; just give it to him twice and have a first down. But they did use other players, which could explain why he didn't win all the Grey Cups he played in because some of those other players weren't that good. He won the cup in '54, '55, and '56 with the Eskimos. He was a western all-star running back, winner of the all-Canadian fullback award five times, named the CFL's most outstanding Canadian in 1955-56, and was Canada's male athlete of the year in 1955. At the time of his retirement he held over 30 CFL records and was the all-time CFL touchdown leader.

Like many others in Alberta he had to do other jobs while he competed in the sport he loved, and he did. He sold real estate and got involved with other ventures. He sold cars and did what he had to do, as many Albertans have over the years to provide for their families. The CFL didn't pay a whole lot back then. He said that in his first year of football he earned $6,000, but by the end of it he was pulling in a whopping $15,000 a year. I think that most people that achieve the greatness he has do it for the love of the game, and that's probably much like why we're in Alberta. We love it here and for many good reasons.

After he retired from the CFL His Honour spent the next few decades in the private sector in sales, commercial real estate, and eventually became the vice-president and general manager of Torode Realty.

You know, it seems like the good people, the really hard-working people, get asked to do a lot of things, and I think his love of the province and his love of sport encouraged him to become the general manager back at the Calgary Stampeders from 1988 to 1991. He also was a co-owner of the Calgary Flames hockey club, actually, back when they used to win games, from 1980 to 1984. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure that Calgary still has a professional hockey team, but certainly not because Mr. Kwong didn't try to bring one there. Anyway, on to something more pleasant.

His Honour is a former national chairman of the Consultative Council on Multiculturalism, former honorary chairman of the Easter Seals campaign in Calgary, a member of the Order of Canada and Alberta Order of Excellence as well as a knight of the Order of St. John of Jerusalem. He holds an honorary doctorate of law from the University of Alberta and was appointed Lieutenant Governor on January 20, 2005.

Now, the gentleman, as we all know, has a very quiet demeanour, but he has a wonderful sense of humour. Sometimes you have to listen carefully to hear it. I recall one particular fundraiser in Edmonton. He has an ongoing battle with Danny Hooper, and Hooper kids him. I remember him walking by in front of the podium, stopping and saying quietly enough that we weren't supposed to hear but into the microphone so we all could hear: Hooper, Zwozdesky is a better auctioneer than you.

Like our province, some things are a contradiction, like our Lieutenant Governor. He may be small in stature; he's certainly larger than life. When you look at our province maybe with a sense of humour, just south of here a couple of hours we have the Drumheller badlands, world renowned, a place where we go look at old, big, dead things. In Alberta we also have the most powerful nanotechnology microscope in the world where we can look at really small new things. One is the connection to our past, and obviously one is the future. In my riding I can go down to Paradise Valley, and I can go into their elevator museum. They call it travelling back through time. Like many elevators that have been restored around Alberta, it has a great history of the families and the activities of that community, and now that's what it does. Or I can go over to the elevator in Vermilion and climb on top of it now, and I can see the future of agriculture where Lakeland College is working at growing crops that are more specialized for the biodiesel, biofuels, supporting the ethanol plant in Lloydminster, and teaching the young people that go there a whole new way of agriculture.

It's a province that contradicts itself in many ways. We have a city, Medicine Hat, that's called the city with hell for a basement. We have natural gas in this province thousands of metres down where we go looking for it, and at the other end, as the hon. member mentioned, we've got oil running right out of the riverbanks, as it has for generations, into the Athabasca River. You'd have to think: well, you know, it maybe was a government committee that planned this province, but they didn't get it all perfect.

To go into our history right in Edmonton, we can stand in Fort Edmonton Park and feel the history of this area, where the settlers started and crossed the river, and we can see the University of Alberta, where our future is, the medical research that's ongoing, the understanding that innovation, technology, and knowledge are going to take us from the riverboats that landed here to wherever the future goes.

We've got so much to be so thankful for. I live in a wonderful part of the province. We used to occasionally have to go down to Kananaskis for conferences and conventions. Well, in that drive I go across land so flat that, like the Member for Drumheller-Stettler would say, you could see your dog run away for two days, then through the badlands and then through Calgary, the gorgeous city of Calgary – it needs a good hockey team but, nevertheless, a gorgeous city – and then into the mountains. No matter how many times you drive that highway towards Banff and Lake Louise, you have to admire the beauty of it.

If you get the opportunity, walk in downtown Banff and realize what an international province we've become when the signs are in German and Japanese and French and English, and the people look more like a movie set. That's right here, and it's very much the same in Jasper.

Or you can drive north. I had the great pleasure to be up to the Peace Country. I'd never been there as a young person. I don't know what the heck I've got about climbing up on elevators, but I'll tell you, climb up on the elevator at Falher and you can see for miles. That country, the Peace Country, is the hidden gem of Alberta. It is as flat and productive as can be. There is more arable land in the Peace Country than there is in the entire province of Manitoba. So, you know, we've got all of these opportunities. Mr. Speaker, in this job I've had tremendous opportunity to travel to virtually every corner of Alberta and see these things. In the summers we've travelled to some with our family.

The things that I'll remember the most: I think, one, the day the Queen came to our Chamber and spoke. That was one of the most inspiring things. I mean, I sat over in that chair and thought: what the heck is the big deal? I wasn't a real monarchist. And then you see her in this Chamber, and you understand what majesty means. To be here for the pomp and ceremony of a throne speech that our Lieutenant Governor delivered, that's special. So to him I say: "Right on. Good health." Good luck, Alberta. With people like him we're on the right track.

The Deputy Speaker: Five minutes for questions and comments. The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Before I make my comments, I'd like to very much thank my hon. colleague. That really was a rah-rah speech, but it was very moving, and I thank you for that. I was listening. I may have missed this, but I think you missed it: Normie Kwong also is the only one to have both a Grey Cup ring and a Stanley Cup ring, the Grey Cup as a player and the Stanley Cup ring as an owner. I'm not sure if it's in Canada, but he certainly is the only one to have that in Alberta. I was at a do with him, and he let me try both of them on. His wife kept her eye on me the entire time to make sure that he got them back.

So thank you very much.

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is absolutely correct. I appreciate the comments. I would have had to admit, though, that he won the Stanley Cup with Calgary, and you know, there are just some things . . .

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I, too, would like to commend the hon. President of the Treasury Board for his tribute to Normie Kwong. When we lost Lois Hole, there were large shoes to fill, and a search was undertaken. Normie Kwong has done an extremely admirable job I wouldn't say in filling but sort of standing beside in similarly large shoes.

I was also very impressed by the travelogue, the beauty of Alberta, and also the history that Alberta has experienced, to a degree, through Normie Kwong's eyes. When Normie Kwong's parents first arrived, there was a terrific amount of prejudice in this province, and over the years the racial prejudice has diminished tremendously due to the warmth in which Albertans have supported each other. However, pockets of prejudice still exist, particularly for individuals of a lesbian, homosexual, or a transgendered nature, and until we get past those prejudices, we still have some history to cover.

As a grandfather I'll ask the question: do you think the glories of the future will live up to or potentially surpass our glories of the past? Are we handing over to our next generation an Alberta that they can be proud of and that will sustain them?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, absolutely. What we're passing on is changing. The world lived in an agriculture commodity environment for 5,000 years, and then they got into an industrial age, that kind of ran the economy of the world for 150. Then the information age has taken probably a 70-year span, and it's not over yet, although I wish it was when I hear some of the sounds in here, but it's not over yet. What's the next great thing? It's going to be genetics, and it's going to be nanotechnology, and this province is leading in both of those.

The most important of a lot of the solutions that we're going to give our children is, I would think, health. It's okay to take care of people, but it's best if they don't need the hospital, if we can keep them well and understanding what makes us sick: the curse of cancer, of MS. That's what I think we are going to pass on. There will be issues, and there will be problems. There are in any country and any province at any time. You have more people moving in, and there's change.

I've talked some about the great big jigsaw puzzle we're all building here in Alberta. Just when we get it pretty close, they dump another 60,000 pieces on. If you put your puzzle together so loosely that you can fit the pieces in, nothing is holding it together, yet if you put them together tightly, how do you fit them in? It's that balance. Do we have the opportunity to pass on so much more to our children, their children, and the rest of this world? I can tell you that I think yes.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak in debate to the throne speech, assuming that the five-minute question period is over? Thank you so much.

Mr. Speaker, this particular throne speech is of great value and of great importance to all Albertans. Just as I look at the headlines, the main categories of Creating Opportunity and Showing Environmental Leadership and People Thriving in a Skilled Workforce and A Healthy Approach and Strong Communities and a sterling Conclusion, I thank God that I'm in this province, where I can live the lifestyle that I wish to live and my family can as well, because it truly provides us with boundless opportunities.

Taking a look at this throne speech from another perspective, I look at what it means to other people as well. I look at some of the people who are impacted, for example, through the ministry that I'm privileged to serve, the Ministry of Aboriginal Relations, and at some of the outstanding initiatives that we'll be pursuing here. I'm going to comment a little bit at length about two because time wouldn't permit me to comment about all of them.

On page 3, Mr. Speaker, as you would know, we referenced the aboriginal consultation policy and guidelines, which are going to be reviewed this year. This policy and these guidelines have been in place now for five or more years, and it has just come time to refresh those particular policies and guidelines with a view to creating greater certainty for First Nations people, for Métis people, for industry, for provincial government purposes, for municipalities, for the federal government as well. We're going to do that.

Everybody wants some certainty and some clarity with respect to consultation. I'll tell you why, Mr. Speaker: primarily because the lands that traditionally First Nations and Métis people have occupied are precious to this province and precious to them. They are precious because land, air, and water are three of the basic things that we must strive hard to protect, and we must have very clear guidelines surrounding their use.

One of the significant growth areas, of course, is our oil sands. I have to tell you that I was extremely pleased to accompany the hon. President of the Treasury Board last Thursday when we went up to Fort McMurray with the MLA from that area, and we unveiled that particular strategy, the new plan, as it were, called Responsible Actions: A Plan for Alberta's Oil Sands.

Mr. Speaker, there are six objectives in this particular document, and one of them as a strategy is dedicated to First Nations, Métis, and Inuit people, where we are going to promote clarity and consistency in our consultation process, where we're going to enhance collaborative government-to-government relationships, where we are going to continue to work with Métis settlements in the oil sands region, and where we're going to involve a series of related government strategies on First Nations protocol agreements and strengthening our relationships through the aboriginal policy framework and the land-use framework and a number of other things. It is just loaded with opportunities which we're trying and working very hard with First Nations and Métis communities to do whatever they can to capitalize on.

Another area that we're interested in pursuing – and I hope we can get to some clarity as we do this consultation piece – is on differentiating between consultation, compensation, and accommodation. Anyone here who has ever been involved in any of those negotiations knows full well how intricately woven those three concepts are. Consultation about treaty rights, for example, compensation for potential adverse effects on the land, or compensation in a partnering way: none of this is negative. This has all to do with empowering greater strides toward self-reliance and autonomy for all aboriginal communities.

We can talk about economic opportunities from the labour side. We can talk about economic opportunities from the skills training side and the mentoring side. I just want to highlight a couple of them for you because our ministry has been involved in these in one way or another. The single-largest bitumen upgrader facility on First Nation land anywhere in Canada is going to be right here in Alberta. In fact, it's already running. I was up in that neck of the woods last summer with the hon. Member for . . .

Ms Calahasen: Lesser Slave Lake.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Lesser Slave Lake – thank you – when we cut the ribbon, as it were, on a joint venture project with Bronco Energy out of Calgary partnering with the Bigstone Cree First Nation just around the Wabasca area. Mr. Speaker, that one project alone, which came about as a result of very careful consultation and strategizing and partnering, is already looking at 6,000 barrels of flow per day, and it can go up to several thousand more. We'll see how that develops in the future, but it's a huge project that they can well capitalize on as they move forward with their strides for self-sustainability.

Another one is a project on the Alexander reserve straight west of Morinville. I believe it's in the lovely constituency of Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert. The hon. member knows it because he's been there as well. This is the single-largest database collection, retrieval, and storage system anywhere in western Canada, and I wouldn't be surprised if it's even larger than that. This is a joint project between eNation out of Calgary and the Alexander First Nation.

Now, I mention these just as two very high-profile success stories that the world needs to know about, not just Albertans. Frequently our aboriginal communities get a rough rub, and I think we're all familiar with that. Sometimes our friends in the media tend to focus a little too much on the negative stories, but here are a few that are very positive. The Fort McKay First Nation, north of Fort McMurray, has an incredible project called the Creeburn Lake Lodge, and that, too, has come about as a result of some of the capacity building that we as a ministry, that we as a government have been doing over the past few years.

It's time to review those policies and those guidelines, and that's what this throne speech has indicated we will do. I'll just quote for you from page 3, where it says: "with input from First Nations and industry to ensure the approach to consultation is beneficial to all Albertans." We're very committed to that. One of the commitments that we have in that respect, Mr. Speaker, has to do with the recently signed protocol agreement on government-to-government relations between the government of Alberta and First Nations in our province.

As you would know, there are 47 First Nations in this province. We value and respect each and every one of them. On their behalf the three grand chiefs – the grand chief of Treaty 6, the grand chief of Treaty 7, and the grand chief of Treaty 8 – along with their vice grand chiefs signed an official protocol agreement on May 22, 2008, with our Premier and myself. That protocol agreement among other things sets up a true new relationship on a government-to-government basis that will allow at least two formal meetings with eight or nine consultation ministers and the grand chiefs and their vice grand chiefs, and it guarantees one formal meeting as well with the Premier and the same grand chiefs and vice grand chiefs. That's very significant, Mr. Speaker, because no other agreement exists in this country today on a government-to-government relationship basis such as our protocol agreement. There will be other meetings, of course. All the ministers are having other meetings, and so are MLA colleagues having meetings of their own. But that is a formal process that has arisen out of the true meaningful consultation aspect that we're pursuing here and reviewing.

I'm also pleased to tell you that as part of this aboriginal policy framework and the policy and guidelines document that guides us, we have been able to conclude a longer term operating agreement with the Métis Nation of Alberta Association. That's a seven-year agreement, Mr. Speaker, worth about $1.5 million per year. At the same time, we've also recently concluded a three-year interim funding agreement with the Métis Settlements General Council and their eight councils. That will be about an $18 million project over three years as we work toward completing long-term governance and long-term funding arrangements for their benefit. Those are a few of the things that we'll be talking about.

The other point that I want to mention very quickly, Mr. Speaker, is on page 8 under the headline Adapting to a Changing Business Environment as outlined in the Speech from the Throne by His Honour. The second paragraph from the end on that page says:

This summer, the Government of Alberta, in partnership with Treaty Seven First Nations, will present a first-of-its kind international symposium that will bring together Aboriginal and business communities to share and encourage indigenous economic development strategies.

This will be not only the first of its kind here but the first of its kind anywhere with a specific focus on indigenous or aboriginal economic development success strategies. We will host well over 500 people at the end of June in this province in Banff, just in the Treaty 7 area, in partnership with Treaty 7, I should stress, one of the largest and most impactful conferences that we've ever had with and for aboriginal people.

We will have world leaders here, keynote speakers who will be talking about economic success stories that are adaptable by or should be considered by anyone, everyone, but specifically by aboriginal communities. In that respect we have a program in our ministry called FNEPI, First Nations economic partnerships initiative, and that's where this idea sprang to my head to pursue something on an international level that would bring world experts here to help facilitate even greater economic growth and economic partnering between First Nations, Métis settlements, MNA folks, or whomever in the aboriginal community, with so many other possible partners not only in Alberta but across Canada and throughout the world.

The symposium is called Gathering for Success. I'll just note for everyone's attention that it takes place in Banff on June 28, 29, 30 of 2009, and if they're interested, they can punch it up on the website at gatheringforsuccess.ca. That's a very important part of this throne speech. I'm so pleased that it was able to be highlighted and commented on in this particular throne speech this year.

Mr. Speaker, I could go on about the aboriginal components, but my point in raising these is to simply say how inclusive our government of Alberta is on aboriginal issues and on aboriginal consultation, meaningful consultation, I should stress, and on other matters affecting aboriginal communities. I say that because I not only believe it and feel it in my heart, but I know that it's the true way to go in order to help us succeed more in our dealings with and in the empowerment of aboriginal communities and aboriginal individuals and aboriginal organizations in this province.

Mr. Speaker, just before I leave that point and wrap up my comments, I think everyone here should be reminded that the aboriginal community across Canada but specifically here in Alberta is growing on a percentage basis at a rate of 2 to 2.5 times faster than the combined population of Alberta. In other words, if the population of Alberta is growing at a rate of 3.5 per cent, whatever it is – I've just forgotten the exact number – the aboriginal percentage is two times higher than that. That's a tremendous opportunity.

It's also a challenge to handle, if you will, but it's a tremendous opportunity to take advantage of a growing population that will soon become a potential labour source, even greater than it already is, and one that we would do well to pay great attention to. The other point is to realize that almost 60 per cent of our aboriginal population today is already under 30 years of age, so it shows you what the growth potential there is and can be.

I would be remiss, Mr. Speaker, if I didn't mention a few comments about health care, and I'm delighted that we have a section in here called A Healthy Approach. I know and I think everybody here knows that health care still tends to be the number one issue on Albertans' minds – it certainly is in my constituency, particularly from the aspect of seniors – so we have some work to do there, that's for sure. There's an entire page dedicated to some of the broader initiatives that we'll be pursuing.

Similarly, there are issues that affect another part of my portfolio, which is the Strong Communities section on page 10, where we talk about cultures of creativity such as the Arts Day. I have a large component of constituents who are artists themselves or are arts supporters, and I'm delighted to see them in there along with the antigang summit.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My time has run out.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes for comments and questions. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I very much appreciate the minister pointing out not only the potential for First Nations to take their rightful place in Alberta but the challenges surrounding them having that full right of citizenship. I'm just wondering if you can comment upon educational opportunities, providing opportunities for First Nations people, and where they stand in terms of our dependence, it seems, on temporary foreign workers. How can we better provide a sustainable future for our First Nations, who basically were the founders of this province?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much. You know, you've hit the heart of the matter in terms of what my first priority is in this portfolio. I indicated very early on – well, I've met now with over 300 or 400 aboriginal communities just in this last not even year. I said that the number one priority is education, that number two will be economic development because it leads one into the other, and number three is resource management and all of the stuff that goes with the treaty rights and the aboriginal rights, be they asserted rights or constitutional rights or whatever.

But to come back to your question, it might warm your heart, hon. member, to know that for the first time ever we are having an aboriginal education summit comprised of ministers of education, comprised of ministers of aboriginal relations or whatever their local title might be, and the federal minister of INAC, Indian and Northern Affairs Canada. It'll be next week in Saskatoon. I'll be joining the Minister of Education from Alberta, for example. We've already caucused with the grand chiefs of treaties 6, 7, and 8 and with the MNA president and with the Métis Settlements General Council president to strategize what issues we want put on the table.

I'll share with you what some of those issues are. I was just down south at the Blood reserve this morning, and I gave this speech there, so I'm somewhat fresh on it, and it talks about what is commonly referred to as a statistical funding gap. That's specific to the amount of money that the federal government pays for on-reserve education on a per-student basis versus what we as a province present as off-reserve, if you like, education; in other words, for the general population. It is conventionally known – and, again, I'm not criticizing here; I'm just pointing out a statistic – that there's a statistical gap of somewhere around 2,000, sometimes a little bit higher, between those two systems and those two forums. So we're going to be talking about that.

Another issue we're going to be talking about is the transition rate that we have from high school into postsecondary, which ties in with the skills training, and the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology has commented on some strategies that he has in that respect. Our job as provincial ministers is to bring this matter to the attention of the federal government and to see where there might be an opportunity for us to not take over federal responsibility but to augment where we see an opportunity to do so. I know that the Minister of Education is focused on that, as I was when I was Minister of Education. We live with the consequences of not handling it properly if we don't handle it properly, and we want to avoid that. In brief, those are a few of the issues that are there.

I should mention one other issue that they've asked be mentioned, and that is that at the reserve end, the Indian reserve end or First Nations end, they are questioning how the growth figures on the one hand don't yield a lifting of the 2 per cent increase per annum on the other end. To put it differently, the federal government is generously giving a 2 per cent per annum increase for on-reserve education, but that 2 per cent, First Nations would tell you and I would agree, is not keeping pace with their needs and their growth and the evergreening they need and the equipment they need and so on. So I've advanced the concept of a triple E approach, equal education for everyone, and we'll see where that goes next week.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. The First Nations have demonstrated a large degree of integrity in saying that they will not allow their standardized achievement test results to be broadcast because it's their personal business, because it's the personal business of the family. How do you feel about that as a provincial-wide trend?

Mr. Zwozdesky: One of the things that we have talked about with the First Nations chiefs is the need for honesty and openness and for accessing those kinds of things. We have to know where we're at in order to move forward, so I hope they'll start releasing those.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, our five minutes are up.

I will now recognize the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week His Honour the Lieutenant Governor rose in this House and delivered Alberta's Speech from the Throne. As he did that, I pondered the fact that the first time that I heard the Lieutenant Governor deliver a Speech from the Throne, I had been an elected MLA for less than a month and had sat in this House for a very short time. I was so pleased to see His Honour the Lieutenant Governor again offering not only views with respect to the future of this province and what the government agenda was but also his own personal perspective and his own personal insight into how he cares about this province. I thought that over the past year as I have been able to spend time with him, very small amounts of time, his charm and his love of this province have always been reflected in everything that he has done. I feel very honoured to have been able to be an MLA at the time that he has served this province as Lieutenant Governor.

I also thought a great deal about what life has been like for me and probably for many of my new colleagues this year and about the changes that we have gone through as we have become more knowledgeable and more involved in the work of this government and this House with respect to the future of this province. I am very grateful to be here, I feel very honoured to be here, and I wanted to take a moment to thank my constituents and my colleagues and my family for allowing me to serve this province.

His Honour spoke of facing the future with confidence and of the value of safe and strong communities. Challenges lay ahead. In the last year we have faced many challenges as a government and as a province, and I guess the challenge of government is that we don't know what those will be. They have been unexpected, and I think the test that we must face as a government is how we respond to events that arise without knowing what those will be. I believe from my experience as an Albertan and as my experience in this government has shown me that Alberta will rise to these challenges and that we will build an even stronger future for our children.

Here, Mr. Speaker, I must say that I am very grateful for the direction that our Premier has shown and his passion toward future generations and ensuring that what this province will look like and what our children will inherit will be worth inheriting and will be similar if not better than what we as young Albertans inherited.

A strong and healthy future can only be achieved when Albertans feel safe and secure within their homes and in their communities. Albertans must have confidence in their government, and it has been very clear to me in the past year that from my perspective and from the perspective of many Albertans that translates into confidence in their justice system. As Minister of Justice and Attorney General it is my responsibility to ensure that government is doing enough to prevent crime, to intervene and provide support for those in need, and to enforce the laws that we all live under.

Alberta's safe communities initiative is now into its second year. That initiative, as I referred earlier to the work that we have to do, is a shared responsibility amongst my colleagues and amongst this government. Our first year focused on building a foundation. We added more police officers. We enhanced the role of the Crown prosecutor and bail hearings. We hired more prosecutors, both special prosecutors and general Crown prosecutors. We developed legislation to combat crime. We added more treatment beds for Albertans struggling with addiction.

Through the recommendations of the safe communities task force we've identified the areas where we need to be better, stronger, and more focused. We know that the roots of crime can very often be traced back to families in need that sometimes will become families in crisis. Substance abuse, family violence, mental illness, and lack of community support are all common underlying factors for criminal activity.

Mr. Speaker, those are the areas where we need to focus as we move forward. Those are the areas where we can make a real difference before crimes are committed and before anyone becomes a victim of crime. This is important not only because it addresses the root causes of crime, but I believe that when we travel this province as members of this Legislature and we talk to people that live in communities, their pride in their community is reflected and is tested and judged by how communities take care of people in need. I believe that that is an underlying philosophy of this government, and I believe it's a very important reason that the Premier has been able to lead so effectively on the safe communities plan.

Our world may be changing, but our values are not. Albertans today share the same values that we did in years past. We want to raise our families in safe and caring communities, and we look out for our neighbours and for those in our communities who need help. But we also want to protect our homes and protect our property. We respect the law, and we expect others to respect the law, and we expect accountability and compassion from our justice system.

We expect the actions of our government to reflect those values, and that's a very complicated set of values. The safe communities initiative has nine government ministries that work together to find realistic, tangible crime reduction strategies. The police, the courts, community leaders, and municipalities all have key roles to play. We can't eliminate crime and social disorder overnight, but if we chip away at this issue with meaningful approaches and meaningful partnerships, I think we'll be surprised at what we can achieve.

Even in this past year through the approach that we've been able to take through the safe communities initiative, through integrated partnerships that involve helping people in need, we've been able to support people who perhaps have come into contact with the justice system, unfortunately, and need more help than simply being incarcerated. We can speak to programs that have been a success even this year: Pathways in Calgary, Rapid Exit in Edmonton.

Mr. Speaker, we need to take a look at that full paradigm of what safe communities means. We need to look at education, prevention, diversion, and then enforcement and prosecution. It's very important that while we speak about the enforcement and the prosecution piece, we also understand that if we don't deal with the first issues, we will only ever be dealing with those last issues.

Mr. Speaker, I mentioned that our world is changing. Alberta is changing, and I think Albertans know that. What was once considered big-city crime is taking root in smaller communities. As I visited a number of small communities to talk about the safe communities initiatives, I have been struck at how open people are about their concerns as to what's happening in their communities.

The other side of that is that big-city crime in Alberta is truly big-city crime these days. The issues that we're facing in Calgary and Edmonton and the five other urban centres are particularly acute at this moment. I think it's very important as we move forward that we acknowledge the leadership that police services, police agencies across this province have taken in enforcement and take a moment to thank them for the work that they do and the high-risk work that they are doing.

There's a real concern out there about crime and the effect that it's having on our society, and much of the work within Alberta Justice now is focusing on organized crime. Mr. Speaker, gangs are not going away. Organized crime is one of the world's oldest industries. It's an industry based on selling drugs, victimizing vulnerable people, and making money. Unfortunately, as we see not only in Alberta but across the country, business is booming. In a strong economy or a struggling economy, unfortunately, there is a market for illegal narcotics. It's a sad reality. In good times and bad it's a competitive market. Today's gangs are sophisticated, well organized, and mobile. They don't respect our provincial boundaries.

In order to disrupt and dismantle gang activity, we have to act now, and we have to act smart. We're working within our provincial legislation and introducing new laws to address gang-related crime. Bill 50, the Victims Restitution and Compensation Payment Act, gets to the heart of what Safe Communities is trying to do. The new legislation hits gangs where it hurts the most: their cash flow, their profitability. The act allows us to seize, hold, and sell property connected to unlawful activity and to return the proceeds to the communities and the victims that are affected by these crimes.

In the two months that the civil forfeiture office has been operational, we're seeing great promise in this initiative. Police agencies have been extremely receptive and are submitting files for review under this act on a daily basis. This is a true partnership between the police and the Crown. Alberta currently has seizure orders on vehicles, guns, drugs, cash, and homes, including a property used to house a large-scale grow operation in a rural community. The total value of illegal profit connected to the seized property in the last seven weeks is 4 and a half million dollars. As I mentioned, this legislation hits organized crime hard, and it removes some of the profit from the gang activity. Mr. Speaker, we believe that when you're dealing with people that are prepared to commit heinous criminal acts, we must hit them where it hurts the most, and we believe that that's affecting their ability to do business in this province.

Mr. Speaker, as a Calgary MLA I hear the concerns about violent crime. I share those concerns. We've seen a number of examples in Calgary in the last two months of armoured vehicles being observed. The police know where these armoured vehicles are. This is the reality of organized crime, and eliminating rivals is a part of doing business. Firing guns in public places is a part of doing business, and innocent people are getting caught in the crossfire. Gangs are not concerned with collateral damage. All they care about is hitting their target. As I mentioned, gangs are getting more sophisticated. The risk of being shot is just the cost of doing business if you're in a gang.

Police are finding an increasing number of vehicles on our streets equipped for battle. Today's gang members are driving around in virtual tanks. Bulletproof glass, hidden compartments for guns and drugs, and body armour are all ways that vehicles are being modified. These, Mr. Speaker, as long as they're allowed to be on the streets, allow gangs to operate or feel that they can operate with protection and impunity. Bill 50 ensures that we can take those vehicles off the street. The best way to make sure that someone's not driving is to get rid of their vehicle.

Mr. Speaker, the Speech from the Throne referred to a gang summit. We're very excited about this. The Premier has asked government to come together with community partners and police agencies to find ways to ensure that gangs are not impacting the justice system adversely. Gang activity puts a tremendous amount of pressure on the police and the courts, it puts innocent lives in danger, and it ensures a constant supply of drugs within our province. This is a problem that needs to be addressed, and the summit, which will be held in Calgary in June, will address that.

We need everyone on board. Mr. Speaker, this summit will be an opportunity for us to explore with our partners the development of a provincial gang strategy, a strategy that will deal with all the pieces of this issue around safe communities. We will deal with prevention, we will deal with education, we will deal with enforcement, and we will deal with prosecution. We know that this is a problem that is part of a wider organizational issue around western Canada specifically, so we will also be organizing a meeting of Attorneys General for western Canada to ensure that we are working together on this program so that gangs are not able to cross borders and operate outside of jurisdictions.

We also, Mr. Speaker, will be introducing some work with respect to witness protection. We believe that there are people out there that are afraid and intimidated. They are not people that necessarily need to be hidden from outside of their community, but they need to be given the confidence and the support to come forward and to feel that they will be protected during prosecutions.

We are also doing a lot of work with respect to federal legislation, Mr. Speaker. We believe there need to be fundamental changes to the Criminal Code. We need strong laws around drive-by shootings, any murder committed in connection to gang activity should automatically be considered first degree, and we want to see gang-free zones enforced to help stem the tide of recruitment into these organizations.

We also believe that it's very important, Mr. Speaker, for us to aggressively amend the Criminal Code to deal with bail, to change the test for bail so that judges have the test that they can move forward with in order to keep people that should be in jail in jail. We also think that it's important to impose the reverse onus. We need to ensure that if people have committed a breach of a court order, the next time that they go to court, the onus is on them to prove why they should be allowed out on bail as opposed to the court making an assumption that they should be allowed out on bail.

Mr. Speaker, we need to deal with all of these issues, the root causes of crime, provincial and federal legislation. We also need to deal with the pieces of our society that need support to ensure that they're protected from people that are involved in criminal activity. Government has an important role to play in ensuring that safety. Preventing and reducing crime is no easy task.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to ask just a short question to the hon. minister. You talked about the confidence in the justice system, and you indicated that because of some of the backlogs, et cetera, you have added Crown prosecutors and judges, but there seem to be continuing delays in the whole justice system, both in the civil and criminal divisions. I was wondering if your department is taking any steps to do an evaluation of the whole system to see if you can determine if there can be improvements in removing some of the bureaucratic delays that seem to be inherent in the judicial system.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to respond to that. We believe that within the provincial court system, which deals with most of the primary charges dealing with bail and criminal offences, while we have augmented the number of prosecutors and the number of provincial court judges, one of the other pieces we need to look at is the way that we actually organize the work the courts do. We need to organize what we call and you will know, my friend, as the administration of justice. We need to look at how courtrooms are booked, how those systems work, whether or not lawyers are coming to court prepared. If they're not coming to court prepared, there must be a consequence.

We continually find that if you look at federal legislation, if you look at some of the disclosure requirements under the Criminal Code, there are a number of pieces of legislation and common law that create duplication. Now, under the jurisprudential piece of this it is possible for defence counsel to require disclosure at a number of different stages in the process. Our point as a justice department is that we believe that the administration of justice must be fair. We believe that everyone must be able to receive a fair trial. But we also believe that if you're going to talk about making the system effective and ensuring that people receive a fair trial in due time and that there aren't unnecessary delays, everyone, every stakeholder in the system, whether it's the Crown or defense counsel or judges, has a responsibility to ensure that the administration of justice proceeds in due course and allows for a fair trial so that everyone is served by the system.

I think that that is a new way of looking at the administration of justice. It's not something that's only happening in Alberta. It's part of what we're seeing around civil procedure reform across the country. Because we need the public to know that this justice system also serves them, we need to ensure that everyone feels that the system is working toward a resolution. When I say that, I don't mean a resolution that will always end up in a guilty plea but a satisfactory resolution that respects the rights of the accused but also understands that people need to have confidence in the system. If they no longer have confidence in the system, then we have failed. So it's very important, as we have these discussions and we involve stakeholders, that everyone understands that they have a role to play. It's about access to justice, and it's about access to justice for everyone because the justice system has to serve our entire community.

Mr. Hehr: I appreciate the hon. minister's comments on, you know, we've got to help people along and support them along the way, or else dealing with them at the endgame is where we're always going to be. But just two quick questions on that. Do you find that our policing numbers, even though they seem to be less than other major centres, are adequate going forward? The second thing: what is the status of the Calgary drug court and the province's role in the future of that?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Redford: Thank you. The first thing I'll say is that I have found the discussions and the partnership that I have developed as Minister of Justice with the chiefs of police, particularly in Calgary and Edmonton, in the last year to be probably the most important part of the work that we have done around safe communities. Both Chief Rick Hanson and Mike Boyd have a very firm understanding of all pieces of this. What I find interesting is that we have been able, I think rightly, to move the discussion from being about X number of boots on the street to what those police are doing. Our discussions and our partnerships with the Calgary Police Service and the Edmonton Police Service talk about targeting police officers in those areas that are involved with kids in schools, prevention, and families at risk. I know that people sometimes synthesize this down to a simplistic approach of saying: oh, there aren't enough police on the streets. The chiefs tell us that that's not all they need. What they need and what they're getting from us is targeted police officers to deal with the front end of these challenges.

Mrs. Klimchuk: I move that we adjourn debate, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 2

Lobbyists Amendment Act, 2009

[Adjourned debate February 17: Mr. Stevens]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today to move second reading of Bill 2, the Lobbyists Amendment Act, 2009.

The Deputy Speaker: My apology. It was moved yesterday by the hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations on behalf of the Minister of Justice and Attorney General, so, Minister, you are not allowed to speak until all the others speak. Thank you.

We'll keep speaking on the bill, then, please. The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you very much. It's my pleasure to rise and speak on Bill 2, the Lobbyists Amendment Act, 2009. You know, it's nice to see that Alberta has moved a long way from where it was some 10 years ago, when they denied the need for this type of, I guess, transparent and open government. I'll say more on that towards the end of my speech. Although we still have a long way to go, this is, I guess, an important beginning, and these amendments are adding to that piece of the puzzle which will one day, hopefully, get Alberta to the place where we really can be. What we are seeking is open and transparent government. Like I said, we're not there yet, but we seem to be plodding along that path. If we could plod along a little faster, that would be appreciated, but we're getting there.

I guess what these types of bills are really trying to balance is representative citizens being able to go forward and meet with their government officials and discuss the business of the day and discuss what ails them or what ails their communities and what governments could do to make things better on their behalf, make the environment better, make the justice system better, make our postsecondary system better.

At the same time, despite the fact that these are often made in the public interest, we have many people or many organizations who are acting in the private sphere or in their private interest that then go forward to government members and people in power and put forward an agenda that may be slightly different than a version that would be in the public interest but more fosters a private interest, the private interests of, for example, farm owners or private interests of oil companies or private interests of schoolteachers, whatever it may be.

That's where the Lobbyists Act tries to balance and cut some rights or comes to a balance of what, in fact, is the rightful, sort of appropriate amount of time private interests or private organizations should be spending with government officials and trying to keep an account of when this occurs and who's meeting with who because, really, access to power enables you to influence it. That's just how it is.

We have a long-standing tradition in democracy where we try to sort of have this open government principle. It goes back to the days of the Magna Carta, where it was not expressed but implied that people would have the right to go see their governments. We see in the English Bill of Rights in 1689 that you have the right of the subjects to petition the king. We see that also in our federal Charter of Rights and Freedoms, the freedom of association and the freedom of expression, where our ability to go see our government officials is implied there. But, again, it's really back to that balance between what is too much influence and how that influence is being wielded, and that's what our Lobbyists Act is trying to come to terms with.

Now a little bit of not really a history lesson but sort of where we are. The federal government first came in with a lobbyist registry in 1986. Then Ontario came up with their Lobbyists Registration Act in 1998, Nova Scotia in 2001, British Columbia in 2001, Newfoundland and Labrador in 2005, and Quebec in 2002. With us coming up with our first cut of this back in 2007, we're a little bit behind the curve.

We would suggest that our Lobbyists Act isn't quite as good or doesn't have as many teeth in it as some of these other legislations that are on the books. That's where we would like to go, and that's where we would like to get to. If we look at our act right now, it's primarily based on what was talked about back in 2001. Really, we haven't seen a lot of movement from there. Back at that time, of course, the Klein government was against any kind of registry, so in fact, like I mentioned earlier, we have made some progress.

Of course, the Alberta Liberals campaigned for a lobbyists act back in 2004. We actually supported it all the way along, every step of the way from back in 1996, when it was introduced in this House, I believe, in the Tupper report. Is that what it is? Maybe someone else could explain that. We were calling for it as far back as then. We've been at least calling for it for some period of time. Those are the things that we'd like to see.

While I'm talking about things we'd like to see, we think there has to be an onus on more government officials actually reporting when people are in fact meeting with them and more of, you know, an approach of the government official telling a lobbyist: "Don't call us. We'll call you when we need the information." We think that approach would go a long way to limiting lobbyists and people who are trying to curry favour with the government or have their special interest put forward that may or may not be in the public interest. It would be much better served. Just an open and transparent lobbyist registry is where we should be getting to. Like I said, these are moving along that direction.

You know, I read the hon. former Leader of the Opposition's last book. It's very good reading, actually, if any of you want to go into it. It shows sort of the access to the corridors of power that people like Rod Love and Kelley Charlebois enjoyed at some point in time in our past. You look at that and look at how people like that had unfettered access and undue influence and, really, maybe had more private interests instead of public interests at heart. That is sort of where it is. I don't know if that book would still be on the shelves or if you could get some members of this Assembly a copy, but it's really a history of what can happen when you don't have a lobbyist registry or have a stopwatch or a guard at the door, so to speak. So I'll leave you with that plug.

I'll have some more comments on this, where we'd like to improve the bill, at that stage of the game. I'd just invite you all to read that book and see why we have a Lobbyists Act and why we're going in that direction and why it needs to be strengthened even further.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Like my hon. young colleague from Calgary-Buffalo, I too and all my colleagues support the notion of a lobbyists registry. As my young colleague pointed out, we've been calling for a lobbyists registry for some time. I welcome this opportunity to engage in debate on Bill 2, the Lobbyists Amendment Act, 2009.

I also want to give a tremendous amount of credit to the all-party standing policy committee that reviewed what had been the government's flagship bill from, I believe, almost two years ago. The process, unfortunately, is far from complete, and I welcome this opportunity to discuss some of the missing parts of this bill that need to be addressed.

One major loophole, probably the largest loophole, is a notion that I put into rhyme, and that's: if the government comes courting, there's no reporting. In other words, if the government member actually does a reverse lobby and says to an individual in private industry, "Would you be interested in a contract for building this particular bridge or building this particular hospital, or are you interested in providing some P3 financing for a particular government project?" no reporting takes place. In other words, the government can initiate a deal that could be in the millions or, in the case of how the carbon sequestration project goes forth, could be potentially in the billions, yet there would be no reporting required of the initial effort on the lobbying that goes behind it.

Some of these holes were dealt with by the standing policy committee in terms of the concerns that nonprofit groups had, the concerns that community associations had, wanting to understand what the rules are so that they wouldn't have to file a lobbyist application when they were talking to their local MLA. The all-party standing policy committee addressed those concerns, and a number of amendments were made. But when it comes to the biggest concern that this bill has yet to deal with – and that's conflict of interest – Bill 2, the Lobbyists Amendment Act, doesn't meet the test.

For example, a recent appointee to the health minister's superboard, Tony Franceschini, is a wonderful man. He's a very capable entrepreneur. He has built Stantec up to the point where it's a multimillion-dollar company. His company has built wonderful infrastructure projects throughout the province. However, to have him appointed to the superboard and for him to carry out his role within that superboard, does he have to leave the room every single time a question is asked with regard to a hospital renovation, a repair on an operating room, the final building or the shelling-in, as it was described, of the Peter Lougheed hospital, the well-received – when we finally get it – south Calgary hospital? This is a man whose fortunes to a large extent have been derived from working on projects for this government. For an individual who has so closely profited by connections with this government to be now a member of the superboard which, amongst other items, will be deciding on future infrastructure projects, the conflict of interest is so glaring.

Members have spoken to our Ethics Commissioner. We've had to declare what holdings we have that could potentially influence government outcomes. I would suggest that Mr. Tony Franceschini has probably not been required to give up any of his what I would think must be thousands of shares in Stantec.

An Hon. Member: Hundreds of thousands.

Mr. Chase: Potentially hundreds of thousands. So through no fault of his own he has been placed in a position of conflict of interest by his appointment.

Now, the Ethics Commissioner, Neil Wilkinson, whom we met with, doesn't have the authority to investigate the appointment and to balance the need for strong, entrepreneurial, potentially business-focused – and I'll be the first to argue that health care delivery is not a business; it's a service. However, this man is qualified. He's qualified, but he's in a position where he's been placed in conflict. The Ethics Commissioner's latitude or designation doesn't allow for that kind of a conflict, so that's a large concern that I have.

We also asked the Ethics Commissioner: how does the reporting of a potential lobbyist occur? For example, one of the things that Neil mentioned was that, you know, if a lobbyist, say, from a packing plant sees a person from a competing packing plant talking to the minister of agriculture at the bar, is that actual lobbying? Can he report the person for having this discussion with the minister of agriculture, who might potentially be directing cattle towards this particular slaughterhouse or packing plant facility? Again, he didn't really have an answer for that, but that was one of the ways he suggested that this lobbying reporting could take place.

I very much appreciate Neil Wilkinson's desire to talk to our caucus and give us a heads-up on his role as Ethics Commissioner. One of the other concerns that he brought up was: exactly how do you define a lobbyist, and when exactly is a lobbyist on or off duty? This was a very large concern. My feeling is that I'm paid as an MLA. Yes, there's an expectation that at some point I'm allowed to sleep and somehow I'm allowed to eat, but my job, as far as I'm concerned, is a 24/7 responsibility, and I'm paid a very fine sum to do that representation of my Calgary-Varsity constituents. Unless a person receives no funding whatsoever, how could they possibly fit the description of an unpaid lobbyist?

Sometimes when we look at things, we have to flip them over. Is a person who's having a beer after their 8 to 5 company job somehow able to distance themselves from the fact that they work for that particular company and any of the discussions are not of a lobbying nature? They're simply off the record, and it's a friendly, you know: "Can I buy you a beer?" "Sure. I'll get the peanuts on the next round." That remains elusive in terms of definition.

Another example of lobbying. It was very difficult for a number of members of the opposition and, I would think, for members of government to sometimes spend a Wednesday night in this Legislature because Wednesday nights were the wine-and-dine nights. The limousines pulled up and whisked the members away to be wine and dined and lobbied. So this lobbying has taken place. What I am saying is: where does the friendly camaraderie, the exchange with entrepreneurial friends, end and the lobbying begin?

Another problem that we discussed with the Ethics Commissioner, Neil Wilkinson, is the MLA's duty to report the potential of a lobbying influence. The rules are so vague that an MLA could honestly not be aware that they were being lobbied or pushed in a particular direction. Possibly it was just a discussion of mutual interest. But as soon as dollars or potentials come up, is an MLA responsible for reporting to the Ethics Commissioner that this discussion was held? Again, just from where I started off, if the MLA initiates that discussion, then there's no reporting required. I can just imagine the situation where an MLA comes in: "Don't say anything. Let me begin, and then the reporting isn't required." I believe that in order for this well-intentioned latest version of the Lobbyists Act to come forward, Bill 2, the Lobbyists Amendment Act, there are still holes, as individuals have indicated, that we could drive a truck through or, maybe, the high-speed train that we've long waited to surface in this province.

Speaking of the high-speed train and trains in general, we had Rod Love riding along on a government plane to talk to government ministers about the private rail company that he was recommending for the extension to be built in northern Alberta. The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo brought up the famous Kelley Charlebois, the several hundred thousand dollar man who had his contracts broken up into a series of small pieces so that the bidding process of $100,000 or less never entered into it until you started adding up the series of contracts.

If we are truly going to be transparent and accountable, then there is a lot of work to be done on Bill 2, the Lobbyists Amendment Act. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: There are five minutes for questions and comments. Any hon. member wish to do so?

Seeing none, I will now recognize the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to be able to rise and speak on this bill. I was on that committee that worked very hard and put many hours into trying to get this right. I think that often we don't know if we've really got it right until we start to use it and have an evaluation of it. I was disappointed that the original bill hadn't gone into practice much quicker than I was hoping it was going to. Hopefully, with this amendment act it will be put into practice, and further down the road we can have an evaluation to see if it really is meeting not only the mandate but also the intent of what this bill should be.

One of the things that I see in the amendment, that I questioned the first time around, is that sometimes I think the question should be: who is the lobbyist? Everybody else seems to be exempt – we're almost hard-pressed to find out who actually is going to be in this bill – and the revised definition will include individuals who are appointed to government committees, so now we have even less numbers of people having to register as lobbyists. I think that the bill is weak in many ways, but let's get it going. At least this amendment, hopefully, will make it move forward. I do think that there still are some loopholes left in this bill.

One of the things that was interesting was that a private citizen who came forward in the deliberations in the committee had suggested that perhaps we should have a reverse lobby so that the onus actually falls on the MLAs. I believe that it wouldn't be difficult to do that because I think we all know and have executive assistants that in fact know where we are every minute of the day, who we're meeting with, and if they don't know, certainly it's in our BlackBerry somewhere. I think that it might be easier for us as MLAs to just keep track of whom we've spoken to and why we've spoken to them. I think it's an idea that still bears keeping in the back of our mind when we do the evaluation on this bill.

One of the reasons that this lobbyist bill is very important, I believe, is because this government does a great deal of business behind closed doors. I think that Albertans need to know and should know who's meeting behind those closed doors. I don't think that they need to know every single detail, but I certainly think that they should know what the gist of the conversation was to be able to see which companies are lobbying the government and to see if, in fact, perhaps it's weighted, as we know it probably is, to friends. It's always good to know people in high places. I think it's fine as long as we know who those people are in those high places that are talking to the other people in high places.

Often, as my colleagues have already pointed out, the government's connections to industry and business go beyond the norm of professional relationships that come with wanting to support a competitive economy. There's nothing wrong with that. In fact, when I see the division in this House, the division between the government and the opposition, when the opposition can be considered the enemy, which I've had quoted about myself on more than one occasion, I think that's why we have to have open communication.

That's not the way it should be in this House. We should be able to work together. That's our job; that's what we're getting paid for. Whether we have different points of view is part of that process. I think that having closed-door meetings is not right when, in fact, we could be working together. The fact that the government would work with businesses is their job as well. But it's also the citizens' job to understand and know which companies are being given perhaps even an unfair advantage as to whom they actually have access.

I will probably speak again on this bill as we move along through it. At this point in time those are, really, all of my remarks.

The Deputy Speaker: We have five minutes for comment or questions.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: On the debate. It didn't seem like anybody was leaping to their feet to engage the Member for Lethbridge-East.

Thanks, Mr. Speaker. This legislation is long overdue. We'll do a section-by-section discussion in committee. In my reading of it, some of the amendments that are brought forward make sense. We'll see how it goes through debate. I am concerned with the delays. I'm losing track now of how long it has been since we've had the lobbyist registry promised.

I should point out that there is a bit of a record with Bill 1 – I think this was the flagship bill a year ago – in being slow to be implemented. If I go back before that, the access to the future fund I think was the result of Bill 1. That stalled. I mean, the legislation went through, but the promises there were never fulfilled. There was also a cancer legacy act, something to that effect, which was a Bill 1. Again, the legislation went through, but it was never fulfilled. I'm concerned that on bills 1 the track record of this government is a bit iffy. Considering that Bill 1 is supposedly the flagship bill, it's a concern for me. I'd like to keep this moving and get on with it. I think the Member for Lethbridge-East makes the point that we won't really know how this works until we try it. There are issues. Some of us will get caught up inadvertently, probably, in problems. We're going to have to test drive this.

I will say that it's a piece of legislation that brings Alberta into the 20th century, and for this government that's progress. It'd be nice if we were moving into the 21st century, but I'll take it as I get it from this government, one century at a time.

Clearly, we've called for a lobbyist registry for years. The Member for Calgary-Varsity quite properly linked this to broader issues of conflict of interest. But let's get on with it, Mr. Speaker. Let's get on with it.

With those comments I will move adjournment on this particular piece of legislation. Thank you.

Bill 3

Credit Union Amendment Act, 2009

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Berger: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to move second reading of the Credit Union Amendment Act, 2009.

The main purpose of this amendment is to give credit unions the ability to allow their members to vote for directors in advance of their annual general meeting. The Credit Union Act was amended in the spring of 2008, which among other things allowed for credit union member participation at meetings through electronic means.

As a result of subsequent discussions related to electronic participation, it was discovered that several credit unions, including some of the large credit unions, have allowed their members to vote for board members at their branches in advance of credit unions' AGMs. The use of advance polls in other circumstances, including provincial elections, is becoming commonplace. We feel that the ability to use advance polls could further credit union member participation at credit union meetings.

We are also proposing that this amendment retroactively validate those formal processes used by credit unions in the past that have counted voting done at advance polls. In doing so, we will preserve the past choices of credit union members for their board members and preserve the decisions made by boards and voted for in this manner. This will also reduce the possibility that these credit unions could be exposed to legal challenges based on the premise that since their board was not appointed in the Credit Union Act, the decisions made by that board are not valid. As these challenges would have the benefit of hindsight, the uncertainty surrounding a legal challenge could paralyze a credit union. We have not received any complaints regarding tampering or other concerns from members of credit unions that held advance polls.

As a matter of expediency we are also proposing a minor administrative change that would give credit unions more flexibility in the reporting requirements of credit union committees to their board. Credit unions have sufficient corporate governance policies in place such that this can be managed by the board.

Thank you, and I move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 4

Post-secondary Learning Amendment Act, 2009

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today and move second reading of Bill 4, the Post-secondary Learning Amendment Act, 2009.

The first amendment ensures further consistency with the roles and mandates policy framework for publicly funded postsecondary institutions, and the second amendment is a housekeeping matter relating to clarifying designation powers for graduate faculty councils and faculty councils.

As you will remember, the roles and mandates policy framework, approved by government in November of 2007, was developed to ensure that Alberta's postsecondary system aligns with the needs of students, taxpayers, and society at large. Furthermore, the framework enables sound decision-making to strategically and effectively invest public resources to address critical skilled labour shortages while at the same time creating a more educated society to respond to the growing need for knowledge workers. The framework also fosters broader and increased collaboration among institutions with a view to enhancing learner access through program and delivery mechanisms as well as pathways and transitions that maximize learner opportunities.

As you will know, Bill 7 was approved on October 21, 2008, to enshrine key components of the policy framework such as the six-sector model in the act. The six-sector model designates the roles and mandates of postsecondary institutions into six different sectors based on program responsibility, research activity, and regions served.

Among institutions identified are comprehensive academic and research institutions. This includes institutions like Athabasca University, the University of Alberta, the University of Calgary, and the University of Lethbridge. They have an academic focus, pure research, where the majority of undergraduate and graduate programs are offered.

Baccalaureate and applied studies institutions, institutions such as Mount Royal College and Grant MacEwan. They have an emphasis on baccalaureate degrees, teaching, and applied research.

Polytechnical institutes, institutions such as NAIT and SAIT. These institutions provide the full range of technically related training such as baccalaureate and trades training as well as vocational education.

Comprehensive community institutions such as Grande Prairie, Red Deer, Lethbridge, and NorQuest College. In many respects they are stewards for that reason, responsible for ensuring a full range of programming from foundational learning and apprenticeship to certificate, diploma, and in some cases collaborative degrees.

Independent academic institutions. These are primarily faith-based with an emphasis on undergraduate programming with some graduate degree offering capabilities.

Specialized art and cultural institutions such as ACAD and the Banff Centre can grant baccalaureate and graduate degrees. Their focus, as their sector's name suggests, is very narrow. These are not institutions that are intended to be comprehensive teaching and research institutions.

Today's proposed amendment is a continuance of the alignment of the act to the policy framework, that of the use of the term "university." Currently the act restricts the use of the term "university." The original intent of this provision was to maintain control over the use of the term, including restricting Alberta's college system from using it in an effort to preserve the foundation of the community college system. However, with the implementation of the roles and mandates framework, it is timely to consider modernizing this provision by giving consideration to the broader use of the word "university." This amendment would allow institutions within the baccalaureate and applied studies sector such as Grant MacEwan and Mount Royal the option to apply to the minister for a formal name change that may include the term "university" in their title.

Without this amendment there are no other mechanisms to allow these institutions to use the word "university" in their name without dissolving them and establishing them as a university under the comprehensive academic and research institution category of the six-sector model, which would not be sustainable in Alberta. The proposed amendment has been intentionally restricted to baccalaureate and applied studies institutions because of that sector's focus in the policy framework. Specifically, this sector of the framework may grant diplomas, certificates, applied degrees, and baccalaureate degrees and may conduct applied research related to approved programs of study provided by the institution that led to the granting of baccalaureate degrees.

The second amendment is a housekeeping matter to ensure consistency and clarity for universities' processes related to the operation of their academic governance model. Stakeholders, in particular the Alberta Universities Association, have indicated that the authority to delegate is unclear in the current act other than for student discipline. In the Universities Act, one of the predecessors to the Post-secondary Learning Act, there was an overarching delegation power that allowed any body constituted or continued by or under this act the power to delegate. With the amalgamation of the legislation into the Post-secondary Learning Act, this overarching provision was not retained for the universities. This amendment returns those powers to the current act and is consistent with the request from stakeholders.

I'd ask that members support Bill 4, and I move to adjourn debate. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 5
Marketing of Agricultural Products
Amendment Act, 2009

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and move second reading of Bill 5, the Marketing of Agricultural Products Amendment Act, 2009.

This act will amend the Marketing of Agricultural Products Act. No substantial changes have been made to the act since 1987. The proposed legislation will update it, simplify the wording, eliminate duplication, and make some minor amendments to clarify regulatory powers, including moving the review and appeal process into regulation.

The proposed amendments are the result of a review of existing legislation and industry consultations. In 2006 the Agricultural Products Marketing Council began an industry governance review, including a review of this act. The consultations included the 20 ag boards and commissions, a survey of producers who are not actively engaged in industry organizations, and, of course, meetings with other agricultural organizations in Alberta and across Canada. Over 400 individuals participated in the consultation process.

The review also included an examination of what changes other jurisdictions, including Australia, the United Kingdom, New Zealand, the Netherlands, have made to their ag industry governance. The feedback from the consultations has been compiled into 50 recommendations for change. Although many of the recommendations can be implemented through governance practices, others indicated a need for some legislative updates, which this amendment will do, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise to speak to Bill 5, the Marketing of Agricultural Products Amendment Act, 2009. The act, as the mover indicated, is largely a clerical sort of act, an act of correcting or updating wording and sorting out administrative issues.

It's actually great to see an agriculture bill come forward or any bill, frankly, these days that has minimal cost implications. We're not increasing spending here. We're actually probably streamlining. I think that's a good thing to do, and I'd like to see more of that from the government, to be honest with you. As I've said in here before – and I'm going to keep saying it because it's a profound concern – as a government we're spending per capita way more than most other provinces, dramatically more than B.C. and even more dramatically more than Ontario per capita. So if we're streamlining things here and making things move more efficiently, that's all to the good.

All of us rely heavily directly on the success of our agriculture sector. Supporting that sector in terms of marketing is a good thing. This bill, if you go back, actually has its roots way back, I think, in the 1960s, when significant steps were taken by the provincial government to support marketing of agricultural products. The system has gone through a series of overhauls and shifts and so on. This is more of a fine tuning. I don't think you'll get any particular objection from our caucus on this piece of legislation.

As the minister said before me, there was a lot of consultation. Given that it seems to be based on a lot of consultation, that it has very few cost implications, that it's largely a matter simply of administration and cleanup – I'm not going to go through section by section at this point in second reading – I expect that this legislation will receive the support of the opposition.

Given the hour I don't know that we need to prolong the debate a whole lot, but I know at least one of my colleagues would also like to speak to it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. As the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview pointed out, we are supportive of this initiative, which is to streamline the process to market the made-in-Alberta agricultural products. One of the things that I'm glad doesn't enter into this bill is the discussion about who's best placed to market agricultural products. I know there are varying degrees of antagonism against the Canadian Wheat Board, for example, in terms of marketing not only wheat but barley internationally, and sometimes we get into the arguments of co-operatives versus competitive and individual rights versus collective rights. Fortunately, we don't get mired in those kinds of debates within this particular bill.

It is important to note how far we've come. In Public Accounts when we were talking with the ag ministry and in some of the discussions within the House it has been pointed out that we have made major strides in age verification of our animals, and that has been one of the biggest barriers for trade. I believe the figure that I heard – and I know the minister of advanced education, who has a strong ag background, can tell me if I'm wrong – is that 85 per cent of animals are now age verified. With the concerns that we had with regard to BSE and when the potential BSE would show up in an animal and all the research that's been done on prions and so on, I think Alberta has made some major strides since that first breakout of BSE, when the animals weren't tested for a three-month period because we only had one person doing the testing, and that person was preoccupied with CWD.

We're at a point where we can say to the world that our products are superior. We can verify the age of the beef we export. We can take on protectionist outfits in the States like R-CALF and say that Alberta beef is number one. We can verify for expansion markets, such as Japan, that we have taken strong safety measures to protect our animals. I'm hoping that with all of the research that is taking place in Alberta, we'll very soon be able to announce to the world that through Alberta research we have a live test for BSE in animals. Once we can do that, verify in an inexpensive manner, then for a large part of our agricultural product, our shipping of beef in the box, to quote the advanced education minister, we can sell our finished product as opposed to a live product, and that's the key to success in Alberta.

We started off as an agricultural province. That's where our roots are. We have that proud tradition. Bill 5, the Marketing of Agricultural Products Amendment Act, 2009, will only tend to strengthen our reputation as one of Canada's top agricultural producers, with the best product the world can buy.

Thank you. I would like to call upon the Assembly to adjourn debate on Bill 5 if that is their wish.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In view of the hour I move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:50 p.m. to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon and welcome.

Let us pray. As we close this week and we look forward in anticipation to going visiting with our constituents, may we also take this opportunity to thank all the people of Alberta for the wonderful benefits this province receives on a daily basis. Amen.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a very special guest seated in your gallery, Mr. Krishan Joshee. Mr. Joshee has a long record of volunteer community service and is a recipient of numerous awards, including the Order of Canada. He has been a pillar of the community and a truly outstanding Albertan. All of us are fully aware of his unbelievable service as the chair of the Wild Rose Foundation, that has helped so many groups not only in Alberta and Canada but in countries around the world. He's been a tremendous ambassador for the province of Alberta.

I just want to thank you on behalf of all Albertans for your years of dedicated service, and we wish you all of the blessings of continued good health.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a very special guest who's seated in your gallery. My guest today is Mr. Clint Dunford. Clint was a member of this Assembly for approximately 14 years, served in numerous cabinet posts, continues to be a community activist and a great volunteer in Lethbridge. We're just happy to see him here in Edmonton. I'd ask him to rise and receive the warm reception of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to rise today to introduce to you and through you a very prominent developer in Alberta, Dr. Prem Singhmar, sitting in your gallery. Dr. Singhmar's contributions to this province are too numerous to list. A couple of highlights include donating significant amounts of money towards establishing the Singhmar centre for education inside the Art Gallery of Alberta as well as donating to the University of Alberta to create a new chair in classical Indian polity and society and supporting countless other programs and organizations. Thank you, Dr. Singhmar, for everything you have done for this province and no doubt will continue to do. I would ask that you please rise and accept the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we also have in the Speaker's gallery today three very distinguished individuals: Ms Coleen Neita, the honorary consul of Jamaica in the province of Alberta; Mr. Broodhagen, president of the National Black Coalition of Canada; and Ms Cheryl Allen, the business coordinator for the National Black Coalition of Canada here in Edmonton in the province of Alberta. These three distinguished people are now a part of Black History Month in Canada and North America.

Welcome.

Introduction of Guests

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, a real privilege again today to introduce three classes of students from Sherwood Park. They come from Lakeland Ridge school. Lakeland Ridge public school is one of the first schools to be built for Catholic and Protestant students as well as two government departments dealing with employment and also dealing with income supports as well as having the children's services there. It's a school that offers a great deal to the community. Today there are 72 students. They're accompanied by teachers Jay Robertson, Lindy Mair, and Sonya Bushell along with parent helpers Jenn Gray, Karin Solberg-Wells, Karen Boyle, and Corrine Thompson. I would ask if they would please stand and the Assembly please give them a warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly today Mr. Darby Tchir, a resident from the county of Lac La Biche who is currently attending Concordia college in Edmonton. Darby is an active citizen who is involved in youth politics.

With Darby are his friends Stephen Boutin and Brittani Rael from the United States of America. Two years ago Darby and Stephen participated in an internship with a presidential classroom in Washington, DC, which prepares young men and women in the roles of leaders in public service and private enterprise. Stephen and Brittani have travelled to Alberta to visit Darby and to see what our great province is about.

Mr. Speaker, I would ask that the three individuals rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It certainly is my pleasure to make an introduction on behalf of the hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly seven hard-working members of our public service. They are joining us today as part of the public service orientation tour. These individuals work in the Ministry of Seniors and Community Supports in the area of freedom of information and privacy and legislative services. I'm pleased to welcome Kent Ziegler, Cindy Want, Janice Rechlo, Sunny Menon, Jennifer Inda, Sharon Getty, and Kathy Robinson. On behalf of my hon. colleague I would ask our guests to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly 14 members of the Taoist Tai Chi Society of Canada led by Cathy Baas. Cathy is a role model for all of us. She's a long-term member of the society, she's a volunteer instructor, and she happens to be in her mid-80s. You may have noticed as you entered the Chamber today that they, myself, and other hon. members of this Assembly were demonstrating how to cultivate the mind, body, and soul through the art of Taoist tai chi. We would like to thank them for helping Albertans to maintain healthy and independent lifestyles by improving their health, their fitness, and their balance, thus preventing falls and reducing injuries and hospitalizations. Mr. Speaker, they are seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly two outstanding volunteers from St. John Ambulance. Last week I attended a ceremony recognizing the top three volunteers for 2008. The third place volunteer, Kathie Robinson, could not be with us today. However, I have to say that she volunteered 12,000 hours in the last eight years for St. John Ambulance.

Second place went to Dean Smith. While volunteering countless hours for St. John's, Dean has always displayed an enthusiastic and positive attitude towards the program. In 2008 he volunteered over 480 hours of patient service while attending 64 community events.

First place went to Melanie Peters. In 2008 she accounted for over 7 per cent of the total volunteer hours in Edmonton.

I'll be discussing more about St. John Ambulance in my member's statement later this afternoon. Mr. Speaker, it takes very special people to do what these people have done. I would ask them all to rise now and receive the traditional warm greeting of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very happy today to rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly some very good friends of mine from Cardston, Alberta. Melvin and Elva Pitcher are long-time residents of Cardston. They raised a great family there, they've run a successful business there for many years, and they are pillars of that community. They are accompanied today by their grandson Tanner Allred, who is a university student in Edmonton. I'm very happy to welcome them here today. They are seated in the members' gallery. I'd ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased and honoured to have some special people from a very special organization joining us in the public gallery today. A little bit later I'll be doing a member's statement to celebrate an achievement of theirs. For now I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly three people who are associated with the Greater Edmonton Foundation Housing for Seniors. The chairperson of the board, J. Lawrence Tymko; Raymond Swonek, the executive director; and Susan McCarthy, who is the public relations manager with the Greater Edmonton Foundation are joining us. I would ask them to please rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very happy today to be able to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the House two members of my family, one of my immediate family and one of my extended family: my son, Scott Taylor, who is home for reading week from the University of Victoria, where he is a third-year history major and poli-sci minor; and my nephew, his cousin, Chris Bowden of Edmonton, who graduated from Concordia university with a bachelor of arts in history and a minor in political science and is currently completing an after degree in secondary education at the University of Alberta with a social studies major and a language arts minor. He has completed his first practicum at Crestwood junior high, and – I should say this for my colleague – he's a resident of the fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre. Chris Bowden and Scott Taylor, if you would rise, please, and accept the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly 21 individuals, sponsors and supporters of Camp fYrefly and from the Institute for Sexual Minority Studies and Services. Camp fYrefly is the major community outreach initiative of the Institute for Sexual Minority Studies and Services at the University of Alberta. The camp, which is now expanding nationally, was founded in 2004 by Dr. André P. Grace and Mr. Kristopher Wells and is now supported by many community, individual, government, and corporate donors. Camp fYrefly provides vital support for queer and questioning youth in need, and this should be a source of great pride to all Albertans. I would now ask my 21 guests seated in the public gallery representing both the institute and Camp fYrefly to rise to receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

St. John Ambulance Volunteers

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On February 10 I attended an event celebrating volunteers for St. John Ambulance, more specifically the two volunteers that I introduced earlier, Melanie Peters and Dean Smith. I was excited to attend an event that recognized the commitment, dedication, and enthusiasm of volunteers in this province.

Volunteers help to relieve the pressures that arise from the changing demographics of our communities, the rapid growth of our urban populations, and the lack of adequate services and manpower necessary to accommodate all of these needs. Volunteers are what make a difference in our communities, and for all of this we are very thankful for their time and effort and energy.

Before I was an MLA, my background, among other things, focused on occupational safety. I am a huge health and safety guy, but I was also a volunteer firefighter, and I know what it takes to do this kind of work. That's why I think it's so incredible for the volunteers of St. John Ambulance and other organizations to do what they do. The volunteers of St. John Ambulance donated approximately 80,000 hours last year. It's an incredible number. Their contribution to the province is simply unmeasurable.

I would like to thank all of the volunteers in Alberta and especially the two here from St. John. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Alberta 55 Plus Winter Games

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to take this opportunity to speak to the House about a very special event taking place in Lethbridge this week. The city will play host to the first-ever Alberta 55 Plus Winter Games and the thousand-plus athletes that will descend on Lethbridge for the four-day event.

Now, you may be aware that the games have been held many times before under the banner of the Alberta Seniors Games before changing their name to 55 Plus. This is the first formal 55 Plus games and will attract an active and vibrant group that competes in all sports at a very high level of competition with the primary goal of sportsmanship and camaraderie.

A group of core volunteers has been planning the logistics of the games for the past six months, and that's no easy task when you have over a thousand competitors coming to town. You have to make sure those folks have their needs taken care of: a roof over their heads, food to keep them going, and directions on how to reach the venues and competitions. That's even more difficult when you factor in the broad range of activities from curling, bowling, hockey, table tennis, cross-country and downhill skiing, snooker, badminton, shuffleboard, cribbage, and many, many more.

The community has truly risen to the challenge, Mr. Speaker. More than 700 tireless volunteers have been working day and night to make sure the games come off without a hitch, not to mention the many people who have opened their homes to the athletes. As well, both the Lethbridge Senior Citizens Organization and Nord-Bridge Seniors Centre have been instrumental in bringing the games to fruition. I'd like to also thank the University of Lethbridge for donating their downtown building as the headquarters. I would especially like to thank Chairman Paul Stevenson, Games Manager Collin Beazer, and their dedicated board and volunteers for over 20,000 volunteer hours already invested in the games.

The opening ceremonies are planned for today, with the games continuing until closing ceremonies on Monday. Our Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation will be opening the event. I'm looking forward to attending, and I invite everyone to join us in Lethbridge for exciting games and a great party.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Greater Edmonton Foundation

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to celebrate and congratulate the Greater Edmonton Foundation Housing for Seniors, or GEF, as it is more informally known. In January GEF received a ranking of 29 out of 50 for the best small and medium employers in Canada. The winners were chosen from over 250 participants who registered in the study. Study partners include the Queen's School of Business, Queen's Centre for Business Venturing, and Hewitt Associates.

Joining us in the public gallery today are representatives of the Greater Edmonton Foundation: Board Chair Lawrence Tymko, Executive Director Raymond Swonek, and Susan McCarthy, the public relations manager.

The finalists in this study are a pretty impressive group, ranging from car sales to video game and software providers to telecommunications and biopharmaceutical research, but I'm proud to say that the Greater Edmonton Foundation is the only not-for-profit service provider on the list. Tough competition, so it tells you just how good this organization is. Running a small- or a medium-sized business is a steep hill to climb, but running a not-for-profit service organization is like climbing Mount Everest.

That leads me to the best part. This award really honours the staff. The ranking the organization receives is based on employee surveys and opinions, so it's about how they feel about the organization, and it's about their leadership. According to what I've read, staff are pretty pumped about the executive director, Raymond Swonek, and I know he is a big fan of the work, dedication, and compassion that the staff bring in the door every day.

This year, 2009, also marks the 50th anniversary of GEF operations. This wonderful nonprofit provides affordable housing and supportive living services to senior citizens in Edmonton in 11 apartment buildings, some of which are in the fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre, nine lodges, and two duplex homes. GEF is a management body created by the province of Alberta and legislated by Alberta Housing.

Please join me in applauding this example of excellence in the nonprofit sector and seniors housing sector. Thank you so much for your leadership, compassion, and exemplary performance.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today the finance minister gave a news conference that repeated previously announced economic initiatives to cloud the fact that this government has mismanaged the Alberta economy. For years this government has ignored the advice of experts to save during times of plenty, and now, once again, Alberta is in trouble. A former Premier admitted there was no plan for the boom. Will this Premier admit there is no plan for the bust?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Treasurer today delivered a report that shows that our savings fund, the heritage savings trust fund, has taken a loss, but I would submit that if we would have listened to the advice of the member across, we would have lost even more money through this unbelievable economic turmoil. On the operational side – the hip replacements, policing – all of the operational costs of government are balanced. This is the loss on the savings account, the heritage savings trust fund.

Dr. Swann: Well, let me try that again, Mr. Speaker. Will this Premier admit that there was no plan for the bust?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, to set aside close to $14 billion in cash, liquidity: we're the only jurisdiction in North America to do that, to have this fund to cushion the rapid drop in oil and gas prices and forestry and agriculture. We're all feeling the effects of the economic downturn, but this is cash that now will cushion. We can use that over the next few years so that we don't have to continue to run large debts like other jurisdictions are going to do.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, the heritage fund today is worth less in real dollars than it was 20 years ago. To the Premier: how does this reflect our commitment from nonrenewable resource wealth to future generations?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, since '93-94 we've seen a net gain in this province of over $50 billion. That's paying off an accumulated debt of about $22 billion, $23 billion; about 3 and a half billion dollars in endowments; $14 billion in the savings account. We have another $13 billion or so in the heritage savings trust fund. That was a lot of gain, a net gain of $50 billion over the last 15 years. You know, we've done well. The other thing is that last year we had the unbudgeted surpluses, and we asked that they go into the sustainability account. Had we put them into the heritage trust fund, we would have lost even more. So this is a very good plan.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This province had an amazing opportunity over the last five years to set itself apart from boom-and-bust cycles by saving its resource revenue. We could have continued on with balanced budgets. We could have been protected from uncertain times like now. Instead almost $10 billion has come and gone within the last year. Our health care is in dire straits. Our savings are shrinking to preboom levels. To the Minister of Finance and Enterprise: will she admit that it was wrong for this government to ignore the warning signs to reduce Alberta's reliance on oil and gas and to stop relying on those dollars to fund core programs?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, the line of questioning today misses the very obvious fact that all Albertans know: with the downturn in the economy your investments aren't going to make money. That's global. That's reality. That's what happened today. There's no mismanagement. That's what's happening. What we have done with the savings, as the Premier has identified, has been responsible. We've brought up our standards of teaching to the efforts that the Learning Commission asked for, a thousand new teachers, policemen. We've accommodated a hundred thousand people in one single year, built extra infrastructure. Anybody in this Assembly should be proud of that record.

Mr. Taylor: Now, Mr. Speaker, by the finance minister's own admission earlier today at the media conference, this government is in effect rounding up the empties to take back to the bottle depot, going through the sofa, looking for the loose change that slipped between the cushions to pay for the rest of the spending for this year. What's it going to do next year? The few billion in the sustainability fund is not going to last very long.

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, stay tuned. We will be delivering a third-quarter result. Subsequent to that, in a few short weeks, we will be delivering a budget, and we will talk about next year. Today's efforts were to enlighten Albertans about what is happening in this state of economy so that we reduce that expectation of the good times of fast-growing revenues and the kinds of things that they may have seen in the past that we are seeing coming to an end. The industries that are calling in to look for help from this government and are getting counselling about where to go for advice for industry skills training and so on are appreciating the fact today that we've come forward to set the tone for Albertans so they understand our economic realities.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, it sounds to me like the minister spent the day pouring cold water on the sunshine and puppies outlook of the throne speech 10 days ago.

If, as the minister stated, there won't be any cuts to programs, why is the minister continuing to delay releasing the budget? We've already heard the worst, haven't we? What else are you hiding?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's almost a daily question except when the hon. member doesn't bring it forward. I have indicated that we're working very carefully on the budget. I think today's comments to the media and to Albertans was an effort to let them know how very difficult it is when we get into a constricted economic situation. We are gearing down from a tremendously high boom to a situation where we've got to make tough choices, targeted, intelligent choices about reallocations. Ministers are doing that every day. Ministers are talking about it. The Minister of Service Alberta identified an expenditure that was not going to be spent this year. We're making some of those choices. We'll have those ready for Albertans very soon.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Returning Officer Appointments

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Deputy Premier failed to answer basic questions about the appointment of returning officers for the last election. On an issue that important the Deputy Premier needs to be open and accountable to Albertans. My question is back to the Deputy Premier. How does he justify to this Assembly a policy in which six written requests from the Chief Electoral Officer, an officer of this Assembly, are ignored and the key nonpartisan responsibility of appointing returning officers is turned over to a political party?

The Speaker: The hon. the Deputy Premier.

Mr. Stevens: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I think the Justice minister should respond to this.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We've had the opportunity to review the suggestions that have been made by the hon. member. Our records do indicate that responses were made appropriately at the time, that requests made by the Chief Electoral Officer were responded to, and that's all we could do.

Dr. Taft: That's pretty pathetic, then, isn't it?

Mr. Speaker, the Chief Electoral Officer contacted this government six different times in writing about appointing returning officers, and the Deputy Premier was the person receiving those submissions. Does the Deputy Premier really expect Albertans to believe that he cannot remember this happening, or is he simply hiding the truth?

Speaker's Ruling Questions about a Previous Responsibility

The Speaker: Well, actually, if we look at Beauchesne 409(6), it says:

A question must be within the administrative competence of the Government. The Minister to whom the question is directed is responsible to the House for his or her present Ministry and not for any decisions taken in a previous portfolio.

So it's appropriate that the Minister of Justice and Attorney General be the one who responds.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I understood the suggestion to be that the government did not respond to the request, and I'm advising the House that it is my information as Minister of Justice that we did respond to the request.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

2:00

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Justice: is she saying that in testimony last week the Chief Electoral Officer lied or misled the Legislative Offices Committee when he indicated that he did not receive a response from the then Justice minister?

Ms Redford: I won't draw a conclusion either way, Mr. Speaker. I will simply advise the House that it is my information and I have been advised that we did respond to the request.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Resource Revenues

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. The finance minister today announced that Alberta is facing a $1 billion deficit this year. While I am happy that the minister has found a definition of deficit that will keep her out of jail, she can't hide the economic mismanagement of this government. Money and jobs are flowing out of Alberta in torrents, and the government doesn't care. My question is to the finance minister. Why won't she admit that the world's lowest royalty rates have already cost the Alberta government billions upon billions of dollars and have thrown the province into deficit?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, I will not admit that. In fact, the reason that we have a declining revenue picture today is totally attributable to the global recession and the fact that our investments have not made the money that we had hoped they would make. In fact, on the investment picture, they have lost money. We have not been in that situation for well over a decade, where collectively we haven't seen the heritage fund generate sufficient revenue to support budgets or support other kinds of activities. Unfortunately, this year that's the harsh reality.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The other harsh reality is that we've lost billions of dollars because the government has the lowest royalty rates in the world.

Now, this government knows that other governments around the world are recognizing the need for stimulus spending except the hidebound Tories in Alberta. This government believes in business as usual. My question is again to the finance minister. How can you look Albertans in the eye who've just lost their jobs and tell them that you are not going to have a stimulus package in the next budget?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, clearly the loss of a job is something that we feel compassionate about and we really don't just overlook. Our Ministry of Employment and Immigration strives very carefully to make sure that programs are in place to counsel people and to find other opportunities. In my own ministry, Finance and Enterprise, we look for ways to help businesses that might be floundering. But the situation that we find ourselves in with our economy spending more per capita than any other province in Canada is that if we sustain this level of the economy, as the Premier has committed relative to reducing our expenditure but keeping our contracts in place, we are still doing more in this province for the people of Alberta than they are in any other single place, on a background of the lowest taxes in any place in Canada.

Mr. Mason: Frankly, I don't think that statement would have any credibility with an unemployed person, Mr. Speaker.

This Tory government has always been prepared to cut programs for people in tough economic times while protecting subsidies to their friends in big oil. We heard that again today. The government will be cutting the Green TRIP program, which supports public transit, but it is going to keep the $2 billion subsidy for carbon capture and storage. Again to the finance minister: why is this government cutting support to municipalities for public transit and maintaining at the same time a $2 billion subsidy to some of the biggest polluters on the face of the planet?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, when I talked about what we would be doing, I said that we would be taking down the barriers that were barriers to doing business, that we would be increasing the dollars available for green technologies. Ultimately, that will see the phase-in of the Green TRIP. But the lighthouse, the single most important pinnacle, I believe, that Albertans should be justifiably proud of, echoed, by the way, by the President of the United States of America, is our commitment by our Premier to carbon capture and storage. We will be the leaders in technology that will support better and greener industry.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Alberta Adolescent Recovery Centre

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My constituents along with many other Albertans value the services provided by the Alberta Adolescent Recovery Centre, or AARC, located in my constituency. Many people are upset with the recent accusations made against this facility, and I am one of them. To the minister of health: can you tell us how many youth benefit from attending this facility?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I can't specifically because it is not a facility that the Alberta government owns and operates, but it's my understanding that several hundred have. What I can tell you is that I've had conversations with, I would say, at least a dozen different parents who have chosen to have their child admitted to the facility, and they speak glowingly. In fact, what they will tell you is that they believe it saved their child. I think one of the things that probably many of us in this Assembly do not have the ability to comprehend is the feeling that a parent has when they believe they have probably reached the end of the line and there is only one ray of hope and that's to seek these kinds of services.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Denis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: can this minister please explain how youth end up being admitted to AARC?

Mr. Liepert: Well, as I said in my first answer, Mr. Speaker, parents do commit their own addicted children to the program. In some cases they are referred to the program by the judiciary. There may be some involvement with government services that might be seeking placement for troubled adolescents. There are a variety of ways, but there is certainly always parental involvement that is part of the program.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Denis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Minister of Health and Wellness: how does this facility fit into the government's overall strategy to provide treatment services for the youth of this province?

Mr. Liepert: Well, I don't know that there's much else that I can add to what I've said in my previous two answers, Mr. Speaker. I do want to add one thing, though. I was in contact this morning with Dr. Dean Vause, who is the executive director of AARC, and he wanted me to know that at his own initiative he has asked the Calgary Police Service to come in to conduct any kind of an investigation they want to conduct, to interview, talk to anyone they want to within the program. I encouraged him to continue to do that, and by doing that, I wouldn't make any further comments.

Prosecutions under the Election Act

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, when allegations of tampering with evidence emerge in a freedom of information case relating to flight logs, the Minister of Justice appointed a special prosecutor. This move, for which I applaud her, ensured that someone separate and apart from the government investigated these concerns. To the Minister of Justice: given having free and fair elections, the protection of democracy, should be priority one for any Justice minister, why wasn't a special prosecutor brought in to investigate the 19 election violations recommended for prosecution by the just-go Chief Electoral Officer?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I said yesterday in this House, we have a process with an independent prosecution service that conducts their work efficiently and effectively. They balance the needs of the justice system. They balance the needs of prosecutions. They make decisions as to whether or not prosecutions should take place, and in cases where there could be a perceived conflict of interest, a special prosecutor could be appointed. That is not the case in these circumstances.

Mr. Hehr: I understand what the minister is saying, but why wouldn't there be a conflict of interest when we have election violations that could be happening with any party, including the hon. minister's party, that runs the government? Why wouldn't there be a perceived conflict of interest?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think that it is very important, as I said yesterday in this House, to recall that one of the conditions that prosecutors must consider when they're deciding whether or not to prosecute a case is to look at the circumstances and determine whether or not the situation can be corrected without a prosecution so that we are not inadvertently persecuting people that perhaps made honest mistakes. It is my understanding from discussions with my department and the advice that I've received on the conversations that were held with the Chief Electoral Officer that in the cases where the Chief Electoral Officer brought this information to the attention of the prosecutors, the situations were resolved, inadvertent errors were corrected, and the matters were dealt with.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much. Nevertheless, it didn't quite answer the question. What I asked was: how can it not be a conflict of interest when the minister's department is investigating alleged election violations that could have been committed by her own party? How is it not a classic case of a conflict of interest?

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would start by saying that the question has been asked and answered, but I will actually supplement. I will say that within the Department of Justice we have strong prosecutors who make decisions on their own, of their own volition, as to whether or not to prosecute cases, and they made decisions not to do that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Forest Industry Sustainability

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Unfortunately, over the past several weeks a number of Alberta forest companies have announced production curtailments and staff layoffs because of continued weak markets. My question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. My constituents are asking: what can this government do to assist this sector?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd also like to thank the hon. member for Athabasca-Redwater for a very timely question. There have been a significant number of closures, curtailments, and layoffs in the industry over the past number of months, and I want all of those companies and affected communities to know that their MLAs have been very diligent in communicating the distress of their communities to myself and to the rest of cabinet. We're working closely with the companies in affected communities to deal with those issues. We have a number of proposals on the go, but we're doing this all the while respecting the softwood lumber agreement with the United States.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister tell us what immediate measures are under way to restore the health of Alberta's forest industry?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can. When I was appointed a minister with responsibility for forestry, I immediately appointed a committee, the Forest Industry Sustainability Committee. I've received two reports from that committee, an initial interim report and a final report. Last September we accepted all 11 recommendations of the interim report. We're implementing those now. Some of those include using community development trust money for putting unemployed workers to work on things like the FireSmart projects. My honourable colleague next to me with Employment and Immigration has $8.2 million dealing with worker retraining and retention. These programs focus on communities and individuals affected by the downturn in the industry.

The final report from FISC we've received. I'm working now with other cabinet ministers to see which of those recommendations for medium and long-term reform we can achieve this year, and I'll be releasing that report later this spring.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question is to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Sadly, I have constituents who have lost their jobs in this sector even in the last two weeks. What programs and supports can Albertans expect from your department to help them get back to work as soon as possible?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our staff are helping workers to look for new jobs or set up educational or retraining plans for themselves. We're also making full use of the community development trust fund to help forestry-dependent communities. We're in the communities. We're working with their communities. We've earmarked a fair amount of resources for forestry initiatives and economic development in the most hard-hit communities, and we plan a lot more activities in the upcoming year. As the hon. minister of SRD has indicated, we're also supporting retraining of forest workers at various colleges and foundations and institutions as well as working with them on projects to increase their productivity.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar followed by the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This morning we learned that the government has a financial deficit. Last night we learned, unfortunately, that the government has a democratic deficit when they fired the Chief Electoral Officer of this province. Mr. Gibson was fired for working hard to fix the democratic deficit.

Mr. Hancock: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MacDonald: My first question is to the Premier. How can the provincial elections in this province be considered to be conducted in a fair and independent manner when the Progressive Conservative Party has sole authority to appoint the returning officers for the provincial elections?

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, as the Government House Leader rose on a point of order, I'm sure it's in relation to the misinformation contained in the preamble to the question. The issue that occurred last night was before a committee of this Assembly – it is not the government – and it was the decision of that particular committee going through the usual process that that committee goes through that gave rise to the decision that the hon. member is talking about.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's very interesting given that a government member on that committee announced to the press last Friday, when we initially had a meeting, that the gentlemen was going to be fired the following week, and you know, that turned out to be true.

Mr. Hancock: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MacDonald: Again to the Premier: when Mr. Gibson refused to sign the recommendation . . .

The Speaker: Hold on, hon. member. Just a second.
The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Xiao: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for giving me the opportunity . . .

The Speaker: No, no. Are you rising on a point of order?

Mr. Xiao: Yes.

The Speaker: And the Government House Leader?

Mr. Hancock: Same one.

The Speaker: Okay. I'm putting them all down, and we'll deal with them later.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate that.

Again to the Premier: when Mr. Gibson refused to sign the recommendation for the order in council to appoint returning officers for the two by-elections which occurred in 2007, what did the government tell Mr. Gibson?

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, those are specifics of which I have no knowledge.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Again, they're in the testimony that was provided to the committee that the hon. member referred to earlier.

Who at the Progressive Conservative headquarters was given the responsibility by the government to appoint the returning officers on Mr. Gibson's behalf?

Mr. Stevens: Well, the aspect that deals with the government, Mr. Speaker, is that ultimately I believe it's an order in council that appoints the returning officers. That is a government responsibility that I can comment on.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Recreational Access Management Plan

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The University of Calgary recently held a working group of interested parties to look at increasing hunting and fishing opportunities on private land and encourage wildlife stewardship. There are many Albertans who are concerned about the recreational management program, acronym RAMP, resulting from that workshop. My question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. What will the department's recreational access management plan do?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The main goal of RAMP is a three-year pilot project starting this fall, one, to increase public access to private lands for hunting and angling and, secondly, the protection and maintenance of habitat. Landowners in two wildlife units in southern Alberta will receive financial support from Alberta Sustainable Resource Development to provide recreational access to their land and stewardship of wildlife habitat. Two-thirds of the land in southern Alberta is private land. If you care about wildlife, you have to care about the habitat that they depend upon for healthy populations. This is about wildlife, the habitat they depend upon. That's what RAMP is about.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you. My first supplemental, Mr. Speaker, is to the same minister. Are you not concerned that RAMP will be seen as a paid hunting and fishing program?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The law of Alberta is very clear on this. It prohibits absolutely any payment for access for hunting. RAMP does not do this. The only money that will pass here is between the government of Alberta and landowners for habitat maintenance and public access. There'll be no privileged access for private hunters of any type based on the RAMP program. The law, as it always has been, will be enforced on a go-forward basis.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, my last question to the same minister: how will RAMP enhance Alberta's wildlife habitat?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Half of the compensation module that will be paid to landowners is based on habitat protection and management. The key to healthy wildlife populations is good habitat. As I've already stated, two-thirds of that habitat is on private land. That will be the focus of half of the RAMP program. If this is done properly in the pilot project – I'm confident that it will be, and of course we'll monitor the satisfaction with the pilot project before we go forward. Healthy habitat, healthy populations: this has the opportunity to be a win for landowners, a win for Alberta's hunters and anglers, and a win for Alberta's environment.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Primrose East Bitumen Spill

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In January 2009 about 500 barrels of bitumen seeped from the CNRL project at the Primrose East field, north of Cold Lake. There are questions around what is happening at the site now and whether the cause of the spill has been contained and if there has been any groundwater contamination. My first question is to the Minister of Energy. Can the minister confirm that such a release occurred at the CNRL Primrose East site, and can we get a firm figure on how much bitumen was spilled into the environment?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, the truth of the matter is that I don't think that anybody could confirm the absolute amount of leakage from any containment reservoir across the province of Alberta, so I'm afraid that at this point in time I'd not be able to answer such a question. She wouldn't have the answer, and neither would I.

Ms Blakeman: Well, you could've tried harder.

To the Minister of Environment: what involvement has the ministry had in ensuring that there has been no contamination of groundwater from the leak? Is the ministry on-site with the ERCB, or is the company self-monitoring?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm not familiar with this specific incident. I'll be happy to get some briefing from my officials to find out the specifics on this case. But I can talk about how we deal with such incidents in general. Yes, there is a degree of self-reporting that's involved in these things, but there's also an auditing provision that is part of the ministry. There is a responsibility on the part of industry to report any incidents. Once that has taken place, there's an ongoing monitoring. There's groundwater monitoring that would come into effect. I'm satisfied that our officials have the matter well in hand.

Ms Blakeman: Well, good. I look forward to what the minister can report back to us on that.

While he's at it, if he could also answer this. Given that kill fluid is being brought in day and night to the site, can the minister tell us if the leak has been successfully mitigated by this fluid, and if not – I'm sorry. This question should be directed to the Minister of Energy. My apologies.

Okay. Kill fluid is brought in day and night. Can the minister tell us if the leak has been mitigated by this fluid, and if not, is the cause of the leak a fracture in the formation?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would suggest that the direction of that question was more appropriate in her first instance, so I would ask the hon. Minister of Environment to respond.

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, as with the first question, I'm not familiar and have not been briefed on this specific example. I'll get the information and provide it to the member.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Sexual Orientation and Human Rights

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Tuesday the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit told the Legislature that he wants to "strive to make sure that we continue to support the diversity and economic well-being of all Albertans." Unfortunately, this commitment has not yet been extended to sexual minorities as he continues to refuse to add sexual minority status alongside ethnicity, race, or religion to the Alberta human rights code. The organizers and youth involved in Camp fYrefly were here today because they demand better from their government. To the minister: why won't you ensure that sexual minorities are protected under our human rights code by amending the legislation this session?

Mr. Blackett: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I had mentioned before, we've undertaken a review of the Human Rights Commission in its entirety since April of last year. We are looking at the different recommendations made by the Sheldon Chumir foundation and others. We have just appointed a new chief commissioner as our first step at looking at reforming the administrative process. Looking at the process, legislation is one particular aspect of that, and we are looking at that. When we have a proposal to make to my colleagues with respect to cabinet and caucus, then we'll go ahead and look at that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This process has been going on under this minister for almost a year now. On Tuesday the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit stood in the House and said that Alberta offers “a great opportunity to raise my family.” I wish this was the case for all, but it’s not. Homophobia has not ended, even 10 years after the Vriend decision. To this minister: why does the government continue to give a wink-wink, nudge-nudge to homophobes and gay-bashers by refusing to include sexual orientation in our human rights code?

Mr. Blackett: Mr. Speaker, it pains me, actually, to have to even respond to that. The fact is that the Supreme Court had written in protection for gays and lesbians in the province of Alberta during the Vriend decision. There has not been an instance – and I dare the opposition member to come up with an example – of one person in this province who has not had a chance to take their case before the Alberta Human Rights Commission and has not seen their complaint dealt with in a proper, efficient, and equitable fashion.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, Albertans should not have to look to a bunch of judges out in Ottawa to provide the human rights protection that every other Canadian receives from their provincial government. It sounds like the minister is unaware of the struggles that sexual minority youth and their families face. There is name-calling, vandalism, social exclusion, and bullying. While education is great, how can you expect Albertans to take it seriously when this government itself is not prepared to stand up to homophobes and do the right thing and change the legislation now?

Mr. Blackett: Mr. Speaker, we do not make changes to legislation or look at forming legislation or making amendments to any particular body just because of the whim of one particular individual in this House. We took the time and we will take the time to get it right. We took a year to come up with a chief commissioner of the Human Rights Commission. I ask you: is anybody in this House saying that that person is not above reproach, is not a qualified person, is not the best that we could do? Albertans demand that we get it right and we take the time to do it. Unlike yourself, we do not believe in knee-jerk responses for the betterment of 3 and a half million Albertans, and it’s 3 and half million Albertans that we have in mind.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Redrawing of Municipal Ward Boundaries

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On February 9 Calgary’s city council voted to redraw the boundaries of the city’s wards, which has resulted in a significant shift in the location of ward 10. The residents of this ward are furious that they were not consulted. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: are there any rules or regulations that govern the redrawing of ward boundaries in Alberta’s municipalities?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In fact, our provincial legislation is very clear. Bylaws can be made under the Municipal Government Act to establish, alter, or eliminate wards. I want to say that bylaws must be advertised by the municipality prior to being passed by council. Also, the public can make presentations to council on any bylaws that the city brings before its council. I also want to say that the Municipal Government Act gives municipalities the autonomy and the flexibility to respond to local priorities.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Provincially when boundaries need to be redrawn, an Electoral Boundaries Commission is struck, which consults with the public and makes recommendations to the Legislative Assembly. Would the minister consider amending the Municipal Government Act to include public consultations in decisions made regarding the redrawing of ward boundaries?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, the Municipal Government Act already ensures that the public is part of the process by advertising the bylaw. Also, council meetings are able to be attended by the public. Again I say that the key principle of the Municipal Government Act is that it gives municipalities the authority to make local decisions.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The public can attend, but they cannot make presentations.

To the same minister: is there a process that the residents of ward 10 can follow to appeal this decision?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, as I stated earlier, Mr. Speaker, there is a process in place. Further to that, individuals can submit a petition to the municipality asking for a vote on any proposed bylaw or plebiscite on any issue.

Councillors are accountable. Elected officials are accountable for the decisions that they make. It is essential that municipalities have the ability to make those decisions that meet the priorities of their citizens.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Greenhouse Gas Emissions

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last summer the government promised funding for carbon capture and storage and also public transit. Obviously, the economic times have changed since then, but while all the funding for carbon capture and storage remains, the funding for public transit has dried up. To the Minister of Transportation: why has the minister failed to advocate for the necessity of funding for public transit?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, Green TRIP, which the Premier announced last July, is going to be the most funding put into public transit in Alberta’s history, and we’re moving ahead with Green TRIP.

Mr. Kang: Mr. Speaker, I’m talking about the same green economy the hon. minister is talking about. Where is the funding for public transit in this budget? We want to see it.

To the minister again: does the minister have a cost-benefit analysis to justify why this government is not as committed to reducing greenhouse gas emissions through taking cars off the roads as it is to burying carbon underground?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, that’s exactly what Green TRIP is all about. I would ask the hon. member to stay tuned until we bring out the budget. We'll know where it's at. We've been consulting. I've met with the mayors of both major cities. We've met with the AAMD and C. We've met with AUMA. I do have to say that the consultation process is taking a little longer than we expected because everybody has a different idea. We're having a little bit of a problem coming to consensus on what we're actually going to have for a program, of what the criteria will be, but I can tell the hon. member that we're working on that criteria, and we're moving ahead.

Mr. Kang: We are talking about $2 billion dollars that was promised by the Premier, Mr. Speaker.

To the minister again: how will Alberta ever move towards a more sustainable cleaner, greener economy and lifestyle when the government runs away from public transit, which has proven immediately effective, and shelves the technology for reducing greenhouse gas emissions?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have to say that one thing he said is right: our Premier did commit $200 million. I will say that what our Premier says has always happened in this province. I agree that we do want to reduce tailpipe greenhouse gases, as the hon. member was saying, and that's exactly what we're going to do. We do have a bit of a problem here with everybody so keen on wanting to increase their public transit that they're not coming up with the greatest innovative ideas to reduce that greenhouse gas from the tailpipes. That's what we're working on.

Security of Provincial Energy Resources

Mr. Marz: Mr. Speaker, despite the current global economic slowdown Alberta's oil sands will continue to play an important role in Alberta's long-term economic growth and provide a secure energy source for this province, our country, and North America. In order for the oil sands to fulfill these roles, government must ensure that the oil sands are secure and protected. My first question is to the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security. What measures are in place to protect Alberta's energy resources such as the oil sands?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government does have a plan in place to protect all critical infrastructure in our province. The Alberta counterterrorism crisis management plan emphasizes the use of intelligence from a range of sources to identify, mitigate, or prevent a security threat before it occurs, and the Alberta Security and Strategic Intelligence Support Team gathers, analyzes, distributes critical intelligent information to industry and law enforcement. Partnership and collaboration between government, industry, and law enforcement is the backbone of our counterterrorism plan.

Mr. Marz: My final question, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister. There have been several pipeline bombings in northwestern British Columbia in the past few months. What assurance can the minister provide that pipelines in Alberta will be protected from attacks such as the ones in B.C.?

Mr. Lindsay: Mr. Speaker, the Alberta government takes the security of our energy resources very seriously. There is no indication that Alberta Energy infrastructure is at risk, and our threat level remains low. However, we will continue to work with the oil and gas industry and law enforcement agencies to ensure the security of the industry. Our counterterrorism and crisis management plan is regarded as one of the most comprehensive in the country and is continually reviewed to make sure it meets the stringent requirements of both government and industry.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Health Care Privatization

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The situation in Cochrane regarding radiology services is an example of one of the problems with private delivery of health services. If a clinic providing health services can't make a buck in the community, then they are out the door. I'm not necessarily advocating public dollars to bail out failed private businesses. My question would be to the Minister of Health and Wellness. How will the minister ensure that the citizens of Cochrane are not left in the lurch?

Mr. Liepert: Through our universal, publicly funded health care system, Mr. Speaker.

Ms Pastoor: That was the system. I wanted something perhaps a little more specific to the problem that we have at the moment.

Has the minister thought that this situation could apply to communities with private long-term care facilities, which, if they left because they can't make a buck, would leave vulnerable residents at risk?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure what answer the member is looking for. Is she asking me if somehow we can guarantee that a private business will not at some point in time make a business decision? I'm not exactly sure what the essence of the question is. At the end of the day any private business has the ability to determine how they do business.

Ms Pastoor: No, I don't think we should be telling business how to do business. What I want to rely on is that we're not relying on private business to deliver public health care.

Will the minister agree that transportation to Calgary for needed radiology services could be an issue for seniors in Cochrane who may not have family support or, in fact, whose children may themselves be seniors?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, the member is referring to a situation. You know, I respect the fact that it's a 15-minute drive from Cochrane to the city of Calgary, but I'm not sure what the essence of the question is. Is she asking us to ensure that we have full medical facilities publicly paid for in every community in Alberta? It's unrealistic.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Vancouver 2010 Olympics

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last year the Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation announced an Olympic and Paralympic Secretariat. Just last week a publication celebrating the one-year countdown to the 2010 Olympics was tabled in the House. The publication focused on athletes, artists, and Alberta's facilities such as the Canmore Nordic Centre. My first question is to the Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation. What is the status of Alberta's involvement, and does the minister plan to continue this initiative given the current financial uncertainties?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Ady: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member is right. The Olympics are less than one year away now. I think the country more than ever is going to enjoy being able to watch these Olympics. Here in Alberta we're going to take advantage of these Olympics to showcase our athletes, our culture, and our province. We think it's a very important thing when it comes to tourism and tourism investment.

As well, last week the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit and I were out in British Columbia watching our Olympians perform. They did a fabulous job. As well, we signed an MOU with the province of B.C. about what we're going to do with these facilities after the Olympics and how we're going to use those in the future to inspire new Olympic athletes.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With this significant provincial investment what opportunities will Albertans have to get involved in the Vancouver 2010 Olympics here at home?

Mrs. Ady: Well, another great question, Mr. Speaker. We have nine World Cup events that will be coming to this province in the next year. We're going to be able to see the world come here. We'll almost have, if you will, the pre-Olympics in this province. It gives us a chance to showcase this province to the world, which helps us in tourism.

As well, we're going to have the torch relay coming through this province. I think it goes to some 73 Alberta communities, with 17 of those communities having celebrations where we get to showcase our artists and performers in this province. Some really great opportunities for this province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit. Why is the province investing in cultural activities at these Olympic Games in B.C. when there are pressing financial issues right here at home?

2:40

Mr. Blackett: Well, Mr. Speaker, the reason is that arts and culture is important to Alberta. It's the fabric of our entire province. It shows our diversity; it shows the multidimensional nature of what we are. It's who we are and what we are. The government of Alberta through the Alberta Foundation for the Arts is working with the Vancouver organizing committee to showcase our cultural talent, and all of that money is coming out of existing funding. The events of the Cultural Olympiad will allow people to see the great cultural artists that we have.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that was 94 questions and responses today.

In 30 seconds from now I'll call upon the first of three remaining members to participate in Members' Statements.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Psychology Month

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. February is national Psychology Month. Throughout the month organizations like the Psychologists' Association of Alberta take the opportunity to let people know what psychology has to offer and the contribution that psychologists make to the overall health of Albertans.

Over 600,000 Albertans, or approximately 20 per cent of the population, will experience a mental illness during their lifetime. When individuals with mental health issues visit a health practitioner, they may only talk about physical complaints like pain, fatigue, and sleep problems; therefore, mental health issues like depression may go unrecognized and untreated. Psychologists can help individuals make good plans and decisions, manage their life more productively, communicate more effectively, and take better care of themselves emotionally. This may help reduce the risk of more serious illnesses.

The government of Alberta is committed to mental health service and has made significant new investment since 2003. Alberta is one of the few jurisdictions with a comprehensive mental health plan, including a children's mental health plan.

The purpose of this month is to raise awareness about the role psychologists play in promoting the well-being of all Albertans. Please join with me in recognizing February as national Psychology Month.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Jan Hudec

Mr. Webber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to recognize one of Canada's top male downhill skiers, Albertan Jan Hudec. Jan developed his passion for skiing at a young age in the Austrian mountains and then later in the Canadian Rockies when his family emigrated to Alberta in 1986. He exploded onto the world downhill ski scene with a silver medal at the 2007 world championships and followed that up with an historic win at Lake Louise that same year.

A few weekends ago Jan tore the anterior cruciate ligament in his left knee while competing at the world championships in Val d'Isère, France. He has suffered through the same injury to his right knee three other times. Despite this setback he is determined to compete in the Vancouver 2010 Olympics, and he is aiming for a podium finish. His perseverance, courage, and indomitable spirit truly represent what is great about our province and our people. I wish Jan a very speedy recovery and all the best in his quest for Olympic gold in Vancouver.

I would also like to recognize five other Alberta athletes for their medal finishes in various international events last weekend. Canmore's Mike Robertson won a silver in snowboard cross, Spruce Grove's Jennifer Heil a silver in freestyle moguls, Calgarian Kaillie Humphries a silver in women's two-man bobsled, Eckville's Mellisa Hollingsworth gold and bronze in skeleton, and, of course, a few weeks ago Calgarian John Kucera gold in the world championships at Val d'Isère, France, in men's downhill.

Mr. Speaker, I ask members of the Assembly to join me in saluting Jan Hudec and all the other Alberta-based winter athletes who train so hard to achieve their dreams and to make us proud.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, are you participating today? Proceed.

Climate Change

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today is a significant day for Canada as the new President of the United States makes his first official visit. President Obama is steering his country on a dramatically different course than his predecessor. He has recognized the responsibility we all have to the global environment and has already taken action to counter the threat of climate change. He has acted quickly and decisively to create jobs, save homes, and deal with the uncertain economic times that face both our countries.

While George Bush coveted Alberta's oil no matter what the environmental cost, President Obama's environmental adviser said just this morning that Alberta's PR campaign to greenwash the tar sands isn't working in Washington. The tar sands will not be exempted from America's new environmental policy. President Obama knows that the tar sands have a massive carbon footprint, and he knows the United States must reduce its dependency on foreign oil. Our energy industry and the jobs of Alberta workers are in jeopardy.

This House can act quickly and decisively if we decide to. We can use our resource wealth to develop a strong green-energy sector and diversify our economy. We can preserve our wilderness with dry tailings technology and managed, responsible growth. We can create good jobs by refining bitumen here in Alberta and by investing in public health care, public transit, and green infrastructure, or we can continue the policies of the past and be left behind as the world changes.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Calendar of Special Events

The Speaker: Hon. members, as this is the last day the House will sit in the month of February, I think it's important to draw the attention of all members to what other events are planned and are taking place in February so that recognition is appropriately paid to all of them.

February is Heart Month, national Psychology Month, as we've heard today, and, as we've heard earlier this week, Black History Month. It's also Junior Achievement Month. February 1 to 7 was White Cane Week, as it was International Development Week, as it was Eating Disorder Awareness Week, as it was National Therapeutic Recreation Week.

February 2 was World Wetlands Day, as it was Groundhog Day. February 2 to 8 was World Salt Awareness Week. February 4 was World Cancer Day. February 7 to 14 was Congenital Heart Defect Awareness Week culminating in Congenital Heart Defect Awareness Day on February 14.

February 9 was Tu B'Shevat. That's the Jewish Arbour Day. February 9 to 15 was Random Acts of Kindness Week, as it was World Orphan Week. February 11 was Winter Walk Day. February 12 was Sexual and Reproductive Health Awareness Day. February 14, as we all know, was Valentine's Day, but it also was Congenital Heart Defect Awareness Day. February 15 was National Flag of Canada Day, as it was International Childhood Cancer Day.

February 15 to 22 was Scout-Guide Week. February 16 was Heritage Day, as it was Family Day in other parts of the country. February 19 to 22 is the Alberta 55 Plus Winter Games, being held in Lethbridge, which we heard about. February 20 is United Nations World Day of Social Justice. February 21 is International Mother Language Day. February 22 is World Thinking Day.

February 22 to 28 is Freedom to Read Week. February 23 is International Corporate Philanthropy Day. February 24 is Shrove Tuesday. February 25 is Ash Wednesday. February 25 to March 1 is Canadian Landmine Action Week, and February 26 to March 7 is National Engineering & Geoscience Week.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to present a petition to this House today. The petition is of roughly 80 signatures from throughout southwestern Alberta requesting:

We, the undersigned resident of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government to introduce amendments to the Health Professions Act that would recognize marriage and family therapists as a regulated profession [pursuant to this act.]

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Bill 14

Carbon Capture and Storage Funding Act

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 14, the Carbon Capture and Storage Funding Act. This being a money bill, His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, clean energy production and wise energy use are the keys to Alberta's sustained economic prosperity. Passage of this act will authorize the Minister of Energy to expend $2 billion for a number of large-scale carbon capture and storage projects, ensure that Alberta pursues clean energy production as outlined in the provincial energy strategy, and allow Alberta to exercise its leadership in forwarding the science of CCS as part of the global greenhouse gas emissions solution, a solution endorsed by the G-8, G-20, the United Nations, the European Union, the International Energy Agency, and most recently the President of the United States.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 14 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Municipal Government (Municipal Auditor General) Amendment Act, 2009

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 202, the Municipal Government (Municipal Auditor General) Amendment Act, 2009.

The objective of this bill is to create an office of the municipal auditor general under the Ministry of Municipal Affairs. The municipal auditor general would work with Alberta's municipalities to improve business practices and would create a mechanism for Albertans to determine whether they are receiving fair value for their business and property taxes.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 202 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to file a consumer tipsheet on the issue of utility submeters for rental units.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of my colleague the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition I would like to table an open letter from the mayor of Cochrane, Truper McBride, who is registering his community's concerns about the removal of radiology services from Cochrane.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a tabling this afternoon that I would like to present to the hon. Members of the Legislative Assembly from the Leader of the Official Opposition, the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View. This is an open letter to members of the Assembly regarding the price of tuition, housing, and textbooks for students.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings. First, I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of some of the images included in an article from the current issue of National Geographic titled The Canadian Oil Boom: Scraping Bottom. These images convey the deep environmental scars of the tar sands to the world.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of 10 reports from long-term care workers indicating specific problems on shifts where they were short-staffed. One of these reports shows that although staff missed their breaks, they also had to rush the meals, and they were, again, unable to toilet or put the residents to bed on time.

Projected Government Business

The Speaker: The Official Opposition House Leader.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. According to Standing Order 7(6) I would ask the Government House Leader to kindly provide the Assembly with the projected government business for the week commencing March 2, with government business commencing March 3.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to do so and, in fact, would anticipate that on Monday, March 2, after Orders of the Day are called, I will be requesting unanimous consent of the House to allow the minister of finance and the President of the Treasury Board to present messages from His Honour the Lieutenant Governor on motions for supplementary and interim supply and to table the appropriate documents. Of course, with the privilege of the House, we would then table those at the first available opportunity after the end of the third quarter and the requirement that the minister of finance has to make a public report on the finances of the province before the end of February. So the first day that's available to us, we will ask for unanimous consent to table those messages and reports.

That would lead to Tuesday, March 3, on which we would have the opportunity to continue in day 6 of the reply to the Speech from the Throne and second reading of bills on the Order Paper. There are a number of bills on the Order Paper – bills 3, 4, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, and 17 – and we anticipate that bills 2 and 5 would be in Committee of the Whole. Bill 1 may be in third reading or may be in Committee of the Whole. That's a long list of bills, Mr. Speaker, but many of them are fairly short, so we anticipate that we may be able to deal with a number of them on Tuesday.

On Wednesday, March 4, we would anticipate asking the House to go into Committee of Supply on the supplementary estimates.

On Thursday, March 5, in the afternoon we would anticipate asking the House to resolve into Committee of Supply on the interim estimates.

The Speaker: Hon. members, during Oral Question Period today several points of order were raised. We'll deal with the first one. The hon. Government House Leader.

Point of Order

Questions about Legislative Committee Proceedings

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are a number of citations that I could give you, but I think I would start with the citation of 23(1) of our standing orders, which suggests that a member should be called to order if they "introduce any matter in debate that offends the practices and precedents of the Assembly." While technically, I suppose, question period is not debate, I think the context of the rule covers the suggestion, as do the general rules with respect to the privileges of members of the House, that we know that the committees of the House are committees of the Legislature and are not an extension of government. I think that's an extremely important distinction for the privileges of members of the House and for the operation of parliamentary democracy. Now, the fact that there are majorities of one party or another on a committee is not, in my view, relevant to the operation of the committee and the privileges of the committee and the understandings that we need to have about the roles and functions of the committee.

Mr. Speaker, it was very unfortunate, in my view, when the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar rose in the House during question period to raise a question to the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations under the guise that he was asking a question to the Deputy Premier and, as you quite rightly pointed out, inappropriately in terms of asking about a subject matter that he was really asking about in terms of his former role as minister of justice, but you dealt with that.

The question that I want to deal with is a clear admonition to the hon. member who raised the question and a reminder to members of the House that the committee – the formal name of it, I think, is the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices – is a committee of this House and is not a government committee. It's not an extension of government. Each member of that committee attends that committee and participates in that committee as a member of the House and acts as a member of the House in carrying out his duties. So for the hon. member to say that the government last night did something at that committee is absolutely, totally inappropriate and wrong, and he must be admonished, Mr. Speaker. We must make it abundantly clear. I mean, I heard the news reports this morning where the media got it wrong.

I am not a member of that committee. As I understand it, that committee went in camera for discussions. I am not privy to the discussions that that committee had as a member of this House. That role, that oversight for legislative offices has been delegated to that committee. It's the purview of that committee. I'm not privileged to know what discussion happened at that committee. I can make assumptions that members opposite raised at that committee the same objections and concerns they had about the Chief Electoral Officer and the process of the election that they raised after the election in public quite vociferously. I assume that they were consistent in their representation before the committee, but I'm not privileged to know that.

So for the hon. member to rise in his place and to say that the government did something last night, when he is referring to what was done by a committee of the House with the full responsibility of the House placed upon that committee, is absolutely and totally wrong. Mr. Speaker, he should be asked to retract that remark and apologize to the House.

The Speaker: Anybody else want to participate? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I, of course, listened with interest to the hon. Government House Leader in this matter, and it would be my view that there is certainly not a point of order here under 23(1). It would be my duty and my role as a member of the opposition to bring forward at the earliest time a matter in this Assembly.

As a member of the Official Opposition I would refer all hon. members of the House to Beauchesne 409 and the roles and duties and the guidelines around question period. Certainly, I would look at 409(4) and explain to the House that this is certainly a very, very important matter. It is not a frivolous matter, and it should be dealt with accordingly.

I certainly have a right to ask the Premier. I didn't ask the Deputy Premier a question. I directed my questions to the Premier, and it is my understanding of the rules of this House that any member opposite can respond if they so choose.

The hon. Government House Leader said that the proceedings of the Legislative Offices Committee occurred in camera, and he's right about that, but after the committee went back into public discussion, there was a rather lengthy debate by all members of the House regarding this matter. It's on the public record. Comments are already on the public record from each and every member who was in attendance and interested to participate. Now, it's difficult to determine that the committee is not supposed to discuss these matters in the House. I certainly have not heard anything like that in my time here, Mr. Speaker.

I would refer hon. members to the Order Paper for today. There is no notice of motion here from any of the government members, including the Government House Leader, on this matter that was discussed at Legislative Offices last night – and not only discussed, but there was a motion, which I opposed – to seek a search committee to find another Chief Electoral Officer. I'd like to point out that it has to be a government motion that appears on the Order Paper. It's not a motion from an individual member; it's a government motion, as the chairman of the committee, who is present this afternoon, indicated when we were discussing this last night. I don't see that motion on the Order Paper.

I would again state that I have every right to bring this matter forward as soon as possible. Now, I might be wrong, but I see notices on here for government motions 5, 6, 7, and 8, and none of them are dealing with this matter. I think I brought it up in a timely fashion. When it does appear as a government motion, I'm sure there will be more debate on it. For the hon. member to indicate that we don't have the right to bring this forward, I think, is an error.

I can understand where he's coming from, but – I'm sorry – the testimony from Mr. Gibson to the committee is directed to the government's actions or in some cases their inaction. The government, in my view, is responsible.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Others?

Hon. members, the point of order raised by the Government House Leader particular to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, I believe, had to do particularly with the usage of a certain word and a particular phrase where the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar said: "This morning we learned the government has a financial deficit. Last night we learned, unfortunately, the government has a democratic deficit when they fired the Chief Electoral Officer of this province." I believe in listening attentively that the point of order basically surrounds itself around "the government has a democratic deficit when they fired the Chief Electoral Officer." Précis, bringing it down, that the government fired the Chief Electoral Officer I believe is the crux of the matter of this particular statement. The Government House Leader contends that that was inappropriate language, was wrong, and the chair agrees. It was inappropriate, and it was wrong.

Committees are committees of the Legislative Assembly of the province of Alberta. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar is the long-standing chair of such a committee. Just to bring it to the attention of all chairs of all committees, then, I want to read a paragraph from the House of Commons Procedure and Practice, which is one of the documents we use in the Assembly, on questions concerning matters before committees.

Questions seeking information about the schedule and agenda of committees may be directed to chairs of committees.

And we've permitted that in the past.

Questions to the Ministry or a committee chair concerning the proceedings or work of a committee may not be raised.

And we've dealt with this in the past.

Thus, for example, a question would be disallowed if it dealt with a vote in committee, with the attendance of Members at a committee meeting, or with the content of a committee report. Questions to the Ministry on legislation or on a subject matter that is before a committee, when appropriately cast, are normally permitted as long as the questioning does not interfere with the committee's work or anticipate its report. When a question has been asked about a committee's proceedings, Speakers have encouraged Members to rephrase their questions.

In this case I would suspect that if the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar had used phrases other than that the government did this, then perhaps we would not be having this discussion at this particular point. So it's the utilization of the word. We're bringing it all down to one thing. The committee is a committee of the Legislative Assembly, not a committee of the government. If there's any misunderstanding about this, I suspect that later on this will lead to great discussion. If there's going to be misunderstanding about this, then why have these kinds of committees? But I don't think that's the intent of any of this.

The point is that I believe that this is an appropriate rising on a point of order. The question: the use of "the government" and "they fired." Well, I don't know. First of all, I'm not even going to comment about "fired" because I haven't seen the report yet of the legislative committee. It has not been brought to my attention, and I haven't seen the Hansard of it. But it was a committee of the Legislative Assembly of the province of Alberta, not a committee of the government, and that has to be very, very clear. Is that clear to everyone? It was an appropriate point of order raised, dealt with.

We have a second point of order. Hon. Government House Leader and hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, you both rose at the same time. The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Point of Order Clarification

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Allow me to respond to the allegation. I have to say this. When we finished the meeting, when we walked out of the meeting, because no decision was made in that meeting, I came out . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, it's appropriate to have a citation. I gather the hon. member is rising on a point of order dealing with something that affects him personally that would come under Standing Order 23.

Mr. Xiao: Yeah, 23(h).

You know, I said to the reporters in the corridor – they all wanted to ask me the question. I simply said one word, “no,” before I stepped into the elevator. I said it in English, not in Mandarin; I can assure you of that. If that one word caused anybody to misunderstand, I'd like to make an apology. But I will take that as a lesson as a rookie politician. Next time I will say more than one word.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Anyone else choose to participate? The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think the hon. member has clearly indicated that the allegation made by I believe it was Edmonton-Gold Bar that a member of the committee breached the in camera nature of the committee and that it was reported in the Edmonton Journal – or reported in the media, I guess you said. I don't know if you quoted the Journal. That was what prompted both myself and the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung to rise because anybody who read the Journal report knows exactly who he was referring to and prompted the hon. member to clarify that he did not intend to comment on what went on before the committee but that he was, rather, saying no to the request for him to comment. I believe that's been clarified.

I think it's very important that people not raise questions to besmirch the reputation or to otherwise impugn the integrity of a member in a nature like that very lightly. Therefore, it would have been appropriate for the hon. member to ascertain the facts before he made the allegation in the House as a side-swipe in a question.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, please proceed.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I don't have the benefit of the Blues, but I'm certain that I just said a government member. I didn't mention the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung or anyone else. In reality, as a member of that committee, for any member to leave the proceedings even before a motion to adjourn from the in camera portion is made is unusual. I've got no control over that. I do know what questions not only this member but other members on all sides of the House were asked following the adjournment of that meeting. I don't think there is a point of order here.

I would like to thank the hon. member for his comments, but I think we've got bills to debate this afternoon, and we should get on with that.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the chair does have the Blues and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar quote.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's very interesting given that a government member on that committee announced to the press last Friday, when we initially had a meeting, that the gentleman was going to be fired the following week, and you know that turned out to be true.

Okay. That statement is made. Then all of a sudden there's movement. The chair is listening very attentively. No member is mentioned. There is no name of any member in here. The chair would have no idea who you're talking about unless you read certain newspaper articles. The chair doesn't read any newspapers, so he doesn't have any problems with any of this now. Life is good. Life goes on. There is no controversy in my life.

It says that “. . . we initially had a meeting, that the gentleman was going to be fired.” Well, I have no idea who we're talking about, which gentleman is going to be fired. There may be a lot of flurry out there, but as far as flurry in the views and the eyes and the mind of the chair, it's difficult to see this being a valid point of order when no member has been mentioned. Nothing in here is talking about in camera or not in camera. This all seems to be secondary to another world other than the world we live in here.

I appreciate the clarification. I've now become illuminated with respect to this whole matter. I suspect, however, that there's clarity in the air, and we can move on to Orders of the Day.

Orders of the Day

Consideration of His Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mr. Johnston moved that an humble address be presented to His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To His Honour the Honourable Norman L. Kwong, CM, AOE, Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Adjourned debate February 18: Mrs. Klimchuk]

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to respond to the Speech from the Throne delivered by His Honour the Lieutenant Governor, the legendary Norman L. Kwong. It's a privilege every day to serve the constituents of Edmonton-Glenora as a Member of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta and all of the people of Alberta in my capacity as Minister of Service Alberta.

I would like to take this opportunity to give a special thanks and incredible appreciation to my family, colleagues, and constituents for the opportunity that I have been given in representing the people of Alberta. Even with all of this global economic turmoil, Alberta is well positioned to weather the storm, and the Speech from the Throne displays the opportunities we have in Alberta to weather this storm.

As the Minister of Service Alberta it's my job to support the plan that our Premier has to navigate through these uncertain times by supporting the other government departments and by providing essential services to Albertans. Since becoming Minister of Service Alberta, I've become more and more impressed by the depth and breadth of my ministry, especially the front-line staff who serve Albertans so well each and every day.

Service Alberta is an incredibly diverse ministry that delivers a range of public services that touch the daily lives of Albertans. The staff in the ministry work very hard to help Albertans solve problems, find resources, and get their questions answered. It's vital work, and it's work that often goes unrecognized or is invisible.

At Service Alberta our ministry is responsible for helping Albertans in a variety of ways. We enforce consumer protection laws. We inform Alberta consumers of their rights and responsibilities through the consumer information branch. In registries we deliver motor vehicle, personal property, vital statistics, corporate registries, land titles, and licensing services. Through the office of the Utilities Consumer Advocate we work with consumers and utilities to help resolve utility billing problems. We assist public bodies with matters related to the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act. Copies of legislation are provided to Albertans through the Queen's Printer. Our services also enable schools, postsecondary institutions, health care facilities, libraries, and municipalities to connect to the Internet via the Alberta SuperNet.

Service Alberta's services to government include the purchase and contract of goods and services for ministries and other government clients: print, mail, courier, payroll, accounts payable and receivable, telecommunications, and library services. We also manage government-wide record keeping, and we lead the standardization of information and technology services across government.

Some "Did you know?" Last year the ministry answered more than 220,000 calls and e-mails through our consumer contact centre about consumer issues, registries, utilities, and landlord-tenant disputes. We returned more than $750,000 to Albertans through consumer investigations. We facilitated 18 million registry transactions. We resolved more than 3,600 disputes through consumers and utility companies and 4,300 landlord-tenant disputes; responded to more than 220,000 inquiries about consumer issues, registries, utilities, and landlord-tenant disputes; purchased more than $400 million of goods; printed almost 28 million documents; and processed and delivered 24.8 million pieces of mail to support all government operations.

Now moving on to my other responsibility, as the MLA for Edmonton-Glenora this past year has been exhilarating, and I have learned a lot about my constituency, my department, and myself. There is a line in the Speech from the Throne that I would like to quote. "It is Alberta's people that make our province unique: people who are dynamic and genuine, optimistic and open-minded, people who share the freedom to create and the spirit to achieve." To me, this is what my constituency is all about and the incredible energy that every person represents.

When I have been out and about in the riding, it is in my capacity as the MLA for Edmonton-Glenora. I'm determined to visit every school in the constituency, and I'm well on my way. I have spoken with brilliant grade 6 students who asked me piercing questions about government and the democratic process, a process we sometimes take for granted in our country, especially when you look around the world and see what many others experience. These grade 6 leaders of tomorrow and future voters certainly inspired me.

I've also had the privilege of meeting with many seniors in my constituency, community leaders, nonprofit groups, and business leaders. Their input and perspectives are invaluable and necessary to assist me in my job as their MLA. Just today the Taoist tai chi group gave a demonstration in the rotunda of the Legislature Building. The Taoist tai chi group and one of their instructors, who happens to be 88 and led the class, is a great example of an organization from Edmonton-Glenora that makes a difference for health and wellness for seniors in the entire Edmonton area.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to just summarize my goals moving forward. I would pledge to continue to be available to the constituents of Edmonton-Glenora and the people of Alberta as Minister of Service Alberta; to listen, respect, and bring back all issues of concerns, which can be both positive and negative; to advocate vigorously on matters of priority to my constituency; and to best represent the people of Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark is being recognized as the 37th participant in the Speech from the Throne.

Ms Blakeman: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is not available?

The Speaker: Oh, I'm sorry. There has been such a lack of attention to that one recently. Please, hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, start the clock now.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's always an interesting exercise for me to listen to the various responses to the throne speech that are given. I've enjoyed this part of every spring session for the last 13 years. But I'm noticing something new this year, and that is the number of ministers who are using this opportunity to speak. With a few exceptions – and I'm thinking of the President of the Treasury Board, who used his time as a tribute to the Lieutenant Governor – there have been almost a dozen ministers who used this time mostly to lay out their plans and priorities and policies. It strikes me that that is what the throne speech is: a collection of various ministries, their plans, policies, and priorities.

This minister has now done the same thing, talked about Service Alberta. Since this is a new thing that's being done in the House, I'm wondering what the end result of this is. What exactly will her little ad for Service Alberta be used for?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, certainly, being the MLA for Edmonton-Glenora and the Minister of Service Alberta, to me it's an obvious opportunity to acknowledge the role of all the employees who support me in my role as minister. I think we all too often forget the front-line workers, the people who are working very hard on my behalf as minister. So part of that is what I wanted to bring forward, and the Speech from the Throne is an opportunity to be flexible, to talk about what's going on, and to pass along, you know, the good work that's going on. That's why to me it's a great opportunity to vision and to talk about what I felt about the Speech from the Throne and, as well, as Minister of Service Alberta.

Ms Blakeman: Fair enough. I'm just interested in the duplication that we have: all of the ministers giving input, one presumes, to the throne speech itself, and then you get sort of an addendum, an added opportunity to get up and take your 15 minutes to talk again about what your ministry is doing. So we get it twice.

I was trying to ask what the end purpose of it was. Will you use it on your website for your ministry or put it out in brochures? What's the end result of how this extra little bit of ad time you get is going to be used in your role as minister?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think, certainly, that there are many ways to pass on information. The thing about communicating, which the hon. member is well aware of, is getting the message out and being able to put something in Hansard so individuals can read it, see what's laid out, see the facts. This is a wonderful opportunity to be able to do this in the House. Hansard transcribers work very hard to make sure that what is said in Hansard is clearly printed and reflects what is said in the House here. That's what I view this opportunity as.

The Speaker: Others?

Then the 37th speaker now on the Speech from the Throne, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Special thanks to the hon. Lieutenant Governor for his inspirational speech to begin this Second Session of the 27th Legislature. I'm honoured and humbled to reply to the Speech from the Throne.

Mr. Speaker, we live in challenging times, so I would like to talk about hope, realistic hope. Anne Lamott said that "hope begins in the dark, the stubborn hope that if you just show up, and try to do the right thing, the dawn will come. You wait and watch and work: You don't give up." This accurately describes the attitude of the pioneers of this province: people who came from afar for the promise of life and liberty who were greeted by cold winters and harsh winds; traders, trappers, farmers, and homesteaders who braved the elements, settled with their families, and forged new communities; and roughnecks like Vern "Dry Hole" Hunter of Imperial Oil, who had more failures than successes. He looked down more than a hundred empty wells before hitting it big with Leduc No. 1, providing the key to Alberta's petroleum success.

This determination did not vanish with the passing of these pioneers. In fact, it inspired others from around the world to venture to Alberta. Mr. Speaker, I want to share a story about an Alberta family that conquered adversity by working hard and believing in a better tomorrow. The story begins with a young farm girl and her family fleeing as the fabric of her country is torn apart by civil strife. After becoming refugees in their own homeland, her family settled in a remote village and started a new life. She then married, and after the birth of her third son her husband left for Canada to make a better life for his young family. During his seven-year absence she not only raised, educated, and nurtured her children, but she also attended college to further her own education and pursue her dreams.

She dreamed of reuniting her family here on Canadian soil, where she yearned for better opportunities so that her children could carry the baton of her dreams in order to fulfill theirs. No sooner had they arrived than they encountered a shocking reality. The Canadian winter was extremely cold. They had to buy new clothes, learn a new language, incorporate themselves into a new community, and welcome a new son. Her husband worked what seemed like endless hours in the mill, while she and her children spent their summers working long hours in farmers' fields. When all the children were school aged, she sewed clothes in a factory and cleaned hotel rooms in order to make ends meet. Times were tough, but this young family remained hopeful, holding onto the promise that if you work hard and believe in yourself, anything is possible.

Then came the '80s. House prices had fallen. Interest rates were alarmingly high. Jobs were scarce, and if you were lucky enough to have one, the pay was scarcely enough to sustain a family. After her children graduated from high school, they headed to Alberta in the hope of opportunity. They carried with them lessons learned from their parents: a humble and stubborn perseverance to work hard and never give up. Eventually, through education the eldest son became an electrician for the railway, the second a computer technician, and the youngest of the four an engineer. She was relieved to see her children finally settled.

After years of backbreaking hard work her devoted husband and father to her children fell ill. As he clung to life, she and her children clung to hope. The boys took the lead by loading up the moving trucks and moving the parents to Alberta, where I'm proud to say the father received world-class medical care. Ten years later he survives to watch his eight grandchildren grow, aspire, and dream, a vision he had missed in the formative years of his own children's lives.

Mr. Speaker, this family's journey of obstacles is not uncommon. Rather, it's the story of many Alberta families. In the words of Samuel Smiles, "Hope is the companion of power, and mother of success; for who so hopes strongly has within him the gift of miracles."

Now, once more the world is facing uncertain times. Today mankind flirts with terrorism, wars, a global banking, trade, and economic crisis that some fear will lead to a global recession, maybe even a depression. Hopes, dreams, and lives have changed around the world. The naysayers often play on the people's fears by embracing extremist views. These actions serve only to shackle our spirit to despair and cause divisions.

Mr. Speaker, I plead for a more hopeful approach. Sometimes our world is not a just and fair place. It is our collective responsibility to make it so, to help where we can and to comfort where we cannot. Indeed, the truest test of a people's character is not how they fare during the good times; rather, it is how they react during the tough times.

The kind of discourse and planning Alberta revealed in the Speech from the Throne strikes a fine balance between optimism and pragmatism. Indeed, here in Alberta we have many areas on which to pin our hope. Alberta's debt-free status is unrivaled by any jurisdiction in North America. Despite job losses we have the highest employment rates, the lowest personal and corporate income taxes, and the highest savings in Canada, with which Alberta is on track to implement one of the largest infrastructure projects in the land.

Alberta's enviable position is due in large part to the vastness and diversity of Alberta's resources, the revenue from which we are able to continue to invest in teachers for our schools, staff for our hospitals, roads and bridges for our municipalities. Its productive farms and plentiful fields nourish not only its own people but also many around the globe. Its parks, lakes, and rugged mountains capture the imagination and stimulate recreation and tourism, while its energy and industry sustain a nation. Now more than ever, Mr. Speaker, Albertans need to continue on the path to produce in an efficient and conscientious manner while at the same time promoting responsible environmental stewardship. On the issue of the environment are we doing better? Yes, we are. Can we improve? Yes, we can.

Now, Mr. Speaker, Alberta's most valuable asset is neither its beauty nor its abundant resources; rather, it is its people, people like the pioneers who ventured here, like that young family who came in hopes of realizing their dreams, industrious and motivated people from a variety of backgrounds, all who call Alberta home.

Mr. Speaker, the wealth of Albertans depends on the health of Albertans. We've all heard of the wait times to see a family doctor, for long-term care, for elective surgery and emergency care. Personally, I'm encouraged by the hiring of our new CEO of the Health Services Board. He brings with him a wealth of international experience that will engage the front-line staff, will define what health care actually costs, and improve the efficiency of our acute-care system. We are on par to educate more family doctors, nurses, and other front-line staff than we had yesterday, and with the help of technology they will be able to deliver and improve the quality of care for Albertans. However, the real solution to improving access to quality care lies in engaging Albertans in a conversation to live happier and healthier lives by not getting sick or injured in the first place. Mr. Speaker, in the past simple measures such as access to clean water and vaccinations were seen as the greatest advances in preventative care.

There is no doubt that we should be personally responsible for our health. However, we need to translate evidence-based knowledge into policy and action on the street to reduce injury and chronic disease by addressing other factors beyond health care services which have an even greater influence on health, such as lifestyles that lead to stress, inactivity, and overeating, excessive use of tobacco, alcohol, and drugs, which all ultimately lead to poor mental and physical health. Today the World Health Organization estimates that 80 to 90 per cent of all cases of type 2 diabetes could have been prevented through minor lifestyle changes. Today in Alberta we have 150,000 diabetics, and we get 10,000 diabetics every year.

We also need to find ways not only to reduce the need to take expensive drugs but also to improve patient compliance when these drugs are prescribed. With the restructuring of public health and the expanded role of the chief medical officer of health, Alberta is on the right track. We will not see results overnight, but in the years to come our children and seniors will live healthier lives and our health care system will be sustainable.

Mr. Speaker, much of this commitment begins with educating Alberta's adults and children. We have an opportunity to leverage the strength of our education system, to create and attract the best and brightest minds, to harness their abilities, and to allow them to lead us into the future. I am reassured of the commitment of this government to advanced education every time I see the multitude of cranes lining the skyline as I drive past the University of Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to talk about responsibility. In order to sustain our core programs, now more than ever we need to think prudently about our spending so that Albertans get the best services for their tax dollars. We would be naive to suggest that governments have all of the answers to all of the problems all of the time. This is where the NGO sector and the business community play a vital role in our province. Albertans have long embraced the virtues of volunteerism and sense of personal responsibility and collective responsibility not only for themselves but also for their community as we lead the country in volunteer hours and funds donated. Earlier today Melanie Peters and Dean Smith from St. John Ambulance were good examples.

Also, the good people of Edmonton-Meadowlark are prime examples of this. The Westend Seniors Activity Centre helps over 1,300 seniors live independently as they participate in programs so that they can enjoy their golden years. It's driven by the energy of its community members, who volunteer their time and services to the operation of the centre. I invite Albertans to join me and my seniors at the Silver Hair Gala event on April 18.

Similarly, the Kids on Track program in the west end educates young people, especially those from immigrant and low-income families, about leadership, spiritual guidance, and, more importantly, to believe in themselves.

Covenant Health manages the Misericordia community hospital campus, where hundreds of health care workers and volunteers are able to provide quality care for the people of the west end.

We have many fine elementary and junior high schools in addition to Jasper Place and St. Francis Xavier high school which educate the next generation of Albertans.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, for employment, retail, and recreation we need to look no further than the jewel of my constituency, West Edmonton Mall, which provides employment to over 23,000

Albertans and has lured international attention and millions of visitors to this province.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta has always attracted dreamers, people with big ideas, big ambitions, and big plans. All they have required is the proper environment in which to prosper, a place where dreams and preparation meet opportunity. Alberta has been and will continue to be such a place.

Alberta is a place where the third son of the young lady I told you about stands before you today thankful for his parents' sacrifices so that his children may create and achieve their own hopes and dreams. Mr. Speaker, I'm appreciative of every gift that this province has given to me and my family. I'm unwavering in my commitment to Alberta. To the good people of Edmonton-Meadowlark who have placed their trust in me: thank you. To my mom and dad: thank you; I love you both.

Mr. Speaker, in summary, yes, Albertans will face challenging times ahead. The world will face tough times ahead, times our pioneers, my family, and all Albertan families have seen before and have overcome only to see a better tomorrow. The U.S. President, President Obama, is visiting our country. While our neighbours to the south pick themselves up and dust themselves off, in his words, we stand steady with our sleeves rolled up, backs straight, and our heads held high with a firm resolve to take on any challenge that confronts us.

I would like to close with some thoughts from my constituents Murray and Donna Armstrong. When we hope that the present economic recession won't get too bad or won't last too long, we put our hopes outside of ourselves, that a world which seems out of control will somehow not be what it is but will somehow make itself better. Our hope comes from knowing that no matter how scary these times are going to be, we get to choose our response to this scary situation. We choose to stay in gratitude for the love our family has for each other, for puff issues, for having a choice between eating out or staying in, for having the Rocky Mountains so near, and for knowing that of the 6 billion people on this planet we have been given so much. For us hope is not a wish born from fear but comes from knowing that our inner choices keep the blessings we have in our lives bright within us.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. May God bless you. May God bless Alberta. May God bless Canada. May God bless the Queen. Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, and thank you very much to the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. That was certainly a heartfelt statement, and I'm sure we all appreciate it. But there is something that is fascinating me that I have heard repeatedly. I have never heard so many Conservatives quote and reference a Democrat politician before in my life. I've listened carefully to most of the responses to the throne speech that have happened in the House, and the member himself has just done it again. So please share with us: was it in briefing notes from the Public Affairs Bureau to mention President Obama? I'm fascinated that so many of the members of the government caucus have mentioned or referenced the new President of the United States. Could you share with me why so many of you are referencing him? I'm just fascinated.

The Speaker: The hon. member, if you choose. You don't have to.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, to answer that question: not at all. This speech was written by myself and my assistant, and the lesson here to learn is that we as elected members are here to solve problems. Whether we reference the President of the U.S. or not reference the President of the U.S., we're here to solve problems for Albertans. It shouldn't be our political affiliations that dictate these problems. One party or one belief system, they don't have the monopoly to quote or not quote anybody. I think the President of the U.S. is a respected man internationally by everybody. He's respected by members of this caucus, and I hope he's respected by members of that caucus as well. But I thank the member opposite for asking that question.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question, really, relates to the throne speech and the comments in the throne speech concerning health care and healthy communities and so on. Given the member's position – I think he's parliamentary assistant, if that's correct, on Health – and his own medical background I'd just like him to discuss the issue of staffing for health care, particularly the long-term manpower shortages of nurses. We are in a position in Alberta of having a deliberate strategy of recruiting nursing staff from outside of the country, particularly underdeveloped countries, and I think that's a poor long-term strategy because I just don't think it's right to be recruiting nurses from countries that need them even more than we do. I'm wondering if the member could discuss that issue. It's not actually mentioned in the throne speech. I wish it had been. Is it appropriate for Alberta to have a long-term strategy of recruiting nursing staff from Third World countries?

The Speaker: The hon. member if you wish.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank the hon. member for asking me that question. That's a very good question in fact. In Alberta today we have 1,000 more nurses this year than we had last year. The real solution is education. We are educating more nurses, more LPNs, and more nurse's aides. The solution is not simply more nurses; while we do need more nurses, it is actually to give the nurses support. I work with 600 nurses, and these are highly-qualified people. I see many of the nurses pushing stretchers, cleaning blood off the stretchers, cleaning floors, changing diapers, jobs that they ought not do.

On the immigration issue we do have teams looking for nurses internationally in countries that have a policy where they create an oversupply of nurses. That is their business and immigration policy. The ones that are qualified and have worked in hospitals that have the standards that we have, we bring them into our country. They have an opportunity to help their families back home and in doing so help their local economies.

Mr. Speaker, I'm glad the hon. member asked about those resources because these were the people – initially, when we came to this country, my grandfather came here, he worked here, and he supported his family back home. When it was convenient for the whole family to come here, we were the new Canadians. This is how we get new Canadians.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my sincere honour to rise today in response to the Speech from the Throne delivered by His Honour the Lieutenant Governor. I believe that the strength of this province stems from the education system we have built together over the years. As His Honour stated, "The freedom to create our own future and achieve our dreams so often rests on the enthusiasm for education." Prior to being elected by the wonderful people of Edmonton-Ellerslie, I taught in this province for 18 years. As such, when it comes to providing the best education for our children, I have seen many initiatives that have worked and many that have not. In the spirit of the discussion we have heard in the past few days, I would like to share some of the recent government initiatives that have given me great hope for the future.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that public involvement is crucial to continually improve Alberta's education system. In order for the education system to truly be successful, it needs to be viewed as successful for everyone involved, from the students and parents to the teachers and administrators. That is why I'm so pleased to see current government initiatives that are focused on public consultations and input from a wide variety of perspectives.

Mr. Speaker, one of these initiatives that is close to my heart is setting the direction for special education in Alberta. I was honoured to be named the chair of the steering committee for this project on July 21, 2008. As many of my colleagues know, setting the direction takes a bold new approach to education, one that creates a transparent system that is accountable for every Alberta student's success. Our task is to examine the foundation of special education in Alberta and look at making systemic changes in order to provide the best environment for education in this province.

Mr. Speaker, our team, which includes the steering committee, a stakeholders working group, and representatives from Alberta Education, recently completed phase 1 of our consultations. We went to 10 towns and cities in Alberta and accepted online and written submissions in order to get the broadest and most complete views on how to improve the education system for our most vulnerable students. In total phase 1 consultation involved input from approximately 4,000 Albertans representing the views of students, parents and guardians, teachers, teacher assistants, school administrators, school authority staff, school board trustees, community support organizations, and health care professionals.

Both as a teacher and a father I have seen and heard many points of view on education. However, there were several issues that had never crossed my mind and never entered into our conversations. This is a perfect example of why I believe in the value of public consultation: to bring perspectives to the forefront and raise awareness of previously unidentified issues.

Alberta Education is also asking for students' perspectives in innovative ways through the Speak Out initiative. Students can log on to the web page for live discussions and blogs and send in 60-second videos of what students themselves feel about the education system. Alberta Education is also travelling to several towns and cities in order to interview students and get their feedback as part of the Speak Out initiative. All of that information will then be collected and analyzed in order to continually make improvements to the already strong education system in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, as His Honour the Lieutenant Governor pointed out in his Speech from the Throne, Alberta Education is currently developing a long-term plan to determine what it means to be an educated Albertan 20 years from now. That plan is called Inspiring Education. This initiative is unique in that it is a dialogue with Albertans, who will bring their own distinctive perspectives to the conversation. Outcomes from both the Speak Out and setting the direction initiatives will be integrated into the dialogue as a new vision for education in the 21st century is crafted.

These are just three examples of government initiatives aimed at improving the education system in this province.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, as His Honour highlighted, innovation is critical to ensuring the continued success of Alberta as a whole. This government's support of postsecondary institutions demonstrates a heartfelt faith in the promise of future generations.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology has also continued with the ambitious registered apprenticeship program. I served as a RAP co-ordinator for J. Percy Page high school for two years before being elected. I can say from experience that this program is a great tool to help train a skilled and educated workforce in Alberta. The program is a way for high school students to become apprentices and earn credits towards an apprenticeship program and a high school diploma at the same time. I think it is very important both to the student and prospective employers to make sure that people are trained before entering the workforce.

These are just a few of many projects that the current government is embarking on to improve the quality of education in Alberta for everyone. I applaud this government's continued commitment to education and stand in the conviction that Alberta will continue to provide the best education system possible in the coming years.

I look forward to the upcoming session and opportunities to engage in debate on these important issues. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciated the enthusiastic support for education in Alberta. I and the entire Liberal caucus are enthusiastic supporters of education as well. In fact, I happen to believe that the key to the future of this province is education, right from prekindergarten to postgraduate.

I agree that there is a good, respectable school system in place in Alberta, and we always need to work to make it better. I wish Alberta's postsecondary institutions ranked more highly, and at some point I would like to see the throne speech make an overt commitment to, for example, the U of A's objective of being one of the top 20 public universities in the world by 2020.

My question to the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie concerns achievement tests, particularly for grade 3s. I would have liked to have seen in the throne speech a commitment to eliminating those. I'm wondering if this member has a perspective on that particular issue, whether he believes that the government should continue to support achievement tests for young children or not.

The Speaker: The hon. member if you wish.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As a former educator I've always believed in accountability. I've also believed in assessment for learning. As a government and as a former teacher I think having assessment for learning is a wonderful tool. As a government I think we will continue to do what's in the best interest of all Alberta students.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask the member, in view of his speech, how he feels about the members across the aisle, who remind me of the two old men in The Muppet Show, who scrape the bottom of the barrel to try to find anything negative in the Speech from the Throne and try to show Albertans what a terrible province it is that they live in. How do you feel about that in reference to your speech?

Mr. Bhardwaj: I have no comment on that. Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others who would like to participate? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you. I commend the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie for the wisdom of his response to the last question.

I'm actually trying to engage in genuine discussion here, so I'll just return to the issue of achievement testing, particularly in elementary schools. The member was a little bit general in his response. Does he hold the position that achievement tests for younger children are as valid and useful as they are, say, for high school students, which he taught for many years?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much. In general, depending on the level you're talking about, achievement tests at grade 3 or grade 6 or grade 9 or grade 12, which we are all familiar with, I think serve a purpose. I think it gives the teachers and the parents and the government basically an understanding of where we place ourselves. How are we doing internationally? How are we doing globally? How do we compare ourselves with other provinces? It sets a criteria and gives us the opportunity to really look at ourselves, look at the curriculum itself, look at evaluation strategy, look at, you know, assessment for learning. Of course, I think it's good.

Dr. Taft: Thank you.

The Speaker: Others, if they choose to participate?

Mr. VanderBurg: I'd like to commend the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie for his lifelong achievements in teaching and helping youth. Out in Whitecourt this man made a big difference to a lot of young people, my sons included.

Now that you've had the opportunity to see the difference in the rural system versus the system here in Edmonton, can you tell me about the importance of the industrial arts programs, the programs that you've been so valuable in, and compare rural to Edmonton opportunities?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I started out teaching in Pincher Creek. Then, of course, I taught in Whitecourt for four years. Recently, as part of my assignment on setting the direction, I had the opportunity to visit a lot of schools. I think we're offering wonderful and excellent programs in our rural schools. Recently I was in St. Paul, I think one of the best programs.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak to the Speech from the Throne. There is no doubt that much has changed in the past year since our last throne speech. However, if economic certainty is our rarest commodity around the world right now, we must still remember that there is much that we can be certain about.

We can be certain about the fact that we are debt free, certain in the fact that we have the lowest overall taxes in the country, certain that we have made the right decision to save. Like one of my constituents recently said to me: you have the good times to save for the bad. Well, Albertans can be pleased that our government had the foresight to save for days like today. We have $14 billion set aside in our sustainability fund and our capital account. We can also be certain in the fact that we are a people that will pitch in to help one another. We can be certain in the fact that Albertans will dig in and be bold in re-energizing our province, ensuring that it remains a place where we enjoy a high quality of life, where we have safe communities, respect our seniors, and pave the way for a new culture of innovation to flourish, inspired by the brightest minds in the world.

Mr. Speaker, let me remind us all that our uncertainty is economic. It does not affect the core of who we are as a people. We are a compassionate people. We understand that diversity makes us stronger, that people of different faiths can come together in unity for common pursuits of harmony and opportunity. We are a generous people, generous with our time and generous with our money. There are no limits to our greatness. There are no limits to what Albertans will do to assist one another. There are no limits to what we can achieve collectively.

I'm always so excited to meet with the young families in my constituency. Hearing their dreams and frustrations, alike, inspires me. I'm proud to say that we promised the young families in my constituency and across Alberta to help support the creation of 14,000 new child care spaces in our province by 2011. Mr. Speaker, we are well on our way. More than 5,500 new spaces have been created so far.

The hard-working parents of Calgary-Montrose have produced so many wonderful young people, like Simon, a University of Alberta medical student who I recently met with. Those hard-working families will be pleased that we eliminated health care premiums, which will put nearly a billion dollars in the pockets of Albertans at a time when they need it the most.

The hard-working families of Abbeydale, Applewood, Penbrooke, Marlborough Park, and Monterey Park will also be pleased that the northeast leg of the ring road will soon be complete. They'll be pleased that myself and my counterparts on the east side from city council took the time to meet with our Minister of Transportation to show how important the southeast leg of our road is to the people of east Calgary. Thank you for the thumbs up there, Minister. We understand how much you value the southeast leg of the ring road.

This year, Mr. Speaker, has given me an opportunity to spend more time with my friends in the community of Chateau Estates. They are hard-working people that will be greatly affected by the creation of the new northeast section of the ring road. I'm proud of the fact that I was able to press Alberta Transportation to restart negotiations with landowners around their community to attempt to create a new road between 84th Street and 100th Street. A recent e-mail from a resident of Chateau Estates said: thanks for sticking up for our little community. Well, your little community has a big place in my heart because the people are so driven to common pursuits to ensure that their community is vibrant. I want to take this opportunity to thank the people of Chateau Estates, who have given me so much encouragement and gratitude. I am humbled and proud to be your representative.

Mr. Speaker, I'm a believer that in times of great change it is important to reflect on and perhaps reshape our collective aims and pursuits as a people. The age of pure materialism may be shifting. This may be the time to move our societal focus to innovation, where we as a society move to place more value on resolving our collective problems as opposed to focusing on consuming. Alberta shall be known as a beacon of innovation in the world, where the greatest minds come together to resolve the world's greatest challenges, where our schools are composed of young people learning to be creative and innovative problem solvers, young people that know no limits to their dreams.

The culture of innovation must be embedded in our societal values. It's a culture that transcends income levels and current levels of education. The culture of innovation involves the greatest minds exploring new frontiers in science and technology. It involves the average Albertan picking up a book and continuously learning and expanding and finding better ways to run their life and better ways to contribute. It encompasses those Albertans with low literacy skills seeking to empower themselves by learning and entering new frontiers for themselves. The culture of innovation should propel our society to great new heights by those cutting-edge new technologies and propel the lives of those struggling to remarkable new levels.

Mr. Speaker, the empowerment of our society's most challenged should be our highest aspiration as a people. I have had the opportunity to visit with some folks that have faced many challenges in their lives. I heard from a man who late in his life embarked on building up his literacy skills. He wrote a piece, a poem almost, on love. He said that you can never tell when love will change your life, and he's right.

I say to all of us that in these times of economic turmoil – some of our friends may be affected more than others – we must ensure that each of us reaches out with our heart to our friends and neighbours. I met a man who was in a dark place when he reached out to better himself through building his literacy skills. He's been clean from using drugs for over a year, and he told me that centimetre by centimetre, newspaper by newspaper, he finally started believing in himself.

These are people that suffered from addictions and now are building literacy skills at the John Howard Society. They're not only recovering but empowering themselves. My message to all Albertans is that just as these individuals reached out and bettered themselves in their darkest hour, we as a collective can better our world during this time of economic uncertainty.

Mr. Speaker, last year I spoke of my commitment to promoting education amongst the young people in my constituency. Well, I set out to visit as many schools as I could in my constituency, and I asked the young people to dream. I asked them to dream their biggest dream. I said that when you feel like your dream is out of reach, you dream some more. When someone tells you that your dream can never come true and that it's outrageous, you dream some more. I said that in the process you also dream of the world you want to see. Don't just dream about your individual life, but dream about the collective. Dream about how you are going to shape our future.

I must confess that after my visits the phone started to ring. Parents would call and say: hey, we heard you speak, and we thought maybe we'd talk to you about the fact that our son or daughter isn't reading at grade level or really doesn't plan on pursuing postsecondary. Or the single mother who said: you know, I've got three; I think two of them are going to pursue it, but I don't think this one is going to finish high school. Mr. Speaker, that was very encouraging for me because it showed that my simple message was getting across.

I hope to continue to bring awareness to new areas such as helping recruit foster parents from various different ethnic backgrounds. A child being taken out of his or her home is perhaps one of the most traumatic experiences in their life. Imagine a young child of 4 or 5 or 6 who's only known one way of life, who's only known one food, who's only known maybe one culture. Imagine that child, first of all, being taken away from their parents and, secondly, being placed in an environment that's absolutely different, an environment that they're not accustomed to. My hope is to help recruit foster parents from various different ethnic backgrounds all over the province to help make that very difficult situation maybe a little bit better for those young people.

The past year has given me an opportunity to meet so many wonderful people, like Mary, whom I spoke about in this House just a week ago, who would not permit her block to appear to be rundown, so she cut the lawn of her neighbours, who picked up garbage on her street, who went out and personally removed graffiti from her community.

The young guy from G.W. Skene school, who after I spoke came up to me. I remember this vividly. He was wearing a white T-shirt and grey jogging pants. He put out his hand, and he looked at me pretty much eye to eye although I was looking down, and he said: sir, that was very inspiring. I could see in his eyes the fact that this young man had seen more than his years should allow him to see. I could see that he'd seen things that young children probably shouldn't see. I could sense from him that he had this maturity and this wisdom that, to be quite honest, I think we don't represent in this House on many days.

There was a young woman who had just finished high school and said: you know, I don't know what I want to do with my life, so instead of sitting idle, I'm going to contribute. She went to Africa to contribute.

The 80-year-old woman I visited on her birthday looks after her son who, I believe, is in his 50s. This 80-year-old woman looks after her son who's in his 50s because he has a mental disability. She says: he belongs at home with me.

Absolutely remarkable people.

The seniors in my constituency, Mr. Speaker, the people that have spent years building the community and then see it changing in front of their eyes, the seniors in Penbrooke, seven of them on one street, that have lived in the community, they tell me, for over 35 years, and they see it change and change, sometimes not for the best. You know what? They reach out, and they try to do what they can to preserve and to nurture their community.

Mr. Speaker, they're proud of the steps that we've taken as a government in the area of safe communities, and they appreciate the fact that we're working . . . [Mr. Bhullar's speaking time expired]

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I thank the Member for Calgary-Montrose for the rather riveting speech. I know this member works very hard and is likely one of the best campaigners I have ever seen.

I recall that when I gave my speech to respond to the throne speech last week, he had a question for me. I also have one for him. I just checked his Facebook a moment ago. A gentleman named Matt Mitschke wrote something. There's reference to the first name of the minister of finance here. It says that this minister is going to post a $1 billion deficit: I demand that – again, a reference to the name of the Solicitor General – do his job and arrest her; we all know that it is illegal in Alberta to run a deficit; help me out and reinstate some good old-fashioned Chrétien Liberal values to our fiscal insanity. Now, when you talk about Chrétien values, that is synonymous with insanity to me. I'd like to ask the Member for Calgary-Montrose if he could differentiate between, obviously, the values of our Conservative government and that of the provincial and federal Liberal parties.

Mr. Bhullar: Mr. Speaker, I must confess that my friend and hon. colleague is, indeed, very smooth. You see, the common denominator between my friend Mr. Mitschke and the Chrétien-era Liberal Party is the fact that they all look for cheap ways of getting attention. So, Mr. Mitschke, if you're listening, you've won. He's got his 15 seconds of fame.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much. I have a question for the hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose. Is the hon. member aware that in the mid-90s the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont was a member of the Saskatchewan Liberal Party and, I believe, a staffer for the leader of the Liberal Party in Saskatchewan, Lynda Haverstock?

Mr. Bhullar: Mr. Speaker, this very discourse we're having right now in the House is again reason for me to state the fact that that young man I met in that elementary school has more maturity and wisdom than we do in this House sometimes. We continuously choose to not rise to the highest common denominator but instead belittle ourselves to the lowest common denominator. The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont is a good man. He's a good friend. The hon. member is a strong MLA with some very strong Conservative policies. I invite you to have a conversation with him about the past because I sure as heck don't want to.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I enjoyed the speech from the Member for Calgary-Montrose, and I think there are some good-news items in there. The ring road – I see the minister is here – that's great. Eliminating health care premiums, which is a very good move, we supported and had encouraged for many years. I did have concerns when he endorsed the throne speech and its claim to having the right strategy for savings because I, as the member probably knows, think that this government does not have the right strategy for savings, and I'd appreciate any comments this member has on the Mintz report.

My biggest comments are around your deep compassion for children and education and the disadvantaged. You will know that I have a strong, strong feeling that we should bring an end to child hunger in this province; there's far too much of it. It's inexcusable that thousands of schoolchildren in Alberta sit at their desks hungry. I'm wondering if the Member for Calgary-Montrose will be championing in his caucus the idea that there be a program supported by the provincial government to end hunger in Alberta's schools.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member would be interested to know that I've actually spent much time with many schools in my constituency asking the very question: do we have children that need breakfast? I identified one, and then we furthered the conversation by saying: who provides this service out there? There was an absolutely wonderful institution called the Boys & Girls Clubs of Calgary, that does an absolutely phenomenal job.

Speaker's Ruling Referring to a Nonmember

The Speaker: Hon. member, thank you very much. During that last interchange a very interesting thing developed in this Assembly, which to my knowledge has never happened before. The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont gets up and has an electronic device in front of him and quotes an individual's name and also quotes a message. Now, what transpires if the Speaker's office gets contacted in the next number of days from such an individual saying, "Listen; somebody used my name; the message is incorrect"? What access do I have in order to make a decision? Perhaps we might all think about: do you have to table your BlackBerry? What message is tabled? How do we deal with this? We're going into a new age, hon. members.

The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, take us to the end.

Mr. Prins: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

An Hon. Member: The end is near.

Mr. Prins: The end is near. Correct.

Thank you very much. I am also pleased and honoured to respond to the Speech from the Throne delivered by His Honour the Lieutenant Governor. As we move forward in 2009, Alberta's position will remain strong. This is clearly reflected in the optimistic vision outlined in the throne speech. The throne speech covered a wide cross-section of interests for most Albertans. We have heard many great speeches on various aspects already, so I'll limit my comments to a couple of key issues that are of interest to myself and my constituents in Lacombe-Ponoka as well as the rest of Albertans.

Despite the economic uncertainty currently facing the world, I am encouraged that our government's continued support for fiscal management, market access, and innovative technology will help Alberta forge ahead with confidence. As a former rancher I've had first-hand experience working in the livestock sector. I say former, Mr. Speaker, because in the last week I sold the last of my herd of bison, so this is the first time in probably almost 40 years that I don't own a dog or a cat or a cow or a horse or an elk or a bison or anything else.

While I no longer run a full-time operation, I'm still very involved and connected to the industry through neighbours, friends, and constituents. In addition, my wife and I still live on our farm, where we board animals for other farmers. We board right now bison, cattle, horses, and, at times, elk. I am optimistic for my farm friends that they will continue to thrive in their industries, even though I'm no longer an active livestock farmer. Being a rural MLA, I'm fortunate to be able to hear the feedback about successful initiatives the Alberta government has put forward. Most of the feedback is positive, but it also comes with some critical and constructive suggestions for continued improvement, and this is good.

I was extremely pleased to see that the government is continuing its commitment to implement the Alberta livestock and meat strategy. This strategy is a long-term plan that involves provincial funding, which provides direct and indirect support to livestock producers. Several principles guided the development of this strategy. We want to avoid the creation of market distortions. We want to improve information exchange and market transparency. We want to avoid short-term ad hoc programs.

In addition, we want to reduce unnecessary regulation and bureaucracy and create an environment that allows the industry to be adaptable to changing conditions so that they can be profitable and contribute to rural prosperity. Ultimately, this strategy will help strengthen Alberta's livestock industry and ensure that our agricultural sector is competitive in a global marketplace.

Much of this will be achieved through the creation of the Alberta Livestock and Meat Agency, or ALMA, which is an integral part of the Alberta livestock and meat strategy. This agency will receive provincial funding and will act as a vital link between industry and government. Its role will be to align and redirect government funds, resources, and programs in order to revitalize the livestock sector.

Essentially, the ALMA will act as the catalyst to ensure industry competitiveness, market access, and profitability. It will focus on initiatives that range from creating a shared vision between government and the livestock industry to developing a comprehensive livestock information system that forms the basis of our traceability and age verification efforts, called the Alberta livestock information system, or LISA.

LISA requires livestock producers to provide updated premises identification information and age verification information. This traceability system is essential in ensuring international market access, and some countries already require this type of identification information. In doing so, Alberta will remain competitive not only in traditional markets such as the United States but also in emerging markets such as China, Korea, Japan, and other Pacific Rim countries. Indeed, LISA makes it easier to meet animal and human health requirements both nationally and internationally.

I've also had the opportunity to meet with stakeholders representing key sectors within the livestock industry, and I am encouraged by what I'm hearing. Stakeholders all want the same positive outcomes, but some may have different opinions on how to get there. They're all very aware of the importance of developing a united front to ensure that Alberta producers can maximize their opportunities and enhance the investments made by themselves and our government in the industry. Mr. Speaker, I strongly believe that the livestock and meat strategy, with all its components, will enhance the success of Alberta's livestock industry.

Mr. Speaker, the throne speech also highlighted this government's commitment to investing in developing technology that will help to reduce our environmental footprint. As we all know, Albertans live in one of the most beautiful and healthy natural environments in the world, which is why we need to sustain it not just for ourselves but for future generations as well. It is clear that this government is committed to developing technology that will reduce emissions in order to combat climate change while at the same time enhancing oil production from existing mature oil fields in parts of our province. This will be achieved through carbon capture and storage, or CCS.

For those who may not know, carbon capture and storage is a process that captures carbon dioxide, or CO₂, emissions and stores them in geological formations deep inside the earth. CO₂ can be captured inside of the gasification vessels, or in the case of many existing plants CO₂ is captured at the flue stack. These specific geological formations where CO₂ is stored are often the same formations that contain oil and gas in Alberta. CO₂ acts as a solvent that is used to flush oil from these formations. These formations may also contain saline water. Experience in Canada and around the world has shown that carbon capture and storage can be done safely while producing positive environmental and economic results.

In fact, the capture and storage of CO₂ is not new to this province, Mr. Speaker. Alberta has been developing carbon capture and storage for well over 25 years, and there are a few examples worth mentioning. One of these is the Alberta Oil Sands Technology and Research Authority, which was an Alberta Crown corporation funded by the Alberta heritage savings trust fund. In 1983 – that's more than 25 years ago – in fact, it provided funding towards Alberta's first experimental pilot project that captured, injected, and stored CO₂ for enhanced oil recovery.

In 1984 the NOVA Chemicals plant in Joffre, which is located in my constituency, started to supply Penn West Energy Trust with captured CO₂ for an enhanced oil recovery project.

Lastly, Mr. Speaker, in 2005 both NOVA Chemicals and Dow Chemical, which is located in Prentiss, just southeast of Lacombe, reached an agreement to capture CO₂ from their petrochemical plants and transport it by pipeline to Glencoe Resources, near Ponoka, for storage in their oil fields. This should increase production from their mature fields and add millions of barrels of oil to their long-term production targets.

These are a few examples of carbon capture and storage projects that have been successful. It is a positive sign for Alberta's future. Ultimately, carbon capture and storage will diversify our economy and provide substantial reductions of CO₂ emissions and add hundreds of millions of barrels to our inventory of producible or recoverable oil in Alberta.

Moreover, the Alberta government has gone one huge step further to ensure that this province is environmentally green. This very afternoon the hon. Minister of Energy introduced Bill 14, the Carbon Capture and Storage Funding Act. This act is groundbreaking because funding for a number of projects will be announced in the future, resulting in greenhouse gas emission reductions of millions of tonnes annually in Alberta. There are already plans by private corporations that specialize in CO₂ sequestration and secondary and tertiary enhanced oil recovery.

At an open house in Fort Saskatchewan some months ago a company announced that they plan to build a major CO₂ pipeline system in central Alberta that will take CO₂ from large producers and transport it to oil fields that can store it and use it to enhance their oil production. This project has the potential to pick up CO₂ from existing plants as well as future plants that may be gasifying coal and upgrading bitumen as well.

Mr. Speaker, exciting new proposals such as these are further proof that industry and the environment can exist simultaneously to the benefit of all Albertans. Ultimately, carbon capture and storage will help lead this province into the 21st century as energy-producing and environmental leaders. I look forward to working with my colleagues to ensure that bright future for all Albertans.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a). The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to start off once again with something positive. I can see that the President of the Treasury Board is thrilled. I hope I'm correct in this, Member for Lacombe-Ponoka. I believe that Bles-Wold yogourt is produced in that constituency. I am proud to say that in my refrigerator right now there are some large containers of that yogourt. I recommend it to anybody who likes yogourt. I will add that I try whenever possible to buy it at Sunterra Food, which is a local success story. The best value is the largest container, which I think is actually four litres. It's quite a lot of yogourt, but it's great yogourt, great value, a great success story out of central Alberta. So there you go. Good news.

I have a question for the member since he spoke at length about agriculture. I wasn't sure if I heard any reference to elk farming or not. I did hear bison and cattle. I have a question. This didn't appear in the throne speech, but elk farming for years has been, from everything I know about it, pretty marginal, and there are serious and growing concerns, which were flagged years ago, about elk farming being a vector for chronic wasting disease. I'm wondering if the member has any thoughts on the future of elk farming in Alberta. I think there are, in fact, elk farms in his constituency.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Prins: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to comment on that. Like I said, I have an elk farm right now. I'm a licensed elk producer although I have no elk on my farm at this point in time, so I'm not actively doing this.

In terms of the CWD problem there was one elk in Alberta in 2002 that was found to have CWD. Since that date all heads of all elk slaughtered or that have died from other reasons on elk farms: every one of these heads have been tested. To date about 45,000 heads of both elk and deer on farms have been tested, and there were two deer and the one elk found in 2002. Since then no more elk or deer have been found with CWD in Alberta.

Now, I know that there are people out there that would like to blame the cervid industry for CWD. There is no use blaming somebody for the past. That would be like blaming somebody that had the flu for the flu epidemic. You don't blame the past; you work toward the future.

In Alberta today we are free of CWD within domestic herds. We continue to test in areas of the province where they have CWD in wild herds. The wild herd CWD actually threatens some elk farms. There are probably about 30 to 35 elk farms that can no longer export into other jurisdictions because they are near the area where there are CWD cases in the wild. So to blame the elk ranches for a problem that's actually a natural problem – it has been known in the States and other jurisdictions for many, many years – is completely wrong.

I would want to encourage people to get informed, find out what's going on, and support our farmers out there that are trying to make an honest living and developing rural Alberta with a wonderful new opportunity in the elk ranching business. You know, they can grow elk on a patch of bush that you couldn't raise a cow or a beef cow or anything else. Elk can live out there and actually produce a good living for rural families. I think it's just a wonderful way to develop all the resources that we have out there in rural Alberta. I hope that answers your question.

Dr. Taft: That was a good response. I didn't appreciate that the member had such a strong personal background in the industry.

My other question is also related to agriculture. Over the last 25 years or so there has been a real narrowing down of the choice that beef producers have in terms of slaughterhouses and meat packers. I know that my father-in-law 25 years ago or so could bring a load of cattle to Edmonton, and he could shop around at the stockyards, Gainers and Swift and Burns and two or three other places like that, and there was a real market. Of course, that's gone now. Does this member see any hope for a genuine diversifying of the meat-packing industry in Alberta?

The Speaker: I'm afraid, hon. members, we must move on.
The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In light of the hour I move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. on March 2.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 4:29 p.m. to Monday, March 2, at 1:30 p.m.]

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon and welcome back.

Let us pray. We give thanks for the bounty of our province, our land, our resources, and our people. We pledge ourselves to act as good stewards on behalf of all of the citizens of Alberta. Amen.

Hon. members and guests in the galleries as well, would you now please join in in the language of your choice as I invite Mr. Paul Lorieau to lead us in the singing of our national anthem.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

Mr. Blackett: Mr. Speaker, I rise to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly Her Excellency Miriam Ziv, ambassador of Israel, and her husband, Mr. Ariel Kenet. I was honoured today to host a special lunch in honour of Her Excellency's first visit to Alberta. Alberta and Israel have a solid, two-way trading relationship that accounts for about $100 million annually, and we have a strong connection through our people as well. Over 15,000 Jewish people call Alberta home.

Mr. Speaker, I'm proud to be part of a government and a Legislature that recognizes Yom ha-Shoah, Holocaust Memorial Day. This Assembly passed this bill unanimously on Thursday, November 16, 2000, and this year Yom ha-Shoah will be recognized on April 21. I'm proud to say that Alberta is a province with a vibrant multicultural heritage and that our Jewish community makes up an important part of our cultural mosaic.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask that Her Excellency and Mr. Kenet rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, thank you. It's my honour to introduce to you and through you constituents of mine and very bright young people from the Annunciation Catholic elementary school. They're accompanied by their teacher, Miss Panaro, as well as Mrs. Anne Bagan. We had a good conversation downstairs. We have a future teacher in the crowd, a future veterinarian, a physician . . .

Ms Calahasen: And a future politician?

Dr. Sherman: No politicians but also a future member of the armed forces in the crowd. Mr. Speaker, I'd like for the young people there to stand up and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I don't know if my classroom, Eastwood school, is here, but I will introduce them and hope that they are. I would like to introduce 21 students from Eastwood elementary school – they're in grades 5 and 6 – and their teacher, Mrs. Patti Lorentz. The helper is Mrs. Jeanne Randell. They're here for the School at the Legislature this week, and I'd like the Legislature to give them a warm welcome. If they would please rise.

I have a second introduction, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you Mr. Jacques Trepanier. Jacques raises honeybees and grows cereal crops near Wembley, Alberta, and has been farming since 1974. Like many farmers in the Peace Country, Mr. Trepanier's farm was hard hit by the drought in the summer of 2008. Jacques is seated in the public gallery, Mr. Speaker, and I would now ask that he rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislature Alberta government employees from Alberta Employment and Immigration's workplace health and safety staff. We have Sharon Chadwick, Lisa Chen, Ming Wu, Celia Chiang, Rose Ann McGinty, Michelle Mbazo, Cailin Mills, Karlene Johner, Vicky Qualie, Cody Sharpe, and Kathy Elniski. Yes, Kathy is a cousin to our Member for Edmonton-Calder. They're all dedicated professionals who develop ways to keep Alberta's workers healthy and safe on the job, and I'm honoured to have them here today. I would ask them to receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly several very special individuals who are sitting in the public gallery today: Jamie Zuffa, my delightful and hard-working executive assistant from Calgary-Buffalo; Mizcha Fourie, a friend and supporter from Calgary; Madeline and Connor Rainey, friends and supporters from Edmonton. I would ask my guests to please rise and accept the traditional warm welcome of the members of this Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Summer Temporary Employment Program

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise in the Assembly today to speak about an excellent program that helps young Albertans gain exciting work experience and provides employers with energetic and bright staff who bring fresh ideas and new perspectives to the workplace.

The summer temporary employment program, STEP, saw an increase of $1.9 million this year for a total budget of $9.1 million. The program is bigger and better. More jobs will be available to students and unemployed Albertans. Over 2,100 STEP positions will be created this summer, Mr. Speaker, an increase of over 450 positions from last year.

As someone who previously consulted with the nonprofit sector as well as was a STEP summer student at one point, I can attest to the immeasurable help that STEP students provide organizations and the benefits that they receive from holding these positions. It gives organizations the resources to hire talented staff to work in the summer programs that benefit Albertans. For example, STEP jobs have included positions like tourism ambassadors and museum interpreters. These and other positions can help young Albertans carve out a career path and help employers find full-time employees for the future. The program offers a wage subsidy to encourage higher salaries for short-term temporary employment opportunities for students. I remind Alberta not-for-profit organizations that this week is the deadline for applying for STEP funding. All applications must be postmarked by March 6 in order to be considered.

I know that members of this Assembly have hired STEP students as constituency and research assistants, and I thank members for their continued support of this valuable program in giving work experience to young Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

1:40 Ukrainian Youth Association
Verkhovyna Ukrainian Song and Dance Ensemble

Mrs. Sarich: Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize two very impressive milestones for Edmonton's Ukrainian community. Last month the Edmonton branch of the Ukrainian Youth Association celebrated its 60th anniversary and the Verkhovyna Ukrainian Song and Dance Ensemble celebrated its 50th anniversary with a banquet celebration that I along with the hon. minister of aboriginal affairs was fortunate enough to attend at the Ukrainian youth unity centre in Edmonton-Decore. Both the Ukrainian Youth Association and Verkhovyna ensemble have been fixtures on Edmonton's cultural landscape for decades.

With the motto God and Ukraine, the youth association has spent the last six decades fusing Ukrainian, Christian, and patriotic values to nurture, educate, and unify local Ukrainian youth. The association offers a variety of programs to members, including organized sports, camps, discussion groups, and lectures, all aimed at preserving the Ukrainian identity through the youth. Verkhovyna song and dance ensemble is the youth association's cultural arm, and its members range from those new to Canada to third- and fourth-generation Ukrainian Canadians. Mr. Speaker, the ensemble is comprised of three groups: the Verkhovyna Choir and the Dunai Dancers, which perform together and separately, and the Verkhovyna Ensemble School of Ukrainian Dance.

Mr. Speaker, both the Ukrainian Youth Association and the Verkhovyna Ukrainian Song and Dance Ensemble have done an admirable job preserving and promoting Ukrainian heritage in Edmonton while providing first-rate cultural entertainment for Edmontonians. I'd like to extend my congratulations to both groups for their many successful years in Edmonton and look forward to what these truly precious cultural treasures will do in the future.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Personal Directives

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. An estimated hundred thousand Albertans currently have personal directives. I would like to announce today that an awareness campaign is currently under way to encourage more Albertans to write and register a personal directive. A personal directive is a legal document that allows adults to write out their instructions and/or possibly name an individual to decide on personal matters if due to injury or illness they become unable to make a personal decision. A personal directive can include instructions on matters such as health care or who will care for their minor children on a temporary basis if a parent suddenly loses their ability to care for their children.

Recent changes to the Personal Directives Act also allow personal directives written outside of Alberta to be recognized as long as they meet the criteria in Alberta. Additional changes include allowing an individual, agent, or service provider to request a reassessment when mental capacity appears to have been regained.

We are encouraging Albertans to register their personal directives on a new personal directive registry. The personal directive registry is an online voluntary tool for Albertans to register their personal directives. The first of its kind in Canada, the registry is currently being developed to give access to health care providers so they will know if the individual has a personal directive. It also tells health care providers how to get in touch with the individual's agency if they have named someone to speak on their behalf in case of medical emergencies. Registering your personal directive is easy, free, and it's your choice, your option. Please be assured that this information will be treated with respect and confidentiality.

To assist Albertans preparing personal directives, information kits are available free of charge at any office of the public guardian. Please join me in encouraging all Albertans to write and register a personal directive to ensure that their wishes are followed when they can no longer make personal decisions.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Alberta Adolescent Recovery Centre

Mr. Chase: Mr. Speaker, having worked with, taught, and coached both children and adolescents for over three decades, I believe very strongly in the axiom that there are two sides to every story. With this in mind I gratefully accepted the invitation this past Friday to visit the Alberta Adolescent Recovery Centre located on Forge Road in southeast Calgary. I was cordially received and provided the opportunity to watch a rap session involving the students in discussion as part of their treatment.

Over lunch, after receiving an overview of the program by the director, counsellors, parents, and teachers, I asked a variety of questions of concern ranging from program methodology to parent and participant responsibility and liability as well as government oversight and accountability for the program. There is no doubt in my mind that the program's director, the parent counsellors, and the teachers with whom I met on Friday are dedicated to assisting adolescents and their parents in overcoming problems related to addictions and at-risk behaviours. I also laud the efforts of the philanthropists whose donations of energy and funding backstop the program.

My continuing concerns have to do with what I see as a lack of government oversight and accountability for the well-being of the young individuals enrolled within the program; the type of programming, that severely restricts both the privacy and quality of access that parents have to their highly vulnerable children during lengthy months of treatment; the heavy reliance on at-risk young people, who themselves are at various stages of treatment within the program, to serve both as counsellors and keepers; the requirement placed on parents to turn their homes into barred cells for which they are forced to play both the roles of warden and prisoner for a program that is not an accredited residential treatment centre.

Desperate times for both vulnerable youth and their distraught parents do not justify desperate measures. Much stricter government regulation and accreditation is required to ensure that the AARC program achieves its laudable goals.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Southeast Calgary Ring Road P3 Project

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today was an important day for residents in my constituency. It's almost been a year since I was elected as the Member for Calgary-Montrose, and there's no better way to celebrate an anniversary than by bringing results to your constituents. I was pleased to see that after advocating the importance of the southeast section of the Calgary ring road, including holding a meeting with east Calgary aldermen and the Minister of Transportation, the minister this morning announced that the Stoney Trail southeast section will be the next portion of the ring road to be completed. This announcement was also attended by the mayor of Calgary, Mr. Bronconnier, and the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Mr. Speaker, my constituents in Applewood and Penbrooke will be pleased to know that there'll be an interchange on 17th Avenue S.E., also known as the wonderful International Avenue. The total length is 25 kilometres of six-lane divided highway, with 29 total bridge structures. This is a very important project for all Calgarians. I've heard from people in communities like Applewood and Penbrooke how important the southeast section of the ring road is. These are people that are excited to spend less time in what is so often a very long commute in Calgary.

After advocating for the construction of this section of the ring road for the past year, I look forward to seeing the groundbreaking for this project and eventually the benefits the completed ring road will bring to my constituents and other Calgarians.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Weyerhaeuser Grande Prairie Pulp Mill Safety Award

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to announce that Weyerhaeuser's Grande Prairie pulp mill was recognized as the safest pulp mill in Canada in its size category in 2008. Pulp & Paper Canada magazine, which has been recognizing exemplary safety efforts since 1926, has awarded Weyerhaeuser's Grande Prairie pulp mill this honour.

Mr. Speaker, in 2008 the pulp mill had a workforce of 315 people, and during that time the mill did not have a single recordable injury among its staff. Essentially, this is roughly 675,000 hours worked without a recordable injury. In fact, the employees and contractors at the mill are now approaching 1.5 million hours worked without a recordable injury. In this way Weyerhaeuser's Grande Prairie pulp mill is a role model to all companies, demonstrating the importance of a safe work environment.

As we all know, on-the-job dangers can have lasting consequences. In fact, the Grande Prairie pulp mill was previously a recipient of this award in both 2000 and 2004. I commend Weyerhaeuser's Grande Prairie pulp mill for its remarkable achievements and its leadership in ensuring safe work.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Provincial Economic Strategy

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week's third-quarter update painted a grim picture for Alberta. Without saving, without limiting spending increases, and without planning for the inevitable bust, government has driven this province right into another deficit. A budget is absolutely necessary, but it is only the first step out of the mess that this government has created. To the Premier: will the Premier tell Albertans what the long-term plan is to remove Alberta from these devastating booms and busts?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the plan is, of course, over the next number of years to be very careful and pragmatic in our spending. Secondly, over the next year or two we will have to dip into the emergency savings fund that we have set aside especially for situations like this. Thirdly, we are going to keep investing in people, meaning education and health, and fourthly, quite frankly, is to ensure that we maintain the momentum and have all of the infrastructure in place so that as we come out of this, we're not left behind again.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: how has this government changed its budgeting procedures now to avoid the consequences of budgeting based on volatile commodity prices?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the changes were made a few years ago, when we changed quite dramatically the accounting practices, allowing us to set aside money in what we call the sustainability fund and also in the capital fund. The Leader of the Official Opposition said, "Yes, we have to plan for volatile revenues," and that's what we did. So we've got $7.7 billion in sustainability, and that's helping to cushion the dramatic drop in oil and gas revenues. We also set aside $6 billion in cash for infrastructure. I'm not aware of any jurisdiction in North America that actually has cash in hand, very liquid, that they can rely on over the next couple of years to offset the dramatic revenue loss.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, as the Premier is reprofiling, quote, rescheduling millions of dollars of capital projects, what guarantee is there that there'll be money for these projects available next year or the year after that, when we've spent everything that's come out of the ground?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, our capital plan is a five-year capital plan. The first three years are committed. The capital plan is $22.2 billion. That is far greater, no matter how you measure it, per capita, two to three times that of any other jurisdiction in Canada. We're well on our way to ensuring that the infrastructure is in place.

The other is that we'll be very pragmatic. We want to ensure that we not only provide the schools and the hospitals that are necessary but also ensure that our water and sewer systems are constantly maintained, so we keep upgrading them. Those will be very wise investments given the fact that we will have some people that may have some job losses, and this will put them back to work.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Oil Royalty Agreement

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Corporate financial filings show that this government recently gave multinational oil sands companies a huge cut in royalties. Payments formerly would have gone to the public purse. For Syncrude alone this sweetheart deal will be worth over $18 billion, greater than the value of our heritage fund, our children's legacy. Eighteen billion dollars to industry while this government can't even fund cancer care appropriately: does the Premier think this is a good deal for Albertans?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the hon. leader is talking about something that appeared in the paper the other day that forecast 40 years into the future. I don't know what price structure they used, whether they put oil at $150 a barrel or a hundred dollars a barrel. But it's funny, you know, how they can forecast 40 years in the future, and only a few months ago nobody forecast this whole world-wide economic turndown. Now all of a sudden they're making these predictions 40 years down the road.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, to the Premier: whose interests was this government acting on when it decided to reduce the royalties for this company? Eighteen billion dollars went back to the corporate profits.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I'll have the Minister of Energy answer the part of the agreement that was reached back in 1997.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you very much. Mr. Speaker, the truth of the matter is that there was no reduction in royalties. In 1997 a Crown agreement was reached with two of the major players, the initiators of this great business in the province of Alberta, and part of that Crown agreement was an option for them to choose to pay royalties a decade down the road either on bitumen or on synthetic oil. They have made a choice of an option to pay on bitumen royalty. It will at the end of the day be a very, very good piece of business for all Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: whose interests were you choosing that decision on? Whose interests?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, it may be in the hon. gentleman's interest to settle down a little bit. You might have to call in some emergency staff. [interjections]

Ms Blakeman: Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

Mr. Knight: I thought they were calling.

The interest with respect to the agreements that were made is in the interest of and to the benefit of all Albertans. Mr. Speaker, there are a lot of situations that will arise where bitumen pricing and pricing of synthetic oil, the differentials, may close and, in fact, could be a very good deal for Albertans.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we will deal with the point of order at the end of the Routine.

Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This Premier and this government agreed to a royalty deal that sees an expected $18 billion transferred from the public to Syncrude. The corporate filings of Syncrude shareholders spell this out in detail, and I'm sure the minister is aware of that. This government, which is supposed to be managing the resource in the best interest of Albertans, barely gave a hint of it. To the Premier: why does this government conceal information from its citizens instead of providing the full, plain, and true disclosure required of corporations and recommended by the Auditor General?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, nothing is concealed and especially not the growth that we've seen in this province since 1997. It has given us infrastructure. It has given us good health and education programs. It has given us wealth not only in this province but wealth that's shared right across the country of Canada.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The $18 billion figure actually applies only to Syncrude. This government must know how much more forecast revenue they also signed over to Suncor. My question is to the Minister of Energy. Did the minister or his department do an analysis of how much these royalty deals were likely to cost Albertans, and if he did, will he confirm that about $18 billion more in public wealth was transferred to Suncor through this deal?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, what I do know is that we have just spent a considerable amount of time and effort to renegotiate the Crown agreements that Syncrude and Suncor have with the province of Alberta, with the people of Alberta. I'll tell you this as a fact, not a number that came from a newspaper but a fact: Syncrude will pay the people of Alberta an additional $975 million in royalties due to that agreement.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The minister maybe should go back to math school or something because he transferred $18 billion to Syncrude to get $975 million back. Does the minister actually think that was a good deal for the people of Alberta?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, what I do know is that both of the Crown agreements that have been reached by the government of Alberta with respect to the two major initial players in the oil sands have opened up tremendous opportunities for all Albertans and all Canadians, as the Premier has stated. They are very good, solid agreements that will net benefits to Albertans for generations to come, decades to come.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party in the House.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This morning Statistics Canada announced the sharpest quarterly decline in Canada's gross domestic product in 18 years, and still this government refuses to create an economic stimulus package. Alberta is not an island, but this government doesn't get it. Ordinary Albertans are losing their jobs and declaring bankruptcy while this government stands alone in the world in refusing to launch a stimulus package. My question is to the Premier. Why is this Tory government failing Albertans at risk of losing their jobs or facing bankruptcy by refusing to stimulate Alberta's economy?

2:00

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the policies of the government over the last couple of years have really stimulated growth in the economy. In fact, we've seen unprecedented growth. We've seen – what? – 600,000 new Albertans move to this province. We've seen investments in infrastructure, education, and health, and we'll continue to do that. We are, as I said before, the only jurisdiction in all of Canada, if not North America, to have cash in hand to work through this economic global downturn, that was totally unpredicted by even the best economists. We're in the best position to weather this storm.

Mr. Mason: That was yesterday, Mr. Speaker. This Premier is not preparing the province for tomorrow.

The federal infrastructure program will match one-third of what provinces and municipalities chip in to stimulate their economies, up to $2.2 billion for Alberta. Many of Alberta's municipalities have already committed substantial funding to new infrastructure and cannot afford more. Our proposal is that this government should pay the municipalities' third as well as its own third to leverage the federal cash and get Albertans working. My question is to the Premier. Will you adopt our proposal and commit the municipal portion of funds for the federal infrastructure program so that Alberta can . . .

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Mason: I'm not finished yet, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Oh, no, no. You are finished. I have called on the hon. the Premier.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for being so kind. I know that there is no provincial jurisdiction in Canada that supports municipalities as much as this government. There is $1.4 billion of new money every year going to municipalities to help them with infrastructure. For some of the smaller municipalities it helps with their operation. It is unprecedented in Canada. We'll continue to keep our solid commitment and good working relationship with all municipalities.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The only positive contributor to total GDP last quarter was public-sector investment, according to Statistics Canada, yet this government refuses to listen to good ideas and refuses to invest money in ways that will actually create real jobs for everyday Albertans. Municipalities cannot afford more spending on infrastructure, and this government will not step up to the plate. Why, Mr. Premier, will you not take advantage of this opportunity for federal funding and commit to paying the municipal share to keep Albertans working?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, just having met with the president of AUMA and having had a long discussion with the president of AAMD and C, both associations are very satisfied with the plan we have in place. You know, the other part of the plan that we have worked out with municipalities is that they are simply delighted because they can stand anywhere in Canada and say that Alberta is the only province that works closely with municipalities and allows municipalities to actually prioritize their projects, the only jurisdiction in Canada to do that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Grizzly Bear Management

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We've heard that communities in Alberta are adopting BearSmart practices, and the Foothills Research Institute is finishing a DNA population study that will give us an idea of grizzly bear populations from south of Grande Prairie to the Montana border. My question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. What is the government doing on the landscape to ensure that grizzly bears remain part of Alberta's wildlife?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Both the BearSmart program and the DNA population study are government of Alberta programs, and they are focused on keeping grizzlies on the landscape. The BearSmart program reduces human/bear encounters to the benefit of both parties. The core grizzly bear habitat is the focus of the DNA study, which will work into the regional plans under the land-use framework. There are many other programs associated with our grizzly efforts. I can assure you that this government does not have a grin-and-bear-it attitude towards grizzlies. We are bearing down and making healthy grizzly populations a high priority.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you. My first supplemental is to the same minister. My constituents have insisted that there are plenty of grizzly bears in the foothills. What can the minister tell me about the population numbers and the influence that they have on managing access in grizzly habitat?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, there are two different stories about grizzly bears out there at the moment. The Foothills Research Institute is doing the DNA sampling study based on a scientific technique. That is projecting fewer bears than we expected: less than a thousand. There is another study out there, done by the Willmore Wilderness Foundation, that involves both a film and also a very extensive database, that reports a higher frequency of sightings around the province in the last year. We've listened to both of these groups. We're putting them together, and I'm optimistic that when those databases are integrated, we'll get a satisfactory result.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you. To the same minister. I've heard reports that the grizzly bear counts are only being done in areas that are close to settled areas and access points, where it would be easier or more convenient to set up sampling points, yet I'm also told that most sightings, especially large multiple sightings, are in the backcountry. Can the minister explain how the counts are being done?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you. The reports that the hon. member has heard are not accurate. The individuals conducting the DNA study are professional scientists, and they're using the very same techniques that have been used by wildlife habitat scientists in Yellowstone park and other places in North America. This focuses on a random grid sample, and then within those grids the catchment areas are placed where grizzlies are most likely. At the end of 2009 the grizzly bear population survey will be done. Mr. Speaker, those are the bare facts, and I'm sticking with them.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Carbon Emissions Reduction

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 2007 the government created a carbon tax of $15 per tonne for all major industrial emitters of greenhouse gas in Alberta. The Auditor General in the report for Environment says that the ministry's statements do not verify the completeness of the reporting toward meeting emission intensity targets. My questions are to the Minister of Environment. Given that Budget '08 estimated $155 million from the climate change fund yet the annual report only has $40 million, can the minister explain this $115 million difference?

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, there are, actually, two reasons for it. First of all, the $155 million that the member refers to is for 18 months, and we've to date reported six months. So there was $40 million in the first six months of the program. After the 12-month period, which has now just ended, we anticipate that it'll be around a hundred million.

The other reason, frankly, Mr. Speaker, is that it was at best an estimate. There's no way of knowing exactly what the savings may have been, that industry may not have had to come into compliance. We also didn't know what uptake there would be on the opportunities for emissions credits to be taken up.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. The $155 million figure appears on page 30 of your budget documents.

To the same minister: given that the Auditor General states that the ministry cannot verify amounts owing because it doesn't have the systems in place to check who is meeting the targets and who isn't and then collect the money that's owed, can the minister not agree that that's the real reason for the difference? You don't have the systems in place to know how much money is out there.

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, clearly, that is not the case. This is an instance where it was necessary for us to as quickly as possible come forward with something that we knew was the right thing to do. There is and was a lot of work needed to be done to the compliance mechanisms. We have that work in place. Frankly, we felt that it was more appropriate that we get the legislation up and running and develop the details after the fact rather than wait for two or three years and do nothing in the meantime.

Ms Blakeman: To the same minister. Budget 2008 estimates for the next three years total $328 million in the climate change fund for new initiatives in emissions reduction. Can the minister tell us if this is still accurate, or will the new budget see a massive decrease in the Budget 2008 numbers?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, the numbers that are in the budget are reflective of projections for growth, that may or may not be seen as we all know that there have been a number of projects that have been put on hold. It also is dependent upon, as I mentioned earlier, the degree to which companies are able to acquire offsets, which would reduce the amount that they pay. It would also depend upon the actual results that they record at the end of the year. So I can't predict whether or not the numbers that are in the budget will be achieved. It's a three-year budget, and as everyone knows, forecasting any more than three months these days is extremely difficult. I can assure this member and I can assure all Albertans that the numbers that are reported are accurate, are audited, and are accountable.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Support for Communities in the Oil Sands

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituents see Bonnyville-Cold Lake as a major hub for industry in Alberta. Communities like Cold Lake are dependent on this industry. As a result, this community faces challenges to its growth and sustainability. My question is to the President of the Treasury Board. This government is providing additional support to oil sands communities like Fort McMurray. Will communities, like Cold Lake, who are experiencing the same challenges receive this additional support as well?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, it's a good point. I think many Albertans don't realize how massive the oil sands – better described by our Member for Athabasca-Redwater as the job sands – are under Alberta, approximately 20 per cent. So the communities of Cold Lake, Bonnyville, St. Paul, and Lac La Biche as well as the Peace Country are all affected and will be affected over time by the tremendous opportunities this oil energy has. The oil sands secretariat has met with and will continue to meet with the different representatives from those communities.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplementary is to the same minister. How will this government improve the quality of life for communities like Cold Lake that are directly impacted by the oil sands?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, in many ways the report on responsible development of the oil sands is a way to attack most of the issues that face major development around any community, whether it be the future development in our Industrial Heartland or the oil sands development around those communities, by addressing it in a government-wide manner, where all the departments are brought together, where we look at the issues raised by that community, and we use whatever means are necessary to include all the relative ministries to handle the issues.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplementary is to the Minister of Aboriginal Relations. The First Nations and Métis comprise a large portion of the population of Bonnyville-Cold Lake. How will this government increase the participation of the aboriginal communities in the development of the oil sands?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, for one thing, aboriginal input to date and well into the future figures very prominently in our recently released energy strategy, our recently released land-use framework, and, of course, the mostly recently released Alberta oil sands plan, which is called Responsible Actions. To date we know that approximately 1,500 aboriginals are already employed in the oil sands development. That's about a 60 per cent increase since 1998, and I think it's going to go even higher. That figure, by the way, does not include construction-related jobs.

The final point, Mr. Speaker, is that more aboriginals will be employed as local industries' initiatives kick into place to hire local aboriginal grads and as our First Nations economic partnership initiative continues.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Alberta Adolescent Recovery Centre

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The strengths of the Alberta Adolescent Recovery Centre are its dedicated teachers, its generous philanthropists, and its desperate, dedicated parents, who are willing to sacrifice, surrender so much to recover their lost children. The weakness of the program is that the Alberta government has allowed an underregulated facility to operate as though it were an accredited residential treatment centre. My questions are to the minister of health. Is it acceptable to you that each night throughout Calgary at-risk adolescents are locked in bedrooms with fixed bars on the windows, in direct violation of fire safety codes?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I'm not going to acknowledge the comments that were made in the preamble. I will say that the member took my suggestion of a couple of weeks ago and actually went and visited the program and, if I understood his member's statement correctly, acknowledged the great work of the parents, the great work of the teachers, and the outstanding program. Unlike the opposition, we don't believe that it's necessary to have civil servants hovering over all of the programs in Alberta.

Mr. Chase: I think you should be concerned about firemen hovering over these facilities with barred windows in direct violation of safety codes.

How do you justify the fact, Mr. Minister, that the keepers of the bedroom cell keys for the at-risk newcomers are themselves at-risk old-comers who have been in the program only a few months longer than those over whom they wield authority and for whom they assume the liability that this government has left?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I think I challenged the member a couple of weeks ago as well that if he had some issues that he thought were criminal in nature, then he should report them to the police. If he has some issues that he thinks violate fire codes, then report it to the fire chief. He has the responsibility instead of just standing here making a bunch of unfounded allegations.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When I spoke to the deputy fire chief, he expressed concerns, and I'll be meeting with police officials this Friday.

Why hasn't the government provided AADAC the funding to build, operate, and regulate adolescent residential treatment centres instead of foisting its responsibilities onto the shoulders of untrained parents and at-risk adolescents? Who's in charge of Alberta children's welfare?

Mr. Liepert: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, in the last budget we allocated some hundred million dollars to AADAC, so for this member to stand here and make those kind of comments is just incorrect.

Again, unlike the opposition we don't believe that government does everything. We believe there is a role for the volunteer and nonprofit sectors to get involved. If this member has an issue with it, then let him say so, but all he does is stand here and make unfounded allegations, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Single Wide-base Truck Tires

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A year ago my Transportation Advisory Committee in Whitecourt-Ste. Anne made me aware of new technology that can assist some sectors of the trucking industry to save fuel, up to 15 per cent. I thank the Minister of Transportation for his quick response to Alberta's trucking industry by allowing super single tires with a slight weight reduction as a use of condition. My questions are all to the Minister of Transportation. The province of Ontario has now announced that they will allow full parity between the new generation wide tires and a set of dual tires. This means now that Ontario and Quebec are the only provinces to allow fuel efficient single . . .

The Speaker: Thank you. The hon. minister. [interjection] Hon. minister, you have the floor.

Mr. Ouellette: I wanted to hear the question because I didn't want to make the answer wrong, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: You have 35 seconds.

Mr. Ouellette: Anyway, Mr. Speaker, I have to tell the hon. member that it isn't quite that simple. Yes, we have been running some pilot projects with super single new-generation tires, but I have to also go by what the technical people in the department say. The technical people are telling me that if you overload or heavily load the superwide tires, we don't have the surfaces strong enough to handle it, and we create more damage. But for the hon. member I will recheck with our technical guys to see if there are some new-technology tires out there that maybe we could load a little heavier.

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, I'll make it shorter this time. Due to the recent change in legislation, Minister, are you concerned that there will be an advantage to national carriers operating in Ontario versus operating in Alberta?

Mr. Ouellette: That's a very good question, Mr. Speaker. Let me tell you, most of our truckers here and especially any of our long-haul truckers, which is about 65 per cent of our trucks in Alberta, are interprovincially licensed. Saskatchewan and Manitoba have the exact same weight ratio as we do, so you couldn't get across from Ontario or Quebec into Alberta and cross those provinces. I think we continually try to do everything we can to make economic benefits for our truckers in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Safety of Secondary Suites

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While safe secondary suites are a low-cost option that could quickly increase the stock of affordable housing, right now many people in Alberta are living in unsafe, unhealthy secondary suites because that's all they can find. While a substandard roof over your head is better than no roof at all, a suite that is unfit or unsafe can put the tenants' lives in jeopardy. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs. A violation of the Alberta fire code can cost a landlord $15,000 in fines or six months in jail. Given that a fire code violation such as a locked or barred window can lead to the death of a tenant who cannot get out of his or her suite in time, will the minister commit to a review of the penalties?

2:20

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, first of all, I want to say that Alberta has strong building and fire codes to help residents in secondary suites. I also want to reiterate that municipalities choose whether to permit secondary suites. The standards for new secondary suites have been in force since December of 2008. At this time the penalties that are in place for safety codes I believe are adequate.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the minister of health this time: given that housing regulations fall under the Public Health Act and the penalty a landlord faces for violating that act is only $2,000, will this minister commit to a review of section 73 of the act?

Mr. Liepert: There's none planned at this stage, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Justice: in cases where tenants die in fires as the result of possible negligence by the landlord, is it possible to lay criminal charges against the landlord, and if so, why is this apparently never done? If not, what can she do about it?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll take that question under advisement.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Impact of Oil Sands Development on Water Resources

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. By treating our watershed like a bottomless well, this government is jeopardizing the environmental future of Alberta, British Columbia, Saskatchewan, and both territories, and this government doesn't care. Canada's House of Commons has noticed, and their environment committee wants to know why this government is letting their friends in big oil soak up Alberta's water resources unchecked. My question is to the Minister of Environment. Why won't you protect the resource that Alberta's future depends on most?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest to the hon. member that that's exactly what we do. She talks about the water that flows through Alberta that ends up in the Northwest Territories, Saskatchewan, or Manitoba. We have in place agreements with our eastern neighbours on the South Saskatchewan and North Saskatchewan, and we are just about to enter into a trilateral discussion with British Columbia, Alberta, and the Northwest Territories to deal with the northern watershed basin.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, it's the job of this provincial government to oversee our environment, and the feds are getting involved because the job is not getting done. The tar ponds already span over 130 square kilometers and are filled with toxic chemicals that industry doesn't know what to do with. It's estimated that 170,000 litres of toxic water from the tar ponds leach back into Alberta rivers each day, yet the government is doing nothing about them. To the Minister of Environment: why has this government continued to turn a blind eye to the black eye it's created in the tar sands?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, nothing could be further from the truth, and this member knows that. She's taken the opportunity to make a political statement, ignoring the facts. The facts speak for themselves. I welcome other authorities to review our legislation and review our regulatory regime because I'm sure that the House of Commons committee will find that Alberta is doing everything that is expected of us and then some.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Notley: Thank you. Well, the minister doesn't seem to understand the very basic need of every Albertan for a fresh water supply. The government has failed to implement the changes that would actually make CEMA effective, the water for life strategy has no teeth, and your directives to clean up the tar ponds won't have any effect for years to come. In short, lots of talk; no action. To the minister: why should everyday Albertans be denied access to clean water tomorrow because of your ministry's negligence today?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, this member obviously has a different crystal ball than anyone else that is involved in dealing with these important issues. The fact of the matter is that we have rigid legislation in place. We have accepted that there can be more technology changes. On an ongoing basis we're committed to continually increase the degree of protection that we have in place. I can assure this member and I can assure all Albertans that there is no risk for the future of the water in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffer.

Southeast Calgary Ring Road P3 Project

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I mentioned earlier in my member's statement, the Minister of Transportation announced this morning that the Stoney Trail southeast portion of the ring road is the next section of the Calgary ring road that will be completed, which is something I've been long advocating for. While my constituents are happy with this news, they're also eager to see results. My first question is to the Minister of Transportation. What is the timeline, such as the start date and estimated completion date, of the construction of the Stoney Trail southeast section?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm very pleased to tell the hon. member that our start date is planned right now for 2010, and we will have traffic driving on it by the fall of 2013. This is great news for Calgarians. The project will make a full free-flow six-lane freeway, and it will significantly improve traffic flows on the east side of Calgary.

Mr. Bhullar: Great it is, Mr. Speaker. Great it is.

My second question to the same minister: how is this project being paid for and what is the department doing to ensure that this project is cost-effective?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, as you know, the last two to three, I guess, ring road legs that we've done in Edmonton and Calgary were done as a P3, and we saved hundreds of millions of dollars for taxpayers of Alberta. We plan on doing this one under a P3. Once that road opens, that will make our contractor responsible for the maintenance for 30 years. One thing for sure we always will do: a comparative bid. We will always make sure that when that comparative bid is open, we're getting the best deal possible for Alberta taxpayers.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With the completion of this section the ring road will be 75 per cent complete. When will the last quarter be completed?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, can you believe that? We just announced such a great project of a six-lane freeway with 29 separate bridges, two flyovers, and – wouldn't you know it? – I guess it isn't enough. But let me tell you that our Premier, who is a great Premier, has announced that he wanted all the ring roads done by 2015, and I really like my job, so I'm going to do everything I possibly can to make sure that they're all done by 2015.

The Speaker: I'm sure that with these hundreds of millions of dollars we're saving, you can help some of your other colleagues out.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Prosecutions under the Election Act

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The integrity of the democratic process should be a priority concern for all governments; however, it seems that for this government ensuring the integrity of the electoral process by prosecuting violations is not really a concern. To the Minister of Justice: can the minister provide any details as to why in the case of 19 election violations recommended for prosecution by the Chief Electoral Officer, it was concluded that a special prosecutor not be appointed?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The integrity of the democratic system in Alberta is of paramount concern to this government. It's of particular personal interest to me both as a minister and as an individual that has spent a lot of time looking at democratic systems around the world, and I believe that we have a very strong system in Alberta that is completely transparent. We have a system in place where we have independent prosecutors who make decisions about whether to prosecute cases. I would actually suggest and I would ask the hon. member opposite to think about whether or not it would even be appropriate for me as Minister of Justice to speak to the specifics of cases since the whole point of this system is that there are prosecutors in the Department of Justice who are independent, make the decisions independent from what the minister may or may not think.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that the minister has the final say on whether cases should be investigated and prosecuted, as you are the head of the department – de facto, you know, that's like the fox being in charge of the hen house – should you not in these cases get an independent prosecutor?

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I have said in this House time and time again, we have a system that works in this province. We have independent prosecutors with integrity, and I think that it is very important for colleagues in this House who are lawyers, before they ask questions such as this, to think and understand how the Department of Justice actually works and is managed.

Mr. Hehr: Well, since I am a lawyer and maybe a slow learning one, I'll try and figure this out sooner or later.

Let's take a look at this. The Department of Justice receives 19 election violations from the Chief Electoral Officer that say: please prosecute. Tell me where I'm wrong with thinking: hey, maybe let's get an independent prosecutor. Would this not be more reasonable?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our prosecutors are independent, and they made the decision not to prosecute.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

English As a Second Language Programs

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the fall of 2006 the Ministry of Education contracted Howard Research & Management Consulting Inc. to conduct a review of English as a second language K to 12 program implementation in Alberta. Among the key findings were that some 64 different instruments were used across the province to assess ESL students, and only 21 per cent of the schools used a comprehensive curriculum plan for these students. Some 64 per cent of the schools relied on subject teachers who lacked specialized ESL training to teach ESL in the classes. My question is to the Minister of Education. How has the ministry responded to the identified issues in the review with respect to identification and assessment?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is a very important topic. We are seeing an increasing number of ESL students in our schools, a better identification of those students and those students' needs. Of course, it's a diverse population of students, so it's much more difficult to develop resources that would be in the nature of a mandatory curriculum. However, there is an ESL Guide to Implementation, kindergarten to grade 9, which provides definitions and descriptions of students and information on intake procedures. We produced a list of assessment resources for English as a second language, and in terms of curriculum development we're progressing on that as well.

Ms Woo-Paw: My first supplemental is to the same minister. Would the minister consider introducing or reintroducing reporting mechanisms to ensure that ESL funding is used for ESL instruction?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As is the case in a number of our funding mechanisms, what we provide is a global budget to school boards, and the calculation of that budget takes into account certain factors. In this case the number of ESL students provides a factor for extra funding for school boards. What we don't do is tell the school boards how to apply those funds, and we would be reluctant to do that unless it could be shown that they were not achieving the outcomes. We are developing a piece of the accountability pillar which will tell us whether we're achieving those outcomes, and if we find that's not successful, we will consider changing the funding to fix it.

Ms Woo-Paw: My last supplemental to the same minister: would the ministry consider auditing schools and school boards for the allocation of ESL funding?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, we do conduct audits of certain types of grants such as the credit enrolment unit grant, student transportation, and enrolment numbers, et cetera. But, again, because this is block funding, because it's up to the school boards to determine how best to apply the funding, it wouldn't be appropriate to audit specifically this funding at this point. However, I'd indicate again that we are developing an accountability pillar piece which would show whether boards are achieving the outcomes that are desired, and if they're not achieving the outcomes that are desired, we would consider whether the funding formula needed to be changed to effect that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Workplace Health and Safety

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Unfortunately, workplace deaths in Alberta have risen 34 per cent in the last three years. My first question is to the minister in charge of occupational health and safety. How can the minister contend that Alberta is overall a safer place to work today than in the past when one Alberta worker per week in 2008 lost their life as a result of a workplace fatality?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, I do agree that workplace injuries or fatalities are totally unacceptable, and our government is constantly working to see those numbers go down. What the hon. member failed to indicate is that our numbers, in fact, per 100 person-years are decreasing. We are heading in the right direction. We do have more people than ever working in this particular province and we've got more vehicles on the roads, so it seems that more things will happen. But our overall numbers when it comes to the disabling-injury rates or the lost-time claim rates are in fact going down.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. minister could tell that to the family of a deceased worker.

Given that workplace deaths from occupational diseases have doubled since 2002 from 31 deaths per year to 64 deaths in 2008, why is an accident investigation report from the government not admissible as evidence for any purpose at a trial arising out of the injury or accident, an investigation, or a public inquiry under the Fatality Inquiries Act?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, I don't have the details of that particular question, so I'd be pleased to get more information and then respond to the member accordingly.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. That's incredible that you don't know why that has occurred under your watch, sir.

Again to the same minister: why is it not a legal requirement under Alberta's occupational health and safety laws to develop an OH and S policy or to have one posted at a work site?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, we encourage active participation between employers and employees to minimize any type of injuries or incidents on the work site. We continue to work with industry. We encourage them to protect their employees, and we've got a number of campaigns and initiatives across the province to have that happen.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary McCall.

Oil Sands Development

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first question is to the hon. Minister of Environment. The March 2009 issue of National Geographic contains an article entitled The Canadian Oil Boom: Scraping Bottom. The article has been held out as being very negative towards the Athabasca oil sands, but in reading the article, the text in particular, I find the article overall gives a very reasonably positive impression of this engine of Alberta's economy. To the minister: have you read the article, and does it accurately reflect the facts?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, I have in fact read the article, and to a large extent I agree with the observation that the hon. member has made. This is one of the more balanced representations that we have seen in some time. That being said, it's a representation of the past, and this government and this ministry are focused on the future. As I've said a number of times, I would be very interested if I could turn the clock ahead two or three years and have that same reporter come back and see what changes have taken place as a result of what the government is doing today.

The Speaker: Hon. member, we're dealing with policy.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A concern was expressed in the article with regard to the amount of overburden that has to be removed to extract one barrel of oil. How is this concern being addressed by your department?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, the issue of overburden is not unique to oil sands; it's really something that goes along with any surface mining operation. Our department, as you know, has been working very hard on developing a new way of dealing with reclamation and speeding up the reclamation. We talked in the Speech from the Throne about a need to speed up the reclamation. Progressive reclamation is something that we feel very strongly about: setting benchmarks in time, creating some benchmarks that need to be met and perhaps some incentives to help to achieve them.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question is to the hon. Minister of Energy. The National Geographic article states that the oil sands industry is wasting the cleanest fuel, being natural gas, to make the dirtiest fuel. What is your response to that statement?

2:40

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, first, let's be very clear about this. Fuels derived from bitumen meet the same standards as any other fuels delivered in the province of Alberta or anywhere in North America. An independent analysis would show that from ground to gas station fuels derived from oil sands are marginally more carbon intensive than fuels from Middle Eastern oil, and they are actually comparable to fuels derived from California heavy oil.

In terms of the natural gas required in bitumen extraction, the very same article that's being quoted here states that, in fact, the energy produced from a barrel of synthetic oil is five times the energy that's required to produce it.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that was 94 questions and responses today.

Statement by the Speaker

Alberta and Manitoba Question Period Comparison

The Speaker: Just by way of information, last week I hosted a delegation from the province of Manitoba, including the Speaker and House leaders, and we talked about question period. The Manitoba question period is 40 minutes. Ours is 50 minutes. They have no time factor refereed by the Speaker, and oftentimes they'll get between 15 and 18 questions and responses for question period. We had 94. It's not at all uncommon for a question from the Leader of the Official Opposition to be upwards of five to 10 minutes and the response from the leader of the government to be the same. After about 25 or 30 minutes they'll have had two or three exchanges, and you know what happens in the Assembly in such an environment.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Bill 18

Trade, Investment and Labour Mobility Agreement Implementation Statutes Amendment Act, 2009

Mr. Stevens: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce Bill 18, the Trade, Investment and Labour Mobility Agreement Implementation Statutes Amendment Act, 2009.

We're now just a few weeks away from fully ushering in Canada's most comprehensive interprovincial trade agreement, effective April 1, 2009. Bill 18 is an omnibus bill that amends 11 acts to ensure that the government statutes are consistent with the TILMA. In large measure they are administrative in nature. Colleagues in the Legislature, I would urge you to ultimately find favour with this particular legislation, particularly with the state of the global economy. It will be one way that we can ensure that Albertans have an advantage.

Mr. Speaker, thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 18 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Bill 19

Land Assembly Project Area Act

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 19, the Land Assembly Project Area Act.

This legislation will improve the process for government to designate and assemble large tracts of land for major infrastructure projects such as transportation utility corridors. The legislative framework enhances transparency and accountability when dealing with numerous landowners for large-scale land acquisitions over a long term.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 19 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Bill 20

Civil Enforcement Amendment Act, 2009

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to request leave to introduce Bill 20, the Civil Enforcement Amendment Act.

Currently individuals who purchase RRSPs sold by a bank or a credit union, also known as noninsurance RRSPs, have no creditor protection for their retirement savings. This bill will change the law so the creditors will not have access to the funds in noninsurance RRSPs, deferred profit savings plans, or registered retirement income plans. However, creditors will have access to payments out of these retirement plans. This proposed legislation, of course, brings us in line with B.C. and Saskatchewan. Also, a provision is being added to exempt registered disability savings plans from creditors. These plans are intended to help individuals with disabilities and their families plan for future needs of the individual.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 20 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that Bill 20 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Culture and Community Spirit.

Mr. Blackett: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I wish to table the appropriate number of copies of four annual reports with the Assembly. The first is the Alberta Foundation for the Arts 2007-08 annual report. The second document is the Wild Rose Foundation 2007-08 annual report, third is the Alberta Historical Resources Foundation 2007-08 annual report, and finally, the fourth document is the Alberta historical resources fund 2007-08 annual report.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to section 15 of the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund Act as chair of the Standing Committee on the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund it is my pleasure to table the third-quarter update on the fund. Copies of this report were distributed to all members last Thursday, February 26, 2009.

The Speaker: The hon. Opposition House Leader.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today, both from constituents. The first is from constituent Crystal Fisher. She is very concerned that rising costs of tuition, housing, textbooks, and child care are keeping students away from postsecondary education. She believes that we need to continue to invest in postsecondary education even in difficult economic times and that this will help us meet challenges for the future.

The second tabling is from constituent Mary Mumert. She has a number of different concerns, primarily focusing on rent control needed to help cope with the high rents that are impacting a lot of the constituents in Edmonton-Centre, particularly vulnerable groups. She feels, additionally, that there's inadequate funding for supportive housing and group homes and that young offenders need community supports as well as safe housing to prevent them from reoffending.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings this afternoon. The first is a letter that I received from the hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration dated January 12, 2009. It's a response to my letter dated December 15, 2008, requesting an update on the workplace health and safety compliance investigation into the accident that occurred at the CNRL Horizon oil sands project on April 24, 2007, which, unfortunately, took the lives of two workers.

My second tabling is a letter that I wrote to the hon. Minister of Labour in the federal parliament. This letter is dated February 25, 2009. It's requesting that the federal government make some changes to the employment insurance structure in Alberta in light of the unfortunate rise in unemployment in this province. There are some background tables to accompany this letter as well.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today. The first is from the Calgary Police Association president, Mr. John Dooks, wherein he thanks the provincial government for instituting Bill 50, the victims of crime legislation, as well as noting that Bill 201, that I'm speaking on this afternoon, is also necessary to finish the loop, so to speak, in that legislation.

I also have a letter from the Community Life Improvement Council, whose executive director is former police officer Barry Davidson. Therein he, again, supports my initiative in Bill 201.

I also have a letter of support from Mike Colle, MPP from the Ontario Legislature, where he supports fully Bill 201. He notes in the letter that they, too, have victims of crime legislation similar to ours but, nevertheless, the need for the bill to close off the loop, so to say, to the criminal element that's out there.

2:50

The Speaker: I'd just like to remind the hon. member that this is tablings, not debate.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of 10 reports from long-term care workers indicating specific problems on shifts that were short-staffed. One of these reports, for example, shows that some residents were left in their beds for the morning and part of the afternoon.

The second tabling is a report referred to by the leader of the NDP opposition in his questions today. It is titled Canadian Economic Accounts: Fourth Quarter 2008 and December 2008. Of particular interest is chart 4, showing that the public sector was the only main industrial sector to significantly contribute to total growth in December of last year.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of correspondence regarding the public health care structure. This tabling is signed by Helen Pollard, Helen Butterfield, June and Tony Feist, Alex Chiasson, Fern Bougie, Marjorie Andrusiak, Lloyd Doering, Jean Madlung, and Margery Warchola, all on the board of directors of the Whitecourt Seniors Circle.

Thank you, sir.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Groeneveld, Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, response to Written Question 20 and return to order of the Assembly 16, both asked for by Dr. Taft on October 20, 2008.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre on a point of order.

Point of Order Provocative Language

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll give you a number of citations, but just so that everyone can follow along with this, this point of order is arising out of an exchange between the Leader of the Official Opposition and the Minister of Energy during the second question from the Leader of the Official Opposition. In fact, to be more specific, the exchange was around the second supplemental and the response to that question.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in M and M on page 365 and also throughout pages 416 to 433 it outlines the purpose of question period and the role of the Official Opposition within that to request information from the government and to hold the government to account by asking questions, clearly. According to Beauchesne 409 and other references in M and M appearing on pages 426 to 427 and also 432, the minister is to answer if it is within their administrative responsibility, and I would say that in this case it was clearly within the ministerial responsibility of the Minister of Energy to answer the question. He hadn't been asked a question about child care; he'd been asked a question directly relevant to policies in his department.

Interestingly, as I went through this, Mr. Speaker, nowhere in here in the question period sections does it say that the point of question period is to not answer the questions. We just need to be very specific about the way we do ask the questions, but there is some expectation that they will be answered.

In addition to that, I'd like to raise the parameters that are set in Beauchesne's 409 to 411 and specifically 417, in which it says that "answers to questions should be as brief as possible, deal with the matter raised and should not provoke debate.” Indeed, that could not describe the exchange that happened here, Mr. Speaker. What’s interesting is that this is an adversarial setup. People are expected to punch above their weight here, and I think that for the most part they do. There’s no expectation that this is a friendly exchange, but there is an expectation that we adhere to a tone of civility, at a minimum. That’s why all of these various parliamentary books refer to decorum in its different ways.

What happened in this exchange was that rather than answering the question, the minister made an observation, and it was of a personal nature, Mr. Speaker. It was clearly directed back to the Leader of the Official Opposition. It wasn’t a general statement that was made about all members of the opposition or all members of the House. It clearly identified the Leader of the Opposition as the person that he meant to be on the receiving end of his statement. He made a personal observation, and I would argue that it was not a personal observation made out of a genuine concern. Certainly, the tone that accompanied the observation was one of derision.

I would go further and say that it was meant to trivialize the concerns that the Leader of the Official Opposition had raised by intimating that in some way the leader was ill and was in need of assistance. [interjections] Once again, I am helped to prove my point by the members of the Assembly. I can always count on you folks to come through and make my point perfectly clear by doing exactly the same poor behaviour. Well done.

The point of order that has been raised, Mr. Speaker, was to call attention to the Minister of Energy, encourage him to in fact answer the question that has been put to him. I know that’s a rarity in this House, but nonetheless I continue to encourage the ministers opposite to do that and as is set out in a number of places in M and M. Let me go to 432 specifically. There are a number of options that are given to a minister: to decline to answer the question, to say they’ll take it under advisement, to answer the question. Nowhere in there does it say to turn this into a personal attack, trivializing the Leader of the Official Opposition and making it out as though he were somehow ill or in need of aid or required medical attention.

So I would in all good humour ask the Minister of Energy to withdraw that statement, and I would be very happy to continue on with the business of the day.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I did not neglect to answer the question, and secondly, what you see in front of you is an individual that was very genuinely concerned for a member of this House and only indicated that concern. In that I see no point of order.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader on this. Proceed.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think that the hon. Opposition House Leader in indicating that members of the House helped make her point clearer overstated the help that the members of the House gave her because her point was very far from clear.

She started her point of order by giving us a summary of some of the rules relating to question period, and she missed a few that were really quite important. “It must be a question, not an expression of an opinion, representation, argumentation, nor debate.” That would be 409(1). “A preamble need not exceed one carefully drawn sentence.” That would be 409(2). “A long preamble on a long question takes an unfair share of time.” That would be 409(2) as well. “Cannot be based upon a hypothesis, cannot seek an opinion, either legal or otherwise.” That would have been a point of order on another question today.

Those are very important rules that the hon. member left out in her recitation of the various rules around the House before she got to what I think was her eventual point, which was that the hon. Minister of Energy referred to – in response, I might add, because this might not appear in Hansard – the hon. Leader of the Opposition appearing very agitated and a bit explosive in his supplementary questions so that we should be careful because he might be having a heart attack. I think the observation was a very, very clear concern that was raised.

You know, if we’re going to have decorum in the House – and I think we ought to have decorum in the House – then much of that decorum has to come from not loading preambles with things that don’t make sense or are not accurate, not being argumentative, and not, quite frankly, being explosive in the supplementary questions. Supplementary questions, by the way, in 410(8), should flow from the answers of the question. We seldom see that in the House, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I listened with interest to the hon. Official Opposition House Leader and the citations that she quoted from, as she calls it, M and M, or Marleau and Montpetit for the rest of us, and Beauchesne 409 through 411, which are frequently cited by both sides of the House.

The Minister of Energy is responsible for questions, not all questions; the President of the Treasury Board is quite capable of providing information and answers as well, and the minister of finance, and the Premier. Specifically, in the questions that were asked by the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition, it was inappropriate and disrespectful for the hon. Minister of Energy to respond that perhaps it was necessary for an emergency department to be called. It certainly is not in tune with what has been going on in this House in the last two to three weeks.

I would quite simply say, Mr. Speaker, that I thought it was inappropriate for the Minister of Energy to refer to the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition in the manner that he did in his suggestions that perhaps his health was delicate and that he needed attention from emergency medical officials or that an ambulance was to be called. With that, I would just encourage the hon. Minister of Energy to please consider withdrawing those comments, which I feel were at the time inappropriate.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others who would like to participate?

Well, that has only been, like, 15 minutes. I thank all hon. members for their contribution to this very important part of the people’s business. I’d just like to quote one paragraph from the House of Commons Procedure and Practice. It’s actually on page 526, and it says:

In dealing with unparliamentary language, the Speaker takes into account the tone, manner and intention of the Member speaking; the person to whom the words were directed; the degree of provocation; and, most importantly, whether or not the remarks created disorder in the Chamber.

In this instance the hon. Leader of Her Majesty’s Loyal Opposition was somewhat uncharacteristic in the manner in which he addressed the question. He was louder than normal and more forceful than normal. Hansard does not record the tone, but the chair was here to observe the tone, and it was uncharacteristic of the demeanor of the hon. gentleman, who I believe is very, very well and healthy.

The minister's response, while not dealing with the question, would not seem to have been out of line. It doesn't seem to have been out of line in the context of the cut and the thrust of parliamentary debate. Perhaps I'm being subjective and reaching for this one, but it may very well have been the case that the minister was trying to be a bit humorous.

There is a situation in baseball, if anybody is a baseball fan. A powerful hitter is at the plate, a powerful pitcher is on the mound, and the first pitch thrown is – what's it called? – the brushback. That's what it's called. Perhaps that's what we've had today.

Orders of the Day

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've had conversation with the opposition House leaders and I believe have concurrence that it would be appropriate to ask for unanimous consent of the House at this time to revert to government business, notwithstanding that today is reserved for private members' business, for the sole purpose of allowing the tabling of certain documents relative to the supplementary supply estimates and to interim supply estimates and to attend to the concomitant for government motions 5, 6, 7, and 8. So I'd ask for unanimous consent of the House to do that.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Transmittal of Estimates

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, I have received certain messages from His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, which I now transmit to you.

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order!

The Speaker: There are two messages, hon. members. The Lieutenant Governor transmits supplementary supply estimates of certain sums required for the service of the province for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2009, and recommends the same to the Legislative Assembly.

In the second the Lieutenant Governor transmits interim supply estimates of certain sums required for the service of the province and of certain sums required from the lottery fund for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2010, and recommends the same to the Legislative Assembly.

Please be seated.

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, when a second or subsequent set of estimates is to be tabled, section 8 of the Government Accountability Act requires that an amended fiscal plan be tabled. Accordingly, I wish to table the 2008-09 quarterly budget report for the third quarter, which serves as the amended fiscal plan. This quarterly report has already been provided to all MLAs. I have also made the report public as required by section 9 of the Government Accountability Act.

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, the quarterly report tabled by the Minister of Finance and Enterprise provides the framework for additional spending authority for the Legislative Assembly and three departments of the government. I now wish to table the 2008-09 supplementary supply estimates. These will provide additional spending authority to the Legislative Assembly and three departments of government. When passed, the estimates will authorize an approximate increase of $128 million in voted expense and equipment/inventory purchases. These estimates will also authorize transfers of $7.4 million of the previously approved spending authority between departments.

Mr. Speaker, I also wish to table the 2009-10 interim supply estimates. These interim supply estimates will provide spending authority to the Legislative Assembly and the government from April 1, 2009, to June 30, 2009, inclusively. During that period it is anticipated that the spending authorization will have been provided for the entire fiscal year ending March 31, 2010. When passed, these interim supply estimates will authorize approximate spending of $9 billion for expense and equipment/inventory purchases, $581 million for capital investment, $50 million for nonbudgetary disbursements, and $409 million for lottery fund payments. Interim supply amounts are based on department needs to fund government programs and services until June 30, 2009. While many payments are monthly, other payments are due at the beginning of each quarter and the beginning of the fiscal year. Some payments are seasonal.

Government Motions

Referral of Supplementary Estimates to Committee of Supply

5. Mr. Snelgrove moved:
Be it resolved that the message from His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, the 2008-09 supplementary supply estimates, No. 2, for the general revenue fund, and all matters connected therewith be referred to Committee of Supply.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to concur with Government Motion 5, which is to refer the supplementary supply estimates to the Committee of Supply.

I think that what is also important as part of this process on supplementary supply – and I have put this idea forward a number of times with my colleague the Government House Leader, but I would also like to put it forward in the context of the supplementary supply referral request today – is that we do come up with some sort of a formula by which we can determine the number of days that we take out of this Assembly to debate supplementary supply in the future. We've had a very uneven history of this over the time that I've served in this Assembly, and we have reached the point of extreme difficulty for the Official Opposition and, I'm sure, the third party to be able to try and bring meaningful debate to supplementary supply estimates debates when we are looking at almost a billion dollars and, I think, last time 14 different departments. We were not able in the time allotted to debate each and every one of the ministries that had money added into its budget.

I would argue that is a requirement of this House that we do allocate enough time to thoroughly debate what is in front of us. I know that at the time the President of the Treasury Board and myself had quite an extended exchange on policy, and then later he took me to task as I raised this very same request for a formula for having wasted all that time on policy discussion. In fact, I think that was an important part of what we were trying to do. Who says that we're not allowed to discuss policy as part of this?

As part of my concurrence and, I'm sure, my caucus's concurrence with referring these estimates to Committee of Supply, I would ask the House to please consider developing some kind of a formula and, if I may, suggest that we look at something that would be more than one day's worth of debate if the amount were over a billion dollars or if more than six departments were involved in receiving additional funds.

Thank you for allowing me to add that into the concurrence motion on the referral. I appreciate that opportunity, and I'm happy to support the government motion.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, this is a debatable motion. Anyone else to participate?

The hon. Government House Leader to close the debate, or should we call the question?

[Government Motion 5 carried]

6. Mr. Snelgrove moved:
Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 61(2) the number of days that Committee of Supply will be called to consider the 2008-09 supplementary supply estimates, No. 2, for the general revenue fund shall be one day.

The Speaker: Hon. members, according to Standing Order 61(2) this is not a debatable motion, so I'll call the question.

[Government Motion 6 carried]

7. Mr. Snelgrove moved:
Be it resolved that the message from His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, the 2009-10 interim supply estimates for the general revenue fund and the lottery fund, and all matters connected therewith be referred to Committee of Supply.

The Speaker: Hon. members, under Standing Order 18(1)(a) this is a debatable motion, so if any member wishes to participate, please draw yourself to my attention.

There being none, shall I call the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Government Motion 7 carried]

8. Mr. Snelgrove moved:
Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 61(2) the number of days that Committee of Supply will be called to consider the 2009-10 interim supply estimates for the general revenue fund and the lottery fund shall be two days.

The Speaker: Under the standing order identified by the hon. President of the Treasury Board this is not a debatable motion.

[Government Motion 8 carried]

The Speaker: Before I call on the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests (reversion)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I know that we've had a couple of individuals join us in the gallery who are very interested in the debate that my hon. colleague from Calgary-Buffalo is about to launch into. Joining us in the gallery today is Laura Young, the president of the Grant MacEwan Young Liberals club. By the way, there is a Grant MacEwan in the fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre. I know there are others elsewhere as well, but we wanted to acknowledge Laura's presence here. Also, Zach Jeffries is joining her. He's a friend and supporter from Saskatoon. I'd ask if they could please rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 201 Traffic Safety (Vehicles with Unlawfully Possessed Firearms) Amendment Act, 2009

The Speaker: Well, now I'm happy to call on the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you for this opportunity to speak to Bill 201, which I had the privilege to introduce on February 18. My private member's bill, if passed, would give police officers the authority to impound a vehicle and suspend the driver's licence of a driver who was unlawfully in possession of an illegal firearm in a vehicle. The suspension and impoundment would occur immediately and last for 24 hours. In addition to charges laid and proven in court, there will be possible further fines of up to $25,000 or imprisonment of up to one year. For further offences an accused would face suspensions of up to five years or possibly even a lifetime ban from driving in this province.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

As recent events show, gun violence affects many communities. Albertans have seen repeated attempts by police forces, victim advocacy groups, and Legislatures – federally, provincially, and municipally – to stem the tide of violent crime. I hope this legislation can provide police with another tool to combat the scourge of gun violence. This act has the potential to deter individuals who choose to arm themselves before taking to the streets. These individuals must know that there will be immediate consequences if they drive around on our streets packing heat.

A string of recent tragedies in my own community and, indeed, across the province makes this bill more relevant and necessary than ever. Since 2007 Calgary has endured five very public gangland shootings. Neither innocence nor the conscious choice to not participate in gang culture is adequate protection from becoming a casualty of this siege. Casualties such as Keni Su'a, who was shot dead during a meal because he was an innocent witness to a gangland assassination on New Year's Day, are becoming more frequent. One of the most appalling incidents occurred in my own constituency of Calgary-Buffalo. On September 14 of last year Jose Neto, a Brazilian student, was blinded when he was an innocent victim caught in the crossfire. This event led Chief Hanson to explain how tired he was of politicians trotting out the same old solutions, banning or restricting weapons. "They're not getting it," said the chief.

Today I'm bringing forward a new and innovative solution, one that Alberta's police officers have rallied to support. The bill has received support in principle from the Calgary Police Association and its president John Dooks, who has been very supportive during the process of bringing the idea to fruition. It is also supported by Calgary's Community Life Improvement Council, which has voiced approval for Bill 201 through Barry Davidson, the executive director, a former law enforcement professional currently active in Calgary's inner-city community.

The bill is an attempt to use our provincial law-making power in a forward-thinking jurisdiction. As you know, there is a limit to what we as members can accomplish. Provincially we have jurisdiction over motor vehicle licences. Similar community needs have led to these types of amendments to the Traffic Safety Act so that we can control the solicitation of sex and habitual and dangerous driving practices.

Some of the ideas for Bill 201 came from an MPP from Ontario, Mike Colle. His bill was essentially trying to do the same thing. The legislation Mr. Colle proposed also takes dead aim at gun-toting gangbangers, attempting, as I am, to suspend their licences and impound their cars. I will point out that Ontario, like us, also has a victims of crime bill, yet they saw the need to pass a similar bill in Ontario to the one I am proposing. His bill has passed third reading there.

Bill 201 also has great personal importance to me for obvious reasons: I have been a victim of a drive-by shooting. Maybe – just maybe – if legislation like this were in place, things could be different. It is too easy to carry a gun in a car in Alberta. Again, I want to help police make it harder for thugs and gangbangers to carry weapons. After unlawful firearms, the ones with serial numbers removed or those in possession of known gang associates, I want to help police deter potential criminals to stop crimes before someone gets hurt. This bill is aimed squarely at those who would try to bring harm to others.

Provincially we do not have all the powers over firearm control, but we do have powers over motor vehicle licences. This bill, if passed, would give us another tool in trying to make our roads and streets safer. It is not going to completely eliminate gun violence, but it's a useful step forward. The people on the street that I've talked to, the lawyers I've talked to, and the rank-and-file police officers in our cities seem to think that this would give them an effective tool to reduce gang and drug crime.

It's too easy for an accused to say: "That gun in my car? I didn't know it was in my car. I borrowed the car. I didn't realize my trunk had three guns in it. I just lease the car." I'd like to take away those excuses. The sad thing is that given the state of the law, this excuse enables them to get off scot-free. Why are they driving down 17th Avenue with an unlawful gun in their car? Where are they going with that unlawful gun? This is not a measure to restrict people who have the legal right to carry guns, whether they're hunters, target shooters, or police officers. Bill 201 is aimed at thugs who shouldn't be carrying guns.

I'm well aware that private members' bills brought to this Assembly are rarely successful, but consider the good that can be accomplished when politicians of all parties work together. Just recently the federal government implemented tougher sentences for gang-related murders and drive-by shootings, legislation that was supported by all three opposition parties. Our provincial government passed victims of crime legislation that will hit criminals where it hurts, in the pocketbook. I was proud to speak in favour of that legislation, and my colleagues and I in the Alberta Liberal caucus were glad to vote in favour of the bill last year.

Still, call me a skeptic, but I have a feeling that some of the hon. members in this House are planning to vote against today's legislation. I got that hint maybe at the surprise press conference that was held this morning. They'll probably object to this legislation for one of the following three reasons: one, we can already accomplish the goals of this bill with the existing victims of crime legislation; two, we can't pass this bill because it falls outside provincial jurisdiction; three, what about the long gun? Won't it be caught up in this legislation? I'll deal with each one of these objections in turn.

First, the Victims of Crime Act. I've already indicated that this is an excellent piece of legislation, but it doesn't address the specific cases I'm trying to solve here today: gangbangers driving around with illegal guns. Let me offer a scenario. The police pull over a vehicle with three gangbangers in it. In the back seat of the car the police find an illegal gun. They lay charges under existing legislation. What happens? The gangbangers all deny that the gun belongs to them, and there's no conviction. Without a conviction the Victims of Crime Act is rendered virtually useless. It can't come into play.

I did attend with great interest the Minister of Justice's press conference today, where she stated that even without a conviction the Department of Justice could conceivably proceed civilly against individuals. Well, let me be the first to tell you something. The hon. minister, although I really do appreciate her efforts, is dreaming in technicolour when she believes that this will be enabled to happen. Just to repeat that because I'm serious here: she's dreaming in technicolour that we'll be able to get the people we're going after in this bill.

The way we need to effectively deal with this crime is by the legislation in Bill 201. If we continue to leave the bill as it is, it will not be able to go after the people who are driving around on our cities' streets. That's why we need Bill 201. It will close this loophole. This is why a similar bill passed third reading in Ontario even though they have a victims of crime legislation very similar to our own. It closes the loophole. Let's make sure that we do the same here.

What about provincial jurisdiction? Some of you will no doubt argue that this bill is in pith and substance a law directed toward criminal activity and should therefore be dealt with by the feds. But here in Alberta we've never been shy about the limits of our jurisdiction regarding the regulation on transportation and motor vehicles and how such regulation can enhance public safety. What we would be doing here in the implementation of this bill we have done before. We passed Bill 206, which allows the seizure of johns' vehicles. If we were really worried about it being outside of our jurisdiction, we would not have passed the Victims of Crime Act.

What I am saying here . . . [Mr. Hehr's speaking time expired]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, I'm not sure whether the chair heard you stating that you moved second reading of the bill. So if you have done so, please state that.

Mr. Hehr: Yes, I've moved second reading of this bill.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I was making my notes for this speech last week, I recalled being at a luncheon where the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere was the guest speaker. His comment was that, quote, the safety of our streets is one of the most important responsibilities of any government. This obviously rings true. Accordingly, it's my pleasure to join the debate on Bill 201. This bill is intended to give police officers new tools in fighting gang and gun crime in Alberta, and I support this intention. Specifically, this legislation would allow police to seize the vehicle of an individual if he or she is found to be in possession of illegal firearms as well as give police officers the discretion to issue a $25,000 fine to the offending individual and up to six months in prison.

Mr. Speaker, I fully support any reasonable measure that would prevent or hinder the activities of organized crime. However, while the intentions of this bill are undoubtedly noble, this legislation falls short of providing any additional tool that is not already in place. This past fall we saw a very important piece of legislation debated and passed unanimously in this Assembly. That, of course, as the Member for Calgary-Buffalo referred, was the Victims Restitution and Compensation Payment Act. This was amended to achieve what Bill 201 intends to accomplish. Our existing legislation takes into consideration all assets of crime, not simply illegal firearms and vehicles. This was a direct result of consultations between this government and community leaders, Alberta police chiefs, and Crown prosecutors. In fact, I spoke with police chief Rick Hanson last Friday about this very issue.

Let's talk about what our existing legislation also covers and how it covers every measure dealing with Bill 201, Mr. Speaker. First, Bill 201 proposes to allow police officers to seize the vehicle of anyone carrying an illegal firearm in it. However, under our existing legislation police officers can immediately seize a suspect's assets if they believe the suspect is involved in criminal activities. This is not limited to vehicles; it also includes houses, land, industrial facilities, cash, and unauthorized firearms and is also intended to effectively disrupt the activities of crime by removing the financial and material incentives to commit criminal acts.

Now, the Member for Calgary-Buffalo referred to a press conference earlier. I do have a copy of the press release today. It is in black and white, not in technicolour. It indicates that since this new law has actually come into place, we have seized $4.6 million of illegal profit taken out of criminal hands. That includes seven vehicles, one of which was even used to attempt to run down a police officer. For shame. The minister's quotation I wholeheartedly endorse: "This law has real teeth. If you are involved in criminal activity, you need to be aware that we have the power to come and take away your luxury SUV, your home or your bag full of drug money. You will lose that property." Now, to ensure that an individual's property is not wrongly seized, of course, there has to be due process, and in this case a court-ordered extension is required to hold the suspected proceeds of crime for more than 72 hours.

Secondly, Bill 201 seeks to impose a $25,000 fine for those charged with the possession of an unauthorized firearm. Currently the existing legislation allows for a fine of up to $10,000 to be levied against an individual if he or she fails to follow the orders of a police officer or the court. This, Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned earlier, is a broad application, not just to illegal firearms but to many aspects of crime. It may be assumed that by increasing the fine on a narrow basis, for example the possession of firearms, we would be increasing the financial deterrent to carry illegal firearms in this province. However, simply imposing a fine for one piece of the puzzle, illegal firearms, will have little effect on disrupting the activities of organized crime. A more comprehensive approach is required, and that is what this government has done.

Third, I must also add that not only does our existing legislation actively target organized crime; it also works to provide financial support to those affected directly by crime, the victims, who must always be our paramount concern, Mr. Speaker. At present all of the funds received from the sale of all assets and levied fines are directed to the victims of crime. Under our current legislation a property disposal hearing is held to ensure and to determine which proceeds of crime should be sold and how they would be collected.

This hearing is based on a civil standard of proof, which of course is a balance of probabilities, much less onerous than the standard in the criminal proceedings, which is beyond a reasonable doubt.

Fourth, Mr. Speaker, Bill 201 would allow a police officer to suspend the licence of an individual charged with carrying an illegal firearm. Now, looking elsewhere to the gun registry introduced by the federal Liberal government in the mid-1990s, a major flaw is that criminals aren't going to register their guns or worry about using an unregistered weapon in committing a crime. Similarly, I submit to this House that the suspension of a driver's licence is not going to deter a criminal from using a vehicle in a subsequent criminal act. Criminals will continue to operate motor vehicles, if they are in their possession, for their purposes.

Mr. Speaker, as a government we need to have, again, a comprehensive approach if we want to truly impair the activities of organized crime in this province. Such an approach, reflected by this government, has been conducted to the recommendations of the safe communities task force, chaired by a former Solicitor General, the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek in this Assembly. Since the final report was delivered to the then Minister of Justice, the Member for Calgary-Glenmore, this government has aggressively implemented new measures to deal with gangs and other criminal activity in our communities, and our Solicitor General has been strong.

These include an increase in nearly 300 front-line police officers province-wide, 42 new prosecutors in the city of Calgary – yes, us lawyers can do good, Mr. Speaker – 50 new probation officers with a total of 110 more over three years to enhance supervision of repeat offenders, and of course the Pathways to Housing program through the Alex Community Health Clinic in Calgary, focusing on taking Calgarians with mental health problems and addictions off the street.

I also wish to add, Mr. Speaker, that last year the Member for Calgary-East introduced a motion for the government to consider innovative tools in crime reduction. Our legislation does just that. It gives our courts and police officers powerful new tools to disrupt the activities of organized crime.

Now, I must also note that our legislation is supported by many parties throughout Canada despite what label you may have. The ideological underpinning, of course, is rooted in classical liberalism, with a small "l", as discussed in the writings of John Locke, Adam Smith, or Thomas Jefferson. Classical liberalism doesn't just deal with matters of economics but also addresses the principles for dealing with crime. Goodman, from the National Center for Policy Analysis, writes about substantive rights versus police powers for the state. "In order to prevent crime, catch and punish criminals, settle disputes and carry out other duties necessary to protect rights, every government will necessarily exercise police powers." Mr. Speaker, our government understands and employs this philosophy. Indeed, this is the underpinning of our existing legislation that we introduced last year.

Looking to other governments, Mr. Speaker, the B.C. Liberal government, to our west, also seems to understand this approach to crime, having hired additional police officers and Crown prosecutors and targeted gang activity. You'd think that such an approach would come from a Conservative government, but this is from a Liberal government.

As well, to our east many consider the most conservative Premier in Saskatchewan's history to have been Ross Thatcher, who carried the provincial Liberal label. Years after he left office, as a teenager I got to know one of his successors, who espouses several of the philosophies of classical liberalism, including principles of fiscal responsibility and crime control, not gun control, not dissimilar from our government's positions on these issues. This is far different from the gun registry policies of the past federal Liberal government that simply waste money that could be otherwise put towards crime reduction and law enforcement.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the Member for Calgary-Buffalo seems to get this whole philosophy about crime control, and I have to commend him for taking this initiative that affects citizens in his constituency and throughout the province. Clearly, crime is an important issue to him, and he sees this as something that crosses party labels. I have to personally thank him because I saw him take an interest in my constituency, as he mentioned, with the murder of Keni Su'a, when I saw him at the memorial shortly after the year turned for 2009.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, my submissions are not meant to be unduly caustic or self-serving but to commend the member for taking crime as a serious issue not just in downtown Calgary or in downtown Edmonton but throughout our entire province. My submission to this House is that our existing legislation already provides measures for our courts and police to bring violent criminals to justice, and as such I will not be supporting Bill 201. I look forward to the rest of the debate, but I encourage all of my colleagues to take a similar approach. I will table my references to the page.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise in support of Bill 201 in second reading and to make mention at the beginning that I would think that the death of 43-year-old Keni Su'a, an innocent bystander who was shot in a gangland-related slaying at a restaurant in the constituency of the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont on New Year's Day in 2009, would prompt the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont to want to support this legislation and all legislation that has to do with making our streets safer, our citizens safer, innocent people safer, and cracking down on gangs, guns, and crime.

Classic liberalism, as the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont knows because he used to consort with Liberals in his home province of Saskatchewan, as has been raised in this House before, does take a holistic approach to serious matters, social and otherwise, and I don't think you'd find anybody – well, I don't know that I can speak for everybody in this House. But I don't think you would find many people in this House who would disagree that we have a serious enough problem with guns, gangs, and crime in this province in our two big cities, Calgary and Edmonton, on at least one First Nations reserve, Hobbema, that we need to tackle it in any way, I think, that we can see fit.

It's not only this province. My colleague from Calgary-Egmont made reference to the efforts of a number of other provinces in his rather quickly delivered 20-minute speech in the space of 10 minutes, but it goes to the issue that gang violence, fuelled by the drug trade and enabled by the ease with which gangbangers can transport their weapons of death and destruction from point A to point B, is an issue in many cities across this country, in many locations across this country. It is a big enough issue, in fact, that the federal Conservative government brought in antigang legislation just last week.

It is an issue that all of us should be concerned about, whether we are Liberals, Conservatives, New Democrats, members of any other political party of any other stripe or jurisdiction or philosophy or ideology in any part of this country because it is a problem that affects Canadians in many locations across this nation. It affects people in Toronto, and so it is that the MPP from the Ontario riding of Eglinton-Lawrence, Mike Colle, brought in a bill very similar to Bill 201 in the Ontario Legislature and wrote a letter supportive of the MLA for Calgary-Buffalo's Bill 201. It is a problem in Vancouver. It's perhaps an even bigger problem in Vancouver than it is in Calgary and Edmonton.

It is a problem that we need to do something about. It is a problem that our constituents, whether they live in Calgary-Egmont, Calgary-Currie, Calgary-Montrose, Calgary-Cross, whatever constituency, expect and demand that we do something about. They have every right, Mr. Speaker, to make that demand and to have that expectation. They expect and demand that they live in a safe and civil society in this country, in this province, and they expect and demand of their elected representatives at the municipal, provincial, and federal levels that we take steps to make that happen.

This bill in and of itself is perhaps not – I don't know – the omnibus legislation that the Member for Calgary-Egmont or perhaps other members in this House would like to see, but this bill, I believe, fits very nicely with other legislation, whether it be Bill 50 passed last year in this House, the federal legislation that is now up for debate in the House of Commons, other legislation probably yet to come, in making it more difficult, less desirable for gangbangers to try and transport their illegal, unlawfully possessed firearms in a car of which they have possession at the moment – it may not be their lawfully possessed car either – from wherever they were coming from to wherever they're going to to commit their mischief and their mayhem and very possibly cost innocent lives or at least quasi-innocent lives in the process.

The Member for Calgary-Egmont knows that Keni Su'a was an innocent bystander. I suspect he also knows that 22-year-old Aaron Bendle was not a gang member. He was merely someone who knew 22-year-old Sanjeev Mann, who was the third victim – or perhaps I should say the first victim – of that New Year's Day shooting in Calgary-Egmont.

Calgary police say, quite rightly, that you no longer need to be a gang member to get killed if you happen to be caught in the crossfire of the ongoing gang war that has been raging in my city since 2002 at least, in which 20 homicides have occurred, eight in 2008 and another three on New Year's Day of this year. All you have to be is somebody close to a gang member. That could be close in the friendship or associative sense, or it could be close, as in the case of Keni Su'a, in the sense of physical closeness, having been in the wrong place at the wrong time.

Mr. Speaker, the people of Calgary, the people of Edmonton, the people of Hobbema, the people of Alberta, the people of Canada deserve protection from that kind of wanton violence, and this Bill 201 will add to the tool kit of police officers in this province and to the criminal justice system to deal with these people who do not respect our laws.

You know, I feel like I'm picking on my hon. colleague from Calgary-Egmont today. It's true what he said, that criminals aren't going to register their guns. I get that. They're not going to comply with the gun registry. But he seems to be implying that if we pass Bill 201, we're going to cause some kind of huge and very costly problem in the province in Alberta where gangbangers won't willingly give up their Acuras or their souped-up Mazdas or whatever they happen to be driving. That's not the issue. We take the vehicle, we take the licence if we find the gun in there.

If the police officer has reasonable and probable grounds for believing an offence has been committed, an offence of having this unlawfully possessed firearm in the car, the officer can require the surrender of the driver's licence and can detain the vehicle on the spot for 24 hours. The licence is suspended for 24 hours. The vehicle is impounded for the same length of time. There is an investigation or there can be an investigation at that point as to whether the vehicle actually belongs to the person it was seized from or whether, in fact, the vehicle had perhaps been stolen from its rightful owner, in which case it can be returned right then to its rightful owner. Upon conviction the vehicle can be taken away permanently. The licence can be suspended for one year, I believe it is, on the first conviction, five years on the first subsequent conviction, and indefinitely on the second subsequent conviction.

Mr. Speaker, by merely taking away a person's driver's licence, you do not guarantee that that person will not drive again. We know this very well, tragically well, in the case of multiple repeat impaired driving offenders, yet we do not stand in this House and talk about the need to stop taking away the licences of drunk drivers just because they won't comply. We need to put in our tool kit whatever tools we can that will help us to maintain a safe and civil society for the protection of all law-abiding Albertans. I don't know whether partisan politics is being played here or not, but to say that this bill is somehow inadequate or not up to the task is, I think, either misinformed or disingenuous.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to rise to speak to this bill, and I assume that there will be more debate. I appreciated the comments from the Member for Calgary-Egmont, and I'm genuinely sorting this out as we go along.

I think this is a bill worth serious support, and from what I've heard so far, I plan to support this bill. To me this bill is common sense, and I have to wonder why it's running into opposition. That's why I listened to the comments from the Member for Calgary-Egmont, and I hope I'll hear other comments on the issue. It strikes me as common sense, and I have to ask us as MLAs why we wouldn't support this bill. I don't understand why this bill doesn't sail through the Legislature, frankly, with unanimous support, so it's a bit of a surprise to me that there is so much push-back on this particular bill.

One of the things I've wondered is if it's because it has links to the gun registry issue, and maybe there's a reluctance to support this particular bill because it legitimizes the gun registry, and we know how strong resistance to the gun registry is. [interjections] Okay. I'm getting some indications from members that, in fact, that is the case, that the opposition to the gun registry is why they aren't supporting this bill. Gee, I think that's regrettable. I think putting ideology ahead of public safety is impractical. [interjections] I'm getting the Minister of Municipal Affairs challenging me on this and the Member for Foothills-Rocky View and others.

Frankly, I think if we put this to a vote of the citizens of Alberta, this would sail through because the citizens of Alberta consistently, actually, support the gun registry, and the citizens of Alberta consistently express concern. [interjections] They do. If the members wish, I will table all kinds of polling. All right. We've gotten a real debate going here. I think it's shameful or sad that we're in a Legislature that's putting ideology ahead of public safety.

There are plenty of circumstances, as the Member for Calgary-Buffalo listed, where we already allow police officers to seize vehicles, the cases of johns soliciting prostitutes. We certainly allow it if there's somebody impaired or suspected of being impaired, so I don't know why we wouldn't do it in these circumstances.

Now, the question and the points made by the Member for Calgary-Egmont around Bill 50 are, I think, worth bringing in here. What Bill 201 proposes isn't just granting the right to seize a vehicle but also suspending a driver's licence. I think we need to put ourselves in the position of a police officer. You know, you're on patrol on Saturday night in Fort McMurray or Calgary or Edmonton or Medicine Hat or anywhere else in Alberta, and there's a vehicle that you see, a suspicious vehicle. Maybe there's a traffic violation by this vehicle. Maybe it doesn't stop at a red light or is speeding or racing or something. You pull the vehicle over as a police officer, and you run the driver's licence through your computer. It comes up that the owners of the vehicle are suspected gang members, so you approach the vehicle. You go through the process. You get the driver's licence and so on. You search the vehicle, and you find guns. You ask the driver, "Whose gun is this?" They say: "Oh, I don't know. I didn't know there was a gun here." You ask everybody else in the car, and they all say: "Gee, what gun? What a surprise. We didn't know there was a gun here. Gee, it doesn't belong to any of us." So you as a police officer are caught. You know, the laws restrict your capacity to act.

Now, I would like police officers to have the capacity to do in that situation exactly what they would be able to do if they had pulled over a john soliciting for sex or if they had pulled over an impaired driver: seize the vehicle. And I would like them to also have the capacity to immediately seize the driver's licence of the person behind the wheel. I think that sends an important message, and I think it actually would discourage this kind of criminal behaviour. It might push some of this business of gang activity to other jurisdictions because suddenly as a gang member – maybe you're a dial-a-dope operator or something – you run the risk of losing your car and losing your driver's licence. Without a driver's licence there's a whole series of other problems.

Let's say you're a member of a big gang, Hells Angels or something, and you're operating, you know, sort of just around the fringes of the law. Mostly you're doing legal things, but maybe you're laundering money, or you're doing sort of the business side of the deal. Well, losing your driver's licence is just, as the Member for Calgary-Currie said, one more tool in the hands of the justice system to help deal with this problem. I think it discourages crime. I think it would help us put a damper on this outburst of crime that we're experiencing in this province.

I think it's worth mentioning, Mr. Speaker, a couple of references here. One is a position paper done by the Canadian Association of Emergency Physicians. It speaks directly to the benefits of the gun registry, and this is just from January 2009. I quote from this paper, which I can table if we wish. It says: "Since the implementation of Canada's gun registry in 1995, there has been a significant reduction in firearm-related suicides and intimate partner homicides." Then they go on. They actually demonstrate this with various charts, clearly showing over the last decade a decline in gun crimes.

I would also ask all members of this Assembly to consider the letter written just about a week ago, dated February 26, 2009, from the president of the Calgary Police Association, specific to Bill 201. He goes through his reasons for supporting Bill 201. He begins, "On behalf of the police officers in the Calgary Police Association," so he's speaking on behalf of police officers, and I know there are members of this Assembly who once were police officers. He concludes by saying, "As a citizen of Alberta I am asking the members of our Legislature to unanimously support Bill 201." I don't know why we wouldn't. I don't know why we wouldn't support giving the police another tool to constrain criminal activity, criminal activity that's most focused among gangs.

There's a rise of gang activity in this province, and it cuts right across society. It's not limited to any particular ethnic group, and it's not limited to any particular community. There are undoubtedly gang members operating out of the constituency of Edmonton-Riverview. In fact, there's a particular stretch of my constituency which is generally highly educated, white collar, but there's a particular stretch where organized crime is flourishing. I want to give those police officers, the officers who I've gone on foot patrol with, every chance I can to make this community safer.

So I just don't understand. Despite the eloquence of the Member for Calgary-Egmont, I don't understand what the resistance is here except that I think what's telling is the jeering and heckling I got when I mentioned the gun registry. I think what we're seeing here, Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier, is the triumph of an ideology and politics over public safety and common sense. I think that's regrettable, and I think everybody here should search their souls a little bit.

You know, I go back to my days as a university undergraduate. A good friend of mine lost her brother at an intersection because there was a little bit of a set-to, people on both sides got out, and he ended up being killed. There was nothing the police could do about it. In the end nobody was convicted.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to thank the hon. member as well as the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont did for his initiative in bringing forth the bill. I know that there are very laudable and worthy objectives in Bill 201, sponsored by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, but I'm afraid that I must oppose the legislation. I hope that I can convince even the Member for Edmonton-Riverview that there are some very valid reasons for opposing this legislation.

I think that the hon. member is quite right in seeking to have more tools to attack serious crime in our communities involving the use of firearms. According to the news reports, the hon. member is also particularly aiming his legislation at the activities of criminal gangs, and I would support endeavours in that direction.

However, the measures proposed in Bill 201 include permitting police officers to suspend driver's licences and allowing the courts to impose a fine of at least $2,500 and up to $25,000 upon a conviction under this proposed section of the highway traffic act. In addition, the bill proposes to allow a police officer to seize the vehicle of anyone carrying illegal firearms in that vehicle. Again, according to news reports purporting to quote the sponsor of the bill, the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo believes that the bill is going to quell gang violence and that it will save lives by stopping gangsters before they hunt down their rivals and gun them down in the streets and that it will stop a criminal before they kill somebody, not after the fact. So the measures are aimed, as I understand them, at preventing crime, particularly gang violence.

Now, I know the hon. member is someone who believes in the rule of law and order, as I do, both of us being members of Her Majesty's bar and officers of the court and who have taken an oath to uphold the laws of Her Majesty the Queen in Canada. I think that all of our constituents would agree that we should do whatever we have within our power to make our streets safer, to rid them of the low-life vermin who use violence and firearms to terrorize their fellow citizens, to enrich themselves, the parasitic criminals who seek to prey upon and profit from crimes perpetrated on their fellow citizens. All of us agree with those objectives, but I believe that this bill is an ill-conceived instrument to accomplish those ends.

Mr. Speaker, my opposition to the bill rests on two broad bases. First, I oppose this measure because it casts the net too broadly in the proposed offence under section 5, where it defines an unlawfully possessed firearm as "any firearm whose possession is not authorized under the Firearms Act (Canada)." Now, the danger is that this broadly worded definition is going to result in the seizure of vehicles and levying of fines against not only the purported targets of the hon. member's bill, the violent gang members and the vermin and the parasitic criminals, but also honest, hard-working, and law-abiding citizens who are long gun owners as well.

To illustrate the point, I'm going to give a couple of examples. A couple of weeks ago I got a letter from the RCMP which notified me that my firearms licence had to be renewed. Being a law-abiding citizen, I sent in my renewal form, and I duly got back my new five-year firearm certificate. Even though I may not agree with the outrageously expensive long gun registry, I did so because that is the law.

Now, what would have happened had I as a law-abiding citizen neglected or forgotten to renew my licence and next fall I was pursuing my quarry of Anas platyrhynchos, which is a mallard duck, for those who are not biologists, and I was stopped for a check by a peace officer? Then I suppose that under the proposed bill I would or could lose my licence, I could lose my vehicle, and I would be subject to a minimum fine of $2,500 and up to $25,000. Would that be just? Well, I think not.

To use another example, my late mother lived on a small farm until she died in her 80s. She always had firearms, like a .22, for dealing with gophers, coyotes, raccoons, and other pests. What if she neglected to register that weapon and carried it in her pickup and was pulled over for speeding, as she was on a few occasions? She could have been subjected to the loss of the vehicle, the loss of her licence, and a large fine. She wasn't a gang member. She wasn't about to deal drugs. She wasn't about to rob a bank or to threaten or to murder someone, yet she would be caught by the provisions of this bill because she was technically carrying an unlawfully possessed firearm.

Mr. Speaker, I respectfully submit that there are thousands and thousands of Albertans, perhaps even a majority of gun owners, who have neglected to register one or more of their firearms and perhaps don't even have a firearms licence but have perfectly legitimate uses for them, including hunting or controlling rodents and vermin. Why should we include them in the broad ambit of a bill which is ostensibly aimed at gang violence?

As the Member for Edmonton-Riverview stated, you know, how could we object to seizing these vehicles when they have unlawfully possessed firearms and are driving down the street? Well, what if I were out with a couple of my hunting buddies in the fall and I was unaware of the fact that they, riding with me in my vehicle, had an unlawful weapon? I suppose I would have to check with the firearms registry to make sure every gun they brought along on the hunting trip was registered, number one. Number two, I'd have to make sure that their firearm certificate had not expired. The consequence of not doing that and finding out that somebody in my vehicle had an unlawfully possessed firearm would be that I could lose my vehicle, I could lose my licence, and I could pay a very large fine.

Now, if the hon. member had worded this bill in such a way that he was targeting restricted or prohibited weapons under the Criminal Code of Canada, then I might be disposed to support the legislation. Under the Criminal Code of Canada restricted weapons include weapons like handguns, and prohibited weapons include weapons like sawed-off shotguns, fully automatic weapons, snub-nosed handguns, machine guns, grenades, and so on. Criminals seldom use long guns, like hunting rifles or shotguns, in the commission of their crimes. Typically they use handguns, which are easily concealed and easily smuggled into the country. Mr. Speaker, to simply include in the broad net of the bill someone with a shotgun or a .22 rifle who may happen to not be in compliance with the federal long gun registry would create a gross injustice upon an already gross injustice, so I cannot as a matter of principle support it.

The second point that I want to make is one to reiterate what the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont has already stated, and that is that the government already has legislation which enables a seizure of vehicles or other property which are instruments of criminal enterprise. The government amended the Victims Restitution and Compensation Payment Act in 2008, which empowers police officers to immediately seize vehicles and all property that has been or may be used to commit a crime and, after judicial process to have that property sold, deprive criminals of the means to further their criminal enterprises. This is much more broadly worded legislation, that gives wide powers but, at the same time, doesn't ensnare the honest, ordinary gun owner. This act has received broad support from the citizens of Alberta. It's doing its job. As has been mentioned, there's been a considerable amount of seizures already that have resulted from that. The legislation, in short, Mr. Speaker, goes above and beyond what is proposed in this Bill 201.

Mr. Speaker, again I would like to commend the hon. member for his willingness to support, as he has in the past, strong measures to fight gangs and criminal activity. However, it is for these two reasons – because this bill is such a blunt instrument and could ensnare law-abiding long gun owners and, secondly, because the measures proposed in it have already been superceded by the Victims Restitution and Compensation Payment Act – that I cannot support Bill 201, and I urge hon. members to defeat it at second reading.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: According to my speakers list here the next hon. member is the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you. It's a pleasure to be able to rise to speak today to Bill 201. I have just a couple of points to make. Generally speaking, I think it's been said before that this is a bill that requires some consideration. It has different implications, and it is something that our caucus is still thinking about and reviewing, but it's certainly worthy to have it carried forward for additional conversation and additional analysis and examination by this Assembly. For that reason I will definitely be supporting this bill passing through second reading.

Basically, let me start with my concerns about the bill because I sort of struggle with a couple of concerns, although at this point I'm still leaning towards supporting it. I suppose the primary concern comes a little bit from my background as a lawyer who's, you know, kind of hung up on that whole due process issue, sometimes to the annoyance of those people around me when I start to go on about it for too long. Nonetheless, it is one of those things. There is no question that what this bill will do is it will take property from someone who has not yet been convicted of a crime. Of course, it's really quite fundamental that we distinguish between someone who is charged and someone who is convicted of the crime. So that, of course, is a concern.

The other thing that is a concern is that whenever we talk about crime prevention, we always talk about adding more police officers, giving police officers more tools, and while 9 times out of 10 I will actually support those initiatives from a very sort of pragmatic community-based approach, I'm also very conscious of the fact that we don't do anywhere near enough work on prevention. We don't do near enough as a community, as a society, and certainly as a province on the issue of prevention. So I get a little bit frustrated when I hear all this hardline stuff, "Oh, we've got to go after the gangbangers, blah, blah, blah," when you know, at the same time, that there are root causes to gang behaviour that go back a good decade before someone is actually that gang member in a car with an illegal gun, a long gun or anything else. Those root causes are things that we don't do a very good job at, so I really want to put it on the record that that is something that always needs to be addressed first.

Just this morning, for instance, there was a discussion on the radio about the prevalence of people suffering from FAS involved in the drug trade. Think about what we could do with respect to our health care system and with our child protection system and with our family enhancement supports that we are not doing in any kind of a proactive preventative way to reduce crime. People will think that I'm reaching here, but really the research will say that I'm not, that in fact a comprehensive public daycare system results in reduced crime activity. No, I'm not reaching because that's what the research says.

Having said that, though, let's go back to this, which, of course, is an immediate tool that we're talking about. I have a bit of a concern about the idea of taking an item from somebody before they are convicted. At the same time, I think that we do need to balance issues, you know, and there's no question that civil liberties always have to be balanced against public safety and sometimes the collective good. It is a constant balance that we need to do as we legislate and discuss issues, and neither is absolute. I think that the member who is proposing this bill has done a very good job of outlining the very significant public safety issues which are related to the prevalence of people driving around in cars with illegal guns. If you put a car and an illegal gun together, it's not likely to end well for folks, notwithstanding all those law-abiding long gun toters who apparently are adhering to the law even though, actually, they're not. The fact of the matter is that it's a very dangerous combination.

We have in this Legislature, as has already been noted, made this kind of assessment before and engaged in this balance before in that we can take away people's vehicles, if we suspect them of impaired driving, before they've been convicted of the same. Why? Because there's a public safety issue. We can take away or impound people's vehicles who are engaged in prostitution. Again, that's before there's a conviction. We can do these things because we've decided from the perspective of public safety and prevention that the balance falls on that side of things.

So it surprises me to see all these Conservatives saying that it's totally reasonable to take a car away from somebody who, you know, may be a wonderfully joyful, lovely person who's just coming home from a baby shower and had one too many glasses of wine. You know what? They're still driving impaired maybe, so you take the car away. It doesn't matter how nice they are or what their intention was or if they knew that they were impaired or not. It happened, or it might have happened, and it's a public safety issue.

Frankly, the same thing is in play if someone is driving around with an illegal gun. Researcher after researcher and criminologist after criminologist will tell you that guns increase crime, that guns increase the acuity of crime and the likelihood of people being injured or killed, particularly in urban situations. That's why we don't have anywhere near the fatality rate due to guns in Canada, where we have control over guns, that they do in the States, where they don't. That's just the way it is, folks. It may annoy you, and you may think: geez, we're all great people. You know what? The gun laws that we have do allow for people to engage in the lawful use of guns, and that's the law that is the law of the land. Whether you agree with it or don't agree with it, we all as members of the Legislature need to respect the law that is the law of the land, even if we advocated against it before it came into place.

I think that the Member for Edmonton-Riverview is exactly correct: the real issue here is that we're talking about guns versus prostitution or impairment. There's a sensitivity in this Legislature about the issue of guns, but I think that there's also a sensitivity in the communities that are being racked by gun violence and the fatalities and injuries that are occurring there as well.

As a result, at least making serious note of the concerns I have around the distinction between a charge and a conviction, I think this is something that really does need to be better discussed and warrants more consideration and potentially being open for amendment through a meaningful, good-faith attempt on the part of all members of this Assembly to get the best piece of legislation through this body that balances the needs and concerns that have been identified by all the speakers to this point. So I certainly hope that the bill will proceed from this current stage.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Ms Redford: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think this is a very interesting discussion. I have a few prepared remarks. I gave some thought to this over the weekend and have been very aware of the work that my hon. friend from across the way has done on this legislation. I want to thank him for bringing this bill forward.

I guess that as of tomorrow I will have been elected to this Legislature for a year, as will many of us. I think that for all of us what we have learned in this year and what we take very seriously is listening to the concerns of our constituents and the stakeholders on the issues that we care about. I think that probably there are some issues that we talk about in this Legislature as new members that we didn't think we would talk an awful lot about before we got elected, but as we learned more about the issues and as we thought more about the implications of certain pieces of legislation for our communities and the people that we represent, I think that a lot of people have become more passionate about those issues. For me that has certainly been the case.

We have learned a lot this past year in the Safe Communities Secretariat about what the community thinks about what it means to be safe, and what I've learned more than anything is that it's a very emotional issue for people. People want to see leadership from government on this. They want to know that the people in this Legislature live in the communities that they live in. They want to know that the people who are here understand the impact of what is going on in communities with respect to crime.

What I find troubling – and I've had a number of conversations and listened to a number of speeches, not just today but in the past year and from many people who've been elected to public office – is the tendency to speak in platitudes about these issues. I think there are a number of points that have been made today by members who have spoken in support of this legislation and members who have advised that they will not be supporting this legislation. Ironically, they're the same points: communities don't feel safe, we need to do something about it, seizing cars is a good idea, we want to make sure that there aren't illegal weapons, and it's really important to try to stop gang members from committing crimes.

What we know is that Bill 50 has accomplished that. Our core values around this are important. We're on the right track. Bill 50, which was unanimously supported in this House – and I certainly thank the opposition for supporting it – has allowed us to achieve what we're talking about wanting to do today. We're already doing it. The Victims Restitution and Compensation Payment Act was introduced with the specific intention of targeting profits and instruments of crime. It dismantles and disrupts the business; it allows us to seize, hold, and sell property connected to criminal activity. As of this afternoon we have seizure orders for seven vehicles, including a car that was used in an attempt to run down a police officer.

Now, there may be people that quibble as to what the ultimate impact of this legislation will be, but, Mr. Speaker, we have seized over 4 and a half million dollars' worth of saleable property in less than two months. Lawyers with our civil forfeiture office are currently working on files to seize a number of other vehicles, including a Hummer, a BMW, a Lexus. At least one of these vehicles belongs to a person who is known to police as a drug dealer. More than one of these vehicles was carrying a loaded firearm. This is already the essence of the law that is in place in this province.

I want to say, because I've been involved now in a number of discussions in this House where people throw out the police and say that the police support this and that the police support that, that as a government the Solicitor General and I as the Minister of Justice have worked very closely with police agencies across this province. What they have told us is that this is the legislation, Bill 50, that they needed to do their job. We passed this in this House, and they're able to do their job. The message is that if you are involved in criminal activity, you run a real risk of losing your property and anything else that you might use, instruments of crime, in carrying out your criminal activity, and I have to say again that our police partners asked for this law. They deserve every possible opportunity to seize weapons that are the arsenal that gangs currently have.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that as we move forward and as my friend from Calgary-Egmont has said, it is very important as we approach gang issues and criminal activity that we do not respond in an emotional way to it, that we do not look for the emotional buttons that will get people in the community excited in a way that doesn't allow us to take a step back and think strategically about how we are approaching this issue. I have to say that that is a lesson that I have learned this year. I think that everyone who takes on new responsibilities wants to see change happen immediately. We want to get everything right at once. But what I will say is that with respect to Bill 50 we did act quickly, it is strategic, it is comprehensive, and I believe that we got it right.

The face of crime in Alberta is often drug related, and drug crime breeds violence. The sale of illegal drugs is the bread and butter of gangs. You can't stop a dial-a-doper from peddling drugs by suspending his driver's licence. You can't convince me of that. Our laws take away his car. Our laws take away their guns. Our laws take away their houses, that they're using to make and grow these drugs in.

There's no cheap and easy fix when it comes to crime, but government is committed to putting a meaningful set of changes into place. Our legislation, Bill 50, which is now the law of this province, is a very important part of that commitment. It expands and extends the scope of powers already available to police and to prosecutors under the Criminal Code. Police have embraced this approach. They support the streamlined civil procedure that allows these powers to be used faster and more effectively. Vehicles transporting weapons are already prime candidates for restraint and forfeiture. This is the reality of what we now have in place. We can target organized crime.

Eliminating rivals is part of how gangs do business. Firing guns in public places is part of how they do business, and innocent people are getting caught in the crossfire. We know that, and as a Legislature and as a government we've responded to that. We've seen success already. We're going to stay the course. This law exists to ensure that people who are participants in criminal activity run a risk of having valuable property taken away from them.

Mr. Speaker, under this act, the crime victims compensation and restitution act, the property and the profits gained from that criminal activity will be used to repair the harm that is caused to victims of crime in this province.

In light of the reasons that I've stated, I cannot support this bill today. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Strathcona.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I am pleased to have the opportunity to support my colleague's Bill 201, the Traffic Safety (Vehicles with Unlawfully Possessed Firearms) Amendment Act, 2009. This bill is designed to be proactive; it's designed to be preventative. It's designed to take guns away from the offenders before the offence actually occurs, and that is its strength. It could work very much in concert with as opposed to Bill 50. A considerable amount of what Bill 50 is about is compensation for victims of crime. What Bill 201 attempts to establish are preventative measures that would not require victims of crime to be compensated because of its early detection and removal of a prohibited weapon. While it's extremely important to provide compensation for victims, being proactive and preventative is considerably more important, and that's what Bill 201 attempts to do.

Now, for those members who don't believe that Bill 201 in its present format does the job, provides police with another tool which they have indicated that they want to see, and if they felt so strongly supportive of Bill 50 alone, why wouldn't they, then, have provided unconditional support for this amendment to the Traffic Safety Act which would improve the police officers' opportunities for removing illegal weapons?

It concerns me when we ignore the fact that we have procedures in this House. We have first reading, we have second reading, we have Committee of the Whole, and we eventually with support have the approval of the Lieutenant Governor, and the bill is proclaimed. The sense I get today and ever since this bill was introduced is that government members aren't willing to go through the entire procedure. They aren't willing to make the amendments that would potentially sharpen this bill. We've heard examples of concerns about long guns being seized. Well, if that's the concern that you have, introduce an amendment and restrict it to handguns if you feel that's going to protect law-abiding long gun owners, but don't just simply throw out the procedure because it has been brought forward by a member of the opposition. Be sufficiently open minded to work with the bill and try and improve its outcome.

The very day that we were asked in the House, "Should this bill proceed to second reading?" we had two individuals, so-called young Tory guns, say no. It's important to note on the record that those two young guns were the member who spoke first, the Member for Calgary-Egmont, and the Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, who thought it was quite amusing to say no to a bill that was designed to protect individuals and remove illegal weapons. [interjections] There was a smirk, followed by a no, followed by knowing smiles. That was sufficient.

Then today we have further undermining action taken by the Minister of Justice, the Member for Calgary-Elbow, to hold a press conference basically explaining what a wonderful bill Bill 50 is and how it's a stand-alone bill and how it couldn't possibly be improved upon although Bill 201, the Traffic Safety (Vehicles with Unlawfully Possessed Firearms) Amendment Act, 2009, doesn't suggest that Bill 50 is not a good bill. That has been recognized by the hon. Justice minister. We all voted for it. We thought it was a good bill. It was a good start, but no one ever suggested that that was the end and that there would be no further discussion. It concerns me, as I say, when partisan politics get in the way of good legislation.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Bufferlo is a hard-working individual who did not allow a shot, a bullet, to end his life. He did not allow it to provide shortcomings for his life. He overcame that circumstance that so many of us could not imagine. Not only did he overcome that initial injury. He went on through university, and he got his degree in law through much hard work. Here he is in our Assembly as the elected Member for Calgary-Bufferlo, trying to prevent what happened to him from happening to other members, and it seems that for very partisan reasons – the idea didn't come from the government side – this bill is being questioned and its legitimacy is being questioned, and therefore the mover of the bill's legitimacy to bring forward protective legislation supported not only by police officers but by community associations is being held up for question but not in a complete circumstance, without the opportunity to provide amendments, not the opportunity in the Committee of the Whole to make adjustments, to carry on the debate to a higher level, to achieve what Bill 50 and what now Bill 201 have as intent, and that is to make our communities safer.

With regard to legal versus illegal weapons, registered versus unregistered, trying to muddy the waters and suggest, as the Member for Calgary-Nose Hill mentioned, that his sort of packing grandma would potentially be arrested in a rural situation and lose not only her .22, if that's what she was using on the varmints, or her .303 or her shotgun, whatever her rifle/long gun preference was, suggests that police have no discretion. It suggests that there's no such thing in Alberta as judicial prudence. This whole business of the reaction to the long gun registry, which police forces across this province have found to be an extremely important tool – at least for those guns that were registered, they were traceable and they were trackable. If a person were accidentally to forget to have that licence to own that weapon renewed, if they've had a responsible hunting career to this date, the chances of losing their vehicle and getting an increased fine are ludicrous. No judge, no police officer is going to pursue a legal gun-owning individual whose licence has expired to have all these terrible losses taken against them.

I don't know how many people have ever faced an individual with a loaded weapon, but I have. I doubt very much that that weapon was legal. It had a short stock. It was of a military nature. It had a clip on the outside of the barrel. It was a pump-action, short-barreled shotgun. I came across it and the individual who was carrying it in his backpack in Cataract Creek. Obviously, my only arm was my golf pencil for registering individuals, but because of the safety of the individuals who were entrusted to my care . . . [Mr. Chase's speaking time expired]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and join debate on Bill 201, Traffic Safety (Vehicles with Unlawfully Possessed Firearms) Amendment Act, 2009, which is sponsored by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo. The purpose of this bill is to help address weapons-related crime in our communities by seizing the vehicles of persons transporting illegal firearms. In addition to seizing vehicles, Bill 201 proposes to suspend the offender's driver's licence as well as issue a fine of up to $25,000 or imprisonment for up to six months. Essentially, this bill is attempting to target crime by hitting criminals where it hurts, their wallets.

Mr. Speaker, I certainly applaud the intentions and goals of this bill. After all, ensuring the safety of all Albertans is of paramount concern for this government. However, I feel as though the goals of this bill are already being addressed by a more comprehensive piece of legislation, the Victims Restitution and Compensation Payment Act. This act was amended and passed by this House last session and clearly allows for the seizure of property used to carry out criminal activity. This can include assets such as cash, guns, vehicles, and even property. These assets can then be sold, and the proceeds from these sales can be used to support the victims of crime. In this way the Victims Restitution and Compensation Payment Act goes beyond the measures proposed in Bill 201 by providing compensation for victims.

Mr. Speaker, with this in mind, it's important that we have a firm understanding of the property disposal hearing procedures. This is the process that determines the fate of property seized during criminal arrest under the Victims Restitution and Compensation Payment Act. Simply because an asset is seized by a court or a police officer does not necessarily mean it ultimately becomes the property of the Crown. A property disposal hearing determines whether or not a property victim or respondent is entitled to any of the seized property, any proceeds from restraint of property, or any compensation for having been deprived of property.

When property is seized, police officers are required to obtain a restraint order. A restraint order is a court order that grants police the authority to seize and hold property that may have been used during an illegal act. This restraint order must list a date, time, location for a property disposal hearing. This date can be set for no later than 45 days after the seizure. Mr. Speaker, it helps guarantee that property seizure disputes will be addressed by the courts within a reasonable period of time. This order must include a section pertaining to the identity of respondents. A respondent is defined by the act as "any person who appears to be a property victim or who may have an interest in the property that is . . . before the Court." If a respondent fails to attend the property disposal hearing, all property seized is deemed to become the property of the court.

The Victims Restitution and Compensation Payment Act clearly outlines the roles and responsibilities of both the court and the respondent once a date for the hearing has been arranged. It's the responsibility of the court to establish that the seized property is an instrument of illegal activity. This guarantees that only property directly involved with criminal activity is seized at the time of arrest. Furthermore, it becomes the responsibility of the respondent to prove to the court that they were not involved in carrying out the alleged illegal act with the property. As well, they must establish that they could not reasonably be expected to know that the property was used in carrying out an illegal act. These responsibilities help to ensure there is a fair and balanced approach to dealing with seized property.

Mr. Speaker, in cases where the court determines that the seized property was not used in carrying out an illegal act, the court must immediately release the seized property. In addition, the court has the discretion to order that compensation be made to any respondent for any losses that may have resulted from that seizure. It helps to ensure that individuals who have had property seized are not unduly punished or have property seized that's not connected to criminal activity. In this matter it only aims to target the tools of criminals.

In cases where the property disposal hearing determines that the seized property was, in fact, a tool of criminal activity, there are several potential outcomes. In some scenarios the court may return the seized property to the respondent. This most likely would occur in cases where the respondent was not directly linked to the criminal activity. The property could be critical to the well-being of family members linked to the respondent. In other cases the court could determine that the seized property be sold and that the proceeds be distributed amongst the respondents. This could occur in cases where several individuals have made claims on the seized goods.

The final outcome of the property disposal hearing is the court ordering the sale of the seized property and declaring that all of the proceeds go to the government. Mr. Speaker, in these cases the funds obtained through the sale of seized property would be used to support the victims of crime. I can see no better use for the tools of crime than to have them sold off for the benefit of those who have suffered directly from criminal behaviour.

I applaud the hon. member for the spirit and motivation guiding this bill. However, I feel as though the spirit is best addressed through current legislation, the Victims Restitution and Compensation Payment Act. Moreover, unlike Bill 201, this piece of legislation provides for direct compensation for victims of crime. Therefore, I will not be voting in support of 201, not because of the ideals it tries to project but because these ideals have already been acted upon by this House.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I look forward to the remainder of the debate.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I, too, would like to have some words on the record pertaining to Bill 201, Traffic Safety (Vehicles with Unlawfully Possessed Firearms) Amendment Act, 2009. I have some questions as I've listened to the very good debate that has been going on in the House up until this point. What's happened to Alberta? Why are our streets not safe? When I moved here 40 years ago, I thought I had sort of probably moved into a bit of heaven, and now actually, quite frankly, probably for some of the first times in my life I am actually afraid to go out into particular areas and, particularly, alone at night. Probably I could handle a one-to-one; however, a gang I certainly wouldn't be able to.

I think that Alberta probably is a bit of a reflection of what's going on in society today. Certainly, violence has increased. There is no question about that. It isn't just in Alberta; certainly, it is throughout the world. However, I question some of the mentalities that we're creating here in Alberta, and then put a gun on top of that, and we have some very disastrous results that go along with that. I'm thinking of advertisements that I see in Lethbridge. It's called, I think, Rumble in the Cage or any other name that that might be. In it we throw a pugilist and many who think they are to actually beat the whichever word you'd like to put in there out of each other. This is considered sport and certainly is a viable commercial enterprise because there is money in it. Blood, gore, and guts: it's great. I would suggest that everybody go to watch one of these Rumble in the Cage sorts of entertainment, but please don't watch the two men in the cage pummel each other. Look at the faces of the people in the crowds that are watching this type of entertainment. I think it would scare you. With some of those faces, put a gun on top of it, and I think you'd be doubly scared.

The purpose of the bill, of course, as brought forward by my colleague from Calgary-Buffalo, who, as I think we all know, certainly has a personal interest in this, is to promote public safety and suppress conditions that lead to criminal activities by adding to the Traffic Safety Act to make it an offence to “drive on a highway a motor vehicle in which there is an unlawfully possessed firearm.” I really do believe that Bill 50 is probably one of the progressive bills that has been well received in this House, certainly passed easily, and so it should have been. I really believe that this is an adjunct. I think it’s just that little extra that adds to Bill 50. It will help us contain the gang violence that we see.

As has already been recognized in the House, certainly the federal government has recognized that gang activity is out of control not only in Alberta but in our country, our country that sort of prides itself on being a peaceful nation, which is why we made our military have a peaceful arm that, of course, we’re recognized throughout the world for. Even the feds have recognized how out of control these gangs are.

The bill is based on Ontario MPP Mike Colle’s Bill 56. Actually, after second reading it was referred to the Standing Committee on Justice Policy. We don’t particularly have one named specifically like that. But as my colleague from Calgary-Varsity has mentioned, I really believe that this bill is worth putting through to the Committee of the Whole stage. I do believe that there are other people that want to speak on it. I think that in a way I’m disappointed because I do believe that I hear and see in this House a bill this good and a bill this right being divided along partisan lines, and that to me is a big disappointment. This is a private member’s bill. Depending on the draw, of course, we all have private members’ bills. I really believe, because it’s the rule of the House, that we can have nonpartisan voting on private members’ bills. From what I have heard so far, I find it disappointing that this is going to go along partisan lines when, in fact, it really, really doesn’t have to. We all have the ability to have a free vote on a private member’s bill.

As I’ve mentioned, I think Bill 50 does accomplish some of the same goals, but I really believe that this is the adjunct, that it can be a little bit more specific.

Given the ongoing number of crimes in our communities – and I know that Edmonton, Calgary, and Hobbema have been marked as an example – some of our rural areas are certainly not immune to this kind of behaviour with guns. Unfortunately, I think some of the smaller communities, certainly mine included, have a lot of violence with knives. Last summer a young man was shot and killed in Calgary-Varsity, very close to my colleague’s constituency office. So crime isn’t in areas. I think that my colleague from Edmonton-Riverview said that he has a strip in his constituency. These are the kinds of crimes that, if they are specific to an area, certainly spill over into any area. It isn’t just necessarily related to a particular district or downtown. Urban versus rural: I don’t think that that really is an argument. This is throughout our society and, certainly, throughout our province.

Gun ownership in Canada. There are almost 7 million firearms registered in Canada. As of March ’07 more than 1.9 million Canadians held firearm licences, and 1.6 million owned at least one registered firearm: 76 per cent owned a rifle, 67 per cent owned a shotgun, and 12 per cent owned a handgun. Owning rifles, perhaps shotguns for geese and ducks – I certainly can understand that when we have such a large rural population, we would have those kinds of numbers.

Restricted firearms refer to nonprohibited handguns, semiautomatic long guns, and other firearms restricted by the Criminal Code. Some handguns, sawed-off long guns, fully automatic guns, and other firearms are prohibited by the Criminal Code. Then the question is: why are they increasing? Why do these even exist in our society? We have to have something specific to go after these guns, particularly, of course, the ones that are illegal.

My colleague from Calgary-Nose Hill, I believe, used an example of he and his hunting buddies. I really believe that he and his hunting buddies wouldn’t even register on any kind of a statistical analysis of people with guns. Surely, he sort of expressed his fear that he might be picked up because one of his hunting buddies wouldn’t have registered their rifle. I could not believe that my colleague from Calgary-Nose Hill would possibly associate with anybody who would have a gun that wasn’t registered. That would be beyond my comprehension. If he was picked up and he’s not sure that his hunting buddies have guns that aren’t registered, it would create an inconvenience, and it would certainly be probably a small embarrassment. However, I am sure that it’s a situation that would be cleared up exceedingly quickly. His buddies – I’m assuming that none of them would be lawyers – would register their guns, and they would continue to be able to shoot and play big man in the outdoors.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’m pleased to rise this afternoon to join in the debate on Bill 201, the Traffic Safety (Vehicles with Unlawfully Possessed Firearms) Amendment Act, 2009. I do want to commend the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo for his intention in bringing this bill forward. He certainly highlighted an issue that’s important to all of us and important to all of the members of our communities. He also needs to be commended for his vigorous pursuit of trying to get his bill passed. I certainly, like many of the members here, was privy to a number of e-mails, that were sent through his innovative means of getting them sent out to members of this Assembly, of those that support this piece of legislation, and it was good to dialogue with those people.

In fact, having dialogued in getting those e-mails and having dialogued with the Minister of Justice on Bill 50 and having talked to a few other members in my constituency of Calgary-North Hill, after explaining what Bill 50 does and the approach that this government has taken, a lot of these people that had sent me these e-mails asked me the question: well, why is this bill coming forward, anyways, if it’s already taken care of? You know, I did get quite a bit of correspondence on that. In going back and forth with those constituents, there was a clear understanding that this government has already acted on this bill and that in essence it’s redundant.

Not only that, Mr. Speaker, Bill 50 from last session, the Victims Restitution and Compensation Payment Amendment Act, is actually a more comprehensive approach than this Bill 201. It allows police to seize property that has been acquired as a profit from crime and also gives them the ability to apprehend any property or instrument that they believe has been used or is likely to be used to carry out a criminal act.

Now, Mr. Speaker, my major concern is not so much the intent of this bill but the means it uses to accomplish the end, and I’m not sure it’s justified. The core of the bill is solely aimed at illegal firearms as defined under the Firearms Act. We’ve heard members of the opposition stand up and talk in support of this bill and not once use the words “gang” or “violence on our streets.” In fact, the Member for Calgary-Varsity, for whatever reasons, decided to digress into why some members didn’t support this bill at first reading. I think that it’s a privilege of being a member of this House not to do so, and I do so on a very principled basis. I believe that Bill 50, as brought in by this government last session and unanimously passed by this House, I must add, is a more comprehensive approach that deals not just with a broad definition but deals with the act of committing violent crimes.

Now, should we take someone's firearms or vehicle away from him because they possess a firearm, broadly defined, or should there be some sort of test, some sort of mechanism put in place that says that the police need to have suspicion that this instrument has been used or is intended to be used in a criminal act? To me that's due justice, and I think that's very important in our system.

I wish that we could come into this Assembly and propose very simplistic solutions to very complex problems. The hon. member over there will have his turn to get up and speak to the bill, but I think it's very important that we look at this and realize that this government has already acted on this issue and is continuing to act and is already seeing results.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I think it's very, very important when we bring forward legislation to this House that we go through careful due diligence. If there's one thing I've learned since almost a year that we've been elected to sit in this Legislature, it's that there are always unintended consequences to every piece of legislation. It's part of our role in this House to bring those forward.

Now, if I was truly convinced that this bill was going to be a tool that would take guns out of the hands of criminals and save the lives of innocent bystanders and other individuals, I would certainly support it. But I'm not sure that when you balance that off with the fact that this bill takes the right – the Member for Edmonton-Riverview mentioned that he wasn't sure where this opposition was coming from and that it could be possibly because of the long gun registry. Well, this is an extension. This is a logical extension of, quite frankly, a piece of legislation that I don't agree with and that a significant portion of Albertans don't agree with. This is legislation that's being built off something that fundamentally I disagree with to start with.

The simple fact, Mr. Speaker, is that we have an organized crime and gang problem in this province. We don't have a gun problem. People kill people, not guns. There are numerous ways in which these criminal acts can be perpetrated on innocent bystanders as well as those involved, and it doesn't just focus around guns. Now, that's not to dismiss the significance of these guns getting into the hands of wrong individuals. What I'm suggesting is that this government has already brought in legislation as part of its safe communities task force and the work being done there that takes a more balanced approach to the individual rights of citizens in Alberta in trying to do the most effective job of dealing with the violent crime and gang issues that we see on our streets.

Mr. Speaker, it's for those reasons that I'm fundamentally opposed to this bill. I'm not opposed to the intent, or the end, and I will do whatever I possibly can in my role as the Member for Calgary-North Hill – not Nose Hill, I might add, Member for Calgary-Varsity – to work with the Member for Calgary-Buffalo to advance the cause of disarming our gangs and disengaging them so that our streets are safe. However, I will not support a solution that I believe is simplistic to an issue that is very, very complex.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I look forward to more debate and would urge all the members of this Assembly to look at this in a much broader lens. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to stand in support of Bill 201 as the whole purpose of the bill is to make Albertans feel safe when they are out and about, doing their shopping and enjoying life on the street and in the park. This bill should be supported by all sides. Everybody agrees that we should be tough on crime. Albertans are crying out loud for the legislators to be tough on crime. My colleagues here, you know, have been advocating that we should be tough on crime. Yet, you know, I don't know why there is so much opposition to this Bill 201. This is another, I think, nail in the coffin of gangsters, in the coffin of criminals. I think we should all support this bill unanimously and pass it without further delay.

This bill is only about making the life of criminals hard, giving our law enforcement agencies more tools to deal with criminals, to deal with gangsters. This will only make life difficult for the criminals, not for the law-abiding citizens of Alberta. There has been concern raised that anybody caught with a gun in their vehicle will be put in the slammer, and they will have no legal recourse to prove them innocent. Everybody is innocent, you know, until they are proven guilty. They will be given that opportunity to prove themselves innocent. Every day citizens are stopped with expired insurance, with expired drivers' licences. You know, maybe they forgot their pink cards at home, and they are stopped on the road, and they are given tickets.

The Deputy Speaker: I hate to interrupt the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall. It's 5 o'clock, so Standing Order 8(1) requires us to move on to the next item.

5:00 Motions Other than Government Motions

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Infrastructure Spending

501. Mr. Doerksen moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to continue judicious and aggressive spending on infrastructure projects that are aligned with long-term government priorities.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a privilege for me to open debate on Motion 501.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, if I may interrupt you, I just got a note here that asks for us to revert to Introduction of Guests.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, and thank you very much to my hon. colleague for allowing us to introduce. I did send two notes, actually, to the Speaker, so I guess the first one got lost.

I'm delighted to welcome to the Assembly and to introduce to you and through you to all members of this fine Chamber three individuals who make my life much more media savvy. Joining us in the public gallery today is Tamara Gorzalka. Tamara runs my Facebook page and is working with David Streat, who's also in the gallery. David is working on making my website more interactive. We're looking at moving into some forum work and policy development. The two of them are working together and pushing that boundary in new media, and I really appreciate their support. [interjection] I can tell that somebody is jealous in here, so we're happy to help out. Of course, they're accompanied by the ever wonderful Peter Marriott, who is my constituency assistant. I would ask the three of you to please rise and accept the warm welcome of the House.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, please continue.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will begin again. It is a privilege for me to open debate on Motion 501. While on the surface or at first glance Motion 501 may be considered to deal with motherhood issues for this province, I believe it is significant that we stay on course and turn what will be challenging times for most jurisdictions into opportunity for Alberta. As Alberta moves confidently through this current period of economic uncertainty, Motion 501 aims at taking advantage of the opportunity before us today.

In the past decade unprecedented growth in this province has required significant infrastructure investment. This government has invested in new or renovated hospitals, schools, roads, and other capital projects in our communities, anticipating and responding to Alberta's unprecedented growth. Motion 501 is intended to focus on projects that will benefit Alberta and sustain economic growth for the long term.

Anticipating growth, this government established a detailed plan that identified priority infrastructure needs for the next two decades. Alberta's 20-year capital plan laid out short-, medium-, and longer-term infrastructure plans and priorities, and this government has committed to invest an average of roughly $6 billion annually for short- and medium-term objectives of the plan.

Mr. Speaker, today's economy provides the opportunity to accelerate the priorities of our plan. Whereas six to eight months ago it was difficult to find contractors ready to take on more work, today the workers and the contractors are available and looking to go to work. In addition, lower input costs resulting from lower commodity prices make the cost to undertake infrastructure projects more affordable. In my constituency, and I expect across this province, there have been numerous municipal infrastructure tenders contracted well under budget: several mid-size paving tenders bid and awarded at 20 to 30 per cent below cost estimates, an arena tender bid and awarded at one-third below the budgeted estimate.

Now is the time to get bang for the infrastructure buck, so to speak, and provide needed and important opportunities for Albertans to stay in the workforce. The economic stimulus provided by continued investment in infrastructure by this government today is both timely and significant. Prudent infrastructure spending in today's economy will provide jobs that keep Albertans on the job.

Mr. Speaker, Motion 501 is not about reckless or cavalier spending. Alberta faces uncertainty on the revenue side of the equation. However, today's economy provides us the opportunity to get more work done with less dollars. This motion advocates prudent investment based on sound budgeting principles for Alberta. Judicious and aggressive investment in infrastructure speaks to me of focusing on higher priority projects, and this motion supports the continued scrutiny and review of our priorities. Infrastructure spending must be balanced against affordability and support projects that are sustainable within our fiscal plan.

There will be opportunities to further stretch Alberta's investment by partnering with municipalities and other jurisdictions on projects that are aligned with our priorities. I know of some that would be completed for half the cost to the province as a result of today's economy and of municipalities offering to partner with the province of Alberta on projects on our list. Mr. Speaker, the building Canada initiative of the federal government will likely be an opportunity to further stretch Alberta's investment.

Motion 501 urges the government to continue judicious investment in projects that build communities, enhance competitiveness, and add to the strategic development of Alberta's infrastructure requirements for the future. These include roads and highways, hospitals and schools, and other projects important to further developing our energy sector and environmental sustainability.

Mr. Speaker, while the duration of the current economic slowdown is uncertain, Motion 501 would have this province emerge from this challenging time in a stronger position than ever before. We are privileged to live in a province that is in a strong financial position. Alberta is debt free, we have the lowest overall tax regime in Canada, and we have money in the bank. This government has almost $14 billion in our sustainability and capital funds that can relieve budget pressures and be expended to continue judicious and aggressive investments in priority infrastructure projects, projects that build our capacity to support the growth that is expected in Alberta for generations to come.

This motion supports the continued strategic development of the province of Alberta. I ask all hon. members here today to vote in favour of Motion 501. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the leader of the third party.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I want to provide my next-to-unconditional support for the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, who had the foresight to put forward Motion 501. Motion 501 follows in the historical footsteps of great individuals like Franklin Delano Roosevelt, or FDR as he was affectionately known, as he tried to pull America out of the worst depression it had ever experienced. Similarly, it has shades of what President Barack Obama is trying to do right now by investing in infrastructure, in public works, in putting money into investments which will reap rewards for years to come. It's for reasons like this that I have my support without reservation for Motion 501.

What I would like to suggest is prioritizing the public infrastructure that needs to be built, the areas where we're likely to get the most bang for our buck. In doing so, I would point out how important it is to have infrastructure that supports public education. The average age of schools throughout this province is now in the area of 41 to 42 years. We've seen schools in Calgary, Marlborough elementary, come very close to a roof collapse, which, fortunately, was structurally examined while the children were out and repairs were able to be made. In my own constituency of Calgary-Varsity Brentwood school two summers ago suffered very great damage due to leaks in the roof. First, it was tiles that came down in the library, and those tiles contained asbestos. Then in the second rainstorm the entire ceiling of a hallway, fortunately on a weekend, collapsed. The wires holding the ceiling buckled as the roof came crashing down in the hallway. Had there been elementary children present at the time, there is no doubt that there would have been injuries.

So let's start with an investment that is going to pay high dividends in the future. Let's start with schools. Let's recognize, for example, that in the Calgary public board alone the infrastructure deficit now is in the neighbourhood of $630 million because money, for whatever reason, even in times of good fortune through royalties and nonrenewable resource revenues, has not been spent.

As the hon. mover of the motion noted, now is the best time to spend to get the economy going again. Take advantage of the fact that we have workers who, unfortunately, have been displaced by oil sands projects. Let's make a sad circumstance into a positive circumstance by turning their skills to the repair and the construction of schools. Let's take advantage of the fact that with the downturn in the economy, supplies for construction are less expensive. People are making bids, private processes but public traditional bids, for construction that are considerably lower than what we've experienced.

Let's learn from what we've seen with the building of the southeast hospital, where the cost of that building tripled because it was delayed. It went from an original estimate of approximately $500 million to very close to $1.5 billion, and that is with a reduced building, without a mental health ward. We've seen examples of, and the minister of health has talked about, the wisdom of shelling in hospitals for future usage. Well, I'm suggesting that given this Motion 501 that says, basically, full speed ahead on public infrastructure, let's get the economy going, let's do the right thing for years to come. What it's suggesting is that instead of building shells of hospitals, like the Mazankowski institute or the Peter Lougheed in Calgary or the not sure whether it's going to be completed or at what time hospital in Grande Prairie, let's take the energy from Bill 501, and let's get on with the building.

The government has boasted that thanks to its following the Liberal's idea of what we called a stability fund – the government chose to call it a sustainability fund, but I'm not going to argue over the wording – we have approximately $7 billion in that fund. So let's prioritize where we're going to build. Let's build the schools first. Let's build the hospitals. Let's build the public infrastructure that we need, postsecondary institutes. Let's build where our investment is going to bring us a threefold return. In the case of hospitals we're being proactive. Let's build the seniors long-term care. Let's do what the Auditor General suggested we do back in 2005 and be more responsive for the type of facility and the care that we provide for seniors.

Let's finally finish off the twinning of highway 63 up to Fort McMurray. As the former critic for Infrastructure and Transportation I would love to see that highway twinned. It serves our economic purpose, but it also saves lives. While we're at it, let's go down to Medicine Hat. Let's look down in Lethbridge. Let's get on with the process of twinning highway 3. We've talked about the economic value of our north-south access. Let's talk about the economic value of our east-west. We will soon be receiving legislation from this House talking about making TILMA successful. If we want to make TILMA a success, let's start with highway 3. Let's get those goods flowing back and forth. Let's provide stability and sustainability for the economics of southern Alberta.

For years we've concentrated on the wealth of the extraction of resources in the Fort McMurray area. We've created a boom, a Klondike rush mentality, which has not been sustainable. Here we have a chance. We can do it with the labour that's available, with the materials that are available. Let's take a negative circumstance and turn it into a positive one.

I am so pleased to see this government recognizing the importance of investing in public infrastructure. My caution is: don't do it as a P3 because P3s take us into debt for 32 years. We have no idea whether we're going to be able to pay those bills at the end of 32 years. What I am saying is: let us go back to the dependable, traditional style of building, pay as you go.

If you've got the money, build it now. Now is the time to build as our economy goes deeper into a recessionary period. We hope not to get into the types of depression that were suffered throughout the world in the Dirty Thirties. We have a chance to benefit from the opportunity that has been presented. Not only do we have a sustainability fund of approximately $7 billion; we also have a capital fund. I don't want to be accused of saying: let's drain the funds. But I am saying: let's be strategic. Let's prioritize. Where are we going to get the best investments? As I've indicated, in my top three priorities for investments I start with schools, public and postsecondary, go to hospitals, and then on to roads.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise and speak to Motion 501. Now, Motion 501 says, "Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to continue judicious and aggressive spending on infrastructure projects that are aligned with long-term government priorities." I'm going to be supporting this motion. I'm going to be supporting it, but I have some reservations.

I just want to start with some of the language, which I think is a little misleading. That the government is going to "continue judicious and aggressive spending on infrastructure projects" assumes, Mr. Speaker, that the government has been judicious and that it has been aggressive, and I think that's not really putting the case exactly the way it is. I think it's pretty clear that the government has allowed a very severe infrastructure debt to pile up in this province, perhaps in excess of $40 billion, to correct infrastructure deficiencies, to bring it up to date, and to build new infrastructure for growth.

I also have a little trouble with aligning it with the government's long-term priorities because that covers things like carbon capture and storage and so on. Since the government's priorities are muddled and misguided, having more spending or continuing present spending on those priorities is a problem.

The reason I'm going to support this motion, Mr. Speaker, is because it does talk about the need for infrastructure spending in a period where the economy is in decline. If you look around the world, you'll see that governments are embracing spending on infrastructure as an important part of fighting the deepening worldwide recession that we are facing, and governments around the world have turned their back on the traditional conservative mantra that in times of recession you have to cut your spending. Of course, what we've seen is the history in this province during the last recession, probably considerably milder than the one we're now facing, where the government slashed to the bone, and still the implications for people are echoing throughout our society, and the damage that was done has just begun to be repaired.

Now, the government finally got the message that it had to do something about the infrastructure deficit at the peak of the oil boom in this province. They were spending a premium of up to 50 per cent more for infrastructure projects at that time. That was because they didn't spend when prices were lower for labour and for materials and when people needed work. Now we're getting back into that situation, and now is the time when we should be spending on infrastructure to stimulate the economy and because it's more economic to do so. Prices will be coming down, and it is the time to do that.

If you look at what the government is doing, unlike governments in the United States or the federal government or other provinces or governments in Europe or anywhere in the world, for that matter, this government has failed to embrace its responsibility to stimulate the economy, and it's a business-as-usual approach.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, not only are they going to continue with just the current level of spending on infrastructure; they've actually made some serious cuts. We've already announced the demise of the Green TRIP program, that was going to bring $2 billion in spending to transit and transportation issues in municipalities in this province. I think they're going to spend slightly under $200,000, but they've cut it from $2 billion. This is exactly the time that we should be making that spending. Far from increasing their infrastructure spending, in fact they're cutting it already by $1.8 billion from what had previously been announced.

But they're keeping that biggest boondoggle, carbon capture and storage, with $2 billion for that, Mr. Speaker. That is their prize cow. It's a sacred cow for them, but all it represents, frankly, is a subsidy to some of the biggest polluters on the face of the planet with public money. I think that if carbon capture and storage, which is purely experimental and needs a great deal of work to make it work, is going to be an approach to temporarily landfill your carbon instead of reducing your emissions, then fine, but let the polluters pay. Let the people who are producing the carbon pay for that. We should not be forcing the taxpayers to do it. We've called it a subsidy, and it is.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, what we've announced are some other proposals that I think are far more innovative and far more effective. We'd take a billion dollars of that carbon capture and storage money and invest it in a green revolving fund that could be used to invest in retrofits and alternate energy applications for homes, for small business, for farmers, and for every public building and facility in the province. When they retrofit their buildings, they'll get savings on their power bills and on their water bills. They can use those savings to repay the loans that they get from that fund. Now, that will produce 10 times the jobs per dollar invested than the government's carbon capture and storage investment, and it will actually reduce CO₂ emissions, unlike carbon capture and storage, which just landfills the carbon. It will create jobs, it will reduce our energy consumption in a very significant way, and it will actually cut the amount of CO₂ that this province is putting into the air.

The second proposal we made with a half a billion dollars of that $2 billion was to create a new research council similar to the Alberta Research Council but dedicated entirely to the research, development, and commercialization of alternative energy solutions. There are literally hundreds of businesses in this province that are waiting for new technology and for support from this government to get involved to help us solve our CO₂ and climate change problem. Those businesses need to be supported with research and development, and we should be commercializing that research, Mr. Speaker, and making it available. We think that a good place to put that new research council would be in the city of Calgary, where many of those businesses are located.

I want to talk a little bit about some of the other infrastructure proposals that we have made. We would restore funding for the Green TRIP program to the full $2 billion originally announced by this government, and we would make sure that public transit gets the kind of support that it needs to offset the use of automobiles, which would also have a significant reduction on the output of CO₂ from the transportation sector. I think it's a shame that the government has cancelled that program, and we would put the money back.

We would go further, Mr. Speaker. There's a new federal infrastructure program. According to the calculations we've made, Alberta's share is approximately $2.2 billion, which must be matched equally by the provincial government and by municipalities. But, unfortunately, municipalities are saying in Alberta and across the country that they have already invested heavily in infrastructure and that money that they've invested doesn't count, so they have to invest again. They don't have the financial capacity to do that. What we're saying is that the province should not only pony up its share but should cover the municipal portion as well and get that federal infrastructure money here and get it working for Albertans. The province needs to get behind that program and drive it and make sure that we're putting our people back to work.

Mr. Speaker, I think the twin problems of a faltering economy and growing unemployment and dealing with the environmental issue, particularly of climate change, are two parts of the same problem, and the solutions, by putting them together, magnify our ability to deal with these questions successfully. I see it not as a challenge as much as I see it as an opportunity for a government that has vision, wants to do something about the environment, wants to stimulate the economy, and make sure Albertans keep working. I don't see this government doing that. I think it's very unfortunate, and I think we're going to pay the price in one or two years. Families will lose their homes and people will lose their jobs because this government doesn't care and hasn't taken the right action today when it could have.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmor, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am standing today to speak in favour of Motion 501, introduced by the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks. The purpose of this motion is to encourage our government to continue investing in our province's infrastructure. Our government has always prioritized improving our hospitals, schools, bridges, roads, water and waste water, and other projects across the province. We campaigned on it, and Albertans overwhelmingly agreed, electing our government one year ago tomorrow.

Albertans want and deserve the best services we can offer, and in a time when our economy is slowing down, this investment would not only provide an excellent stimulus but would as well continue to invest the much-needed infrastructure that has been identified in our capital plan. By supporting projects that are ready to go, we are creating jobs and purchasing building material at a time when the prices of these commodities are lower than they have been in the past years. This could allow projects to come in at a lower cost than originally forecasted. Job creation ought to always be an important objective of our infrastructure investments. These projects would create jobs in the engineering, construction, and resource sectors, jobs for trained professionals, skilled and unskilled labourers alike.

Motion 501 encourages the government to continue pursuing projects, to improve our economic competitiveness, productivity, and trade, and to add to the strategic development of Alberta's valuable resource sector. As well, our government will continue to lead the way through meeting stringent environmental standards in our own infrastructure projects.

Motion 501 also promotes the strategic development of Alberta's energy resource sector. Our energy resources are an economic powerhouse for this province, and we need to ensure their viability for years to come. For example, investments in carbon capture and storage will be leading edge in dealing with our CO₂ but also in creating jobs in the resource industry. This motion does not in any way suggest that our government ought to increase spending excessively but continue to invest in projects that are ready to go and that make good economic sense at this time.

We are working within the framework of Alberta's 20-year capital plan and 2008-11 capital plan. Budget 2008 included funding for these ongoing plans. The 20-year capital plan maps out where we are going in the short, medium, and long terms. Through this planning, we know where we are and where we want to be. We understand what the infrastructure priorities of Albertans are, including our schools, health facilities, and our roads, to name a few. We believe it's important to set these goals, and we will meet them. This is no small task, but we have earmarked the funding, and we will get things done.

Our government has committed to investing an average of $6 billion annually for short- and medium-term objectives over the 20 years of the capital plan, which is no small investment, by any means. The 2008-11 capital plan increases infrastructure spending by $3.9 billion over the 2007 budget figures, to about $22.2 billion spending in total over this period. This includes spending for health facilities and equipment, schools, postsecondary facilities, provincial highways, housing, and municipalities, indeed, the priorities of Albertans. Coming from a municipal background, I can tell you that municipalities have never had access to these kinds of dollars that they have today, through the commitment of our Premier and our government, with the $1.4 billion investment to municipalities over the coming 10 years.

There are many exciting projects that our government can invest in to drive Alberta's competitive advantage. One of these is through the development of Port Alberta into a major North American inland trade and transportation hub, which I'm very happy to say will run through some of the municipalities in my constituency. We understand that highway and road upgrades are very important considerations. It is a tangible investment for all Albertans that use them on a daily basis. Some need upgrades sooner than others to ensure that they are safe for travel.

Mr. Speaker, the current economic challenges we are facing give us an opportunity to invest our money wisely and to come up ahead of the curve once they have passed. The intent of Motion 501 is to reiterate the importance of spending money on building and maintaining our province's infrastructure. This, indeed, benefits all Albertans. Not only would it mean better facilities and roads for their use on a regular basis but job creation at a time when it is getting increasingly more difficult to find a new job and cheaper costs for project completion as many building materials have had significant drops in their costs. These investments would strengthen the local, regional, and provincial economies. Our government understands that this would provide a much-needed economic stimulus at a time when it is very necessary.

I will be supporting Motion 501 because I believe these investments that we are making now will provide a boost to our province both now and in the future. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by the hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is, indeed, a privilege to rise and speak in support of Motion 501, that indicates: "Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to continue judicious and aggressive spending on infrastructure projects that are aligned with long-term government priorities." The sponsor of this is Mr. Doerksen. I commend him on the foresight of this motion.

In fact, I've enjoyed the comments of the member of the third party, the Member for Calgary-Varsity, who also spoke, as well as the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar. It's nice to see that at least three and I believe even one other speaker from the governing party have spoken on basically what they call Keynesian economics. [interjection] Well, it may have or it may not have, but I'm glad to see that your government is embracing this philosophy as it appears that the rest of the world has, including our federal government. It's nice to see that some of that reigns supreme and some of that ideology is shared by members of that party. One might ask what, in fact, the logic of belonging to that party is, then, if you believe in Keynesian economics, but then again I've long stopped asking such questions myself given that it is Alberta and whatnot.

Anyway, back to the motion at hand. What I would like to say is that I agree, in particular, that the timing of this motion is really outstanding. I believe that to build an Alberta, we've got to get off our roller coaster of spending when times are good and cutting when times are bad. We should more or less reverse those things. When times are in fact bad, that's when people need jobs. That's when infrastructure projects are cheaper. That's when the opportunity to open up a space at your university for people who need education is best because – guess what? – that's when the economy is slow. That's when people need to be employed. That's what government's role is. Government should have a role in building a society, putting people to work if they need jobs, opening spaces at school if people need a place to go to improve their education, and improving our prospects in the province for the future.

I did hear the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont who said that Keynesian economics is dead. Well, then again, if it's dead, I'll tell you what: someone has got to tell me because if you look around the world, it looks like it's back, baby, and back with a vengeance. I'm not sure what he's calling dead because it looks to me like it's had a rebirth, but, hey, I might not know what the definition of dead is. Maybe he'll enlighten us with what the spending world-wide is because, really, it amused me, that comment. I guess some people say that Elvis is dead, too, but he might come back again sometime in the future.

I'll get back to the synopsis of the motion. Actually, I'm reading a book right now. Yeah, it might surprise some people that I do read as my pastime, but nonetheless I do. The book I'm reading is called Hot, Flat, and Crowded. Really, what it goes into in the last third of the book are the commitments to what we're going to need as a society to move ahead: actual reducing of our global consumption of CO₂. That will take investments in carbon capture and storage, which this government has done, and it's going to take investments in our LRT lines, which I'm hoping this government will continue to do. It's going to take investments in opening up a greening of our grid.

I will note, in particular, to the Minister of Environment today that Ontario recently came forward with what I would call some very forward-thinking legislation that allows the grid to become a smart grid, that allows people to feed electricity back into the grid for resale, that allows those economies to grow in Ontario and green their economy. Maybe we'll see this type of legislation coming from the Minister of Environment pretty soon, hopefully in the next legislative session. I think that spending on those types of things right now when the economy is slow can lead us not only to a more prosperous interim but can really look to the long term where we can diversify our economy and really get on with the needs of the day, which the overriding issue is.

I believe that numerous people have had children in recent times. I know that many members on the opposite side have children, and the issue facing their kids in the long-term future is global warming. It's repercussions that may be felt. I've said before that I'm 40 years old; I'm probably going to make it out all right because I'm going to be dead by the time the repercussions hit. But for the other people who are still around, I tell you what: it's what we do today. Get those things going.

Anyway, I appreciate the spirit of this motion, and I would urge this government to try to do some of these projects to keep our people working, to maybe open up some spaces at universities for people, to green our economy and do some legislation like Ontario did on greening the economy that can start that aspect of the Alberta advantage or the Alberta – can anyone give me a heads-up on what it's going to be now? Anyone? No takers. Anyway, you get the point.

An Hon. Member: Alberta: the Liberals' dream.

Mr. Hehr: There we go.

Anyway, I really appreciate this motion and the intent of it, and I speak in favour of it. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater, followed by the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and speak to Motion 501. This motion encourages the government to continue judicious and aggressive investment in infrastructure projects that are aligned with the priorities of government. While Alberta's economy is certainly stronger than most, the current global economic situation will have impact on this province and on many jobs in this province, which is a major concern to many Albertans and many of my constituents. However, I'm pleased that Alberta is in a strong position not only to weather this downturn but to capitalize on it. If we choose to, we can continue to aggressively invest in building viable and necessary infrastructure projects to help the economy at all levels.

Investment in these infrastructure projects will keep Albertans – most notably, the engineering, construction, and resource fields and their suppliers – employed. This encompasses all professionals, from highly trained specialists to skilled and unskilled labourers. Our skilled labour and construction workforce has been built up with great effort and cost. By keeping people working, more Albertans will continue to be net contributors, taxes and otherwise. Investment in infrastructure projects will also help the students we are training find placements for their apprenticeships and employment as they enter the workforce. When the economy regains momentum, will we be quick to capitalize if our capacity has been diminished, diminished by labourers taking other jobs even outside of the province or after companies downsize, move, or even close their doors?

Keeping both experienced and inexperienced workers in the trades will also help us avoid another labour gap in the near future and improve the long-term sustainability of Alberta's economy. Our economy, jobs, and provincial revenues will not return to 2007 levels at the flick of a switch. By keeping Albertans working, we will be prepared to capitalize when the economy strengthens again, which will ensure the shortest possible downturn for Alberta. We need to work to retain as much capacity as possible to be positioned to generate economic development.

Mr. Speaker, another advantage to continuing aggressively investing in infrastructure right now is that it provides the greatest value for Alberta taxpayer dollars. By taking advantage of today's lower commodity, labour prices, and more competitive bids, we can complete these important projects at a lower cost to Albertans. Concentrating on projects aligned with the priorities of government will address many of the province's present and upcoming infrastructure needs. These priorities respond to the increasing need for more roads, schools, health facilities, water and wastewater systems, and other vital infrastructure. I'd like to emphasize that this motion does not encourage excessive increase in spending but, instead, a continued investment in projects that are shovel ready so that stimulus can be injected into the province's economy as soon as possible.

Strategic investment in infrastructure enhances Alberta's economic competitiveness, productivity, and trade opportunities. This includes projects that support industrial developments in Alberta's energy sector, such as the extraction and refinement of oil sands, which favourably positions Alberta in the global market. Good infrastructure is a competitive differentiator and an enabler for value-added projects in particular.

With infrastructure we can pay now, or we can pay later. It is important for future generations that we pay for as much as we can now at a lower cost. This is not an expense; it is an investment, an investment in Alberta and Albertans not only for us today but for our kids and our kids' kids. Mr. Speaker, this type of investment can not only have great benefit for specific areas of the province, such as Alberta's Industrial Heartland, which is located in my constituency of Athabasca-Redwater; this type of investment will also continue building the infrastructure we need to ensure Alberta's continued economic success by showing new industry that we'll provide the support and infrastructure they need to flourish. Other infrastructure initiatives, such as developing Port Alberta and working to position it as a major North American inland trade and transportation hub, would greatly enhance Alberta's long-term economic viability and global competitiveness.

Motion 501 proposes a continuation of strategic and aggressive investment in infrastructure projects, which would stimulate Alberta's present and future economy. This is a good motion for the three reasons I have outlined. Job loss mitigation: this will keep people working, and employed taxpaying Albertans are able to be net contributors. Retain our capacity: our industry and skilled labour are well developed, and we need them active to ensure a quick recovery from economic slowdown. Value for taxpayer dollars: we can get a great return on investment.

We need to look at the current economic situation not as a storm but as a glorious opportunity. I support Motion 501 and urge all members to consider its merits. I look forward to the discussion to follow.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: I just got a note that an hon. member from the opposition wishes to speak on this. I would like to recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I also rise in favour of Motion 501. We have been advocating from this side for more funding for schools, for bridges, for roads, and for expanding the LRT system not only in Calgary but right across the province. I know that during the cutbacks in 1993 we fell way, way behind on all the infrastructure spending. There should be continued focus on infrastructure spending. It's the right time to do it because of the costs of material and labour. I think we can save lots of money on that; our buck can go a long way in getting things done. I think that this is the right time to catch up on our infrastructure deficit. Let's not get piecemeal work done. Let's start it and finish it off. I remember that when the General hospital was imploded, we could have replaced the hospital for $180 million. Now the south hospital is costing $1.4 billion. That was the right time to do it.

I congratulate the government on this southeast leg of the LRT, but my concern is about the P3 way the government wants to go. I think we should have the government pay for the southeast leg of the LRT and not give the debt to our grandchildren 30 years down the road. Who knows what economic conditions we will be in by then.

I also look forward to funding for the airport tunnel. I hope seriously that we get the airport tunnel put in place. It's going to affect 250,000 Calgarians. If we build the airport tunnel now, it will be cheaper, and it will go a long way to cut down on the traffic jams in Calgary. If we don't build the airport tunnel, the airport will have only one access from the Deerfoot, and then we will have to travel all the way down to Country Hills. All the Calgarians from the southeast or Langdon or Chestermere or Strathmore, anybody coming from southeast Calgary will have to drive all the way down to Country Hills on a ring road and then get back to the airport. There are going to be big traffic jams, you know, if you don't build the airport tunnel. Deerfoot is already at capacity, and we need a better roadway system so we can move the traffic faster. That will help the environment, and that will help, I think, Calgarians to spend more time with their families. I think that will be a good investment for the future. There's no doubt in my mind that this is the right time to do it.

There have been some indications that there will be some funding cutbacks like on the Grande Prairie hospital and the south Calgary hospital. They have been kind of pushed back. There are rumors about that, but I think we shouldn't be pushing anything back. We should be just going full speed ahead, as the motion proposes. The Tom Baker cancer centre and, you know, all the renovations on the schools, we should finish all those. Even in northeast Calgary they were expanding the LRT to Saddle Ridge. I think the government should be funding all those projects so we could get them done on time and with a lot less cost.

For those reasons I support Motion 501. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have the opportunity to rise today and speak in support of Motion 501. The purpose of this motion is to encourage the government to continue judicious and aggressive investment in infrastructure projects that are aligned with the long-term priorities of the government.

Investing in infrastructure creates jobs and keeps people working. Providing strategic investment into shovel-ready infrastructure projects can create jobs in many different sectors throughout Alberta. Jobs created through infrastructure construction, whether it is highly trained professionals or skilled and unskilled labourers, strengthen the local and regional and provincial economies. Mr. Speaker, the Alberta government spends significantly more per capita on infrastructure than any other province or territory in Canada.

Alberta's population has grown significantly in the past decade. This unprecedented growth has required substantial infrastructure investment to build the necessary roads, schools, and hospitals. By 2028 Alberta's population is expected to increase by 40 per cent, or 1.4 million, to nearly 5 million people, requiring significantly more infrastructure investment. Last week I was reminded of just how quickly our population changes when my granddaughter Tory Lynne Sherene Johnson was born. Investing in key infrastructure priorities is important to all Albertans but is especially important to the future of our children and our grandchildren. Investment will help meet the future infrastructure needs of the province and will help attract business innovators and entrepreneurs to Alberta. It will have a ripple effect by creating new opportunities in communities all across the province.

Currently the Alberta government has about $14 billion set aside in the sustainability fund and capital account to cushion the province from losses in revenue and to support announced capital projects. This motion will help support the infrastructure projects that are important to my constituents in Grande Prairie-Wapiti and the province. Highway improvements increase the ability for Albertans to take advantage and benefit from our established and developing trade corridors.

Another infrastructure focus would be the strategic development of Alberta's energy resource sector. We will all benefit from the infrastructure projects that support the industry developments necessary for the development and extraction of oil sands and the refinement of developments throughout the province. Not only is it important that these infrastructure projects proceed, but these projects are also environmentally sustainable to minimize the extent of Alberta's environmental footprint on the world.

We should focus on projects that align with Alberta's 20-year strategic capital plan. The plan lays out short-, medium-, and long-term infrastructure plans and priorities of the Alberta government. The priorities it has set are in response to the increasing need for infrastructure investment in Alberta's roads, schools, health facilities, and other infrastructure needs. The Alberta government has committed to investing an average of about $6 billion annually for short-, medium-, and long-term objectives over the next 20 years. The 2008-11 capital plan released as part of Alberta's Budget 2008 delivers on the short-term commitments made in the 20-year strategic capital plan.

Mr. Speaker, in reviewing the key highlights of the 2008-11 capital plan, we should take note of an overall increase of $3.9 billion, or 21 per cent, from Budget 2007. The capital plan has significantly increased spending in infrastructure, delivering on the short-term commitments of the 20-year capital plan. Throughout 2008-2011 it is projected that $22.2 billion will be invested in infrastructure. Continued and well-thought-out investment in infrastructure would stimulate Alberta's economy today and in the future.

This motion would support projects that will stimulate Alberta's economy and help the province recover from the economic slowdown much earlier than other provinces and jurisdictions. Mr. Speaker, with the continued investment in infrastructure proposed in this motion, I know Alberta will remain the best place to work, to live, and to raise a family.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: We have, really, 12 seconds left, so I would now like to call the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks to close the debate. You have five minutes.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to thank all of my hon. colleagues who spoke in favour of this motion. I think we've covered the bases with regard to the intent of this motion. It's about building the Alberta that we all know and love. It's about building the schools, the hospitals, the roads, the transportation infrastructure that's important to our future. I think it's important to note that this province has an unprecedented history of significant investment on a per capita basis in all of those types of projects.

I thank my colleagues for their consideration of this motion and ask you to support Motion 501.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 501 carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that we call it 6 p.m. and adjourn until 1:30 tomorrow afternoon.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:59 p.m. to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Statement by the Speaker

Anniversary of 2008 Provincial Election

The Speaker: Hon. members, today is one of those anniversaries that we would like to acknowledge. One year ago today, on this date, 31 members were elected to this Assembly for the first time, and two members were re-elected after a slight absence from the Assembly. I would like to acknowledge the hon. members for Calgary-North West, Edmonton-Glenora, Calgary-Elbow, Airdrie-Chestermere, Athabasca-Redwater, Bonnyville-Cold Lake, Calgary-Egmont, Calgary-Mackay, Calgary-Montrose, Calgary-North Hill, Drayton Valley-Calmar, Edmonton-Calder, Edmonton-Decore, Edmonton-Ellerslie, Edmonton-Manning, Edmonton-McClung, Edmonton-Meadowlark, Edmonton-Mill Woods, Edmonton-Rutherford, Grande Prairie-Wapiti, Lethbridge-West, Livingstone-Macleod, Red Deer-South, St. Albert, Strathcona, Strathmore-Brooks, West Yellowhead, Wetaskiwin-Camrose, Calgary-Buffalo, Calgary-McCall, Edmonton-Strathcona, and the members for Cardston-Taber-Warner and Edmonton-Beverley-Clareview. March 3, 2009, is the one-year anniversary of your participation in this very esteemed body.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Stelmach: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed an honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislature 31 very special guests. They are from the Field home-schooling group. They are seated, I believe, in both galleries, but I know that there are a number in the members' gallery. They are accompanied today by teachers/group leaders Mrs. Kathy Ansell, Mrs. Paulette Field, Mrs. Patty Marler, Mrs. Lianne McDonald, Mrs. Michelle Flim, Mrs. Roxanne Theroux, and Mrs. Kimberly Walker. The students and parents had an opportunity to visit the Premier's office, and we had a very good, hearty discussion about the province of Alberta. I can tell you that we are in good hands. I know that the students participated in the mock Legislature and learned a lot about the operations of their government. Thank you so much. I'd ask them now to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly 27 students and four leaders from Guthrie school, which is just north of Edmonton on the military base. They are led by their teachers Chris Layton and Becky Williams and their parent helpers Selina Robb and Rosita LaFrance. I'd like to thank them for coming today and ask them to please rise and enjoy the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce the students from Eastwood school along with their teacher. I think they were in the Assembly yesterday as well. I would ask that they please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Webber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Mr. Ken Kent, who is the president of Harley-Davidson of Edmonton. Ken was the first Canadian to run 200 miles per hour, or 320 kilometres per hour, in the quarter-mile top fuel motorcycle drag racing event in the States. He likes to ride fast, and he does that each year at IHRA, International Hot Rod Association, racing events throughout North America and the world. His local Harley-Davidson business on the Yellowhead and Fort Road is where I bought my first Harley, so I thank Ken for introducing me to the world of Harleys. Ken is seated in the members' gallery along with our friend Brady Whittaker. I'd ask Ken to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to the Members of the Legislative Assembly two staff members from my department. I'm truly blessed to lead a department that is so passionate about education and research in our province. Here are two of our great staff members: Monica Pysko, human resources project assistant, and Simon Underwood, administrative assistant, human resources. They're taking part in the public service tour. They're seated in our public gallery, I believe, this afternoon, and I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Likewise, it gives me great pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly 13 staff members from Sustainable Resource Development. They work in our lands division taking care of our public lands, two-thirds of this province, and dispositions related to its use. They, also, are on a public service orientation tour of the Legislature today. They are Christine Giurisevich, Mel Palmetier, Kevin Ball, Susan McGillivray, Karen Scott, Lizette Kaba, Blair Stone, Barb Grunau, Kali Hennessey, Francine Duret, Rubena Hassan, Annette Krumm, and Donna Bambrick. I'd ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children and Youth Services.

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly five very special guests. They are registered social workers who are here to represent their profession as we recognize National Social Work Week. Social workers are a compassionate and dedicated group of individuals who touch the lives of many Albertans and build brighter futures, and for that we thank them. They are sitting in the public gallery. I would ask the following people to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly: Lina Filomeno-Melchionna, representing the Alberta College of Social Workers; Sarah Banick, from our Didsbury office; Melissa Zimmer, from our Wetaskiwin office; Rhonda McKinnon, from the Edmonton and area CFSA; and Bailey Puchyr, from the Edmonton and area CFSA. Please join me in welcoming them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My friend and colleague from Calgary-Foothills alluded to it, and I wanted the House to specifically recognize our friend Brady Whittaker. On behalf of the forest industry, as executive director of the Alberta Forest Products Association he's working very hard to support a very troubled industry right now, and he's been a great friend to this Legislature.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Fallen Four Memorials

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Four years ago today, four brave young RCMP officers full of promise and hope were shot and killed near Mayerthorpe in the Whitecourt-St. Anne constituency. It was a terrible tragedy when the lives of constables Peter Schiemann, Leo Johnston, Anthony Gordon, and Brock Myrol were taken. Today my thoughts go to the families, friends, and co-workers of these four officers plus the communities in the Mayerthorpe and Whitecourt RCMP detachment areas, and all uniformed officers.

The Fallen Four Memorial Society in Mayerthorpe determined early that these communities will neither be defined nor defeated by the killings. They organize a yearly memorial candlelight ceremony to remember Brock, Anthony, Leo, Peter, plus all uniformed officers who have died in the line of duty across Canada. There is also a hockey game between the RCMP and the Mayerthorpe Wranglers to bring the communities together in a fun way to celebrate the once-vibrant lives of our four officers.

This year, unfortunately, the Mayerthorpe Arena burned down, but with some help from Northlands the memorial moved to Rexall Place on Sunday, March 1. It was a very special day, and I appreciated assisting our Solicitor General in the lighting of the centre candle for all peace and police officers and soldiers. Thank you also to the Member for Calgary-Hays for joining us that day. I congratulate the many volunteers from the Fallen Four Memorial Society, the Mayerthorpe Arena Operating Committee, minor hockey, the RCMP, Whitecourt Wolverines, and all donors. I also join the organizing committee in recognizing the generosity of the Edmonton Oilers, Oil Kings, Northlands, Rexall Place, and Ticketmaster.

To the families of Peter, Brock, Anthony, and Leo and to all of those who have lost a loved one who wears a uniform, I assure you that the brave are never forgotten.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [applause]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Setting the Direction for Special Education

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you. As chair of the Setting the Direction for Special Education in Alberta Steering Committee I would like to use this opportunity to provide an update on this important initiative. Mr. Speaker, 3,500 Albertans contributed input towards a vision and principles for a new special education framework. They told us what parts of the current system worked well and shared visionary ideas that demonstrated a considerable appetite for change.

We're now entering phase 2 of Setting the Direction. On Saturday I had the pleasure of attending a consultation session in Red Deer, and today, as I speak, approximately 100 people in Medicine Hat are participating in the session. I would like to encourage all Albertans to contribute to this work. Phase 2 consultation can take place online, in person, or through a group or individual print submission. This phase of work is about engaging in even more challenging conversations about the elements required to build an inclusive education system.

Following the second round of consultations, recommendations for a new special education framework that includes policy, accountability measures, and a funding model will be developed. On behalf of my colleagues on the Setting the Direction Steering Committee I will present the framework to the Minister of Education at a forum to be held on June 8 and 9 in Edmonton. After the June forum is complete, I am confident that we will have a policy framework in place that will propose near-, mid-, and long-term challenges to build one inclusive education system.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Livestock and Meat Strategy

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to highlight the important work that has been accomplished under the Alberta livestock and meat strategy. The strategy was announced last June and is a framework designed to strengthen the industry and create a more profitable and competitive future.

One important component of the strategy is the agency itself. ALMA's role is to act as a catalyst, and it is responsible for implementing specific parts of the strategy. ALMA was created shortly after the announcement, has recently become incorporated, Mr. Speaker, and already it has created five industry advisory committees that will help guide their initiatives and ensure the livestock industry's input.

Another working group has been formed as well between Agriculture and Rural Development and the cattle industry that will play an important role in shaping the future of traceability initiatives. The group has already started developing a traceability implementation plan for 2010 and beyond. The creation of these working groups demonstrates this government's commitment to revitalizing the livestock industry. It also highlights the importance of industry consultation and involvement as the Alberta livestock and meat strategy is implemented. We all know that change is not easy, but there are already signs that we are on the right track. New markets are beginning to open to Canadian cattle; however, this access comes with the condition of age verification. Because Alberta's producers have been able to adapt to change and have begun age verifying animals – indeed, 83 per cent of the livestock has already been age verified, which is an incredible success, Mr. Speaker – we will be able to respond and take advantage of these opportunities as more borders open.

I encourage all members of our livestock and meat industry and all of my colleagues here to continue to support the strategy. I also want to thank the minister and the Premier for their clear vision and determination, that have shown that this is incredibly important and that working with a progressive industry, Mr. Speaker, has had great successes, that are critical to the future success of the industry in our province.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Workplace Health and Safety

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta is becoming a dangerous place for workers. Workplace fatalities in this province have risen 34 per cent in the last three years, yet the employment minister claims that our workplaces are safer today than they were in the past. The numbers are far too high. Last year there was an average of one workplace fatality per week. The government has not made sufficient progress in reducing accident rates. Immediate action is needed.

First, the government must create mandatory joint work-site health and safety committees. These committees, composed of representatives from labour and management, identify and resolve health and safety concerns in the work site. They conduct regular site inspections, accident investigations, and safety education programs, and they meet every month to assess workplace safety.

In Alberta employers are not legally obligated to form these committees. That needs to change.

Second, the government must amend the fact that it is not a legal requirement for employers to develop occupational health and safety policies or to post such a policy at the work site. A clear, well-communicated OH and S policy can save lives and prevent accidents. The government should require high-risk industries to create and communicate OH and S policies.

Finally, accident investigation reports should be admissible in court. The fact that they are not admissible shields wrongdoing and unsafe practices from exposure. Unsafe practices should be brought to light so that they can be corrected and further accidents can be prevented. Last year dozens of Alberta families were confronted with the horror and grief of the loss of a loved one due to an avoidable workplace-related death. This government is not doing enough to bring these numbers down. I urge the government to strongly consider the options we have discussed here today.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Persons Case Scholarship Recipients

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On February 27 of this year the Alberta government announced that 27 Alberta students will receive financial assistance in their postsecondary studies through the Persons Case scholarship. I'm very proud to say that two of my constituents are among the recipients: Ms Barbara McLean, undertaking her master of arts in political science degree at the University of Alberta, and Ms Patricia Orizaga-Brooks, who is enrolled at Grant MacEwan College in the diploma in social work program.

Mr. Speaker, these scholarships were established in 1979 to mark the 50th anniversary of the Persons Case victory. In 1929 Alberta's Famous Five – Henrietta Muir Edwards, Nellie McClung, Louise McKinney, Emily Murphy, and Irene Parlby – successfully led the landmark legal case in which the British Privy Council confirmed that women in Canada were eligible to be called to the Senate and therefore qualified as persons under the law. This year marks the 80th anniversary of that monumental decision.

The Persons Case scholarships are awarded each year to students whose studies and career goals will ultimately contribute to the advancement of women or to those who are studying in fields where members of their gender are traditionally few in number. Mr. Speaker, this year the government was pleased to announce that the scholarships' total funding increased from $20,000 to $100,000 annually.

On behalf of all members of the Assembly, Mr. Speaker, I congratulate all recipients of the scholarship and thank them for their continued contribution to life in Alberta.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Oil Royalty Agreement

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the release that Canadian Oil Sands Trust put out last year when Syncrude signed on to the new royalty system, the company states that their after-tax future net profits will go up 12 per cent as a result. Syncrude signed the royalty deal, and the sum of money is vast, over $18 billion extra to Syncrude on top of already projected $153 billion profits. To the Premier: why did the Premier sign this deal that costs Albertans so much?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, to take us back to the royalty review, we had made a commitment that we would not tear up any Crown agreements that were made back in 1997. In fact, the opposition there asked us not to, and we didn't do that. We honoured those agreements. Both companies came to the table, and we renegotiated. As the minister said yesterday, we're actually getting more money from the development in the oil sands.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. A government that was managing this resource in the public interest would have numbers, and they would have told Albertans what it's costing us. What about the Suncor deal, Mr. Premier? Did we lose more than the equivalent of our heritage trust fund in that agreement as well?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, yesterday when this question came up, I made the comment: how did you come up with the figure of $18 billion 40 years out if no one – no one – as little as seven months ago predicted this whole economic downturn around the globe?

Some Hon. Members: We did.

Mr. Stelmach: I hear across the way: oh, we did. Wow, they must have done it and kept it very secret because, you know, there wasn't one economist in the world. So all of these figures that are being bandied around today are projections. I can't tell you, Mr. Speaker, 40 years from now what the price of oil will be, but I do know the agreement we have, especially the ability to keep some of the bitumen in kind. We'll be able to process that here in Alberta, and we can also sell it to other countries, not only to the United States. We might have other markets.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, these are public documents Canadian Oil Sands Trust put out to their shareholders in trust. They did their homework. The question is whether this government is doing its homework.

Since the Premier yesterday did not give figures about what the deals are going to cost Albertans, is he saying that the government signed away these billions without working out the implications, or is the Premier hiding from Albertans the scale and the scope of this giveaway?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the hon. leader is referring to an agreement that was signed in 1997. When we renegotiated the agreement over a year ago, all of the information was made public in terms of how both companies came to the table and what the new agreement is, and that was communicated to the public.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Royalty Reporting

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, again, this was put out just last year, 12 months ago. Canadian Oil Sands put out the information because they have to update their shareholders, the owners of the company. But the government of Alberta, which manages the oil sands on behalf of the owners, Albertans, does not provide even remotely adequate information on such deals. To the Premier: why do Albertans have to go through corporate filings to get this information? Why isn't the government reporting openly, transparently, to the owners of the resource, Albertans?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I believe we continue to be the only jurisdiction in Canada that legally has to issue quarterly reports – that's on our revenue stream and our expenses – and we're proud to do that. That is the best, I think, information stream that there is in Canada. We'll continue to do that. Also, we're able to predict to a degree what the next three months will be in terms of some either unanticipated price increases or when the price keeps dropping on our resources. It's very concise. It's information that is available to all of the public, and I believe the public is satisfied with the kind of information we're giving them.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, the Royalty Review Panel, the Auditor General, even Peter Valentine told this government that their royalty reporting was weak and inadequate. Why has their advice to fix this serious failing continued to be ignored?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we are not ignoring any advice. In fact, before the Auditor General talked about the royalty process that we have in place, we already undertook the royalty review in the province, and we followed it up, of course. Coming from the panel was some advice in terms of how we can improve the system and also from the Auditor General. That's why Mr. Peter Valentine, who is a former Auditor of Alberta, was asked to review. He came up with a report, and we're following all the recommendations.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, this is an example where clearly they haven't been following the recommendations. When will the government fix the broken royalty reporting system and start providing Albertans, the owners of this resource, with comprehensive, detailed, transparent information on their natural resource royalties?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we are. But as I said before, following the new royalty framework, there will be a new information system put in place to capture all of the necessary information to ensure that we are collecting the royalties on the right volumes that are produced by oil and gas producers. Of course, the oil sands agreement is different from the conventional oil and gas. It is a complex area, but we're doing whatever we can to make the information clear and concise to the shareholders, which are all Albertans.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Blue Cross Premiums

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Starting this July the premiums for Albertans, singles and families, with Blue Cross coverage will increase, and by July 2010 the premiums will be three times what they are now. To the minister of health. This minister is making changes to Blue Cross premiums so that they're more comparable to private insurance. This could be interpreted as the direction the rest of Albertans' health care changes will go. Do Albertans not have the right to worry about the direction of increased comparisons to private health care?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, the member is purposely trying to put words in my mouth, because there was never a comparison to private health care. What we did say was that the Blue Cross program that we offer to all Albertans needs to more clearly be aligned with employer-based plans because currently, today, we have a situation where a number of plans that employees have with their employer cost significantly more than the government plan does, and that's inequitable. The taxpayer should not be subsidizing that.

Ms Pastoor: Will the minister agree that by making this change to Blue Cross premiums, private health insurance may look like the better option for Albertans, making them decide to opt for private health insurance?

Mr. Liepert: Again, Mr. Speaker, the member is having some difficulty understanding the situation because what I just said was that the private-sector employers in this province and, quite frankly, public-sector employers have insurance plans, benefit plans, that are aligned with the Blue Cross plan, which is provided to those who do not have employer benefit plans. The only difference in the two is the amount of premiums that are paid.

Ms Pastoor: Many letters and e-mails that are coming to my office say that there is as much public concern about Alberta's Blue Cross premiums as there has been about the seniors' pharmaceutical change. Will the minister commit to re-evaluating the change to Blue Cross like he has for the seniors' pharmaceutical change?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, if this particular member and that particular party want to campaign in the next election on the fact that the taxpayers of this province should be subsidizing a Blue Cross plan which has premiums that are less than those of employer plans, let them go ahead. The problem is that this particular member and members of that particular party never tell the truth when it comes to how these plans work.

Ms Blakeman: Point of order.

The Speaker: I think we're definitely going to have – no. As a matter of fact, I want to deal with this right now.

Speaker's Ruling Parliamentary Language

The Speaker: Hon. Minister of Health and Wellness, would you retract what you just said?

Mr. Liepert: I'll retract that statement, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Election Commitments

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, it's a year after the election, and it's report card time. Today an evaluation of this government's performance gives them a failing grade. The Premier promised to stop shipping raw bitumen and jobs to the U.S. One year later this government has failed. Will the Premier stand here today and explain why he has failed to keep his promise and why he continues to ship bitumen and the jobs of Albertans to the United States?

Mr. Stelmach: I hope he said "ship" bitumen.

Anyway, Mr. Speaker, we are very proud of our record over this past year. We've completed Canada's first land-use framework. We've undertaken this past year in Infrastructure the most kilometres of highway repaved in the last at least dozen years that I'm aware of, maybe even 15 years. We've made tremendous progress with our aboriginal community in signing a first-time agreement with the three treaties. We have accomplished a lot, and in the next question I'll be able to tell him how much more we've accomplished.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. This Premier promised to renegotiate deals with Suncor and Syncrude to keep a fair share of royalties for Albertans. Instead, we have a massive increase of $18 billion going to Syncrude alone. One year later this government has failed. Why did this government fail to stand up to two of the most profitable operations in the world to get a fair share for Albertans?

Mr. Stelmach: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I said before in previous questioning, the agreement is fair. It was a Crown agreement that was signed in 1997. We said that we were not going to tear up those agreements, and we kept our word. We have renegotiated those agreements. You know, finally, across Canada, especially after today's poll, all Canadians are realizing that the oil sands are very, very important to the economic well-being of not only Alberta but the rest of Canada, and that speaks a lot for what we've done in this great province to support the economy of Canada.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Just over a year ago this Premier said, "Our government will invest $300 million for 600 new beds . . . in seven new long-term care centres across the province." Just 11 months later they admitted that the number of long-term care beds will remain at the current number of 14,500 for the next several years. Once again this government has failed a year later. Will the Premier stand up today and explain to all Albertans why he has failed to create a single new long-term bed?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I think the member has his information a bit mixed up. We're continuing to construct housing for seniors. I know that there's a propensity by that party there to institutionalize seniors. That is not what we want to do. We want to give our seniors a good quality of life in their last years, so we are increasing support for home care. We are providing options in housing, and these are the kinds of options that are going to improve the quality of life and have our seniors, the seniors that helped build this province, enjoy their last few years in comfort.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Home Renovation Contractors

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The new federal home renovation tax credit has many Albertans thinking about renovating their homes this year to make the most of tax savings. This is certainly good news that will help keep people working in our province. Unfortunately, there are some contractors who see this as an opportunity to take advantage of consumers. My questions are for the Minister of Service Alberta. How is the government protecting Alberta consumers from contractors who may try to take advantage of them?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's certainly true that a lot of Albertans are considering home renovations. Before signing a contract with a renovator, people should first get written estimates from more than one contractor, and after choosing a renovator, they should get a written contract with all the necessary details listed. As well, any contractor who takes payments in advance must be listed by Service Alberta as a prepaid contractor. They also must pass a criminal record check and provide monetary security. Consumers considering hiring a prepaid contractor can call us to find out if a contractor is licensed or not.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. It's fine to have rules in place, but they're only good if enforced. What is the government doing to make sure that contractors are following these regulations?

Mrs. Klimchuk: Service Alberta is very active in enforcing the laws and helping Albertans when someone takes advantage of them. Since 2003 we have dealt with more than 1,000 files regarding prepaid contractors. We have recovered nearly $1.3 million for consumers who have been wronged by prepaid contractors. The courts have also fined prepaid contractors more than $225,000 under the Fair Trading Act.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you. My final question to the same minister: what is the government doing to ensure that Alberta consumers are aware of their rights when hiring a contractor?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While most contractors are indeed trustworthy and responsible, we want to warn Albertans about the risks and what they can do to protect themselves. We have a lot of good information. Our website includes tipsheets on choosing contractors for home renovations. We also have news releases warning consumers on a regular basis. We have also information booths at many of the renovation trade shows. There is good protection in place, but I would encourage all Albertans to do their homework and choose a contractor very carefully.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Strathcona.

School Bus Safety

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A tragedy involving a child causes everyone to question how to prevent it from happening again. It is within this government's control to ensure that standards are in place to protect children who take the bus to school. To the Minister of Transportation: will the minister implement legislation that requires school buses to drop off children at their driveways rather than putting them at risk by having to cross the secondary highways?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, any time that we have an accident or a fatality involving a child, it's very, very heart-wrenching for everyone involved. We did have a fatality by Millarville recently, and my heart goes out to that family. I don't know all of the exact details about what happened there, but we are investigating within our highway Traffic Safety Act, and we will do what's necessary.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Education: how will the minister be working with the school boards to implement best practices for school bus safety?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last fall, with our co-operation the Ministry of Transportation did a bus safety report. It had a number of recommendations with respect to what could be done with school buses to make sure that they were visible to drivers. I can say that I have met with superintendents and chairs of boards across the province, and I've always emphasized bus safety as part of our discussions. In the end it comes down to drivers on the road being careful and being aware that at certain times of the day our buses are out with our children and that we should be paying attention to the fact that buses are out there with our children. We need to be more careful on our roads.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister again: will the minister specifically target funding to school boards to address school bus safety concerns?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Transportation may wish to address this because he has graciously indicated to boards that his department would provide some of the funding necessary to outfit buses in accordance with the report that was prepared. That work is ongoing. In fact, some school boards have been ahead of the game in that process in terms of making sure that the reflector tapes and the strobe lights and those sorts of things have already been installed on their buses. Yes, funding has been provided through the Ministry of Transportation to accommodate that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Nanotechnology

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In May of 2007 this government announced the Alberta nanotechnology strategy aimed at capturing a share in the world's nanotechnology market. My question is to the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology. Why has this government chosen to invest in nanotechnology?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, the government chose to invest in nanotechnology based on a partnership with our federal government partners in the National Institute for Nanotechnology. Nanotechnology is what they call platform technology that crosses a number of different disciplines. In Alberta, obviously, we're interested in environmental impacts, energy and alternative energies, health, imaging. All of these things are part of what nanotechnology can build in this province. That's why we're very, very interested in that world market.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental to the same minister. As part of this strategy this government announced their investment in the National Institute for Nanotechnology and the Alberta Centre for Advanced MNT Products, or ACAMP. How do these two organizations differ, or how do they complement one another?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, NINT, as I mentioned, is the partnership between the provincial government and the federal government and really has a national connection. It's the institute, if you will, that is going to do the research on building nanosystems, on materials that can be constructed from nanomaterials. ACAMP, or the advanced micronanotechnology products institute, is really to take the research that NINT develops and turn it into a package that our entrepreneurs can commercialize in this province, turn it into a wealth generator of business here in the province of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental to the same minister: how do we plan to ensure that Alberta remains a world leader in nanotechnology?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's all about partnerships. Even today at a Prion Research Institute meeting with a number of my colleagues from the Legislature we were talking partnerships. Nanotechnology is no different. We are attracting world-class researchers who have connections around the globe. We're investing in the infrastructure that is critical to nanotechnology. We now have companies that graduate students can work for in our province. So as you build the cluster here in the province, you build the economy around nano. You also build those products and services that are related to it, and that provides for sustainable economic development.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Secondary Ticket Sales

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In the spring I raised my concern that this government does not protect ticket buyers, artists, and stagehands from Ticketmaster's scheme on Internet and secondary sales. Since then governments in the U.S. and Canada have both convened inquiries and have introduced legislation on this issue. My questions are to the Minister of Service Alberta. What steps has the minister taken since the spring to protect Alberta ticket buyers, artists, and stagehands from Ticketmaster's scheme of secondary sales?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to this whole issue Service Alberta is monitoring it on a daily basis. Protecting consumers is very important. When the act is proclaimed – indeed, that is going to be happening. The legislation that we have in place, the Fair Trading Act, does protect consumers, but we are monitoring it on a daily basis because of the ongoing cases that are before the courts.

Ms Blakeman: No, it doesn't protect them, and my question to the minister is: why? When it has the chance to protect its citizens, to protect ticket buyers, to protect artists, and to protect stage workers, why won't this government step up and protect them?

Mr. Blackett: Mr. Speaker, we are stepping up. We've got Bill 18, that has yet to be proclaimed, that will indeed do what the hon. member is asking for. In the meantime, ticket selling and scalping of tickets is illegal, and when that Bill 18 is proclaimed, we'll be addressing the issues that the hon. member mentions.

Ms Blakeman: So the minister wants us to rely for protection on a bill that has not yet been proclaimed. How is that protecting ticket buyers in Alberta, artists in Alberta, and stagehands in Alberta? You haven't even proclaimed the legislation. It does not protect them.

Mr. Blackett: Well, Mr. Speaker, all I can say is that as the hon. member who has been in this House a lot longer than I have knows, everything doesn't work as quickly as we would like, but we'll take time, and when the bill is proclaimed, then we will have the protection that you are looking for.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Regionally Produced Construction Products

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As we all know, the forest products companies of Alberta have fought a valiant fight to stay afloat in these trying economic times. Commodity lumber prices have never been lower, yet the industry has never asked for direct support. With the limits of the softwood lumber agreement the best thing we can do to help is to buy lumber. My question is to the Minister of Infrastructure. Can you please tell me what the government of Alberta is doing to ensure that the wood used in GOA construction projects is sourced from Alberta mills?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I agree with the hon. member. Albertans, their businesses, their jobs, and Alberta's forestry industry are at the heart of our province, and we must support them where we can. In 2006 Alberta Infrastructure actually incorporated a clause into its design guidelines that encourages the use of Alberta forestry products, and using the wood certification system is recognized in Alberta. It's important to note that we must comply also, though, with building codes in the construction of our facilities. While wood products may be suitable for many projects, we have to follow the codes in other areas.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is to the same minister. What is the government of Alberta doing to ensure that the maximum amount of wood possible is being used in government of Alberta construction projects?

Mr. Hayden: Well, Mr. Speaker, my ministry is committed to environmentally sustainable standards in our building, and government of Alberta construction projects find that using the LEED environmental design standards is one way to meet that commitment. Through our LEED guidelines we put a strong emphasis on the use of regionally produced materials for construction such as wood. The more local products you use, the more credits you get for the LEED standard. We use regional materials to minimize the energy emissions related to the transportation of products.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental is to the same minister. Will you commit to using wooden framing materials for the interior partitions of the federal building renovation?

Mr. Hayden: Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, building codes require us to use steel studs in the framing construction of interior walls for structures like the federal building. As part of our efforts to recycle materials, the existing wood trim within that building is going to be saved and restored and reused.

Wood is extensively used in many of our projects throughout the province. A couple of recent examples are the Royal Tyrrell Museum, their field station, and the Boreal Centre for Bird Conservation in Slave Lake.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Public-private Partnerships for School Construction

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last month the Minister of Infrastructure stated that the government's failure to disclose P3 school contract details benefits "Albertans, the taxpayers, the people that are paying for this." Albertans, especially during these penny-pinching times, want to know how much of their money will be used to pay for the 18 P3 schools. They also want to know how much of their children's money will have gone to pay for these schools over the next 32 years. The competition is over. The contract has been signed. To the Minister of Education: whose private interests are your ministries protecting, and why?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, this government has dedicated itself to making information available to its citizens, but it also has in the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act specific protections for commercial information. The P3 project with respect to phase 1 is not a one-off. There are other opportunities for people to build in this province, and when they build in this province, when they bid on jobs in this province, they want to know that their commercial information, their competitive information, is protected. So it's very clear that in a commercial contract certain pieces of information are not made public.

Mr. Chase: Alberta taxpayers could well be on the hook for bailing out the failing Australian consortium of Babcock & Brown, the main P3 lenders for this project. Given that according to a recent study, a P3 in British Columbia will cost taxpayers 130 per cent more than it would have had they followed traditional building methods, will the minister commit to releasing the actual costs of building and maintaining the 18 schools?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member's premise is absolutely wrong. Babcock & Brown Australia has nothing whatsoever to do with the P3 project in Alberta, and there would be no circumstance in which taxpayers in Alberta will bail out Babcock & Brown in Australia.

Mr. Chase: The minister stood with me in southwest Calgary when the lender Babcock & Brown's initial financing was announced, so how he can deny that connection is news to me. I guess it's more of the secrecy associated with the deal.

Without knowing what the details are of this particular P3 contract, we have no way to know if taxpayers are getting a deal or being hosed. Will this minister commit to transparency and release how much these schools will actually cost taxpayers, and if it's not Babcock & Brown, if they've been erased, who is it?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member indicates that he was standing beside me. Clearly, he had his earmuffs and his blinders on. The information that was released showed directly what the relationship was between Babcock & Brown in England and the consortium partners that are operating the consortium in Canada, and if he looked at it, he'd have seen that there is no relationship. There is a very small relationship between Babcock & Brown Australia and Babcock & Brown Britain that has absolutely no impact on the contracts in Alberta and no exposure or risk to the taxpayer of Alberta. He would also have known, had he been listening at that particular time, because we did include him in the process and he was there – he could have heard if he'd been listening – that the funding was put in place prior to the contract being started. Again, there is no risk to the taxpayer of Alberta from that particular partner.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Back to this government's report card. A year ago today everyday Albertans went to the polls hoping for a government that would take climate change seriously and actually reduce greenhouse gas emissions. One year later this government has failed. Alberta is alone in the world in relying on intensity targets that encourage the increase of greenhouse gas emissions. To the Minister of Environment: will you stand up today and explain why you are still letting Alberta's greenhouse gas emissions rise for at least the next 30 years?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, this government is clearly committed to reducing greenhouse gases. [interjection] I remind the hon. member that intensity targets are related to global experience, not individual operators. [interjection] So for each of the 100 large industrial emitters in this province our legislation remains the only legislation of its kind in North America that has legislated mandatory reductions of CO₂. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. member, you made a couple of interjections. Your colleague made a couple of interjections. Are we clear now? Are you okay now? Have you finished everything, or do you have some more questions now?

Ms Notley: I do.

The Speaker: You do have a question.

Ms Notley: Yes, I do.

The Speaker: To the hon. colleague sitting right beside you, you listen to what your colleague says, okay?

Mr. Mason: Oh, I do, Mr. Speaker. I do.

Ms Notley: There's a reason why there's only one jurisdiction on the continent that has it: because it doesn't work, your particular code.

Anyway, the government also promised everyday Albertans it would invest $2 billion in green transit. One year later this government has failed. Instead, the government cut and run. They got a fast headline, and they axed the Green TRIP program. They're failing to create new jobs, and they're failing to take any cars off the road. To the Transportation minister: why won't you stop failing Albertans and follow through on your promise?

The Speaker: The hon. minister. [interjections] Hon. minister, you've been recognized.

Mr. Ouellette: You know, I don't know where you're getting statements like saying that we've axed the Green TRIP. It's straight imagination somewhere that people dream these things up. In fact, last Friday we were in Calgary meeting with the Calgary Regional Partnership, and we talked all about Green TRIP. You know what? Stay tuned to budget day, and you'll find out how much we're going to spend on it this year.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, $2 billion to $200 million is what most people would call axing.

Last spring many motherhood statements were made about protecting Alberta's children. One year later this government has failed. They've failed to create enough child care spaces for working Alberta families. They've failed to protect children in care from abuse. They've failed to take the Child and Youth Advocate from under its thumb. To the Minister of Children and Youth Services: how can you justify your government's repeated failure to meet the needs of children throughout Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased, actually, to address this. You're right: one of our promises was to create child care spaces. I can tell you that between April 1 and February 20 we created over 5,900 spaces. We helped 148 communities create spaces. I've got all kinds of statistics. Currently we have 2,500 people registered in our online orientation course.

Nonprofit and Voluntary Sector Initiative

Ms Woo-Paw: Mr. Speaker, the Alberta nonprofit and voluntary sector initiative was officially announced in 2007 with commitment from the government of Alberta and the sector to forge ongoing dialogue and enhance collaboration. I have spoken previously about the roles, challenges, and contributions of this third sector in our modern-day society. My question is to the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit. Would you please tell us what has taken place under this initiative? What key developments have taken place under this initiative since the announcement was made on the project charter?

Mr. Blackett: Mr. Speaker, this is a groundbreaking initiative as for the first time we are talking directly to this sector about challenges and opportunities and how we can face them together. This sector is important to all Albertans and to our government. The purpose of the framework is to engage the government of Alberta and the not-for-profit and voluntary sector in a collaborative effort to discuss matters of mutual interest. Some of the activities currently under way are developing a comprehensive knowledge database of the Alberta not-for-profit and voluntary sector, 19,000 organizations, which we didn't have, implementing a workforce strategy for the nonprofit and voluntary sector, and co-ordinating discussions between the sector and funders looking at the impact of the current economic climate and how it affects the sector.

Ms Woo-Paw: What will the minister do to ensure this important sector has the capacity and resources to continue to support our communities and vulnerable citizens in these challenging economic times?

Mr. Blackett: Mr. Speaker, the work we are doing to help the nonprofit and voluntary sector make it through these economic times is not just in our ministry. Working collaboratively with several other ministries of interest, the comprehensive database that I mentioned will help us to identify the needs that exist in the different subsectors, whether it be sports, whether it be faith-based organizations, whether it be social or arts and cultural organizations. The workforce strategy will help the sector attract and retain the people they need, and discussions are not limited to the government alone. We're talking with all different people, and that just goes on top of the different programs that we have that are available for funding.

Seizure of Illegal Firearms in Vehicles

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, I've heard from members of law enforcement and legal practitioners, and they have told me they are unable to get convictions in instances when illegal firearms are found in vehicles. The people charged simply deny that the gun was theirs. Accordingly, can the Minister of Justice explain how the victims of crime legislation will work against gangbangers in a rental car or a stolen car with illegal firearms therein when they deny ownership and knowledge of the guns being there?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This legislation is two months old. We've been working with the police on this. We believe that as the police begin to make investigations with respect to these circumstances, they'll have perfect opportunities under the Criminal Code to charge these people with appropriate violations.

Mr. Hehr: That's contrary to what my people who are working in those institutions tell me. [interjections] Well, thank you.

It is common knowledge that oftentimes these gangbangers are generally young individuals, not the criminal masterminds of an organization. Given that these individuals probably have no assets to take under the victims of crime legislation, what will be their punishment in Alberta?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, I'm not going to speculate or make presumptions about whether or not people that are committing criminal acts may or may not hold property. The intention of this act is to seize property, to seize instruments of crime, to seize property that is likely to be used as an instrument of crime, and to sell it to compensate victims. If we spend the next three months in this Legislature trying to come up with every particular scenario that may or may not work, we might as well all be back in law school again.

Mr. Hehr: I think it is wonderful legislation as well, and I applaud the minister for implementing it. However, we're not talking about something hypothetical. We're talking about guns on the streets and that people are dying in constituencies like mine. How can we close this apparent loophole that is present in your bill, which again I applaud?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, this government does not need to be lectured on what's going on in the streets and in communities across this province. We are taking steps under safe communities legislation. We have passed legislation that has been asked for by the police within six months to take action against what is going on. It is wrong for us in this Legislature to be debating and to be crying out about the panic in the streets. We know what's going on. We're responding to it, we're doing it in partnership with the police and with Crown prosecutors, and we're having an impact.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Carbon Capture and Storage

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Carbon capture and storage is a popular subject around the water cooler and in the media these days for good reason. Some are questioning why we are continuing with such a significant investment in a time of financial uncertainty. Others are focused on the proposals of President Obama to spend $2.5 billion on carbon capture. Now, my question is to the Minister of Environment. How is the province justifying spending $2 billion in such a narrow field when the world's fiscal situation is so uncertain?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think the simple answer is that if it was the right thing to do prior to an economic downturn, it's still the right thing to do during an economic downturn. The purpose of this investment is to contribute our efforts that will lead to real reductions in CO₂, real effects on global efforts related to climate change.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My support of carbon capture and storage is because it's a very economical thing to do in terms of the payback that we will be getting, but there are questions around what impact CCS will have in reducing emissions in the oil sands. I, unfortunately, read a recent media report that the potential capture rate for the oil sands is possibly as low as 10 per cent. How does the minister respond to these statements?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, I think that the report that the member refers to was perhaps based on the past and forgetting about the future. Let's not forget that the future of oil sands is not in the giant mines that everyone associates with oil sands today, but it's in situ. There are huge opportunities for CCS for in situ operations. There are huge opportunities for the application of CCS at the upgrader level, at the refinery level. There are a myriad of ways that CCS will apply not only to electrical energy but also to oil sands within Alberta. Our estimates – and we stand by them – are that there should be application of CCS for anywhere from 60 to 70 per cent of CO₂ emissions from oil sands operations.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental to the same minister. The Americans are expected to come out with aggressive climate change policies soon that could have an impact on Alberta. In fact, the federal Minister of the Environment is in Washington as we speak to discuss the U.S.-Canada clean energy dialogue. Why is the province putting its eggs in the carbon capture and storage basket if we don't yet know what is going to come out of the U.S.?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, Alberta has not been waiting for the U.S. to get engaged in this file. We've been actively involved in CCS and the climate change file now for quite some time. It's encouraging for us to see that the Obama administration is now working towards, among other things, the application of technology. It's also encouraging to us that there is an agreement between our national government and the U.S. national government to engage in a North American dialogue that will eventually lead to the application of much-needed technology in this field.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Employment Insurance Benefit Program

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In December 2008 only 1 in 4 unemployed Albertans was eligible to receive EI benefits. My first question is to the minister of employment. Will the hon. minister support the Official Opposition to request the federal government to change the EI rules for Alberta by lengthening the benefit period and reducing the barriers to qualify for EI benefits?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As labour ministers, the ministers responsible for employment in Canada, we don't need to rely on the opposition to move forward with our work. We're continuously working with our federal counterparts to make sure that the employment benefits are applicable to Alberta. We've made some suggestions to our federal counterparts and are continuing to work with them to assure ourselves that benefits come to Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: given that the unemployment level for construction workers in this province is now over 9 per cent, the unemployment level for young people is over 9 per cent, how can the province work with the federal government to increase job skills training through the EI benefits program?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, we've got a number of agreements that have been signed with the federal government, and those agreements were signed a year ago and are being added to as we speak. The intent of those particular agreements is to provide ongoing training, ongoing support to those individuals who are losing their jobs. It's always sad to hear of individuals losing their particular positions, but our mandate is to help them try to find additional work experiences, additional training and to try to move them on to other jobs that they might be suitable to do.

Mr. MacDonald: Speaking of finding work, Mr. Speaker, again to the same minister: will the minister organize a job fair – it's something you're very good at – in Borger, Texas, to showcase the skills of the unemployed construction workers here in Alberta who specialize in heavy industrial construction so that they can participate in the boom that's going on in Texas with the upgrader construction? We're exporting our bitumen, building the upgraders in Texas. That's where the jobs are. Will you go to those places?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, I think we're doing our best to make sure that Albertans are working. You know, to go where this particular member is going, I don't believe that his comments are worthy of additional responses.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Municipal Sustainability Initiative

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The municipal sustainability initiative is an unprecedented program, to the tune of $1.4 billion if I recall correctly. This MSI funding assists municipalities to manage growth and also long-term planning and sustainability. My question today is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. How does the government ensure the MSI dollars are spent effectively on high-priority projects?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This government is committed to supporting municipalities. The province has set project categories: transit, underground infrastructure, roads and bridges, police and emergency facilities, recreation and cultural facilities like libraries. Municipalities decide what the projects should be on their priorities. Municipalities are accountable to their ratepayers.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental question is to the same hon. minister. My constituents in Calgary-Fort would like to know how much money Calgary has received under MSI and some of the projects that have been funded.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, MSI is having a real impact on helping municipalities plan. Calgary has received $270 million.

The mayor in his State of the City address at noon today stated that one of the centrepieces of the Calgary infrastructure program is the west leg of the LRT. Fifty-four million dollars of that expansion comes from MSI. MSI helps build strong communities each and every day.

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last supplemental question is to the same hon. minister. My constituents also would like to know if the provincial MSI program will be affected by the decrease in public revenue due to the current downturn of the economy.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, as you are well aware, April 7 is budget day. I would like to say to the hon. member that at that time we will reveal the ministry's budget, but I want to stress that this government will continue to support municipalities, as it has in the past.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that concludes the question period. There were 94 exchanges today. In 30 seconds from now we will continue with our Routine. I'll recognize the last of six members to participate in Members' Statements.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Business Awards of Distinction

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to draw attention to some of Alberta's top businesses that were honoured last Friday during the 18th annual Alberta business awards of distinction. The event was hosted by the Alberta Chambers of Commerce and featured awards spotlighting the exceptional achievements of 10 businesses.

The evening's most prestigious honour was the Premier's award of distinction, presented by the Minister of Employment and Immigration. The Premier's award went to Rogers Insurance of Calgary for its innovative human resources strategies.

Other winners included Muskwa Productions & Consulting of Tsuu T'ina for the aboriginal woman entrepreneur award; Hy-Tek Computer Sales and Service Ltd. of Rocky Mountain House for the aboriginal youth entrepreneur award; Frito Lay Canada of Lethbridge for the diversity leadership award; Canada Safeway Limited of Calgary for the employer of persons with disabilities award; Good Earth Coffeehouse and Bakery of Calgary for the employer of youth award; Mathieu Hryniuk of Peace River for the small business award; Spindle, Stairs & Railings of Calgary for the marketing award; ESS Support Services of Calgary for the aboriginal relations best practice award; and last but not least, Samson Management Ltd. of Hobbema for the aboriginal relations eagle feather award.

I'd like to ask all members of this Assembly to join me in recognizing the winners of these awards for their exceptional performance.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Stevens: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Premier it's my pleasure to table copies of the Alberta's Promise annual report.

This report summarizes the fifth year of this project's activities and highlights the achievements of our Promise partners.

Today 1,164 service organizations, businesses, and communities throughout the province are working together to do more for Alberta's children as partners in Alberta's Promise. The work of our dedicated Promise partners over the past five years has resulted in many outstanding success stories that have had a positive impact on the lives of Alberta children and youth. I know the hon. members will enjoy reading about these activities and achievements. The annual report is also available at www.albertaspromise.org.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Culture and Community Spirit.

Mr. Blackett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the appropriate number of copies of the Alberta Human Rights and Citizenship Commission annual review for April 1, 2007, to March 31, 2008.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children and Youth Services.

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I wish to table the appropriate number of copies of the responses to motions for returns 10 and 11, both asked for by the Member for Calgary-Varsity on October 20, 2008.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As you may recall, on February 19 I rose pursuant to Standing Order 29(2)(a) to speak to the hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose's response to the throne speech. In doing so, I rose with my BlackBerry and I quoted from it, which was from a page from the hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose's Facebook. I have a copy that I'm tabling with you, which is a quote dated the same day, February 19 – it's on page 3 for this House's reference – and which I'll pass to the page. I trust that this will conclude this new chapter in the history of this Assembly. I'm proud to do so, to make some sort of history, however small, being referenced as a young gun.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm rising to table a number of working-short reports. These forms are to draw attention to the issues of short-staffing in extended facilities. I have several to table which indicate in many cases that baths, in particular, and urgent personal care for residents of long-term care facilities were not provided as a result of short-staffing those facilities.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is Evaluation of Public Private Partnerships in B.C., the 130 per cent cost overrun which I referenced in my question. I'm very grateful to the Auditor General for looking into the 18 P3 schools.

My second tabling. This past week my wife and I had the pleasure of attending the updated, augmented Alberta Ballet's production of Joni Mitchell's and Jean Grand-Maitre's creative collaboration of The Fiddle and the Drum. The ballet dealt with the troublesome themes of war and environmental degradation but, true to Alberta tradition, ended on a note of hope and possibility.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Liepert, Minister of Health and Wellness, pursuant to the Public Health Act the Public Health Appeal Board annual report 2008 and pursuant to the Health Professions Act the Alberta Dental Association and College 2008 annual report, the College of Registered Psychiatric Nurses of Alberta 2008 annual report, and the College of Hearing Aid Practitioners of Alberta annual report 2007-2008.

Orders of the Day

Consideration of His Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mr. Johnston moved that an humble address be presented to His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To His Honour the Honourable Norman L. Kwong, CM, AOE, Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Debate adjourned February 19]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today with my response to the Speech from the Throne and to thank His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor for delivering the Speech from the Throne that opened this session, the Second Session of the 27th sitting of the Alberta Legislature. I also want to pass along my best wishes at this time to all of my constituents in Calgary-Currie. It is a great honour to represent you in the Alberta Legislature.

We have many challenges before us, but the people of Calgary-Currie continue to demonstrate the type of resilience and willingness to work together to solve problems that I think gives this province its character. As was noted in the Legislature earlier today, Mr. Speaker, one year ago today we were elected to serve the people of Alberta. Many of us were re-elected; 31 of us were elected for the first time. How things have changed in that past year, especially on the economic front.

It is true that we are going to experience some tough times this year. Albertans have overcome huge challenges in the past, and we will get through this one, too. But if I have one message as Official Opposition finance critic today, it is this: there is a right way and a wrong way to overcome challenges. We need a plan, Mr. Speaker, a strategy to lighten the impact of this crisis, to stimulate the economy, to support people who are hurt by the downturn, and to keep people working. We need to keep investing in infrastructure – roads, bridges, hospitals, schools, and public transit – because infrastructure puts people to work in real jobs, building and maintaining real things that we can use. We need to diversify and green our economy. We need to invest in health, education and workforce training, housing, and human services so that no Albertan gets left behind. To do that, we need to cut out all the wasteful and unnecessary spending and reallocate those dollars to the programs and the priorities that work, to the programs and the priorities that count.

The government of Alberta spends 23 per cent more per capita than the national average, Mr. Speaker, and I think it's time we had more to show for it. Let's learn from this. Oil and gas is not stable at any price and will not stay stable at any price. This means we need to start saving our nonrenewable resource revenues when prices are soaring so that we have a cushion when times get tough. It's the only way we're ever going to get off the boom-and-bust roller coaster. I know there are some experts who have said that the government of Alberta, quite frankly, can't afford to embark on a savings program this year. I would suggest that they can't afford not to.

Were this a family that we were planning a financial plan for, we would understand that you have to do three things simultaneously. You have to pay your debts, and you have to make those debt payments on time. That's an obligation you have to your creditors. You have to meet your daily and monthly expenses. And you have to set aside something for the future for whatever purpose you're saving for, whether it's your retirement, your kids' education, a down payment on a house, whatever. Sometimes when times are tough, when the money is a little bit thin, you can't save as much as you would like to. You can't put as much into your retirement plan as your salary would indicate that you could, but you have to put something in there because it's about getting into the habit as much as anything. We need to get into the savings habit in this province in a way that we never have.

Mr. Speaker, the Holy Cross centre in Mission has been a valued community landmark and health services provider in my constituency for years. This is why the fate of the site remains a top concern of mine as plans proceed to attempt to have it rezoned and perhaps to redevelop the site. I've heard from many of you, many of my constituents, who wish to have a continued health care presence in the community, and I agree. The province has invested millions of tax dollars in the Tom Baker cancer centre. The people of Calgary-Currie must see a return on their investment. They deserve to have the current health care services preserved in any redevelopment plans. Furthermore, with the economy cooling and job losses beginning to mount, the need for affordable housing will continue, and the Holy Cross site is a perfect candidate to help address this need.

On the topic of affordable housing, Mr. Speaker, it's true that housing prices have started to decline, but a $280,000 condo now is no more affordable to someone on the street or someone without a job, someone without prospects than a $300,000 condo was last summer. We are going to see an increased demand for housing as the economy slows, and we're going to have to use ever more innovative ways to help the economy recover, I think. It therefore makes sense to preserve construction jobs – and, as my colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar pointed out a few minutes ago, construction unemployment in this province now tops 9 per cent – and at the same time get people out of the shelter and off the street. So let's make affordable housing development a moral deed that pays this year.

Like most Calgarians I am tired of having our city's reputation tarnished by reports of gang violence. That's why I support initiatives to give law enforcement more of the basics: more cops, tougher penalties, more stringent bail conditions, and passing my colleague the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo's Bill 201 to allow police to take additional effective action against gangbangers who transport guns in vehicles, whether that happens to be a vehicle they legitimately own or a vehicle they stole from somebody else.

In Calgary-Currie we're also especially interested in cutting gangs off at the source by ensuring that our kids aren't being recruited into the gangs, recruited by gangbangers. We need more after school programs, Mr. Speaker. The minister for children's services gave some statistics in the House earlier today about the number of child care spaces, daycare spaces that have been created. We have made progress on that file. Where we really need to make progress, I believe, in the coming year is in before and after school care. I repeatedly hear from law enforcement and social service workers who tell me that unsupervised youth are the biggest targets for gang recruitment. While mom and dad are at work, our kids need something to occupy their time. Let's make sure it's safe and supervised.

About health care, Mr. Speaker. In the 1990s the people of Alberta were told repeatedly that if we made some short-term sacrifices, we would see long-term gains. We are still waiting. Health services were cut, hospitals closed, doctors lost, nurses fired, and now the health minister is telling us to stop whining about the fact that these things haven't been replaced, these things and these people. Well, if hospitals don't get built and if beds don't get staffed, Albertans don't get the health care that they deserve for their tax dollars. End of story. Times are tough enough without having to worry about our health care or that of a loved one. Let's not burden Albertans with another worry. Let's continue to invest in health care.

Mr. Speaker, to end, I just want to note that it's good to see legislation in this session that will allow postsecondary institutions in the baccalaureate and applied studies institutions sector to finally apply to be able to name the elephant in the room; that is, to become authorized, on jumping through the necessary hoops, to call themselves what they are, universities, if they wish. Bill 4 will finally allow the rest of the nation and the rest of the world to recognize Mount Royal, of which many of my constituents are proud to call themselves students, faculty, support staff, alumni, and their families, for what it has already effectively become, an excellent undergraduate university focused on teaching. It has been a long time coming, and I know my constituents and I look forward to the day when Mount Royal becomes officially Mount Royal University.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Then I'll call on the hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports.

3:00

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. I'm very happy to be able to stand today to respond to the 2009 throne speech delivered by His Honour Norman Kwong, Lieutenant Governor of Alberta. I would like to thank His Honour for his work as our Lieutenant Governor. In the throne speech he read: Alberta is a beautiful and blessed province that has attracted people of courage and determination, dreamers who saw opportunity here. I wonder if His Honour realized that he was describing himself, a person of courage and determination, a dreamer, an Albertan who saw the opportunity and seized the day. He is an inspiration for all Albertans, one of only a very few that have won both the Grey Cup and the Stanley Cup. Thank you, Your Honour, for being an inspiration to all Albertans and Canadians. You have shown us that whatever the mind can conceive, the person can achieve.

I wonder sometimes if we ever thank our families enough for supporting us in our roles as MLAs. In many ways it is as if the Crown receives two persons for the price of one as our spouses and significant others support us in the many activities that we undertake to meet and greet our constituents and their concerns. I want to now once again let my family know how much their love and support mean to me. I would not be able to help other people as an MLA or as a minister without their unconditional love. Bob, Jeremy, Amy, Krystin, Amber, Tyler, and my five incredible grandchildren – Taiya, Hannah, Kaden, Camryn, and Morgan – thank you for your love and support. You are the wind beneath my wings.

I would also like to thank the people of Red Deer-North for allowing me to have the privilege of serving them in a fourth term as their MLA, and a special thanks to all the volunteers who have stood by my side for the past four elections and nominations. Helen Keller was right when she said, "Alone we can do so little; together we can do so much."

I came to Red Deer in 1980 thinking that one day I would return to Ontario, the place of my birth. It didn't take me long to realize that if I was searching for paradise on earth, I had found it. Although I believed that Red Deer was paradise, as I have come to know Alberta better, I realize that Red Deer is the centre of paradise. Red Deer is like living in the country in the middle of a city. The friendly wave from your neighbour or a friendly wave from a complete stranger, a warm smile from the commissioner as he places another parking ticket on your windshield, and the helping hand of a passerby as he stops to open a door for you tell you that you are in the right place.

Nowhere else in Canada can you live only an hour and a half from two NHL teams, two CFL teams, two international airports, and two Jubilee auditoriums and not have to put up with rush hour traffic jams or drive-by shootings. Although things are changing and the innocence and charm of our city is threatened by increasing criminal activity, I take great comfort in the safe communities program, that will provide a new law enforcement framework that will make it very uncomfortable for gangs and organized crime to grow and prosper in Alberta.

Alberta has drawn a line. We have drawn a line not in the shifting sands but in solid rock, in the foothills of the Rockies and in the fields of wheat and in the cities and in the towns. Albertans will not put their heads in the sand and ignore the signs all around us. We will take a stand to make our communities strong and safe, for what is the worth of a village that cannot protect its own?

The throne speech states that Alberta "is made up of vibrant, inclusive communities, places of opportunity, culture, and belonging where families and children are supported, where the vulnerable are cared for, and where people feel safe." Fostering strong and sustainable communities includes supporting children and families, helping Albertans through tough times, and supporting seniors and persons with disabilities.

As Minister of Seniors and Community Supports I'm very honoured and humbled to represent seniors and persons with disabilities in Alberta. I would like to thank my very competent and dedicated staff in my office and throughout my ministry, who work so hard to serve seniors and persons with disabilities. I know how important it is for a community to care for its most vulnerable members, and I know that our ministry, with the help of many others, is doing just that. You have all heard the quote that it takes a village to raise a child. Well, I say to you that it takes a village to raise a child to care for an aging person and to care for a person with disabilities. Together we have a shared responsibility, a shared responsibility between the person, the family, and the village.

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

One shared responsibility of my ministry is to help Albertans to age in the right place. We have found through consultations with Albertans through the Demographic Planning Commission, chaired by the very capable MLA for Whitecourt-St. Anne, that Albertans want to live in their homes for as long as possible. One day on my way to my office a gentleman stopped me and told me about his wife of 45 years. He told me that she was showing signs of Alzheimer's disease. Then with great passion he said that he would crawl across broken glass to be able to keep her at home. He would look after her and care for her, only he needed some help, and he asked if I could help him. Between the family, the community, and the government we will find a way to help this man love and care for his wife in their home for as long as possible.

This is where the new continuing care strategy becomes so important to Albertans. This new strategy is in response to our Premier's mandate to improve the quality, improve the supply, and improve client choice in the continuing care system. Improving the continuing care system is a top priority for me, and because of this strategy we will have more community living supports in place so that seniors like the couple that I just spoke about and those with disabilities can receive care in their homes, where they are most comfortable, and have a place to go when they need some more help.

Along with the new continuing care strategy our government understands the importance of seniors' centres in our communities. I've had the opportunity to visit many of these centres in Alberta, and I'm very impressed by the number of people who work together to help seniors maintain a good quality of life. In Cold Lake I met a gentleman who told me about moving to this community and going to the seniors' centre for the first time and sitting alone in the back of the room. Another senior noticed him and asked him what he was doing sitting at the back of the room all by himself. He said he didn't know anyone, so she invited him to sit at her table. She asked him if he knew how to dance, and he said, "I can't remember," so she got him up to dance and discovered that he was indeed a good dancer. He hasn't missed a dance since and is always the first one up, encouraging others to get up and dance. I hope he keeps dancing. Being active with other people helps seniors to remain healthy and happy. Health and happiness are both essential elements to a good quality of life.

To further support our shared responsibility, as you heard in the throne speech, we will be presenting updated legislation this session. The Supportive Living Accommodation Licensing Act, sponsored by the very competent MLA for Red Deer-South, introduced as Bill 10, will promote the safety and security of seniors by updating legislation that oversees residential living, lodge living, assisted living, and enhanced assisted living. The act will also continue to require facilities to comply with the accommodation standards. I've spoken to many seniors in Alberta who have requested and encouraged this legislation.

In addition and related to our efforts to increase the supply of supportive living units, we are providing more than $92 million to create more than 870 new units, to modernize 200 units, and to improve seniors' lodges across Alberta. This funding will provide more options for people to remain in their communities and have more affordable alternatives.

Another piece of legislation that will be brought forward by Seniors and Community Supports during this session is the Protection for Persons in Care Amendment Act. This legislation will continue to highlight the shared responsibility that we all have within our village by strengthening the existing legislation to ensure the safety of adults receiving care by making it a duty for a person to report abuse.

There are also several other initiatives related to our commitment and shared responsibility of assisting both seniors and persons with disabilities within this village known as Alberta. This includes preparing for an aging population. Did you know that research in the United Kingdom shows that people who prepare a will will live on average 10 more years than those who don't? This is one good reason for you to prepare a will. That looks after your wishes after you die, and a personal directive takes care of your wishes when you're not able to speak for yourself and you're still alive.

My ministry is promoting personal directives and has developed an online registry, the first of its kind in Canada, to encourage adults to detail their wishes in case they become unable to make personal decisions. We will continue to support Albertans with disabilities through programs like the assured income for the severely handicapped, or AISH, and the persons with developmental disabilities program, or PDD. The Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities, chaired by Marlin Styner and the capable MLA from Edmonton-Rutherford as the deputy chair, is a very important connection to the disability community and to the future.

I know that we have a long way to go to make our communities more accessible to those with disabilities. Just last week I had the very humbling experience of needing a wheelchair to get around after I tore a ligament in my knee. Do you know how many places in Alberta do not have universal access? Although I was in the wheelchair for only two days, it became very clear to me that there are many places in Red Deer and Alberta that are not wheelchair accessible. I was forced to cancel a number of appointments because I had no way of going up and down stairs. As baby boomers age, we will add to the numbers of those who require universal access just to make a day.

The throne speech states: "It is Alberta's people that make our province unique: people who are dynamic and genuine, optimistic and open-minded, people who share the freedom to create and the spirit to achieve." Alberta is all of this and more. Alberta is a big village where people share responsibility with courage and determination, where dreamers see the opportunity and work together to seize the day. Peter Seeger, the American folk singer who wrote Turn! Turn! Turn!, said, "I want to turn the clock back to when people lived in small villages and took care of each other." I would tell Mr. Seeger that instead of turning the clock back, all he needs to do is move to Alberta – Alberta – a big village where people live and take care of each other.

I am proud to be Albertan. I am proud to be Canadian. As we continue to build this province for those who will inherit this land that we love, I hope that we will always remember to dance like no one is watching, sing like no one is listening, and to love with all our hearts.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Five minutes are available under Standing Order 29(2)(a).

Seeing none, the hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, am pleased to have the opportunity to rise today in response to the speech delivered by His Honour the Lieutenant Governor. The Lieutenant Governor showed considerable emotion in starting his speech and noted that it was his fifth. I can only say in starting a response that we have been well served by this particular Lieutenant Governor and that he has done well for both the institution and office and for the people of Alberta.

One year ago today was Alberta's 27th general election. I was honoured and privileged to be returned to this Assembly for a fourth term by the constituents of Edmonton-Whitemud. It remains a privilege for me to continue to serve those constituents and all the citizens of Alberta as a member of our Premier's government. Anniversaries are always an opportune time to reflect, and the past year has certainly provided ample food for thought. The past six months have been particularly difficult for many Albertans as events in the global energy and banking sectors have brought unexpected uncertainty into our homes and businesses. While today we are concerned about how the economy will impact our families and our neighbours, we must continue to look to the future with the certainty of better times ahead. Now more than ever is the time for faith and foresight as we form that future.

A great challenge for Alberta is to ensure that our future is economically and environmentally sustainable. There is no better way to succeed in tackling this challenge than to invest our resource-based wealth into our people so that we become a key part of the global knowledge economy. A knowledge economy depends not just on the creativity of people but on the facilities, the institutions, the universities and colleges, where knowledge is developed.

In recent years Edmonton has become a world-renowned centre for nanotechnology, energy and natural resources technology, diabetes, cardiology, cancer prevention and treatment, and ambulatory care. Of course, many other parts of Alberta are renowned for what they deliver to the research agenda and the knowledge agenda. The cutting-edge research conducted at our universities, our community facilities, our businesses is garnering international acclaim while generating economic spinoffs and reducing our environmental impact while improving the daily lives of Albertans.

Of course, continuing to build an economy based on knowledge will not be easy. We can and must build on our successes – the best schools, world-class universities, a province-wide fibre-optic network, unique endowment funds, and state-of-the-art facilities for medical, science, and engineering research – to ensure that every Albertan has the opportunity to succeed to the best of his or her abilities.

Alberta has a strong record on which to build a better future, but there's more work to do. In all of this there is one crucial foundation, our basic education system. Leading in learning is central to a successful story. This means making certain that our educational opportunities are second to none, that every child can find his or her passion and grow up to be a caring, contributing, confident member of society. When all Albertans strive together in a shared desire for our children to succeed, we will ensure that our province reaps the benefits of maximizing its human potential.

The timeless promise of education everywhere is to nurture and stimulate, to enrich and fulfill the innate potential in every human being, and that is why we strive to ensure that every child looks on the world with wonder, is fascinated by constant surprises, and is challenged and uplifted by the search for truth in all things. That's why our schools must be places of delight and dedication, diversity and depth, places of dignity and vitality in which we can gather and celebrate, aspire and achieve.

Yet education is not solely about what happens in schools. It infuses and informs the whole of life. It is about preparing each student for life as a citizen, teaching them to appreciate their entitlements, capitalize on their opportunities, and fulfill their responsibilities. Instilling hope, respect, dignity, and humility in our young people is thus a task that cannot be undertaken solely by educators. The entire community must actively contribute.

Mr. Speaker, education exists not just for the child but for the community. Every Albertan has a stake in what happens in our schools today. Years from now the toddler you passed on the street today may be the nurse caring for you in a hospital, the youngster ahead of you in line at a grocery store may be the police officer keeping your community safe, and the teenager who helps you with your computer may employ you at the next big Alberta company. Education does not become any less important when our children and our grandchildren graduate from school. It is a never-ending and noble task for only through education do we bolster the shared bonds of community and citizenship.

Our province is unique because of the content of our characters and the sense of purpose of our souls. It is therefore imperative that our children learn to honour our heritage and dedicate themselves to the future. Only in an education system that is open to all Albertans regardless of gender, race, religion, class, or geography can our students come to appreciate the value of diversity and to learn to make judgments about things that truly matter. People come to Alberta from all over the world because of the opportunities that are available here, especially in our schools. That is why it's essential that every person has the opportunity they need to learn, adapt, and develop new knowledge and new skills, and it makes it absolutely critical that those learning opportunities are high quality, accessible, affordable, and sustainable for all Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, the Lieutenant Governor said, "The freedom to create our own future and achieve our dreams so often rests on our enthusiasm for education." To this end we've undertaken a project called Inspiring Education: A Dialogue with Albertans, ably chaired by the Member for Athabasca-Redwater and an Edmonton school-teacher, Brent McDonough, a former U of A senator. We undertake this effort not because there is anything wrong with our schools. Indeed, education is one of those things of which Albertans can be rightfully proud. People come to Alberta from all over the world to see our school infrastructure and to observe how our children learn. International tests often place Alberta as one of the top five education systems in the world. Clearly, the hard work of students, teachers, parents, administrators in our school communities are deserving of celebration. However, new times demand new approaches, and the time has come to establish what educational excellence looks like in the next part of the 21st century.

Inspiring Education is both a process and a product, an invigoration of learning in our province and a legacy to leave to the next generation. We seek to renew public appreciation for the value and importance of education in Albertans' lives and to build understanding of how education is increasingly the basis of a prosperous society and economy. We must develop a broadly accepted and clear understanding of what it will mean to be an educated Albertan 20 years from now, and we must look beyond our immediate needs and interests to develop a policy framework which describes the overall direction, principles, and long-term goals for education in Alberta over the next two decades.

Mr. Speaker, by reaching out to Albertans to explore their hopes, dreams, and aspirations for their children, we will ensure that education enables every one of our citizens to face the future with confidence. We will know that we have succeeded when our children are inspired to be imaginative, inventive, inquiring, inclusive, informed, independent, and industrious. With education Albertans will continue to have the freedom to create and the spirit to achieve.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a) five minutes are available. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity under Standing Order 29(2)(a).

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. Earlier during question period the hon. Minister of Education suggested that this past summer, when sod was being turned for a P3 school in southeast Calgary, I was potentially wearing earmuffs and blinders because I confused the Babcock & Brown financing. I would just ask the minister: was I wearing earmuffs and, potentially, blinders during the Speech from the Throne? I don't recall having heard any reference about full-day funding for kindergarten. I don't recall hearing any reference to funding for half-day junior kindergarten. I don't recall any references being made to catching up on defrayed infrastructure for schools. The Calgary public board of education, for example, is $630 million behind.

If I was in fact missing these points, as I obviously did in the summer, were these ideas mentioned in the Speech from the Throne? Was there any mention, Minister, of getting rid of the publication of achievement test scores? Could you please clarify if I somehow missed those points in the throne speech?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, as has been just said to me, there is absolutely no way to tell how many ideas this fellow has missed. But, in fact, if the Speech from the Throne was simply a litany of programs and things to be done, if that's all that was in the Speech from the Throne, the true meaning of a Speech from the Throne, in my view, would be missed. The Lieutenant Governor when he delivers the Speech from the Throne, yes, talks about the agenda for the next year, but what he's really talking about are our hopes and dreams for the future of the province. In Inspiring Education, which was mentioned by His Honour the Lieutenant Governor, he truly encompassed the things that we need to do to plan that future for the children of this province to make sure that they get the kind of education that they need.

The hon. member can list all of the issues, and certainly there are issues in education. No one is denying that there are things that need to be done. Notwithstanding the comment from Red Deer-North earlier, Alberta, although a wonderful place, is not necessarily a perfect place. There are things that we can do to make it better. There are things that we can do to make education today better. But what I was addressing my remarks to was about making sure that as we move forward into tomorrow, we understand what the world of tomorrow for our children is going to be like and what things we need to do to make sure that our children and our grandchildren can live here and work here and enjoy the environment here, the place that we've come to know and love.

The fact of the matter is, Mr. Speaker, that I was at a conference in London, England, with 65 ministers of education from around the world, one of the few subnational ministers of education there, and it was very affirming because those ministers of education were aspiring to have what we have in Alberta: wide broad-band connectivity for all of our schools, good curriculum, strong teaching, those things which make the education system strong. Do they have challenges as we have challenges of keeping up with the school infrastructure? Absolutely. Are there more things that we could do on a day-to-day basis? Absolutely. Do we need to work more on early childhood and addressing issues, identifying concerns? Absolutely. But we've got a pretty great place, and we're going to make it even better.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. When you were in England attending the conference with the 65 ministers, did they mention a program where children who scored very poorly in standardized achievement tests in Britain received grants of £9,000 apiece, each school, to raise the level of the children who were having such difficulties with testing as opposed to simply publishing their test scores?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, in terms of publishing their test scores, I would have to say this: the government of Alberta does not publish children's test scores. We have a Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, which allows people to get access to information, and members opposite, including that member, routinely ask us to give out more information. Well, one of the pieces of information that we, unfortunately, have to give out are the test scores, and then the Fraser Institute publishes them and ranks schools. But I routinely say, when asked, that those reports ranking the schools is a wrong use of the data, inappropriate use of the data, and I will continue to say that.

I will say in response to his other question, about what I learned, that I learned a lot about things we could do, things that we could do better. In fact, I had the opportunity to go up to Sheffield in England – and I know you're wanting me to wrap up. They're rebuilding their secondary system, and in doing so, they're mandating wrap-around services. There's a thing we could learn from them.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour today to rise on behalf of the constituents of Airdrie-Chestermere and respond to the Speech from the Throne. It really has been a very interesting first year and a very memorable first year. I learn lots every day from my constituents, and it's been an honour to serve with the members from this House.

Mr. Speaker, these are sobering times. Today Albertans and the rest of the world are experiencing feelings of great anxiety and feelings of unease at the state of the world's economy. Jobs are being lost, and incomes are tightening, and a mountain of consumer and government debt is piling up. I know that many Albertans, including many of my own constituents, are hurting, and many more are worrying that they or their loved ones might become the next casualty of this economic downturn. However, we must not allow undue pessimism or negative thoughts to become self-fulfilling prophecy. As Albertans we must do what we have done in times before: we must stand up, we must get to work, and we must turn these daunting challenges into opportunities. It is these opportunities that I wish to address today.

The hardships we face present us with a chance, I think, to refocus, to replan, to set goals, and to aspire to new achievements. As government revenues shrink, we as a fiscally conservative province should re-examine the ways in which we deliver core services to Albertans. Throwing around more money and regulation at tired and antiquated ways of delivering health care, education, and infrastructure will not solve our problems. Rather, we must without preconception, as we are doing in these areas right now, learn of the best and most innovative practices from around the world and have the courage to implement them.

Similarly, crippling our resource-based economy with overregulation and wealth redistribution schemes will do nothing to help the world's environment and certainly will not stimulate an economic recovery. As our Premier has indicated, committing Albertans' hard-earned money to an international trading scheme run by the same kinds of geniuses that brought us the credit crisis and subprime mortgage meltdown is simply not a sensible course of action. Rather, the key to dealing with our environmental challenges will be found in new innovation and new technology. It's funny. Where many critics see the oil sands as a threat to our world's environment, Albertans see the potential wealth and technology derived from the oil sands as the very solution to the environmental challenges the world faces.

It is this sort of innovative thinking and leadership that has made Alberta today one of the best positioned jurisdictions in the world to successfully weather the current economic storm. We have in times turned challenges into opportunities, and we need to do so again. For example, in the recession and commodities bust of the early 1990s, while governments in this country and around the world increased spending, increased taxes, and built up debt, Alberta took a very unique and decidedly different approach. The Progressive Conservatives under then Premier Ralph Klein curbed spending, lowered taxes, and began implementing a plan to pay down the provincial debt. The result: the economy recovered and a prolonged boom ensued.

But our party did not stop there. Our government stuck to the plan to pay off the debt and paid off the entire balance. It also invested close to $14 billion in our rainy day sustainability fund and capital account for exactly this sort of economic downturn. In short, Albertans and we as their government made the fiscally prudent and innovative decisions necessary to place ourselves in the enviable position we find ourselves in today. We turned a fiscal downturn into an opportunity to become better fiscal stewards for the long term.

Now, not everything was handled perfectly, obviously. First, it is safe to say that some core programs were cut too deeply. It is likely that almost the same cost-cutting could have occurred without so much pain had the cuts been better planned and focused. Our current Premier has made it clear that he will take a more prudent and measured approach during the current downturn.

Second – and this is a problem that I believe we're still facing today – is the issue of bringing government spending under control and to do so permanently. This is the key to the long-term success of our province, and it is this opportunity that we have before us today. That is why I will be urging our government to legislatively limit overall government spending to the rate of inflation plus real GDP growth.

This type of legislation has several advantages. It ensures that spending does not get out of control, while providing the funds necessary for continued strong core social programs. In fact, if former Prime Minister Paul Martin had kept his promise while then Finance minister in 2000 to cap government spending to the rate of inflation plus growth, the federal government would be expecting a surplus this year rather than a $34 billion deficit. In Alberta, where our total provincial spending has increased 140 per cent since 1996, it is clear that had we instituted adequate spending controls, we would be announcing surpluses even during this world-wide recession and corresponding low oil and gas prices.

Another advantage to spending control is that it would provide clear benchmarks and have the effect of curtailing the size and scope of government bureaucracy as departments look for innovative ways to provide more efficient and better services by reallocating existing funding rather than simply asking for more funding while outdated and wasteful programs linger on.

Most importantly, though, this type of legislation could act as a cornerstone of a new, long-term financial plan for Alberta. By controlling spending in this way, it will only take a few short years of modest growth and commodity price recovery for our provincial revenues to greatly outstrip expenditures. This would allow us to grow the heritage fund substantially by investing unbudgeted surpluses therein, and as the fund grows over time, the annual interest returns from the fund would eventually eliminate our reliance on oil and gas revenues, which are both volatile and nonrenewable.

This sort of forward thinking will save our children and grandchildren from having to either substantially raise taxes or cut core social programs. Wouldn't it be a wonderful gift to our children and to our grandchildren if by enacting such a plan, we turn what was once a sea of nonrenewable oil and gas revenue into a mountain of permanent investment capital compounding with interest each and every year? From that point the possibilities are endless. We could grow the heritage fund further for the purposes of substantially lowering income taxes. We could invest in infrastructure, health care, education, and other core programs in degrees that other jurisdictions could only dream of. In short, we could elevate the Alberta advantage in unprecedented ways, attracting the best people, the best entrepreneurs, the best businesses and technologies from around the world and for decades to come.

With those thoughts and aspirations in mind, Mr. Speaker, but, obviously, recognizing the feelings of unease and uncertainty that many of us in the province feel right now, I want to conclude by expressing to my constituents and each and every Albertan my faith that our province is prepared to weather this economic storm and that the spirit and drive of our people will turn these struggles and challenges into new levels of opportunity. I would say with unequivocal certainty that Alberta's best and brightest days are still to come.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I very much appreciate the comments and the hope for Alberta to survive this economic recession. I would like to know if you support the notion behind Motion 501 of investing in public infrastructure in schools, in hospitals, in roads and under what circumstance you would limit any expenditures to inflation. For example, if there was a circumstance where a hospital desperately needed to be completed or major infrastructure repairs suddenly became necessary, are you flexible on that inflationary sort of limit?

Mr. Anderson: Well, I would say that it would probably be an important idea to keep spending – and that would include all increases in government spending – under that cap. But we have to realize that, yeah, there are situations where infrastructure is needed, and sometimes, perhaps, that might take us over the cap. Where I think that money would come from in that case is the capital account, money that had already been set aside for that purpose. Whether we put all the money into a heritage fund and build that up for the purposes of eliminating our dependence on oil and gas revenues or whether we put a portion of that into kind of a capital heritage account so that when there's a downturn, we have money to spend on and stimulate the economy through infrastructure projects, et cetera, that's definitely a way of doing it. But the point is that on a year-over-year increase, operational government spending would only increase by inflation plus growth. If we did that, we could put away money for those types of infrastructure projects as well as the heritage fund.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. In a fashion, I think, what you're talking about is almost the equivalent of a COLA clause, where you adjust expenses by inflationary measures. I'm wondering: with regard to savings do you think that even during this time of recession it is important to sock money away for the future? Do you think it's possible to both save and responsibly spend at this recessionary time?

Mr. Anderson: I think it's very important to make sure we're controlling our spending, but there's no point, in my view, in borrowing money to save money. That doesn't make a whole lot of sense to me. There is some case to be made for it in some circumstances, but I don't think that that's what we should be looking at. What we should be looking at and what the Premier, I believe, has done is laid out a specific plan for getting us out of this recession, on the road to recovery, and part of that includes controlling our spending. Then, once we are out of recession and once revenues start to again outstrip expenditures, I think that point would be the time to implement an aggressive saving strategy. That would be my feeling.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I agree with you. The idea of borrowing money to save money is questionable, but that's the underlying principle of P3s. The idea is that rather than use your own money now, if you borrow that money, you can get a better price for construction. Do you feel free to comment on P3s, which, in fact, borrow money against future prospects?

Mr. Anderson: Well, as I said in the response to the throne speech, we need to be looking at innovative solutions that maybe we haven't looked at before, and I think actually P3s fit the bill quite well. They do lead to an overall savings for taxpayers if they're done appropriately. What I would like to see – and I think that it could be argued that the heritage fund and the other funds do this – is make sure that those future obligations are backed up by money set aside for that purpose so that we're not mortgaging our children's future on P3s. But the concept of P3s as a way of saving money for Albertans I think is a very solid initiative so long as we're backing up those obligations for the future.

The Acting Speaker: No one else wishes to speak?

The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Stevens: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. It certainly is my pleasure to rise this afternoon and to make a few remarks in response to the Speech from the Throne delivered by His Honour the Honourable Lieutenant Governor. As was noted earlier today, we are celebrating one year since the last election, and I can only remark that after listening to the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere and other hon. members that form a part of the majority in this House, there were 72 gold stars handed out a year ago, and the hon. member is but one of them.

What struck me about his opening comments was that after a year he has noted that this job is most interesting. I'm part of the class of '97. I'm in my 12th year, and indeed those of us from that particular year will be celebrating 12 years next week. I can tell you, hon. Speaker, that after 12 years I still find this job most interesting. It continues to be an honour. It has always been an honour. Indeed, it has always been a matter of waking up each day and saying: this is a privilege, and I look forward to what I am doing. I can tell you that all of us in this House, I believe, feel that way most of the time. I can think of no exception to it, but to have somebody after a year say that and to be able to say it after 12 years I think speaks well, even when we've gone through, in my case, 12 throne speeches.

What I would like to say about the hon. Lieutenant Governor is that it would appear that his reading of the throne speech this year may be his last. He is in his fifth year. I'm not sure that his term will take him through another one, but if it does, that would be great. If it does not, however, I would like to join others in thanking him for his grace and good humour – and indeed there has been great grace and great good humour for his regular travels throughout this province – and for all he has done for the people of Alberta.

The Lieutenant Governor in his remarks stated that Alberta is a trading province and that our economic success depends on competing in a world marketplace. Well, Mr. Speaker, trading and competing in a world marketplace is part of the critical work of my ministry, International and Intergovernmental Relations. Alberta has advocated for the elimination of barriers to interprovincial trade, and we have been very successful.

With the trade, investment, and labour mobility agreement, otherwise known as TILMA, Alberta and B.C. have shown tremendous leadership in breaking down interprovincial barriers. No other Canadian jurisdiction has made a commitment like this. On April 1 of this year Alberta and B.C. will have achieved full labour mobility for all certified tradespeople and a majority of other occupations, reconciled business registration and reporting requirements, and the reconciliation of several regulations that have impeded trade and investment. As a result Albertans will be able to pursue career, business, and investment opportunities in B.C. without going through needless red tape.

The TILMA has been and will continue to be a catalyst at the national level. The pan-Canadian agreement on internal trade has recently been amended to incorporate TILMA-like labour mobility and dispute resolution provisions. There has also been significant progress to bring the TILMA principles to the AIT chapters on energy and agriculture.

Alberta is also a strong and consistent supporter of trade liberalization at the international level. We believe success at the Doha round, where Canada and other member countries of the WTO have been negotiating to liberalize international trade, is the best way to gain international market access for Alberta exporters. Alberta's priorities in the WTO Doha round negotiations have been liberalizing trade in agriculture – in other words, eliminating export subsidies – liberalizing trade in the industrial goods and services, and reducing unnecessary red tape surrounding international trade. Alberta intends to remain fully engaged to ensure that its interests are reflected in the approaches taken by Canada in these negotiations.

Of course, the current economic market has had an impact on trade. Exports and imports dropped in December amid the global economic downturn, with exports falling at a faster pace than imports. Canada recorded its first trade deficit since March 1976. Alberta's exports dropped 14 per cent, from $8.25 billion to $7 billion, from November to December. It was inevitable that the global economic recession and the economic crisis in the United States would affect our exports. That said, 2008 was an exceptional year overall for Alberta as our exports reached $109 billion, which is up from $81.8 billion in 2007. Alberta continues to supply goods that countries around the world need: food and energy. This puts us in a very favourable position on a go-forward basis. Alberta continues to be a net exporter and will be into the foreseeable future.

The effects of the economic downturn on global trade are a further indication that the work International and Intergovernmental Relations does to promote Alberta business and attract investment abroad is all the more crucial. There's no question our province's economic success is tied to our ability to market our goods, services, and people globally. My ministry will continue its outreach to Alberta companies, gaining their input on international business, providing information on international trade and export opportunities through our trade offices.

The trade offices help the province compete in the global marketplace and showcase and market Alberta to attract tourism and labour. In '07-08 our international offices facilitated more than 3,300 networking sessions and participated in almost 200 trade shows to promote trade and investment in Alberta. We also promote foreign investment in Alberta through direct contact with key multinational corporations to encourage expansion into our province. Alberta will continue to diversify our export base and will target international markets that offer solid export opportunities.

To ensure that the message about Alberta's leadership, commitment, and action on the environment reaches an international audience, international travel by the Premier and cabinet ministers is vital. We cannot wait for international opportunities to come to us. We are an export-based economy, and creating linkages with other countries is essential for Alberta. Particularly during this time of economic uncertainty it's important that the Premier and cabinet ministers meet face to face with government and business leaders. We need to demonstrate that Alberta's investment climate remains strong.

International activities also expand beyond business. We nurture strong international relations in other areas of importance to Albertans: culture, sport, education, technology. One of our most important relationships is with our biggest trading partner and neighbour to the south, the United States. The election of President Obama was an historic event and has brought a renewed sense of purpose and vigour to the American people and to the U.S. government. The new U.S. administration has the potential to directly impact Alberta's economic fortunes. The oil sands are an important key to North American energy security, and we know the world demands that the resource be developed with great care and especially great care to the environment. We demand it from ourselves, and we will reinforce to the new administration that we are committed to continuous improvement on the environmental front.

During these difficult times it is prudent for all governments to weigh and re-evaluate the economic impacts of any policy decision. Discussions over cap and trade systems as well as carbon taxes are not new for Alberta. Right now that is what they are, discussions. Alberta believes that the key to addressing climate change is unleashing technology, specifically carbon capture and storage. President Obama has talked about the importance of clean coal and alternative energy. Alberta is pursuing clean coal, and we have committed some $239 million to bioenergy development. It should also be noted that we are leaders in Canada in wind power production.

Our Alberta Washington office is at the front line of ensuring that the relationship with our top economic partner remains positive. It focuses on key areas, including energy and the environment, agriculture, forestry, and technology. The office also ensures progressive energy-related initiatives under way in our province are understood and factored into new U.S. rules and regulations.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to make some comments in response to the throne speech.

The Acting Speaker: Five minutes are available under Standing Order 29(2)(a). The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I believe that the hon. Deputy Premier is a man of integrity. In discussions we had with regard to affordable housing, he indicated to me that affordable housing wasn't a top priority for the individuals he represented in his constituency. I'm just wondering, with regard to the Speech from the Throne and the government's actions, are you confident that in the nine years that remain in the 10-year plan, the government will have taken every opportunity to provide affordable housing for Albertans? Can we reach that goal?

Mr. Stevens: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's always encouraging to know that this hon. member believes that I am a person of integrity. It's helpful to hear that in this place or any other place.

I think that what I would say about our efforts in the area of homelessness is that our Premier and the minister responsible have taken significant leadership in developing this particular plan. I have every faith in the ability of Albertans to focus their attention and their resources on this. I have no doubt that as we go along, we will see incredible progress being made and that when we look back upon this, as we march towards that 10-year mark, we will be most proud of what we have accomplished, and we will have accomplished a great deal.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I do want to acknowledge that the government has contributed, for example, to the Mustard Seed structure, that the government has contributed to the drop-in centre, and those are very much appreciated expenditures. Does the hon. Deputy Premier believe that the government has done enough in terms of supporting organizations like Inn from the Cold and women's shelters? In the last year we had over 19,000 women turned away from shelters. Could the government, during this recessionary period, armed by Motion 501, be even more aggressive on eliminating homelessness and providing shelter?

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, as has been noted in one of the previous responses to this hon. member's questions, the government always acknowledges that we can do more. There are always matters that need to be attended to, and while I'm not specifically aware of what is happening with the organizations that he alludes to, I have no doubt that in that area there's always more that can be done. What I know is that when budgets are presented – and one will be presented in early April – we have the opportunity to measure the amount of money that is available and the choices that are made by government and debate that at that time, and that would be an appropriate time to deal with the specifics of the question that the hon. member has put forward. But from my perspective, we have come a long way in addressing many of those necessary and important social issues. Almost assuredly there is more to be done. We will wait and see what the budget ultimately says on April 7.

The Acting Speaker: Are there any other members who wish to speak?

Hon. members, if no one else wishes to speak, in order to move on in government business, we have to have someone who has not spoken in response to the Speech from the Throne adjourn debate on this. Perhaps the hon. government whip would wish to adjourn debate on this?

Mr. Oberle: I would be pleased, Mr. Speaker, to move that we adjourn debate on the throne speech.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 3

Credit Union Amendment Act, 2009

[Adjourned debate February 18: Mr. Berger]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and join second reading debate on Bill 3, the Credit Union Amendment Act, 2009. I will be brief on this. [some applause] What? You wanted me to go on? [interjection] Well, you know, in my own opinion, I don't think there's 20 minutes' worth of talking for me to do on this one, hon. member. I believe that when the bill is mostly in order, which I feel this one is, I should just get down to the business of saying so and express a couple of concerns that we do have.

This bill will allow credit union boards to use advance polling to elect board members, and it will also remove the time frame when credit union committees are to submit reports to the board. Credit Union Central Alberta, which is the central banking facility service bureau and trade association for the credit union system in Alberta, requested the ability to use advance polls in order to facilitate the participation of credit union members. Thus, in the spring 2008 sitting Bill 13, the Financial Institutions Statutes Amendment Act, was passed, which partially dealt with modernizing amendments to the Credit Union Act. These changes allowed for the increased use of technology, privacy enhancements for directors. It gave the option for directors to apply for loans with their credit unions without having their peers on the board be involved in the approval process.

Now, what this amendment act, Bill 3, seeks to do is allow vacancies that are filled during annual general meetings to be filled in another manner provided for by the bylaws, for instance advance polling. Some credit unions did advance polling in the past, so this bill would have retroactive validation of their elected board members, which would avoid any legal action that could be undertaken for those elected in advance polls before it was actually legislated.

The other thing that this bill does, as I said, is remove the time frame when credit union committees are to submit reports to the board. The original legislation stated that reports are to be submitted after meetings forthwith or at least once a month or at least once a quarter. The proposed amendments will simply state that reports should be submitted forthwith after each of the committee's meetings.

Mr. Speaker, we have checked with stakeholders. Those who have responded to our requests have no complaints with the bill and see it as cleanup legislation. We're still waiting for a response from one particular stakeholder, but we're not anticipating that that response is going to be different.

I really only have a couple of questions, which I think we can probably deal with in committee stage. The questions are these. These amendments state that members can only be appointed or elected outside of annual general meetings "in another manner provided for by the bylaws." What I'd like to know around that is: what will determine quorum, if anything? Does this open the door for problems, with the elections being seen as fair or unfair? On the reporting by committees, how will the reporting back to the credit union boards be monitored to ensure that it happens? Really, all it says now is "forthwith" under Bill 3, and while this certainly allows for some flexibility, there's a potential danger, I think, that forthwith might be too vague and may lead to delays in reporting.

If we get satisfactory answers back to the above questions, then I would imagine that our response to that is probably going to be that the amendments as proposed in this bill are fairly minor and probably won't be contentious. Of course, if we get answers back that we don't like, it might be a different story.

That's my take on it at this point. I will take my seat now and see if any other members wish to join debate. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I very much appreciate my hon. colleague from Calgary-Currie's brevity. I think he was potentially allowing me more time to speak on the bill. However, I agree with him and do not see great concern with this bill. Basically, what it does is facilitate a democratic electoral process, and that's very much in need in the province of Alberta, even though it's at the credit union stage as opposed to adopting I think it was 182 recommendations made by our former Chief Electoral Officer, Lorne Gibson. By the time he'd finished with his recommendations, I think they'd come up to 250. However, the election of a credit union board is considerably simpler.

The concerns that the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie brought up with quorum, making sure that the votes were accurately counted and reflect the wishes of the credit union membership, are extremely important. Just recently I had an opportunity, for example, to vote for the board of First Calgary Financial, and I appreciated that opportunity to simply mail in my ballot and first and second choices. I'm sure that the Credit Union Amendment Act, 2009, Bill 3, will facilitate that process.

It's unfortunate that in this province it's so hard to have your vote registered and have your vote counted in general, but within Bill 3, Credit Union Amendment Act, regulations of voting procedures will be set out, and hopefully, as the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie pointed out, the "forthwith" comment will be replaced by a specific time, at which the election of the new board will be noted and, hopefully, celebrated.

Being as this is a bill of facilitation, a bill, basically, of cutting red tape, eliminating bureaucracy, encouraging credit union participation, at this point I am supportive of Bill 3.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wish to speak?

The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod to close debate.

Mr. Berger: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just wish to close debate at this time. I'll bring forward answers to those questions at committee.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 3 read a second time]

Bill 8

Feeder Associations Guarantee Act

The Acting Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm certainly pleased to rise today and move second reading of Bill 8, the Feeder Associations Guarantee Act.

As shared during the introduction of Bill 8, Mr. Speaker, this bill provides a rewrite of the existing act. Like the current act, the proposed legislation supports the growth and the development of feeder associations. We all know that the agriculture industry makes an important contribution to Alberta's economy and the development of our rural communities. Under the leadership of the Premier, our government has committed to ensuring that Alberta's agriculture industry has effective financial services. Like any industry or business sector, financial services are critical to business development opportunities. This also applies to our livestock producers and feeder associations, who want to be competitive and enjoy some long-term success. Specifically, the current and proposed acts authorize government loan guarantees to financial institutions that lend money to local feeder associations.

This bill adds clarity to several sections of the act and refines the text, such as using current legal language, updating definitions, and clarifying roles. I will highlight a few of the updates and clarifications proposed. The bill clarifies the joint roles of the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development and the Minister of Finance and Enterprise. It also clarifies the ministerial powers to inspect and audit records of feeder associations and lenders. This will align it better with other legislation. The new text makes the ownership position for feeder associations clear, and it enables regulations that will define requirements that must be met for a producer to be recognized as a member of a feeder association. The bill also removes the requirement for the act to be renewed every five years, and it aligns with the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act.

As noted earlier, creating opportunities is at the heart of this legislation, and this bill enables improved and new regulations that support program enhancements. For example, it allows the program to be expanded, extending what and who is covered. The appropriate regulations would accept agricultural partnerships and corporations as feeder association members. It would also enable extension of the feeder association program to include financing the processing and marketing of products from feeder association-owned livestock. Mr. Speaker, this has significant potential to encourage the development of producer-driven supply chains.

Another business benefit that would be supported by the new legislative framework would be improving cash flow. It would enable payments to be provided to members on a portion of the equity they have created in the livestock during the feeding period. Flexibility, of course, is often the hallmark of an effective program. As a government we continue to be focused on the accountability of the programs we support. That is why we proposed additional risk mitigation and protection measures. The new act would enable protecting a feeder association security deposit account for the benefit of all its members.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Together these administrative changes and additions will allow the program to meet the needs of industry in the current business climate. I'm confident that the livestock industry will be very pleased with this proposed act, Mr. Speaker. This bill is a product of extensive stakeholder consultation, which included feeder associations and other livestock industry groups as well as the financial institutions. We have already witnessed how this program has assisted our livestock sector. Currently 56 feeder associations representing over 2,000 Alberta producers are benefiting from the program. In 2008 over 19 per cent of Alberta's annual calf crop was financed under the program: 375,000 head of cattle valued at $216 million. There has been over $6.7 billion worth of cattle financed since the beginning of the program in 1936.

Mr. Speaker, we are pleased to continue with this program and look forward to improving its ability to make our agriculture industry even more competitive. The proposed legislation strengthens and expands financial services to our agriculture industry. It allows government to better meet the needs of the livestock feeding and marketing value chain, which will ultimately create a strong industry and a strong provincial economy.

I would therefore encourage all members of this House to support Bill 8 at second reading. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to speak at second reading to Bill 8, the Feeder Associations Guarantee Act. I will admit that I'm subbing in for my colleague who is the critic for Agriculture and Rural Development, so I hope I don't disappoint him.

I do have some questions and concerns around this act. I listened very carefully to what the sponsoring minister had to say, and the first question that comes to mind as I look at the act and I listen to what the minister says is: why did you repeal the previous act if all you were looking to do was sort of clarify and update a few things? That's not the usual process that I see this government follow. We usually have an amending act that goes back and adjusts the existing one but not to repeal it flat out and then to bring in a new act. I think, in fact, they might even have exactly the same name. The Feeder Associations Guarantee Act of 2000 is repealed, according to section 12, and we have the Feeder Associations Guarantee Act. Okay. So they even have exactly the same name. Now, that's interesting. I'm wondering what is the strategy behind that. That is an unusual process for the government to be involved in, and I'd like an answer to that, please.

I also note that what's being covered here is only feeder livestock, not cow-calf operations. We've got a very specific piece of legislation that is about a loans program to a very specific sector and not even the entire sector, just a section of it. These are only cattle that are coming up through these feeder associations, as I said, feeder livestock, not cow-calf operations. That's also one of my reasons for hesitation.

I think that what is most concerning me from what I'm seeing in this act is that, essentially, two major things are being accomplished, and the minister mentioned both of these. One, it's essentially moving everything into regulations, and I'm seeing the same language and the same phrases that have become such a trademark of this government. It's a trademark about moving accountability and transparency and a sort of open process behind closed doors, where regulations can be worked out by the minister and by an order in council and then they pop out the other end, and if you search really hard, you might be able to find out what they are. But it removes the process from the discussion in this Chamber, which also means that it makes it harder for members of the public or even members that are concerned in this particular sector to have any input on the debate and even to be able to track what's going on.

The big difference I can see from repealing the previous act and putting this one in place is to be able to take everything that was in legislation and stuff it under regulation, and I am never going to support that. I am one of those who is now coming up to the end of my 12th year of service in this House, and I cannot say that I have seen very much benefit for the public and the citizens of Alberta from having a number of different programs and pieces of legislation which remove discussion in an open and public manner to behind closed doors by way of putting them into regulations. I do not believe that that has been a good move on behalf of this government, and they've done it over and over again and not to the benefit of citizens. So the first thing that I see happening with this legislation is moving it into regs.

The second major point – and, again, the minister raised it; he sees it as a plus, but I see it as a minus – is removing the five-year renewal. Again, that raises real issues for me because I think we're talking eventually about tens of millions of dollars that are used to guarantee these loans. The government itself in its press release notes that these changes are to reflect current economic times, but I don't know that removing the requirement for a five-year renewal is going to make anything more accountable. I think it makes it less so, and I think it weakens this program. I would like to know what the justification is for moving that other than to say that the minister thinks this is great. I want to know what the technical details are that would give me a good reason to support this because I don't see it right now, and it's certainly not in the information that I've been supplied with.

I have some additional questions that I would like to have answered when we get to committee on this bill. I'm wondering if the government is anticipating that loans are going to be guaranteed exclusively for processing and marketing livestock products. You would remember that previously this was only for purchasing livestock, and now we have language that talks about marketing, and there's some other new language I heard the minister using. Basically, previously it was for purchasing livestock. Now I'm wondering if the government is looking at guaranteeing exclusively for the processing and marketing of the livestock and even separating that into different components, if you will.

I'd like also to have the minister give us some examples of specific cases where it would be necessary to extend the loan guarantee to processing and marketing of livestock products. I'll come back to that when I get to the end.

If the minister could also provide us with information about the benefits that the members of the feeder associations are most likely to anticipate seeing. I mean, does this benefit a smaller operator? Is it mostly going to benefit a larger scale operation? What members of feeder associations will benefit most from these changes?

Finally, has the minister or the department done any studies at all to anticipate how these changes may increase the number of defaulted loans and the cost to government as a result of guaranteeing these loans?

As someone that represents an urban riding, I'm looking to see how I go back and justify this to my constituents. That's why I'm asking the questions about... [interjection] Well, the minister looks confused. Don't you expect that legislation would be justifiable to all citizens in Alberta or just to the special ones that somehow qualify under his determination? He should be able to make this legislation make sense to every single citizen in the province. That's his job, and I'm looking forward to seeing him do it.

The major difference with this is that it seems to me there are two added components of this production line, if you want to call it, being added in and being made eligible for a loan. To me this starts to sound like an expansion of what we had before. Before it was about purchasing them, I think, and now we're talking about marketing and processing. Those, to me, are two more components along an assembly line, if I may, if you'll allow me to describe it that way. That starts me thinking that we're actually starting to be funding these operators for additional parts of this that they weren't funded for before, that they couldn't get loans for before.

So if this is part of a larger scheme where we're looking for value-added and we're trying to encourage more value-added processing, okay – fair enough – but I'd like to see the minister be able to lay this out. What it looks like to this city slicker is that we used to grant a loan for the purchasing of livestock and that now we're talking about also granting loans for marketing of this livestock and also for processing of it, and those are very different things than the purchasing.

I also understand that these feeder associations are essentially co-ops, and I tend to be supportive of the co-op movement because it's a group of people. Contrary to the way a number of people like to describe this province as though it was all these mavericks, these lone cowboys that showed up on their single horse and somehow, without working together, managed to produce this province, it's simply not true. What it came from was groups of people that chose to work together to help each other to build things, and of course the ultimate example of that is a barn raising.

We have a long and very proud history of a co-op movement here in this province, and it strikes me that that's, in fact, what these feeder associations are supposed to be. But once you start to get into loan guarantees and particularly loan guarantees where all of the criteria can be decided by the government behind closed doors, by a minister, and then executed through an order in council, it starts to cause me great concern.

I am not willing to support this bill at this point. I will look forward to hearing the rest of the information that is forthcoming from this minister, and if he is able to explain it in a way that the citizens of Edmonton-Centre can understand it, well, good on him. If he can't, then perhaps there's a problem with this bill.

Thank you very much for the opportunity to speak to this bill in second reading. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

4:20

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll be quite brief. Like my hon. colleague the Member for Edmonton-Centre, I too consider myself a city slicker. However, each day in this Assembly I attempt to grab the bull by the horns but often sort of am the recipient of the tail end of things. With that delightful analogy I'll continue.

A concern I have with regard to this bill is the concern of the government tending to move back into being in the business of being in business and, in that being in business, selecting winners and losers, and I'll refer to that a little bit later. We're in a time when we're saying to the world: don't get protectionist. We've gone to battle with groups down south like R-CALF, who have tried to limit exports of Alberta beef south. Here we are potentially setting a dangerous precedent of subsidizing to a fairly large extent through loans Alberta cattle, and hopefully that won't be a problem when it comes to GATT and free trade and so on. I'm hoping that the minister is much more knowledgeable about the protectionist forces we may face when these cattle are ready to be processed. If they're just simply going to be turned into beef in the box, then we probably won't have to deal with those problems.

While I'm a city slicker, I have a degree of background or at least experience in and around areas. For example, my wife's cousins were operating a 9,000-head feedlot in Boise, Idaho. Their location was right in the area along the Owyhee range, which our Alberta hero Ian Tyson sings about. My wife's cousin Sheila Lincoln is married to Bob Lincoln, who in turn is related to Abraham Lincoln. He ran a very successful business pretty much on his own without subsidies right up until the time that the recession hit. Then what he found was that in trying to sell his business and potentially look forward to retirement, the individuals who would potentially have bought his feedlot couldn't find the financing.

I know that part of Bill 8, the Feeder Associations Guarantee Act, is finding the financing for organizations, for feeder co-ops. I'm sure that based on the quantity of the cattle that these organizations own, there are a significant number of feedlots involved, so the magnitude is extremely important.

I also have referenced in this House my uncle, Dave Chase, who married Patsy Cross. The Cross family, as I'm sure most Albertans know, were one of the founders of cattle business in Alberta, and also that same Cross family is connected with the Calgary Exhibition and Stampede. My uncle David through marriage inherited the beginnings of an Angus herd, which he built up and then passed along to my cousin, unfortunately, who bought cattle from the Saskatchewan farmer who was later traced to have BSE, and his whole Angus herd was culled. Now, I believe that he received compensation from the province, but what I'm concerned about:

even though we're getting a much better handle on feed and even though we're getting a much better handle on testing for BSE, getting a much better handle on age verification, which is especially important for export, we're putting out the potential of a lot of taxpayers' money to promote a singular industry.

In terms of other experience that I believe is relative to this bill and the idea of supporting livestock producers, my wife's family is from the Ottawa Valley, and my father-in-law operated a very successful dairy farm out in Bells Corners. Again, he did it, basically, on his own. He worked off the farm in order to get the money to make the farm successful, and he wasn't reliant on loans. He was very much a self-made man. I'm proud of those connections.

I'm also concerned when the government, in the best interests of supporting agriculture, puts out loan guarantees. Look at what happened with a number of beef producers who invested an awful lot of money into Rancher's Beef so that there would be a Canadian competitor in Alberta that could potentially go head-to-head or toe-to-toe or, if not, at least give ranchers a choice of not having to take their beef to American-owned slaughterhouses. Rancher's Beef went belly up, and the government lost a significant portion, millions of dollars of taxpayer subsidies and grants to that organization. So I have concerns there.

The government during the height of the BSE epidemic compensated the greatest amount of compensation in terms of large chunks of millions of dollars, $32 million to one particular outfit, I believe, an American feedlot. The justification was that those American feedlots, which slaughtered their own cattle first, incidentally, had large numbers, and we were compensating based on a per cattle situation. A lot of the smaller producers did not receive the compensation. In a number of other cases they were overcompensated, and now they're having to pay back those loans. I'm hoping that Bill 8, the Feeder Associations Guarantee Act, has considerably greater oversight in terms of tracking the money, and hopefully people don't get in such debt in terms of the loans that they've been allowed to take out that they suffer the circumstance of repossession, which seems to be occurring more and more. It's primarily failed housing in the States where repossession starts happening, and it's going to start happening here, north of the 49th.

I am also concerned, as I mentioned earlier, about picking winners and losers. We have decided through this Bill 8, the Feeder Associations Guarantee Act, that the winners are going to be the beef producers, the collectives, the co-operatives. To the minister of agriculture, who is much more knowledgeable of these areas than myself: has there been a degree or a percentage of equivalency in terms of compensation or support or loan guarantees for cow-calf operators? I mean, that's where it all begins, obviously. Even I as a city slicker know that.

I'm also concerned, as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre pointed out, about one more example of moving legislation into regulation. What are we hiding? Why is it being left up to the minister, at the discretion of the minister, whoever they may be at the time, to determine what the regulations will be? If we're going to be transparent and accountable and if we're going to be able to follow each one of those dollars that gets loaned out and repaid in a timely fashion, then accountability is of the absolute essence. If it's just simply buried in regulation, why should taxpayers from Calgary-Varsity, as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre pointed out, have faith in something that is murky through its location and regulation?

I'm hoping that the cloud of potential suspicion or just simply the fact that we don't know what the answers are in terms of the auditing process, the loan guarantees – how will we know how these subsidies will be reacted to by other producers, whether they be American or European? We seem to be constantly in a battle over the amount of subsidies, and considering how important the beef trade is to this province, we'd better get it right. Obviously, the minister felt that we hadn't gotten it right before because he repealed the entire act and substituted it with Bill 8. I look forward to the explanations. Turning this city slicker into a better-informed Albertan will be much appreciated.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we have Standing Order 29(2)(a) available. Did the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod catch my eye?

Mr. Berger: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would just like it if Calgary-Varsity could clarify for me and for this House what relevance Cousin David, Uncle David, married to whom, married where, Boise, Idaho, and all these other things actually have to this bill, the intent of this bill, and the Alberta cattle-feeding industry. Basically anything? I fail to get where the connections come in here. Could you clarify that, please?

Mr. Chase: I welcome this opportunity to proceed with my family history and connections. What I was trying to establish is that although I'm a city slicker, I do have some limited knowledge of the beef industry. I have worked on farms. For example – a family extension here – when we were stationed at Namao air base, I worked on a mixed farm. The Croziers were very good friends of my mother and father. I participated in feeding the cattle. I participated in bringing in the bales.

What I was trying to establish in my family narrative is my ability to have a relationship to this bill and to beef production and my concerns for the well-being of not only my own family members who have been engaged in beef and cattle and dairying, but I want to see Albertans' interests well protected within this bill. I don't want to see whole herds, as was the case with my uncle, being culled. I want to see that the oversight within this bill is going to not only subsidize and support farmers and ranchers but that it's going to protect them.

I thank you for the opportunity to clarify my family experience.

Mr. Berger: Well, I have to say that I feel no more enlightened now than I did three minutes ago. In saying that, I appreciate the name-dropping and all the other comments, but would it not be more productive to actually study the bill, the intent of the bill, and what effect it actually has rather than all that? I rest with those comments.

Mr. Chase: That's a very fair comment. Unfortunately, because it's being moved from legislation to regulation, I'll never have an opportunity to know the exact details and, therefore, not be able to debate them.

The Speaker: Are there additional comments or questions?

Additional speakers? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to comment on Bill 8. I also appreciated the opportunity that the minister, through the Member for Battle River-Wainwright, and the minister's staff gave me to get a briefing on the bill. Thank you very much. It makes things easier at our end.

I think I've got a sense of what this bill is intended to do. It's intended to expand loan guarantees to members of feeder associations to get them further through the production cycle of beef and not just to support the purchase and then initial sale of the animals but to support the process through processing and marketing. I can see the logic of that. You know, the system has worked pretty well. The feeder associations have been around for a lifetime, a long lifetime. Not every cattle rancher uses them. That's fine. If they want to join, I don't think it's that difficult. If they don't want to and they can find their own financing elsewhere, they don't have to.

Also, as a couple of my colleagues have pointed out, the idea of supporting a co-operative is a good idea. The history of co-operatives on the landscape of the prairies is very deep and very broad. I think it's interesting that this government is prepared to support co-ops in this case but in many other cases doesn't seem to. I wish there was more support for housing co-operatives, for example, or for utility – power and gas – co-ops and a whole range of other ones, but that's a different issue.

Our concerns with this have been mentioned before, and I'm just going to mention them briefly. I think that, speaking as the critic for this area, we'd like to support this bill, but we need some reassurances, thinking about this as a liability that's being expanded for the citizens of Alberta, for the government of Alberta. Both the members for Edmonton-Centre and Calgary-Varsity have raised the issue of oversight and accountability, and I think that's a real concern. As the scale of the loan guarantees grows, how large is that liability going to get? How will that be disclosed? If and when there are defaults and when that guarantee is called, as it occasionally is – I mean, that's the purpose of it – how will that be disclosed to the public and explained to the public, who, after all, will end up covering that loss? These are concerns and questions we have. I hope the minister takes them seriously because I think we would be speaking on behalf of every citizen of Alberta when raising those sorts of concerns.

The vagueness of what's going on here is also a worry. You know, there is the possibility for abuse when things are left so vague. I'll try to walk the minister through a possible situation, and maybe later in debate, in committee, he can respond. If I were a member of a feeder association and got a loan guarantee to acquire a herd and I sold those animals to a slaughterhouse, as things stand right now, at that point the slaughterhouse would have to pay, and the loan guarantee is over as soon as I sell the herd. Under the new system the guarantee would continue through the processing of the animals and meat and right through to the marketing. That marketing might be in Medicine Hat, or it might be in Tokyo, or it could be in Mexico City. We don't know.

My concern is that the bill could in effect be a prop-up for processors and marketers to handle their cash-flow problems. What we're really doing here may not be supporting the producer but supporting, let's say, the slaughterhouse because the slaughterhouse, then, doesn't really need to pay the producer right away because the producer's loan is still guaranteed. So is this really a backdoor way of propping up cash-flow issues for processors and for marketers? I'm not just trying to make up imaginary problems here, Mr. Minister. I'm just trying to understand. Is the effect of this bill to make life easier for the ranchers, or is it to make it easier for the processors or the marketers?

Other issues, of course, arise. What's the time frame? How long might it take for the marketing to occur and for the conclusion of this life cycle to be reached if we're dealing with beef that may be going to any corner of the world? Those are all issues that through a loan guarantee the taxpayers are going to be on the hook for, and I don't think it's unreasonable to be asking on behalf of the taxpayer for an explanation on that.

I think the other issues to a large extent have been raised by other members in the Assembly. As I say, nothing would be more satisfying than for all of us to see a more diverse, broadly based, secure, stable beef sector in Alberta. This bill might help organic beef develop. It might help very specialized sectors in the beef industry develop. We'd all love that, but we'd like to know the full story here. So I'm going to count on the minister to in later stages of debate help us acquire that full story.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I would ask my hon. colleague if he is as concerned, as has been formerly mentioned by his colleague from Edmonton-Centre and myself, about moving from legislation to regulation. Is that a concern when it comes to transparency, accountability to this House and to Albertans in general?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of my beefs with this bill is that it moves a lot of items from legislation to regulation. Yes, we are steering in the wrong direction. You know, I won't pursue those anymore, but it's part of a trend. I think that we need to be alert to what the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar described a few days ago as the quiet overthrowing of this Assembly by the cabinet. That's what we're seeing here, and we see it over and over and over. The legitimate topics for debate and decision and accountability of this Assembly are taken out of the hands of this Assembly into the hands of cabinet. This is just another example, and of course it goes without saying that that is a concern of mine.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Others?

Shall I, then, call on the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood for participation?

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That would be great. I'm pleased to stand and speak to Bill 8, the Feeder Associations Guarantee Act. I want to just say a few words to start with about feeder associations. Feeder associations were set up to help ranchers who may not be able to afford their own livestock for whatever reason and to continue them in business. All of the farmers that we spoke to believe that these local feeder associations play an important role in the industry and that they should continue. Obviously, by providing the credit or guaranteeing the loans that people involved in this business need, we ensure that the industry remains as stable as possible under the difficult circumstances that they now face. Certainly, it is an important part of the cattle business, and I think that it needs to continue.

The basis of the act is quite simple. It allows the government to secure or guarantee the loans that would be made to a feeder association. It requires that a guaranteed loan can only be made to a feeder association that is incorporated.

I think the concerns that have been raised about the role of regulation in this legislation and other pieces of legislation are valid and a continuing concern that more and more power is in fact being placed in the hands of cabinet and cabinet ministers and less here in the Legislature.

I do want to say a few things about feeder cattle. This is, I think, a broad principle with respect to the operation of the industry that is touched on by this act, so I think that it's relevant here. That has to do with the role of very large packing plants. There are just a couple of very large ones that pack about 80 to 90 per cent of the cattle in this province and a significant majority of that in the country as a whole.

One of the things that I find interesting is that the new President of the United States, Mr. Obama, is proposing to implement a ban on packer-owned cattle. This is what his website says:

When meatpackers own livestock they can manipulate prices and discriminate against independent farmers. Strengthen anti-monopoly laws and strengthen producer protections to ensure independent farmers have fair access to markets, control over their production decisions, and transparency in prices.

What happens – and we've seen this in this province; certainly it became apparent during the whole BSE crisis and the government bailout package, that ended up largely in the pockets of the two biggest producers – is that those producers, by maintaining their own herds in feedlots, can control the prices that they have to pay for cattle. When prices get too high and they're having to pay too much for the cattle, they just bring more of their own cattle into the market, and the price comes down. So they're able to manipulate prices at the expense of the small producer, Mr. Speaker. I think that that's an issue that this government needs to grapple with.

We would propose that the government follow the suggestion of the American President and implement a ban on packer-owned livestock. I think that that would help the small producers as much as any of the provisions in this particular bill.

Nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, I just want to indicate that we will be supporting this bill. We think that the feeder associations are an important institution within our cattle industry and will help producers stay in business, have some stability, and have access to the capital that they need.

One of the concerns that has been raised with us, however, is that corporations can join the feeder associations, companies like Cargill and so on. I think that that is causing considerable concern among small producers, who are concerned about the role that these companies play in the market already and the power that they have. Mr. Speaker, in principle we believe that the policy of the government should be to continue the support for small operations and for the family farm. That is not their policy. They have a policy, in our estimation, of encouraging large-scale production and corporate control of agriculture. That's not where we want to go. But I think that with respect to that matter, the Feeder Associations Guarantee Act is still something which is generally positive and something that we are prepared to support.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Are there additional speakers who wish to participate?

Shall I call on the hon. Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to close the debate? The hon. minister.

4:50

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I got quite an education myself here this afternoon. Kind of surprising. Clearly, the hon. opposition people don't understand the Feeder Associations Guarantee Act. The feeder association does relate very much to the small operators and the cow-calf producers, by and large. In fact, these are most of the people that do participate in the Feeder Associations Guarantee Act.

I'm quite amazed how the two people talked about their 12th year in the House – the one on this side of the House was so positive, and the one on the other side of the House was so negative – how that could happen in that 12-year period, how people could get into that process.

I listened to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, and I think I probably looked surprised about Edmonton-Centre. One of the hon. members said that he was a city slicker. I guess I'm a country bumpkin because I didn't realize there were any feeder associations set up in Edmonton-Centre, but perhaps there are. I'll have to check that out. I wouldn't know.

I was quite enlightened and heartened to listen to my opposition critic over there because he did spend some time to look at what the Feeder Associations Guarantee Act is all about, obtain an understanding of where we're at. Some of the questions you ask are very legitimate, and in Committee of the Whole we will address those ones, particularly the ones you talk about with the packers perhaps not paying and whatnot. There are safeguards in there that we can handle.

The hon. member from the third party, certainly I can tell him that some of his original comments were very legitimate and insightful. This has nothing to do with the large operations or, perhaps, a whole lot to do with the President of the United States, this Feeder Associations Guarantee Act, but I can appreciate that.

One thing I would like to touch on, the default rate on the act to this point. I'd be trapped if I said the number, but I think it's less than 1 per cent. It's quite amazing, to be honest with you.

We certainly will go through the answers, check out the questions, and in committee address these.

With that, I would like to move that we pass the bill on.

[Motion carried; Bill 8 read a second time]

Bill 14

Carbon Capture and Storage Funding Act

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise on behalf of the Minister of Energy to move second reading of Bill 14, the Carbon Capture and Storage Funding Act.

Mr. Speaker, this act will expedite the design, construction, and operation of three to five large carbon capture and storage, or CCS, projects in Alberta, projects that will demonstrate the effectiveness and safety of CCS. The $2 billion is an investment in our environment and our future and a continued signal of our commitment to the responsible development of Alberta's resources. CCS is being done around the world and is a proven technology. It may not be a technology that is well known in North America, but it is an evolving science that is used around the world.

During U.S. President Obama's visit to Canada in February he reiterated his support for our two countries working together through co-operation and co-ordination of research and demonstration of CCS projects. President Obama knows that this technology is key to developing large-scale CCS projects. To illustrate this point, one need only look at a unique Canadian-U.S. joint venture. EnCana's Weyburn project pipelines CO₂ from Beulah, North Dakota, to its aging oil reserves in Saskatchewan. Since 2000 there has been a 65 per cent increase in oil production in what was really a depleted reserve.

CCS is not just in the domain of North America. The European Commission has proposed up to 12 large-scale CCS demonstration projects. These projects have been endorsed by the European Council. Contrary to what you may have heard in the media, there are other full-scale CO₂ projects operating throughout the world. In the North Sea StatoilHydro's Sleipner project has been injecting since 1996. StatoilHydro also has been injecting at its Snøhvit project since 2007. The British Petroleum Salah project in Algeria has been operating since 2004. Clearly, Mr. Speaker, the notion that this technology is unproven is unfounded.

Despite the current uncertainty in the global economy long-term forecasts estimated that oil production will grow from about 1.4 million barrels per day now to 3 million more by 2016, and despite improvements in oil sands development and reductions in carbon emissions intensity, as production levels increase, so will emissions. The question is not if oil will be developed, because world oil supplies will be developed, Mr. Speaker. It's a question of how oil can be developed in cleaner ways. Carbon capture and storage can answer that question, scientifically proven technology that will reduce carbon emissions from large-scale operations like oil sands extractions, value-added upgrading, and coal-fired generation. Carbon capture and storage will significantly reduce our greenhouse gas emissions. This is an initiative that all Albertans can be proud of. As a safe and secure supplier of energy with a growing presence on the global stage, our focus on carbon capture and storage is not only good for Alberta, our investors; it's also essential to our future.

Let me be clear, Mr. Speaker. Industry, government, and consumers need to tackle this problem together. We need to invest in cleaner energy technologies and new and greener sources of energy. We need to reduce emissions and reduce energy use. Alberta's economy and, frankly, much of Canada's, in fact, is largely reliant on energy development. This act will give Alberta a very powerful tool with which to meet the unique set of challenges we face and further cement Alberta's leadership in this area.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. In debate, Mr. Speaker, I'm glad to rise to discuss this particular bill, Bill 14, Carbon Capture and Storage Funding Act. I am certain that this will be a highly contentious bill. It's a topic that's highly contentious in the public, and that's healthy. I think debate is good. I expect that if the information coming from the government is okay, we'll probably support this bill. I don't expect that everybody in the Legislature will, and that's great. Such is democracy.

I will say right off the bat that one of the matters that complicates our support of this expenditure is the not unrelated matter of the royalty structure for the oil sands. I know – and I'll talk about this in a few minutes – that a lot of the efforts around carbon capture and storage are actually going to go to coal-fired power plants, which are a legitimate priority. Nonetheless, one focus of this is the oil sands. I'll be straight in saying that when we are giving royalty deals – the corporate filings of shareholders in oil sands companies indicate a worth of tens of billions of dollars – when we're giving concessions on that level, then it's pretty hard for us to support a bill that's spending another $2 billion in subsidies to the energy industry. I would much prefer and be much more comfortable if we had a system in which we were collecting the full value of the royalty resource for the people of Alberta. Then I would be more comfortable in defending a bill that has up to a $2 billion price tag on it. As it is, it's tougher to defend morally. It's tougher to defend politically. It's tougher to defend financially when this comes on top of massive royalty breaks. The government makes it hard for people to support it when it structures things this way.

I want to run through a few of the facts. The Minister of Environment touched on some of these. There are debates around the viability of the technology. Probably all of us in this Assembly rely on a range of experts. I don't think any of us here are expert in the technologies of carbon capture and sequestration. The people whom we have consulted tell us that the technology is viable, that, as the minister says, it's proven in a range of settings around the world in a number of countries and that its viability and economic – well, its viability will only increase, and the costs will decrease. I know that there are people around who question the viability of the technology. Again, that can be debated, but we have gone out of the way to consult a number of people who are disinterested, who have no financial vested interest in whether the technology works or not, and they're telling us that, yes, this is viable technology.

I also want to make the point about the security of the sequestration because we've had this discussion in our caucus. If we are pumping vast millions of tonnes of CO₂ into underground formations, how do we know it's going to stay there? How do we know that in 10 or 20 or 50 years it's not just going to start re-entering the atmosphere? That's, again, a legitimate question. I guess there are a couple of responses to that. One is that there are vast amounts of all kinds of things that are dangerous to humanity that are trapped underground and are kept there. An obvious example would be sour gas. Sour gas, when it's underground in those formations, stays there at very high pressures indefinitely until we actually deliberately seek it out. So that's some reassurance that when the CO₂ is pumped into the ground, it will also stay there, and when those wells are properly capped, they can be successfully sealed indefinitely. In addition, of course, there are chemical processes that occur; gradually the carbon dioxide actually bonds with minerals in the rocks and forms carbonates and other materials that will stay safely underground. So we're prepared to accept our advice that the technology is viable and that the CO₂ is secure and move forward from there.

I think it is worth trying to shift this debate a little bit away from the oil sands to where the largest CO₂ emissions still occur, and that's in the coal-fired power plants. Alberta is very fortunate. Our coal-fired power plants, particularly concentrated west of Edmonton in the Wabamun area, are also in the area of some massive and now largely depleted oil reserves, oil fields: the Pembina field, the Devon field, and others. Somehow I wish that the public in Alberta at least would understand that this isn't just about the oil sands. This is about capturing emissions from coal-fired power plants, which are single emission sources. They're fairly, relatively speaking, easy to work with, and they're close to viable sequestration sites, so that makes this more workable.

I think it's regrettable and a bit of misinformation on the part of the public that this issue is thought of strictly in terms of the oil sands because somehow the coal-fired power plants in Alberta seem to continually get under the radar when, in fact, they remain the largest emitters of CO₂. We understand that that's where the biggest impacts are going to be and fully support that. Of course, that doesn't mean that the oil sands should be left out of this. While they are not yet the largest source of CO₂ emissions in Alberta, they are the most rapidly growing source. That needs to be reduced, and technologies developed through this program will help address that problem.

I think a point that has to be made, if for no other reason than that at least we need to think about it, is that because the largest benefit of this will be to the coal-fired power generators, this really amounts to a subsidy to electricity consumers, and the largest electricity consumers in Alberta by far are big businesses. There's issue upon issue layered here with deregulation and other matters, but I think that what we are really looking at here is a subsidy to power consumers.

I think it would be interesting to at least consider an alternative approach, which would be to tag a levy on power rates so that those who use the most electricity paid the most. Rather than the taxpayer at large being on the hook for up to $2 billion, the people who are actually using the electricity and therefore driving the emissions pay the bill. I think that would be at least worth a debate in this Assembly. I don't know what the levy would have to be to pay for this, but I think it would be worth working out and looking at a different approach.

In the end we have to ask ourselves: what is in the best interests of the public and of the people of Alberta? In this case that's not an easy question to answer. We're here as taxpayers who are looking at a bill of $2 billion over the next decade or more. Obviously, we have to look at it from that perspective. We're here as people whose economy depends more than almost anywhere in the world on fossil fuels, whether that's coal or oil sands or conventional petroleum. So we have to look at it from that perspective.

We're also here as citizens of the planet, a planet that is increasingly endangered because of global warming. I think that that ultimately, for me at least, trumps the other concerns because long after the world has moved to other fuels, what we are doing to our atmosphere in our lifetime will echo through the future for potentially a thousand years and shape the lives of countless generations. They will be living in a different world than the one we inherited because of the very things we've done. When I think of it in those terms, I think, you know, that we need to do whatever we can to address this issue. That $2 billion spread out over 10 years is not an unreasonable investment to make in protecting our planet. Ultimately, that is the perspective that informs my support for this sort of initiative.

I was able to discuss this issue in a briefing with some officials from the minister's office and department. One of the issues I raised was around intellectual property. We're putting $2 billion into this. It will be going to undoubtedly create all kinds of patentable processes and equipment and a significant investment in intellectual property, and some of the questions I have are: who's going to benefit from that? How's that going to be managed? Will we as investors in these patents then reap some kind of benefit? Will we get a royalty from that? Will we be able to sell that intellectual property? Actually, it led to an interesting discussion and reframed my thinking about that.

I understand that the government's plan – and I hope that the minister will ultimately address this – is that it will be kind of an open architecture approach to the intellectual property. In other words, whatever is developed in terms of intellectual property will be made freely available to anybody in the world to adopt. Actually, when I think that through, I think that may be a brilliant idea.

I want to at least discuss that. Particularly, if the Norwegians and the Americans and the Japanese and everybody else who are working on this also share all that intellectual property, then who benefits? Well, humanity benefits. The planet benefits. If we get a really great idea that can benefit the Norwegians on this, let them have it. If they have a really good idea that can benefit us, well, we'll draw on that as well. I hope that comes up for some discussion at later stages of this bill. We need to hash that one through and figure out if that really is the best way. It's at least worth some serious thought.

I also think that it's worth noting with the enhanced oil recovery, which the minister alluded to in his opening comments, the fact that tired, old, depleted conventional fields can actually be rejuvenated through this process. That has a range of benefits, including increased royalties for the citizens of Alberta and extending the life of conventional fuel fields, which have lower environmental impacts often than unconventional energy sources.

The cost of this grabs everybody's attention. I just saw in the last day or two the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, in concert undoubtedly with the New Democrats – I know how much Danielle Smith and the New Democrats work together; maybe it's just coincidence – urging the government to stop this expenditure. Again, given the financial times, given a government that is heading into deficit, that's worth a debate. I think one of the important things is that people are informed that this is an expenditure that's going to occur over more than 10 years. The $2 billion will go out in phases over more than a decade. It's not a single expenditure at once; it's phased over many years. I think that that needs to be put out to the public.

The public will also want to know and for very good reasons the selection process for the projects that will get funding. How are these partners chosen? Who will the partners be? How much are they going to contribute? What are the deals? Will they agree to an open-architecture approach to the intellectual property? If EPCOR, for example, turns out to be a partner and in research that is supported in part by them and in part through this funding they come up with some spectacular intellectual property, are they prepared to share that openly or not? Will that be a condition of this funding? What will be the conditions of this funding? I hope that in the course of the debate the government is forthcoming in addressing a number of those issues.

I think that this is the kind of bill that could swing either way for this government. Right now I think it's very much hanging, with the public undecided. Do they see this as yet more massive subsidy particularly for the oil sands industry, which, they quite rightly see, doesn't need any more subsidy? On the other hand, do they see this as a legitimate gesture in addressing profound climate change issues? The way we conduct the debate in this Assembly will shape the public view, and I think we all need to keep that in mind.

Mr. Speaker, I've tried to outline a whole range of issues. I've tried to plant some thoughts in the mind of members who are here today and in the mind of government officials, who, I hope, will read Hansard carefully and help the minister come back and inform debate in Committee of the Whole.

With those comments, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to move adjournment.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 15 Dunvegan Hydro Development Act

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure and honour today to rise to move second reading of Bill 15, the Dunvegan Hydro Development Act.

In December of 2008 a joint review panel of the Natural Resources Conservation Board, the Alberta Utilities Commission, and the Canadian Environmental Assessment Agency reviewed a proponent's power proposal on the Peace River just west of the Dunvegan bridge, and they found that that project was indeed in the public interest and should proceed.

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

That triggers a legislative requirement on our part, and that legislative requirement flows from our own Hydro and Electric Energy Act. As soon as a panel prepares a report and submits it to the minister, section 9 of our act requires the minister to prepare a bill which allows the AUC to authorize construction of the plant. The commission cannot authorize construction of the plant without the passage of that bill and cannot do so, in fact, until that bill receives royal assent. The bill in question, of course, is Bill 15, that's before us now. There's an additional provision in the Hydro and Electric Energy Act. Under section 10 the commission has to authorize operation once the plant is constructed, and they cannot do so until they are granted the authority to do so through an order in council.

Bill 15 has two clauses in it. The first one grants authority to the AUC to authorize the commencement of construction. The second section authorizes the AUC to approve operation, obviously once construction is completed.

Mr. Speaker, this legislative requirement that flows from our Hydro and Electric Energy Act comes from a time when hydro projects were perhaps controversial in our country. There was James Bay in Quebec and the Bennett dam and the site C dam in B.C., in fact others around the world. People came to realize that the construction of dams comes, in fact, with environmental consequences, as does any form of power generation, so there was some controversy. Even in Alberta we had some controversy around hydro projects, and it was thought at that time that projects should come back to the Legislature so that the Legislature itself could grant approval to the Alberta Utilities Commission. So that's why the legislation, in my understanding of it, is structured that way.

It's important to recognize that in this particular case although we have that legislative requirement, we're not talking about a dam here. This is a run-of-the-river project that does not have the significant environmental consequences of a dam, a much smaller project with a much smaller footprint. As I mentioned, the joint review panel, in fact, found that this project was in the public interest.

It's also important to say two things, Mr. Speaker. One, the bill does not remove any of the regulatory authority of the Alberta Utilities Commission. All we're doing is granting that body the authority to approve construction and, eventually, operation once all of their conditions have been met. Secondly, although, as I point out, this particular project is small – it's a run-of-the-river, not a dam – this bill only addresses the Dunvegan project. If in the future another hydro project were to come along, a dam perhaps, we would again be required to go through the same process. We're not proposing that we remove the requirement for all future projects. It only relates to the Dunvegan project.

Mr. Speaker, I think this is a good-news story for Alberta. It'll broaden our renewable energy portfolio. It's a low-impact project, and it adds to an already significantly large alternative energy proposal. I'm really keen on it.

In closing, I want to maybe congratulate the company. This project has been on the books for a very long time. The company was consulting and working with municipalities back before 2004, when I left the Peace River town council. I was a councillor at the time. Well before then the company was out consulting and working with locals. They've met whatever requirements, mitigation requirements or public consultation requirements, they had to in order to pass the joint review panel. I know it's a tremendous amount of work and expenditure on that company's part.

Mr. Speaker, with that, I'll conclude my remarks, and I look forward to the debate on Bill 15.

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise to discuss Bill 15, the Dunvegan Hydro Development Act, in second reading. I appreciated the opportunity to get some information about this matter from the Member for Peace River and some officials. This is a pretty interesting initiative, and I think it's worth very careful observation. The member in his opening comments talked briefly about the impact of hydro dams, and I think it's worth reflecting on that.

Many, many times I've been by Lake Abraham in the Rockies west of Nordegg. It's a spectacular lake. There's no doubt about it. But it wiped out what was a beautiful valley and what was also a very sacred spot for our First Nations people there. It has had benefits as well as hydro. It helps with flood control downstream, including in Edmonton. Nonetheless, you know, the member is right that the idea that hydro dams are somehow benign is a bit out of date now.

I think we understand more of their impact, and unfortunately we've had to learn that sometimes in more painful ways than with the Bighorn dam. An example would be the Bennett dam on the Peace River. Last August I was up in Fort Chip and flew in and flew out, as you have to do to get to Fort Chip in the summer, over the Peace delta. That was at one time the largest freshwater delta in the world. I don't know if it still is, but it has suffered profoundly, and it has shrunk because of the effects of the Bennett dam way upstream in B.C.

So this feels like we're moving to, no pun intended, the next generation of hydro generation. This is a technology that has been demonstrated around the world, and I hope it continues to develop. I very much support the idea of Alberta shifting even this little bit of its power supply away from fossil fuels to hydro in this case. I'd love to see a very aggressive campaign to reduce demand for electricity. That's another issue. I don't know why this government doesn't get more serious about reducing demand, about supply-side management on power supply. Anyway, that's a different issue. This is a little bit of an advance in terms of bringing a zero emissions or near zero emissions project to Alberta's electrical grid.

The Dunvegan site is beautiful. It's genuinely beautiful. I think many of us here will have crossed that bridge. It's a glorious drive. I also note in the background that there will be an adjustment to the ferry that runs in that area. I'm glad to hear that because two summers ago, I think, I drove along the Peace River Valley to that ferry, and it's something worth preserving. It really is.

I'm glad to see that all of those issues will be considered in this. I look forward to what I hope will be a straightforward debate. I think that there might be a question or two. I'm not going to raise them right now because I want to do a little bit more background research, but I expect that this bill will move through fairly straightforwardly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the chance to speak on Bill 15.

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wish to speak?

Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker: Does the hon. Member for Peace River wish to close debate?

Mr. Oberle: I'd just call the question, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 15 read a second time]

Bill 18

Trade, Investment and Labour Mobility Agreement Implementation Statutes Amendment Act, 2009

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise this afternoon to move for second reading Bill 18, the Trade, Investment and Labour Mobility Agreement Implementation Statutes Amendment Act, 2009.

Mr. Speaker, similar to Bill 1 from last year, Bill 18 will ensure that Alberta's legislation and the trade, investment, and labour mobility agreement, otherwise known as TILMA, are consistent. This particular bill is nuts-and-bolts technical legislation but, nonetheless, extremely important for Alberta. It's important because it is the last piece of legislation before Canada's most comprehensive interprovincial trade, investment, and labour mobility agreement becomes fully in force April 1, 2009.

TILMA is a bilateral interprovincial trade, investment, and labour mobility agreement between Alberta and British Columbia. Its goal is simple: make life easier for Albertans by removing the duplication, overlap, and unnecessary regulatory differences between our two provinces that have evolved over decades and have negatively affected our competitiveness, both domestically and internationally.

The agreement itself was signed in April 2006 by the two provinces and came into effect for certain sectors in April 2007, with full implementation on April 1 of this year. It means seamless access for businesses and workers in both provinces to a large range of opportunities across all sectors, including energy, transportation, and agriculture. For example, Mr. Speaker, a business incorporated in one province will be deemed registered in the other if it wants. There is no residency required, no added administration, reporting, or fees.

Alberta and B.C. companies will have increased opportunities to bid on government contracts in both provinces, particularly in engineering, architectural, and related services, which will be in greater demand as infrastructure construction projects get under way. More importantly, these firms will compete on a level playing field regardless of whether the company is based in Alberta or British Columbia. If they are qualified to do the work, they will have an equal opportunity to bid on these contracts, whether they are from Alberta or B.C. Mr. Speaker, this is good news in these challenging times, when companies will be faced with looking outside of their traditional markets for business opportunities. As well, all skilled tradespersons like plumbers or welders or highly trained professionals like nurses or teachers certified in Alberta or B.C. will be able to move between these provinces and keep working without having to go through extensive recertification or retraining.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 18 itself is critical to Alberta in order to fully implement this groundbreaking interprovincial trade agreement, one that is already a catalyst for how Canada and all provinces look at interprovincial trade and labour mobility. It is because of TILMA that every province, territory, and the federal government are working towards full labour mobility across all provinces under the pan-Canadian agreement on internal trade. The TILMA model for full labour mobility has essentially been incorporated into the national agreement, and that was a very significant development last December.

The AIT has been around since 1995, but it has begun to show some real progress within this last year largely because of what Alberta and B.C. have done under TILMA. The AIT is also being amended to contain an effective dispute resolution mechanism, which, Mr. Speaker, is another concept that the TILMA introduced into the domestic trade context.

Bill 18 is an omnibus piece of legislation that amends existing statutes and ensures that provincial legislation and the TILMA align. Most of these amendments deal with jurisdictional provisions like residency requirements. Alberta and British Columbia agreed under the TILMA that residents of both provinces would be treated equally. Just because someone happened to reside in one province, they would not be barred from accessing opportunities in the other. Again, this is good news for Alberta businesses and workers.

In total, 11 acts will be amended, Mr. Speaker. For example, the Marriage Act will be amended to allow a resident of B.C. to be appointed as a temporary marriage commissioner. At the moment only an Albertan is eligible. So if you happen to have an uncle who's a marriage commissioner living in Victoria, once this legislation is passed, he will be able to come to Alberta and perform your marriage should you need that. The same would be true for an Alberta marriage commissioner performing the ceremony in British Columbia.

Bill 18 will also amend the Charitable Fundraising Act to provide extraprovincial charitable organizations and businesses the option of keeping deposits and records in their province of residence, minimizing additional administrative duties and paperwork.

Other changes include amending the Agriculture Financial Services Act. The act may currently leave the impression that commercial loans can only be made to Alberta firms. That's not the case. The change will make it clear that provided the operation is in Alberta, the security is in Alberta, and the direction is in Alberta, commercial loans can be made to a person from Alberta, B.C., Nova Scotia, or anywhere else in Canada.

The Business Corporations Act will be amended to broaden the existing appeal provisions available for an Alberta company registering in B.C. It will include a cancellation of an extraprovincial incorporation in B.C. pursuant to the new TILMA business registration process.

A change to the Government Organization Act will empower the Lieutenant Governor in Council to make regulations to temporarily amend noncompliant legislation. This will occur when prompt change is required to implement a TILMA panel ruling or for Alberta to avoid a challenge from B.C. under the TILMA when the Legislature is not in session. Some examples of where temporary regulations can be made to deal with unforeseen circumstances or regulatory deficiency already exist in Alberta legislation, including the Municipal Government Act and the Animal Health Act.

We expect that we will continue to make changes under the existing legislative process. However, there may be a situation where others that have authority to make regulations are unwilling or unable to bring their regulations into effect on a timely basis. This could have serious repercussions for Alberta under its TILMA obligations, so these provisions will be short term and would expire after three years. This is something that would only be used in extraordinary circumstances to bring Alberta into alignment with its TILMA obligations.

The Insurance Act will be amended to eliminate barriers facing a small subset of fraternal insurance companies from B.C. when they seek to operate in Alberta.

The Legal Profession Act will be updated to remove the current requirement that as a condition of recognition an individual be a Canadian citizen or a permanent resident of Canada. Similar requirements in B.C. were struck down by the Supreme Court of Canada, so this amendment will bring Alberta's act into conformity with the Supreme Court ruling and increase compatibility with B.C. legislation.

Both the Mobile Home Sites Tenancies Act and the Residential Tenancies Act will be amended, and the requirement to have an address in Alberta will be removed.

Finally, the Business Corporations Act, the Cooperatives Act, and the Partnership Act will each be amended in the same way to remove a current limitation on the ability to modify policies and other measures to conform to the TILMA.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, this omnibus bill represents the final series of technical amendments to improve our trading relationship with British Columbia. Once fully implemented, TILMA will mean seamless access for business and workers in both provinces through a larger range of opportunities within a single economic region. It will create Canada's second-largest market, with more than 7.7 million people and a combined GDP of more than $400 billion. In just a few short weeks more than 120 regulated occupations, including virtually all trades in Alberta, will have full labour mobility in B.C. Alberta businesses will have a broader pool of skilled professionals and tradespeople to meet their needs without having to worry about a lot of red tape to bring a B.C. person onboard.

Mr. Speaker, breaking down trade, investment, and labour mobility barriers is as important during the current global slowdown as it was before. We need to allow businesses and labour to go where they find the opportunity without artificial, unnecessary constraints imposed by government.

So that is the nature of this bill. It is an important bill. As such, I would encourage all members to consider it favourably when the votes come.

At this time, Mr. Speaker, I would move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 2

Lobbyists Amendment Act, 2009

[Adjourned debate February 18: Dr. Taft]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to be able to rise and address a few brief remarks around second reading of Bill 2, the Lobbyists Amendment Act, 2009. This is a really important bill for this Assembly but also for citizens. I'm going to keep my remarks brief because I'm more interested in participating in the debate in Committee of the Whole.

As to the principle of the bill that we have in front of us, there are a number of things that I support in the bill. One of those is adding the agencies, boards, and committees, those individuals that are appointed by the government to an agency or a board or a committee or a council, that they would also fall under the auspices of this act, and that all parts of it would then apply to them. So if someone is lobbying somebody on the northern development council, for example, that's going to count.

I think that's important because what we've seen from this government over a long period of time is an increased reliance on what used to be called delegated administrative organizations. That's certainly a preferred method of operation that this government has engaged in, where they set up an arm's-length, or supposedly arm's-length, agency which is to deliver the service. But it is still delivering a government service. It still is attached to government, and ultimately government and the minister are responsible for

it. I think we need to be clear that when you're lobbying one of those organizations or an individual connected to it, you are involved in a lobbying activity.

I also am pleased to see the clarifications around "persons associated with." I'm aware that part of that is flowing from the amendment that I had proposed during the original debate of this act. My concern there was that we had to understand that we were in a new millennium, that we have a number of – I can see this debate is going to be longer today than I anticipated. There are a number of those that seem to be very eager to join in the debate, which would include the Minister of Municipal Affairs and the Member for Peace River, who seem to be very keen to get in on the debate. I'll be looking forward to their erudite comments.

The persons associated. My concern is that we understand that it would be, I would argue, more common than not common to have people that are sharing a household or are spouses that are each engaged in their own professional careers, and to say that because one of them is associated – and I'll put that in quotations – with the other, who may be engaged in a lobbying effort, they get captured in that is just not realistic in this day and age. We have to be very careful about how we designate those associations and who we capture under that net. That's why I made the original argument.

In test driving the act, there have been some difficulties that have been encountered around what we ended up with, so we're seeing a section here that is clarifying that particular part, which is good. I'm glad to see it. We're moving ahead on that.

There's been a clarification around the reports so that if there was to be an investigation, the registrar, one, is to prepare a report; two, there was an expansion of what was to be in the report and that, in fact, that report would be submitted to the Ethics Commissioner, who then submits it in care of the Speaker to the Legislative Assembly. Perfectly appropriate.

I'm also glad to see that the disclosure of personal information section, which was the old section 18, has been eliminated. I think we have to be very careful, when we are collecting, using, or disclosing personal information, that there is consent that is attached to that. So if the disclosure has been removed from the act, fine. If it's turned up in a different place, which is possible – I haven't gone looking for it – I think we need to be careful with that.

I'm pleased to see what has been done with the act. I know my colleagues have brought forward their concerns and some of the things they were pleased to see. I'm looking forward to expanded debate in Committee of the Whole.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a) a five-minute question-and-comment period is available for anyone who wishes.

Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I just want to start my comments on Bill 2, the Lobbyists Amendment Act, 2009, by noting that the act has not been proclaimed. We also understand that the Ethics Commissioner expects to have the lobbyist registry ready to launch in September of this year. It includes a clause for review of the act two years after it is proclaimed.

Now, the NDP has generally been supportive of the bill that created the Lobbyists Act. The former MLA for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, Mr. Ray Martin, sat on the special select committee of the Legislature which, in its review of the conflict-of-interest legislation, recommended that the province establish a lobbyist registry. We criticized the act for including a loophole that allows lobbyists to avoid disclosure of any contact with officials where the contact was initiated by the official being lobbied. A similar loophole existed in the federal legislation from 1995 to 2004.

Mr. Speaker, when the act was being debated in 2007, an amendment was introduced by the Official Opposition, which was passed, which changed the definition of an associate. The original version of the Lobbyists Act introduced by the government stated that an individual could not lobby the government on a particular issue if at the same time they were being paid to provide advice to the government on that issue. Paid advice mainly refers to the government practice of establishing multiple stakeholder advisory bodies, such as the Clean Air Strategic Alliance, which is made up of business, government, and environmentalists. It further stated that nobody associated with a lobbyist, such as a spouse, could provide advice to the government on that issue so that people would have to choose between either being a lobbyist or providing paid advice to the government. They could not do both at the same time if they were married.

Now, the amendment brought forward by the Official Opposition at that time removed the reference to spouses in the definition of an associate. The Liberals argued that the law has to recognize that spouses have independent careers and that, therefore, one spouse should not be penalized by the other spouse's career activities. The Conservatives agreed with that proposition, Mr. Speaker.

The NDP did not agree, and we attempted to have that amendment reconsidered. Our argument was that it's a conflict of interest if someone is lobbying government while at the same time their spouse is providing advice to the government on the same issue. Furthermore, the Conflicts of Interest Act recognizes the common interests of spouses by requiring that spouses file their financial interests with the Ethics Commissioner. We asked the question: why should the Lobbyists Act pretend that such common interests do not exist?

Bill 2 seeks to fix the loophole that the Liberal amendment unintentionally created, while maintaining the amendment's original goal of treating spouses as having separate interests in terms of lobbying and of being paid advisors of the government. Now, it does that in a couple of steps. First, in section 2(b) on page 1 the bill amends the act's interpretation clause by removing the clause "the person's spouse or adult interdependent partner" from the definition of an associated person. It also in sections 4(a) and (b) undoes the Liberal amendment by putting the reference to associated persons back in section 6 of the act. The remainder of the bill fixes parts of the act, just some general administrative and minor changes to language and so on.

Mr. Speaker, we believe that the Lobbyists Act is an important piece of legislation that will when proclaimed and in force increase the overall degree of transparency in government. Alberta is considerably behind other jurisdictions in Canada in having no legislation governing the activities of lobbyists, so the implementation of this act should be a high priority.

The government's use of multiple stakeholder bodies to provide advice represents a considerable opportunity for individuals to be in a conflict of interest. We would like to avoid any loopholes which would undermine the purpose of the act. We don't understand why someone should be allowed to lobby the government on a particular issue while their spouse is being paid to advise the government on the same issue. There is a clear conflict of interest here. The Conflicts of Interest Act recognizes that spouses share certain interests, and therefore the financial interest of spouses must be declared. There is no reason why the Lobbyists Act should ignore these common interests. So we would like to support this with an amendment to include spouses in the definition of associated persons.

Mr. Speaker, proclamation of this act is long overdue. Alberta has lagged significantly behind other jurisdictions in failing to recognize conflicts of interest with individuals lobbying government and the potential to undermine the democratic process in our province by powerful and well-financed special interests, and we think that at least with the proclamation of this act, there will be a degree of transparency. We don't have any illusions about this stopping. We are pretty clear it's going to continue, and powerful special interests will use their considerable resources and influence with this government. We don't expect that will change, but at least we will have a small window in on that activity, so we will strengthen the democratic process in our province, and hopefully that will lead to further reforms down the road.

Mr. Speaker, thank you very much for the opportunity to speak to the bill.

The Acting Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a) five minutes are available for comments and questions.

Hearing none, the hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations on behalf of the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General to close debate?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 2 read a second time]

Bill 5 Marketing of Agricultural Products Amendment Act, 2009

[Adjourned debate February 18: Mr. Chase]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to make amends by calling for the vote, if we may, at this time. I mistakenly adjourned debate, and I have the opportunity to correct, so I would call for the vote at this time, please.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Yes, well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think the hon. member is going to have to make amends another time because I would like to address this particular bill, the Marketing of Agricultural Products Amendment Act, 2009.

I want to just indicate that we want to raise some of the issues. You know, while the bill is mainly administrative and does not make major changes, I think it's still significant. The biggest change is that the appeal and review process is now moved to regulations, and I think that's unfortunate. We've addressed that repeatedly in this House, and the government continues to do that.

Section 43.1 is added, which specifies that the Minister may make regulations

- (a) providing for or establishing an appeal tribunal;
- (b) respecting reviews and appeals, including the charging of a fee and the recovery of costs.

By condensing the definitions of councils, boards, and commissions, they remove details and put more into regulation. This fits in perfectly with the government's move towards more secrecy because really we don't know what the plan for marketing associations is going to be. There will be no debate on their function because it's all been moved into regulation.

At two points the proposed act takes out the specifics, in describing the roles of commissions and boards and then review and appeals of decisions. The Lieutenant Governor in Council is then allowed to make regulations on the composition and process of negotiation agencies. A group would use an appeal board if they had a problem with the plan that had been approved by the council; for example, if it cost the producer too much money.

In the current act a council member who does not need to be a producer cannot sit on an appeal board. This is amended in the new legislation, and a council member can sit on an appeal board. By allowing nonproducers to be members of a council, it means people making the decisions are not necessarily those who are being affected by the outcomes of these decisions.

Mr. Speaker, in 2006 a government discussion paper regarding MAPA stated that the review is necessary because the industry needs to consider moving away from producer-run commodity organization. We believe the opposite. In order to protect family farms, we need to continue to develop producer-run commodity organizations. For example, a producer-owned and -operated packing plant would have provided an alternative to big packers like Cargill. Now, while MAPA does state that you must be a producer to sit on the board, the statement does not eliminate the ability for agribusiness to become members or from setting plan regulations.

Again, Mr. Speaker, big corporations already have an advantage when it comes to producing and finishing, and this allows them a chance to control marketing as well. As the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity pointed out during a debate on Wednesday, the 18th of February, this bill does not directly mention who is best suited to market the agricultural products. However, we know the Alberta government is very opposed to the Canadian Wheat Board single desk, and while this particular bill may not bring it up, we know that the intention is still there. I think I should mention at this time that in the recent Wheat Board elections in western Canada five of the six directors who were elected favour single desk. These are elected by farmers themselves, and it proves once more how out of touch with real farmers this government is. They can't tell the difference between a family farm and a corporate farm, and that's the bottom line.

No one representing the Wheat Board was on the list of participants during the industry governance review. Perhaps the sponsor could let us know if they were even asked to participate.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta spent over $1.1 million on the Choice Matters campaign to end the Canadian Wheat Board's single desk system. Clearly, their direction has been rejected by farmers across western Canada.

There are no explicit changes in this legislation that are directly linked to the Alberta livestock and meat strategy, but it's hard to imagine that the government would pass up any mechanism that would allow implementation of this plan, a plan which will ultimately lead to the destruction of Alberta's family farms. Mr. Speaker, we do worry about who is marketing our agricultural products because if the marketing and governance mechanisms are in favour of the corporate farms and allow continued corporate concentration and if they ignore the needs of the smaller farms, then once again the result is the progressive destruction of the family farm.

Mr. Speaker, we need more than just administrative bills to fix the ballooning farm debt. There need to be protections in place for small producers who do not receive the same handouts that are given to big agricultural business. While this bill does not make any major changes, it is ultimately a part of the government's agriculture plan, and this plan, this vision, does not include a space for family farms. So we are going to oppose this bill on that basis.

Thank you very much.

Hon. Members: Question.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon and welcome.

Let us pray. Grant us daily awareness of the precious gift of life which has been given to us. As Members of this Legislative Assembly we dedicate our lives anew to the service of our province and of our country. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly the consul general of India, Mr. Ashok Das. I had the privilege of hosting a lunch today in honour of the consul general's first visit to Alberta.

Alberta and India have a very strong connection, and we value very much that relationship. I think it would be appropriate to say that our Assembly has a strong relationship with India in that five of our 83 members are, indeed, of Indian heritage. We have a well-established trade relationship that goes back 25 years, and it's a significant one. In 2007 our two-way trade was valued at over $300 million. We know that there's great potential for that to grow in the years ahead. Alberta and India also have a very strong friendship and a connection through our people. Over 72,000 people of Indian descent call Alberta home, including, as I've indicated, five members of this Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta appreciates our strong relationship with India as a key trading partner and as a friend. I would ask that the consul general now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Ouellette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of individuals from my constituency who are visiting the Legislature today. I think it is so important for these bright kids to visit the Legislature. As you know, they will all be tomorrow's leaders. We have with us today 23 students from Spruce View school, who are seated in the members' gallery, and they are accompanied by their teachers and parent helpers Ms Teri Patterson, Mr. Peter Wiersma, Mrs. Jeanne Rasmussen, Ms Sharon Johannsen, Mrs. Bonnie Schweer, Mrs. Shelley Newsham, Mrs. Gaylene Dolphin, Ms Shauna Wills, and Ms Bren Gairdner. I would like them all to stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure today to rise and introduce to you and through you to this Assembly two classes from Holy Cross elementary and junior high school from the most vibrant constituency in the province, the constituency of Edmonton-Glenora. The students are here on a tour, and they've been visiting the Legislature today. I would like to acknowledge the teachers and the parents who are here. We have Ms Brigitte Levasseur, Mr. Gilles Beaudoin, Ms Manuela Wagner, Ms Connie Versluys, and Ms Jadeene Wheaton. I hope you've enjoyed your experience today. I would encourage you to give a warm welcome to these future leaders.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Vandermeer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly some wonderful children from Abbott elementary school. They are here with their teachers Mrs. Christian and Miss Rouault and also a parent helper with the same name, Mrs. Rouault. I believe they are in the members' gallery. I would ask them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure for me to introduce to you and to all members of this Assembly a number of students from R. J. Scott elementary school. These are bright and intelligent young people. I had a great chance to have just a little chat with them as we got our picture taken at 1 o'clock this afternoon in the rotunda. Their teacher is Miss Adele Edmondson and the parent helper is Mrs. Marci Baril. I would ask that they and all the kids from the class please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to make another introduction. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly someone that most of you have met from time to time over the years, a good friend of mine and a former colleague, Mr. Jeremy Chorney. Jeremy was with me as my executive assistant from 2001 to 2007. He came out of the research ranks of our government caucus. Over those years he taught me much. I taught him a great deal more. As a public servant I can tell you that it's nice to have somebody from the private sector who is in government relations who from time to time has access to a free beer or so. I would ask Jeremy to please rise and receive the traditional welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's great to have all these school classes here today because Alberta Education has initiated a project called Inspiring Education: A Dialogue with Albertans to build understanding of and enthusiasm for education, to develop a vision of an educated child, and to develop a policy framework to guide education in Alberta over the next 20 years. Inspiring Education is led by a steering committee comprised of enthusiastic, diverse, and very busy Albertans. Today I'd like to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly, the members of the steering committee.

In addition to my MLA colleagues the Member for Athabasca-Redwater, who is the co-chair of the steering committee, and the members for Edmonton-Decore, Calgary-Hays and Calgary-Montrose, we have with us today in the gallery Mark Anielski, who is the author of The Economics of Happiness and a professor at the University of Alberta; Lance Carlson, president of the Alberta College of Art and Design; Sharon Carry, president of Bow Valley College; Dr. Sharon Friesen, chairman of the Galileo project; Jim Gibbons, the superintendent of Chinook's Edge school division; Dr. Wilton Littlechild, regional chief of the Assembly of First Nations for Alberta; Deborah Lloyd, an educator from Medicine Hat; John Masters with Calgary Technology Inc.; Dr. Jane O'Dea, who is the dean of education at the University of Lethbridge; Brant Parker, president of University School in Calgary; Anne-Marie Pham, who, among her other talents, is known for working very closely with the various communities in Calgary; Zuhay Sayeed from Lloydminster, who is a community activist, I think, is probably the best way I'd describe her; Laurie Thompson, principal of the Kikino school of the Kikino Métis settlement; John Tiemstra from your own constituency and town of Barrhead, Mr. Speaker, who is retired now as a CTS or, as we used to know it, a shop teacher and, actually, the head of their CTS department at the school in Barrhead; Don Iveson, who is an Edmonton city councillor; and the one steering committee member who is not with us today, Mary Hofstetter, the president of The Banff Centre.

I'd ask that the steering committee please rise and that all members of the Assembly give them our thanks for taking time out of their busy lives to help improve education in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It certainly is a pleasure for me to rise today. Speaking of education, I don't have a long list like my colleague; however, I can make up in quality what he gave us in quantity.

Mr. Speaker, seated in the gallery I have a very good friend, a gentleman that spent his career in the education scene in northwestern Alberta, a very dedicated individual. Upon retirement he committed himself to volunteering efforts in and around the city of Grande Prairie and the region of northwestern Alberta. It's a great pleasure for me to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Mr. Dennis Grant. I would ask Dennis to please stand and receive the warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to this Assembly Moneca Melan, who is visiting the Legislature today. As a result of the tragic loss of her daughter Melissa in a motor vehicle collision in 2006, Ms Melan has worked tirelessly to ensure that other families do not have to face the same loss. Since 2007 Ms Melan has collected more than 1,500 signatures that urge the government to introduce legislation to suspend a graduated driver's licence if the holder of the licence is involved in a collision resulting in serious injury or death. This issue was first raised in this House on April 10, 2007. Later today I'll have the pleasure of presenting an additional 770 names that have signed the petition. She's seated in the public gallery, and I would ask that she rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to rise today and introduce to you and through you a good friend and a proud Albertan, Mr. Preetam Sharma. Mr. Sharma is the president of Council of India Societies of Edmonton, which is an umbrella organization for 15 different organizations. He also served as chairman for the India pavilion at the Edmonton heritage days last year and will serve again this year. I would ask him to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mr. Benito: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my distinct pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly our constituency staff of Edmonton-Mill Woods. With us today in the members' gallery are Ms Kae Espedido, our constituency assistant, and Mr. Reginald Petines, our deputy constituency manager. They serve the community well, and I'm very proud of the service they're extending to Edmonton-Mill Woods. I would like to ask Ms Espedido and Mr. Petines to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater.

Inspiring Education: A Dialogue with Albertans

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to speak today about a very special initiative, Inspiring Education: A Dialogue with Albertans. Inspiring Education is fundamentally about the future of our province. We must educate our students not for the world of today but for the world into which they will graduate.

During these dynamic and challenging economic times it's increasingly apparent that if we are to remain successful individually and collectively as a province, we must rely on the virtues that have made Alberta strong. Beginning from the core values of opportunity, fairness, citizenship, diversity, and choice, Inspiring Education will work to increase public appreciation for education, a clearer understanding of what it will mean to be an educated Albertan 20 years from now, and ultimately a policy framework to guide activities and decisions in the education sector.

It's my honour to co-chair the project's steering committee along with Brent McDonough, an outstanding teacher from Holy Trinity high school in the Edmonton Catholic school district. Along with three of my legislative colleagues – the members for Edmonton-Decore, Calgary-Hays, and Calgary-Montrose – we are working with 16 accomplished and diverse individuals from across the province who round out the committee and bring a great breadth of perspectives to the projects.

Inspiring Education is a dialogue, not a traditional stakeholder consultation. It's a discussion to explore the perspectives of all Albertans rather than reviewing key stakeholder positions. It's an exciting visionary exercise focusing on the outcomes of our education system rather than the system itself. In short, it's about our kids and giving them what they need to be successful in a dynamic world that we cannot predict.

Inspiring Education is about engaging all Albertans so that we can understand what education needs to deliver for Albertans. Very soon the Minister of Education, my steering committee co-chair, and I will be announcing further details about Inspiring Education and how all Albertans can get involved.

I want to thank the minister and all the members of the steering committee for their dedication to this initiative. I look forward to continuing to share the important work being done on this project with my colleagues and with all Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Health System Reform

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The government has created chaos in Alberta's health care system, the result of rushed, hasty changes made without careful examination of the evidence and without proper public and professional consultation. This lack of planning and the failure to invest in the past 15 years in more health professionals, beds, and hospitals has left the system on the edge of breakdown. We're spending more money per capita in this province than across the country, but what do we have to show? Long wait times in the emergency room, ambulance service delays, equipment putting people at risk, delays getting needed operations, and a decline in professional morale.

To discover and correct the underlying causes of the breakdown in our health system, we need careful, comprehensive analysis of planning and planning based on evidence. My experience of 25 years in public health is quite simple. We need to carefully examine what is working for people and what is not. We should start with the health professionals, who are quite able to identify where the system is efficient, where it is not, and have made suggestions for years. Patient experience, too, needs to be communicated and acted upon to improve the key indicators of quality, access, and the best use of resources.

If I were Premier, I would reassert stability and control over this chaotic situation now with four steps. First, I would bring together research, citizens, and professionals in Alberta from across the system to identify key barriers and opportunities for improving access, quality outcomes, and health professional well-being. On the basis of sound evidence we would develop a plan with ongoing measures of success and make appropriate changes as needed. I would ensure that all available resources, human and material, are delivering the best results. Third, I would examine all health professionals and where they can best be used to maximize long-term benefit in the health care system, including a greater focus on prevention. Finally, I would focus more effort into the front end of our health care system, including early intervention and home supports. Albertans demand the best.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Olds College Fine Arts & Multi Media Centre

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last Thursday was the long-awaited grand opening of the Fine Arts & Multi Media Centre in Olds at the Olds College campus. This Fine Arts & Multi Media Centre will provide a wide range of learning opportunities to both high school and college students as well as entertainment opportunities for art patrons in central Alberta. Other rural communities such as Elnora and Hanna that are linked through the Alberta SuperNet, that provides regional access to the community learning centre arts programming and large group presentations, will also benefit from this centre.

The fine arts centre is the next but not the final stage of completing the vision of the CLC. The final stage will be in the opening of the new high school located just next door, and that will happen later this year. The treasure of the CLC was made possible through the co-operation and collaboration of the Chinook's Edge school board, Olds College, the town of Olds, Mountain View county, and, of course, the Alberta government, which has invested over $55 million in this project to date, as well as corporate Alberta.

I'm pleased to see in the gallery today one of those members – he was introduced earlier by the hon. Minister of Education – Mr. Jim Gibbons, superintendent of the Chinook's Edge school board. Jim can be identified because he's wearing the same I Love the Alberta Arts necktie today.

Mr. Speaker, the Bell e-Learning Centre, which provided the linkages to other rural sites to enjoy the day's festivities, was made possible through significant contributions from Bell Canada. The Fine Arts & Multi Media Centre has also benefited from the generosity of a $500,000 donation from TransCanada Pipelines corporation, and the centre will now be called the TransCanada Fine Arts & Multi Media Centre.

I'd like to thank all those who contributed their time, money, and expertise to this project. I'd also like to thank my colleagues the hon. Minister of Culture and Community Spirit, the hon. Minister of Transportation, and the Member for Rocky Mountain House for being on hand to help celebrate this event and also for their past and ongoing support. The CLC is certainly a learning treasure that all Albertans will benefit from and can be proud of.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Auditor General Office Funding

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The extent to which the government has worked to muzzle the Auditor General is clear. On November 28 last year two government members confirmed in Hansard and to the Legislative Offices Committee that the President of the Treasury Board instructed them to limit the Auditor General's budget. To the President of the Treasury Board: at a time when Albertans want to know their money is well spent, is the minister telling members not to give the Auditor General the resources he needs?

Mr. Snelgrove: That's just blatantly untrue. There are obvious changes in the financial position our government finds itself facing. When ministers or MLAs or the general public ask me what I see going forward, I say that I see belt-tightening, unfortunately, some from inside. But the fact of the matter is that anybody with a clue would understand that all of us in this government at every government board level, at every agency are going to have to share in the go-forward operational dollars of this government.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the impact of this direction to restrict funding to the Auditor General is a 34 per cent reduction in planned audits, including audits of Conservative friends of Horse Racing Alberta and disgraced Highwood Communications, why is the minister denying the Auditor General the means to ensure that the government uses taxpayers' dollars in the most efficient way?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, I know we all said that we'll try to be nice – and I will try very hard – but it's very simple for the hon. leader to stand up and say that these are Conservative friends who we're not auditing. The Auditor General runs a very, very independent office, and I think he would probably be insulted that the hon. Leader of the Opposition would infer that anything I do or anyone on this government does directs him where to look, who to look at, how hard to look. We live with his reports. We don't always agree with the suggestions from him because, obviously, we think he sometimes may be into policy, but his independence is essential, and that's the way it's going to stay.

Dr. Swann: Well, it's hard to be independent without money, Mr. Speaker.

Another cancelled review is that of food safety in the province, basic food safety. This review was cancelled because the President of the Treasury Board ordered government members on the committee to deny the Auditor General adequate funding. Why was this funding blocked?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, once nice, twice – I did not order anyone what to vote. I have never ordered anyone what to vote at any committee I have ever attended. But the funny thing that the hon. member seems to be missing is that the Auditor General of this province says that Alberta is one of the best-audited provinces in Canada and has been for years. So for that hon. member to make some kind of allegations that somehow I have instructed or ordered anyone on that committee or anyone to do with the Auditor General to stop, start, or overlook an audit is absolute crap.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, the November 28, '08, Hansard would suggest otherwise. The Auditor General plays a vital role in ensuring that government spends public dollars wisely; in other words, making sure we get value for our money. But this government is deliberately handicapping the Provincial Auditor by denying year after year his office funding for important audits. To the President of the Treasury Board: is it this minister's policy to deny the Auditor General additional financial resource to ensure that the public doesn't know how the money is being handled by this government?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, the Auditor General and his office work through the government through an independent audit committee, which I don't chair but which I sit on. This group of very intelligent and informed businessmen and -women deal with the Auditor General's department, and they assess priorities. The Auditor talks to them about where he could be looking, issues that he might be going forward to. Together they put forward an audit plan for the coming year. He then has the same responsibility as every other officer of the Legislature to go back and prioritize his budget to where he feels it's the most effective, and that's exactly how it should work.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that on November 28 in the Legislative Offices Committee, when asked why the Auditor General funding was restricted, two government members made it clear in this Hansard that the instructions were from the President of the Treasury Board. Why were these instructions given to the Tory members?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member might want to write a letter to the hon. members he talked to. I don't know what hon. members said in that meeting and have no question that they have said that. But the fact is that in the context of ever suggesting that it was my right or authority to tell them how to vote at a committee meeting for any level of this thing is simply not true.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In recent years this government failed to manage infection control in the health care system: Vegreville, High Prairie, Vermilion, Lloydminster hospitals, all subject to serious health scares. Residents are worried, but the government wouldn't fund the Auditor General investigation. Why did the President of the Treasury Board block funds for infection control in the province?

Mr. Snelgrove: You know, this goes from the sublime to the absurd. I'm not sure what the Auditor General knows about infection control in hospitals, but I know that we have a Health Quality Council, that does know quite a bit about it and does a very effective job.

The other inference the hon. member makes is that somehow I would use my influence to not have them look at a hospital in my riding or any other riding. This is, Mr. Speaker, simply a dog chasing his own tail. It don't bite.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Hospital Services in Banff

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. At a time when Albertans have given birth to a record number of babies – in 2008, 50,543 – expectant mothers in Banff are facing what to them seems a crisis. It has been reported that the Mineral Springs hospital is considering an indefinite suspension of obstetric services. To the minister of health. Over 70 women are expecting babies in the next five months in Banff, and the lack of planning by this government is directly affecting a core service. What is the minister's response to these citizens?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, it is correct that the Alberta Health Services Board has issued a statement that said that there would be a temporary closure of obstetrical services at the Banff hospital strictly related to the fact that for the staff that are required, the decision was made that the hospital was not adequately staffed. They have attempted to recruit staff. The decision was made that for safety reasons there would be a temporary suspension of obstetrical services. It should be noted that services are supplied at Canmore, which is some 15 minutes away.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, there are services available beyond Banff, but has the minister considered the extra burden on an already overburdened system of delivery in Canmore and also in Calgary?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, both facilities are quite capable of handling the extra cases. I think that it's somewhat of a stretch to call a 15-minute drive a crisis situation. I would suggest that there are many places that residents of this province would be actually quite happy to have to only drive 15 minutes to services.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, without obstetric services many physicians will stop providing other services in the community. They will move to a community where they can provide the services they're trained to deliver. What is the plan, Mr. Minister?

Mr. Liepert: You know, Mr. Speaker, I don't understand how this particular leader can make that statement. He's basically coming up with a premise that something is going to happen where there is no evidence that it's going to happen. You know, it's typical fearmongering.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Assembly of Land for Large Infrastructure Projects

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. This government is proposing a bill that gives them unprecedented power to control all activities on any land in the province it designates, and it would lock them in jail if they protest. Joseph Stalin would be proud. To the Minister of Infrastructure: why is your government implementing a policy that tramples the rights of rural property owners?

Mr. Hayden: Mr. Speaker, the bill is before the House. It would be inappropriate to talk about it before we've had an opportunity to debate the bill and take it through its proper democratic process.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, that's a disingenuous way to get out of answering the question about this government's policy.

It is a policy that tramples the rights of rural property owners. It claims that this is a harmless tool which will streamline infrastructure, but it threatens two-year jail terms and hundred thousand dollar fines for noncompliance. The winners in this proposal are this government's P3 partners and private energy companies. The losers are everyday rural Albertans. To the Minister of Infrastructure: how long has it been this government's policy to threaten dissidents with imprisonment?

Mr. Hayden: Mr. Speaker, when we do discuss the bill, the members in this House will see that there are no additions that are any different than already exist with respect to enforcement of regulations.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, this policy permits virtually unlimited state control over private property belonging to hard-working farmers and ranchers. This government's policies claim that government will consult with landowners but promise jail if they don't co-operate. Threatening to lock up owners who would stand up for their rights is undemocratic. To the Minister of Infrastructure: why are you stripping the rights of rural Albertans?

Mr. Hayden: Mr. Speaker, when the bill goes through the proper process, the members of this House will see that, in fact, this gives notice to landowners and to people far ahead of what we've done in the past and will be a great benefit to those landowners in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Incentive Programs for Oil and Gas Industry

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the hon. Minister of Energy announced a three-point incentive program to stimulate additional activity in the province's conventional oil and gas sector. This is good news as investment by the oil and gas sector has a huge multiplier effect throughout the entire Alberta economy as our province continues to suffer the consequences of the current global economic disaster. Could the hon. minister provide this House with the rationale behind his three-point incentive program and what Albertans can expect to see as a result of its implementation?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Most certainly, the programs that were announced yesterday have one and only one goal, and that is to put Albertans back on the job this coming year. These initiatives are intended to keep drilling and service crews at work. Remember that the only time that any access to these programs takes place is when Albertans are at work.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Governments around the world have tossed around unprecedented and substantial amounts of taxpayers' money over the last six months in the form of corporate bailouts and economic stimulus packages. I'm curious how yesterday's announcement compares to these strategies that have been implemented by other governments in jurisdictions across the world. To the same minister: how much money will yesterday's announcement cost taxpayers?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, there is no cost to taxpayers for these programs. Unlike other jurisdictions the member has mentioned, this government is not spending taxpayers' dollars. Rather, while the pressures we are facing are outside of our control, we are using the means that we have available to us to address pressures on our province's key industry.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While the announcement yesterday was welcome news by many in the junior oil and gas sector investment community, I have heard from some that they are concerned about the frequency of changes to the royalty structure in the junior oil and gas investment environment in the last year. I'm hearing that in a time of great uncertainty the sector needs stability. To the same minister: how does the recent announcement create an environment of stability and certainty within the oil and gas sector?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, again, let me be very clear about this. The announcements made yesterday have nothing to do with the royalty structure. The announcements made yesterday were in response to a global economic situation that is not of our making. What we've done here is use the levers we have available to us in the government of Alberta to put Albertans back to work. Over the long term we continue to look at the investment climate in Alberta and elsewhere. What we've done here is put Albertans to work, and it's very important from that point of view.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Cleanup of Orphan Wells

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With the prosperity of our oil and gas wells comes a price: thousands of abandoned wells, pipelines, and facilities with a billion dollar cleanup price tag. The companies get their resource and walk away. The big question is: who will pay to clean up these sites? My questions are to the Minister of Environment. Can the minister tell us why taxpayers are paying $30 million to clean up orphan wells? They mess it up; we pay to clean it up.

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, there are two reasons. First of all, this government is committed to keeping Albertans at work. That's the underlying reason for having this expenditure put in place at this point in time. There are thousands of service rigs and individuals that work on those service rigs that are looking for work at this point in time. So that's part of the reason.

The other part of the reason is because it's an opportunity for us to address some long-standing issues that, yes, industry is responsible for, but at $10 million a year it's going to take a lot longer than what we can accomplish at $40 million.

Ms Blakeman: To the same minister: given that the $30 million taxpayer subsidy is only for the upstream oil and gas industry, are taxpayers going to be on the hook for the downstream facilities as well?

Mr. Renner: Let's be clear, Mr. Speaker. Companies that are currently operating in this province are and will continue to be responsible for the reclamation of everything that they do. Orphan wells are different. Orphan wells are wells that were drilled long ago, and for numerous reasons the company that was responsible for drilling those wells is no longer in business, has gone bankrupt, or for whatever reason is not in a position to be held responsible and liable. Industry pays into a fund to address orphan wells. All this does is speed up the rate at which those wells are reclaimed.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. To the Minister of Energy: given that for '07-08 industry contributed only $13.6 million to the orphan wells fund and there are over 37,000 abandoned sites, for which the ERCB estimates that more than $9 billion will be needed to reclaim them all, why is the fund set up to only collect a fraction of the cost of what is needed?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, again, it's interesting that we stand and answer questions relative to newspaper articles and articles that other people publish relative to the business related to energy in the province of Alberta. It's very true that there is somewhere in the neighbourhood of $12 million or $13 million a year collected. The fund actually has about $110 million in it currently, and they spend about $12 million a year working on orphan wells. The Orphan Well Association, of course, directs that work, a much different situation that we're talking about here. These are not abandonments. These are orphaned wells. There is an obvious disconnect between what the member is talking about and what it is we're doing.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Incentive Programs for Oil and Gas Industry (continued)

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know that many of my constituents and their families will be pleased with yesterday's announcement of an incentive program for the energy sector. This sends a very positive signal to Albertans who are concerned about their jobs during this economic downturn. My questions today are to the Minister of Energy. Do we have any idea what impact the energy incentive program will have on job creation?

Mr. Knight: Well, yes. Mr. Speaker, we know that with the incentives that we had in front of us yesterday, drilling activity should be buoyed by about the amount that we see the decline projected. There's a projected decline from the original estimates of about 27 per cent this year over last. It relates to about 20,000 jobs. PSAC has indicated in a news release, which I will table at the appropriate time, that this relates to about 20,000 workers in their membership back in the field at work.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, that's certainly good news, and I'll take it back to my constituents.

My constituency of Drayton Valley-Calmar and the hon. member's constituency of Whitecourt-Ste. Anne make up many of the orphan wells in this province. Can you tell me how this announcement as it pertains to orphan wells will help create jobs but also reduce the environmental footprint?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, again, thank you very much. It is refreshing to know that there are members in the House that understand the situation that we're talking about here. This is a one-time investment that will help reduce the environmental footprint created through the abandonment of decades-old sites by aiding and returning them to their former state. In doing that, what we do is hire additional service rigs, additional equipment operators, and provide employment across Alberta for these individuals.

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question to the same minister: can the minister please advise the Assembly how we will know if the incentive program has been successful?

Mr. Knight: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, in the end success will be measured in the jobs created and most certainly in money continuing to be spent in the province of Alberta. Even more success can be measured by new resource pools brought on by this particular initiative. Long after these incentive programs have ended and have been forgotten, we will continue to collect royalties on these pools that will produce long after these incentives are gone. A win-win situation: with these actions we save jobs now, and we will continue to collect resources in the future.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Workplace Health and Safety

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thirty-four per cent of the audit projects between October 2008 and March 31, 2010, by the office of the Auditor General have been deferred or cancelled. One of the audit projects deferred until April of next year is on workplace health and safety. My first question is to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Given that workplace fatalities have risen 34 per cent in the last three years, what is the Minister of Employment and Immigration doing to have this necessary audit by the office of the Auditor General done right now?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, I'm not the one that controls what the Auditor General chooses to audit. All I want to indicate is that workplace incidents, whether they're fatalities or injuries, are totally unacceptable. We recognize that as a ministry. We have inspectors of our own on-site. We do go out to do spot inspections, and, yes, we work with those individuals that are poor performers to try to improve their performance. As a ministry we take a very, very active role in trying to minimize any of those activities from happening.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister. One hundred and sixty-six workers died last year in Alberta because of their jobs. Why did the government limit the Auditor General's resources, preventing a necessary audit at this time which would ensure safe and healthy workplaces throughout the province?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated in my earlier response, I don't control the audits that the Auditor General may choose to do.

I do want as well to indicate that although our numbers are climbing with the amount of Albertans working in this particular province, our rates are pretty constant in terms of our historical averages. Our disabling injury rates are actually decreasing per 100 full-time jobs as well as our lost-time claim rates. Those numbers are going down, and we're still attempting to do better.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: how can the hon. minister justify sporting around the globe at taxpayers' expense when the office of the Auditor General has to defer for one full year a life-saving audit on workplace health and safety throughout this province?

Mr. Goudreau: Well, Mr. Speaker, those are two different priorities. Inasmuch as we are very, very concerned about workplace fatalities and injuries, we do have some priorities in terms of making sure that we have the right people at the right place with the right skills to do the work that's expected in the province of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Incentive Programs for Oil and Gas Industry

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Our government collects zero corporate taxes from the oil and gas that companies do not produce and sell. Our government collects zero personal taxes from jobs that are not there. My question is to the Minister of Energy. How much royalty does your department collect on wells that are not drilled?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, if I understand the question correctly, the amount of royalty that Albertans would get from wells that are not drilled is zero.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That was why I was so pleased to hear about the programs that were announced yesterday and wonder if these programs that were announced yesterday are related to the other programs that were announced last year for deep drilling and transitional royalties.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, the short answer to that is no. Again I've got to be very clear. These incentives that were discussed yesterday and the programs released yesterday are in response to a very steep decline in oil and natural gas prices and, most certainly, a squeeze in the global credit markets. These programs, these incentives are in response to a crisis that we have today, and they are not in any way, shape, or form attached to the royalty structure we have in place.

The Speaker: The hon. member?

Ms DeLong: No further questions. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Secondary Ticket Sales

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. The prohibition against ticket resales has been removed from the new Film and Video Classification Act with the government arguing that consumers are protected under the Fair Trading Act, and this is simply not true. The Fair Trading Act only ensures that tickets are legitimate and that there is disclosure for why they're charging such high prices. This is not the same thing as protecting consumers from the ticket reselling practices of Ticketmaster. I'll ask again to the Minister of Service Alberta: what is the minister doing beyond daily monitoring to protect Alberta ticket buyers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, daily monitoring is ongoing. As well, with respect to the Fair Trading Act there is protection for consumers under that if a consumer has been misled or been sold a fake ticket or other unfair trade practices. What's really important here is that the conversation is happening. We need to hear from people out there who are being misled or consumers who are not getting the right information. That's why this conversation needs to happen, so we can do the right thing and handle it properly.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Well, thank you. To the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit. Ontario's act actually protects ticket buyers and artists and workers by prohibiting secondary ticket sales, so why doesn't the minister introduce legislation to do the same thing here?

Mr. Blackett: Well, Mr. Speaker, right now we're going through the regulations as opposed to Bill 18 before we have it proclaimed. What we have done is that we've talked to Ticketmaster, and we've had indications from them. We asked them to cease and desist. We did that months ago. TicketsNow is not operating in Alberta. None of our artists or our consumers are at risk on this particular issue.

Ms Blakeman: Boy, did you get taken.

Back to the same minister: if he doesn't want to bring in legislation that prohibits ticket reselling, why doesn't the minister take the same steps that the Attorney General from New Jersey took; that is, to stop Ticketmaster from steering customers to its secondary sites, they legislated that Ticketmaster could not resell tickets on TicketsNow until after a delay of up to one year. Why don't you consider that?

Mr. Blackett: Well, I will take that under advisement. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Long-term Care

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last January the Premier said, and I quote: "Our government will invest $300 million for 600 new beds . . . in seven new long-term care centres across the province." A year later this promise is broken. Not one single new bed exists, and the government's continuing care strategy includes no increase to the number of long-term care beds for at least six years. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: when hundreds of seniors are lining the hallways of our hospitals waiting for care, how can you show them so much disrespect?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, the preamble was, as is customary, not correct. There are a number of projects around this province in long-term care that are under way. I would encourage the member to leave her office in the Legislature and travel to some of the communities west of Edmonton and down to Calgary. There are several facilities that are under construction.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. None of these new facilities are part of what was announced.

Now, approximately 750 seniors are taking up acute-care hospital beds because they're on the waiting list for long-term care. Meanwhile, the government is planning no new beds that will provide the level of care these patients require. These seniors don't need new apartments with new fees; they need qualified care. To the minister of health again: will you admit that the only way your strategy can succeed in getting these seniors out of hospitals is by waiting for those currently in long-term care to pass away?

Mr. Liepert: No, I won't, Mr. Speaker, because what we are doing and what we will be doing – and I would encourage the member to listen carefully to the minister of finance's budget delivery on April 7. We don't believe that the answer to those particular patients is to simply to house them, institutionalize them in long-term care. We want to provide some options. We will be ensuring that there are additional dollars for things like home care, where these particular patients can actually go back to where they want to be, not where these two want to send them to.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Notley: Yeah. Well, indeed, yesterday when asked about the 600 long-term care beds he promised Albertans, the Premier started talking about housing. Home care won't cut it for the 1,500 Alberta seniors waiting for long-term care beds and neither will new apartments. Alberta's senior population is growing, and so is the long-term care wait-list. To the minister of health: wouldn't it be wiser to build the new long-term care beds you promised rather than leaving it to overcrowded hospitals and overworked Alberta families to do your job for you?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I can only repeat what I said in my first answer. We are.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Research and Innovation Funding

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I attended the Ingenuity in Our Community event last week in Edmonton, where the government provided an update on the innovation framework. Given the state of the global economy I've heard questions about whether we should be rethinking some current initiatives that could perhaps wait until after the economic storm has passed. My questions are to the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology. Could the minister please explain why he's proceeding with his work to define the role and mandates within Alberta's research and innovation system at this time?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a very good question. Given the current economic situation that we find ourselves with globally, I think it was actually quite a good vision of the Premier to embark upon this kind of realignment and refocusing of our research system and our research and innovation framework. Last year is when we started this. What that's going to do is give us a leg up on many other jurisdictions around the world that are currently looking at how they can become more accountable, more focused, and more aligned, and that's exactly where we're headed.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Once again to the same minister: the audience last week was very supportive of the youth techno entrepreneurship program, but given the circumstances would the $3 million be better spent on bolstering another part of the research and innovation system?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, the youth of Alberta are the future of Alberta. The youth of Alberta are the future entrepreneurs of Alberta, and our techno entrepreneur program, which was part of what came forward in the task force last year, is something that we're not going to pull back on because it's exactly the type of investment we should be making in this type of climate.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question to the same minister. There seems to be a great deal of emphasis on entrepreneurs and not so much on the research side of things. Is this a signal that Alberta is moving away from its past support for research?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I do hear this question a fair bit; that is, are we moving away from the tremendous strengths that we have in basic research in our postsecondary institutions and our research institutions? The answer is absolutely not. What we are doing is building upon that strength and building upon the areas of focus and alignment that we have so that we can take that basic research and turn it into the good that it should do for society.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Homelessness Initiatives for First Nations People

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions today are to the Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs. The aboriginal community accounts for about 5 per cent of Edmonton's population but constitutes a startling 40 per cent of Edmonton's homeless population. The statistics for Calgary are similar. The difference, it seems to me, between the two cities is that Edmonton's new 10-year plan to end homelessness proposes programs that are specifically geared to housing and supports for aboriginal people, and Calgary's plan seems not to do that. Does the minister agree that for any 10-year plan to end homelessness in Alberta to be successful, the plan should include culturally specific programs to address housing and supports for homeless First Nations people?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's a very important question. Yes, the Edmonton 10-year-plan, which was just released, as you know, approximately three weeks ago, has identified that the aboriginal population in Edmonton that is homeless is at 40 per cent when, really, it's 5 per cent of the Edmonton population overall. I do agree, as I've indicated even that day when we did the announcement, hon. member, that I very strongly support culturally sensitive housing programs, and that would include those for the aboriginal community.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister for that answer. What is the minister doing to ensure that the 10-year plans that have already been adopted by cities or municipalities have programs that are specifically designed to get First Nations people out of homelessness and into housing?

Mrs. Fritz: Well, Mr. Speaker, the 10-year plans that we've received as a ministry have been from the seven major municipalities in the province, which would include Lethbridge and Red Deer, Edmonton, Calgary, the ones that the member has named. It's really the local communities that put forward what is important in their communities into their plans. Edmonton has addressed the aboriginal housing component, and as I said, I will be supporting the Edmonton plan strongly.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, given that we are still waiting for the release of the province's 10-year plan to end homelessness – and maybe the minister can shed some light on when we might expect to see it – will the minister tell us what programs, if any, are being developed at the provincial level that specifically address the overrepresentation of aboriginals in Alberta's homeless population?

Mrs. Fritz: Well, Mr. Speaker, the provincial 10-year plan to end homelessness will identify long-term strategies, as I've indicated here in the Assembly before. I am looking forward to that release once the government process has been completed. As for the aboriginal community over the past three years, we've allocated about $45 million through a federal program to the communities overall, and they've been for student housing at Mount Royal College and other colleges; also for aboriginal home ownership programs for aboriginal communities – some are applying for Habitat for Humanity, for example – a number of ways that we're assisting communities with that money.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Cattle Age Verification

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As part of the Alberta government's ongoing plan to assist our livestock industry, a second portion of a benefit will be available to Alberta livestock producers. In order to receive this benefit, cattle producers were required to age verify their 2008 calf crop by the end of 2008. My first question is to the minister of agriculture. How much of our calf crop has been age verified to date?

Mr. Groeneveld: Mr. Speaker, we certainly are pleased with the response from the Alberta cattle producers. We now have about one and a half million, or 83 per cent, of our 2008 calf crop age verified. All livestock producers who meet the requirements, including premise identification, receive a second benefit under the AFRP 2 in early March. We now have a total of a hundred million dollars which is available to the qualified producers.

Mr. Prins: Well, thank you very much for that answer. Mr. Speaker, my next question to the same minister. I know that there are some producers that have questioned the value of the age verification program. Can the minister tell us how age verification will be of benefit to this industry?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, certainly, there are some questions about it, but simply put, age verification will increase our market access. Key markets, including many of the Asian markets, insist that our animals now be age verified. The federal agriculture minister, Ritz, was recently able to secure some market access in principle for the sale of Canadian beef to Hong Kong. This is a staged approach, and it will open other markets for age verified animals only. Just as important, probably, in the event of a disease outbreak age verification will help us identify the animals at risk.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Prins: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: age verification is now mandatory under the Animal Health Act, and I would wonder what assistance is available to producers to help them to comply with this mandatory function.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you. Absolutely, Mr. Speaker. Since October Agriculture and Rural Development field staff have been assisting producers age verify their animals and complete their premise ID identification. I believe Alberta ag at this particular time has about 61 field staff available for them, so help certainly is available over the phone or in person by calling the Ag-Info Centre at 310-FARM.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Early Childhood Services

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Part of the Minister of Education's mandate as specified by the Premier is to "increase . . . early intervention initiatives." One such initiative, early childhood services, provides programming for children under the age of six.

But a letter a parent received from the minister states, “The School Act does not give [the minister] the authority to review decisions related to the special education programming of a child in an ECS program.” To the Minister of Education: if the minister is not responsible for ECS programming, will the minister please tell us who is?

Mr. Hancock: Well, luckily, Mr. Speaker, this government works well together. I work with the ministry of health and the ministry of children’s services to make sure that children have access to the services that they need not only to do well but to be ready for school at an appropriate time. That means early diagnosis, that means talking about early childhood programming, and it means co-operating with our school boards, many of whom have put forward programming in the areas of early childhood work. There are a lot of people in this province who care about kids, and a lot of them are working together to make good things happen.

Mr. Chase: I am pleased to hear that that co-ordination exists. I’d like to see concrete examples of it. I’ve asked questions to the Minister of Children and Youth Services, who’s passed it on to the minister of health, and you’re sort of flipping it back to both of them, so I’m still not sure.

Does the minister acknowledge that children younger than six years old should be protected with the same rights as children who are six years old or older, and who’s going to ensure that that protection occurs?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, that’s a very broad question. Should children under age six have the same rights as children over age six? Absolutely.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Inappropriate clustering, misuses of funding, and record mismanagement are just a few problems this particular parent has had to face recently with the ECS programming without any course of redress. Will the minister admit that the School Act must be changed to better protect children under the age of six? Specific care.

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, luckily, we’re engaged in a process of Inspiring Education, which is going to review entirely the process of providing educational opportunities to students in this province to make sure that every child has the opportunity to maximize his or her potential. In the course of that process, as I’ve indicated both in the Legislature and outside the Legislature, we’ll be looking at the legislative framework for education, and we’ll be happy to consider all aspects of education and all potential amendments that might be needed to the act. I’d invite the hon. member to engage his community in the discussion and to bring forward suggestions as to how we might do things better.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Municipal Taxation

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. All of my questions are for the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Some cities are suggesting that they need to keep all of the education property taxes that they’re collecting in order to meet the growing demands of municipal budgets. Can the minister please advise the House whether he’s contemplating any such change?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, we all benefit from the funds collected for public education. Let me be very clear that education taxes are not municipal revenue. They are collected on behalf of this province. The funding of education through the general revenue fund and property taxes strikes a balance: property taxes, approximately 31 per cent; GRF, approximately 69 per cent. There are no plans to change.

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, many municipalities are feeling budgetary pressures associated with increased costs and the deteriorating economy. Can the minister please tell us how municipalities can manage these challenges?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, strong municipalities are the key ingredient to strong communities. One of the ways, of course, is the municipal sustainability initiative. But this government is supporting municipalities, supporting them through transportation grants, infrastructure, health projects, savings through the health care premiums, ambulance savings. Municipalities need to prioritize, and they have the responsibility to the citizens of their municipality to prioritize.

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, recently the city of Calgary proposed implementing new ways for municipalities to raise revenues, including a real estate transfer tax. Can the minister tell the House whether there are any plans to amend the Municipal Government Act to allow any new fees or taxes by the municipalities?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, the simple answer is no. We are not considering providing new taxation powers, especially in these economic times. We will continue to talk with municipalities about the importance of sustainability, their challenges, and possible solutions. But in the end, no, we are not considering providing new taxation powers.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Syncrude Royalty Agreement

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. In the private-sector world corporate reports to shareholders must meet the test of full, plain, and true disclosure. This government, sadly, has no such requirement. Information filed by one of Syncrude’s shareholders indicates that the royalty deal Syncrude just negotiated with this government is worth many billions in increased profits. To the Minister of Energy: what was the makeup of the government team that negotiated this deal? Who were its technical leaders, and who were its political leaders?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, as has been the case over a number of years, the people that are responsible for negotiating and continuing the health of the Crown agreements on behalf of the province of Alberta are individuals in the Department of Energy.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. This government was hosed by Syncrude negotiators. It ignored the advice of its own experts and gave Syncrude an unbelievably generous deal. Again to the Minister of Energy: did the Department of Energy conduct detailed analysis of the impact of this royalty deal before agreeing to it, and if so, did he accept the full and complete advice of his department officials in agreeing with this deal?

Mr. Knight: Again, it's interesting to note that a number of individuals, and particularly some of the individuals here in the House, think that it's just kind of a simple little arrangement when you go and make a Crown agreement relative to a 40-, 50-, 60-, 80-year business proposal for the people of the province of Alberta. These agreements are very complicated and complex agreements. Have I had an opportunity to sit with people from both sides of the negotiating? Have I sat at the table with people on both sides of the negotiations when it is going on? No. But have I accepted and read and concurred with people from both sides of the negotiating team? Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have done.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Given that the President of the Treasury Board has directed government members to limit the Auditor General's budget, leading to a deferral of the audit of royalty collections, will the President of the Treasury Board take this multibillion dollar issue seriously and request the Auditor General to conduct a special audit of the royalty collection system?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, from Hansard from our Auditor General, who says, "Alberta is unique also in that it is the only jurisdiction that publicly reports on every ministry." A little further down the line it says:

where we go more in depth beyond the financial statements and into the actual operations of an organization and how they conduct their work. We do . . . more [than a] thorough examination . . . Since I am statutorily required to do all the financial statement audits, then I'm only left with what is left over to do the systems audits. Therefore, we have to reflect upon that as to how much you can do in the year with the resources that you have available.

From Mr. Fred Dunn.

The Speaker: Hon. minister, that was a direct quotation from what I believe to be a document that already is the purview of the House and has been tabled in the House before. Is this correct?

Mr. Snelgrove: Yes.

The Speaker: Okay. It doesn't have to be done again, then.
The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Education Consultation

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Some people may say education in Alberta has sometimes been everyone's whipping boy: reports of students failing, testing stressing students out, and parents writing letters to media and trustees saying that they do not understand what their child is learning in school, all at a time when according to some corners about 70 per cent of our population do not have children in school. My question is to the Minister of Education. Earlier you introduced a number of individuals who are serving on the steering committee for Inspiring Education: A Dialogue with Albertans. They are well-respected members coming from many parts of Alberta. Are you expecting these people to solve the problems of the education system today?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think it should be clear that Albertans have a right to be very justly proud of the education system they have today. By some accounts, very credible international accounts, we rank among the top five in the world. In fact, people come from all over the world to take a look at what we're doing here in terms of our curriculum, our assessment processes and accountability processes, our teacher education and teachers, the standardized curriculum. There are many things that speak up for the value of education today. There are issues, obviously, but our committee is about tomorrow, about the long term.

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you. Again to the Minister of Education: is it wise to be undertaking such an ambitious task at a time of economic uncertainty?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, absolutely. A time of economic uncertainty is a time when you invest in looking to the long term and the big picture and where the province is going so that you can be ready and have your citizens ready to engage in the opportunities that they have for tomorrow. That's the important part: to make sure that our children and their children have the opportunity to be Albertans tomorrow and to seize the opportunities at home and in the world. Looking at what we're doing, the Inspiring Education process and getting the public to understand the value of education to the future are absolutely essential.

Ms Woo-Paw: My final question is again to the same minister. Is this process a roundabout way to eliminate locally elected school boards and establish a school superboard to run everything out of one office?

Mr. Hancock: No, Mr. Speaker. In fact, that's a question that was raised with me at the Alberta School Boards Association and many other venues. This is about public engagement in a discussion, a dialogue of Alberta. It's about public involvement. A locally elected school board should be part of that process of involving the public in the discussion. The Alberta School Boards Association in the next week or so is holding a conference to do exactly that. The Public School Boards' Association is engaged as well. This is about involving the public.

However, the discussion will be about the future of education, and obviously part of that will be governance structure and the appropriate governance structure. Form will follow function. But, Mr. Speaker, it's not about eliminating the school boards; it's about involving the public in education.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that was 106 exchanges today. In 30 seconds from now I'll call upon the first of three remaining members to participate in Members' Statements.

Strathmore Youth Exceptional Service Awards

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure today to acknowledge the Strathmore youth exceptional service awards that were celebrated and presented on Saturday, February 21, 2009. This marked the fifth anniversary of the awards, that were initiated thanks to the inspiration of society president Valerie Heck. This year 10 young people were nominated for and received the awards based on their significant and exemplary volunteer service in the Strathmore community.

Thirty-six young people have been recognized in the five-year history of the awards, ranging in age from 4 to 18 years. Sponsored by local businesses and service clubs, the awards highlight the positive volunteer actions of young people in a wide variety of areas, young people whose actions and commitment are the fabric of what strong communities are made of. I highlight the initiative of 9-year-old Erin Waterchief, who, among other achievements, collected over $100 at her last birthday party in lieu of gifts. With her young friends Erin donated and delivered the money to the Strathmore hospital.

Volunteer services at the community library, the seniors' lodge, and fundraising for a skateboard park were among other achievements highlighted during the awards. Mr. Speaker, at a time when some are concerned about the loss of commitment to volunteer service, I am proud to congratulate the Strathmore Youth Exceptional Service Award Society and the 10 young nominees they recognized last week.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

National Social Work Week

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise today and recognize social workers in our province during National Social Work Week, which is March 1 to 7. Social workers are heroes in our society. They're ordinary people who do the extraordinary by responding to children and families in crisis, counselling patients in hospitals, giving guidance to our children and youth in schools and universities, and working with families in family courts and elsewhere. Their contributions to our communities have far-reaching and positive effects on Albertans from all walks of life, and we are a stronger province because of their vital care and support.

However, their work is often behind the scenes and isn't always acknowledged. I applaud the work social workers do each and every day to ensure that Albertans are receiving the help they need to be successful. I hope that this week and throughout the year we can all take the time to say thank you to social workers for the valuable role they play.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Multilingualism

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak on the value of learning international languages. It has been long recognized that language is one of the most powerful instruments for communication, the preservation and development of our tangible and intangible heritage, and positive human connections. As our world and societies become increasingly pluralistic, global, and multilingual, there's a corresponding increase in the recognition and appreciation for the benefits of learning international languages and maintaining heritage, or mother, languages. This is deemed so important for human development that UNESCO proclaimed February 21 of each year as International Mother Language Day 10 years ago.

Mr. Speaker, having a multilingual population yields benefits in all aspects of life in our society. It helps learners to develop greater ability in thinking, problem solving, as well as improved ability to learn. Multilingualism is also linked to reduction in school dropout rates and enhanced social integration. In our global knowledge-based economy the ability to speak in multiple languages is crucial for conducting business in the international community and critical for advancement of business goals. Having a shared language also strengthens family connections at home as well as relationships around the globe.

The United Nations also recognizes multilingualism as a way to demonstrate respect and inclusion and develop better understanding and appreciation for those from different cultures, countries, and nationalities, which in turn helps reduce racism, xenophobia, and intolerance.

Here in Alberta, Mr. Speaker, international and heritage languages are taught to students in both our public schools and community-based language schools. At the community level over 40 languages are taught to over 12,000 students every weekend by many dedicated leaders, teachers, and volunteers from our diverse cultural and linguistic communities.

As an Albertan who has devoted more than a decade to running community-based language programs and raised three multilingual young Albertans, I look forward to seeing greater development in international programs in Alberta in the years to come. Thank you.

Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

The Speaker: The chair of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts I am pleased to table five copies of the committee's report on its 2008 activities. Additional copies of the report have also been provided for all Members of the Legislative Assembly.

Thank you.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have one petition this afternoon. This petition is signed by 770 individuals, many of whom are residents of the Sherwood Park and the Strathcona constituency. It reads:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government to introduce legislation that will ensure the following:

1. where a person who holds a graduated driver's licence is operating a motor vehicle that is involved in a collision resulting in serious injury or death, that person's licence shall be suspended immediately and notification shall be provided to the Alberta Transportation Safety Board; and
2. the Board shall immediately conduct a review of the incident to determine whether the person's licence should be reinstated, and if so, under what conditions.

Thank you.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am tabling the correspondence to and from the Minister of Education which I referenced during question period today.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have four tablings today. The first two relate to documents referred to in my questions. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of excerpts from the government's December continuing care strategy, which related to my questions today, wherein the government's plan to build no new long-term care beds is clearly stated.

My second tabling is the appropriate number of copies of speaking notes for the Premier dated January 29, 2008, available on his website, in which he promises that his government will spend $300 million on 600 new long-term care beds and more than 200 replacement beds.

I'd also like to table the appropriate number of copies of a news release from Public Interest Alberta regarding the opposition expressed by a number of seniors' groups to the government's continuing care strategy.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Minister of Energy.

2:50

Mr. Knight: Yes, Mr. Speaker. As I'd indicated earlier in question period, I would like to take this opportunity to table a news release from the Petroleum Services Association of Canada in which they indicate that the Alberta energy initiatives program will save jobs.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Ms Redford, Minister of Justice and Attorney General, response to a question raised by Mr. Taylor, hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, during Oral Question Period on March 2, 2009, regarding fires caused by the negligence of a landlord.

On behalf of the hon. Mr. Lindsay, Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security, victims services branch status report 2007-2008.

Orders of the Day

Committee of Supply

[Mr. Cao in the chair]

The Chair: The chair would like to call the Committee of Supply to order. The hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Supplementary Supply Estimates 2008-09, No. 2 General Revenue Fund

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to move the 2008-09 supplementary supply estimates, No. 2, for the general revenue fund. These estimates will provide additional spending authority to three departments of the government and the office of the Auditor General. When passed, the estimates will authorize an increase of about $128 million in voted expense and equipment inventory purchases. These estimates are consistent with the third-quarter fiscal update, which updated the 2008-09 fiscal plan for all government entities. While specific ministers can speak to the details related to their individual budgets, I can outline the overall requests for additional spending authority.

The increases include $70 million for higher than anticipated producer claims for the 2007-08 year of the Alberta farm recovery program, phase 1; $49.7 million for employment and training programs, health benefits, and income supports; $8 million for the off-site service work for the Fort McMurray community development plan; and $750,000 to the Auditor General for increased audits and requirements from the March 2008 restructuring of the government and several special-purpose audits requested by the Legislature.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. It is a pleasure, an honour, an experience is perhaps the best word, to rise and kick off the debate of the 2008-2009 supplementary supply estimates, version 2.0, I guess we could call it because we dealt with version 1.0 on November 26. That was worth pretty close to a billion dollars, and now we're looking at adding another $128,477,000 to that. The hon. President of the Treasury Board gave a brief, specific breakdown of where that money would go. Over the course of this afternoon, Mr. Chair, we will debate this further, and we will see what kinds of questions we can come up with and what kinds of answers the government can provide to our questions.

Of course, the first question for the 2008-2009 supplementary supply estimates, No. 2, is: how come we keep doing this over and over again, at least once a year, often twice a year, going back 10 years now, going back $13,843,000,000 worth of additional money requested within the budget year? I mean, Mr. Chair, I'm sure there was a time when we actually had budgets that small to get us through a year in the province of Alberta.

Dr. Taft: Not long ago.

Mr. Taylor: My colleague from Edmonton-Riverview says that it actually wasn't that long ago although I must confess that I have no historical memory from being here in this House of a time when the budget was only $13.8 billion. The first budget that I think we debated after I was elected in 2004 – that would be the fiscal 2005-2006 budget, I guess – was about $25 billion. About this time last year, a little later than this, we were debating the '08-09 budget for $37 billion, $12 billion, or nearly 50 per cent, more than it was just four years earlier. Mr. Chair, on top of that – on top of that – we need to keep going back to the well, you know.

Mr. Chair, I've got two kids in university. I know a little something about the experience of being the bank of mom and dad. I know what it's like. If my kids kept coming back to me the way this government keeps coming back to this Legislature with its hand out and its pockets turned out, pleading poverty and saying, "Please, sir, I need more," I think I'd tell them to go get a job.

Ms Pastoor: You might tell them to get a job.

Mr. Taylor: Exactly. Go stand out on 17th Avenue in Calgary with a squeegee.

Ms Pastoor: Teach them how to budget.

Mr. Taylor: Well, yeah. My hon. colleague from Lethbridge-East actually just nailed it there, Mr. Chairman. What I would do, what I have done, is teach our kids how to budget.

Mr. Denis: How conservative. Very conservative.

Mr. Taylor: That from a former Liberal, a former Saskatchewan Liberal, the Member for Calgary-Egmont. I'll take that comment about conservatism with a lowercase "c". [interjections] Oh, the sparrows are starting to chirp again from the other side.

An Hon. Member: Absolution is good for the soul.

Mr. Taylor: Bless you, my son.

There is just no way around the fact that this is like the Seinfeld show. It just went on and on. It was never about anything in particular. It was about the same thing every episode. Nothing ever really changed. Nothing ever really was accomplished. No progress was ever really made. No accountants were apparently hurt in the making of this movie.

The simple, sad, inescapable fact of the matter, Mr. Chairman, is that this government cannot live within its means, cannot budget properly for a 12-month period, and that is why it continues to come back to this House once or twice a year asking for more.

Now, in the grander context of the requests for more this is only a request for a little more – a little, tiny bit more – just $128,477,000. Not much more than beer money when you're talking about it in the context of a $37 billion budget. But the combination of this increase that's being asked for now and the increase that was approved in November and the original budget of $37 billion – and we're not quite finished this year yet. We've got – what? – 27 days left in it. I think this brings the actual increase in expenditures from fiscal '07-08 closer to 13 per cent than the 9.7 per cent increase in spending that was advertised when we did the budget debate last year. Of course, that budget – we're coming to the end of that budget period – estimated spending increases of 12 per cent over the next three years and admitted that that was going to be front-loaded onto this year's budget because of a pretty massive increase in capital spending that would level off over the years to come.

There was some acknowledgement in Budget 2008, Mr. Chairman, that going forward from that point, things were a little dicey; it was going to be a little difficult to predict what the world economy was going to do. I quote from the fiscal overview from Budget 2008. "The actual surplus over the next three years will depend on factors largely outside the control of the Alberta government." Well, may I say in a totally nonpartisan way: we've all discovered that. We've all discovered that all kinds of things outside of the control of any or all of us in this House have had a massive impact on the budget, on the economy, and on the way things look going forward.

The way things look going forward is a bit dark, a bit cloudy, a bit scary, a bit bleak, and understanding that I'm talking now a little more than a month in advance of the beginning of debate on the budget for fiscal '09-10, which may present – we don't know yet because we haven't seen the budget – a very different picture than what we've been used to, we are here debating a hundred and some-odd million dollars in requested supplementary supply money in a context that says that nothing is being reined in yet. So I guess my first question to the President of the Treasury Board would simply be: what is this government's plan to curb spending increases?

Now, I'm not asking the President of the Treasury Board to steal the finance minister's thunder or spill the beans in advance of the finance minister's budget or anything like that. I understand the requirement to wait for April 7, to stay tuned, as is often said, for the details. But in broad, general terms I think this is an appropriate time in this Assembly for the question to be asked about what the government has in the way of a plan, if any, to curb spending increases. I think this is an appropriate time to ask whether we will be going through this exercise again twice next year. I think this is an appropriate time to find out whether the government is even prepared to acknowledge that it perhaps needs to change its ways and learn to come down with a budget at the beginning of the year that it is going to stick to.

If this were the budget that any one of us in this House were drawing up for our own family, Mr. Chairman, outside of the possibility that sometime during the fiscal or calendar year of our family's existence somebody in the family might get a little bit of an increase in their pay, though I doubt that's going to happen in very many cases, in very many families in Alberta over the course of the next 12 months, we would have to create a budget that did the best job we could of projecting what our costs and our expenses were going to be over the next 12 months as against what our income was going to be over the next 12 months, and we would have to stick to that.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I guess, to follow the logic, if you don't want to come back here and monitor the expenditures you've set out for departments, you just give them more than they need. You just write cheques until they absolutely don't have to come and see you. We'll say: see you next year. We could get our spending up to $50 billion, but we won't have to come back here and hold departments to account for changing their spending.

So there's a method. You can say: let's budget tight. Let's think in perfect circumstances that the ship sails along fine and we don't have to come back. But in a situation like most governments are in and certainly most provinces are in, the chances are that the circumstances you set out with in the spring aren't going to be exactly the same year-round, nor are the needs and the demands of the different departments, and the interrelationship between some of the departments certainly needs to be understood better.

I have two kids in college myself, and I know that if I don't have them coming back looking for money, I've given them too much money. It's pretty simple. How their mother and I keep track of them as best we can is to make sure that there is a definite need in the pocket of the college kid. I make no apologies for being a bit of a skinflint with that.

The hon. member asked about what we are doing. Two years ago we set forth on value reviews, making departments work together, trying to understand things they may do that may have costs in other departments or things that they could do better to actually deliver what we're trying to do better to the people, doing it more efficiently by identifying overlaps and lapses. This is a very good example of where the Premier allowed us to create the safe communities fund, which demanded that all relevant departments had to come back for money to the issue. Instead of just automatically increasing the baseline funding to all departments, who may have some kind of an influence on how we solve some of the crime and addictions and drug and gang issues we've got, we said, "Here's the issue. Here's the money. Come to us with good ideas, and we'll make sure that we're getting value for our money as we address it," as opposed to the old form of just raise the base and measure it at the end of the year.

We've also put together in this government ministerial working groups, which are very effective at making sure that our policies and programs go forward in a very synced method, so that Energy and Environment and Aboriginal Relations and Treasury all understand where the energy programs and the environmental programs fit together. I can quite proudly say that this started two years ago. So as we have to address the obvious change in our financial situation, we have benefited greatly from some of the work of our Premier and the ministers that have been involved.

I make no apologies for having departments come back to account to this House for the dollars that have been either transferred from department to department or have been required for special circumstances that have arisen. I would think the hon. member would appreciate that the accounting systems, the accounting responsibilities in this province are second to none and that he should probably appreciate the fact that even down to the $740,000 that the Solicitor General got, he gets to come back and comment on it.

I don't get his point that we've done nothing. It's a political argument that, of course, he would do better, but it sounds like his better would be to write the cheque so big that no department would have to come back.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development.

Agriculture and Rural Development

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. A very interesting and quite a theatrical opening we had here; however, we're not in a theatre here today.

An Hon. Member: Great.

Mr. Groeneveld: Yeah, it would be nice.

I'm certainly pleased to speak about this government's ongoing commitment to Alberta's agriculture and food industry. Mr. Chairman, in 2008 this government responded to the challenges facing the livestock industry by creating the Alberta farm recovery plan. This plan saw the distribution of $165 million to all Alberta livestock producers to help them to cope with the disaster as a result of increased input costs.

What is before you today relates to the original Alberta farm recovery plan, where producers already enrolled in the CAIS program were automatically registered and those that were not had until December 2007 to apply. I'm pleased to share that a significant number of livestock producers were helped through the AFRP program 1, considerably more, in fact, than we expected, which is a good thing.

However, our cost estimates for the program were based on the number of producers who participate in the CAIS program and the information provided at that time. The number of new participants and the extent of revision requests to change livestock numbers after the announcement far exceeded our expectation. Instead of getting the additional 1,000 new claims that we projected, we received 3,600, and almost a third of the 16,500 total claims we received had to be revised due to producers adjusting their information, which resulted in cost increases under the plan. As a result, we require $70 million more to cover the benefits to those additional producers who are eligible.

Originally we expected that this increase might be offset by a reduction in claims under the AgriStability program due to unprecedented increases in commodity prices in 2008. However, the economic downturn resulted in a steep decline instead. Moreover, we had one of the worst years in terms of crop losses due to hail storms. As a matter of fact, it was the worst year ever recorded at AFSC. As such, adequate funding is not available this year through AFSC.

Mr. Chairman, agriculture is the backbone of our province, and it's imperative that we support livestock producers through the challenging times. We are pleased that so many were able to benefit from the first AFRP program because it was a resounding success, ensuring that they and their families were able to weather the storm of rising costs.

The hon. member across has left the room, but I apologize that we in ag, I guess, don't have a crystal ball to look into to tell the future or, more importantly, a crystal ball to tell what the weather is going to be. I know he talked about a plan, and he always talks about a plan. Maybe that particular member could come up with a plan that would control the weather for the next five years. I would love to sit down with him and see where we could get to with this type of plan. However, we have no such luxury in this world.

Under these circumstances, Mr. Chairman, I am requesting you to favourably consider the request for the supplementary budget.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciated the comments, at least most of the comments, from the minister. We're looking here at an additional $70 million for the farm recovery program. I think it's really worth emphasizing that this is actually a supplement not to this year's expenditures but to the '07-08 benefit year. So it's kind of an unusual situation, where we have this amount of money that's being requested for a program for a budget year that has actually been behind us for 10 or 11 months.

I'm concerned, as I think probably an awful number of Albertans are concerned, that no matter how many years go by, no matter how many promises are made, that, well, with just one more year of support, one more round of support, the agriculture sector will not need subsidies anymore, will not need supports anymore.

I don't think anybody takes issue with insurance sorts of programs, like hail insurance or other programs like that, but we're talking here about a lot of money. We talk every year about a lot of money for farmers. I don't dispute that farmers play an important role. Obviously, they're a vital part of our society, but I know that an awful lot of Albertans wonder: when is this flow of subsidies to the agriculture sector going to peter out; when is it going to come to an end? They flow to this sector in a way that they don't flow to any other sector. They don't flow to the housing sector, even though housing is a necessity. They don't flow to other sectors nearly as much.

There is a broad social concern out there that somehow or another we need to figure this out. You know what? It's a concern shared by an awful lot of farmers. Farmers I speak to often say that they don't want to be taking this money; they wish the system didn't work this way. Maybe it's a necessity of living in a world where many of our agricultural competitors subsidize their farmers – the Americans, the Europeans, the Japanese, and so on – so we just have to play that game, and maybe we're caught in that dynamic. I do want to get on the record the ongoing concern of an awful lot of Albertans that payments of one kind or another to the agriculture sector are unending, and it would be nice to get to a point where they didn't need to occur quite so much.

I am concerned by the nature of this particular $70 million request because under the Alberta farm recovery plan announced a year and a half ago almost, there was $165 million allocated, and that was expected to be enough. We then see that's $165 million just for phase 1, and we see $70 million more coming on top of that. The minister tried to explain that, and he gave a sincere explanation, but it does raise questions about how the program is managed. We're talking about an overrun in estimated budget of 40 per cent or perhaps more than 40 per cent. That's a pretty major overrun for a government program, and inevitably it asks questions about how the program is designed and managed and evaluated. A 40 per cent overrun on anything ought to raise very serious questions.

So it would be good to hear from the minister some reassurance, some explanation, some commitment to holding the line because if there's a 40 per cent overrun in phase 2 of this program, it's going to be a much bigger number. I don't know if the minister would be prepared to address the question around what assurance he can give this Assembly that there won't be a similar overrun on phase 2 of the Alberta farm recovery plan. Are there provisions in place? Are there safeguards that have been implemented since phase 1 so that phase 2 won't go 40 per cent over budget?

Does the minister want to respond now? I appreciate that. Thanks.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development.

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the comments made by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, and I certainly have no quarrel with what he said. Farming, I guess, is a gamble right from day one. I don't have to explain that to you or anyone here. It doesn't matter what portion of farming we get into. That's the nature of the beast, and it's a pretty hard one to tame.

You did hit the nail on the head somewhat when you talked about the subsidies from other countries. If we could get the WTO issues settled, that I think would certainly help us. The overrun, of course, as you correctly identified, comes from the '07 program, and the weather played a big portion of that. We thought we probably had it covered quite easily, which we usually do, but the hail issue pretty much depleted our fund.

Probably the bigger issue is the number of producers out there that we never knew were out there. I can honestly say that it concerns me very much because we had to take the numbers from the CAIS program, which we struggle with at the best of times. We knew that there would be more than that, but we didn't know how many more than that. Unfortunately for us, the Canadian Cattle Identification Agency knows how many cattle are out there, but because of the – what do you call it? – secrecy or whatever issues . . .

Mr. Rodney: Privacy.

Mr. Groeneveld: Privacy issues. That's the one.

. . . they won't share those numbers with us. Had they done that, we would have known. Hence the $70 million overrun.

Probably more important yet are the AFRP numbers of this particular year, which are no secret: we put out $300 million. Three hundred million dollars it is. We put out $200 million more on the first. We thought we were going to do $150 million and $150 million. There were more subscribers, particularly on the hog side, but we paid out $200 million on the first portion. All that's left in that kitty is $100 million, which we are sending out in March at this time. So there'll be no overruns this year. That's the number. We prorated and divvied the money up accordingly. I can pretty much guarantee you that that particular program will not be back. Because of the nature of the beast of agriculture, something else may jump up and bite me. I don't know. But that program will be done when we're paid out.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. I appreciate the comments and the response from the minister. One of the questions I think from comments I've read of the minister that has come to his mind – it has come to my mind – is a fundamental one about the balance between supply and demand. We in Alberta have a huge productive capacity, produce a huge supply of red meat. There are questions to be made when that sector needs this kind of support that maybe it's just too big. Maybe it's producing more than it can sell at a profit. And then when it can't sell it at a profit, it turns to us to pay the difference.

I would be interested to hear if the minister or this government has any strategy for managing the productive capacity of the red meat industry, for limiting the productive capacity, for saying: "Okay. Enough cattle being produced. You're producing yourselves to bankruptcy, and we're tired of picking up the pieces." Or not. Maybe the whole idea is just to stimulate this industry until there is even more cattle and even more hogs. I don't know. But is there a strategic way that this government foresees to bring the balance of supply and demand into closer alignment?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate those questions because, you know, we wrestle with that problem all the time. The truth of the matter is – you made it easier for me because you reduced it to beef production – that we in Alberta supply over 60 per cent of the Canadian beef that is consumed or exported. Indeed, there's no way we can eat our way out of this problem. Unfortunately, our neighbours to the south, they can do that.

An Hon. Member: I try.

Mr. Groeneveld: Yeah, it appears that we do sometimes, too.

The BSE crisis, you know, was a big reason for the big bulge in cattle numbers in the country because there was no place to ship them out. So breeding stock that should have been culled and disposed of stayed and reproduced with the rest of it. It's interesting to note that I think we're down about 10 per cent in Canada, particularly in Alberta, this year already, which does help the situation. But what you were kind of referring to was, you know, should it be smaller?

I'm glad you didn't say the words "supply management" for beef because I don't ever want to go there with beef. It's a big portion of Alberta's export market and should be making money as an export market. As you know, supply management, we would have to go out and tell probably 60 per cent of our producers: either cut your herd by 60 per cent or 60 per cent of you will have to go out of business. We don't want to go there, and I don't think you were intending that that was the nature of the beast at all.

We've talked about it in the House here, and you people across have mentioned the Alberta livestock and meat strategy, which, hopefully, is going to start to address that problem. I'm trying to assist personally by going overseas and getting some market access. I'm proud to say that Minister Ritz probably has done that in Hong Kong, particularly because we in Alberta have been there twice. We knew that they were going to offer him that before he ever got there. The trick was pushing him there, to get him there and get that done. I dare say that if he would go to China and Japan, I think we could get the same. Although it's only incremental, it certainly would help the whole process. That's where we're trying to go.

We've got to take charge of our own industry in the red meat industry. You're absolutely right; we haven't done that. When you start putting out ad hoc programs, eventually the entitlement sort of creeps in there and distorts the whole issue. I think probably I'm pleased that the Treasury Board has said: "Lookit. You have these X many dollars for AFRP 2, but that's it. Come up with a long-term plan." They said: don't bother coming back here. Now, we're endeavoring to do that with the Alberta livestock and meat strategy. Hopefully, we're going to see some gains within the next year. It will be incremental, but we have to get so that we're self-sufficient in there.

Hopefully, that answers some of your concerns.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Again, I appreciate the candid discussion with the minister.

Of this $70 million that we're being asked to approve here in supplementary expenditures, the level of detail provided is, frankly, pretty limited, as is normal in the reports we get. I'm looking at page 15 of the estimates. I'm just wondering about the $70 million. It's a remarkably round number, which always is curious to see something quite so exact for an expenditure, and I'm wondering if we can get any more detail on that $70 million. Is some of it for administration? Will it all flow through to farmers? I mean, how did we end up with exactly to the last penny $70 million in this vote? How does it break down? Can we get some detail?

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. Yes, there is a reasonably good answer for that. It's because these programs, of course, we run through the business risk management suite of programs that are already there. We run them through those programs because if we just made ad hoc payments, we would be, you know, in danger of having countervail. We don't want to run that risk. We don't want that border shut off a hundred per cent.

What we actually do is run it through the AFSC, you know, lending institute. In some cases, we can rob Peter to pay Paul. I guess it's kind of a bad analogy, but we do that, and that's what I said. We had hoped to cover this off with some of the hail premiums and whatnot – and farmers are quite happy to see us work it that way – but we got that account cleaned out this year. There is a certain amount of administration, very, very little administration cost because we do run it through our own program at AFSC. So, you know, to sit there and say that there isn't some administration cost – but the farmer virtually gets all the money. In the last program, AFRP 2, of the $300 million AFSC charged no administration costs. All of those dollars went to the farmer.

3:30

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. You know, I appreciate the exchange with the minister. I'm going to have to read that last response from him because I'm not sure I quite followed it all. I mean, in general I understood that the very, very large majority of this is going to flow through to farmers. It would be interesting to know a little bit of detail: how many and what the average payment is, that sort of thing. None of that detail is here, so it's a little bit hard to hold government to account, to be honest with you.

I think I'll wrap up my comments here by just reiterating some of the concerns from the Member for Calgary-Currie. We're in an Assembly where it has become the habit of the government to come back, a couple of times anyways, to augment the budget. It's not a great way to run the organization, despite the comments from the President of the Treasury Board earlier. Certainly, if there's an unforeseen disaster – you know, I remember a few years ago there was a catastrophic fire season, and almost six years ago now, I think, there was the BSE crisis. Okay. In those circumstances we understand. It's hard to accept that all of this was some kind of an emergency – and I'm not just meaning the $70 million; I'm meaning the whole thing – that twice all of this was unforeseen.

Is it, in fact, the product of a government that has become a bit complacent? I describe it sometimes as a latte attitude: you know, when there's just too much money in somebody's pockets and you stop paying attention to the quarters and the loonies, and you go into a coffee shop and you end up spending five bucks on a cup of coffee. You don't think about it because, you know, you've developed that latte attitude, when in fact it's still the taxpayers' money. There's nothing wrong with $1.49 for a Tim Hortons coffee instead of five bucks for a fancy latte.

I'm concerned that in general we have a government that outspends all others. We have a leader of that government who has actually boasted in this Assembly about being the highest spending government in the country. When that tone is set from the top, it becomes very casual and relaxed. They just keep coming back: "Well, we blew through the budget; we'll come back for more. Oh, we blew through that extension; we'll be back for another one." I'm really hoping that if there's one benefit at least to a tightening of the global economic scene, it's an attitude from government that returns to a bit more pinching of the pennies.

I've said in this Assembly a number of times that I was working in the public service in the 1980s when there was a real belt-tightening. It became a career move for a public servant to allow their budget to overrun more than 1 or 2 per cent, and it was not a favourable career move. If you were charged with a program that cost $100 million and you were over by, you know, $3 million and had to come back, it was a pretty unpleasant scene. I think we need to return to some of that sort of discipline or else we're going to spend our way into a real mess. Value for money is the issue here.

People understand, I hope, that when we were taking the government to task 10 years ago for spending too little and we were saying that you've got to spend more, it was a matter of understanding that for a modern society governments do have a significant role to play, and you can spend too little. You can spend too little on your health system, your education system, or your infrastructure. But you can also spend too much. We're in a government that in 1986 spent the most in the country per person, in 1996 spent the least in the country per person, is now back up to spending the most. That's no way – no way – to run an efficient system in the long term.

I just wanted to get those kinds of comments on the record, Mr. Chairman, because the habit that I've seen this government develop of repeated supplementary supplies raises serious flags for me as a taxpayer and as somebody who is trying to hold this budget to account. I do appreciate, once again, the comments from the minister. I hope we can tame some of these tigers. Maybe we can't tame the weather, but we can tame some of the other issues, and I'm happy to try to help out.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Certainly, I understand that the hon. member was taking a broader stroke at the rest of the government, other than agriculture, in his last comments. I think, probably, that when you look at the total number we're talking about today, agriculture is by far the largest part of the request. I think the hon. member across actually voted with us last year.

We are now putting in a cattle insurance program that will take out some of this risk. The cattle producers, all of them that are involved – but it's going to be incremental, whether it's going to be feeders or cow-calf operators – will be able to participate in livestock insurance in which they will have to pay a premium as well. I think they are going to welcome that, and that's going to help our big swings. As the hon. member says, we can't control the weather and whatnot. We're going to try this. I think that the important part to note in the estimates here today is that agriculture is the largest part of that. So I think that as a government we're doing very well getting the whole issue under control.

The Chair: Who of you wishes to speak on agriculture? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona on Agriculture and Rural Development.

Ms Notley: Thank you. I appreciate the opportunity to join the debate on the supplementary estimates and, at this point in particular, with respect to the requested addition of $70 million to the department of agriculture's budget. There are a number of points that have been covered to some extent with respect to this additional $70 million. I'm afraid that to some extent I may be asking one or two of the questions again, but I think we could actually use a little bit more clarity of explanation with what occurred with respect to the Alberta farm recovery plan 1 in the 2007-08 year.

Before we get to that, though, I would just like to talk a little bit more globally, as has already happened, with respect to the issue of the beef market in the world and the role that our beef industry plays in it and how we can play a role in terms of enhancing the profitability opportunities of many of our producers in Alberta. I certainly understand that there is a need for us to establish and develop a market and to diversify our market as much as possible so that there are greater opportunities for our producers outside of Alberta. There's a certain degree to which the efforts in that regard can be supported.

I also, however, think that one of the other factors and processes that seems to impact what our producers are actually getting for their beef is the structure of the industry in Alberta and the way in which many of the packing companies and packing plants are able to exercise more control than one might expect in the classic Conservatives'/Liberals' view of the free market.

In particular, I refer to the fact, for instance, that just yesterday, I believe it was, one of the major packing plant companies, XL Foods, bought Tyson, so now we basically have XL and Cargill. Those are the only two packers in Alberta that are buying the beef. Then, of course, Tyson and Cargill have many, many feedlots, so they're able to play around with the amount of cattle that go to the auction mart on any given day in order to impact the price that the small producer is getting when they get to the auction mart. This in effect creates a very unhealthy monopoly which greatly benefits one player in the industry and greatly compromises the success of the other player in the industry. I believe that the other player is actually a player that, you know, this government historically has aligned its interests with and had great support for, which is, of course, the small beef producer, the farmer, the Albertan who lives and makes a living in rural Alberta.

I note with interest – and people probably get a little bit tired of us every now and then, particularly very recently, over the last month, when we have been inclined to refer to the United States with a whole new level of respect, and again I'm going to do it – that President Obama has in fact reviewed this issue of vertical integration within the agriculture industry and in particular with respect to the beef industry and is considering legislation to ban that kind of vertical integration and to ban the packing plants from being able to also have feedlots and, therefore, manipulate the market and manipulate the price that the local producer is receiving.

I think that that's not by any means the only answer. I do think that there is an issue with respect to expanding our market. I absolutely think that that's the case, but I don't think that that's the only issue. I think that we need to be wise when it comes to making sure that the process that we are subjecting our own citizens to is as fair and as balanced as possible. I think we've got lots of examples out there. Even the biggest supporters of the free market will acknowledge that every now and then corporate concentration and the concept of monopolies grows so significantly that the free market has lost its ability to fairly compensate those who are operating within it. In terms of the global kinds of ideas that were already being discussed, I want to make that point.

With respect to the extra $70 million in AFRP 1 I think it has already been noted that we're basically looking at roughly a 40 per cent increase there. There's no question that that is rather significant. Apart from some of the comments on what I just offered, I'd also be interested in hearing from the minister – and I know that he did already answer this question once, but I think I actually heard that there was a desire to get a little bit more detail on it; certainly, I wasn't able to catch everything – just a little bit more of an explanation beyond that which we see in these documents around how it is that we went from what was $160 million to an additional $70 million in terms of how that plan operated and what pieces of the calculation resulted in the amount going up so much. Was it simply a question of more applications, or were there changes in the calculations as a result of external forces that resulted in more money going to individual applicants?

If I could get a few answers to those questions, that would be very helpful. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's unfortunate the member opposite wasn't here when I gave my opening statements because those questions have been answered, and of course the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview asked those same questions. I guess I'll take the time in the House to reanswer them.

A couple of comments. We are changing our industry. Some of the concerns you bring up I'm not going to address in detail because there are other issues that we have to deal with today.

The Alberta livestock and meat strategy is intended exactly for that, to make some changes out there, and they will make some changes out there.

On your comment about XL beef and Cargill and trying to limit what they can do, particularly maybe with feeder cattle – I think that was your main point – that has certainly been tried in various states in the United States. They've tried to legislate it that they can't own cattle, and it's failed miserably. If you think about it very closely, you can see how easy it would be to get around that and how you would control that. It didn't work.

President Obama certainly is saying some of the right things, but let's not forget that the truth of the matter is that a Democratic government is traditionally a very protectionist government. If you look at what's happening with the MCOOL issue right now and if you've been following that, hon. member, very closely, what President Obama said when he was in Canada differs very much from what his Secretary of Agriculture is actually doing. Who's going to win that battle I'm not sure. I hope the President does.

I'm sure you've heard of the R-CALF group south of the border, that love what's happening out there. Their entire mission is to stop all cattle from coming out of Canada. So we've got to be very careful about how we start to criticize in this case XL and Cargill and try and limit them. If we drove them out of Canada right now, which wouldn't take a whole lot to do, to be honest with you – I'm not so sure how much money they're making doing what they're doing right now – then we have a big problem, a huge problem.

I will address your last questions there. I'm just going to go over it very roughly because we've dealt with it, and you can read it in Hansard as well. The issue was that there were 4,600 cattle people out there that we didn't realize were going to qualify for the AFRP program, the first one. That changed our numbers dramatically because we didn't have a ceiling on how much was going to go out that time.

The other issue with it, of course: traditionally out of our crop insurance programs there's an excess of money that probably could cover a lot of that deficit that was in there. As I said before, 2008 was the worst hail year that we've ever recorded through AFSC in Alberta. That completely wiped out our crop insurance kitty, I guess you might say. Those were the two combinations that hit us right between the eyes that took us to the $70 million.

As I said to the hon. member before – you know, I haven't said this, but he brought this up – I guess that if you wanted specificity, actually, on where the dollars went, we have nothing to hide there. We could probably find those numbers for you if you wanted.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. This will probably be my last question for the minister today. [interjections] Given the applause maybe people want me to ask more. I don't know.

One of the questions, of course, that comes up is: is there anything that the minister or the department considered coming to the table for and didn't? Or even – and this has to be put in context with my previous comments about sticking to the budget – are there pressing issues that ought to be here that aren't? There is one in particular that comes into my mind – and that responsibility is shared between this minister's department and the Minister of Health and Wellness – and that is food safety issues. Of course, there's been serious national concern about food safety because of the problems at the Maple Leaf plant and elsewhere, and there are serious global issues around food safety because of exports out of China and other issues like that. The food safety system in Canada and in Alberta has come under some serious question, and it is an area where I think that even those of us who are the tightest of tightwads would say that, you know, good food safety is worth a bit of expenditure.

I am raising this issue in part because the Auditor General has had to defer some of his work on the food safety system and following up on food safety audits. I would just look for the minister's comments on whether he is satisfied that the food safety resources of his department are adequate and if they are supported by other activities elsewhere in the government in other departments. Particularly, since we've been focusing on red meat issues, are there any food safety matters that ought to be addressed that aren't being addressed through this particular budget expenditure?

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. A timely question indeed. Food safety is probably the most important issue out there for all producers and consumers. Of course, if the consumers aren't happy, the producers are not going to be happy. I was in Asia. That was after they told us that the price of our beef is too high. They always tell you that. That's their opening statement in every country you go to, but that's just normal procedure. But then it's food safety. It's absolutely food safety. Even in China, with their consciousness of what happened with the milk issue last year and their reputation, they talk about that as the number one issue.

To answer your question, we certainly have not made any cuts in funding for the inspectors that we have here in Alberta. As you're fully aware, of course, we have two types. We have the federally inspected plants and the provincially inspected plants. Absolutely, we've been stepping up that process, and I can guarantee you that we are not going to cut the dollars back in that area because it's something I'm after my people all the time about. That, as I said here, is the number one issue.

If we want to really have a problem in this world, it's to have some of the issues that came up with the Maple Leaf situation and whatnot, so we're constantly working with the CFIA. If I had my druthers in this world, I would like to bring all the standards up to the same height. I'm not so sure about us in Alberta. We would have to change some of the facilities a little, but the standards are just as high or maybe higher even than the federal ones. Some of the conditions in the facilities are a little more stringent maybe under the federal program, and it would be quite costly, but we monitor them very closely to make sure that they're within the guidelines. Rest assured that we're not going to cut back in that area. There are times when you spend money wisely, and there are times when you should tighten the belt, as the minister said, but that's not going to be one area we're going to do it in, that's for sure.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. There are other areas that, obviously, we want to go to and ask questions about and other ministers and ministries that we would like to ask some questions of, and we will do so as we carry on with debate this afternoon.

I'd like to return for a few minutes, if we could, to some of the comments that the President of Treasury Board made in response to my remarks. I don't know if he was confused, if he misheard me, if he doesn't speak Liberal, or exactly what his problem was. He seemed to get out of my remarks or seemed to want to leave the impression that he got out of my remarks – and I'm sure that if he really wants to leave that impression, you can cherry-pick the comments that we all make that are recorded in Hansard and, you know, take out a little portion and put it on your website or whatever to make up what you will – that I had somehow said in my remarks about the spending habits and the budgeting habits of this government that if I had my druthers, I'd just cut everybody a big fat cheque and I'd spend $50 billion, I think was the number he used, that I wouldn't hold anybody to account, and that he had two kids in college, too, just like I do, and he wants them to come back and ask for more money because that's how he keeps a rein on their spending. I refer back to what I said before, that our preferred approach was to actually teach the kids how to budget.

Mr. Chairman, the notion that I want to spend or that we want to spend on this side of the House $50 billion a year I think couldn't be further from the truth unless there is a way to justify spending $50 billion a year or any number – $5 billion a year, $500 billion a year, whatever the number is – so that you can justify it on the front end and account for it all the way through to the end of the fiscal year.

When you start out the fiscal year with your budget, that's what you have to spend, more or less, and you've got to live within those means. If you're only making X number of dollars a year in income, then that's what you've got to play with. Out of that, you've got to set some aside for saving and investments, you've got to set some aside as appropriate to your own situation to pay your debts, and you've got to cover your monthly and your daily obligations with the rest of it. You've got to find the money from time to time to put on a new roof, to redo the bathroom, whatever kind of repairs the house requires, but you've got to do it within those means.

We all understand, Mr. Chairman, at least all of us except perhaps the President of the Treasury Board – he didn't seem to get it in his response to what I had to say. Most of us in this House understand that over the course of a 12-month period, be it a fiscal year or a calendar year, your situation may change, your priority may change, that priorities may change. That may be due to circumstances under your own control; it may be due to circumstances completely beyond your control. Think of the thousands of Albertans who started out 2008 thinking that things were looking really good and ended 2008 on the unemployment lines. It happens. That's a dramatic example perhaps, but it happens.

Circumstances change. Halfway through the year you need a plumber for a major plumbing repair that you weren't anticipating at the beginning of the year. Something else comes up, major car repairs, something like that. You've got to find the money to do those things, but you have to find that money by taking it from someplace else where you thought you would spend the money if you got the opportunity. It's called reallocation.

Within the context of $37 billion plus a billion on the first go-round of supplementary supply plus another hundred million in loose change on this go-round of supplementary supply – and who knows what's coming down the pike on April 7, Mr. Chairman? – common sense dictates that there has to be room for some reallocation. Common sense dictates that if we're going into troubled times and given that the finance minister is already on record as saying that we will run a deficit next year, I guess we will be debating, when it's time for the budget debate, the size of the deficit that you need to prioritize your spending requirements and reallocate money from things that you don't need to spend the money on to things that you do need to spend the money on.

That is a far cry, Mr. Chairman, from, you know, saying that there's some mythical figure that I'm going to pull out of the air here or somebody else is going to pull out of the air here and say: we'll just write cheques holus-bolus till we hit that amount, and we won't require anybody to be accountable. Quite the contrary. What is required, what is necessary, what we are not seeing from this government is that kind of accountability.

The President of the Treasury Board says that the way he keeps his kids accountable is by not giving them enough money so that they have to come back and ask for more so he can check up on them. Well, you know, I'd support three, four supplementary supply debates a year if I really honestly felt that that's what we were doing. If we were starting out with a budget of $25 billion or $20 billion or $15 billion for the year, and we knew it wasn't going to be enough and we were going to require everybody come back to the House in three months and say, "Okay, this is what we did for the last three months; now we need to do it again" – it's a lot of extra work, I suppose, doing all that debating – I might be supportive of that kind of supplementary supply debate with these kinds of supplementary supply estimates. But, no, we start with $37 billion and then just pile onto that. That, Mr. Chairman, was my point.

I don't know if these comments of mine are going to elicit a response at this time or not, Mr. Chairman. I will leave it up to the members opposite to decide on that. But I wanted to get that on the record, and now I'm prepared to turn it over to others who want to probe the specifics of some of the supplementary estimates here with some of the ministries and ministers we haven't talked to yet.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Employment and Immigration

Mr. Goudreau: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. We're one of the ministries that is requesting an additional $49.7 million. When the economic downturn hit Alberta, our caseloads went up in a number of areas. Nobody was able to foresee that those things would happen with the dramatic change in the economy, and we are responding to the changing conditions.

Mr. Chairman, our unemployment levels a few months ago were at 3.7 per cent. Then a month later they had moved up to 4.1 per cent and eventually 4.4 per cent. We're predicting, and I think that the key thing here is trying to anticipate in the future what our numbers might be. Nonetheless, with more Albertans getting laid off, we've seen an increased utilization of our programs, the Alberta Works employment and training programs. These programs help unemployed people find and keep their jobs and adapt to changing labour conditions. To do this, we work with people very much on an individual basis and match them up with employment or training according to their unique skills and their unique needs. Increased use of these programs accounts for $8.3 million in additional funding that was required.

Our caseloads, as well, for income supports were also higher than originally anticipated, requiring an additional funding of $31.5 million. The biggest caseload increase, Mr. Chairman, was in the category of people that were expected to work, which can be expected given the number of layoffs that we've seen over the last few months. Our caseloads for people expected to work have increased from 14,200 families in January of 2008 to close to 17,000 families in January of this year. So we've seen about increase of 3,000 in our caseload. Unfortunately, it looks like those numbers seem to want to continue to rise.

We've also seen increased utilization of our health benefit programs, which include the Alberta child health benefit and the Alberta adult health benefit as well as health benefits for people on income supports. These benefits provide low-income Albertans and their families with medical benefits they would not otherwise be able to access such as prescriptions or drugs or glasses and dental care. These programs require an additional $15.8 million in funding.

The increased costs I've outlined amount to just over $55 million. We've carefully reviewed our spending and found some administrative areas where we could cut back, and we've reduced our spending in those areas by about $5.5 million. Mr. Chairman, Employment and Immigration is requesting the remaining $49.7 million to go towards these programs. The economic downturn has impacted many Albertans, and these support programs are imperative in helping them through these difficult times.

Mr. Chairman, I'm prepared to respond to some questions.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much. I appreciate those comments from the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Certainly, if we look at the monthly economic review issued by the department, we can see first-hand the changing economic conditions in the province and the unemployment levels, whether they are in Calgary or Edmonton or throughout the entire province. We see for January 2009 an unemployment level of 93,500 citizens or workers. That's a yearly change of 25,000. It's significant. We look at youth employment. We look at male unemployment, female unemployment. Youth unemployment is now close to 10 per cent. It's 9.8 per cent. We look at the construction sector. We look at transportation and warehousing, manufacturing, mining, and oil and gas extraction. There have been some rather quick increases in the number of unemployed workers.

I can understand and have significant sympathy for the minister. I look at the last annual report for the department, and we can see significant overexpenditures in other areas in program spending. They vary in amounts from $6 million to $2 million, $3 million, $4.7 million, so there is certainly a need for this supplementary supply. I look at the past annual report, which I just made reference to, Mr. Chairman, and one would have to think that perhaps this program is one of the ones that is chronically underfunded. I hope that's not the case.

Certainly, when we have a look at this amount of money, $50 million, it's just about the same amount that we put into subsidies to the horse-racing industry through grants. If economic conditions were really tight, it's certainly one program – and I'm speaking specifically about horse racing – that could be scratched, as they say, and the money put into the minister's request. If money was an issue, certainly that's one place that I would encourage the government to look if we were not able to provide employment and training programs or health benefits or income supports for those who for one reason or another could not, if they wanted to, work for any length of time.

Now, could the minister explain in detail what higher contract costs are involved in the $8.2 million request for employment and training programs? I know the Auditor General had some things to say, Mr. Chairman, about some of the training programs and the responsibilities of the training providers and the performance expectations of training providers. Is this $8.2 million amount in any way a reflection of the Auditor General's report from October 2008 and complying with that report?

Now, the client numbers. What increases have we seen? In what areas of the province?

The case management fees. I would be interested in a detailed explanation of those case management fees, please, and also the $15.8 million for health benefits due to higher caseloads and cost per case. Where, again, are these higher caseloads occurring? Is it in rural Alberta? Is it in Fort McMurray? Is it in Grande Prairie or Edmonton and Calgary, in metro regions? Again, the cost per case, why at this time is that going up? Is that due to prescription drug costs? If we could have some details from the hon. minister on the $31.4 million request for income supports due to higher caseloads and cost per case, Mr. Chairman, I would be very grateful.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Well, thank you very much for those questions and the comments. My first comment is that this province is certainly not immune to the world-wide changes that are occurring out there. The changes in economic conditions certainly are affecting us although maybe less than a lot of other jurisdictions across Canada, other provinces, and other countries around the world, including the U.S. There's no doubt that our unemployment levels are trending upwards, and we're seeing that right across most jurisdictions. The member is right. Individuals that tend to be laid off first are those individuals that maybe have the least education. They tend to be our youth, naturally. There's always a challenge with the aboriginal community and those that are trying to participate in the workforce in the province of Alberta.

The member did allude to the fact that there were certain industries that are harder hit. There's no doubt that the forestry industry, the construction industry, the oil and gas industry: there's a number there that are hit hard. Some individuals have been able to move on to other jobs, and they've been able to be retrained to be able to accept different responsibilities, so they've been absorbed in other areas. We still have in this province a number of areas where we still have a shortage of people. I'm thinking specifically of those areas in the tourism industry, the hospitality industry – our hotels, our restaurants – as well as in the health industry as well as other areas, including engineers in certain parts of the province, where we still identify a strong shortage.

Although on one side we're seeing an increase in unemployment levels, we're seeing still a demand on the other side. Overall as a province we're faring better than others although as was indicated, our numbers are trending towards higher unemployment levels.

The question was asked about training programs and the increasing cost there. There's no doubt that because of more people coming to us, we are experiencing more people requesting additional support and a lot of the other benefits as well as an increasing need for more training for more individuals. I think the member is alluding to the fact that there was a request from the Auditor General that we monitor maybe a little closer the results of our training programs. We're not adding more money to do that. We're in fact adding more money to train more people.

On the health benefits side we're working very, very closely with our federal people, Revenue Canada. As they're issuing cheques to our lower income families, there's also notice being placed in there where individual members and family members are being made aware of some of the additional supports they can get from my ministry. So we're doing a much better job of reaching out to more people. We've identified more people. We're doing better contacts with individuals and, no doubt, are getting more people qualifying for a lot of the benefits that we are offering.

Just a quick comment on horse racing. I see horse racing as a benefit to the province whereby the revenues generate more funds for the province. They're not a cost to us. They provide additional dollars to our overall budgets, and some of these dollars are channelled to meet some of the needs that we have as a particular province.

The hon. members will realize that we did some increases to income support in 2008. That was an across-the-board rate increase. We did that in the fall of 2008. We increased the amount of money that single people can earn while receiving full benefits. So we're working to help people in need. We've increased the availability of total dollars that individuals can qualify for. We've brought up our rates for those that are learners, for people that are expected to work or who are working, and, as well, for people who are not expected to work. Aside from increased levels of support, we're getting increased numbers of individuals that require our support.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. I appreciate that from the hon. minister.

Now, I have a question specific to the Alberta child health benefit and the Alberta adult health benefit. They are part of that $15.8 million request. I'm right, I believe, in assuming that in 2007-08, last year, on a monthly average almost 8,000 Albertans, or 3,722 households, received the Alberta adult health benefit. We are looking for an additional $4.1 million here. What is that monthly average now? With the Alberta child health benefit the monthly average of children who received the health benefit was 77,375. Has the department seen a significant increase in both those monthly averages since economic conditions have changed?

Thank you.

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Chairman, I'm not sure that I've got the exact numbers in terms of averages, but I've got some numbers that I can share here with the member. Under the Alberta child health benefit program – and that's for children in low-income families; we always talk about that – the qualifying income levels have been raised, with the threshold for a two-parent family with two children increased, for instance, to $34,346 from $33,460. There are 94,000 children that benefit from the Alberta child health benefit, and those numbers are constantly increasing.

There are about 5,000 households that access the Alberta health benefits. The Alberta child health benefit covers things like eyeglasses, prescription drugs, emergency ambulance services, essential diabetic supplies, and dental care. Again, it's for children up to the age of 18 and can include children up to 20 if they're still attending school or living at home. Now, with children not being able to access as much employment at times, we will be probably seeing more children staying in school a little longer.

Under the Alberta adult health benefit program – and that's for all the family members – those families are eligible when they leave income support and have income from employment or self-employment or a Canada pension plan disability. Families with high prescription drug costs in relation to income are eligible. That program is available to individual ladies in low-income households that are expecting. Those individuals from the assured income for the severely handicapped, for instance, the AISH program, or who have income from employment or self-employment, again, or the Canada pension plan disability, are also eligible as they transition out. Similar kinds of coverage are there with support for things like drugs or eye exams or glasses or dental care.

I regret that I don't have the specific average for individuals at my fingertips here.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. I appreciate that information from the hon. minister. That indicates to me that as economic conditions have changed, those necessary benefit programs are being accessed by more families, certainly.

Now, I'm a little confused about the numbers I keep hearing, so if the hon. minister could clarify this not only for myself but for members of the House and people throughout the province. I recognize the changes that have been made to some of the programs, particularly people expected to work or working and allowing AISH clients, if they can do a little bit of work, extra income.

We welcome the small changes that have been made in the minimum wage. There was an announcement earlier today. Who exactly is included in the minimum wage numbers? Is it just individuals, for instance, who work in the service industry, or does it include some of the individuals who may do part-time work at the minimum wage to supplement their AISH benefits? There are a lot of numbers going around, some as high as 70,000, some as low as 20,000 working Albertans who work for the minimum wage either full-time or part-time. I know that when we were debating this a number of years ago in the Assembly with a former minister of labour, I think there were around 27,000 individuals working for minimum wage.

If the hon. minister could clarify that, give us the numbers of those who actually are working, for instance, in a restaurant as a waiter and getting minimum wage plus tips. Exactly how many are there? If the department has an indication as to how many individuals may be working part-time to supplement their AISH benefits when they can. I stress "when they can" because many of these individuals can't work for very long because of an issue with their health.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. As the members are aware, the minimum wage – and we took that particular position some time ago now – would be set on the average weekly earnings based on what has happened over the past year. Our minimum wage – it was announced today – is going from $8.40 to $8.80 per hour.

The minimum wage is directed at anybody and everybody working at that particular level, so it doesn't exclude any particular category. If you're working, the minimum that you can earn is $8.80 now. When we talked about who is involved, those individuals that are working at this stage as a server in a restaurant or a front desk attendant, whether they're working full-time or part-time, will be expected to be paid $8.80 per hour.

It's often quite difficult to get exact numbers to the last individual, but generally speaking in this particular province we have anywhere from about 19,000 to 20,000 or 21,000 people at the minimum wage level, and those tend to be, the majority of them, individuals working part-time. They're our youth. They're often people between 15 years of age and 19 years of age. They're more often the individuals who are working for the very first time away from home. It's their first experience in the job market, and a lot of them are at an entry point in the job market. For a lot of them it's a learning experience; it's an opportunity to join the workforce.

There have been a lot of studies that have indicated that raising minimum wages, you know, certainly causes a hardship at times on the employer and that if the minimum wages were to go up too high too quickly, employers would actually, in fact, quit hiring individuals or even start to lay off particular individuals. There was a study out of B.C. that indicated that an increase in minimum wage of $1.50 to $2 a hour would actually cause them to lose about 40,000 or 50,000 jobs in British Columbia. So we're conscious of that particular fact as well as the fact that individuals require a certain amount of resources to be able to live on a day-by-day basis.

Most of the people earning minimum wages are those individuals, as I indicated, that work part-time. A lot of them are students. A lot of them are still living at home and are not dependent often on the full amount of that minimum wage to pay their full room and board, for instance. Although we do have some individuals that depend on that particular level for their full day-to-day living, the majority of them are living with another adult or living with a spouse who may or may not be earning some money as well.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's again a pleasure to be able to rise and talk a little bit about the extra money that is being requested to be added to the budget for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. It does appear as though in essence what we're seeing here is a request for additional money for three areas and that in order to I suppose minimize that request to some extent, we are seeing two other areas that will be losing money. So I want to focus on all of those points.

We've been talking a bit, of course, about the income supports, and you've outlined that we've had roughly 3,000 new families or individuals go on welfare and that that's been in association with the increase in unemployment rates in Alberta. You'd started to talk about some of the rates – and I appreciate there was some mention of the increase in rates – but I just want to first inquire as to whether or not the current rates are the ones that are on the website or if, in fact, they've been raised from this. My understanding from the website is that we're now looking at a single employable individual, which, of course, would be the majority of the individual people who had come onto the rolls in the last year because, clearly, they were added as a result of losing a job in most cases, at $583 per month. That's the information that I have, and I'm just curious as to whether the increase that you noted in the fall is different from that.

You know, another example of an income support rate is for a family, a mother and a father with two children. My understanding is that between the money provided through your department and the money provided through the child credit benefit through the federal government, that family of two adults and two children would receive $1,700 per month. I suspect you can imagine where I'm going with this. Both of these amounts are not enough for people to live on. You know, if you imagine the family of four living in a two-bedroom apartment, assuming that they can't possibly have more people living with them in a way that is healthy, and then you look at what is allowed for food, you can't even begin to imagine how they will keep themselves from getting ill. You know, I don't know what they're going to do, frankly.

It's interesting because I'm sure you would have had various officials within your ministry at least alert you to the CBC interviews that were done a couple of days ago with people who had engaged in the working-poor diet and had attempted to feed themselves on the basis of the amount of money that was allotted to them through the amounts identified through your ministry. All three of them described losing between 10 and 15 pounds in the course of a month. This is deeply concerning to me. I appreciate that, on one hand, you're coming back here looking for more money because there are more people in need of the benefits, but I think we're also in a position where we have to seriously look at whether we can humanely, with a view to having respect for basic human rights, ask people to try and ensure that their kids are not malnourished and ensure that they get enough food so that they can actually continue their efforts to find employment. I'm deeply concerned that no one really can with this amount of money; you just simply can't ask people to live on this much.

One of the reasons I talk about the family of four is because that's a family that you're not really going to expect will invite other people to come live with them in their two-bedroom apartment, which, I think most averages at this point tell us, is going at about $1,100 or $1,200 a month. So those folks can't rely on that. They're living with themselves. What are they doing to feed their kids and themselves? That is a very, very significant concern that we have.

In some respects I'm just wondering, as we come closer to the next budget, if you anticipated – I think that you in fact articulated that you did – the number of people who are forced through no fault of their own to seek income support because of the downturn in the economy. Are we really doing our best for them? We know that these are people that were working up until very recently, and they are not working because the economy has changed. These are people who are not, you know, sitting at home sipping mai tais and chuckling at the fact that they really put one over on that big socialist welfare state and having a grand time. No. These are folks that were working until very recently. With the change in the economy they've lost their job, and until they can find a new one, this is all they've got to take care of themselves and their family. I think this is an issue that's going to come back, and it's going to continue because nobody can explain how anybody can live on these amounts of money.

Another area where you were talking about looking for money is with respect to employment and training programs. Again, it makes perfect sense. These are initiatives that are going to take on a much, much larger role. We've talked about it a lot. As people lose their jobs in our current economy, we need to look at helping them transition to new skills, new jobs, new areas. There are certain parts of the economy that may not recover, so employment and training initiatives are critical because we want people to get retrained, and we want to give them the skills and the tools to be able to find re-employment in a different sector if necessary. That's good. Again, I think that there's going to be a much bigger draw on this program than is currently the case.

At the same time, then, I go back to the questions that were raised by the Auditor General about the quality of the programs that are being funded, the monitoring of those programs, and the criteria that are being used for those programs to be approved. I have some significant concerns about this because I've had constituents come to me and describe, frankly, quite unfortunate circumstances where they are theoretically in an educational institution, but the conduct in those institutions is not what I would ever expect to see from any kind of traditional postsecondary institution.

I think that there will probably be a lot of quick and dirty start-up companies that are going to come looking to get government funding for more employment and training initiatives as the government looks to support folks. I think that the key thing that needs to happen when those requests come is that your ministry needs to be very vigilant in terms of how these groups are assessed and monitored and what kind of standards they are abiding by. The last thing we need to do is take that very teeny pot of money you have and give it to folks that aren't effectively training the people they're supposed to be training. I think that that is an issue. I think the Auditor General raised it for that reason, and it's going to become a more significant issue as time passes.

A couple of points with respect to the items that are being pulled from in order to deal with the increase that you're talking about with us today. I see that there is another reduction in the health work-force development line item. I'm a little surprised by this, and maybe you can give me some explanation for it. It seems that, you know, as recently as last year there was a press release talking about the health care centres that were being established for health care professionals. In those press releases there was talk about the ongoing shortage of health care professionals in Alberta. I know, of course, that there's been a shift with the change in the economy, but I suspect that if there is any place left in the economy where there's still a shortage, this is one of them. This is, of course, with respect to helping foreign-trained health care professionals learn what they need to learn in order to be able to function safely and effectively and professionally within our system. I'm a little concerned . . . [Ms Notley's speaking time expired] I guess I'll have to come back to it.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Just to start off, I know that it is a challenge in our own budgeting when we see constant changes in people accessing our services. You know, we try to anticipate as much as we can what those levels will be, but we really don't know in the end how many people will be accessing our individual services and how we'll be able to respond to them. Suffice to say that the increase in requests that we have here is basically due to the increase in caseloads that we're having as well as the increases, albeit small, to income support that we approved in the fall. The rates on the website, I would think, should be up to date. I haven't checked them to really compare, but I would expect that those rates would be up to date.

I know that the changing conditions will create individuals that will be faced with more challenges financially. Really, in any society, whether they're here in Alberta or elsewhere around the world, we know that there are people that are struggling to make ends meet. As a government and as Albertans we want to support them as much as we can. There are a couple of philosophies that we use. The programs that we have are very important even in good times. There are people that struggle all year round, people that struggle whether our economic conditions are very poor or very, very good. So those programs are important in good times, but they're also important in times of difficulty, in times when things get tough. We try to provide benefits and support when we do our budgeting to help people that are most in need. That's our primary target, to try to look at that. We want to safeguard as much as we can the vulnerable Albertans.

So we work on a number of fronts. Employment and Immigration is involved in helping people in need. As I indicated and you've alluded to, we provide employment and training supports, and we provide the basic living and household costs. We provide some support for their health requirements and much more. I think the important thing is that Alberta's approach has always been to help people increase their income through work as much as possible. So we're going to try to provide the proper training. We're going to try to move people on so that they can certainly gain and get ahead more by work. It's more of a hand up rather than a handout.

Our mandate is to try to say: well, if there's an opportunity for you, we're going to encourage you to work through that system to take advantage of that opportunity, recognizing that some individuals are not expected to work. They're in a category where they're maybe facing a little bit more difficulties, and because of particular situations or circumstances we don't expect them to work today, but maybe as things change in the future, they'll be expected to work. We're trying to incent them rather than disincent them. There are times when things are tough, and we're saying: we're going to support you during those tough times, but to really get ahead, we're going to have to work with you to move on to try to do something a little better in that way.

Again, you know, we're trying to increase revenue for those individuals through income from work. We recognize that on the short-term basis income support is the answer and is needed, but in the long run our mandate is recognizing that a job eventually is the better solution for everybody. That's our goal in that way.

When it comes to the training programs, you know, certainly we're responding to the Auditor General. He did indicate that we needed to monitor things maybe a little better. I think we've been doing a much better job over the last little while, and I'm anxious to see what the Auditor General is going to say next year or the next time he reports. We have tightened up considerably in terms of our expectations out there from those who are contracting with us. We certainly have some strong outcomes that we want them to meet, and we do monitor those.

When it comes to maybe some declining dollars – and I don't have the specifics in front of me here – I would suspect that some of those dollars are based on some of the agreements that we've had with the federal government. Some of those agreements were signed partway during the year, so the declining dollars reflect the fact that we weren't able to use a full year's revenue because of some of the labour market agreements, for instance, that we've signed with the federal government.

Under health workforce development we're still very actively involved with the Bredin Institute. We're working with that particular institute. We're working with a college in Calgary to help facilitate the movement of those individuals that have backgrounds in health, that have experiences there but are not fully qualified or do not know how to fit into our system. We are in fact taking them by the hand and helping them work through the process of qualifying and seeing what additional educational experiences they require to be able to work in the health field in the province of Alberta.

In Calgary, for example, we're helping about 60 internationally educated health care professionals over the next two years to obtain training for health care jobs responsible for things like the sterilization of medical equipment, so we're able to do some of that. I could list quite a number of examples where, you know, we're working with individuals not only in the health care professions but in other professions to make sure that if it's a language impediment or if it's a requirement for workplace upgrading, we can provide that and make sure that they have access to that.

I think that might respond to most of the questions that you had.

Ms Notley: Well, if I could raise just a couple more, then. I understand what the programs were doing with respect to the health workforce development group, but my questions were more sort of that it seems as though the level of work that's being done through that department is decreasing because the budget keeps decreasing for it, so that is a concern.

I don't know why it is or if it is just unique to my particular riding or if it's the case for all the members of the House, but certainly it seems that I do have a whole bunch of unemployed foreign doctors in my riding. It continues to perplex me, the degree to which roadblocks are put in place with respect to their ability to be able to practise. I know there is a program through the provincial government to try to work with them. It is very backlogged; I know that as well. As a result, I don't know if, really, this is the time to be reducing that if it's actually paid for through this program. My understanding is that last year we had a decrease of $1.7 million in that program and that we've got a net decrease from when it first started of about $4.4 million. It would seem to me that there's actually greater need for it at this point, certainly not less.

The other issue. Again, I appreciate that you are monitoring more with respect to the education programs. I would be interested, maybe through correspondence after this, to hear what that monitoring looks like since it does appear, and you've noted, that there's no actual budgetary adjustment to account for that monitoring or those monitoring efforts. Again, we have some concerns about shall we just say the efficacy of those programs for the people that they're purporting to serve.

I still go back, of course, to my first comments around the income supports. I mean, we agree with you very much that the idea is for these folks to get back to work; no question. But we know we're in a situation where there's a downturn, and clearly, through no fault of their own, that may not happen right away. I go back to the original question that while these folks are trying to get back to work, how they can do that if they can't afford to feed themselves in a way that will keep them from fainting halfway through the day. I don't say that facetiously. Again, I refer you to recent interviews with people who've tried to feed themselves on the budget they're currently allocated.

The last thing I want to mention is that I see, again, that the money that's going towards the needed increase in income supports and education and employment is also coming out of the section under

WCB appeals. It appears as though there's a reduction in that part of your budget. I'm assuming that that relates to the appeals advisers. Maybe I'm wrong. I know that WCB is self-funding, but I believe the appeals advisers are funded separately. I believe that's where that's coming from.

I have to say as one who has done not a small amount of work in this area that the last thing that that area needs is a further reduction. Workers' compensation law and law related to any issue associated with disability, on one hand, and eligibility for income, whether it be through workers' compensation or insurance or anything else, is increasingly complex in today's world.

Workers' compensation law in and of itself is increasingly complex in today's world, and I can say with probably a great deal of certainty that as a province we offer the least amount of support for worker advocacy when they are attempting to navigate their way through an incredibly complex system, which is workers' compensation. That is a substantial income issue and a substantial worker right issue. I say this from having observed files over the last few years. I am repeatedly shocked at how obvious the issues are that should be addressed with respect to injured workers that are not in any given file because they are just simply not able to access the kind of expert advice they require to ensure that their rights under the act are actually honoured. So there's a real difficulty there.

Other jurisdictions fund WCB advocacy through their legal aid system. Our legal aid system really doesn't, for all intents and purposes. Again, the worker appeal officers are pretty much the only resource that injured workers have at their disposal, and I know full well that you could probably hire 20 of them tomorrow, and they would all be working overtime within about a week.

So I have some very serious concerns if that's where it is. Maybe I'm wrong, in which case I'm doing this whole ramble for nothing, but I would be very interested to know how it is that it could be thought that there was any room to reduce that budget if that's what the budget is.

Thanks.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Going back to the unemployed health professionals that are coming to this province, we're working very, very closely with the minister of health and the minister of advanced education and, you know, coming with various initiatives to recognize foreign credentials. We've got a very aggressive file on this along with the recognition of the various educational institutions around the world. We know now for a lot of people that come with a particular certificate or a particular diploma from another country where they might fit within our systems and if there are additional training requirements or not for them to move into their field of interest or their field of practice. Often it's not a question of qualifications specifically, but it's often their understanding of English as a new language and making sure that they're very comfortable in being able to practise and to understand our system and to be understood.

We are working with them. We've got some very, very good success stories. I went to the Bredin Institute here, which is just a few blocks from this particular building. Talking to some individuals that have gone through that particular process shows us that there is a lot of good work that's being done. We've got some foreign-trained medical individuals that have been able to navigate through our particular system. At times it can be very cumbersome, but they're now practising in Alberta.

We recognize that there are still a lot of challenges. We recognize that there's still lots to do. We are very aggressively working on that particular file, and we would hope that we'd be able to streamline it yet that much more with any new individuals that are coming to Alberta.

When it comes to training, again, and monitoring of those particular training programs, I can send you a letter maybe in the next few days to indicate what we're doing, the various steps that we've done to look at the particular training, to indicate how we're trying to achieve particular objectives when it comes to the training of individuals under those particular programs.

Going back to income supports, you've alluded to it as well that a job is probably the ultimate goal for a lot of people, yet there are people that will take some time to be able to get to that particular level. We recognize that. The income levels often are just to meet the bare necessities, and we recognize that there are some hardships there. We encourage those individuals to keep on working with our staff. Our staff have been given some flexibility, and if there truly are some hardship cases, we will work with them.

As an example – and I'm not suggesting that that's happening in all cases – we've had individuals in particular communities where rents have in fact gone down. There is an expectation that individuals will try to help themselves by maybe at times moving from a particular facility where they're having to pay fairly high rent to other facilities that might provide the same type of accommodations but that, you know, will require less commitment to rent and rent payments. We are working with them to have those kinds of things happen. We are working in areas where we've seen, actually, vacancies climb and rents go down. If landlords are not prepared to accommodate those individuals, then we will encourage them to move, to try to get better facilities or similar facilities at lower costs to increase the overall residual income that they've got to spend on other necessities.

With WCB I think the only reason our numbers are going down is the fact that our appeals are in fact going down. We are probably getting less appeals. We can move them through the system a little quicker. We are getting lower numbers.

We do provide support with the changes that have happened with WCB over the last few years. I know there are a number of reports that came through the system where changes were accepted by the government, where we've got different appeal mechanisms. We do provide support to individual clients that request that. We will put an adviser to work with a particular individual that has concerns with WCB and help them work through that process as well. Those are independent advisers or independent supports that are there. You know, if there's a need to understand the process or to get some decision made, those individuals can literally hold the applicant by the hand and help them work through that particular process.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. My questions are to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. When the boom times were here, kids were just dropping out of school because they could find very good jobs, had no problem making money. When the economy is slowing, I think all those kids, you know, will be coming back. They'll probably want to further their education, and they'll want to go back to school. Lots of others, say new immigrants, too, will want to upgrade their skills. It was easier for them before to find jobs when jobs were plenty. Some of them will probably be upgrading their language skills. Probably they want to go to SAIT or upgrade their education.

The way things are going – this $40 million share is going to go towards everything – is there any kind of plan in place to put those kids back in school or all those new immigrants who want to improve their language skills, their professional skills? How fast are we moving on the foreign credentials recognition program? I think it would be a good idea to put all those people through school so we are ready for the next boom. Those are my concerns. If not, are we going to put the cart before the horse, or are we going to leave the horse before the cart, that kind of thing?

Do we have any number in place, you know, that this is how much we will be needing for next year's budget? I'm sure you must have some idea. The way things have been going lately, what kind of a flood of students are we going to have in our education system?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I think I need to remind the Member for Calgary-McCall that we are dealing with interim supply and the required dollars that are needed here. We're really not dealing with next year's budget or the budget that will be tabled then, so I'm not in a position to be able to share numbers that will be coming out. Nonetheless, your comments are taken very seriously about the economy and the changes in what we're faced with: a slowdown in the economy and more people becoming unemployed.

As I indicated earlier in my comments, we're still in a pretty enviable position. We're doing quite well as a province, where our unemployment levels are hovering around the 5 per cent level. We still don't know where that's going to be. For most areas in the world 5 per cent would be basically considered full employment; for us it's not. It means that in certain sectors we do have individuals that are looking for work and that in other sectors there is still a demand. We will keep on providing support for training, and we recognize that those individuals that maybe had not finished their high school level are coming back and wanting to finish their high school level. We are working with the Minister of Education to make sure that they have the opportunity to do that. If there's a need to improve skills so they can move to a better job for themselves, we will work with them.

Some of the things that we've done. For full-time students the employment income is a hundred per cent fully exempt, and we've looked at the employment income exemptions. We're looking at bursaries, those bursaries that are available to students. We're looking at the assets that individual students can have. We've relaxed that. We're providing various supports all along in terms of making sure that they can upgrade themselves and improve their skills. That's not any different for anybody in this particular province, including our immigrants. Once they're immigrants and are here, they've got access to similar kinds of support. Even with our immigrants, through our ministry we do provide at times additional support to improve their language skills, whether it be in English or in French, so that they can work and be fully functional in the province.

Mr. Kang: I think it takes me a step further. The minister mentioned something about unemployment hovering around 5 per cent. This is just the tip of the iceberg, I believe. You know, I think it's going to be much higher. When we look out there, all the economists are predicting for the States 11 and a half per cent unemployment. I don't know what kind of ripple effect that's going to have on us. Are your projections based on 5 per cent unemployment, or is there some different number the minister has in mind? Would he like to share it with the House if he has it? Those are the questions we are asked every day. Last week, when I was in my constituency, those were the questions. At every door everybody is asking questions: "Where are we going? Do you have any clue? You guys are in there." So do you have any idea, sir, what our unemployment numbers will be like at the end of the year 2009? The year 2009 is being predicted to be the worst year.

I remember '81, '82. We had the same kind of gloating feeling that nothing is going to happen here, but we were the hardest hit. We have the same feeling out there again, that nothing is going to happen in Alberta, that we are okay at 5 per cent. I'm not trying to portray a doom-and-gloom days scenario here, but there's a concern out there, and it's a big concern for everybody.

Mr. Goudreau: Well, Mr. Chairman, I guess it's the same thing. You know, there's no doubt that if we could predict the oil prices in a few months, we would be much better off. We do have some indications as to how things are going. We know that our unemployment levels are slowly creeping up. We're monitoring it. We're keeping an eye as to our numbers. We're working very, very closely with Finance.

We know that Alberta's labour market did extremely well over the last year except for the last few months. We know that it's not immune to some of the global changes that are happening out there, but we also know that this particular province is very well positioned to weather that particular storm. I think the message that I want to leave with you is the fact that we do have, say, 4.7 per cent of people unemployed, but we still have 95.3 per cent of the people working, and that's incredible. [interjection] That's right. Is the glass half empty or half full?

As a province we're doing well. We're monitoring it. I don't know where those numbers are going to peak and where they're going to go, but through our particular programs we recognize that our unemployment levels are a little higher than they were in the last few years. Fifteen, 20 years ago these numbers would have been considered just excellent numbers, and as I indicated, most jurisdictions would just love to see the types of numbers that we have. Certainly, we're seeing some short-term unemployment numbers. We're gearing up for increased caseloads. You know, I guess you'll have to wait till our budget is tabled to see where our numbers are heading.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I would like to maybe do some questions on Transportation. The supplementary amount that's being asked for is $8 million to provide off-site servicing work.

The Chair: Hon. member, we have to have the Minister of Transportation speak first.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Transportation

Mr. Ouellette: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's been a long afternoon here already today. As Minister of Transportation I'd like to provide one supplementary estimate requirement. My department requires $8 million in the expense and equipment/inventory purchases vote. This is actually a reallocation of funding from the capital investment vote, for which approval was previously received, so this is not new money.

The $8 million requested for '08-09 is for projects related to the Fort McMurray community development plan. As you know, Mr.

Chairman, the community development plan is aimed at addressing the housing pressures in Fort McMurray, and this government, our government, is committed to helping the community deal with the pressures of their huge economic growth. I believe this plan is a very important cross-ministry initiative, and I ask all members to support the request for the $8 million supplementary estimate.

Thank you.

The Chair: Hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, your turn now.

Ms Pastoor: Yes. Thank you. The $8 million that's asked for at this point in time is reallocated money, not new money, but last December the department also asked for $86 million. I have to assume that that was new money and partly for the same reason, relating to Parsons Creek, the Fort McMurray development, the advisory board, the community development board there, comprised of many different representatives – provincial, municipal, Alberta social housing, et cetera – because of part of its experience with land development. My question, I think, relates to why the money would have been necessary. When the plan was put together in the first place, why would it not have been included in the original development? I mean, surely, when you do a development, one of the first things you look at is off-site servicing.

As a rule the developers pick up – and I think that more and more in the province developers are picking up – off-site levies in terms of their cost to get their developments in. What was the off-site servicing in question? I'm assuming it's services to get the development going. Is this all that will be required for the off-site work, or is there more on the way? Would this be part of a P3, and if it is part of the P3, why wouldn't it have been a part of that contract that would have been included in the RFP for whoever did the bids on the P3 part? We haven't seen any agreements on the development signed with any companies. How is the money accountable, and who's in charge of this? As a former municipal alderman I just find it peculiar that the off-site part of it wouldn't have come first, before anything else.

Mr. Ouellette: You have to remember, hon. member, that right from day one all we've heard from that side of the House was how we needed to help Fort McMurray more, how Fort McMurray was in so much trouble. I even went up there and toured and saw people that were actually sleeping in the garden sheds in the backyards, so I believe this is a very important initiative.

I did say that this money was approved. I have to tell you, though, that there are other ministries involved. We haven't even got anywhere near the position of RFPing or RFQing for a P3 at this point. My department at this point has been more involved in the planning of where the roads are going to go, how we're even going to get the services, and how much cost there will be in getting the services and stuff there. This was approved in capital. We had to move it over to operating, and that's basically all I'm asking for.

It is a good cross-ministry initiative. It's being led by the President of the Treasury Board, that ministry, because the oil sands secretariat falls under that. We're really not ready to go out with a P3 yet on this project.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Thank you for that, Mr. Minister. This money, then, that you're asking for is actually to do the planning part of it, where you're still working on that? I'm just not sure where this money is going if you're not even up, you know, into the developing part of it. Are these sort of the pre preliminary monies, and you need more to run through the actual process of getting it done?

Mr. Ouellette: Oh, I mean, we're not talking about a little project here. There's going to definitely be more by the time you start putting people in houses there. There's a great deal of funding required to do all of the servicing for both Parsons Creek and Saline Creek. I myself today don't know how far my own department is along the lines of getting that done, and I can get that information for you at a later time. I'll get you a letter out on that thing.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I will just take the minister back here a little bit to the growth of Fort McMurray. The population growth in the last eight years was about 9 per cent. It was growing at a rate of 9 per cent, and by the year 2012 the population would be a hundred thousand people. There were lots of other studies done. Currently there are about 1,800 new housing units being built in Fort McMurray in each year. This is not going to be enough to meet the demand, you know, the way things are going. The serviced land will be depleted by 2010. We won't have any more land after that. There were some studies done by the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo in March 2007, and they identified Parsons Creek and Saline Creek Plateau as the top priority of their new development areas. My question is: how come it took us so long to get to this point? You're asking $8 million today.

Mr. Ouellette: I'm going to have to keep repeating this. I'm transferring $8 million. I'm not asking for $8 million. I'm transferring $8 million that was approved before. I also want to remind the hon. member that I look after Transportation. My job is to plan roads, make sure that all of our interchanges are safe, make sure that when they do a development, what the impact is going to be on the intersections, that sort of thing. As far as actually building the houses or building the lots, that's not my portfolio and not anything to do with this $8 million. But they are interesting questions. In a short few weeks' time here – I'm not exactly sure when – there will be budget deliberations, and they are probably very good debating questions to ask at that time.

Mr. Kang: Where is this $8 million coming from? Are you reallocating money from some other program into this? You said that it's old money, so where is the $8 million coming from if you're not asking for new money?

Mr. Ouellette: Previous approvals from the capital investment fund.

Mr. Kang: So the Transportation department is working with provincial and municipal representatives and the other community stakeholders and CDB. You're working with CDB. Where is the money going to go? Is it going to go to CDB, or is it going to go to Alberta Housing and Urban Affairs? How will that fund be, you know, distributed to develop the area?

5:20

Mr. Ouellette: We're also working with the CDB, but I'm trying to explain to you that I'm not building any houses. I'm not building any lots. I'm looking after getting servicing done because water and waste water are under my department, and I'm looking after making sure that wherever they do these developments, we can access them by our roads and highways and that it's safe to do so.

Mr. Kang: My question, sir, is: who will be accountable for the money your department is spending on roads and highways? Will it be your department accountable for the money, or will it be some other outfit hired by the department that will be accountable for the money? That's what I'm getting at.

Mr. Ouellette: Guaranteed that our department is always accountable for the money that we spend that's in our budget. This $8 million is going to be in our budget, and I and this department will be accountable for it.

Mr. Kang: Coming back to the 2007-2008 budget under Alberta cities transportation partnership expenses, I think your department was $106 million over budget. So only $8 million here. I congratulate you for that. You're doing better. But will you be coming to ask for more later on, or will this be it?

Mr. Ouellette: Stay tuned. There's going to be a new budget coming out soon.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'd like to follow up on something that the Minister of Transportation had spoken about, and it's something that I think is very important to be putting in his planning. It's about waste water. It's about the waste-water treatment, you know, to be able to put it back into the rivers. I can speak from representing Lethbridge at one point in time. We have an amazing tertiary treatment plant, where the water that we take out basically goes back in probably cleaner than how we took it out.

This may seem sort of off topic, but it really is part of how they set up a tertiary water treatment plant. In fact, for the houses that have garburators, part of what the tertiary treatment plant counts on is to be able to get that garbage, so to speak, that's already been fairly pulverized through the garburators, through the system. That causes the bacteria to work that much better. I'm just wondering if you could share how much of a priority good waste-water treatment is and particularly at the tertiary level. Again, this is, I think, more on the housing side, but it does tie into the tertiary treatment side about having garburators, that (a) it cuts down on your garbage, that (b) it does help the tertiary treatment system work better. Are you looking at these kinds of things, especially at this very ground-level planning for servicing? Are you planning for tertiary water treatment.

Mr. Ouellette: I'm glad to hear that you're concerned about how we get clean water back into the river. This is the first time I've heard somebody talk about garburators adding to our bacterial system to make the bacteria work better within a system. I know exactly what you're saying, but I don't know, if it is as good as you say – I'm not a biologist or whatever – how much will come out of that garburator. I also know that in some cases garburators do create problems with blockages and stuff within systems. I don't think that I'm qualified or that my purview would be to say that I want to mandate garburators in houses somewhere to help with a system. I think that would have to be designed by the engineers that design those systems.

I know that today we're spending an awful lot of money together with municipalities in the province. Most municipalities have been applying for new treatment systems for their potable water and also for their waste water. You know, I'm completely scraping all the time and having our guys say: can you make sure that they're designing these systems in the most feasible manner possible that will still do the best job? We can't keep up with budget for the amount of systems we're trying to get done out there to clean up our whole water system because of how important our watersheds and our fresh water is to us today. I mean, it's a real gem to make sure we keep fresh potable water available in Alberta.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm going to direct my questions to the Minister of Transportation. I have to confess that I'm somewhat confused by this. What I'm looking at here is a supplementary estimate, a request for money in the amount of $8 million. The minister is referring to this amount of money as a transfer, so I'd like to know where it's being transferred from. If he can't answer that question, then it, you know, goes to what is apparent here, that this is, in fact, $8 million of new money. If it is $8 million of new money, we are trying to get a handle on this side of the House on what this new money is for. It's described as being requested "to provide for off-site servicing work related to the Fort McMurray Community Development Plan."

Now, you know, I know it's kind of labyrinthine on your side of the House, and things that one would think from a common-sense point of view would live in one ministry end up living in a ministry at the opposite end of the building. This seems to be one of those cases where this is clearly a housing development project, both market priced housing and affordable housing, yet somehow it has ended up in the lap of the Minister of Transportation, who doesn't from his answers so far seem to be much interested in actually having it in his lap. I would really like to know what this is for. What is the off-site servicing in question? How does this relate to the Community Development Board, the advisory board that's been set up to have some part of the management of this plan.

I don't know. Maybe the Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs should get involved in the discussion here. Maybe she can shed some light on it. It would sure seem to me that it would be logical that all this would live in her department, but it lives in your department, sir. I guess I want to have a clear answer as to just what is the scope and limit of the Ministry of Transportation's involvement in the Parsons Creek development plan.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ouellette: Yes, Mr. Chair. To explain where the money comes from, the money came to this House originally under the capital investment fund vote. I'm asking for the reallocation of $8 million from the capital vote over to the operating vote. My department should be involved with getting the services to the site but not developing or building houses or doing whatever. You can call it whatever you want. My department builds the roads and gets the services to the development, and that's what this is all about. It's figuring out how we're going to get the services to the site and doing the job. At the start of this there were no services going to Parsons or to Saline Creek.

Mr. Taylor: So the services would be roads. What else?

Mr. Ouellette: Water and sewer.

Mr. Taylor: That's it?

Mr. Ouellette: Yeah. For us right now that's all we're doing.

5:30

Mr. Taylor: Okay. Then bear with me. Maybe this is particularly difficult terrain. I know that depending on where you are in the Fort McMurray area there are certainly some challenges. You've got to work your way around muskeg, sometimes through muskeg, all the rest of that. But we are talking, now, a supplementary request for $8 million. For argument's sake, if nothing else, I will accept that this is not really new money, that you're just moving it over from the capital plan into here. I'm not really sure why it then goes as a supplementary estimate, but, okay, I'll accept it for now. But it's $8 million to go with $86 million before. You know, the city of Fort McMurray doesn't take up that much geography relative to the size of the Wood Buffalo region, relative to the size of the province of Alberta. Are you paving the streets with gold that it's costing so much to build a road from where the road is now to where the houses will go?

Mr. Ouellette: To service those areas: very, very, very expensive. We have to take services across the river, for one thing.

I agree with you that when money is already allocated – if I was running my own little business, I would be able to just move that money wherever I wanted at any time. The way we report in this House: if it's been voted on in the House one way and you want to change it, you have to come back and vote on it again within this House. That's what the Auditor General requires of us on how we report things, and that's being accountable to this House and to the taxpayers of Alberta.

Mr. Taylor: I'm resisting the temptation to say "bravo" right now for your accountability. Oh, I guess I didn't resist the temptation. I used it, didn't I?

I guess what I'm trying to get at here is that first there was $86 million. Now there's another $8 million, which, I mean, you know, is 10 per cent. It's a plus or minus sort of thing. I'm trying to get a handle going forward on where this is going and how much more cost escalation we might be looking at in this project as far as the off-site servicing component of it is concerned. What are some of the challenges?

Mr. Ouellette: Today I'm not ready to take myself through a number. If you want a bigger breakdown, I was going to get one for the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, so I'm sure she'll pass it on to you. We can itemize what we're doing there. I'll get that information for you.

Mr. Taylor: To the minister: thank you. I'd like a sense of some of the challenges that you are facing and whether there are unanticipated challenges that have occurred, you know, whether something happened on the route, kind of thing, that you didn't know was there, that you had to work your way around or through or however it goes. I'd like some sense of the difficulties, the challenges that you're encountering as you go forward with this project. Maybe that will give this House some idea of what to expect in fiscal '09-10.

Thank you.

Mr. Ouellette: I'm very happy to do it. I will say that at this point in time it's not that we've run into obstacles. Long before we were involved with this project, everyone knew it was very, very expensive to service those lands. That's why the community of Wood Buffalo didn't get involved in it before because they just couldn't afford it. It was time, with your help of always saying, "Do things for Fort McMurray," that we got involved as a government to help out that region.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Chairman, I am so happy. I am so happy that you did that. I'm so happy that you heeded our call on behalf of the 88,550 some-odd residents, as of the Alberta census of April 1, 2008, in Fort McMurray. I am so happy you did the right thing, and I am so happy that you're being accountable for it. It is so rare that we have such an open and transparent display of accountability that I'm going to run with this one, okay?

What I want to know, because clearly the project is not on budget, is if it's on time, because you're providing the off-site servicing that is going to allow the construction industry, the home building industry, the development industry to get into that area, to get into Parsons Creek and start digging holes and pouring basements and building houses, some of which are very-much-needed affordable housing units in the Fort McMurray area. I want to know if this project is on time or if we're running well behind schedule here.

Mr. Ouellette: I'd really like to thank the hon. member for all of those kudos that he was giving us. I am getting back to him with the information on paper.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any others? Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, do you wish to speak?

Mr. MacDonald: No, Mr. Chairman. I was going to have a discussion with my hon. colleague from Calgary-Currie on the frost levels that occur in Fort McMurray and the length of time you have for construction that are frost-free days, but we can do that on our own time.

I would prefer if we could now move to and perhaps have a brief discussion, before time expires, on the requisition for the AG.

The Chair: Yes. Go ahead.

Office of the Auditor General

Mr. MacDonald: Okay. Thank you very much. It's not that the Transportation discussion, or debate, wasn't interesting, Mr. Chairman, because it certainly was.

In light of the time that we have left, I think it's important to have a discussion on the supplementary amount of $750,000 that is requested to provide for increased auditing requirements related to the March 2008 government restructuring, the new Alberta Health Services entity, plus various special systems audits such as Alberta mental health, the Alberta Treasury Branch, climate change, protecting information assets, and, of course, the asset-backed commercial paper. These are very, very important issues.

The Auditor General has in the past certainly been very prudent with the budget that is provided through the Legislative Assembly. The Auditor General is always very, very busy. He provides timely information to all Members of the Legislative Assembly and various committees, one of which I serve on, of course, the Public Accounts Committee. The work that's done in the office of the Auditor General is done, in my opinion, in a very effective and efficient manner.

There are now two public reports that are provided to this House and to the taxpayers of the province. If we look at these reports closely, we can see where there are many major systems audits, and they have recommendations which are to be followed up by various departments. There can be many assurance audits done on the 35-plus billion dollar budget of the Alberta government and its reporting entities.

Now, if we look at some of the activities in 2007-08, we can see that of those assurance audits, Mr. Chairman, 190 were completed. There were 97 smaller systems audits. It should be noted that each requires a management letter or internal controls or reviews or advice.

Of course, the Auditor General is a very active participant in Public Accounts meetings. He and his staff came to 21 during that time period, Mr. Chairman. They also do work analyzing and prioritizing Alberta's infrastructure needs, child intervention services, the Department of Energy's royalty review system, revenue forecasting systems. I'm certainly looking forward to next month when the Auditor General's office will be providing an update, as I understand it, on postsecondary institutions, noncredit programs, seniors' care and programs, managing information technology risks. There are a number of issues. The office of the Auditor General is very busy.

When we look at this three-quarters of a million dollar request, we also have to be mindful of, again, just how prudent this man and his office are. Last year, as I understand it, $408,000, or 2 per cent, of the entire budget of the office of the Auditor General was returned to the Legislative Assembly. I believe that in the previous four years there was at least this amount, if not slightly more, also returned.

When we look at this government, we look at the changes that were made since March. We had at our Public Accounts meeting this morning the departments of Infrastructure and Transportation. Next week we're having Municipal Affairs come by and some of the folks from Housing. The reason why we're doing this is that prior to this year the size of the cabinet was different. Since the election in March, of course, the Ministry of Transportation, the Ministry of Infrastructure are completely separate departments. So the size of government has grown. The budget has certainly grown. We look from one fiscal year to the next, and we see where the budget has increased by 13 per cent.

The easiest way for me to get a handle on this is that when I was first elected, Mr. Chairman, the provincial budget was $14 billion. Now it's well over $40 billion. We certainly have not seen an increase in the office of the Auditor General's budget to correspond with that, and I think he would be the first to agree that that's not necessary.

The Auditor General does excellent work to make our government and our province and the policies that are initiated by the government for the taxpayers – he does an excellent job to make sure we're getting value for money and points out in a diplomatic manner how we can improve our systems.

Now, I'm surprised at the workload that the Auditor has. I learned at Public Accounts this morning that he has some audit projects that he would like to complete. Many of them, we have to be mindful, Mr. Chairman, are not in this current fiscal year, but he does have some projects going back to October of last fall that he would like to see followed up. Some of these projects are on his deferred or cancelled list.

There are 80 projects, and it's surprising that 27, or 34 per cent, of them have been either deferred or cancelled, and some of them are major, major projects like food safety, a follow-up. This was deferred to this fall. In Culture and Community Spirit Horse Racing Alberta is deferred, and the report date is to be determined. Education: improving school performance. In Employment and Immigration, again, we're having this, to my surprise, follow-up or audit on workplace health and safety deferred until this time next year, April 2010. The homeless and eviction fund is going to be deferred to this fall. Ensuring the collection of royalties: incredibly, this has to be deferred to a report date that is to be determined. We need every dollar that we can get for the provincial treasury now that this economic downturn has exposed our provincial savings plan to be inadequate. Highwood Communications, Executive Council, a follow-up or an audit on the Public Affairs Bureau: this is deferred again until October 2009. In Health and Wellness we have a deferral again to October 2009, a follow-up on food safety. Infection control is also deferred.

This list certainly indicates that the Auditor General not only has his usual work to do, which he does very effectively, again, but we have increased his workload and that of his staff. I'm sure that this $750,000, if a small portion of it is not used, it will certainly be turned back to us. I would encourage all hon. members to have a good look at how the Auditor General wisely spends our money.

The Chair: I shall now call on the chair of the Legislative Offices Committee, the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to thank the hon. member for fully explaining all of the duties and all of the functions of the Auditor General's office.

Certainly, to bring it back to what we are discussing today, the $750,000 that is required in supplementary supply is a significant number. But we must remember, too, as the hon. member mentioned, that the Auditor General also is returning $408,000.

When we look at the numbers – and I'd like to thank the hon. member for sharing the whole list with me of the 27 out of 80 projects that he had planned, and some of those were deferred. That $408,000 that is being turned back, I would only have to assume, was turned back for the reason that perhaps he didn't plan on doing that particular job, some of those that perhaps could have been done. So now we're talking about, maybe, the lack of contracts or lack of manpower to be able to handle those or a lack of agencies that he would contract with to do those jobs.

What we're looking at is almost $1.3 million worth of shortfall. He's turning back $408,000. We're looking at – and I'm rounding the numbers there, Mr. Chairman – $750,000 as a shortfall in order to be able to balance his budget for 2008-2009. The $750,000, as the member mentioned, was to cover the costs of the consolidation or the dissolution of the health regions. He mentioned the Treasury Branches, and he mentioned the Mental Health Board and the others. There was a significant cost to be able to have to look after those. That's part of the shortfall.

Also, I'd like to mention: who audits the Auditor General? You know, the Auditor General does his job. He looks after some 200 different agencies, including all of the departments of the government. Who audits him? There's also an external auditor, an accounting firm, who audits the Auditor General to make sure that he does his job and he spends his money properly. So I think there's a good set of checks and balances there.

Really, what we're looking at here is $750,000 that the Auditor General has requested, and it was approved by the Legislative Offices. He came and spoke for approximately half an hour, explained the entire process that he had and explained the supplement that was required. It was approved, probably not unanimously, but it was approved that we recommend that the supplementary estimates be also presented and approved.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Certainly, I appreciate that from the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, the chairman of the Legislative Offices Committee. When we look at the request for more money to have a look at how Alberta Health Services has been set up since April, I would urge everyone here to strongly support this initiative. We look at how the budget for Alberta Health has changed. The Premier in his end-of-the-year interview with the Canadian Press indicated that that budget is $1.3 billion higher than what it had been anticipated to be. So we fired the regional health authorities in the spring, and by the following Christmas we have an additional $1.3 billion. The Auditor having another look at Alberta Health Services, in my opinion, is a very good use of our money.

The Alberta Treasury Branches management. Certainly we need to have a look at that. Some of the documents that were left with us at Public Accounts today: there were three different documents. I referred to the deferred or cancelled projects or audit projects earlier, Mr. Chairman, but certainly the mandate of the Auditor General is spelled out in detail, and it makes for very interesting reading. This was prepared for the ATB Financial audit committee on February 17 of this year. I don't know why this was necessary, why it was needed, but it's a very interesting document. I would encourage all hon. members to read that. We look at the Treasury Branches and we look at their investment in asset-backed commercial paper. I was startled to learn that there was over a hundred million additional dollars set aside to cover losses in that. I believe that was announced with their financial report that was made public last week.

We look at climate change, the carbon taxes initiated by this House for certain oil sands producers, some of whom are paying, I think, about 10 cents a barrel right now, or they were, into that fund. So the Auditor is planning on having a look at that.

Protecting information assets. I don't know exactly what that is, whether it's dealing with health information or dealing with issues around the security of the government's intranet. I was startled to learn that there may be people cruising around our internal intranet that are violating our security codes. Now, Mr. Chairman, I'm not nearly as sophisticated as those hackers are because sometimes I even forget my own passwords to get into our LAO computer system.

There are any number of issues here where the Auditor General, I think, would very wisely spend the taxpayers' money to ensure that we are getting value for our government programs and policies.

It is true that next year the budget is going to be limited to 3 per cent. We had quite a debate at the Legislative Offices Committee last fall. Everyone was involved in this: the hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose, the hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House on down to the hon. Member for Calgary Centre.

An Hon. Member: There's no such riding. Calgary-Buffalo?

Mr. MacDonald: No. Pardon me. Edmonton-Centre. Did I say Calgary Centre?

Hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. MacDonald: I apologize.

Mr. Taylor: She won't think that's too fabulous.

Mr. MacDonald: Actually, Calgary Centre is fabulous.

Mr. Taylor: It's a federal riding.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, it is.

Calgary-Buffalo is a provincial riding, and I'm proud to say that after it was so ably represented by Mr. Chumir and Mr. Dickson, it is now represented by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, who is an Alberta Liberal Party member.

In closing . . . [Mr. MacDonald's speaking time expired] I'm sorry, Mr. Chairman.

Vote on Supplementary Supply Estimates 2008-09, No.2 General Revenue Fund

The Chair: Hon. members, it's 5:55. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member, but pursuant to Standing Order 4(3) and Government Motion 6, agreed to on March 2, 2009, I must now put the question. Please occupy your own seat.

Those members in favour of each of the resolutions relating to the 2008-09 supplementary supply estimates, No. 2, for the general revenue fund for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2009, please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Chair: Opposed, please say no. The motion is carried.
The committee will rise and report.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Mitzel: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.
The Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Another excellent day of debate and discussion in the House, rather inspiring, I should say. In view of the hour being nearly 6 p.m., I would move that we now call it 6 p.m. and adjourn until 1:30 tomorrow.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:58 p.m. to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. We give thanks for Your abundant blessings to our province and ourselves. We ask for guidance and the will to follow it. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mr. Benito: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a group of 17 students from Minchau school in Edmonton-Mill Woods. The group is led by their teachers, Ms Linda Manson and Miss Joan Newman, together with a parent helper, Mr. Dan Rea. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the House my very first constituent guest from Calgary-Mackay. Mr. Danny Ng is a second-generation Albertan Canadian. An engineer by training, he is now an entrepreneur focusing on building trade between Canada, Alberta and his family's ancestral village, Xiaolan, Guangdong, China. Mr. Danny Ng is in Edmonton to attend the Chamber of Commerce import-export seminar, and he is the mastermind behind the Xiaolan-Alberta International Business Conference to be held on March 18. Mr. Ng, please stand and receive the warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my privilege and pleasure today to introduce to you and through you two constituents from the riding of West Yellowhead, in particular the town of Edson, Mrs. Ruth Martin Williams and Ms Joan Olson. Mrs. Ruth Martin Williams is the executive director of Reflections. Professionally she has collaborated with stakeholders from the provincial, municipal, and territorial governments and colleges and universities in developing and delivering educational programs. She was the assistant games manager for the 2006 West Yellowhead Winter Games involving over 2,000 athletes and 3,000 volunteers.

Ms Joan Olson has lived in Edson for 32 years, and she and her husband, Bob, have raised three sons and have been very involved in the community. She has volunteered with the Glenwood community club for 21 years. She is a founding member with the Edson and District Recycling Society since 1990 and has been with Reflections since its inception in 2001. She has been for the last three years and still is the president of Reflections. I will be talking more about Reflections in my member's statement.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to introduce to you and to all members of the Assembly a group from my constituency. They are a group from a truly outstanding facility, Canterbury Court and Manor. Like true pioneers they didn't let something as small as a March snowstorm stop them from coming out. I would like to introduce them briefly by name. You know, as I give your name, why don't you stand up: Mrs. Wildgoose, Mrs. Grisdale, Mrs. Patrick, Mrs. McConnell, Mrs. Anderson, Mrs. Chostner, Mrs. Crossman, Mrs. Hussey, Mr. and Mrs. McCannel, Mrs. Maltby, Mrs. Norton, Mrs. Stenson, Mrs. DraBot, Mr. and Mrs. Ray Pierzchajlo, and they are accompanied by two wonderful supporters, Greg Lyderik and Donna Zipse. Please give them a warm welcome.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I, too, have a group of guests here today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House, who braved the elements to come up from Calgary today to make an appearance on behalf of a cause that they believe in very deeply. My guests are all connected in one way or another to cancer patients who are being treated or who will be treated with the drug Avastin. I will be talking a little bit more about that in a couple of minutes in a private member's statement. But let me introduce my guests to you now. As I call out your names, if you would stand up, please, and remain standing: Michelle Graham, Nel Christoffersen, Jeanne DeVetten, Kan Pattar, Satbir Cheema, Lori Creech, Monica Istvan, Jeremy Judge, Andie Christenhusz, Tom Henderson, Debbie Woods, and Judy Dunbar. Many more are with them here in spirit today. If everybody would give them, please, the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we have an anniversary today. On this day 17 years ago, in March of 1992, the hon. Member for Little Bow was elected to this Assembly in a by-election for the first time.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Reflections Empowering People to Succeed

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Reflections Empowering People to Succeed was incorporated as a society on April 9, 2002. Reflections' objective was to develop and promote a day program for adults with mental illness and other disabilities, including brain injuries. Since their incorporation Reflections has had a major impact on improving the lives of their members, which in turn has had a positive impact on the community of Edson. Through Reflections' employment program 20 members who were unemployed, some for as long as 25 years, are now in the workforce, increasing their economic participation and financial independence in Alberta's economy. One client went from being unemployed for years to being a supervisor due to the support of Reflections' employment assistance program.

Reflections' programs work as relapse preventive therapy. The success of these programs has impacted families as there are families who still have their family members, including fathers, mothers, brothers, sisters, sons and daughters, uncles and aunts, because individuals received support when considering suicide.

Reflections' nutrition program provides 200 meals monthly to members living with the reality of hunger. The nutrition program includes active participation by members in all aspects of nutrition: menu planning, shopping, and food preparation.

Reflections encourages its members to support the communities that support them. Members give back to the community of Edson by volunteering, including the 2006 Winter Games in West Yellowhead, literacy tutors, the food bank, and extended care facilities. Reflections does not just want to improve their members' lives; they want to reduce society's stigma and discrimination surrounding mental illness. Reflections' community education programs work to reduce stigma and discrimination. By doing so, barriers to treatment are removed and paths to recovery are opened for Reflections members.

Reflections' work is critical. National statistics show that 20 per cent of Canadians live with mental illness. Support for Reflections is support for individuals, for the community, and for the province of Alberta.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. member, did you want your guests to rise to receive the warm welcome of the Assembly?

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In my excitement to introduce them, I forgot to ask my guests, Mrs. Ruth Martin Williams and Ms Joan Olson, to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Dr. Brendan Croskery

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On January 14 the Calgary board of education held a retirement celebration for Dr. Brendan Croskery highlighting his 10 years of service to students in Calgary and his exceptional leadership record as the chief superintendent for the Calgary board of education. Dr. Croskery came onboard with the CBE in 1998 and became the acting chief superintendent in 2001. By 2002 Brendan became the permanent chief superintendent. There is little doubt that at this time the Calgary board of education was seeking to regain the public trust of Calgary citizens.

Brendan was the right man for the job. His focus on student learning outcomes and providing strong support for a governance model shows in the outstanding academic success of Calgary students. CBE students' results are higher than the provincial average on almost every measure. Mr. Speaker, this is an outstanding accomplishment considering that the CBE is Alberta's largest school district and would be considered a mean setter. All students succeeded under Dr. Croskery's tenure. The CBE educates 45 per cent of Alberta's ESL students; they scored above the provincial average on 95 per cent of the measures, again a statistical phenomenon. Also, special education students in the CBE exceeded the provincial average on 100 per cent of the special education measures.

This past year the CBE celebrated its seventh consecutive year of improving the overall learning outcomes of its students. This is unprecedented for any school jurisdiction in the history of Alberta, and it all happened under the leadership and direction of Dr. Croskery.

On a personal note, I've come to know Brendan as a kind, caring, and compassionate individual whose intellectual capacity far exceeds anyone I've had the pleasure of working with. I believe Dr. Croskery plans to stay in Calgary. I hope that students in this province benefit from his future line of work either as a consultant or an academic.

Mr. Speaker, I hope all members of this Legislature can join me in recognizing Dr. Croskery's exemplary service provided to the students of this province through his 10 years with the CBE.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Drug Coverage for Avastin

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The continuing miracle of the last hundred years or so has been that we have beaten so many of the diseases that used to kill us. Many we have cured outright. Most of the rest we've learned how to manage. So it is that now almost everyone is touched by or will know loved ones who are touched by cancer in their lifetimes. And not all cancers are the same. Not all cancer patients have the same experience when fighting the same kind of cancer. There's really nothing fair about cancer.

Take colorectal cancer, for instance. It is one of the most curable cancers, if I can use that word, if it's detected early, which is why this province actively promotes colorectal cancer screening for people over 50. If you haven't been screened, talk to your doctor about getting screened. When colon cancer is not caught in time, it can be deadly. It kills close to 600 Albertans a year.

There is a relatively new and promising treatment called Avastin approved by Health Canada some three and a half to four years ago for use in the treatment of advanced colorectal cancer and recently some forms of breast cancer and lung cancer. Avastin works by cutting off the blood flow to tumours, slowing their growth and sometimes shrinking them to the point where a previously inoperable tumour can be removed surgically or sometimes to the point where they disappear altogether. Like I said, it doesn't work equally well for every patient because there's nothing fair about cancer.

My message today, however, is about bringing fairness to cancer treatment. An advanced colorectal cancer patient in British Columbia, Saskatchewan, and several other provinces will receive Avastin for free because it's covered by those provinces' drug plans. The same patient in Alberta will pay $2,000 every other week because in this province Avastin is not covered.

Some of my guests in the gallery today have responded very, very well to this drug. The husband of one of my guests has had seven treatments. It cost him $14,000 to get the tumours to the stage where they can be operated on, and shortly he will undergo surgery for that. For others the bill can be thousands and thousands of dollars higher. It causes people to burn through their life savings, lose their homes, cash in their RRSPs. That's the most unfair thing of all.

Mr. Speaker, someone in the fight of their lives, the fight for their lives, should not have to worry about financial ruin for their families. It is time Alberta funded Avastin.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

International Women's Day

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a privilege to stand today and note that Sunday, March 8, is International Women's Day. International Women's Day is recognized by citizens around the world to celebrate past progress toward equality for women, reflect on the challenges women continue to face, and consider what action we can take in the future to ensure girls and women achieve equality in all aspects of their lives.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta women contribute to every part of our society. We are honoured and proud to have countless exceptional women leaders acting as role models for our province's girls and women, including Alberta's Famous Five but also the incredible team of cabinet ministers and MLAs from all parties serving this province. These are, indeed, remarkable women.

As we know, women have made great strides in today's world, but we also know they may still face challenges in many parts of their lives. This is why we must continue to take action on women's issues so that our daughters and granddaughters will not have to face these same obstacles. From working to prevent family violence to providing scholarships for students whose studies contribute to the advancement of women, our government has many programs and services that support women. On behalf of all women in Alberta, thank you.

I rise today not only to recognize this day and the importance of strong and supported women to our province but to encourage all Albertans, women and men, girls and boys, to honour International Women's Day and reflect on the steps they can take to support women's equality each and every day and to thank those past and present for their contributions.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Seniors' Pharmaceutical Plan

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Seniors from all across Alberta have been sharing their concerns with me about this government's proposed changes to our health care system, in particular the Alberta pharmaceutical strategy. They're telling me how the Conservative government is not doing enough to meet the health concerns of today's seniors. Proposed changes to the seniors' pharmaceutical plan will significantly increase the amount that middle-income seniors have to pay out of pocket for the medications they require.

Let's be very clear about this, Mr. Speaker. It is yet another attack on universal health care by this government, and we intend to oppose it. We need to reduce health care costs for all seniors, not just some seniors. Placing a greater financial load on our seniors is simply not the answer.

Seniors shaped this province, yet it was the seniors who sacrificed during the cuts of the 1990s, and it is again the seniors who are being told to shoulder an unfair portion of the burden today. Mr. Speaker, enough is enough. This is not what Albertans voted for.

I am tremendously proud that my party brought medicare to Canada under Tommy Douglas. This was a true victory for Canadians. This system, which is one of our nation's proudest, is under constant pressure from private interests, and the current government cannot be trusted to defend it. Mr. Speaker, I can assure you and all Albertans, both young and old, that when it comes to the strong delivery of health care in the province, the Alberta NDP will continue the hard-fought battle of a visionary leader and ensure that health care remains as it should, universal and public.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Les Rendez-vous de la Francophonie

Dr. Brown: Merci, M. le Président. Je me lève en Chambre aujourd'hui pour le lancement des Rendez-vous de la Francophonie albertaine, une célébration nationale de deux semaines soulignant la culture, la langue, et le patrimoine français, qui se tient du 6 au 22 mars. Ici en Alberta les communautés françaises lanceront des célébrations avec des cérémonies de lever des drapeaux partout dans la province, suivies de deux semaines de festivités pour tous les albertains. Il s'agit d'une magnifique occasion pour nous tous de célébrer notre diversité et notre patrimoine unique.

La Francophonie albertaine, une des plus importante et ayant la plus grande croissance au Canada, joue un rôle important dans l'habileté de notre province à créer des communautés accueillantes et inclusives. Les centres de carrières et d'emploi francophones ainsi que les centres d'accueil et d'intégration pour les nouveaux arrivants et les immigrants débordent d'activités. Un joueur clé dans ces réussites est le Secrétariat francophone du gouvernement de l'Alberta. Le secrétariat joue un rôle important en développant des partenariats positifs qui renforcent le bien-être et l'autonomie des franco-albertains.

M. le Président, je remercie les membres de cette Chambre pour leur appui continue, et je les invite à profiter des célébrations qui soulignent notre histoire unique et nos riches traditions et culture.

[Translation] Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise in the Assembly today to kick off Alberta's Les Rendez-vous de la Francophonie, a national two-week celebration of French culture, language, and history that runs from March 6 to March 22. Here in Alberta francophone communities will start celebrations with flag-raising ceremonies across the province, followed by two weeks of celebrations for Albertans. This is a great opportunity to celebrate our diversity and our unique heritage.

Alberta's Francophonie, one of the largest and fastest growing in Canada, plays a key role in the province's ability to build welcoming and inclusive communities. Francophone career and employment centres as well as francophone settlement and integration services for newcomers and immigrants are bustling with activity. A key player in this success has been the government of Alberta's Francophone Secretariat. The secretariat plays an important role in building successful partnerships to enhance the well-being and self-reliance of French-speaking Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, I thank members of this House for their continued support and invite them to take part in the two-week celebrations that salute our unique history and our rich traditions and culture. [As submitted]

Local Authorities Election (Finance and Contribution Disclosure) Amendment Act, 2009

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 203, the Local Authorities Election (Finance and Contribution Disclosure) Amendment Act, 2009.

Bill 203 would define province-wide standards for municipal election finance and disclosure requirements, allowing for greater transparency and ultimately enhancing the integrity of the democratic process in Alberta.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 203 read a first time]

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Health System Restructuring

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The minister of health needs to answer for the situation that's facing Edmonton and other Alberta emergency rooms: unacceptable wait times, more complications, and preventable deaths as admitted by some emergency physicians. To the minister: will the minister provide the Assembly with the exact number of people who have died while waiting for treatment in Alberta's emergency rooms in 2008?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, it has not been drawn to my attention that any have. You know – and I'll table five copies of this – as is so often typical of headline writers and those who do their research through the headlines, we only take certain parts of a story. We're referring, I presume, to this morning's local newspaper, where a local doctor was making some comments. What the Leader of the Opposition did not refer to is that this same doctor says that the Edmonton region of Alberta Health Services has done a good job in trying to reduce waiting lines, that triage liaison doctors so on and so forth, that these policies are evidence that Alberta Health Services "is trying and is really dedicated to make our emergency care in the city tenable."

The Speaker: Later in the Routine there's an opportunity to table such documents.

The hon. leader.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's been 10 months since the minister's rushed restructuring of Alberta's health care system. The experiments continue. When can Albertans expect to see improved quality, access, and basic lifesaving services?

Mr. Liepert: I'll go on, Mr. Speaker, to quote the particular gentleman that the Leader of the Opposition has done his research on, who says, "The problem is that there is no easy solution." However, we have brought forward a number of initiatives, including our continuing care strategy, our pharmaceutical strategy, our Vision 2020, all measures that we brought forward late last year that as we implement into the system will go a long way.

Ms Blakeman: Point of order.

Mr. Liepert: I should say that on April 1 we will be incorporating the EMS services into our health care system, so we are taking a number of actions to make access more efficient.

The Speaker: There's a point of order that will be dealt with at the end of the Routine.

The hon. leader.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What specific plans does the minister have to reduce the number of people in acute-care beds so that people in the emergency room can be transferred to other areas, freeing up treatment centres for emergencies?

Mr. Liepert: A good question, Mr. Speaker, because that was the essence of our continuing care strategy that we brought forward last fall. I hope that we are successful through our budgeting process to ensure that we have additional funds available so that we can have more provision of home care in seniors' homes, in lodges, in areas where they don't have to be in acute care or they don't actually have to be in long-term care if we can provide the quality of health care that they require. That, to me, is the more immediate solution that we need to try and get to.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Obstetric Services in Rural Alberta

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, the response that the health minister provided yesterday to the concerned citizens of Banff and to all Albertans clearly showed a lack of understanding and sensitivity to the frustration over what is happening to their most cherished health system, including obstetric services, in rural Alberta. To the minister: how has the minister allowed the steady decline in obstetric services in the face of increasing demand since 2000?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, we have not done that. In fact, we probably lead the country in terms of the provision of services. We took a very significant step several months ago when we announced that starting with this budget year, we are going to publicly fund midwifery services. All of these initiatives go exactly to address what the leader is raising.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, obstetric services have gone down from over 80 to the mid-60s in the last six years.

My next question is for the Premier. What is the Premier doing to ensure that citizens in rural communities will have access to good-quality obstetric services?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the good news. The province of Alberta is one of few provinces in Canada that has seen this unbelievable increase in births, which speaks well for the confidence that people are showing in this great province. I believe the increase in the number of births has far exceeded those of the last record, that was set way back in 1983. As a result it has put some additional pressure on neonatal and all of the other obstetric services. As I said before, even in these economic times we're going to continue our education programs for nurses and doctors to make sure that we have the necessary people to meet the demand.

Dr. Swann: My final question, again to the minister of health. February 18 in this House the minister compared our health system model to the American auto industry business model and the need for change. Is this decision on Banff obstetric care a business decision?

Mr. Liepert: Well, just to be clear, Mr. Speaker, I was not comparing it to the American auto business. I was comparing it to the Canadian auto business and said at that time that one of the issues I believe is predominant in some of these situations is that the fundamental business model is wrong and that if you keep throwing money at the wrong model, you're going to continue to get the same results. I believe that in health care we need to ensure that we have the right model. Just simply throwing more money at it is not going to solve the problem.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Drug Coverage for Avastin

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions today are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. On November 25 of last year, when I asked the minister to consider funding the cancer drug Avastin, the minister indicated the drug status at that time; that is, that a couple of years earlier the appropriate committee of physicians had reviewed Avastin and concluded that it should not be covered under the drug plan. However, since then, Avastin has gone through all but the final step of a reconsideration process, and it is my understanding that the minister now has on his desk or will have in a few days a recommendation to fund Avastin. My question is: will the minister agree to fund Avastin?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, a little bit of history. Avastin was first introduced to the marketplace in 2005, and at that time the Alberta Cancer Board's Pharmacy and Therapeutics Committee considered whether it should be on the drug benefit list or not. It did not recommend inclusion on the drug benefit list, but during the ensuing couple of years Avastin has been prescribed by physicians in a number of instances. Last November, as the member raises, I did promise to have the committee re-evaluate in light of the new evidence whether we should be considering it. The committee did recommend in January of this year to the Alberta Health Services Board that they consider the recommendation, and I can say that this morning I received a letter from the Alberta Health Services Board recommending that they fund the drug. As of April 1, with the new budget year, Avastin will be added to the drug benefit list.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my guests in the gallery and many other Albertans I wish to thank the minister. I have no further questions.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Protection of Children in Care

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the Minister of Children and Youth Services. Two years ago a boy in the Alberta foster care system was abused and ultimately died. Last year the minister told us that her hand-picked review board concluded that the foster care system in Alberta was working well. However, information I've recently received suggests that a recent incident suggests otherwise. Will the Minister of Children and Youth Services confirm that a young child very recently apprehended in southern Alberta just sustained life-threatening injuries while in foster care?

Ms Tarchuk: Mr. Speaker, I'm not exactly sure what the member is speaking to. It is true that we did have that tragic incident that you referred to not too long ago, but I can tell you that we have 2,300 foster families in this province doing a wonderful, wonderful job. While those tragic events are exceptionally tragic – one death is one too many – I can say that after the incident that you referred to, we did do the foster care review. It determined that we do have a good system and that we can make it better, and we are doing that.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, last year the minister promised after the last fatality that she would immediately implement the panel's recommendations to end the practice of overcrowding foster homes.

It appears as though this promise was broken. Will the minister admit that this very recent tragedy occurred in a government-approved foster home that had been allowed to exceed the maximum number of children in care once again?

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The foster care review last year, as I said, was a very extensive review, had internal and external experts. They did say that the foster care system was good, but they also came out with eight very good recommendations, which we adopted. All are to be fully implemented by the end of this spring. As well, internally we're taking a look at and have started a review on our kinship care.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, this doesn't relate to kinship care. This is a different incident.

This tragedy is further evidence that serious steps need to be taken immediately to protect kids in government care. Last year's public relations exercise that masqueraded as a review of the system just didn't cut it. To the Premier: will the Premier today announce a full public inquiry into Alberta's foster system and commit to implementing its recommendations?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the minister responsible is very passionate with respect to her responsibility for the children under care of this government and has done an excellent job. She'll continue to do that on behalf of those children. Some have been abandoned by their families and are in the government's care. She'll continue to help those families and individuals to the best of her ability and the ability of this government. We take child care very seriously and will continue to do that as well.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Highway Safety and Maintenance

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Along with many of my constituents I travelled the Queen Elizabeth II highway this morning from Leduc to Edmonton, and there was not a snowplow in sight in the midst of the snowstorm this morning. To the Minister of Transportation: where is the highway maintenance when we need it the most?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm very, very surprised that this hon. member didn't see a snowplow this morning on his way. I can tell you that the weather has been very, very bad out there this morning, causing havoc on the roads. I made a call myself to my department this morning to find out where our plows were. They looked it up on the GPS screen, and we had over 500 plows on the roads this morning in this province. There were 25 of those plows in the Leduc area and another 35 between Red Deer and Leduc. By GPS today we can tell, even when there's an accident – we can trace back – exactly what time a plow was in that exact position.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I certainly hope they weren't camouflaged in white because they were certainly hard to find.

Mr. Speaker, my constituents have consistently told me that over the years the maintenance standards have dropped significantly. Could the minister tell us why?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can tell you that our government, our Transportation department, sets the standards of maintenance in this province. I've been told that from way, way back when, when the government was doing the maintenance themselves, our standards are exactly the same or better. We have inspectors that go out and make sure that these contractors do the work. I'll tell you what. I'm sure this hon. member has done business at some time in his life. These contractors don't get paid unless they go to work. They're businessmen, and they go to work so that they get paid.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final supplemental is for the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security. Mr. Minister, I was constantly passed on my way this morning by many drivers who must have thought this was a summer's day. Are there any enforceable laws that would slow these careless drivers down?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lindsay: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Absolutely. In fact, I want to take this opportunity to remind drivers in our province that the posted speed limits are the maximum. When we have conditions such as today, with icy roads and poor visibility, drivers who put themselves and others at risk can be charged with a number of offences, including driving with undue care and attention. We do have the laws in place, and we do enforce them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon was just snowed by the Minister of Transportation.

Off-road Vehicles in Natural Areas

Mr. Chase: One fantastic aspect of Alberta that is sometimes lost in the oil sands debate is the pristine beauty of many natural areas that Albertans cherish and enjoy. Last month the government was talking about expanding off-highway vehicle access into natural areas, further disrupting environmental integrity. To the Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation: is it the policy of your ministry to expand trail systems to allow for more off-highway vehicle access to natural areas as a way to increase tourism in this province?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Ady: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We do have a trails committee, that's looking at this issue right now. The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater is currently chairing that committee, both for myself and the hon. Minister of SRD, to ensure that we have the right answers to these questions. We are having more and more vehicles. In fact, they will tell you that the province of Alberta sells more of those off-road vehicles than in all of North America. We need a management plan in place for all of these vehicles, and the trails committee will come back and report to me.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. The start of that plan should be compulsory helmets for ATV operators.

Given that in a 2008 survey of Albertans' priorities for provincial parks 41 per cent of Albertans were opposed to increased support for off-road vehicle use compared to only 17.3 per cent for increased support, can the minister explain why she is striking a committee to expand the off-highway trail network in direct opposition to what your survey has indicated?

Mrs. Ady: Well, that is a good question as well. As I just stated, more and more of these vehicles are out there in the province. We want to make sure that there's good management of those, or they will go to places that we don't want them to. We want to make sure that there are trails there so that they stay on those, that they use our environment appropriately, so we will continue to look at this issue.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Hopefully, part of the looking at the issue is the hiring of more conservation officers to enforce those trails.

Your survey results are clear: 61.3 per cent of Albertans want more land left undisturbed compared to 3.6 per cent wanting less. Why is the minister ignoring what Albertans want, thereby ignoring what the majority of Albertans have clearly told you to do? How successful is this ATV lobby?

Mrs. Ady: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would say that you're right: people do like to. I would say that this government has been well at work when it comes to expanding more parks. If you were to look at our track record, you know, just in the last year with the River Valley Alliance, we're looking at Lois Hole park. We've also just brought in the Doc Seaman piece – that was a wonderful thing – the OH Ranch. We are at work on this, we're doing more, and we intend to continue this work.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

East Calgary Transportation Utility Corridors

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Calgary parks foundation is looking to make pathways and green space along the transportation and utility corridor in east Calgary. The first leg of this project runs behind the community of Monterey Park, which I proudly represent. I have met with the community, and the community and myself strongly support this project. My question is to the Minister of Infrastructure. What is the process for determining what transportation utility corridor land can be used for establishing pathways and green space?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There is an application process. It's outlined in the transportation utility corridor policy, and it's posted on Alberta Infrastructure's website. Essentially, the proponent submits an application for ministerial consent to my department. The department will review it, speak with the city involved, and we'll determine if it would qualify as a pathway.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I strongly support this project. Does the minister support the proposed plan to utilize the undeveloped transportation utility corridor land in east Calgary to construct recreational pathways?

Mr. Hayden: Mr. Speaker, I very much support that as a use where it's appropriate. We are in meetings now with city parks. The east

Calgary greenway project is on the table now, and we're considering the request, taking it through the proper steps. If it does in fact qualify, we certainly will support that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll take that as a yes.

My final question to the same minister: once Alberta Infrastructure hands land over for this use, who takes care of the maintenance of that particular property?

Mr. Hayden: I think I should clarify that if it does qualify and it's safe enough to do it, of course, it will happen, and then it would require a licensing agreement. Generally speaking, in this particular case the licensing agreement would be with the city of Calgary, and they would be the ones that would enforce it.

Blue Cross Coverage

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Corporate filings from Syncrude shareholders indicate that this government's royalty deal will transfer billions in public wealth to an already profitable oil sands company. At the same time, the government is jacking up costs that many families and seniors must pay for medically necessary drugs. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Does the minister support government priorities that grant huge benefits to a highly profitable oil sands company while forcing ordinary Albertans to pay so much more for medically necessary drugs?

The Speaker: Hon. Minister of Health and Wellness, if you wish.

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, we have said right from day one that we are going to deliver a more efficient, effective health care system, and we plan to do that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Corporate filings show that the royalty deal this government struck with Syncrude is worth an additional 12 per cent in net, after-tax profits to shareholders. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: why doesn't this government increase Blue Cross benefits for families and seniors by a similar 12 per cent, just like it increased the after-tax profits for Syncrude shareholders?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, there has been no increase in Blue Cross for seniors, and what the member is probably confused about is that, as I outlined to his colleague to the left there the other day in the House, the premiums that we charge in our nongroup plan have fallen behind. They have not increased since 1993. What we are proposing are increases that will bring it in line with those plans that are offered by employers both in the private and public sectors.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. It's clearly stated in a government news release of December 8, 2008, that this government will drive Blue Cross rates up to the same level as private insurance. The winners in this, of course, are the private insurance companies, and the losers are the regular Albertans, like those in the gallery today. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: why doesn't this government stand up for ordinary Albertans instead of selling them out to private insurance?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, we stand up for ordinary Albertans every day in this House, and I think it was proven just over a year ago on March 3.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Gang Violence

Mr. Denis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today in concert with the many Albertans who are concerned about gang violence in this province. This week Calgary police revealed details of a drug bust where they seized the same type of body armour used by police along with other police paraphernalia. My question is to the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security. What is this minister doing to keep body armour out of the hands of criminals in this province?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lindsay: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is indeed a very disturbing trend. There's absolutely no legitimate reason for anybody outside of law enforcement to have body armour. I've contacted the federal Minister of Public Safety and the federal Justice minister, urging them to take action on this issue. I've requested that the federal government consider tabling amendments to the Criminal Code that would make body armour a restricted device that can only be sold, purchased, and possessed in accordance with provincial law or regulations. The changes I am proposing will give police another tool in their ongoing efforts to disrupt and dismantle gangs and organized crime in Alberta and make our communities safer.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Denis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what is being done to stop gangs from other jurisdictions, British Columbia or otherwise, from doing their dirty business in this province?

Mr. Lindsay: Mr. Speaker, again, this province has moved on the gang issue by providing more police in Alberta and recently announced four integrated gang-enforcement units. I can assure you that police in Alberta are working closely with police in other jurisdictions to fight gang crime. One method is by sharing gang intelligence. In fact, last week several gang members were arrested in Vancouver in connection with a murder investigation. I can tell you that the Edmonton and Calgary police services along with members of the integrated response to organized crime unit in Alberta worked with police in British Columbia to make those arrests. It's through this type of co-operation and innovation that police will continue to reduce gang crime and the illegal drug trade in our province.

Calgary Airport Tunnel

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is not regarding the highway today. It is about my constituents telling me very clearly that they want this government to ensure a prosperous future for their local area. An infrastructure system is needed that will be able to handle the growth of this rapidly expanding community, and a key part is a tunnel under the new runway at the Calgary airport. That is to provide better access from the east of the city. My questions are to the Minister of Transportation. What is the status of this project?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can't tell the hon. member the status of that project because it's not a government of Alberta project. That's a municipal issue; it's a local municipal road. I don't know where the city of Calgary is on whether or not they're going to fund that tunnel.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My understanding is that there have been some meetings going on with the minister and the city of Calgary. This is the fastest growing part of Calgary, and it needs proper infrastructure planning. Does this government support the building of this tunnel, and will this minister be advocating strongly to get the funding needed for this project?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, we're speaking of an awful lot of money here to build this tunnel. We have a couple of different issues, and I mentioned it to the aldermen that I met with from Calgary. First of all, the road where they want that tunnel is a dangerous-goods road, which is Barlow Trail. As you know, for safety reasons alone we cannot have dangerous goods in a tunnel, so the whole plan would have to be revised. You'd have to change that from dangerous goods. Also, I'm not a hundred per cent sure yet how happy the airport authority is with a runway over and above a tunnel.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're talking about infrastructure funding again. Does this minister agree that this is clearly a viable stimulus project that will create much-needed jobs and one that is a necessity to ensure the current and future prosperity of my constituents and all Calgarians?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, we just announced this week a huge project in southeast Calgary. The ring road in the southeast, Stoney Trail, will create lots of jobs. We plan on doing a lot of other necessary highway work in the province, which again will create jobs. We really do want to make sure that your constituents are looked after and we have economic growth that goes on in Calgary.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Long-term Care

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. This government's failure to create long-term beds has created a backlog in hospitals so horrific that patients are dying in waiting rooms. Emergency departments are overcrowded because patients can't get a regular hospital bed because too many are occupied by long-term patients. Instead of creating the long-term care beds it promised, that would ease the emergency room congestion, this government has created a hospital backlog that is costing lives. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: will you admit that your failure to keep your promise to add 600 new long-term beds has created a backlog that is costing lives in emergency rooms?

Mr. Liepert: No, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, the minister isn't being straight with Albertans by suggesting that people who have long-term requirements can be housed in independent living options or in their own apartments. The fact is that there are far more people who have been assessed as requiring long-term care in Alberta than there are beds. That is creating a backlog in hospitals, and people are dying in waiting rooms. The choice the minister is really offering to Albertans who need long-term care is to get the level of care they need or not. To the minister: why won't you admit that the backlog in Alberta emergency rooms is a direct result of your failure to create new long-term beds?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, the congestion in emergency is far greater than just the inability to move patients into beds. It is one of the reasons; there's no doubt about that. We are working diligently to try to resolve that. I believe also that on April 1, when EMS becomes aligned with health care and not municipal transportation services, that will go a long way towards easing some of that burden. There's a whole bunch of other initiatives that we are going to be pursuing that eventually we want to have access to in emergency.

2:20

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I'll conclude with a simple question for the minister. How many Albertans have been assessed as requiring long-term care beds, how many long-term care beds are there, and how many are required in order to make up that difference?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that if he wants an answer to that question, he should put it on the Order Paper.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Edmonton Crime Rate

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Maclean's magazine ranks Edmonton as one of the most dangerous cities to live in Canada. The province's capital is number 5 on the list and is number 2 in the number of homicides. My first question is for the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security. Year after year Edmonton ranks high on this type of list. When are we going to see Edmonton rank high on safe communities lists?

Mr. Lindsay: Well, Mr. Speaker, we want all Albertans to live in communities where they can safely live, work, and raise their families. I want to point out that the rankings in this particular Maclean's article were based on 2007 figures. Since then we have added significant resources to reduce crime and support safe communities. Over the past year, for example, we have added more than 300 police positions in Alberta, including 70 front-line officers in Edmonton, plus an additional 24-member integrated gang enforcement unit and a SCAN unit to target property used for illegal activity. We're also putting 20 more probation officers in Edmonton.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplement to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General: can the minister tell us what her department has done to make Edmonton a safer city?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We believe in the government that the best way for us to deal with this issue in Edmonton is to work in partnership with the police, in partnership with the Solicitor General, and to make sure that police and Crown prosecutors are working very closely together to track prolific offenders and to ensure that once the police have been able to arrest people, we're able to track them through the system and make sure that they're held on bail.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Final supplement to the Minister of Justice again: what is her department doing in the long term to ensure that Edmontonians can raise their families in a safe and secure community?

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Part of what we have to do under safe communities is not just talk about crime and touching people once they've been impacted by crime but deal with work that communities are doing in partnership with the police and on their own to build institutions and structures and confidence in their own communities. The safe communities innovation fund, which the Premier announced last fall, will be putting $60 million into those sorts of activities. We'll be announcing the first of those results in about two months, and those will continue over the next three years.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater.

Extending Municipal Council Terms of Office

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Municipal Affairs recently voiced his disinterest in extending the terms of municipal councillors from three years to four years. I don't believe I'm doing this, but I'm actually going to quote from the media, that I have a great deal of respect for. This is from the Edmonton Journal, where he was quoted to say that he hadn't heard an overwhelming push, desire, or communication in that regard. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: why does the minister consider the AUMA representing 99 per cent of Alberta municipalities an underwhelming representation? What number would be necessary?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Just to add clarity to the question, not prior to the last election but prior to the election before that we did a general review of the Election Act. We did not do that this term. What we did do is send letters to the AAMD and C and the AUMA and contacted both the city of Edmonton and the city of Calgary asking them what they felt were the main concerns. Residency identity is one that came up, and I feel that the area that the hon. member is talking about needs to have further consultation.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you for that. Perhaps we could move back a little bit more to where I thought I was aiming. Municipalities fight every day to make sure that every dollar counts, and extending council terms would save considerable taxpayer money in these cash-strapped times. Would the minister consider this a money-saving opportunity?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, this would be a dramatic change in the Election Act for Albertans and for Alberta municipalities. We have not done a full consultation on that proposal. Now, the AUMA did bring that forward. Would it be a cost savings? It may be a cost savings, but would it be a focus or a direction that the citizens of this province want to see?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 2005 – and I think you've alluded to this: the Local Authorities Election Act review – actually, your colleagues had recommended extended terms of office. I'm wondering if there has been further work done and if you've gone outside of the Local Authorities Election Act review looking for extra input because it doesn't seem to jibe.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't see where we have gone past the extensive review that we did in 2005. I would also like to say that our intentions are to do a review after the next municipal election, and that could be on the agenda at that time, but it needs to have a full consultation after the next election if the people so desire.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Recycling Industry

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of my constituents who has been in the business of scrap metal recycling for more than 13 years regularly employs from five to 35 employees, but because of a serious downturn in the recycling market he's had to lay everybody off. My question is for the Minister of Environment. There is strong evidence from right across the province suggesting that Alberta's recycling market is showing extreme volatility. What is the province doing to address this?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, let me say that I think we should all empathize with both the employer and the employees in this situation, but I think what it shows is that even the recycling market is not immune from the economic downturn. In December of this year Alberta Environment brought all of the various stakeholders together to discuss this very issue. I'm somewhat disappointed to report that the consensus of that group at that time was that this industry is extremely volatile and there really are no short-term solutions.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm sorry to hear that that meeting could not provide any short-term solutions. What does the future of recycling look like for my constituents and others involved in the recycling industry across the province?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, if there are no short-term solutions, hopefully we need to find some longer term solutions. There still is a market for high-quality material, albeit that it's a commodity market when you're talking in this case about scrap metal. I understand that there's a problem in the steel industry right now, and the two of them are coinciding. Consumers really have a role to support recycled products, products that are manufactured from recycled material. We have regulated programs, and I think that in the long term we need to incorporate both sides into those programs, not only the collections side but also the recycling side.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: with this downturn in the recycling market what are you doing to ensure that more waste is not going into landfills?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think that I need not remind all members that when it comes to recycling, that's only one of the three Rs. There's also reuse and reduce. We can have significant emphasis on reduction in landfills by concentrating not only on recycling, which is laudable, but also a commitment to reuse through recyclable bags and simply making a point of reducing. We can do that through some of the work that we're doing on demolition and waste material, for example.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Workers' Compensation Board Investments

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The market value of the investment portfolio of the WCB was worth $6.6 billion at December 2007. My first question is to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. What is that WCB investment worth now?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, I don't have those figures at my fingertips. I would indicate to the member asking the question that I could get those numbers and share that with him.

Mr. MacDonald: You should have those numbers, but I'd be grateful if I could have them.

Again to the same minister: why did the WCB hire new external investment managers in 2007 when this government was planning to implement for all investment pools AIMCo, or the Alberta Investment Management Corporation?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, the WCB operates very, very independently of a lot of the other activities that this particular province is involved with. I can say that WCB has done over the last few years a tremendous job in making sure that they're solvent, that they can meet their future obligations. If we look at what happened in other provinces and where our WCB is, I'm very, very pleased to see that the WCB has enough resources to meet all of their future commitments.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the minister: we've got to be aware that the WCB reports to this hon. minister and that the WCB's activities are included in the annual report from that department.

My third question is: will employers' WCB premiums or will workers' benefits go up or down as a result of this latest investment strategy by the WCB?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, that's a very good question, and I think the answer is both. Generally speaking, the benefits with better financial positions accrue to both the employers and the employees themselves. Every year there are rebates that are given back to those employers that have shown to have done a great job, and they are rewarded with a refund on their cost. As well, the WCB is mandated to look at increasing benefits, at least to offset inflation costs.

Fire Safety Standards for Secondary Suites

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, regulations enacted this January provided new fire code standards for existing suites, including the requirement for adequately sized windows and interconnected smoke alarms. A recent fire in an illegal secondary suite in Calgary caused the untimely death of three tenants. The tragic event highlighted the plight of many people living in substandard and illegal secondary suites across the province. My questions are for the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Given the changes to the Alberta fire code which came into effect, can the minister explain what prosecution measures are in place to make sure that existing suites comply with all of the fire code regulations?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Violations of the safety codes are taken very seriously by our ministry. If the suites do not meet the safety standards, the owner can be charged under the Safety Codes Act or under the Public Health Act. The penalties are serious for violating the Safety Codes Act: $15,000 for a first offence or six months in jail or doubling that for the second time. This enforcement provision demonstrates our commitment to keeping Albertans safe.

Dr. Brown: Strong provincial building and fire codes aren't of much use if they're not being followed. Will the minister undertake measures to inform landlords what these new fire code regulations are regardless of when the suites were built?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, we do have a website that's available. Safety is everyone's responsibility. We have also developed a guide. When individuals are building or, let's say, enhancing a secondary suite, they can look at what is necessary. Also, when there are development permits that are given by the cities, they also give that information to those individuals who are doing renovations or developing a secondary suite.

Dr. Brown: Can the minister please explain where the buck stops and who's going to be responsible for ensuring that these codes are being adhered to?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, safety is everybody's concern. The province does have very strong building and fire codes and safety codes. It is the municipalities' responsibility to enforce provincial standards, investigate, and lay charges. Again, property owners have responsibility, the municipality has responsibility, and the province has responsibility.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I'm hoping that the Minister of Municipal Affairs will show concern over the children who are locked in residential treatment centres each night in Calgary in barred circumstances.

Child and Youth Advocate

Mr. Chase: It is of the utmost importance that this government takes whatever means necessary to ensure the safety of children in its care. Last year it was revealed that there are serious issues regarding the role and functions of the Child and Youth Advocate. A review was undertaken, a review which the Minister of Children and Youth Services should have received by now. To the minister: will the Child and Youth Advocate report directly to the Legislature or, at the very least, to an all-party policy committee?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The member is right that before Christmas we had talked about having a review done, taking a look at what different provinces across the country do as well as reporting mechanisms. I have had a committee that's been taking a look at those exact issues, a really good committee. We've had external and internal experts on this committee as well as, and probably most importantly, youth. I do expect that report to be on my desk, hopefully, within the next week or so.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I'll look forward to it being tabled and shared.

Will an advisory committee be established that would include community stakeholders to help address systemic problems in our youth protection system?

Ms Tarchuk: Mr. Speaker, like I said, I won't have that report for another week or two, so I'm not sure exactly what the contents are. But I think it's really important to say that we all want the same thing. We want a really strong voice for our children, we want a really accountable advocacy system, and as well we want reporting to the public that is meaningful and timely.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. When will the minister table and, more importantly, implement the recommendations of the review so that Alberta's youth will not be placed at further risk of neglect or abuse?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again, I do expect that in the next week or so, and my intentions would be to move on it quite quickly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Minimum Wage

Mr. Benito: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It was recently announced that Alberta's minimum wage is increasing on April 1 to $8.80 per hour, up from the current $8.40. My question is to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. My constituency of Edmonton-Mill Woods is wondering: how is the minimum wage determined by your ministry?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Back in 2007 this government decided that the minimum wage should be linked to Alberta's average weekly earnings. In 2008 these earnings increased by about 5 per cent, and this increase will bring Alberta's minimum wage to a rounded figure, as the hon. member indicated, of $8.80 per hour. This rate will at least temporarily place us second highest amongst all provinces. But it's my understanding that other provinces are also adjusting theirs to where we'll be in the middle of the pack.

Mr. Benito: To the same minister. We're already hearing from at least one business association that says that its members now have to completely revise their budgets with less than a month's notice. Is this fair, Mr. Minister?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, this increase to the minimum wage should not come as a surprise to anyone. We have not changed our mind, not wavered from a system that has been in place for a couple of years now. Our policy calls for the minimum wage to be reviewed every year and that it would be indexed to the weekly earnings, with any change to take effect on April 1. I re-emphasize that that is to happen every year. In doing so, we ensure that new entrants to our workplace are entitled to an entry-level rate of pay that strikes a fair balance between the workers and the business community.

Mr. Benito: Again to the same minister. When some say that the minimum wage is too low and should be a living wage and others say it's too high and could create layoffs, can you please explain: who are we to believe?

The Speaker: Find an answer to that. It's not a question.

Mr. Goudreau: Well, Mr. Speaker, the member is quite right in that we regularly hear from a number of small businesses and retail associations that suggest that raising the minimum wage might cause hardships for companies trying to make ends meet. The opposite happens on the other side, where labour associations and social agencies repeatedly suggest that the minimum wage should be higher. We're sensitive to both of these, and we're trying to strike a fair balance.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Ambulance Services

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are now very close to the effective date for the transfer of ambulance service from municipalities to the province. Many people in Lethbridge have been calling me to find out the status of negotiations. My first question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Could the minister provide us with an update on where we are in this process?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to say that with the exception of one very small provider where some loose ends need to be tied up, we have now in place contracts with all 65 jurisdictions in Alberta to provide ambulance services as of April 1. Of those 65 contracts we have 12 which are integrated services with municipalities. The remainder are where Alberta Health Services will direct-deliver ambulance services.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Health and Wellness again. Lethbridge has an integrated fire and ambulance service and has been concerned about the quality of future ambulance service. What words of assurance can the minister give the people of Alberta that their emergency services will not be compromised as a result of this transfer?

Mr. Liepert: Well, I believe, Mr. Speaker, that what we have in Alberta today are incredibly dedicated professionals, paramedics delivering ambulance services in Alberta. We have just as dedicated firefighters and police. At the end of the day these individuals work well together whether they are part of the same system or doing the job that they need to do to ensure that patient safety is paramount. I'm very confident that we will have a better system as of April 1.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you. My final supplemental is to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Emergency workers have said that their work is unique and that they need a separate way to be represented in collective bargaining. Will the minister ensure that these workers' interests are protected?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Between now and April 1 we'll continue to work to ensure that a system will be developed that is very inclusive and fair. We've met with a number of stakeholders, and we've received numerous submissions from others. We are reviewing them carefully before making any final decisions about the new process that will be in place. We expect to have these recommendations for government within the next coming weeks and for a decision to be made before April 1. There's no doubt that there will be changes, but while there will be those changes, employees will continue to be covered by collective agreements, and they will have access to union representation.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that was 109 questions and responses today. Two hon. members did quote from certain documents during the question period. I'm going to ask that they table the documents they quoted from, the Minister of Health and Wellness being one and the Member for Lethbridge-East being the second, if you would deal with that.

In 30 seconds from now we'll continue with the Routine.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of letters regarding the government's pharmaceutical strategy. These are from the CN Pensioners' Association, Denny May of Edmonton, and Wayne Hampton of Lacombe. They express concern about the replacement of a universal program with income testing, which is effectively a tax on the sick, and the privacy of their income information that will have to be shared with pharmacies.

I'd also like to table the appropriate number of copies of 10 reports from long-term care workers indicating specific problems on shifts that were short-staffed. These indicate that some residents' baths were missed, toileting was late, and there were not enough staff to keep track of those residents who sometimes wander and are at risk of falling.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings this afternoon. The first is the program from the 45th annual Night of Music presented by the Edmonton public schools over at the Jubilee Auditorium last evening. I was joined there by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, and we were both impressed by the performances from elementary, junior high, and senior high students.

The second tabling I have is a document from Employment and Immigration here in Alberta. It is a discussion of who is eligible among temporary foreign workers for health care benefits.

The third tabling I have is titled the Capital Region New Upgrader-Related Property Tax Revenue Estimates. It's a document from Alberta municipal affairs and housing, local government services, dated November 27, 2007. It is the scenarios of the money that would have been collected if we had built upgraders in the capital region.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of my colleague the Leader of the Official Opposition I'd like to table two sets of letters. The first letter is from Michael and Kelly Moynihan, and this is regarding the closure of the obstetrical unit at the Banff Mineral Springs hospital. They are both very concerned and are rebutting some of the comments that were made by the minister of health.

The second is a very thorough letter from Chad Kerychuk, who is also expressing his great concerns about the closure of that unit at the Banff Mineral Springs hospital. He is feeling that expectant parents are having to make last-minute changes in plans that they had worked out for some time. This is immensely stressful, and he's asking that this closure be reconsidered.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Liepert: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table five copies of a document I referred to in question period today.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Projected Government Business

The Speaker: The Official Opposition House Leader.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. According to Standing Order 7(6) I would ask the Government House Leader to please share with the members the projected government business for the week commencing on the 9th of March.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd be delighted to advise the House that on the Order Paper for next week we anticipate on Tuesday being in Committee of Supply on the second day of interim supply estimates.

On Wednesday we would anticipate doing debate on a number of government bills: bills 4, 6, 7, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20; in other words, most of the bills that are on the Order Paper. Some of them we don't anticipate a lot of debate on. It's hard to know just exactly how many might proceed, so all of them are there. We also have Committee of the Whole on 1, 2, 3, 5, 8, and 15, and as per the Order Paper. I might indicate to the House that we anticipate that bills 21 and 22, which are on notice, the appropriation bills, would be available to the House next week after Committee of Supply completes.

On Thursday, March 12, in second reading the same bills and the same bills in committee.

Speaker's Ruling Quoting Documents Legal Opinions

The Speaker: Hon. members, I received several notes during question period from members inquiring whether or not it was permissible for people to quote from newspaper articles. The answer to that question is yes. What the rules do prohibit, however, is questions which inquire whether statements made in a newspaper are correct. The rules also prohibit, though, any question which requires an answer involving a legal opinion, and we must have had half a dozen of these this week from all sides of the House, including some of the members who sent me the most notes asking how come those questions are permitted.

2:50 Orders of the Day Committee of Supply

[Mr. Cao in the chair]

The Chair: I would like to call the Committee of Supply to order.

Interim Supply Estimates 2009-10 General Revenue Fund and Lottery Fund

The Chair: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I am very pleased to move the 2009-10 interim supply estimates for the general revenue fund and the lottery fund.

On March 2 the hon. President of the Treasury Board tabled the 2009-10 interim supply estimates, which contain a schedule of interim amounts to be voted to support operations of the offices of the Legislative Assembly and departments of the government of Alberta and the lottery fund from April 1 through to June 30, 2009. Mr. Chairman, that motion was carried and referred those matters to this committee.

Mr. Chairman, interim supply estimates provide funding authorizations until the new budget is approved. This is not unusual for government. In fact, it's required whenever spending authority is required to bridge the gap between the prior fiscal year and the passage of a new budget. Authorization is needed so that government can continue to provide services until the budget is passed.

These estimates are based on the departments' needs to fund government programs and services. Government spending is typically higher in the early months of the year. This pattern occurs because some payments are due on April 1 for the first quarter and some annual payments are also due on April 1. Members will note that the interim supply is inordinately high compared to what is expected from the overall government budget simply because there are a lot of front-ended costs that need to be paid out in the first quarter.

When passed, these interim supply estimates will authorize approximate spending of $9 billion for expense and equipment/inventory purchases, $581 million for capital investment, $49 million for nonbudgetary disbursements, and $409 million for lottery fund payments.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I look forward to discussion throughout the afternoon.

The Chair: Before we proceed, I would like to ask if members want to use 10 minutes each back and forth or 20 minutes combined. Let me know, and then we'll have the time.

Mr. MacDonald: Ten minutes, I believe, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: All right. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. Ten minutes.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much. I rise to participate in the annual interim supply budget discussion or debate for 2009-10, the fiscal year that we're looking at. Certainly, as we go through this document, we see that we're making budget requests for each and every department and office of the Legislative Assembly, which is, I guess, considered normal in this province. I for one would have much preferred to have seen the entire budget now. [interjection] Well, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud is making a suggestion. I have had various meetings with groups not only in the city but across the province who get funding from the province, and they're very anxious to see what happens when we do, finally, get the budget on April 7, I do believe. There are a lot of questions.

Yesterday we heard in this House that the President of the Treasury Board and his associates had no idea that there was a recession on the horizon. We only have to look, Mr. Chairman, at the budget from last year to realize that that series of statements from the President of the Treasury Board was incorrect. It is a reflection of how our economic affairs have been managed by this government.

Last year when we did get the Budget 2008 fiscal plan, one only has to look at page 11, and you can see where this province was planning to have financial issues around the looming U.S. recession. To stand up in question period and say that they had no idea that this was coming – we're losing tax revenue. We're losing resource royalty revenue. We are losing significant revenue through our investments, if we're going to have any revenue at all.

On page 11, Mr. Chairman, it states that "the outlook for the U.S. economy has deteriorated sharply since the beginning of the year and it appears to have entered a recession." It goes on to state that the "weakness in the U.S. economy [is] expected to lead to slower Canadian export growth." In this document it indicates that 90 per cent of all exports from Alberta are to the U.S. I looked at the latest statistics, from February of this year, and 88 per cent of all exports are to the U.S., $95.7 billion according to the latest economic update. Did we shift away from having all our export eggs in one basket? No. Unfortunately, we didn't. It was clear that we were relying on the American economy for the majority of our exports. We knew there was a recession coming, but it's apparent to me after looking at the third-quarter update that we did very little to prepare for it. I'm sorry.

Now, if we go on further in the fiscal plan, the three-year document, this is on page 61, the "possibility of a US recession in 2008 would reduce demand." This is concerning nonrenewable resource revenue. Also, it's interesting to note here, Mr. Chairman, that there's an indication that "royalties paid on bitumen prices expected to reduce 2009-10 revenue." So last year there was a lot of detail in the fine print about the looming recession, and I can only conclude that many government members, many cabinet ministers across the way did not read the fiscal plan that was presented by the minister of finance.

Now, on page 118 it is indicated, Mr. Chairman, that “despite the likelihood of a U.S. recession and turbulent global financial markets, Alberta’s economic outlook remains positive.” That was this time last year. The storm clouds economically were on the horizon. It’s reflected in the drafting of this fiscal plan, but it was not reflected in this government’s fiscal policy.

Now, for the next indicator you only have to go a few pages further in the fiscal plan. On page 127 we are talking about the three-year economic outlook.

Global Growth Picture Mixed

- Key economic indicators in the United States have deteriorated sharply since the beginning of 2008. The U.S. economy is likely already in recession as the slump in the housing market appears to be spreading to the broader economy.

Hello? The economic conditions in the U.S. and in the global markets come as a surprise to the government members across the way? I just can’t accept this because, certainly, your fiscal plan last year gave good solid warnings pretty well in every chapter and verse of it of what we are experiencing today.

Now, again on page 138, Mr. Chairman, I’m going to quote.

Fallout from the U.S. Housing and Credit Markets

The impact of the U.S. housing market on the sub-prime mortgage and broader credit markets represents a notable risk for both the U.S. and global economies. The United States appears to have already entered a recession although the extent and likely duration remains highly uncertain. The United States remains a key export market for Alberta, accounting for about 90% of our total international exports.

We have yet again another example that someone in this government knew that there was trouble on the horizon, but we did nothing about it. The minister of finance only a few short months ago, this past fall, was indicating that we would have an $8 billion surplus, which turns out not to be true. How we are going to manage our financial affairs is another question.

In the interim supply budget there is no mention of the price sensitivities for our nonrenewable resource revenues. I think we should spend a few minutes talking about our price sensitivities for nonrenewable resource revenues, Mr. Chairman. If we look at last year’s fiscal plan, we can see where there is significant detail on the price sensitivities and what they mean. Alberta’s new royalty regime, which was effective January 1, 2009, is more price sensitive. The effects of energy price changes on Alberta’s royalty revenues will also increase. The revenue impact of a $1 change in the price of oil will increase from $130 million in 2008-09 to $211 million in 2009-10. For natural gas the revenue impact of a 10 cent change in the Alberta reference price will increase from $114 million in 2008-09 to $166 million in 2009-10. So when we look at what was presented in the third-quarter update last week, we see that there are significant changes in those sensitivities. If an hon. member across the way in the government, in the cabinet, could clarify what numbers we will be dealing with not only in this interim supply budget but also in the budget for the entire province, I would appreciate it, and the taxpayers of this province would appreciate it as well.

The oil price sensitivity will change now by $105 million. That means that when the price of oil goes up or down, before, whenever the fiscal plan was tabled last year, the net change would be $130 million. [Mr. MacDonald’s speaking time expired]

Ms Blakeman: That’s 20?

Mr. MacDonald: That’s 10. May I continue, Mr Chairman?

The Chair: Other members who wish to speak?

Ms Blakeman: I’ll let him go ahead.

Mr. MacDonald: Okay. I would really appreciate this, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: You go ahead, Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Now, the net change in the fiscal plan that was introduced last year was $130 million, and it has changed post-January 2009 by $105 million to bring it to $235 million. This may not be of interest, and I’m not trying to confuse the House here, Mr. Chairman. But I would like to know: do we collect $105 million less for every dollar if conventional crude oil declines that amount in price? If conventional crude oil goes down, do we collect $105 million less for every dollar it goes down with the new price sensitivity chart, which is noted as $235 million for conventional oil?

Now, with natural gas if the annual change was 10 cents, the net change would be $114 million in royalties. With the new, post-January 2009 sensitivity it is $158 million, or a change of $44 million. My question – and I hope I can get an answer on this – is: do we collect $44 million less with a 10 cent drop in the price of natural gas per gigajoule in Canadian currency?

We know that the new royalty structure that was implemented in January of 2009 is price sensitive. We collect more whenever conventional oil and natural gas are significantly higher, but how much less are we going to collect now that the price of natural gas is much less than was anticipated? I think it’s $4.20 a gigajoule at the moment. I hope it’s a lot higher than that. Crude oil before question period was $41 and some-odd cents. [interjection] Since question period it started to drop? [interjection] Yes.

If I could have clarification on that I would be really grateful, if I could have an estimate of exactly how much money at these current prices with these current sensitivities with both conventional oil and natural gas the government anticipates in this budget year to collect with this royalty regime. Things have changed. These sensitivities are sort of mentioned here in passing on page 8 of the third-quarter fiscal update, but these are very, very important questions as we debate the entire interim budget and also the budget on April 7, 2009.

Now, I would like to point out to the House, Mr. Chairman, footnote C on page 8 of the third-quarter fiscal update: “2008-09 sensitivities include 9 months under the current royalty regime and 3 months under the new regime. After January 1, 2009, sensitivities for an entire fiscal year will increase as shown.” I hope I explained this in a manner that is understandable. These price sensitivities are certainly different, but they’re very, very important, and if I could get an answer from an hon. member across the way, I would be very grateful.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Renner: Mr. Chairman, it’s very difficult to provide specific answers as they relate to budget and forecasts and projections because all of that, as I’m sure the member is aware, is the essence of the budget itself and is the responsibility of the minister of finance and the President of the Treasury Board. What we have before us are interim requirements that essentially bridge the gap between the point at which our fiscal year ends, March 31, the expenditures for which have already been approved by this Legislature, and a reasonable and foreseeable point in the future following March 31, at which point the new budget would be passed. All of the details with respect to that new budget are very much part of that budget process, and it would be (a) inappropriate for anyone to comment on forecasting and the like at this point in time, and (b) I would suggest that it would also be almost impossible for someone to provide that kind of information in the absence of all of the detail that will accompany the budget documents.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much. I'm surprised at that. These price sensitivities are very, very important, and they do concern not only this interim supply budget but also the fiscal year 2009-10. Certainly, in the past the province has had no problems whatsoever making a forecast. Last year, for instance, we had a three-year forecast of anticipated revenue not only from nonrenewable resources but also corporate income tax, personal income tax, investment revenue, et cetera. So I just don't understand why the hon. members across the way wouldn't have the information available in this interim supply budget debate which would indicate to us the changes that these price sensitivities are going to have on the fiscal year which we are discussing with the interim supply. These numbers are significantly larger than the previous price sensitivities, and if we are with the changes on an annual basis getting $235 million less in royalty revenue on conventional crude oil, and if we are getting $158 million less when the price of natural gas on an annual basis drops by 10 cents, this is a significant loss of resource revenue. If I could have that clarified, Mr. Chairman, I would be grateful.

Mr. Renner: Mr. Chairman, without getting into debate, I think I answered the question, and if the member doesn't like the answer, there's nothing I can do about it. The fact remains that the detail that he is requesting is the very essence of the detail that accompanies the budget. That level of detail is not available when we deal with interim supply.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I must say that I'm disappointed in that. Whenever we go through this interim supply budget line by line, there's billions of dollars here in allocations. When one can't get an answer as to how all this is going to be funded, I find that unusual. With that I will cede the floor to another hon. member of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It is a pleasure to join in debate on Bill 22, the Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2009, and kick around a few ideas about how we're going to spend our first $10 billion this year, I guess, because that's about what the dollars add up to. I understand that this involves some front-loading of programs and you have to put more than just a few weeks' worth of dollars into the interim supply budget to get things going and keep things going and all the rest of that. So we won't go down that road. And I'm not going to quibble about whether the interim supply bill should be concerning itself with $10 billion in spending or $6 billion in spending or how many billions of spending we should be concerning ourselves with. It is what it is, and it is a big number, $10 billion.

Of course, it's still, in my mind, a number that we ought not to have to be dealing with because – and I'm sure if I'm wrong about this, Mr. Chairman, someone opposite will correct me – it seems to me that we wouldn't have to deal with interim supply at all if we could just get organized around budget day, just get organized around bringing in a budget and having it approved and ready to go by April 1 of every fiscal year.

We came back into this House – excuse me; I'm going to have to look on the calendar – on Tuesday, February 10, with the throne speech. We sat for three days that week. Well, the 10th was throne speech day, so that's really all we did that day. We listened to His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor give the throne speech, and then we all repaired to the rotunda for cookies and milk and those little sandwiches without the crusts. Then we came back into the House and did some business on the 11th and the 12th, and then we went for the Family Day weekend, which was a long weekend. Then we came back in on Tuesday the 17th, and we sat three more days. Then we took a week off for a constituency week. Gosh, if I was a taxpayer sitting at home listening to this or at work monitoring this on my computer, I'd be getting just a little bit hot under the collar right now that these guys have been back at work since February 10, and they've already taken a long weekend and a week off.

Now here we are at the end of the third week of actual legislative work, and we're debating this great big interim supply bill because we're not even going to have a budget to debate, we're not even going to have the budget read into the record by the Minister of Finance and Enterprise, until Tuesday, April 7, a full four weeks after we came back into the House. I'm sorry, Mr. Chairman; I don't have those old standing orders – and they were temporary standing orders – at my fingertips because they go back a couple of years, but there was a brief period, a brief, shining moment in the history of our standing orders not too many years ago when we actually committed to, you know, coming back into the House at a specific date in February and then, I believe it was either 10 days or two weeks later, delivering the budget. It seemed like a good idea at the time. I don't think we ever actually got around to doing it that way because those temporary standing orders never got final approval at the end of the year, and then we were into an election cycle and so on and so forth, but that idea, which I think was a good idea, has never come back.

I think it was a good idea, Mr. Chairman, because when you start your fiscal year on April 1, I think it's a good idea to have your budgeting process worked out by then. I think that, you know, if we were to come back on Tuesday, February 10, and rather than take a week off two weeks after we came back because we were just so overworked – and please note for Hansard that I said that with every ounce of sarcasm and cynicism that I could muster in my voice – if perhaps we had brought down the budget on February 24, two weeks later, we'd be well into debate on the budget now. I'm willing to predict – and I don't think that I'm taking much of a psychic flyer here at all – that we'd be through the complete Committee of Supply process in terms of debating the budget and through first, second, committee, and third. The budget would be approved, passed, set, and ready to go before we hit the end of this month and the beginning of April and the beginning of the next fiscal year. I'm willing to bet that, if we had just shown a little bit of discipline in terms of when we were going to start the process. We should have done that.

Now, I know that the finance minister and, I suspect, the President of the Treasury Board and probably the Premier and maybe everybody on the government side of the House feels the same way, that, oh, that's just too tough to do in a year like this because we're on such a roller-coaster ride as far as the economy is concerned. We don't know from one day to the next what's happening with the markets, with the credit crisis, with the real estate slowdown – can't call it a meltdown in this country, and thank goodness for that, but it certainly is a slowdown, and if you're trying to sell your house right now, you know that all too well – with the rise in unemployment, with slipping into a recession, with running a deficit for this fiscal year that the finance minister had to report in her Q3 fiscal update. Only a few months after she was touting a projection of an 8 and a half billion dollar surplus, now we're into a 1 and a half billion dollar deficit.

Of course, we have 2009-2010 coming, and we know that we're looking at a significant shortfall in revenue relative to what we brought in this year, in the billions of dollars, I think, maybe in the $5 billion or $8 billion or $10 billion range according to some of the people that I've been talking to. We're into a very, very different situation. We're into a situation where nobody knows whether we've hit bottom or when we're going to hit bottom or how we're going to know when we've hit bottom until we've already started coming back out of it, et cetera, et cetera, et cetera.

But, really, Mr. Chairman, what would prompt anybody to think that things are going to be any more stable on Tuesday, April 7, than they would have been on Tuesday, February 24? This is a roller-coaster ride. It's a seven-ticket ride on the Conklin midway at the Stampede. It's going to go on for a while yet. There are a few loop-the-loops in there and some nasty surprises. There are going to be times when your stomach is above your head. We just don't know what all the twists and turns on the ride are and when and where it's going to end. But it doesn't change the fact that our fiscal year starts on April 1, 2009, just like it started on April 1, 2008, just like it started on April 1, 2007, just like it's going to start on April Fool's Day 2010.

Preparing a budget, Mr. Chairman, is not an April Fool's joke. It's a serious business. It doesn't matter when you do it. Pick a date. You're going to be dealing with some uncertainty, some instability, some not insignificant amount of instability, and you're going to have to take your best shot at it, which should not be a stretch for this government, taking a shot at it, because their budgeting process is about as accurate as EPA mileage figures for new cars. You know: your mileage may vary. Our spending may vary. We'll have to come back to this House once or twice anyway for more supplementary supply for things that we went and spent money on that we didn't think or we didn't have the guts to tell people we were going to spend money on back when we were bringing in our $37 billion budget.

Mr. MacDonald: How about those 525 snowplows on the GPS?

Mr. Taylor: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, we could use a few of those snowplows out on the roads today. This may be one time that I might be in agreement with the Minister of Transportation. I see him smiling over there, and I'm going to make a note of that. [interjections] Yes, I know we're all out.

Anyway, back to the matter at hand. If we brought the budget down in time for the beginning of the new fiscal year, if we brought the budget down in February a couple of weeks after we come back into this House and listen to His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor read the throne speech and started debating it then, we would have a budget in place in time for the fiscal year, and we wouldn't even have to be doing this interim supply stuff. The members opposite complain they can't go into detail anyway.

Okay. I'm going to take my seat now and see who else wants to jump up and join the debate. I'll be back.

The Chair: The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. Mason: Yes. Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to make a few comments with respect to the interim supply estimates. I'm going to make them fairly general. As we know, with the schedule of interim supply, they're very broad numbers to get the government through until they can actually get a budget before the House, so there are not a lot of specific line items that you can really point to. So I'd like to make a few comments, I guess, on the interim supply in the sense that it's anticipating the next provincial budget.

I'd like to start with the economic outlook. The Minister of Finance and Enterprise a couple of weeks ago had an economic update – this was about a week before her financial update – and one of the things that she talked about was losses in the heritage savings trust fund to the extent of about $3 billion, that that would not be restored in order to avoid a technical deficit. I've argued in the past that we shouldn't have deficits in Alberta, that we don't need to have deficits in Alberta, and indeed, Mr. Chairman, if we had got the level of financial contribution from our petroleum industry that we could have – I'm particularly referencing the tar sands – I don't think we would have to be running a deficit today.

So I guess the first point that I would like to make is that having amongst the lowest royalties in the world really hamstringing this government in terms of being able to survive the ups and downs in the price of oil and natural gas. The less you retain as the owners of the resource and the more you allow the people who extract the resource to have, the more difficult it is for the owners of the resource – that is, the people of Alberta, represented by the government – to actually accommodate and survive in a healthy fashion the ups and downs that are so typical of that industry.

The second point that I'd like to make is that the economic update indicated a difficult time for the province financially next year but predicted a recovery the year following; that is, in 2011. This absolutely is flabbergasting, Mr. Chairman, that the provincial finance minister would tell Albertans that she expects the recession to be over in a year. That's essentially what she said. The result is, as we saw from the fiscal update a week later, that the government really has no plans to counteract a recession longer than one year.

My view is that that is going to create considerable hardship and economic dislocation in this province because the consensus among governments outside of this province and among economic experts is that we may in fact be in for a fairly prolonged recession and a fairly deep one. In fact, the free fall of the markets and the rapidly growing lists of layoffs outside of this province indicate that. The layoffs within the province will build and continue to grow, especially in 2011, when the minister is predicting we are going to be in recovery. I suggest that because of major projects winding up in the next year or so, unemployment in this province is actually going to be considerably worse a year out and beyond. If the government is betting that the recession is going to be a very short one, then they are gambling with Albertans' jobs and prosperity, and I want to go on the record as saying that this is an extremely dangerous assumption and that the economic strategy of this province clearly needs to extend beyond one year.

Now, I want to say something also about the priorities of the government. As they have been battenning down the hatches for the economic storm that lies ahead, the government has given a few hints of what its priorities are. Now, they had campaigned in the last election on creating at least 600 new long-term care beds and five new long-term care centres in the province. They have now stated that they're going to retain the current number and not expand it as promised, but there is a wide gap between the number of people who need long-term care and the number of beds that are available. The result is that people who need more care are in places where they can't get the care they need, first of all, and secondly, they displace other people from those beds. We've seen that with respect to emergency rooms, which I talked about a little bit in question period today. Because there's a shortage of long-term care beds, people are in acute-care beds. Then when people come into emergency, they can't be put into an acute-care bed because it's occupied by a long-term patient, and as a result we have backlogs in our emergency rooms, and people are dying. So that's not a priority. Obviously, long-term care in the broad sense is not a priority of the government.

I think another thing that's not a priority is public transit. While the government had allocated $2 billion towards public transit as part of the Green TRIP, they cancelled that at the first sign of reduced government revenues. They've cut that back now to $195 million, so approximately under 10 per cent of what they had committed. Clearly, public transit is not a priority of the government.

What is, then, Mr. Chairman, a priority of the government? What things have they given priority to? Well, I think the first thing that we can say is that they are committed to the carbon capture and storage program and have retained the $2 billion in previous surpluses that they had allocated towards that. Now, that is not something to reduce emissions but to bury them, and it is something that places the taxpayer on the hook for at least the first $2 billion, when the very wealthy corporations, like Syncrude, Suncor, and in fact the power companies that produce electricity from coal, are being essentially subsidized. The subsidization of power companies and tar sands operators is a priority of the government, unlike seniors.

I think we saw some other priorities the other day. It's clearly a priority of the government to support the oil industry and the conventional oil industry in these times of economic downturn. I think we can see a pattern. We begin to get an inkling of what the priorities are going to be when the actual budget comes down on April 7.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. If the Minister of Environment is willing, I would like to combine our two 10 minutes into one 20-minute exchange. Is the minister willing to do that?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm more than willing to do anything that the member desires. However, I think I made it pretty clear that I don't really know that there is an opportunity for exchange because of the nature of the business at hand. I don't know that there are any questions that I can answer beyond those that I already have. If the member wishes to speak for 20 minutes, that's fine with me. I don't know that I have enough information to contribute to go back and forth for 20 minutes.

Ms Blakeman: Fair enough.

The Chair: Hon. member, do you want to take the 20 minutes?

Ms Blakeman: Yeah, I will. Definitely.

The Chair: All right.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. If the minister signals that he's interested in answering, we'll let 'er rip.

I think that a number of my colleagues have already spoken of their frustration over the process, and I have certainly been on record a number of times over the years expressing my frustration. I mean, the government has complete and total control over how this House runs. They can call us in any time they want. They can add on night sittings if they want. With a 72-member majority they can pretty well have their way any way they want it. There's not a lot we can do about it. [interjection] I can see that the Member for Calgary-Nose Hill is excited about that thought.

The truth of the matter is that this budgeting process is up to the government, and they can do better. Any sort of feeble protestations that there have been a number of things that have stood in their way – well, they could have just decided to get around it.

I remember once the Government House Leader getting up and saying: "Well, I mean, who says that we have to have a budget as of this date? You know, budgets can come in any time. They can come in all year." True enough. But we have a fiscal year that starts on the 1st of April, and there's an expectation that there is money to pay for things as of the 1st of April. The logical response that flows from that is that the budget would be passed prior to that. We need about a six-week run, so you're really looking at the need to have a budget come in by the middle of February.

What we've seen is that this very, very late budget – we're now talking into April – has become the new norm. The result of that is that it makes it very difficult for groups that have to then perform their budget process to be fiscally responsible and have their planning completed as per the timelines that are placed on them. I'm talking about what used to be the RHAs but would now be the sort of local hospital boards, how they're going to use their money.

School boards are another group across the province that are expected to have plans in place that are reflecting the government's, and they can't do it because they don't know how much money they've got coming. I mean, in starting this budget process at the beginning of April, it will be almost the end of May before we're done. So that's two full months into the fiscal year. At that point the school boards will know how much money.

We've got a number of previous school board trustees that are now elected members, and I'd be very interested in hearing what they have to say about, you know, their experience on a school board and how not getting your budget figures would affect you. The Member for Calgary-Mackay was on the school board. The Member for Edmonton-Decore was on the school board. Oh, yes, there's the Member for Calgary-North Hill, who was on the school board. Bonnyville-Cold Lake was a school board trustee, I think. There are lots of people in here with direct experience of the effect of that. I never hear them say anything, and I'm sure that their former colleagues that are still on school boards would appreciate it if they would say something.

I want to move on and look directly at the interim supply budget for Environment. As I went through this, what I noticed is that the interim supply for the Ministry of Environment is substantially lower than most of the other supply amounts that have been requested for the other ministries. We've had a $63 million request for Environment and $1 million in nonbudgetary disbursements. I mean, aside from very small ministries like International and Intergovernmental Relations – we don't mean to diminish in any way the importance of International and Intergovernmental Relations. It's requesting, like, $10 million. Fair enough. Obviously, the Environment request for $64 million is higher than that, but in comparison to a number of the other ones – you're looking at Education, which has a request of $1,143,000,000. Employment and Immigration is $255.8 million. Health and Wellness, of course, is huge; it's asking for, you know, over $3 billion. Even Housing and Urban Affairs is asking for $133 million. Municipal Affairs, $588 million; Seniors, $640 million. Then you have Environment at $64 million.

One of the questions that I would like the minister to answer if he's able to – this is a noticeable difference – is why the supply request from his department is so much smaller than the supply request from other departments that are of equal size in total budget and in many cases even of smaller size in total budget. They've actually requested more money. I know that sometimes ministries need upfront money. You know, they've got projects that happen during the summer, and they need to pay for those before they get there. Fair enough. But you'd think that there would be activity in the Environment department that was happening during the summer, yet it is still, I think, next to International and Intergovernmental Relations the smallest supply request that we've got here this year. I'm just wondering if the minister can comment on that.

Mr. Renner: Mr. Chairman, I will comment on that. I think that the member actually answered her own question. The reason is that because of the nature of the business that we have in Alberta Environment, we don't have the degree of granting and that subsequent front-end loading that many other ministries have. The details of the budget will come out on budget day, when the budget document itself is tabled. I can assure the hon. member that there are more than adequate funds included in this appropriation so that we will not be out of business before the Legislative Assembly gets around to passing the budget.

Ms Blakeman: Okay. Thank you very much for responding to that question. We don't know what the budget amount is at this point, so when I look at the request of me as a member of the Assembly to grant money to the government, my question is always: what for, and is there a way of sort of verifying that? Often that's about having standards set, it's about monitoring the work that's going on, and it's about enforcement of the work that's going on. Obviously, we don't have the budget, so I can't ask some of those questions. I thought: well, what is a way that I can look at this and say, "Is it reasonable to grant this money?" Okay. It's about performance. All righty-ho.

I went back and I looked at the Auditor General's recommendations for the Environment ministry. These appear, by the way, in the October 2008 report, and specifically I'm looking at page 382. These are recommendations that have been raised in the past that have not been successfully met or implemented. Two of the ones that are raised here, in fact, have been raised multiples times. One of them originally was from the 1998-99 report, and that is about enhancing approval systems. Now, in '98-99 there wasn't a system of numbering or of grading and giving priority to certain Auditor General recommendations; they all sort of came out the same. So this doesn't have a number on it, but that doesn't mean that it wasn't important.

This is appearing on page 159 of the '98-99 report under Environmental Protection. "It is recommended that the Department of Environment enhance the systems that support the Approvals process. Attention should be directed to issues of management information and data completeness." Now, this recommendation was originally brought forward, as I said, in '98-99. It was repeated in 2000-2001. It was repeated again in 2004-05. So three times the Auditor General has followed up and said that there has been unsatisfactory progress on implementing this.

It is specific to financial security for land disturbances because what this was talking about was the environment management system, that automated system that supports an approvals process. Staff have to rely on this environment management system, and the information has to be complete and accurate and timely. The work at the time suggested that there were a number of issues that had not been completely addressed around the timeliness of the approval process.

There was no system, for example, to track how long it takes to process an approval, and some approvals cannot be reviewed on the EMS document viewer. That has yet to be accomplished. And I thought: "Well, okay. I'm being asked to approve money to a department to operate for a period of three months." But when I go back and look at performance and I say, "Well, is there anything outstanding there that I should be bringing to attention and saying: you need to do this before I, you know, can support your request for additional money?" there's an example of it.

Second example was in 2002-03. On page 103 was a recommendation. We're now numbering the recommendations, so it's recommendation 12 recommending "that the Ministry of Environment implement an integrated information system to track contaminated sites in Alberta." Well, Mr. Chairman, what goes around comes around because I'm pretty sure – well, yes, it would be just yesterday that I asked a question in this House about contaminated sites and how taxpayers were now going to get the honour and the privilege of forking out $30 million more than they did the day before to help pay for contaminated sites that oil and gas companies had walked away from. So here was the beginning of this recommendation that has yet to be implemented to the satisfaction of the Auditor General and is turning up again in the October '08 recommendations. That originally, as I said, came up in '02-03, and the recommendation was made again in '05-06.

Then there are a series of other ones that were brought forward in '05-06, which tells me that there was a concentration on that department in that year, and most of these are around drinking water. I'm just guessing that this is probably following along on Walkerton and the one in Saskatchewan, wherever that was. On page 37 we've got recommendation 1 recommending that the Department of Environment make its system to issue approvals and registrations more effective by:

- Strengthening supporting processes such as training, manuals, checklists, and quality control . . .
- Ensuring that applications are complete and legislatively compliant,
- Documenting important decisions in the application and registration processes,
- Processing applications and conversions promptly,
- Maintaining consistency in the wording of approvals and registrations across the province, and
- Following up short-term conditions in approvals.

Environment issues place-based drinking water approvals. Registered facilities follow a provincial code of practice. Mechanisms to promote consistency in approval writing.

3:50

Their findings were: training, support materials, and mentoring can improve; template not updated for five years; a quality assurance function would promote best practices in approval writing; resourcing issues have caused backlogs; not all applications were legislatively compliant or complete. It goes on for several pages. As I say, that recommendation has still not been dealt with to the satisfaction of the Auditor General. It continues to be noted in outstanding recommendations, which means that they're outstanding; they haven't been fulfilled.

When we look at page 43, we see a key recommendation, and that's recommendation 2, that the department improve its drinking water inspection processes by:

- Applying the same inspection frequency targets to all water-works regulated by the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act,

- Ensuring inspectors receive sufficient training in waterworks systems and operations,
- Revising documentation tools and practices, including making them more risk focused, and
- Informing operators promptly of inspection results, ensuring operators respond appropriately, and concluding on each inspection.

That's a highlighted recommendation. So it's a key recommendation, meaning very, very important and a high priority, coming from the Auditor General, and that is still outstanding.

We go to page 49 of the report of '05-06. Again, recommendation 3, a numbered recommendation, that the department update its strategies to deal with the Province's needs for certified water treatment operators.

Going to page 52, a key recommendation, recommendation 4: improve the information systems used to manage its drinking water . . . by:

- Updating EMS forms and improving reporting capacity,

Where have we heard that one before? That would be in '98-99.

- Co-ordinating regional, district, and personal information systems to avoid overlap and encourage best practice, and
- Using data to improve program effectiveness and efficiency.

Moving on, we had recommendation 5, which is actually not leaping off the page at me here, page 48, recommending that the department at the district level expand its communication with partners involved in drinking water matters.

Volume 2, page 84, recommendation 28, that the department improve its system to regulate water well drilling by:

- Ensuring that drillers and drilling companies meet approval requirements;
- Implementing controls to ensure that water well drilling reports are:
 - received on time,
 - complete and accurate, and
 - accurately entered into the Groundwater Information System.

There we had six unmet recommendations on drinking water, one on water well drilling and then on contaminated sites and financial security for land disturbances. So a fair number of things that are outstanding, and the requirements have not been met there.

I realize, Mr. Chairman, that my time is running out, and I will endeavour to negotiate with my colleagues to get back on the speaking list again because I think one of the great concerns that Albertans have identified to me and to other members and to the government is the issue of water: clean, safe, fresh drinking water for Albertans.

Then we look at a request from the government, "Please, give us more money in order to operate," essentially unscrutinized at this point, because once we grant that interim money, they're good to go until the end of June. They have enough operating money there. Yet this issue of largest concern to people, which is drinking water, fresh water for Albertans to use, Albertans first, there are a number of recommendations from the Auditor General that have not been met, nor could I find – and perhaps the minister can point it out to me – any reasoning from the department as to why those recommendations are still outstanding. This was as of October 2008, so it's not as though I'm way out of date on this. Yes, some of the recommendations have been brought forward from past years, but they continue to be unmet as of October 2008. I think the concern that's expressed to me is our capacity to . . . [Ms Blakeman's speaking time expired] Shoot.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Okay. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I will get back up and rejoin the debate here. I want to get back to a few general points and a few general questions if I can at this point, and depending on how long it takes me to elucidate the specificities of my obfuscation or whatever, I may get onto some specifics here in this round as well.

I was talking earlier about the notion that we wouldn't even need to be doing a debate on interim supply if we could just fix a date on an annual basis that the budget would be brought down and fix it about two weeks after we come into this House so that we could debate the budget and pass it in time for it to take effect at the beginning of the fiscal year. What a revolutionary concept. However, that hasn't been done yet, so we are in debate on interim supply, a debate that brings with it the issue of the granting of money without a sufficient amount of detail on the amounts being debated. We have $10 billion worth of very vague spending requests here.

We know that Advanced Education and Technology, for instance, needs $744,300,000 to get it through the next few weeks in expense and equipment/inventory purchases and another $34,900,000 in nonbudgetary disbursements. We know that Culture and Community Spirit needs $97.2 million for expense and equipment/inventory purchases and $300,000 for nonbudgetary disbursements. We know that Energy needs almost $134 million. We know that Education needs $1.142 billion. We know that Health and Wellness needs $3,238,000,000 for expense and equipment/inventory purchases and another $4.8 million for capital investment, but we don't really know any of the specifics involved there. We just know that Health and Wellness needs a lot of money because Health and Wellness always needs a lot of money because it's a very expensive portfolio. We know that Housing and Urban Affairs needs $133,100,000, but all we know that it needs that for is as an expense. We don't even have the line "expense and equipment/inventory purchases" there. And on it goes. It all tallies up, totals up, to about $10 billion.

It's very difficult to get into any kind of meaningful debate. I think the hon. Deputy Government House Leader has conceded as much in some of his comments here this afternoon. It's very difficult to get into any kind of meaningful debate about these significant monetary amounts when there's no information to go along with it, no detail.

Another point that has to be made is about the lack of budget management, which was highlighted yesterday when we debated the second supplementary supply request of the year. We know going forward that whatever comes down on April 7 will be a budget that will be somewhat different from recent years for no other reason than the government has already admitted that there will be a deficit in fiscal '09-10 and we have significant declines in revenue from oil and gas.

I'm going to throw out some questions and see if we get any answers back today or any time before April 7. It's not likely, but one should live in hope, especially on a Thursday afternoon.

What is the estimated deficit for the 2009-10 fiscal year? [interjection] The minister of health just said: there's the $64 million question. However, hon. member, I'm willing to bet that the deficit is going to be more than $64 million. Call it a crazy hunch.

How does this interim supply reflect the current economic situation? Now, there's a question I would love to know the answer to before we start debating the budget. How does this $10 billion here, the upfront money, the down payment on our operations for the year, reflect the current economic situation?

I mean, I leaf through this skinny little book, and I see that Employment and Immigration needs $255,800,000 for expense and equipment/inventory purchases. I note that we debated some money for Employment and Immigration in supplementary supply yesterday. I note that the Minister of Employment and Immigration gave some answers yesterday that indicated, not surprisingly, that there were areas where extra spending needed to be undertaken by his department because of the change in our economic conditions and the subsequent job losses, the need for more retraining money and things like that. But I cannot tell from the interim supply document how the $255,800,000 request from Employment and Immigration in interim supply reflects the current economic situation. I would like to know that. I would like to know that specifically of the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

I'd like to know specifically from the health minister how the $3.2 billion interim request in his department plus the $4.8 million in capital investment reflects the current economic situation. What does the $4.8 million in capital investment mean? It's a very small percentage. It's about 1 per cent of the amount of capital grants in his department, in his ministry, that the finance minister told us last week in the Q3 fiscal update have been delayed, are being postponed, are being rescheduled and reprioritized and all of that.

She said at the time that those repositioning and reprioritization issues from capital grants are based on the notion that for one reason or another that was money they intended to spend on capital projects this year that they just couldn't get around to. I don't know. They couldn't get the building permit. They couldn't find the guy to pour the concrete pad. I'm not sure what it was, you know, but the point remains that whatever the reason for not getting around to it this year, there's going to be one heck of a lot less incentive to getting around to it next year, when there isn't nearly as much money to play with, I would think.

I hear this government talk repeatedly and I've heard the finance minister talk often about the notion that this government is going to continue with its infrastructure spending. I hear them talk about it in terms of regarding infrastructure spending as an economic stimulus program that is already well under way, that anticipated this downturn, I guess. But when I hear talk about infrastructure spending, it sounds to me like roads and sewer lines and waterlines and that sort of thing. It doesn't sound like there's a tremendous commitment to capital projects involving, you know, hospital facilities that the people of this province need: long-term care, continuing care, assisted living, whatever level you want it to operate at. There doesn't seem to be the commitment to involve itself in economically stimulating infrastructure or capital projects, built things, public works for the public good that the public of Alberta need, that you can't make out of asphalt or gravel, and I would like to know about that.

Do these estimates include the department belt-tightening that the finance minister stated was necessary for the upcoming fiscal year, or will cuts not be reflected in spending until the budget is released? Well, really, Mr. Chairman, there's no way to tell just looking at these documents – is there? – whether there's any cutting of spending happening or not. Can't tell. I'd like to know. I'd like to have known before this.

I come back to the point that I made earlier, that it doesn't really matter whether you bring the budget in on April 7 or you bring the budget in on February 24 or you put it off until August, you know. The day you bring the budget down, things are still going to be uncertain and unstable because that's just the nature of the times we live in. You've got to make the call or get out of the phone booth. Unfortunately, when you've got a government to run, you've got to make the call because they need the money.

How does the list of capital investment reflect the third-quarter fiscal update's stated reprofiling and rescheduling of capital grants?

[Mr. Taylor's speaking time expired] How could that time have flown by so soon? I leave it to others.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Ms Blakeman: Well, how lucky can you get? I get another chance at this. I would have thought there would be all those people that wanted to get up and speak about this budget.

Mr. Taylor: You were about to shoot something when the clock went off, weren't you?

Ms Blakeman: Well, no. The "shoot" was an expression of my disappointment that I couldn't keep going.

Okay. I'm going back again following on my concept that if I'm going to give somebody more money, I'm going to look at how well they're doing with the money I gave them last time.

Going back to the October 2008 Auditor General's report. Now, of course, you will remember that there was a very large report done in here on climate change, Alberta's response to climate change. There were a number of recommendations that were made as a result of this. Let me be clear: I'm not finding fault with the Department of Energy for not having accomplished all of this because, frankly, they've had six months, and I wouldn't require that of them. It does tell you the amount of work that needs to be done.

Let me just take a step back here. I think one of my concerns and one of the things that I would like to know is if the money that we're allocating here today is going to go to a change in direction. Because what I've seen from this department is that it's not about protecting the environment; it is about sort of getting out of the way of the Department of Energy and what the Department of Energy wishes to do. I think we need to change that.

We need to refocus so that our Department of Environment is about protecting the environment: first of all, for Albertans, the people; secondly, for our biosphere, literally the environment that we have here, our wetlands and our water, and allowing those particular bioenvironments to stay healthy; and third, for an economic development.

Don't mistake me and don't get all upset and go run around saying: oh, the Member for Edmonton-Centre got up and said, you know, that we should stop all oil and gas and nonrenewable natural resource development in the province. That's not what I'm saying. But we do need to put a focus on protecting the environment while that development happens. In some cases maybe the development might have to take a step aside while we put some protections in place.

I've already identified water as a key concern of Albertans. It has been something where the department has not met the requirements and met the recommendations. That's about an attest auditing. That's about recording what you've done and how you've spent the money. As we start to move into systems audit, it is about: did you get value for money? Did you accomplish for the money you had what you said you were trying to do? It's a much more complicated way of looking at it, but ultimately it gives us tools as legislators to be better able to answer the questions of our constituents as to: did we get what we thought we were paying for? Did we get it? Did we get healthier babies and fewer low-weight babies? Did we get that? Well, you might have to do a number of things to achieve that. Did we get, you know, clean drinking water for every Albertan? That may be harder to achieve than it sounds at the first go.

We did have a systems audit done on Alberta's response to climate change. I would have to say that the biggest thing that comes out of this is that we don't know because we are not keeping track of things well enough and monitoring things well enough to be able to give ourselves a benchmark from which to measure that.

Some recommendations were set out by the Auditor General, in this case recommendation 9. Again, it's a numbered recommendation, so that's a serious recommendation. It recommends some areas of improvement for the department.

- establishing overall criteria for selecting climate-change actions.
- creating and maintaining a master implementation plan for the actions necessary to meet the emissions-intensity target for 2020 and the emissions-reduction target for 2050.
- corroborating – through modelling and other analysis – that the actions chosen by the ministry [actually] result in Alberta being on track for achieving its targets for 2020 and 2050.

So what we're learning here is that we actually can't tell how well we're doing in moving forward on climate change.

The government did not consistently consider cost-effectiveness when it decided to establish climate-change programs to fulfill the 2002 Plan.

I'm looking at the bottom of page 98 in the October 2008 AG report. It did consider cost-effectiveness for the energy retrofit program and for the Specified Gas Emitters program . . . [but the cost] of Me First! and the Bioenergy programs were known at the planning stages, but the amount of emissions reductions expected at the planning stage . . . was not documented.

So we have no way of knowing.

We've started implementation plans, but we don't know how we're progressing along with that. We don't have the overall criteria for selecting the projects to fulfill the 2002 plan and haven't developed overall criteria for selecting projects to fulfill the 2008 strategy. Well, that's gone.

The ministry does not know the best route to achieve reductions. The actions will achieve target, but we can't corroborate them. Major actions were not modelled, and where they did model action, it wasn't included in the plan.

We have an additional numbered recommendation 10, that "for each major action in the 2008 Climate Change Strategy, the Ministry of Environment evaluate the action's effect in achieving Alberta's climate change goals."

Recommendation 11 is that the ministry "improve the reliability, comparability and relevance of its public reporting on Alberta's success and costs incurred in meeting climate-change targets."

If I could recommend this to anybody that's trying to track along, you can download this from the Auditor General's site and read it yourself. It's a good way of understanding where we're at and gives us some standards to measure the progress of the department.

Here we have a department that is requesting $63 million plus a million dollars in nonbudgetary disbursements. We've been told by the minister, in response to one of my questions earlier today, that there's no front-end loading on this, that most of their projects just roll through, and that this $64 million plus a million dollars is going to be enough to take them through. But we have no sense of this and, as a number of my colleagues have noted, no details to understand what exactly is going to be done in those first three months. Actually, by the time the budget will be approved, now by the end of May, two full months will have passed in which we did not know what the government was going to be doing.

The reaction I usually get about this point from members of the government is: well, hang on; we have a three-year process here, so you can tell what's going on if you go back and look at the three-year budgeting process. Yes, she said cautiously, but every time I look at that, it has shifted so much that you really cannot compare year to year. One of the ways of watching that is the performance measurements, which, again, absolutely disappear. You look and there's a whole new series of performance measurements which all say that there is no benchmark because they're developing it. The idea of this three-year rolling budget is one that we should be attempting, but we've got to try a little harder to get closer to actually sticking to it.

Of course, we've now had a huge change in our finances. Part of what I'm trying to dig out from everything I can read about the department's plans is: will this change in the economy, will the change in the price per barrel of oil affect what the Department of Environment is going to be doing to protect our environment? How are they going to end up moving forward? Will there be cuts in what the department is going to be doing during this fiscal year?

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Taylor: And the hits just keep on coming, Mr. Chairman. Up again. When the little beeper went off last time, I was just starting to ask about the third-quarter fiscal update and the reprofiling and the rescheduling of capital grants therein and asking if we can draw any kind of relationship or correlation. I'm hoping I will get an answer back from somebody on the government side sometime before the budget, but not holding my breath, on how the list of capital investments in the interim supply reflects the third-quarter fiscal update's reprofiling and rescheduling of capital grants. Will there be a significant slowdown in capital spending in the upcoming years? How much of this interim spending, how much of this $10 billion, is the result of the budget being delayed? I know the easy answer – all of it – but in real terms how much of this spending is as a result of the budget being delayed?

Here are a couple of things I'd like to know. Given that we are in such perilous times, such unpredictable times that the government has had to put off the budget until early April, will the government be reducing travel expenditures and hosting expenses and vehicle allowances and nice-to-do, nice-to-have things like that, fluffy, perky things that perhaps ought not to be indulged in when times are not good? I wonder if we'll get an answer to that. This is something I would love to know. This is something I would love for someone on the government side . . .

Mr. MacDonald: The details on the health care budget?

Mr. Taylor: Oh, that, too. I'd like to know that.

This is what I'd love to know if somebody on the government side of the House will spill this before budget day: what kind of cost-cutting advice was given to all these ministers from the Finance minister? Were there any specific areas highlighted for reducing expenditures? Do we see any of that reflected in these interim reports?

Ms Blakeman: Is that what he's waiting for with bated breath?

Mr. Taylor: Is somebody waiting for something with bated breath?

Ms Blakeman: Yeah. The minister of health.

Mr. Taylor: The minister of health is waiting for something with bated breath. How can I help him?

Mr. MacDonald: The budget.

Mr. Taylor: Oh, he's waiting for the budget with bated breath. The minister of health says he doesn't know how much money he's going to have. Gosh, I'd have to ask him back: when does he get to find that out? Do you get any clue before budget day?

Mr. Liepert: April 7.

Mr. Taylor: April 7. So what do you do as a cabinet minister between now and April 7? Do you just kind of sit there, you know, twiddling your thumbs and wondering what's going to come? You rely on interim supply, obviously, to pay the bills between now and then, so when all of this is said and done and when we're finished asking questions and you're finished not answering them, you're going to have, Minister, your $3,242,800,000 to get you through until the new Visa card comes in the mail – I mean until the budget comes – but you're still not going to know what the situation is for the new fiscal year. What are your spending plans? I will put this to the health minister: what are your spending plans for this money, for the $3,242,800,000, the $3,238,000,000 in expense and equipment/inventory purchases and the $4,800,000 in capital investment? What are your spending plans for that money from the time this gets approved?

4:20

Mr. Liepert: Avastin.

Mr. Taylor: It's not all going to go to Avastin, and you know that very well.

Mr. Liepert: Part of it will.

Mr. Taylor: Part of it will, but one would think a fairly small part of it. One would think a fairly small part of it. Do you stay the course with the spending that you've been doing? Do you cut back? Do you save some of this in case it turns out that you're going to need it because you've had your spending cut in some other area as your budget has been reduced? What kinds of thoughts go through the health minister's mind, I wonder, when he's in this situation, when you're heading out to get yourself and your department through the next few weeks until we've finished the budget debate, till we have the budget? I'm very curious – very curious – as to what that would be like. I would love to be a fly on the wall, you know. I would love to be a fly on the wall.

You know, you look at the health budget, for instance, and I keep coming back to the $400 million in capital grants reprofiled from the '08-09 budget. What was that? What's being delayed? Are we going to get three floors out of a six-floor expansion of the Peter Lougheed hospital in Calgary? Is that going to go ahead or not? Is this going to have an impact on construction of the new south Calgary hospital? Are things going to come to a grinding halt, or are they going to slow down there? What other hospitals in what other communities, Grande Prairie for instance, are right off the books as a result of this or delayed? Who gets to move to the back of the line again is really the question. There are many health facilities that are under review – Fort Saskatchewan, Grande Prairie, the south Calgary campus, the Lougheed expansion – and there's $400 million in delayed projects, so you've got to figure something's not going ahead that we thought was going to go ahead.

Now, if I can refer back to the example of the city that I know best, Calgary, you think back to the experience with the expansion of the Rockyview general hospital and how they built that. They opened all the new beds, and then they closed all the old beds because they didn't have the staff to staff the expanded facility. So they basically moved the patients from the old beds into the new beds, moved the staff from the old beds into the new beds, closed down the old beds with a net loss of five or six beds. When all that capital money was spent on the expansion of that phase of the Rockyview, we ended up with a smaller hospital than we had before we started building.

I'd love to know how that happened or why. I would love to know because, I mean, a hospital is not like putting a new granite countertop on your counter in the kitchen. It's not something you just do in a day or so. It's not like laying new carpet, right? It takes a while to build a hospital. It takes a very long while to build a hospital in Calgary, and it takes a fairly long time to expand a hospital.

The Calgary health region, which no longer exists because of the restructuring that we're going through, came to the realization four or five years ago now that: "Holy bleep. We don't have enough beds for our population. We'd better start building some more hospital facilities." They embarked on an ambitious and unquestionably expensive program to try and expand the Rockyview, to try and expand the Peter Lougheed, to put the new Sheldon Chumir urgent care centre downtown, to put urgent care centres in various other parts of the city, to do a pretty significant rebuild on part of the Foothills hospital. All that, Mr. Chair, was just to get us through till the new hospital opened.

The Chair: It's 4:25. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie. Pursuant to Standing Order 4(3), which requires that the Committee of Supply rise and report prior to the time of adjournment, the Committee of Supply shall now and rise and report.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Vandermeer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions relating to the 2009-2010 interim supply estimates for the offices of the Legislative Assembly, the general revenue fund, and the lottery fund for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2010, reports progress, and requests leave to sit again.

The Deputy Speaker: Does Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.
The Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I now move that the Assembly stand adjourned until 1:30 p.m. on Monday.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 4:27 p.m. to Monday at 1:30 p.m.]

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Welcome back.

Let us pray. We give thanks for Your abundant blessings to our province and to ourselves. We ask for Your guidance with our deliberations in our Chamber and the will to follow it. Amen.

Hon. members and ladies and gentlemen, we'll now be led in the singing of our national anthem by Mr. Paul Lorieau. I would invite all here to join in and to participate in the language of one's choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation.

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly the consul general of Greece, Mr. Georgios Ayfantis. Mr. Ayfantis is on his first official visit to Alberta, and I was pleased to be able to host a lunch with him today. As he pointed out, one thing we do share is that we're both great places for tourism. With the weather outside I know the hon. members would like to perhaps be visiting Greece today. There are almost 12,000 Albertans of Hellenic descent, and they help enrich the Alberta culture. Every summer Calgary holds a Greek festival to promote Hellenic culture with food, dance, and music. I'd ask Mr. Ayfantis to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Mr. Goudreau: Merci, M. le Président. Aujourd'hui j'ai le privilège de présenter en votre nom, à vous et à l'Assemblée, des leaders de la communauté francophone de l'Alberta. Ils ont participé ce matin à la cérémonie dans la rotonde de la Législature à l'occasion des Rendez-vous de la Francophonie, une célébration nationale annuelle de l'histoire et de la culture françaises.

Je suis heureux de vous présenter les membres exécutifs de l'Association canadienne-française de l'Alberta. L'association, connue sous l'acronyme l'ACFA, est l'organisme porte-parole des francophones. L'ACFA a son bureau provincial à Edmonton et chapeaute 14 bureaux régionaux ou cercles locaux à travers la province. Le gouvernement de l'Alberta est fier de la relation positive qu'il a construite avec l'ACFA, et ensemble nous sommes engagés à améliorer le bien-être et l'autonomie des francophones en Alberta. Présents parmi nous aujourd'hui sont Mme Dolorèse Nolette, vice-présidente de l'ACFA, représentante du nord-ouest; Mme Jeanne Robinson et Reed Gauthier, représentants du nord-est;

Mme Carole Anne Patenaude; représentante de la région du centre, Mme Omayra Issa; et M. Denis Perreux, directeur général.

Les accompagnants pour cette journée spéciale à la Législature sont M. Denis Tardif, Cindie LeBlanc, et Manon Hamel, membres de mon équipe au Secrétariat francophone. Je leur demanderais de se lever et être reconnus par l'Assemblée.

Je vous invite à vous joindre à moi pour leur souhaiter une bienvenue chaleureuse.

Merci, M. le Président.

[Translation] Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I have the privilege of introducing to you and through you to Members of the Legislative Assembly a number of leaders from Alberta's francophone community who participated this morning in a ceremony in the Legislature rotunda as part of Les Rendez-vous de la Francophonie, a national two-week celebration of French culture and history.

I am pleased to introduce executive members of the French Canadian Association of Alberta. The association, commonly known as the ACFA, is the provincial organization representing all francophones. The ACFA has a provincial secretariat in Edmonton and 14 regional, or affiliate, chapters across the province. The Alberta government is proud of the positive relations it has built with the ACFA and commits to supporting initiatives that will enhance the well-being and self-reliance of French-speaking Albertans. I would ask our guests to stand as I introduce them: Vice-President Mrs. Dolorèse Nolette, representing the northwest; Mrs. Jeanne Robinson and Reed Gauthier, representing the northeast; Mrs. Carole-Anne Patenaude; representing the central region, Mrs. Omayra Issa; accompanied by Director General Mr. Denis Perreux.

Also joining them on this special day at the Legislature are members of my staff at the Francophone Secretariat: Mr. Denis Tardif, executive director; Ms Cindie LeBlanc, assistant director; Ms Manon Hamel, community liaison officer for southern Alberta.

I would ask all of the members of the Assembly to give these guests a very warm welcome to our Legislature. [As submitted]

The Speaker: Hon. members, today is also Commonwealth Day. All hon. members will have on their desks a message from Her Majesty the Queen, head of the Commonwealth.

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, today we celebrate the 60th anniversary of the Commonwealth, which is comprised of 53 member states and over a third of the world's population. I'd like to introduce to you and all members of the Assembly three directors of the Edmonton branch of the Royal Commonwealth Society of Canada who are seated in your gallery. These individuals work diligently in carrying out the important work of the society in Alberta and across the globe. They are Major Alexander Tsang, Mrs. Sheri Paquette, and Reverend Joshua Phillpotts. I'd ask that they now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Stelmach: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a young gentleman with a genuine interest in Alberta politics, and that is Mr. Dawson Wikkerink. He is seated in the members' gallery. I've had the pleasure of meeting Dawson on several occasions both in Lethbridge and in Raymond. Dawson and his family, Wayne and Anne and his brother J.R., live and farm just 15 kilometres outside of Lethbridge. Dawson is currently in grade 3 at Fleetwood Bawden school and has been a keen follower of our political process. In fact, when it's his turn for sharing with his classmates, he provides regular updates of our political processes, including both the recent leadership and the general election. I know that farming is in Dawson's blood, and so is politics.

A memory that I will always cherish. I had made a comment to the media when I was in Lethbridge, correctly put by the media, that we sold our cow herd and that I kind of missed early spring, you know, when the calves are running around the field with tails up in the air, really spirited. He was kind enough to send me a picture to my office of their first-born calf last year. Dawson, I would welcome you and your dad, Wayne Wikkerink. Please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a wonderful group of 37 grade 6 students from Brander Gardens elementary school, located in my constituency of Edmonton-Whitemud. Accompanying the students are their teachers, Natalie Gago-Estevés and Daniel Lemieux, along with teacher aide Mrs. Carroll. They are seated in the public gallery, and I would ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, it's also my pleasure to introduce to you and through you today a number of Alberta Education employees whose innovative work on Speak Out, the Alberta student engagement initiative, has gained momentum across Alberta and high praise with education stakeholders, parents, the media, and, most importantly, the students themselves. Seated in the members' gallery and representing Alberta Education are Jennifer Keller, director of student engagement; Litzy Baeza, manager of student engagement; Sandra Dyal, Speak Out forums co-ordinator; Jamie Stewart, co-ordinator of student engagement; and Greg Kuzniuk, public affairs officer. These fine individuals are responsible for motivating Alberta's youth to participate in an ongoing province-wide forum on education, and they deserve the appreciation of the Assembly and all Albertans for raising the level of discussion in an engagement of our students. I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two groups to introduce today. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly a group of 32 visitors from Boyle school, who are in all week for the School at the Leg. They are led by their parents and teachers Emily Thomson, Tracey Currie, Bonnie Antal, Karen Douglas, Cheryl Snyder, Curtis Gunderson, Dale Bencharsky, and grandpa Tom Ghostkeeper, who worked in this building for five years. I believe they're in the members' gallery behind me, and I'd ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, I'd also like to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly 14 visitors from the New Horizons seniors' club in Radway: Allan and Cecilia Holt, Norm West, Esther West, Lena Chykerda, Helen Kuchmak, Mike Halun, Alphie Delorme, Martha Delorme, Joy Langley, Nick Kuchmak, Harold Moffitt, Nestor Buryn, and Ruby Burkosky. They will be entering and leaving during question period, but I'd like to acknowledge their presence here today and welcome them to the Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I have the privilege of introducing to you and through you to the Members of the Legislative Assembly a number of very special guests from my constituency. They sang for us here this morning during the symbolic Franco-Albertan flag-raising ceremony in the Legislature rotunda as part of Les Rendez-vous de la Francophonie, the national two-week celebration of French culture and history. It is with great pleasure that I introduce the grade 6 students from l'école Père-Lacombe, who I believe are in the public gallery: teacher M. Mathieu Brosseau-Tremblay and parent helpers Mme Lise Roy-Maxwell and Mme Adeline Viens. I'd ask them all to please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a great pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to this House 24 very brilliant students from Patricia Heights elementary school and from my constituency of Edmonton-McClung. Accompanying them is their teacher, Mrs. Beverly Oldford, and parents Mrs. Angela McEwen, Mrs. Lisa Hamdon, Mrs. Tina Choucair, and Mrs. Krista Leddy. I'd ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today with two introductions. My first is to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly two representatives from the University of Calgary: Mr. Gary Durbeniuk and Mr. Brian Wik. Gary is the vice-president of development at the University of Calgary. In 2007-08 his department raised over $82 million to support scholarships, bursaries, research, and new learning spaces at the University of Calgary. Brian Wik, University of Calgary's senior director of government relations, is responsible for maintaining effective working relationships with the provincial government. I would like to thank them both for their ongoing commitment to the University of Calgary and to students in Alberta and abroad. They're seated in the members' gallery this afternoon. I would ask that they please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

It is also an honour for me to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly members of the Council of Alberta University Students, or CAUS. They are an advisory group of presidents and vice-presidents of students' unions from universities around the province who are meeting with the members of the Assembly all this week. They are seated in the members' gallery this afternoon, and I would ask that they would each stand as I call their name to receive the warm welcome of the Assembly. They are Beverly Eastham, CAUS chair and recently re-elected vice-president external at the University of Alberta; Jenn Prosser, CAUS vice-chair and U of L Students' Union vice-president academic; Janelle Morin, University of Alberta Students' Union president; Dalmy Baez, University of Calgary Students' Union president; Alastair MacKinnon, University of Calgary Students' Union vice-president external; Lauren Webber, recently elected as external commissioner at the University of Calgary and daughter of the Member for Calgary-Foothills; Adam Vossepoel, University of Lethbridge Students' Union president; Kendall Yamagishi, University of Lethbridge

Students' Union academic commissioner; and Duncan Wojtaszek, executive director of CAUS. They are now standing in the members' gallery, and I'd ask that you give them the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to rise today and introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly Mr. Stanley Swensen, seated in the members' gallery this afternoon. Mr. Swensen is a memorial counsellor for Remco Memorials in Didsbury, in the constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. He earned his doctorate of veterinary medicine in 1971 from Western College of Veterinary Medicine at the University of Saskatchewan. What a great school. He is also a graduate of Rocky Mountain College, biblical studies, where he earned his bachelor of arts in education. He and his wife, Linda, have two daughters, Cynthia Dawn and Amanda Jane. He's joining us today to get a better look at how things operate in this Legislature. I'd ask that Mr. Swensen please rise and accept the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege today to introduce to you and all members of the Assembly one of the true statesmen of Alberta business, chairman of the board of the ATCO Group of companies, truly a family that shares with many, many communities in Alberta. It's my pleasure to introduce Mr. Ron Southern. Would Ron stand and please accept the warm, traditional welcome of this Assembly?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise and introduce to you and through you to all hon. members of this Legislative Assembly my brother John MacDonald and his wife, Pam MacDonald. John is a farmer, and Pam is a teacher. They're visiting Alberta for an entire week. Last week they were in Calgary to attend the annual meeting of the Canadian Horticultural Council. John is a past president of that council. They are proud parents of three children. They're expecting their first grandchild at the end of May, and they're very much looking forward to being grandparents. They have already risen. They are in the public gallery. I would now ask that hon. members give them the warm, traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many brave and determined people come through the galleries to watch the proceedings, none more brave or determined than those I'm going to introduce to you today and to all members of the Assembly. First is Lorna Chandler, whose husband died in a farm accident. The fatality was the subject of a recent inquiry. I'd ask Lorna to stand. Second is Philippa Thomas, who is here with her husband, Bruce. Philippa is permanently disabled because of a farm accident. With them are two tireless crusaders on this issue, Eric Musekamp and Darlene Dunlop. I'd ask them all to rise. Please give them a warm reception. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly two engaged and concerned citizens of our province who I met with earlier today and who have presented additional signatures to a petition originally presented to the Legislature in August of 2006. My guests are Mrs. Diane Martin, president of the Alberta Lymphedema Association, and Mrs. Theresa Storm, a Calgarian who suffers from primary lymphedema. Earlier today I met with Diane and Theresa to discuss the closing of the only clinic in southern Alberta which treats non cancer-related lymphedema patients. I want to thank these two individuals for coming to the Legislature to raise their concerns today. I would now ask that they both rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms. Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I have as my guests seven individuals representing Women in Black Edmonton, an organization that opposes violence in all its forms, whether it be in the home, in our communities or cities, or full-scale military action. In 1975 the United Nations proclaimed March 8 to be International Women's Day, a day on which women around the world should commemorate their struggles and celebrate their achievements in attaining justice and equality for women throughout the world. Women in Black Edmonton were the recipients of the Salvos peace award from Project Ploughshares for 2006. My guests are seated in the members' gallery and I would ask them to rise as I call their names: Marilyn Gaa, Sarah Miller, Susan MacEachran, Jean Ure, Anna Radyo, Peggy Folinsbee, and Barbara Sykes. I would ask that they now receive the traditional warm welcome from this Assembly.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Provincial Borrowing

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the midst of a boom Alberta was spending 23 per cent more per capita than the national average. Now, in the midst of a bust, the Premier is thinking about taking out a loan rather than taking a serious look at the rampant, often wasteful spending this PC government has gotten so used to. To the Premier. Never mind the great rates at the bank. The fact is that putting Alberta back into debt is against the law in this province. Is the Premier planning to do away with the Fiscal Responsibility Act?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is picking up on a headline that was in the Edmonton Journal following a discussion I had with a financial analyst Sunday morning. I put forward the situation where the province of Alberta has a triple-A credit rating – we can't have a better credit rating than the country of Canada, so we will always stay at the triple-A credit rating – and we also have $6 billion cash in the bank to spend on capital. My simple question was that if we were to borrow against the $6 billion, keep that cash in the bank but borrow against it at very reasonable rates or even still borrow cheaper than what we're getting for return in interest on the cash in the bank, why wouldn't we do it? To me, I think that's a good business decision.

Mr. Taylor: Gee, Mr. Speaker, I don't know. Maybe because it's illegal.

If Alberta is going to be taking out loans, does that mean there isn't enough in the sustainability fund and the capital account to cover your expenses, Mr. Premier?

Mr. Stelmach: Well, first of all, they're not my expenses; it's providing programs for people in this province. The sustainability fund is different. Again, this is not truly the whole understanding of the opposition. There are two funds that we have in the bank: capital, which is for construction of infrastructure – roads, schools, hospitals – and the sustainability fund, which is in place to cushion the dramatic drop in the price of oil and gas.

Ms Blakeman: We know what it is. It was our idea.

Mr. Stelmach: Well, if it was your idea, then you should know more about it.

What happens is that the sustainability fund stays in place, and we will draw on those savings as necessary if oil and gas prices do not increase over the next year or two, and the reason being that we always were clear with Albertans. This is like putting money between the mattresses. We'll draw on it when our revenue drops. That's very good planning, and the only jurisdiction in North America that actually has cash in the bank to do that.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, he's talking about using somebody else's money from somebody else's mattress. That would be the taxpayers of Alberta, ultimately, who are going to have to pay this money back with interest.

Has anyone in the government made a serious attempt to spend smarter before the Premier started thinking out loud about taking out a loan so that he doesn't have to take his fingers out of the cookie jar?

Mr. Stelmach: Once again, complete misessaging there on behalf of the person asking the question. This is for capital. What a good opportunity to finally catch up with the roads and the schools and the hospitals we need at one-third or even half of the cost we were paying in this high inflationary period that we just went through. It makes sense. Let's throw some figures. If we're getting, let's say, 3 per cent on the money in the bank, and we can borrow at 1 per cent and make 2 per cent on the money in the bank, man, I think that's a good business decision.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Protection of Children in Care

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government has failed once again to protect a vulnerable young child in their custody. The government's pretense of not holding a public inquiry as an excuse to protect the child's identity rings hollow. It's too little too late for this child. To the Premier: to honour the memories of the three children most recently killed or critically injured while in custody of the ministry of children's services as well as to provide some degree of closure for the parents and family whose children were apprehended, will the Premier conduct a complete and transparent public inquiry?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, our hearts go out to the families, both the birth families and also the thousands of foster families that open their doors, their homes, to foster children in this province. This is a matter that the minister is investigating thoroughly. There is legislation in place to protect the identity of the children and the families. I think that legislation is appropriate.

Last year we gave the opposition an opportunity to sign a waiver and open up the files to those two individuals that are opposition critics. I believe maybe one had accepted; the other one refused. Then to use this House to now debate a situation that the minister is thoroughly investigating – once again, I have tremendous trust in our minister to investigate fully.

Mr. Chase: Mr. Premier, you and I are both grandparents. We can be empathetic. We can be sympathetic. But you're the one that needs to take action. Given the disproportionate number of aboriginal children taken into custody, what assurances can the Premier provide that he is working with his federal counterparts to support aboriginal families within their home so that fewer children will have to be placed into foster or kinship care?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, with respect to working with aboriginal and Métis families, this province has shown great leadership in the country of Canada in terms of building relationships with the First Nations. In fact, we have entered into agreements with a number of chiefs that offer children's services on reservations. We believe it is culturally right, and we're working with the First Nations to do whatever we can to improve the quality of life and also reduce the number of children that are under the care of the government. It is much better for them to stay within their families.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. We have one recent aboriginal child dead, another barely hanging onto life in the Foothills hospital while his mother maintains a vigil. Why, having made the decision to apprehend these children, was more thought not given to the conditions of their placement, including support for and oversight of the foster parents?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the department has a very thorough way of assessing foster families. As was the occasion this weekend where the foster families got together for a celebration, one of the foster families said that, you know, 99 per cent of the time things go right. Occasionally, you do have a situation like this, but let's not point a finger at all of the foster families in this great province because without them we wouldn't have anyone to assist us in dealing with . . .

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Farm-related Accidents and Fatalities

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. On average, there are 18 deaths and 1,500 significant injuries from farm-related accidents in Alberta every year, yet most farm workers have no protection under the Occupational Health and Safety Act or workers' compensation or the labour code because of the deliberate policy of this government. To the Premier: when will paid farm workers have the same protection under Occupational Health and Safety as other workers as recommended by a judge in a recent fatality inquiry?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, a judge has made a decision. The two ministers responsible – the minister of agriculture and also Employment and Immigration – are now looking at how to hold consultations and work with the public to see what we can do in this particular area. It'll take a little time to work out the various situations, but we're moving ahead.

Dr. Taft: It doesn't need consultations. There are off-the-shelf solutions in every other province in this country.

The fatality inquiry notes that neither the Department of Employment and Immigration nor the department of agriculture normally investigate farm deaths because, unbelievably, there's no legislation to require it. The judge noted that investigations of deaths allow for the incorporation of standards to prevent similar deaths in the future. Again to the Premier: will this government implement changes to automatically require investigation of all farm worker deaths?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I'm not familiar with the letter of the law, but I know that all deaths on family farms – and other farms are investigated if there's a death and an accident – are certainly investigated by the police. But this is looking at how we can work towards preventing not only deaths but accidents where, you know, there is loss of limb or some damage to one's individual health. As I said, progress is being made, and we'll be able to report to the House at the most appropriate time.

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Enacting work standards for paid farm workers was done long ago in other provinces, so people are wondering why this government won't act. The Premier, who is key in this, failed to disclose the names of major supporters for his leadership campaign covering $160,000 in donations. It's widely known that huge feedlot operators granted him an airplane and a helicopter for his leadership bid, but those donations were not filed. To the Premier: will the Premier admit that his government won't budge on this life-and-death policy because he doesn't want to offend the backers of his leadership campaign?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I think that the hon. member is bordering on a question of privilege, and I would ask him to withdraw those comments in the House or I shall proceed with one.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Assembly of Land for Large Infrastructure Projects

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. This government's proposed Bill 19 will give them total and unchecked control over private property owned by Albertans, and if they dare to protest, this government would throw them in jail and fine them hundreds of thousands of dollars. Rural Albertans are furious that a rural Premier and his cabinet would propose such a Stalinist law. To the Premier: why won't you admit that this policy tramples the land rights of rural Albertans?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, looking back in history, we could have done things better in terms of acquiring land for public infrastructure or possibly right-of-ways for pipelines and electrical transmission lines as well. We want to work with landowners to ensure that they are treated fairly as we develop long-term corridors in the province of Alberta. The province will grow. We will require more electrical transmission lines. We want to make sure that when we're crossing someone's property, when we're buying land for the purchase of that public use, all landowners are treated fairly. That's the purpose of the bill.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, the Premier thinks that black is white.

Ordinary Albertans won't stand for a government that tramples on their rights even if they're threatened with prison time. This policy is a disgrace, landowners know it, and they're furious that this government would propose such measures. The government will rue the day that it betrayed rural Albertans. To the Premier: how can you claim to respect the 600,000 rural residents of this province when you're about to throw their land rights into the meat grinder?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, you know, it's one thing to go to someone to write these questions and add offensive language, but this is a serious matter. We want to work with landowners to make sure that they are treated fairly. There is huge room for improvement in the way we buy land for public infrastructure, and we want to ensure that all landowners are treated fairly. It is a complex issue. In some cases a municipal government or the provincial government may want to almost, like, sterilize land for the future for years and not appropriately deal with the actual cost of that land because we've sterilized it for years on end. How do we deal with that situation fairly? That's the whole discussion through this Bill 19.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, the principle of fairness is entirely absent from this bill. It empowers government to make more sweetheart deals with their P3 friends and their energy company buddies to build whatever they want on farmers' land. It might be a power line, a ring road, or a nuclear power plant. It is an authoritarian policy brought forward by an arrogant government that takes everyday rural Albertans for granted. To the Premier: will you do the right thing and withdraw Bill 19?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the power lines that are built through agricultural lands, farmers' own land, are there to supply energy to the city of Edmonton and the city of Calgary. If you don't want to supply energy, just tell us; we won't have to build the transmission lines. But I don't know how you will get energy to the major centres without building new transmission lines, simple as that.

Speaker's Ruling Questions about Legislation

The Speaker: Hon. members, nearly four minutes has transpired in this last set of questions. The chair is a bit concerned because the chair does not believe that this bill has been moved yet for second reading in this Assembly, and we're now debating bills in question period. Questions related to policy are one thing, but questions with specifics to a bill are quite another thing, particularly when the bill has not been moved for second reading.

The hon. Member for Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Victims' Restitution and Compensation

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There have been issues raised recently about a perceived loophole in the government's new Victims Restitution and Compensation Payment Act. My first question is not for the Premier but for the Minister of Justice and Attorney General. Could the minister provide some clarification regarding this concern?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There has been much discussion about this issue in the last couple of weeks in many places that I've been. I wanted to take the opportunity today to talk about Bill 50 with respect to what it achieves and compare that to what the Canadian Criminal Code tries to do. What we see is a Criminal Code that requires a conviction before property can be seized and sold. It also has a loophole where, if a person who owns property has their property seized, the police are not able to move forward and ask the Crown to make an application to sell the property. Our provincial legislation does not have that loophole and therefore is more effective.

Mr. Quest: My second question to the same minister. This law is also being questioned for its ability to seize property before a criminal conviction has been obtained. Aren't all Albertans considered innocent until proven guilty?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our legislation does not speak to innocence or guilt. Our legislation speaks to property. What we are doing with our legislation and with Bill 50 is nothing more than what a citizen in Alberta could do who felt that property should be seized and sold. We believe that if the citizens of Alberta think that something should be done, it's entirely appropriate for us to pass legislation to not only support them in what they would like to do but to assist them and in some cases step into their shoes and take the same steps.

Thank you.

Mr. Quest: No supplemental.

Opening of Calgary Courts Centre

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, the former Minister of Justice advertised a political fundraiser to raise money for his re-election at the opening of the publicly funded Calgary courthouse in January 2008. This was just weeks before an election call. Although the event was put on the back burner, questions still remain. To the Deputy Premier: isn't it problematic that the most senior lawyer in our province was soliciting partisan donations at an event that was to be held at the Calgary courthouse on the same day as its grand opening?

Mr. Stevens: Well, Mr. Speaker, I must say that I recall the court opening. I don't recall doing any solicitation at all at that event.

Mr. Hehr: Well, fair enough. I'll table these documents after, but just to give you a highlight of them, you were soliciting donations through the PC Association. Nonetheless, I'll move on.

To the Minister of Justice: as that's the background, why did taxpayers pay for an event, the opening of the Calgary courthouse, that was being advertised by the Progressive Conservation Association as a fundraiser for the then Attorney General?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Whenever we open a courthouse, we have an event. I know that as Minister of Justice I've been to a number of events where we've opened different clinics within courthouses, where we've opened different courthouses throughout the province. I know that opening the courthouse in Calgary was a very important event. From my department I'm advised that people believe the Calgary Courts Centre is one of the top three courthouses on this continent right now. I think that it's important for a lot of people to have the opportunity to see it, and I believe that they did so on that day.

Mr. Hehr: I agree one hundred per cent with what the minister said. However, do you think it's wise, believing in the separation between government responsibility and court responsibilities, that the PC Association should be advertising fundraisers at the courthouse for an Attorney General, that are going for partisan goals?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my understanding that when courthouses are opened, we have an event. I can't speak to the specifics or the allegations that the hon. member has made.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

2:10 Postsecondary Education Affordability

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. According to a recent report by the Educational Policy Institute some institutions may have to increase tuition by as much as 25 per cent in the future due to losses to their endowment funds and declining revenues as a result of the global economic slowdown. My questions are to the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology. Do you foresee adjusting Alberta's current tuition fee policy to help students and institutions?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am somewhat familiar with the report that the Educational Policy Institute did. It was a national study. In Alberta we take great pride in the affordability framework which we put together in consultation with the students, and at this time there are no plans to change our current tuition fee policy. Currently students in Alberta pay somewhere under 25 per cent of the cost of their postsecondary education with Alberta taxpayers making a very good investment of upwards of 75 to 80 per cent.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First supplemental to the same minister: how is the government supporting institutions in their effort to provide affordable student housing?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, we're working with other members of this government in terms of their portfolio responsibilities in housing and students finance in my department. Affordable housing is one piece of the puzzle, and living on campus is one piece of the puzzle, but even living on campus is not necessarily desirable for all students. Some of our students are perhaps a little older when they come into our institutions than they used to be. Perhaps more of them are married with children. Perhaps the environment that they would like to live in while they attend our postsecondary institutions might not be conducive to on-campus. So we're looking at the whole package, and we'll continue to do so.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question to the same minister: does the federal government's deferred maintenance program have potential to help Alberta students?

Mr. Horner: Very much so, Mr. Speaker. You know, our guests in the gallery would recognize that we've chatted about deferred maintenance at our postsecondary institutions many times over the last few years. It's certainly one of the priorities of our department. I have been in discussions with our federal counterparts on how we might be able to work together to reach mutual priorities on campus, which would include the deferred maintenance. That deferred maintenance, if we can utilize some of those federal dollars, obviously frees up dollars in other areas of the postsecondary budget that we hope would help the affordability framework for students.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Long-term Care

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Rural seniors are concerned that they may have to leave the area that they have called home for most of their lives when they find that they are unable to live independently. The seniors may in fact be second generation to the community. To the minister of health: what commitment is the minister willing to make to rural seniors so that when they have need of a long-term care facility, they will not be moved far from family and community?

Mr. Liepert: Well, as the first part of that preamble, the member referred to living independently. That's exactly what we want to try to do: ensure that if seniors want to live independently, they can have the health care provision that they need to retain that ability to live independently.

Ms Pastoor: I think that, clearly, the minister of health knows exactly what I'm trying to say. What I'm saying is that they are going to need long-term care. That is not independent living. No matter how you cut it, they need care, and they need the facilities.

The minister has proposed incentives for private and nonprofit investment in long-term care facilities. Will there be a provision for a percentage of these facilities to be developed in rural Alberta?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure what incentives the member is referring to. I'm not aware of any incentives. However, the provision of long-term care by nonprofit and private providers has been in this province I think probably as long as the province has been incorporated, and we don't intend to change that.

Ms Pastoor: In fact, extra beds were promised in that area.

On February 18 in the House the minister stated, "I would hope that we could provide the options that we wouldn't need this policy," referring to the first-bed policy. What details and timelines can the minister give Albertans that he's really taking action on this issue, that it hasn't been put on the back burner?

Mr. Liepert: Well, clearly, one of the timelines will be the provincial budget that comes on April 7, Mr. Speaker, to see what funding we have available in Alberta Health and Wellness. We are working diligently every day to ensure that seniors have the accommodations that they need in their community, and we'll continue to do that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Pigeon Lake Fishery

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many of my constituents continue to be concerned about the whitefish fishery at Pigeon Lake. They are worried about the stocking of walleye and the special walleye licence program. My questions are to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. What is he doing to support Pigeon Lake's whitefish fishery?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, the battle for Pigeon Lake continues. On the one side you have the walleye and their backers; on the other side, the whitefish. I say good. The fact that they're fighting each other – not the humans but the fish – is a good sign that our walleye stocking program has succeeded. We've succeeded in re-establishing a balanced fishery with all species of fish and better angling for humans.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: why has the minister allowed Pigeon Lake to be taken over by walleye to the detriment of whitefish, according to the long-time residents of the Pigeon Lake area?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, there's something fishy about that question. The restocking of walleye has benefited the whitefish fishery. Before the restocking program the whitefish were quite small. Now our fall netting survey shows that the average weight of the whitefish has doubled between 2003 and 2007, and the average length has increased from 42 to 49 centimetres. In the battle for Pigeon Lake size matters, and the whitefish are rising to the occasion.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the same minister. My constituents in the Pigeon Lake area ask the minister if he will consider scrapping the special walleye licence and allow a one-walleye-per-day limit for all anglers at Pigeon Lake.

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I want the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar to know that I'm all for scrapping; scrapping between the whitefish and the walleye, that is. Opening up Pigeon Lake to an open season would quickly take us right back to where we were in the 1960s, with no walleye being left in the lake. The special walleye licence has made Pigeon Lake a premier walleye fishery and is helping to rebalance the population. Let the battle for Pigeon Lake continue.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Infrastructure Costs

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In comments this weekend the Minister of Transportation indicated that construction costs have dropped 40 per cent in six months in the province of Alberta due to the recession. When I look back six months, I see the following: a $650 million, 30-year contract to build schools and a $1.4 billion, 30-year contract for the north Anthony Henday Drive. That's a total of over $2 billion in P3 projects. My first question is to the Minister of Infrastructure. Does the hon. minister now see that tying Alberta taxpayers to a 30-year P3 payment at peak construction costs is a very bad deal for taxpayers?

Mr. Hayden: No. In fact, Mr. Speaker, to the contrary. If you look at the agreement on our website and the payment schedule for the maintenance over the period of the contract, it's tied to labour costs and the consumer price index. When things get tough, the price comes down, and we as Albertans enjoy that break.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, that is untrue.

Again to the Minister of Infrastructure. Given the falling construction costs, will the government still be giving out those sweetheart deals where you've got overrides, cost-plus contracts for 15 per cent and 20 per cent on those contracts? Those details are on your website. It's obvious that you haven't read them.

Mr. Hayden: Mr. Speaker, that's completely incorrect. The agreement and the schedule for payment is posted on the website, has been posted on the website since the P3 was first announced. It's there. It dictates that the costs for maintenance on an ongoing basis are tied to those factors that I mentioned earlier. When we go forward with a project, there are no sweetheart deals unless it's a sweetheart deal for Albertans. We get the best price and get efficient and effective delivery.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would advise the Minister of Infrastructure to read closely the changeover portions of the contracts that he mentioned.

Again to the same minister: if the province can borrow publicly at just 1 per cent, as the Premier mused yesterday on radio, why is this government tying Alberta taxpayers to 30 years of high private-sector debt with these P3 contracts?

2:20

Mr. Hayden: Mr. Speaker, it was referred to earlier today by the Premier that, in fact, we have money in place within our provincial coffers for sustainability funds for our capital for the future, and it is actually receiving interest rates that exceed those that we pay in our agreements. It's only good business on behalf of Albertans to make sure that we get the most effective, efficient delivery of our infrastructure in a timely manner.

The Speaker: During that last exchange one hon. member used the phrase "untrue," and another one used the word "incorrect." The chair considers that a draw. There will be no points of order arising out of the last exchange, but I'd ask members to try and find other words to use.

Foster Care Review

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last year the Minister of Children and Youth Services pledged to immediately implement a recommendation to stop arbitrary placements that ignored the four-child limit for foster homes. This weekend a director from her ministry said that there's at least one foster home in Alberta that has eight children. To the Minister of Children and Youth Services: how many foster homes in Alberta are in excess of the four-child maximum? Or is that yet another issue about which the minister is unaware?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member does mention the foster care review. I can say that the foster care review last year was extensive. It had internal and external experts. There were eight recommendations that stemmed from it. We accepted all of them. I mentioned last week that we're at various stages of implementation. Later today I do plan on tabling a report that will say what the status is of all the recommendations.

Ms Notley: Well, we have not however received an answer to my first question with respect to the number of homes in excess of four children.

As you mentioned, the minister pledged to immediately implement the recommendations of the hand-picked panel to clean up the foster care system. Thursday, as mentioned, the story changed, and we were told that the recommendations would be implemented by this summer. To the Minister of Children and Youth Services: given that you don't appear to have the slightest idea of what's actually going on in your ministry, how can Albertans trust that you are competent to protect the children in your care?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think I've always been very consistent with any information that I shared about the foster care review. That was a very extensive review last June. We accepted all of the recommendations and started to implement them. Like I said, this afternoon we'll have full information on the status of all of the recommendations.

Ms Notley: Well, last year we were told that they'd be implemented immediately. Now we're being told that they might be implemented by this summer. Last week the minister appeared unaware that a foster baby was clinging to life in a Calgary hospital. She gave us vague platitudes, and then she went into hiding. Indeed, last Thursday this minister told the Legislature that Alberta has a good foster care system. If this poor baby dies, however, he will be the third to suffer such a tragic fate under your watch in just over two years. To the minister: have we not yet reached the point where, in good conscience, you will do the right thing and resign?

Ms Tarchuk: Mr. Speaker, as the member mentioned, we do have a serious incident where we have a little boy fighting for his life in hospital. I can tell you that the police are investigating this. At this point they have not said or determined whether this was an accident or whether it was because of wrongdoing, but I can tell you that I'm not waiting for any deliberation to take action. There are things I am doing. There are things I will not do. What I will not do is be irresponsible and speculate and interfere with the police investigation.

What I am doing: last week I talked about that I already had called a special review on this very case; today I'm announcing that I plan on making the findings of that review public. As well, I'm going to have information in the next couple of days and will make sure that there's a co-chair of that special case review who is an external expert. I think the bottom line is that we will always stay committed to continuous improvement of our child intervention and our foster care system.

Registered Education Savings Plans

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Both the federal and provincial governments give grants and tax shelters through programs like registered education savings plans to encourage and assist parents to save for their children's advanced education. Many Albertans are concerned about the financial well-being of their savings and the investment of the money contributed in these programs. My question today is to the hon. minister of finance. In light of the global economic situation what guarantee do parents have that that money is safe?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance and Enterprise.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 2005 in celebration of a special event in Alberta, the centennial, we offered parents up to $800 as an incentive for saving for their children's future education. It was open to people to make their own selection of financial institutions. The private businesses that are banks do not receive any kind of insurance or guarantee from the provincial government, but the federal government under the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation has such a guarantee. When the institution fails, there's a hundred thousand dollars available for up to a hundred thousand dollars. People have to make sure that they have that kind of protection when they deposit money.

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Madam Minister. The Alberta government has invested, like you said, tens of millions to supplement our young people's registered education plans. To the same minister: what assurance do taxpayers have that this money is invested wisely and protected against mismanagement or bankruptcy by the institution that it's invested in?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Evans: Yes. Mr. Speaker, first of all, when you provide a deposit to any financial institution – and Canadian financial institutions are among the best in the world, and I think that that's a real tribute to both our federal government and the institutions themselves – the first thing to do is to find out if that insurance, the CDIC program, is in place. Choose well your financial institution and rest assured. There are some things that are not insured for – scam, fraud, theft, or in fact a situation where the institution itself falters on its investments – only the hundred thousand . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many new Canadians have friends and relatives in their former lands who have lost their investments in the recent economic downturn. What protection do we have for fellow Albertans against such happenings?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, as long as they invest in an institution that's CDIC insured, if that insurance is provided by the bank, then there's no further action that has to be taken to guarantee that particular protection. They don't pay extra insurance; that's provided by the bank. It is, in fact, automatic.

Oil Sands Area Groundwater Monitoring

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Academy Award short-listed documentary Downstream, about the impact of the oil sands development on the Athabasca River, has again raised a number of issues important to Alberta and, more importantly, questioned how this government has managed the resource. My questions are to the Minister of Environment. Can the minister tell us whether the government has conducted research on resource extraction in the oil sands region and any increase in the levels of toxic chemicals in the water?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, I mentioned on numerous occasions in the House that the government has an ongoing monitoring system to monitor not only the water that is within the Athabasca River itself but also at various points throughout the watershed to assess the ongoing quality of groundwater as well.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Yeah. I think most of that is industry led, and it's self-reporting.

Next question to the same minister: given that this minister stood in the House last year and stated, when asked if groundwater had been contaminated, that "there is no evidence to indicate that there is any impact on the Athabasca River," is this still the minister's position?

Mr. Renner: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. Can the minister tell us why neither he nor the Minister of Energy nor the Premier has ever met with the people in Fort Chipewyan or Fort MacKay to listen to their concerns? The industry had the intestinal fortitude to go and speak with them, so why hasn't this government?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, I can't say it's untrue, I guess, so I'll say that I think the member is misinformed. In fact, I have met with the people and the leadership of Fort Chip. I have personally been there twice. I know that the Minister of Aboriginal Relations has been there at least twice, perhaps three times. We have had a good working relationship, and in fact at the last meeting that I had in Fort Chipewyan, we agreed in principle to the implementation of a community-based monitoring system. I understand from my staff that the details for the implementation of that community-based water monitoring system are moving well along, and we should have it up and running sometime this year.

Packaging Waste

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I recently bought a gift and ended up with a small item wrapped up in a substantial amount of packaging. Unfortunately, I'm sure that we've all had similar experiences. I understand that packaging is necessary to preserve and transport products, but the material is often used just once. I'm sure that I'm not the only one who finds this unnecessarily wasteful. My question is for the Minister of Environment. What is the province doing to reduce unnecessary packaging?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, as many members are aware, we have the document Too Good to Waste, which is a strategy that allows us to deal with waste of all kinds. We have shown leadership in this province with respect to beverage containers, tires, electronics, paint, and used oil. The issue of packaging is something that we now need to deal with. However, unfortunately, because of the relative size of our market in relation to the national market it's difficult for us to act unilaterally on an issue such as packaging of materials.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is to the same minister. If the problem of packaging waste cannot be solved by Alberta alone, then are you working with other jurisdictions on the issue?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Renner: Yes, Mr. Speaker. The CCME, the Canadian Council of Ministers of the Environment, has been engaged in this file, and I'm pleased to report that at our most recent meeting in Whitehorse about three weeks ago we reconfirmed our commitment to develop nation-wide national standards for packaging that will be geared towards reducing the amount of waste that's generated through the retail sale of goods.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister. It's good to hear that progress is being made to reduce this type of waste. Can the minister tell us what Albertans can do right now to help ensure that this kind of packaging does not end up in landfills?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think we always have to resort back to what we all learned in school, and that's the three Rs. There needs to be a commitment on behalf of Albertans to reduce the amount of waste, and that's partly through the program that I just made reference to, some standards, but we can reuse material. There's nothing to prevent individuals from reusing packing material that they have in their possession for one reason or another, and we can also recycle that material. I encourage Albertans to do all three.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Public Transit

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the recession bites, more and more Albertans will be turning to public transit, which provides the most affordable way of getting around cities and towns. For many Albertans public transit is their only means to get groceries, to get to work, to see family and friends. To the Minister of Transportation: what is this government doing to provide support for the increased ridership that public transit will undoubtedly experience in this recession?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, as you know, all public transit has been looked after by the municipality that public transit is in. We don't really have public transit as a province. We look after all the roads and everything that public transit can run on. But we did announce a program for Green TRIP which is going to deal with a lot of public transit. We've been having meetings on that already. We're doing our last consultation right now on what type of programs we need to not only put people on public transit but to reduce greenhouse gases from the tailpipe.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think that Green TRIP hasn't left the station yet.

To the same minister again. In its report titled Plan It the city of Calgary has made very clear the vital importance of an upgraded public transit system to Calgary's future prosperity. Does the government agree with the report's conclusions, and will it be committing to projects accordingly?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, we won't be committing to projects unless they meet the criteria we've come out with within Green TRIP, and the very best ones, the most innovative and what's going to reduce the most greenhouse gases and get the most cars off the road, are the projects that are going to win, that we will be able to supply some resources to.

The Speaker: The hon. member.
