Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Council of Canadian Academies' report on water said that 92 per cent of private wells in Alberta don't meet Canadian guidelines for water quality. Now, on Monday the Minister of Environment said that industrial water monitoring won't be reduced, which means that he's got to cut groundwater monitoring, that affects water wells for rural Albertans. When 92 per cent of these wells are pumping poor-quality water, how can the minister possibly think it's okay to cut water monitoring anywhere in Alberta?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, I think that what the member is not acknowledging is that groundwater monitoring is an evolutionary process. It's something that goes on over time. You only really get the information that is required to interpret from making comparisons over time. What we're doing is not eliminating groundwater monitoring, but perhaps instead of monitoring every well every year, we may monitor some of the wells every other year. The end result at the end of the day will be relatively unaffected.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, that sounds to me like we're reducing our water monitoring.

Now, First Nations are taking government to court for ignoring them and failing to protect their water resources. Meanwhile, this government is giving industry free access to nearly 90 billion barrels of fresh water a year. To the Minister of Aboriginal Relations: will the minister explain how he can pretend to advocate for aboriginal Albertans when his government ignores their rights but lets industry go on using and contaminating their water?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, there's nobody in this government that I'm aware of that's ignoring any aboriginal rights whatsoever. In fact, I was just with the chiefs at their annual meeting yesterday, and we talked about some of these issues. I think the Minister of Environment has clarified what the province's role is. At the same time, perhaps I'd encourage the member to take a look at what the federal role is. We have a joint partnership with respect to the work that we're doing to help improve that circumstance. I've been up and have spoken with these groups at least half a dozen or more times to ensure that that gets done and those treaty rights referred to are respected, and they are.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, it seems that mostly there's a joint partnership in passing the buck.

Now, the recent water report also notes an Alberta Research Council report stating that toxins from tailings ponds are leaking into our water table and aquifers. This government denies the effects this pollution is having on downstream First Nations despite the rising incidence of cancer. To the Minister of Environment: will the minister explain why aboriginal communities should trust that their watersheds are being protected when he continues to insist that development in the oil sands is harmless to the watershed, to groundwater, and to the environment?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, we've been through this many times before in the past. The fact of the matter is that there are some acknowledged issues with some of the very early tailings ponds, the very first ones using very old technology. In those instances there are collector wells that are in place that will return the vast majority of any seepage back into the tailings pond itself. With the newer technology tailings ponds, the ones that are currently being developed – and, frankly, the old ones are almost entirely retired – the technology is entirely different.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Aboriginal Training and Employment

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of the main concerns of aboriginal people, like most Albertans, is employment. We all realize that the current economic downturn has negatively impacted job opportunities around the world, so it's not surprising that aboriginal communities in Alberta are concerned about these downward trends. My questions are to the Minister of Aboriginal Relations. What is your ministry doing to help stimulate more job opportunities for Alberta's aboriginal people?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, there are a number of excellent programs housed within the Ministry of Aboriginal Relations, one of which is the First Nations economic partnerships initiative. That program alone has supported 109 successful economic partnerships with and amongst the First Nations, involving about 31 First Nations. We also have the First Nations economic development fund, which has provided additional opportunities through dozens of partnering programs that the First Nations have undertaken from casino dollars. Those two programs alone have helped add hundreds of jobs for aboriginals in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is to the same minister. Mr. Minister, how do you know whether your ministry's programs and efforts are helping to increase aboriginal employment opportunities?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, we keep a keen eye on the statistics and on information gathered through other means. I can tell you, for example, that in the oil sands area there are over 1,500 jobs, not including construction-related jobs, that aboriginal people are involved in. That is an increase of 60 per cent over the last few years. Similarly, there's another statistic with respect to the trades and apprenticeship area, where we've seen an increase of over 400 per cent of aboriginal people involved in the trades. Finally, we're working very aggressively with the Ministry of Employment and Immigration to help increase our aboriginal workforce plan, and that's succeeding now as well.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, Mr. Minister, with the significant growth in this population, what about job skills training for aboriginals and for youth in particular? What is your ministry doing to help engage that sector?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, a number of aboriginal youth already receive employment opportunities through some of the programs I've just mentioned, but I just want to highlight one that we're very proud of that's coming up at the end of June in Banff. This will be our first-ever international symposium focused on economic development success strategies for aboriginal people. This is in partnership, by the way, with Treaty 7 First Nations. We're going to feature a special aboriginal young entrepreneurs forum within that particular milieu. The registrations are starting to come in, and I'm very encouraged by that because there's a large number of young aboriginal people who are coming out to learn how to ply the trade and do business in this wonderful province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater.

Labour Protection for Paid Farm Workers

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's paid farm workers have no occupational health and safety protection. When asked about what paid farm workers should do when injured, the Minister of Employment and Immigration told this Assembly that they could turn to the courts. Well, in the public gallery today is Philippa Thomas, an injured farm worker who has paid 15 and a half thousand dollars in legal costs and faces many times that cost before she even could get her case considered. What does the Minister of Employment and Immigration say to Philippa today?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, thank you very much for the question. As I've indicated to this House, we've hired a consultant to deal with this particular issue, to delve into it. The consultant will be talking with farm workers, will be talking with farm owners, will be talking with various businesses that deal with farmers, and will be preparing a report for us to review over the summer and into the fall. We'll make some recommendations from there.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Given the tens of thousands of dollars that injured farm workers are forced to pay in legal costs because of this government's policies, does the minister recognize that saying, as he did in here a few weeks ago, that farm workers "have access to the courts as any other Albertan has access" is irresponsible, is unacceptable, and needs to be changed?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, I think I've indicated to this House quite often as well that, you know, it's not the rules and regulations that will make the difference on individual farms; it's the atmosphere of developing a farm safety attitude on farms. That works from both the employee's side as well as the employer's side. Both have to co-operate, and both have to work towards farm safety for each other.

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, that was a shocking comment. The implication there is that a woman like Philippa Thomas is equal to any other worker and is responsible for the damage that she suffered at the hands of an employer.

My question is again to the same minister. He has talked about this consultant many times. Will the minister direct this consultant to personally meet with Philippa Thomas and any other injured farm worker or their family who wants to meet with him?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, we're working with the Ministry of Agriculture and Rural Development, and we are developing the list of individuals that will be met. At this stage we're expanding on that particular list. This afternoon I'm personally meeting with the Farmworkers Union to discuss this very subject, and we'll keep on doing that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Rural Family Physician Recruitment

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got several rural communities that are experiencing a dangerous shortage of family physicians. This affects my constituents' access to primary care and in some cases is decreasing services in local hospitals and emergency rooms. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. I have some great communities that are working on doctor recruitment committees and investing great dollars in trying to get family physicians to the rural areas. What is this ministry doing to help these groups recruit family physicians to rural areas?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, the member is absolutely correct. It is a challenge today. However, there are a couple of programs that the department runs. One is the rural physician action plan, which works with rural communities. In addition to that, there's the rural, remote, and northern program, which is part of the recent agreement with the Alberta Medical Association to actually provide incentives.

I think, however, Mr. Speaker, we have to look at a couple of other options to fill in some of these roles, such things as the physician assistance plan that we need to start to examine and hopefully put in place. We need to adopt a model where nurse practitioners have the ability to assist in some of those communities as well.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the minister for that answer. I'd like to add that some of my communities are frustrated that qualified and experienced physicians from out of the country must jump through so many hoops and regulations in order to be able to work in their profession here. Again to the same minister: why is it so difficult to get foreign doctors approved to provide services here in Alberta and improve our rural communities' access to these physicians, and what is his ministry doing about that?

Mr. Liepert: Well, the reality is that we have a number of foreign-trained doctors who are working in Alberta. In fact, every time I travel into rural communities, it seems like at least 50 per cent of the physicians are from somewhere else in the world, many of them from South Africa. We need to recognize that it's the College of Physicians and Surgeons that actually registers international graduates. I know that we've been working hard with them to impress upon them the fact that we need to ensure that there are no barriers to approval of these foreign-trained doctors. We also have to recognize that the college has a fiduciary responsibility to ensure that the training these doctors have in foreign countries meets the high standards that we have. That's always a delicate balance that has to take place.

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, we know we have added more spots to educate Albertans at our universities in medicine, but it doesn't do much good if they leave the province once they're educated. My final question is to the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology. What is the province doing to help ensure that doctors who are trained here in Alberta stay and practise here in Alberta once they've completed their medical training?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, it's my pleasure to be working with the Minister of Health and Wellness on the health workforce action plan. We're doing things such as the member mentioned, adding a number of spaces for Alberta students in our two medical schools. That in and of itself will help increase the number of doctors that will practise in the province.

In addition to that, we recognize where the hon. member's constituency is. It's very important that we attract rural physicians, so the integrated community clerkship program is funded through my department. I must say, Mr. Speaker, that we've had a recent report from the two medical schools on that clerkship program, which includes a doctor in your constituency. It has been tremendously successful.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Support for Children with Disabilities

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The nature of care that not only protects but nurtures children with disabilities in Alberta is of the utmost importance in ensuring that they experience the best quality of life possible. It is therefore essential that there are appropriate placements and ongoing evaluation of the care that is provided for vulnerable disabled children. To the Minister of Children and Youth Services: given the highly specific individual needs of disabled children, can the minister briefly introduce and follow up on in writing what quality and quantity of training specific to physical or mental disabilities is required for Children and Youth Services staff above and beyond the limited staff members in the family support for children with disabilities program?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will endeavour to get that information for this member.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I'll look forward to receiving that information.

Is the minister absolutely certain that all Children and Youth Services staff are adequately trained and have the necessary understanding and experience to provide the proper placements and supports to Alberta's vulnerable disabled children?

Ms Tarchuk: Mr. Speaker, I can tell you that we have some of the most dedicated staff in the province that are dealing with issues related to families with disabled children, and I just want to also stress for the House – and I think everybody here understands – that we do have one of the best programs in Canada. We're known for that. Our FSCD program is very unique. I don't know that there's any other program in this country that offers the wide variety of supports that we do, and we're very proud of that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. You can have a big heart and be extremely dedicated, but unless you have the training and experience, that practicality is not going to be there.

What type of follow-up does the ministry conduct to ensure the well-being of disabled children after they've been placed in either foster care or kinship care? How frequently does the support evaluation occur to ensure that the placement and care continue to be appropriate?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This response also relates to your last question. I think it's really important to point out with this program that we do survey families to find out what their experience with the program has been. In our last survey 87 per cent of the families talked about this being a very positive program for their family and having a very good impact on their children.

I think another thing that's very relevant and worth pointing out is that we have close to 9,000 clients that are using that program, and on an annual basis we only see just over 20 appeals.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

May Long Weekend Campsite Preparations

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Albertans are getting ready to enjoy the long weekend, and for many of my constituents that means camping. My first question is to the Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation. In light of the new online reservation service does your department have a policy in place to ensure that Albertans can still find campsites at a provincial park without having to spend $10 to reserve?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Ady: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The new online campground system has been very successful. We've had a few glitches, but we've booked to date over 14,000 campsites this summer, so I would say very successful. We don't have a specific policy, though, on sites available on a first-come, first-served basis. We usually check out each different campground to see what needs to be done, but most of them as a policy or practice try to have some on-site that you can actually drive to that day.

As far as collecting reservation fees, we've been doing that for 20 years, and that always goes back into the campground system.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is also for the Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation. Parents of teenagers in my constituency are very interested in temporary liquor bans at eight provincial campgrounds for the long weekend. Are you planning to extend bans to all provincial parks?

Mrs. Ady: Well, Mr. Speaker, we're not planning on having liquor bans for all provincial parks. We have eight campgrounds out there that have proven to be problematic, so we have placed bans on those. As a result, we're seeing families return to those campgrounds where they were not feeling like they could be there and be safe. We want people to be safe and to have an enjoyable weekend, but only eight of our campgrounds will have a ban for the May long weekend.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. It seems like every May long weekend we have a problem with people tearing up Crown land with monster trucks and ATVs. What is your department doing to protect our precious lands?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, the monster truck rip-up-the-land crowd had better bring their chequebooks with them this weekend because they're going to meet 280 law enforcement officers out there. Last week we signed a new joint enforcement task force with Tourism and Parks, Solicitor General, Transportation, and the RCMP that's going to put 280 officers out working together to make sure people have a fun weekend, a safe weekend. The people that destroy public resources are going to pay.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Support for Community Sports Organizations

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Culture and Community Spirit has created a domino effect by reallocating money from the community initiatives program to international development agencies, which were cut when the minister disbanded the Wild Rose Foundation. Other groups who received cuts have also been told that they will be looked after, but the one group not looked after now or before is the sports community. My questions are to the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit. Why did the minister choose to allocate the entire $20 million to the community spirit program instead of using just $13 million and leaving $7 million to protect the Wild Rose and CIP programs from cuts?

Mr. Blackett: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member should know that I'm not responsible for the sports community. I'm responsible for communities, community investments. I'm responsible for the not-for-profit sector. But I'm not responsible for the sports community, so I don't understand the question.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. Back to the same minister. This government has made it almost impossible for sports organizations to qualify for funding through the enhanced charitable tax credit, the community spirit program, both of which are under the minister's jurisdiction, or the Alberta Sport, Recreation, Parks and Wildlife Foundation. Why does the government resist funding community sports organizations?

Mr. Blackett: Well, Mr. Speaker, we absolutely do fund community sports organizations. I looked at the combination of community investment programs; it's well over $10 million that went to community facilities programs, so I don't know what she's talking about.

Ms Blakeman: Well, let me help the minister. Given that only 65 out of the 1,500 organizations who were awarded grants under the community spirit program were sports organizations even though they have a huge portion, almost a third, of the volunteer base in Alberta, will the minister commit to reviewing the criteria of this program so that the sports community can be included?

Mr. Blackett: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member does identify one problem. There is only so much money to go around, and yes, we have 19,000 organizations. Yes, about 4,000 of those are community-based organizations. We do the best we can within the resources that we have, just as Albertans do in their own homes, and they expect that of our government.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that was 102 questions and responses. In 30 seconds from now we will continue the Routine.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table five copies of my responses to the questions raised during Employment and Immigration's estimates in committee on April 14, 2009.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I recently met with Mrs. Barb Oatway, whom you met earlier, about her very brave battle with cancer and a new medication called Revlimid, that was recently approved by Health Canada for the treatment of multiple myeloma. Mrs. Oatway has asked that I table this petition urging the government of Alberta to provide Revlimid as a publicly funded choice to patients with multiple myeloma.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have one tabling from Alison Ainsworth, formerly of Medicine Hat, who continues to be concerned that a golf tournament fundraiser held by the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat in 2008 was falsely linked to autism support. Alison writes:

I continue to demand the apology that is owed for the conduct of an elected official who, rather than taking responsibility for failed promises and misdirection to a cause, would insult a family that he himself brought into the mix, make the issue about the family's 7 year old child with Autism and the community, and do so in writing to officials who have nothing to do with the family's best interests.

The Speaker: Hon. member, you be prepared for either a point of order or a point of privilege. The hon. member in question is not here today, and I will accept that upon his return.

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, earlier in question period I referred to a letter from the CEO of Alberta Health Services relative to the question by the Leader of the Opposition. I would like to table five copies of that letter.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of six letters from Albertans concerned about the burden the drug plan places on seniors and who are opposed to the means test involved in that plan. The letters are from Sonia Francis, Shirley Swanson, Jim and Roberta Saltvold, G.M. Hoke, Dave Williams, and Miriam Farrington.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of my colleague the Leader of the Official Opposition and Member for Calgary-Mountain View I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of correspondence directed to him by the individual who was introduced in the House today. His name is Al Kiffiak, and he is most concerned over the changes to Alberta health care coverage for middle-income seniors.

Thank you very much.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk Assistant: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of the hon. Mr. Horner, Minister of Advanced Education and Technology, responses to written questions WQ 7 and WQ 18, both asked for by Ms Notley on April 6, 2009.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 36 Alberta Land Stewardship Act

[Adjourned debate April 29: Dr. Morton]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Yes. It's a pleasure to rise and join debate on Bill 36, the Alberta Land Stewardship Act. This is a very substantial piece of legislation, with a number of components to it, that has tremendous implications for how things in this province unfold over the next several decades, quite frankly. It's premised, of course, on the land-use framework, which is a document that has been prepared over time by the government with some consultation with a number of different stakeholders.

The principles underlying the land-use framework are in many respects laudable principles. So in theory, then, in principle, this piece of legislation is one which we support because it is, in fact, you know, a vehicle for moving forward on some of the elements that were and are included in the land-use framework. Quite honestly, we need to move forward on many of those ideas because we're behind on many of those issues. I think that we really have a crisis in development and environment and resources across the province right now as a result of our failure to co-ordinate in any kind of substantial way. Should the land-use framework be implemented in a thoughtful and effective manner, it could truly be one of the most important government initiatives ever introduced and could put Alberta quite high up in terms of responsible land-use policy with respect to other jurisdictions.

The concern is that there is a tremendous amount of discretion that exists within this piece of legislation, notwithstanding the length of it. Really, what's going to be the measure of success is how that discretion is exercised. I suppose that at the end of the day that's one of our most critical concerns, that there is so much discretion that rests with cabinet in moving forward on the initiatives inherent in the land-use framework and that that discretion can be exercised while at the same time overruling municipal bylaws and plans, impacting First Nations' issues and rights, impacting upon Métis nations' issues and rights, and having tremendous consequences for private landowners and, of course, for people with an interest in promoting community interests and promoting wise and effective environmental development.

It is a bill, then, where again it's really hard to see what's going to come from it because the measure of the bill in large respect would be a regional advisory plan, one of these plans that the bill facilitates the development of through the regional advisory councils. What we need to do is really see what a plan will look like and see how it will unfold and see how the consultation process took place and see how the various stakeholders believe that their interests were reflected and then see how it is implemented and introduced. Until we see that, we can't know if the grand amount of authority and discretion being given to government through this piece of legislation is a good decision or not.

Again, the high-level principles are good ones, but it really comes down to how this stuff is implemented, when we get right to it. You know, we certainly have other examples. We know that the government had established CEMA in the lower Athabasca region, and we know that in that case what happened was that government really didn't exercise a lot of its authority to deal with what were clearly competing interests within that regional planning process. So what ended up happening was that large components of the CEMA board left because there were no hard decisions being made, the balancing processes with respect to how those decisions were made were not clear, and ultimately there wasn't a belief on the sense of a significant number of members of the community that their interests were really being heard.

Of course, if you then expand it to how other parts of government consultation have been introduced and pursued – and we've had a great deal of debate on, for instance, the whole concept of whether or not we're actually consulting anybody in any kind of open fashion on the nuclear issue – the question becomes: how will this be done, and will it be done in a way that will actually bring about the kind of changes that we need? Or will it turn into a defence mechanism for the government so that whenever a problem arises, we're told to wait for a process that is endless yet never resolved one way or the other, or alternatively we're told that, well, it went through a process, and this is what they came up with, that this is the best that we can get? We really, really don't know.

I think part of that comes from the fact that there really are not any kind of substantive planning criteria built into this legislation. We don't have details on the kinds of hard targets the government attempts to achieve in terms of air quality management, greenhouse gas emission management, and land use and water use and all these kinds of things. We know that the principle of cumulative effects is mentioned in the bill – that's a good thing – but that's where it stops. We don't have a real sense of what the hard targets are. We just know that people the government chooses will be consulted, but then the government will ultimately do what it wants to do with it, and in so doing, it will have tremendously broad impact on numerous components of the community. So this is, generally, our concern.

The other thing, of course, is that all along, through the whole process with respect to the land-use framework, there has been a long call for interim measures pending the development of regional advisory plans. I appreciate that the government is moving reasonably quickly, well, reasonably quickly relative to since I've been here, with respect to the lower Athabasca region in that they hope to have a plan in place by the fall. But we have been talking about these issues now for years, and there is no plan in place yet, and there are numerous ways in which development is proceeding and decisions are being made that impact on land use and the environment and all these other issues without there being any kind of cumulative effects assessment and without there being a strong assessment of even what the state is of the environment in those areas on so many different levels.

There has been talk, then, that while the idea of the land-use framework was a good one, there should have been interim measures put in place. There's no mechanism for interim measures in this piece of legislation, and there is no record of interim measures absent the legislation.

Another concern that we will probably talk a little bit more about in third reading is the whole way in which the conservation offsets that are referenced in this piece of legislation can be used. The regional plans are based on watersheds, but it appears as though conservation offsets can be traded between regions, from one region to another region, which would obviously contradict the very objectives behind doing cumulative effects assessment on a regional basis. So we're a bit concerned about that one.

There's also quite an extensive power that is being put forward with respect to the government's ability to impose and/or penalize municipalities in terms of the implementation of this act.

We've also heard concerns from a number of different Métis groups about how this piece of legislation will be integrated with their current land-use rights. We know that certain elements of their land-use rights are excluded from coverage under this legislation, but not all elements of their land-use rights are excluded from this legislation. The concern is: how will those competing interests be measured given the record of the government with respect to dealing with aboriginal issues in general over the last few years?

Finally, the concern, of course, is that the regional advisory council process is so much left to the discretion of government to appoint the regional advisory council members. Of course, just today we saw that the South Saskatchewan Regional Advisory Council was established. It appeared to me to be a group that was very industry heavy and had pretty low representation from the environmental community.

You know, the whole issue of how one gets to be on the regional advisory council, not to mention the regional advisory council's obligations and criteria with respect to consulting with people within the region and the community and receiving information from people about the implications: none of this stuff is laid out in the act. It's just: "There will be a council. Government will appoint it on whatever basis they see fit. They may do whatever they think is necessary to come up with a plan." It may involve extensive consultation; it may involve very little consultation. We don't really know. Then, of course, notwithstanding all that, the government can just say: "Well, thanks. It's been fun having you here, but we're actually going to go in a completely different direction." So there is a tremendous amount of uncertainty.

While I do appreciate the introduction of a legislative vehicle to potentially move forward with the land-use framework, there is so much discretion, as is usually the case with this government, left to cabinet within this bill with so few criteria set out. The difficulty that we have is that the authority being given to cabinet through this bill and the implications of what this bill could cover are so broad, yet the way in which it would move forward is so without detail and so without clarity. We can't help but have some significant concerns about it.

That's sort of how we'll start on this issue. I will just say again, though, that the principle is a good one. We absolutely support the principle behind it. The key is whether Albertans, members of the Assembly, key stakeholders will be able to engage in the process and whether there will be a sufficient level of transparency and accountability ultimately and mechanisms for people to actually have their concerns and their positions seriously considered by government throughout this process. That is our concern.

In broad principle that's our view of this legislation as it stands at this point. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Minister of Municipal affairs, then the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, then the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise and join second reading debate of Bill 36, the Alberta Land Stewardship Act. Since we are at second reading, we are debating the principle of the bill, so I have to say that in principle I like this bill. I think that in principle this is a good bill. Needs some work. Needs some tweaking around the edges. I don't know that I would go quite so far as the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona in terms of finding issues in the bill that need to be worked on, but there are some, and I think our side will be bringing forward amendments at the appropriate time, which is in committee.

Again, I reiterate that in principle I like this bill, and I think it goes in the right direction. Of course, you might not be so surprised to hear me say that since a couple of years ago, in 2007, I introduced a private member's bill, Bill 211, Planning for the Future of Communities Act. My colleagues across the way voted that one down. Shock. Horror. Surprise. They voted that one down. The interesting thing, Mr. Speaker, is that if they had passed Bill 211 two years ago, we would be two years further on in the implementation of a land-use strategy because this Bill 36 is eerily like Bill 211. I want to say clearly that Bill 211 offered at least some inspiration to the members opposite. Well, maybe not the Member for Peace River, who is sitting there shaking his head right now. I would simply point out to the hon. member that denial ain't only a river.

Nevertheless, I myself have to admit that Bill 211 was inspired by a piece of legislation in Ontario, the Places to Grow Act, which I think was a very aptly named piece of legislation. It would have been an apt name for Bill 211. It would be an apt name for this particular Bill 36 because that, essentially, is what this bill is about, places to grow and places to preserve, places to protect. The rough patch that our economy has hit notwithstanding, with the incredible growth pressures in this province over the last several years we've seen now the necessity – some of us saw it earlier than others, clearly – for moving in this direction to come up with a land-use strategy and legislative authority to create regional plans that will implement the land-use framework throughout the province, which is what this bill will do.

You know, as I was preparing to get up and join debate on this today, I was thinking of the number of different ways that I could approach this. There are almost as many ways as there are communities in my constituency, interests of mine, interests of people I know, that sort of thing. You can take it from the approach of a mature inner-city residential community like Cliff Bungalow-Mission in inner-city Calgary, which is a community dating back to about 1910, 1912. It's coming up on its hundredth anniversary. It was originally, at least the Cliff Bungalow side of it, housing for Canadian Pacific Railway workers and managers. The Mission district, of course, is one of the oldest if not the oldest district in Calgary. Folks in Inglewood might dispute that. It's one of the two oldest; let's put it that way.

The residents of Cliff Bungalow-Mission – and I refer to them as one community because they are represented by one community association – are deeply concerned about the ability to preserve the character of their neighbourhood from intense development pressures over the last few years. It's not that they're antidevelopment – far from it – but there are certain characteristics of their neighbourhood, of their community that they want to see preserved. They want to see the opportunity for the development of affordable housing in their neighbourhood.

You know, there are a lot of communities that don't feel that strongly in favour of affordable housing, but the folks in Cliff Bungalow and Mission do. They want to see that when new development takes place, when old housing is knocked down and new housing takes its place – condominium developments, townhouses, more densification of the neighbourhood even though it's pretty densely developed as it is – the new development architecturally respects the heritage character of the neighbourhood, that the mature trees are preserved, things like that.

You can get so far negotiating those things as a community with city hall. You can get so far with an area redevelopment plan. But when you've got something like a land-use strategy and a Land Stewardship Act and a regional plan and within that context a subregional plan and an intermunicipal plan involving, you know, the Calgary region or the capital region or something like that, then you've got something backing you up that helps you preserve and create the kind of character for your community that you want.

Another thing that is a particular interest of mine and has been for a number of years now, which a bill like this can and should and, I think, will address, is the rapid disappearance of our rangeland in southern Alberta. This was an issue first brought to my attention by the Nature Conservancy of Canada I would say about 10 or 11 years ago now, when the Nature Conservancy sounded the warning that the subdivision of our rangeland in southern Alberta was continuing at such a pace that if nothing was done to preserve that rangeland, which is a unique land use and a unique geographical feature, if you will, a unique ecosystem, if I can apply that term here, in Canada, that rangeland would be gone by 2020.

Thankfully, since that alarm was sounded by the Nature Conservancy, work has been done, especially around the area of conservation easements, and this particular bill speaks to that. The Alberta Land Stewardship Act will enable the expanded use of conservation easements, which are voluntary, legal agreements between landowners and a qualified organization like the Nature Conservancy, which is a land trust, or like government to conserve the ecological integrity of a piece of land. The current landowner retains ownership, but the conservation easement is registered on the land title, and then that particular parcel of land is protected under that easement. Those conservation easements have been around in Alberta now for about 10 years. There are about 300 square kilometres of Alberta's private lands under conservation easements right now. That only represents .2 per cent, two-tenths of a per cent, of our private land, but it's a start, and a bill like this allows us to get a good deal farther than that.

There are other conservation initiatives, too: conservation offsets, conservation directives, transfers of development credits, conservation exchanges. I like these tools. These tools will go a long way to preserving not only those ecological portions that are designated or defined as natural or native areas but also those areas which are under some degree of human development, like ranching, and which have a very unique purpose, a unique function, and which in their own way represent a form of conservation and a land use that very much must be protected. As anyone who is even distantly related to or involved with or acquainted with ranching knows, ranchlands these days are much more profitable if you can hive off subdivisions or sections of them, whether that's for acreage development or whatever you're doing, than if you're trying to keep the entire spread going. So there's some good stuff in here, some really good stuff in here.

And, yes, there are some quibbles, some concerns. I think the big one is that there's no mandatory public consultation and, close on the heels of that one, no binding cumulative impacts. The Member for Edmonton-Strathcona has spoken to that angle, I think, and rather than add to it, I'll just concur with what she had to say about the cumulative impacts. The public consultation part, I think, needs stressing. Right now that's a discretionary item in this bill, and I believe it needs to be made mandatory.

I'll refer back to Bill 211 again, which would have balanced our respect for municipal autonomy with the clear need for a provincial role in support of integrated regional and intermunicipal planning. I mean, we have at this level a role to play as the coach, the quarterback, the head cheerleader, the encouraging and, to some extent, enabling body. The province has a clear role, I think, in ensuring that planning occurs and that a planning process is in place, but fundamentally I believe that those plans, those actual plans, are best developed by local leaders, local citizens with support and backing from the provincial government rather than top-down direction. So I think that's key, and I think as we go forward into Committee of the Whole, we're going to be wanting to talk a good deal more about that in a good deal of detail. I think that public consultation and cumulative impacts need to be made mandatory, and I think if they are, this law will be stronger, a better law.

There are a few other things as well. There appears to be no appeals process in the legislation around the development of regional plans other than cabinet's ability to amend those plans as they wish. I'd like to know the reasoning behind that, and I'd like to question the reasoning behind that, quite frankly.

There are a number of things that the bill says that regional plans may do as opposed to saying what the plans must do. I think as we get into committee study, I'm going to be wanting to tweak some of those.

But, again, we're at second reading. Second reading speaks to the principle of the bill. The principle of this bill, I think, is excellent. The government is on the right track. I don't get to say that all that often, but the government this time is on the right track, in my opinion, and certainly at second reading I'll be voting in favour of this bill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs, do you want to postpone? Did you want to participate today?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, I'll make my comments during committee.

The Speaker: Well, you're going. I've recognized you now, so go.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, I just have one comment. I'll make my comments during Committee of the Whole. I just wanted to let the hon. member opposite know that, you know, Bill 211 had some good ideas in principle, but it was the detail that gave me concern.

The Speaker: Well, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is now available. The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll take advantage of that because he said he was going to make some comments, and all he made was that one very general statement. This member wants to hear more. He wants specifics. Inquiring minds want to know, Minister.

The Speaker: Sorry. We have a Q and C. The hon. minister was recognized. If you don't want to participate in Q and C, that's fine, but we still have time available for questions and responses. Any other members want to raise a question? No further members?

Then we'll recognize the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today and speak to Bill 36, the Alberta Land Stewardship Act. I would like to first congratulate the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development and all those who worked on bringing this important piece of legislation forward.

The conservation of our natural heritage is part of the legacy our ancestors bequeathed to us. It is not legislated. It is something that every Albertan is a beneficiary of. We are born with the notion that this land is not ours but belongs to generations of Albertans, present and future.

This legislation proposes to create regional advisory councils of pre-eminent Albertans who will advise the government on economic, environmental, and social goals for each region. Planning and land-use restrictions are nothing new in Alberta, of course. Decades ago the province was split into green and white zones, the former primarily for forestry and the latter for settlements. Until they were abolished in 1995, Alberta had regional planning commissions. They failed because they did not respect landowners and tried to run against their rights in some cases.

Land-use planning in the form of municipal zoning has always existed for subdividing land, and this will not be affected either by this legislation. Municipalities will retain their authority for municipal development plans, area structure plans, land-use bylaws, and making decisions on subdivisions and development standards.

Mr. Speaker, clearly, land-use restrictions and planning have been an ongoing Alberta project. The new regional planning does not mean creating a heavy-handed, centralized bureaucracy in Edmonton. It does mean, however, that the government will provide the kind of policy direction and guidelines and opportunities that local levels of government cannot. That being said, the most local level of government is the Alberta landowning family. There is no one better placed to determine the best use of their land than the owners who reside upon it.

I am thinking of the thousands of Albertans who ranch not merely as a means of earning a living but also as a living legacy of our western heritage, Albertans like the late Jim Hole, who passed away recently. Jim farmed on ranches east and west of Airdrie all of his life. Even after he sold most of his herd in 1982, he kept a keen interest in ranching and farming, especially in the young people of our area and their 4-H projects. This legislation is about preserving the Alberta that Jim helped to create. It is about preserving our landscapes, protecting our streams, and keeping our traditional agricultural values. All of these can be accomplished while respecting the fundamental right of Albertans to own property.

At first glance much of this legislation may be interpreted as a regression on property rights, but it would be a very large mistake to think so as this bill, in my view, does the exact opposite. It strengthens landowner rights. Bill 36 has provisions for four conservation tools: conservation easements, conservation offsets, conservation directives, and transfer of development credits. I would like to briefly explain what these are and why I believe they will work to strengthen property rights protection in our province.

A conservation easement is a voluntary legal agreement between a landowner and a qualified organization, like a land trust, to conserve a land's ecological integrity. Easements are registered on the landowner's title. A great example of private, small, family-level, and local government voluntary conservationism is the late Doc Seaman's generosity in placing conservation easements on the historic 125-year-old OH Ranch. This was a gift almost as important to Albertans as when Doc helped to bring the Calgary Flames to Alberta during the 1980s.

Mr. Speaker, conservation efforts driven by landowners is the finest example of who we are as Albertans. We are stewards and conservationists at heart. This bill will not change that. This bill will not disrupt these grassroots efforts. The government will not get in the way of the good work done by groups such as the Nature Conservancy of Canada, the Southern Alberta Land Trust Society, and Ducks Unlimited. This legislation will not get in the way of generous Albertans who want to responsibly steward their land.

Another tool in this bill is the conservation offset, that can replace, restore, or compensate for the effects of an activity on public or private land. In early 2008 the Suncor Energy Foundation and the Alberta Conservation Association partnered together to protect habitat in the Winagami Lake area. This was a three-year pilot project that led to 1,750 acres of ecologically significant boreal habitat being secured for conservation. You know, it's a fine contribution to our ecological heritage, in my view.

Another tool, the transfer of development credits, helps direct development away from our protected or conserved land. This can protect agricultural, ecological, or heritage landscapes from urban and rural growth pressures.

Lastly, a conservation directive is a new, nonvoluntary tool that through regional plans will protect, conserve, and enhance landscapes, views, environmentally sensitive areas, or agricultural land, that is important to all Albertans. I would like to take a moment to dwell on this last tool for a second. My constituents and other Albertans have raised some concerns about what these conservation directives might mean for property rights.

Read literally, it basically gives the government of Alberta the power through a regional plan to take an interest in any piece of private land for conservation purposes. However, all this will be accomplished with appropriate compensation. None of this will happen without landowners being properly compensated for a public good they are asked to provide. This is an important and, in fact, a groundbreaking proposal that ensures that landowners are compensated for being asked to provide a public good even in cases where their land is sometimes not directly affected.

The act protects property rights. Landowners will be compensated for any loss in market value based on principles under the Expropriation Act. This is an improvement over the status quo that placed the costs of conservation for public good on what I would define as the private treasury. The private treasury consists of the funds, monies, and savings that families have privately, of course.

Some critics may argue that providing mandatory compensation will be a disincentive for government to use conservation directives. Well, that is exactly the point. These decisions have to be done responsibly and must respect the private costs borne by Alberta families that are associated with conservation. No other jurisdiction proposes to protect the rights of landowners the way Bill 36 does.

Another major benefit to landowners is the regional plans themselves. They will provide consistency, stability, and predictability. Lands determined to be candidates for conservation directives will be identified in the regional plans. Formal notice will be provided that will outline the land affected, give a description of the directive, notify the landowner of the right to compensation, describe the application process to the Land Compensation Board, and inform the landowner of the right to appeal any decision.

No longer will landowners be surprised by having parks or other conservation areas created at their expense and at the whim of politicians. If the only way to protect the land is to impose a conservation directive, then the value of the land will be appraised, any impact assessed, and landowners will be compensated for any loss in market value. Landowners will retain title to their land. Often in the past they were expropriated outright, losing lands that may have been passed down through several generations.

Mr. Speaker, the process I have just outlined is game changing. It is an unprecedented victory for the rights of landowners in this province. It will ensure that our province's precious views, landscapes, and lands that we all know and love are preserved for generations to come. I am very excited to see this bill proceed. I support it, and I urge all members of this Assembly to support it as well.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Anyone wish to participate?

Then I'll recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I support the nature or the underlying principle of land protection and land designation. I see where Bill 36 leads toward the eventuality of a land-use framework, and I want to recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, who referenced his previous private member's Bill 211, that, as he noted, would have taken us in this direction two years ago had it been adopted.

As the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere pointed out that this would reinforce the rights of landowners and private holdings, my concern is that when you add this bill to previous bills – Bill 19 from this year and Bill 46 from last year – what we are seeing is an attempt by the provincial government to centralize its controls over land, not just the Crown land but the private land. If it were strictly for stewardship purposes and in the best interests of, say, watershed protection, protection of the air, I would be less concerned. The white and green zones, that again the MLA for Airdrie-Chestermere referenced, while currently those designations are drawn up and appear as colour-codings on a map, the reality is that just because something appears to be in the green zone and, supposedly, comes under a notion of a degree of greater protection, that's far from the case that I have witnessed, particularly in Kananaskis.

The concept of multi-use continues to override the notion of priority use, and my experience was that on any given day, regardless of the fact that there may be a fire ban on at the time, you could simultaneously have clear-cutting, camping; you could have free-ranging cattle roaming through the area. There was no one to direct the various uses or prioritize them. That certainly was not in the best interests of either the flora, the fauna, or the people that were in the area trying to enjoy it because, as I say, there is no referee. Now, if the land-use framework is done properly, that referee will exist, and priorities will be established based on seven watersheds. I very much appreciate that concept.

The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere pointed out the wonderful donation of Doc Seaman's with the ranch. We've had similar wonderful donations of land that's going to eventually turn into a park, and that's the Glenbow Ranch project, that stretches from Cochrane to Calgary. The need to co-ordinate the donations of land, such as the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie mentioned, through organizations like the Nature Conservancy, that Larry Simpson and other members have been so passionate about, and the notion of co-ordinating conservation easements and offsets and trying to link them with existing Crown land is a wonderful idea. Also, from the point of view of protecting animals, if done properly, it will help to preserve the Yellowstone to Yukon wildlife corridor, that continues to be fragmented by a variety of different types of land use.

We've had a number of individuals: the Pekisko Group, members of the Cartwright family, Ian Tyson, landowners in the Longview area and then heading further into the Whaleback and then going into the area that Larry Simpson in his Nature Conservancy refers to as the last five miles. That's the area along the American border that is one of the few areas where we still have fescue grasses and original vegetation. So protecting these lands for enjoyment by future generations is absolutely essential.

In terms of restoration and protection I'm extremely proud of my father, Bryce Chase, who has planted single-handedly thousands upon thousands of caragana as part of restoration projects. He has worked on Two Jack Lake in terms of fish habitat preservation, and for this he has received the centennial medal, the Order of the Bighorn from the Alberta Fish and Game organization, and numerous other awards because he very much cares. He has passed on that idea of preservation and conservation to me and, in turn, to my daughter and his great-grandchildren.

This land-use framework is absolutely essential. Dr. Brad Stelfox has done a number of presentations on cumulative effects. The beauty of Brad's presentations is that he allows the viewer to interpret the results. He doesn't push people in a particular direction. He just indicates that if we continue with a certain type of usage at the rate we're going, then here's what it's going to look like in 2020, 2040, 2060 unless there is some type of intervention. The difference between stewardship and central control not necessarily for positive legacy is where my concern for Bill 36 lies.

If we don't protect our watershed, as the land-use framework suggests it will do, then forget whatever future activities we might have, whether it be trying to maintain a ranching stile in the Whaleback area, west of Longview, whether it's parks and protected areas. Right now only 4 per cent of this province is set aside under the provincial parks and protected areas, but as I began, even those areas aren't guaranteed to be protected. It's absolutely important that we get this right.

Lorne Taylor, with his water for life, began this progress years ago. It's taken us years to get to Bill 36, but my concern is that we haven't got it right yet. Hopefully, in terms of amendments, in terms of collaboration and collegial interaction between all parties, we'll get this right. As I say, Bill 46 got it wrong. Bill 19 got it wrong. Bill 36 without amendment has got it wrong. We're still waiting for the land-use framework to get it right.

We've got a lot of homework ahead of us. I think the individuals within this House are capable of achieving a responsible land-use framework which will protect a legacy for generations to come, but we're not there yet.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available if anyone wishes to participate.

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to be able to speak to Bill 36, the Alberta Land Stewardship Act, in second reading. There are a few things that I would like to point out that have already been talked about, if I could bandy them about and flesh them out a little more. I think that is the opportunity that is before me, so I will take it.

If you look at the Alberta Land Stewardship Act in total, the idea is going forward in the correct direction. What we actually see is an act here that is going to input the land-use framework at some point in time. It will be able to measure some creative boundaries here in Alberta that will be able, then, to govern and grow those areas with much more respect for the watersheds and respect for nature and respect for our birds and animals that live on the Alberta prairie that need to be respected.

I guess there is some point of consternation in that this act should've been in place a long time ago. We can note that two years ago this bill, which was Bill 211 at that time, was brought forward by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, and at that time it was rejected. Probably it should have been made law at that time. We could've made some amendments and got things going, and it would've saved us two years on this timeline. Even at that, Alberta would still have been behind the curve if you look at areas like Ontario, areas like Oregon, areas like that that have had these types of acts in place for a long time, that really have managed the growth of various areas and, in fact, stopped cities from growing exponentially and stopped the inordinate urban sprawl and all that sort of stuff. That's where we're at.

We should've been at this point we are at here today, for sure, two years ago, and probably a strong argument exists that we should've been here 10 years ago. However, those are just some of the details, I guess, of living in Alberta, that we don't quite get to things as soon as we should. I think it is a failure of this government that this hasn't been brought in a long time ago. Nevertheless, that's where we are.

There are some things that concern me in this bill as well. They were brought up by members earlier. Primarily it's again with the concentration of power, that this bill seems to put all the decision-making power into the hands of the cabinet, with no recourse to courts or other appeal mechanisms that can be put in place. Where it stops is, I guess, for all intents and purposes, the cabinet. The government is the single deciding force that can implement. It can change. It can withhold money. It can consult. It doesn't have to consult. It can do whatever the heck it wants in regard to land-use decisions once this bill is in place.

Now, I'm hopeful that this doesn't occur. Nevertheless, when we set it up such that it is being set up at this time, that is what can happen. I would say that no doubt someday in the future it will happen. The concentration of power that we see happening in this province will come back, and citizens will look and say: well, how the heck did this happen? You know, hopefully, we'll say: we kind of warned you of it; we kind of thought this might happen. At this point in time that's not quite happening, but it's happening on every single bill we see coming through here, and we see no difference on this bill.

I guess, just to go back on the history here and sort of why this is a bit of a positive movement, the Alberta government has talked about doing this in the past. For instance, in 1999 the government published Alberta's Commitment to Sustainable Resource and Environmental Management, which was basically a document that looked a lot like the beginning of the land-use framework, that this government said they were going to get busy on doing and implementing in the near future and all that good stuff. Anyway, that document sat on the shelves for a number of years, but it was not signed until 2006. Following that, you go to the draft land-use framework, which was finally presented by the government in early 2008, with the final land-use framework document released in December 2008.

I think that just shows you how sometimes there are plans to make plans to make plans. Sometimes all these announcements are made with much fanfare and much trumpeting and flag-waving, when they're merely almost a delay tactic or a way to take the public's attention off the government, I guess, moving toward actually doing something. The announcement is just a way of distracting things or buying the government time, which I'm sort of seeing happen in many other cases up here in the Legislature in even the short time I have been here. That's sort of the future.

I guess where we're talking about the seven regions and such, although the concentration of power exists, this will hopefully allow for our land development to go forward in a much more reasonable fashion. You know, we have some stuff on the Alberta landscape that is not something to be that proud of. For instance, the city of Calgary is the largest city, I believe, in terms of its land use in the world, possibly, or it's as large as New York City, and New York City houses 10 times the people.

Nevertheless, this type of thing has happened in our landscape. I believe in the future that because we've delayed so long in getting a land-use framework to the table, it will make our cities and our ability to do business and what have you and our communities' ability to thrive much more difficult because we didn't recognize the fact, you know, that sustainable development was in vogue a lot before this document recognized it. Communities that develop sustainable planning or sustainable development and cumulative effects planning and all of those things are going to be much better served in the future than, I believe, communities that are spread out over wide areas, that use an abundance of natural resources and even fossil fuel resources to survive and even thrive. I believe those areas in the future will not do as well as those who recognized this some time ago and built up and developed land-use frameworks at a much earlier time.

Nevertheless, as indicated by people earlier, this act brings in a wide variety of legislation. It amends 26 pieces of legislation and tries to bring them in line under this act. That is part of the centralization of power that I was referring to earlier and the proposed amendment's attempt to ensure that existing acts align to support the regional plans and ensure compliance with these plans. For some legislation this requires more extensive changes and will have to be done in the future.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

As also indicated by my colleague from Calgary-Currie, this act will have more of a direct hand with the Municipal Government Act. It's going to take a more committed working relationship between the province and the regional communities and surrounding cities to work together, which is a good thing. Hopefully, areas like Calgary, Okotoks, Airdrie, and that can with this plan hopefully develop their own regions with the existing watershed and go forward in a more sustainable way.

It also sort of amends the forest management act and has many conservation and stewardship tools, which was talked about already. Conservation easements are being provided, which is a good thing. A conservation easement is a voluntary legal agreement between a landowner and a qualified organization such as a land trust or a government that conserves the ecological integrity of a piece of land. The easement is registered on land title, but the landowners retain ownership of the land. This is one of those good things.

Another good thing is conservation offsets that are going to counterbalance the effects of both activity on public and private land. They can be used to replace and restore or compensate for affected landscapes. For example, a company can serve an environmentally significant area to offset its industrial activity elsewhere. The act also sets the framework for offsets to be used for restoration, mitigation, or conservation as it provides a legal basis for government to establish an offset program and to set rules for defining and trading these offsets, which is going to take a certain amount of dedication and a certain amount of, I guess, utilization of the secretariat and putting this into play.

Nevertheless, I am hopeful that this sort of sets us on a new stage of recognizing that Alberta is probably at a tipping point when it comes to recognizing both how much, I guess, land and water and air and all that stuff we take for granted can actually be put to use by industry and others in a sustainable way and still have an economy and still have people who are living in a healthy state.

The land-use framework recognizes that in the language. It recognizes that we are at a tipping point here in Alberta. I think to that extent the government has to be commended for at least recognizing that the no-holds-barred approach to developing industry and letting industry, I guess, go willy-nilly wherever it wanted to, which by all means probably in the past was relatively effective – you know, we had lots of land; we had lots of resources. [Mr. Hehr's speaking time expired]

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of comments or questions. Does any hon. member want to take part?

Seeing none, does any other hon. member wish to speak on the bill?

Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 36 read a second time]

Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Amendment Act, 2009

[Adjourned debate May 7: Dr. Sherman]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, do you wish to continue since you still have time from the last adjournment?

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to stand and speak to Bill 44, the Alberta Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Amendment Act, 2009. Human rights are an important and delicate issue for many Albertans and Canadians because no single issue is more essential to humanity than how we treat ourselves and one another.

A few weeks ago from my vantage point in this House, when it appeared that an hon. member opposite used his liberty with impunity to call some members of the government caucus an inappropriate word that I don't want to mention, I am reminded of past examples of discrimination. It reminded me of when I first came to this country in the '70s as a child. You felt different, you looked different, and you knew you were in a cold climate in a cold country with no family and no social supports. Your parents were adventurers to this land. But there were times when you were made to feel different, and that was the most difficult point about discrimination, Mr. Speaker.

This is a nation that is founded on immigration. We are all descendants of immigrants if we are not direct immigrants. Today before you you see the most diverse caucus in this nation. Mr. Speaker, human rights are defined in the Canadian Oxford Dictionary as the "basic rights held to belong to every living person."

My personal experience from my family. My grandfather came here in 1906 – and he was the first from our family to come – at the age of 16 in his search for freedom for in his home nation they didn't have freedom to speak, nor did they have freedom.

In speaking to this bill, I would like to speak on freedom of speech – I think this is one of the most valuable things that we as human beings have – and, at the same time, the freedom to walk down the streets and have the feeling that you belong in this society. With that freedom of speech is the right to life, liberty, justice, free thought and expression, and equality before the law.

The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms sets out guiding principles, and the Criminal Code of Canada defines acceptable conduct. Furthermore, the government of Canada has addressed the discrepancy between law and practice by creating a Human Rights Commission to investigate complaints regarding human rights violations, provide legal channels to hear the complaints, and find solutions to human rights problems. It seeks to educate all Canadians about human rights and to advocate equality of opportunity for groups in society that are frequently the target of discrimination. It does this for the good of society and because discrimination based on age, gender, race, religion, and sexual orientation is against the law.

Likewise, Mr. Speaker, each province has supplemental human rights laws that cover other issues not included in federal legislation. Thus every Canadian is legally protected from discrimination by the various levels of human rights legislation. But in order to guarantee that this legislation is effective, provincial human rights commissions oversee the application and everyday function of human rights laws.

Mr. Speaker, over the past year there has been much discussion about the effect of antidiscrimination legislation on freedom of speech. There are certain individuals who believe that section 3 should not be included in the Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Amendment Act. I am standing in support of this bill today on account of what it proposes not to change. It does not silence the voice of the voiceless or remove the advocate of the visible minority, of the new Canadians. Rather, it sends a loud, clear message that all human beings are to be respected and accepted and that willful discrimination will not be abided. Removing section 3 would be inconsistent with our Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. It could lead to unnecessary legal squabbling.

Just as importantly, it sends the wrong message about us. The vast majority of Albertans, as I've mentioned, are from elsewhere or descendants of folks from elsewhere. We are not narrow minded, and we are not intolerant. In fact, I would say that this is one of the most tolerant societies and provinces in this nation. The elected members are evidence of that.

However, within the context of the overall human rights system the government of Alberta has recognized the need for a few simple yet vitally important administrative changes so that freedom of speech may be maintained, which, by the way, has already begun with the introduction of a new chief commissioner, who brings an extensive judicial background and a new focus to the position. Other necessary changes include finding ways to reduce the average time it takes to process a complaint, working to improve the general functioning of the system for all complainants, and, of course, expanding section 3 to include sexual orientation.

While some may grandstand for the media and make themselves advocates and champions of freedom of speech, they continue to have that right under this legislation. Section 3 is and will continue to be an important piece of Alberta's human rights legislation because it outlines protections for those same freedoms of speech. In fact, this act states that nothing shall be deemed to interfere with our freedom of expression or opinion on any subject. The real challenge is curtailing alarmist rhetoric and promoting common sense, a value I believe most Albertans possess in abundance.

As proof of this, freedom of speech complaints account for less than 3 per cent of Alberta Human Rights Commission investigations. That's a good thing. This very Assembly illustrates equality of rights and opportunity and the protection of the law provided by this great province. This Premier, who did not speak English until the sixth grade, has provided a great example of this. As he pointed out, this caucus is the most diverse in this nation.

Mr. Speaker, let us not divert our focus from the big picture; 97 per cent of cases reviewed by the Alberta Human Rights Commission are with the respective areas of employment and tenancy. This legislation ensures continued protection and equality of the rights of all Albertans where they need it most: in schools, in workplaces, and in homes. I will support it and encourage all hon. members to do the same.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the hon. member from across for explaining his comment in the House, and I accept his apology.

It's truly an honour for me to be a member of this Assembly. It's truly an honour for me also to be an Albertan. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of questions and comments. Does any hon. member want to take that five minutes?

Seeing none, now back to the bill. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. While I appreciate the intent of Bill 44, it fails to achieve its intent.

Last Wednesday the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark and I were sitting side by side in the Children and Youth Services discussion. As we were chatting, it turned out that given his age and given my age, I could very well be his father or of his father's age, at least. I'm extremely proud of my son-in-law, as I'm sure the hon. member's father is of him.

My son-in-law's family had a similar experience coming from Kerala in southern India in the 1970s. They recognized the opportunities, although because it's a maternal society, Kerala had the highest education per capita of any of the states in India. However, the family came seeking opportunities that Canada provided, and like the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark my son-in-law and friends of his have been the recipients of prejudice.

Bill 44, as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark pointed out, deals to a large degree with employment and tenancy. What the bill has done is recognize the rights of individuals regardless of race, religion, or sexual orientation. Now, what Bill 44 does is recognize their rights in the workplace, it recognizes their rights to habitation, but unfortunately – and this is where I have great concerns – it turns public schools into places of potential prejudice.

What it does is say that while you can't discriminate on the basis of sexual orientation in the workplace or in a tenancy circumstance, prejudice can still be fostered either passively or actively within the school system because individuals who interpret a lesson as somehow connecting with sexual orientation or sexuality can show, basically, their concerns and expect to be accommodated by being previously informed about a discussion that has yet to occur. Under the School Act the protection already exists for classes in sexuality, and human sexuality is what I'm referring to.

There is also protection based on religious grounds, but where the areas become grey – for example, in the grade 7 social studies curriculum that I taught, there was a section on world religions. I provided the details: a little bit of a historical background of how the religions got started, the number of potential worshippers on a global basis, followers of the particular religion. My concern is: would I now be expected to send out a permission slip to parents saying that I'm going to be talking about world religions tomorrow should there be an objection? Or – and this happened, for example, when I was teaching English in grade 9 – one of the plays that we were studying was referring to pieces of wood, but the comment was: pile the faggots high. In this new circumstance and the misuse of the word "faggot" to be somebody who is of a same-sex nature, then that discussion could be the subject of a human rights accusation. So teachers don't know what grounds are now off limits. In the School Act it was fairly broadly determined, but with this latest aspect of religious opting out, there is no possible way of predetermining what might be considered offensive.

I think it's important that I establish a little bit of my own historical background in terms of relevancy. I was brought up in a Christian religion. In my particular church Sunday school went up to 21 years of age. When I was in one part of Saskatchewan visiting one grandma, who was my sort of preschool Sunday school teacher, it was the Anglican faith. When I was in Saskatoon, it was the Christian Science faith. I have a very strong faith-based upbringing, but nowhere in my religious studies, which continued on at the university level, where I actually prepared sermons on a weekly basis for my organization – nowhere there was I suggesting that I had a stronger sense of right or wrong, of religious principle, than other people did.

When people come to my door and have a particular religious belief, I don't slam my door in their face. I don't opt out through closing my mind or my door to the individuals who appear on my doorstep. I interact with the individuals, and I thank them for their concerns and for coming to my door in their belief that they had a very strong message to give. On some occasions I've even suggested: would you like to exchange literature? I've always sort of ended the discussion with: thank you very much; I have my own faith, and I'm pleased that you're faithful. My version of faith is very much grounded in the New Testament, where we talk about loving thy neighbour as thyself and doing good to others and setting a table in the presence of one's enemies. It doesn't say anywhere: your views aren't good enough or I don't accept your views; therefore, I'm going to pull myself out of a circumstance.

The strength of our public system is its secular nature. If that is eroded and it becomes a place, potentially, of religious intolerance as opposed to tolerance of all faiths and backgrounds, then the whole fabric of the public school system, that I've been so proud to be a member of for 34 years, is undermined. As long as the religious opt-out clause, which has been extended from religious topics and topics of human sexuality, gets blurred by going into sexual orientation in great detail, which, as I said at the beginning, in Bill 44 is no longer acceptable as a cause of prejudice – if that type of clause is instituted as another layer into the public system, then it changes the whole nature of the public system.

We have private schools. We have charter schools. We have home-schooling. We accommodate in this highly tolerant province a whole variety of opportunities. I believe that one needs to live their faith as opposed to using their faith as a hammer, and that is what I am concerned about, that religious intolerance of an individual based on sexual orientation will now become enshrined within the public education system and replace what was the intent of the education act.

I've heard the hon. Minister of Culture and Community Spirit speak at news conferences and say: "What's the big deal? It already exists under the School Act." Well, sexual orientation doesn't exist under the School Act, and bringing it into legislation excludes as opposed to includes a significant sector of the public. The last thing I want schools to be turned into are bigotry breeding grounds. One's faith is personal, but when one starts to exercise that faith, whether by excluding themselves from a science lesson or a literature lesson or a social studies history lesson, especially at the junior high situation, where children are undergoing changes that people may not want to discuss under the terms of human sexuality, the reality is that physical and mental changes are taking place, and kids are extremely vulnerable at that age. The child who isn't sure what his religious rights or beliefs are would feel potentially uncomfortable in a variety of discussions, and if that child leaves the class, standing up for what he or she believes is their religious right, there is the perception of that child being excluded.

I don't want public schools to have to be forced into a circumstance where an external religious muzzle is placed on any types of open discussion. Trust teachers. Where a teacher's trust isn't warranted or if there is any evidence of crime, of hatred, or exclusion based on race, religion, sexual orientation, then it belongs in the courts. It doesn't belong as a shoehorn into human rights legislation. Parents already can make the choices.

Please, I urge you to remove this particular clause, which undermines the whole foundation of a secular public education system.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to say, first, that I respect very much the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity and his respectful arguments and the tone of debate that he brought.

I have two questions in particular. Specifically, you mentioned the world religions class, the grade 7 class that you taught. I happened to go through that same course. During that experience my personal faith as well as the faiths of several other students in the class were really, for lack of a better word, slandered. It was very much misrepresented. I don't think it was on purpose. I don't think that the teacher in that case had any sort of vice or anything towards these specific faiths. I think it just came from a lack of a true understanding about what that faith taught. And it was more than just mine; it was others as well. I will say, though, that although it wasn't intentional, the discrimination that I felt at that time was very real, and the feelings of hurt were very real. My first question would be: is that appropriate? Is it intolerant of me as a parent, in order to keep my kids from possibly experiencing that same discomfort and pain, to teach them about world religions in my own home, where I think I can give a very fair and balanced and very tolerant approach to that subject?

The second question. We all know – and it's very much related – that one example where the state thought that they were a better teacher of religion than parents was the tragedy, of course, of the Indian residential schools, where the state took children against their will and forced them to learn a religious-based teaching. I guess what I would ask is: in that context, given that history, do you believe that the state is better positioned than parents to teach religion to students?

Mr. Chase: It is my firm belief as a parent and a grandparent that religion is something that originates in the home. Depending on your type of practice, it may be fortified in a mosque, in a synagogue, in a church. It may be celebrated within a natural setting. It is not the state's purpose to supplement or teach a child a particular religious faith. That's up to the families.

I'm sorry that you felt the type of discomfort in that class on world religions that I was explaining other children might feel. As a teaching professional it's very important that we not provide a particular view as to, you know, yea this religion, nay that one. It's very important that we lay out the factual information. For example, I said a major prophet for the Islamic religion was Mohammed. I talked about Buddha. I talked about Jesus as being a primary representative of the Christian faith. But I did not indicate that one religion or another, other than numbers, has a greater following or should be followed over any other. That's very important. That was part of a global class, and I provided maps on where the various faiths had the greatest intensity of worship and so on.

I would like to separate religion and secular education. Religion, as I say, belongs, I believe, in the home. I believe the demonstration of one's religious beliefs is something that we should live by on a daily basis, but I don't think we should push our beliefs.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education, on the debate.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is a very important debate, and it's a very important debate because it's very important that the clear meaning and understanding of the intention of this bill be on the record and be understood. There has been a significant amount of discussion about what, in my view, is not in the bill, but I think it's important to say what is in the bill.

First of all, what is in the bill is some effort at an administrative change to the Human Rights Commission to make the processes of the Human Rights Commission more effective, to recognize that there are frivolous complaints that come forward and make sure that it's easier to deal with those, and to make sure that the complaints that come forward that are grounded are dealt with appropriately. The important part of the bill, really, is about the reinvigoration of the Human Rights Commission to do its job properly and to arm it to do its job properly.

There had been discussion – and I appreciate the comments from my colleague from Edmonton-Meadowlark – with respect to section 3. There had been comments that this bill does not address section 3, and I'm not going to go into the section 3 issue other than to say that there are all sorts of concerns about our right of freedom of speech. I'm one of these people who believes that I was born with a bundle of rights and that every time society does something through government, it takes away from my personal rights. Hopefully, it does that on an appropriate basis, to encourage and create a civil society. But there's nothing we can do as government which doesn't detract from my personal rights, so we have to always be on guard that when we detract from personal rights, we do it for rational reasons that are for the good of civil society.

The other thing I would say about section 3 and the freedom of speech and our freedom to express ourselves is that there are restrictions on all of our rights. I have a right to flail my arms around, but I don't have the right to connect them with somebody else when I do it, and I think freedom of speech has the same kind of limitations. That's all I'll say about section 3.

The section that I really want to address is section 9, which provides for putting section 11.1 into the act. It's very important because a lot of the public discussion and most of the discussion in here has been focused on that section 11.1 and what it means. Let me clear up something, first of all, that I think has been mentioned in the House – I know it's been mentioned outside the House – and that's whether section 11.1 deals with all educational institutions because it talks about a board as defined in the School Act. That board is defined in the School Act as not just school districts and school divisions; it also includes charter schools under section 36(1) of the act. So it should be perfectly clear that this includes charter schools. Should it also include private schools? Well, that's a subject that we could raise later on. Certainly, I would see no reason why it shouldn't, but clearly it includes charter schools. I wanted to make that perfectly clear.

Then there are the claims that people are making that this will somehow result in students being deprived of knowledge and understanding necessary to participate in a diverse society. This is not the intention or the import of section 11.1 as proposed. Section 11.1 affirms in law parents' ability to opt their child out of instruction that deals explicitly with religion, sexuality, or sexual orientation. This will not result in any changes to current practice.

Section 50 of the School Act already states that parents can opt their children out of religious instruction or exercises. The guide to education, the mandated policy that all schools operate under, states that the principal shall exempt a student from school instruction in human sexuality education at the written request of the student's parents. The guide to education is policy, not law. Mr. Speaker, section 11.1 affirms in law parents' ability to exempt their children but functionally changes nothing.

Now, some comments have been made that this has never extended to sexual orientation before. Human sexuality includes sexual orientation. Full stop. It's always been in there; it's always been part of the policy. Now it's part of the law. Some people didn't realize that that was included, so it's expressly mentioned so that people will realize that that's included.

The other effect of section 11.1, of course, is to require parents to be informed of instruction that deals explicitly with religion, sexuality, or sexual orientation. It only makes sense to do this because parents can't opt their children out of activities that they don't know about. This is a minor change to current practice in that section 50 of the School Act allows for opting out but doesn't require notification.

The guide to education says that parents shall be advised prior to the start of human sexuality instruction of their right to exempt their child from that course component. There is no similar notification about religious instruction or, for that matter, patriotic exercises in the current School Act, so that's now added. All section 11.1 does is mandate a consistent approach to informing parents and allowing them to opt out of religious or human sexuality instruction. When I say "religious," I mean as it says in the section, explicit religious instruction.

Are we going to cause mass chaos in the schools by requiring boards to inform parents about instruction explicitly addressing religion or human sexuality? Well, no. We already do that. We already require that parents be advised before instruction begins on human sexuality. Adding a requirement that they be advised of explicit instruction about religion imposes no extra unmanageable burden. In much the same way this does not create a logistical problem in schools, as has been mentioned. In the past teachers and principals have not had any problem accommodating students who have opted out of human sexuality instruction. Students who opt out of religious courses are not going to overwhelm the ability of teachers and principals to find suitable alternative activities.

Mr. Speaker, some critics of section 11.1 say that you can read anything into the meaning of religion, so students could opt out of anything that they interpret to be religious. That is not the import of section 11.1, and it's not the intention of section 11.1. Our current practice of allowing students to opt out of sexual education classes has not enabled anybody to opt out of their biology classes. I don't know why anyone would think that including religion here will enable anyone to opt out of discussions of Middle Eastern politics or evolution or geology. What are clearly intended are courses of study, educational programs, instructional materials, or instruction or exercises that are explicitly, specifically, primarily about religion.

Mr. Speaker, there are also claims that Bill 44 will somehow put a chill on what can be discussed in class. This concept that teachers will have to fear any utterings, that discussions in class will freeze, that there can be no utilization of teachable moments when a topic touches on religion or homosexuality is really not on. Social studies classrooms must and will be able to discuss current events, especially when they involve a clash of cultures, values, or even religions. This is not teaching religion. This is acknowledging that in the reality of today's society in developing students who are global citizens, religion will be part of the topic. That is basic to understanding where we are going and how we deal with disease among other things. Science will continue to teach about cell structure and its continuing adaptive evolution.

Other critics are asking why there is any particular sensitivity at all about teaching religion. The implication of these statements is that allowing students to be exempted from explicit religious instructions or teaching about religion somehow prevents students from learning about and appreciating diversity. That's simply not the case, Mr. Speaker. When it comes to values and value systems, there has always been this question of whether schools should teach values or whether that's the purview of the family.

Bill 44 is not about preventing children from learning about diversity. In fact, we can't prevent that, and we don't want to prevent that. In a modern, pluralistic society there is no way to avoid discussions of values. Just by walking into a modern classroom, with dozens of ethnocultural backgrounds, religious beliefs and, yes, sexual orientations, today's students are going to learn from each other about diversity. Our society increasingly reflects this diversity and celebrates this diversity. That's why students absolutely should be learning about subjects that they do not necessarily agree with, whether a scientific viewpoint or a religious belief. That's why we ask our students to express views based on their personal values and beliefs. Thinking through personal beliefs is an important part of developing judgment and character.

But there is a particular sensitivity for specifically teaching about religion and religious doctrine. While I want my children to understand the spectrum of religions in the world, I may not want you to interpret for my child what the doctrines of my religion are. That's why we respect and honour students' religious beliefs by allowing their parents to opt them out of religion classes.

When it comes to sexuality and sexual education, it's important to me that I know what you are teaching my child. Then I can be involved in ensuring that my child has more than a technical understanding of the mechanics of sex but also a clear and unequivocal view of the importance of sex within a loving and caring relationship. It is for these reasons that notification is provided to parents and the opportunity is there for a parent to say, "I would rather my child not participate."

Some people have argued that by putting these provisions in the Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Act, there is a significant change, that we're elevating them to the status of rights. Surprise. Parents have always had the fundamental right to direct the education of their child. That's recognized in the preamble of the School Act, Mr. Speaker, where it says that "parents have a right and a responsibility to make decisions respecting the education of their children." They have the right to review curriculum with teachers and, in fact, are encouraged to do so. I wish more parents would take an active interest in what is happening in their child's school. That's why parental rights, including being informed about and given the chance to opt out of explicit religious instruction and exercises and instruction about human sexuality, are important. But that absolutely does not include allowing a religious interpretation of the broader program of studies as grounds for opting out.

Mr. Speaker, I've always maintained that education exists not just for our children but for our communities and our society as a whole. This legislation is one of those efforts that walks the always uncertain and uneasy line between communal needs and personal preferences. However, it is clear that parents are ultimately responsible for their children, that society has an interest in making sure that children are appropriately educated, and that in some areas there is inevitably going to be a clash of values, which needs rational discussion and resolution.

This is a methodology of ensuring that parents can and will be involved when those sensitive subjects come up. They can opt out if necessary, but hopefully it would only be after a discussion with the teacher as to what was actually going to be included in the instruction and possibly the ability of the parent then to supplement that discussion at home if they had concerns. Ultimately, they have the opportunity, they have the option, they have the right to opt out.

One of the other issues that I want to deal with very quickly is this issue that perhaps teachers will be hauled before the Human Rights Commission. Mr. Speaker, clearly, if this section is in the human rights act, the Human Rights Commission has a role. One of the tenets of the Human Rights Commission is always to require a complainant to first go through other processes that are available to them. In the school process those processes have always been there and always worked. We have all across this province opportunity for parents to talk to teachers not just about these issues but about any issue in the curriculum that they find offensive or any teaching resource that they find offensive. We've had examples of that across the province where a parent has taken an objection to the resource, and the appropriate route is then to talk to the teacher about it. If they don't get satisfaction, talk to the principal about it. If they don't get satisfaction, talk to the school board about it. I'm not aware of any circumstances where that process has not been successful.

However, in the event that someone did complain to the Human Rights Commission, the Human Rights Commission would first ensure that they went through that process. Secondly, the Human Rights Commission would have the opportunity to determine whether this was a frivolous or a valid complaint. This doesn't have to be a huge process. In fact, the other amendments to the human rights act that are being proposed will make it much easier for the Human Rights Commission to do its job and not be burdened with frivolous complaints, to deal with those expeditiously and to deal with the appropriate complaints that come before them, the ones that have merit, in a robust nature.

I do not believe teachers or school boards should be scared of the process at all. I do not believe that there's anything in section 11 which should freeze discussion in the classroom at all. The clear interpretation that should be put on section 11.1 is that when a teacher in a program of studies is going to teach explicitly about religion or, as is in the School Act, religious instruction, when the teacher has a unit in their program of studies which teaches about human sexuality, which includes sexual orientation, notification is required. In fact, that's the process that's undertaken now, and it works.

Changing this, putting it into the human rights act, is not going to change the fact that parents have rights. It's not going to change the fact that parents are required to be notified as they are now under policy – not in the act but under policy – about the teaching of human sexuality.

It will change one thing with respect to religion, and that is not only the right to opt out of religious and patriotic instruction and exercises but the right to opt out of the teaching about religion. But it's explicitly teaching about religion and not using a religious lens on all the other curriculum to determine whether they disagree on religious grounds with anything that's being taught in science or math or social studies or literature.

Mr. Speaker, let's be clear about this. The intent of this bill is to make sure that you can opt out where appropriate but not opt out of all the other areas.

The Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I appreciate the hon. Minister of Education reviewing the historical significance of the School Act as it relates to opting out of religious classes and the specificity and definition of religious classes. I also appreciate his reinforcing of the sexuality clauses. But one area that he either treaded around or didn't tread into to the extent that it's causing the greatest deal of difficulty is the area of sexual orientation. That was not previously in the School Act, and now it is being put into this human rights legislation. That is where the difficulty of the interpretation will exist. I don't anticipate a degree of difficulty with the religious aspects. With regard to human sexuality it has always required a consent. I don't see that being a problem.

While we have promoted tolerance in one part of the bill with regard to sexual orientation, which the government reluctantly put in – it was 1998, with the Vriend case, when this matter first came to a head. Now we protect people, as I say, in the workplace, and we protect them in terms of tenancy, but it's a slippery slope as to whose rights are being protected, whose rights are subject to interpretation when it comes to sexual orientation. So if you could please talk about that part of the bill because that's where the controversy lies.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't believe there should be any controversy on this. The human rights bill, Bill 44, clearly puts sexual orientation into the act in all the appropriate places with respect to ensuring that there is no discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation. As the former Premier said when this was discussed in the House a number of years ago: I abhor discrimination. I think every member of the House would say that same thing. People should not be discriminated against on any basis, quite frankly. We all live in this society together, and we have to live together and work together. It's very important that it be in. This is the first time the human rights act has been opened. It's quite appropriate that there were changes to be made to the Human Rights Commission. So to put it in, now is a good time to do it.

With respect to human sexuality sexual orientation is part and parcel of human sexuality. In our mandated policy to school boards right now if they are teaching anything about human sexuality, they have to give notice to parents. The fact that it's specifically set out, because some people didn't realize that, in my view makes no change to the policy that has been mandated for a long time; that is, if you're teaching human sexuality, you need to give notice. I could give the member chapter and verse of the various sections of the curriculum that deal with human sexuality issues, where notice is required, but that's the sum and substance of it.

You can read it broader if you want, but my suggestion is that that's not the appropriate reading of it. The appropriate reading of it is that when you're teaching explicitly about religion, when you're teaching about human sexuality, including sexual orientation, those are areas where parents should be notified so that they can discuss the curriculum. If they have a problem about the way it's presented or the content of it, they can opt to teach their children themselves about values which they hold dear.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. There is no sexual orientation 101(b) of human sexuality. Sexual orientation isn't something that's limited to a health class. It's not a lifestyle. It's something that individuals are potentially born with. It's not a disease. It's not a choice. It's not a preference. But it isn't restricted to a human sexuality class. When issues of sexual orientation appear not as a direct part of a teaching lesson, can a person simply jump up and say, "I'm opposed to this person because they're soft-spoken" or "He's wearing purple and pink clothes again, and that's annoying me"?

Mr. Hancock: Clearly not, Mr. Speaker. Clearly the section says, "deals explicitly with religion, sexuality or sexual orientation." It's a class that deals with it. It's not a comment that comes up in class or a teachable moment that occurs. That's clear from the wording of it. It should be the way all of us focus on this because it's so important.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo on the debate.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a privilege to be able to speak to this bill although I will say that it is one of those things that I speak to with a little bit of a heavy heart as I don't think it holds Albertans in a good light or holds our classroom teaching to really going forward in a positive direction.

If I look back at this bill and sort of the makings of it, I look back at being in a law school class in about 1997-1998. We were then given the Alberta Court of Appeal's decision to read on Vriend. I remember that being interesting reading and going forward and then saying to myself: you know, this really is kind of bizarre. The fact that we actually appealed it to the Supreme Court of Canada I thought even more bizarre. Then the fact that we didn't immediately take the recommendation to implement sexual orientation into the human rights code like many other jurisdictions did immediately, like the Supreme Court of Canada suggested all jurisdictions do, again, I found very bizarre. I guess that's sort of what it was. That's why my first question that I believe I asked in this House was on when sexual orientation was going to come into our human rights legislation. I felt proud to ask that question. I'm actually overjoyed to see that that is finally part of the legislation in this act.

Nevertheless, you know, what the right hand giveth, the left hand taketh away, or something to that effect, because although we have a piece of I guess what we call symbolic, progressive, what have you, legislation going forward, we have an equally, I'd even suggest, more regressive act going forward the other way, which is the enshrining of parental rights into our human rights code. Essentially, what I see that as is really just holding a flag out to people, like almost a red flag, saying: "Hey. Here it is. In Alberta you are allowed to drag people to a human rights tribunal if this happens in your school system, if you don't like it happening, if you don't want people to talk about sexual education or sexual orientation, if you feel it has happened, whether it has happened legitimately or whether it happened in the playground." You have enshrined a right that was not there before.

I understand what the hon. House leader said before, that this is a not a new right given to parents. Fine. I agree with that. You could've yarded your kids out of class in section 50 if you got your knickers in a knot over them going to teach sexual orientation or if they were going to talk about X, Y, or Z. You know, fair enough. Parents could always do that. You know, I guess that's fair enough. I won't comment any further on that. But what we're doing here by this is that we're putting a red flag not only to parents but to institutions, religious and otherwise, to say: "Hey, guys. In Alberta we're allowed to do this. Let's get organized and possibly do this." It just alerts people to something that really I don't think was necessary. It enshrines a right that I believe sets us back, and I'll say it sets us back numerous years.

Maybe some of you read the Canadian Press today, where a former member, I believe probably still a member of your party but at least a former member of your party, who was a member of the House, Ron Ghitter, from Calgary-Buffalo – he wrote the document on tolerance and understanding – expressed extreme, I think, distaste towards this.

It was just a few short months ago when I was in a meeting put on by the Sheldon Chumir foundation, and Mr. Ghitter came in with the hon. Minister of Culture and Community Spirit. I had such great hopes for this bill at the time. When Mr. Ghitter introduced you at that forum in front of the Sheldon Chumir people, I was saying: well, Ron Ghitter wouldn't be doing this unless he thought this was good stuff. Then lo and behold, this is what happens. I can't help but say I'm nothing but disappointed in the fact that this has come out. It's safe to say from his comments in the paper today that he's disappointed.

So, you know, don't just point at us on this side of the House and say we're the ones being silly here. Look at people who've built that party, who supposedly were part of that progressive arm of your party, that sort of left the Social Credit Party and said: "Yeah. We're not quite like that anymore. We've moved on as a society." Whereas now those guys are looking and saying: "Are they back? Did the Socreds do a reverse takeover?" I don't know. It really looks to me like this is a regressive set of legislation that goes back to 1967, apparently before the Progressive Conservative Party took over. But hey, what do I know? What does Ron Ghitter know? I guess that's sort of what I read in today's paper. I don't want to speak for Mr. Ghitter, but that's what I took from his comments.

I think that's almost what I'd like to point out, that Alberta has taken a step back in terms of this legislation. I think we've really got to look at ourselves like: "Man, are we going in the right direction? Are we going in the progressive direction, the way people are going?" In my humble opinion I would say not.

Anyway, those are my comments, and I thank you very much for allowing me to make them.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available for questions or comments to the hon. member.

There being none that I can ascertain, then I'll recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie to continue the debate.

Mr. Taylor: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and continue the debate I will. We're at second reading, so we're again debating the principles of Bill 44, the Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Amendment Act, 2009. I have to say that I do not understand this bill. I do not understand the purpose behind this bill at this time. I do not understand why, when the Supreme Court of Canada ruled in 1998 that sexual orientation needed to be written into our human rights legislation, it could or would possibly take over 10 years for this government to get around to doing that. I do not understand why there would be any connection made between writing in sexual orientation as a prohibited grounds of discrimination and writing in parental rights.

I do not understand why when a human rights law expert like Linda McKay-Panos says that no other provincial human rights legislation, none anywhere in the country, touches on parental rights in education – and she's the head of the Alberta Civil Liberties Research Centre at the University of Calgary – I do not understand why this government would see fit to put it into human rights legislation. She says that the issue, in her opinion, belongs under the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, not in human rights legislation.

I don't understand how these two things, Mr. Speaker, are supposed to go together. I do not understand why I should accept the Education minister at his word that enshrining what already, in his view, exists under the School Act in human rights legislation makes no difference whatsoever. The reason why I don't understand why I should accept that line of argument is because if that's the truth, if that's the correct and factual interpretation of this legislation, then there's utterly no reason to put it into Bill 44, the Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Amendment Act, 2009, because you don't put things into legislation unless those things – those clauses, those sections, those paragraphs – are meant to have an impact.

Mr. Speaker, you can't have it both ways. You can't say that this was a vitally important issue to put into our human rights legislation on the one hand and then on the other hand say: "Oh, but it doesn't change anything. Things just continue on gloriously, calmly, wonderfully, the way they've always been, with parents having no more right and no less right to opt their kids out of sex ed than they did before."

Now, I remember when my kids were young and in school – and it even started back in elementary school. I guess we sent our kids to a really progressive public school; I don't know. You know, the earliest sex ed classes for our kids were in grade 4, and I know the opt-out provisions existed there, too. There were a couple of parents in our neighbourhood who routinely opted their kids out of sex ed. I know that's existed under the School Act for a long, long time. I understand that.

Mr. Hancock: It's policy.

Mr. Taylor: Policy. Fine. Good enough. The Education minister has just corrected me that it's an issue of policy. Fine.

Nevertheless, the ability, the right, the privilege, whatever you want to call it, of parents to opt their kids out of sex ed in the public school system in the province of Alberta has existed for a long time. My kids are 22 and 20 now, and by the way, their parents did not opt them out. They made them go and take sex ed whether they found it embarrassing or not, which from time to time maybe they did a little bit, but it did them good. They turned out just fine, and I would highly recommend to any and all parents in the province of Alberta that they not opt their kids out of sex ed classes because it will do the kids some good. It really will.

That opt-out ability has existed for a very long time, and it seemingly worked just fine for the parents who wanted to take advantage of it. Now suddenly we feel the need to enshrine it in the human rights code. But at the same time that we're feeling that we need to enshrine it in the human rights code, we're saying, "But it doesn't change anything; things just go on as before," and this from a government, this from a party that actively and with premeditation, I would argue, dragged its heels for a decade on doing what the highest court in the land told it to do, which is to enshrine sexual orientation in the Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Act of the province of Alberta as a prohibited ground for discrimination.

Now, Mr. Speaker, to me none of this passes the smell test. I don't think we're getting the straight goods on this. I don't think a government that dragged its heels for that long on following the directions of the highest court in the land on an issue that they now have suddenly, if you'll pardon the pun, gotten religion around supporting – if it took them 10 years to figure out that the Supreme Court made the right ruling here and that they should actually do what the court told them to do because it's the constitutional and right thing to do, you know, I don't really buy it when they say: "Yeah, just put the parental rights clause in there. Nothing is going to change. Things are going to carry on as before. Everything is going to be just fine. Don't you worry your little head about this." Well, my head, which nobody has ever described as little, is worried about this, greatly worried about this, greatly concerned about this.

I don't think this bill passes the smell test. I'm going to vote against it at second. I invite and challenge members opposite to convince me in committee, as we debate amendments to this bill, that they're not trying to sell me some swampland in Florida over this one, but I've got to tell you, Mr. Speaker: they've got a ways to go to pull that off.

Mr. Speaker, I've been instructed that I'm supposed to adjourn debate on this issue, so I would move adjournment of Bill 44 at second reading now.

The Speaker: Well, we'll deal with that after we deal with Standing Order 29(2)(a), which affords all members an opportunity to provide question or comment.

Mr. Chase: I was just wondering if the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie was intending on moving adjournment following 29(2)(a). If he could clarify his position, that would be much appreciated and would serve this honourable House well, I'm sure.

The Speaker: Well, he'll not be in a position to do that. He's already provided the motion. I postponed it for five minutes. That's one of the little quirks we have here on the administrative side. That just dealt with 35 seconds.

Any other members want to participate on the Q and C side?

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 45 Electoral Boundaries Commission Amendment Act, 2009

[Debate adjourned May 12: Mr. MacDonald speaking]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to rise in second reading and speak to Bill 45, the Electoral Boundaries Commission Amendment Act, 2009. Now, according to the electoral boundaries act that currently exists, we would have had to strike our next Electoral Boundaries Commission by June 30, 2010. Clearly, the government is anxious to get that ball rolling, so this act is replacing that date. Now they would like to roll that back to July 31 of 2009, so pretty much back by a year. My memory was that it does take about a year before you actually get a report, so this would line us up a little earlier.

In the other electoral boundaries that I have been in place to witness, the number of seats was kept the same. What you're trying to do is anticipate growth and also anticipate fair and equitable representation. That usually breaks down into two things. Is a vote in Athabasca-Redwater the same as the vote of an individual who's voting in Edmonton-Centre? Also, is the ability of a given MLA elected in one area to provide representation the same as the ability of an MLA in another jurisdiction?

Lots of things are at play here: urban versus rural, the number of constituents, the stress that we place as what was a predominantly rural province is now a predominantly urban province, how we offer reasonable access and representation to those people who are still living in rural areas, how large the area is that a member is expected to serve and to serve their constituents with a reasonable amount of access to them and, frankly, without killing the MLA, which sometimes we don't put enough consideration toward. We're struggling here. We have 80 per cent of our population who are living in an urban area, but when you look at the number of those 83 seats that are what we would call urban seats, I would argue that we end up with significantly less than 80 per cent of the MLAs in this House representing those people. I think it's much closer to 60 per cent. So there is already an inequity created here.

Now, in Alberta in the electoral boundaries act we have tried to adjust for that in the past, and frankly I think we've stretched those definitions to the point where that elastic is going to snap on some kind of Supreme Court challenge. There was a lot of talk in 2002 about whether what was being proposed would qualify as a Charter challenge. Certainly, there has been some judicial commentary that is available as to when they start to signal that they think that's going to be a problem, but we do stretch it. I mean, we allow, I think it is, four ridings to have a variance of plus or minus 50 per cent, and a number of other ridings – or maybe it's all the other ridings – are allowed to have a variance of plus or minus 25 per cent.

Now, remember, guys, that this is off the average. You can have one riding, let's say an urban riding, that has 25 per cent more people and a rural riding that has 25 per cent less people off your norm. Let me just pick a number. Let's say 30,000 people. You can have a riding that has 25 per cent more than that 30,000 and 25 per cent less than that 30,000. You can end up with a heck of a spread between those two constituencies, yet supposedly their votes are the same and the ability of the MLA to represent those two areas is the same. I think we've reached the point where what we have in that current legislation is not justifiable any longer.

You know, it's an interesting thing. Having been elected long enough in this House, you do start to find that everybody thinks they work hard, that everybody thinks they work harder than everybody else. I've never met any MLA who stood up and said: "No. You know what? I don't work as hard as my neighbour." Everybody says that they work harder than everyone else. I think MLAs do work hard. I am not aware of any MLA sitting in this House at this time who's slacking off, who's kicking back eating bonbons. I don't know of anyone sitting in this House right now that's doing that, that is skipping days in the House, that is calling in sick, that isn't doing a share of their caucus load or their committee load or their critic load. You can probably argue that some people work harder and read more stuff and that some people take longer lunches. Yeah, yeah. Go ahead and argue it. I don't see how that's getting us any further forward here.

I think what's important for us to understand is that there are differences in the constituencies we serve. Driving is not a factor for me. I can remember the previous member for I think it was Cypress-Medicine Hat, who eventually when he resigned said: "That's it. I just cannot do those five and a half hour drives from Edmonton back to Medicine Hat anymore. I've had it." Fair enough. I drive, as you know, hardly at all. I walk almost everywhere, and you know what? I can walk across my constituency, if I really get going at a good clip and I'm already out of the river valley, in about 40 minutes. So driving is not a factor. Those are not comparisons for me. But I am not going to . . . [interjection] If you want to dis me, there is a five-minute opportunity for you to get up and slag me at the end of what I have to say here, and I'm sure you'll take advantage of it.

If there's an event in my constituency, everybody knows where I am. They know I'm not very far from them, and they expect me to be there. There's no excuse for me not to turn up because, you know, I'm so close I can just – and I'll put it in quotes – pop by. So there is great expectation that I am going to be at every single event that's happening in this constituency. I can't say to them: "Sorry. I'm in Edmonton, and I just can't get to whatever is the list of events that you have. I won't be back in the constituency until, you know, Thursday night at 8 o'clock, and I'm happy to go to something then." No. Monday morning, Monday lunch, Monday night, Saturday, six, seven events on Sunday: I'm expected to be at all of them. So it's different. That expectation is not held for some people, but there's also no burden upon me to drive around. Constituencies are different.

My constituents want to know why their votes can be valued so differently, why we end up with such a difference in the spread of votes that are required, why the vote of an Edmonton-Centre constituent is not of equal value to the vote of someone in Cypress-Medicine Hat or in Little Bow or anywhere else, to make sure that my ability to represent my constituents is essentially the same as another member's ability to represent their constituents. This is not about how hard you're working. This is about whether it's actually possible to do these things.

I remember having a conversation once with the Member for Edmonton-Riverview. He said: I just don't understand how you do your work in your constituency office. I think we had a STEP student that had worked in my office, and they went to work in the Member for Edmonton-Riverview's office, and the student had been talking. Yeah, I do a lot of casework. I mean, I represent people whose household socioeconomic demographics range from millions of dollars worth of real estate in the penthouse of a condominium high-rise overlooking the river valley to the homeless guys that are sleeping underneath the bridge behind my office and everybody in between. I have the widest range of household incomes in the province. Fair enough. Okay? Good. Move on.

How do I represent them? He said that, you know, when people come to see him, they want to talk policy; they want to see their MLA and talk policy; they want to express their opinion. My constituents don't do it that way. They e-mail me if they want to express an opinion on a current issue, or they phone and leave a message on the voice mail, or they phone and leave a message on my cellphone, or whatever. The people who come into the office need help, and they need casework. They don't actually need me to do it. They need someone to do it, some staff to help them through it.

The way we work is literally different than everyone else. I don't have 32 municipalities that I deal with, but I do have half a dozen community leagues, six to 10 BRZs, a couple of city councillors, three or four school board trustees, half a dozen ARPs, a bunch of multimillion dollar NGOs that serve a number of constituents not only for me but for others, head offices of a number of other agencies and companies. Can I compare it directly across there? No. Do I have my attention pulled in as many different directions as somebody with 32 municipalities? Yeah. I mean, I can match them 32 to 32 if that's what is important to you. But I understand that it's a different way of going at things.

What's important to me in what we're contemplating here is a couple of things. One, I do not believe we need more MLAs. I look to our neighbours, who just had an election. They've just elected 79 members in the province of B.C., which has a significantly larger population than Alberta does. They also have a very wide diversity of urban density versus rural density. I think their average, or their mean, is 75,000 people. I've always thought: "Well, what's the matter? Are we wimps or what?" I think what it is is that we, in fact, could represent that many people, but we would need to approach things differently. We would need to make use of technology. Some things we wouldn't be able to do in the same way as we've been able to do them.

I don't know that it's about having more MLAs in place. I think it's about how well we serve people. That doesn't necessarily mean that every individual is going to get face time with an MLA and that that's the definition of effective representation. I challenge that. I don't think we need to have four more MLAs. I think what that is about is the distribution of boundaries so that we can keep a whole bunch of rural seats and give a few more urban ones, but we'll see how this plays out.

I think the other thing that's important as part of this process is that we look at how that matrix is developed and what's included in the matrix and what's not. I think that matrix is very unfair, and it does not take into consideration this diverse Alberta that we are in today. I think it's very backward looking. It, for example, takes into consideration not at all a diversity of language in a constituency. Lots of you have many different language groups in your constituencies now. I must provide translations for the work that I do in my community. It's not an option for me. But that matrix doesn't recognize that at all. It does not recognize that I have to provide a level of casework that other people don't even contemplate. It's not even considered in that matrix.

I think that matrix is very old-fashioned looking, very backward looking, and needs to be redone and updated. That's what our funding for our constituency offices is based on. You know, that point system that is worked out there very much advantages certain things and very much disadvantages other ones, and I would argue that there is a bias against the urban ridings on that one.

I know that I'm nearing the end of my time, and I'm looking forward to a robust discussion on this. I know you guys need this by the summer, but for heaven's sake, you've got until June 4. There's lots of time to work this through committee and third. There's no need to run it through in the middle of the night. I'd really be interested in hearing what different people have to say about the challenges they face in representation and what they think would be the best changes.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, we have five minutes for comments or questions. The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a couple of questions for the member, and I ask these in absolute good faith. I don't for a second poke any darts in that direction nor suggest that she works more or less or harder or not as hard as I do. The argument is essentially that all Albertans are entitled to equal representation, and we're fundamentally not different people regardless of where we live. Why can you make that argument but then suppose that in a rural constituency the constituents don't expect the MLA to pop in, as you put it? My constituents do expect me to pop in. When I pop in in La Crête or Rainbow Lake, it's a nine-hour return trip from my home in Peace River. Never mind coming back to Edmonton, it's a nine-hour return trip from my home in Peace River. So popping in is certainly an issue. I always found it amusing coming back to Edmonton on Monday morning and sharing office space with the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, who would always tell us he went to four functions on Saturday and five on Sunday. I go to one, and that's a day for me, a nine-hour return drive.

I guess I'm wondering, and I would ask the member: is there some line – and I don't argue that my constituency or any other rural constituency at the moment is over the line. Would the member allow that there is some line, some situation where it's harder to reach constituents in one constituency versus another constituency and that in the interests of fair representation it might be advisable to recognize that there is such a line? The courts themselves have recognized that there is, in fact, such a line. I'm wondering what the member would have to say about that, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Well, I think the point of that and the point that I was trying to make – and I'm sorry that the Member for Peace River didn't get it – is that there are a number of lines. That is the point. There are different challenges that each of us face, and what the Electoral Boundaries needs to recognize and what that commission . . . [interjections] Well, if this was just an opportunity to slag me, then I guess you've had your fun. There you go.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just have a question for the member opposite. She made reference to the province to the west, our neighbour B.C., and the fact that they had 79 seats up for re-election, a population of something over 6 million, and that they didn't need to see an increase in the number of MLAs. Well, I would like to remind her that, in fact, they increased the number of seats. They had six more. They elected 85 seats last night. Just out of curiosity, for a Liberal Party in B.C., they must have felt the need for some sort of extra representation, and apparently that was part of the mandate given to them last night because prior to the election they held 42 seats. Last night they won 49. As I said before, they moved from 79 to 85 seats, so they've added six seats in their Legislature.

If you care to respond to that, that's fine. If you don't, I just wanted to correct the record, that, in fact, they weren't staying the status quo. They have had a substantial increase in their population, as Alberta has. I just checked it on the website, actually, to make sure that 85 was the correct number, and if I'm wrong or if the information I have is wrong, I'd stand corrected.

While I'm up on the floor, though, I, like the Member for Peace River, from Rocky Mountain House – if you recall, a couple of weeks ago two of our members got awards for 20 years of service, Lesser Slave Lake and Rocky Mountain House. I found it rather interesting when the Speaker made a commendation to them that each of the members in those two ridings, although they can't walk across their riding in 40 minutes, had to travel the equivalent of two trips around the earth just to do the normal travel. I'm not unlike that. I max out at 80,000, and I lose track after 80,000, as the Member for Peace River does. It's a five-and-a-half hour drive. Most people don't realize that those of us that are driving that kind of time spend 13 weeks a year driving to and from Edmonton and around our constituencies. That's more than a lot of people get just for holidays each year. I guess I, along with one of my colleague members, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, have the dubious distinction of having one of the two hardest ridings to represent in the province according to the report that came out on the last Electoral Boundaries Commission.

The Deputy Speaker: Now back to the bill. Does any hon. member wish to speak on the bill?

Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 45 read a second time]

Bill 43 Marketing of Agricultural Products Amendment Act, 2009 (No. 2)

[Adjourned debate April 29: Mr. Griffiths]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to get up and join second reading debate on Bill 43, the Marketing of Agricultural Products Amendment Act, 2009 (No. 2), and register my opposition to this bill.

I am a city boy. I have been a city boy all my life. I have never pretended to know my way around a farm. In fact, back in my past life, from time to time agricultural issues would come up for discussion, as they would do from time to time on a radio station with a signal like CHQR that covers about half this province and a good chunk of Saskatchewan and down into Montana as well. Whenever they did on my show, I would always hasten to point out that what I don't know about farming or ranching or producing crops or producing livestock would fill the Library of Congress, no doubt. So when we had to discuss those things, I always relied on our listeners who actually made their living that way to guide me through it and help me understand what was going on. It seemed to be a fairly effective way of dealing with the subjects, and I think we built up some good relationships, some of our rural listeners and I, over the years on the radio station. I have found out since this bill hit the fan, I mean hit the floor, that those relationships still exist. I've heard from a lot of people who produce livestock for a living, and they ain't happy, Mr. Speaker. They ain't happy at all.

Now, as I've said in the past and as I say to them, even though I know theoretically the process by which steak arrives on my dinner table, as a city boy I still tend to kind of suspect that it comes from the back room in Safeway or Co-op. You know, that's kind of the default position. So if I say something dumb during debate – remember there are no stupid questions, just stupid politicians and stupid interviewers – I beg the indulgence and the forgiveness of the agricultural community. I'm trying to keep on topic as much as possible and keep this as accurate as possible.

I do think that I now understand check-offs. I understand that check-off is not just the navigator on the U.S.S. Enterprise. There was a time, Mr. Speaker, when that's what I thought a check-off was, and we are not looking for nuclear 'wessels.'

Anyway, what I have been made to understand or have come to understand in the last couple of weeks since this bill hit the floor is that there are an awful lot of beef producers, pork producers, lamb producers, and potato growers as well who are not happy with the intention and the direction of this bill, which would require producer commissions to grant their members the option to seek refund of mandatory check-offs, mandatory service charges, in the beef, pork, lamb, and potato business. As the beef producers have pointed out to me, those beef producers who've spoken to me about it, there are about 28,000 of them in this province, and there are about 100 really big guys in the beef-producing business. There are about 28,000 cow-calf operators, smaller folk who maybe run a couple to a few hundred head of cattle in their operation, as opposed to the feeders, who maybe deal with a couple of hundred thousand head of cattle over the space of a year, something like that. It's the 100 really big guys who want this; the 28,000 normal-size guys don't want this.

See, this city boy brain says that the 100 big guys who feed the 100,000 or 200,000 head of cattle a year and fatten them up so that ultimately they end up in the hands of Cargill or Tyson or one of those organizations and then at horrendous markup end up on the shelves at Superstore and hence from there to the Taylor family table wouldn't be anywhere without those 28,000 normal-size guys who are growing the cows 100, 200, 500 at a time. I think the 28,000 ordinary-size guys are more important members and producers and contributors to the food chain than the 100 big boys. I really do. I think that without the 28,000 little producers the 100 big boys are sunk.

Now, I'm probably missing something here. I'm probably missing some fundamental of agricultural or agribusiness economics that would play out like this. If we can get refundable check-offs so that we don't have to contribute $3 a head times several hundred thousand over the years to Alberta Beef Producers or the pork producers or the lamb producers associations and we can just hang on to that money given that we already get to, as I understand it – and this is how it's been explained to me by farm folk, who know a helluva lot more about this than this city boy does, you know. They already get to discount what they're going to pay the normal-size guy when he sells them a cow or sells them a calf or sells them an animal for them to fatten up if their input costs have gone up. They get to discount what they pay the producer by the amount that their input costs have gone up, more or less, so they get to hang on to that, and they get to hang on to the refundable check-off.

Maybe there's something about the economics of agribusiness that says: if we can do that, then we can drive enough of the normal-size guys out of business, and then we can corner that part of the market, too. Or we can just turn the normal-size guys who have this preternatural compulsion, that no city boy could possibly understand, to stay on the land and produce food at sometimes abnormally low prices paid to the producer on behalf of those millions of us who actually live in the city and still suspect somehow that the steak comes fully formed right out of the backroom at the butcher department at Safeway, you know, that these folks can in effect be turned into indentured servants of the big boys of agribusiness. You know what? I just cannot wrap my urban-raised, fast-food-fed city boy brain around the notion that that can possibly be good for the people of Alberta and the people of Canada, for their economic well-being, their health, the environment, or anything else. It doesn't add up to me.

It adds up for me that a normal-size guy who runs a few hundred head of cattle and has this preternatural compulsion to stay on the land, whether it actually pays or not, and to do this farming thing because it's in his blood, because he views it like a craft, like a piece of artisanship almost, you know, has more of a stake, no pun intended, in making sure that his animals are well cared for, that they're well raised, that they're healthy, that they're in good shape when he sells them than somebody who's just running these things through, you know, looking at a few hundred thousand head of cattle and seeing how many quarter pounders with cheese they'll turn into, you know – no slam, no offence against McDonald's – or how many T-bone steaks at Superstore, however you want to measure it.

I think this bill does a disservice to some of the hardest working men and women in the province of Alberta. It does a huge disservice to them. As I did earlier when we were debating Bill 44, I'll offer another challenge to government members opposite in committee to try and convince me, although I feel more like a state representative from Missouri today because of my skepticism than I do a provincial representative from Alberta, that this bill somehow translates into a benefit for anybody but the hundred or so big boys, that this actually will open up world markets in a way that no other strategy or initiative or approach could to our beef and our pork and our lamb and our potatoes, that without this the whole agricultural sector is going to collapse like a house of cards. Mr. Speaker, I don't believe it is.

What I do believe is that the passage of Bill 43 is going to inexorably and negatively alter the production of beef and pork and lamb and potatoes in this province. It's going to negatively impact the agricultural sector in this province. I think we're all going to be the poorer for it, and that would be very unfortunate. These folks – and I'm just talking about beef producers right now – these 28,000 normal-size, ordinary-size folks and their counterparts who produce lamb and produce pork and produce potatoes, some of the finest beef and lamb and pork and potatoes you will find anywhere on the planet, these folks are themselves hard working, the bedrock of our society, and in many cases the product of many generations of the bedrock of our society, families who have been on the land and who have been producing for several generations now. I think we owe them something better than this. I think this does them a real disservice.

Maybe, just maybe, somebody can come up with a compelling argument in committee to convince me otherwise. But as I said before, Mr. Speaker, I think that'll take some doing.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a constituent – her name is Florence Henning – in Whitecourt-St. Anne. She's a well-respected agricultural producer and a member of the Alberta Lamb Producers association. For the record, she asked me to stand up and express her concerns, and maybe the mover of the bill can comment on this in Committee of the Whole.

She has some concerns that under the Alberta government's Bill 43 all of the $1.50 check-off paid to the Alberta Lamb Producers will be refundable to producers. Alberta Lamb Producers is a voice to governments and the Alberta Livestock and Meat Agency, and the check-off enables access to industry development funding. So she wants to know: how will producers be represented provincially and nationally should the majority of large producers claim a refund?

As well, she's concerned that choosing the refund will not always mean that producers do not support Alberta Lamb Producers. It just may mean that in these economic times more dollars available to the producers to cover things like the bluetongue insurance premium might be more important. Neither the Alberta Lamb Producers nor the Alberta government have been lobbied by sheep producers for a refundable check-off, so she's asking: why is the government including the Alberta Lamb Producers in Bill 43? That would be denying the sheep producers the fundamental right of choice for a democratic vote on this issue before it's made law.

Those are the points that are raised by Florence. I told her and I made a commitment to her that I would raise this in the Assembly, Mr. Speaker. I look forward to the comments from the mover of the bill in Committee of the Whole.

Thank you, sir.

The Deputy Speaker: We have five minutes for comments and questions.

Seeing none, I'll recognize any other member who wishes to speak on the bill. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Following the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie's lead, I may be a city slicker, but I'm not a city sucker. Prior to this bill I thought that check-off was the last name of Anton Chekhov, who wrote the play The Cherry Orchard, that I had the pleasure of viewing in Stratford, Ontario, during my high school days in the 1960s.

What this Bill 43, the Marketing of Agricultural Products Amendment Act, reminds me of is what this government tried to do to the Canadian Wheat Board. They were opposed and spent I think it was in the neighbourhood of $3 million trying to undermine the authority of wheat producers all across western Canada because they felt that it was individuals' rights to market their grain on their own as they saw fit. When I think nine Alberta individuals were arrested for trucking their grain across the Montana border, this government took great offence to the fact that these poor men, who were entrepreneurial individuals, were so badly treated and hauled off to jail. Well, all I see Bill 43 doing is centralization, monopolizing, concentration of power in the hands of the few at the expense of the many, as the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie so adeptly pointed out.

This bill takes away the democratic rights of producers under the act to conduct a plebiscite to amend their plans to determine whether or not service fees, check-offs, should be refundable. This act by the government appears to be a retaliatory action against the Alberta Beef Producers for criticizing the implementation of the Alberta Livestock and Meat Agency and is also being made in the interests of the big corporate feedlots, who will benefit from the refund of hundreds of thousands of dollars in service fees. It's not in the interests of the small producers, as the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie mentioned. He numbered them in the area of 28,000.

The government has said that this is about choice for producers to determine whether or not their producer organization is doing a good job of representing them and, therefore, to request a refund of service fees if they feel the organization is not doing a good job. However, the reality is that producers already have the choice through a plebiscite as set out currently in legislation. This move by the government is aimed at supporting the interests of the big corporate players in the industry.

If democracy is important – earlier we discussed Bill 45 with regard to electoral boundaries, and we talked about representation by population – then the interests of the majority of individuals who are small producers have to be taken into account. During the BSE crisis we saw what happened when foreign-owned outfits slaughtered their own feedlot cattle first. The smaller feeders didn't get a chance to even have a play in the market. Then this government sent out cheques, of course, based on the per-head and the per-slaughter capacities. Again, the American feedlot owners did extremely well at the expense of the small producer and the family farm or ranch. This is what Bill 43 is doing. It's a pure case of bullying.

There are approximately 20 agriculture marketing boards and commissions which engage in various activities to support their industries, lobby government, and promote their products and producers. Some examples are Alberta Beef Producers, Alberta Barley Commission, Alberta Beekeepers, and Alberta Milk, just to name a few. Currently the majority of these boards and commissions allow for refundable service fees, sometimes referred to as check-offs, which are charged at the sale of a product or animal.

However, four do not. Those four are the Alberta Beef Producers, Alberta Pork, Alberta Lamb Producers, and Potato Growers of Alberta. They represent the greater majority of producers in this province, and they're the ones that are being targeted. There are a number of reasons why these four are not refundable. The government is proposing in Bill 43 to make all of these check-offs refundable.

Currently under the act producers have the ability to conduct a plebiscite on matters relating to the amendment of their agricultural board or commission plan, which sets out how it operates. How democratic: a plebiscite. This would allow producers to hold a plebiscite to determine whether or not the plan should be changed to make the check-offs refundable. Many producers in the beef industry are outraged that the government has not allowed them to make their own decisions.

Now, whenever I raise the issue in terms of government stewardship or the importance of governance, I'm accused of promoting some type of a Liberal nanny state. Well, if this isn't an example of a nanny state and the government treating small producers as their wards or children, then I don't know what is.

There is also a concern that these are actions the government has taken to weaken the Alberta Beef Producers as the ABP last year released a letter to its members which was somewhat critical of the government's recent livestock and meat strategy. Concerns were around increased burden on small producers and lack of consultation with small producers, more evidence of bullying.

Further, this move to make these check-offs refundable is seen as acting in favour of the big corporate feedlots, who stand to gain quite a lot given that they manage such large amounts of cattle. The check-off is currently at $3 per head of cattle. Some in the industry may be in favour of this bill, but the majority do not see it as of any advantage to them.

In situations of crisis such as BSE and now the problems facing the pork industry with H1N1 influenza, otherwise known as swine flu, these producer associations play an important role in promoting products and making sure that misconceptions are addressed head on. Weakening these organizations by making check-offs refundable means that there will be less funding to engage in these promotional activities. The big feedlots also benefit from the promotion of Alberta beef, yet their dollars will no longer be going towards these organizations if they choose to request a refund for their check-offs, which they most likely will.

It reminds me of some of the sort of simplistic comments about Texans and, you know, bigger is better or bigger is more beautiful. This province was built on the sweat and labour of men and women and not on agricultural sweatshops, with large producers dictating to the family farm to either get in line or get out. We don't need more corporate farms in Alberta. We have enough. What we need to be supporting are the family producers.

Bill 43 basically ignores a hundred plus years of Alberta history. Therefore, for that reason and many others that I will allow other members the possibility to bring forward, we are opposed to Bill 43, Marketing of Agricultural Products Amendment Act, 2009 (No. 2).

The Deputy Speaker: We have five minutes for comments and questions. Does any hon. member wish to take that five minutes?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As with my colleague from Whitecourt-St. Anne, I, too, have a number of constituents who've asked how I was going to represent them. I find myself in a very awkward position. For those of you who may not know, our riding has the largest number of confined feeding operations and some, if not the biggest, feedlot operations. We also have a lot of cow-calf operators, backgrounders, grassers. As well as having a unique meat, poultry, swine industry in our riding, we have probably the second-largest number of potatoes grown in the province. Along with my colleague from Cardston-Taber-Warner we have between the two of us the two largest potato processing plants: Lamb Weston, outside of Taber, and McCain, just outside of Coaldale.

I have to say that in 17 years I've never had the Potato Growers approach government, that I'm aware of, for anything until this bill came up. I find it really rather difficult when anyone that has contacted our office from the Potato Growers who are not in favour of being rolled into this marketing amendment act has asked me how I'm going to vote on it. When I've pursued the question here, I've been told: well, if this group is as strong as they say it is, people shouldn't really be requesting a refund, and therefore everything should continue as it is.

I have to ask the question: but what if it doesn't? Like many industries – the cattle industry, potato growers, probably lamb – there are always a few very large operators. The question at the back of my mind that I have to have answered fairly soon: what if those two or three of the very largest request a refund and don't reinject it into the system for advanced research, marketing, and so on? If, in fact, they don't, then I'm more worried about the repercussion afterwards, that in fact without that cash flow of money going back into research and marketing development, the groups that have represented these different industries will then come back to government and say: well, we can't do it without your help.

That's the quandary I find myself in because we've been told that this is the last bailout, subsidy program of any kind that we're going to have. But if, in fact, a few of the largest producers in any one of these areas were to pocket their refundable check-off—which is their money; they paid it—if they didn't reinvest it in research and market development, there's going to be a shortfall. That's just my impression of it.

For that reason, Mr. Speaker, especially from the point of view of the potato growers in our riding, I have a problem supporting the concept of potato growers being included in a meat problem, that seems to be the impetus behind this bill. I know that it won't curry a lot of favour, but as the representative for a constituency that probably has, along with my colleague south of us, in excess of 80 per cent of the potatoes grown in Alberta I find it very difficult to support the bill as it is, without excluding the potato growers from it. I wanted to get that on the record on behalf of my potato grower constituents, especially.

As far as the cattle and beef, I know a lot of these people in the industries, and they're on both sides of the issue, whether it's the Western Stock Growers', Alberta Beef Producers, the Cattle Feeders' Association. Some of these individuals are on both sides of the issues, and it's much like a family fight. I wish there was another way that the family could come together and resolve their differences instead of putting me as an elected representative in the middle of it, making a decision on which side of the vote I want to go to.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: We have five minutes for questions and comments. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. I found the member's comments about the potato growers being in with the meat people really interesting. Is the member able to give me some understanding as to the size of the potato grower operations? Can you give me a yearly amount that they're under or number of employees or some idea so that in my mind I can understand whether I would be considering these as a sort of small or medium-sized operation versus a larger operation?

Mr. McFarland: Mr. Speaker, I'm not a potato producer, but I can tell the hon. member that, give or take, there are 120 potato producers in Alberta and, considering 59,000, 58,000 farms, 29,000 or thereabouts producers of various types of meat. I just don't think it's of any importance, so to speak, other than having a common thread of refundable. I buy that argument. It's just difficult for me to ascertain when 100 per cent of those that contact me from the potato growers' side—again, I may have 60 of the 120 or 50, and the average would be about three and a half circles of potatoes, which means in layman's language 550 acres. That part is incidental because they also have a dedicated check-off. Actually there are two check-offs in the potato industry; one is for research, and they have another component. They're dedicated; they're designed to be a check-off for certain purposes, and potato growers know how good that is.

The Deputy Speaker: Does any other member wish to join the five minutes?

Seeing none, now we go back to the bill. Does any other hon. member wish to speak on the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona on the bill.

Ms Notley: Thank you. I'm pleased to be able to rise and join in debate on Bill 43, which is a bill that we have some difficulty supporting. There have been a number of points that have already been made. Nonetheless, I think it warrants repetition in some cases.

Generally speaking, this bill seems to me to be a bill which is about making a choice between sides in many respects, picking a large producer over a small producer or, alternatively, perhaps even doing one of things that periodically this government does, which is retaliating against individuals or organizations that speak out publicly against it and risk embarrassing it.

We know that last fall the Alberta Beef Producers—I guess it started last summer—were fairly public about their concerns with respect to proposed changes through the ministry of agriculture, the Alberta livestock management plan. There was significant concern expressed by the Alberta Beef Producers. I have no doubt that those concerns were not shared by all members of the Alberta Beef Producers. Nonetheless, it appeared that the majority of beef producers had concerns, and as a result that organization spoke out against that particular initiative of the government.

Now what we see, of course, is an initiative on the part of the government to allow the very large players within the industry to withdraw their funds and, effectively, to stunt and potentially bankrupt the Alberta Beef Producers in terms of its ability to play its role as effectively as possible. Basically, with the Alberta Beef Producers, as we all know, like many other organizations, money goes in by size and decision-making is allocated by vote. Heaven forbid that you have that kind of system in place, but some people refer to it as democracy. Far be it from me to characterize it so politically. So that's the way it works right now within the Alberta beef producers and within the pork producers and within the lamb producers and within the potato growers. Each organization has its own internal ability, its independent ability to change that formula should they determine that that formula requires change to meet the objectives of the organization and to meet fairness.

Obviously, that particular change has not come about in the best interests of those people whom the Tories spend most of their time talking to, so as a result the government is going to step in and make it happen for them. They're going to make this change under this act to allow for big producers to either (a) hold the rest of the organization hostage by threatening to take their money out and thus controlling what happens or (b) just simply taking their money out.

Not too long ago in this House we heard the minister of agriculture talking about how in terms of promoting the livestock industry and promoting the pork industry and promoting the beef industry, the marketing associations had a huge role to play in working with government to get all this kind of work achieved. It is quite true that, for instance, Alberta Beef Producers does spend a lot of its money on research, on trade advocacy, on policy development, on lobbying, and just ensuring that the issues of producers are addressed at the provincial and federal levels.

There's no question that these types of organizations do do the kind of work that the minister of agriculture not too long ago was suggesting should be left to those organizations in answer to our suggestion that maybe government should be stepping in periodically to help them out.

It's really quite interesting that now we're moving forward with this initiative, which is clearly designed to either fracture that organization or to give power in that organization over to those with the most resources and take it away from those with the most support within the organization because, of course, those positions within, for instance, the Alberta Beef Producers that have the most support are not ones in many cases that those who pay the most dues themselves support. So the government has kindly chosen to step in and to make sure that Agricore in whatever capacity is well represented and has the ability to have even more control and influence over these organizations so that hopefully in the future the government will never be embarrassed by them putting out any releases or reports critiquing their proposals.

Needless to say, we don't support that initiative. We don't think that that is in the best interests of the industry. We still think that the small producer is someone that the government should support and try to encourage rather than embarking on policy after policy after policy designed to push them out of the industry. Unfortunately, again, the government doesn't agree with that. As has already been mentioned by the previous speaker, the Potato Growers of Alberta have also expressed their concerns about this initiative. It's interesting. The Potato Growers, although a much, much smaller organization – the member opposite did an excellent job of describing the dynamics within that organization, did an excellent job describing the consequences of this bill to that particular organization and how it would happen. As he said, there are big producers, and there are little producers. The big producers do most of the funding, and the little producers have a democratic right to participate in how the associations are run.

Basically, if we pass this bill, the big producers will now have the ability over the objections of the democratic process within their association to pull their funding. The government will by regulation give itself the ability in cabinet to overrule the democratic decisions of these producer associations. Just as the member opposite suggested that he did not want to be in the position of being like in a family fight and picking winners and losers, I agree. It's not up to us to pick winners and losers, yet apparently the government or some members of this government think it is up to us to pick winners and losers. Their plan, not surprisingly, is to pick the bigger players on the field and just make sure that they have even more opportunities at their disposal to carry on their growth at the expense of other members within the industry.

Generally speaking, we do not agree with this bill, and I don't believe that it can be saved by simply exempting the potato growers. Certainly, the lamb producers, the potato growers, and, of course, a number of people within the Alberta Beef Producers have strongly stipulated their very real objection to this bill. This is not about choice. This is about picking winners and losers and a very small number of winners at the expense of a very large number of losers. It is a bad choice.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: We have five minutes for comments and questions, hon. members.

Seeing none, on the bill, the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Just coincidentally, I was actually at a wedding recently, and there was a gentleman there by the name of Earl Hale. He is a cattle producer outside of Strathmore. Mr. Hale also taught me and coached hockey when I was younger. His son played for the Lethbridge Hurricanes. Anyway, they're both involved in the beef industry. I said to him: "Mr. Hale, up here in the Legislature we seem to deal with a lot of stuff that deals with livestock, agriculture, feedlots, all this sort of stuff. Maybe you can tell me a little bit about what's going on in the industry. Is the family farmer able to make it? Are the feedlots making money?" On that comment he said: "Oh, yeah. Someone is making money. It's not the family farm here, but it is the feedlot."

I said, "How does this happen, Mr. Hale?" He said, "Well, let me tell you something here, Kent." And someone can correct me if this is wrong. "These guys get paid when they feed cows. So if they've got 6,000, 7,000 cattle sitting there, they get paid for every cow they feed a day by the Alberta government. Then guess what? They get paid when they kill those cows, too. Okay? So they get paid on the front end, and they get paid on the back end." If Mr. Hale was right, what he was saying with that story is that the big guys are getting paid. Okay? They're getting paid some good money by this government to do this sort of stuff.

My follow-up question then was: "Well, how are the family farms doing, the people who are ranching and who are doing this stuff?" He said, "Well, you know, I guess that if they inherited their farm, maybe they're plugging along, doing okay, but if someone really wants to, say, stake their claim, take $250,000 and say, 'I'm going to go start a farm, and I'm going to run some beef on it,' well, that's not available anymore here in Alberta."

Maybe, just maybe, this bill has something to do with that story I heard at that wedding just on the weekend. I bring that up now just sort of to give a little background and a little bit of personal feel to, I guess, my comments on the bill.

Again, my understanding, like individuals' who have spoken before me, is that this is a bill designed to support the larger players in the game. It supports the big producers, the big feedlots who are already, I would assume, making a buck or else they wouldn't still be in business because they have shareholders to answer to and all that sort of stuff. But then if you look around, there are all these people who are seemingly upset about this, and they're called the little guys. Whether they're actually little or not, I don't know, but it's a euphemism for, I guess, smaller players in the industry than the big feedlot. Do you know what I'm saying? So I think I'm painting a pretty clear picture of what this bill is seeming – David and Goliath, to use a Biblical reference. Hopefully, no one here is going to take offence at that, being that Bill 44 is about to come into law, but there are no students here.

Nonetheless, I'll get back to the bill. Currently under the act producers have the ability to conduct a plebiscite on matters relating to the amendment on their agricultural board's or commission's plans which set out how it is to operate. This would allow the producers to hold a plebiscite to determine whether or not the plan should be changed to make these check-offs refundable. Many producers in the beef industry are outraged. These are the little guys.

When I say that many producers in the beef industry are outraged, those are the little guys, Mr. Speaker, just to make sure you're following along. Those are the little guys, and they are outraged, extremely outraged that the government has not allowed them to make their own decisions through a plebiscite and that their democratic right is being taken away. It's amazing how things run their course. It's sort of like city folk here don't understand why a rural vote is worth more than a city vote. That representation by population we were talking about earlier, democracy? Democracy seems to . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt, but it's 6 o'clock. The House stands adjourned until 7:30 tonight.

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 43 Marketing of Agricultural Products Amendment Act, 2009 (No. 2)

[Debate adjourned May 13: Mr. Hehr speaking]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and speak in second reading of Bill 43, Marketing and Agricultural Products Amendment Act, 2009 (No. 2). This has been very interesting this afternoon, listening to the debate on what was going on here. It really started to play out for me as a battle of opposites, if you will. It's about the large producers versus the smaller producers. It's about a small group that has chosen to have a check-off and to continue to use it for their own membership to do, for example, work on policy or regulatory issues, production research, promotion campaigns, animal health and welfare concerns and follow-up, communications – ah, yes, the famous communications line – land use and environmental stewardship. I'm sure they had some input there into what's being considered under Bill 36.

I think this also is an issue of an intersectoral dispute, if you will, which is something that politicians usually avoid. I think that's partly what I heard the Member for Little Bow saying. You know, none of us is keen to get pulled into an argument. Let me just give a little explanation of what I mean there, which may not necessarily pertain to the issue in front of us with the group that's being captured under this particular act.

It's not uncommon for us to be approached by a group that's a splinter group off somebody else or slightly different from another group, and they want the MLA to sort of say that they're the right ones. "Pick us as being the official voice for this group. We're the ones that should be legitimate and get the grant or get the support." Certainly, it's the policy in my office that we do not get involved in those. We say: "Look, we're not here to pick winners and losers out of your group. You know it best. You guys figure it out. When you've figured it out, come back and let me know where you want to go from there. I'm happy to work with all of you or the ones that you elect to represent you."

It's a bit of what's going on here. The Member for Little Bow was really good at sort of drawing out that we had four groups that had come together because they are the ones that remain out of all the other agricultural producer associations that still have a service charge, which they call a check-off, which they're then using for a number of the reasons that I listed earlier. It's a bit of an odd matching because you've got – just let me get this straight – the Alberta Beef Producers, Alberta Pork, Alberta Lamb Producers, and then the Potato Growers of Alberta.

The potato growers, for obvious reasons, are a bit of the odd group out here. They're also quite a small group compared to the number of producers that are involved in the other three areas. Additionally, they're not as large a producer as you would find with the beef producers or the pork or the lamb. They've been captured in something that, I think, based on their letters to the government, they're not too happy about being captured in. As the Member for Little Bow put it, the potatoes are caught in the meat problem. Oh, if it was a little later at night, we'd have some good puns going, but it's not quite late enough for that, so I'm just going to keep going.

I also see this as being a dispute or a difference between what I would call a corporate farm or a large organization like an intensive livestock organization – they go by a different name now: confined feed operation – and a family farm or a smaller, locally owned farm. But, essentially, what we've got here for some reason is the government injecting itself into a sector that didn't ask for help. It doesn't look to me like any of those four groups came to the government and said, you know, "Please change the legislation and take away our ability to decide for ourselves," which they've clearly done, and they continue to be able to do. They're self-empowered through their collective organization to be able to hold a plebiscite, amend what they're doing, elect different people, amend their board or their committee, set out a different plan on the way they want to manage themselves. They're allowed to do that. They could even change whether or not they have the check-off system in place that they currently have in place.

It doesn't look to me like they asked for the government to inject itself into this and to change the rules, and I haven't seen a compelling argument from the government as to why they would be doing this. I'm tempted to say in my own colloquial manner: butt out. They didn't ask for you to be coming in and doing this to them. They clearly don't want this to happen to them. So with all possible due respect, maybe the government could just butt out because I don't think this seems to be solving anything.

More than that, the government once again seems to be picking winners and losers and deciding that they're going to favour the larger over the smaller. This always I find really interesting because the government likes to put itself out as the sort of saviour of the farmer and the family farm and the ones that are interested in promoting business interests and that this is the party of the marketplace and the free marketplace, yet every time I turn around, I see them do something like this, which flies in the face of all of those claims and, if anything, certainly is not supporting local over global. It's not supporting the local farmer, the smaller or mid-sized operation here over a multinational corporate farm that's owned by somebody outside of Canada. So the government makes a claim about one thing, and then its actions belie its policy statements.

I wouldn't usually join into a conversation or a debate about this, but I've listened to enough of this and read correspondence and press releases from the potato growers and letters from the beef industry and all kinds of Hansard clippings and the old marketing act, version one, and it just strikes me that this is a really unnecessary intrusion for the government to get involved in. So I'm going to come down on the side of these four producer associations that have an agreement on their check-offs and say: more power to them, and, government, back off and butt out.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: We have five minutes for questions and comments.

Seeing none, then I will recognize the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Marz: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to take this opportunity to add my comments to this bill in second reading. Unlike most of the opposition members I do live in a rural riding, and I actually live on a farm. I've farmed most of my life. I have a lot of people in my riding involved in the business. As a rural riding, as we've talked in a previous bill about the electoral boundaries, I get around my riding. It takes a long time, but I get to know everybody on a personal level. I tell you, these people are not shy about phoning me, and I'm not shy about phoning them. When I call them up, most of them recognize my voice; I don't even have to identify myself. So they're not shy in calling me about issues that are near and dear to them.

So far on this particular issue I've had 10 either letters, calls, or e-mails, representations, and I think I've called all of them back except maybe one so far and was able to talk to them personally on this. They're not all in agreement with each other on this issue, so it does create a bit of a dilemma for me. Of the 10 calls I got, eight were from my constituency, and out of the eight from my constituency seven of them were cattle producers, not all in agreement with each other, and one was representing the lamb industry. I didn't get any calls from the pork industry that I'm aware of at this time unless some got to my constituency office today. Although I've had some potato production in my constituency over the past few years, it's not an area that produces potatoes in this province, and I've got no calls on that.

To say that there's a division amongst producers in the cattle industry I think would be an understatement. That division has been going on for some time. As I looked at this bill, I had a lot of reservations about it. I thought about it a lot as I talked to people. Of course, they all want me to represent their view in the House. As I talked to them, they understood that it's not that easy because they recognize the divisions within the industries themselves.

I looked at the choices and the ideas that were brought forth to me. The choices were to stay with the status quo and just leave it alone, and hopefully things would resolve themselves. But this issue has been going on for a long time, and it hasn't resolved itself. The other option is to do as the minister is proposing in Bill 43, change it to an optional check-off. As recently as over the supper hour I heard of another option, a discretionary check-off, where it would be mandatory to have a check-off, but you could direct your money to the organization you thought would best represent you. I found that one kind of interesting as well. I haven't had a lot of time to think about that particular option or discuss it with any of my colleagues. I will be discussing it with the minister. But I wanted to bring that up tonight so the minister would have the advantage of seeing that on the record. I'm sure we'll have a discussion on that before tomorrow ends.

I just wanted to bring these issues forward. There are some deep divisions not easily resolved. I wish I had all the answers that some members in the House have that would be so easy to say: this is the right way or the wrong way. Yes, there have been some vocalizations by some organizations. It's an issue you could probably argue a number of different ways. Being a farmer myself, I used to have a mandatory check-off on canola. There were times when I felt that I wasn't being represented properly by that organization and that my money would be better spent with an organization of my choosing that I could influence more.

I just wanted to bring this up, Mr. Speaker, to contribute a bit of ideas to the debate that I'm hearing from my constituency. I'd be interested in listening further to comments from my other colleagues. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: We have five minutes for comments and questions. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the comments from the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. I'm sure that he's getting a range of calls on this issue – I know I am – and I thought his comment about the discretionary check-off was an interesting one. There are other ideas here. I guess my question to the member would be: why not just allow plebiscites? Why not allow the producers to have the vote that the current legislation would allow and let them decide democratically as opposed to going this way?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Marz: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I fully expected to hear from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview because we have a mutual friend in the Didsbury area. I would be very surprised if he hadn't talked to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview as well because he's related to him but also a good friend of mine.

The issue of the plebiscite has been brought up and debated by the industry, and there's no common consensus within the industry to even have a plebiscite. Certainly, that's supported by some members of the industry. Some feel they could win it; some feel they can't. Of course, those that feel they can't wouldn't want a plebiscite. But I think it's well accepted that the industry is almost split 50-50, which creates a much more difficult situation for all of us in this House to try to resolve this issue.

The Deputy Speaker: On the five minutes, the hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I wanted to ask the hon. member a question because he talked about being torn and, you know, trying to decide which way to vote and so on. But it's my understanding this is a government bill, and the government caucus is supporting it, and that's pretty much how everybody in the government caucus is bound to vote. Is that not correct?

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, do you wish to reply?

Mr. Marz: As the Speaker would point out to you, hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, and has on many occasions in the past when I was in the House to witness it, every member in this House has the right to vote however he or she feels according to their conscience. I don't have the references in Hansard, but I'm sure I could find them. As rusty as my memory may be from time to time, I believe that he has pointed that out on many occasions.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, what do we pay whips for?

The Deputy Speaker: Is that a comment or a question? Just a comment, I guess.

Mr. Oberle: Point of order.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member on a point of order.

Point of Order Allegations against a Member

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, 23(h), (i), and (j). I can't comment on what the whip for that party does, whether they do a good job or not, but the member is suggesting that I control the way members vote and that, in fact, I infringe upon the privilege of members in this Assembly. I don't know whether the whip over there does, and I'm not going to comment. If I were, I would have to point out if anybody could remember the last time you got two separate votes coming from that side. But that's not the role of the whip here. I object to the remark. I would ask that he withdraw it.

Mr. Mason: Well, Mr. Speaker, I didn't mean to imply that anybody was forced to vote any way. I'm quite sure that on every government bill every government member always votes for it, without exception, of their own free will. I accept that and withdraw my remarks.

The Deputy Speaker: You have 12 seconds.

Mr. Marz: My response was going to be, if I may, Mr. Speaker, that I know the responsibility of our whip, and he just laid it out. I was going to ask the hon. member: what's the responsibility of his whip in his party?

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, we can't afford a whip.

The Deputy Speaker: We had a point of order, and the withdrawing of the statement has been done. Hon. Member for Peace River, are you happy or okay with that?

Mr. Oberle: Well, no, actually, but I guess I have to let the matter drop, seeing as how the remark was withdrawn. In withdrawing it, he managed another drive-by smear on the role of the whip or the Government House Leader or whoever else he intended by that drive-by smear. Our members are independent, Mr. Speaker, and I think it's important for you to stand on that principle and inform that member that he's out of order.

The Deputy Speaker: Well, I would advise the hon. members, all of us here, to just be careful of what we say in the House. We're all honourable members. We respect each other. Go on with the debate.

Debate Continued

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party on the bill.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to speak to Bill 43, Marketing of Agricultural Products Amendment Act, 2009 (No. 2). Now, currently producers pay a check-off, or a levy fee, to their commission upon the sale of a commodity, which goes towards various areas of the organization. The changes proposed in this legislation would mean that producers could request that these funds be refunded.

The Alberta Beef Producers benefit the most from the $3 check-off, which is paid on a per head of cattle basis. There are three other commissions affected by this legislation: Alberta Pork, Alberta Lamb Producers, and Potato Growers of Alberta. Currently the producers of nine commissions have a choice of a refund. That's barley, bison, canola, pulses, soft wheat, winter wheat, elk, bees, and forage seeds.

Mr. Speaker, these amendments will be phased in for each commission at the start of their 2010-2011 fiscal year. Section 3, which amends section 23 of the current act, is where the controversy comes from. It basically says that if a commission's mandate says that fee is nonrefundable, the Lieutenant Governor in Council can step in on a request from a producer and change the rules of the commission so that the fee has to be refundable.

The Alberta Beef Producers have always been against refundable check-offs, but there's a new group in Alberta called the Beef Industry Alliance, which has been pushing the government for refundable check-offs. The Beef Industry Alliance, or BIA, is made up of the Alberta Cattle Feeders Association, the Beef Initiative Group, the Feeder Associations of Alberta, and the Western Stock Growers' Association.

The Alberta Beef Producers, the Alberta Lamb Producers, and the Potato Growers of Alberta have spoken against these changes. The news release for this amendment quotes the minister, who says that now refundable check-offs can be used. If producers "feel their organization has not met their needs or provided value, they can ask for a refund. It is all about choice." Very, very common language from this government: it's all about choice.

The minister thinks that the producers in the four commodity groups dealt with in the proposed changes lack a fundamental right of choice, but really the ability for producers to make a choice regarding the check-offs already exists. In effect, these changes will actually do the opposite, remove a producer's choice. The government has taken away the producers' ability to make their own decisions on how their commissions will be run. There's already a mechanism in place where producers can democratically change the way their organization deals with check-offs by way of plebiscites and voting on procedures. So producers can ask for a refund in any case, not just when they feel their needs are not being met.

Now, I know that the member proposing this bill mentioned that only between 7 and 10 per cent of producers request refunds from these commissions that use refundable check-offs. It is possible that because the cattle industry is so big in Alberta, the percentage will increase because producers stand to take in more profit if their check-offs become refundable. When the government says that based on what has happened in the past with the other commissions, only a small amount of producers will opt out, what they don't realize or don't understand is that this pattern won't continue because the biggest agricultural industry was not part of the calculation.

Farm cash receipts from cattle sales were $3 billion in 2008. This industry, which makes up 58 per cent, makes a significant amount of money. This money, however, becomes more and more concentrated within the larger industrial farms, while smaller family farms struggle to keep producing. If these changes are made, smaller producers are concerned that the decision-making will become based on how much money is contributed; for example, if a large agribusiness is at the table with smaller producers and declares that if the commission is not functioning the way it wants, then they will request a refund.

This makes the head of this organization have to decide between the money from big business, which helps the commission run smoothly and protects their members, and the rest of the members. This would make these organizations less democratic. The biggest contributors can threaten to request a refund. Then it makes it easy to manipulate the commission to the benefit of the richest and largest producers. There's some worry that if producers choose to have their check-off refunded, there will not be enough money for things such as legal fees. Who would then defend the industry in a legal situation?

Mr. Speaker, in a letter to all MLAs the Alberta Beef Producers' chair, Rick Burton, lays out his concerns. Alberta Beef Producers continue to tell the minister that it is ultimately cattle producers who are affected by this type of legislation and that it should be run by the producers, making the decisions on how they want their commissions to run.

The chair, Mr. Burton, of the Alberta Beef Producers has asked the minister to conduct a plebiscite of producers regarding this issue. The minister chose not to do this and amended the legislation regardless. In the letter Mr. Burton says:

Cattle producers have a choice under the Marketing of Agricultural Products Act about whether check-off should be refundable or non-refundable. We think that refundable check-off does not give producers more choice – it allows money to vote instead of people.

The Alberta Beef Producers have also said that making the check-off refundable would reduce the amount of industry funding that's available for marketing research and promotion activities.

Another letter from the Alberta Beef Producers, this time from the vice-chair, Mr. Boon, echoes some of the chair's positions by saying that the current act already allows direct and individual input through plebiscite from producers. He continues on to say that this bill does not give producers the opportunities "to make the choice of where they direct their check-off dollar . . . What it does do is allow for individuals to remove these dollars." Mr. Boon also raised a point about the advocacy that happens with the check-off funds. He said:

Currently about fifty cents of the check-off goes to [the Cattlemen's Association] for such things as trade advocacy, domestic policy, and insuring our producers wishes are being heard nationally. Reducing this funding would put organizations capabilities in serious jeopardy.

Mr. Speaker, the Potato Growers of Alberta have also issued a release which lays out concerns similar to those of the Alberta Beef Producers, that there is already a democratic process in place where producers can introduce changes to the operation of their commission. They're also concerned that the government expected them to continue to offer services to the producers even after they've had their levies refunded. Finally, he said that contrary to what the government has said, there was no consultation with the Potato Growers association about these changes. The mechanism for deciding whether or not a commission's check-off will be mandatory or not: there was absolutely no reason why the government needs to intervene in the issue. The producers have the means to make democratic changes they as a group want to make, and the government interfering in the process makes the commission less democratic because it removes the right of producers to make decisions for themselves.

We know that the Alberta Beef Producers, the Alberta Lamb Producers, and the Potato Growers of Alberta have been against the refundable check-offs, and we know that the beef industry group has been pushing for refundable fees. We also know that there are only four commissions affected by these changes. It would be good to find out what other commissions were asking for refundable fees.

Mr. Speaker, what's happening here is clear. The large producers, the big boys in the industry, don't want to pay their fees, or they want to be able to use the potential withdrawal of those fees to increase their influence within these organizations. The small producers favour the current situation with mandatory check-offs. I want to say that it is my experience that when it comes to the agriculture industry or any other industry, this government consistently sides with the big players against the small players, and that is what they are doing here. It's the golden rule of this Conservative government: them that's got the gold make the rules. That is what is happening here today.

I'm not surprised that other hon. members who represent rural constituencies are getting a lot of heat over this move because I think the large majority of producers, who are small producers, will be adversely affected by this. This is a play of the powerful and strong producers in this province, especially in the beef industry, and it will only result in accelerated concentration of ownership within our agricultural industry.

Mr. Speaker, I would urge hon. members to please consider voting against this bill as it is something that will hurt small producers and further do damage to our family farms. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: We have five minutes for questions and comments. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Hon. member, I listened with interest to your questions and your answers regarding Bill 43. However, you talked about big producers and little producers. Do you have any other examples of the big producers calling the shots in the beef industry? There was that $400 million BSE program. If you do have any more examples, I'd love to hear them.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, there's a bit of irony here because it was the Alberta Beef Producers who produced the report which showed that, in fact, when the bailout for BSE was brought forward by the government, the lion's share of the money went to the big packers, to two very large packers, Cargill and Tyson Foods at that time, who pocketed the lion's share of the public bailout money as a result of that. That was millions and millions of dollars. You know, the program was designed to favour, actually, the people who really didn't need it. The small cow-calf operations, which tend to be in some cases mom-and-pop operations, smaller types of farms, actually didn't get the help that they needed.

Most of the money went to feedlots, and the feedlots were of course controlled to a large degree by the big packers because we don't have a rule that bans packer-owned cattle, and that, of course, allows the big packers to manipulate the price. If there's a shortage and the price starts to rise, they can just put more of their cattle on the market, and they depress the price that they have to pay. So the whole deck is stacked in favour of the biggest players in our food industry, and I think that particularly applies to the cattle industry.

Thank you for the question, hon. member.

Mr. McFarland: Mr. Speaker, I'm just going to make it very quick. With respect to the previous speaker and hopefully to set the record straight, the largest recipients of BSE payments were not the packers. They own traditionally 8 to 10 per cent of the herd that's live and ready to be slaughtered at any one time. I don't think it's any secret that I've got the largest feedlot in the province in my riding. I'm not going to say who they are, but it's fairly obvious by the size of the operations that they would be the largest recipient.

The Deputy Speaker: Anybody else for the five minutes?

Seeing none, the chair will recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview on the bill.

Dr. Taft: Yes. Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Bill 43 is proving to be one of the more contentious bills on the Order Paper these days. I think it's worth getting on the record a handful of things at this second reading before we get into a section-by-section analysis in Committee of the Whole.

I've had quite a number of calls and letters and e-mails on this issue, and most of them have been pretty unhappy. This is in some ways the kind of struggle that the Member for Edmonton-Centre said that we typically stay out of. This would be easy to dismiss as an internal power play within the industry, and in some ways it is, but it's a lot more than that because there's so much public funding at stake here. The simple fact of the matter is that the taxpayers of Alberta put an awful lot of money into the beef, pork, lamb, and potato industries, especially the beef industry, so I think it's important that as representatives of the taxpayer we make some comments on this bill and that we show an interest in how the industry is struggling.

The origins of the bill seem to lie in a basic conflict between a small number of large players and a large number of small players. The small number of large players are the 40 or so biggest feedlots and related companies, who among them have a huge number of cattle. I think it's very important to state right off the bat that this bill seems really to originate with the cattle industry and that the pork and lamb and potato people are collateral damage in it as far as I can see and as far as they can see. We have a small number of companies controlling a large number of animals, and because they control a large number of animals, they have a much higher cost of check-off. It's just because it's per animal. If they've got a lot of animals, they pay a lot in check-offs. On the other hand, you have a large number of cow-calf operators with maybe a few hundred head each. It's a much smaller deal to them individually, but collectively it's a very big deal.

So it's a basic power play, as the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood indicated, between the big, powerful players and the many small players. It seems that the big, powerful players were able to get the ear of cabinet and the ear of the Premier and presumably of the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development and basically convince them that despite whatever opposition there might be, this bill was a good idea. I know that there's some support for the bill in caucus, and I suspect there's some concern about the bill, and the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills reflected as much.

I think we need to stop briefly and just reflect on the value of Alberta Beef Producers to the industry. Alberta Beef Producers has played a key role, particularly in the last six or eight years, and they are supported by this check-off. Because of that, they've had the resources to do some very important work. The first thing that comes to mind, of course, is working in the United States and other international markets to get those markets reopened after the BSE crisis, but they do a lot of other work as well: advocating on behalf of the industry, lobbying nationally and internationally, developing new markets, doing all kinds of very valuable stuff that any good industry association should do.

A similar kind of work is done by the pork, lamb, and potato producers. I think it's important at this moment to just mention in particular the pork producers. This could not come at a worse time for the pork industry. The pork industry has taken a terrific blow in the last couple of weeks because of the H1N1 flu. Borders are being closed. We're seeing some culling, maybe widespread culling. We're seeing a drop in consumer confidence, unjustified, but it's there.

This is a time when we need the pork producers to be focused one hundred per cent on addressing those issues head-on. They don't need to worry about refundable check-offs. They shouldn't have to worry about coming to the floor of the Legislature or the Assembly and trying to sort out political issues that were never of their own making. My heart really goes out to the pork industry right now on this issue because at a time when they should be having this government one hundred per cent behind them, no questions asked, they find that they're standing on a foundation of quicksand, and I think it's very regrettable. I know as well that potato producers are very concerned about this.

Mr. Speaker, I do need to keep an eye on time a little bit, and there's an awful lot in this bill. Just to keep things moving, I have an amendment to make, so I'll just give it to the page and wait a moment while it's distributed.

May I proceed, Mr. Speaker?

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, before you proceed, I just want to remind all members here that this is a hoist amendment that you introduced. Proceed.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The amendment reads as follows. I move that the motion for second reading of Bill 43, Marketing of Agricultural Products Amendment Act, 2009 (No. 2), be amended by deleting all the words after "that" and substituting the following: "Bill 43, the Marketing of Agricultural Products Amendment Act, 2009 (No. 2), be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence."

Mr. Speaker, we all know the intent of these kinds of amendments. They're meant to basically stop the bill, and I think it comes down fundamentally to one principle, and that's the principle of democracy. We have a democracy that developed over many centuries. I won't go through the whole history of it. I won't claim to know it all. I have a pretty good sense of some of the key moments, but I won't go through all of that.

It's through a very gradual, sometimes bloody and often very difficult process that we've gotten to the point in our society where people don't vote according to how much land they own or don't vote according to their gender or don't vote according to their ethnic background. I think it's worth reminding that the Lieutenant Governor of Alberta's family, when they came to Canada, couldn't vote because they were Chinese. Through all of those struggles it moved the vote to universal suffrage so that whether you're rich or poor, whether you own property or not, whether you're male or female, as long as you're over the age of 18 and a Canadian citizen, you can vote. That's a huge principle: one person, one vote.

The reason I think this amendment should be accepted is because Bill 43 is enormously undemocratic. It takes us back in voting terms to the middle 1800s or the late 1800s, when you had to own property to vote, and it connects voting rights to property. In this case people will vote with their dollars, and their dollars will depend on how many animals they own. The more animals they own, in effect, the more clout they have. It's not democratic. The producers don't like it.

The Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills indicated that there isn't consensus in the industry on this bill. That's why you have a vote. There are lots of times when there isn't consensus in this Assembly, and we have a vote. There are lots of times when there's not consensus, in fact there's very seldom consensus in society at large on any particular issue, but we go to votes. That's what it means to be democratic. Fundamentally, that's what it means to be Albertan and Canadian.

Mr. Speaker, I won't go through any of the other arguments at this point. I will simply drive home the message that we should stop this bill now because it's antidemocratic. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on the amendment.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much. This amendment to Bill 43 certainly comes at a very good time. I appreciate the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview giving the Assembly a choice in this matter. I heard from a beef producer this afternoon. This gentleman was phoning from just east of Bashaw. He phoned our constituency office. He took issue with this bill. He took significant exception to this bill. This amendment certainly would be acceptable to that farmer, the beef producer.

When we look at democracy, flourishing democracy, the right to vote is certainly the number one principle. The hon. member talked about age and citizenship and various other matters that are of importance when you think that it's not so long ago that certain individuals could not vote. I don't think that we should be advocating that the ownership of property is a criterion for voting. We've been through that, actually, a couple of centuries ago. Hopefully, we would never go that way again.

I can't understand why the producers themselves could not have a plebiscite. The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills was talking about that earlier. To seek direction from the producers themselves, to me, is the logical way to go with this. We've had divisions over the Wheat Board in the past, and there were, I think, two votes taken to seek direction from the producers themselves on which direction the Wheat Board should take. The government got actively involved in that through the Grain Commission. We all know that the Grain Commission had picked a side on that vote, and we know how active they were. We know through the Internet that there was even at least one employee in the department of agriculture, who was from a government source, making his or her opinion known as to which way they would like the Wheat Board election to go.

Certainly, when we look at this bill and we look at the controversy that it has created by requiring producer commissions to grant members the option to seek refund of mandatory check-offs in the beef, pork, lamb, and potato industries, I see absolutely nothing the matter with allowing the producers themselves: one producer, one vote. In the case of the cattle industry, regardless of whether they have a thousand head or only 50 head, let them decide. I can see no reason why this shouldn't happen.

It's interesting to note, Mr. Speaker, that if we were to allow this amendment to proceed, it would certainly give time for a vote to be organized. Producers currently have the ability to conduct a plebiscite on matters relating to the amendment of their agricultural board's or commission's plan, which sets out how it is to operate or how it's to conduct its affairs. What would be the matter with allowing producers to hold a plebiscite to determine whether or not the plan should be changed to make the check-offs refundable? Many producers in the beef industry, including the fine gentleman that I talked to earlier this afternoon, are outraged that the government has not allowed them to make their own democratic decisions through a plebiscite, and they're very resentful that their democratic right has been taken away. If we allow this bill to proceed, I think we are showing disrespect and, in a certain way, neglect of the democratic process.

Now, there's also concern that these are actions the government is taking – I can't believe this, but I've certainly heard this – to try to weaken the Alberta Beef Producers as the Alberta Beef Producers last year released a letter to its members which was somewhat critical of the government's livestock and meat strategy, which was released last year. Of course, there are concerns around the burden on smaller producers and the lack of consultation with smaller producers. That's why I was listening with a great deal of interest to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, who was talking about the contrast between the big producers and the smaller producers in this province. I would agree with him. There is a significant difference. The ear of the government is certainly tuned to the voice of the big producers, in my view.

This amendment certainly would provide ample opportunity for a vote to be organized and taken and counted, and the organization would have to live with the results. If that was to happen, I would certainly like to see the government stay independent and impartial, not like it was during the Wheat Board elections. As well, I don't know how the Beef Producers would be funded and the consequences of that if the check-off was to be removed or changed or reduced.

Certainly, I know from the public accounts, Mr. Speaker, that there is the odd grant that goes the way of the Alberta Beef Producers. I don't have those statistics with me. I thought for a minute of darting down to the library and just looking them up quickly. But it's a significant amount of money. If we are to eliminate the check-off, is that how the government plans to finance the Alberta Beef Producers?

Ms Blakeman: You don't think it's the plan to not finance them?

Mr. MacDonald: Well, it's a plan of control, hon. member. You know, the strings would be pretty short, and the Beef Producers would get nervous. They certainly would not want to rock the jukebox, so to speak, and have whatever grant they are getting jeopardized.

When we look, Mr. Speaker, at the money and how it's spent . . . [interjection] Hon. member, rural Albertans are known to rock the jukebox on occasion, too. Oh, yes.

An Hon. Member: How do you know?

Mr. MacDonald: How do I know? I travel to rural Alberta. Hon. member, I also know how they feel about this bill.

Now, when we look at the $3 check-off and how it's spent, it's interesting to note, Mr. Speaker, that 38 per cent is spent in national and international market development, promotion, and research. I would say that that's money well spent, certainly, as we get our markets back after the issue around BSE not only in America but expanding to new markets in the Far East. Operations and administration is only 9 per cent. Now, if this government had that sort of track record, it would be, like, wow, as the children would say. Environment and animal welfare is 3 per cent of the budget, or that would be 9 cents. Animal health and research would be 15 cents of the $3 check-off. Producer communications would be 15 cents. That seems to be a lot cheaper than what the Public Affairs Bureau would provide that service for. Policy development is 18 cents. Federal and provincial government affairs is again 18 cents of the $3. Provincial market development and promotion is 33 cents. The BSE recovery programs are an additional 51 cents. That's how the money is spent. It seems to be spent very wisely, very prudently.

I don't know what it would mean for the Beef Producers if this bill were to become law or if the government is going to provide similar amounts through a grant program. That would be one question I would have. Hopefully, if we were to pass this amendment, it would be very considerate of the government to answer how they plan to fund the Beef Producers. Through the grant programs, I would suspect, through the ministry of agriculture, but it's hard to say. It could be lottery money these days. It could come through the Solicitor General through to the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit to the Beef Producers, and of course it would be all authorized by the President of the Treasury Board.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I would certainly urge hon. members of this House to give consideration, please, to the hoist amendment presented by my colleague for Edmonton-Riverview. I think it would certainly allow for democracy to exercise itself, a vote to be conducted, and all parties to live by the direction from the producers resulting from that vote.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Other hon. members wishing to speak on the amendment? Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question on the amendment.

Bill 44 Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Amendment Act, 2009

[Adjourned debate May 13: Mr. Taylor]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think this is going to be one of the more interesting discussions of the session, not just tonight but throughout the duration, on Bill 44. Some members may not feel that's a very high standard to set, but I think we could set a pretty high standard with this one. I must say that I feel like there have already been some passionate and eloquent speeches on this. I hope that we can keep this entire discussion respectful, and I think we probably will.

I want to speak in the few minutes available to me tonight in second reading primarily to the principles, as I see them, surrounding the issues in Bill 44. There are certainly significant administrative questions, and if there's time, I'll explore those a little bit, but I think it's always good to begin in second reading thinking about the principles of the bill and of the spirit behind the bill. I listened to the comments from the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere when he spoke, and I think he touched on some of the principles that need to be discussed. The concerns around Bill 44 hinge in some ways on matters of tolerance and understanding and how those are developed and respected in Alberta and in Canadian society.

I wanted to start, actually, by reflecting on an experience I had last Saturday afternoon, which was a very sad funeral for a young man, a 25-year-old man, the son of some good friends of ours, who died quite unexpectedly. There was a very large funeral. The main hall was overflowing and even the backup hall was overflowing. Several hundred people were there. I was looking at the crowd of people there and the impact that this young man had had and the number of lives he had touched. As I looked around, I couldn't help reflecting both on the nature of Alberta society and on the discussions we'd had around Bill 44 because there was a remarkable range of people there, people from, of course, all walks of life and all ages.

There were also people from many ethnic and religious backgrounds. In fact, the father of the young fellow who died is Jewish; his mother is Christian. There were people, as far as I could tell, from almost all faiths you would imagine at this funeral service: Muslim – in fact, I think there were a couple of Muslims who were pallbearers – Hindu, and undoubtedly atheists and who knows? It was a tremendous mix of people. There were also, I think it's important to mention in the context of Bill 44, lots and lots of straight people, of course, but undoubtedly a significant number of gays. It didn't matter. They were all there to mark a life, and they were all there out of tremendous mutual respect.

One of the things that struck me and my wife and others was how young the crowd was and how, to people of a generation, say, under 35 or so, many of the traditional divisions in our society just are not relevant anymore. They don't care. They don't care what your religion is. They don't care what your ethnic background is. They don't care, particularly, if you're straight or gay. I found myself thinking: boy, there's something special to celebrate here. How did we get here? How can we continue to encourage this not just in Alberta but around the world? I think we need to think hard about that, as I know members have. Members on both sides of this debate undoubtedly have.

It got me to thinking a little bit – and I won't dwell too much at this point – on Canadian society and something I sometimes think about, which is: why Canada? Why does Canada work? What kind of remarkable place is this? Inasmuch as we express frustration over Canada, I think we need to reflect on what a remarkable achievement this country is and, particularly, what a remarkable achievement it was in the middle 1800s to take French Catholics and combine them with English-speaking Protestants and mix them in with all kinds of First Nations people and through open willingness and commitment come together, not split apart but come together and embrace, really, a new approach to a nation.

We have continued to develop that over the last 150 years, leaders like Macdonald and Cartier and shortly after that a very controversial figure in the form of Louis Riel. If you actually study and read the proposed constitution, as it were, for the Métis settlement in Manitoba and if you look at Riel's vision for Canada, it was a remarkably far-sighted vision for plurality, where people of all faiths and ethnicities and languages could live together. He proposed that. In some ways you could probably make the argument that Riel was a very important founder of the multicultural fabric of Canada. There's even history going back to Champlain and his vision, but I won't dwell too much on that.

Bill 44 wrestles with those kinds of ideas, and it struggles with those kinds of ideas, and it challenges us to think about what's the best way to move forward to continue this wonderful experiment that our society is. Because there is the specific term "religion" brought into this bill, it opens up what will be a very wonderful debate.

It got me thinking about a book I read earlier this winter at the recommendation of a friend. It's called The Search for God at Harvard. It's actually a pretty interesting book. It was written, boy, I think it'd be close to 20 years ago. It's autobiographical. It's about an Orthodox Jew who's a reporter at the New York Times who takes a year to go to divinity school at Harvard. Harvard was founded, actually, as a Puritan school of divinity. Obviously, it lost the Puritan roots centuries ago, but the school of divinity has always been sort of a heartland of Protestant thought. It has expanded and grown and so on. But the idea of an Orthodox Jew taking a year to go to divinity school at Harvard was very, very unusual.

Although we only have a few minutes now, just to set up what would be later debates, I wanted to read a couple of passages from this book. When the author, Ari Goldman, decided as an Orthodox Jew to go to Harvard Divinity School to study other religions, he ran into a lot of resistance, and he ran into resistance from his own family. Here is just one brief example. It's from page 5 of the book, if anybody ever reads it. He's referring to his Aunt Minnie, who had largely raised him, and he says:

Aunt Minnie was very much opposed to my going to study religion at Harvard. "You have one of the best schools for religious studies right here in New York – Yeshiva University," she told me. But when she realized that I was going to Cambridge despite her entreaties, she gave me her blessing. "Remember," she whispered in my ear at a family gathering shortly before I left for Cambridge. "You can study all the religions, but Judaism is the best."

That was how his aunt sent him off to Harvard. So he spent the year there. It wasn't always comfortable for him, and it stretched him, but it's very interesting to go through the book and see what happens.

I'm going to just read a couple of other passages, again because I think it sets context for this debate. At page 8 he says:

No, I did not convert. My deeply nurtured Jewish identity never seriously came under siege. But what did happen was an extraordinary dialogue, one between the religious ideas that I encountered and the Jewish ideas within myself. The dialogue continued every day in the classroom, in the words of the New Testament, the Koran, the Upanishads and in fellowship at my own Sabbath table, around which I assembled people of various faiths. As a result of these encounters, I learned how others experience their faith. But more important, I developed a richer and fuller understanding of myself and my own Judaism.

I think there's a very important point to be considered in there as we look at the possibilities of Bill 44, Mr. Speaker, and that is, to put it in a nutshell, that bringing people together and challenging people to understand each other and share experiences and speak to each other and, I think, in the words of Ari Goldman in this book, enter into a dialogue isn't necessarily threatening. It doesn't mean that the people who come will leave with their identities overthrown. In fact, he himself admits – and perhaps later in another debate I'll read from the conclusion – that his Judaism was enriched. But he came out understanding other people well.

I think that's what we want to achieve in our schools, and I think that's one of the great, great values of our public education system. I've had teachers tell me in the last few days, since this bill has got a bit of publicity: "You know, I've got Jewish kids, I've got Muslim kids, and I've got Christian kids all in the same class, and it's wonderful." And it would be wonderful. I think that we as a society need to encourage that, and we need to facilitate that. We don't need to impose it, but we already allow ways out if it makes people that uncomfortable.

The Member for Airdrie-Chestermere – and I wish I had his comments in front of me – spoke about us approaching these issues with confidence, that we shouldn't be threatened by what's proposed in Bill 44. Last fall I had a woman come to me on a completely unrelated issue, of course, but towards the end of my conversation she said, "You know, I grew up in a very conservative family, and one of the things I noticed" – and I don't mean this with a capital C at all; I don't want anybody to take this personally – "is that conservative people so often come to issues out of fear." They approach an issue as if it's a threat, and they approach it therefore as fear. She was struggling with that because she wanted to approach issues as problems or opportunities or challenges to be solved, and she made this interesting comment about people approaching things from a position of fear.

I suppose we're all guilty of that. You know, I'm a little bit nervous – maybe not fearful – about Bill 44, and there are others who are concerned about Bill 44 not being here. It seems to me that what we've achieved and what we can achieve in our classrooms by expecting people to come together is a wonderful thing, and we can do that by having our own courage and our own confidence, just as Ari Goldman discovered it himself. When he first set off to Harvard, that took courage, but he had confidence in himself, and at the end of the year he was still Jewish, he was still an Orthodox Jew, but he had a far broader understanding, a far richer view of things.

Mr. Speaker, I think that we as a society should have the courage and confidence to urge people to work, to dialogue, to talk, to share, to laugh, and to live together. That's why I have some concerns with Bill 44.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, we have five minutes for comments or questions.

Ms Blakeman: I just wondered what the member's concerns were for Bill 44.

Dr. Taft: Well, I'm assuming there will be other opportunities for debate, but I'm concerned that there is a symbolism in this bill that encourages people to separate from those who are different from them and that discourages people from coming together to share life with those who are different. I prefer us as an Assembly and I'd like the government to do everything reasonable to encourage people to come together and share their differences and live their differences.

Now, I did mention in my very opening comments that I also have quite a number of concerns around the administration of this bill. Of course, it needs to be said that I find, as the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona said several days ago, that this bill giveth and it taketh away, in a sense. It's very important that equal rights are granted for people regardless of sexual orientation. I think that's a step forward, and it's overdue. We even see that becoming very common in the United States. My concern is that just as it does that, it then, in a way, takes a step backwards.

Again, I'm assuming we're going to have lots of really good discussion on this, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. member wishing to join the five minutes?

Seeing none, the hon. leader of the third party on the bill.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure, at last, to rise to speak to these amendments to the Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Act, one of which will change the name to the human rights act.

Mr. Speaker, if we can talk for a moment about the positive things that are in this bill. I want to indicate that the government has included sexual orientation as a protected right in sections 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, and 8 of the bill. Now, this comes years after these rights were read into human rights legislation in this country by the Supreme Court of Canada, so this amounts, really, to a formality. This government has been the last government to recognize this, and in fact it is just a matter of changing the language to conform with the reality that has been created in this country. It's something we've been urging the government to do. Even just a matter of months ago, the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit was saying: we're not going to do that. Now it has been done. But, really, it amounts to nothing more than a formality.

Similarly, the definition of marriage has been changed in section 30, and the requirement that marriage be defined as a union of two people of the opposite sex has been deleted. This comes after the reality was changed with respect to this about three years ago by the federal Parliament of Canada. Again, what we have is a change in formality, recognizing the reality that others have created. This government has not created that reality; in fact, it has resisted it as long as possible.

Now, the real nub of the debate around this bill has to do with the inclusion in section 9 of the bill, which amends section 11.1 of the act, of sexuality, sexual orientation, and religion as protected grounds, which then gives the right of a parent whose wishes in their view have not been respected with regard to the teaching of their children in these areas to bring a case there to the Human Rights Commission. The government has acknowledged that these rights of parents already exist in the education act, where parents may inform a school or a teacher that their children are to be excused when things explicitly dealing with this are being taught. There is a process of going to the teacher or the principal and appealing, then up to the superintendent and right up through to the Minister of Education, that already exists. So the question then is: why does the government need to now make this a protected right, where the Human Rights Commission gets involved?

One of the problems that we have about this, Mr. Speaker, is that the current system seems to be working quite well in protecting the rights of parents to exempt their children from those areas of education if they choose to do that, so why now are we going to subject teachers and school boards to being brought before the Human Rights Commission and superseding the existing process? Now it will be possible for a parent to simply jump over the existing procedures and make a complaint directly to the Human Rights Commission.

So what's the problem with that? Well, I think a great deal of confusion was created by the Premier's comments at a news conference, which I attended, in which he said that parents would have that choice when asked about whether this act would allow parents to excuse their children when the theory of evolution was being taught. That interpretation of the Premier, because he is the Premier, gave rise to a great deal of concern. Now, his ministers have subsequently gone to great pains to dispute the Premier's interpretation and to assure the House and Albertans that, in fact, that is not the case, but we have not heard that yet from the Premier.

Ultimately, what's going to happen, Mr. Speaker, is that we're going to now have the Human Rights Commission making essentially case law, making decisions on these matters. The Minister of Culture and Community Spirit says: well, of course, you know, we expect people to behave reasonably. But if you talk to any teacher, they will tell you that there are occasionally parents who are not particularly reasonable, so the assumption that all parents are reasonable is absurd. There will be parents that bring charges before the Human Rights Commission if they don't like what their child has been taught.

Now, a lot has been said about this, but ultimately, Mr. Speaker, even if the Human Rights Commission makes reasonable interpretations of the act when charges are brought, it will have a profound effect on the education of our children because teachers will never know what it is that they can talk about if issues relating to sexuality, sexual orientation, or religion come up spontaneously in a classroom outside of their lesson plan. So they will adjust their behaviour accordingly. You could call it self-censorship. They will say: "You know, I'm not going to talk about this. I'm not going to do this because Johnny's or Janey's parents might object, and we haven't got time to deal with it." They don't even know sometimes where the discussion is going to go in a class.

Here's the thing, Mr. Speaker. The handful of parents who might avail themselves of this clause are going to influence the education of all of the children, including the children of parents who want their children to be present for those discussions. It will change how education is delivered in the classroom, however subtle, and that is of great significance. Why, then, do we need to include this under the human rights act when it's already well dealt with under the School Act?

Mr. Speaker, I think we have to talk a little bit about what the politics behind this move are. This reflects a proposal made a couple of years ago in a private member's bill by the hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development, which basically sought to enshrine parental rights in a very strong way. The question is why those views, which I consider to be not mainstream views in this province – I'm putting that delicately – should come to dominate the government caucus to the point where the two ministers responsible, that being the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit and the Minister of Education, who have indicated at various times their preference to approach this in a different way, are now forced into the position of being the staunch defenders of legislation which apparently they don't even agree with? That is a disturbing trend. It seems to me that the government caucus has been hijacked by a group that has very, very socially conservative views. I don't think that those views are widely held by the people of Alberta, and yet here it is as government legislation. And if the government persists, it's going to become the law of the land.

Mr. Speaker, I want to speak about another very serious deficiency here, and that is that the very stakeholders in the education system who will be affected by this legislation have not been consulted about these changes which will in such a fundamental way change the way education is delivered in our classrooms. We saw the spectacle a week or so ago of the Public School Boards' Association, the Alberta Teachers' Association, the association of parent councils, and the association of school superintendents all opposing this legislation and indicating that they have not been consulted. Where's the consultation?

That brings me, Mr. Speaker, to my amendment to this bill that I would like to now bring, which deals with the lack of consultation that has taken place. I will send that up to the table and have it distributed, and I'll make it when you indicate.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, we have an amendment here, a reasoned amendment, introduced by the hon. leader of the third party.

Hon. leader of the third party, continue on the amendment.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would move that the motion for second reading of Bill 44, Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Amendment Act, 2009, be amended by deleting all words after "that" and substituting the following: "Bill 44, Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Amendment Act, 2009, be not now read a second time because the bill has not been subject to sufficient consultation with teachers and school boards."

Mr. Speaker, if I might speak to this motion. It really strikes me that when you make a change which will affect the education system in a fundamental way, you make sure that there is as broad a consultation as possible with teachers, with elected school boards, with school administrations, and most of all with parents. Now, it's curious that the same government that claims that it's standing up for parents' rights has not consulted with parents on this bill. It's true that they've apparently consulted with some religious leaders, but they have not consulted broadly with parents yet are attempting to suggest that they're actually representing the interests of parents with respect to this bill.

I have been contacted by many parents in my constituency and from other parts of the province as well, and I would say that the very large majority of the parents who have contacted me have deep concerns about this bill. If it's about parents' rights, then I think it's just logical and even fundamental that we ask parents and get a sense from them. Instead, the government has not done that, and now the provincial association of parent councils has taken exception to the sections of the bill that we are concerned about. They represent the parents in schools. They're the active parents. They're the parents who get involved with their children's education and who participate in school councils.

When my son was still in public education, I participated from time to time in the parent council as well, and I know that the parents there are deeply concerned about their children's education. They want the best for them. They want the best opportunity not only for their kids but to strengthen the school, to strengthen the education system, and so on. These parents who participate in public education from one end of the province to the other have not been consulted about this, not been consulted by a government that claims that they want to protect parents' rights.

School boards have not been consulted by this government with respect to this bill. There may have been some quick meetings organized since we've raised this issue and since it's become a fairly contentious public issue, but it's very clear that school boards, the people who are elected by the citizens to run the education in our communities, have not been consulted about this bill and about this change. Now, we give them that responsibility. The government created school boards. They give them limited powers, but they do ensure that they are elected by the citizens in the community. And they haven't been consulted.

Mr. Speaker, I would urge members to support this amendment. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre on the amendment.

Ms Blakeman: Yes. Absolutely, Mr. Speaker. I would like to speak in favour of the amendment because I think this was true. There may well have been consultations after the fact between the drafters of the bill and representatives of the educational sector, but I would argue pretty strongly that there was not sufficient consultation prior to going into this bill.

I mean, it's hard to get the four organizations together that have come together as a coalition almost in reaction to what this bill has brought forward. But this government managed to do it with this particular legislation. We had the Alberta Teachers' Association, the College of Alberta School Superintendents, the Alberta School Boards Association, and the Alberta School Councils' Association.

I mean, this government does some impressive things sometimes, and getting those four groups to come together as a coalition to speak with one voice in opposition to this bill is really impressive. I have to hand it to the government because that's no mean feat, to get those four groups all motivated to come together. They did a joint press release. They had it all co-ordinated. Wow. This government must have really done something to get them that motivated.

Indeed, they did. They put a section in this bill that has thrown — chaos is a strong word to use in this context.

Dr. Taft: Confusion.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. A colleague suggests that "confusion" would be more appropriate.

Dr. Taft: Disarray.

Ms Blakeman: Disarray is another possible wording. Actually, I like "disarray." I think that's pretty accurate. I mean, we don't actually have this bill in play yet. It hasn't passed, and I hope it doesn't pass in the form that it's in.

You know, the guards are kind of making fun of me every day as I haul all this stuff up the stairs. A significant portion of it, all this stuff in the pink here, is the reaction that we're getting into my office on the proposals in this bill, and 99 per cent of that reaction is about section 9, which is amending section 11.1. It's being casually referred to as the parental opt-out.

I'm coming at it as the daughter of teachers and someone who grew up in a household that was all about education. To me this section is about creating disarray, confusion, and possibly, finally, chaos in our classrooms, in our schools, and in our education system. This comes about because we don't end up with the kind of consultation that should have brought us to this point.

I'm going to back up a little bit here. I think that the minister got into this for all the right reasons. I think the government got into this for the right reasons. It may have been that the minister came on board when this process was already in the pipeline, and that's quite likely.

First of all was to streamline the actual process of the Human Rights Commission. Yes. Needed to happen. I've now gone back and consulted with some of the people I know who knew that system well. You know, I'm just reading through some of the notes from these people, and they're saying: "Yes, absolutely. Needed that. Good to see this. Glad they chose to call it a tribunal, not a panel." So a lot of administrative changes that really needed to happen.

One of the perennial sets of questions that I inherited as the human rights critic from my predecessor, the previous member by two for Calgary-Buffalo, the venerable Gary Dickson, was a series of questions about how many cases had been opened by the Human Rights Commission, how many cases had been closed by the Human Rights Commission, how many had been carried over the year, how many were more than 300 days old as open cases, et cetera, et cetera. What it really showed us was year from year the commission was falling behind in its ability to deal fairly swiftly with these cases and investigate them and either mediate to a conclusion or move them on. It just really dragged out.

So they got into it for the right reasons. Of course, once the act was open, they'd really look very silly if they didn't include the sexual orientation, which they did. I'm very glad to see that, and so are many of my constituents and many of those that I claim as constituents.

Then they didn't do what this motion is suggesting they should have done, which was to do sufficient consultation with the teachers and the school boards before they got into this section 9, which is amending section 11.1, suggesting that we start to create this disarray, confusion, chaos in our classrooms. The argument that comes back at us is: well, we always did this. Yeah. Good. So why did you feel the need to write something that properly should be situated in the School Act and write it into a different piece of legislation? Can you imagine writing something that affected the beef producers into an act on education because someone decided that that should now . . .

Dr. Taft: We should all be taught to eat beef.

Ms Blakeman: Yes. We should all be taught to eat beef.

Yet we've talked about this so much now that everybody is going, "Yeah, that sounds very reasonable" when the Minister of Education says: "We already do this. This is why we put it in the act." Huh? No. If this is affecting what is going on in the classroom, it should be under the School Act, not under the human rights act. Well, then I'm told that it's already there. Okay. Then if it's already there and it's working, why are you, one, writing it into a piece of legislation and, two, writing it into a different piece of legislation?

You know there are nights – and it always seems to happen at night; there we are, 25 after 9 at night – when I start thinking: why does this government insist on exposing our taxpayers to yet another constitutional challenge? Every time I stand here in this House and say, "Mark my words; this one's going to come back as a constitutional challenge," a couple of years later there it is on the front pages of the paper, and the taxpayers are on the hook to chase through on why this government decided to do this. Maybe they need to do it to satisfy their own internal politics. I don't know. But if that's the case, can you not just work that out the way other caucuses work it out?

Mr. Mason: Because they have free will.

Ms Blakeman: Yeah. Right. Voting with the free will and all of that kind of thing.

To expose taxpayers to what is surely going to be a pretty clear-cut constitutional challenge on these grounds is really unfair to the taxpayers, especially when I suspect you know that going in. You've got a lot of smart people working for you. You've got a lot of lawyers working for you. [interjection] I'm sorry; the minister is interested in something. I'm sure he's going to get up and respond to me when he gets his chance. [interjection] Oh, yeah. I've come back to the amendment a number of times. It's talking about: we can't read this a second time because we didn't consult with teachers. You bet you didn't, and you didn't consult with them particularly on section 9, which is amending section 11.1, which is about why the government chose to put something that affects the School Act into human rights legislation and the fact that – are you following along? – that is going to end up being a constitutional challenge and cost taxpayers money. There's the total thread recast for you. Thank you so much.

The other things that have come up repeatedly here are: well, you know, if you just notify parents of what's going to happen, you can adjust the modules, and kids can be opted out of classes or given alternate instruction. Here I'm going to come and stand alongside my colleague from Edmonton-Riverview to say: we really need to be working forward in a way that is about coming together, not about highlighting differences, not about taking people apart, not about taking children out of the classroom.

I'm just going to pause here and say that part of this is about religious education. There have been other discussions earlier in the day about, you know, parents' rights to educate their children in a particular religious faith. Absolutely. But to me that doesn't mean that that faith is then used to remove a child from the teaching that all other children are getting in that system. To me as the child of educators I want to know that when we say, "This is someone that graduated from 12 years of education in Alberta," we know that this is what they know. We know that this is the instruction that they've had, that they can think, that they have analytical skills, that they've been challenged on some things that maybe make them a little uncomfortable.

I mean, let's face it. If everybody in this room had been allowed to opt out of everything that made them a little uncomfortable, this would be a much harder place to work toward some kind of a solution in. As part of our education in Alberta we were taught how to be able to construct those arguments and bring them forward and to recognize that you disagree with someone and to be able to develop those arguments and put them out on a public platform and debate those ideas out there.

What are we trying to create here when we say, "No, we don't want children involved in these discussions or exposed to these ideas or challenged by this; we want them taken out of this and not exposed to that"? Everything I've been reading about what we really need children to do and all the stuff that's actually in the School Act and in the manual that they use about, you know, creating opportunities for kids to learn, to find controversial issues, to help them work their way through that process – and Sheldon Chumir, you know, has also weighed back in on this a couple of times.

Dr. Taft: You mean the Sheldon Chumir foundation.

Ms Blakeman: I'm sorry. I mean the Sheldon Chumir foundation. For those of us that actually knew Sheldon Chumir, yes. Now there is a foundation in his name, which he funded. Much of the work that they did in the consultation process was freely adopted by the minister in charge of this bill, but not all of the suggestions that the Sheldon Chumir foundation made were in fact adopted and incorporated into this.

I'm aware that my time is running out here, and I'm not going to be able to find the references fast enough to speak to them. But the point that I was trying to make is that the world gets more complex. It's not getting simpler. It's not getting easier the more times we look at a problem, and in many ways we've not solved problems. How many times do you hear people say, "Well, we're coming around on this one again"? Child poverty: you know, here we are; we're still dealing with it. Is it an easier issue to deal with now than 50 years ago? No, it isn't. We've got all kinds of other complications in it, so in many ways the issues are still here, but they're increasingly multilayered. They're much more of a woven tapestry. We need to be able to educate the next generation to be able to understand the complexity of that and to be able to put forward their point of view with confidence, with some factual backup to it, and be able to argue those ideas out in a public context. I really feel strongly that removing kids from controversial issues and from the classroom is a bad idea.

It also puts enormous pressure on teachers to somehow deal with impromptu ideas coming up, that with questions from students or current affairs that are brought up in the day, a teacher now has to say: "Oh, okay. Whoa. Stop. Just let me send a note home to the parents to let everybody know that this is controversial, and we'll get back to you in two weeks."

Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. members wish to speak on the amendment?

The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that we adjourn debate on the bill.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Cao in the chair]

The Chair: I would like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 47 Appropriation Act, 2009

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Certainly, I'm looking forward to speaking at committee on Bill 47. I was encouraged earlier in debate this week by the President of Treasury Board that if I had any questions or any concerns, to put them on the record. I received a similar response yesterday from the hon. minister of health regarding the Appropriation Act and what should or should not be in this legislation.

When one thinks of the Appropriation Act and the budget and the whole budget process that we just I would describe it as endured, Mr. Chairman, I certainly don't think the interests of the taxpayers of this province were served with the whole process of examining the budget to date. Whether we go through the respective offices of the Legislative Assembly and the support for the Legislative Assembly or the government departments from A through T, there is a lot of money allocated here, a lot of money allocated during difficult economic times.

When we look at the budget process and how it was developed by the government, we do know that there are a lot of volumes to this. The first volume I would like to mention in my remarks is the ministry business plans, Budget 2009. The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill also was anxious for members on this side of the House to provide some examples of budget restraints that could be used to reduce this big, bloated government, its wasteful spending habits. I'm not going to mention horse racing because that gets a lot of attention in this House, and taxpayers seem to pay a lot of attention to the fact that during these rather difficult times we still have a significant subsidy to the horse-racing industry.

We look at the accountability statements that each minister signed off on. Some of them signed off on March 19, others on the 18th, one, I think, signed off on the 20th, and it goes on and on. We'll just check some of the larger departments by budget amount, and Justice is one, certainly. They've got a lot of money in bonuses; that's for sure. They always give a lot of money in bonuses. This accountability statement was signed off on March 19, 2009, Mr. Chairman, and the accountability statement in the business plan reads:

The business plan for the three years commencing April 1, 2009 was prepared under my direction in accordance with the Government Accountability Act and the government's accounting policies. All of the government's policy decisions as of . . . And this is very important.

. . . March 12, 2009 with material economic or fiscal implications of which I am aware have been considered in preparing the business plan.

The Ministry's priorities outlined in the business plan were developed in the context of the government's business and fiscal plans. I am committed to achieving the planned results laid out in this business plan.

It's signed by the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General, dated March 19. That's a week after it was signed off in the accountability statement. My point in all of this is that these sign-offs occurred, and I'm sure these budget documents went to the printers before we had finished our additions on the lavish senior management bonus plans that this government used as a means to exercise complete authority over senior civil servants.

Now, we have done additional math – and I know this is outside this budget year, Mr. Chairman – over the years since this program was first initiated, and the majority of the money, oddly enough, was taken from the social services budget, but $250 million has gone through this program. What does it have to do with the sign-off on these business plans? Well, the Premier stood up in question period one day and said: we're going to discontinue this practice. It was the right decision but the wrong year. This should have been discontinued, in my view, quite some time ago. It was not.

The Premier indicated that it's about a $40 million tab now that is to be paid out in these bonuses, and if you look at last year's budget, where the money is coming from for the $40 million now, it's hidden line by line in the budget in each and every respective department. Nothing has changed from last year's budget to this year's budget. The government certainly would not have time from the day that we started asking questions about this to reduce these budget documents by $40 million. So there is one more pot of cash that we can either save or set aside for key government programs.

Now, I know there are members opposite that just want to spend, spend, spend [interjection] – the hon. Minister of Education laughs, and it's not a laughing matter. I can read the Alberta Gazette as well as the next person. This hon. minister certainly has taken liberties with the treasury to provide lavish hosting expenses. An example of this, hon. member, is that last year when the budget came out, the Provincial Treasurer's postbudget reception cost $700, but the one hosted by the Minister of Education was over $2,000. In fact, I think it was over $2,300, but I'm going by memory, and my memory is like that of the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills: it gets rusty at times. But you can look that up in the Alberta Gazette, and it's not a laughing matter.

I'm going to get to hosting expenses in a minute, but I want to summarize my point that when the accountability statements were signed off, and then later the Premier announced that this was a bad, bad program and it was going to end, this government did not have time to remove that $40 million from this budget department by department. So there is an additional $40 million that can be set aside, and if a portion of it is to be spent, it's to be spent in a prudent fashion. That's one example.

When we look at hosting expenses, while I'm on the subject, Mr. Chairman, last year – and this is in the latest issue of the Gazette that we've had a chance to have a look at – hosting expenses over $600 for this government in amounts that have been publicly disclosed in the Alberta Gazette are over $1.4 million. It's a lot of lunches, a lot of dinners, a lot of wine. When we look at places where we can save money, these are good places for the government to start. I would encourage the hon. Minister of Education to set an example with budget discipline because when we look at these hosting expenses, Mr. Chairman, we have to realize that they're all buried in Bill 47 here, in each and every department with the exception of Energy. The Minister of Energy seems to have a very modest and reasonable amount in hosting expenses, as do several other ministries but not all.

What is annoying to the taxpayers is that in these global amounts is money to be used to pay for hosting expenses. There was an ambassador, an envoy from a country visiting the province and our capital city. No one is suggesting that the minister shouldn't take that individual out and have a pleasant meal. No one is suggesting that for a moment. But there has to be some sort of control on this. If there's no control on this kind of spending, what kind of controls do we have on other larger amounts?

I was startled to realize and learn that hosting expenses, well, just exist. There's no budget to speak of. There's no amount. Sure, the deputy minister or the assistant deputy minister sign off on it; in some cases, I would say, the minister. But it doesn't seem like a sound practice. It doesn't seem like a sound practice at all. That's why when we talk about Bill 47, when we talk about the entire budget process, we have to realize that there's a lot of wasteful, lavish spending going on. We see how the budget has increased so dramatically. This is a government that appears to want to continue to practise those habits. It's a government, in my view, that doesn't have the discipline necessary to practise fiscal restraint. Common-sense spending, not wild, lavish spending: that's what the taxpayers are demanding.

When we look at the strategic plan that's provided for health care through the Alberta Health Services budget, there's an acknowledgement in there of wasteful spending. There's an elaborate circle, a 360-degree chart, and in there is the acknowledgement that there has been waste and inefficiency. I wish I had the chart before me, but I do not, Mr. Chairman, but that is yet another example. It's how much budget? Well, there is close to $13 billion in the total Alberta Health and Wellness budget. There is in the Alberta Health Services Budget over $7 billion.

I don't know what's going to happen. I was told yesterday, and we had this discussion in question period about the whole issue of the edict or the order or the demand or the command – I don't know how you describe it – from the Minister of Health and Wellness to the Alberta Health Services Board that they were to reduce their expenditures by $500 million. Now, there was a reference to that in the Edmonton Journal today, in the newspaper, that I'm sure all hon. members read. There was a reduction of surgical services to be provided by the Royal Alex hospital. That was an interesting front page of the Edmonton Journal.

It was quite a contrast. In fact, I was at a public meeting before session started at 7:30, and there were many questions from individuals who were attending the meeting about the scaling back of surgical activity at the Royal Alex and about the oil sands production, synthetic crude oil, about the fact that one of the partners at Syncrude was paying less than 50 cents a barrel in royalties for the first quarter of this year, from January through the end of March, whenever the new royalty regime had come into force. The citizens were quite puzzled. How could this happen? Who was looking after our interests? Who is defending our interests in all these discussions and these negotiations? Surely, the government cannot be when we're paid less than 50 cents. I think it's 48 cents a barrel, is it, hon. member?

Dr. Taft: Yeah.

Mr. MacDonald: Forty-eight cents a barrel in royalty.

Dr. Taft: What is it in Yemen?

Mr. MacDonald: I don't know, but hopefully I'll find out tomorrow in question period.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we look at that contrast: the events at the Royal Alex hospital with the cancellation of surgeries and the amount of resource revenue, the royalty stream that we are getting. These events are related. Fortunately, we do have the stability fund, or the stabilization fund, and it's going to carry us through at least this year. But where do we go from that point? I don't know.

This budget and this budget process are both flawed. There should be considerable public discussion. I think these business plans should be reviewed publicly. I know the Minister of Education is very fond of the policy field committees. They were born under his watch; I'll put it that way. I know that he's very fond of them, and I know that when they were started, it was hoped that they would be a means by which this government would be more open and more transparent.

I can't understand why, after these business plans go through the Treasury Board and go through their usual government processes or discussions, they couldn't go before the policy field committees before the minister of finance stands up with great fanfare and with the full effect of the Public Affairs Bureau and delivers the budget. Instead of having an open and transparent process, we have this budget process.

It all started with Aboriginal Relations: the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview and the hon. Minister of Aboriginal Relations. I was present at that first budget debate, and I was disappointed. I didn't think the taxpayers were well served by the whole process, and I still think that. Yes, certainly, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview was very diligent in the time that was allocated to him to get specific, detailed answers from the minister, but the process was, I'm afraid, constricted. It was limited. That department had a budget in excess of $149 million. There just wasn't enough time, I felt.

So here we are in Committee of the Whole having another look at the budget and the implications of it for the citizens. Advanced Education and Technology, a significant amount, not 10 per cent, but it would be between 8 and 10 per cent of the total budget. We look at Agriculture and Rural Development. We look at Children and Youth Services; that's an interesting department. [Mr. MacDonald's speaking time expired] We'll get to that again.

Thank you. I appreciate the chance.

The Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move that we adjourn debate on this matter.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Teachers' Pension Plans Amendment Act, 2009

The Chair: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mrs. Leskiw: I believe I have a potential conflict of interest relevant to Bill 25, Teachers' Pension Plans Amendment Act. I will now absent myself from the Chamber during the discussion.

The Chair: Any other hon. member wish to do the same thing, a conflict-of-interest declaration? The hon. Member for Red Deer South.

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I believe I have a potential conflict of interest relative to Bill 25, the Teachers' Pension Plans Amendment Act, and would now absent myself from the Chamber.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Olson: Yes. Mr. Chair, I also believe that I may have a potential conflict of interest with respect to this Bill 25, Teachers' Pension Plans Amendment Act, so I'll also be excusing myself.

The Chair: Any other hon. member who wishes to do so? The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It would appear that the Ethics Commissioner believes that I have a conflict of interest in this matter, so I will absent myself.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. If the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose is in conflict, then I certainly would be, too. Enjoy the debate. I'll be in the opposition lounge.

The Chair: Now that all the hon. members who feel that they have a conflict of interest have left the Chamber, we'll go back to the debate on the bill. The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Marz: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure for me to rise this evening in Committee of the Whole to present Bill 25, the Teachers' Pension Plans Amendment Act. The bill legally transfers the full pre-1992 unfunded liability to government effective September 1, 2009. The act will also incorporate changes to the payment and governance arrangements pertaining to the pre-1992 unfunded liability.

The support received at second reading of this bill is greatly appreciated, Mr. Chairman, but there were some points raised by the opposition that I'd like to address.

The Chair: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt you, but another member wishes to declare his conflict of interest at the last minute here. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie is leaving the Chamber on conflict of interest.

Hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, please continue.

Mr. Marz: Okay. Thank you, Mr. Chair. As I was saying, there were some points raised by the opposition earlier that I would like to address at this time.

Under the November 2007 memorandum of agreement the government agreed to pay the teachers' portion of the pre-1992 unfunded liability payments until August 31, 2009, and then assume the total pre-1992 unfunded liability on September 1, 2009. Inquiries were raised as to how much this will cost as well as how this additional commitment will be managed, considering our current economic condition. The opposition also wanted to know the amount that will be transferred from the general revenue fund to get this commitment paid.

Annual payments over the next three years from the general revenue fund will be $356 million in 2009-2010, $437 million in 2010-11, and $450 million in 2011-12. The annual payments are expected to increase to about $500 million by about 2021 and then gradually decrease until the liability is eliminated by about 2060. In light of the current economic downturn the amounts for the next three years have already been built into Finance and Enterprise's spending targets that have been provided in the fiscal plan.

A concern was also raised regarding the plan of payment. Alberta Finance and Enterprise and Alberta Education share responsibility for the teachers' pension plan, with Finance and Enterprise responsible for the liability and funding related to the pre-1992 obligation. Education covers the ongoing regular contributions.

The government was already responsible for two-thirds of the pre-1992 obligation before the agreement. Under the agreement the government will pay the entire amount of benefit payments to recipients without borrowing from the post-1992 plan. By paying the pre-1992 benefit payments in full as they come due rather than borrowing to make part of the payment, the government is saving hundreds of millions of dollars it would otherwise have paid towards the unfunded liability over time.

Under the previous payment arrangements the pre-1992 unfunded liability would have increased to $14 billion by 2041. Under the new payment plan the unfunded liability would be reduced to $2 billion by the year 2041. Last spring an earlier amendment, the Teachers' Pension Plans Amendment Act, 2008, authorized government to pay teachers' unfunded liability payments until August 31, 2009.

It's important that the 2009 amendment proceed to ensure the implementation of the pension agreement in a timely manner. The 2009 amendment establishes a closed pension fund for the pre-1992 pension benefits under the teachers' pension plan. The amendment provides for the Crown to make payments into the fund as statutory expenditures and guarantees payment of pre-1992 benefits from the Crown. The amendment also provides that any assets remaining in the fund after all pre-1992 benefits have been paid will be returned to the Crown.

Mr. Chairman, in conclusion, I would encourage all members of this House to give their full support to Bill 25. I'll now take my seat. Thank you for your time.

The Chair: Any other member wish to speak on Bill 25? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to rise to speak to this bill. I want to express my appreciation for the comments from the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, giving information on some issues that have been raised earlier.

This is, as soon as you scratch the surface, a fairly technical issue, and it's a very large issue. This bill is an initiative that we support. We, in fact, included this sort of concept in our pre-election platform before the last election, and it's good to see the government adopting the idea. I think there's a lesson to be learned from this. This is a very expensive problem. This was a small problem that grew bigger and bigger and bigger, and now it's going to be multiple billions of dollars and, if I understood the member correctly, several more decades before it's fully addressed.

The lesson that Bill 25 ought to teach us is to be very careful and very thoughtful about the actions we take as a Legislature. Sometimes we move very abruptly and without thought and find that we've created problems that are difficult or expensive to resolve. This particular bill is one of the really, really big examples of this. The origins of the issue that is being addressed by Bill 25 go back to, I think, the 1950s and probably some debate that occurred in this very hall the better part of a lifetime ago, when people perhaps didn't consider all the issues or people were rash or people just weren't paying attention. At some time 50 years ago decisions were made in this Assembly that today are costing us $8 billion – or who knows how much by the time it's all done? – and won't be played out for another 50 years.

I think there should be a copy of this bill and some of the expenses connected with it framed and hung on the walls, maybe one in each of the two lounges behind the Assembly, to remind people that there are sometimes very expensive, long-term consequences to what initially seem like small decisions. I can't imagine – in fact, I'm certain that when the decisions were made that led to this unfunded liability, nobody really thought it through. Nobody thought: you know, this is going to cost people in 2009 many billions of dollars. I wish they had, and all those teachers who are affected by this wish they had as well, particularly the youngish teachers now, who have been paying a premium on their pensions because of the mistaken decisions of years ago. I think that's the key lesson here.

When I see some of the other legislation that's brought forward, I see that the lesson hasn't been learned because I see legislation brought here and pushed through here that is almost certain to cause all kinds of different problems in the future. Earlier this evening in a different debate the Member for Edmonton-Centre was talking about how this government enacts things or puts us in positions where we end up, predictably, in Supreme Court decisions and lose those. The auto insurance one is an example, the Vriend decision is another, and it may well be that the amendments brought in on Bill 44 this session will be yet another. Why do we do that? Why don't we just pause and collect ourselves and think things through, do the number crunching, do the analysis, exercise real prudence, and save people decades from now very expensive corrective action like the one we're having to take here in Bill 25? That's the most important lesson, I think, from Bill 25.

However, there are other things to be recognized, and I think this bill corrects some of those. The first to be recognized is the importance of teachers and the importance of attracting new, young, energetic recruits to the profession. Those were the people who were going to be paying the most under the current unfunded pension situation. I've talked to any number of them who were considering leaving the province because it was like making a second mortgage payment every month, with very little to show for it in their books. So I think we're demonstrating as an Assembly that we value teachers, that we value education, that we want to renew the profession through bringing in fresh recruits and replacing the retiring teachers, who have by and large done an outstanding job.

I support this bill. I think that as a caucus we support this bill. We just really hope that as an Assembly we're not making decisions today such that people in 2059 are going to be standing in this room, saying: gee, I wish those people had thought a little longer and a little harder before they pushed that through.

With those comments, Mr. Chairman, I'll take my seat. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm happy to rise in support of Bill 25, the Teachers' Pension Plans Amendment Act, 2009. This bill puts in place the legislative framework needed to implement the pension agreement reached with Alberta teachers in November 2007 having to do with the pre-1992 unfunded liability payments.

Now, the unfunded liability with respect to teachers' pensions in Alberta was a very long-standing problem. Certainly, we on our side urged the government repeatedly to deal with it. Finally, after some lengthy negotiations an agreement was reached that the government would fund the teachers' portion of the unfunded liability in exchange for an agreement with the Alberta Teachers' Association. A term of that agreement gave four years of certainty as far as labour peace was concerned and so on. I thought that it was definitely a win-win, with the Alberta Teachers' Association, I think, getting a very long-standing issue resolved and the Alberta government ensuring that the education system could operate without any prospect of labour difficulties anywhere in the province for four years.

Mr. Chairman, I think that it's a very reasonable agreement, and I think it will provide not only reliable pensions for teachers who are retiring today and in the future but also is fair to young teachers, who were hit with an extremely heavy burden of trying to pay off a liability that had grown out of control. The pension payments required by young teachers were onerous and difficult for them to meet in some cases and quite unfair. It was those teachers who would have to bear the brunt of this problem, which was created way back when the Social Credit Party was in power and was unfair to teachers who weren't even teaching before 1992 but who still had to make extra contributions to service the liability. This was off-loaded onto those teachers for years and years by this government, and finally an agreement was reached. I think it's unfortunate that it couldn't have been dealt with earlier, but I think that it is to everyone's credit that it has been done.

Mr. Chairman, during an economic downturn such as this people need to know that their pensions are secure, especially when their retirement savings may have lost significant value as a result of the stock market crash that we have seen. I think that this deal ensures that the pre-1992 liability will not have a negative impact on the health of the current pension fund because those are now entirely separated.

Mr. Chairman, I think for now that will suffice for my comments with respect to this bill. It's a good bill and, I think, a credit both to the government and this Legislature and to the teachers and the Alberta Teachers' Association. I urge all members to support it.

Thank you.

Bill 27
Alberta Research and Innovation Act

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm just looking through this for my notes here, but I do know what I want to say about this because I've been doing a bit more research. When I spoke in second on this, I was talking about the politicization of our research and academic scholarship programs. What I was seeing was a movement on behalf of Conservative-based governments towards funnelling, controlling our research and our scholarship and award and granting system towards sort of producing a certain outcome that is business focused. As I started to read on this, I think this is the first time that this government is moving into that area, but I've certainly seen it in a government to which my colleagues across the way have a close affiliation, and that is the current federal Conservative government.

Dr. Taft: They're cousins.

Ms Blakeman: Well, yeah, pretty close cousins.

That is turning up in a number of places. I'm looking at one report of the awarding of the Steacie fellowship, which is a very prestigious pure research-based fellowship. The PM was there and was going on and on about how he wanted to more narrowly target the new research dollars for commercialization of the products of research. It's interesting because there have been a couple of times recently in this House, particularly around carbon capture and storage money, when members of the Official Opposition have said: "Okay, if the government is going to put money into developing this technology, are we going to own a piece of it? Do we get a sort of copyright payment or a royalty payment back because we've invested in this technology and it takes off and it makes everybody a gabillion dollars? We were the seed money for that. We gave them stuff to get started with. Do we get something back for that?"

Mr. Mason: But they're not going to do that.

Ms Blakeman: Well, no, they're not going to do that.

It's one thing to invest in the development of that technology, but I think when you start controlling research and academic institutions and saying, "You are going to focus your research on doing what we want you to do," we have stepped down a completely different road than what we understand academic research to be.

How is that relating to what we're contemplating in Bill 27? Here's what we're contemplating. Bill 27 is basically taking our favourite and, I would argue, our most successful heritage fund resourced, funded research foundation, the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research, and it's rolling it in with a number of other research bodies like the Alberta Research and Innovation Authority, the Alberta Research and Innovation Committee, the Cross-government Portfolio Advisory Committee, and a number of other corporations.

I know in this bill there is an act. There it is. I knew I would find it. Under section 14 in the bill, entitled Transitional Provisions, Consequential Amendments, Repeal and Coming into Force, we're looking at the Alberta Agricultural Research Institute, the Alberta Energy Research Institute, the Alberta Forestry Research Institute, the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research, the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Science and Engineering Research, the Alberta Information and Communications Technology Institute, the Alberta Life Sciences Institute, the Alberta Research Council Inc., the Alberta Science and Research Authority, iCORE Inc., and any subsidiary of any entity that has been referred to in the list that I just went through, which are sections (a) to (j) in the bill. For reference for those of you that have got a paper copy, I'm on page 11 of Bill 27, Alberta Research and Innovation Act.

We're seeing a Conservative thought process that seems to be generated out of the federal government under Prime Minister Harper, where they talk about targeting research dollars for commercialization of products of research. One of the places that I noticed this the most was SSHRC funding. SSHRC is the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council. Now, that is the only grant source to support humanities and social science based research. It's the only one that exists in the country. It doesn't get a lot of the money. I think it's like in the 20 per cent range. It has been told that all the new research they do has to be business focused.

I'm just quoting from an article out of Vue Weekly, but I have seen this. This is the week of February 26, issue 697, an article by Ricardo Acuña from the Parkland Institute, but I've also seen the same statistics quoted elsewhere. Essentially, it's saying: "Budget document that says 'scholarships granted by the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council will be focused on business-related degrees'." Here are the other quotes. There we go. So of the money that's granted, we've got, yeah: $17.5 million allocated to Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council for Canada graduate scholarships is to be uniquely allocated to business-related degrees, one of the few budget elements that is devoted to the knowledge economy.

This is where we all say we're supposed to be going, right? This is the future. This is it. Invest in the knowledge-based economy. Okay, here it is. That's what these grants represent. But, no, they're now going to focus that not really on a knowledge-based industry but on business-related output, which is what they're looking for, and only 20 per cent of the federal research grants go to SSHRC, but that's now all to be focused on business-related study.

So we have two things happening here. One is a reinvention, a recasting of the social sciences and humanities research grants into a business-related research function. Then we have the provincial government drawing together all of the different research councils that we have operating, I might say very successfully, out there. Like, this has become a growth industry for us. This is an economic driver. This is a cluster for us. All of those things that excited, you know, economists and Edmonton boosters talk about in having the Alberta Research Council located in Edmonton, in having the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research based out of here, all of the wonderful press releases that have come out: now they're looking at shifting that and rolling it into some strange thing that the government will control.

That's what this is about. You don't change this stuff that has worked very well because you just thought it would be fun. I mean, this costs money; it costs time. Let's face it, we've got a professional reputation that's tied up in this as well.

This is important. I think this is a serious mistake. I think we run the risk of not attracting the top-notch scientists that we want to see. I mean, look at what we've got running here in Edmonton and in Alberta. I'll talk about Edmonton because I know it better. We've got the nanotechnology centre here. We've got the new engineering building that's on the U of A campus. We've got a lot of medical research that comes out of here, the Edmonton protocol. We're developing the Edmonton clinic and that whole way of doing team-based approach. I mean, that's the stuff that flows from this, and it's working for us, and now we've got a government that says: "We're going to change it all. We're going to uproot everything. We're going to tear it all apart. We're going to roll it all together and do something completely different with it." I have yet to hear a clear explanation of why the government thinks this is a good idea. Everything that I look at says: no, no, no, do not do this.

Mr. Chairman, I'm actually surprised that I've heard as much as I have out of the research community because this is not a group of people that, you know, really has their finger on the pulse of current affairs and politics, that's following this with any amount of vigour, that would throw themselves into a political discussion about, you know – what's the word I'm looking for? – the configuration of the context of what they work in, the administrative set-up and format that they work in. They're researchers. They're off doing what they do. They're thinking about and inventing the new things that are to come. So, as I say, I'm surprised that I heard from as many of them as I did. Clearly, they are deeply concerned that this will shake what they know, that this will drive away some of the colleagues that they have who are currently here, that they will fail to attract new colleagues here.

Let's face it. These people are not coming here because they're going to get paid multimillions of dollars. They can go other places and get paid that kind of money. Frankly, they could go and work for, you know, Swiss drug companies. There are lots of places that if they wanted to go and just make money, they could go to and make money and lots of people willing to pay them a lot of money to do that. But this is about the opportunity to work with other amazing minds in a research-based facility with a focus on putting out and working toward an end here. I think this is a serious – a serious – step backwards. I am really concerned about what this does.

I talked in second reading about how impressed I'd been by that model of the heritage trust fund for medical research and what it had created for us, that it had created an economic cluster, and that I had based some of our policy going into the '04 and subsequent '08 elections with the same policy because it was based on that idea of creating endowment funds that you then used to drive a community of researchers and thinkers towards something else, that whole idea of an endowment fund that supported postsecondary education, an endowment fund that supported a capital fund. And when that capital fund had reached the point where it paid off all the infrastructure debt that we had accumulated and had built all the capital projects that we needed, that money would then roll over into the heritage trust fund. In the end, the ones you ended up with were the postsecondary education endowment fund and the heritage savings trust fund.

I'm puzzled by why the government would choose to do this. As I look around for what could possibly be the reasoning, that's the reasoning that I found is out there, that it is an approach that the federal Conservative government has taken in trying to control what kinds of things our researchers work on and develop, and that they want it focused into a business model. Now, these are fairly recent announcements, February 26 and March 17. These are recent moves by the federal government to control this, so we don't know what the outcome is going to be. I can't see how this is going to be a positive move. I can't see how this is going to recruit people, that it's going to attract scientists and researchers into Alberta. I can't see how this is going to move us into a more creative economy. I mean, we do need to be more creative. We have finite resources. We have less money available. Everybody wants everything, you know, bigger, faster, funnier, and more wonderful.

I don't think that this is a smart move on behalf of government. I think it is really going to cause us a lot of trouble. I guess all I can say is that for those that are in the research community that are following along with this and keeping attention on it, you need to start communicating with your elected representatives. As I say, I've heard from more people than I expected to on this one. If you want the government to understand the effects that this is going to have, the intended and unintended consequences, you need to start getting in touch with us.

I'm going to leave it at that and see whether I can get any kind of response from the government side as to why they would choose to do this. I've read in Hansard, and I'm not picking up anything that's particularly good about it. I'll take my seat and let some others discuss this, and maybe I'll get another opportunity to stand up and rebut a little later on.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on the bill.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much. Bill 27, the Alberta Research and Innovation Act, is certainly an interesting bill. It follows a pattern, as I said in second reading, with this government of centralizing and exercising control, in this case of a series of endowment funds that, if this bill becomes law, will total over 2 and a half billion dollars.

When I first had a briefing on this, I thought it was a bill that one could accept, but when I talked to various people, they cautioned me. They warned me. They said: "Hold on. This may not be in the province's best interests. It may be in some people's best interests but not everyone's." If there's something that I think we have to guard in this Assembly and guard diligently, it is the public interest.

So we have a look at the Alberta Agricultural Research Institute, and we see what they're up to. We have a look at the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research, Alberta Ingenuity, the Alberta Research Council, iCORE, Alberta Forestry Research Institute, the Alberta Energy Research Institute, Alberta ICT Institute, and of course the Alberta Life Sciences Institute. They will all be sort of centralized.

We look at what's going on. Let's take, for example, Mr. Chairman, the Alberta Agricultural Research Institute. It's an unincorporated board consisting of representatives from industry, academia, and government. It was established under the Alberta Science and Research Authority Act. Its goal is to support the growth of a dynamic, sustainable Alberta life sciences sector by leading the agribased industry's research, development, and deployment strategies and outcomes. Their final goal, if I can use that word, is to become an Alberta leader responsible for ensuring that agricultural research, development, and deployment delivers innovative solutions to the marketplace. The Alberta Agricultural Research Institute plays a big role in Alberta's agribased industry. I'm told that this role will continue to occur, but I don't know why we can't just leave well enough alone.

Now, the research institute has a priority of sustainable production. It continues to make significant contributions in support of the bovine genomics programs, enhancing the portfolio with investments in support of a national healthy embryo development network and further initiatives in livestock genomics. The investments that are also under this research institute include biomarker development.

I'm not going to get into this at this time, Mr. Chairman, but certainly we know that in August of 2007 the institute supported the eighth International Plant Cold Hardiness Seminar, critical to evolving cropping systems in western Canada amidst climate change. That is only one of a number of conferences and seminars that the organization has been involved in. They're certainly going to be involved in other critical conferences, as I understand. I certainly hope this continues, and whether you support or reject this bill, the institute will continue to work.

Now, I understand that two years ago there was close to $5 million invested in the institute's three strategic theme areas: bioproducts, health and nutrition, and, as I said, sustainable production. I think we should just leave each one of these organizations as a stand-alone research facility. I thought about what the minister had said in our bill briefing – and I appreciated his time, as I said before – but I'm not convinced this consolidation or whatever we want to call it is in the public interest.

If we look at the Alberta Energy Research Institute – now, this is another one of the organizations that's going to be consolidated – according to the annual report, as I said in second reading, it's a $10 million entity. Again, it is an unincorporated board, established under the same act, the Alberta Science and Research Authority Act. The Energy Research Institute works closely with other research institutes in business areas, with Advanced Education and Technology as well as key stakeholder departments of Energy, Environment, and Employment and Immigration. The Alberta energy innovation strategy and the Alberta Energy Research Institute's business plans are designed, I'm told, to position Alberta for the future in energy and environment so as to create value and build a strong Alberta economy.

I don't know where we would be going with all of this, Mr. Chairman, but certainly we look at hydrogen development from sources other than natural gas. We look at the source of that. Perhaps at some point it will be mostly coal, that source of hydrogen. We look at coal gasification in the coal seams. We look at ways of capturing and compressing CO₂ streams from exhaust from electricity-generating stations which are coal fired. There are any number of interesting projects that the Energy Research Institute can do and in some cases can continue to do without this consolidation, this big package idea that seems to be coming from the ministry of advanced education.

I know the ministry makes the comparisons of California and the San Jose area and some of the research clusters that go on there, but research and development will go on. Sometimes smaller may be better. It can be certainly in some cases more innovative.

I don't know whose research projects would get priority if we were to vote Bill 27 into law. Whose ideas would come first?

Which research would be funded, and which wouldn't be? How would those decisions be made? Some members have suggested that this may be politicizing the research and development community, and that would never happen here, hon. members, no, certainly not after one party has been in power for – is it 38 years or 39 years?

Mr. Mason: I don't know. I was in grade 11 when they got elected.

Mr. MacDonald: You were in grade 11 when they got elected. You're not that old. You must have been a very smart student. You must have combined a couple of grades in elementary.

Mr. Chairman, there are many projects that the Alberta Energy Research Institute could do. We know that there's a combination of resources in this province that "allows an integration strategy that maximizes synergies, protects the environment and aids in developing coal, oil sands, heavy oil, refining, petrochemicals and alternate energy resources." This is according to the annual report, the overview, a year in review of the Energy Research Institute. I mean, there's merit in what they want to do.

I look at the old ASRA, or whatever it was called, that initiated the research into the original oil sands extraction technology and the money that the province put into that, the taxpayers did, significant amounts of money, and some of the innovations or some of the processes were sold and adopted commercially. When we look at what return we're getting on those dollars now – I'd have to go back into the library and go back 25 years through Public Accounts to get an accurate figure – it's startling to think that we made all these investments through research and development, some of which were successful, some of which were applied commercially, and now we're getting 48 cents a barrel in royalties from some of those same facilities that got off the ground initially as a result of research and development that occurred here in this province, not sponsored but certainly supported by the government, and it worked.

It wasn't a big megafund. It wasn't a big mega endowment fund. It was a much smaller facility. I believe it was located at the corner of 17th Street and 101 Avenue, just in the east side of Edmonton, nestled between Edmonton and Sherwood Park. A lot of work went on out there. Of course, a lot of work went on in the field up in Fort McMurray. That's an example of a small research and development enterprise that certainly has worked out. Sometimes I think, Mr. Chairman, that we could be getting significantly more return on that investment. We've certainly built some big facilities up there as a result of that research and development that I don't think would have been built by the private sector. When we look at the Energy Research Institute, it's only one of many outfits that are part and parcel of this suggested legislation.

Now, another one is the Alberta Forestry Research Institute. The Alberta Forestry Research Institute certainly has a lot of work to do. Again, it's an unincorporated board. It was established under the Alberta Science and Research Authority Act. I'm not going to bore you, Mr. Chairman, with any of the other details of how it relates to other research institutes, but Alberta is Canada's fourth-largest manufacturer of forest products. Alberta's forest sector, as the government whip fully knows, contributes over $8 billion to the provincial economy – this was in 2007-08 – ranking third after the energy and agricultural sectors. Forestry is the primary industry in over 45 Alberta communities. Of those, 12 communities are deemed forestry dependent.

Now, the hon. minister of advanced education has indicated, again, in a briefing I had with the hon. minister and his officials, that there was widespread consultation regarding Bill 27. Perhaps the hon. Member for Peace River, the government whip, can confirm to the House in committee if any of the 45 Alberta communities where forestry is the primary industry were consulted regarding this consolidation into this one big megafund for R and D. Does Bill 27 suit the needs of the Alberta forestry industry?

Every member of this Assembly, I would suggest to you, Mr. Chairman, hopes that the forestry industry makes a quick recovery and that we get back to business as usual. We all recognize that many communities and many workers rely on this for their livelihood, and investment in research and development in the forestry industry will certainly help that economic recovery. Again, I'm concerned that the Alberta forestry institute will be treated as a little sister. I could be totally wrong, but I certainly hope that it would not be ignored. I'm not implying that little sisters are ignored in family discussions or family matters.

Now, as I understand it, two years ago close to $4 million was invested in the Alberta Forestry Research Institute strategically in the areas of the resource management centre and fibre conversion technologies. I would like to find out more details on the fibre conversion technologies, but in the time that I am permitted, I doubt if that's going to be possible.

Certainly, when we look at this institute and others, we've got to be confident that the good work that these institutes do is not going to be swallowed up in this megaconsolidation that the minister is proposing here.

At this point, Mr. Chairman, at this stage of the discussion at committee, I would ask that we adjourn debate. Thank you.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move that the committee now rise and report progress on Bill 27. I do believe we've actually reported the other two already.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 27.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 44

Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Amendment Act, 2009

[Adjourned debate May 13: Mr. Hancock]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. For clarification, we're on the amendment?

The Deputy Speaker: On the amendment.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. This is the amendment as proposed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood that, certainly, Bill 44, the Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Amendment Act, 2009, be not now read a second time because the bill has not been subject to sufficient consultation with teachers and school boards. I couldn't agree with the hon. member more.

I got up this morning, and I was reading in the newspaper where the chairperson of the Edmonton public school district 7 had suggested that this legislation certainly was not necessary or that the parental opt-out section was not necessary. Then you go around the province and you look at other newspapers and publications, and school officials are also indicating that if they had our jobs here this evening, they would support the hon. member's amendment to Bill 44. [interjection] They perhaps will.

I'm going to quote a gentleman from a recent edition of the St. Albert Gazette. I believe it's dated May 6 – it could be May 8 – and I apologize to the House and the members if I have the date wrong. The board chair – and this is why I think we have to support the hon. member's amendment – for the greater St. Albert Catholic schools, Mr. Dave Caron, states regarding Bill 44, "It's almost a sledgehammer approach to what I'm really not aware is a major problem." [interjection] That's very powerful, and if the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere doesn't think that is powerful enough, this is another quote from the same individual: "It's unreasonable to assume that teachers have to get bogged down every time they want to touch on a topic." This is, again, from the board chair for the greater St. Albert Catholic school system.

Now, we do know that the School Act already allows parents to opt out of religion classes and requires educators to respect a diversity of opinion. This is also according to Mr. Caron. He is also concerned about how teachers could be hauled before the Human Rights Commission. He also fears an end to impromptu classroom discussions, and this is the teacher chill that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre had talked about earlier, I believe, the chill in the classroom.

The Catholic chair is not the only individual that has concerns. The same concerns were echoed by Gerry Martins, board chair for the St. Albert protestant schools. Mr. Martins had this to say regarding Bill 44: "We have no reports that it's not working and that parents are dissatisfied." He's referring, Mr. Speaker, to the School Act. He goes on to say, "Why do we need legislation that now puts it into another bill, another arena?" Now, those are two individuals from St. Albert.

The Alberta Teachers' Association president, Frank Bruseker, called the opt-out section utterly unworkable for teachers and argued that it goes against Alberta Education's own guide, which states: "Studying controversial issues is important in preparing students to participate responsibly in a democratic and pluralistic society."

Now, those are some of the individuals that have expressed a great deal of concern, and this amendment would deal with that matter and would deal effectively with their concerns.

Ms Blakeman: I thought this was five minutes.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. You're absolutely right.

Now, I have one more point, Mr. Speaker, and this is stated by a St. Albert resident who heads the institute for sexual minority studies at the University of Alberta. That individual indicates that the opt-out clause represents a slip back into the 20th century at a time when the province should be moving beyond tolerance towards celebrating diversity, and that individual was Kris Wells.

Ms Blakeman: It's a guy.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes.

Now, those are comments from four individuals. I think those four individuals, if they were present here tonight, if they were members of this Assembly, would give consideration to this amendment because in light of the political firestorm that's surrounding this bill, I think this is the right thing to do. Let's have sufficient consultation with teachers and school boards as to precisely how this is going to work, what sort of resources, if this bill became law, would be needed by school boards across the province to try to implement this.

Mr. Mason: It's a firestorm.

Mr. MacDonald: It is a political firestorm.

Mr. Mason: And I'm just a kid playing with matches.

Mr. MacDonald: Okay. Well, I'm not going to go there, but I am going to urge all hon. members at this late hour to please consider this amendment. I think it's the right thing to do with a very, very poorly drafted bill.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. members wish to speak on the amendment? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll keep my comments to one specific point in the amendment. The amendment reads that this bill not be read because it "has not been subject to sufficient consultation with teachers and school boards." I just want to focus on one single issue concerning school boards, and it relates to what is in section 9 of the bill, which proposes adding further paragraphs, and there it contemplates notice to parent or guardian.

My concern, which I would like to get on the record – and maybe later on it can be addressed; I don't know – is that there is a genuine complication for schools to give the notice that is proposed here. How I would imagine that notice would need to be given to fulfill this particular paragraph of the act is that – and I'm quoting here largely from the bill – wherever there are "courses of study, educational programs or instructional materials, or instruction or exercises, prescribed under that Act," then notice has to be given to parents.

If you're thinking, say, of a school that goes from K to 9 and has going at any given time and in any given grade classes on world cultures which deal with religions, or perhaps it's a separate school board and there are religion classes, or perhaps there are issues or classes that one way or another deal with sexuality, I foresee a significant administrative complication with giving those notices and then in getting them back. I can see somebody in the school office, which is already a very busy place, having files and files of paper and trying to keep it all straight or perhaps having to build databases so that we have to notify parent X in grade 2 class B, and we have to notify parent Y in grade 4 class X, whatever. It just feels to me like we're creating a bit of an administrative nightmare here, and I don't believe that that sort of consultation has occurred with the schools or with the school boards.

Of course, if you multiply that by the hundreds and hundreds of schools in the province, this feels like we're building a very complicated bureaucratic system. Frankly, if the schools fail to do that, then there's apparently a genuine risk of being taken to the Human Rights Commission, and of course there are real costs which are going to take resources away from the classroom or else are going to require further spending by the government.

Mr. MacDonald: Schools with site-based budgets.

Dr. Taft: Yeah, some school boards have site-based budgets, so resources are going to have to go to this from somewhere else.

I don't believe – I could be corrected – there's been consultation with school boards on the practicalities of this bill. I'm just zeroing in, because it's late and people want to get going, on that one particular issue, but that alone makes me feel that this is a sensible amendment and that, gee, you know, maybe we should just let this bill even sit for the summer and that we can let some of these issues percolate and come back in the fall and maybe make some amendments that streamline it or adjust it or address some of these issues.

I will be supporting this amendment, Mr. Speaker, because I think it's right on the money. Thanks.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. member wish to speak on the amendment?

Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question.

[Motion on amendment to second reading of Bill 44 lost]

The Deputy Speaker: We are back on the bill now. Any hon. member wish to speak on the bill?

Seeing none, does the hon. minister wish to close debate?

Mr. Blackett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to close debate on second reading of Bill 44. Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 44 read a second time]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 11:09 p.m. to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. We give thanks for the bounty of our province, our land, our resources, and our people. We pledge ourselves to act as good stewards on behalf of all Albertans. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly a very special person, someone who was a former member of this Assembly for 11 years and as so did a terrific job serving his community and his province. He also did a fantastic job raising four terrific kids with my mother. I would ask my father, LeRoy Johnson, to please rise and receive the familiar warm welcome of the Assembly.

Introduction of Guests

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly some 58 enthusiastic grade 5 students from the Webber Academy school in my constituency of Calgary-West. This is a class that makes an annual visit to our Assembly, and I know it's a class that both the Member for Calgary-Foothills and myself are very proud of, a school we're very proud of in our constituency. They're accompanied today by teachers Mr. Ash, Mr. Mondaca, Ms Ferguson, and Mrs. Webber and by parent helper Mrs. McCurdy. I think they're seated in the public gallery. I would ask them all to rise and have members give them an enthusiastic welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislature a group of 26 people from the Edberg Countryside Christian school. There are 19 students in grades 8 and 9 and one teacher and six adult helpers. The teacher is Steve Penner, and the adults with him are Andy Friesen, Trish Friesen, Menno Siemens, Nelda Siemens, Kerry Baerg, and Rachel Baerg. I believe they're seated in the members' gallery. I'd ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly 17 visitors from the Radway school in my constituency. There are 13 grades 5 and 6 students accompanied by group leaders Darlene Kuzik and Sandra Moschansky and parent helpers Tammy Kuefler, Randy Prockiwi, and Corine Wilchiw. I'd ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two sets of introductions today. One is a group of people who are sitting in your gallery. There were I thought five but I maybe only see four people who, along with the other people I'll introduce, are here to celebrate Norwegian Independence Day, which I'll speak to in a few minutes. They are Mr. Wayne Nordstrom, the president of the Sons of Norway Solglyt Lodge and his wife, Joyce – if they wouldn't mind standing as I call their names and remain standing – Mr. Roger Bruce, treasurer of the Solglyt Lodge; Mr. Ivar Traa, the former honorary Norwegian consul general from Quebec, visiting from Montreal; and his son Olaf Traa of Armena. I was looking for Mr. Lloyd Reed, of the Ronning Lodge in Camrose, but I don't see him there. I'd ask that this Assembly give them the warm traditional welcome.

There are also a host of other people of Norwegian descent in both galleries today who are here to celebrate with us. I won't attempt to name them all, but I'm very pleased to welcome them all here. I should single out my wife, Mardell, though, because tomorrow is our 33rd anniversary. If they would all rise and receive the welcome, please.

The Speaker: Just how big a diamond does one get for the 33rd anniversary?

The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a real pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a very dedicated and inspiring public servant whose innovative work on Speak Out, Alberta's student engagement initiative, was acknowledged on Tuesday at the Institute of Public Administration of Canada, Edmonton region's recognition dinner. Jennifer Keller, director of student engagement at Alberta Education, is the winner of the first annual Institute of Public Administration of Canada, Edmonton region's new public servant award of excellence. This award recognizes Jennifer's tremendous attitude towards work and learning, her commitment to providing consistently excellent service beyond the scope of her usual role and responsibilities, and her drive towards improving the public service. I'd ask Jennifer Keller to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome and thank you from this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is, indeed, a pleasure for me to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly today the grade 9 class from l'école Beausejour in Plamondon. We have 16 students visiting together with their teachers, Claude Lamoureux and Étienne Vaillancourt. I had the opportunity to take a photo with them along with the Minister of Employment and Immigration. They are having a great day in Edmonton touring the Legislature Building. They are seated in the members' gallery. I would ask them to rise and accept the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly. We welcome you to Edmonton.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Webber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a very special person in my life who served the last 27 years of her life in the career of law enforcement, protecting both the citizens of Edmonton and later the citizens of greater Victoria on Vancouver Island. Her work as an undercover police officer had her tediously infiltrating organized crime gangs and crime rings, often putting her in very dangerous situations. This lady would pursue and harass and persecute those who preyed on the sick and the vulnerable. Often the most cherished in society, our children, would be the targets of these ruthless criminals. Most recently, up to her retirement, she supervised a highly specialized and passionate group of undercover police officers within the child abuse and youth section on the island. As a sergeant she was awarded the Lieutenant Governor's medal of valour for outstanding service on the assignment. Best of all is the fact that this lady just happens to be my sister. She is here today, somewhere up here under cover. I'm not too sure where she is, but I think she's with the students of Webber Academy. I'd ask that my sister, Barbara Webber, please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to talk about the commitment the government of Alberta has made to assist low-income seniors and persons with disabilities. I have received phone calls from constituents and people have stopped on the street to say thank you. It is very encouraging to have constituents – is this introductions? I don't have any guests to introduce.

The Speaker: Well, that is very unique. You are not on any other list that I have.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a very, very great pleasure for me to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a wonderful woman whom I've known for a number of years, Lorna Thomas. Lorna is a documentary filmmaker. She is joined here today by Kern Goretzky, who is a broadcaster for Access television. But, really, the star of today and of tomorrow is Ken Thomas, her brother. Ken is an activist, an athlete, and the subject of the documentary Catching My Breath. I'm going to do a private member's statement later describing Lorna's film about Ken and his participation in the Masters Games. But in the meantime, Ken would like me to remind all of you that May is Cerebral Palsy Awareness Month. I would like to congratulate them all on the broadcasting tomorrow, May 15, of Lorna's and Ken's documentary on Access television. I would ask you all to please rise or signal your acceptance of our welcome to the Alberta Legislative Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Norwegian Heritage

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I've already indicated, we have many people in the galleries today who are proud of their Norwegian heritage. We have actually the largest number of people of Norwegian descent in Canada living here in Alberta. My informal survey indicates, too, that we have 17 former and nine current MLAs who are of Norwegian descent. We're actually using this occasion today – we're a few days early – to celebrate the 17th of May, or syttende mai, to recognize the country of Norway and its independence from Sweden. Now, a former MLA from my area, Gordon Stromberg, who is actually of Swedish descent but lived at New Norway, was fond of saying that syttende mai was really a celebration by the Swedes for having finally gotten rid of the Norwegians. I would suggest that's a bit of revisionist history.

The real reason we are celebrating, though, is to recognize our ancestors, our people who came here, many of them at or just before the turn of the last century. In that sense the story of our ancestors is the same as many other groups from many other parts of the world. There is a lot of similarity. It may be a generalization, but these people all were probably from underprivileged classes in their own countries, and they came here on a quest for political and religious freedom, economic opportunity, and educational opportunity for their children.

These new Albertans may have had little in terms of worldly possessions, but they had great hopes, they had a strong and abiding faith, and they had a huge work ethic, and that stood them in good stead as they built their communities. They built schools; for example, Camrose Lutheran College, which is now the Augustana faculty of the University of Alberta. They built many communities, communities like Bergen, New Norway, Viking, Valhalla Centre, Camrose, which for a time was known as Oslo, Bardo, Vang, and Armena, which was originally Thordenskjold.

I just want to point out, if you'll indulge me, that the staffs on the outside of this door have the reeds that are bound together, and it's that binding together of all of these groups that makes Alberta strong.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. That's a very hard act to follow, but let me see if I can match that.

Catching My Breath

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Tomorrow is the first broadcast on Access television of Lorna Thomas's documentary about her brother Ken Thomas, entitled Catching my Breath. It's not easy to make a film, never mind to get it screened and then to nail a broadcaster, so I really want to celebrate Lorna's artistry and her tenacity in getting the documentary this far. It has already been nominated for two different cinema awards. Please watch for it at 8 o'clock tomorrow, Friday, the 15th of May, on Access television.

But, you know, Mr. Speaker, tenacity runs in the family. Ken has cerebral palsy, and his tenacity has carried him through a lifelong fight for inclusion and independence, for housing, for home care, for education. Not surprising to those who know him, he's also a winning wheelchair athlete and a fierce competitor on behalf of the Alberta and Canadian cerebral palsy sports associations in the '80s and '90s. The film shows his battle to participate in one more race being held in his hometown of Edmonton during the 2005 World Masters Games. Catching my Breath witnesses his heated e-mail correspondence to convince race organizers to let him race his way, which is racing backwards in his wheelchair, and his family, friends, and volunteers all get in on this. I'm not going to give away the outcome. You will have to watch and see for yourself.

I do want to extend my congratulations to Ken Thomas on his many victories on the track and in life and a big cheer to Lorna Thomas for her wonderful film. Many thanks to the support of her brother Bryan and family and for the great folks at Access television, including Kern Goretzky.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Okay, hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill, go.

Support for Seniors and Disabled Persons

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do rise today to talk about the commitment the government of Alberta has made to assist low-income seniors and persons with disabilities. I have received a number of phone calls, and people have even stopped me on the street in my constituency to say thank you. It is very encouraging to have these constituents make these comments.

They are thankful because the government has increased the maximum monthly benefit through the assured income for severely handicapped program and the funding to address the increase in client caseload. This year's AISH budget of $709 million allows us to increase the maximum monthly living allowance for AISH recipients by $100 per month to $1,188 per month.

I'd also like to highlight this government's ongoing commitment to low-income seniors through the Alberta seniors' benefit program, which supplements federal benefits by providing monthly cash benefits to low-income seniors. As a result of this budget presented to the Legislature, approximately 6,000 more seniors will be eligible for the Alberta seniors' benefit. In addition, those that qualify under this new income threshold will receive up to an additional $40 per month for a single senior and $60 a month for a couple.

I'm proud to be a part of this government that is making a difference in the lives of those who most need it. We define ourselves by how we treat the most vulnerable in our society, and by this definition I think each and every Albertan can be proud of what this government is accomplishing on their behalf.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Lois Hole Day

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta has been very fortunate to have had many fine citizens serving as the Queen's representative in our province. This morning in St. Albert we honoured one of Alberta's and St. Albert's finest, Her Honour the late Lois Hole, 15th Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta.

Lois Hole became well known in the late '50s and early '60s for her generosity to patrons of the family market garden on the edge of St. Albert. She would always add a few extra carrots to everyone's purchase. This was a defining characteristic of Lois. She always went that extra mile, adding those few extra carrots in whatever she did. In fact, she was even known to add a few extra gems when she read the annual Speech from the Throne.

This small market garden evolved into Hole's greenhouses, a business that attracted customers that came from far and wide not just for the produce but for the friendly gardening advice and the hospitality that was part of every visit.

Lois was very interested in education, children, and libraries, which led her to serve on local school boards, the Athabasca University Governing Council, and as chancellor of the University of Alberta. She was named to the Order of Canada in 1999.

We all know her very well as our 15th Lieutenant Governor. Lois was very special to all of St. Albert and all Albertans and, in fact, everyone that she met. As the queen of hugs Lois broke through traditional social barriers. As a woman of the earth Lois was always very down to earth in her approach to issues. Whether they were school board, civic, or political issues, she always took a very practical approach and she always took the high road.

The city of St. Albert has declared May 14 Lois Hole Day in recognition of Her Honour. A sculpture was unveiled this morning in St. Albert, which will initially stand in front of St. Albert Place until a suitable location is available in Lois Hole provincial park. The intention is that when the interpretive centre is constructed on Big Lake, the sculpture will be relocated at a suitable location near the interpretive centre. This sculpture by Barbara Paterson is a fitting tribute to a great lady who brought honour and grace to our province and to the city of St. Albert. In a few years everything will come together when the interpretative centre is completed in Lois Hole provincial park.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Surgery Reductions

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, no matter how the minister of health spins it, the Royal Alexandra hospital has cut surgery in response to pressure from this administration. Right now the issue, though, is not budgets; it's not dollars. It's about people, people who have a right to an honest, straight answer from the Premier. To the Premier: now that the administration has forced these cuts on the Royal Alex, how much longer will people be expected to wait for elective procedures like hip, knee, cataract, and hernia?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the board has received an additional $550 million in operating funds – that's about a 7.7 per cent increase to the Alberta Health Services Board – and they're now working with health care providers in the province to try and work within the money that was given to them. At the same time there was a substantial increase to the medical profession, a billion dollars over the next three years. As to the detail of the plan I'll ask the minister to respond.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. How can the Premier explain the rationale that reducing surgery will strengthen public health care and reduce wait times?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned in the House before, we have quite a challenge before us, and that is to protect a publicly funded health system for the next generation and the generation after that. At the rate of increases that we've seen in health care delivery – and we've been rather fortunate as a province because we did grow our wealth. But in this particular case when we see substantially declining revenues, this year we took money from all other departments and gave health the largest increase to try and maintain services through this province. At the end of the day it's a long-term vision to make sure that our grandchildren enjoy this system that we enjoy today.

Dr. Swann: Well, it's a puzzle to Albertans how we're going to cut efficiency and improve services in the long term. Again to the Premier: how long will Edmontonians expect the Royal Alex's operating rooms to be forced to perform at less than full capacity?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I think it's important to put on the record in this House that this particular government spends more per capita on health care than any other province in this country. This particular member has said on several occasions that we've got to spend our money smarter. I agree with him. We have to spend our money smarter. We can't continue to do what we've done in the past and expect to get different results. We have a health board. We have a new CEO, and he is taking the action that will be required to ensure that this system becomes more effective and more efficient and that we no longer are spending 23 per cent more per capita than every other province in this country.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, people and organizations, including the Alberta Medical Association, are saying that these cuts will spread to other hospitals and to other surgery. The fate of many services throughout the province is being called into question. This is unacceptable. To the Premier: will he tell Albertans what percentage reduction in surgery we'll be seeing at other hospitals, including the University of Alberta, the Peter Lougheed, the Foothills hospital in Calgary?

Mr. Liepert: I'd like to answer that question because I challenge the Leader of the Opposition to show me where the Alberta Medical Association has said what he just said they did. He can't prove that, Mr. Speaker. What I would suggest is that, yes, we've got the United Nurses of Alberta saying that, we have the two opposition parties saying that, and we have the odd doctor saying that, but when I meet with the Alberta Medical Association, they are committed to work with us to ensure that we make this system more effective and more efficient for all Albertans.

Dr. Swann: Well, again to the Premier, will the Premier tell Calgarians how much reduction in cancer surgery to expect in the coming year?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, again, this particular leader is trying to convey a message that is wrong. We have been very clear yesterday and will be as clear again today: there are no changes to cancer and urgent surgery that are required. We're talking about elective surgery. Until the hon. member will acknowledge the fact that he is — I won't say what he's doing, but until he starts to ensure that what he is saying is consistent with what is fact, then I'm not necessarily going to respond to his questions on that.

Dr. Swann: Well, again to the minister, then, despite what he and the Premier are saying, the fact is that Albertans are seeing surgery delayed further and even cancelled. People are leaving the province to get the service they expect. How can he claim to be improving the system when Albertans actually experience cuts?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, this particular leader is suggesting that somehow when we've added $550 million to the system, it's a cut. Now, yes, of course, it's not as much as they would want us to spend because today is a spending day. Tomorrow will be a savings day. We've got to be consistent on this side of the House if we want to have any credibility with Albertans.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Rural Hospitals

Dr. Swann: Well, back to the Premier on the issue of rural hospitals. Mr. Premier, this administration is planning to close specific rural hospitals, it's clear. The plan was approved in the former David Thompson health region. It falls into line with the Premier's Vision 2020. It means cuts for rural hospitals in Alberta. Beyond generalities the fate of specific small-town hospitals, however, is still a mystery to Albertans. To the Premier: why is the Premier so secretive and reluctant to tell Albertans what the plans are for rural hospitals in Alberta?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, the government's decision around the future of health care is very clear. We've released the Vision 2020 document, which lays it out very clearly. We have committed that if there are any changes to what current facilities in rural Alberta are providing, we will discuss that with the communities involved. For this leader to suggest that somehow he and a few of his friends think they've got some kind of secret document here is just ludicrous.

Dr. Swann: Well, there's nothing secret about it, Mr. Speaker. It was approved by the David Thompson health region. Will the minister then tell the people of Rimbey, Ponoka, Lacombe, Innisfail, Coronation, Consort, Sundre, Three Hills, and Hanna if their hospitals will be downgraded to urgent care? They know that's on the block. What is the plan, Mr. Minister?

Mr. Liepert: Where has this guy been for the last year and a half? There is no David Thompson health region anymore, Mr. Speaker. It's one of the reasons why we went to one health board, so we can deliver equitable health care across the province. It just shows how out of touch he is, using a document that is some year and a half old with a board that doesn't exist anymore.

Dr. Swann: Well, if this administration is already cutting access in the cities and now the plan to cut services in small towns, where are rural people supposed to get their services, Mr. Minister?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, rural people will get their services where they're getting them today and as long as we're providing that service, Mr. Speaker. This particular member is doing nothing but fearmongering in this particular Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Health System Restructuring

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Senior doctors say that cuts to operating rooms will affect cancer patients, and they say that Alberta Health Services is lying about it to Albertans. My question is to the Premier. Why is your government cutting cancer surgeries at the Royal Alex hospital and then denying it to the public?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we're not. Once again, he comes forward with misinformation. The minister yesterday answered the question very clearly, and he'll be able to respond in terms of the level of activity at Royal Alex and all other hospitals in Alberta.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, it's not enough that this government is cancelling hip and knee and cataract surgeries. Now cancer surgeries will be delayed, and people may die as a result. Again to the Premier: when will you accept responsibility for Albertans' health care and rein in that one-man wrecking crew you call a health minister?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, you know, Albertans have an opportunity here to judge. Do they believe the leaders of Alberta Health Services and this government, or do they believe that member and the Edmonton Journal? That's what we're talking about. There's an issue around credibility here, and I would suggest that Albertans consistently show that they happen to believe this government and not those two over there who do nothing but spread fear throughout this province.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, this Premier has unleashed a shock wave of unplanned change that is shaking the very foundations of our public health system, yet he did not seek nor did he receive a mandate from Albertans for these changes. Will the Premier agree to stop wrecking our public health care system until he goes to the people for a mandate? Run an election on cutting cancer surgeries, Mr. Premier. I dare you.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we were very clear during the campaign that our goal was to increase access, also to increase the quality of care, but most importantly to ensure that we preserve this publicly funded health care system for the future. I mean, if that's a challenge that I hear today in terms of the operation of government, I'll take them on any time. First of all, they wanted to shut down the oil sands. Then all of a sudden he reverses his position. He's going to keep it open. Even with a little slowdown and all of a sudden thousands of people out of work, now he's changing his position.

There would be more to come, but I used up my time.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

2:00 Capital Power Corporation

Mr. Benito: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Some of my constituents have questions about a recent move by EPCOR in the city of Edmonton to create a new publicly traded company called Capital Power. They are concerned that this move will affect the price they pay for their electricity and the services they receive. My questions today are for the Minister of Energy. Will this change in ownership affect the prices Edmontonians pay for electricity?

Mr. Knight: In a word, Mr. Speaker, no. EPCOR's retail and distribution services will remain the same. The change actually only affects EPCOR's electricity generation facilities. Electricity prices are determined here in a fair and open, competitive marketplace. The move will not impact electricity services, nor will it have any direct impact on the rates that these Albertans are paying for their power.

Mr. Benito: To the same minister: does the creation of this new publicly traded company change the way the services are regulated?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, no. The province continues to regulate the rates and service levels of EPCOR's distribution customers and the regulated rate retail customers. The creation of another publicly traded company in our competitive electricity market is good news for all Albertans.

Mr. Benito: Mr. Speaker, I've heard a number of concerns about electricity, the regulation, the role of power retailers and so on. Some might think that this latest move by EPCOR is further evidence that the electricity market is more focused on corporate interests than protecting consumers. What assurances can the minister provide that the market is fair and working as it should?

Mr. Knight: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, the answer to that is that all of the work done relative to the generating side and the distribution transmission of power in the province of Alberta is done under the scrutiny of the Market Surveillance Administrator. Private investment is responsible in the province for about 5,000 megawatts of new generation since 1998, an approximate value of over $5 billion invested in this province, money that was not paid for by the provincial taxpayers. We believe that the system is working.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Provincial Fiscal Policy

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The current recession has shown us that this government's fiscal policy is not sustainable. Whether this recession ends this year or in five years, we must use this experience as an opportunity to take a different path, yet this government has failed to develop either a long-term vision or the fiscal discipline to implement it. To the minister of finance. I'm going to try to get an answer to this question one more time. What specific plans does the minister have to reduce Alberta's reliance on funding core programs with nonrenewable resource revenues?

Ms Evans: I'm sorry; there were at least two points in that question that weren't clear. But if it's relative to the financing of government programs with nonrenewable resource revenues, we have certainly been privileged in Alberta to have such a healthy economy, such a largesse of fortune from nonrenewable resource revenues. We have been operating with the full knowledge and consent of Albertans in the expenditure of those types of revenues not only in the development of infrastructure that supports development but in the support of the families that have lived and worked in the oil and gas industry.

Mr. Taylor: Well, Mr. Speaker, I said I'd try.

The budget says that the government wants to encourage a culture of savings with Albertans because "it is timely to enhance Albertans' awareness of the importance of individual savings." Can the minister explain the hypocrisy in asking Albertans to be more prudent in their savings when this government is completely unwilling to do it itself?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, our track record on saving is second to none in any other part of the country. Today Albertans have the benefit of over $10,000 worth of assets on an individual basis if you divided up some 36 billion dollars and ascribed it to every man, woman, and child. Contrast that with Ontario. If they cashed in their chips in Ontario, they would owe $13,000 for every man, woman, and child. With the heritage fund, the sustainability fund, the assets we've accumulated in the endowment funds, we have shown that, clearly, we are savers.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the minister of health has already floated the idea of upping gasoline taxes by 5 cents a litre to bring in additional revenue, will the minister of finance clarify if this government is going to be increasing the gas tax or not?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, we have not entertained that type of discussion. We have certainly been looking at the challenges that lie ahead in this fiscal situation. We've seen some ideas and other things floated that might gain traction, but at this time I have no knowledge of that. What we are looking at, though, is a very serious situation when we have in fact used $4.7 billion from our sustainability fund. We take that seriously, and our intention at the time that we have recovery is to pay those dollars back.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Financial Literacy Education

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last night Junior Achievement of northern Alberta hosted its 29th annual Alberta business hall of fame gala here in Edmonton, a great way to celebrate the accomplishments of two of Alberta's finest entrepreneurs and the work of an outstanding community organization. To the Minister of Education: what are you doing to support the work of organizations like Junior Achievement to ensure that our students learn how to properly manage their money?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It was, indeed, an honour and a privilege to be at that banquet last night with the President of the Treasury Board to say thank you to Junior Achievement for the great work they do in our community, partnering with our schools to make sure that our children have an opportunity to develop entrepreneurial instincts and to learn financial literacy among other things. JA's economics of staying in school program is an excellent way for grade 9 students, for example, to think about their financial future and make sound financial investments. There were 70 teachers at that banquet last night, representing over 400 teachers across our school jurisdiction who partner with JA to make this possible for our students.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. Junior Achievement not only teaches students how best to manage their personal finances but the entrepreneurial skills needed to turn bright ideas into a successful business. What is the minister doing to ensure that Albertans have the skills that will keep our province a hot spot for entrepreneurship?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, it's important to recognize the role of Junior Achievement and the many members of Junior Achievement who are role models and mentors for students across our system. Every study shows that to encourage students to finish high school, one of the strongest incentives for students who are successful is that they have an adult in their life who has made a difference. That can't always be the teacher. Often it is, but it can't always be the teacher. Sometimes it can be someone from the business community – a role model, a mentor – who comes in to help the students find their passion, learn financial literacy, and improve. We have programs like CTS and others that help with financial literacy instruction, but we really have to thank Junior Achievement and the role models and mentors that go into our schools to help our children.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final supplementary to the same minister. The 2009 federal budget includes a plan to establish an independent task force to develop a national strategy on financial literacy. Is Alberta going to participate in this?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, this is a very important issue. Particularly in this downturn that we are experiencing across the country and around the world, many people have talked about the need for more education on financial literacy. We've got a very good head start on that with the program that Junior Achievement does in our schools and the partnership that it has created with our schools, and again we need to thank them for that. But we do need to do more. We're talking with the Ministry of Finance and Enterprise and some of our colleagues in government about how we can do financial literacy across the spectrum on an even broader scale.

Building Construction Review

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, this government has been reviewing the building codes since last summer. It's now a year later. An increasing number of people are losing their leaky, mouldy condos because the government is sluggish to improve Alberta's building codes. The industry knew three years ago that stucco in Alberta is a problem, and this government is still monitoring, still reviewing, still sitting on their hands. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs. The minister's review of building codes began last summer. When will the recommendations to improve the building codes be made public?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is right. We did have a consultation last summer. Through the fall and into the winter the report was assembled and was presented to me. At the present time we are reviewing it, and we hope to have recommendations coming forth in the very near future.

Mr. Hehr: Well, Mr. Speaker, that is good to hear, but it still doesn't reveal how many condo buildings this government has identified to date in Alberta that potentially have faulty stucco.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, what did take place is that we mostly looked at single-family dwellings. We did have consultations with individual families that reported to us that they had concerns. We examined those buildings. We do not have a number of how many buildings were or are affected. We have very good safety codes in Alberta. The discussions, that the hon. member mentioned, that were looking at the consultation very much talked about what needs to happen to ensure that we have good workmanship.

Mr. Hehr: Nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, many people in my constituency have had their condominiums built in the last number of years, built in the boom time, and they are really worried about what has happened. When will these new building codes be put into place to better protect homeowners from faulty construction?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, let me be very clear. There's not a suggestion from our department that there will be new building codes. We examined the quality of construction to ensure the protection of new homeowners. As I said before, we're reviewing the recommendations. We want to ensure that we do have safe and reliable homes for Albertans to live in. We're confident, as I said before, that the codes are appropriate, and we want to ensure that Albertans have the confidence in the construction industry that they should have.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Postsecondary Application System

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the school year gets closer to an end, caring parents and eager students are looking forward to higher education. Now is the time that tens of thousands of students are looking forward to applying to postsecondary education for the fall program. Alberta's province-wide postsecondary enrolment system should be up and running by now. My first question is to the hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology. Why is the new enrolment system taking so long to implement?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know that everybody is anxious to get ApplyAlberta working across the province. It was a huge undertaking, getting all 21 of our publicly funded postsecondary institutions online, with well over 140,000 students. There has been some pilot testing along with the students to test the usability of the system. The University of Lethbridge conducted those tests, and it did pass with flying colours. By the fall of this year all 21 postsecondary institutions will be expected to be using ApplyAlberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same hon. minister: with the ApplyAlberta system running, will the students from out of the province and out of the country wanting to apply be able to use the system? Will it be the same as it is for Alberta students?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Out of province students and international students will be able to use the ApplyAlberta system, and it will be the same as it is for Alberta students. The only difference is that those out of province or international students would have to provide their own transcripts from their high schools or the schools that they're coming from as they would have to do currently. We don't have access to those; therefore, we can't tie them into the system. Alberta students do not have to pay for high school transcripts that are applied for through the ApplyAlberta system. That's one of the benefits of the new system that we're putting forward. Most of the postsecondaries do charge a fee, but there is no fee for ApplyAlberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last supplementary question to the same hon. minister. I understand that the ApplyAlberta system is part of a larger initiative called Campus Alberta. Is the framework for Campus Alberta now complete, or is there more work, as ApplyAlberta, to complete it?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A couple of years ago we brought forward into this Legislature the roles and responsibilities framework document, which put the six-sectoral model in place, which is unique to North America, I would say, and we should be very, very proud of that system. It's working very, very well. As we roll out the other pieces of it, one piece being the APAS system and another piece will be the Campus Alberta management of that system, we will bring all of these pieces together, have that support system as a single source of support so that as new projects come along, whether that be space utilization or other things that we can do, we have one place we can go to.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Personal Care Aides

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The vast majority of the care that is provided in Alberta's continuing care facilities is through personal care assistants. Personal care assistants are not a regulated profession, so there's no requirement for continuing competencies or standard level of training. To the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports: is the minister concerned that the majority of the care provided in Alberta's continuing care facilities is through an unregulated profession?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, my ministry is responsible for overseeing accommodation standards in long-term care and supportive living facilities. Accommodation standards include housekeeping, meal quality, and resident safety. To help ensure that Albertans receive quality continuing care accommodation services, my ministry staff monitor operators for compliance to these standards. If the member would like to talk specifically about qualifications for personal care aides or any other health professionals, she should talk to my colleague the Minister of Health and Wellness.

Ms Pastoor: Whoops. That was perhaps a little bit too prepared.

My next question is to the same minister. Do you have any plans or discussions to advocate that PCAs be included in the Health Professions Act and give seniors and their families the peace of mind that they're receiving a standard level of care? I think that would be your discussion with the minister of health.

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, I'm familiar with personal care aides. There are courses in our colleges that people take in order to be certified as a personal care aide. I've experienced many good people who are part of this profession, and it's a conversation that I would consider having with the Minister of Health and Wellness later on.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, I'm just going to upstage you here, and I'll ask the minister himself. Can the minister answer if there are any plans or discussions that PCAs would come under the Health Professions Act now or in the future? It's very important because in the future we're going to be relying more and more on PCAs to deliver that care.

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, the member actually raises a very good issue. Through the department a couple of years ago we had brought forward some certification standards that we felt would enhance the quality of care that was being provided. As we all know, in the last few years we've had a real challenge relative to finding workforce, especially in facilities like long-term care. So what we've done is worked with the long-term care providers to relax those guidelines. Now, that doesn't mean to say that the quality isn't the same. Long-term care providers were having difficulty not only attracting people but keeping them and training them. We are working with Alberta Health Services to see how we can make this a certified profession, but we have to work with all of the players in the system.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater.

Rural Health Care Facilities

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. An Alberta Health Services document outlines this government's plans to downgrade 10 hospitals in the former David Thompson health region. Now, this is the heartland of rural Alberta, where people can't risk driving hours to a major medical centre. To the minister of health: what other plans to downgrade and shut down health facilities in other areas of the province are you not telling the public about?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, there's little doubt this is just fearmongering on behalf of these members and a few of their friends. There is no plan in place to do anything of the sort, what the member has just referred to. What I think she is talking about, I suspect, is the same question that came from the Leader of the Opposition. I don't have the document in front of me, but it sounds to me like it's a couple-of-years-old document by a no longer operating health region.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, this plan was repeated in an Alberta Health Services newsletter that was published a month and a half ago, and it outlines the closure of long-term care facilities in Trochu, Bentley, and Breton. Now, this government promised to build up long-term care in the province. Instead, it appears they plan to take long-term care beds out of the communities where they're needed. The minister says that this is an old plan. Will he stand up here today and commit that every facility listed on the DTHR capital plan will be maintained?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, what I will commit to is what I said earlier in the House, that if there are changes planned for any facilities in a community, we would ensure that we have discussions with that community. There are no plans that I'm aware of that follow the path that this particular member is talking about.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, by downgrading 10 hospitals and closing five other facilities, this government would be making health care for over 100,000 rural Albertans less accessible. To review, that's just the one region we know about. Now, there's no doubt this government has similar plans in other rural regions of the province. Rural communities at this point feel as though they're being left out of the process. When exactly will the minister consult rural Albertans about what health care facilities they need in their regions as opposed to dictating what facilities he thinks they can do without?

Mr. Liepert: Well, I think I beat the member to the question because that was my exact answer to her last question. I said that we would be consulting with the communities. If she would just quit yipping away there, as she has become accustomed to, Mr. Speaker, she could listen to the answer and she might have heard when I answered her previous question.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Rural Physician Recruitment

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm advised by one of my constituency's five local doctor recruitment committees that until recently the province provided incentive funding or a relocation allowance to attract doctors to rural areas of the province. This is a valuable program, and they are concerned that it may have been eliminated. My questions are all to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Can he tell my constituents: has this program recently been eliminated for rural doctor recruitment?

Mr. Liepert: Finally, we have a question from a rural member who actually has real concerns about rural health care, not some wannabe rural member from across the way. Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure what funding the hon. member is referring to, but we continue to provide dollars through our trilateral agreement with the Alberta Medical Association through the rural, remote, and northern program to provide financial incentives to physicians to practise in rural and remote regions.

But I do want to add that physicians do not work for government. Physicians make their own decisions as to where they want to locate. I think it's very important for communities to do whatever they can to ensure that they make it easy for physicians to locate in that community.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have another community working very hard to keep their emergency room services open, and they are concerned that we will pay a doctor from another town significantly more money to do an ER locum, yet we will not offer that same amount of money to incent a local doctor to cover extra on calls at the local emergency room. Can the minister tell us: is that accurate? If so, why do we do that?

Mr. Liepert: Well, I don't believe it is, Mr. Speaker, because my understanding of how the locum service works is that locums are paid equivalent to what a permanent physician in that community would be paid. Now, where the differential may come in is that, obviously, if it's a locum, it's someone from outside the community, so there would be expenses that that individual would incur, and that would obviously have to be paid for.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Some rural hospitals have empty wings or pods, areas we maintain yet are sitting empty. We are also as communities trying to provide incentives to get doctors to come and practise in our rural areas. My constituents would like to ask the minister: why do we not provide these empty hospital spaces at a reduced rate or no rate to general practitioners to house their clinics in our hospitals that are underutilized?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, finally a constructive suggestion on how we start to fix situations in rural Alberta. I think that has some merit. Each one would have to be looked at on its own by Alberta Health Services, but I would suggest that if it makes sense, we should be looking at that. At the same time, I can guarantee you that when we do that, we'll hear all kinds of screaming over here for closing down rural hospitals because they'll be exaggerating exactly what we're doing.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Strathcona.

All-terrain Vehicles in Parks and Protected Areas

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Tomorrow is the official kickoff of the 2009 camping season. To date, due to the lack of proactive government policy and enforcement a small minority of irresponsible off-roaders have caused millions of dollars of damage in the Ghost-Waiparous, Indian Graves, and most recently in the McLean Creek area. Government inaction has simply moved the destruction around. Due to the increased camping registration costs in a growing number of campgrounds, more families will be driven to wilderness random camping, where much of this destruction has taken place. To the Solicitor General: how far ranging will the RCMP and sheriff support be for SRD and conservation officers this weekend?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lindsay: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity asks an excellent question, certainly a question that's a concern of many Albertans. Based on, you know, what the hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development said yesterday, he's going to have, I believe, over 280 officers out patrolling those areas. I can assure this member that our sheriffs and the RCMP will also be patrolling the surrounding roads to ensure that proper vehicle registrations are in place and will be monitoring the liquor control act as well. We believe we have a good handle on it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. That's reassuring. For the last number of years conservation officers have been stretched very thin. This added support will be very much appreciated. I'm hoping that this increased presence will reach out into the wilderness areas to offer 24-hour security responsiveness.

Again to the Solicitor General: will the vehicles of irresponsible off-roaders be seized if they have caused destruction in undesignated trail areas?

Mr. Lindsay: What I can say, Mr. Speaker, is that we will utilize the legislation that's in place to the best of our ability to ensure that these wilderness areas are not abused.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I think a tough-on-crime approach in the rural areas, particularly wilderness, would be welcomed.

Again to the Solicitor General. Yesterday the Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation indicated that there would be a temporary liquor ban in only eight of Alberta's hundreds of parks and protected areas. Given that the overconsumption of alcohol is at the heart of most campground confrontations, will you be reviewing the liquor policy and enforcement support in campgrounds?

Mr. Lindsay: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, I believe the minister responsible for parks indicated the steps that we're taking this weekend, quite similar to the steps that we took last year. They have created the results that we were expecting. We're not looking at or considering a total ban of alcoholic beverages in Alberta's parks.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Crime Prevention Initiatives

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We've all seen and heard media reports suggesting that crime in Alberta is on the rise. Gangs seem to operate without any fear of getting caught, and every day brings new stories of more crime and violence in our cities and towns. This government has introduced a number of initiatives to help prevent and reduce crime so Albertans feel safe, but crime prevention also requires a partnership between Albertans, police, and government. My questions are to the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security. Can the minister tell us what his ministry is doing to help prevent and reduce crime in our province?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This hon. member knows that this government does have a plan and is taking action to ensure that Albertans are safe in their homes and communities. We've added more police officers. We will continue to do that. More probation officers, as well, will monitor those that are out on release. We've launched a new program that targets chronic, repeat offenders. We have four new integrated gang enforcement teams that will be taking to the streets of our cities and province over the next month or so. We also have a province-wide gang reduction strategy that's been developed. A new grant program is providing $60 million to support programs in our communities. We are moving ahead to ensure that our communities are safe.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what can individual Albertans do to help share the responsibility for preventing crime in their own neighbourhoods?

Mr. Lindsay: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, crime prevention works best when it's a community effort involving residents, police, and all levels of government. When a neighbourhood experiences a problem, often all it takes to fix it is one person to get involved. Then others come on board, and great things happen. We encourage all citizens in our province to get involved by being vigilant and to take action to reduce crime.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: where can Albertans get the information that they need to help them become effective partners in crime prevention?

Mr. Lindsay: Mr. Speaker, we have a number of programs and educational materials available for Albertans who want to take an active role in preventing crime in their communities. The ministry's website offers practical information on how to organize community crime prevention activities and tips on how Albertans can protect themselves, their neighbourhoods, and their workplaces. Crime Prevention Week ends this Saturday, but crime is a reality all year long. I encourage all Albertans to continue working with their neighbours and the police to prevent crime in their communities.

Bitumen Royalty in Kind Program

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Royalties on oil sands are very price sensitive, and when prices are low, royalties almost disappear. When those royalties are paid to the government in the form of bitumen instead of cash, then when prices are low, the flow of royalty in kind bitumen will slow to a trickle. My question is to the Minister of Energy. How will this government establish local upgrading through the bitumen royalty in kind program when royalties can drop to such a low level?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, again, the questions that the hon. member opposite raises are questions that are all predicated on a snapshot in time that's about three months long. The vision of this government relative to this resource for the people of the province of Alberta spans 40 or 50 years, and the amount of time that we're talking about relative to this resource and the wealth creation that it will provide for Albertans is a much longer time horizon than a three-month snapshot from someone's public document.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I am just trying to get at the policy issue here when we have such wild swings in the production. A good bitumen royalty in kind program, I think we agree, could be a useful tool for stimulating Alberta-based upgrading, but it is a very unstable tool. Right now it's very low. Last year it was very high. Who knows, next year? Again to the Minister of Energy: what measures will the government introduce to ensure greater stability in bitumen supply for local royalty in kind upgrading?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, again, I think that if we go back and take a look at what the provincial government did relative to this business kind of in the mid-90s, took a look at a specific framework, a generic regime to allow for the investment and increase in production of bitumen for the future of the province of Alberta, no one – no one – in those days would have expected the tremendous amount of investment and the tremendous uptake relative to production of bitumen in the province of Alberta. Right now we do about 1.2 million barrels a day, and that will increase over time.

Dr. Taft: Okay, Mr. Speaker. Well, reaching the government's objective of having 70 per cent of bitumen upgraded in Alberta is going to be tough. It's a stretch target. With so much upgrader and pipeline construction surging along in the U.S., it's going to take some kind of dramatic step from this government very soon, or it's going to be too late, and we'll end up, in the Premier's words, shipping topsoil from the farm. Back to the same minister: is this government prepared to consider a regulatory requirement on producers to upgrade a per cent of bitumen here in the province?

Mr. Knight: Well, I'll tell you, Mr. Speaker, the situation, of course, with respect to bitumen royalty in kind and the royalty structure that we have in place is that bitumen royalty in kind, as the member opposite very well knows, is the subject of ongoing debate relative to how it will perform for us in the long term. What I will say is that the government of Alberta and this government under the current administration will not overcommit supplies to any project for the province of Alberta or the producers.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Marketing of Agricultural Products

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are currently some advertising campaigns, especially in local newspapers, rural newspapers, and some on air. These campaigns are being paid for by producer associations, and they are showing opposition to some government initiatives related to agriculture. My question to the minister of agriculture: what do you plan to do to address this?

Mr. Groeneveld: Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate that the focus is on the organization itself rather than on a successful future for the producers in the industry. It is also unfortunate that producers' money is being spent on this when it should be supporting initiatives that create a better future and growing industry for producers. We are not focusing on the negative. We are focusing on new initiatives, research, new increased market access in order to create a more profitable and competitive future for the industry.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Some of these organizations are actually saying that making check-offs refundable might be the end of these organizations' existence. My question to the same minister: what are you doing to prevent this from happening?

Mr. Groeneveld: Mr. Speaker, nine other commissions operate very successfully in Alberta. They are able to represent their producers very effectively. For these commissions their membership base is engaged, and the commission is responsive, and it's positive. You know, there's a saying that comes to mind: if you think you can or if you think you can't, you're probably right. These commissions will survive and they will prosper if they turn their attention to ensuring the future of the industry and their producers.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Prins: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and Mr. Minister as well. My final question to the same minister: are there really new markets and opportunities for Alberta's livestock and meat industry around this world?

Mr. Groeneveld: Mr. Speaker, there certainly are. We've recently opened new markets offshore, and we're trying to get a foothold into the European market. We're now in Hong Kong and we're in Taiwan, which are great strides into the Asian market. If we can provide these markets with what they want, we will be more competitive in the global marketplace and have more customers, which will put more money, certainly, into the pockets of Alberta producers. For producers ALMA is working. The strategy is working. It will continue to work and it will continue to prosper as long as we work together.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Groundwater Monitoring

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The point of collecting data is to understand an issue and then make decisions to either benefit or to reduce harm. The province's own report states that the government can't make good decisions on groundwater and aquifers because it doesn't have enough data. In other words, it risks making bad decisions. My questions are to the Minister of Environment. How can the minister know what the acceptable amount of water that can be diverted from aquifers is if he doesn't have the data?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, the member is absolutely correct. That's precisely the reason why we've identified learning more about the connection between groundwater and surface water. How the groundwater aquifers contribute to surface water, and vice versa, is critical as we go forward and deal with what will inevitably become a decision that needs to be made at some point in the future. I can assure the member that that point is not today. We don't have the huge stress that we anticipate is going to come in the future. At this point in time there is plenty of time for us to gather the information, have that information in place so that we can make those appropriate decisions in the future.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Back to the same minister: why does the government consider damage to aquifers not relevant in situations where there are no other identified users in the immediate vicinity?

Mr. Renner: I don't think I agree with the premise of the question. I'm not so sure where the member gets the idea that the government considers damage to aquifers not to be relevant. Frankly, Mr. Speaker, that's exactly the reason why we engage in the work that we do. Damage to anything, clearly, is relevant. It's a question of determining what is the impact that we have on anything related to the environment, be it aquifers or be it surface areas, and determining what is an appropriate level of impact and what is the point at which that impact becomes something that we need to address.

Ms Blakeman: Well, I'll send the minister the quote. It's from government documents.

Final question to the same minister: is the sparse population in northern Alberta the reason why the government accepts high levels of risk in groundwater contamination when approving water allocations?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, there are various types of groundwater that we deal with. There are water allocations in northern Alberta that are dealing with saline sources of water, deep well sources. There are sources of water where water is in contact with bitumen, where there are some natural contaminants that are located within the water, and then there are groundwater sources that would be more traditionally associated with what you would encounter in southern Alberta. All of those various sources and realities have to be taken into consideration when making decisions with respect to allocation of groundwater.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that was 102 questions and responses today. In a few seconds from now we'll continue the Routine.

Jennifer Keller

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased and honoured to rise today to recognize a young, passionate, and dedicated member of Alberta's public service. She was introduced to us earlier today by the hon. Minister of Education for her role as director of the Speak Out Alberta student engagement initiative, to engage Alberta's youth in an ongoing province-wide forum on education, and as the recipient of an IPAC award.

Over the last 50 years, Mr. Speaker, IPAC, or the Institute of Public Administration of Canada, has been advancing excellence in public service through learning, networking, and celebrating the successes of public service. Jennifer Keller received the Edmonton IPAC new public servant award of excellence to recognize and showcase her significant achievement in driving and succeeding in fulfilling a challenging government mandate. The inspiration for the Speak Out initiative came from the February 2008 throne speech, when government announced it would strengthen Alberta's education system by establishing a youth advisory committee to provide a fresh and youthful perspective on learning.

This past year Jennifer has successfully engaged youth from across the province, and on May 4, 2009, the Minister's Student Advisory Council on Education was officially formed. Over the past eight months Jennifer has criss-crossed the province, visiting 37 high schools to engage students and gather their opinions and ideas on education. Asking for students' input and taking action on their ideas will move us toward creating more actively engaged citizens and a stronger education system in our province. One student's mother wrote:

My son returned home last night after having the "best time of his life" at the conference. He is super motivated, and unbelievably positive about what he learned and experienced. Thank you for hosting an excellent conference for the kids.

As a parent of two children, Mr. Speaker, it's pretty amazing to have your teen motivated to get involved and motivated for success. This speaks to the outstanding work that Jennifer Keller and her team have done on behalf of Alberta students. Thank you, Jennifer, for your dedication.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Rural Communities

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Rural Albertans have the largest representation in this government, including the Premier, since the Socred days. They rightfully expect that their issues will be heard. But ever since the election this government has abandoned their needs in so many areas. They've attacked small producers and favoured large corporate farmers. They've abandoned hog farmers, who are in crisis. They've broken many promises about rural health care. The Peace region is just one example of a region that is being ignored by this government, with broken promises about building a new regional hospital in Grande Prairie while in Beaverlodge the hospital may be closed altogether. This region is not alone.

Small family-owned farms are struggling to compete against the large corporate farms that are favoured by this government. Producer associations that support small farmers are being weakened while this government spends public money to lobby against the Canadian Wheat Board. Most recently, the hog producers have been left stranded by this government's lack of a plan for H1N1 flu. It isn't enough for this government to attend photo ops and say that everything is just fine. The farmers need assistance and a plan, and they need it now. What about the people of Rimbey, Lacombe, Ponoka, Coronation, Consort, Sundre, Three Hills, Hanna, Innisfail, Castor, Beaverlodge, Athabasca, and others whose hospitals are now under threat of closure?

The social and human impact of this lack of commitment to the very rural communities who helped elect this government has yet to be determined. So much of our provincial pride stems from our rural identity, and we celebrate it every day. It's time for this government to stop ignoring the needs of Alberta rural communities and start fulfilling long-awaited promises.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, do you have a tabling?

Ms Notley: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of two e-mails from Albertans concerned about the amendments to the human rights act in Bill 44. Lyndia Peters is concerned about the bill's effect on teachers and the public education system. Zoya Svitkina is concerned that postsecondary institutions will have to require students who did not learn about evolution at the secondary level to take remedial science classes before entering the regular program.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others?

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk Assistant: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Groeneveld, Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, responses to questions raised by Dr. Taft, hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview; Ms Notley, hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona; and Mr. Webber, hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills on May 4, 2009, Department of Agriculture and Rural Development main estimates debate.

Mr. Goudreau, Minister of Employment and Immigration, pursuant to the Architects Act Alberta Association of Architects annual report 2008; pursuant to the Engineering, Geological and Geophysical Professions Act Association of Professional Engineers, Geologists and Geophysicists of Alberta annual report 2008.

Hon. members, before we go further, might we revert briefly to the Introduction of Guests?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

Introduction of Guests (continued)

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions. It indeed gives me pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly a very renowned builder, an entrepreneur, and a very consistent supporter to the community of Edmonton and Alberta. Greg Christenson and his mother are in the members' gallery. He has been the past president of the Edmonton Chamber of Commerce. He's with the Home Builders' Association. If I could ask the two to rise to receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, I am also honoured to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly a very upstanding and exceptionally united, solid Alberta family. If I could please ask the guests to rise when I introduce them. Firstly, I would like to introduce the mayor of Lac La Biche county, His Worship Peter Kyrilchuk, who is visiting the Legislature today with his wife, Alma, and their three daughters and one son; the Shultz family from Lac La Biche – if you could remain standing – the Lane family from Airdrie; and the Vandervalk family from Claresholm. If we could give them the traditional warm welcome for all coming from different parts of Alberta to unite here today to watch this Assembly.

Thank you.

Orders of the Day Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Cao in the chair]

The Chair: The chair would like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 37Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2009

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's my pleasure to rise today in Committee of the Whole to present Bill 37, the Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2009. The Alberta Corporate Tax Act is generally amended every year, and it's to ensure that Alberta maintains a fair, equitable, and competitive tax regime. The support received at second reading of this bill is greatly appreciated, but there are some points raised by the opposition that I would like to discuss.

A concern was raised that we are amending a section to legitimize claims in the oil and gas industry for companies that were breaking the law because of the industry's misinterpretation of the program legislation. I'd like to point out that the transactions in question were not structured to avoid the Alberta royalty tax program parameters. Exempting these transactions from their restricted resource property rules ensures that companies that met the policy objectives of the program and the spirit and the intent of the program when they drilled a new well will indeed receive the benefits under the program of which they truly are deserving. The industry's general misinterpretation of the existing legislation did not preclude individual companies from receiving program benefits when the policy objectives of the program were met.

With regard to the scientific research and experimental development tax credit, the proposed legislation does not change any parameters of the program introduced last year. Proposed amendments will correct several minor technical errors in the legislation and clarify administrative rules for the program. For example, the assessment of the tax credit or the credit is generally later than the assessment of other taxes payable. Therefore, the proposed legislation provides a separate reassessment period for the credit.

I encourage all members of this House to give their full support to Bill 37. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the comments we just heard from the Member for Athabasca-Redwater. They are useful to us in addressing this bill, which is a bill that we're inclined to support.

I wanted to comment in particular on one thrust of the bill. As far as we can tell, most of this bill is pretty much housekeeping. The bill does address one issue around the Alberta scientific research and experimental development tax credit, and I just want to comment generally on that and the need to continue to do things that stimulate the development of research and development in this province. That's a full range of initiatives, including things like a tax credit, granting, providing direct support through universities and colleges and the Alberta Research Council and those kinds of organizations. So I am heartened. I think we're all heartened to see that any issues that could be causing friction or confusion around a tax credit for research and development are being addressed.

I, just by coincidence, was reading earlier this afternoon a report indicating that the level of research and development investment in Alberta is actually relatively low by some measures compared to most other provinces. In the long term – if I've said it once, I've said it a hundred times – decades from now Alberta's future is not going to be built on oil and gas or agriculture or the existing pillars of the economy. It'll be built on something new, and we don't know what that is, but we can be certain that whatever it is, it's going to depend on terrific education and on an ongoing, stable, generous, and far-sighted support for research and development.

This bill is just one little, tiny part of filling in that picture. But, you know, the little bits add up to a large whole, and I am hoping that this little bit in this bill will contribute to stability and prosperity for Alberta's future by supporting further research and development.

With those comments, Mr. Chairman, I'll take my seat. I think that's probably it from our caucus.

The Chair: Does any other hon. member wish to speak on Bill 37? Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question.

[The clauses of Bill 37 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 38Tourism Levy Amendment Act, 2009

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Well thank you, Mr. Chairman. A moment ago when I was commenting on the previous bill, I spoke about the need for a stable, reliable, far-sighted, generous strategy in relation to research and development. Exactly that same approach needs to apply to the development of tourism. This bill and the bill that we just voted on are both components of building the longer term prosperity of this province and securing Alberta's future from the day when our fossil fuel wealth diminishes. I think we need to be moving aggressively on that.

I want to just reflect briefly, Mr. Chairman, on the history of tourism development in this province. You know, an easy place to begin would be the establishment of Banff national park, when the Canadian Pacific Railway first went through Banff and discovered the hot springs there. I suppose that in many ways Banff remains the keystone of Alberta's tourism development, but shortly after that – and we're talking well over a hundred years ago – you had Banff, then you had Jasper, and you had the rise of things like the Calgary Stampede, which, as everybody knows, is the greatest outdoor show on earth, I think it's called.

Those kinds of initiatives provided a foundation for Alberta to build a remarkable tourism sector. In the 1970s and through the 1980s this provincial government understood that and worked hard to advance the interests of tourism, understanding that it was a diversifying of our economy, that it was a relatively green industry, that it was interesting, that it didn't just provide services to people who visited here but that all of us benefited. So we saw a number of initiatives under tourism in the '70s and '80s because tourism was a priority for this government.

That included the development of attractions like the Tyrrell museum in Drumheller, the Remington Carriage Centre in Cardston, and the Reynolds-Alberta Museum in Wetaskiwin and support for a whole host of festivals, a lot of which arose in the late '70s and the very early '80s, things like the original Fringe festival in Edmonton, which now has taken its place as one of the largest festivals of its kind in the world, the Folk Festival in Edmonton, Jazz City, and so on. All of those were part of a movement that the government of the day led in enhancing tourism. It was part of a larger strategy to make tourism a central part, and probably it culminated with the Olympics in Calgary in 1988, which, of course, was an enormous international success.

The reason I bring that up is that through the '90s and until just a very, very few years ago this government seemed to almost abandon tourism. There was confusion around the mandate for tourism. The tourism initiative got passed back and forth around industry groups and the government. It wasn't clear who was in charge. There were issues around how it would be financed. In the last couple of years there seems to have been some progress on that issue, and I think this particular bill, Bill 38, will help in consolidating some of that progress and help in addressing some of the confusion.

I want to drive home the point here to all members of this government that tourism, like research and development and like so many other things, needs government to take a far-sighted, predictable, stable leadership role. Government needs to work with partners, needs to be there year after year after year. There's no point in spending vast amounts of money over two or three years and then abandoning it.

I hope this government understands that tourism can grow significantly for Alberta and that it's a good employer, that it's a good cornerstone for this province's economy, that it's something that can be enjoyed by people who live here as well as by visitors, and I really hope – really hope – that this government sticks to it when it comes to a far-sighted tourism strategy. I think this bill is part of that thinking, so we will support this bill.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other hon. member wish to speak on the bill?

Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question on Bill 38, Tourism Levy Amendment Act, 2009.

[The clauses of Bill 38 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Tobacco Tax Amendment Act, 2009

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's my pleasure to rise today in Committee of the Whole to present Bill 39, the Tobacco Tax Amendment Act, 2009.

This bill implements the tobacco tax rate increase announced in Budget 2009. Support received at second reading of the bill is greatly appreciated, Mr. Chairman, but there were some points raised by the Member for Calgary-Currie and other opposition members that I would like to address.

The government believes that the tax increase strikes a balance between encouraging individuals to quit smoking while not increasing illicit activity, black-market tobacco smuggling, and theft. Even with the increases in tobacco tax rates Alberta's tobacco tax is comparable to the other western provinces after factoring in other provincial taxes such as a provincial sales tax.

The opposition asked: how much of the tobacco tax is used for the tobacco reduction program? The collection of tobacco taxes is an important component of the Alberta tobacco reduction strategy as higher tobacco prices continue to be one of the most effective ways of encouraging individuals to quit using tobacco. Tobacco tax revenues are not dedicated. Rather, they flow into the general revenue fund. In general, the government is opposed to dedicating revenues to specific initiatives primarily because it limits the government's ability to direct dollars to its highest priorities.

Proposed amendments to the act will also strengthen the tobacco tax framework and support the province's safe communities initiative. The measures outlined in Bill 39 will help curb illegal tobacco trade by increasing the economic consequences of doing so. By way of background, the act imposes a tax on tobacco purchased in Alberta. It also prohibits various activities and requires industry participants to register in order to import or sell tobacco in Alberta at the wholesale level.

Concerns were also raised regarding the severity of illicit tobacco and the extent of smuggling in Alberta. It is estimated that Alberta could be losing tobacco tax revenue of $12 million a year to illicit trade. Illicit tobacco trade has a number of negative impacts. Not only does it erode the tax base; it also puts an additional burden on the health care system by dealing with the impacts of tobacco which has not met health standards. In addition, the proceeds of illegal tobacco could help fund gangs and crime.

The Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission has reported a steady increase in the presence and seizures of various types of illicit tobacco, especially black-market cigarettes. The equivalent of one carton of cigarettes sells on the street for $30 to $40 compared to the retail price of $75 to $90 for legitimate cigarettes. These black-market cigarettes do not have the Health Canada warnings.

The opposition also wanted to know how Alberta compares to other jurisdictions. Other jurisdictions in Canada are facing similar and even worse problems with illicit tobacco trade. The RCMP released a report last year on this problem, noting that linkages between the illicit tobacco market and organized crime have increased exponentially over the last six years. While tobacco is a legal substance that is consumed . . . a growing number [of Canadians] are purchasing contraband tobacco without realizing the negative impact it is having on Canadian communities and Canada's economic integrity and also on their health since the contraband tobacco may not meet tobacco standards.

Amendments are needed as the current Tobacco Tax Act does not effectively prohibit unwanted activity, and prosecutions are becoming difficult. To help ensure that tax is properly paid and that only legitimate participants are involved in the industry, the amendments strengthen prohibitions and clarify their application. The act also broadens seizure powers and adds the ability to seize joint bank accounts in proportion to ownership for those in default.

The opposition Member for Edmonton-Strathcona also raised concerns around seizure and the ability to search without warrants. Officers in this province have long been able to seize vehicles without warrant where the officer believed that the vehicle was used in contravention of the act. Officers have always been restricted by the test that they must believe on reasonable and probable grounds that a contravention of the act is being or has been committed. The wording was also brought up as a concern. The term "reasonable and probable grounds" is generally considered equivalent to "reasonable grounds," and the Supreme Court of Canada has said that it is essentially the same thing. The change of wording does not affect the bill, and personal residences are still exempt from search and seizure without warrant.

This bill also adds a temporary seizure power for items that are used in contravention of the act within the previous 60 days. Temporary seizure provisions can act as an additional tool to fight those conducting illegal tobacco trade. Since these measures are targeting illegal activity, legitimate participants should not be affected by these measures. Since seizure provisions vary among provinces, it is difficult to draw a direct comparison. However, many jurisdictions have some form of seizure power.

For example, Saskatchewan's legislation contains the ability to seize a vehicle if it contains a certain amount of unmarked tobacco. Although the offences are different in each jurisdiction and it is difficult to draw a direct comparison, Alberta is on the low end for the amount of the associated fine. To bring Alberta in line with other jurisdictions, fines are doubled and civil penalties tripled for unlawful possession or sale of tobacco on which tax has not been paid.

A late-filing penalty for tax collectors will be imposed. Changes also enhance requirements for tax collectors and make reporting obligations more transparent.

In summary, these proposed amendments raise the tobacco tax rates, clarify prohibitions, and make enforcement more effective and more efficient. In addition, providing more serious penalties will act as a greater deterrent to prohibit these activities.

I encourage all members of the House to give their full support to Bill 39. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I just want to briefly raise an issue of potential hypocrisy or conflict of interest with regard to the raising of the tax on tobacco. While I support raising this tax, a sin tax, which can then be potentially plowed back into general revenue and eventually make its way proactively to support health issues, I would like to know if we still have over a $600 million investment in tobacco in our heritage trust fund. If we do, I would consider that, particularly at this time, a very unethical investment.

I would also express concerns that given the government cutbacks or failure to fully fund expansion of the Tom Baker cancer centre in Calgary or sufficiently support the Cross cancer centre in Edmonton, the funds that have been received through this tobacco raise go specifically to fight the diseases which tobacco caused in the first place. Rather than having that money disappear into the black hole of general revenue, I would like to see this money specifically targeted.

If there is a member here who can answer the question as to whether we are still investing in tobacco companies, this is very important because down the line there's talk about us joining other provinces in pursuing tobacco companies for the health effects that they have caused on our citizenry. I would look forward to having that matter cleared up. I know it has been the case in previous years. Is it still the case?

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other hon. members? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I notice we have some guests in the gallery, and I'll just take a moment to explain what we're doing here. I have no idea if they're tobacco users or not, but just for your information we are in the final minutes of debating and then voting on a bill that will make tobacco use more expensive. It's actually quite a far-reaching bill. It isn't just about adding a few cents to the cost of tobacco. It addresses issues around search and seizure, law enforcement. It's quite a significant bill.

I appreciated the comments from the Member for Lethbridge-West, who spoke about the need to balance raising the price without making it so high that we encourage growth in the black market for tobacco. I know that has been a problem, particularly in Ontario and Quebec, where there are easier channels of smuggling across the border to the United States because of the placement of some Indian reserves, but it is an issue we have to watch here as well. We can only put it so high before we create a black market that becomes, actually, a bigger problem than the one we're solving. That's an important point.

I would like to see this government in its initiatives to reduce tobacco use also rely on other strategies. At some point I'd be interested to hear more about what those are. I know there have been restrictions on how tobacco can be marketed. I'd like the government to continue to tighten that up.

I'm particularly concerned that the one segment of society that is seeing a significant growth in tobacco use, particularly smoking tobacco, is young women. It's a bit of a mystery to me, except I think the marketers have got it into the culture of young women that it's cool, it's fashionable to smoke.

Ms Blakeman: Thin.

Dr. Taft: Yeah. Maybe it goes with being thin. I'm not sure. That's what the Member for Edmonton-Centre is suggesting, that smoking can be an appetite suppressant. I'm sure it's linked to many things. I think we as a government need to particularly target those people because if they start when they're 16, 17, 18, they're going to be smoking for decades and decades and then becoming very ill.

That leads to my next point, which would be that I'd love to see a more systematic and routine reporting from this government on the costs to the health care system of tobacco use. I'm sure those would be calculated if the minister of health moves forward with taking tobacco companies to court, which I hope he does. It would be terrific in the government's reporting somewhere to try to count year by year how much money the health care system is having to spend because of tobacco use and report that publicly, and we could see whether it's rising or falling.

I also noted in here, of course, the specific mention of cigars. Probably about four years ago, after one significant increase in tobacco taxes, there was a very aggressive lobby – this was when the former Premier was in place – to single out cigars and to reduce the cost of cigars. I found myself wondering: why are we doing this? Is there some kind of cigar industry in Alberta that I don't know about? In fact, it was the result of some very serious lobbying by former senior officials of this government. I don't need to name names, but a couple of them were well paid here. I think that was one of the issues that led to the creation of the lobbyist registry, which we're still waiting to see implemented. It's a kind of interesting history around tobacco and lobbyists in Alberta.

Finally, my last comment is around the strategies of the tobacco industry to shift tobacco use from smoking to smokeless tobacco, which I think is nefarious. I would encourage this government to continue to work very hard to address all forms of tobacco use: chewing tobacco, snuff, all forms of smokeless tobacco as well as cigars and cigarettes. Tobacco is one of those few legal substances that no matter how you use it, even if you use it according to directions, it's bad for your health.

I'm happy to support this bill. I think our caucus will get behind it. The Member for Calgary-Varsity and I have both raised a handful of issues. We understand that this is an ongoing strategy, and for each move we make as a government, the tobacco industry makes a countermove. But I think we are as an Assembly sending a clear message that, you know, ideally, tobacco use would be eliminated in Alberta. Let's hope that day comes along, and we can look back and think of this particular moment as one of the steps toward that day.

Thanks, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Do any other hon. members wish to join the debate?

Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question on Bill 39, Tobacco Tax Amendment Act, 2009.

[The clauses of Bill 39 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2009

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered relating to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Vandermeer: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I will speak only briefly to Bill 40 in Committee of the Whole on behalf of the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill. As he stated during debate on second reading, the proposed amendments will accomplish two objectives. First, they will ensure that Alberta's dividend tax credit is administered in accordance with existing Alberta government policy and that the status quo is maintained in light of changes to the gross-up factor applicable under the federal Income Tax Act on dividend income. If we did not adjust the formulae in our tax act, we would in effect be double-taxing Albertans on the portion of their dividend income. Secondly, they will align the eligibility for tuition credits to reflect the way our tuition credits for foreign students are currently administered. This is required under the Alberta-Canada tax collection agreement. The objective of the change is to ensure that one does not have to obtain 90 per cent plus of one's income from sources in Canada in order to claim the tuition credit.

Mr. Chairman, I urge all hon. members to support the movement of Bill 40 on to the third reading stage. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. Again, I will keep my comments brief here. As the MLA whose constituency includes the University of Alberta I just want to make particular note that in this bill it does address the eligibility for the Alberta tuition credit. To the extent that that makes it easier and more affordable for students to attend postsecondary education, I think that's a terrific idea.

I noticed that this particular amendment removes the requirement that a student has to obtain 90 per cent or more of their income from sources in Canada in order to claim the tuition credit. That raises a question for me, which perhaps the sponsoring member or somebody on the government side may be able to answer when we get to third reading: will that have any effect on foreign students studying here in Alberta? Will that make it easier for them, or does it have any impact at all? Or possibly does it have any impact on students from Alberta studying internationally?

I have no idea about the answer to those questions, Mr. Chairman. But because the University of Alberta and I'm sure the University of Calgary and others are wanting to become bigger players on the global stage and attract students from around the world to add to their mix, particularly at the graduate level, I'd be curious to know if this particular amendment will have any impact whatsoever on that. If it does have an impact, I certainly hope it will be a favourable one because I think attracting more students from abroad to Alberta and encouraging more Alberta students to study abroad would be a great thing.

Thanks, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Does any other hon. member wish to speak on the bill?

Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question on Bill 40, Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2009.

[The clauses of Bill 40 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I move that the committee now rise and report bills 37, 38, 39, and 40.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Allred: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bills: Bill 37, Bill 38, Bill 39, and Bill 40.

The Deputy Speaker: Would those hon. members concurring in the report please say aye?

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed, please say no. So ordered.

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 47 Appropriation Act, 2009

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to move third reading of Bill 47, the Appropriation Act, 2009.

Mr. Speaker, at this time I would like to acknowledge and thank the Minister of Finance and Enterprise and her department – her deputy Mr. Bhatia; in fact, all of the deputies – Mr. Ramotar in Treasury Board; and certainly Mr. Brian Manning, chief of deputies, and all the CFOs that were very, very diligent in putting together this budget and the thousands of hours that were spent by our staff in compiling the document that allows us to deliver the programs and the services that are important to all Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, today around the world governments of all stripes are trying to balance the issues of the situation that we're in right now, and in many ways they take different methods to try and achieve the same result. I think it's quite obvious that there is no absolute right or wrong when it comes to determining what a budget can be. I think the opposition has done a very good job of pointing out some of the priority differences they may have, and certainly internally the government spends a lot of time working on the different policies and struggling to find the balances in the spending. So I would want to also thank the House for the work they've put into it. I think the people of Alberta are being well served by the budget that's being voted on today, and I want to thank all hon. members for their participation in the budget debate.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Those were very nice opening remarks from the President of the Treasury Board. I have a number of issues that I want to raise. Unfortunately, I was trying to get on the list yesterday for Committee of the Whole, but thank you for the opportunity to speak in third reading to Bill 47, which is, in essence, the budget bill, the Appropriation Act, 2009.

We had a new structure for debating the main estimates, which is what the budget is, but that's the parliamentary language for it, this year that I really didn't like. I didn't make any secret of that. I think, having gone through it, that some of the concerns that I had and my colleagues had did not manifest themselves. But two of my major concerns going in did, and they've resulted in my having to try and raise questions now.

One of the two biggest issues for me was the doubling up of the committees. As an opposition member that's a critic for two portfolios and who has a very active and interested and engaged constituency, I couldn't be in two places at one time, yet I needed to be in two places at one time. I really find that the structure of running two full committees each night for the budget debates was an impossibility for me, and it placed an impossible burden on me and my colleagues in the Official Opposition. That actually manifested itself triply because we're assigned to various policy field committees and are expected to be there and were there.

We also often had to be in a different room as the Official Opposition critic for a given portfolio. Then we have our own constituent concerns. They want us to raise questions. So I will raise some of the questions I wasn't able to just because I couldn't get into both committees at the same time, and I think that's a real flaw.

I understand that the government has got 72 members and they're going to get what they want, but it doesn't make them a government for life. I didn't know whether to be amused or horrified when I heard one of the rural members talking the other day in the Electoral Boundaries Commission debate about the tyranny of the majority over a minority. I mean, that's exactly what our lives are every day, and this was a perfect example of it. The government doesn't want to spend time in budget debate, and they made darn sure that I couldn't either. Frankly, I resent that because there was work I wanted to do, and I couldn't do it.

The second issue around that process was the allocation of how much time was spent. Essentially, the opposition most nights could manage to get about 80 minutes of debate on a given portfolio, a given ministry. At times we were debating hundreds of millions of dollars a minute. I mean, it's an impossibility. I don't think it's transparent, I don't think it's accountable, and I don't think it serves the citizens of the province well.

If the government is proud of its budget and they believe that it will stand up to scrutiny, then let it stand up to scrutiny and do what the other provinces do, which in one case is to allow unlimited debate on a bill until all questions are asked and everybody is ready to move on. In some of the other provinces with a committee structure for examining estimates there's a 20-hour limit of time that can be spent on a given ministry. That's in Quebec. I think in B.C. it's 10 to 15 hours. In Ontario it's 10 hours per ministry. We got one hour and a total of three hours if you include the third-party time and the time for the government members.

I don't understand in a lot of cases what the government members were doing. There were a few that clearly had prepared and were asking reasonable questions and others that were reading from a script. I just don't understand why we were doing that. I just don't understand that. If the government believes that it'll stand up to scrutiny, it should let it stand up to scrutiny, and we should take as much time as we need.

So the areas where I had questions. The Minister of Justice: I understand that there's been a request for a review of all programs under legal aid and that there are some statutory requirements of what Legal Aid must look after; you know, difficult custody battles and children that have been taken as wards of the state and various things that they're required to look after under family legal aid. My concern is: what is the expectation for what will happen to those programs that aren't statutorily covered if the money runs out or all the time has been allocated based on those statutory requirements? What is supposed to happen to the rest of those programs?

As I'm sure the minister is aware, coming from a vigorous law practice in this province, women more than men, I would argue, need that assistance. They have in some ways two barriers that they face when trying to seek a remedy in the court, and one is monetary. Often those that are involved in that system are working on a wage basis, and to appear in court or to be required to appear in court repeatedly to answer and argue, for example, a custody battle is a financial hardship aside from the money that they actually may have to be paying out for a lawyer. So assistance through a legal aid program is particularly essential to them.

I find – it certainly was the truth in the past, and I'm not seeing that much of a difference now – that a way that some male partners can continue to control and abuse female partners is by bringing them back into court over and over and over again. There's a need there for access to justice in more than one way. I was really concerned about what would happen to that program under this review and what the end expectations are for it.

I'm switching departments now to Housing and Urban Affairs. I'd like to get a clear answer of how the money for homelessness really has been reallocated. There was money taken out of programs and then a new hundred million dollar program set up, but that's over 10 years, so that's $10 million a year, which for what needs to happen there and the expectations of those programs is, frankly, a drop in the bucket. This is not to say – where's the President of the Treasury Board? – that I'm insisting that more money be spent, but I think we need to be really careful on that one.

I'm still trying to figure it out, and I'm not a stupid person. It looks to me like there was a shell game of money coming out of a couple of areas around homelessness and affordable housing and a blurring of lines there. We just managed to get to the point where everybody did understand the difference between that, and now it appears to me that money has come out of both homelessness and housing funds and has been shifted to this 10-year homelessness program. So I would like some real clarification about that.

I've also tried to seek answers through some of the other large agencies that are working with this, and they're not able to help clarify for me. Often the opposition is the last one to get the answers on things, so I've developed various end routes to try and go around and get information through organizations that are working in the community. They didn't really have a clear enough answer given to them to be able to provide it to me. So I'm just wondering what exactly is going on there. I think it would be better if we actually knew. Even if it's bad news, I'd rather know it because then I'd know what I'm dealing with, and maybe I could go looking for another way of working with this. Right now it looks like it's $100 million, but I don't think it is. I'd like to know how that's affecting the programs that the money came out of.

Under Children and Youth Services, which I think ran at the same time as Housing and Urban Affairs, I'm wondering what our numbers are on violence against women and their children. The province stopped publishing the turn-away rates from the shelters several years ago because, frankly, the rates just kept doubling and doubling and doubling. I think at the point that we hit the 11,000 turn-away rate, they stopped publishing the numbers. Let me clarify. That doesn't mean that women didn't get some kind of assistance from the shelters. They did, and the shelters try very hard to do that. But it's not the same as actually getting admitted into a shelter and having the immediate on-site and consistent assistance and programming and counselling and support that's available.

If you're a woman that arrives at a shelter without children in this day and age, the chances are pretty good that you're going to be turned away. You'll probably never get a spot. Obviously, the priority is to women and children, and you can understand that, but it does mean that we've left a whole bunch of women out there without support. They can get access to an outreach program, but you know it's not immediate. It's not there 24 hours a day. It's not in the next room. It makes a difference because we end up with a lot of women returning to a violent situation because they don't have the financial resources to just walk away from it and go somewhere else. So I'm interested in what the turn-away numbers are.

I'm also interested in how the funding is working out for support for the shelters at this time. There was an increase, but I continue to hear out of that sector and other sectors that there continues to be a wage gap between what they're able to offer their employees and equivalent positions in government social services. The vacancy rate, I think, is almost directly correlated to that wage gap.

Further to that, I would like a clear undertaking by the government and by the minister to explain what the government expects or how the government expects to benefit from moving to a request for proposal system in the social services sector. I mean, in a number of areas there is only one provider or possibly one provider large enough to do it and maybe one small provider.

Expecting these, again, in many cases volunteer-based not-for-profits to jump through the hoops of writing up an RFP and then being, according to criteria – and some of the stuff I'm seeing is making my hair stand on end, you know, where if somebody gets a contract to look after troubled youth and the youth don't improve under their care, the organization won't be paid. Well, I don't know how that's an incentive for an organization to continue to take in troubled youth when it looks like they could do a whole bunch of work and not get paid for it. This drive, this unholy belief that business is best and the free marketplace always produces the most amazing results just is not true when we are trying to work with having a large number of the NGO sector provide services that the government doesn't wish to. They're getting a heck of a deal. I have serious reservations about where this is going to take us.

Unfortunately, in my opinion, the social service sector is too good. I think there are times when they should step aside and say: "No, we're not taking that person on our doorstep. No, we're not keeping this program. No, we're not taking one more whatever because the government is not paying adequately for it." But we have people there who, in their hearts, cannot leave that person on the step and will continue to run a program and take more people in even when they're not getting adequate contractual compensation from the government.

There's something happening behind the scenes there that I think is sort of creeping along at the government's instigation, and I don't like the direction it's going. Let's hear the government's reasoning behind it.

For Employment and Immigration I'm interested in what has been the advancement on the cultural workers strategy that was released under the then Minister of Employment and Immigration, the previous Member for Lethbridge-West. There was an entire study done on cultural workers, and as far as I know, nothing has ever been done with it. I'm interested in where that is in the process. Hopefully, I'm wrong that nothing further has been done with it. Seeing that we now have Conservative cousins provincially and federally, I would have expected that there could have been a better working relationship between the province and the feds on strategies around cultural workers.

It costs considerably less to create a job in the cultural sector than it does in the manufacturing sector or, for example, in the oil and gas sector or nonrenewable resource sector. As we are looking to try and encourage employment of all of our population, you know, the knowledge-based creative sector is where we're supposed to be going, yet I don't see the government investing in that sector at all. So I'm looking for information about how much investment has happened there. What has been the follow-up to that particular policy that was produced by this government specifically around cultural workers?

Just by the by, it would be very helpful if we could actually get the minister of community services to protect our cultural workers that are working in large touring houses from getting the short end of the contractual deal when we have related reselling practices that are going on that end up ripping off our cultural workers – our stagehands, our union members, our artists, backup musicians, and people like that – whose original contract is based on the original ticket price times the number of seats that are in a house.

When we end up with a reselling practice, none of our people in Alberta get a piece of that action. It all goes, you know, in a nanosecond across the Internet waves and ends up landing in the pocket of a shareholder in the States. I would prefer that that kind of practice doesn't go on, because I think the ticket buyers don't appreciate it, but if the government is satisfied to let those reselling practices go on, then, for heaven's sake, could we not get some of that money staying here in Alberta and going to our own cultural workers?

I should mention that in my constituency office I've had a number of concerns raised about delisting of the chiropractic services. It's a significant number of letters that I've had. I haven't brought them all in and tabled them, but suffice it to say that I've certainly had them, and people are very concerned about the delisting of that service.

Of course, I raised the issue of gender reassignment surgery and the cuts there. The specific question I have around that is: when is the cut to the tariff in effect? It doesn't appear in any official document, but the minister did talk about it in media conferences, and then there was a series of questions in question period. The question that I'm now being asked and I can't answer, so I'd appreciate the minister's help, is: when was this in effect? Is this in effect as of the 1st of April? I realize that he said he would cover the people that were already in the pipeline, who had already started on hormone therapy or who were scheduled for surgery and were far enough along. But for those otherwise did this come into effect on the 1st, and where would I find the delisting of the tariff or the change in the tariff that the physicians would have normally billed for? I just need something on paper, if I can find that somewhere. The minister can send me a note about where I'd locate it. That would be very helpful.

I'm not doing too badly here. I'm going to run out of time again. I'm sorry, Mr. Speaker, that for the rest of the issues that I was looking to raise here, I don't think I'm going to have time. But I do want to reiterate again my frustration around the lack of time that we spend on the budget debates, particularly opposition getting an opportunity. I didn't have any spare time in any of the debates I was involved in this year.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, on Bill 47.

Ms Notley: Thank you. I'm pleased to be able to rise to join debate at third reading of Bill 47. I believe this is the first time I've actually had a chance to rise on this particular bill. I want to start, of course, by talking a little bit about the process through which we went to discuss the individual ministry budgets. I, too, having had the opportunity in a previous life to work in politics in a different jurisdiction, was, as I've mentioned in the past, quite taken aback at the amount of time that opposition is given to engage in any sort of debate or, more to the point, fact-finding with respect to the budget decisions being made by government. I was intimately involved in estimate debates that went on until the opposition was finished asking questions. That was basically an understanding of how the system was supposed to work, how people, whether they were actually opposition members or government members, were going to keep the government accountable on behalf of taxpayers for these huge amounts of dollars that were being spent.

It was quite a shocker to discover that, instead, with ministries, many of which were multibillion dollar ministries, we would get in our party between 20 and 40 minutes for each ministry to inquire into the spending decisions, the priorities that went into making these decisions to spend billions and billions of dollars. I mean, it's quite ludicrous, obviously. You know, it really puts the system in question in a lot of different ways.

Nonetheless, that's what we dealt with, so we gamely attempted to embark upon that process and do so in a way that would disclose even the remotest amount of information on behalf of taxpayers. Personally, I had the opportunity to participate in estimate debates for 10 different ministries, typically one night after the next night after the next night, of course with the House sitting during the day between those estimate debates. So, not surprisingly, it was often a challenge to be able to really prepare in a way that would allow taxpayers to get the benefit of any sort of comprehensive oversight of the way in which their dollars are being spent. Nonetheless, we are here today.

We're talking about globally a budget that would allocate spending of $36.4 billion with expected revenues of $31.7 billion, such that in this budget we are forecasting a deficit of roughly $4.7 billion, although I don't think it's actually $4.7 billion because I do believe that, again, the government brought in an unfinished budget, which is what this budget is, in that they were unable to find a quarter billion dollars of revenue and/or cuts. So it's just sort of this extra deficit floating around unallocated and undescribed to taxpayers, you know, a quarter billion dollars we couldn't quite make work. It seems to me to be a little bit of an unfinished job. That's sort of the overall plan that we're dealing with.

The government, to its credit, does project down the road in terms of what they're expecting. They indicated to us that they were also expecting a $2 billion shortfall next year, so somewhere that money had to be found unless, you know, the magical oil revenue fairies started unexpectedly showering the government with happy revenues that they had otherwise had nothing to do with creating.

Anyway, we're in this position where we're looking at this budget. Now, as our party has said in the past, the notion of a deficit periodically where it is needed to carry a province through a period of economic shortfall is not something that we're necessarily going to say is wrong. We've said this in the past, that there is wise, good economic sense to periodically relying on a deficit in the bad times and then figuring out how to increase your revenue and balance things out in the good times. As I've said before, of course, we think the government grossly mismanaged the good times, but that was discussed in a different bill, so I won't get into that.

In this one I just want to talk a little bit about some of the cuts that we observed or some of the priority in spending decisions that, at least, I observed in the course of engaging in estimates debate and some of the decisions for which we have some great concern. I will start with the ministry of health. This is a ministry where we have a tendency to hear that the sky is falling and, for that reason, big changes need to happen. About every three or four years the government rolls out another dramatic set of changes, and they attempt to actually, in a way, scare Albertans into accepting significantly less and into accepting very different models of health care and significantly lower service levels.

There's nibbling around the edges in that respect, and we see that in this budget. We see the start of service delisting – and I have no doubt that it is merely a start – and again delisting, that was not really saving them a whole bunch of money, but it was about starting a process, in our view. So we saw delisting of chiropractic services and gender reassignment surgery. Of course, we delist chiropractic services, a significant preventative benefit, ultimately a long-term savings, I would suspect, to the health care system. And gender reassignment surgery, well, that's just a group that is, you know, easy to pick on. We can do that, and then we can create a precedent of delisting services so that, you know, when we move on more next year, people are kind of used to it. This, of course, all flows from previous directions given to government through previous reports. In particular, I believe, it was the Mazankowski report.

We also have a new drug plan, which, say what you will – we may be doing things more equitably; we may be giving seniors more choice – whatever the language is, at the end of the day the new drug plan this year will save government $20 million, and it's structured in a way to save it more money every year, so it is about one thing and one thing only, which is transferring services away from seniors and making them pay more for what they currently receive. The numbers don't lie, and that's what it's about. You can dress it up in any other kind of spin, but that's what we're doing. We're saving money on the backs of seniors.

We talked already, of course, at long length about the plans the government has with respect to long-term care. We don't really have the time to get into that much more than we already have except to say that that particular method of saving money is not a good one.

The only other thing in health care that I'd like to talk a little bit more about is the issue of mental health services. I believe that our caucus was able to share with Albertans some pretty reliable information about the state of mental health care services in this province. I believe that we were able to show that it is pretty much a disaster, that we are not providing services at anywhere near the rate that's happening in other provinces, that we have significant regional disparities, not just rural to urban regional disparities but also Calgary to Edmonton regional disparities. Even in places like Edmonton, that, theoretically, has more resources, we still have nowhere near the support that we should have. This is a huge issue because there are so many cost implications and social and community and health implications from failing to treat mental illness in the way that it should be. We're just not doing a good job in this province.

I was very disappointed to hear, you know, the government suggest that they believe they're doing a good job because of a community anticrime strategy, which is truly just a drop in the bucket. Were this government to actually be taking this issue seriously, there would be a much more significant investment in that area. It's something that is needed because we have a real problem. We have a homelessness plan, which the government claims it's going to spend billions of dollars on – but I'll get to that in a second – and that's just a small example of the cost to the system of untreated mental illness. So I'm quite disappointed to see that, really, there's nothing of any significance in our budget to address that.

Another area that we have some concerns about I'll just mention quickly. Children and family services essentially maintained its budget in order to stay at a maintenance level after you factor in population increase and inflation. I have said before and I will say again that I don't believe this government is coming anywhere near to doing what it needs to do on the issue of child care. I know there's been a lot of recent talk about: oh, look at all these new spaces we've created. I don't believe that the spaces they're talking about are truly high quality or affordable. The affordability of those spaces remains a very significant problem, and of course many of the spaces the government is counting are not really dealing with the primary crisis area, which is full-time care for preschool children. Of course, the numbers that the ministry has been talking about include a whole bunch of other categories that are not that issue. At the end of the day we're at about half the number of child care spaces for that age group that we should be at, and we are nowhere near providing the number of affordable child care spaces that we should be. So I was disappointed to see that we're not really moving forward on that key priority area.

I also mentioned briefly that I think there's a lot of work to be done with respect to the environment in terms of monitoring, in terms of controlling, inspecting, and ensuring that our environmental resources are protected. Earlier today there was some reference to the fact that we have a long way to go before our groundwater resources become a matter of concern, but I actually don't believe that that's the case. I believe we have studies that show that we could well be at the tipping point in the lower Athabasca region, yet we have nowhere near the resources out there to properly address water quality, groundwater, and surface water usage in that area. I think we are letting Albertans and certainly the people of that area down by not doing a better job there.

Finally, I would like to talk just briefly about the homelessness strategy. Government spent a heck of a lot of time and probably a little bit of money giving itself a lot of credit for adopting a homelessness strategy earlier this spring, but the reality is that there is not one new dollar put into that program. Every dollar going into the homelessness strategy is coming out of other resources which are required to meet the broad spectrum of housing needs in the province. So we take a hundred million dollars out of affordable housing. Affordable housing is designed to assist those people who are at risk, who are housed now but are housed in a tentative way. They need low-income housing, and if they don't have low-income housing, their access to housing becomes vulnerable. We're taking money out of that program to put it into the homelessness program.

Now, you know, I understand that the homelessness program needs money, but at the expense of the next level of the overall program that we need to put into place to ensure that all Albertans have high-quality housing? That makes no sense. More to the point, what is frustrating to us is to see the government attempt to characterize their action in this regard as something that it's not. If they choose to prioritize homelessness at the expense of other types of housing, that's fine, but be up front and honest about the fact that that's what you're doing.

The Deputy Speaker: We have five minutes for question and comment. The hon. member.

Ms Notley: I'd like to adjourn debate.

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 34 Drug Program Act

[Adjourned debate May 6: Dr. Swann]

The Deputy Speaker: Any hon. member wish to speak on the bill?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I move second reading of Bill 34.

The Deputy Speaker: It has been moved, hon. minister. You spoke to it when you moved it according to our documents.

We continue on the debate. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you. It's a pleasure to be able to rise to speak to this bill in second reading. This is a bill with which we have some concerns. There are some parts of the bill which actually make some sense. Let me start out that way for a change.

You know, the bill does move from policy to regulation certain practices with respect to managing our drug programs. Of course, not a big surprise, moving stuff from policy into a legislative framework is always a good thing. As well, it is very possible that this bill, from what I understand, could provide some foundational support for moving towards bulk pharmaceutical buying initiatives. Of course, that too is a good thing and is something that our caucus has been promoting for years and years and maybe even decades at this point.

The concern that we have about the bill, though – and I will try to be relatively brief at this point – is the role that it plays with respect to operating as a vehicle for the recently announced seniors' pharmaceutical plan. As I mentioned ever so briefly in the discussion about Bill 47, this is a pharmaceutical plan with which we have some great concern. We have heard a lot about how this plan ensures equity and availability and choice. As I said, I can't remember the exact communications buzzwords that were used in this particular press release, but as I've said before, I think the key measure on this as a starting point is that this plan saves the government money. It is anticipated that this plan will save the government $20 million this year, and it is anticipated that with demographic projections being what they are in terms of both the number of seniors and their projected income levels, this plan will ultimately save the government a great deal more than $20 million a year. It's not really about improving things for seniors; it's about saving money.

How are we going about saving money? Well, no question, one part of the plan and the part of the plan that they'd hoped would receive the most attention and distract people from the other components of it is that low-income seniors are now paying fewer if not, in fact, in some cases no fees at all with respect to receiving prescriptions. There's no question that that's important. I will say that during the last election, when I was out knocking on doors, seniors would talk to me over and over and over again about how much money they were being asked to spend on their prescriptions. The system that was in place with the $25 per prescription was very significant and really a problem. Now we've seen that go down to $15. You know, this is an improvement. The key, though, is: what are we paying for this improvement with? In the long term, the way we put this all together, the one positive thing is that we need to accept all these negative things. Is that a reasonable approach to providing for medical care for seniors?

Let's not be unclear about this: pharmaceuticals and the provision of drugs are medical care. This is more and more how people receive their medicare in our province and in our country. Having fair and equitable and affordable and, I would suggest, universal access to it is critical.

One of the key points with this plan is that it denies and abandons the principle of universality. We start to make the access to these treatments, because pharmaceuticals are a form of treatment, something that is incumbent upon income and where prices go up and down and you're paying on the basis of income. Well, I'm a New Democrat, and I'm always about, you know, progressive systems, but as far as I'm concerned, the progressive system we should be looking at is a progressive tax system. We should not be loading a bunch of costs onto one particular group in society, in this case seniors, and saying: you guys get to pay for this because you guys have started to be too expensive for the rest of us, so we're going to move that cost over to you. That's essentially what we're doing through this. We're abandoning universality, and we're asking seniors to pay more.

As time goes on, as the demographic projections unfold, seniors will pay more and more and more, and that's what this act effectively brings into play. It is with that in mind that we have some very, very serious concerns about what the act is trying to bring about. Of course, as most members across the way know, we're not the only people to outline those concerns. I suspect that almost all members of this House have received tremendous feedback from seniors in their constituencies and across the province telling them how incredibly angry they are with this plan, and of course it's for that reason that the government had to back down a bit and tweak it. Nonetheless, as far as I'm concerned, it has not been sufficiently well tweaked.

As a starting point we have concerns about this bill and at this point are not prepared to support it. For now I will sit down and allow others to speak.

The Deputy Speaker: Any hon. member wish to speak at second reading of the bill?

Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question.

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. Very quickly, I want to get onto the record that I am not pleased with this government's accountability in terms of its deficit: $8.6 billion in unfunded liability; $10 billion at least, of which $1.5 billion is Education deferred infrastructure; a $4.7 billion deficit. Add on another at least $1.5 billion in unfunded public pension liabilities. That brings the total to $23.8 billion. We've got $17 billion as our sort of desperation parachute fund that's supposed to carry us over the next three recessionary years in terms of our combined sustainability-capital fund. We have no accurate accounting.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, sorry. It's 4:15. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, but in accordance with Standing Order 64(5) the chair is required to put the question to the House on the appropriation bill on the Order Paper for third reading.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion for third reading carried]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon and welcome.

Let us pray. Renew us with Your strength. Focus us in our deliberations. Challenge us in our service to the people of this great province. Amen.

Hon. members and ladies and gentlemen and all present, we'll now be led in the singing of our national anthem by Mr. Paul Lorieau. I invite all to join in and participate in the language of one's choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a great pleasure for me today to introduce to you and through you some of the best and brightest students in the constituency of Edmonton-Mill Creek who happen to attend Jackson Heights elementary school. They were here last Wednesday, and they had such a good time that they came back again today. I'm delighted to have them here. They had some very interesting questions for me. I'll look forward to seeing them when they get back to their school. I'd ask the students and the parents and teachers who are here with them to now please rise and receive the accolades of the House. Welcome.

Ms Calahasen: Mr. Speaker, I know we are in between the time that they come in, but I thought I'd introduce at this moment a group of grade 6 students from E.G. Wahlstrom school in Slave Lake, which is about 250 kilometres north of here. It's rare that we get visitors, but it's so nice to see teachers take the time to bring their students in. They're accompanied by six adults and their teacher, Jane Zimmer. I'd ask that they stand – I do believe they might be here, but I'm not sure – and that this House give them a warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour for me to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all of the Assembly students from the Rosedale Christian school in my riding. They are accompanied by teacher Joshua Hunt and parents Mr. Rob Wohlgemuth and Mrs. Monica Wohlgemuth. This very attentive group of youngsters have been here, had a tour of the Legislature. I would ask that they rise and that all of my colleagues give them the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of special people responsible for the international award winning video Our Workplace, Our Future. The video was produced for the 2008 Premier's awards of excellence and was aired at the ceremony last fall. It was a very powerful production that highlighted our employees' contribution to our province and the impact the Alberta public service has on the lives of Albertans. From over 13,000 entries submitted around the world for a Telly award, this Alberta public service video received the highest, the silver Telly. Corporate human resources along with their production partner, Dynacor Media Group, are to be congratulated on this outstanding achievement.

Members of corporate human resources and Dynacor Media Group are in the members' gallery: Mr. John Kelly, Briar McGinnis, Janine Weber, Terri Dorn-Gromada, George Gromada, and Susanne Hunka. In addition to offering our thanks for their participation, we also want to acknowledge how important it is to have the external recognition for our employees within this province. I would ask them to please receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly Mr. Bradley Moss. Mr. Bradley Moss is the artistic director for Theatre Network. Theatre Network is a society, a nonprofit charitable organization, which operates within the jurisdiction of Canadian Actors' Equity Association. Theatre Network is resident in the constituency of Edmonton-Glenora. Since its inception in 1975 the nonprofit society has prided itself on presenting plays about Alberta for Albertans and has not shied away from controversial subjects in the process. Mr. Moss just finished directing a very successful play called Buddy, which used some visually stunning camerawork and some very different approaches to theatre. It was a very successful play about perceptions of the world as Albertans see it from the centre of a small town. I would like to have Mr. Moss stand up. I'm thrilled that he was able to come spend some time with me. I know that he's looking forward to the excitement of question period. Could you please rise? Help me welcome Mr. Bradley Moss.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can assure you that today I do have a guest to introduce. In fact, I have a couple. Sitting in the members' gallery is my constituency assistant, Kathy Holdaway, as well as my STEP student for the summer, Jeff Agnew. Jeff is the former president of the Students' Association of Mount Royal College. He is taking his degree in political science and history and is still a current member of the students' association. Jeff's family has a history of over a hundred years of residence in Alberta. Currently Jeff is also a member of the Alberta Council on Admissions and Transfer. I was hoping that the two of them could please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you 69 students from University elementary school in Calgary-Varsity. The University elementary school is very tightly connected with the University of Calgary and offers a special observation program for bachelor of education students. We have today 69 student guests, their teachers, and parents. The teachers who are accompanying them are Laura Mills; Chris Blais; Laura Smart, whose children I taught at F.E. Osborne; Patti Acorn; Heather Conellan; and Heather Wolfe. The parents who are helping this large group enjoy the hospitality of the Legislature are Naz Convery, Paul Kim, Rob MacLeod, Jennifer Eiserman, Yongzhang Li, Michelle Rosenberg, Janet Pelzer, and Nancy Bly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to draw the attention of the members of the House to my 38 very special guests, who departed Beaverlodge at 6 this morning in order to be here today in both the members' and the public galleries. Included in the group is Andony Melathopoulos, president of the Friends of Beaverlodge Hospital. My guests are concerned that this government is failing to respond to the needs of rural Albertans and are here to state their concern over the future of the Beaverlodge hospital. The community wants the hospital to remain an acute-care facility, and they want the building to be upgraded. I would now ask all of my guests to please rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Four individuals are here with the group from Jackson Heights, and I'd just like to read their names into the record because the list was just given to me: teacher Melissa Bruins and parent helpers Terry Mahoney, Janet Caceres, and Chris Spracklin. If the four of you could quickly rise, we'll rerecognize you. Thank you very much for being here with our students.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Tablings

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our parliamentary system is looked on as one of the best in the world. Engagement that is open and transparent is a facet that's the envy of many jurisdictions.

Last week a tabling was made by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity that was not checked for authenticity but was also defamatory and had absolutely nothing whatsoever to do with my job as an elected legislator in this Assembly. I thought long and hard about this and decided to look at this not as a personal affront, even though I believe it was, but with regard to the point of tablings in this Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, tablings are a function whereby any member of the Legislature can ensure that an item or an event that is germane to the government is on the record. This is also available for anything that is statutory in nature and is relevant to Alberta and Albertans, not to make a defamatory member's statement.

Mr. Speaker, the tabling by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity last Wednesday was neither of the above. This is not the first time that this member has tabled items as a way of making a statement. In fact, you admonished this member many times, including on April 16 and 23 in 2008 and on May 1, 15, and June 6 in 2007 to name a few. If the member was truly interested in helping this individual, how does the process of tabling an e-mail make this happen?

Mr. Speaker, I believe that many tablings are, as I mentioned, neither relevant or of a statutory nature and are about as stupid – I'm sorry; I apologize, and I withdraw that remark. I should have said: as smart as me standing here and asking to table the other half of my cheese sandwich that I forgot to finish last night.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Nagar Kirtan

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On May 17 around 20,000 people attended the Nagar Kirtan in Edmonton. This annual event gets bigger and better every year. The Nagar Kirtan is a Sikh religious parade. The one in Edmonton loops around the Mill Woods area in the month of Vaisakhi, and it takes about four hours to complete. We were joined by Member of Parliament Tim Uppal and my colleagues from Edmonton-Mill Creek, Edmonton-Meadowlark, Edmonton-Ellerslie, Edmonton-Gold Bar, and city councillors. The date of the Nagar Kirtan is one of the most important dates in the Sikh calendar, marking the Sikh new year and celebrating the creation of the Khalsa on April 14, 1699.

This parade is celebrated by millions of Sikhs around the world, and most major cities in Canada have a Nagar Kirtan each year as well. This parade is led by RCMP and city police escort cars, an RCMP police band, and Canadian and provincial flags. There were six beautifully decorated floats, and thousands of people participated in this celebration. As this parade continues from one gurdwara to another, some sing Sikh hymns, and others have a good time meeting new friends and sharing the laughter and conversation. There was a lot of youth participation in understanding the culture and the religion, and this parade really united our community.

I would like to thank everyone who participated in this parade. Those who organized all the details and floats, the business owners who provided the food and the cleanup all did a great job. [Remarks in Punjabi]

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Freedom of Speech

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, freedom of speech is the cornerstone of every liberal democracy in the world. Canadians have fought and died to protect this freedom. In his work on liberty British philosopher and parliamentarian John Stuart Mill wrote, "We can never be sure that the opinion we are endeavoring to stifle is a false opinion; and if we were sure, stifling it would be an evil still." Our ability to discuss controversial issues, to offer contrarian opinions, to speak out and defend the rights of even those whom society detests is perhaps the greatest philosophical invention of the human species.

Without freedom of speech there is no progress, no evolution, no ability for society to move forward. Over the course of the last number of years we have seen many cases here in Alberta that have gone before our Human Rights Commission that have stifled free speech, that have stifled the free expression of ideas. I believe this has been an affront to our democracy, an affront to our ability to communicate ideas.

We have seen cases where individuals have published their honestly held beliefs or made comment about religion when exercising their free speech in newspapers or magazines and have found themselves in front of a human rights commission. Accordingly, what I'd ask the government to do is return section 3 of our human rights legislation, the section that deals with free speech, back to its pre-1996 wording to give both individuals and the press gallery alike the ability to express their opinions without the legitimate fear of winding up in front of a human rights commission.

Mr. Speaker, people don't need to be protected from ideas as currently can happen under our human rights legislation. People should be able to express their honestly held beliefs about science, sexuality, religious belief, and other controversial subjects without having a fear of appearing before a human rights commission.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Airdrie Centennial

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On September 10, 2009, the city of Airdrie will commemorate its 100th year as a community. We started as a small farming and ranching community and have grown into a flourishing city with numerous amenities, opportunities, businesses, and facilities. Although we are approaching a population of 40,000, we still maintain our small-town feel, that draws so many young families, entrepreneurs, and other to our city.

I would like to invite all Albertans to come and visit Airdrie this year, whether it's to see our Pro Rodeo from June 26 to July 1 or our parade on Canada Day, or if you like flying, the Canadian Snowbirds performance is on July 22. Our homecoming weekend and centennial day is on September 10. There are other events posted on our centennial website, at www.airdrie.ca/centennial.

I'm proud of my community and hope you will come and see what a great place my family and I get to live in. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Child Care Professional Awards of Excellence

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Friday, May 22, the government of Alberta recognized nine of the province's best and brightest child care professionals at the 2009 child care professional awards of excellence. These nine professionals contribute to the heart and soul of their child care community, and their talent, dedication, and innovation are essential to the success of child care in Alberta. The recipients of the award this year were Patsyann Sanftl from Athabasca; from Beaumont, Colleen Kwong; Dawn Wiseman from Blackie; from Canmore, Crystal Ryan; from Calgary, Maggie Tew and Helen Cameron; Laurie Knoll and Claudia Murga from Edmonton; and Suzanne Chivers from Namao.

I'm very pleased that our government has demonstrated its strong commitment to the child care sector through the implementation of the creating child care choices plan. Child care professionals are highly skilled individuals who are dedicated to making sure that our children are cared for in safe, stimulating environments. Every day, Mr. Speaker, they provide high-quality care to children and give families peace of mind, knowing that their children are in excellent hands.

I congratulate and thank the people who were mentioned for an award of excellence this year and thank the thousands of professionals working in Alberta who have chosen child care as their career.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Parental Choice in Education

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. By placating certain interest groups at the expense of public education, this administration has made Albertans both angry and embarrassed. Ordinary citizens, parents, teachers, academics, and religious groups have all joined together to support public education and oppose enshrining parental rights in the human rights code. To the Premier: why is the government unwilling to accept the voice of the majority and protect public education?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the bill does protect parental rights. We believe that families are really the foundation of our society, and that's what we are committed to.

Dr. Swann: The Canadian Civil Liberties Association, whose goal is to protect freedoms, states that this legislation will, quote, promote a regime of religious intolerance. End quote. Why is the government protecting special interests at the expense of society?

Mr. Blackett: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have listened and will listen as a government. The intention of this bill was never to have undue fear, undue duress put upon any members of the teaching profession, any members of the school board. We have an amendment that we will propose and bring forward tomorrow that will make the wording clear, and to clarify what we intend to do, we will add a section which will state this.

The Speaker: We'll get to that later.

Dr. Swann: Again to the Premier. Our public school system is designed to impart knowledge; it is not designed to reinforce dogma. Why is the government persisting in its attempt to break down this core role of public education?

Mr. Blackett: Well, Mr. Speaker, obviously the hon. member didn't listen to the last answer. We have listened to the ASBA. We have listened to the ATA. I've actually had numerous conversations last week with the Canadian Civil Liberties Association. They have concerns, and we as a government are listening. We will make some amendments to make sure and clarify the intent of this caucus and this government. We will not put them in any undue circumstances. We will not cause them any undue pain, and tomorrow you will see that.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Surgery Reductions

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This Premier talks about improving quality and reducing wait times yet is cutting the number of elective surgery procedures performed in Edmonton and Calgary and elsewhere. Elective operations are not optional. They are not frivolous procedures. They are medically necessary services, and they relieve Albertans of painful, disabling conditions. To the Premier: does the Premier understand that the consequences of deferring treatment are lost productivity, medical complications, and some elective patients actually becoming urgent patients?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, two weeks ago, when this question came up in the House, I did say that we're certainly aware of some of the surgeries that have been delayed, whether it be for hip and joint. We know that people may be living in pain during that period of time, and our goal, of course, is to improve access and the quality of care. The minister may have further detail on what he is planning to do with the situation.

Dr. Swann: Well, does the Premier realize that short-term savings and cutting surgery increase long-term costs?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, as I said numerous times, we are trying to find a balance in terms of ensuring that we have this good quality of health care that all Albertans enjoy, ensure that we sustain it well into the future, and we're working through a very difficult situation. Our revenue stream is down dramatically, but even – even – at the rate of growth that the province saw in its revenue, the costs surrounding delivering health care services far outstripped the revenue increases. We've got to deal with this, and that's why I've been asking all the health care providers to work with the minister and the Health Services Board to find a solution to it.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, right now health reform has meant reductions in services, cutting of surgery, increased wait times that will spread throughout the province. How long will Albertans have to wait to see improvements in this area?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, on the 11th of February of this year this particular member of the Legislature – and I quote from Hansard – said it's not “about spending more; it's about spending smarter.” That's exactly what Alberta Health Services is doing within its budget. Alberta Health Services has an increase this year of some 6 to 7 per cent. It has to ensure that those dollars are spent smarter than they have been in the past, and that's the review that's happening right now by Alberta Health Services. But I must emphasize that all emergency and urgent surgeries are not being impacted; we're talking about elective surgeries only.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Federal Financial Aid

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Here we have a government that constantly tells a worried population that we're better positioned to weather this economy than perhaps any other jurisdiction in the known universe. We've got enough to get us through, and those silly opposition politicians are just being alarmist about us not having saved enough. Then we have the finance minister in Meech Lake today asking for close to a billion dollars from Ottawa, including $200 million in stabilization payments if she gets the chance. You know, it's time for the Conservatives to stop talking out of both sides of their mouth at once. To the Premier: did you do enough during the boom to save for the bust and reduce your dependence on volatile energy revenues, or did you not? Which is it?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, since 1993 this government has not only paid off a $26 billion debt; we've set aside a $17 billion sustainability fund. We've put money into endowments in postsecondary education, we've put money into the heritage savings trust fund, we've also spent close to $40 billion on infrastructure, badly needed infrastructure, and at the same time, the last 10-year period, we made a net contribution of $117 billion to the capital of Canada, Ottawa. I would think that Albertans did their part over the last 10 years.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, have provinces don't ask Ottawa for stabilization funding. Isn't the Premier embarrassed by this appalling demonstration of fiscal incompetence?

Mr. Stelmach: I think the member has a few things mixed up. He's probably thinking about the equalization fund. The equalization fund is different than the stabilization fund. The way the stabilization fund was set up many, many years ago, if your revenue drops, you know, more than 5 to 6 per cent, then you could qualify for the stabilization fund. I would say, Mr. Speaker, that just in the last fiscal period I think the net contribution to Ottawa was something like $18 billion. Just in the last fiscal period $18 billion net: that's what stayed in Ottawa. How much is it? I believe the whole national defence budget of the country of Canada is $17 billion. So we probably could have bought our own army.

Mr. Taylor: Well, that's an interesting concept, and I must go there sometime. But for today, Mr. Speaker, this government is the rich kid that squandered its inheritance, and now it's a provincial welfare bum. Will the Premier commit to using any funding his finance minister does get from the feds, be it health transfers or this embarrassing need to ask for stabilization funding like we couldn't see an inevitable drop in energy prices coming, to fix the cuts his health minister is making to elective surgeries?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the request by the minister is in two key areas. One is the stabilization fund, which is about $220 million, and the other – and I believe we've been unfairly treated – is about $200 per capita that should have come to us from the Canada health transfer fund. It didn't come to Alberta, and that's about $700 million. So between the two that's close to a billion dollars. I think any Albertan that is ill and requires health care is in no way any different than someone in the Maritimes or in Quebec or in Ontario. We're just asking for fair treatment. That's all we're asking for.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Bitumen Exports

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. When this Premier first took office, Alberta was booming. Now the Premier is going cap in hand to Ottawa for a bailout. Because of this government's misguided policies Alberta is at risk of becoming a have-not province. Instead of the Premier asking for a federal handout, why doesn't he end the export of unprocessed bitumen to the United States and bring the jobs back to Alberta?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, once again the hon. member is a little behind the times. We're continuing to add value to about 700,000 barrels of bitumen in this province. He's talking about all these jobs that have vanished or have gone to the United States. There are pipelines that are being built. I keep reiterating to him that these pipelines will receive a much higher tariff by moving finished product as opposed to bitumen. So there are things under way to ensure that we keep adding to the amount that we upgrade because we are going to see continued investment in the province. We just had a good announcement today on another project that's been introduced by Exxon, and that will increase the number of barrels that we're producing and also increase the number of barrels that we're going to upgrade.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, right in the Premier's backyard Alberta's Industrial Heartland Association has joined the outcry over this Premier's bitumen blundering. They want upgrading here, not in the United States. This is the Premier who once likened the sale of unprocessed bitumen to scraping the topsoil off the farm, but under his watch every single upgrading project in Alberta has been cancelled except one. In the U.S. upgrader construction is booming. To the Premier: how long will you keep starving our economy while the Americans get rich upgrading our bitumen?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, for someone that talked about shutting down the oil sands, now all of a sudden he wants to keep everything here and add value to everything. You know, as I've said before, it looks like he didn't read my speeches during the campaign, but after the campaign he's finding them particularly interesting.

We do have a good plan in place to keep adding value to the bitumen that is produced in Alberta. We are endeavouring under the bitumen royalty in kind program, which will have a number of barrels that every Albertan owns that we can add value to. We're looking at other markets as well because I submit to this House that we cannot depend only on one market, the United States; we have to expand and look at other countries as well. So we're doing our part.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, the Premier knows that we never said that we should shut down the tar sands. The Premier is misleading the House.

The Premier's bitumen policy is threatening Alberta's economy. He's not even listening to his own constituents in the heartland who are demanding this government do more to ensure bitumen is upgraded in Alberta. To the Premier: given that Alberta's energy economy has stalled and your finance minister is asking for a federal bailout, why won't you act now to stop the export of unprocessed bitumen to the United States?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, as I said, we're adding value to about 700,000 barrels of about 1.2, 1.3 million production. That's what we've done in the past. We'll continue to do that, but as the production in bitumen increases, we also want to increase the amount upgraded here in the province.

We're working through a number of details. One of them, of course, is doing a cumulative environmental impact assessment because as we load more in the airshed in that particular area, we have to make sure that we're meeting all of our very strict guidelines. We also have to make sure that we have pipeline access and also an ability to ship that product once the value has been added to it. We also have to work with the other industries, the petrochemical industry, that are going to use a lot of the product as a result of bitumen upgrading. There's a lot of work going on, and I feel very confident it will not only increase the amount of bitumen upgraded but that we're going to add thousands of jobs in the petrochemical industry.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Rural Hospitals

Mr. Marz: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recent reports of several rural hospital closures in central Alberta have set off alarm bells throughout these communities. This would appear to defy all logic. For one thing, there would be no apparent capacity anywhere else for all these patients to go. Can the Minister of Health and Wellness assure Albertans that these rumours are just that, rumours and not public policy?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think what the member is referring to is a document that the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood and a few of his friends had released and thought they had this revelation relative to rural hospitals. But the author of the working document himself has indicated that if they would have actually contacted him before releasing this document, he could have informed them that this was a working document with the former health region, that has now been deemed not to be appropriate going forward. I know it certainly caused a lot of unnecessary concern in residents of central Alberta, and I would just hope that going forward there would be more responsibility shown in that area.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Marz: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister share at this time: what is the plan for central rural hospitals like Three Hills and Trochu and Didsbury, which has recently been put on pause, which are full to capacity most of the time? The staff are working very hard to meet the needs of their patients.

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, the reasons that many of these hospitals have capacity issues are twofold, I guess. Number one is that we need to ensure that in our acute-care facilities we are treating patients who really should be in acute-care facilities. We need to have a broader view of what our health delivery system should look like. We need to ensure that when these patients are being admitted, they are being admitted into the right facility. But equally as important is that we have the challenge of ensuring that we have the right workforce for those particular communities. That's part of the overall review that Alberta Health Services is currently undergoing.

Mr. Marz: Well, given that the services offered in any health facility are dependent on the level of training and the skills of the individual health professionals such as doctors and nurses, what is the minister doing to attract more of these health professionals to rural Alberta? The need is great.

Mr. Liepert: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, the member actually hit on something that I think we have to address: doctors and nurses. What we need to ensure in health care in this province is that all of our professionals are working to full scope of practice. We have highly qualified LPNs who are underutilized. I believe we have many other professions, like pharmacists, who are underutilized. That's the whole initiative that we'll be re-examining through our Vision 2020 document to ensure that the right professional is providing the right level of service no matter where you live in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The parental opt-out clause has not been carefully thought out by this government. The lines that separate discretion and discrimination are not clear cut. Under the proposed changes a child can either be pulled out of a class or stay in the room and not participate. The clause is eerily silent on who gets to decide how a child will be accommodated. To the Minister of Education: if a parent chooses to pull their child from a class, who decides how that child will be accommodated? Will it be the teacher or the parent?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, it'll be handled in the same way it's handled throughout schools in this province right now. Under the mandated policy with respect to human sexuality education parents are notified when what we know as sex ed classes come up, and they have the option, if they wish, to have their child excluded. It doesn't happen very often, but it does happen. When it happens, the school provides another option for the child.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Again to the Minister of Education: given the shortage of teachers and classroom space, if a child opts out of a class, who will teach them and where will they go?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member would have people believe that there are going to be hordes of students leaving classes. That has not been our experience in Alberta, and we don't expect it to be the experience in Alberta.

Mr. Chase: If that is our previous experience, then why introduce Bill 44?

Who will instruct the remaining children when a teacher is busy contacting a parent to pick up their objecting child during a spontaneous class discussion on religion, evolution, or sexual orientation?

Mr. Hancock: It's been very clear in the discussions in the House and the discussions in public – and I think it'll be even more clear in the very near future – that this is not about spontaneous discussions. This is about a mandated curriculum. This is about teaching the curriculum, which includes religious instruction or religion, which includes human sexuality, including sexual orientation. This is not about spontaneous discussion. This is not about what happens in the schoolyard. All of those things are fears that have been raised by people who want to interpret this far more broadly than it's ever intended to be interpreted, and hopefully that'll be clear once this process is done.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Immigrant Nominee Program

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta immigrant nominee program launched a family stream in June last year. My question is to the hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration. We're coming up to the one-year mark. What result has Alberta seen from this family stream compared to others?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are nearing the one-year mark for the family stream, which generated a tremendous amount of interest. Visits to the Alberta immigrant nominee program section on our website have reached over half a million. This interest has translated into action, with another 4,800 applications received under this stream. In fact, on average we receive about 15 family stream applications per day. Processing these applications takes a little longer than other streams, but we have so far processed 279 nomination certifications.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same hon. minister: if the family stream applicants are not required to have employer sponsorship, what measures are taken to ensure that they find a job and they are not on social assistance?

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While the candidate does not have the job in place, the selection criteria are designed to ensure that that person is ready to join our workforce. They have to be between 21 and 45 years of age, have funds to support themselves after arrival. They need to have a certain level of postsecondary education, some work experience, and English language skills. The applicant must also have an Alberta sponsor who provides support for the newcomer while they are settling into their new job and location.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same hon. minister. There is a recent rise in Alberta unemployment. Also, the need for foreign workers is in doubt, but recruitment outside Canada is still enticing people in foreign lands with, I could say, a false promise of work. What is our government doing to address this issue, that hurts people financially and the good reputation of Alberta and Canada?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That is a good question, but we need to plan for the long term. We know that the economy will pick up, and with our aging population we are sure that we'll be short of labour in the future. There are also still some labour shortages in certain occupations. A skilled worker in one field cannot necessarily switch to a different occupation without meeting certain educational or training or certification requirements. We are addressing this by enhanced training and offering more spaces in schools and attracting the right people at the right time.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Imperial Oil Kearl Lake Project

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Well, as we all know, Imperial Oil today announced it is proceeding with its Kearl Lake bitumen mine. About three years from now the first stage of that will be producing over a hundred thousand barrels of bitumen every day. My question is to the Minister of Energy. Will he tell this Assembly where that bitumen is going to be upgraded?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, that, of course, will be a matter to be determined by the proponent of the project. Now, there are a number of options, of course, available to them. I'm not exactly sure, but I would think that the member opposite would understand that Imperial Oil, it occurs to me, has a relatively large refining operation in the Edmonton area.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Yeah. Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I am aware of that. Actually, it might interest the minister to know that back in my university days I had a summer job helping build it.

Then I'll pursue the minister's question. Is the minister aware of information that Imperial Oil is considering altering its Strathcona refinery or some other facility in Alberta to upgrade bitumen?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think it's quite obvious by the announcement that was made today. It's public information. I think I've got two or three different articles that indicate that the announcement has been made. The matter of the upgrading of bitumen in the province of Alberta is continually being addressed by this government and, most certainly, industry players. What I will suggest is that phase 1 – phase 1 – of the Kearl Lake project does not include an upgrader at Kearl Lake.

Dr. Taft: Yeah, well, we knew that. That's the point of the questions. Holy smokes, Mr. Speaker.

Alberta gets the largest share of environmental liabilities, including tailings ponds and an open pit mine. We should also get the largest share of the wealth which is overwhelmingly generated by the upgraders. This government approved Kearl Lake in 2007 in an order in council. My question is to the minister. Why did the government approve Kearl Lake mine without requiring some portion of upgrading here in Alberta?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, again, the way I would like to have that understood and answer the question is that Kearl Lake as a project will very likely end up at the end of the day producing somewhere in the neighbourhood of 340,000 or 350,000 barrels a day of product. In the initial mining operation, that's being developed by the proponent now, 100,000 to 110,000 barrels a day, that product will move someplace and very likely into the Alberta heartland. Part of that product may move to upgraders that are outside of Alberta. I would not be able to stand here today and say that every bit of the bitumen relative to Kearl is going to have the molecules adjusted in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Building Construction Review

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The media has recently been reporting about concerns with stucco leaks in homes throughout the province. As a former home builder in the Edmonton area for 18 years I know that poor quality and workmanship can lead to stucco leaks, which can cause serious problems for homes. My questions are to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Is the minister aware of the extent of the problem, and what is he doing to address it?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am aware of some homeowner concerns with residential construction practices in Alberta. That's why my ministry very proactively looked into the matter. I asked my parliamentary assistant to consult with homeowners and stakeholders. We want to ensure that Albertans have confidence in the construction process. It is essential that the homes built in Alberta are built to the quality that Albertans expect and deserve.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The next question is to the same minister. How will the minister ensure that the building codes are being properly enforced to make sure that tradespeople are not cutting corners and putting homes and homeowners at risk?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, our building codes, I think, are some of the best in Canada. My parliamentary assistant, as I said before, carried out a broad review of the residential construction practices. The review focused on inspection and enforcement, on construction industry accountability. It talked about consumer protection, about certification and skill development. The review examined ways to ensure quality of construction of new homes in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the same minister. When will the government respond to that?

Thank you.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, this is one of my ministry's and my top priorities that we are dealing with at this time. I want to thank all of the individuals that were involved for their valuable input, whether it be homeowners or the Home Builders' Association or the municipalities that were involved.

This does involve Service Alberta, Finance and Enterprise, Alberta Justice, Advanced Education and Technology. We are discussing with these ministries ways that we can make improvements, and we're also looking at other provinces. In the end, Mr. Speaker, we want to make sure that we get it right and address the homeowners' needs.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Temporary Foreign Workers

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The temporary foreign worker program has many flaws. The economic downturn has highlighted yet another. Along with thousands of other Albertans temporary foreign workers are being laid off, and many are not receiving the EI benefits they have paid for on each and every paycheque they earned. My first question is to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Why are temporary foreign workers who are eligible for EI benefits not receiving them?

The Speaker: Hon. member, EI falls under the federal jurisdiction, not the provincial jurisdiction. I don't know what the minister is going to respond, but we're staying within the competency of Alberta here.

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, maybe the only comment that I would add is the fact that we are working with the federal government to see if those particular issues can be resolved.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: given that temporary foreign workers are not only promised jobs but also the possibility of permanent residency when being recruited in foreign lands, how can the minister now explain to the workers who've been laid off that the program is working and protecting workers' rights when it has so clearly failed?

The Speaker: Well, once again, residency in this country is under the federal mandate, not the provincial mandate. If the minister has something to offer, go ahead.

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, temporary foreign workers have the same rights as any other worker once they are in Alberta. When it comes to the treatment of temporary foreign workers, we've taken a very proactive approach to it. We've added a couple of offices to help temporary foreign workers. We've established a hotline. As well, we continue to work with our federal government to see if we can make some changes to make things much better.

2:20

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Again, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: given that the minister stated that temporary foreign workers have the same rights and the same benefits as each and every worker in this province, why, when they are laid off and they have worked the number of hours necessary, are they unable to collect EI benefits? You're the minister of immigration.

The Speaker: Well, but that comes under the federal jurisdiction, hon. member, not the provincial jurisdiction. For the third time today, if the minister wants to proceed, proceed.

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, I would really encourage the member opposite to ask his MP for that type of answer. They need to move forward.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Support for the Peace Country

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government has abandoned the Peace Country, and residents want to know why government is turning its back on rural health care. The minister's plan to downgrade the Beaverlodge hospital will make the closest emergency room over an hour's drive from that area. To the minister of health: why can't the health minister be straight with these people and tell them once and for all what's going to happen to the Beaverlodge hospital?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I'll be straight with this member. There is no plan to downgrade the Beaverlodge hospital.

Mr. Snelgrove: There goes supplementary 2.

Ms Notley: Not so much because it hasn't quite worked out this way.

Now, this government continues to abandon the Peace Country. Displaced Beaverlodge patients may well end up arriving in Grande Prairie only to be bottlenecked at a crumbling facility this government has yet to replace. The only thing this government actually knows how to do up in the Peace Country is make empty promises. Again to the minister: why won't this minister come clean and admit that his repeated foot-dragging on the Queen E hospital is hurting the health care of Peace Country residents?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, unlike the two members of the opposition there who've gone to Beaverlodge once and may have stopped in Grande Prairie on their way through, we have a planned visit with the three MLAs for Grande Prairie in about a week's time, when we're going to discuss with the community what the plans are in Grande Prairie and how we can meet the needs of northwestern Alberta.

Ms Notley: Well, I suspect they'll tell you to start building their hospital.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it's not just in health care that this government has abandoned the Peace Country. They've turned their backs on farmers, too. Their latest attempt to kill the family farm strengthens Agricore at the expense of small producers, many of whom are still trying to make a go of it in the Peace Country. My question is for the minister of agriculture. Why is it that the minister is so committed to giving Agricore more power over their producer associations at the expense of the family farmer?

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, Mr. Speaker, I probably would need a little more information about where the hon. member is coming from. I have no determination to do anything to the small producers out there except put them on a better footing with the rest of the people.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Watershed Planning and Advisory Councils

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At a meeting last week with Alberta's southern region watershed planning and advisory councils council members raised some concerns regarding future funding given the reduced government budget. My question is to the Minister of Environment. Is this government going to let its long-term environmental responsibilities fall by the wayside to deal with this short-term economic situation?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm glad that the member brought this question forward because nothing could be further from the truth. In fact, I have been working and speaking with a number of our WPACs, watershed planning councils, throughout the province, indicating to them that they are partners in our implementation of water for life. As a matter of fact, we just recently announced $2.5 million in funding for both WPACs and the Water Council, so there's a clear commitment on the part of the government.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Obviously, times are tough and we're all feeling the effects of the global recession, but the important work of these councils must continue. My first supplementary is to the same minister. Last week this government announced funding for Alberta's watershed planning and advisory councils. Can the minister explain the changes in the funding from this year over last year?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, one of the things that is critical is that we maintain the corporate knowledge, that we maintain the core services that are provided by these critical organizations. As a result, we put in place a $250,000 cap. Well, that will result in a slight decrease for some of the WPACs, the more mature and larger WPACs, but it will actually allow for some growth for some of the new organizations that are just coming on. Overall, the effect will be that we will maintain the capacity, we will maintain the strength that lies within these organizations so that when the economy starts to turn around, they'll be in a position to be able to pick up right where they left off.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. Since the implementation of water for life five years ago, watershed planning and advisory councils have built a knowledge and public understanding of Alberta's watersheds. Since the land-use framework seems to be the way of the future, what does that mean for the future of Alberta's WPACs?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think the future of the WPACs is very strong. The work that the WPACs do, the watershed management that they do, is critical to the development of the land-use framework and the regional plans for the land-use framework. It's no coincidence that the boundaries for the land-use framework follow the watershed lines. That is not by coincidence. It's to allow the terrific amount of public and community-based input that's associated with our watershed planning to be incorporated and fed up into the land-use framework process.

Civil Recovery of Health Costs

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, the health minister has been front and centre in the media lauding his new approach to medical care in this province. Today I ask the health minister: who in the medical community was contacted before inputting the civil recovery for medical costs associated with Criminal Code violations?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, in our particular caucus we have 72 members. When a department proposes a change in policy, we take it to caucus. Caucus is responsible for ensuring that their constituents are supportive of what we are proposing. That's the process we have always followed and will continue to follow.

Mr. Hehr: Well, nevertheless, as the hon. member knows, many of the people that use his services in the health system have mental health issues and addiction issues. They are also involved in the criminal justice system. Can you tell me how this is going to help our overall society by implementing this bill?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, the member raises the issue of mental health in Alberta, and this province will stand on its record any day relative to what we do for mental health patients in this province. Our budget is some 600 million dollars annually for the treatment of mental health. We've announced a number of initiatives in recent weeks through our safe communities initiative to ensure that we have more beds available for mental health and addictions. I think our record speaks for itself.

Mr. Hehr: Well, I'm glad to hear the minister talking about his record, yet other people would have opposite views.

Nevertheless, somehow to get a mental health bed sometimes you have to plead guilty to a criminal offence. Now, this happens. In this bill if you plead guilty to a criminal offence, are you going to be able to get this mental health bed if your crime is involved?

Mr. Liepert: The member makes an accusation that I do not agree with, that in order to access mental health, somehow you have to plead guilty to some sort of an offence. I think that is, Mr. Speaker, just an absolute misrepresentation of facts relative to what we do for mental health in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

International Biotech Conference

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are for the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology. The minister has just returned from Atlanta, Georgia, on a mission for Alberta. Can the minister tell us what has been accomplished on behalf of Albertans during that mission?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, last week the Premiers of several provinces and ministers from a number of provinces – from across Canada, really – all gathered along with industry representatives and federal Minister Clement in Atlanta to all represent their jurisdictions and the industries that they lead. We lead these missions to promote Alberta's knowledge-based industries, which are growing. This mission, in particular, helped profile Alberta's innovation capacity and the emerging life sciences and the technology that is related to that in genomics and a number of areas. The event itself attracts over 20,000 businesses and leaders from across the world.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. As the minister knows, two of my constituents from the town of Drayton Valley, Mayor Moe Hamdon and Manager Manny Deol, also attended. They had the opportunity to meet with the minister and the minister from Germany with regard to a bioenergy project they are working on. Can the minister elaborate on some of those details and how they will benefit both the community of Drayton Valley and Alberta?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is correct. I would congratulate her, too, on her experience in bringing forward these types of collaborative ventures where it's not only American companies but international companies. I did have the opportunity to meet with one of the innovation ministers from Germany, and we witnessed the signing of a memorandum of understanding between Drayton Valley and the German group called CLIB, which is an organization network of biorefineries, another example that will show to the world that Alberta is a leader in alternative energies as much as we are a leader in environmental stewardship of the energy that we create. I would note that this is not just about agriculture. It's about forestry. It's about the biotechnology that we're going to be able to sell to the world, and Drayton Valley is going to be a hub for that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Finally, to the same minister: how do the initiatives that your department is working on reflect on the province's priorities and needs?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. members across the way have read the bill that's in front of this House, bioindustries and biotechnologies are critical key components of the vision of the future for Alberta's economy this Premier has set out. I think attendance at these types of conferences and attendance in other global aspects to get Alberta's vision out there and to also showcase the talent and the expertise and the technology innovations that we're creating is an extremely important step in selling Alberta to the world.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Protecting homes from high-intensity residential fires is important, but it is also important to protect homes from leaks and mould. Despite all the so-called consulting this administration does, time and again industry's concerns are not heard and not acted upon. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: why did the minister stipulate that nonventilated soffits are to be used when builders already know that they will create mouldy roofs?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member opposite is talking about the high-intensity residential fires. The consultation on high-intensity residential fires was done with fire chiefs, was done with home builders, was done with the Safety Codes Council, with municipalities. These are some of the recommendations that came forward. In fact, this last Friday I did meet with representatives from all different parts of Alberta discussing where these code changes are and how they're working. The hon. member did make mention of one particular example. We had those discussions, and we're going to have some discussions very closely in the near future to make sure that if that recommendation is not working quite to where we see it should be, we will look at it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the minister again: gypsum can develop mould when it is installed in inclement weather. This is Alberta. How does the minister expect builders to install gypsum boards only in dry conditions?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I said before, when we had the consultation process with home builders, that discussion had taken place. This consultation had two aspects to it: one of them, of course, is the building process; the second one, ensuring that the building process provided safety for residents. We don't want to have another situation like the fire that took place in southern Edmonton. With consultation with all of the stakeholders: that is where those recommendations came from.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. These complaints are coming from the builders. If these complaints were not coming to us, I wouldn't be standing here asking these questions on the gypsum part.

To the minister again. When new houses become mouldy because of the recent changes to the building codes, who will foot the bill: the homeowners, the builders, or the taxpayers?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, I want to express to the hon. member that safety codes, building codes, and fire codes are directions for building safe homes. If there are changes that are necessary, that is where we get our information. We get it from builders. We get it from the Safety Codes Council. We get it from municipalities. We get it from inspectors. We need to ensure that homes, the biggest investment for individuals in this province, are built to the quality that they deserve.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Red Deer Riverbank Erosion at Sundre

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday in the town of Sundre there was a very large rally sponsored by the committee calling themselves Save Our Sundre. This committee was formed about a month ago to try to get the message through about the danger of the Red Deer River jumping its banks and causing great damage in the town. My first question is to the Minister of Environment. As well as the number of people that were there, there was a lot of equipment loaded on trucks, and they were wondering why they couldn't go down and unload the equipment and start working in the river yesterday. What do they have to do to get permission?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I actually wish that they could begin the work immediately as well. However, there is an approval process that's in place. It's a necessary approval process. Our staff have been working with not only the town of Sundre but the rural municipality in that area to explain the process to them. The approval, that is under the Water Act, requires a detailed application be developed that would include an environmental assessment. Most importantly, that, then, would result in a public notification and a requirement that public affected by any work on the river would have an opportunity for input.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know that the minister has toured this particular spot himself, so he's seen the whole situation. Many people were asking me yesterday: why do they have to do these studies and the engineering when, in fact, it's so plain to see what needs to be done in order to stop the river from eroding the bank further?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, it does seem quite obvious, and I can assure you that once this application has been filled out and the basic engineering has been completed, we'll work as efficiently and quickly as we possibly can to do that approval. But it's not as simple as it would seem. A river is almost like a living instrument. If you fix something in one area, the chances of having unintended consequences downstream or elsewhere begin to multiply. It's so important to ensure that we don't solve one problem by creating another.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I spoke yesterday to a person that was from High River. Apparently, they've got much the same situation there.

My next question is to the President of the Treasury Board. This project is going to cost probably – it could be up to at least a million dollars. The town of Sundre just simply cannot afford to pay that kind of money. So to the minister responsible for Treasury Board: is there any provincial assistance available?

Mr. Snelgrove: Well, Mr. Speaker, we do allocate a great deal of money over the years to the different departments for various projects like this, but the Treasury Board does not determine nor do we approve individual projects nor funding for them. So without the support of the Minister of Environment or that department it wouldn't be appropriate to even approach Treasury Board for the spending as it would have to fit into our ongoing capital plan.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that was 96 questions and responses today.

Statement by the Speaker

Bill 43 and Potential Conflicts of Interest

The Speaker: I have some information that I have to convey to the House, and it deals with general advice that I have received from the Ethics Commissioner. On May 21, 2009, late afternoon, I received a letter addressed to me in my capacity as Speaker, subject regarding general advice pursuant to section 44 of the Conflicts of Interest Act regarding Bill 43, the Marketing of Agricultural Products Amendment Act, 2009 (No. 2).

For the information of all members – I think it is timely information – I intend to read the letter into the record. I also intend to provide all members with copies of it.

It has been brought to my attention by more than one Member that some Members of the Legislative Assembly may have concerns regarding participation in Bill 43, the Marketing of Agricultural Products Amendment Act, 2009. I am therefore taking this opportunity to provide general advice to all Members under section 44 of the Conflicts of Interest Act.

Section 2(2) of the Conflicts of Interest Act requires that Members who have reasonable grounds to believe that they, their minor or adult children, or their direct associates have a private interest in a matter before the Legislative Assembly must declare that interest and withdraw without voting on or participating in the consideration of the matter. The full text of section 2(2) is noted below.

And I quote directly.

(2) Where a matter for decision in which a Member has reasonable grounds to believe that the Member, the Member's minor or adult child or a person directly associated with the Member has a private interest is before a meeting of the Executive Council or a committee of the Executive Council or the Legislative Assembly or a committee appointed by resolution of the Legislative Assembly, the Member must, if present at the meeting, declare that interest and must withdraw from the meeting without voting on or participating in the consideration of the matter.

The Ethics Commissioner goes on:

I was asked to review this issue in late April, prior to the introduction of the Bill. At that time, I advised the Member who raised the issue that Members who were producers affected by the Bill could vote on the matter. It was my opinion at that time that this was a matter of general application.

I have now had an opportunity to review Bill 43. It is my understanding that Bill 43 will allow for producers covered by the Bill to request a refund of service charges from the commission to which the producer is required to submit service charges. A request for a refund is a direct financial benefit and, in my opinion, is a private interest.

Under the Conflicts of Interest Act, a "private interest" is not defined. The Act states what a "private interest" is not. It is not an interest in a matter that is of general application or one that affects a person as one of a broad class of the public.

As noted, I originally considered that this matter was one of general application. However, not all producers may opt to request a refund and, further, as earlier noted, there is a direct financial benefit to those producers who do seek a refund. It is my view that this matter is not a matter of general application but is, in fact, a private interest.

I have advised that a private interest exists, in part, because I am mindful of the preamble to the Conflicts of Interest Act that sets a high standard of conduct for Members to ensure that the public can be confident that Members are acting in the public interest and not to further their private interests.

It is my advice that Members who have a private interest in Bill 43 should declare that interest and withdraw without participating in the debate or voting on the matter. That advice also applies where the Member's minor or adult child has a private interest and where the Member's direct associates have a private interest.

It was signed on behalf of the Ethics Commissioner by Karen South.

On Friday I discussed this matter with the Ethics Commissioner, and I asked him for further clarification. He corresponded with me late Friday afternoon – that is, May 22, 2009 – and in a letter addressed to me, same subject:

This letter is further to my letter of May 21, with respect to the above-referenced Bill.

For clarification, as indicated in my May 21 letter, I had previously given advice to Members that, in my opinion, Bill 43 was a matter of general application and Members who were producers covered by the Bill could participate in the debate on Bill 43 and vote on it.

Those Members are therefore protected under section 43(5) of the Conflicts of Interest Act. They were acting in accordance with the previous advice given and no proceeding or prosecution can be taken against those Members. The advice contained in my letter of May 21 should be taken to apply from that date forward. It does not apply retroactively. In my opinion, Members who complied with my advice are protected and not in breach of the Act as of this [moment].

It's signed by the Ethics Commissioner.

So, in a nutshell, what this means is that we have before the Legislative Assembly tonight for committee review this particular bill. It has now gone through second reading. Some members who have participated in second reading are clear. That's not an issue in the eyes of the Ethics Commissioner. But members who will participate if it comes to committee tonight will have to declare that interest, and I've asked the Deputy Chair of Committees and the Deputy Speaker, who will be in the chair tonight, to raise that as the first issue when this bill does come up: to ask members that if they believe they're in a private interest, they must declare it. The procedure I outlined to all members in my memo of May 11, 2009, on this particular matter. So there are a number of hours which members have to review this matter in their own personal views. That's fine. They may contact the Ethics Commissioner this afternoon again for further information as well.

In 30 seconds from now we will go back to the Routine.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: Hon. members, we're back to the Routine. We were on Members' Statements. I'll call on the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Integrated Training Program for Health Care Aides

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I had the honour of attending the graduation of the integrated training program for health care aides at the Centre for Newcomers in Calgary, where I met program graduates, all newcomers to Canada from a wide range of countries, who have completed four months of full-time instruction, including academic upgrading in English and science, essential workplace skills in communication, and life management skills like making and implementing plans, being accountable, giving and receiving feedback. They will now attend the health care aide program at Bow Valley College and after another four months of full-time instruction will move into jobs in extended care facilities, home care, and other positions requiring the health care aide certificate.

This program is supported by Alberta Employment and Immigration and is offered without charge to the participants. Integrated skills training addresses the needs of the local labour market and is offered in occupations where there is strong labour market demand. The graduation illustrates the value of services offered by Employment and Immigration.

The participants in this training have come from many countries – Africa, China, India, Venezuela, and the Philippines – with length of immigration from several years to a few months before the training began. Each of them has faced the struggle of learning a new language and culture and finding connections and opportunities in an unfamiliar place. The graduates spoke about the anxiety they felt in making the transition to Canada. However, with the strengths they have developed through the training program, each of them is now able to stand before a group of friends and strangers and speak with confidence of their skills, plans, and dreams. They are proud they have the academic and study skills they need to attend a certificate program in a public institution. They are taking the first steps toward building a career in Canada and thus a role in the ongoing economic and social development of Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford in his capacity as chair of the Standing Committee on Health.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour as chair of the Standing Committee on Health to table today the requisite number of copies of the committee's report on Bill 52, the Health Information Amendment Act, 2009, introduced by the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon and referred to the Standing Committee on Health on March 17, 2009.

On behalf of the committee, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to acknowledge and express our appreciation for the support provided by staff of the Legislative Assembly Office. I'd also like to thank ministry officials from the government of Alberta Department of Health and Wellness for their diligent work with the committee. Sincere appreciation is also extended to the many Albertans who provided the committee with their written submissions and made oral presentations. Finally, I would be remiss if I did not thank my fellow committee members, representing all parties in this Assembly, who worked so well together over both the First Session of this Legislature and the current session to provide meaningful consultations and discussions in support of the review of this bill.

Mr. Speaker, the report recommends that Bill 52 proceed with amendments.

Thank you.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to present a petition signed by approximately 4,000 Albertans from the Beaverlodge-Grande Prairie area urging the government to "maintain a full-service hospital in Beaverlodge which includes such services as acute care, palliative care and emergency health services."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Bill 208 Life Leases Act

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 208, the Life Leases Act.

This bill will set out the specific rights and responsibilities of life lease landlords and lessees.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 208 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

Mr. Griffiths: On behalf of my colleague the Minister of Infrastructure and MLA for Drumheller-Stettler I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of a petition that reads:

We the undersigned want it to be understood that we do not want the Dialysis Unit in the Hanna Hospital to be closed. It is important to patients who use it, to their families and to the aging rural community that we live in to have these services available to us.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table petitions bearing the names of 96 Calgarians and two residents each from the communities of Blackfalds and Airdrie, Alberta. These petitioners are urging the government of Alberta to immediately provide Revlimid as a choice to patients with multiple myeloma and their health care providers in this province through public funding. I have the required five copies.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have four sets of tablings today. The first is a copy of the program for the graduating class of 2009 of Sir Winston Churchill high school, located in Calgary-Varsity.

My second tabling is a letter written to me by the Bow Valley Christian Church and copied to the Minister of Health and Wellness calling on the government to include marriage and family therapy under the Health Professions Act.

My third tabling, Mr. Speaker, is a letter written to me by a constituent and neighbour to my constituency office, Dr. Jeffrey Mellor, expressing concerns about Bill 52 and the potential infringement on the privacy of his patients.

My final tabling for today, Mr. Speaker, is a letter written by a constituent, Mark Hambridge, to the Minister of Health and Wellness, calling on the government to give more attention to the prevention of colon cancer through screening and, particularly, to decrease wait times for colonoscopies.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. A few quick tablings today. First, I have letters from Dr. Reg McCurry and Michael Longul regarding their concerns on health care coverage reform and delisting of chiropractic services.

Next I have a letter from Ivan Fair, voicing his concerns on the reduction in elective surgeries in Alberta hospitals.

Finally, I'm tabling letters from Lennea Oseen and Alison Dinwoodie, who have both written to express opposition to Bill 44 and the problems they feel such reforms would create.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On the weekend last I had the opportunity of attending the ARA, the Annual Representative Assembly of the Alberta Teachers' Association, but today I have the privilege of tabling the 2008 annual report of the Alberta Teachers' Association and the requisite five copies.

The Speaker: Are there others?

Hon. members, a few minutes ago I read into the record two letters that I'd received from the office of the Ethics Commissioner, one dated May 21, one dated May 22, both entitled General Advice Pursuant to Section 44 of the Conflicts of Interest Act, Re Bill 43, the Marketing of Agricultural Products Amendment Act, 2009 (No. 2). I'm now going to table the appropriate copies for the library. As well, I've asked the pages to circulate to all members copies of both of these letters so that they'll have them for review prior to tonight.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of the hon. Ms Redford, Minister of Justice and Attorney General, responses to questions raised by Ms Notley, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, and Mr. Hehr, the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, on April 22, 2009, in Department of Justice main estimates debate.

Orders of the Day

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 203

Local Authorities Election (Finance and Contribution Disclosure) Amendment Act, 2009

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and move third reading of Bill 203, the Local Authorities Election (Finance and Contribution Disclosure) Amendment Act, 2009.

I'd like to begin by sincerely thanking all hon. members from both sides of the House for productive and thoughtful debate thus far on Bill 203. Through second reading and Committee of the Whole we were able to better examine what this legislation hopes to achieve and the means by which to achieve those goals.

Mr. Speaker, the objective of Bill 203 is to provide all Albertans, regardless of where they live, with minimum campaign finance and contribution disclosure standards in municipal elections, mirroring standards that already exist provincially. The proposal is to do so through several key provisions. First, Bill 203 would limit contributions to municipal candidates to $5,000. This would ensure that all Albertans, regardless of their personal wealth, would be able to contribute meaningfully in local elections by supporting the candidate of their choice. This limit was designed to fall in line with the maximum contributions a provincial candidate and their constituency association could receive from a single donor over a typical term.

Second, Bill 203 would require all candidates to file complete and accurate disclosure statements with the municipality following the conclusion of an election. These statements would be made public, ensuring transparency for voters and protecting candidates from accusations or insinuations of undue influence from particular donors.

A third key element of Bill 203 provides clear direction for the handling of surplus campaign funds following an election. Should a candidate record more than $500 in surplus campaign funds following an election, they must be directed to the municipality, who will hold the funds in trust for use in subsequent elections. This will protect the donors and ensure that donations to campaigns are used for their intended purposes, municipal election expenditures. Should the councillor decide not to run in the subsequent election, the campaign funds held in trust may be directed towards a registered charitable organization. Failing that, they will become the revenue of the municipality.

The fourth key element is the outlining of prohibited corporate organizations for the purposes of donations. These are similar to those prohibited organizations already set out for provincial elections. They will include organizations owned in majority by a municipality or nonprofit organizations who receive municipal grants.

Mr. Speaker, several municipalities across Alberta have paved the way with implementing campaign finance and disclosure rules, and they should be commended for their efforts. Bill 203 was designed to build on these efforts to ensure consistent standards and consistent transparency throughout Alberta.

Members from both sides of the House addressed some very important issues over the course of second reading and Committee of the Whole. Some members suggested Bill 203 should take into consideration the possibility of extending its measures to school trustee elections. As a private member's bill I believe that its scope should be narrow and focused on its intended purpose, to ensure accountability in municipal council elections. I believe such a proposal could be brought forward in future legislation and would be a worthy idea for this Assembly's consideration at the appropriate time.

Furthermore, some members expressed the belief that Bill 203 should make financial contributions to municipal campaigns qualify for a tax credit. I also believe that this proposal could be considered in a future debate in this Assembly, but it does not address the central issue that Bill 203 seeks to address, which is accountability and transparency in municipal elections, and it would impact government revenues, something that is just not practical for a private member's bill to tackle.

I would like to again acknowledge the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona for raising the issue of fairness for trade unions and corporations in Bill 203. The member raised the fact that under the act a trade union and its locals are considered one trade union for the purposes of contribution and that that same restriction did not exist for corporations and those corporations associated with it. In Committee of the Whole this House approved an amendment that addressed that oversight as it was always the intention to mirror the provincial guidelines and ensure that fairness for all parties who participate in the local election process, from individual donors to corporations or trade unions.

Mr. Speaker, it's my hope that these measures included in Bill 203 will keep interest and faith in the local democratic process as high as possible. Ultimately, Bill 203 will ensure the same high level of accountability asked for from provincial and federal campaigns. For these reasons, I encourage my hon. colleagues to support this private member's bill, and I thank them.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I look forward to the remainder of the debate.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise in third reading debate on Bill 203, the Local Authorities Election (Finance and Contribution Disclosure) Amendment Act, 2009. I want to start out by extending my congratulations to the Member for Athabasca-Redwater for bringing forward a good piece of legislation. If we, in fact, pass it today in third, I think this bill will do what he seeks and sets out to do with it, which is bring additional accountability and transparency to the municipal election process.

It brings minimum standards across the board, and they are minimum standards. I would like in many cases to see those standards be perhaps a little more stringent than they are, but at least it gives a consistency, a minimum consistency now across the board in local municipal elections, and I think that's a good thing.

One of the things that the bill does or seeks to do, which I think is important, is to determine and regulate what happens to surplus contributions. I remember the very, very first time that I discovered, I'll say – I don't know that I really discovered anything, but I sort of tuned into it and became aware of the fact – that in my city, Calgary, there really were no controls over that. You know, if an alderman decides to step down, retire, and not run again for city council, they can keep – or they could and still can until this bill becomes law, I guess – whatever surplus they have accumulated, that was left over from the last election and, I suppose, in some cases even in terms of donations that had gone on through their last term of office. I remember thinking to myself: well, that's certainly one way of getting yourself a pension plan, but it's not exactly the most open and transparent and accountable way.

I think that the regulations that this bill sets out around what happens to surpluses address an issue that needs to be addressed and address it in a fair and equitable way, I think, to the benefit of all the voters and all the taxpayers and, ultimately, to candidates and office-holders at the municipal level themselves. We do better by our constituents and by ourselves when we have to disclose.

I note with my four years and a bit of experience the huge gap that sometimes exists between what we do disclose, what is routinely disclosed and available to people, to our constituents, or, you know, anyone else across the province if they wish to go look for it and what they actually take the trouble to go look for. In many, many cases they don't know that it's there for them to find out if they want to go looking for it. It makes me think that perhaps we could and should do a better job of publicizing the rules as they exist already and the rules as they will exist for municipal elections and municipal office-holders under Bill 203, should it become law, because there are many people who do not know what our own situations are in this House, what their city councillors' situations are, what the situations of their federal Members of Parliament are, even though much of that information is there for public consumption as it is.

I think that in general this is a good bill. I, too, as the Member for Calgary-McCall brought up in committee debate, would have liked to have seen contributions to municipal election campaigns become tax deductible simply because they are at the provincial level and they are at the federal level. I understand the member's concern, two concerns really, one about keeping a private member's bill specific and clear and focused and straightforward, the other one being the concern around how a private member's bill would address the impact on government finances that would follow any attempt to make the contributions tax deductible. I don't know how we address that problem, then, other than to have the government bring forward legislation that would do that, and I would urge the government to do that should Bill 203 become law.

As well, my congratulations or acknowledgement or both to the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona for bringing up the issue of fairness and equity relative to trade unions and corporations. My congratulations to the Member for Athabasca-Redwater for addressing that concern with an amendment that passed in the House a week ago. I think that although it may not be perfect, it's a pretty darn good piece of legislation. I know that I intend to support it when the vote is called, I assume, later on this afternoon.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I'll take my seat and let others join the debate.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm also pleased to rise today in this Assembly to speak in favour of Bill 203, the Local Authorities Election (Finance and Contribution Disclosure) Amendment Act, 2009. I have to first preface my comments by thanking the Member for Athabasca-Redwater for putting forth this good piece of legislation. And I have to say that it is Monday, and I am feeling okay, but I have to agree with a lot of the comments of my colleague from Calgary-Currie. The tripartisanship that we're seeing here shows what an important piece of legislation this is and how the Member for Athabasca-Redwater must be commended.

Now, of course, Mr. Speaker, Bill 203 has three main goals that could ultimately improve our democratic system. These include defining minimum standards for financial contributions during municipal elections, ensuring comprehensive and timely disclosure of campaign financial records, and setting a clear directive for dealing with surplus campaign funds.

Strengthening this province's democratic process requires in part the removal of barriers to accessing candidates' information. Provincial candidates already have to disclose their financial information to the public, so it makes sense to extend this transparency to municipal elections. As a result, Mr. Speaker, one of the positive effects of Bill 203 would be a greater public involvement in municipal campaigns. In fact, the greater accountability achieved through this bill would motivate more people to get involved with the campaigns and volunteer. Once people feel that the efforts are going towards a cause that they believe in personally, they may increasingly want to help and contribute to that cause financially.

Mr. Speaker, public participation in these elections enhances the very quality of our governance in this province. This happens because a greater public participation allows the public to have a stronger relationship with the municipal candidates, which in turn helps candidates to better represent their constituents. When people start a process, they tend to feel as though their involvement in the process matters, which in turn encourages them to volunteer. The election process is the foundation of our political system, and improving involvement in these campaigns is the first step towards enhancing our democratic system. In fact, a more democratic system goes hand in hand with greater accountability and transparency, which Bill 203 intends to accomplish.

Bill 203 is based on the principles of accessibility and integrity, which ultimately support the legitimacy of our electoral process. Elections must be accessible and responsive to the needs of voters, and that is my submission. Bill 203 does this by ensuring that the majority retains a vote in municipal campaigns. You may ask why I am talking about the majority when, of course, citation 1 in Beauchesne says that the principles of Canadian parliamentary law are "to protect a minority and to restrain the improvidence or tyranny of a majority." Similarly, it is my submission to this House, Mr. Speaker, that while we want to get away from tyranny of the majority, we also cannot have tyranny of the minority, where a few people, corporations, or unions, who may be wealthy in their means, can simply affect the whole outcome or governance of a campaign or election.

Now, without Bill 203 we run the risk of individual voices, again, taking precedence over the majority, as I mentioned. Funds can be a powerful, influential tool, Mr. Speaker. They're not a bad thing.

Of course, none of us would be here if it wasn't for contributions. But we also have to ensure that certain funds do not have an undue influence on our elections. Enshrining full public disclosure of any and all financial accounting in campaigns allows the public to have greater confidence in our political system and our candidates. Because the absence of rules involves speculation, imaginations can run wild if the public and contributors are unaware of how candidates actually spend their donations or how they obtain them. Bill 203 takes the unknown out of campaign contributions, reducing the possibility or appearance of mishandling even when none may exist.

Mr. Speaker, more and more we are concerned about public engagement and its apparent decline in this province. We have to get more people engaged in our elections so that they become more interested in who represents their views and opinions. Nowhere is this more important than in municipal elections, where we see the lowest turnout. A great way to do this is by disclosing more information to the public so that they know exactly how the campaign process works and how campaign funds are being spent.

Mr. Speaker, elected officials are accountable to the people who voted for them. They have to be open and they have to be transparent about their actions. A more accountable and open campaign process raises public confidence, particularly with those who otherwise might think their involvement did not matter or was of little importance. In this way another mechanism in Bill 203 that would help increase public participation in the democratic process is the limit on the size of campaign contributions, be they from individuals, corporations, or trade unions. This would limit and control the power that such funds could have in campaigns.

When candidates have to rely on a greater number of people to sponsor their campaigns, this allows individual contributors to play a greater role. This allows the individual contributor to feel more significant because his or her donation matters just as much as everyone else's. As a result more people will be inspired to donate, knowing that their contribution matters and is valued by the candidate. In this way we see that the increasing number of contributors has another positive effect on enhancing our democratic system.

Another approach to inspire more people to donate money is to set a clear directive for dealing with surplus campaign funds, which Bill 203 intends to do. The public are more likely to donate money once they are guaranteed it will actually be spent on a campaign and not a retirement policy, as the Member for Calgary-Currie indicated, and that surplus funds are donated to a municipal district or to a registered charity.

In addition, Bill 203 would allow contributors to be eligible for a tax credit which would benefit both candidates and contributors – I believe that there have been some changes that I have just been corrected on, and I apologize to this House. Contributors would be motivated to donate, knowing that they would receive part of this donation back in such a situation. I guess that's a matter to be dealt with on another day.

In short, this bill is a win-win situation. I've said to the Member for Athabasca-Redwater that I don't think he appreciates, probably because he's too humble, how important this legislation is to our democracy, realizing on a go-forward basis how this is going to impact our municipal democracy. Mr. Speaker, this is going to be a model for the rest of this country and maybe even internationally.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to again take this opportunity to thank the hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater for putting forward Bill 203, the Local Authorities Election (Finance and Contribution Disclosure) Amendment Act, 2009. I pointed out in great detail why I support the member and the legislation that he has proposed. I also pointed out that while the federal regulations and restrictions on the amount of money that can be contributed to any candidate are of a stricter nature, this by far is the best we have at a provincial level. Therefore, applying it at the municipal level makes absolute sense. I also appreciate the support and enthusiasm of the Member for Calgary-Egmont for Bill 203.

It will be interesting given our by-election circumstances to see to what extent this bill could potentially be preapplied or at least the intent of this bill. It has been stated in the papers that Diane Colley-Urquhart, an alderperson in the city of Calgary, is potentially seeking the nomination for Calgary-Glenmore. If Bill 203 were to be applied voluntarily by her, she would donate the proceeds from her last campaign to a charity of her choice or possibly, as Bill 203 suggests, directly to the city coffers. To do less would be to go against the intent of Bill 203 and would fly in the face of the potential colleagues she attempts, at least, to join through a by-election process.

Again, I support the need to disclose completely, whether it be at a provincial election, as we already do, whether it be at a municipal election, as Bill 203 proposes to do, and I would like those same disclosure rules extended to any type of party leadership at the provincial level.

Wonderful legislation. Again I want to thank the Member for Athabasca-Redwater for putting forward this highly clarifying piece of legislation, which is truly transparent and accountable. I would hope that future members of this Assembly will take Bill 203 and its intent, when passed, into consideration. I guess they'll have no choice because at that point it will become law.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Additional speakers? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It again is my privilege to rise in support of Bill 203, the Local Authorities Election (Finance and Contribution Disclosure) Amendment Act, 2009. The reason for my, I guess, zest in speaking to this bill is the fact that there has been so much unregulated raising of money for a municipal election. If you look at even the numbers and totals that were raised in municipal elections to run, for instance – I've heard up to a million dollars – for mayor.

I know that in my riding of Calgary-Buffalo, of the two candidates, John Mar, now alderman, ran a campaign of close to $280,000, and Madeleine King, an incumbent alderman who ran against him, spent $250,000. That's an inordinate sum of money, seemingly, to be raised by individuals who are seeking, really, to serve in the community. There are other situations, not just those, that point to the fact that an awful lot of money is given to people to run, seek office in municipal campaigns.

Without the ability, I guess, of there being some sort of limit on the amount given or some contribution guidelines for these people in positions of power, it leads to people being suspicious. I don't know whether there's any need to be suspicious, but I'll tell you what: over the last 100 years of municipal governance here in Alberta, given that there have been these sums of money at play, I would hazard a guess that there may have been one or two instances of maybe some influence being peddled with large contributions to a particular councillor. Now, that just might be my spider sense overacting, but that's sort of what I'd postulate before you.

What these rules and regulations will do is eliminate, hopefully, all of that if there was any or at least the rumour and innuendo around such financing. For instance, it's been long held – the rumour around Calgary was that the developers own city council. That was because, I guess, developers could write big cheques that were for unlimited numbers. Whether that is or is not true, that was some of the suspicion that came from constituents and people in Calgary. They'd look at decisions being made and often say: well, how can that be? Then someone, rightly or wrongly, pipes up: well, the development community pays for our elections here. You know, that was some of the suspicion that was aroused. I believe that this bill will clarify some of that, will allow some people to have more confidence in our civic elections and allow for the disclosure principle to happen by all candidates.

Again, just like the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity said, I believe the disclosure principle should also go to all leadership candidates, those who win or not. It just eliminates that element of suspicion. Although there's probably no reason, it's human nature to sometimes say: well, why was this decision made? It leads us, you know, to make accusations, albeit probably unfounded, on just the simple fact that they are not disclosed. This may have happened a time or two unwittingly by our side in the fact that the current Premier has not submitted his full list of donors to his leadership campaign. We now have suspicions, probably wrongfully, over some of those contributions there. Nonetheless, this type of act by people wanting to go into public service will eliminate the suspicion that unnecessarily surrounds the current situation.

Just briefly, again, I'd like to applaud and commend the member for bringing this bill forward. I believe it is timely and much needed.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for giving me the opportunity to speak to this very important bill.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake to participate.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise today to support Bill 203, the Local Authorities Election (Finance and Contribution Disclosure) Amendment Act, 2009. The ultimate goal of Bill 203 is to help improve confidence in the electoral process. Significant elements of public confidence include citizens feeling as though they have had an opportunity to elect an individual who could satisfactorily represent them and that there is transparency in the election process, particularly with regard to finances.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that the components of Bill 203 would contribute to this objective. Changes proposed to Bill 203 would not only provide individuals with better access to information, thereby improving transparency, but would encourage new individuals to run for municipal office, which would help provide a wider range of nominees for the public to choose from when they vote.

Let me expand, Mr. Speaker. One of the components of Bill 203 limits the size of campaign contributions, a rule which all provincial and federal candidates running for office currently follow. In ensuring that contributions from a single source do not exceed a certain threshold, candidates would require endorsements from several individuals to raise the necessary finances to run an effective campaign. This is an approach that is fundamentally democratic. Candidates are capable of securing the confidence of more members of the public and would be capable of raising more funds. The candidates who secure the funds of more individuals would be in an optimal position to run a campaign with a higher budget. This could encourage new members of the public to consider running for office because they would know that their competitors couldn't rely on being backed by just a few individuals. Furthermore, candidates would feel confident that if they chose to run, they would not be unduly influenced by large contributors.

Mr. Speaker, two other key components of Bill 203 are to ensure that all campaign contributions and expenditures are made public and that any surplus funds are either held in trust or donated to a charity. In addition to providing increased transparency, this element of Bill 203 serves to secure accountability. Candidates would benefit as donors would be more likely to contribute, knowing that if their funds weren't spent during the campaign, they would either be used to fuel a future campaign or donated to a charity or a municipality. Further, in knowing how the candidates manage their campaign finances, the public is able to evaluate whether they feel the money was spent diligently, which can be a testament to the efficiency of the candidates and contributes to their accountability.

Moreover, in ensuring public disclosure, Bill 203 would allow for new candidates to learn how much their rivals had spent on a previous election, perhaps an indication of how much a successful campaign could cost, which in turn would help them better evaluate whether they could be a serious competitor, and if they were to run against an incumbent, they would have the knowledge of how much money remained in trust from the previous campaign. All in all, the information that would be disclosed through Bill 203 would help new candidates evaluate whether they wanted to run and facilitate planning for the kind of support they need during their campaign.

Ultimately, I believe that Bill 203 will legislate changes that would encourage new members from the public to run for office. In turn, this would engage the voters as they would be better able to elect an individual who, they believe, accurately represents them. In fact, Mr. Speaker, I think several components of Bill 203 would allow for greater public engagement. For instance, limiting the size of contributions would ensure that single, modest donations would not be overshadowed by exceptional ones. Donors would be more likely to contribute as they would feel that their contribution was thoroughly important to the candidate in his or her campaign.

Again, it is fundamentally democratic. It would ensure that a single opinion expressed through a donation would not carry significantly more weight than the next. Moreover, Mr. Speaker, contributors and voters could rest assured that finances used to run a campaign were acquired through sincere and diligent means, with the candidate securing contributions from many different individuals or organizations. In addition, because Bill 203 ensures public disclosure of all campaign finances, contributors would know for certain how funds were spent, which would provide them with confidence in the system.

Further, Mr. Speaker, Bill 203 would make donations tax deductible, similar to provincial and federal politics, so individuals would increasingly be motivated to contribute. In addition to knowing that their donations would have an impact on a campaign, they would receive a portion of their donations back.

All in all, Mr. Speaker, Bill 203 would establish rules for municipal campaign finances that would benefit both the candidate and the voter. Candidates would have a more level playing field, all having to secure donations from many different individuals or organizations. Public disclosure of all campaign finances would benefit potential candidates as they would have the opportunity to research previous campaigns and candidates and assert how much an efficient campaign would cost, perhaps resulting in more individuals running for office.

Voters, too, would benefit, as they would have the knowledge of where the finances fuelling a campaign originated and would be certain that candidates are not being unduly influenced. With contributions becoming tax deductible and limitations being placed on their size, more individuals may feel motivated to make a donation.

In all, Mr. Speaker, I believe that Bill 203 would encourage engagement in local politics. For this reason I support Bill 203 and urge all hon. members to do the same. I look forward to the remainder of the debate.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise and join the debate on Bill 203, the Local Authorities Election (Finance and Contribution Disclosure) Amendment Act, 2009, sponsored by the hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater. This bill seeks to regulate the size of financial contributions, to create a standard framework for allocating surplus campaign funds, and to ensure full public disclosure of election revenues and expenses. In essence, the financial requirements in Bill 203 would parallel those found in legislation that currently guides provincial elections within Alberta. Ultimately, these measures would help ensure a high level of transparency and accountability in municipal elections.

This is not to say necessarily that municipal elections are neither transparent nor accountable. However, this bill intends to further strengthen campaign finance rules at the municipal level, benefiting both the electorate and candidates in a municipal election, and would encourage greater public engagement. For example, by creating a maximum for campaign donations, some candidates would no longer simply solicit significant donations from a small group of individuals. In doing so, the influence that individuals may have on candidates through financial contributions, and by extension the election, is significantly reduced. As a result, candidates would be less vulnerable to allegations of impropriety during an election or once elected.

In addition, ensuring full public disclosure of campaign finances allows the electorate to see who is donating to a candidate's campaign. This would allow them to determine what groups or individuals may be trying to forward their interests through campaign contributions. Also, this information would ensure that the voters could identify which candidate most accurately represents the issues that concern them. Mr. Speaker, these are just two examples of many benefits this bill would create in municipal elections.

I would also like to draw the Assembly's attention to how Bill 203 would be instrumental in engaging greater voter turnout in municipal elections. Mr. Speaker, we're all very aware of decreasing voter turnout experienced not only in municipal elections but in all levels of government. An example of this can be seen in the most recent federal elections, where voter turnout reached an all-time low of 59 per cent. However, this situation in Canada is not unique as other countries also experience lower voter turnouts. On average, voter turnouts in both the United Kingdom and the United States have been falling for the latter half of the 20th century.

There are many theories and explanations as to why voters are not showing up at the polls as often, and there have been many studies conducted on how societies can help encourage greater voter participation. However, given the many theories and research studies on the subject, the reality is that there is no one single solution. Mr. Speaker, there are numerous contributing factors as to why individuals decide not to exercise their right to vote. When surveyed, those who chose not to vote cited many reasons for their decision such as being too busy, not interested, or simply not aware of the issues. It is this last reason in particular that I believe Bill 203 would help address.

Knowledge of local issues is paramount if the electorate is to become engaged in a municipal election, and by establishing a campaign contribution maximum, this would help pass on this knowledge. By regulating campaign contributions, individuals or groups would be limited in the amount of money they could donate to a campaign. Consequently, candidates would be limited in how much funds they could receive from individual donors. Rather than raising large amounts of money from a small number of contributors, they would be more concerned with increasing the number of campaign donors. This would likely give more influence to those individuals or groups who traditionally may not have the financial means to contribute significant funds to the campaigns. Given the need to expand their fundraising base, candidates would have to actively engage a greater segment of the voting population. In order to do so effectively, candidates may even have to increase the number of volunteers to broaden their fundraising efforts. Ultimately, we would see more Albertans more deeply engaged and knowledgeable about the issues in their municipality.

In short, all of these measures help to engage greater voter participation. This may also encourage more Albertans to seek municipal office. Individuals may be more willing to put their name on a ballot if they believe they have an equal opportunity to win. This equal opportunity would arise because the financial advantage experienced by those who rely on a small number of donors would be greatly reduced. This would result in a more even playing field for candidates in a municipal election. As more candidates enter a municipal election, the more competitive it may become. Again, this would result in more campaign-related activities and greater community engagement on the issues that affect the local level.

Mr. Speaker, there may not be a catch-all solution to address low voter turnout in municipal elections. However, I do believe that Bill 203 will ultimately lead to greater equality in municipal elections for both the electorate and candidates, resulting in improved voter turnout. It is for this reason that I'm fully supporting Bill 203.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today to speak to Bill 203, the Local Authorities Election (Finance and Contribution Disclosure) Amendment Act, 2009. Some of the fundamental aspects of a successful democracy include openness, accountability, transparency, and fairness. Just from my personal experiences as a newly elected member of this Assembly, I was impressed with the level of scrutiny and reporting with respect to reporting election finances and contributions and expenses. I rise in support of this bill because it works to enhance transparency in the election processes within our province. Further, it enhances consistency across municipalities by standardizing rules related to election contributions and finance disclosure. Consistency and transparency are integral to our democratic process.

Currently under the Local Authorities Election Act municipalities may pass bylaws that require candidates to prepare and disclose statements of all their campaign contributions and expenses. As well, the legislation allows for municipalities to define what should happen to unused campaign contributions. Because municipalities have enacted independent bylaws under this legislation, these and other requirements vary from municipality to municipality. This variation is one of the challenges when it comes to ensuring consistency in accountability and transparency province-wide.

For instance, Edmonton's bylaw requires all candidates to file election statements itemizing contributions that exceed $300 and identifying the donor. The donor may not be anonymous. In fact, under the bylaw if the candidate receives a donation that exceeds $300 from an anonymous donor, they are required to attempt to identify the donor and return their contribution. If they are unable to identify the donor, they are required to give the money to the city manager so that it can be deposited in the city's general revenue fund. Edmonton's bylaw also requires that campaign surpluses be held in trust for candidates' future municipal campaigns. If candidates choose not to run again, they are required by law to donate the funds to a registered charity or to the municipality. In addition, the bylaw requires that all contributions and surpluses be disclosed publicly.

Mr. Speaker, Calgary has also passed a bylaw. However, several elements of the Calgary bylaw differ from those of Edmonton, which exemplify the variation that Bill 203 would address. For example, Calgary's bylaw also requires candidates to track campaign contributions and expenses. However, unlike in Edmonton, candidates in Calgary must disclose the names of an individual donor if their contribution exceeds $101 rather than the $300 in Edmonton. Furthermore, Calgary's bylaw does not make any specific reference to how to manage anonymous donations, as Edmonton's does. In addition, Calgary's bylaw, unlike Edmonton's, requires candidates with campaigns exceeding $2,500 in either contributions or expenses to submit reports that have been audited by a recognized professional accountant.

So, Mr. Speaker, despite similarities in bylaws such as full public disclosure, there are many variations. That would be addressed in Bill 203, ensuring that municipalities are held accountable to exactly the same rules. In fact, there is greater variation throughout the province than those between the bylaws in our two largest cities. Red Deer, for example, also passed a bylaw regarding municipal campaign finance disclosure. It requires, like Edmonton's and Calgary's bylaws, that expenses and contributions be tracked and disclosed. However, in contrast to the two bigger cities, itemized lists of contributions need to be submitted for all donations that exceed $100 versus the $300 in Edmonton or $101 in Calgary. Furthermore, following the election, Red Deer's bylaw requires that campaign surpluses be disclosed to the public and held over for a future election or donated to a charitable organization. This is similar to both Edmonton's bylaw and what is proposed in Bill 203 except that in Red Deer they do not have the option of donating it to the municipality.

In addition to these differences, Mr. Speaker, St. Albert's bylaw introduces even more variety among the municipalities. It requires candidates to have their finances audited not once but twice if their total campaign expenses exceeded $2,500. This is similar to that in Calgary, which also requires large campaigns to be audited, however only once. Currently Edmonton's and Red Deer's bylaws do not require campaign expenses to be audited. Bill 203 would address these variations and can create a standard to ensure a consistent level of transparency in municipal campaign finance for every municipality across the province.

Mr. Speaker, it is evident from these bylaws that municipalities are working towards transparency and accountability, and that is a good thing. All four municipalities I have mentioned require that contributions exceeding a certain threshold are explicitly declared along with the name of the contributor. Bill 203 would simply standardize this threshold so that there would be no variation. It would also ensure disclosure of campaign finances for all municipalities. Further to this, Bill 203 would establish a maximum contribution size for all donors regardless of whether they are an individual, corporation, trade union, or employee organization. It would also standardize directives regarding surplus campaign funds, ensuring that they were disclosed and held in trust for a future campaign or donated to the municipality or a charity.

Mr. Speaker, all components of Bill 203 are about ensuring the integrity of our democratic system and making certain that in municipal elections, like provincial elections, the rules are clear and consistent. In essence, Bill 203 would harmonize the rules related to municipal election campaign finances. Altogether, this consistency would ensure openness and transparency within all the campaigns and all the governments in the province.

For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I stand before the Assembly today in support of the Member for Athabasca-Redwater and Bill 203. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to participate in the discussion today at second reading of Bill 203, the Local Authorities Election (Finance and Contribution Disclosure) Amendment Act, 2009, as proposed by the hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater. Bill 203 seeks to implement standardized regulation on election contributions and financial reporting for local elections in municipal districts, counties, and cities across the province. Similar regulations are now common at the federal and provincial levels and have been implemented with the intent of providing information on campaign contributions to the electorate, therefore reinforcing the fairness and accountability in the electoral process.

Currently Alberta's Local Authorities Election Act does not specify mandatory reporting of the identity of campaign contributors, nor does it specify requirements for reporting and disclosing contribution amounts. However, Mr. Speaker, the act does allow municipal governments to enact bylaws for the regulation of campaign finances at the municipal level. The application section of the legislation reads as follows:

An elected authority may, by a bylaw passed prior to April 15 of a year in which a general election is held require that candidates prepare and disclose to the public statements of . . . their campaign contributions and campaign expenses and may prescribe how campaign contributions not used for campaign expenses must be used.

Through this act, then, the Alberta government allows for municipal districts to implement campaign finance regulation and related disclosure requirements as determined by their citizens and enacted by their officials. Thus far Alberta's three major population centres – the cities of Edmonton, including St. Albert and Strathcona county, as well as Red Deer and Calgary – have enacted bylaws that specify reporting requirements for municipal election campaign finance.

However, Mr. Speaker, the collective bylaws of these municipalities exhibit an assortment of regulation and a lack of consistency. For example, one of these municipalities has included in their bylaws all of the five main components that Bill 203 focuses on, being the total amount of campaign funding where the reporting is required, the amount of a contribution of which reporting is required, minimum expenses for reporting, how to deal with anonymous contributions, and, finally and significantly, how to deal with surplus funds.

For example, Calgary and St. Albert specify that campaigns not exceeding $2,500 in their total budget do not need to report contributions or expenses while Edmonton, Red Deer, and Strathcona county bylaws provide no such detail. Regarding the expense amounts that need to be reported, Edmonton and Strathcona county specify an amount of $50 or more while Calgary specifies an amount of $101 or more. Red Deer and St. Albert do not specify any amounts.

In regard to anonymous contributions, Edmonton, Strathcona county, and Red Deer require that they be reported if the contributor's identity can be established. If identities cannot be established, then their bylaws require that the amounts be donated to the city or county for inclusion in their general revenue funds. Calgary and St. Albert have no such provisions for anonymous donations.

In regard to surplus campaign funds, both Edmonton and Red Deer require that such funds be held in trust until the future candidacy of the respective candidate while Calgary, St. Albert, and Strathcona county do not have such requirements pertaining to these funds.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, in regard to contribution amounts, each of the aforementioned municipalities – Strathcona county, St. Albert, Edmonton, Red Deer, and Calgary – specifies threshold contribution amounts where it is required that the size and identity of the contribution be reported. For example, Edmonton and Strathcona county require that all contributions of $300 or more be reported, St. Albert requires that all donations greater than $200 be reported, and Red Deer and Calgary require that all donations greater than $100 be reported.

It is clear then, Mr. Speaker, that the aforementioned municipalities have included provisions in their legislation for some of the categories Bill 203 focuses on, but not all. I must emphasize the importance, though, of these municipalities leading the way in establishing campaign finance standards. It is proper and fitting that they have recognized the importance of such measures to improve the transparency and accountability of the election process. With Bill 203 we as a government can consolidate such efforts by standardizing the campaign financial disclosure requirements, providing clarity and leadership for all municipalities consistent with our duties to ensure a thriving democracy for all Albertans.

Bill 203 will harmonize the direction that municipalities have taken in campaign finance regulations, implementing changes that will be consistent with provincial and federal legislation that regulates election campaign finances and has largely been deemed a success. Such measures truly resonate with the electorate, Mr. Speaker, and I wholly believe that they are crucial to the vitality of the electoral process. In recognizing the merit of the election campaign bylaws that I have mentioned for Strathcona county, St. Albert, Edmonton, Red Deer, and Calgary, I believe Bill 203 focuses on all the right areas of the election campaign finances to ensure transparency and accountability for all Alberta voters.

I stand today to support Bill 203 and urge my fellow members to do the same. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Do any other members wish to speak?

The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater to close debate.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure to rise and conclude debate on Bill 203, the Local Authorities Election (Finance and Contribution Disclosure) Amendment Act, 2009. In recent years both federal and provincial governments in Canada have elevated the discussion of how to make elections even more accountable and transparent to voters, and they have acted. In 2006 the new Conservative government fulfilled an election promise by enacting the Federal Accountability Act, ensuring the most open and free federal elections in Canadian history. Here in Alberta the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act governs provincial parties, constituency associations, and provincial candidates to ensure openness and fairness, that Albertans demand and deserve in provincial elections.

In recent years provincial governments across Canada have begun to debate how to extend many of these key provisions to the municipal level of government. This is because, as members know, provincial governments are charged with developing the regulations that govern the structure and functions of a municipality. Provinces such as Ontario, British Columbia, and Quebec have already enacted legislation to govern municipal elections, finances, and disclosure statements, and the objective of Bill 203 was to bring such legislation to Alberta. Numerous municipalities across the province – such as Edmonton, Strathcona county, even Red Deer – have already taken a lead on campaign finance and disclosure reform.

Mr. Speaker, all municipal councillors should be applauded for their hard work and dedication to honest and open government. Bill 203 builds on their efforts and will extend the same accountability demanded of provincial candidates to all Alberta municipal candidates. This will ensure certainty for municipal candidates across the entire province as to who is permitted to contribute to their campaign, how much contributors are able to donate, how surplus campaign funds may be used, and what reporting of finances is required. Because of these measures Albertans will feel an even increased confidence in the already high integrity of their municipal elections, and for these reasons I encourage all hon. members to vote in favour of Bill 203.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 203 read a third time]

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 205 Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure (Third Party Advertising) Amendment Act, 2009

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'd like to stand and speak to Bill 205, the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure (Third Party Advertising) Amendment Act, 2009. Yes, we definitely do need a shorter name for bills in the future. It's quite a mouthful.

This Bill 205, Mr. Chair, puts clear parameters around third-party advertising during provincial elections. One of the main thoughts in crafting this bill was to find that delicate balance between protecting free speech and the right of people to express their views during an election period. We want that. We want the free expression of views from all over the spectrum. That's healthy for democracy. We wanted to make sure that we balanced that right to free speech and the principles that that upholds with making sure that we had an even and balanced and fair election playing field, to make sure that the size of one's wallet would not unduly influence the outcome of the election, rather that the quality of an idea and its ability to foster public support and grassroots financial support from hundreds, thousands, even tens of thousands of voters would determine whether or not a third party's idea would be believed in and agreed with. That's the balance that we tried to strike.

There are many jurisdictions across the country and across North America and across the world that have laws governing third-party financing. We took a long look at those and decided on kind of a hybrid of many different ones, a more made-in-Alberta approach. The approach we took is that we would place third parties for the purposes of political advertising during elections on the same level playing field as political parties. The reason we wanted to do that is that if we were to use what other jurisdictions had used and put, say, a cap of a certain amount of money that a third party could spend on election advertising, then basically we'd be giving political parties the monopoly of speech during an election period, and that's not what we wanted to accomplish either. We wanted it to be fair. What we decided to bring forward was a piece of legislation that would place third parties on the same playing field as political parties.

For example, political parties have to go out and raise funds that they can use during elections. They can have $15,000 in a nonelection year donated to their cause from an individual or a corporation, et cetera, or $30,000 in an election year. We have now applied that exact same contribution limit to third parties.

Political parties have to set up election accounts for their party. The money goes into those accounts, it's accounted for, and then they can spend and purchase election advertising or campaign brochures. Whatever they want they can purchase out of that account. It's a transparent document that's registered with Elections Alberta. Well, now third parties will have to abide by those same principles and those same rules.

There's disclosure for political parties when someone donates over $375 worth of contribution. Now third parties will also have to identify their donors who give in excess of $375. That is another similarity between third parties and political parties that this legislation will create.

The most important thing that we've done, in my view, is that we have not capped election advertising spending. I think that's important. The reason is that let's just say that a third party comes along, third party A, and they come up with just a brilliant idea, but it's not an idea that caters to big interests or people that are wealthy or anything like that. It's an idea that has the support of a large percentage of the population but maybe not popular with the richer and more wealthy, well-to-do segments of society. Well, that group should be able to raise, in my view, the funds necessary to get their viewpoint across to the people of Alberta. That would mean that they would need to spread their idea to a large base of people because they would need little donations of $10, $20, $30, $40 in order to get their idea across to Albertans and be able to in their case hopefully sway the vote.

If they're able to raise, say, $2 million or $3 million or $4 million or $5 million from tens of thousands of different donors across the province, I don't think it's fair to say: "No. Sorry. I know that that's a great idea and so many people support it, but we're only going to allow $150,000 of that $5 million you raised to be spent on this idea." I think that is too restrictive. The federal government and the B.C. government went that way and capped the amount a third party can spend on election advertising. I don't think that that is the way to go, especially in Alberta, especially in a place where we believe in free speech and we believe that an idea should proceed or not proceed on its merits.

Those are kind of some of the thoughts that went into this bill.

I'd like to thank the Assembly for the debate. It's been a very healthy debate. I just hope that they would support this bill as currently written. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Do any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I suppose it's not terribly surprising that I might have a different opinion on an issue than the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere. I appreciate his putting forward his ideas. The beauty of this House is the opportunity to exchange a variety of ideas.

For me Bill 205 is an act involving suppression as opposed to freedom of speech, of gagging as opposed to communicating. If a group feels sufficiently concerned about an issue, I think they have the right to promote that issue. I personally don't like attack ads. I would prefer to point out what should be done as opposed to, particularly, how badly something has been done.

I'll state for the record that when I first ran as an MLA in Calgary-Foothills in 2001, at the time I was not in support of provincial Liberal attack ads on the government. I believe that was a major factor that contributed to fewer Liberals being elected in 2001, the negative-style attack ads that are more frequently seen in federal campaigns. Whether the attack ad is a puffin flying over a would-be Prime Minister or whether it's the "you've been out of this country for so long" and "you're in it for yourself" types of ads, I don't believe negative ads contribute anything, whether they're from a third party or from a political party. However, I do believe that third parties have a right to establish not only what they believe is in the best interests of their particular membership, as may be the case in a union or an association, but what they believe to be in the best interests of Albertans as a whole.

I had the dubious honour of being a member of the negotiating subcommittee for local 38 of the Alberta Teachers' Association in 1993 and 1994. With regard to Bill 205, Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure (Third Party Advertising) Amendment Act, 2009, that year, I think, it would have been highly appropriate to have pointed out the effects on education of cutbacks, the effect of teachers being let go, class sizes increasing. Then in 1994 again I was a member of the negotiating subcommittee who brought back to my less-than-enthused membership the notion of a 5 per cent cut in salary and in operating fund support for education. Similarly, unions connected with nurses or doctors were very concerned about the cutbacks that were not just a year in length but lasted over a series of years and drove a number of professionals, both teachers and medical personnel, out of this province.

Now, at that point, if they so desired, they could have put forward arguments in favour of education, in favour of a strong health care system. But I'm not sure with Bill 205 if they would have run into difficulties. If in the future teachers want to point out the importance of having a full-day kindergarten, for example, or if they want to point out during an election that it would be very important to have half-day junior kindergarten – or what if teachers pointed out that the government needed to live up to its commitments during the last education discussion with regard to pupil-teacher ratios? Would Bill 205 prevent those issues from being raised? These are questions that I'm putting out there as well as concerns.

If there are limitations on the freedom of speech as opposed to an attack, does Bill 205 still allow for that same freedom of speech opportunity to be provided if you have a concern? Possibly it's the thought or the perception that rural hospitals may be closed. Say you're a member of the Health Sciences Association. Are you able on behalf of your membership to state, "We as a union are concerned about potential effects of closures of hospitals on not only our membership that serves those hospitals but on Albertans as a whole, whose health care is concerned"? Would that be, under Bill 205, a discontinued or a nonallowable process?

If a group of farmers, beef producers, got together and said, "We think that there's a better way to market our beef; we think that age verification is important," during an election would Bill 205 prevent beef producers from pointing out something that is in their common interest? I am hoping that further on in our Committee of the Whole discussion somebody can delineate for me what is allowed in terms of promotion versus what is disallowed in terms of the potential view of attack.

The whole notion of Bill 205 limiting free speech concerns me. As I began, I am not concerned about sort of working on the negative aspects. Well, my personal view is that negative attack ads have the reverse, that they create a degree, a potential of sympathy for the individual being attacked as opposed to pointing out the lack of capabilities of those who are under attack.

I look forward to rising again in committee on Bill 205 following these clarifications. I'm hoping that freedom of speech, freedom of opinion, even freedom of assembly, which was denied to teachers at one point prior to the Learning Commission being set up – it was stated that teachers were not allowed to gather in groups of two or more to discuss the potential of a strike. That right of assembly was denied prior to the Learning Commission report coming out. So I'm hoping that that type of suppression is not the intent of Bill 205. I look forward to further debate and clarification, whether it be the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere or any other member of this House. Whether they have come from a legal background or a professional background, it is of no consequence to me; I look forward to their input.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I'm pleased to have this opportunity to also join the discussion on Bill 205, the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure (Third Party Advertising) Amendment Act, 2009. I hope I got that right.

When I first was discussing this just with some colleagues, somebody suggested that either I or the government had no plan. However, Mr. Chairman, since the administration took office, our government has been steadfast in our efforts to implement measures to improve both openness and accountability. Bill 205 complements these measures.

In particular, I refer members here to section 39.2, which proposes guidelines for applicants who qualify to register third-party advertising accounts. Our government recognizes that new democratic reforms for these applicants as outlined in Bill 205 need to be thorough if they are to be, indeed, effective. Section 39.2 of this bill strikes a balance between setting appropriate registration guidelines for third-party accounts while upholding their rights to express perspectives on various issues.

Mr. Chair, I reaffirm that the intent of this legislation is not to impede third parties from voicing opinions but to establish guidelines to allow Albertans to know who's attempting to influence them throughout a provincial election. To achieve this, I submit that third parties that will incur expenses over the prescribed limit during an election will be required to register an account. However, we have limited some entities from sponsoring an account directly in an effort to restrict those groups that may present a challenge to increased disclosure and fairness.

I refer specifically to section 39.2(5) and its provisions that list those applicants who are restricted from registering. Some of those parties listed pose obvious conflicts of interest, while others are simply restricted in an effort to close potential loopholes. Pursuant to section 39.2(5) the list begins with provision (a), which denotes "numbered corporations." I believe that there are over 1.4 million corporations in this province to date, so this could be just any corporation where people can't distinguish them. Now, as anyone with a marketing background will acknowledge, one disadvantage to having a corporation named by numbers only is that it provides very limited, if any, information about the identity of the business. Provision (a) exemplifies a key objective of Bill 205 in that it aims to inform voters. Prohibiting numbered corporations from sponsoring accounts sets a precedent that will encourage third parties who attempt to persuade voters to bare their identity.

Provision (b) will restrict any organization "that has not carried on business for one year prior to making its application" pursuant to this act. Additionally, part (c) further restricts "an organization whose primary purpose is to engage in political advertising" from sponsoring a third-party account. The intention of these provisions is to ensure that third-party political advertising is conducted in an open and a democratic manner. Through these provisions we are limiting avenues that could potentially allow third parties to exploit these accounts for political gain as well as to remain de facto anonymous.

However, some organizations will be restricted from operating in this capacity for other reasonable purposes. The restriction is set in place with provision (d), that "a registered charity within the meaning of section 248(1) of the Income Tax Act (Canada)" is not able to register an account. These organizations, such as nonprofits, collect funding in order to provide ostensibly benevolent services; therefore, realizing expenses for political advertising could potentially undermine their charitable causes. Now, Mr. Chair, we all know that this government offers very generous tax credits under our own tax code, and the purpose, I submit, for these charities, is exactly for that. It's for charities. It's not for a particular political activity. That's what this legislation goes through.

Building on provisions (a) through (d) inclusive within section 39.2(5), there are provisions for restricting political professionals and organizations from operating a third-party account. The provisions restrict the following individuals or entities:

- (e) a candidate for election;
- I think we've all been there.
- (f) a registered political party;
- (g) a registered constituency association;
- (h) a member of Parliament;
- (i) a member of the Senate;
- (j) a member of the Legislative Assembly.

Mr. Chairman, these individuals or entities, if allowed to sponsor a third-party account, would be in direct conflict of interest. Yes, I am aware of this. This is due to the fact these individuals and entities have other means by which they can advertise political messaging, so it may in fact not be appropriate for them to use third-party advertising mechanisms.

Indeed, I believe that we have before us guidelines for comprehensive registration and reporting requirements for third parties. Whether for the purpose of supporting or opposing registered political parties or a candidate through advertisements appearing in print, broadcast, or online, third parties pursuant to Bill 205 will now have a more accountable system in which to conduct their activities. Having third parties disclose information and adhere to these guidelines will serve to strengthen Alberta's electoral process.

Mr. Chair, Bill 205 will usher in a new level of accountability for political disclosure in provincial elections, and I urge all hon. members in this Assembly to stand in support of this legislation. I must also add my personal thanks to the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere for sponsoring such an excellent piece of legislation.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. It is a privilege to rise and speak to Bill 205, the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure (Third Party Advertising) Amendment Act, 2009. At least, I believe that's what we're on. It was a bill just introduced by the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere. I've heard some of the debate that has gone on, and this is, in fact, my first time to speak to the amendments.

I appreciate the intent of the bill in that it attempts to sort of look at third-party contributions and maybe rein them in to a certain extent. Yet I think that in this situation it is better for us to err on the side of caution. I think this would be too much fundamentally an attack on freedom of speech.

As I mentioned earlier today in my member's statement, freedom of speech is the cornerstone of every liberal democracy in the world. Canadians have fought and died to protect this freedom, and in no small way should we be interfering with this right of citizens to take part in freedom of speech. We can see that now being, I guess, done in this manner, and I think it really is one of those situations where the government should not be deciding who or what or if anybody would want to comment on the status of the government, the status of whatever they'd like. The government should not be involved in regulating that speech or in any rules intended to be used for limiting that speech by third-party organizations. Now, it's fine to have rules and regulations for the people who are running for office, who are running in elections, or for limiting the amount of advertising, say, of a political party. That, to me, would be a fair and reasonable gesture. It would allow for a level playing field for people taking part in an electoral process so that the battle of ideas could truly be heard by constituents.

I don't believe that limiting freedom of speech in terms of third parties being able to comment on the democratic process is what we are here to do. If we take a look at some of the examples used by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, it would have effectively eliminated many of our trade unions pooling together their money and contributing to advertising for what they full well stand for and believe in. I guess I say this is more of an attack on their individual freedom of speech than it ever would be for any government in power. Let's face it. Those individuals who have been part of a union have contributed to a fund, and I guess that if they disagree with what those funds are contributing to doing, they can full well quit the union and go work somewhere else. Needless to say, by limiting their freedom of speech, we are in fact taking away an avenue that they as individuals who have started to work together and bind together on how to organize their workplace and how they're going to take part in the political process – we are starting to interfere in that. That's something I do not believe should be happening: governments interfering in that process.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity also brings up the fact that the teachers' union, the Alberta Teachers' Association, could have been stifled by this type of legislation should they have wished to advertise on the airwaves about the unfair and unjust cutbacks to education in the early '90s or if they wanted to talk about whatever it is the ATA, the Alberta Teachers' Association, would like to discuss. They should as an organization be allowed to use their resources collected by members in whatever fashion they see fit. This is a fundamental attack on their ability and their free speech rights as entertained under the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

I also heard the earlier comment by the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere regarding freedom of speech, his suggestion or comment that his government is more in favour of freedom of speech than, say, other relative governments or other jurisdictions. But I'd challenge him on that opinion. If we look at this bill, at its core, it's a limit to free speech. If we look at the bill, what many people have been calling for in the human rights and multiculturalism act is a return to 1996 protections under the human rights code as advocated by the Sheldon Chumir foundation. That isn't being followed up. Again, we're not moving to extend free speech in this province; we're looking to limit it, it appears, at every turn.

On that note, I have appreciated the opportunity to come up and speak for, I guess, civil rights, for the protection of democracy and individuals' or groups' rights to partake in advertising in elections – I believe it is a fair comment – for those organizations to use their funds to advocate for change or changes, whatever that may be. I thank you for the opportunity, for allowing me to speak at the committee stage. I guess that in the meantime and in-between time that's it for now.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise today and join in the Committee of the Whole debate on Bill 205, the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure (Third Party Advertising) Amendment Act, 2009. I would first like to commend the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere for bringing forward a notable amendment to a very important piece of legislation. Bill 205 proposes to clarify the parameters of third-party spending for election advertising during provincial elections.

While this bill has many points worthy of support and discussion, I would like to focus my comments this afternoon on the term that is key to this amendment act, the definition of third-party advertising, found under section 39.1(1)(c) of the legislation. Bill 205 defines third-party advertising as "political advertising that appears during an election period and is placed by a third party." Mr. Chairman, I think everyone in this Assembly would agree that it is important to have a comprehensive understanding of a specific word and term prior to using it, especially when dealing with legislation. Ambiguity could create confusion, which, in turn, could detract from the intent of this bill. Therefore, the definition of third-party advertising in Bill 205 provides clarity as it contains three terms that are also defined under subsection 39.1(1).

Before delving into part (c), each of those terms needs to be explained as they are essential to understanding the meaning of the definition of third-party advertising. The first term I'd like to clarify is "election period." Under Bill 205 an election period commences the day the writ is dropped and concludes at the end of the polling day. Mr. Chairman, according to Alberta's Election Act the 14th day after the writ is dropped is nomination day, and 14 days after that the voting takes place. An exception occurs if the 14th day is a holiday, in which case the voting occurs on the next day that is not a holiday. Therefore, the election period in Alberta is typically 28 days, according to the definition described under section 39.1(1)(a) of Bill 205 and qualified by the Election Act.

The second term I'd like to touch on is "political advertising." We all know that companies advertise and attempt to entice consumers to purchase their products. Similarly, parties engage in political advertising in an attempt to sell a political platform or a candidate or to dissuade you from continuing to support your current candidate or platform of choice. According to Bill 205, political advertising means advertising "with the purpose of promoting or opposing any registered party or the election of a candidate, for which there is or normally would be a charge." Political advertising also includes advertising that takes a position on an issue a political party or candidate may be associated with, bearing some exceptions such as the publication of free news, editorials, and interviews, which are detailed in the legislation.

The final term contained within the definition for third-party advertising is “third party.” As detailed in Bill 205, a third party refers to “a person, including a trade union, employee organization, corporation and any other organization that would qualify for registration under section 39.2” Section 39.2, entitled Registration Requirement for Third Parties, outlines both the requirements for the third-party registration and details that must be included in an application for registration. Simply put, if a party’s advertised expenses are or are anticipated to be $1,000, they are considered a third party and are required to apply for registration. That, Mr. Chairman, brings us back to the definition of third-party advertising.

Bill 205 defines third-party advertising as “political advertising that appears during an election period and is placed by a third party.” As you can see, the wording of the definition is comprehensive and straightforward, and since the three terms contained within the definition are also covered by the legislation, it leaves little room for confusion or misinterpretation. Accordingly, if you expand that definition and generalize it, third-party advertising essentially means advertising by a party whose advertising expenses to promote or oppose any registered party or candidate in an election are at least $1,000 during the 28 days after the writ is dropped.

Clarity is key when dealing with legislation, and clear legislation is the foundation of transparent and accountable governments. This government is committed to transparency, Mr. Chairman. To this end, the proposed amendments in Bill 205, especially those contained in section 39.1(1), are vital to ensuring third-party election advertising transparency. I commend the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere for bringing forward legislation that aligns with that ideal.

I fully back Bill 205, and I hope the hon. members of this Assembly will add their support to mine to pass this important amendment to the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I very much appreciate the opportunity provided for the democratic process under the Committee of the Whole structure. It allows for a flow of ideas not permitted, for example, under second reading, where you have a 20-minute, if you’re leading off the debate, a 15- to 10-minute opportunity. The beauty of Committee of the Whole is that it allows for an exchange, a discussion, a collaboration. It’s interesting, for example, the support that all parties gave towards Bill 203. That’s a great example of collaborative efforts.

With regard to Bill 205, when I last stood up, I put forward a challenge. I put forward a request, and that was: can you show me or demonstrate to me or explain to me that Bill 205, the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure (Third Party Advertising) Amendment Act, 2009, rather than allowing for a third party to have a level platform of opportunity to express views – what I said was: show me that this isn’t actually stifling the opportunity to put forward ideas that may be contrary to those of a particular party, most frequently contrary to the ideas of the ruling party.

Now, what I find interesting is that on the same Order Paper we have bills 203, 205, and 206. Bill 203 talked about tightening up regulations. After a fact Bill 205 does the same. It talks about tightening up the regulations for third-party advertising. On the record, I have no problem with the tightening up of regulations. The expectation that a third party would have to undergo similar divulging, accountability, transparency as the current political party: I have no problem with those ideas. However, as the hon. member who preceded me pointed out, the definition of what falls under political advertising is not as clear as it might be. If you put forward a view in terms of “I’m looking for support for reducing the size of a classroom,” is that political advertising because it takes place during a campaign period, or is that simply a notion that I am upholding? So again I ask what falls under the idea of political advertising. Anything that happens within the writ period, whether it’s putting forward a positive idea that you would like to embrace: is that considered political advertising, or is it only, in Bill 205, some form of confrontational advertising? Is there a difference between positive and negative advertising, and how do you tell whether they’re political?

One of the best innovations that this government has brought forward in the last number of years is the idea of the all-party standing policy committees because, like the Committee of the Whole, there is an opportunity to combine efforts, to put our collective minds together and come up with something which is better through our Committee of the Whole or standing policy committee process than any individual, whether they’re the proposer, or proponent, of a bill or not. I would hope that in our continuing discussion over Bill 205, the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure (Third Party Advertising) Amendment Act, 2009, somebody will come up and clearly demark for me, create the lines of demarcation between what is simply putting forward an idea that we would like to have considered and potentially adopted by a party, whether it be government or opposition – during an election period, is that putting forward of an idea considered political advertising?

That lack of clarification makes me a little bit suspicious or, at least at this point, withholding of full support for Bill 205 because I am yet to be convinced that Bill 205 promotes and acknowledges the need for freedom of speech as opposed to suppressing it. But I am pleased to see that the hon. member and mover of Bill 205, the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, is here and has heard my concerns and may wish to answer them. Does Bill 205 limit the opportunity to put forward ideas? How do we define political ideas? Are they strictly political because they’re brought up during the writ period? What allowances are there for freedom of speech within that writ period?

We have all experienced as we campaigned prior, of course, to the introduction of Bill 205 the public forums and the opportunity to debate, and we have all beat the bushes, some more successfully than others, in terms of raising campaign donations. Ideally, we wouldn’t need to worry about third-party advertising or limits on it as Bill 205 puts forward. We would be able to be champions for individuals regardless of whether they were members of unions or associations, whether they were mothers or fathers or students that were age 18 and older and had an opportunity to vote. Ideally, they would look at our campaign literature and they would say: this is an individual I can support. But the reality is that individuals and organizations have the right, at least prior to the passing of Bill 205, to put forward an alternative viewpoint, and if Bill 205 limits that opportunity for freedom of speech, then I see it as a regressive move.

I am looking for clarification. I will sit down, and hopefully that clarification can be provided.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I do have an amendment which I am going to propose be circulated.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. We’ll pause for a moment while the pages distribute the amendment.

Dr. Brown: Mr. Chairman, I move that in Committee of the Whole Bill 205, Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure (Third Party Advertising) Amendment Act, 2009, be amended by the addition of the amendment as circulated, which states that the following is added after section 39.4: 39.41(1), that a third party shall not incur election advertising expenses of a total of more than $3,000 to promote or oppose the election of one or more candidates in a given electoral district, including by naming them, showing their likenesses, identifying them by their respective political affiliates, or taking a position on an issue with which they are particularly associated; and 39.41(2), that the limit set out in 39.41(1) only applies to an amount incurred with respect to a leader of a registered party, or eligible party, to the extent that it is incurred to promote or oppose his or her election in a given electoral district.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, what you just read is the amendment, or were you clarifying the amendment?

Dr. Brown: No. What I read is the amendment. Is there an issue with . . .

The Deputy Chair: Well, that's not what the amendment that we have says.

Dr. Brown: The amendment as circulated. Yes. I'm sorry. It's the amendment as circulated.

The Deputy Chair: Okay.

Dr. Brown: If I could just clarify that, then, for the record, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: Yes.

Dr. Brown: It states:

39.41(1) Subject to subsection (2), a third party shall not incur political advertising expenses of a total amount of more than $3000 during an election period to promote or oppose the election of one or more candidates in a given electoral division.

That's the extent of it.

Mr. Chairman, I do support the bill, and I commend my colleague and fellow member of the Alberta bar, the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, for bringing forth his bill. The thrust of his bill is to put limits on the amounts which any person or entity can contribute to a third party. However, I believe that a small amendment, that I'm proposing, would strengthen the bill and make it a stronger piece of legislation. I think that the amendment would level the playing field by limiting outside interference in local constituency elections. The proposal that I'm making is to add a provision that would limit spending in any one electoral district, for or against any candidate, to $3,000.

This amendment, Mr. Chairman, tracks the provision already in federal legislation, and in my estimation it would prevent the perversion of a fair election by third parties and special-interest groups which might blanket a riding with ads or single out candidates for an overwhelming campaign. I would note that the limit of $3,000, which I'm proposing in the amendment, is identical to the limit already in the federal legislation and that federal ridings are over three times larger than our provincial constituencies. So the amount is a generous one, in my estimation.

Mr. Chairman, I want to talk very briefly about what happens in the United States right now with respect to some elections. In the United States spending by third parties and special-interest groups has been shown to be a real problem, and it is really a situation which is perverting democracy. It hasn't happened here yet, but I think that when we look to the south of us, we can see what might happen, where dirty politics become the norm, where huge sums of money are needed to fight very close elections, where Congressmen and Senators accept huge contributions from special-interest groups which, in turn, expect favourable treatment, where American elections have been influenced by big spending from third parties. These are known as political action committees. We haven't called them that yet in the bill, but political action committees in the U.S. spend millions of dollars to promote the interests of specific industries or business interests. They target specific candidates in specific ridings, often with considerable effect.

Mr. Chairman, as I've said, we haven't yet seen large-scale involvement of third-party interest groups in Alberta's individual electoral districts. However, the expensive attack ad campaign which was organized by certain labour organizations during the last election might be a harbinger of changes to come. If such resources were allocated against individual candidates in specific electoral districts, they could significantly affect the outcome of an election. Third-party interests with deep pockets and self-centred interests should not be permitted to manipulate the democratic process by buying up media space and attempting to push a certain political agenda against an individual candidate.

In Alberta we have no limits on campaign spending by candidates or by parties, and this amendment would not change that situation. Nothing in the proposed amendment alters the total amount which could be spent by a third party during an election in the province as a whole or in a given city or in a region. Nothing in the amendment restricts the amount which political parties can spend in any given electoral district. That remains unlimited. The amendment doesn't control the use of attack ads. The proposed amendment would not in any way control total spending, nor does it affect spending in specific areas, cities, or districts. Only as long as it does not single out specific candidates would those totals be allowed. The amendment only addresses limits on advertising for or against individual candidates in a given electoral district.

Mr. Chairman, the danger is that without some type of spending limit on third parties, a political campaign could become extremely one sided. Different political views could be prevented from having a fair airing. In my submission the danger lies not just in the influence of the election; I think the greater danger lies in the intimidation of members of the House or candidates for public office in taking strong stands or expressing their honestly held beliefs.

I think that right now in the United States, if we look at what happens with Senate and Congress elections down there, there is a chilling effect that these third-party spending campaigns have with respect to many of those controversial issues, whether they be for or against. [Dr. Brown coughed repeatedly]

Mr. Chairman, in view of my present situation, I think I'll sit down. I would urge members to support the amendment.

The Deputy Chair: On the amendment the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I wish the hon. member a speedy recovery.

I'm honoured by the fact that the hon. member who's proposing this amendment to Bill 205 – I'm assuming we'll call it A1 – is a Calgary-Varsity constituent. I believe that we have a type of rarified air in Calgary-Varsity that naturally promotes good ideas. The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development is also a Calgary-

Varsity member, and we all know some of the wonderful ideas with regard to sustainable development.

Speaking specifically to amendment A1, as I've stated earlier, I don't believe in slime politics or mud throwing. I believe in putting forward an idea that has merit on its own as opposed to tearing down one that doesn't. The reason I am here today is because the ideas I proposed were considered superior to those of the candidates who ran against me. What this amendment A1 is proposing is that no individual or third party has the right to basically slime or toss mud at an individual beyond the amount of $3,000; in other words, "advertising expenses of a total amount of more than $3000 during an election." I'm quoting from 39.41(1) of amendment A1, just to qualify the comments. Instead, we have the opportunity of supporting an individual for what they stand for and the ideas they put forward as opposed to spending money on attacks.

Now, during campaigns when I've had signs destroyed, I've said to the individuals who were apprehended: why did you not spend this time and this energy in terms of supporting an opposing candidate whose views you felt were closer in mind to yours? What this does is it eliminates or at least limits negative advertising, and the other side of that coin is, hopefully, promotes positive advertising. Work for the candidate of your choice. Financially support the candidate of your choice. Get positive as opposed to getting negative.

This afternoon as we further discuss A1, given the limited time we have remaining, I think you'll get a chance to see democracy in action because I have presented the pro side of the support for A1. I support the Member for Calgary-Nose Hill for bringing forward this amendment as I believe it strengthens the intent of Bill 205, and I look forward to other discussion, pro or con.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere to the amendment.

Mr. Anderson: Yup. On the amendment. I'd like to speak to the amendment from the hon. member. First of all, I'd like to point out the incredible contradiction in the argument of the Member for Calgary-Varsity. It's just mind boggling to me how he can stand and say that he's against Bill 205 because it restricts free speech, and then an amendment is brought forward to effectively restrict certain types of free speech, which he is for. It's like you were for the bill before you voted against it. Or I don't know.

Mr. Liepert: That's kind of typical.

Mr. Anderson: It's pretty typical. Exactly.

Anyway, we'll get down to the actual amendment here. I appreciate the amendment being brought forward, and I understand the spirit behind it, but I will not be supporting this amendment, and I would urge my colleagues not to support it, as well. I do so for several reasons.

The first is that it undercuts what I tried to do when drafting this and what I tried to do as I talked with different colleagues and different interest groups and stakeholders on this issue. There was a feeling that we had to get the right balance between making sure we protected free speech while at the same time making sure that we created an equal playing field for democratic participants, for third parties, for political parties, et cetera.

The way we went about doing that is by saying: okay, we're all going to be in the sandbox together, we're all in the election together here, so let's everyone play by the same rules. Whether you're a political party, whether you're a third party, if you want to advertise an election you've got to raise your funds in the same way that everyone else raises them. You've got to get a whole bunch of grassroots support together to raise those funds and in relatively small donations. We're not talking about in increments of $100,000 dollars or in amounts of $1 million. You have to raise them in amounts of $15,000 or less from many hundreds or thousands of people around the province, and then during the election we can use those funds to purchase advertising and to conduct campaigns, et cetera.

If we were to do this, if we were to limit the amount you could spend in any one constituency against a candidate to $3,000, in effect we would be placing a rule and a restriction on a third party that a political party does not have to abide by. So there's an inconsistency there. What's good for one participant should be good enough for another. If somebody were to target a riding, if someone were to target, say, the riding in Calgary-Varsity, the Liberal Party could then target that riding as well in order to defend it.

Or if someone was targeting Airdrie-Chestermere and I needed some help from the Progressive Conservative Party, well, we would have the right to spend as much money as we wanted on that riding. We could spend whatever – $100,000, $150,000, whatever it is – to make sure that we were fairly defended against the attack of a third party who got their funds because they had an idea that resonated with hundreds or thousands of Albertans enough to raise a sizable sum of money. In other words, there might be some merit to that. That's part of the democratic process, and that's part of free speech. So I would say that this amendment undercuts the level playing field that we were talking about.

Secondly, I do think that logistically this will be a very difficult amendment to implement. Let's look at the amendment. It says, "a total amount of more than $3000 during an election period to promote or oppose the election of one or more candidates in a given electoral division." One or more candidates: well, what does that mean? Let's say that there are three ridings in the city and you have $15,000 that you want to spend on political advertising, does that mean you divide the $15,000 by three? Then it's $5,000, so that's over the limit, so you have to bring down the amount of money that you're using. It's a little bit vague, too. Are we talking about named candidates? Do you have to name these candidates or identify an issue that they're closely associated with? What does this refer to? I would say that logistically this would be a very difficult amendment to implement, and it is quite vague as to how it would work.

Thirdly and finally, we looked very closely at B.C. as well as the federal legislation. What B.C. and the feds did is they put in a cap. They decided they were going to cap at – I believe that B.C. is $150,000; I can't off the top of my head remember what the federal one is. That's how much a third party is going to be allowed to spend in an election period. They have rules similar to this, where they then limit what can be spent in a local jurisdiction by a third party on election advertising. That's one way to go about it. That's one system.

My belief is, and I believe the majority of this caucus feels, that instead of the capped system, free speech is better served by not capping the amount that can be spent but by capping the contribution from each individual who is trying to contribute to an election advertising campaign to a certain fair amount so that no one person can dominate kind of the marketplace of ideas during an election just because of the size of their wallet. So you can't have somebody swoop in, give somebody $2 million to do an election campaign, and so be it. If we had a cap system, then I would say that this amendment would work. But we're not going towards a spending cap system; therefore, this amendment doesn't fit into the legislation as it is before us.

I mean, that's basically it. I know our time is short here before we possibly vote on this, but I would say that this amendment is an unnecessary restriction on free speech. It treats parties differently from third parties, and it gives political parties a more dominant voice than they need. We have lots of means to avail us. We don't need to restrict free speech any more than this legislation already does and, I believe, appropriately does.

With this, I would urge my colleagues to vote against the amendment. But I want to say to the hon. member moving the amendment, Calgary-North Hill, that I do respect where he's coming from. I welcome debate on the issue and appreciate his bringing this forward, but I will be voting against the amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, pursuant to Standing Order 8(1), which provides for consideration of motions other than government motions at 5 p.m. on Monday afternoons, I must now put the following question: shall progress on the bill be reported? All in favour, please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed, please say no. This motion is carried.
The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I move that the committee now rise and report progress.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

Mr. Marz: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 205. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Monitoring of Home Electricity Usage

509. Mrs. Forsyth moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to require all electricity providers to notify local authorities of spikes in home utility usage that may indicate the electricity is being used to power the operations of an illegal drug facility.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise before this Assembly and open debate on Motion 509. I've talked to people before in this Assembly about how I've seen drug productions in my own neighbourhood. I can drive around Calgary, Edmonton, Red Deer, and any other community in Alberta and see houses that I know are being used to produce drugs. They're unmistakable. The place is just a tangle of wires running to lights, timers, and watering equipment. What are these wires carrying?

The answer is that they're carrying the lifeblood of any drug production operation, electricity.

I don't need to tell any of you who were recently driving through a snowstorm in May that Alberta's climate is not hospitable to the production of the plants associated with drug operations. This isn't some warm jungle in South Africa where you plant Mary Jane in the back 40, and she'll grow like a bad weed. No. To create this type of climate in Alberta, you need tons of heat, artificial light, and water, and the delivery of all these elements involves electricity.

Utility consumption rates are a very useful tool to identify houses that are involved in drug production. The average 2,000 square foot home in Canada consumes 1,000 to 1,100 kilowatt hours per month. With hot tub usage, et cetera, it can reach up to 1,500 kilowatt hours per month. The average grow op consumes 10 times this amount, around 10,000 kilowatt hours per month. So we're not talking about shades of grey differences here; we're talking about huge discrepancies that indicate something is up. In B.C. the trigger for reporting unusual utility consumption to police is 3,000 kilowatt hours, or about three times normal consumption.

Making it mandatory for electricity providers to alert authorities when these huge discrepancies occur will allow us to take action to stamp out drug production in Alberta. Mr. Speaker, drugs are like any other product. There is a defined process that they must go through to be produced, distributed, and consumed, and every step of this process endangers Albertans. Drug production in Alberta usually involves a clandestine operation located in a house, and this creates a whole host of dangers. It produces mould, which can lead to respiratory disease, exposes people to harmful chemicals, and, according to a study in B.C., increases the chances of fire by 24 times.

It would be reassuring to think that these operations were located out in the woods somewhere many miles from any neighbour. Well, actually it would be naive to think that way. These operations are often located smack in the middle of densely populated areas throughout the province. This means that many innocent families, children, and seniors are exposed to the dangers that I've mentioned.

Once these drugs are produced, they've got to be distributed. This involves a complex network of mules, dial-a-dopers, and street corner pushers. It also means heavy involvement from organized crime. Hardly a day goes by that I don't read about violence associated with organized crime in Alberta – a brawl between rival gangs, a body dumped there, a drive-by shooting, a beating because of a drug-related debt – and innocent bystanders like youth out at a club on a Saturday night or motorists on their way to the grocery store are sometimes affected. We need to take action to stop this.

Finally, after drugs are distributed, they are consumed by the buyer, usually someone who is young. Drugs have many awful effects on the body. They're highly addictive. They can cause cancer and respiratory disease, impair motor skills in the short term, and cause long-term congestive damages, and they can be laced with dangerous additives which can lead to sudden death. We were recently reminded of that sad fact when two young girls west of Edmonton died after taking ecstasy.

All of these dangers make it imperative to eliminate the drug trade in Alberta, and it begins with taking out production. It's pretty hard to distribute and consume something that cannot be made. Now, it's true that 90 per cent of drug operations bypass the electricity meter and steal electricity from the provider, and I've heard some argue that forcing utility providers to report spikes will accomplish nothing since they don't know about 90 per cent of cases where drug operations are consuming their product.

Well, a couple of points on this issue, Mr. Speaker. First, what about the 10 per cent the utility companies do know about? Would it benefit our communities if 10 per cent of the grow ops in Alberta were busted and 10 per cent fewer drugs made it to our schools? Secondly, advanced metering technologies are rapidly being developed. These technologies make it possible to use remote sensing to determine how much electricity is being consumed, no conventional meter necessary. So you can bypass all you like, but the provider will still know how much electricity is being consumed. I think that mandatory reporting combined with enhanced technology will really take the bite out of drug production in Alberta. This isn't to suggest that it will entirely stop the drug trade or that we should discontinue our efforts, but it's a practical step that will make it much more difficult to make drugs in Alberta.

I urge my colleagues to support this motion and make it more difficult for those who endanger Albertans by manufacturing drugs.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, before we proceed, may we have unanimous consent to revert to introductions?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

The Acting Speaker: The hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll be very brief because I think this is a very important discussion to have here. I just wanted to introduce some guests we have from out in my part of the world, Ken Freimark and Kent Staden. Ken's business is in Lloyd. And Gerald Zagrosh is here to talk about some important discoveries he's making in health care. I'd just like to welcome them.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I want to commend the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek for attempting to get a handle on drugs. The hon. member led the crime and community task force that toured this province and came up with a number of recommendations that have since been implemented.

I, however, would rather see the amount of money that this would entail being put towards increasing feet on the beat, so to speak. Motion 509 is talking about the need to monitor, and I believe that type of monitoring could potentially better be involved with a greater police presence, an active participation in the community, improving local reporting in communities in terms of Neighbourhood Watch and so on.

I'm concerned that in casting a large net, there will be individuals potentially caught within the net who are law-abiding citizens. I know a number of individuals, for example myself at one time, where we didn't get into the hydroponic production, obviously, of an illegal drug, but we did have a number of lights in our basement for promoting the early growth of plants. Then we watered them in a very systematic nature. [interjections] Notice I am not saying illegal plants. I'm talking about flowers, just to clarify for those people who are getting excited across the way.

I am aware of the amount of electricity and the amount of water beyond the normal day-to-day usage that was required to keep those lights burning in the evenings, the amount of extra water that was necessary to bring the seedlings to a mature point. I'm also aware that to try to make the transition from the basement to the greenhouse, we had to have heaters installed, and of course they were drawing more voltage. I can imagine the look on my wife's face or on my face if all of a sudden we had several well-armed individuals kicking down the front door of our greenhouse with the thought that the flowers we were growing were more of the smoking as opposed to the smelling kind. So I'm concerned about this.

It goes beyond the B.C. legislation. B.C. only required Hydro to pass on records on request. This is saying that electricity companies are to automatically provide this information. The potential, as I say, of the net casting and, rather than catching the big fish, getting some minnows is rather disconcerting to me. Does the member, for example, intend for power companies to pass on the information without there being a request from local authorities? Is this only under specific circumstances? For every house in the province and every local authority, how often would these reports be required? Daily? Weekly? Monthly?

In addition, we should bear in mind that with the new confiscation and civil forfeiture provisions, this kind of a move is a potential revenue maker for the government as seized drug houses can be auctioned off. Now, I have no problem with the profits of crime being seized and turned into a positive circumstance. I would like to put the marijuana growers out of business. I would also like to put the crystal meth manufacturers out of business, cut down on other types of illicit drug manufacturing which don't show up on the monitoring or metering of electricity. But does this take away the focus for police? Does this mean that police and local authorities would be driven to focus primarily on these operations, which, while serious, are not the full sum of drug dealing operations? We'd manage to shut down a greater number of marijuana grow ops – that's a good thing – but I would be much more concerned about, as I say, crystal meth and some of the drugs that have automatic, devastating, brain-damaging, immediate effects.

Now, how expensive would this policy be? The power companies will now have to process all of this information. Are we expecting them to, out of the goodness of their public-spirited hearts, not expect extra compensation for this extra observation? Are they going to then be passing it on? What would the cost of an inspection be? Would that be borne by the homeowner even if no grow op was found? Where are the electric companies going to find the resources and the individuals to do this extra monitoring and at what expense? Is the government prepared to provide this expense as opposed to requiring every electricity consumer in the province to be stuck with a marijuana grow op increase on their utility bill each month? People are having trouble paying the extra $5 a month for the blue boxes. Can you imagine how they would jump up and down with regard to the marijuana grow op potential electricity spike adjustment to their bills?

What are the long-term impacts of such a policy? Doesn't this move grow ops into moving off grid or using a generator, for example? There are, from a camping point of view, quiet generators that very efficiently can provide this. We've seen examples, and the hon. member mentioned the Mayerthorpe circumstance. Well, in a situation like that, far from your neighbours, you could have a great big industrial generator cranking out the power you needed, and it would never show up on the electricity grid. There are similarly effective generators, auxiliary generators that organizations like hospitals use and so on, that can create a significant amount of power.

So while I support the idea of getting tough on crime, I believe the correct vehicle to be doing the toughening is our police force in co-operation with local authorities. If the government has funds that it can not only hire extra police to patrol our communities with the support of existing programs such as Neighbourhood Watch – in the rural areas they talk about Report a Poacher. Well, maybe we can talk about report a spiker. But for the hon. member to suggest that these electrical companies would be such good corporate citizens that they wouldn't tack on the extra costs of this monitoring is a concern for me.

I don't believe in the balance that if we only interrupt the lives of three families but we catch five crooks, that's a fair trade-off. We've seen the examples where the wrong door was kicked in or the wrong assumption was made, and we've got to do our due diligence. The best ones to provide that due diligence and monitoring are the police forces themselves. We have a number of sophisticated abilities that have been used by the military and by the police in terms of monitoring the amount of heat that is coming out of a suspected facility. It's not science fiction wherein they show the heat ramifications; they can penetrate into walls. [Mr. Chase's speaking time expired] Well, that's unfortunate. I ran out of power.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise and speak to Motion 509, the energy spike provider reporting motion, as sponsored by my colleague the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek. Motion 509 urges the government of Alberta "to require all electricity providers to notify local authorities of spikes in home utility usage that may indicate the electricity is being used to power the operations of an illegal drug facility." I would like to congratulate the member for bringing this motion to the attention of government. She's a lady that speaks tough on crime and actually does something to address crime as opposed to the members on the opposition benches.

Safety, as we know, Mr. Speaker, is extremely important to Albertans, especially the safety of our neighbourhoods and our children. We all know that illegal drug facilities are dangerous to have within our communities. The operators and occupants of marijuana grow ops can be dangerous people, and their homes are more susceptible to both extortion and home invasion. These grow operations are often linked to organized crime. Rival gangs may invade a grow op, which can lead to assaults, kidnapping, and the use of weapons not very far from where our children live, play, and go to school. They break into these operations to steal marijuana and put our families at risk just to make a quick buck. Oftentimes the operators will use traps to deter and obstruct intruders, which also can compromise the safety of our neighbourhoods and our children.

One of the Premier's five stated government priorities is to provide safe and secure communities for all Albertans to live in. To do this, our government implemented the safe communities initiative, in which a number of departments are targeting the problems of addiction as well as gang- and drug-related crime. If the government required electricity providers to notify local authorities of spikes in home utility usage, it would be a simple addition to our crime-fighting tool box. It would alert authorities to potentially illegal drug and gang activities within our communities, and it would do so at virtually very little cost to taxpayers.

I would like to draw attention to our neighbour to the west, British Columbia, which has implemented similar legislation and has had quite a bit of success with it. In 2006 the B.C. government enacted Bill 25, called the Safety Standards Amendment Act. This legislation gave local governments the right to request from electricity distributors information regarding residential electricity consumption within the government's jurisdictional boundaries. While the bill was intended to make communities safer, it also had a positive effect for electricity companies: it helped address the issue of electricity theft and the safety of electrical employees. So the success of the legislation in just that regard is encouraging, but even more encouraging, Mr. Speaker, is that in over a six-month period 88 grow ops were found in Coquitlam, B.C., with the information from electricity providers, and over a 13-month period 125 grow ops were found in Richmond, B.C.

I was going to say something about pot usage being a little bit more prevalent in B.C. than in Alberta, but I would digress. I would just say that there is no doubt that similar legislation in our province would definitely provide us with similar results. We would give our law enforcement officials one more way to track down dangerous and illegal activities while improving the quality of life in our neighbourhoods. I think it is fair to say that no one wants a drug house in their neighbourhood, and we must use every reasonable tool that we can to get these houses out of our communities. Again, this is a cheap way for the taxpayer, for everyone involved, a very simple solution that would have immediate benefit to our communities in making them safer and more secure.

For those reasons I applaud the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek for Motion 509, and I encourage all members of this House to support the motion. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, want to compliment the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek on 509, the electricity usage and grow op sponsor, because it does appear to be well-intentioned legislation. I would like to say that I probably would have supported this legislation should it have been drafted more according to what the B.C. legislation was. The legislation in B.C. . . .

Mr. Liepert: I thought you were a crime fighter.

Mr. Hehr: I am a crime fighter, Ron. I just forgot my cape today.

The legislation in B.C. asked hydro companies to pass along this information if requested. The difference in our jurisdiction is that this requires electric companies to actively just go about looking at people's electricity bills and submitting this information randomly to the powers that be. If we look at this, what we're saying is there is no opportunity for police to do, I guess, criminal investigations anymore, and that's the thing.

If you go ask the police officers in the city of Calgary, in I'd assume almost any jurisdiction in Calgary, "Do you know where the grow ops are in Calgary? Do you know the people who are dealing marijuana?" they'll say yes. Ask them that. I challenge the hon. member or anyone in this House to simply go ask their local police officer: do you guys know where the grow ops are? They'll tell you yes. Honestly, they will. Then the question is: why don't we then go follow up? Now, that's another question that I can't answer as well. But they seem to know where all the grow ops are. They seem to know where the people are dealing drugs. It's not this type of stuff that is keeping these grow ops going.

What happens is that when we're enabling this type of legislation, we're just not respecting good old honest police work, where they go in if they know where the houses are. You've got to ask the question, "Why aren't they doing this?" and ask yourself, then, if the laws need to be toughened as to what happens if you find a grow op. I'd suggest, then, that if the laws were toughened and if they were enabled to lock them up longer instead of just a revolving door, this might actually happen, that this might actually have some teeth to it and allow for our police officers to actually go in and bust these grow ops on a more regular basis. They know where the dope dealers are and, in fact, where the people who are running grow ops are.

I think the other thing, too, is that when you're not having the police or the court get this information, you're opening up a severe, I guess, infringement on people's right to privacy. We're having a company that is doing business that is simply firing in, willy-nilly, spikes to electricity and simply just sending them in. There's no real police intervention in the process. It's simply a company who looks at records, doesn't do any investigation, and sends it on down the highway.

Maybe the people doing those things, they go tell their neighbour and say: "Hey, by the way, I just sent up this request. Do you know who had a spike in their electricity? It was the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie." You know, maybe he was, like the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, growing plants and watering flowers and all that stuff in his basement. I would hate to see this person from the company then besmirch the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie's good name. I know he's more of a birdwatcher than a plant grower or a flower grower. I just used that as an example.

Nevertheless, those are the reasons for speaking out on the bill. I believe our police know where these things are. I challenge anyone in this room to go ask them if they know who the people are with the grow ops, and they'll say yes. What they do after that – you'd have to ask them why they don't go bust them down.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to rise to speak to Motion 509, energy spike provider reporting, sponsored by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek. I'd like to thank the hon. member for her tenacity and enthusiasm in trying to reduce crime in Alberta. I appreciate that very much. I'm supportive of Motion 509 for several reasons; namely, because it will tackle crime in our province and because I believe it will benefit consumers.

Mr. Speaker, drug-related crime impacts our society in many ways. It affects the drug user who suffers from an addiction and community members whose safety may be compromised while at the same time profiting traffickers and fuelling crime. For these reasons this government has shown incredible innovation and determination in addressing crime. For example, the Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act is particularly innovative as it provides a mechanism for the public to report properties that are possibly being used for illegal activities. Essentially the initiative builds on the foundation that the people living in the community know it best.

Motion 509 expands on this kind of innovation. It utilizes the fact that harvesting marijuana requires large amounts of electricity and that high residential electricity consumption can therefore be indicative of an illegal grow op. Based on these facts, Motion 509 works to collaborate with energy providers, engaging them to pass on relevant information to authorities.

One of the criticisms of this methodology surrounds the fact that many grow operators bypass the electricity meter in their home so as to remain inconspicuous as well as to avoid paying excessively high utility bills. In essence, operators steal electricity. In light of this it can be difficult for utility providers to identify grow homes using consumption data. However, new technologies are being discovered that present alternatives to current measuring mechanisms. Mr. Speaker, these technologies are capable of accurately measuring how much energy is used in the absence of a traditional meter, ultimately making it very difficult to steal electricity. This will facilitate the discovery of properties that are using excessive energy. Therefore, requiring utility providers to report these occurrences to authorities would likely expose many, if not all, grow ops in the province.

That is why I'm primarily supportive of Motion 509. However, I'm additionally supportive because I believe that it will directly benefit consumers. Mr. Speaker, in addition to exposing homes that use electricity excessively, the information that is collected through these new technologies is sent wirelessly in real time to utility distributors. Essentially this means that for billing purposes no one needs to come to your home every couple of months to read the meter. By these means utility companies would no longer have to issue billing estimates to consumers. The bills would contain thorough and accurate consumption data. I consider this aspect of new metering technologies particularly appealing.

I frequently hear from my constituents about overestimated utility bills. This may not seem like a major issue because if a bill is estimated high, when the meter is read and shows less consumption, the subsequent bill will compensate the consumer. However, for individuals who have detailed financial plans or who are on a fixed income, like seniors, this kind of estimation can actually be burdensome. For this reason alone I would support the implementation of new metering technologies. If coupled with Motion 509, this technology can have a major impact on crime reduction in our province. Therefore, I would be happy to support Motion 509.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, thank God that motions only urge the government to take action on this, that, or the other thing. This is one of the most cockamamie, silly, stupid, ridiculous motions I think I've had the dubious honour to come across in the time that I've been in this House. [interjections]

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie has the floor, and he will address the chair.

Mr. Taylor: And the health minister, you know, if he's going to make life difficult for me in the next election, Mr. Speaker, might first want to learn what riding I represent and what the name of that constituency is. He doesn't seem to have a pretty good handle on that.

Mr. Liepert: You might not be there next time.

Mr. Taylor: I might not be. You never know. You might not be in Calgary-West next time.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, please address the chair.

Mr. Taylor: And maybe my constituency is going to be called Calgary-Centre. [interjections]

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, let's have a little bit of order. The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie has the floor. Everyone else, please refrain from interjections.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that intervention.

I'm being led to believe here that this draconian interference with people's privacy rights and civil liberties is being done in the name of consumer protection, so that my Enmax bill will go down. Is that the purpose of this? I find that a little bit of a stretch. I find it a little bit of a stretch that we are going to solve a problem – namely, the war on drugs, that we have been fighting now for probably 35, 40 years and losing . . .

5:30

Mrs. Forsyth: Because of people like you. [some applause]

Mr. Taylor: Thank you for the applause. Mr. Speaker, that goes precisely to my point here: there is absolutely no interest in solving the drug problem and every interest in limiting the freedoms of citizens of a democratic state in bringing forward a motion like this.

Look, give your head a shake, hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek. This is not going to solve the war on drugs.

The Acting Speaker: A point of order.

Point of Order

Parliamentary Language

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to quote Beauchesne. I'm sitting here very quietly, listening to some of the comments. "Stupid," which I think he mentioned, is in here.

Every person in this Assembly has the right to bring forward a motion or a private member's bill that they believe in. This particular motion that I have brought forward has been a year in the works with a lot of very reputable, good police officers in this province. I think that when we talk about "give your head a shake," I'm sitting here very quietly, listening to the hon. member so that I can figure out in my head where he's going on this particular issue. Mr. Speaker, if we may, would you get the fellow back on track?

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, were you calling a point of order?

Mrs. Forsyth: Yes.

The Acting Speaker: Under what standing order, what citation?

Mrs. Forsyth: Unparliamentary language, Mr. Speaker. It's on page 148 in the offending words in Beauchesne 488 to 492. "Stupid" is one of them.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, the word "stupid" is unparliamentary. If the member would wish to withdraw that word, we can continue on.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will withdraw the word "stupid." I wouldn't want to use unparliamentary language when there are so many parliamentary words that can describe the pointlessness of this exercise, of this motion.

May I continue?

The Acting Speaker: Yes. Please continue.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you.

Debate Continued

Mr. Taylor: So let me put it this way. Hon. member, you're right. Any member of this House has the right to bring forward any motion that they believe in, as does any member of this House have the right to debate that motion when they don't believe in it. That is precisely, Mr. Speaker, what I'm doing.

I don't believe that this is going to solve the war on drugs. If you want to start winning the war on drugs, Mr. Speaker, we have got to wrap our collective heads around the notion that we are going to attack demand, not the suppliers. As long as there's demand, there will be criminal elements in our society who will find ways to meet that demand no matter what it takes. The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek knows this. The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek has undertaken a number of very laudatory efforts, initiatives in the past to try and tackle the war on drugs from the demand side of things, I believe. This, I'm afraid, is not one of them.

Now, I have no problem with the notion that there may be from time to time reason, probable cause for the authorities to contact a power company and say: we want to see the electricity consumption records on 123 XYZ Street S.E. because we have probable cause to suspect that there's a grow op going on in that house. But, Mr. Speaker, we have warrants for a reason. This motion urges the government to simply set up an arrangement by which Enmax and EPCOR and every other power company that may ever come into the mix in this province are somehow required to notify the authorities every time there's a spike in home utility usage.

There can be spikes for many reasons. Certainly, running a grow op in the basement is one of them, and it's the worst possible reason because at the end of the day you have a house that is for all intents and purposes rendered unfit for human habitation which may yet go back on the market and be sold to some unsuspecting homeowner. I do not for a moment believe that our rules and regulations, if we're going to make rules and regulations around grow ops, governing what becomes of houses that were grow ops when they go back on the market are tight enough, as tight as they should be.

I think that if you want to deal with consumer protection, there's an area to deal with in terms of making sure that no grow op goes back on the market so that some young family comes along, buys it, and raises their family at great risk to the children's health and their own. That, to my way of thinking, is a real issue. But this notion that the state can order electricity providers to just go on a regular fishing expedition or to somehow undertake the role of Big Brother and notify the authorities every time there is a spike in electricity usage – look, I might be wrong. Maybe the hon. member who is the sponsor of this bill, maybe one of the hon. members opposite who has spoken in favour of this bill can sit down and enlighten me as to precisely how this would work – and I don't think they can because this is a motion; it's not a bill – precisely how they envision that this would work beyond new metering technology, which I heard the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner reference, so I acknowledge that.

But, you know, at what point does a residence become suspect? Is it a gradual increase over time in the usage of electricity? Is it a sudden increase that then is constant and prolonged? Is it literally a spike on the coldest night of the year, when it's minus 35? You know, what is it? Let's say that on the coldest night of the year the furnace conks out, but the electricity is still on. I recognize that sometimes furnaces conk out because of an electrical problem. But let's say that the furnace conks out, and the homeowners have a number of electrically powered space heaters. Is that reason enough to have the police or health inspectors from the municipality knock on their door in the middle of the night and then present them, as has happened frequently in the B.C. lower mainland, with a bill to cover the cost of the inspection, that can run into the thousands of dollars, regardless of whether there is any concrete evidence found in those inspections that there's an actual grow op taking place in that residence?

This may be well intentioned. I'm not even sure – and if the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek wants to get up again and call another point of order on me, then have at 'er – that this particular motion is all that well intentioned. It doesn't make sense. It ain't going to fly. It ain't going to work no matter how many people in this Legislature vote in favour of it. I suspect very strongly that, you know, if this motion passes, this is the last that we'll probably see of it because I think the government will quickly take a look at it and go: no, we can't go there. At least, I hope they would because to do otherwise, to require unasked this routine notifying of the local authorities whenever there's a spike in electrical usage in a particular residence, a requirement on the part of the provider that they have to provide this without anybody in authority asking for it, without anybody seeking a warrant, that's not drug enforcement. That's enforcement of a police state.

And the funny damn thing about police states – oh, I'm sorry. "Damn" is probably an unparliamentary word, too, Mr. Speaker, and I apologize and withdraw that. The funny darn thing about police states: you know, there are an awful lot of them in the world, including ones that shoot drug users and drug pushers but still have a drug problem. So you may be able to very effectively quash civil rights and civil liberties, but you can't quash the drug problem, not through police-state tactics.

This is badly thought out, and there is no way I can support this, Mr. Speaker. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today to speak to Motion 509, energy spike provider reporting, a motion brought forth by my friend the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek. This motion urges the government of Alberta to require electricity providers to notify local authorities of spikes in home utility usages that may indicate the electricity is being used to power operations of an illegal drug facility.

Mr. Speaker, our province is committed to providing Albertans with safe communities to raise our families in, and one of the factors that greatly endangers this is the presence of illegal drug facilities. We made this promise to Albertans, and we need to follow through on this to the best of our abilities.

Whenever I talk about safety in our communities, I always think about Sherbrooke, a neighbourhood in my constituency, that expressed concern recently about a recovery house operating in their tight-knit community. After debate on the issue, Sherbrooke residents realized that the folks in the rehab facility needed a safe place to live, free from the addictions that threatened their rehabilitation and livelihood.

A lot of people came out to debate this issue, which made me think about the areas that may be of more concern to members of the community, issues like having an illegal drug house next door or across the street. But as important as helping these individuals in their recovery, it is equally imperative that we detect the houses in our community that are contributing to their addiction, the houses that are manufacturing illegal drugs and distributing them into our communities, houses that are hidden throughout many neighbourhoods across the province, and the houses that some people are too afraid to question or to report despite their suspicious activities.

Recently the government enacted the Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act, which provides a method for citizens who are concerned about tenants or residents who are using the property for illegal activities to voice their concerns to authorities. While this is breakthrough legislation, it may not mean that all drug houses are found. Some are difficult to detect, which is why novel and innovative tools such as Motion 509 are needed. Ultimately, this is the kind of initiative that is likely to get these criminals out of our community, helping to put a stop to the illegal activities that threaten the safety of our neighbours.

Mr. Speaker, in addition to the issues of safety, illegal drug facilities could threaten the health and lives of nearby residents. Due to the large volumes of electricity and carbon dioxide needed, not to mention the carbon monoxide that is created, these operations could also greatly affect and threaten the safety of our communities. They increase the probabilities of fire, pose risks of infections, skin irritation, exacerbation of asthma, and increase the rates of upper respiratory disease.

Mr. Speaker, ultimately, the issue of grow ops is one that affects all Albertans, and it's one that we cannot stand by and let threaten the safety of our communities. We need to commit to keeping this government's promise of protection of the safety of Albertans every day. Motion 509 is another innovative way we can achieve this, and I would really like to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek for bringing this motion forward. I, too, had some concerns about how one initially measured electrical consumption, and my fears were laid to rest. I think it's a great motion.

Colleagues, I would urge you to support Motion 509 and commit to ensuring the safety of communities within this province. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I sincerely appreciate the opportunity that the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek has given us to rise this evening and spend a few minutes to add to the debate on Motion 509, regarding energy spike provider reporting. Now, as the motion is proposed, it urges the government to require electricity providers to notify local authorities – authorities – of spikes in home electricity usage that might indicate the electricity is being used to power the operations of an illegal drug facility.

Mr. Speaker, anyone who pays attention here knows my views relating to crime. Some of these people, with due process, simply belong behind bars – and I will state that over and over again – for all of the damage that they cause to our respective communities. This motion would further highlight the Alberta government's commitment to developing innovative ways to fight organized crime and to keep our communities safe.

As most of my colleagues – most – have probably noticed over the past year, again, as I mentioned, crime and organized crime are huge issues to me in my constituency and to all my constituents in Calgary-Egmont. I'm very happy to hear from constituents, including the Member for Calgary-Currie. My constituents and I recognize that the presence of organized crime in a neighbourhood often leads to increases in crime on all levels. I'm talking theft, violence, fires, other neighbourhood disturbances, and, as we saw on January 1 in my constituency, even murder. Mr. Speaker, I think that all Albertans will agree that keeping organized crime out of their neighbourhoods is a priority worth investigating.

With that said, Mr. Speaker, there is a clear link between organized crime and those illegal drug facilities, that this motion indeed intends to help detect. This last Friday I happened to run into someone who was a grade 4 student of my mother's, who now lives in Ottawa. He was in Calgary. He said to me: "I've never been involved in any drug issues whatsoever because I always think, what's behind that? What's behind the marijuana? What all is behind the cocaine?" What is it? It's organized crime. The more demand there is for it, the more activity you're going to have in our communities. In fact, it's estimated that grow ops are operated and fuelled by organized crime 90 per cent of the time. It's clearly in the public interest that these grow ops cease to operate because of the impacts on criminal activity.

Not only do grow ops increase crime in the neighbourhoods that they occupy, but they also provide unavoidable health risks to the law-abiding neighbours of these drug facility operators. In fact, Mr. Speaker, an article written in the Calgary Real Estate News back in 2004 talked about the dangers to unsuspecting home buyers, again these unrecognized consequences of crime. Actually, I wrote the article. Those health risks include high levels of carbon dioxide, carbon monoxide, contamination from toxic spores and pollen from mature plants, contamination due to vaporized pesticides, fire hazards, and never forget also the black mould that often is part of the homes of unsuspecting buyers of these properties. These health risks obviously affect Albertans who have the misfortune of living in the vicinity of illegal drug facilities, not just the criminals who operate them.

Mr. Speaker, one of the government's key strategic goals is to promote strong and vibrant communities and reduce crime so Albertans feel safe. My vision of this province is one that the people of today and the people of tomorrow can continue to walk the streets safely without fear of organized crime. This motion is consistent with the commitment of this government's crackdown on criminals and criminal activity. For example, just last fall this Assembly passed Bill 50, the Victims Restitution and Compensation Payment Amendment Act, 2008, which established the process through which property and profits gained through unlawful acts are seized through civil courts and returned to the victims or used for programs that benefit the victims of crime. The Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security has continued his department's commitment to increasing the police force in Alberta as part of the government's three-year plan to add 300 more front-line officers and to ensure that people in this province are safe from organized crime.

One of the major criticisms of this motion that I hear is that it would invade the privacy of individuals. I posted this on my Facebook and Twitter moments ago. That was the main theme that came up. A few things to consider here, first of all, is that B.C. Hydro has a similar program, and they use a trigger point of 3,000 kilowatt hours, which is approximately three times the average home consumption, okay? On top of that, the Electric Utilities Act code of conduct regulation in this province permits utility providers to disclose information to law enforcement without consent in certain circumstances. This obligation of service providers to ensure public safety in relation to the supply of electricity may provide an additional basis upon which a service provider may disclose consumption and other information where the circumstances warrant.

As I mentioned, there are already provisions in the existing regulations that allow utility companies to disclose information, and that, to my mind, speaks of due process. We don't want to go and start knocking down doors. Mr. Speaker, this is about public safety and crime reduction and crime control. Furthermore, there are also provisions to allow utility companies to report hazardous situations, which illegal drug facilities would obviously qualify as. This goes one step further and proposes suspicious consumption levels to be automatically reported, again, not to other individuals; this is reported to law enforcement officials. This motion as proposed would give law-abiding citizens one more tool in their fight against organized crime and bring our neighbourhoods and our families one step closer to enjoying the safe, healthy lifestyle they so richly deserve.

Mr. Speaker, the Member for Calgary-Currie talks about reducing demand, and I agree. This can be done through education. It's not a one-pronged approach. It's a two-pronged approach: reducing both demand and supply. My part in reducing demand—I've always wanted to say this—I've never inhaled, and I've never exhaled.

Thank you.

5:50

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wish to speak?

The hon. member to close debate.

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Speaker, thank you very much. I appreciate the opportunity to listen to the debate, and I really want to thank my colleagues from this side of the House, if I may, for their thoughtful, provocative thinking. I say that with all sincerity. I've been listening to the jibe back and forth from the opposition, and I'm thinking: God, they don't even know how to listen because we brought up in the Legislature the triple spikes used by B.C.

I want to close, Mr. Speaker, by thanking two people who have worked very hard on this particular motion with me. That's my researcher, Elizabeth Clement, and my Leg. assistant, Brock Mulligan. I have to send a special thanks to some of the police in this province that have helped me with this particular motion, provided me with all of their wisdom and their advice when they're dealing with drug homes, grow ops, and taking drug-endangered children who are in these particular grow ops out of the house.

I ask everybody in the Assembly to support this motion.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 509 carried]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the hour I'd move that the Assembly now adjourn until 7:30 p.m.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:51 p.m.]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

Bill 27

Alberta Research and Innovation Act

Dr. Taft: [Not recorded] of decision-making over research activities, and I'd like to speak about that for a moment, Mr. Chairman.

The reason this bill is moving forward, I think, and one of the rationales for it is that we want to streamline decision-making. We need to simplify funding and administrative arrangements over supporting research, and we want to streamline the process, speed it up, make sure that funding programs that were complicated for supporting research – because researchers had to go here, and then they had to go there, and they had to go somewhere else, and if everything didn't come together in the same time frame, they might get their operations funding for research in year 1 and not get any equipment to conduct the research until year 2, and on and on. So there were a lot of problems, and I think the idea of this bill is in part to correct those problems.

Where I have concerns around one of the outcomes of the bill, probably an unintended effect, is that it centralizes. In the process of streamlining it brings tremendous control into the hands of a very few, ultimately the minister and the Premier, and I think that the whole effect of centralization on innovation needs to be questioned. I don't dispute the government's right and, indeed, the government's responsibility to set some broad frameworks for research directions. If you're putting a half a billion dollar fund together to fund research, you'd better have some idea of what the research is going to be about, but that's already being achieved when we have things like, you know, a fund for medical research or a fund for engineering research.

As the control from the central figures, the minister and the Premier, becomes more and more specific, the danger here is of micromanaging research, and I think we need to really be alert to that because I think that sort of centralization will actually achieve the opposite of what this bill wants. Instead of encouraging innovation, I think that too much centralization will discourage innovation. As I said in my comments a couple of weeks ago, the great innovations of history – the printing press or, you know, Einstein's $E = mc^2$ or Steven Jobs inventing the personal computer, whatever you want – weren't undertaken because some central figure said: thou shalt innovate and invent a personal computer. Those were very much decentralized innovations that came through a culture of innovation. I think there's a risk that this bill will lead us in the opposite direction.

There's, not surprisingly, a fair amount of literature on the effects of centralization and innovation. There are a number of concerns. I'm not going to go through all of them, but I do want to raise one particular concern with having a research structure that in the background document says that the mandates will be set by the Premier. It refers repeatedly to the Premier's priorities. Then we see the minister named in the act as being quite closely in charge. The minister chairs the cross-governmental committee, and the minister and cabinet appoint the people who sit on the research authority, and so on and on. One of the concerns – sorry, I'm just getting distracted by one of the members. [interjection] Thanks. I know you're not meaning to, but it's just a little bit loud.

One of the concerns when there are just a very few people setting the tone for the whole research structure is that if those few people become captured by a particular interest group, the entire structure can end up getting rearranged. The former Premier here, Ralph Klein, in his last couple of years seemed to suddenly develop a real passion for cancer research. He unveiled a plan for a billion dollar fund on cancer research, and there was the hope of curing cancer. There was a great deal of activity around that, not nearly as much money in the end, and then when he was no longer Premier, that priority faded out. Now we have a Premier with a different set of priorities, and who knows how long those will last? Frankly, I think that having somebody in centralized control of decision-making raises the risk that under a concerted effort of lobbying that minister or that Premier can end up being captured to special interest.

Imagine a very aggressive bioenergy lobby on the Premier today. You know, it would be timely. It would be kind of tempting even though it's not at all clear that it's a viable area. But if the Premier were captured sufficiently by interests committed to bioenergy research, then suddenly we might find a significant shifting towards bioenergy. That might go on for two or three years, and then a new interest group would capture a new minister who would be in place by then, and there could be another shifting there. I'm very concerned that by having things so centralized, the system itself is prone to being captured, if I may say it that way, by special interest groups.

In the same way that that could lead to research getting focused on one or two areas and the system lurching about every time the minister changes or the Premier changes, there's also the possibility that research would never be done on areas that were deemed politically dangerous. I think that's also a concern. That's one of the basic issues with this bill.

There's also, of course, the whole idea – and I think it's kind of ironic that this comes from a government that seems so consistently committed to the marketplace because the marketplace is all about decentralized decisions. You know, there's a sort of famous case study on how it is that people in Edmonton, for example, can go to any number of grocery stores in the middle of January and get fresh tomatoes. How does that happen? Well, when you look at that, it doesn't happen because there's a minister responsible for fresh tomatoes. It doesn't happen because there's some centralized structure. It happens because there's this tremendously decentralized structure, and a whole series of marketplace decisions that seem to occur on their own lead to us having fresh tomatoes in Edmonton. You know, the comparison was the old Soviet system, where there was central planning. I don't know how fresh the tomatoes were in Moscow in January, but I don't suppose they were that great.

I'm concerned that in the same kind of way the marketplace for ideas under this bill is being centralized in a way that's actually going to be inefficient and stifling. I think it's, as I said, a bit ironic that a government that's apparently on paper committed to free ideas and decentralization and market forces and so on in this case is actually going the opposite direction. So, Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment I'm going to propose for this bill.

The Deputy Chair: We'll pause for a moment while the pages distribute the amendment.

Dr. Taft: Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, this is amendment A1. Please proceed.

Dr. Taft: Okay. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. For the record amendment A1 reads that I move that Bill 27, the Alberta Research and Innovation Act, be amended by striking out section 4(1) and substituting the following:

4(1) The Authority shall consist of not more than 12 members appointed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council as follows:

- (a) 2 members nominated by the University of Alberta General Faculties Council,
- (b) 2 members nominated by the University of Calgary General Faculties Council,
- (c) 2 members nominated by a public post-secondary institution as defined in the Post-Secondary Learning Act other than the University of Alberta and the University of Calgary, and
- (d) 5 persons recommended by the Minister.

That's the end of this proposed amendment.

I just want to draw to members' attention how that compares to what's there right now. What's there in the act right now says:

4(1) The Authority shall consist of not more than 12 members appointed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council.

It's pretty obvious what the idea here is, and that's to bring in multiple voices, to bring in the wisdom of several perspectives to that council. We're frankly concerned, as we've seen this play out with the Alberta Health Services Board or see it play out with other organizations, that when everybody is appointed at the discretion of the Lieutenant Governor in Council, you tend to get people who are politically safe. You don't get the rabble-rousers. You don't get the innovators. You don't get the people who are pushing the limits. You get the people who are politically safe. Sure, they may have academic qualifications, or maybe they won't. But when the chips are down, the number one qualification is that they are politically safe. You can be sure that those people are going to be coming from one slice of life and that they are not going to reflect broadly enough in our view. They're also going to be accountable not to the various institutions or to the researchers or to anybody else but accountable strictly to the minister, in effect, and the Premier.

The effect of this amendment that I'm proposing is to diversify the membership of the board. The Lieutenant Governor in Council would still appoint five persons as recommended by the minister, so the minister still has the largest voting block, as it were, on this authority. But the authority would also be comprised of members nominated by the two largest research organizations in the province, the U of A and the U of C. Their general faculties councils would each nominate two members, and then we would get two members from another postsecondary institution. That might be the University of Lethbridge or Athabasca. It could be NAIT or SAIT or one of the colleges. It could be – who knows? – perhaps in the future some different institution entirely.

The idea of this amendment, Mr. Chairman, is to reflect the need for many voices so that we get a genuinely rich and diverse view, the need, frankly, to dilute the risk of political safety around the board of the authority, and to open space for the real spirit of innovation to be breathed into the authority.

I think it's pretty straightforward. I leave it open now to debate from members of the Assembly. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Any members wish to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'll rise and support this amendment. It reminds me of an amendment that we attempted to move a few years ago, back when we were dealing with legislation setting up the Access to the Future Act. At that time we attempted to suggest that the best way to govern such things is to get a diversity of voices onto boards and agencies like this one. Although that didn't go through, I still think that the rationale is sound for this idea.

I do think, especially where we're talking about research and innovation, that the very definition of research and innovation involves creativity, diversity of viewpoints, the dynamic tension that can come sometimes from that diversity of viewpoints, which leads to more creative paths of thinking and more creative undertakings and more creative developments in many cases. That works in the lab. That works when you're doing the actual research. I think that'll also work in terms of setting up the reorganization, if you will, of our research and innovation sector.

I'll be brief. I'd just speak very quickly in favour of this. I think it would be a good idea. It brings people from the University of Alberta, people from the University of Calgary, people from at least one other public postsecondary institution, and then five people of the minister's choosing to the board. You'll notice as well that "the Authority shall consist of not more than 12 members," and we've only tried to define here where 11 of those members should be brought from, so there's potentially a 12th member up for grabs here that could potentially be appointed from, oh, perhaps out of province, something like that.

You might go looking for somebody like someone from the Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council of Canada, for instance, to add some outside perspective to the authority and, I think, create the conditions – there are never any guarantees, of course – for more innovation and more leading-edge work as we combine these various corporations and try to make our entire research and innovation sector a whole lot more efficient, effective, and leading edge.

With that, I'll take my seat and let others join the debate on the amendment.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Well, first of all, I'd thank the hon. member for the effort that he put into this amendment, but I'm going to have to tell my colleagues that I cannot support this amendment, and I cannot support this amendment because the stakeholders would not agree with this. If the hon. member would look at the act.

- 3(1) The Alberta Research and Innovation Authority is established.
- (2) The purposes of the Authority are
 - (a) to provide strategic advice and recommendations to the Minister on research and innovation matters relating to the purposes of this Act, and
 - (b) to carry out other duties . . .
- (3) The Authority reports to the Minister through the Chair of the Authority and is responsible for submitting to the Minister, at the times and in the form determined . . . reports and plans as requested by the Minister.

It's an advisory body. It is the replacement for the Alberta Science and Research Authority. If the hon. member – and I'm sure he did – read the international review panel, eminent scholars from around the world who did the review of the ASRA report said, "What you need to do is to have it outside of the postsecondaries in your province; you need to have international experts from around the world that have a tie to Alberta that can give us the type of advice on direction and where we're going and how we're going to get there," in fact quite the opposite of the centralized control the hon. member seems to be stuck on. In fact, the opposite is to take international eminent scholars, create an advisory authority that can tell us where our strengths are, where our alignment needs to be, where we need to move forward in consultation with all of our stakeholders.

Mr. Chairman, the stakeholders, that we had numerous discussions with throughout the last year and a half, would not agree to the University of Alberta General Faculties Council being advisory because they have an interest in their institution. I have every faith that they are doing the right things in their institution, but I would not want to put them in a situation where I'm pitting them against each other in their advisory capacity or in a funding capacity because that's been one of the problems. It creates a problem in terms of getting that creativity and that innovation.

Frankly, Mr. Chairman, I'm somewhat surprised at this amendment because this one is pretty straightforward from the international review panel. They would be very upset with me if we were to accept this amendment to this bill. They kind of wrote part of this act, and I would suggest to all hon. members that we should pretty much defeat this thing fairly quickly and move on.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much. I'm very interested in the discussion here and certainly in this amendment. I can understand where the hon. minister is coming from, and I certainly can understand where the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview is coming from. His constituency, of course, is home to one of the finest universities in Canada, and he has knowledge of and interest in this matter.

The hon. minister is talking with the international community and the advisers from that community, but he didn't mention the taxpayers, who are responsible for the majority of the money that will be provided, and I'm puzzled at that. I would think that this amendment would certainly give taxpayers a more balanced representation, with people from the University of Alberta, the University of Calgary, two members nominated by a public post-secondary institution: six of the maximum of 12 that would be appointed as members of the authority. I really don't understand what the concern is here from the minister. I think it's a very good idea.

It breaks up the authority, if I can use that term, and the minister may not realize it, but this is another example of centralization. I could list off a lot of legislation that is coming before us, Mr. Chairman, through the House in the last six weeks or so. Certainly, if one word was to describe the theme or the trend, it would be centralization. Bill 36 would be another example of the authority and the scope and the power that rests with the minister and with cabinet. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview here, in conclusion, Mr. Chairman, is ensuring that that does not happen, and in the public interest and in the interest of the taxpayers I think the floor of the Assembly should give this amendment due consideration.

Thank you.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Chairman, obviously, the hon. member didn't hear my previous response. I'm not going to repeat it. I'll allow him to read it in Hansard later. But I would like to point out that this authority will not be a funding authority, so I fail to see the taxpayer connection here in the sense that they're not going to be making decisions about funding. They're going to be making decisions about strategic advice to this government, the government of Alberta, about our research initiatives and agendas and where our postsecondaries are going. In fact, the presidents of our postsecondaries are very keen about this particular piece of the legislation. I would suggest the hon. members might want to talk to them.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. I'll go from the conclusion of the minister's comments to his initial comment. But certainly I have discussed this with various officials at the university. Some are for, some are against, and some move from one foot to the other one. There are a lot of opinions regarding this bill.

Mr. Horner: Did you talk to the president?

Mr. MacDonald: I did. I did talk to the president. Yes, I did.

Now, when you have a fund that comes from our revenue stream or from the taxes, whether it's resource royalty revenues or whether it's from our taxes, ultimately it's from the taxpayers. If this authority provides advice to this government and there is an initiative that doesn't work out well, who loses? The taxpayers.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Why, thank you, Mr. Chair. It's a privilege to speak on this amendment. I've listened to both the minister and the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar and the Member for Edmonton-Riverview, and I still believe this amendment does have some merit in that it does allow for the minister to get advice from credible Albertans that have served their community well and are recommended by our universities. I've heard the argument that they don't want to be picking winners and losers from their own university, but by all means these people would be the leading authorities in Alberta on who has the best scientific chance, I guess, of succeeding. Simply put, you've got to have these types of people, with education and brains and know-how, on Alberta boards.

I also do take the comments of the Member for Edmonton-Riverview quite seriously. There happens to be a tremendous amount of centralization going on right now with this government, and this is plainly evident in this bill as the decision begins and ends with the minister and the Lieutenant Governor in Council. In particular this type of decision-making I do not believe will serve the taxpayers, and the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar is correct that it is the taxpayers who we're looking out for, the citizens of Alberta who are funding this research and innovation venture that we are ultimately accountable for and to.

I believe having a board more consistent with players both known and not arbitrarily selected by the minister will serve this process very well and would allow for some influences outside of the minister and the Premier's office to set some tone and direction as to where this fund is going and what research gets going. For instance, I would hate to see all of a sudden, you know, a venture down some sort of scheme because it's the thought of the minister at the moment or anything like that. That's just why I think this errs on the side of caution. I think it's a good amendment that recognizes the centralization of power that is occurring.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak on the amendment?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I think we've probably heard everything we're going to hear on this. I should warn the minister that there are more amendments coming.

Mr. Horner: Then you won't get my speech. I prepared a speech.

Dr. Taft: You have a tremendous speech. Well, you can give that after we vote on this.

I just want to comment to the minister that, in fact, I spent a good deal of my week last week consulting with stakeholders, and I was a bit surprised at how few of them knew much at all about this bill. I think the stakeholders the minister has consulted are at the level of the president and the vice-president of the university. When you get talking to the researchers, including the very, very senior researchers, they have just a passing knowledge of this piece of legislation. You know, there's ambivalence. We're not saying to throw the whole bill out, but there's ambivalence about how this is headed.

When you sit on our side of the House and you watch one piece of major legislation after another centralize control in the hands of fewer and fewer people, there's a pattern here. It's a pattern in health care. It's a pattern in education, K to 12. It's a pattern now in research. It's a pattern in land use. It's a worrisome pattern, and I don't think it's good for Alberta. So this is just a small gesture aimed at providing insurance against one voice and a groupthink taking over at that particular level.

So I'll call the question on that at this point, then, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: Ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Deputy Chair: On Bill 27, the hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's indeed a pleasure to rise today and address some of the questions. I know the hon. members have further amendments that they might be wanting to bring forward, but I thought perhaps it might be a good time for me to get on the record some of the responses to some of the questions that were brought up in second reading and some of the other debate that we've had on this bill.

I would like to also, Mr. Chairman, first of all, thank the hon. members for the glowing things that they've said about our Alberta researchers and the innovators because we are truly very proud of the research and the innovation that is created in this province by our government. We're also very proud and we're very pleased about the important role that research and innovation is going to play in Alberta's future, and I think some of the members have even mentioned that. I couldn't agree more with their praise. That's why we're introducing Bill 27. It's to pave the way for the kind of research and innovation that we need to grow a more knowledge-based economy and that culture of innovation the hon. member talked about.

Mr. Chairman, I think it's very big of the members across the way to celebrate our government's decision in the late '70s to establish the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research and all of the world-class work that has been achieved by its researchers. It's a stellar organization that has brought international recognition and excellent people to the province, and we're going to build on that stellar history to set the stage for even better things to come.

I've heard many good things all around the world about AHFMR, the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research, as well as our other research and innovation organizations. I'm in awe, Mr. Chairman, of the talent that we already have here in Alberta. I can't overstate the personal sense of pride that I get when I speak about Alberta's outstanding talent around the world to the various places that I'm blessed to go.

There is Alberta Ingenuity, supported by another endowment fund, a fund which is going to realize and focus its tremendous potential through this bill. There are the amazing contributions through the current Alberta Research Council, with over 600 people committed to excellence in their fields. They're world class.

I might note that they forgot the Alberta Research Council, and they forgot some of the other funding agencies in the past amendment. There are world-class iCORE chairs, whose work will continue to turn heads around the world. There are leading-edge institutes for agricultural research, for energy research, for forestry research, which the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar celebrated so articulately during the debate on Bill 27. They're all staffed by great innovators. Bill 27 is going to help them become more effective.

Of course, a few members of the Assembly also expressed some concerns and questions, and I appreciate having the opportunity now to provide clarification and further details. As I mentioned during second reading, this bill is an important step in this very timely work to develop and implement a framework that defines roles and mandates for the provincially funded organizations that support world-class research and innovation in our province.

Mr. Chairman, I hope that a certain member from across the way will be paying attention to the next points that I make because she said during the earlier debate that she has yet to hear a clear explanation of why Bill 27 is a good idea. I hope she is listening carefully.

Mr. Chairman, if Alberta is serious about our place in the global economy, then we need to strengthen our support for Alberta's researchers and entrepreneurs. This is about strengthening the support for those researchers and entrepreneurs. It will better enable them to realize their potential as creators of world-class discoveries and products. The world economy is changing, and we would be remiss if we didn't take action to situate ourselves strategically in that economy. It's a new, knowledge-based economy, and the leaders in that economy will be the ones who are smarter, more aligned, and more focused. We want Alberta to be a place where researchers and scientists can achieve beyond their wildest dreams.

But Bill 27 is also for all Albertans. By enabling our government to align and focus Alberta's research system, we'll be able to realize greater societal and economic benefits for Albertans and others beyond our borders.

Mr. Chairman, I always enjoy a good debate, and I enjoyed many of the diverse questions that have been raised. I must also say that I was somewhat disappointed and actually quite surprised at how some of the debate was focused on rumour and innuendo and an uninformed resistance to change. I didn't really know where to start. We heard everything from false rumours about AHFMR's fall competition to an undisguised effort to confuse the overall vision with individual funding decisions. I note, for example, that AHFMR has confirmed that their fall competition will be taking place despite attempts in this House to make people think otherwise. It's like the game of telephone, that is very popular in grade school. One person whispers to the next one until the real message is garbled. This is really a disservice to the existing researchers and innovators in the province, and it sends an entirely wrong impression to those people who are looking to start their careers in Alberta.

This is clearly a time when we are renewing our commitment to research and innovation, providing greater support than ever before, not less. You need only look at any one of our announcements over the past couple of years to see how deeply committed we are to moving forward on the next generation economy here in Alberta. That takes foresight. Bill 27 will enable our people and our organizations to better connect with their stakeholders and with each other as well as with other parts of the innovation continuum both here in the province and around the world, Mr. Chairman. It's all about better communication, improved alignment, and clearer direction.

Mr. Chairman, I hope we can put aside some of the rumours. I want people to have the facts. As I said, I appreciate the opportunity. I heard comments from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar during second reading that government would have less control over the corporations being created as well as their funding, and I heard from the hon. members for Edmonton-Riverview and Edmonton-Centre that government is going to have too much control. Which is it? Perhaps the members, since they're all part of the same party, can compare some notes next time and let me know.

Let's just set that aside for a moment, Mr. Chairman, and look at some of the specific questions that were raised. I'd like to start with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar's concern about the ability of board-governed entities to manage money given the Auditor General's recent report specifically regarding postsecondary educational institutions. Our board members take their responsibility for managing public funds very, very seriously. They are proactive, and they take action when issues arise. I can assure you that the boards of the new research and innovation entities will operate with a high level of financial accountability. We will ensure that the right people, the right systems, and the right processes are in place so that the corporations provide the level of financial oversight that Albertans expect.

Mr. Chairman, the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar brought up Bow Valley and the Auditor General going in and finding something about that. I might point out that it was the Bow Valley auditors that found the error and called the Auditor General. I just wanted to clarify that.

I'd like now to turn, Mr. Chairman, to the comments shared during second reading by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview. We heard some fairy tales in the House that day. If the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview finds vision and leadership to be politically and culturally frightening, then I think he lives in a very, very scary and sad world. It would seem that if the hon. member were to be telling some of the old classics, Snow White would turn into an ogre, and Bambi would be a fire-breathing dragon.

It seems he's chosen to willfully select isolated phrases from our roles and mandates framework document to suit a single-minded opposition to the bill. It's unfortunate that he chose to pull a very specific passage regarding the Premier's long-term vision for an aligned research and innovation system out of context for the purposes of creating anxiety in the research community. If he had read the very next paragraph, Mr. Chairman, the very next paragraph, he would have told the Assembly that the document says:

Greater transparency and accountability for the processes used by all provincially funded organizations. Governance structures should have the financial capacity to make long-term commitments as many research and innovation activities have multi-year dimensions.

The reason, I think, that he didn't go on to read that sentence is because it doesn't support the conspiracy theory of a centralized government, and it recognizes the long-term nature of research and innovation efforts in a way that we haven't been able to address before. In fact, it does disprove that conspiracy theory that seems to be bubbling up there. It also speaks to support for the basic research that he says is absent in the document.

So does this sentence, which appears just a few lines later, regarding building and supporting a strong research and innovation base. It says that "basic and applied research is seen as a cornerstone" – a cornerstone, Mr. Chairman – "of any research and innovation system." I think it's important that we repeated that. Not only have there been some single sentences very selectively pulled out of context from the roles and mandates framework document, but it seems that there has been a blind eye to our clearly stated and dearly held tradition of peer review and excellence when it comes to basic research. That will not change.

If he had looked at the website that we have, if he had explored the documents on it, he would have seen the importance we place on the role of basic research and the importance we place on the role of emerging technologies. We fully recognize that the next Alberta frontier, like our frontier in nanotechnology, for example, will come out of that kind of innovation, and we don't want to miss it.

The bottom line is that we'll be able to afford a much stronger basic research system. We'll have a much stronger infrastructure for it. We'll have even stronger universities and applied research institutions so that we can build both basic and targeted research, and then we'll be able to build that tax base that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar is talking about, to build that jurisdictional advantage and turn the eyes of the world toward Alberta.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview also seems to have missed this sentence, which is on the very page he said he was quoting from.

Over the last two years, stakeholders have told the Government of Alberta that the Province needs to better align and co-ordinate its provincially funded research and innovation resources to become more competitive and to better achieve desired outcomes.

Stakeholders – stakeholders, Mr. Chairman – have told us, and stakeholders have asked us to take leadership. We're doing what the stakeholders told us and are asking us to do. Yes, they want government leadership. They want government to have a vision that targets overall funding directions, not individual funding decisions, like the member liberally implies. Stakeholders agree that boards would make decisions, exercise judgment, and ensure excellence, all within a more collaboratively and integrated environment.

That's one of the many passages which the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview chose not to quote that demonstrates the stakeholder support for Bill 27. Instead, if you look at Hansard, he would have me put forward a strategic recommendation that chaos be a creative approach to build a research and innovation system in Alberta. In the full day of workshop discussions we had with over 90 of Alberta's key researchers and innovation stakeholders and in all of the subsequent discussions that we've had with stakeholders one on one, not one of them, not one, recommended that we employ chaos as a strategy to develop research and innovation in the province.

I would note that as the MLA representing one of our largest research campuses, as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar pointed out, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, from my understanding, hasn't even asked the president of the University of Alberta what she thought of Bill 27 before he spoke about it. I can tell you what she thinks. She knows and has told her staff that the province remains strongly committed to the principles of excellence and rigorous peer review that have characterized research in all areas. The Alberta government and the university have invested heavily in research and infrastructure and will not contemplate compromising Alberta's successes in these areas. [The Alberta] government further underscored that basic research is our foundation, and it is one of the reasons that Alberta is a destination for top researchers.

Mr. Chairman, we understand the full value of the whole research system. I also note that the hon. member fails to acknowledge that research enterprise extends far beyond the faculties of medicine and even the postsecondary institutions.

Before I move on, Mr. Chairman, to address the question raised by another hon. member and reviewing the Hansard from that day, I found it interesting, too – and this is just of personal interest – that when the member was casting a vote for names of potential future Premiers, it didn't occur to him that his own leader should or could perhaps be Premier one day.

Mr. Chairman, I'd like to turn now to the question that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre asked during second reading of Bill 27. I found startling the hon. member's question regarding who would come up with such a wacky idea to change the system. I'll tell you who: the more than 90 stakeholders intimately involved in the system, from postsecondary institutions to industry to the chairs of our existing research and innovation organizations. I'll tell you who else: the CEOs of the current organizations – of AHFMR, of the Alberta ingenuity fund, of the Alberta Research Council, of iCORE – who jointly signed a letter on March 18, 2009, available publicly on our website, which states: "Such a system is integral to a diversified and robust knowledge-based economy – the Next Generation Economy – that will position our province advantageously on the global stage."

These individuals, Mr. Chairman, are forward looking. They don't want to go backward. They want to do what's best for Alberta. They understand that aligning and supporting Alberta's research and innovation is even more important now in light of the global economic situation. This is about staying committed to building long-term prosperity for Alberta, a sustainable future where we are fully participating in the global knowledge-based economy. It's unfortunate that the member doesn't value the input of some of the top minds in the province.

Mr. Chairman, I'll tell you who else told us that the system needs to change: the outstanding and eminently qualified individuals on our international panels, which I mentioned earlier, people like Dr. Joseph Martin, former dean of the Faculty of Medicine at Harvard Medical School, who chaired the international review of AHFMR; Dr. Jacquelyn Thayer Scott, professor of organizational management at Cape Breton University, who chaired the international review of ASRA; Dr. Alan Bernstein, executive director of the Global HIV Vaccine Enterprise, who chaired the international review of Alberta Ingenuity in 2008. Sir John Bell from London, who is in charge of revamping the entire British medical system, said to me personally: this is music to my ears. Those are the wacky people which I refer to as the stakeholders who helped us with this.

The comments from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre would indicate, somewhat like the Member for Edmonton-Riverview, that perhaps they haven't gone through those international panel reports. I give them credit that there's a lot of work, there's a lot of reading that has to come into a lot of the stuff that they have to do. But I would encourage them: don't listen to me; listen to the individuals that I've just read into Hansard. Phone the people who are the CEOs of these institutions who have the touch. Did we go to every researcher in the province and ask them to design the new system? No because that's not their job, Mr. Chairman. Their job is to do their research. Our job is to make that research turn into something valuable here in this province. That's what this framework is all about. That's what Bill 27 is all about.

Mr. Chairman, the international reports have been available on my department's website for months. I would encourage them to take the time to read them. I'd also refer the hon. members to the debate that took place in this very House on November 9, 1979. I think it's very important that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre look at that debate because it was she who referred to former Premier Lougheed and the creation of the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research, so I think it's important she be aware of former Premier Lougheed's own words when it comes to the original intent of AHFMR. He said:

I've made it absolutely clear to the university presidents and to the deans of medical schools in discussions with them – and the records would say, on a number of occasions – that this foundation and the government's priority decision, and hopefully the legislative priority decision, in medical research is not to be used as a lever in terms of university funding. I think that should be clear and on the record. It's a decision we have made.

Those were Premier Lougheed's exact words, and they are guiding us in our ongoing consultation with the universities to ensure a sustainable long-term approach to research and innovation.

While we're on the subject of health research, Mr. Chairman, I really do need to address head-on the hon. member's concerns about the future of health research in Alberta. I think it's important to find out that the health corporation will continue to lead health research activities in the province with the continued financing from the endowment fund. For the new health corporation there will be clearly defined provincial health research priorities to support its mandate, something that Albertans have not had before but that the stakeholders have asked for.

What's new is the affirmation that investments in health research are a key driver of the new knowledge-based economy. We want this health institute to work with many key stakeholders to capture as much value as possible at every stage of the health research continuum. In fact, it's the model for all of the institutes to work with key stakeholders in an aligned and strengthened research fashion in an innovation system that takes the entire value chain of innovation from the bench top or the garage, Mr. Chairman, right through to the societal benefit or the marketplace or the benefit of the taxpayer.

In terms of the comments made by the hon. member during debate on Bill 27 that it will increase levels of government control or centralization, I'd like to present the facts. Mr. Chairman, the intent is to establish boards for these institutes comprised of individuals with the knowledge and the experience to deliver on the mandate and roles of those corps. We want to strengthen the relationships between the Ministry of AET and our new institutes. Among the organizations themselves we want some work between themselves in order to move in a more collaborative fashion towards common outcomes. The boards are going to have the ability to manage and make investment decisions based on their approved strategic business plans. The institutes will continue to seek external advice as may be required, and they will develop and deliver programs that will support many people working in our research and innovation system.

It's worth repeating, Mr. Chairman, because it's such an important foundation of our system, that Alberta's research decisions will continue to be based on peer-reviewed standards of excellence. We have so many very talented individuals employed within our current system who will continue to work within the new organizations and across the entire research and innovation system towards clearly defined objectives. The difference is that the government will also show greater leadership in bringing these institutes together to discuss and deliver on collaborative research initiatives. We need to continue to work together towards a strong future for Alberta. It's a global environment that we're working within, so we have to harness the collective strengths of our province.

There's a final point in the second reading that I'd like to address regarding the boards of the new corporations and specifically regarding their ability to make tough decisions. I have to say, Mr. Chairman, that I completely agree that the boards will need to be able to make some tough decisions. That's why they will have boards appointed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council.

I'm sure, Mr. Chairman, I may have an opportunity to finish that thought.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. Well, I listened carefully to the minister's comments. He made some good points, some unnecessarily personal attacks, and walked very close to points of order, but I chose not to challenge him on that. I'll go through a handful of points.

First of all, he spoke of rumours on AHFMR's fall competition. I don't know if the minister is aware, but it's just today that AHFMR put out notice that they were actually going to proceed with a fall competition on funding. It's late. There was reason for those rumours. There are reasons for fear. For the minister to somehow suggest that this was all made up without any grounds, in fact, is, I think, unfortunate for him to conclude. The truth of the matter is that it was only today that notice was given out on that.

As for greater transparency and the statements in government documents about greater transparency, that's just, in our view, standard boilerplate, and we don't take it seriously. I don't think the public does either. We'll begin to take the government's commitment to transparency more seriously when they're actually transparent, when they meet things like the standards of full, plain, and true disclosure required of publicly traded corporations to their shareholders. This government falls shockingly short of anything like that, and there's no shortage of examples. We can't even get the cost of building schools from the Minister of Infrastructure. If they're under P3s, it's some kind of state secret. We can't get the cost of road construction under P3s. What kind of disclosure is that? What kind of transparency is that? It's very disappointing.

Of course, I won't even go into the frustrations in obtaining information on royalties. Where do we have to go? Where do the citizens of Alberta have to go? They have to go to corporate filings to find out that oil sands companies are paying 48 cents a barrel in royalties. So don't talk to us about transparency. There's a reason your government lacks credibility on that.

The stakeholders: I just return to our point. Sure, the minister probably had many lengthy conversations with the president of the university and of the Alberta Research Council and so on. I can tell you again that last week I e-mailed and spoke to multiple deans, multiple researchers, other very senior officials. The level of knowledge on Bill 27 was shallow, and the people I spoke to did not feel consulted with one or two exceptions. So the stakeholder consultation has been only, as far as I can tell, at the very highest level.

I will tell the minister this. He'll be pleased to know that in my e-mails to probably two dozen different researchers I ended up attaching links to the government's website and links to the bill and links to the background framework paper so that the researchers whose careers depend on this can read and be informed because so far they have not been.

There is a concern – and I speak personally about this – about the politicization of the research sector of Alberta. I speak personally because I've gone through that experience. I've also witnessed too often that politically unpopular topics, when they're researched and published, are subject to efforts to squelch them, and I think there's a serious concern there that needs to be reflected. We do not want this bill to lead to a suffocating blanket of conformity which will have exactly the opposite effect of stimulating innovation. So I will take issue with the government on that.

I will, however, look to the minister here for the possibility of support on my next amendment. I do have another amendment.

The Deputy Chair: We'll pause for a moment and have the pages distribute it.

Dr. Taft: Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, this is amendment A2. Please proceed.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The amendment reads as follows: Dr. Taft to move that Bill 27, Alberta Research and Innovation Act, be amended in section 2 by adding "and supporting a balanced long-term program of research and innovation directed to the discovery of new knowledge and the application of that knowledge to improve the quality of life of Albertans" after the word "industries." This addresses the idea that the minister spoke to, that I spoke to earlier, which is basic research, the importance of exploring subjects just to see what happens, the importance of undertaking research that may or may not have commercial benefit or may or may not lead to some conclusion.

One of the concerns that I have with this bill is that starting right from the beginning, Mr. Chairman, the purpose is not what I think this bill deserves. The purpose reads right now as follows:

The purpose of this Act is to promote and provide for the strategic and effective use of funding and other resources to meet the research and innovation priorities of the Government, including fostering the development and growth of new and existing industries.

Period. That's the purpose. There's nothing in this bill that speaks to the importance of pursuing information for its own sake and understanding. You know, taking an example I used earlier tonight, when Albert Einstein sitting in a patent office as a young man in Vienna or Salzburg in the very early years of the 1900s was doodling away on physics, there was no realization that 30 or 40 years later his work would transform the world. It was just exploring for the sake of exploring. We want that spirit in this province.

This amendment would recognize and champion that spirit in the purpose of this bill by talking about a balanced, long-term program of research and innovation directed to the discovery of new knowledge. It broadens things out. It understands that this isn't just about serving the commercial interests. As important as those are, it's about something much bigger than that, Mr. Chairman.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Again, I'd like to thank the hon. member for the effort that he's putting into the debate here tonight in the amendments that he's bringing forward. I would like to point out that in my comments what we talked about was strengthening the framework for basic research. That basic research really is the domain of the postsecondaries. It really is the domain of the deans. It really is the domain of the graduate students of those researchers that are going to be pursuing those questions to solutions that we want. But it's also the solutions to questions that they have curiosity about.

I think what the hon. member is really talking about is this idea of curiosity and that curiosity can lead to some very interesting things, and I agree with the hon. member. I also agree that the framework and the way we've developed the framework and the structure, again, of Bill 27 – and I'm glad he agrees with this – allows us to support a balanced, long-term program of research, and it allows us to support innovation directed to the discovery of new knowledge, and it allows us to support the application of that knowledge to improve the quality of life, I would suggest, hon. member, of not just Albertans but of the globe because we do want to sell this.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I would suggest to all hon. members that I have absolutely no problem accepting this amendment from the hon. member, and I would support it.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: I'm left speechless, so I would call the question before anybody changes their mind.

Thank you.

[Motion on amendment A2 carried]

The Deputy Chair: Back to the bill as amended.

Mr. Horner: Well, I thought, Mr. Chairman, that in the interests of continuing this and perhaps bringing closure, I would want to just continue on the independence of the boards to make decisions within the bill because I didn't get an opportunity to actually clarify that. I think the hon. member deserves that. He's talking a lot about centralization, which is not in the bill because it isn't about the centralization of decision-making. What we're talking about is alignment. We're talking about getting focus from science researchers to give us advice. That's not the government making the decision. That's researchers from within Alberta and from without similar to – and the hon. member is probably familiar with this – the old ASRA, the original ASRA. That's where we're headed with the authority.

In terms of the comments, Mr. Chairman, the boards of these corporations will be individuals of knowledge and experience to deliver the mandate. So if it's within the biosphere, they'll be experts in bioindustries or with their health researchers. The boards will have the ability to manage and make investment decisions. They're going to have true strategic business plans. That's the accountability part that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar asked for. The institutes will continue to seek external advice as may be required to manage those activities. The Alberta research decisions, as I said before, will be peer-reviewed standards of excellence.

There's a final point that I'd like to address from second reading, and it's regarding their ability to make tough decisions. We really do want them to make tough decisions, Mr. Chairman, and that's why the corporations will have boards appointed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council. There's a current process already for the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research and for Alberta Ingenuity, two organizations being transformed through this bill. The research institutes being transformed by the legislation currently have their boards appointed by government through ministerial orders. ARC, or the Alberta Research Council, and iCORE are owned by the government of Alberta, and their boards are approved by their shareholder, the Crown.

In these respects board appointment by government is continued. What has changed is that with the introduction of Bill 32, the Alberta

Public Agencies Governance Act, all agencies, boards, and commissions, including these four as well as the Alberta Research and Innovation Authority, the one the member was talking about, will have defined roles and mandates documents completed as per Bill 32, and it is between the minister and the organization to clearly outline the roles and responsibilities. Mr. Chairman, I think that gets to the hub of what the hon. member has been talking about. We're not going to make the decisions. We're just setting the parameters and the framework that they can work that decision through.

If the hon. members have reviewed Bill 32 – and I'm sure they have – they would note that there are other requirements around board orientation and training, all critical elements to support strong governance of the research and innovation system. There is currently and will continue to be accountability in these systems for these publicly funded corporations through mechanisms such as reviews by the Auditor General and by the development and release of annual reports, again a current practice which we will continue. The new structure simply enhances the accountability through good governance practices, and that's an important objective when we're dealing with funds that have been provided to us through the taxpayers.

Mr. Chairman, these changes will give us a system that's focused on priorities, that will be responsive to society, to the economy, to students, to graduate students, to researchers. For a province of our size breaking into this global industry, we need to do it right. We can't be all things to all people. The framework does result in changes and new relationships among the players, and yes, there's always angst when that's going to happen. But ultimately I believe, as do all of the stakeholders who built this framework – I didn't write it – that the framework will allow us to be more successful using research and innovation to do what needs to be done to address the social needs, to add value to our resources, to diversify our knowledge-based economy, to be a serious global player.

It truly is an exciting time to be part of Alberta's research and innovation system, Mr. Chairman. Through the renewed system we're going to be able to become an even more attractive place for researchers, scientists, entrepreneurs, and innovators of all kinds. I have taken this structure to places like the Silicon Valley. I've taken this structure to places like Oxford, to places like Ireland, to places like Mexico. I've showed them what we're doing, and they are in awe of how we've been able to align our system. The only way we can do that is because of our size, because of the fact that we can do it, and because we are pulling as one. Is that centralized control? No. That's a good team effort.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the spirit behind the minister's comments. As I said, we're not standing here trying to sabotage Bill 27. We're not going to do anything to block its passage. We understand that streamlining and consolidating can be a good thing. We're just offering some sober second thoughts on the process. Just to repeat a message I've said many, many times – and I know the minister would agree with me here – getting this right is one of the most important things this government can do to ensure the medium and long-term success of this province, so that's why we're taking some time on it.

I would now like to move with the minister to section 9 of Bill 27 because there are some real concerns around this section, and I'm hoping to hear some real reassurance and explanation from the minister. Section 9, for those of you who haven't seen the bill, is titled Records and Accounts. Under this bill the minister has the right to get access to very extensive and detailed information. I have to wonder why it's necessary. Just for the purposes of this debate I'm going to read two or three portions of section 9 out loud here.

Section 9(2) reads:

The Minister may request from a research and innovation corporation any information, including personal information, the Minister considers necessary, and the corporation shall disclose the information in the form and manner determined by the Minister.

It's very clear here that the corporation shall disclose.

Then it goes on under 9(3):

A research and innovation corporation shall allow the Minister or the Minister's representative to inspect and make copies of all records, accounts, reports and other documents of the corporation and, in the case of an electronic document, print the electronic document, and otherwise review the operations of the corporation.

Then under section 9(4)(d) – I read it initially thinking there was some reassurance – it basically gives the minister, as I'm reading this, the capacity to seek this information “for any other purpose authorized by regulation.”

I want to draw attention to one other point here. Maybe there's a good explanation here. Maybe I'm misreading this. But I am concerned. Under the definitions of the act the term “personal information” is defined as meaning “personal information as defined in the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act.” Now, that definition – I'm not sure that I have it with me here – is remarkably inclusive. It includes all kinds of personal information, medical information, opinions, biometrics, virtually anything you'd ever want to know about anybody. So I'm asking the minister why. Why would we give the minister that level of detail?

Here is the concern I have. Let's say that we have a researcher conducting research into AIDS and HIV patients or, goodness knows, any number of medical conditions. The way I'm reading this bill, the minister if he so chooses – and I'm presuming that that would be a rare occurrence. Nonetheless, if he chose – and, you know, it could be this minister, it could be any minister in the future – he could request very, very detailed information collected under research. Maybe I'm misreading this. I don't know if the minister can help me now or if we need to defer here. I do have an amendment. But before putting everybody through the process of the amendment, maybe the minister can explain.

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Chairman, the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act as well as some federal regulations as well as some other legislation that has been passed by this House protects individuals from the type of thing that the member was talking about. Yes, this gives the minister some fairly intensive powers in terms of being able to review what's going on in those institutes, but we fund and will be the major funder of these institutes. We need to have some way of ensuring accountability both on the financial side and on the strategic business plans that they'll be presenting to us.

I think it's important that when you set out a framework like this – and I'm not saying that we're going to do this on a regular basis, and the hon. member knows that. But I don't think you pass legislation that precludes you from doing the things that you're going to potentially need to do down the road, and that's essentially what this section is all about.

Dr. Taft: Well, I was so thrilled with the minister's response to the last amendment, but he won't be surprised that I am less thrilled. I really want MLAs to listen to this because this is how personal information will be defined under Bill 27. This is how it's defined. People, please think about this.

“personal information” means recorded information about an identifiable individual, including

- (i) the individual's name, home or business address or home or business telephone number,
- (ii) the individual's race, national or ethnic origin, colour or religious or political beliefs or associations,
- (iii) the individual's age, sex, marital status or family status,
- (iv) an identifying number, symbol or other particular assigned to the individual,
- (v) the individual's fingerprints, other biometric information, blood type, genetic information or inheritable characteristics,
- (vi) information about the individual's health and health care history, including information about a physical or mental disability,
- (vii) information about the individual's educational, financial, employment or criminal history, including criminal records where a pardon has been given,
- (viii) anyone else's opinions about the individual, and
- (ix) the individual's personal views or opinions, except if they are about someone else.

It's a remarkable scope, an unnerving one. I'm not just doing this for political grandstanding. It's unnerving for me to think that information collected under research, covering everything from genetic makeup to political beliefs to criminal records, is subject to this kind of request.

It says here – and I'm quoting from the bill – that the Minister may request from a research and innovation corporation any information, including personal information . . . and the corporation shall disclose the information.

Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment, and it is specific to this particular issue. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you. We'll pause for a moment while the pages distribute this. This amendment will be A3.

Okay. Proceed, hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. This amendment would proceed as follows: that Bill 27, the Alberta Research and Innovation Act, be amended in section 9(2) by striking out “including” and substituting “excluding.” What the section currently reads is, “The Minister may request from a research and innovation corporation any information, including personal information.” This would amend that to say, “The Minister may request . . . any information, excluding personal information.” So it's pretty straightforward. I don't know that I need to belabour the point.

For the life of me, unless we're somehow misunderstanding the legislative drafting here, I'm concerned not only about the principle of intrusion into personal information but about the fact that this could create all kinds of problems when we get into ethics reviews. For example, any research done involving personal information is going to have to go through an ethics review committee, which is pretty strict, and if this is hanging over the decisions of an ethics review committee, I just don't know how it's going to work out. I think there's a concern that we may be creating inadvertently a whole bunch of angst and problems and even driving good researchers to other jurisdictions by having such an open door for the minister to request personal information.

I won't belabour it. Thanks.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member just mentioned researchers and various other folks as if he's talking about a researcher in the University of Alberta. This wouldn't apply to them. This is about the institutions that we are creating, and if the hon. member thinks about it, there is going to be some very significant information and probably in some cases some very significant security. When you talk about biometrics, we may use the fingerprint as a security code to get into a locked lab. When you talk about some of the information that we're going to have to hold as it pertains to the institute's duties, there's going to be some interesting information that we're going to have that could be commercial down the road.

I'll also point the hon. member to section 9(5), which basically says that we're going to hold it as confidential. However, I want it to be clear that this does not apply to the entire research and innovation system. This applies to the institutes, which the hon. member is telling me he wants to be transparent, where we want to be able to find things and be able to go in there and do things.

The reality, Mr. Chairman, is that I cannot – I cannot – in good conscience support this amendment, and I truly do regret that, hon. member, because, you know, we were doing so well.

Dr. Taft: Okay. Well, I appreciate that this is applying to the research corporations, but that's going to include, well, AHFMR or son of AHFMR, research organizations doing medical research.

Mr. Horner: They don't do the research. They hire it out.

Dr. Taft: Okay. So this is where I'm looking for clarity from the minister. The way this reads right now, "the Minister may request from a research and innovation corporation any information, including personal information." Let's imagine we have a research and innovation corporation researching hepatitis. There has been some brilliant research done in Alberta on hepatitis. Well, okay. I think the minister is narrowing things unnecessarily. There will be human research done under some of these innovation and research corporations. [interjection] None? Zero? Zip? Okay. So elaborate. Please elaborate.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Chairman, perhaps this will clear up some of the misconception the hon. member has. The institutions are the ones that will be creating the strategic plan to decide where in our framework we're going to go to answer the question. They're going to be the person that's going to take the funding that we provide or that a government department provides or that an outside entity provides and take the question and then go find those researchers in that other framework and say: lookit, this is the answer we need. We are not building research institutions that will have labs and researchers in them. We already have that. If the hon. member thinks about AHFMR as an example, AHFMR provides a chair at the University of Alberta. That chair isn't working for AHFMR. He's underneath the umbrella of the University of Alberta. This would not apply to him. That's what I'm getting at.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. That's what I was looking for here. The way this is worded, however, it gives remarkable scope and depth to the powers of the minister.

Mr. Horner: Now it's forever in Hansard.

Dr. Taft: Yes. So now we've got the minister's comments forever in Hansard. I don't know if those carry the legal status of legislation, though: "May request from a research and innovation corporation any information." If the research and innovation corporation is granting out money to whoever the researcher is and that researcher is conducting research, my concern – and I hope the minister can understand this, and I'm sure this minister wouldn't do it – is that should a minister at some point in the future demand information, the research and innovation corporation would then need to pursue it from the researchers. Okay. The minister is going to explain.

Mr. Horner: In that situation, Mr. Chairman, that person would have every right to go to the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act and the Privacy Commissioner and lodge his complaint that it doesn't pertain to anything else that's happening. It would be dealt with in that manner as it is today in any other situation.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood on the amendment.

Mr. Mason: Well, thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to just briefly get in on the dialogue here about the amendment to Bill 27 that's put forward by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview. I share his concern that the clause here, 9(2), is far too broadly written. The government has been bedeviled during the session with what I would consider to be sloppy drafting of bills. It's gotten them in trouble on Bill 19. It's gotten them in trouble on Bill 44. Sections giving government powers are drafted far too broadly and without due care for concerns that legitimately might arise. I think this is another one.

For example, because this power on the part of the minister is not constrained in any meaningful way in this section, it could allow the minister to demand personal information of a researcher whose research the government found awkward or embarrassing. There are questions whether or not . . . [interjection] Well, there are no constraints on it, hon. minister, and that's a problem. If there are, I'd sure like to hear what they are, and I will sit down so that you can do that.

Mr. Horner: I would point to, again, "The Minister may request from a research and innovation corporation," not from the University of Alberta, not from, you know, the Alberta research corporation, not from any of those entities that the hon. member is thinking about.

Secondly, if he scrolls down the page to section (5):

If the information disclosed under subsection (2) or contained in records, accounts, reports and other documents of the research and innovation corporation inspected, copied or printed under subsection (3) relates to labour relations, is a trade secret or is of a commercial, financial, scientific or technical nature, the information is to be treated as having been provided in confidence.

That's right in the legislation. That's an offence as well.

Mr. Chairman, we're looking for bogeymen where bogeymen don't exist. I really believe that this amendment is not necessary.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Chairman, we're not looking for bogeymen. We're looking for things in the drafting of the legislation that may give rise to unexpected problems or in the hands of a different minister somewhere down the line might give rise to abuse.

I'm sorry; I'm not completely satisfied by what the minister has to say. I know that these are with respect to the corporations, but what information does the corporation have within its possession? That is really the question the minister hasn't addressed. It may possess a great deal of information with respect to the nature of the research that's being conducted, who's conducting it, in fact even who's being researched. You know, I'm not satisfied by the minister's response.

Dr. Taft: Well, I need to point out to the minister, because I read the whole section a few times, that 9(5) does not include personal information if I'm reading it correctly. It says: "If the information disclosed . . . relates to labour relations, is a trade secret or is of a commercial, financial, scientific or technical." It doesn't cover personal.

Now, personal information may have other protections, but the principle I'd like to proceed on, especially when it comes to collecting people's personal information and disclosing it, is to use the minimal powers necessary, to be minimally invasive. Losing personal information always seems to be a one-way process. Once it's gone, it's never recovered. Once we give up that personal privacy, it seems to be lost forever.

I don't think we're going to advance this discussion too far. I have this sinking feeling that the minister is not going to go for this amendment. I want it on the record, though, that I'm not convinced at this point by the minister's arguments. Let's call the question.

[Motion on amendment A3 lost]

The Deputy Chair: On the bill as amended, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the vigorous debate, the exchange of ideas. I do feel some progress was made. I learned something. I appreciate the minister's gesture of accepting one of the amendments. I wish him well because this is a really important bill.

I would leave one last request to the minister from me, which is that when it comes to developing the regulations, please consult widely and deeply. I would ask you, please, not to just go to the presidential and vice-presidential levels, but make sure that the people actually conducting the research, the senior research, the people who actually are going to be doing the innovation and who are actually getting the millions of dollars in research grants – please consult those people because they haven't been consulted extensively in developing this act. When it comes to the regulations, if it's going to work, they have to be listened to.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: On the bill.

The Deputy Chair: On the bill as amended.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you very, very much, Mr. Chair. It's been a long while. I almost lost my train of thought, but it's a good thing that sometimes I write down the odd note here. If you'll indulge me a little bit here, it's regarding a little bit of the minister's comments that he has letters from this university president, that university president, this person here, that person here. I'm reminded, too, by the comments just made by the Member for Edmonton-Riverview. Really, it's sort of a story, and I think it will bring some clarity to it if you just, like I said, allow me some leeway.

There's a scene in The Godfather where Michael is sitting there with his girlfriend, and there's Luca Brasi. It's a very famous scene. It will be on the bill; you'll see how it relates here. Luca Brasi is there speaking, and Kay says, "Who is that very scary man, Michael?" "You're right. That is a very scary man." They go to another thing, but they come back to this. Michael explains to his girlfriend: "There was a big band leader, and my cousin Johnny Fontane played with this big band leader. Long and short of it, he was in a contract with this big band leader. My father and Luca Brasi went to that big band leader, and they tried to get my cousin Johnny out of the thing." Long story short, they said: "Either you let cousin Johnny out of this contract or your brains will be on the contract. Either/or." Anyways, the gentleman signed the contract, allowing Johnny Fontane out of the said contract. He was free to go. He didn't want his brains on the contract.

Sometimes, Mr. Minister, you have an extraordinary amount of power. When you go get these letters, asking the presidents of universities for letters and for endorsements from various heads of things, they feel like they may be in a situation much like the big band leader's. They have an obligation to sign these letters. I'm not saying they do it as a rule.

Mr. Mason: It's an offer they can't refuse.

Mr. Hehr: It's an offer they can't refuse. Thank you.

I just offer that. That's why you have to go to the secondary levels of research. Thank you very much for allowing me some leeway in that story.

Mr. Horner: Well, I guess I'm a little taken aback. I'm Irish-Scottish, and I'm now a godfather. I don't know what to say about that.

An Hon. Member: Forget about it.

Mr. Horner: Forget about it.

Mr. Chairman, getting it right, as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview talked about, is extremely important. Getting it right meant that we started this process 18 months ago. Getting it right meant that, yes, we did consult with well over 90 stakeholders at the one that I remember and probably an equivalent amount of folks in the second and third. We stood in front of them at the last forum that we had, and we drew on the map. We said: this is what you wrote; this is what you said you wanted your new framework to look like. You can ask anyone that was there. I was standing at a podium, and I said: I don't need to do this; you guys are telling us to do this; you're the stakeholders. The research community is saying to us: we want you to do this because this will make it better for us.

So when we wrote Bill 27, what we said was: we're going to change the system and the framework to what you have asked us to change it to. Bill 27 is a reflection of what those folks told us to do. I'm sorry, hon. member; I don't have the power that you may think I have and am perhaps not as persuasive as you think I might be. However, what I'm doing is a response to what those stakeholders told us to do by way of this legislation.

The other point that I will make to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview – and, again, I appreciate the debate, too, and I appreciate his concerns. I'm sure that one day we may see him at one of those institutions. I think that the other thing that we have to take for granted or we have to make an assumption of is that the deans of science or the vice-presidents of science or the presidents of their respective organizations – and by the way, hon. member, I never asked them to write a letter. They wrote them voluntarily. You can ask them that as well. But the deans and all of those folks who came to the consultations were asked to go and talk to their groups. If they didn't do that or if they didn't talk to the specific people that you talked to in the 7,000 or 8,000 researchers that we have in the province, I don't know what else I could have done in terms of consultation.

It was on the web. It was advertised very clearly. No, it wasn't an open forum because we would have had 8,000 people in a room, and we'd have gotten nothing done. What we said was: "You have a hierarchy of management within your postsecondary institution over research and innovation. Bring us those people who run that system," because they do, "and have them disseminate the information to those other levels, and then give us that feedback." That was done over the course of 18 months.

Mr. Chairman, I agree that this has to be right. But in order for it to be right, it had to be written by the stakeholders, not by us. That's why we're doing it this way.

The Deputy Chair: Are you ready for the question on Bill 27, the Alberta Research and Innovation Act?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 27 as amended agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

Bill 45 Electoral Boundaries Commission Amendment Act, 2009

The Deputy Chair: Any members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chair. It, again, is my pleasure to speak on this bill in Committee of the Whole. Really, you know, we looked at it, and we thought about things, and our opinion is still similar to where it was after second reading. We still believe sincerely that the work of this Legislature can be done with its current 83 members, who are a part of this august Assembly.

We do not see that with the advent of technology, with Black-Berrys, with cellular phones, with, I guess, executive assistants in our offices and computers and staff here at the Legislature that we can't all pick up the slack in these economic times and carry the workload of an additional four MLAs. Simply put, I would hazard to guess that it is easier now to be an MLA; maybe not easier, but technology makes it easier for us to access more of our constituents now than it ever has been. This will continue to be so, so there is a strong argument that we can do the job, that there no longer needs to be an additional four members added to this Assembly.

I brought this up last time, that an additional four members in this House will cost us on a four-year term roughly $10 million. That is not an extraordinary expense to the taxpayer; nonetheless, it's an expense that we don't need to saddle them with going forward. It's something that's going to be on the books and not just for one election. It's going to be on the books for a longer period of time. This $10 million could be added to a savings plan, to policing, to helping our colleges grow and expand, heck, even the research and innovation fund. I'd like to see the money go there more so than I would an additional four MLAs.

I appreciate some of the concerns brought up by some of the members last time at second reading. They were primarily brought up by rural caucus members, who do have to travel a great deal of distance and do have to do their jobs with some of that constraint on them. That said, like I said earlier, the technology and the ability and the tools we have here at our fingertips as legislators should enable us to do that job better than we ever had and continue to represent the interests of Alberta citizens in the fashion they've become accustomed to.

On that note, I guess we could have brought in an amendment trying to reduce the bill, and I don't believe we have. Maybe we'll bring that in third reading when I remember things in my office, which maybe are still there, but I can't remember that right now, so we'll move on from that standpoint. But needless to say, I see where we are, and where we are is where we're at. Those are my initial comments.

I think we can do the job and continue to do the job for our citizens without adding an additional four MLAs. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much. It's a pleasure to participate this evening in the discussion, or the debate, on Bill 45. Certainly, when we look at the proposal here to increase the number of electoral divisions by four – or another way of saying that would be to have an additional, after the next election, four representatives, to bring the total to 87 – I look at it this way, Mr. Chairman. I think it is an unnecessary cost at a difficult time. Many of us are now using electronic devices to consult with not only our constituents but with the government, so there has been a significant improvement even since the last commission, as I said in second reading, in electronic communication. Communication is so fast that in reality you can't keep up with it all, so the need to have four additional members, I think, is inappropriate at this time.

In fact, Mr. Chairman, this morning, almost 12 hours ago or a little bit better than 12 hours ago, I attended a committee meeting, the Chief Electoral Officer Search Committee. You were also chairing that, so you've had a very busy day. It came to the attention of the committee members and those present that we were going to reduce the size of the ad that we're going to place for the Chief Electoral Officer as a cost-cutting measure. Hon. members in the government talked about that as a cost-cutting measure, and I would certainly agree with that. If people are interested, they're going to read the ad. They may have to put their glasses on, but they'll be able to read it. Now, that's an example of saving pennies, and dollars will follow. The health minister would have difficulty with that concept, of course, as would other members on the government front bench.

This is about this bill, and I would appreciate it if I would be allowed some leniency here. We're in committee. You understand that.

We have a cost-cutting measure like this over 12 hours ago, and here we're debating a bill that's going to increase the Legislative Assembly budget by hundreds of thousands of dollars, maybe millions of dollars. We don't know. No one in the government is indicating publicly just exactly what the cost would be to the taxpayers of these four additional seats. Mr. Chairman, that is an example of spending and saving. The health minister is the first one that wants to bring this up. In the morning we're going to save a small amount, which all the members across the way were in agreement with, but here this evening people don't have any problem with increasing significantly the size of the budget if we pass Bill 45 in its present condition. I have a number of issues. That would be the first one.

The second, of course, is that I really don't think it's necessary to speed up this process in any way. I don't understand why we couldn't wait another year and then have a discussion. The five individuals that are going to form this commission – I was present at the last commission. I made a presentation. I heard other individuals make their presentations. Unfortunately, they weren't listened to. It's really unfortunate. I hope that with this commission it will be different.

In fact, it was the government that took the eraser to the electoral map around Edmonton and removed a seat, and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud would have one of the largest populations in the . . . [interjection] There was a Liberal member on the committee, but they certainly, hon. member, were not in charge of the map. In fact, that person wrote a minority report, which I'm sure the hon. member has read, and that minority report certainly indicated that Edmonton should not have been penalized politically. Again, we took the eraser to the map. It was Edmonton-Norwood that was eliminated or cut up.

Certainly, Edmonton in the next report from this commission, if this bill becomes law, should get Edmonton-Norwood back. Perhaps Edmonton-Whitemud – I'm not saying that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud is not doing a very good job, but the population in that end of the city has grown in the last eight years to the point where that is a natural place for a seat to be added. We're almost, as they say, halfway to Leduc. We all know the troubles there during the last election with the enumeration. Those would be some of the areas of concern.

When we consider what happened to the city of Edmonton with the last commission, we can only speculate on what's going to happen with the next commission. There are five individuals that are going to be appointed to the commission, three from the government and two from the Official Opposition. Now, it will be interesting to see how all this works out. It will be interesting to see when we change the population by striking out 4,000 individuals and substituting 8,000. Now, Mr. Chairman, I'm looking at the current section 15(2)(c): "There is no town in the proposed electoral division that has a population exceeding 4000 people." Whenever this amendment, if it becomes law, is put up to 8,000 citizens, how many constituents as we know them now would this definition apply to? I certainly would be interested in that information.

Mr. Chairman, in conclusion, I would just like to say that it is, again, ironic that we started out this morning at a committee meeting saving a few dollars by reducing the size of the ads that are going to be circulating throughout the national press regarding the recruitment of the Chief Electoral Officer, yet here this evening, over 12 hours later, we are discussing a bill that's going to add substantially to the administrative costs of the Legislative Assembly.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I will take my seat. I certainly will be interested, regardless of whether it's this summer or next summer that the commission gets started on the proceedings, and I will certainly make every effort to attend some of the commission's public hearings and make a submission if it's necessary.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise tonight during Committee of the Whole in support of Bill 45, the Electoral Boundaries Commission Amendment Act. I'm encouraged by the debate on this legislation. It deals with a fundamental system of democracy in this province, and it's essential that Albertans, no matter their location, are represented fairly and equitably in this Assembly, which I think is a point that has been lost in this discussion.

There are certainly some issues that have been raised in this debate, and I'd like to take an opportunity to address some of those tonight. The increase in the number of electoral divisions will mean that the average population in each electoral division will be smaller than what it would be without the addition of four new electoral divisions, Mr. Speaker. It's important that we look to the number of constituents that will be represented by MLAs to ensure that MLAs are able to better interact with their constituents, which in turn leads to more effective representation. I think that in a province like Alberta, where we see a great contrast between very concentrated urban communities and much more dispersed rural communities, it's very important that we acknowledge both pieces of our province and that we don't make assumptions that one approach which will work correctly or well for one part of our province will be equally as responsive to constituents in other parts of the province.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to take a moment to talk about the concept of representation by population, or rep by pop as it is commonly known. Under the representation-by-population system elected representatives are chosen by more or less numerically equivalent blocks of voters. In 1991 the Carter decision of the Supreme Court of Canada considered the creation of electoral boundaries, took into account the nature of Canada and the wide variety of communities in our country, and reviewed the extent to which variation from strict representation by population is acceptable.

The Supreme Court held that variations in the size of voter populations among electoral divisions do not infringe on the right to vote that is guaranteed by the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The Supreme Court held that the right to vote means that "each citizen is entitled to be represented in government." Representation means having a voice in the issues under consideration by the government and having the right to bring your concerns and questions to the attention of your elected representative. I think that's key, Mr. Speaker, to how we understand and how Albertans understand the democratic process.

The purpose of the right to vote is not a quality of voting power per se but the right to effective representation. It is impossible to draw boundary lines that guarantee exactly the same number of voters in each division. As the Supreme Court has noted, voters pass away; voters move. Even with the aid of frequent censuses absolute voter parity is impossible. However, the court went on to note that other factors also need to be considered when determining electoral boundaries: geography, community history, community interests, and minority representation. These may need to be taken into account to ensure that the Legislative Assembly as a whole effectively represents our province's broad range of interests and backgrounds. In the end there are numerous considerations that may justify a departure from absolute voter parity in order to achieve more effective representation.

Mr. Speaker, I would now like to provide some clarification on what our act says about the size of electoral divisions. The Electoral Boundaries Commission Act says that the population of a proposed electoral division . . .

Mr. MacDonald: Point of order.

Point of Order Parliamentary Titles

The Deputy Chair: What's the citation?

Mr. MacDonald: The specific citation, Mr. Chairman – and I've been trying to get your attention for some time – would be 23(c).

The Deputy Chair: You're saying 23(b)(i)?

Mr. MacDonald: No; 23(c). The hon. member is obviously reading off prepared notes. We are in committee, and there is repetition here of the term "Mr. Speaker." I believe the correct term is "Mr. Chairman." So if we could stop that, I would be grateful. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: On the point of order. It's been done on both sides, calling Mr. Speaker, calling Mr. Chair. Taking into consideration what is meant on this, I don't see this as a point of order. We'll carry on.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's wonderful that we're able to really keep this spirit of – what was it? – open dialogue within the Committee of the Whole going on both sides of the House.

Debate Continued

Ms Redford: Now, as I was asked to do previously, Mr. Chair, I would like to provide some clarification on what our act says about the size of electoral divisions. The Electoral Boundaries Commission Act says that the population of a proposed electoral division must not vary from the provincial average by more than 25 per cent. This means that any proposed electoral division can be up to 25 per cent larger or 25 per cent smaller than the average proposed electoral division's size. Allowing this amount of variation means that the commission does not have to make each proposed electoral division exactly the same size. Instead, the commission has the flexibility to consider factors such as community interests, extending municipal boundaries, as I've said earlier, natural geographical features, and the like. It's important for communities to feel that they're well represented by an MLA who is able to understand their community interests.

This act will allow for up to four electoral divisions to have a population that will vary by as much as 50 per cent outside of the average population. The allowance for special electoral divisions recognizes that some parts of our province are particularly remote or may be sparsely populated. The act will require a special electoral division to meet three of five criteria, which we have discussed before and which are set out in the act: the physical size of the area, its distance from the Legislative Assembly building, the size of towns in the area, whether the area contains an Indian reserve or Métis settlement, and whether the area is on the boundaries of the province itself.

Now, everything I've spoken of so far already exists in the act. However, the act would change one small part of these rules. It will relate to the size of towns in a proposed special electoral division. We think that that is an important piece of work that needs to be amended in this act. Looking to the nature of the communities and how they have changed since the last time this act was amended, Bill 45 will increase the maximum size of a town from 4,000 to 8,000 people. Mr. Chair, the reason that this is important for us to address is because since the last time that this legislation was amended and what we talk about in this House all of the time, the nature of this province has changed. The discussions that we have, the legislation that we pass, not just this legislation but other legislation, reflect the fact that as a province and as a government we are dealing with increasing demands on this province.

It would be short sighted for us to think that it was possible to continue to represent the people of Alberta and the population of this province, that is continuing to grow, to ensure that we as a government and we as a Legislative Assembly can address the concerns that modern Albertans believe we must address in order for us to be competitive in the world, Mr. Chairman, without amending this legislation. We believe that it is important to amend this legislation to ensure that Albertans can continue to have confidence in the Legislature that represents them, to make sure that their common views, their shared goals for the future will be properly represented through face-to-face dialogue with the people that they vote for.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I would urge people to support this legislation.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Well, thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm happy to make a few comments with respect to this. One of the key bases for this act or any similar act was a decision of the Supreme Court, which the minister has identified in terms of its impact, which is that no electoral division can be either more than 25 per cent larger or less than 25 per cent of the average. Now, that gives a tremendous amount of leeway. That was a decision, in my recollection, against Alberta because at that time the electoral divisions were enormously different; the variation was enormously different.

I remember helping to put together a submission for the city of Edmonton with respect to electoral boundaries when I served on the Edmonton council. At that time Edmonton-Whitemud, for example, was one of the largest constituencies in Alberta, with over 24,000 at that time, and Cardston was an electoral boundary that had about 8,000. So the range was 3 to 1 at that time.

Of course, when we look at these things, we need to look at the politics behind them. That is key. To simply debate this bill in terms of sort of abstract principles, and to not look at how it actually affects results in this Chamber is, I think, a mistake. What occurred up until that decision was that, in fact, heavily Conservative rural areas had small populations in their electoral districts whereas the cities, which were more inclined to vote for opposition candidates, especially in Edmonton and Calgary, contained very large populations. Of course, that favoured this government, who was the same party at that time, Mr. Chairman, as it is today.

Now, the plus or minus 25 per cent rule still gives very, very broad latitude. In my view the principle of equality of population is a very important one. I think that the range should be less, but that will be up to the electoral commission. This act tends to widen the latitude of the electoral commission, to make exceptions and provide for additional special districts where the plus or minus 25 per cent rule doesn't apply. I don't think the case has been made for that yet by the government, and I think they should make the case. In the last electoral commission, I think, of the four special cases only two were really required. So the question, then, is: why do we need to have more special electoral divisions, with more latitude for the commission? I don't think the minister has made the case for that yet.

With respect to increasing the number of electoral divisions overall, adding four seats to this Legislature is an interesting question. I know that some members have expressed the concern that we don't need more politicians, that there's additional expense, and that the existing size is perfectly adequate given additional tools – for example, electronic means and so on – to communicate with constituents.

On the other hand, let's again look at the practical impact of not increasing the number of seats in this Legislature. There has been rapid growth in the province, but it's been extremely uneven, Mr. Chairman, and much of the growth has taken place in places like the cities of Calgary and Grande Prairie. That means that other places will lose seats if, in fact, we don't add new seats. In the last electoral redistribution Edmonton lost a seat and rural Alberta lost two seats. Those two seats went, then, to Calgary because the growth in Calgary had been faster than in other parts of the province.

Mr. Chairman, I think, based on my preliminary look at the situation, that the same thing will happen again if we don't increase the size of this Legislature. Edmonton will lose a seat. Rural Alberta will lose at least a couple of seats and maybe more. I haven't really had an opportunity to look at it in great detail. The result of not doing this, then, is to mean that there will be a redistribution that will take away a seat from the city of Edmonton. There'll be a redistribution that will take away at least two seats from rural Alberta. Is that really in the interests of those communities?

We fought very hard during the last redistribution to raise the question of loss of representation, particularly in the city that I represent, which is the city of Edmonton. I think it would be a detriment to the people of this city if they were to have to lose a seat because of uneven population growth. It's not that Edmonton hasn't been growing – it has – but Calgary has been growing faster and is a larger city and will benefit.

The question is whether or not you take away seats from Edmonton and rural Alberta or you add seats and give them to Calgary and potentially to Grande Prairie. That's the challenge that the government is grappling with in this legislation. For my own part I want to indicate that I do not support the reduction of representation in either Edmonton or in rural Alberta. I think this is an important question that we all ought to take into account.

Again, I think that when we look at the bill, we need to look at its practical impact, not just the theoretical or abstract concepts behind it. What I would like to see is, of course, an electoral system that gets away from the first past the post system altogether. If you look at the popular vote received by the political parties in the last election, you'll find that it is not represented under the current system. It's not represented in this Legislature. There are far too many Conservative members here in this Legislature compared to the actual votes received by that party. There are fewer Liberals. There are certainly fewer New Democrats than were represented by the actual votes. There are no Greens in this Assembly. There probably should be some Alberta Alliance members as well if seats were accorded according to the actual popular vote. They're not because the first past the post distorts the representation that we have, and the result is that the Legislature is even more lopsided than it was.

There's no question that the Conservative Party in the last election won a majority of votes, so they should have the majority of the seats in this Legislature, but they shouldn't have 75 or 80 per cent of the seats in the Legislature. That, I think, is a real, serious problem with the kind of electoral system that we have. That's not put forward in this legislation, and I think that it's too bad that the government isn't willing to explore that with the voters. I don't think this Legislature should make unilateral decisions with respect to that. There needs to be an important role of consultation with the public.

Nevertheless, we have before us a bill that will add four seats to the Legislature. That is, I think, the key piece or the most important element of this piece of legislation that we need to address. I think that people who believe that Edmonton should lose a seat, maybe two, that rural Alberta should lose a couple of seats, maybe more, in order to expand the representation from Calgary, you know, need to be really clear about what the result of their position actually is and be prepared to accept the consequences of their position.

Mr. Chairman, for now that will be my comments with respect to this piece of legislation. I look forward to more debate on it.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I would be inclined to go along with my colleague from Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. I would be inclined to go along with the Justice minister. I would be inclined to support adding four seats to this Legislature except that I can't get away from the fact that an alderman on city council in Calgary represents roughly twice as many constituents as an MLA in the Alberta Legislature, and a member of the federal Parliament of Canada represents roughly – I think we're getting pretty close to four times, certainly three times as many constituents and change as you and I do.

I'm left asking myself: well, how do they do it? How do they manage to represent so many more people than we do and still respect the democratic rights of their constituents, still go to bat for their constituents, still meet on a regular basis, whether it's in the council chamber at Calgary city hall or in the federal Parliament in Ottawa, and debate issues of interest to their constituents and, hopefully, in the case of the federal Parliament the entire country and, hopefully, in the case of city council in Calgary the entire city? Although watching how things have been going at Calgary city council lately, one wonders whether the ward system sometimes gets dramatically in the way of that, but that's a topic for another time.

I use the city of Calgary as an example for a couple of reasons: one, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood referenced it a few times in his contribution to the debate, and two, because it is a unicity as opposed to the capital region, which is a collection of 23 different municipalities. It's maybe easier to make the example. You know, we have 14 aldermen in the city of Calgary to represent just over a million people, and there is no serious talk that I'm aware of as city council wrestles with the issue of electoral redistribution about adding any seats on council. [interjection] Is there talk? There is talk of adding one.

If the Calgary city councillors were to represent roughly the same number of people as we do, we'd need to go from 14 not to 15 but to 27 or 28, yet they manage. Now, depending on who you're talking to, some might say they manage better or worse than others, but they manage. The Members of Parliament seem to manage, and we seem to be managing fairly well, thank you.

I'm just looking back through some numbers on the Members' Services Committee section of the Assembly website, looking at MLA remuneration figures and considering our base pay as Members of the Legislative Assembly, our tax-free allowance, and our committee work. Most of us in here, quite apart from whether we have additional responsibilities – cabinet, Leader of the Opposition, whip, deputy whip, House leader, whatever – are making in the ballpark of $120,000 a year.

I look at the Members' Services orders under 9, which deals with constituency office budgets in the constituency services order. I see that each MLA gets roughly $26,000 for office operations, roughly $72,500 for staffing, and then there are a couple of other figures that involve a little bit of calculation to take care of such things as the expenses of mailing, postage, that sort of thing, some promotional activity, and so on and so forth. Again, just rounded off, it's roughly $120,000 per constituency office to run our constituency offices.

If we get into one of those situations where we're dealing with an MLA who represents a huge piece of real estate sparsely populated, well, there's a matrix for that that takes those sorts of things into consideration, and that can add up to another $23,256 to that member's constituency office budget.

Here's the point. We manage, most of us, give or take a little bit, plus or minus 25 per cent or less, to run our constituency offices and, by extension, our constituencies for about the same amount of money that we are paid as individual MLAs. So it would seem to me that if the individual MLA needs a little more support to represent his or her constituents, which might be a reasonable possibility, the addition of some extra budget to the constituency services order to accommodate another full-time assistant or perhaps a part-time assistant – I don't know; I'm just speculating here – would turn out to be undoubtedly a good deal cheaper, a good deal more economical than adding another MLA. You add another MLA, and you're adding another $120,000. You add another full-time staffer, and it's probably going to come in at $50,000 or less, in around there.

The other thing I can't get away from is that the Legislature of British Columbia now consists of 87 MLAs, and there has been a bit of push-back about that because the British Columbia Legislature until very recently, until this last election really, consisted of 79 MLAs. The majority of respondents to a survey conducted by Statistics Canada said that 79 MLAs were sufficient. There's been some push-back about going to 87. Up until the election earlier this month in the province of British Columbia, 79 MLAs represented a population of a million more than the population of Alberta, give or take. Now it takes 87 to do that, but that's four more MLAs to represent a million more people, or 250,000 an MLA if you wanted to do the math that way.

Of course, that's not how they do the math any more than that's how we do the math, but the point remains, Mr. Chair, that the province of British Columbia has a million more constituents than the province of Alberta, and they manage with the same number of MLAs that the Justice minister is proposing that we go to here in the province of Alberta. You can speak in glowing and eloquent terms until the cows come home about equitable representation, democratic initiatives, and this, that, and the other thing, but you just can't get away from the fact that compared to other levels of government, other provinces, the people of Alberta are overrepresented by the people in this Legislature.

Mr. Chair, I don't know what your constituents tell you when you bring up the matter, but my constituents tell me that we don't need any more Members of the Legislative Assembly in the province of Alberta, that 83 of us ought to be enough to do the business of the people of this province. I don't think we can justify going to another four.

Now, I acknowledge the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood's concern about Calgary gaining at the expense of Edmonton and rural Alberta, and I don't think it's just a Calgary versus Edmonton thing that he's bringing up here, anything like that. The member is right: Calgary has been growing faster, and Calgary is the bigger city. But I come back to that reference I made to the unicity and the fact that if you take the 23 member municipalities of the capital region and put them together, the population of the capital region is only a smidge smaller than the population of the unicity of Calgary. We're just over a million; you're just under us. That is really what it comes down to.

Again, as a possible way to break the ice on this, maybe we can consider the capital region or the most built-up section of the capital region as equivalent to the city of Calgary when redistribution actually comes along, so we think of a million people or thereabouts in the capital region being represented by essentially the same number of MLAs as would represent the city of Calgary.

I must admit, Mr. Chair, that I would hardly consider myself an expert on the drawing or redrawing of electoral boundaries at this point, but I haven't come across anything yet that says that every constituency in the city of Calgary or in the city of Edmonton must fall only within the limits of that municipality, that you couldn't spill over like you do, you know, in Grande Prairie-Wapiti, Grande Prairie-Smoky, or the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology's constituency, the name of which escapes me right now. It's St. Albert and Spruce Grove and the islands – I don't know – something like that.

An Hon. Member: Sturgeon.

Mr. Taylor: Sturgeon. Thank you.

We can use some creativity and some innovation here, I think, and dedication. I refer back to – I think that the Justice minister was actually quoting or at least referring to a decision made by the Supreme Court in 1991 under reference re provincial electoral boundaries Saskatchewan when she talked about deviations from absolute voter parity. The Supreme Court did say:

Relative parity of voting power is a prime condition of effective representation. Deviations from absolute voter parity, however, may be justified on the grounds of practical impossibility or the provision of more effective representation. Factors like geography, community history . . .

I won't repeat what she said because what she said is very close, word for word, to what the court says.

But after things like "to ensure that our legislative assemblies effectively represent the diversity of our social mosaic," the Supreme Court also added in there: "Beyond this, dilution of one citizen's vote as compared with another's should not be countenanced." So the Supreme Court of Canada has certainly recognized that there needs to be some wiggle room. I'm not sure what the justices of the Supreme Court of Canada would say about the amount of wiggle room that allows a plus or minus 25 per cent error 79 times out of 83 and that on the other four you can be totally out of whack with that.

I'm thinking, Mr. Chairman, that if we choose wisely in terms of the five members of the boundaries commission once this legislation is passed and put those five individuals to work, they should be able to be creative and innovative and within the context of 83 Members of the Legislative Assembly, not 87, redistribute the boundaries in such a way that Calgary gets effective representation, that Edmonton gets effective representation, and that the rest of Alberta, the rural areas of Alberta, get effective representation as well. [interjection] There was some kind of heckle from the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud. I'll take it that he's just overly tired because he's got one of the biggest constituencies by population in the province, and he's probably run off his feet, if he's not planning his golf tournament, that is, which must be coming up soon, isn't it?

Mr. Hancock: On September 17.

Mr. Taylor: September 17. I'll mark it in my calendar, and I'll see you on the 19th hole.

Mr. Chairman, I think I've made my point. I will take my seat and allow others to continue the debate now.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. Due to a stroke of luck or the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview I do now have that amendment that I would like to put before the House. If possible, I'd like to do that now, please.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we'll pause for a moment while the amendment is distributed.

Hon. members, this amendment will be marked A1. Please proceed.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. This amendment is pretty straightforward. It allows us to amend the act by striking out section 4. This will return us to having 83 members in this House and send this new committee to draw the new Alberta electoral map, challenging that committee to do their work by redrawing the electoral map here in Alberta with 83 seats. We bring this bill forward at this time given that we are in a deficit situation, given that it will add $10 million in spending over every four-year cycle, possibly more to the legislative work we do here in the Assembly.

We have made the arguments before that we are all pretty well paid in this Assembly. We are asking Albertans to do more; we should be asking ourselves to do more. This is simply a chance for this government to not only talk about small government but to actually put it into action. As an opposition it constantly gets said: where can we cut? Well, here it is, lo and behold, an opportunity where the opposition can put forth an amendment where we can cut. We can cut a significant ongoing expenditure to the budget right now by doing this. I would like the people who believe in small government – and hopefully that's all members of this House – who believe that small government works and that small government is better and more efficient government, you know, to do that here today. Let's roll up our sleeves here and do the work ourselves.

I leave it at that, and I encourage others to support the amendment as well as hear from others who would like to speak on this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Yes. Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I want to speak in favour of this amendment. Frankly, if it were up to me, I'd reduce the size of this Assembly. I don't think we even need 83. [interjections] Yeah, I'm getting lots of suggestions with nine members.

There has been some good discussion tonight about, you know, the cost savings of this in terms of direct expenditures. There have been comparisons to how city councillors represent their wards and how Members of Parliament represent their ridings and so on. I just want to add one other point. I actually believe that particularly when the size of this Assembly is combined with the first past the post voting system, where we end up in Alberta with one party with so many members, in fact some government activities are created as make-work projects just to keep the backbenches busy and that that actually leads government into problems.

You know, I think that we create committees that may not be needed. We name MLAs to tasks where the MLA is not an expert. We conduct things as a government and Assembly which I think would be better off left alone. I think that, frankly, having 83 seats in Alberta is plenty, and I don't see any need to add four.

Quite genuinely, Mr. Chairman, I just don't see that this is needed. I mean, my concern, if you think this through, is that if Alberta continues to grow, then in another eight years we'll be adding four more, and pretty soon we're not going to have room for them. There has got to be a way to do things smarter rather than bigger. I just think this is misguided and unjustifiable, so I will be supporting the amendment.

Thanks.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Certainly, I would like to speak in favour of this amendment. As I said earlier, I don't think that we need an additional four seats at this time. British Columbia certainly increased the size of their Assembly, but not only did they look at things recently; they also had, of course, the citizens' forum on electoral reform and what should and what should not be done. They sought direction from the citizens. This government here in this province certainly is not seeking the direction of the citizens. That will come later, of course, through the commission. But, specifically, why do we need an additional four seats? I think we can reach a balance.

Calgary and Edmonton are a reflection of the urbanization of this province. Rural Alberta is no different than the rest of rural Canada. We see small towns getting smaller. We see farms growing larger. It's quite an issue. Young people are leaving the smaller centres and migrating to the cities. That being said, we look at the growth not only in Calgary and Edmonton but Grande Prairie, Fort McMurray, Lloydminster, Red Deer, Medicine Hat, a little bit in Lethbridge as well. Where the growth is is where the seats should be. We talked about communications earlier, the electronic age and the ease of communication.

I think this is a very good amendment. I know we've seen the size of cabinet expand dramatically. It's almost the complete half of the second row there, Mr. Chairman. The government seems to survive with a variety of cabinet sizes, whether it's 16, sometimes it bloats up to 24 or 25, and then it may go down. For instance, over the constituency week the size of the cabinet was reduced by one. It was a 4.4 per cent reduction, I believe. So the cabinet was reduced in size. The Department of International and Intergovernmental Relations was consolidated into Executive Council, I believe.

So there can be a reduction in the size of government, the size of cabinet, even if it's part-time or it's an event that is going to be short-lived and someone else will be appointed in June. Who's to say? But that's an example of a reduction in the size of cabinet. The government is still functioning as far as I know. For how long we don't know. The former Member for Calgary-Glenmore certainly did his job as best he could. We wish him well in his future career.

That being said, Mr. Chairman, that is just one example of how life goes on after a government front bench is reduced in size. We're not asking for a reduction. I'm with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview. I think we could do with less seats in this Assembly, but to remain at 83 is sensible.

I thank the hon. member for bringing this amendment forward, and I urge all members to give it consideration and vote to keep the Assembly with 83 seats in it after the commission reports. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak to the amendment?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 24 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

Bill 28

Energy Statutes Amendment Act, 2009

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. Bill 28 is a complicated piece of legislation. It touches on a number of things. It touches on a couple of things that could be particularly large. On the one hand this seems like sort of a housekeeping bill, but on the other hand it's not, and it shouldn't be understood that way. The two areas from this bill that are of biggest note are the provision it gives to the government to start the bitumen royalty in kind program, and it also addresses the orphan well issue.

I want to speak first to the bitumen royalty in kind program. In theory, the bitumen royalty in kind plan seems to us to be something worth seriously considering. What it allows the government to do is to take a flow of bitumen that might be worth, in today's dollars, $30 a barrel maybe, and instead of taking $30, it takes a barrel of bitumen, and then it upgrades that bitumen, and it gets $60. It's a way of increasing the value of the royalty being received by the provincial government, at least in theory. That certainly is worth exploring. There are people who are opposed to this just on principle, but we think the economics of this are worth exploring.

It's not without some concerns. The Minister of Energy has not been very forthcoming at all about how the bitumen royalty in kind program may work, so we don't know how those concerns are being considered. I'm going to mention one of them right now, which began to become particularly apparent two or three weeks ago, when we saw how the drop in the price of oil created a collapse in the flow of bitumen royalties to the provincial government because the royalty system is now so price sensitive. Frankly, I think being price sensitive up to a point is a good idea. We understand that oil companies, energy companies can't bear the same level of royalty when the prices are really depressed as they can when the prices are really high. But the price sensitivity is now to a point where if we were taking a royalty in the form of bitumen, it would barely be a trickle because the royalty levels are so low.

Where that seems to me to cause complications is that if we sign a deal with an upgrader, potentially a merchant upgrader, to upgrade that bitumen, we need to be able as a government, I would think, to guarantee a flow of bitumen, let's say a hundred thousand barrels a day. When prices are good and the bitumen royalty is flowing in generously, that's no problem, but when prices collapse, I'm curious to know how the bitumen royalty in kind program can be structured to guarantee a minimum flow to a merchant upgrader.

Now, there's lots of speculation these days that North West Upgrading, you know, may come back to life as a merchant upgrader and that the bitumen royalty in kind program will facilitate that because the provincial government will be able to do a deal with North West, guaranteeing North West a supply of bitumen, therefore guaranteeing North West a much more viable operation. But I'm curious to know how the provincial government will be able to guarantee a supply, if that's their plan, when the flow of royalties is so price sensitive.

That's one of the concerns here, and then that leads to a second concern, which is a concern about trying so hard to make the bitumen royalty in kind program work by stimulating an upgrader that the government goes beyond good sense and runs the risk, frankly, of participating in a kind of white elephant upgrader. You know, that may not happen, but it's certainly the kind of thing that this government has got into in the past, and it's not hard to imagine it happening yet again. I think that it's important that a merchant upgrader stand on its own economically, and I can see the bitumen royalty in kind program having a role to play there, but I am concerned that a government desperate to get an upgrader going again may do a deal that, in fact, in the long term hurts the citizens of Alberta.

I just wanted those comments to be on the record, Mr. Chairman, because it seems that engaging the minister in debate otherwise on this issue has actually proven to be quite difficult.

The other issue this bill addresses is expanding the orphan well program. There's a contentious issue there about how orphan wells should be handled. Many people in Alberta feel that we've had a good track record in handling orphan wells. Some people feel that we haven't. Many people feel that it's not a cost that should be borne by the taxpayer, yet that is a possibility that is brought forward through this legislation. The question is: why should the taxpayer be on the hook for cleaning up a well that made private shareholders potentially millions of dollars and that they then walked away from? Luckily, we're in a province where most oil companies don't do that, but it's a risk.

I actually think that someday we should get a little more aggressive on what I might call orphan gas stations, Mr. Chairman. I'm really tired of driving around Alberta and seeing abandoned gas station sites sit there for sometimes decades. I think that we should be looking at ways to make industry more responsible for cleaning up abandoned gas stations. Some of them are on very, very prime urban real estate. Probably the single most dramatic example of that is the old Imperial Oil station on Whyte Avenue, which was shut down probably 10 years ago or more, a prime piece of real estate that has been completely disabled and has just sat there while it's being vented and so on for years and years and years. I'd like to see a little more aggressiveness from this government in holding those companies to account. But if I go much farther there, I'll be wandering off the topic.

I think that, in the end, Mr. Chairman, the benefits of this bill are notable, that it at least opens the possibility of a successful bitumen royalty in kind program. The devil will be in the details there. You know, our caucus has chosen to support this piece of legislation.

I'll leave it with those comments. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Do any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to make a few comments with respect to Bill 28, the Energy Statutes Amendment Act, 2009. Now, in many respects this tidies things up. There's a mishmash of different acts and so on that cover our energy sector in this province. This makes a few changes, but basically in many respects it's a housekeeping bill.

I think there are some very important points dealing with orphan wells and the fund to pay for those and allowing the ERCB to impose a levy on oil field waste management facilities and so on. It provides for the Lieutenant Governor in Council to approve various decisions of the ERCB, including designating the proprietor of a pipeline to be a common carrier, declaring a company to be a common purchaser of oil or gas produced from a pool, declaring a company to be a common processor of gas from a pool, and other aspects of pooling. It requires an order in council for an amendment to consolidation of an approval permit. One thing where it doesn't give the authority to the Lieutenant Governor in Council but instead to the minister, which is a problem, in our view: members of the Alberta Petroleum Marketing Commission would be appointed directly by the minister rather than by the Lieutenant Governor in Council.

Now, I want to deal with the question of bitumen, which has been the subject of a number of questions that we've asked in this House during this session and is something which is a very serious issue as far as we're concerned. We need to cast ourselves back to the days leading up to the election of the current Premier as leader of the Conservative Party and some of the promises that he made at that stage to eliminate or at least reduce the amount of unprocessed bitumen that was being exported to the United States for upgrading there.

Of course, what we've seen is that this has increased steadily under the current Premier's administration. In fact, absolutely nothing has been done by this government to stop, to constrain, or to restrain the increase in unprocessed bitumen out of this province and the jobs and the investment that go with it, to the point where we've seen just the other day where the Industrial Heartland Association, representing municipal officials in the Industrial Heartland area, has added their voice to those who have been saying along with us that the export of unprocessed bitumen is costing Alberta investment and costing us jobs. They're very concerned about it.

There are only two projects ongoing in the Industrial Heartland but a multitude of projects in the United States, which will be fed by the Keystone and Alberta Clipper pipelines. Not only that, Mr. Chairman, but various energy companies are planning a number of additional pipelines that will connect the entire American energy market to Alberta bitumen and will be capable of carrying the full production that we're likely to achieve out of the oil sands and, therefore, I think, cripple the long-term value-added basis of the economy in this province.

Now, when the Keystone and the Alberta Clipper projects were before the National Energy Board for approval, we urged the provincial government to intervene and speak against them, but they did not. They reserved a status before the board, but they did not avail themselves of the opportunity to talk about that. I know that the government is absolutely opposed to and terrified of anything that smacks of a national energy program, but it would be possible with a little vision, in my view, for the government to develop a made-in-Alberta energy program that benefited our province and the country. They don't have to abdicate anything to the federal government in that respect. They can take leadership here.

We have talked about how this could be done, Mr. Chairman. We produced a bill, which didn't make it through the Order Paper, in 2007. It was at that time, in the Third Session of the 26th Legislature, Bill 225, the Mines and Minerals (Alberta Value Added) Amendment Act, 2007, by my former colleague Mr. Ray Martin.

Alberta exports more than a million barrels of bitumen every day. Nearly half of that now is exported and upgraded outside of Canada. This is despite the Premier's commitment. Enbridge's Alberta Clipper pipeline will export another 450,000 barrels per day, to be upgraded in Superior, Wisconsin. TransCanada's Keystone pipeline will export another 590,000 barrels per day, to be upgraded in Illinois and Texas. This is, in fact, where the construction and the jobs are today, Mr. Chairman, as a result of this government's failure to stand up for the interests of the province.

In a presentation to the National Energy Board on the Keystone pipeline Infometrica CEO and economist Mike McCracken estimated that the Keystone pipeline alone will cost Alberta 18,000 jobs and $2 billion in economic output. That's shocking. That's not coming from some raving socialist or wild-eyed environmentalist, Mr. Chairman, but is in fact a very real thing.

An Hon. Member: Fearmongering.

Mr. Mason: I heard someone on the other side say "fearmongering," which is the government's standard response now to any criticism that might be put forward by reasonable people to their policies. But it's not fearmongering; it's a fact.

Our proposal, which I think should've been incorporated in this bill, was a concrete step to ensure that bitumen is upgraded in Alberta. It is entirely within the government's authority to do so simply by requiring it as part of the leases. The government can negotiate or renegotiate existing leases or, if necessary, legislate. They should do that, Mr. Chairman. Our bill showed exactly how that could be done.

It's not that the government doesn't have the authority to do this. It's not that it has not been a concern. It's a concern for the Industrial Heartland Association, it's a concern for people who work in the industry, it's certainly a concern for people who work in construction, and it should be the concern of this government because in the long term they are ensuring that our economy does not live up to its full potential. That's how fundamental and critical this question is.

One has to ask why they would put the interests of the companies who are wanting to export our un-upgraded, non value-added natural resources belonging to the people of Alberta ahead of the interests of the people of this province. It's a really curious question. But, Mr. Chairman, these resources do belong to the people of Alberta, and they are nonrenewable. People who look on the other side, who talk about the oil sands as almost an inexhaustible resource, remind me of people 20 or 30 years ago who talked about the oceans as an inexhaustible resource. In fact, they are not inexhaustible. They are very finite, and as you dig down, the economic cost of producing the material rises. There's low-hanging fruit, and then it gets a little higher, and it gets a little higher. I think it's important that the government really put in an Alberta-first energy policy.

We need a made-in-Alberta energy policy that starts with keeping the bitumen here. Simply taking some of the royalties as bitumen in lieu of money so that you've got some left over is a weak and inadequate response to this problem. The government needs to exercise its legitimate legislative authority and its administrative authority to protect the long-term interests of Alberta and its economy. It is failing to do so, and the idea that you can take a little bit of your royalties in kind and you're going to have some bitumen that will be left in the province to be upgraded is pathetically weak and not the response that this province needs, that future generations, the next generation of our province require.

So although there is a lot in this bill that is simply administrative and a lot of it is positive – we have no objection to many of the changes that are being made in this sort of omnibus grab bag of a bill – its absolute failure to deal with the question of bitumen and the future economic development of this province is a glaring failure and one which should give all members of this House pause. Why aren't provisions included in this bill that would protect the future development of our province and would ensure that the jobs and the investments stay here? It's not there, Mr. Chairman. The bill is not worthy of support, and I will not support it.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. It is a pleasure for me to speak. I just would like to make my points relatively quickly as two other members have spoken quite at length and probably much more eloquently than I will on this bill. Nevertheless, I believe that allowing the government to start taking bitumen in kind is probably a step in the right direction. It's something that this government can then use to hopefully build an upgrader system or a processing system, where we're not sending this bitumen downstream. Our friends in the United States, although very nice people, shouldn't be getting the economic value of this one-time resource withdrawal system that we have here in Alberta.

If you look at, like, 30 or 40 years ago, we thought that the old-fashioned way – well, not old-fashioned, but the traditional oil and gas fields were full. We had lots of oil and gas revenues coming in from people out there, junior oil companies going out there, putting a spit into the ground, and finding lots of oil. That, too, has happened with our natural gas and still does happen with our natural gas.

But we know all too well that that is a sunset industry. Yes, there are opportunities for people to go back into old holes, and there are opportunities for some individuals to actually find some new, but all things being considered, that is a sunset industry. What we're looking at now with this, the advent of the oil sands, is that this is Alberta's new future, and part of that future should be developing some provisions that allow for the maximum economic value of this resource to be produced here in Alberta.

The best way to do that is by either legislating that more bitumen be upgraded here, finding some way to either incent the private marketplace to do it here, or finding some mechanism to get these bitumen processing plants developed here, where we can get the jobs, we can get the profit, and we can move ahead and start adding the value to our universities, our health care system, all of that good stuff which oil and gas has done. I think we should be doing it in this case. I think it is a failure of this government that we're not further along this process than we are now, that we continue to see development of these upgrading systems down in the United States, and we'll continue to see that unless we put our feet down and say: "Stop. We're not going to do this. We're not going to continue to be hewers of wood and drawers of water. We're going to have these resources be developed for ourselves, for the people of Alberta, to add to our prosperity."

On that note, I think, you know, this is a decent start, so I guess I am supportive of it. But I do recognize what the leader of the third party has said, that this bill is a failure in the fact that it doesn't recognize that this government should have people working round the clock, 24 hours a day, saying: how are we going to develop more of this bitumen here in this province? Really, if you can't find the answer, I don't think you're looking hard enough or you don't have the right people hired. There's got to be a solution to this, it should be done sooner rather than later, and let's get on with it.

Thank you very much for my opportunity to speak to Bill 28.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to rise and speak on Bill 28, the Energy Statutes Amendment Act, 2009. A lot has been said by previous speakers, but I certainly have one question at this time that hopefully I can have answered by the government members.

In December – I believe it was the 10th to be precise, Mr. Chairman – of last year there was a regulation passed that ceded a lot of control at the edge of the lease by this government of bitumen and bitumen production. I'm just curious as to how that regulation will be impacted by this legislation. Certainly, we know that our neighbours to the south are benefiting currently from this government's bitumen policy. Those pipelines, unfortunately, are exporting jobs, value-added jobs, in this province. One only has to look at the price of bitumen. It almost doubles, if not a little bit more, whenever the bitumen is upgraded to synthetic crude oil. Synthetic crude oil in some markets trades at a modest premium.

So there are the economic benefits which have been outlined by previous speakers. Hopefully, the bitumen in kind, the royalty in kind will become standard practice in this province, and the bitumen that is gathered or collected will be used to incent the construction of a local upgrader. I don't think there's any value whatsoever, Mr. Chairman, in allowing for the expansion, whether it's in Borger, Texas, or whether it's in Illinois, of facilities that are existing.

There's no benefit to this province. There's benefit to the producers, there's certainly benefit to the Americans, but there's none to us. We've got to get every nickel and every dime we can from this resource. The government has to date failed to do that, but hopefully this section of the bill will once and for all stop the export of jobs from this province to the American lower 48 states. That will stop. We will see upgrading occur here in a sustainable fashion which will be respectful not only of the local economy but also of the local environment.

I think we can do this. I know we had the royalty review, and I know it was said about taking bitumen in kind. I know the details are yet to be worked out. Who will be the agent? Will it be the Alberta Petroleum Marketing Commission? Who will act on their behalf? Those details. How will this bitumen be stored if it's necessary to store it, or will it just be a simple exchange transaction?

We will see what happens with this, but certainly the government stepping up and accepting bitumen royalty in kind I think is a very good idea. It will hopefully be used to incent the development in this province of an upgrader, as I said before, and hopefully someone from the Department of Energy can put on the public record my concerns regarding the regulation and how it will impact this bill.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Are you ready for the question on Bill 28, the Energy Statutes Amendment Act, 2009?

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Welcome.

Let us pray. Guide us so that we may use the privilege given to us as elected Members of the Legislative Assembly. Give us the strength to labour diligently, the courage to think and to speak with clarity and conviction and without prejudice or pride. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to welcome a delegation from the Russian Federation, who are sitting in your gallery. They are here in Alberta participating in a week-long public administration reform program, regional economic development study tour with the Canada School of Public Service. Our guests are accompanied today by their interpreter and staff from the Canada School of Public Service and the Russian Federation. I would like to ask our guests to rise and receive a warm welcome from the Legislature. [Remarks in Russian]

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Chair of Committees.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Seated in your gallery today is Rudy Weibe. Rudy is one of two Albertans chosen to receive the 2009 Lieutenant Governor of Alberta distinguished artist award. Rudy was formerly the curator of the Southern Alberta Art Gallery in Lethbridge and is a professor emeritus of Canadian literature and creative writing at the University of Alberta. An acclaimed author, he has written nine novels, four short story collections, two children's books, and six books of nonfiction. Rudy is accompanied by Susan Green, who is the board chair of the Lieutenant Governor of Alberta Arts Awards Foundation. I would now ask them both to rise and receive the warm welcome and congratulations of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to rise to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly two different groups of grade 6 students, one group from the C. Ian McLaren school in Black Diamond and the other from the Turner Valley school. Accompanying the C. Ian McLaren school is the principal, Mr. Garry Tink; two teachers, Diane Lindelad and Carol Anderson; and one parent, Mrs. Jennifer Briggs; and from the Turner Valley school teacher Matt Berrigan and eight parents: Victoria Berrigan, Marlene Whiteside, Dawn Jardie, Katie Berrigan, Sue Burwash, Karen Lyons, Verna Staples, and Brenda Salmon-Cherry. I'd ask them all to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure again to introduce to you 26 outstanding students from Jackson Heights school in my constituency, students who are all here today and for the next couple of days attending School at the Legislature. They are accompanied today by their teacher, Mrs. Pam Schenk, and by parent helpers Mrs. Terri Fuller and Mrs. Janet Krebs. I believe they're seated in both galleries, and I would ask all of them to please rise and receive the warm applause of this House. Thank you for coming.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure to rise again this afternoon – actually, it was yesterday I rose – to introduce 29 students and six adult chaperones, including teacher Jill Bishop, from E.G. Wahlstrom middle school. It's such a huge school that they come in waves. It was really nice to be able to welcome our first batch yesterday and today, again, our second batch. They have travelled all the way from Slave Lake, 250 kilometres north, and they have travelled for about three to four hours. I'd ask that they rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Liepert: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over the lunch hour today many of the members had the opportunity to hear a little bit more about the challenges that our Alberta international medical graduates have in this province and to answer some questions. I believe that we have quite a number of them seated in our gallery here today, and I would ask that they rise and be recognized by the members of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure for me today to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two dedicated Albertans working for the ERCB. The first gentleman is Dwayne Waisman. Mr. Waisman is the ERCB executive manager of the field centres located throughout Alberta. Field centres, of course, are an integral part of the ERCB's work in our communities. He certainly would invite all MLAs to contact their local field centre office if they need any ERCB information or assistance. Dwayne is accompanied today by a gentleman familiar to all members of the Assembly, Mr. Rich Jones. I would ask them if they would please both rise and receive the warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour today to rise and introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly two constituents of mine and three visitors. Chander Mittal and his wife, Anita, reside in Edmonton-Whitemud. Chander is the president of the Bhartiya Cultural Society of Alberta. I've had the honour and privilege of being hosted in Chander and Anita's home in Edmonton-Whitemud. They're with us today in the members' gallery.

They're joined by Jaspinder and Micky Narula, who were originally Calgarians, who have moved to Mumbai in order to pursue their music careers in Bollywood. Jaspinder and Micky have successfully created a niche for themselves in a very competitive industry. They're currently on tour across North America and are joining us in Edmonton to perform at a fundraiser for the Bhartiya Cultural Society of Alberta on Saturday, May 30. They're also joined today by a good friend of theirs, Avinash Gupta. I'd ask that all of our guests rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. All of us have constituents who really stand out as leaders in their neighbourhood. Today I'd like to introduce to you and to all members of the Assembly one such member from the community of Belgravia. His name is Richard Law. He's seated in the public gallery. I'd ask him to rise. Richard is a neighbour and friend. He's a businessman. With his wife, Joyce, he's a father of three fine young adult children. He's the kind of fellow who's a real community leader. Whether it's helping to coach with soccer or organizing community events or helping at the school, he's the kind of person who steps up. Please give Richard a warm welcome. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure today to introduce some special guests with us in the public gallery. Mike Gray and Sean Ouimet are both from the Centre For Inquiry Alberta, a nonprofit group that promotes and defends science, reason, and free inquiry into all aspects of human interest. We also have with us Scott McKinney, Debbie Courchene, and Bradyn Villebrun-Buracas from the University of Alberta. If they'll stand. Our guests are here this afternoon to show their concern for the government's flawed Bill 44. Let's give them a warm welcome from the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Dr. Gordon Groat from the town of Devon, which is located in my constituency. Gordon is very active in his community and a great supporter of this member and our government. I would ask Dr. Gordon Groat, who is seated in the public gallery, to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Hate Crime

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over 100 people gathered at a forum a few weeks ago to address increased activity of hate groups and the issue of hate crime in Calgary. The forum was attended by members from aboriginal and various minority communities, the city of Calgary Police Service, the Alberta Human Rights Commission, federal government departments, and nonprofit agencies.

While it is disturbing, those harmed by hate crime can feel that they have no where to turn and feel defeated and abused. It was an empowering experience for many participants as they shared concerns and suggestions on how the community can collectively make a difference. Participants discussed community and individual responses to hate groups and recommended more public education on hate crime and racism, greater commitment from governments to address hate crime, development of policies and legislation to protect vulnerable populations, and greater engagement with populations such as aboriginal and minority communities.

Mr. Speaker, this forum is also very timely. In the middle of May Statistics Canada released the 2007 Police-reported Hate Crime. While hate-motivated crimes were down from 2006, accounting for population, Calgary had the highest rate of reported hate crime in both years, and the cities of Hamilton and Edmonton had increased reported hate crimes. Race or ethnicity made up 65 per cent of reported hate crimes, followed by religion and sexual orientation; 50 per cent of incidents were comprised of mischief offences like graffiti of hate signs and symbols, degrading language on public and private properties; and 3 in 10 crimes involved assault and threats. The report also cited that one-third of people accused of committing hate crime were youth 12 to 17 years of age, almost double the proportion of youth accused of committing crimes in general.

Mr. Speaker, we clearly have work to do in this area, but I'm very pleased to recognize the leadership demonstrated by our government to protect vulnerable groups through existing legislation such as our human rights act.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Calgary Roughnecks

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to offer my congratulations to the Calgary Roughnecks organization for capturing their second National Lacrosse League Champion's Cup in franchise history in defeating the New York Titans 12 to 10 a couple Friday nights ago.

This championship capped off a stellar season in which the Roughnecks earned home field advantage throughout the playoffs by posting a league best record of 12 wins and four losses in the regular season. Led on the field by their captain, Tracey Kelusky, and the game's most valuable player, Josh Sanderson, who was also named to the NLL's all-pro second team, the Roughnecks cruised through the playoffs to the championship game by outscoring their opponents 32 to 13. Mr. Speaker, not only did the Roughnecks win the National Lacrosse League's Champion's Cup, but they did so in dominating fashion right from the start of the NLL season to their final victory the other night in front of 13,000 passionate Calgary fans in the Pengrowth Saddledome.

Mr. Speaker, I attended my first two lacrosse games this year. While I do not profess to know all the rules, I can assure this Assembly that the entertainment value of a professional lacrosse game compares to that of any other professional sport here in this province. More so than any other professional sport, the National Lacrosse League and the Calgary Roughnecks have attempted to integrate the fans into the on-the-field action of the game. I will admit that I did get a lot of satisfaction from the fan/game interaction. One example is when the opposition team shoots the ball on the net and fails to score and the announcer comes on the PA system while the game is continuing and yells, "What's he got?" and the crowd of thousands collectively yells back, "Nothing."

I want to congratulate the whole Roughnecks organization, including all of the players, head coach Troy Cordingley, and owner and GM Brad Banister, for their incredible season, but more importantly I want to thank them for their commitment and involvement in the Calgary community. Professional sport franchises are more than just wins, losses, and championships. They play a very important and integral role in our communities, especially during these challenging times.

I hope all members can help me recognize this successful season, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Crime Prevention

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Crime affects all of us, even if we've never been robbed or attacked or assaulted ourselves. Crime affects us because of its cost to the broader community and because of the lurking threat that at some point we could become the next victim. For some people that means living in fear, but for others it means taking action to prevent crime from happening. Today I want to speak about a community taking action.

The truth is that many crime rates are lower now than in the past, but crime prevention is as important as ever. One of my constituents, Richard Law, along with approximately two dozen community members have accepted responsibility for maintaining their community's safety by working diligently to watch for, report on, and prevent crime in the Belgravia neighbourhood right here in Edmonton. The approach is simple but powerful. When people see suspicious behaviour in the neighbourhood or learn of a neighbourhood crime – a prowler, a stolen bicycle, a break and enter – it's quickly and widely reported throughout the community by Richard through the use of the web. If someone out for a walk sees something suspicious, they may take a photo and send it to Richard, who posts it for other neighbours to see. The effect is powerful. Very quickly everyone in the neighbourhood is watching out for everyone else.

There's nothing vigilante about this. There aren't organized patrols or citizens' arrests, but there is a close relationship with the police, who find reports come in quicker and more accurately because citizens are paying attention and taking responsibility.

The Belgravia community has never been a high-crime area. This community group with Richard Law as its catalyst is working to make sure it never is. Their responsible and prudent actions make Belgravia and the surrounding area a safer place to live and a stronger community.

On behalf of the wider community I thank these people for their dedication and hard work in bringing people together to respond to crime.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Industrial Eye Safety Program

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There can be no doubt that one of our most precious gifts is our sight. Unfortunately, our family knows this all too well since my dad's dad, Grandpa Rudne-ski, lost an eye while repairing a closed-in cutter many decades ago and had his other eye severely damaged in a farm accident shortly thereafter. It's for these and other reasons that I was very pleased to learn about the Canadian National Institute for the Blind's industrial eye safety program, which was launched earlier this month.

In 2007 the CNIB Alberta received $95,000 in start-up funding from a court-ordered penalty against an employer who failed to adhere to the Occupational Health and Safety Act. The funding provided an impetus to launch an eye safety program in Alberta and elsewhere in Canada. It's a very important program, Mr. Speaker. There are close to 1,700 disabling eye injuries at work in our province alone every year. Like all workplace injuries and illnesses they are preventable. In fact, 90 per cent of these incidents could be avoided simply by using appropriate eyewear.

The CNIB program is delivered by facilitators with vision loss. Utilizing real-life stories, shocking visuals, and interactive exercises, they educate employers and workers about eye safety in the workplace, and they motivate them to follow safe work practices. The funds generated by this program are invested in the agency's rehabilitation programs for people with vision loss. This is an excellent example of how alternative sentencing puts funds from court penalties for health and safety violations back into preventing future injuries and caring for injured workers.

I'd like to commend all of those involved with the program, including our Minister of Employment and Immigration. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Parental Choice in Education

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. After extensive public backlash this administration is trying to fix the flawed and ill-thought-out changes to human rights policy in Alberta. Yet without scrapping the opt-out provision in its entirety, this government is fixing nothing. In fact, the government is simply duplicating what is already under the School Act. To the Premier: what is lacking in the School Act that makes it necessary to duplicate existing provisions in the human rights policy?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I believe this bill is up for debate later today, so I'll try and talk in generalities and not refer directly to the bill. But it's really about the right of Alberta parents to have a voice in the education of their children. This government believes in family, believes that the family is the basic unit of our society. Families have built great communities, and these great communities have built one of the best provinces in the world to live.

Dr. Swann: Well, what guarantee can the Premier provide that parental opt-out will not cause a chill not only on curriculum but on the teachers in Alberta?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I believe that the amendments coming forward will deal with some of the issues that were raised in the House. This bill was well thought out, and the amendments were discussed in great detail. We're looking forward to their introduction later today.

Dr. Swann: Why have the Premier and this administration ignored the request of thousands of Albertans – teachers, lawyers, schools, parents, and students – to completely remove the parental opt-out?

Mr. Stelmach: By listening to Albertans – those that support the bill and those that may not support, may want to see some improvements – I believe that the amendments coming forward will find the balance. Those will come forward, and the House will vote on them over the next few days.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This administration has put forward several poorly-thought-out policy changes this session and continues to ignore the outrage of Albertans across the province over proposed changes to human rights. In a democracy all voices count regardless of whether they sit in the cabinet or not. The parental opt-out is a matter of conscience and personal and moral and religious belief. The tradition is that these issues are open to free vote. To the Premier: will the Premier maintain the tradition and allow a free vote on the proposed parental opt-out?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, in our caucus I don't have to threaten anybody to vote. We have a thorough vetting of every piece of legislation. Members are allowed through great discussion, I may add – it does take a little longer because now we've got 72 members around the caucus table. It does take longer, but when you look at the diversity of our caucus, it's very good, solid input. We're going to have a very good piece of legislation coming forward with some amendments after listening to positive feedback from teachers and others. This will all be implemented in the amendments. I feel good about it. And yes, there will be a free vote.

Dr. Swann: Well, since the Premier seems reluctant to answer the question, I'll ask it again. Will the Premier allow a free vote of his members on parental opt-out? Yes or no?

Mr. Stelmach: I said yes. I'm sure Hansard will see my answer in the first question. But yes, all the members will have the right to a free vote. As I said before, in our caucus all legislation is thoroughly vetted. Once a consensus is reached, the bill proceeds before the House. This is, like I said, a good piece of legislation, and we will have a free vote.

Dr. Swann: Will the Premier explain to Albertans, including those here in the gallery, why he has chosen to ignore the objections across the province to opt-out and support of free speech in the classroom?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I don't know where the hon. member is coming from. You know, I've travelled the province extensively over the last number of weeks when this bill was introduced, and I'm getting a lot of positive feedback. Yes, there are some that have some issues with the wording clarification required in the legislation, and we're going to do that. I believe that all Albertans support that the family unit is basic to our society. Why should we give this up to sort of a nanny state that the Liberals want to see in this province?

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Out-of-country Health Services

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today the Alberta Ombudsman released his report on the administration of out-of-country health services. The fact that there are 53 recommendations contained within the report speaks to a serious problem regarding transparency and accountability in this program. To the minister. It's the minister's responsibility to ensure fairness and transparency of administration of all boards, committees, and agencies in his ministry. Will the minister accept the recommendations from the Ombudsman and fix this program?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't know how much more arm's-length and transparent one can be but to have an arm's-length, transparent, independent committee of experts that reviews out-of-country claims by Albertans. It's that particular committee that makes the decisions. I'm sure that the Leader of the Opposition – I'm not sure if he's asking for political interference in how this committee operates. It's a committee of medical experts that make decisions based on medical evidence.

Dr. Swann: This is a program relied upon by vulnerable Albertans in desperate situations. There have been previous concerns raised, and the minister took no action. What is the minister's explanation for not fulfilling his responsibility to his office?

Mr. Liepert: Well, it sounds like the Leader of the Opposition is asking for political interference in a committee that is at arm's length from the government, Mr. Speaker. This is a committee that is set up to ensure several things. One, that those who need to seek out-of-country services and cannot find them in this province have that opportunity to be reimbursed. But we also have to ensure – and that's why the committee is in place – that we don't have Albertans jumping the queue and going out of province and getting reimbursed by the taxpayers of Alberta.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, the fact that the Ombudsman initiated this on his own, one of a few instances in which he has done that, suggests this minister is out of line with that remark.

Will the minister direct the Out-of-country Health Services Appeal Panel to hear the four cases that the Alberta Ombudsman has again identified for redress?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, the appeal panel has the Ombudsman's report, and they'll act accordingly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Bitumen Exports

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. The Kearn oil sands project will export hundreds of thousands of barrels of unprocessed bitumen to the United States. Thousands of Alberta jobs will go south as well. These jobs could stay here if the government had the political will. My question is to the Premier. Will the government ensure that oil sands leases, including Kearn Lake, are amended to require upgrading of bitumen here in Alberta, and if not, why not?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, as I said yesterday, some of the research institutes are looking at oil production from the oil sands to increase to about 6 million barrels by 2013-15. Whether we get there or not, you know, we'll see how things proceed from today. But as I said yesterday, our goal is to find a balance between adding as much value as we can to the bitumen – there will be some bitumen that will leave the province more for some pricing, to see what is the right price of bitumen. We're also going to be looking at other markets. The hon. member keeps talking about the United States, and I can tell you that we're not going to put all our eggs in one basket. We're going to look at shipping some of our product west through the B.C. ports. To do that, we have to add value to it because you're not going to send bitumen with diluent. What do you do with the diluent at the other end?

The plan is in place. We're working through it. Just to say that there's a new project announced, and then this guy gets up in the House and he's criticizing it already.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, it sounds like they're not satisfied with exporting jobs to the States; they're going to export them to China as well. With unemployment up dramatically in Alberta and upgraders like BA, Fort Hills, and Voyager being mothballed, meanwhile there is an upgrader construction boom in the United States. The Premier promised to stem the flow of bitumen and jobs to the United States, but he has done nothing. To the Premier: why have you failed to stand up for Albertans' jobs by not insisting that oil companies invest in upgraders here?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, of course, he's getting onto this bandwagon about upgrading. Like I said yesterday in the House, just in the last election the movement by that group there was to shut it all down, you know, because they were all worried about the environmental issues. Today, not only with additional production, he wants to add the issue of adding value to it, which, again, we have to do in a very balanced, environmental, sensible way. This will take time to get there in terms of adding value to all.

The other thing is that the hon. member keeps talking about these jobs going to the United States or the bitumen going to the United States for upgrading. The president himself said no. He's looking at upgrading here in Alberta with some of the integrated operators and also looking at if there is some value in adding value to bitumen in Canada in other refineries.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, the Premier continues to repeat the lie that our party would shut down the tar sands. That's a lie, and I will not accept it. He continues to repeat it.

Albertans need sustainable jobs, not temporary work building projects . . .

Mr. Hancock: Point of order.

Mr. Mason: . . . that create American jobs at the expense of the Alberta economy. If the Premier was truly committed to ensuring a sustainable future, he would ensure that oil sands leases require a minimum percentage of bitumen to be upgraded in Alberta. Why won't the Premier stand up for Albertans and demand the Kearl project upgrade at least 50 per cent here in Alberta?

Mr. Stelmach: Well, we're well beyond that. We're closer to 70 per cent. Why would we reduce the amount upgraded?

I'm just going to pose this question to you, Mr. Speaker. How is it that this member can get up in the House and make such passionate speeches about adding value to bitumen and increasing production when a former staff member, paid by the Alberta taxpayer, was one of the ones hanging from the rafters at the Premier's speech last year? How is it that somebody can get paid by the taxpayer during the day and during the evening go and support Greenpeace to shut everything down? Can you answer that, Mr. Speaker?

The Speaker: There also was a point of order raised during that exchange. There was some rather intemperate language that was used there. We're going to deal with this point of order at the conclusion. I'm going to ask the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood to do some reflecting in the interim.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

International Medical Graduates

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta Health and Wellness recognizes that international medical graduates are an important part of addressing the province's shortage of physicians. In addition, full economic integration of internationally trained professionals such as IMGs will also yield social and economic benefits to our province. In 2009 only 69 out of about 149 IMGs that successfully completed the AIMG program were placed in externship, the only way to receive full licensure to practise medicine in Alberta. These positions are low because of the shortage of physicians to act as preceptors, or supervisors. The questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Is an assessment process in place to recognize the prior learning and clinical experience of IMGs in Alberta?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned in the introduction, the international medical graduates in this province have an opportunity to play a large role in the delivery of health care going forward. It needs to be stated, however, that the registrar of new physicians in the province is the College of Physicians and Surgeons, and the college has been working, I believe, actively to try and ensure that more foreign-trained doctors are registered in Alberta. In fact, in the last three or four years the number of residency seats for international medical graduates has gone from around 20 to some 67 or 69 right now.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the minister of health: what is your ministry doing to increase the number of preceptors?

Mr. Liepert: Well, that's one of the challenges, Mr. Speaker. To be a preceptor you have to be a practising physician, and we know that in the province today physicians are stretched. We have a couple of programs that we've attempted to introduce to assist along with some additional funding, but having those residency positions is clearly a challenge.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you. The Alberta education system is very good at creating bridging programs. Would the ministry consider integrating the bridging program for IMGs into universities for these professionals?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology and I have had some discussions about how we can remove some of these barriers for our foreign-trained physicians. Currently postsecondary institutions in this province have some international relationships with other universities around the world. We think there are opportunities to actually improve on that. We do know that the College of Physicians and Surgeons has special recognition of training in certain countries. I think in light of the global world that we live in today, we need to do a better job of ensuring that that bridging does take place both between our universities and other world institutions.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yet more flawed inconsistencies in this government's parental opt-out policy have been pointed out by the Public School Boards' Association of Alberta. Enshrining a parent's right to pull their child out of classes on religion in the public system should also enshrine a parent's right to pull their child out of classes on religion in other systems. To the minister: given that parental opt-out will not apply to private, charter, or francophone schools, what specific harm do parents of children in public schools need to be protected from that would justify enshrining only their rights in the human rights code?

Mr. Hancock: What the public ought to be protected from is people who can't read legislation. In fact, under section 36 of the School Act, in terms of application of the act under the charter schools section, it specifically includes under 36(1)(a) that the provision, the definition, with respect to board includes charter schools. So charter schools are actually covered. With respect to private schools that's a choice that the parents make. When they make that choice, they presumably are looking to see what is involved in the child going to that school, so they're opting in at that point.

Mr. Chase: When children enter the public school system, a secular system, parents expect that universal, inclusive ideas will be discussed and debated. If students in public schools need to be able to opt out from learning about religion, then will non-Catholic children attending Catholic schools have similar opt-out provisions?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, it's absolutely essential that students in a secular public school or, in fact, in any school have the opportunity to discuss widely, to share viewpoints. Nothing in the proposed act, which will be debated tonight, will do anything to forestall that. Indeed, Catholic schools are public schools, so one presumes that if you're specifically teaching religion or if you are specifically teaching human sexuality or sexual orientation courses, you would require notification to parents and the opportunity to opt out. Now, if I was running a Catholic school or a Catholic system, I would probably indicate to parents right at the start of the year – again, you have a choice as to whether you want to register in that – that Catholic education permeates what we do in a Catholic system, and therefore you would acknowledge that at the time of registration.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Again to the minister: will the requirement for non-Catholic children to attend religious classes at Catholic schools be ruled as an infringement on the human rights of parents?

Mr. Hancock: Asked and answered.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Financial Support for Refugees

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A couple of weeks ago a constituent of mine asked if I was aware that new arrivals to Canada got $2,500 per month in support payments. I found it a little bit high, so I told him I'd try to get an answer here from the Minister of Employment and Immigration. So my question today to the minister is: can a new arrival into Canada receive equal amounts of money from both the federal and the provincial government in the form of income support or some other category of money?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta has a wide variety of programs and services available across the province to assist any newcomers as they settle. It is true that the amount of federal settlement funding to the provinces is calculated based on the point of entry, and the federal immigration minister is aware of the challenges this poses as people move from one province to the other. Our refugees will get a one-time payment of $1,300 as they move into Alberta or into Canada, for that matter. We need to recognize that refugees come to us with very, very little assets or no assets at all.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. McFarland: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Could I clarify: is that $1,300 a one-time payment or a per-month payment for a certain period of time?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, the $1,300 is just a one-time payment. Once they land here and become residents of the province of Alberta, anybody can qualify for any type of assistance. So if they need income support and if they don't have resources to meet their basic needs, then they will qualify for any type of program that any other Albertan will qualify for.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. McFarland: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I know that I'm trying not to get into the federal side of things, but I need to understand from the minister why it is that – it appears, anyway – the province would end up paying quite a bit more money, whether it's through AISH or income support, to somebody that chose Canada as a place to come to, yet the federal government doesn't appear to be paying nearly what the province ends up being on the hook for.

2:10

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, there are a couple of things that have happened. Generally, you know, all refugees – and we're talking more specifically about refugees rather than the broader class of immigrants – will qualify for that one-time $1,300. The income support after that is calculated based on whether they're married or not, the number of dependants, the accommodations, their ability to work. We will treat any immigrant like any other Albertan once they are settled in the province of Alberta. Our focus is to try to get people to return to work as quickly as possible. Last week we just signed an agreement with the federal government to give us additional support that we can use to train individuals and provide for the needs that they have.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Calgary International Airport

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have asked the Minister of Transportation about the building of the Calgary airport tunnel. The city of Calgary will be voting on support for the tunnel in June. My constituency and city need this tunnel. It's not only vital for local transportation flow but also to the east side and the whole city of Calgary. To the Minister of Transportation: does the government support this tunnel?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's not a matter of whether or not this government supports the tunnel. Yes, the hon. member has asked me this question many times, and I've answered it the same. The airport and the roads within the city of Calgary are arterial roads, and they're to be done by the city of Calgary. It's a municipal issue.

I can add to that by saying that we give hundreds of millions of dollars for infrastructure to the city of Calgary. The city of Calgary has to plan what their priorities are and what they're going to build with those priorities, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's good to hear the minister say that you give out hundreds of millions of dollars for infrastructure. How much is the province committing towards the tunnel, if any?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I answered that question by saying that it's not our responsibility to pick out one particular project. It's up to the city of Calgary to decide what their priorities are and where to spend the money that we send them within their own jurisdiction of the responsibility of their roads.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm just looking for commitment from the minister as to some money towards the tunnel. To the minister again. The community associations and the residents of northeast Calgary expressed to me, to government MLAs, and to the local Member of Parliament their full support for this tunnel. Why is the minister dismissing these concerns of all those residents of Calgary?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I'm not dismissing anything. I just don't understand why that hon. member can't understand that we're giving hundreds of millions of dollars. I don't want to tell the city where they should spend that money. I guess what he's saying is: "Can you make a special little effort? Can you find something special just for us over and above what we already give them?" I don't know if we can or not.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Organization of Petroleum Exporting Companies

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I understand that our province has established some official connections with OPEC, the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries. I know that many of my constituents, particularly those that are employed in the energy sector, will be interested in the details of this relationship. My questions today are to the Minister of Energy. Can the minister explain the benefits of working with OPEC and how we can protect ourselves in this relationship given the fact that the member nations are some of our main competitors in the energy sector?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you very much. Mr. Speaker, let's be very clear about this. We cannot and will not become members of OPEC, and we're not interested in becoming members of OPEC. However, benefits relative to having discussions with other jurisdictions, including our competitors, can be substantial for the province of Alberta. This is all about sharing information. This is to ensure that we understand the factors we're facing: global markets, demand, and pricing. Much is to be learned here while also protecting Alberta's interests.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you. Given that Alberta cannot become a part of OPEC, can the minister describe how Alberta might participate without OPEC?

Mr. Knight: Well, certainly, Mr. Speaker, OPEC hosts regular dialogue meetings which include both OPEC members and non-

OPEC producers around the world. We now have an opportunity to participate in these meetings, and we'll do so when it makes the best sense for Alberta. Most certainly, there are opportunities to discuss a wide range of energy issues. I might point out that OPEC countries are committed to $750 million of investment in carbon capture and storage technology. We're very interested in speaking to them about that. They also, of course, lead in energy supply. We want to lead in the environmentally friendly and sustainable production of energy. We think that there's good opportunity for us to discuss it with OPEC members.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: are there any other potential benefits for the province in participating in OPEC?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, of course, we expect that there'll be opportunities for us when we have discussions outside of Alberta at any point to look at the attraction of new investment to our province, and getting attention on the world stage is, we think, beneficial. Also, OPEC has a student exchange program, about which we will be getting more information. There's a good opportunity also for the next generation of Alberta energy professionals to gain valuable world experience in these areas.

Imperial Oil Kearl Lake Project

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, I'm following up questions from yesterday concerning the upgrading of bitumen from phase 1 of the Kearl Lake project. Yesterday the Minister of Energy was not particularly clear in his answer, so I'm going to start off just simply: does the minister have knowledge of where the bitumen from phase 1 of the Kearl Lake project is going to be upgraded?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, indeed, I think that the Premier has indicated – and it's odd, actually, that the question would come to the House today. I think that yesterday, in fact, the president or the CEO of Imperial Oil indicated that although with this first phase of 100,000, 110,000 barrels the upgrading would likely not be done in their own facility, there are opportunities where there is excess upgrading capacity in the province now. They may be able to make some commercial arrangements there. Also, interestingly enough and relative to something that this member was promoting not all that long ago, it appears as though there may be an opportunity in other parts of Canada.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Energy is responsible for developing the province's bitumen upgrading strategy. This government approved this project, yet it seems that the minister has lost track of a hundred thousand barrels of bitumen a day. I don't see how he can think he's doing his job. How do you defend not knowing where a hundred thousand barrels a day of bitumen are going to be upgraded when you're responsible for the upgrading strategy of this province? Come clean. Come clean.

Mr. Knight: Is he finished with my cleanliness?

Mr. Speaker, I'll tell you what's been lost track of here. The hon. gentleman opposite has lost track of 8,000 jobs for Albertans. That's what he's lost track of. What we have here is a situation where a proponent has come to the table – and they've done so, I think, very prudently – taken a look at the opportunity that they have in front of them in Alberta as we stand currently. They've offered here to proceed with an $8 billion investment in the province of Alberta. By 2012, as the thing unfolds and production comes into play, it will become abundantly clear what's going to happen with the product, and it's to the benefit of Albertans to maximize the value. There may be bitumen leaving Alberta. There may be bitumen upgraded here. There may be opportunity for value-added. There may be opportunity for petrochemical income. We will work with all of the above.

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, there are a lot of maybes in there, but one of the things we know for sure is that in Toledo and Borger and elsewhere in the U.S. real upgraders are being built right now, as we speak. This minister can't tell us if the bitumen from Kearn Lake is going to be upgraded at Mildred Lake at the Syncrude site or if it's going to be upgraded somewhere else. So one last time, Mr. Minister. You are responsible. Where is this bitumen going to be upgraded? Do your job.

2:20

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am doing my job. My job is the development of these resources in an environmentally manageable way for the province of Alberta for the good of the people of the province of Alberta. We will continue to do exactly that. We will get maximum value from this product for Albertans over a long term, including the 8,000 jobs this gentleman seems to not be worried about.

Dr. Taft: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Land-use Framework

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Under the guise of improving provincial planning between competing interests through the new land-use framework, this government is preparing to give itself absolute power, and we all know what absolute power does absolutely. To the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development: why does your proposed framework fail to include the democratic checks and balances that would protect ordinary Albertans from cabinet's whims?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, we've spent over two years consulting with Albertans, getting their input into building the framework. We've now brought forward some legislation. We've been having open houses around the province, working with Albertans, getting more feedback, explaining this. As the regional plans are implemented, for each regional plan there is an advisory committee representing a cross-section of the communities in each of those communities. That's how we're incorporating full participation of all Albertans in the land-use framework.

Ms Notley: Well, actually, Mr. Speaker, the advisory committees the minister refers to may or may not be established and may or may not be representative.

Now, the original land-use framework document emphasized the values of accountability, shared responsibility, and transparency, but those values seem to have gone missing from the final product. If government wants Albertans to trust what they are doing, the minister needs to understand that changes of this magnitude require uncommon levels of respect for democratic accountability and transparency. With that in mind, will the minister commit to making the stewardship commissioner an officer of the Legislature?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I guess the members opposite have been out of power for so long – I guess they've never been in power – they don't appreciate some of the operational details of actually getting something done. We've put together a plan. Is there a lot of executive discretion in it? Yes. But there's no off-the-shelf manual that we're going to take from some other jurisdiction to design the Land Stewardship Act. We're breaking new ground here, and we want a commissioner and a minister that are politically accountable so that the people of Alberta know that if they don't like what's happening, they can hold the government of Alberta responsible.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, a good land-use framework is transparent, accountable, and representative of the people. What this government proposes in legislation is opaque, discretionary, and centralizes power around the cabinet table. Will the minister commit to putting his legislation to an all-party committee so that the principles of the land-use framework can be rescued and preserved and the excesses of the legislation corrected?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, the members opposite have been urging us to go faster and faster for the last couple of years. "When is the land-use framework coming? When is the Land Stewardship Act coming?" Now they want to throw us into a process of more public consultation. I repeat: we have done more public consultation on this piece of policy than probably any other in recent decades, and I'm proud that it's before the House right now.

Imperial Oil Kearn Lake Project

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, I live in the oil sands capital of the world, Fort McMurray. We have more oil than anywhere else in the world. Let me direct my question to the Minister of Energy. We've had a slowdown, we've observed, in the last nine to 10 months, yet yesterday there was an announcement and a vote of confidence for $8 billion on a new project. My question to the Minister of Energy is this: how many more jobs and jobs for Albertans will this announcement yesterday create?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, I will start off by saying that at least we have some members on this side of the House that are concerned about Albertans being at work.

The 8,000 jobs that are relative to the construction of Kearn in the initial phase are certainly very, very important for Alberta, but on an ongoing basis I might let the member know and let all Albertans know that the potential for employment in this first phase of the project for about 40 or 50 years for Alberta is in the neighbourhood of a thousand people at work.

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, the New Democrats often use the words "tar sands," and we're very proud of the words. I understand that Jack Layton seems to think it sounds dirtier if they use "tar sands" rather than "oil sands."

My question relative to the issue of infrastructure has to do with transportation. To the Minister of Transportation. There's been a rumour that the twinning of highway 63 and some of the other infrastructure projects are being somewhat slowed because of the economy. My question to him: is this true, or in fact is the government moving forward under the Radke report relative to building the infrastructure required for such projects?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, there's absolutely no direction but straight forward for this government. Let me tell the hon. member that we did run into a little problem this year. We were waiting on some permits federally, and by the time the permits came through, we got into the migratory bird problem and couldn't get in and start knocking down trees and stuff. But we will be – we will be – moving ahead with more pavement and more twinning of highway 63.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the President of the Treasury Board. Of course, he's responsible for the oil sands secretariat. Some ministers often talk about needing more money. To the President of the Treasury Board: in going forward on infrastructure according to the Radke report, I want to assure my constituents that, in fact, we continue to move forward to create the jobs for Albertans, who pay tax, and ultimately see the oil sands develop to what it really should be in the future.

Mr. Snelgrove: I have to correct one little part of the question, Mr. Speaker. All the ministers are asking for more money, not just some of them.

You know, Mr. Speaker, we have never really slowed down since this Premier initiated the oil sands working group and co-ordinated our different government departments going ahead on providing the much-needed infrastructure both to Fort McMurray and in Fort McMurray, whether it's health facilities or schools. We strongly believe that the best years of Fort McMurray are not only decades and generations ahead of us, but it will be a wealth that Canada will benefit from for centuries. Getting it all right and putting the appropriate amount of money into the infrastructure is exactly what we've been asked to do, and we will.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Energy Efficiency Rebates

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Alberta is well behind Ontario in dealing with climate change. Ontario's green energy act will create 50,000 green jobs, its feed-in tariffs will expand renewable energy, and their energy efficiency grant programs actually match the federal program's grants. [interjections] Oh, there's a great deal of interest in this. Alberta's, unfortunately, does none of this. My questions are to the Minister of Environment. Given that windows can account for up to 25 per cent of a home's heat loss, why are windows not covered by the provincial consumer rebate program?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I guess I could stand here and answer a litany of questions: "Why is this not included? Why is this not included?" There's only so much money to go around. We made a determination that we would focus this first round and first phase of an energy efficiency program into areas where the maximum number of consumers could participate. I would suggest to the hon. member that she has an excellent idea. If we're able to secure a little bit more money from the Treasury Board at some point in time, windows may well be part of a program.

Ms Blakeman: Okay. Back to the same minister: can condominium owners apply for provincial rebates for their individual units, and can condo owners pool their rebates for the entire building?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, I don't know the answer to the second part of the question, as to whether or not pooling could be accommodated, but certainly there are portions of the program, to do with appliances for example, where by all means condominium owners can participate.

The portion of the program that has to do with meeting efficiency standards and the testing that's associated with it is a little bit more complex. I would say that in principle it makes sense to me that they should be able to participate, but on the actual implementation and the details I may have to get back to the member.

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. I look forward to receiving the information.

Final question to the same minister: given that there are minimum R-value requirements for insulation in houses, when will there be minimum insulation requirements for large buildings in Alberta?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, that is very much part of the commitment that the government has made to do an extensive review of the building code program. Building codes not only apply on the residential side but also on the commercial side. It simply makes sense that we should be thinking about how we can integrate the energy efficiency and conservation initiatives, that are so critical if we're going to achieve our long-term targets with respect to climate change, into the safety considerations that are principally governing building codes. I would suggest to the hon. member that she stay tuned. In conjunction with Municipal Affairs it's our intention to do a very thorough review and update on building codes in the very near future.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Distracted Driving

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Following its review of Bill 204, the Traffic Safety (Hand-Held Communication Devices) Amendment Act, 2008, the Standing Committee on the Economy recommended that the ministries of Transportation, Solicitor General and Public Security, and Justice create an offence of distracted driving. My questions are all for the Minister of Transportation. Can the minister provide an update on this matter?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, my department has done a lot of work to bring forward a report that deals with this issue. What we're looking at covers a lot more than just cellphones. We're looking at the bigger picture and trying to address all distractions behind the wheel because there's no sense drafting a law if it only looks at a little bit of the big picture or the big problem that we have. We're consulting with stakeholders and working with other ministries to make sure that we develop a law that's enforceable.

Mr. Johnston: Given that Strathcona county is the first municipality in Alberta to ban the use of hand-held cellphones while driving, will the Department of Transportation revisit its stance on banning hand-held cellphones province-wide?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, as I was saying before, we've done a lot of work on this. In fact, some of the reports that are out there now show that cellphones are only a small part of the problem. There are other distractions that are a more serious issue than the cellphone distraction. We have to figure it out so that we address all of those so that we're not just bringing one-offs forward like some of the other provinces have done, like some of the other jurisdictions in North America have done and have found out that then they have a different one-off and a different one-off, and they end up with a whole 'sloppage' of things that they can't enforce.

Mr. Johnston: My final question: would the Department of Transportation consider banning cellphone use in playground and school zones as some municipalities are now considering?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, why we keep saying that we want to look at the big picture here is so that we can cover the whole province, one end to the other. I absolutely have no idea why one county or one municipality would bring in a bylaw that's almost unenforceable, because there are only certain little areas and they have to train certain policemen to be able to look after the one case, when they know that we're working on this issue. We're going to bring forward legislation that addresses the whole problem, the big picture.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

President and CEO of Alberta Health Services

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In January of this year the Alberta government recruited Dr. Stephen Duckett from Australia to run the Alberta Health Services Board. My first question is to the minister of health. Why did the government set Dr. Duckett's annual compensation level at $575,000 per year?

Mr. Liepert: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, the government didn't set the salary. We have an autonomous board that recruited the new CEO, looked at similar situations across the world. I would suggest that considering what some of our previous CEOs were paid, we got a bargain at $575,000.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: given that the information that I provided to the minister is on a government of Alberta news release, again, if we're going to pay this gentleman $575,000 and a bonus annually that could amount to $140,000, is Dr. Duckett still eligible for an annual bonus?

Mr. Liepert: I think that in the question, Mr. Speaker, the member stated that part of the contract of the CEO is that he's eligible for a bonus up to 25 per cent of his salary, and that's the bonus we're talking about.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Okay. Again to the same minister: given that we've had surgical cancellations, given that we've had layoffs in the health care system, given that we see seniors without health care, given that hospitals are being reduced or in some places closed, why is this gentleman, under your watch, eligible for a $140,000 a year bonus?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, let's clear up the facts. I'd like to have the member show me one hospital that's been closed. He just finished stating that hospitals are being closed. That's wrong. There are not surgeries being cancelled. There are some that may have to be deferred because of cost restraints that a responsible government brings in in its budget. For this particular member to stand up here and spin all that garbage is just that, garbage.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Camping in Provincial Parks and Recreation Areas

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This past May long weekend thousands of Albertans enjoyed our beautiful public lands and provincial parks for a weekend of camping and other recreational activities. Unfortunately, there are always a small number of people who abuse this privilege and damage the environment, leave their garbage behind, and break other rules and laws. My first question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Can the minister please explain what his ministry has done to combat this problem?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The May long weekend has indeed become an annual event where Albertans go out and enjoy themselves in our forests and parks, and we think that's a good thing. We want them to enjoy, get out and be in our forests and parks, but what we don't want them to do is to destroy them. I'm happy to report that thanks to the joint task force this year – the combined efforts of SRD, Parks, Solicitor General, and the RCMP – for the third year in a row we reduced the type of destruction and lawlessness that has occurred over the past few years. Part of it is education, a respect-the-land theme. SRD focuses on that with good co-operation, though, from Solicitor General and the RCMP and Parks on enforcement. I'll leave that to the other ministers.

Mr. Rodney: My second question is to the Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation. There were temporary liquor bans in place in certain provincial campgrounds over the long weekend. I'm wondering what the minister can tell us about the bans and their effectiveness in cutting down problems in parks this past May long weekend.

Mrs. Ady: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is right. We had about 225,000 campers in the parks system over the May long weekend, and I'm happy to say that of that number of people in the parks only about 1 per cent presented a problem. Generally speaking, it was related to alcohol in banned areas and noise levels. We did have to evict about 275 campers, but, again, a very, very small percentage when you look at how many people enjoyed the parks. We think our enforcement efforts are working, and we're pleased that we're able to offer a very safe and wonderful place for Albertans to recreate.

Mr. Rodney: My final supplemental is for our Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security. I'm hoping that the minister can be specific and include numbers in informing Albertans and this House exactly what his department did this past long weekend to enforce our laws and keep Albertans as safe as possible.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lindsay: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. With the number of people travelling during the long weekend, we knew that we needed to provide increased enforcement to improve highway safety. Almost half of the fatalities that occur in Alberta occur between the May and September long weekends. As part of our agreement with SRD and other agencies, 90 members of our Alberta Sheriff Highway Patrol together with the RCMP provided extra enforcement to not only enforce the Traffic Safety Act but also other offences. On the past weekend our sheriffs laid over 4,000 charges and took 21 suspected impaired drivers off the road. We will continue with this program of education and awareness of motorists concerning highway safety to ensure that our highways remain safe.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that was 96 questions and responses today.

In a few seconds from now we'll continue with the Routine.

Excellence in Teaching Awards

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm reasonably confident that each of us has had a teacher who made a positive difference in our lives, a teacher whose passion was evident through a strong commitment to students and to the teaching profession. I am sure we still remember that teacher to this day.

Today I am proud to honour 23 of Alberta's finest teachers and principals, who engage our students and encourage them to reach further for their educational goals and, more importantly, for their dreams. These 23 teachers are representative of the thousands of exceptional teachers we are so fortunate to have in our school districts and our province. Chosen from 365 eligible nominations, they have been selected as award recipients for the 2009 excellence in teaching awards due to the creativity, innovation, and dedication they demonstrate every day in the classroom. They are well respected by their teaching colleagues and the greater community and are an inspiration to their students.

Of the 23 award recipients 20 will receive the provincial excellence in teaching award, where they will have access to $4,000 for professional development to further develop their teaching skills. Mr. Speaker, three out of the 23 award recipients will receive the SMARTer Kids Foundation innovative use of technology award, which includes a comprehensive technology package.

The excellence in teaching awards have been celebrated since 1989. More than 8,200 teachers have been nominated, and more than 400 have received awards. The influence of these teachers, Mr. Speaker, will long be felt by their students.

I'm honoured today to rise to recognize all of the outstanding teachers and principals across this province and to give heartfelt congratulations to the 2009 excellence in teaching award recipients. Also, on May 30 in Edmonton these recipients will be formally honoured at a dinner and awards ceremony with the hon. Minister of Education as well as some colleagues from our Legislature.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Evansburg Legion Ladies Auxiliary

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was honoured to be part of the 60th anniversary celebration for the Ladies Auxiliary at the Evansburg Legion Branch 196 this past weekend. For 60 years the ladies have reached out to the community and the Legion in an outstanding way. Many families and organizations have benefited from their generous and hard work.

The Evansburg Legion Ladies Auxiliary was granted their charter on May 14, 1949. The original 16 ladies who founded the auxiliary set out to support veterans and the community at large.

Mr. Speaker, I had the pleasure of meeting Mary Cumming, who was an original member 60 years ago. Mary is 96 years old and continues to serve the community through work with the auxiliary. In the program is written a little story about Mary Cumming. She joined in April 1949 when physical activities were the most difficult. Holding many offices, including President . . . she was a dedicated worker not only in the auxiliary, but in the community as well. This earned her a life membership, the Meritorious Service Award and the highest award of all – The Palm Leaf.

On June 12, 2009, she will be 96 years old, and she still attends meetings.

I want to thank Janene Barry, president of the auxiliary, and all the past and present members for their tremendous work, for all they have done for Evansburg and the residents of Whitecourt-St. Anne. Congratulations on 60 years, and best wishes for the future.

Tabling Returns and Reports

Mr. Mitzel: Mr. Speaker, as chair of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices I'd like to table five copies of a report by the Ombudsman entitled Prescription for Fairness, Special Report: Out of Country Health Services, dated May 2009. Copies of this report were distributed to all members today.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling five copies of a program for the 11th annual Vaisakhi Nagar Kirtan parade. Yesterday I shared with the House about the parade on May 17 in Mill Woods to celebrate this very important Sikh holiday.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. First, I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter from the Pochaiv maple leaf safe house project, that I referred to in my May 5 member's statement about human trafficking in the Ukraine.

Second, I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of a petition with 363 signatures from my constituents on behalf of Landon Karas, whose family believes excessive force was used on their son in maximum security here in Edmonton.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In my capacity as chair of the Standing Committee on Health I'd like to table the requisite number of copies of three letters, all expressing support for the committee's proposed amendments to Bill 52, which were tabled in this House yesterday. The letters are from the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Alberta, the Alberta Medical Association, and the Information and Privacy Commissioner for Alberta. These letters may be useful as additional reference material for members reviewing the committee's report.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two sets of tablings today. The first is on behalf of my colleague the Leader of the Official Opposition, who wanted to table a series of documents that are actually a petition but are not appropriate to be presented as a petition, so we're doing them as tablings. These are some 600 or 800 signatures collected by a young man named Oba Powis, who was working with his MLA, the Member for Lethbridge-East, and has done a good deal of work with his fellow students in Lethbridge around Bill 44.

The second set of tablings is a series of e-mails that I've received over Bill 44, including one from Lisa Barrett with concerns about Bill 44 promoting discrimination; from Luanne Sawatzky, a graduate student who feels knowledge is power; from Krystal Harvey, who is concerned that the goal of education should be to educate and enlighten; from Kelly Ernst, who feels Bill 44 is poor governance and bad policy-making; from Scott Rowed of the Centre for Inquiry Calgary, with concerns that children should have a right to be taught critical thinking and proper science; and from Connie Jensen, who talks about a case from California where a student was stopped from doing a presentation on Harvey Milk.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have one tabling today. It's a PowerPoint presentation entitled Australia's Health 2008: Elective Surgery Waiting Times, by Dr. Stephen Duckett, University of Queensland. One of the take-home messages in this PowerPoint presentation is that if you want to improve access to elective surgery, a.k.a. reduce waiting times, think about incentives.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling the required five copies of my letter and receipt dated May 8, 2009, regarding my donation to the Lethbridge Salvation Army Food Bank. As per my pledge in the Assembly of April 2, 2007, half of my MLA indexed pay raise of $146.25 is donated monthly to a food bank until AISH is similarly increased and indexed and is fair with the MLAs' salaries.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table four letters from Albertans concerned with section 11.1 of the proposed Bill 44. Montgomery Moore writes: "I have been a loyal Tory supporter for years . . . I believe it is the role of education to teach children how to think, not what to think." Harris Kirshenbaum writes, "While the 'Alberta Advantage' drains away yet again, we have in Bill 44 yet another stunning example of a mode of thinking trying to return us to the age of the horse and buggy." Richard Leslie, the chair of a school council, writes: "There's an old rock and roll song that says 'leave our kids alone' . . . well, now is the time to 'leave our teachers alone.'" Lisa Hurrel, a parent and school council member, states, "I want our teachers to teach and not be worried about being absolutely politically correct absolutely all the time."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

2:50

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter from Melissa Luhtanen of Calgary, who is a lawyer who is opposed to the parental notification section of Bill 44. She's concerned that even with the minister's proposed amendments the bill will have a chilling effect on discussion of sexual orientation, sexuality, and religion in classes.

Thank you.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of the hon. Mrs. Jablonski, Minister of Seniors and Community Supports, responses to questions raised by Ms Pastoor, the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East; Ms Blakeman, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre; Ms Notley, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona; Dr. Taft, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview; and Mr. Denis, the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont, on April 15, 2009, in Department of Seniors and Community Supports main estimates debate.

On behalf of the hon. Dr. Morton, Minister of Sustainable Resource Development, responses to questions raised by Mr. Hehr, the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo; Ms Notley, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona; and Mr. Griffiths, the hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright, on April 27, 2009, in Department of Sustainable Resource Development main estimates debate.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader on a purported point of order.

Point of Order Parliamentary Language

Mr. Zwodzesky: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I want to raise a point of order with respect to comments that the hon. leader of the third party made in this House today during question period. I would cite our own Standing Order 23, wherein it says that a member may be called to order by the Speaker under 23(h) if he or she makes allegations against another member, under 23(i) if he or she imputes false or unavowed motives, and under 23(j) if he or she uses insulting language that may cause some disorder.

Today during question period the leader of the third party said words to the effect of: the Premier said a lie. I think we heard it not only once, but we heard it twice. The context, of course, in which it was said was highly unparliamentary, in my view, as cited in sections of Beauchesne, which I'll get to in just a moment. But, you know, Mr. Speaker, I recall that even during your term in the chair you have frequently advised this House as to what may or may not be parliamentary and how on various occasions some words can be used in one context to mean one thing and in another context to mean another. However, here I think the leader of the ND opposition clearly maligned the Premier, and I say that he did it intentionally because he said that the Premier had lied or that the Premier told a lie, not once, but he said it twice. He repeated himself in so doing. So this, in my view, would be one of those cases where the context leads to the point of order, I would hope.

Specifically, under Beauchesne 489, Mr. Speaker, as you would know, the word “lie” is cited. It’s cited as being on the list of unparliamentary words. In fact, it gives 38 occasions when the word “lie” was ruled as being unparliamentary. Furthermore, under Beauchesne 492 there’s an additional list of words, terms, and expressions that “have caused intervention on the part of the Chair,” and the word “lie” appears there quite clearly as well. Coincidentally, the word “lie” does not appear in Beauchesne 490 as being a parliamentary word under any occasions. As well, under Beauchesne 486 we can see references to the tone in which words can sometimes be used which convey an additional hurtful or insulting meaning. I would suggest that the leader of the opposition New Democrats used that particular tone not once but twice today in referring to the Premier in the way that he did.

Additional references to support this point of order, Mr. Speaker, would be 409(7), where it specifically states what is and what isn’t allowed specific to QP. In fact, it states in 409(7) that “a question must adhere to the proprieties of the House, in terms of inferences, imputing motives or casting aspersions upon persons within the House or out of it.” In this case I think the member violated that particular rule as well.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, Beauchesne 428(i) goes on and talks about: a question must not contain imputations. I could give other references. However, one of the most important references that I found were rulings made by yourself in your capacity as chair for this House, which we all recognize has its testing moments. On April 18 of 2000 you found it, quote, totally inappropriate in the context of a question to use the words “lie,” “lied,” or “lying.” You found a similar situation on November 27 of 2001, where the member apologized and withdrew the comment after you brought it to his attention. It goes on with November 24 of 2008, which is not that long ago, where similar findings were found by you.

In this case, Mr. Speaker, I think we all recognize that a great deal of latitude can be and often is given in this House, and we appreciate that as members, but in this particular case I think the latitude was breached. It was breached in a very demeaning way, and I feel that the leader of the New Democrats should at the very least apologize and withdraw those comments.

Alternatively, in closing, if that’s not the case, I would then cite Standing Order 24(1) of our own House rules, wherein it suggests that persistent refusals to adhere to the requests of the Speaker’s earlier advice can also result in a point of order being brought against a member.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. During this session it has become a routine for ministers of the government to answer questions of the opposition by either misstating the question or by attributing false motives to the questioner. The Premier has repeatedly stated in this House the falsehood that Alberta’s NDP and myself specifically had proposed shutting down the oil sands. I can recall at least four previous occasions this session when the Premier has done that. The last time before this point was yesterday, and I quote from Hansard: “For someone that talked about shutting down the oil sands, now all of a sudden he wants to keep everything here and add value to everything.”

I have repeatedly attempted to correct this false statement by the Premier, but he insists on repeating it. I said yesterday: “Mr. Speaker, the Premier knows that we never said that we should shut down the tar sands. The Premier is misleading the House.” Again today the Premier repeated something which is not true and which he knows not to be true. I believe that the Premier has used his position to falsely accuse myself and my party of taking a position which would be extremely damaging to this province and its economy.

We know that there are tens of thousands of workers, unionized and ununionized, that are employed by operations in Alberta’s oil sands, and we attempt to represent their interests as best we can as well as represent the interests of Albertans as best we can. We would not take any position which would cause tremendous damage to Alberta’s economy. That does not mean we do not have criticisms about how the oil sands are regulated by this government, but at no time whatsoever have we ever done that.

For the Premier to continually repeat in this House something he knows not to be true, which is damaging to us politically and otherwise, is unacceptable to us. I have taken a number of occasions to try and correct the Premier on this false statement that he keeps repeating, to no avail. So, frankly, Mr. Speaker, while I didn’t call the Premier a liar, I called the statement that he made a lie, and I believe it was.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to briefly join the debate and state what I hope would be blatantly obvious, that if the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood has an issue with something that the Premier said in this Chamber, he has, as any other member in this Chamber has, the option of rising on a point of order. He cannot use that as a justification for his own use of unparliamentary language both in the use of the term “lie,” which he did on two occasions earlier, but now he’s added to that “misrepresentation,” another unparliamentary word. He has the option of rising on a point of order. He didn’t do so. That makes no justification for his subsequent behaviour.

The Speaker: Others to participate?

This issue here this afternoon causes me concern. This is a Tuesday in the week. There’s a lot of business that has to be done in this House. We’ve already agreed that the outstanding orders and policies, basically, we would leave on June 4. Now we’re going to spend a great deal of time on an issue that really need not be dealt with.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood says the following in the Blues:

Mr. Speaker, the Premier continues to repeat the lie that our party would shut down the tar sands. That’s a lie, and I will not accept it.

He continues to repeat it.

And a point of order is raised.

Now, look, all our texts very, very clearly, as pointed out by the hon. Deputy Government House Leader, lead to the conclusion that the use of such words is inappropriate, unparliamentary, and not to be used in this Assembly. There’s no defence against it. It’s in our standing orders. In Beauchesne’s Parliamentary Rules & Forms a series of sections deals with it. Erskine May’s Parliamentary Practice, 23rd edition, very clearly has sections in it with respect to allegations against members, defence. We’ve already dealt with the question on two or three or four occasions in this Assembly.

When members get involved in the question period and seek not information but wish to create debate, it leads to other kinds of responses that enhance debate. The purpose of question period is to seek information of an urgent nature. We get into debate repeatedly in this question period. That’s part of the leniency factor, perhaps, provided by the chair to allow the greatest opportunity for members to participate, but it's often violated, and the chair is not going to intervene every time there's a statement because there would be no question period. I'd be intervening 30 times in question period with respect to all of this. That's never been the intent. There has to be self-discipline.

Quite frankly, the words are inappropriate, hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, and I await what you are going to do about it.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, but with the greatest respect to you and to this Assembly I stand by my words.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I was afraid of that, and that's part of the histrionics and the theatrics of this Assembly. I indicated that this would probably be something we would look at in the dying days of an Assembly. So I want to draw to the attention of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood Standing Order 24: 24(1), 24(2), 24(3), the naming of a member and the consequences arising therefrom.

I'm going to offer a second opportunity for the hon. member to do the appropriate thing and withdraw his statement with respect to the words in question.

Mr. Mason: With the greatest respect I believe that the Premier has an obligation to withdraw his accusations against me and my party, and if he does so, I am also prepared to withdraw my statement.

The Speaker: Hon. member, the difficulty that I have with respect to the standing orders is that there are no conditions associated with it. This is not a barter system. This is not a trade-off. This is not an "I'll do that if you do that" kind of thing. It's very, very clear. I'm going to repeat it for the third time. Naming a member, section 24(1) of the standing orders: "If a Member, on being called to order for an offence, persists in the offence or refuses to follow the Speaker's directions in the matter, the Speaker shall name the Member to the Assembly."

Section 24(2):

When a Member has been named by the Speaker and if the offence is a minor one . . .

And the Speaker does not view this as a minor one.

. . . the Speaker may order the Member to withdraw for the balance of the day's sitting, but if the matter appears to the Speaker to be of a more serious nature, the Speaker shall put the question on motion being made, no amendment, adjournment or debate being allowed, "that the Member be suspended from the service of the Assembly", for any time stated in the motion, not to exceed 2 weeks.

The hon. member must understand that if the Speaker puts this question before the Assembly, that the member be suspended from the service of the Assembly for any time stated in the motion, not to exceed two weeks, and if the Assembly agrees to that, the member leaves. The member will have no further role because the motion put forward by the Speaker would be for the duration of this session.

Now, I'm going to ask for the third time very, very politely, with all the best of the parliamentary tradition that I can muster. Recognizing that I believe it to be in the best interest of the hon. member to withdraw his statement, recognizing that I will lose a lot of sleep tonight if the hon. member does not – don't make me do it, please – I implore you to withdraw your words.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I am very torn about this, but I have not found a way to get the Premier to stop saying things about me, my party that are untrue. In a civil case truth is a defence. I take it from your comments that that rule doesn't apply here.

The Speaker: No. I'm sorry. We're not having a debate. You're not embroiling me in this. I'm enforcing the rules of this particular Assembly. I made it very, very clear what our traditions are, what our rules are. I quoted from the text, the holy text that we govern ourselves by, the tradition of parliament. Don't do that. You're getting further into trouble.

I'm going to ask you for the fourth time now – not the third time, the fourth time – will you withdraw your words?

Mr. Mason: No, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: You know, I guess the hon. member is really pushing the matter for his own agenda. I can accept that.

I'm going to repeat it again. I've asked it four times now. Naming a member. Four times I've asked the member to respond. The member refuses to follow the Speaker's direction. I'm going to name the member, and I'm going to repeat 24(2).

When a Member has been named by the Speaker and if the offence is a minor one, the Speaker may order the Member to withdraw for the balance of the day's sitting . . .

The Speaker does not believe this is a minor one.

. . . but if the matter appears to the Speaker to be of a more serious nature, the Speaker shall put the question on motion being made . . .

If an hon. member in this Assembly wishes to make a motion.

. . . no amendment, adjournment or debate being allowed, "that the Member be suspended from the service of the Assembly", for any time stated in the motion, not to exceed 2 weeks.

The chair would feel much more comfortable if an hon. member would stand and make such a motion and give me the dates associated with it, and I will immediately put the question to the Assembly.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, I've been in this Assembly for many, many years, but I've never yet witnessed what I fear we are about to witness. I find it very, very sad and very unfortunate that the Leader of the Official Opposition . . .

3:10

Some Hon. Members: Third party.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Third party. Sorry. I clarify that right now.

. . . of the ND opposition doesn't find it plausible or possible to find some other way to address this. There are things like telephones and visitations that can be made, and I would have hoped that he would have taken that route and followed your advice in the meantime. However, not being given much choice in the matter and finding the words and the tone of the words and the continued refusal of this member to abide by what we as hon. members of this House have agreed to in our own standing orders and what hundreds of years of tradition have spelled out for us to follow, I would move that the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood be suspended from the service of the Assembly for whatever time is stated, not to exceed two weeks.

The Speaker: I'm sorry; the motion should be complete.

Mr. Zwozdesky: For one week. [interjections] Not to exceed two weeks.

The Speaker: Okay. Listen: "that the member be suspended from the service of the Assembly" for a period of time "not to exceed 2 weeks."

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, my apologies. I'll specify that it be for two weeks.

The Speaker: Standing Order 24(2) says that if the matter appears . . . the Speaker shall put the question on motion being made, no amendment, adjournment or debate being allowed, "that the Member,"

the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood,

"be suspended from the service of the Assembly," for any time . . . not to exceed 2 weeks.

A time of two weeks, in other words. Is that understood by everybody?

I'm going to give the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood one last chance before I call the question.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, this is very difficult for me because I believe very sincerely that my reputation has been besmirched by the Premier. I also believe that I owe an obligation to my constituents to be in this House to represent them, and if I was absent for that period of time, I would not be doing my job that I was elected to do. So at this point I will withdraw my remarks and apologize to you, to the Premier, and to the Assembly.

The Speaker: Some members may disagree with the chair about the role taken by the chair. Some members may argue that the chair should have put the question immediately as per the rules, without debate, amendment, or anything else. I believe very strongly in the decorum of a parliament. I believe very strongly in the roles of members. I believe very strongly that members were elected to be here in this Assembly. I understand correctly the difficulties that individuals have at various times. The last thing in the world I ever want to see is any member of this Assembly be banished. There also is a tradition that if a member withdraws and apologizes, the matter is ended.

You may criticize me for this direction. You may do that, and ultimately you can do something further. But I believe that it is in the best interests of the parliament of Alberta to ensure that all members are here. We've heard the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood apologize, withdraw his statement and apologize, and I think we should move on now.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 20

Civil Enforcement Amendment Act, 2009

[Adjourned debate April 22: Mr. Denis]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise and speak on Bill 20, the Civil Enforcement Amendment Act, 2009. Really, this is a good-news bill. It aligns us with legislation that has been proclaimed in other areas of the country: Saskatchewan, Manitoba, and Newfoundland. What this bill essentially does is it aligns these other jurisdictions with our province now in allowing RRSPs and other savings devices, registered disability savings plans and other things like that, to be outside of the reach of creditors.

Really, this might seem like good news, and it is because we as legislators, as people who want to encourage a culture of savings in our province, should be allowing for mechanisms like this where people can put their money away in registered retirement savings plans and other devices like that to protect their hard-earned money from future civil forfeiture in a lawsuit.

Simply put, without this type of legislation we're opening up many of our province's entrepreneurs to the opportunity to maybe not start businesses, to maybe not take that creative step forward or to pursue some risky invention or risky business opportunity that could advance society. For instance, they may be too worried: well, maybe if we try that, someday it'll come back, and all our savings will be gone. Really, that's not the type of attitude we'd like to encourage in, I guess, the entrepreneurial people that we are or in our society.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Basically, if we look at this, what happened before was that unless your money was protected through the Insurance Act, individuals who were involved in a lawsuit against an individual family or an individual member of our society could obtain in a lawsuit registered pensions like RRSPs, DPSPs, and RRIFs. These plans, then, were available for civil forfeiture in instances where it was deemed that the court would go after these instruments in order to facilitate the payment of, I guess, a judgment due and owing by the court. But the thing is that that principle has to be balanced against our principle of protecting people's investments, people who have worked their entire lives to squirrel away a nest egg, to make a living, to try and have some RRSPs, DPSPs, and some RRIFs, to have this money available to them when they are in their old age.

Otherwise, if this money was made available to creditors, what would happen is that these people would be thrown onto, I guess, the government dole. Well, not "I guess." They would be forced to live on the government dole. That would not leave the government or society in a very good position.

What this bill does, again, is align our jurisdiction with other jurisdictions in Canada. It encourages a mentality of saving, a mentality of putting away money for the future, a mentality of people providing for themselves in their old age and not being reliant on the government and still encourages that entrepreneurial spirit we value so much here in Alberta.

It is with pride that I speak in favour of this bill. I commend the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont for bringing forward this bill. I'd also like to note that this is really being advised to us by other jurisdictions. The Uniform Law Commission, review boards, civil enforcement agencies, sheriff organizations, and basically the financial planning community all speak in favour of this type of legislation.

I think it is a good move that will bring the necessary clarification to civil enforcement of our judgments relative to deferred savings plans, and it is a necessary harmonization of provincial laws. It will protect citizens' retirement savings and allow for deductions from deferred savings to be garnished to maintain the rights of the creditors. You can see that there are elements for both in that creditors are going to be able to get a lot of protection, and so will our retirees.

Those are my comments, and I'm glad to see this legislation being put forward. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. member wish to speak on the bill?

Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 20 read a second time]

Bill 26

Wildlife Amendment Act, 2009

[Adjourned debate April 21: Mr. Mitzel]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is, again, a privilege to rise in second reading and discuss this bill on wildlife. Like I indicated, it is an honour to speak on this as I've had a great deal of time to think about this bill since it was first announced. Now, as I've contemplated this more and been able to think about this, it now becomes ever more clear to me as to what is coming. Yes, it has become clear.

The bill proposes amendments to the Wildlife Act. The purpose of the amendments is to eliminate challenges in enforcing the act and to clarify legislation to make it easier for the courts to interpret and deal with offences under the act. This seems to be a very good bill that is before the House at this time. These amendments that have been brought forward at this time are designed to clarify the provisions of the Wildlife Act that deal with enforcement, sentencing, and wildlife control measures. These clarification amendments will provide more certainty for hunters in understanding what the clear penalties are for offences and for wildlife officers performing their duties as well as owners of captive wildlife and controlled animals.

This bill attempts to address certain challenges in enforcing and administering the Wildlife Act. These amendments will recapture costs associated with wildlife control that the government must take in certain circumstances, and this is a good move for revenue generation.

If you look further into the act, if you look at what is happening here, wildlife management is obviously challenging and constantly changing. Providing more certainty in enforcing provisions of the act will only enhance the goal of wildlife management. As we've seen here in the province and as I've brought up numerous times in this Legislative Assembly, we appear to be at a tipping point here where much of our wildlife – you know, a case in point, I guess, is that the grizzly bears and many of our elk species and other species are simply being threatened here. Of course, you have grizzly bears. Estimates are that there might be 500 left here in Alberta, some estimates as low as 238, and I guess we really don't know how many there are.

The simple fact of the matter is that our actions as human beings are taking a severe toll on our wildlife and our wilderness community. When you have animal species like the grizzly bear that are disappearing, well, that should be a sign to us as human beings that, hey, we're doing something that isn't quite right here. We may be overharvesting or taking too much of our forest space or using too much of our water or a whole host of things, a combination of all of these things, that is making it increasingly difficult for wildlife to survive. Guess what? When the wildlife can't survive, I guess that in some time eventually human beings may not be able to survive. Yes, I know that's, hopefully, a long way down the road, and hopefully we will be able to straighten this out.

What I think Bill 26 is trying to recognize is that some of this stuff we've ignored for far too long here in Alberta. I guess the unconstrained development of our wild areas, that was probably the position of governments in the past that appreciated just a more straight laissez-faire approach to governing the wilderness – go out and do what you want and not worry about the consequences – for instance, no regulation of marketplace or just simply no regulations at all, possibly led to a lot of this wildlife being in danger.

That's why, actually, you know, although there are problems with the land-use framework, coming in at this time as well is a recognition by this government that maybe we've gone too far and that maybe we should have had these rules and regulations in place 10 years ago. We wouldn't have had much of the, I guess, unintended consequences of an oil rush up in Fort McMurray, which has left many people questioning the environmental practices or the land stewardship and our whole concern for the environment, that now exists as a cloud over Alberta.

Bills like this really bring to light that maybe if we had been more attentive to these difficulties, say, 10, 12 years ago, our province would be in better shape today and so would our reputation amongst the communities throughout the world, and there wouldn't have to be money spent on creating Alberta's image and all that stuff because it would already be highlighted around the world that we had done a lot of this stuff that appears to be coming down the pike now. I guess the answer is: better late than never.

Again, just speaking to the definite merits of the bill, it allows us to assess owners of captive wildlife or controlled animals with the cost of transporting, recapturing, or euthanizing animals that were kept in lawful captivity and escaped or were unlawfully released. By doing this, you can have a landowner who can be, I guess, rewarded for land stewardship. I know this is somewhat controversial in that beforehand maybe it was just one of those things that people were supposed to do, but I think we learned over time that if people aren't sometimes financially rewarded for doing the right thing, well, they'll do the wrong thing.

For instance, the tragedy of the commons. You know, we remember back to when people realized that if you overused too much of the commons or if you overhunted or overcut the wood or whatever it was you were doing, all of a sudden there would be no more commons. Without rules and regulations in place, well, you're going to have that kind of tragedy. We're trying to move to a system – and I really hope it works – where we are going to pay people to avoid this tragedy where they're not looking after the wildlife or looking after fish and wildlife and expand it toward monitoring our hunting activities.

Also, a good thing is that, as I say, it provides the courts with a higher penalty range to deal with those who export wildlife or wildlife parts that are banned from export. Let's face it: although I do have some questions over whether these are actually at a significant enough range that they deter some behaviour, I hope they do. For instance, we on this side of the House believe that our environmental fines in general in this province are probably far too low and that people are willing to risk, I guess, inappropriately violating these laws because the penalties aren't high enough. I think we saw that case, you know, where really 700 or 800 dead ducks were found in the pond.

Really, you know, were the penalties stiff enough? I think many people around Alberta and other jurisdictions are saying: no, they weren't. Maybe this is a recognition here that we have to increase our fines for people who are illegally or unjudiciously exporting wildlife or wildlife parts that are banned for export.

This wouldn't have had to be done, you know, 50 years ago because we had lots of animals around. Maybe we didn't think it would get to this point, where we have so few animals and wildlife, and there's really a recognition that we've reached that dangerous stage of our existence. I think this is a recognition that we're there. Hopefully, we continue to monitor this, and if we continue to have our wildlife disappear from the landscape, we continue to amend these penalties higher and continue to add to our monitoring of these pristine areas, and we'll go from there.

Thank you very much for giving me a second to get organized. I'll allow other members to discuss the merits of the bill as well.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, would stand in support of this bill. For someone who's been privileged to be able to live in other than an urban setting and be exposed to the wild and all the animals and plants, the flora and the fauna that it presents, I can't begin to say how much I think it is very important that we protect the existing wildlife that we have.

One of the things that I think is just recent and that I'm hoping this type of a bill would be able to help: it may empower the ability to actually do and have longer periods of time to do investigations into what I thought was a sacrilege, the killing of the wild horses. They've been killed before, and no one seems to have managed to be able to bring anyone to justice for that, and now it's happened again. I believe there were four horses; one was a mare that was in foal. So I'm hoping that this bill would be able to prevent that sort of massacre again.

Wild horses breed. Yes, perhaps at some point they may have to be culled because of their numbers increasing, and perhaps the Crown land that they run on can't support that particular number in the herd, but I think there's an awfully big difference between scientific culling and just having someone go by with drive-by shootings, so to speak, on these horses.

The purpose of the amendments to this bill is really to eliminate the challenges in enforcing the act and to clarify legislation to make it easier for the courts to interpret and deal with offences under the act. I think that over the last number of years, certainly, the ones that I'm hoping that they'll really be able to get are the poachers and people who have guns and no brains. They go out into the wild and shoot and just leave the animals. Sometimes that animal doesn't die on the spot. Those are the people that I'm hoping that this act will really get. There's no excuse, in my mind, for that kind of behaviour. If it's just a bunch of good old boys getting out there with a bottle of rye and a gun, then let's hope this act will get them. Not wanting to be terribly sexist in that last remark, I do know that actually there was – and I can't remember just how long ago it was – a woman also caught shooting indiscriminately and just leaving animals to die and not taking them away and all those sorts of things that aren't nice.

One of the other things this bill will do, too, is assess the owners of captive wildlife and controlled animals with the cost of transporting, recapturing, or euthanizing those animals that were kept in lawful captivity and escaped or were unlawfully released. I really do think that captive wildlife that are kept in a reserve or in a private field that is fenced in are really the responsibility of those owners. An animal may have come from the wild, but once it's in a controlled situation, I think it then doesn't qualify so much as wildlife as it does qualify as a responsibility and a captive animal of that person that owns them.

The other thing that I think is good is that they authorize fish and wildlife officers with increased access to land to respond to wildlife issues and monitor hunting activities. I've gone through a couple of examples of why I think that is important. I would like to stress at this point that it says: authorize fish and wildlife officers. I'm hoping that that's exactly who would be allowed to do this. I don't believe that sheriffs have the background or the training. In fact, many of these fish and wildlife officers have degrees in environment. They have degrees in wildlife. They understand the wildlife. I think that those are the people we should be allowing to do this. Not only that, but those are the people that we should be increasing in numbers and not using sheriffs as backup.

It does provide the courts with a higher penalty range to deal with those who export wildlife or wildlife parts that are banned from export. I think we all know that this continues to this day. Certainly, it's an underground industry, but it does continue. Unfortunately, some of it is taken from our grizzly bears, of which

I don't believe we have nearly enough to go around, let alone be taking animal parts, especially for aphrodisiacs. We have – the name escapes me right now. Oh, dear. Not Valium.

An Hon. Member: Viagra.

Ms Pastoor: Viagra. Thank you.

We have Viagra to take care of that now. We don't need the aphrodisiac parts of animals. Perhaps we could be exporting that as a very legal industry instead of something under the table.

It also provides another creative sentencing option, requiring a convicted person to pay restitution to someone who has incurred a financial loss as a result of the offence. One of the things that I'm thinking, which would be a very difficult thing to work with – I know that sometimes horses will get loose and will be on the road and can cause very serious car accidents. In fact, people have been killed by a collision with a horse. Certainly, they don't want to have a collision with a moose. However, moose are wild, and it's a little bit harder to get restitution from an owner that doesn't exist. The elk that get loose: if a car is in a collision with an elk, there are certainly very severe injuries. In fact, deaths can occur in that kind of an occurrence. So I think that, within reason, people who own these animals that do get out and cause those kinds of problems should pay some type of restitution.

The amendments will recapture costs associated with wildlife control that the government must take in certain circumstances, as I mentioned. It's a good move for revenue generation, but I would like to see that revenue go back directly into the ministry of sustainable resources so that that money is used to maintain our conservation officers and to maintain our wildlife and to do the scientific research that is really necessary, that we need to understand exactly what we're doing because wildlife is constantly changing. Certainly, we have our new land-use framework act that's going up, and I know that it will cover some of this, but our wildlife is always changing because of what we are doing to the land. So I think that this will provide certain enforcement that will enhance the goal of wildlife management.

There are more punitive measures that the court could impose on offenders, which serve as a good deterrent to activities such as poaching and illegal exporting of wildlife and wildlife parts, which I have already mentioned. I think that poaching is probably far more prevalent than the exporting of wildlife parts, but I think it's something that is often done under the cover of night. We do know that as much as it is abhorrent, people do hunt at night with lights, and that really is against what I would consider to be a true hunter. We can expand the ability of the wildlife officers to access the land, as I've mentioned already.

With those remarks, Mr. Speaker, I will sit down, but I think this is a good act. I'm certainly recommending caucus support this, and I hope that it will go forward and that we will be able to see that more and more people – now almost 80 per cent of our population live urban – will be able to get out into the rural life and be able to enjoy everything that rural life and that rural experiences can give people. I know that even just a weekend of camping for many, many people is as good as a whole week's vacation in some fancy resort. Just get out and commune with nature and be able to be quiet. Leave your BlackBerry at home and enjoy. I'm hoping that this amendment will be able to ensure that all Albertans will be able to enjoy that.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, we have five minutes for questions and answers. The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Marz: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I enjoyed the hon. member's comments about these feral horses. I do a bit of riding out in that country myself and have seen them and seen more traces of them because they are quite wary. But just a clarification: did I hear the member say in her initial comments that she was aware that someone was caught shooting these animals? If you were, were you aware that they are charged under the Stray Animals Act, or were you just not aware of that? I just wanted to clarify that. There are laws under our Stray Animals Act and under the Criminal Code. It is illegal to shoot these animals at will, whether it's at nighttime with lights or at any time to do that, and I just want to clarify that. We have laws already in place to deter that.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you. Yes, I was aware of that. I'm wondering if this wouldn't just be an even stronger backup to those laws that do exist. No, I didn't say that I knew of someone. What I had said was that I knew that before these last four horses were killed, there were incidents beforehand and that to my knowledge no one has been charged with that. Now here's a second incident that I'm aware of. So I'm really hoping that very quickly this act may give more money to more conservation officers that could spend time doing the investigation that would bring these kinds of abhorrent people to the courts quicker.

Mr. Marz: If I could just add to that, Mr. Speaker. Being out there and seeing how difficult sometimes it is when you're in country that's only accessible by foot or by horseback, it's sometimes really hard to track down perpetrators regardless of how many laws you have.

The Deputy Speaker: Anybody else? The five minutes are still on. You want to speak on the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, then, on the bill.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Few places in the world have as great a diversity of wildlife as Alberta. In the province we have 515 species that are traditionally considered wildlife, and that includes 10 species of amphibians, 95 mammals, 402 birds, and eight reptiles. British Columbia is the only province with a greater number of mammals.

I'm taking this back to an example from Bangladesh, how important it is to protect our wildlife. In Bangladesh they were exporting frog legs and throwing the torso away. That really upset the whole ecobalance. There were mosquitos. Frogs were eating the mosquitos. There were snakes and all that. So I think it's very important to protect our wildlife, you know, not only for the ecosystem balance but for our future generations. We don't want them to look at the pictures; we want them to go in the wild to look at the real stuff.

It is very important that this bill has come forward, and I think we should strengthen it to protect all the species we have out there. There are also 3,500 species of plants and fungi that are in Alberta. I think this bill will go towards protecting all those. I think there should be severe penalties for poachers and people who just go out there and hunt for fun. We should strengthen the bill a little bit further so we get the numbers to build up to the point where we are not afraid of losing all those species.

It is provincial legislation. Protecting and maintaining suitable habitat is critical, too, for maintaining long-term wildlife health and viability. Similarly, wildlife health is an important indicator of the health of Alberta's environment. You know, we talk about the environment all the time. We talk about greenhouse gas emissions and all that. I think this is equally important, to protect the wildlife of Alberta, to protect the ecosystem.

For those reasons I'm supporting this bill. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Does any other hon. member wish to speak? Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 26 read a second time]

Bill 29

Family Law Amendment Act, 2009

[Adjourned debate April 28: Mr. Denis]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a privilege to rise and speak about Bill 29, the Family Law Amendment Act, 2009. Again, we're on a theme here. This is good legislation as it allows people who are going through the throes of divorce or who have been divorced for quite some time to I guess more adequately deal with the child payments and maintenance payments that are outstanding and due and owing to people after their relationships have come to an end.

What this bill does is that if a party who has been assessed as either owing maintenance enforcement or support of some kind fails to provide an income tax return, a notice of assessment, and a short questionnaire, the child support the next year will be recalculated as if the payer's income had gone up 10 per cent. An additional 3 per cent would be added annually to capture since the order was granted or recalculated. The maximum deemed income increase would be 25 per cent, and that would be applied to orders where five or more years have passed since income was last determined.

What basically happens now is that if parents are divorced and there are orders out there asking for maintenance, typically, if a person believes his or her spouse is making more money or his or her partner has not provided the requisite income tax return to them or submitted it to the government, that person would have to apply to a magistrate, probably get a lawyer, do what's called a variation order. This can cost anywhere from $5,000 to $10,000, probably more around the $10,000 mark, and it could be even higher considering a lot of the delays and a lot of the, I guess, tactics that some clients get their legal practitioners to perform to avoid going into these variation orders. Nonetheless, now that has seemingly come to an end at least for a regular user of this maintenance enforcement type of program.

Now if they don't provide the necessary information and they do have an existing order, the payer's income is deemed to go up 10 per cent. This seems reasonable. If you should supply the information to your ex-husband or ex-wife, well, then, by goodness, you should have some sort of penalty attached to your actions for not doing this. You know, a 10 per cent penalty for not providing this information is relatively reasonable, to assume that this is not something that individuals should really feel that offended by. For instance, if they wanted to get rid of that 10 per cent, all they need to do is provide the information. We see that this measure can work. It will make things easier for people to get what is due and owing to them from their former partner or spouse and move on with their lives in a much easier fashion.

Now, there are maybe some family lawyers who have lost out on some money coming into their pockets, but let's hope they will be able to make do and struggle and emerge despite this avenue no longer being a part of their legal tool box, if you might want to call it that.

We're not the first government to have done this. Five existing recalculation programs already exist. British Columbia, Manitoba, Prince Edward Island, Newfoundland, and Nunavut currently recalculate orders granted after these programs are created. An interesting thing: Alberta's program will actually help parties with child support orders dating back to May 1997, when the child support guidelines were introduced. This increases access to justice even further as Albertans will not have to go back to court to get new orders so they can participate in child support recalculation programs.

Like I said, this is very good legislation. I congratulate the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont for bringing forward this legislation as it will streamline the system, allow people to go about their business with a much more easy and systematic approach. This is pretty straightforward legislation that our government should be bringing into Alberta. With the advance of technology and the ability to simply have computers do a lot of simple recalculation methods, judges, magistrates, lawyers, and, more importantly, individuals who use those services don't need to be bothered.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It was a privilege to be able to speak in favour of this bill.

The Deputy Speaker: Does any other hon. member wish to speak on the bill?

Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 29 read a second time]

Bill 30

Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2009

[Adjourned debate April 21: Mr. Drysdale]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure to speak in support of Bill 30, which is going to close some legal loopholes regarding red-light cameras. It will also broaden the definition of who is deemed an investigator, including the disciplinary provisions from the recent case of a driving instructor who was recruiting young female students to work at his massage parlour. It will also provide vicarious liability to rental companies regarding accidents. Also, it will make changes to the Maintenance Enforcement Act to have the licence of violators suspended rather than cancelled.

In November 2007 changes were made to the Traffic Safety Act which included, among other things, the introduction of speed-on-green, which changed the role of red-light traffic cameras to be devices that can issue speeding tickets. There was a concern there about these cameras being cash cows. You know, as long as these cameras promote safety on the roads, it's good to have them issue tickets. As long as they're not cash cows, I have no problem supporting this. But I think we should be doing something about enforcing the laws some other ways for these cameras to be more effective in reducing accidents. Amendments to Bill 30 don't address the cash cow issue. Now red-light cameras will be able to issue tickets if somebody speeds and runs a red light also. The previous legislation allowed only one or the other. I think it's a good thing if it's going to reduce accidents, like I said before.

The changes which are being made under this broaden the definition of who is deemed to be an investigator. You know, are we going to have an Alberta provincial police force? Are we going to expand it further to have that? This opening up of the definition of investigator may allow for the implementation of that in the near future. These amendments will also now include First Nations police officers under the peace officer definition. I think that's a good thing to have.

Another good thing to have is including disciplinary provisions from the recent case of the driving instructor who was recruiting young female students to work at his massage parlour. Originally only the instructor could be penalized, but now with this I think the school will be penalized. You know, that's a good thing. I believe that these driving instructors should get the clear message that they cannot do favours when they're training the students. They shouldn't be doing that. There should be heavy penalties, as far as I'm concerned, with these.

This also provides vicarious liability to rental companies regarding accidents. Also, changes to the Maintenance Enforcement Act, that we just talked about, I believe, under Bill 29, that the violators' licences, you know, will not be cancelled, but they will be suspended. I think this bill goes some way to address the issues, and I congratulate the Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti for bringing forward this bill. I'm in support of this bill.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Does any other member wish to speak on the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, please. Thank you. This certainly is an interesting piece of legislation. We're looking at five changes, that I see, when we implement the amendments to the Traffic Safety Act as proposed. It's a long time ago, the middle of March, when the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti first discussed this bill at second reading.

Now, reading through this, it looks like the changes that are proposed are all tweaks, as they are described, to the Traffic Safety Act. But I've always had concerns about red-light cameras, and now red-light cameras will be able to issue a ticket if someone speeds and runs a red light. The previous legislation only allowed for one or the other.

I can see where people are coming from whenever they argue that we must have this in order to make our intersections safer. Traffic accidents are certainly a problem. Traffic fatalities are, unfortunately, a major issue. But I fail to understand. The hon. member was talking about this being a cash cow. If we were really sincere in our efforts, why could we not – and I could be one of the guilty ones speeding through an intersection or running a red light or a combination of both. If you really want to deter me from that, I think you should take into consideration my licence and the number of demerits that I could possibly lose as a result of my speeding. Why are these issues not linked more conclusively? I don't know. That was quite a discussion in Calgary last summer.

Again, Mr. Speaker, if we are sincere in our efforts to make our roads safer and to control speeding and to control some of my bad habits, this would be a place to start. I know the deduction of demerits or deduction of points on a licence is a major topic of discussion for many young drivers who are afraid, when that happens, of the consequences. Whether it's behaviour that's bad enough that they lose their licence or if the behaviour is bad enough to attract the attention of the insurance agent, we know what's going to happen if the insurance agent gets involved in this. Well, those young drivers are going to pay even more for their car insurance, and we all know that car insurance is unaffordable for many young drivers. I have an association with many young people, and that is a major topic of discussion with them. So why could these two items not be linked if this is an issue of traffic safety and not a cash cow?

I know what it's like. I haven't been involved in this lately, but I do know that one time I drove north of Rexall Place, Mr. Speaker – and I wouldn't be the only one that's been caught – where you go up over the Grant Moellmann Bridge and you're going downhill and it turns quickly to a 50 kilometre zone. I consider that camera location to be nothing more than a cash cow. I consider the black Dodge Caravan that parks in my neighbourhood a cash cow as well. I watch sometimes, particularly after dark, and it does not seem to slow traffic down. It has been located there for a number of years now, and the traffic patterns are the same as ever, but someone somewhere is getting a significant flow of revenue.

I'm certainly supportive of this bill, but I would like to urge that when we're looking at a traffic violation – and I know there are issues around this. I know what the hon. member is going to tell us: that perhaps this is not good evidence, that perhaps it's not adequate for an issue around changing how many points I will have on my licence. But you're after my money. We could certainly look at changing this, again, if we're sincere about the issue around traffic safety.

Now, there are a lot of good points in this bill, but there's one that's not in here, and that's the whole issue of banning cellphones in vehicles. I know the county of Strathcona is making a noble effort to at least start Albertans, in particular their own citizens, on the whole initiative of eliminating cellphone use while one is driving a car. That's a good start in the county of Strathcona.

It's going to be very difficult to police. The provincial highways are not caught up in this at all, so the hon. minister of health can jet out to Vegreville any time the minister wants in his car, and he can zoom right through the county of Strathcona and not have to worry about talking to anyone on his cellphone. But I am probably one of the most frequent users of a cellphone in my car, and in order to be protected from myself, if it was a provincial law, I think it would be a very good law.

I'm getting back to the insurance industry here, the number of traffic collisions and the number of accidents in this province. The use of text messaging by some drivers just astonishes me. I see drivers scrolling on their BlackBerrys as well at traffic lights. It's getting to be quite a practice. If we were sincere, again, with amendments to the Traffic Safety Act, that's one that we should consider. We shouldn't leave it up to the municipalities. I just cannot understand why we would continue with the practice of allowing cellphone use by drivers unless, of course, it is a microphone that is mounted in a sun visor or in a similar place so that one's voice could be picked up. You can talk to other people in the car; there's no reason why you can't use a hands-free device.

It's a practice that I would say each and every one of us who has a cellphone and a driver's licence in this province is guilty of. It certainly affects how I drive. I've been very lucky to date where I have not had an accident. [interjection] Yes. You know, some people would even say I'm lucky like Luke, whoever that is, but there are times where I've had close calls, Mr. Speaker. But I think that's one of the things that we could do to improve the Traffic Safety Act that's not included here in Bill 30.

Now, other members have talked about the changes that have been made. Certainly, this bill is not contentious. There are some good things in it, but I think we could have made it better if we had taken the issue of cellphone use and drivers and put them together. I think we would have safer roads, and we would have less accidents, because there's no doubt in my mind that the use of cellphones and the practice of text messaging, the practice of using the BlackBerry in the car is going to get many of us over time in trouble that we will regret. So that's one issue.

In conclusion to that, I would certainly like to commend the county of Strathcona for their action. I think it was the right thing to do. We on this side of the House, of course, have had many discussions on that. They have been rejected for reasons which I'm not going to get into this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, but certainly that is an issue that I'm disappointed is not in Bill 30.

Now, I'm also quite curious about the Alberta police force. It's not many years ago since we saw on the Solicitor General and Public Security's annual report a photograph of an APP, an Alberta police member. The photograph would be perhaps 60 years old, if not close to 70 now. That individual had boots similar to what the RCMP wear when they're on parade, a uniform that was similar to what the RCMP would have, not necessarily in colour but in style, and this individual was in a car, of course. It was a 1930s model car. That was probably one of the last photographs taken of the provincial police service before, for financial reasons, we turned it over to the RCMP.

I know the RCMP contract is expiring, I believe, in three years, in 2012. I've heard the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo and the hon. Member for Stony Plain in exchanges during question period discuss the RCMP's role in Alberta and the role of the sheriffs, the sheriffs department. I'm not convinced that we're not going to have another Alberta provincial police force. I don't think it is necessary, but when I look at this bill and I see some of the minor changes that are in it, Mr. Speaker, I have concern. When we think of the definition, changing the definition of investigators, I would like to know in the course of debate: will the opening up of the definition of investigators pave the way for the implementation of an Alberta provincial police force?

I certainly am curious about this. Not only do we have questions in the Assembly; it seems to be almost an annual tradition here whenever we have budget estimates. I look around and I see the profile of the sheriffs increasing, whether it's in urban areas or in rural areas. I know they are helpful in policing our roads. They're all over the place issuing speeding tickets, for one. I know because my spouse got one. She deserved it. She was guilty. She was travelling fast, but it was on one of the Minister of Transportation's finer roads up in Grande Prairie.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, we have five minutes for questions and comments. The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to ask the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to elaborate on the state of the highways and the incident with the ticket.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much. Well, hon. member, I would consider the new twinned highway from Grande Prairie to almost the edge of Valleyview and the sections of that twinned highway on the other side of Valleyview through Fox Creek through to Whitecourt as one of the finest highways in Alberta. It is relatively new. The surface is without ruts. There are very few cracks that I can see in it.

My spouse was travelling quickly along that road.

Mr. Knight: Was she flying?

Mr. MacDonald: No, she was not flying, but she was apprehended by the sheriffs. She was astonished. She paid her fine, and she moved on. She doesn't travel nearly as quickly now. Certainly, on that road in a car with good tires you can motor along, as they say. She was going too fast.

I would consider that stretch of highway almost from Darwell right up to Grande Prairie as one of the finest in the province.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: We still have minutes left.

Mr. Kang: I have a question for the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. After you got the ticket from the red-light camera, what kind of driving habit changes have you made?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much. Well, I travel north of Rexall Place. I go over the Grant Moellmann Bridge. I think the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview would be quite aware of the bridge and the grade that I'm referring to as it crosses the light that intersects the Yellowhead Trail. Certainly, since then – and it's been 11 years – I am conscious of the fact that I had a $120 ticket, and I have driven the speed limit.

As far as that ticket changing my driving patterns, you'd have to say, hon. member, that it certainly has.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: We still have time in the five minutes.

Seeing none, does any hon. member wish to speak on the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a privilege to rise and speak to Bill 30, the Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2009. Before we get into the exact merits and changes of the bill, I'd just like to point out to this honourable House, as I'm sure the Minister of Transportation knows, the costs to the Alberta economy, the hospital system, insurance companies, what have you. It costs the Alberta gross domestic product $12 million a day. That's $12 million a day, traffic accidents alone. It's from, I guess, car repairs to money spent on new vehicles, money spent on higher insurance, time out from injuries, costs to the hospital system.

If you look at the overall impact of what actually makes our society more productive, more efficient, one of the things, a simple thing – really, it's not that simple – is the lessening of traffic accidents. There's no doubt that this legislation as it stands, on the face of it, will go some ways to reducing that. If we look at this, this bill will allow the combination of red-light cameras giving out tickets both for running a red light and for speeding.

There's no doubt that if you look at the evidence of the statistics and, actually, the speed limits of people travelling on roadways that have these devices, people travel slower. When people travel slower, guess what? Fewer accidents. It's just how it is. There is a lot of talk about Big Brother involvement: this is too much government; why are people looking at us doing this sort of thing? But in this regard I think the balance of public safety and the tremendous cost it is to our system and our society – simply put, it's a way to get people to slow down. All it is is a reference to a driver's licence number, and a ticket is given out. You don't have the infringements on privacy and all that stuff. It's a simple way that technology can be used to better regulate our highway system.

From my perspective, we should actually have more of this type of thing on our highways, byways, whatever. Why are we having the hon. Solicitor General's men and women in uniform and hiring more sheriffs? We can be using this technology to get people to slow down. Simply put, why not just set – this is just a for-instance. Maybe we could set these up, say, about every 40 miles or so on the highway and move them randomly, set them maybe at 120 or whatever, sort of like the sheriff does. Let people have that leeway, but if they get caught, they get sent a ticket. Guess what? By and large, the statistics say and the evidence on studies done in areas that have these red-light cameras shows that people will slow down. By getting people to slow down, well, you know, you save accident costs.

I think that's what we're doing. People, including myself, including the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar and his wife, like he brought up in his story, sometimes need the help of the government to do what's right and also to protect not only themselves but to protect other people. This is a way that this legislation as well as technology can be used to reduce accidents on our city streets, reduce productivity costs, reduce outright costs coming out of the coffers of our health care system. The quickest and easiest way to do it is through reducing traffic accidents.

I think the hon. Minister of Transportation knows that. That's why he continues to have safety as his job one on our highways. That is a good thing, and we'll keep holding him to that motto to make sure that he doesn't let that down. But if we're speaking candidly – and I believe the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar was doing it and sort of floating some ideas. I think he floated a pretty good idea there of maybe having demerits associated with this type of deal. Now, I understand that a police officer doesn't hand out the demerit and that it can happen on a more frequent basis, but we don't have to hand out the same demerits that a police officer hands out. If a person gets one of these tickets, let's say, reduce the demerit to one, you know, regardless of the speed. Tell you what: when they get 12 of these, well, then they're in trouble, but hopefully after about six they've learned the lesson. I think that might be something to maybe explore.

I thought that was a good idea brought up by the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, where we take that extra step in not only giving a fine but giving a direct threat, sort of: if you continue to drive like this, your licence will be pulled away as you are a danger not only to yourself but to other members of our community. I guess that if you lose your licence, as my cousin in Lethbridge says, that'll learn you. Sometimes that works. That's one thing I'd like to say.

Hey, while we're floating ideas here, this is another thing. This probably wouldn't be very popular, and I know this government doesn't like to do unpopular things, but I'll just float it here, something that can maybe be tried. Back in the 1980s there was talk about, you know, running out of fuel and us being environmentally friendly and all that good stuff. In fact, I believe we had our speed limits at 100 kilometres an hour. I don't know. Maybe someone could confirm that for me. I believe that was the speed limit, and there's evidence out there put forth that there was a reduction in the amount of fossil fuels used.

When people are driving on highways and going faster, carbon is emitted into the atmosphere at a much greater rate. I guess that in the name of reducing our use of fossil fuels, reducing our carbon impact, it might be time for us sometime in the near future to look at that and say: hey, Alberta, we're going to do our part, reduce our speed. Not only is this a good thing for reducing our carbon footprint; it's also a good thing for saving our society money. You can make a strong argument. Yes, people will howl. People will be upset. They'll say: oh, my goodness; it takes me another 12 and a half minutes, maybe even 20 minutes to get from Calgary to Edmonton. That is something that maybe at some point we'll want to look at. Hopefully, that type of legislation, which would reduce not only our fossil fuel used but also create a safer environment, would go to that sort of measure.

I realize the difficulty. It would not be an overly popular thing. It would be on the airwaves for days. But I tell you what. After you did it, it'd be like ripping off a Band-aid. People would get on with their lives and realize that it didn't impact them all that much. That's all I'll say about that.

If we look at this bill, there were some other changes that came in that have allowed – I guess organizations involved in the teaching of driving were involved in nefarious activities by luring young women into the massage industry. Simply put, they were using it basically as a tool to get young women under their influence and have some alone time to try and get them involved in these activities. The bill allows, then, not only for that driver to be penalized but for the company to be caught up in what was in fact going on and for that element to be shut down. Let's face it. You know, the people who are teaching driving are primarily teaching it to either younger people or new immigrants in our society, who are more vulnerable populations who may need the support of the government a little more and the government keeping an eye over these types of situations a little more prevalently.

I would like to comment, too, on what the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar did. I know the hon. Solicitor General and I have talked about this at great length. At a time when I need a question for question period, I'll dig up the old firewall letter and say: "Ah, here. We'll keep the Solicitor General busy with this. Hopefully, he's forgotten the page in his notebook where he keeps the notes on the 2012 firewall letter, and I can catch him off his guard. He'll maybe admit that, yes, we are having a provincial police force." I don't know whether he is or not. I'm just sort of talking out of turn.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Frankly, you know, to be honest, I'm not sure whether it would be better, worse, or in between. I think that in the name of transparency and open government, if we are doing that, you might as well tell everyone and say: yeah, we're going to do this. That's sort of how we've been implementing the sheriffs and all that stuff. Get there. Otherwise, if it's not, then I think we can continue on that path.

You know, I'm not sold either way. I know that when that day comes, we're going to have to do a hard, more targeted look at it and see what the advantages and the disadvantages are. Hopefully, the government is doing that. But in the case of having a really transparent and open and honest government, I would advise, let's just either sort of announce it, say that we're going to get ready for it in 2012, and here's some of the stuff we've done, and it looks like a better way for Albertans. If not, well, then, let's stick to at least the crib notes to date. I hope the crib notes have been correct and not just sort of a way to pacify some resistance to this that there would be in some communities who have become very attached to their RCMP departments. They've been here a long time, and they have served our communities very well; there are no ifs, ands, or buts about it.

Further, there are also, I think, some benefits to getting some money out of the federal government from time to time to help pay for things on that front. Maybe that can be done through the Alberta police force – I'm not sure – but that's just another way. Just back to the open and transparent government, we might as well do things that way.

I guess those are sort of my comments on the bill. I think this is good legislation. I commend the mover of the bill, the Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti, for bringing this bill forward. It recognizes that although this may not be the most popular thing for people driving on the streets, it is cannon fodder for the talk show hosts, and it's an easy thing for people to get their head around and rally against. Nonetheless, it's good legislation that, once implemented, keeps our streets safer, actually.

You know, the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar – I was winding up there, but I forget that he triggers my brain with some of his comments there. Sometimes I try to ignore them, but most times he's right on point, so I will comment further. I do also commend the community, I believe, of Strathcona for passing the cellphone legislation. That is something that we should have done a long time ago in this House. Really, I've only been here a year, but that could have been done a year ago. I guess it could have been done since 2001 that it's been on the books. Yes, I know there are arguments that we can already lay that charge underneath dangerous driving provisions, but then that's got to become a directive from us as a government that we want to lay charges out there because I don't think it's happening.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available should there be questions or comments. The hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security.

Mr. Lindsay: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo made mention of a provincial police force. I want to reiterate that we have a provincial police force in Alberta, one that has served us in this province since 1874. We refer to them as the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. We are in the process of negotiating a new contract with them, and we're quite confident that the negotiation will be successful. I would ask the hon. member if he sees things differently and if he sees the RCMP being replaced by another police force because that's certainly not our intention.

Mr. Hehr: Well, again, I think that question is better directed at the Solicitor General himself as I'm not in a position to actually do those things or to make those changes or, in fact, implement an Ontario-style police force. You know, if that's a question, if he's asking me if I was the Solicitor General, I'd do a little more research on it, I'd get back to him in due course, and I'd do whatever is best for the Alberta people.

The Speaker: Others?

Mr. Ouellette: I think I probably should just comment on the last two speakers, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar and also the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo. When they talk about demerit systems on a camera system, it's pretty hard to put demerits to someone when you can't place the person behind the wheel. I think it's just wrong to charge a person for being a good Samaritan and lending somebody their car and somebody happens to do something wrong with it through no control of theirs. How do you actually administer them a demerit when you don't know who's behind the wheel? That's the reason there are no demerits on that.

Also, you'll find that we do have a little bit of a problem in Alberta with our courts being plugged up by the amount of people that go out there and break the law. Sometimes in cases where you have too heavy a penalty, that's when they jam up the court system and make the lawyers happy. You're better to have strong enforcement and a law that people are willing to say, "Yeah, I was guilty," go pay it, and let the system carry on.

The Speaker: Others to participate?

Others to participate in the debate, or should I call on the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti to close the debate? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to just make a few comments briefly about this piece of legislation. I think that there are, again, a number of clarifications and tidying of things, closing loopholes, which I think is a good thing, and in general I am supportive of that.

I'm concerned about a new class of investigator. The Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti indicated that this new class of investigator – this was probably in the briefing that he indicated this; I don't know if he said it here today – will be for designating mechanics so they can add their expertise in examining vehicles in other premises. It was added because it was often the case that we went to the court with a mechanic who had done inspections on a vehicle and was not allowed to testify because they're not legal inspectors under the current act.

We're a little concerned that there could be room for misuse here. The minister can appoint any individual or group whom they deem qualified to carry out actions related to this act and its regulations, both specific provisions and general ones. It does say that the special investigator is not authorized to do anything outside of the certificate of designation, which they get from the minister, but there are no specifics on what the designations will be, and it's a little bit vague. So that would be something we would indicate that we would like to see tightened up a little bit.

Mr. Speaker, generally, these changes do strengthen the enforcement abilities of police officers and peace officers as well as reinforce the provisions in the Traffic Safety Act, which hopefully will make Alberta's roads safer.

Now, one thing that is a little controversial is the use of red-light cameras or speed-on-green cameras. I know that there's a balance here. A lot of accidents are caused by speeding through intersections and running red lights, and it is a very serious concern. I'm not going to oppose the use of these devices in enforcement there other than to express a concern that I think we need to balance the increased use of surveillance devices in order to enforce the law. It's not just from the point of view of electronic observation or surveillance of the public, but it's also the importance of having real officers available to enforce the law. I think that it's very important.

I remember a case brought by former Inspector Chris Braiden of the Edmonton Police Service against photoradar. He was opposed to photoradar, and he made some interesting points. His case wasn't successful, but he said that when someone is speeding and photoradar takes the picture and they get the ticket in the mail, it's a very kind of sanitized process. There's no human interaction between a police officer and the offender. But when you actually have real police pulling people over, say, in a speed trap, then if the person has an outstanding warrant, if the person is intoxicated, if there are drugs in the car, or if the person is just in a really bad state mentally or perhaps rushing to the hospital for a baby that's coming a little faster than would otherwise be expected, the officer can interact with those people and make additional decisions that improve the quality of law enforcement in our community. This is by no means meant to say that we shouldn't have red-light cameras or we shouldn't have photoradar but only that we need to retain a significant human dimension in our policing. It's the interaction between police officers as part of the community with community members that I think enhances our safety and our sense of community.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to indicate that we're prepared to support this piece of legislation and would like to see the changes contained in it enacted because we think they're in the best interests of the community. Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available should there be additional comments or questions.

There being none, I'll entertain an additional speaker.

Shall I call the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti, no need to close the debate? Okay.

[Motion carried; Bill 30 read a second time]

Bill 31

Rules of Court Statutes Amendment Act, 2009

[Adjourned debate April 28: Mr. Denis]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a privilege to rise and discuss Bill 31, the Rules of Court Statutes Amendment Act, 2009. I will right off the hop congratulate the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont, who brought this bill forward. I believe he said in his introduction that this is the first major revision of the Rules of Court statutes since 1967. Indeed, that's a long time, and a lot of things have changed in our society, and the language that is used is different now than it was then. Some of the procedures we do now are different from what they were then, and it just seems to be a well-timed thing to bring forward the Rules of Court statutes.

As many people may or may not be aware, the Rules of Court are primarily used by litigators who are engaged in the practice of head-to-head combat, both zealously representing the interests of their clients to the best of their ability. Oftentimes disputes arise between the two lawyers or two clients as to how, in fact, a lawsuit should proceed or what the makeup of the lawsuit is and what's going to be the timing in between how things happen.

Many people, actually, just think that when you, say, go to court or bring a suit against someone, an individual or a company, all you do is trot off, fill in a piece of paper, and go to the courts six months, a year, two years down the road, and a magistrate will make the decision. That's not how it is, Mr. Speaker. Along the way there are many things: you need to supply evidence to each side, you need to do what are called discoveries, where you as a lawyer get to interview their client and their lawyer gets to interview your client. Then you may ask for things to be given to you by either side. This is evidence that you ask to be handed over, that you've obtained through the course of discovery.

The next thing you know, the other side doesn't want to give you this information, or they don't think it's part of the lawsuit. Well, you know what happens? You have to make an application to go to the court to get them to decide whether that information is relevant to your lawsuit. All that stuff and all of those steps – how to get this information from the other side and how to go to discovery and how to get a date with the court and how to apply for things like a settlement meeting or, when a lawsuit is over, how to divvy up the costs that have occurred between your clients – are all contained in what is called the Rules of Court.

I remember that when I was starting out at a place called Fraser Milner Casgrain in Calgary – it's a large national law firm – I had the privilege of working for a couple of people. When you'd go into their office, whether it was in the morning or the afternoon, and you'd say to them, "Well, what should I do next? I've got to do this," they'd say: "You know, Kent, there's a book called the Rules of Court. Instead of you coming in here and bothering me all the time, why don't you go get that book and look at it?" So, you know, after you get that answer four or five times the first few weeks you're there, you go to their offices a little less and you go to that book first and you try to figure out for yourself what rule, in fact, you're going to use. I'll tell you what: after you've checked that book, then you can go back to your principal and do that.

The gentleman's name was Neil McDermid. He is a QC, and he's actually a tremendous man who taught me a lot and taught me how to use the Rules of Court. More importantly, when you went off to court and you lost, he wasn't always that disappointed. He'd tell you about some times in the trials and tribulations of his legal career, that when he thought he had a winner and it turned up the other way, everything usually worked out all right. He was perfectly correct in that.

If you look at sort of what we've done here on the Rules of Court – and I've checked some of the language – it's much of an improvement over what was there. It allows practitioners who are starting out in practice or actually have even been in practice for a long time to be more adept at using the rules and regulations. It's easier to find. It's not in such archaic language, old English language. Although law is based on precedent, there's no need to have language from, you know, 400 years ago contained in the rules. They're the same rules. Let's just put it in modern language that people can understand so that when they go to court, when they get served with something, when they read a document from a court, it's very simple to understand, and it's not such a foreign language to them. I believe it'll make it not only easier for practitioners but for those people who simply are trying to navigate the legal system on their own.

Also, there's been a lot of advancement in the law, and a lot of that, especially around litigation, has been through ADR, or alternative dispute resolution, which is becoming very big in legal circles and is actually used to save our courts some time. There are many ways now in the Rules of Court that you can go to ADR. You know, it's actually kind of funny. They call ADR alternative dispute resolution, but some people call it appropriate dispute resolution, where you should always go to ADR to discuss things before you actually go to court. Now many practitioners, because of these changes and more, I guess, incorporating the modern language and modern use of what a courtroom is actually for, use ADR much more frequently. In fact, the changes make it mandatory that parties to any litigation seek ADR before they're able to obtain a trial date. This is very good.

Ontario has had this legislation since 2000, and they've seen trial times fall as a result. In fact, even if people aren't able to solve all their disputes, they're able to solve a couple, or the lawyers can get together and meet and discuss things and, hopefully, end some stuff. It's just a forced time where they're going to get together and think about what exactly is going to happen before they go to court. I'd like to say that this has been a real work-in-progress. There have been various fits and starts to it, I believe, since people started working on this in 2001.

I'd like to also point out that the Hon. Justice Sheilah Martin, who was my ethics prof at the University of Calgary, worked hard on this. So did the Hon. Justice Keith Yamauchi. He taught me debtor-creditor, and he also actually told some funny stories in school as well. There are many other people on the discovery and evidence section of the new Rules of Court. Professor Chris Levy, who is also a teacher at the University of Calgary law school, brought his guidance. You see a lot of legal practitioners who have spent a great deal of time and effort revising, who have dedicated their professional lives to trying to make the court system a little bit easier to navigate not only for individuals who use the system but for people who find themselves involved in it and who maybe don't have a lawyer, who want to take part in it in a more knowledgeable way.

There's one more thing I'd like to add, that Ms Hilary Stout also worked on this, and she was a compatriot of mine with Fraser Milner Casgrain. I know she's talked very fondly of this project and has noted the work and effort that has gone into creating this bill. I'd like to thank all of the legal practitioners who have worked so long and hard on bringing this bill forward. I'd like to thank the Member for Calgary-Egmont for sponsoring this bill, and I'd note he is also a lawyer and has some familiarity with the Rules of Court and their importance to the whole system of justice that is one of our pillars of justice.

I thank you very much for allowing me to speak on this bill, and I will allow some other members of this august House to speak.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted to stand up and speak to Bill 31, the Rules of Court Statutes Amendment Act, 2009, knowing full well as I speak that I'm aware of what this bill actually does but that when I get into some of the reading I've done, it's all legalese, and I can assure you I am not a lawyer; I'm a nurse. I think what I'm getting from this is that one of the things, which to me is the most important, is that, in fact, it's going to help make things easier for the unrepresented litigant. That's very important. More and more and more people are finding that they can't afford lawyers, and they are trying to do things on their own. Often they would be someone like me, who has never been inside a courtroom, and just the fact that I would go into one would be intimidating in itself. If I would be going in with very little knowledge and having to cut through heaven knows how many documents of red tape, I'm sure that I would perhaps give up and walk away.

Many of these things – I'm assuming I'm right on this – may help going through small claims courts, which is where a lot of really good work is done in terms of mediation. Sometimes it'll go into mediation processes. In the end it helps everyone. It really is a win-win situation. At least they can make that process go a little quicker. As I've said, I really have never been into a courtroom. Clearly, I pay all my traffic fines by mail, so I haven't had to go to court.

One of the things that this bill will incorporate is that the effect of the new bill will be to limit the sitting time durations for the three nonjudicial members and to limit their reappointment to one extra term. I for one have always been a very firm believer in term limits for any organization – and that probably would include politicians – because I do believe that you can get stagnant in your thinking. I think that this will bring in fresh thinking, fresh minds, and someone that would be appointed to this particular position would realize the gravity of the judgments that they make and would accept the challenge and not fall into a rut. Just that part of it alone I think is very good.

I think it has been mentioned already that the changes have been needed for a very long time, and as has been pointed out by my colleague from Calgary-Buffalo, huge numbers of highly qualified people with many, many years of experience have been involved in looking at this and redrafting this bill. I think it's very good, and I'm pleased to be able to stand up and support it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Should we call the question on the bill?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 31 read a second time]

Bill 32 Alberta Public Agencies Governance Act

[Adjourned debate April 28: Mr. Horne]

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, further comments, or are you fine?

Mr. Horne: I'm fine, Mr. Speaker. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and join in the debate on Bill 32, the Alberta Public Agencies Governance Act. This act is being brought forward by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, and I would like to thank him for this valuable piece of legislation. Bill 32 helps to clarify several issues faced by our numerous public agencies. Specifically, the bill will standardize the operation of public agencies by ensuring competence-based recruitment and appointment by making all recruitment information public and also by requiring mandate statements as well as codes of ethics and by legislating periodic operational reviews to ensure efficiency.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta's 250 boards and agencies play a valuable role in the delivery of government services. I'm proud to say that over the past 40 years I've had the honour to serve on several of these boards, ranging from the Edmonton Metropolitan Regional Planning Commission to various development appeal boards and municipal planning commissions, which I recognize are not government boards: the Health Professions Advisory Board, the federal employment insurance Board of Referees, the Métis Settlements Appeal Tribunal as well as several disciplinary tribunals. I feel as though this background has given me a reasonable understanding of the diverse roles and operations of our various agencies as well as agencies in other jurisdictions. Moreover, I believe that the proposals made by the Alberta Public Agencies Governance Act will only serve to improve upon our already effective boards and agencies.

Particularly during this time of economic uncertainty it is imperative that we ensure that these boards are operating efficiently. After all, Alberta's boards and agencies are directly responsible for delivering almost half of this province's operating budgets. To this end, I would like to address the various measures proposed by Bill 32 that directly impact the operation of these boards, specifically mandate statements, codes of conduct, and terms of office.

Firstly, Bill 32 sets out that all public boards and agencies must develop a public document that clearly outlines their mandate. This document is to include information regarding roles and responsibilities, recruitment, and training as well as the organizational structure. All of this information is to be made public and would help to ensure that our public agencies operate in a competency-based manner that best benefits Albertans.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, Bill 32 proposes to require a code of conduct for each public agency. This code of conduct will require board members to disclose any potential conflicts of interest and require all members to carry out their duties impartially. It is important to note that currently many public agencies in Alberta have codes of conduct. Bill 32 would simply standardize these across the board.

Finally, Bill 32 would set clear guidelines for terms of office. Currently there is a mix of restrictions in place that would limit the length of time a person could serve on a public agency. With Bill 32 in place, terms of service for adjudicative agencies would be set at 12 years, and all other agencies would be set at 10 years. This restriction will ensure that there is a dynamic balance between new and experienced board members.

Mr. Speaker, it's also important to look at how Bill 32 would affect the role of the various ministers when dealing with public agencies. Bill 32 would give the correlating minister the ability to set policies for public agencies that they must follow. This will dramatically improve service delivery, particularly in cases where cross-governmental policies involve several agencies. With this regulation in place, a minister would be able to ensure that all of Alberta's public agencies are working in a co-ordinated effort towards a shared goal. Without this level of ministerial oversight it would be difficult to co-ordinate agencies with overlapping mandates. These policy-making powers also help to promote increased accountability in both government and public agencies.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

It is important to note that while allowing the minister to set policies for public agencies is needed, there need to be some restrictions in place, specifically with respect to a public agency's adjudicative functions. Adjudicative bodies make legal rulings on cases that do not necessarily need to go through the court system. Furthermore, they can take pressure off the courts by adjudicating disputes requiring specialized knowledge. Mr. Speaker, as in the court system, it is imperative that they remain impartial, independent, and removed from influence. To this end, Bill 32 proposes to place limitations on the policy-making powers of ministers when they interfere with the body's adjudicative functions.

Mr. Speaker, the benefits of transparency, accountability, and efficiency proposed by Bill 32 are clear. Bill 32 will help to not only recognize the valuable contributions of our public agencies but serve to improve upon their already effective operating systems. The creation of standardized public mandate statements, codes of ethics, and term limits will serve to promote public confidence through transparency while the policy-making decisions given to ministers will ensure effective co-operation of committees with overlapping mandates.

It's interesting, Mr. Speaker, that just as I was sitting here this afternoon, I happened to get on my desk an Alberta Ombudsman report entitled Prescription for Fairness. I'd like to just make a few quotations from it that are relevant to this issue. Perhaps to bring it into context, this Ombudsman report deals with some problems with a particular government agency. It indicates:

Decision letters issued by the Appeal Panel should document its authority to hear the appeal, the names of the members who participated in the decision, identification of the issue, conflicts of interest, all of the material considered in the decision, its findings of fact, how it weighed the evidence, and how it applied the legislative criteria.

I would suggest that those are standard procedures for many public agencies. Unfortunately, in this particular case those guidelines do not appear to have been followed in the Ombudsman's review.

The Ombudsman went on to make three recommendations. Actually, they made more than three, but I would summarize with only three.

Regarding management of the Appeal Panel, the Ombudsman recommends:

- Recruitment of members follows an open and transparent process, and the interview panel include a member of the Appeal Panel.
- New members receive orientation and training opportunities.
- The Appeal Panel procedural binder be reviewed and updated on a regular basis.

Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that that's exactly what this bill is all about, and I think the Ombudsman's report reinforces the need for such a statute.

Just in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to again thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford for bringing forward this well-thought-out bill and would encourage all members to join with me in support of Bill 32. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much. It is a pleasure to participate in the discussion this afternoon on Bill 32, the Alberta Public Agencies Governance Act. This certainly will codify a framework and processes that have been developed to improve the management accountability of Alberta's agencies, boards, and commissions, and we know there are quite a few of them. I believe the hon. member mentioned that there are 250. Some individuals may not recognize, many taxpayers would not recognize that these bodies deal with about 50 per cent of the provincial budget, certainly showing the importance of the issue. There has been a trend by this government to download or give each one of these agencies, boards, and commissions more responsibilities, more control, and I would say that it is a conscious decision to reduce the importance of this Legislative Assembly.

Now, the hon. minister of health over there, Mr. Speaker, is shaking his head. [interjection] I didn't hear a rattle, no, hon. member.

I certainly was astonished when I was provided a copy of the memorandum of understanding from last summer which set up – about this time last year, it was in the month of May, near the end of May actually – the Alberta Health Services Board. The hon. minister of health signed it, as did I believe it was Paddy Meade and another individual, Mr. Hughes. When they signed that agreement, I was astonished that the legislative authority that was cited for that agreement included the agencies governance framework document. It was the first time I've seen a framework of this nature quoted as a legislative authority to set up this memorandum of understanding, which of course was the document that allowed the regional health authorities to be dismantled or fired and the Alberta Health Services Board to be set up.

I don't know how that happened, but certainly Bill 32, if it becomes law, will in effect make this framework a statute of the province. I'm still puzzled as to how a memorandum of understanding as the one I described earlier, the public agencies governance framework, could be used and cited as an authority. Now, perhaps the minister of health will eventually participate in debate and enlighten the House on why this framework or how this framework could be used in that manner, but it was.

When we look at the whole issue around agencies, boards, and commissions, there certainly are issues. We look at the commission that was struck. I believe it had the former chair of the EUB, Mr. McCrank, involved and two other individuals. They reported. The report certainly is of interest. But this bill, Mr. Speaker, Bill 32, will provide the legislative framework that hopefully will improve transparency and accountability. We know that this government lacks transparency and certainly lacks accountability. This bill will also promote excellence in the governance of the province's agencies, boards, and commissions.

Now, this bill also, as I understand it, builds upon the work done by the task force that I spoke about just a minute ago. This task force made 15 recommendations to ensure that the right policies and best practices are in place for all of these agencies, boards, and commissions, and of course they have to deliver their mandates. They get their direction or their marching orders from guess who?

The task force's first recommendation was the introduction of legislation to provide to agencies governance frameworks and standards reflecting the importance of all of these agencies. Now, we saw in February of 2008 that the government released its public agencies governance framework that I referred to earlier. It certainly elaborated on the recommendations of the task force. I notice that implementation of the public agencies governance framework is under way, as I said earlier, in all government departments, including Health and Wellness, regardless of the drafting of Bill 32.

When we look at this legislative framework and we look at some of the issues that surround the government's reliance on agencies, boards, and commissions, we should note again another section of the Auditor General's report – the Auditor is doing a lot of fine work – and I'm referencing the report from October 2008. The Auditor had a lot to say and a lot to report on chief executive officer selection, evaluation, and compensation, particularly regarding board governance. When we look at the agencies, boards, and commissions and how this government relies on them, it's a very important sector not to have legislation governing their activities. We can read the AG's comments and his recommendations. So this bill certainly is necessary.

The bill does put in place the principles that ministers are responsible for the agencies, boards, and commissions under their ministry and therefore allows us on this side of the House to hold the government to account if the agencies, boards, and commissions fail. I can just imagine some day in question period the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall asking a question about one of the agencies, boards, and commissions that would be in Service Alberta. Now, that would include the Alberta Residential Tenancies Advisory Committee, the Fair Trading Act appeal boards, the Cemeteries Act appeal boards, the Funeral Services Act appeal boards, or one that everyone in this province has heard about, the Utilities Consumer Advocate Governance Advisory Board.

Mr. Mason: Wow.

Mr. MacDonald: Wow is right. That's a wow with a capital W.

Mr. Mason: And they say we've got too much government.

Mr. MacDonald: And they say we've got too much government. They don't read their own reports, hon. member. Certainly, we have a big government. We have a big, bloated government here in this province. One only has to look at the budget to realize that. [interjection] I'm sorry, hon. Minister of Transportation?

Mr. Ouellette: For a little, wee opposition it would look that way.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. The opposition is little, but we get by. We certainly get by.

Those would be the agencies, boards, and commissions under Service Alberta that the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall would look at.

Certainly, with the Utilities Consumer Advocate there would be a lot of work to do there. When we look at the number of issues that surround energy deregulation, electricity deregulation, natural gas deregulation, I don't know how the hon. member gets time to spend with his family because that outfit certainly is very busy. Now, what's going to happen? How many complaints are we going to see? How is that advisory board going to work? How is all this going to be set up, Mr. Speaker?

When ratepayers get stuck with an additional $30 to $35 a month on their bills to pay for the transmission upgrades, they're going to be scratching their heads, wondering: "What is this amount on my bill? How did that get there?" They're going to say: "Not another hit for energy deregulation. Have I not already paid enough for the government's mistake? Have I not already paid for the last decade for the government's mistake with high power bills?" Yet they'll be hit with this monthly bill, and the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall will have to deal with that through Service Alberta, through the Utilities Consumer Advocate Governance Advisory Board.

Now, we know who appoints the members to that advisory board – obviously, the government through order in council – who these individuals are, how they will be evaluated, how they will be compensated. The Auditor General has some good, sound ideas on how all this should work, but does the government, and will the government follow that?

That would only be one example.

Now, when we look at the framework, Mr. Speaker, that I spoke about earlier that had been developed and was issued publicly in February of last year, we know how important that was. It was of course used to shape some of the important changes to government structures already, in particular – and I referred to that earlier – Alberta Health Services. We know from the Ethics Commissioner's investigation of the appointment of Paddy Meade to the Alberta Health Services Board from Alberta Health what went on there. She's no longer employed there. We have no idea what happened – I'll be the last to know – but maybe the minister of health through the course of debate can enlighten not only this Assembly but taxpayers.

Mr. Mason: If they told you, you'd only spread fear.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, taxpayers, hon. member, may shudder at the cost of this. You know, these appointments were made, and less than a year later, for obvious reasons, there was dissatisfaction, and respective parties parted company. But I don't want to be accused of, you know, getting off topic here. I really want to stick to Bill 32, hon. member.

This investigation was requested to be conducted by the Ethics Commissioner. It was done, and it was done on the grounds that it appeared to contradict the Conflicts of Interest Amendment Act, 2007, public service postemployment restriction. Now, in his ruling on the matter the Ethics Commissioner quoted extensively from the task force report as well as the agencies governance framework, which is the basic blueprint of this bill. It's astonishing that these documents were already shaping and forming government practice, so this comes to the point where we should ask a few questions about that. Hopefully, they can be addressed or answered in the course of debate.

What kind of binding power has the agencies governance framework had so far? That, again, is referenced in my opening remarks whenever we were discussing this. Where, legislatively speaking, does it draw its power from, and why is the government legislating this if the framework is already determining policy and actions? So, essentially, that question is: why is it necessary to have Bill 32 as we see it before the Assembly?

Now, in undertaking this review, Alberta was following a number of other provinces that had looked at the same issue of agencies, boards, and commissions and their accountability... [Mr. MacDonald's speaking time expired] We'll get to this more in committee, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of comments or questions. The leader of the third party on this.

Mr. Mason: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to continue because I was hanging on his every word and very much trying to anticipate where this is going to go. You know, just to be cut off in the middle of grand thought like that I think is a shame. I'd like to hear the rest of it.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much. I will continue because the hon. member is right. This is quite important because not only is Alberta looking at accountability issues and governance issues around agencies, boards, and commissions; British Columbia, it should be noted, has the Crown Agencies Secretariat and a shareholder expectations manual that governs agencies, boards, and commissions there.

Now, the question around that, of course, would be – and this relates around TILMA – do the provisions of TILMA, as we know them, require a harmonization of Alberta's and British Columbia's rules governing agencies, boards, and commissions? Now, other provinces as well have rules, regulations, and best practices governing their agencies, boards, and commissions. Of course, Ontario does. New Brunswick does. In fact, I would urge all hon. members of this Assembly to have a look at the Canadian Comprehensive Auditing Foundation, the CCAF. There is an article written by Mr. Ken Stewart, Trends in Crown Agency Accountability Arrangements. This is an excellent article for those who are interested in these matters.

Four other provinces, hon. member – Ontario, B.C., Saskatchewan, and New Brunswick – have specific standing committees of the Legislature to review Crown corporations. Now, we in this Assembly have or are developing a process with the Public Accounts Committee, where on occasion we see for a two-hour period an agency, a board, or a commission. In the past we have looked at the Treasury Branches, we have looked at some school boards, we have looked at some regional health authorities, so there is no reason why we in this province could not bring before in a timely fashion any number of any one of these agencies, boards, or commissions that are listed.

Now, would it be in the public interest to bring, for instance, from the Finance and Enterprise department the Automobile Insurance Rate Board before Public Accounts, the Capital Finance Authority, maybe the Public Service Pension Plan Board? Maybe we could have a look at the Utilities Consumer Advocate Governance Advisory Board. Travel Alberta: that's a new outfit just getting fired up over there, and I hope it's not in time for the Winter Olympics in Vancouver, speaking of British Columbia. I certainly hope there's going to be more to it than that.

We can go through each and every ministry, and we can see the agencies, the boards, and commissions that are outlined there, so that would be how we're starting to deal with it here, through the Public Accounts process. Is that good enough? I don't think so. I think more could be done, and maybe here we could have the policy field committees. There's a lot of work to do. There are 250 agencies, boards, and commissions. Maybe the five standing policy field committees could have a look on occasion at some of those entities. I think that would be a good step. Perhaps we can have an amendment later on to have a look at that. Maybe we can discuss that.

When we look at Ontario, B.C., Saskatchewan, and New Brunswick with their specific standing committees, that's how they're doing it. This is an interesting issue to test the government's commitment to public accountability. Will the government do the same as other provinces?

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Does any other hon. member wish to speak on the bill? Hon. leader of the third party, do you wish to speak on the bill?

Mr. Mason: Yes, I do. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to at least get a start at this because this is an important point, an important issue for us, that we have so many agencies, and this act is something that will, you know, govern how this whole thing is handled. It's interesting to ask about how many agencies actually there are because in the original press release that announced the creation of the task force, it said that there were more than 130 agencies, boards, and commissions in the province. But when the release that accompanied the introduction of the bill came out, it said that there were now 250 agencies, boards, and commissions affected by the act. My question is: is this an error, or have we really seen almost a doubling of the agencies, boards, and commissions in this province in that period of time? I'm just curious.

I know the government has grown rapidly, and I know they've got a lot of folks over there to keep busy, but one of the ways not to keep them busy, Mr. Speaker, in my view, is to appoint MLAs to these boards and commissions. That was in fact one of the recommendations that came forward in the task force. There were 15 key recommendations, and a lot of those were good ones. "Establish a more rigorous process for the establishment of agencies." Well, if they've shot up since 2007 to almost double, they haven't followed that one.

A second one was to review agency mandates in order to ensure their mandate remains relevant. That's good if they do it.

"Use... non-partisan and competence-based appointment process for the appointment of directors." Mr. Speaker, this is perhaps one of the most important recommendations of all from the task force, that these appointments should be based on merit, and they should be nonpartisan in nature.

5:30

You know, I know there are a lot of Conservatives in Alberta. I've come to grips with that fact. I've come to the realization that it's just part of reality, like death and taxes, that you have to accept. Nevertheless, I'm absolutely amazed at how many worthy Conservatives the government can find to appoint to the burgeoning numbers of agencies, boards, and commissions that they do appoint and how few people there are in this province that are qualified from any other political persuasion. It is really something that surprises me.

I think this is an important one, and I'll give the government a little credit here: recognize the diversity of the population and recruit to that end. I think that if they do that, we're going to see a much more representative group of government-appointed organizations.

Another recommendation is to implement fixed terms for directors, which may be renewed to a maximum of 10 consecutive years. It does say that the minister has the power to waive this if he or she feels that it would be beneficial to the agency. I think, Mr. Speaker, that we need a little more control than just leaving it up to the minister to waive that. I think 10 years is a long time. I think for some it's 12 years.

Evaluating the board and director performance and making public the remuneration for directors and CEOs: these are all good things.

Now, all of these recommendations were accepted by the government except for one, the task force recommendation that the government "should not appoint elected or senior government officials to the governing bodies of agencies." The government has said that they would modify this recommendation. Their proposed action said, "Due to the nature of some boards, elected or senior officials will be appointed when their input is important for the agency to achieve its mandate." In other words, Mr. Speaker, the government has left themselves a huge loophole. They put the rule in there. They accepted the recommendation, or something like the recommendation, but they've just let themselves have a loophole they can use whenever they want. You know, why do you even have the rule if the government doesn't have to follow it?

I think that this legislation makes it clear that public agencies which perform adjudicative functions are exempt from some aspects of the act. Those are mainly the sections that require information to be made public. You know, once again there's an opportunity there for the government to provide exemptions when it comes to making information public. Now, there might be some cases where that's justifiable, but, Mr. Speaker, it's well known in this province that this is the most secretive government in Canada. We're constantly pressed to try and put greater requirements on this government to provide information that otherwise would be made public in almost any other province.

The government has provided itself with enormous numbers of loopholes to restrict information from the public. One of the main ones that they've done is to call something advice to the minister, and then it's exempt. In other places it wouldn't be exempt under freedom of information legislation. Government briefing books and so on are all exempt. Pretty much anything the government doesn't want to release it doesn't have to. Now we've got something here that provides additional exemptions from the sections that require information to be made public.

Personal information needs to be protected, Mr. Speaker, and I think there's a case for legal advice and things to do with personnel matters and so on, but otherwise it is the public's information, collected by the government on their behalf with their money, and it ought to be available.

Mr. Speaker, if the goal was accountability and good governance, the government should have accepted the recommendation that no elected official or senior official would be appointed to the governing body of agencies or boards. Now, I'll give you an example. We had the Ministry of Energy – the deputy and his assistant deputy ministers and so on – before the Public Accounts Committee just a couple of weeks ago. There's an appointed body, a body that deals with energy policy, and it includes stakeholders and so on. The assistant deputy minister is on it, the head of the ERCB, and so on.

Now, that body has recently made some public recommendations that are very favourable to nuclear power in this province. You know, I asked the question of the deputy minister whether or not it was appropriate to have those government officials sitting on a body that's now making recommendations and pronouncements with respect to nuclear power. We all know and the Minister of Energy says repeatedly that the government actually has no position on nuclear power. They may produce reports that are kind of weighted in favour of nuclear power and paint wind power as something that's very dangerous, but they officially have no position on nuclear power. There again, I think there's potential for people to misinterpret the government's good intentions because they have placed their senior officials on a body that is actually in a very real way advocating for nuclear power.

I wonder about the government's statement that this legislation will improve the accountability and transparency of agencies because based on the new framework, agencies are accountable to the responsible minister, and the minister is accountable to the House and to the public. We've seen many cases where the ministers are not being accountable to the public. We've seen, for example, in Children and Youth Services that the advocate failed to table annual reports for three years. So I question, then, whether or not the provision that requires public agencies to be reviewed at least every seven years is a bit of a long time. That's a long time to see if an agency is performing their duties properly and appropriately.

Now, I want to come back to the question of the length of appointments. The act provides that no person shall be appointed as a member for longer than 12 consecutive years if empowered to do an adjudicative function or 10 years in another case. However, after section 14(2) it states that if the minister feels it's necessary to ensure effectiveness of the operation, then the term limit can be waived. I want to repeat my concern that the minister can waive this. The government puts rules and then paints giant escape clauses that render the rules almost irrelevant.

After setting out the steps on how public agencies and the government will become more transparent and accountable, they attach regulations at the end which basically say that the Lieutenant Governor in Council can make regulations that could change pretty much every provision of the act. Here it is again, Mr. Speaker. The government says: "Well, we've got all of these provisions, but we've given ourselves this huge loophole. We can actually make regulations to change the act."

Now, one of the positive changes that the act makes is to ensure that appointments and recruitments of members are to be competency based and that this process will be open and transparent by making information about the recruitment public. The second part of this open and transparent recruitment strategy is that reappointments will only be allowed if a member continues to meet the requirements of the position. I want to just indicate that those are fine principles and fine words, but the question really is in its implementation and in its interpretation. I wish I had more confidence it would be interpreted in the spirit in which it is written.

I want to raise some specific concerns about the local authorities pension plan and my concern that this act may negatively impact their ability to operate independently. Section 3 requires that all public agencies develop a mandate and roles document that is made jointly with the responsible minister and the agency. I think one of the concerns here is that there's no room for stakeholders to develop the document or involve themselves in the periodic review that's set up by section 19. That's something I'd hope to hear back on in later debate.

Section 10 states that the minister can set policies and force the public agency to follow them, and this affects the ability of the LAPP to function independently.

Section 12 of the act says that each agency must "participate with its responsible Minister in setting its long-term objectives and short-term targets." Again, I think we need to raise the issue that there appears to be no room for stakeholders to be part of that decision-making process.

Going on to section 13, where it states that a member must be recruited based on the extent to which the person possesses the identified skills, knowledge, experience, or attributes that the agency identifies before selecting the person. You know, I wonder if this would limit the ability of the LAPP stakeholders to nominate people that they want for the board.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of comment and question. The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to hear perhaps a little bit more elaboration on the business of the appointing and the time frames. I've always felt that when you have staggered appointments to boards – and I believe they shouldn't be longer than 10 years – you also have a consistency because you don't lose that board knowledge that goes when you clear out a board. Perhaps the member would like to make some comments on those thoughts.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. Mason: Thank you. Yes, I would, Mr. Speaker, because we do have a little bit of experience with that, as does my colleague, both of us having served on municipal councils in cities in this province. It was always a matter of trying to find the right balance. We had in the city of Edmonton, basically, a rule that you couldn't serve more than six consecutive years in any position. I agree with her that having staggered appointments is also very important. You need to strike the balance between experience on the one hand and fresh blood on the other. Fresh blood, new blood, young blood: what is it?

Ms Pastoor: New thinking.

Mr. Mason: Yeah. New people coming on with new ideas and striking that balance, which is very important. I know from some of the work we did with respect to the governance of EPCOR that board reviews are very important, and we always did that according to certain criteria and in conjunction with the chairman of the board, and there was succession planning. There was very much always a plan to refresh the people who were serving on the board of EPCOR and, in fact, on some other boards and agencies. But in a big company like EPCOR, of course, it was well developed and very, very important. I want to just say, if I could, that there's a real concern, going back to the local authorities pension plan, that this bill undermines the governance and reduces the ability of the board of the LAPP to achieve independence. I think that it will permanently restrict the role of stakeholders and will place the direction, goals, and even the continued existence of the plan in the hands of the minister.

So, Mr. Speaker, what else really is new? In addition to this being the most secretive government in Canada, it's also emerging as one of the most centralized, bringing more and more things under direct political control as opposed to having local communities, local stakeholders, and local citizens playing a role in the governance process. I think that this is really not something that is to the benefit of the people of this province.

It really contradicts the tradition, I think, of the Conservative Party in many respects, which tended to talk about the importance of local communities and so on. We've seen that that trend has been reversed. It no longer seems to be the direction of the government. A highly centralized sort of planning, growth of state power, more secrecy: these are things that Conservatives used to be against, but now it seems that this is part of the direction of this government, very much so, and I think something that is deplorable. We need more democracy, not less. We need more community involvement, grassroots involvement, not less, in the governance of our province.

You know, I was there when the regional planning commissions were wrapped up by Steve West, one of the first major steps to destroy local decision-making and planning. If you contrast that . . . [interjection] Yes, it was gone.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Does any other hon. member wish to speak on the bill?

Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 32 read a second time]

Bill 35

Gas Utilities Amendment Act, 2009

[Adjourned debate April 28: Mr. McFarland]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on the bill.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, the Gas Utilities Amendment Act at first blush is just a routine housekeeping piece of legislation. Certainly, we look at the hon. Member for Little Bow's efforts with this bill. We look at the highlights of this legislation, and we see where it reflects the transfer of regulatory control of the TransCanada-NOVA Gas Alberta system from provincial oversight to the federal National Energy Board. We look at the National Energy Board, and we look at the old system. Many people would not recognize that the National Energy Board is centred in Calgary. They do a lot of good, sound research down there. They put out a lot of very interesting reports, whether it's on natural gas, whether it's on exports of petroleum or petroleum-related projects. They can give quite an overview of the energy industry not only here in Alberta but in B.C., Saskatchewan, and Manitoba.

The National Energy Board also does a lot of work on electricity: electricity transmission and electricity exports. According to the hon. Member for Little Bow when this bill was moved and adjourned at second reading, going back not quite a month, "This is an administrative act to give legislative authority to a ruling of the National Energy Board. It's a small and minor amendment." As most members would see if they were to have a look at the legislation. Now, this is what I've been told. We were also led to . . . [interjection] Thank you, Mr. Speaker, because I believe the Minister of Energy was complaining that he couldn't hear me.

Mr. Knight: No. I put my hearing aids in. I can hear you well now.

Mr. MacDonald: Oh, okay. Pardon me.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we had quite an overview of Bill 35 from the hon. Member for Little Bow, but when we're looking at the National Energy Board and the legislative authority, we need to always remember the quasi-judicial ruling and the concern with the NOVA Gas Transmission pipeline owned by TransCanada PipeLines. The ruling was to accept an application by TransCanada to make this pipeline subject to federal regulation. We always have issues with federal regulations in this House.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood certainly pointed out, I thought quite effectively, earlier in debate on Bill 32 that we forget just how far-reaching administratively this government is and has grown to become. We only have to have a look at all the agencies, boards, and commissions. This, as I understand it, is a transfer to the federal regulatory body. The hon. Member for Little Bow assured the House that Albertans who've followed the history of oil and gas development will recall the establishment and subsequent growth of the Alberta Gas Trunk Line. Of course, it's over 50 years old. This pipeline system was the underground transmission system that facilitated the exploration and development of natural gas fields across Alberta. Over the decades the people involved, the hon. member assures us, have become quite familiar with the regulatory process. Some agree with it; some do not.

The hon. member correctly goes on and outlines many things in this bill. Certainly, one of the outcomes that we should be cognizant of is that given the shifts in regulatory controls that have happened over the years towards the federal system, shifts that have happened in co-ordination with more interconnected natural gas systems not only to other provinces but to many of the lower 48 states, the impact of this bill will probably be relatively small.

There are main concerns, and they are that we have to ensure that landowners don't suffer because of the federal regulations and how burdensome they are. We know that Alberta's natural gas liquids and by-products industry, which is a significant industry, is certainly in some cases, not all – and I'm referencing bitumen – significant value added to this province. We have to make sure that that does not suffer, and I am sort of confident from reading the remarks of the hon. Member for Little Bow that that won't happen, but we have to be careful about regulatory control here.

Now, I don't think that there is a real reason to think that either of these issues will come true. The National Energy Board has already addressed, as far as I know, some of the landowners' concerns and has processes in place for additional resolution. With Alberta at the centre of the growing natural gas production in the Horn basin in northeastern B.C. – also, I think, Mr. Speaker, there will be significant natural gas exploration and production in Canada's north as well – the provincial industry here, hopefully, will be well located to take advantage of the liquids and the by-products that were essentially the building block of our economic prosperity around the petrochemical industry. There appears to be no significant legal reason for Alberta to have regulatory control over this Alberta system anymore given its current location at the centre of a national and even an international system of natural gas transmission, which we discussed earlier. Providing landowners are treated properly by the National Energy Board and Alberta's petrochemical industry has the feedstock necessary, these changes should not have any impact, hopefully.

When we look at some of the issues that landowners have, particularly whenever pipelines either cross or the right-of-way is actually on their property for a significant length, the compensation that those landowners receive and what they should get, some of them are very, very upset that they get so little, if anything. If you look at some of the oil- and gas-producing states in America, if you put a pipeline on someone's property, you pay and you pay annually.

So there are some differences that need to be worked out, but certainly, Mr. Speaker, when we look at this bill and we look at the changes that are proposed, we've got to remember that our Alberta pipeline system in reference to this bill is over 23,000 kilometres long. It's a network that stretches to most parts of the province. The Alberta system started, again, in 1954. It was established by this Legislature and Premier Manning, and of course it was a partnership with the industry. Over time the company added multiple assets directly connected to its core gas distribution business such as chemicals and plastics from the natural gas liquids and others. In 1980 it became NOVA, a Crown corporation, and over time many of the other businesses were spun off, particularly in the recessionary periods in the '80s and '90s. In 1998 the core Alberta system business was taken over by TransCanada.

Alberta is becoming, as I said, less monolithic when it comes to natural gas production in western Canada. We look at the gas production in B.C., in the north. The Alberta system is almost a flow through. It's like an expressway. But in shipping this gas, we have to be careful. We had a discussion years ago in this Assembly about the Alliance line and the natural gas liquids that are in that line; they're whistling through just the other side of Fort Saskatchewan on to a location south of Chicago. Mr. Speaker, we could look at . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt you. It's now 6 o'clock. The Assembly stands adjourned and will continue at 7:30 tonight.

The Deputy Speaker: Please be seated.

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Cao in the chair]

The Chair: I would like to call the committee to order.

Bill 44 Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Amendment Act, 2009

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Minister of Culture and Community Spirit.

Mr. Blackett: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Alberta's human rights legislation has not been updated for 13 years, since 1996. While 88 per cent of Albertans have said that they feel protected by our human rights legislation and system, there was a strong recognition that the legislation needed to be updated. In taking consideration of what updates were needed, government took note of that strong support.

But we need to bring forward changes that reflect our diverse 21st century society with a made-in-Alberta human rights law to continue to position Alberta as a safe and welcoming province, make the human rights processes more transparent to Albertans through the establishment of tribunals rather than panels, reflect the Supreme Court decision on inclusion of sexual orientation to acknowledge that we are a tolerant society, remove system bottlenecks which have slowed the resolution of complaints, and recognize that Albertans feel strongly about the rights of parents to make decisions regarding the education of their children, as existing School Act policies demonstrate. These changes as well as appointing a new chief commissioner with a judicial background and making administrative improvements will restore Albertans' confidence in the Human Rights Commission. It will restore the confidence that their complaints will be dealt with respectfully, effectively, and expeditiously by the commission.

Mr. Chairman, Bill 44 strikes the right balance on a variety of complex and difficult issues. I believe that it will improve our province's human rights system in the areas that matter most. Since becoming minister, I've heard a number of issues raised by Albertans, commission staff, former commissioners, and others, and we have addressed them in the following ways.

First of all, section 2 of the amending act amends the name of the act to be the Alberta Human Rights Act. Commissioners, staff, the Sheldon Chumir foundation, and others recommended deleting citizenship from the name of the act. The new name clarifies that the purpose of the legislation is indeed human rights.

In section 3 of the amending act and throughout we are adding sexual orientation into the act. Sexual orientation has been a protected area in Alberta for over a decade. Writing it in makes the legislation consistent with judicial decisions and was recommended by the Alberta commissioners and others.

We've also heard views regarding removing the section on hatred in publications currently in the existing legislation in section 3. We listened to all concerns and decided to retain that section so that Alberta's human rights legislation balances freedom of speech with our responsibility to others. Although we as a caucus and a government believe in freedom of speech, we also feel the need to protect those who are vulnerable to discrimination with respect to employment, accommodation, and access to services as our primary responsibility. Until we can be assured that the Criminal Code of Canada would ensure protection for those, we have to err on the side of those that we are charged to protect.

It is important to emphasize that the commission operates independently of government. The commission interprets Alberta's human rights legislation and decides which cases to pursue and those not to pursue. Government's role is to help ensure that the qualifications we use to hire our chief commissioner and commissioners include an ability to deal with complex human rights cases.

Section 11.1 would give parents the right to receive notice and, if they choose, exempt their child from courses of study, educational programs or instructional materials, or instruction or exercises that deal explicitly with religion, human sexuality, or sexual orientation. The proposed amendments will simply consolidate into law the rights that parents or guardians already have concerning the education of their children throughout a combination of legislation and education policy. However, the bill does not provide the right to exemption from instruction in any additional curriculum areas.

Mr. Chairman, I had meetings with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud, our Minister of Education, and the Alberta Teachers' Association on May 4. We also had meetings with the Alberta School Boards Association and the Alberta School Councils' Association on May 12. I had a meeting with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre on May 5. At each of these meetings we promised to consider changing the wording of this section to make the intention very clear.

Bill 44 is being amended to clarify that parental rights do not include withdrawing children from spontaneous discussions of religion, human sexuality, or sexual orientation that may arise during everyday classroom teaching. The exact wording of the amendment is: Section 9 is amended in the new section 11.1, (a) in subsection (1) by striking out "explicitly with religion, sexuality or sexual orientation" and substituting "primarily . . .

The Chair: Hon. minister, are you introducing the amendment?

Mr. Blackett: Yes.

The Chair: You're talking about the amendment you're bringing in, not the bill, right?

Mr. Blackett: I was talking about the bill, and I was talking about the amendment. Do you want to deal with the amendment afterwards?

The Chair: You have to introduce an amendment; then you talk about it.

Mr. Blackett: Okay. Then I will do that, sir. Sorry.

The Chair: Hon. minister, because you introduced an amendment, the page needs to distribute it before you continue on.

Mr. Blackett: Okay. My apologies.

Mr. Chairman, can I continue reading it, or do I have to wait till after it's distributed?

The Chair: Wait until the members have got the amendment in their hands.

The amendment moved by the minister is now known as amendment A1.

Minister, please continue on amendment A1.

Mr. Blackett: Okay. Mr. Chairman, the exact wording of the amendment is: Section 9 is amended in the new section 11.1, (a) in subsection (1) by striking out “explicitly with religion, sexuality or sexual orientation” and substituting “primarily and explicitly with religion, human sexuality or sexual orientation”; (b) by adding the following after subsection (2):

(3) This section does not apply to incidental or indirect references to religion, religious themes, human sexuality or sexual orientation in a course of study, educational program, instruction or exercises or in the use of instructional materials.

Bill 44 has absolutely nothing to do with parents’ religious beliefs or teachable moments, those conversations that can arise in a classroom but are not directly tied to the curriculum. It’s important to note that there are very few requests to exempt students from discussions on human sexuality. School boards have an excellent system to address parent concerns, and we respect that process.

I’ll stop there right now.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Following on the precedents of the House and referencing Beauchesne, I think it’s 688, I would request that the government amendments be severed for the purpose of voting.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: That should be allowed for separate voting. Could you repeat which parts to separate out?

Ms Blakeman: Into A and B. It looks to me like there are two sections, so it would be two votes, section A and section B.

The Chair: Okay. Do you want to debate the proposed amendment as a whole package and vote on each or debate separately?

Ms Blakeman: I’m fine with debating it in its entirety and voting it separately.

The Chair: All right. We shall proceed along that line, debate entirely and vote separately, A and B.

Ms Blakeman: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I will admit that I’m not usually at a disadvantage in this House, but I certainly find myself at a disadvantage tonight. We have not seen these amendments, and now I am up debating them without even having been able to read them. This is somewhat of a superhuman effort on my part, but I will do my best to speed-read.

Okay. I’ve had an indication that my plea has been answered. At this point I would like to move adjournment of this debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 52

Health Information Amendment Act, 2009

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. Yesterday in the House I tabled the report of the Standing Committee on Health with respect to Bill 52, which was referred to the committee after second reading. There are a number of amendments contained in the committee’s report, and I would appreciate the opportunity to distribute those now to members.

The Chair: The amendment introduced by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford shall now be known as A1.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, please continue on A1.

Ms Blakeman: I’m sorry. Could I ask that these amendments be severed for the purposes of voting, please, so that they would be severed into sections A, B, C, and D? I am happy to have us debate this as a whole, but I would like them voted in four separate votes corresponding with A, B, C, and D.

The Chair: Yes. The amendment shall now be debated as a whole but voted on separately, in sections.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, please continue on A1.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I would like to make a few remarks. I will address all the amendments since we’re debating them as a whole. I don’t propose to go through the amendments in much detail. They were distributed to members yesterday as part of the standing committee’s report. Throughout my comments I will make reference to particular amendments, and then perhaps if there are questions, I can help to address those later in the debate.

Mr. Chairman, first of all, I appreciate the opportunity to speak to you about Bill 52, the Health Information Amendment Act, 2009, and would like to once again express my gratitude to my colleagues on the Standing Committee on Health for their considerable efforts to improve Bill 52. I think the amendments before us tonight are a testament to the committee’s hard work over this session and the previous session of this Legislature.

The Health Information Amendment Act was referred for further review to the Standing Committee on Health on November 27, 2008, after second reading. Over the past five months, Mr. Chair, the committee has held a series of public meetings totalling more than 20 hours of review on this bill. As part of the review process the committee sought input from stakeholders and the public. The committee listened to 11 presentations and received a total of 59 written submissions.

Based on the feedback received, the committee developed a series of recommendations for amendments to Bill 52, which are now before Committee of the Whole. The recommendations are contained in the committee’s report, as I’ve mentioned. I’d like to take a few minutes now to highlight the key issues that were identified before our committee and to outline our specific recommendations to address them.

The first major issue, Mr. Chairman, relates to a patient’s right to know who has accessed their personal health information and for what purpose. Section 41 of the Health Information Act currently requires custodians to maintain detailed logs of all disclosures of health information, and in the proposed part 5.1 of Bill 52 all interaction with the Alberta electronic health record, including making the information accessible through this resource, is defined as a use of that information. Therefore, the existing disclosure-related logging requirement would not apply to the use of information in the Alberta electronic health record context.

In response to many concerns raised on this issue, Mr. Chair, the committee is recommending an amendment to Bill 52 that requires custodians to maintain access logs for Alberta electronic health record use. Those amendments can be found in part B of the amendments that were just distributed.

The second major issue, Mr. Chair, that we dealt with related to stakeholder concerns about protecting the privacy and confidentiality of individuals' health information. The first concern, which is addressed in part A of amendment A1, involves section 46 of the Health Information Act, which enables the minister to request health information from other custodians. If the requirements of that provision are met, those custodians must provide that information to the minister.

Stakeholders expressed concern about the proposed deletion in Bill 52 of the minister's requirement to prepare a privacy impact assessment and to submit it to the office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner for review and comment when requesting information from other custodians. In response, the committee is proposing to reinstate the requirement for privacy impact assessments.

The second concern stakeholders raised relates to the expressed wishes of patients in the context of the Alberta electronic health record. This, Mr. Chair, is dealt with in part B, clause (c) of amendment A1. Individual consent is not required to disclose information to other custodians in numerous situations, including via the electronic health record. However, section 58(2) of the Health Information Act currently requires custodians to consider individuals' expressed wishes when deciding how much health information to disclose.

As I indicated earlier, in the proposed part 5.1 of Bill 52 all interaction with the Alberta electronic health record is defined as use by this bill. Therefore, the existing expressed wishes requirement in section 58(2) of the Health Information Act would not apply to use of information via the electronic health record. The concept of expressed wishes is tied closely to masking, Mr. Chair, and masking is not defined or otherwise referred to in the existing Health Information Act or in Bill 52. Masking is sanctioned by the office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner and used by the department in its role as information manager of the Alberta electronic health record to prevent information from being seen by other custodians attempting to access information via the electronic health record.

Custodians can unmask information if they need the information to provide treatment and care to patients, but it should be noted that masking is the current tool used to give effect to a person's expressed wishes. If in the future, Mr. Chair, other tools provide feasible options, the language of the act would be flexible enough to accommodate such a change. Stakeholders appear to recognize the limitations of masking both technologically and in its ability to block access to information permanently or from all access points. I should add that as part of the committee's deliberations the Department of Health and Wellness provided a demonstration of the electronic health record and specifically demonstrated and discussed with us the limitations of the masking feature.

Stakeholders have consistently indicated that completely removing the expressed wishes component from the electronic health record provisions goes too far and fails to strike an appropriate balance between the Alberta electronic health record's efficiency and individual privacy. Therefore, in response to this concern the committee is proposing to include the concept of expressed wishes within the Alberta electronic health record provisions.

The third major issue the committee dealt with relates to stakeholder concerns about balancing the protection of individual privacy and confidentiality of health information with the needs of the health care system. Mr. Chair, for this I would refer hon. members to part B, clauses (a) and (b), of amendment A1. This was by far the most controversial part of the bill and the part that was perhaps examined in most detail by the committee.

Bill 52 as proposed gives the minister the ability to compel custodians to make information accessible via the Alberta electronic health record. Custodians who fail to do so are subject to significant fines. In an effort to strike a more appropriate balance and address stakeholder concerns, the committee is recommending that delegation of this authority be put as preferential approach prior to enabling the minister's ability to compel custodians to make health information accessible through the electronic health record.

Just to elaborate very briefly on this, Mr. Chair, what the amendment proposes is that the authority for requiring a custodian of health information to make that information available to other custodians of health information be delegated to the colleges of the respective health professions. Members will note that in amendment A1 there is a more explicit definition of regulated health professions provided for this purpose. The idea for this is to allow the colleges, which have the right under Alberta law and the responsibility to regulate health practice, to in fact be able to develop standards of practice and codes of conduct that reflect the appropriate uses and behaviours of health professionals in sharing health information via this new medium. The committee is also recommending that the corresponding offence provision be removed, and that is addressed in part D of the amendment.

Mr. Chair, the fourth major issue the committee dealt with relates to health information repositories. Although health information repositories exist in other jurisdictions, the concept is new to Alberta. Bill 52 establishes a basic legal framework to ensure that the Health Information Act will apply to health information repositories.

However, Mr. Chair, concerns have been raised about leaving the details to regulation. Health information repositories are intended to improve access to health information for research purposes only. These amendments simply enable health information repositories to deal with research requests in the same manner as custodians currently deal with health information today. Health information repositories cannot authorize the use of health information for any other purpose. In addition, health information repositories do not expand access to health information beyond what is currently permitted under the Health Information Act.

By creating health information repositories, greater protection will be provided to health information used for research purposes. Rather than requesting information from multiple custodians, a researcher will be able to request information from a single health information repository. Since the repository is the single source of entry to that information, Mr. Chair, it mitigates threats to privacy. For example, a health information repository will be able to conduct data matching and provide the final data at the highest level of anonymity. Currently researchers conduct their own data matching based on information received from multiple sources.

In response to concerns about dealing with health information repositories through regulations, the committee is recommending that Bill 52 be amended to include a provision requiring the Minister of Health and Wellness to consult with the commissioner when preparing these regulations. The committee is also recommending that Bill 52 be amended to address the correction and amendment of health information by health information repositories.

A more detailed description of the standing committee's proposed amendments can be found in our report, Mr. Chair. For now, with respect to amendment A1, I would just direct members to part C to review the amendments that we are introducing.

Mr. Chair, just in conclusion, in addition to thanking committee members, I would like to point out that the committee heard extensively from the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Alberta, the Alberta Medical Association, and the office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner. We are very appreciative to all for their advice in our deliberations. As I noted earlier in the House today, I have tabled letters indicating support for the committee's amendments from those three entities. In addition, it's my understanding that the Information and Privacy Commissioner issued a news release this afternoon indicating that he had no outstanding concerns regarding Bill 52 based on the amendments proposed by the committee.

With that, Mr. Chair, I'm pleased to support our committee's recommendation that Bill 52 proceed with the proposed amendments outlined in A1 as distributed. I would urge all members to join me in doing the same.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre on amendment A1.

Ms Blakeman: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. This is my second go-round now with the Health Information Act and amendments and reviews of it. I was so interested, actually, that I asked to be subbed onto the policy field committee on health, which was charged with reviewing Bill 52, the Health Information Amendment Act, 2009. I was on the committee that participated in developing the amendments that are now before you.

I have to say that my overriding concern with health information has been the protection of people's personal health information because it is such an integral part of our identity and how we move through the world, our ability to get a job, keep a job, marry certain people, have a credit rating and a standing in the community, maintain an individual identity. Protection of that and everyone else's protection of personal health information are critically important in this day and age.

At the same time, we have immense pressure to be more efficient in the way we deliver health care. One of the things that we're told repeatedly is that we need to be able to share health information about people quicker between health professionals. Indeed, as I've often mentioned to this House, there are a number of individuals in Alberta who would find it reassuring to be able to go to a hospital, present to a hospital for health services, and know that that hospital has access to the same information as the clinic they go to at home and that there's no possibility that there's confusion over medication or past diagnoses or diagnostic tests they've had or ailments they've had. The information is all together for everybody to be able to access.

Certainly, for anyone that's ever been in the hospital, that teeth-grindingly frustrating moment when the umpteenth health professional comes in, takes the clipboard from the end of the bed, and starts over from the top with the same series of questions that the last health professional asked you not six minutes ago is very frustrating. You get asked the obvious question: "Is there no way you people can keep track of all of this information? Why do I have to keep giving it to you?"

That's part of what we're trying to achieve in electronic health records. The challenge for us is — here's that tricky word — balance, and I actually don't know that it is about balance. I think it needs to be about protection of personal health information, first, and facilitation of how that information gets out and to whom, second. That's my primary cause.

If we go back to the original bill, it is very clear in its opening sections. It sets itself up to say:

The purposes of this Act are

- (a) . . . to protect the privacy of individuals with respect to their health information and to protect the confidentiality of that information,
- (b) to enable health information to be shared and accessed, where appropriate . . . and to manage the health system,
- (c) to prescribe rules for the collection, use, and disclosure of health information . . .

And this is very important.

. . . which are to be carried out in the most limited manner and with the highest degree of anonymity that is possible in the circumstances.

So collect the least amount of information you can possibly do with, and as much as possible keep that information anonymous. Don't go walking around, you know, giving out detailed health information with names, addresses, and telephone numbers attached to it. That's actually set out under the purposes of the bill and has the paramountcy of the protection in there first.

What we had under Bill 52, I felt, did not meet a number of tests around this privacy. What we attempted to do in the committee, having listened to a number of stakeholders that approached us — and I was surprised because I would not tend to view the AMA as a rigorous, progressive, get-out-there group of people, generally speaking. I would have said that they tend to be more, let me say, conservative, not in their politics, necessarily, but in their approach. They were vigorous in how they criticized the bill because they felt it was really going to have a negative effect on the way they were able to provide health services.

Clearly, they felt that the public would not have confidence in the system and would start to withhold health information from them, the primary health provider, and that would cause a breakdown in the system. And I agree. If there is a balance we're trying to achieve here, that's the balance: we run the system well enough that people have confidence in the system and will give us their personal health information, and we can in turn provide the health service that is necessary.

How do we maintain or uphold that public trust, that confidence in the system that we're using? Frankly, when I first started into this, Mr. Chairman, I thought it was all about electronic technology. I thought it was all about, you know, password systems and people not being able to get into certain kinds of information. You know what? It's not. What we know now, from watching how personal health information gets out there, is that it's mostly about being able to detect and stop, hopefully in advance, human deliberation, people who are sloppy and access personal health information of other people when they shouldn't, people who are deliberate about accessing it. Those people wreck the system for everybody.

What are some of the things we've learned about how to stop that kind of unauthorized use of personal health information? One of the famous examples — and I think it's from here in Alberta through our own Information and Privacy Commissioner — is an individual who was having an affair with someone, and his wife was suffering from a major disease. The individual managed to access the personal health records of the wife, who was suffering from cancer, and tracked her progress, one presumes, to be able to judge the likelihood of supplanting the first missus. This, clearly, is not why we collect health information, so that someone can plan their romantic life. I mean, it's a horrifying, horrifying story. It's the kind of thing that people make up bad movies in Hollywood about. Unfortunately, it's not a bad movie. It was somebody's life, several people's lives, and it happened here in Alberta. It happened, and it happened under the system that we have.

So the audit trails that are available is one of the ways that we are able to find out and, hopefully, move in advance of worse things happening, that we're able to get out in front of someone who is accessing personal health information in an unauthorized way. That ability to have those audit trails in place was very, very important, and that's one of the things that turns up in that first series under A, what we're calling amendment A. I'm sorry; this is amendment A1, but this is under the section A. Under section 11 it's striking out clause (b), which was basically getting rid of the necessity of the minister to do a privacy impact statement, which is another tool that we found is very helpful in checking whether this really needs to happen or that person really needs to get access: why are you doing this? If you have to do a privacy impact statement, it gives us, the system, a better sense of whether that is a legitimate access point. The second section was that the privacy impact statements had to happen before disclosing the health information to a custodian listed in various areas. This was about keeping an audit log in place.

The second series, the B series, is around the electronic health record section, and that's what's in section 20. The sponsoring member, the chair of the committee, the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, was right. There's actually a lot in this amendment, but there were a number things we were looking for. One, again, is around people's privacy. There was the ability of the minister to compel information from doctors and even from doctors' medical records. Remember, you've got two terminologies here: an electronic health record, which is that sort of electronic in the sky stuff, with the diagnostic and the lab results and your prescriptions and what happens to you in hospital all going into an electronic health record. A medical record is what the doctor is writing on in your doctor's office. So those in many cases are still paper files, but increasingly they've got a little electronic tablet, like a laptop, that they're walking around with, and that's where they're making the notes now, with some sort of super transcriber for bad doctor handwriting, one must presume, like a translation program.

There was a clause in there that was going to force doctors to give information over to the minister if the minister asked for it, including information from the medical record, which was the little one that's taken in the doctor's office. That was a break point, a tipping point, if you will, I think, for the medical profession, that if people were aware that anything they said to their doctor could end up as part of these records, there just would not be public confidence. So it was important to change that.

There is a new series of how the minister could try and get at that information. At this point I always say to myself: I'm sorry; why does the minister of health need to know my personal health information? Well, for a number of reasons, usually to do with tracking and planning for health care management, you know, some of those census questions we always get annoyed about. Why are they asking these personal questions? Well, it helps for allocation of money and to provide social services in that context, and it's similar to what is being talked about here. They're collecting that information so they have an idea that in a population of this age you're likely to have X number of these kinds of surgeries required, for example. So it helps with health planning, which should help us with our health expenditures, so this would be a good thing.

The other piece that's covered in this section is the masking provisions. This is something that, no surprise, I was very concerned about because I have heard from a lot of people who for a number of reasons – let me be specific. I've worked with a lot of people in the queer community. There are still people in there who are living with AIDS, and they're doing well living with AIDS. They're leading productive lives; they're working in many cases. But they certainly don't want that information out in the general public, and they need to be careful about that. They need to be careful about who gets that information. As a matter of fact, you know, lots of us have reason to not want to have our health information sort of bandied about out there.

An individual's ability to mask their information from anyone that just looked on the electronic health record was, I felt, an important feature when I started into this. I'll tell you that I've come to the other end of the spectrum on this. I did do a minority report, which is included in the report from the committee and was tabled in the Assembly. Masking means that certain bits of your information literally get masked, like having a piece of paper over it.

Having watched the demonstration of Netcare, I think the masking can give people a false sense of security. If they think that nobody can look at that information for any reason at all, they are mistaken. There's actually a drop-down menu on the Netcare portal, and you can just click on it. It says: this information is masked. You click on the drop-down menu, and it says: I want to unmask it. Then it gives you half a dozen reasons why you'd want to unmask it: this is an emergency situation; this is a public health situation; I want to; they told me to; they gave me permission to. You just click on the drop-down menu, and, bingo, it's open. So it's not masked in the way people think it's masked. But we had completely lost that provision under what was originally proposed in Bill 52. So for those people that want some kind of masking provision, it is available to them under the amendments that have been brought forward under the auspices of the policy field committee on health.

I think we need a lockbox because that actually does lock up information, and you cannot get it, no matter what. The masking provision, as I say, can be lifted for any number of reasons and without having to go back to the individual that it's about and say: can I unmask this information for you? That's why those phrases, those words about collection, use, and disclosure of health information are so important. You need to get very familiar with these in the act because certain things can be done without disclosing it. Certain things have to go back and get your consent to do that. Is it blanket consent or informed consent? All those things get really important.

I'm running out of time again.

Okay. Section C in the amending document is the one that I proposed, and there's actually another piece on the end compliments of my ND colleague who was also on the committee. One of the things that I learned is that a lot of health information that exists is inaccurate, badly input, incomplete, wrong, or wrong person, and you don't realize that unless there's some reason why you have to access your health record and go: oh, my goodness, I don't have that at all.

I actually had an episode with that, you know, in one of those things you fill out in the doctor's office: have any of your parents ever had diabetes or heart disease, blah blah blah, and you check all those boxes. One of them had got some wrong information about a health issue I'd had as a young woman. They actually had me as having had cancer. Wrong. But that's what was in that particular doctor's file. At one point I applied to get more life insurance, and they make you sign a blanket consent that the insurance company can go look at all your health information to decide if they're going to give you more life insurance. Right? Okay. Fine.

I kept getting denied, and I'm thinking: "What goes here? Like, I'm healthy, I'm exercising, I lost all this weight. You know, I'm a vegetarian. I quit smoking. Good God, what do I have to do here?"

I finally said: "What gives? What's the problem?" They said, "Well, you know, you've got this cancer thing on your file." I said: "I've never had cancer. Where did you get that from?" They said, "Oh, well, from your file." I thought: gee whiz. So I went back to every doctor I had and said: go look in your files because one of you has got this wrong. I found the one that had it wrong and said: it's wrong; correct it. That's the only way I found out. We know that despite all of our best attempts – and you guys know me; I'm pretty picky about information and specificity and accuracy and all of those things. There's an example of a really simple, everyday life experience that happened to me. That happens many, many times over and over and over again.

The accuracy of the health information they hold is critical. The health information repositories are really the big new bit of this act. I wanted to make sure that you could correct any information that is held by a health repository that is wrong. With the help of Parliamentary Counsel I was able to draft amendments, which were accepted by the committee, that essentially said that if you identified it to a custodian, as I had done – remember, I went back to the doctor and said, "You've got it wrong; fix it," and they did fix it – the custodian of the information would be obliged to tell any health information repository to also correct it. So you could get your whole file corrected. That was the point of that.

Then section D is removing the absolutely draconian fine that was in place and went back and reflected on any doctor who wouldn't give the information to the minister that the minister was requesting.

I think these amendments have gone a long, long way to making Bill 52 much better. It still felt very much like a rushed and very rigid process to me. I think we could have done an even better job if we could have spent more time looking at the bill and reflecting on what amendments were really needed. But I know the chair of the committee was determined to get it back before the Assembly and, hopefully, I think in his mind, get it passed before we rise from spring session. It felt very rushed to me. I think we did good work. I think we could have done better work.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to be able to rise to speak to Bill 52 in Committee of the Whole and, in particular, amendment A1, that has been put forward by the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, also the chair of the Standing Committee on Health. I'd like to start my comments by picking up where the Member for Edmonton-Centre left off in terms of the process through which we went with respect to this bill.

As has been stated by everybody who has spoken to it so far, this bill deals with a very important issue. It deals with the treatment of people's personal health information, their very, very private, sensitive information. It deals with the balancing, if you will, or the integrating, on one hand, of tremendous growth in our technological capacity to collect information and to share it electronically and at the same time, while we collect more and more and more information, the need to preserve it in a way that keeps people's ultimate security maintained.

When personal health information, that information that is shared between you and your doctor – I mean, this is something that the medical profession has for centuries made as a key part of their profession, this notion of patient-doctor confidentiality. The information that a doctor receives about an individual is so incredibly personal and has such significant implications were it to be shared with the wrong person. What this bill deals with in many ways is how we balance this growing technological capacity we have and tendency to collect information against the right of individuals to preserve the security of that information.

Now, as the Member for Edmonton-Centre already stated, there was a committee, a select standing committee, that was established in 2004 which was tasked with the job of reviewing the Health Information Act. At the time that the Health Information Act was brought in, in 2000 – I believe it was 2000 – it was seen as being very leading edge, cutting edge, and it was very cutting edge in terms of how we protect privacy and manage information. So a select standing committee was established in 2004 to review how that had worked and also to review a number of issues that they perceived were developing as a result of the initial establishment of the act and the legislative authority.

Now, that select standing committee ultimately prepared a report, which included a number of recommendations, many of which were followed up subsequently through statute and many of which were not. But some of the recommendations stated: you know, there are a whole bunch of other issues that we learned about in the course of reviewing this act in 2004 that need to be referred to another committee for more exploration and more discussion. One of those issues was how we manage this concept of the electronic health record and the way information just shoots from one person to another person to another person over this electronic health record without our ever having the slightest idea that that information was being shared. The committee in 2004 recommended that that issue, the issue around who's allowed into that electronic health care information arena, and a number of other issues should be sent to another committee for further exploration and review.

Well, ultimately, unfortunately though, that committee was never struck. What happened instead was that in the fall of 2008 Bill 52, with its many significant consequences, was presented in the House. It was referred to our standing policy committee, and we commenced meeting on it in January of 2009. Well, what we did was that we essentially had one meeting where we received about an hour and a half, two hours of presentations from the people who wrote the bill, who were presenting the bill to us to convince us that it was a good thing. Then we had a day and a half of hearing submissions from a number of different interest groups, who made, as the chair of the committee has already noted, some very worthwhile, intelligent, very helpful submissions to the committee. Then the plan was to have been for the committee to sit down and work through this information that had been presented to us and, in fact, to get further information as we saw fit.

Instead, what happened was that the schedule changed quite dramatically. Suddenly we were given a total of three hours – through the encouragement of the opposition members I think we ultimately ended up with six hours – to discuss and review and analyze this very complex piece of legislation and come up with amendments. As even this amendment A1 signifies, this amendment in and of itself is a very complicated proposal to deal with some of the concerns that were raised, but it was one that sort of came as a done deal to our committee. I have to say that in many respects I think that we are rushing forward on a very serious set of initiatives with only a limited amount of oversight.

I want to put that out there as a start because I do feel that as legislators we haven't really been given the opportunity to consider these issues with the attention that they deserve. Having said that, there is no question that amendment A1 is a step forward in addressing a number of the concerns that were raised to us. There were other concerns that were not addressed through this amendment, which, obviously, are identified in the minority reports that were appended to the majority report of the Standing Committee on Health. But this amendment does address some of them.

I think an important addition is the notion under the first part, section A, of ensuring that there is, in fact, a requirement for there to be a privacy impact assessment before information is disclosed to a custodian under certain circumstances. So that's good. I don't know exactly why it is that we were ever in a situation where we were ever trying to avoid that. Nonetheless, it's an improvement to have that back in there.

Section B is an interesting addition to the bill. It's a creative one, and I give credit to the people who helped draft this and, of course, I think, to the chair of the committee because I think he put a lot of work into it in terms of dealing with the very serious concerns that were raised by, primarily, the physicians over the prospect of being told that the minister would be able to tell them and ultimately compel them to put whatever information the minister deemed advisable into an electronic health record. Of course, there were tremendous concerns that what would ultimately happen is that we'd start seeing more and more detailed chart notes getting into this electronic health record.

As I'm sure many people in this House know, doctors now have a tendency – I don't know what percentage of them, but certainly mine does – to listen to you and type into their computer as they're listening. So all the notes of the whole discussion end up in your electronic file. Now, the physicians raised a very good point, you know: if this is what we are compelled to include in the electronic health record, it's going to fundamentally change the way patients communicate with us, and it's going to fundamentally impact the way that we're able to provide health care to our patients. That was a good point.

The proposal that is in this amendment essentially gives a lot more authority back over to the professional associations for them to determine what is appropriate to go in and what is not. That's certainly a good start. There's no question that those folks have tremendous expertise in deciding what is the best balance between what the health record needs to have to provide good care versus what would otherwise put a chilling effect on the patient in terms of what they would be willing to disclose or talk about to their doctor. It's certainly a good component.

My concern, though, is that ultimately we are still leaving that decision to another body, and ultimately that body can be overruled by the minister. We all know it's not the minister; it's the officials in the ministry of health who originally didn't have this kind of information or this kind of balance in the first draft of the act. You know, ultimately there is no complete protection because the way this is crafted, the minister can overrule recommendations made by the professional associations trying to limit the amount of information that they need to put into the electronic health record and, hopefully, also limiting certain circumstances.

But it doesn't quite go all the way. There's still that possibility for too much information to be compelled from individuals and put into an electronic health record. We then move into the situation where we're not a hundred per cent sure for other reasons that that information will be protected as well as it could be.

Definitely I give credit to the creativity that underlay this proposal to try and balance those interests. It's worth exploring whether or not it can work. I just raise a caution that there are circumstances in which I could see it not working. That's all I will say on that piece of it.

The last section that I wanted to talk about relates to the health information repositories. That, as the previous member noted, includes amendments that both opposition members put forward. As I outlined in the minority report of the third party, although these amendments were accepted, they don't ultimately go anywhere far enough to constrain or delineate the rights and obligations of the health information repository.

Put clearly, the bill as it stands right now gives the health information repository the authority to hold personally identifying health information of Albertans. There is nothing else in the bill as it exists now that compels that repository to follow the majority of the rest of the privacy rules which are included in the Health Information Act. There is nothing in the bill itself that sets out the purpose and the objectives of the health information repository as would be the case in, say, other acts, acts in Manitoba that we referenced in committee debate.

There is nothing in the act right now that gives the Information and Privacy Commissioner a good deal of authority over regulating the health information repositories. A good deal of the authority that the Information and Privacy Commissioner has to enforce the privacy protection which appears in the Health Information Act arises from the relationship between a custodian and their duties under the act and the enforcement provisions that attach to the Information and Privacy Commissioner. Because the health information repository is not a custodian under the act, there are large gaps throughout the act that do not apply to the health information repository.

A simple example is that the Member for Edmonton-Centre proposed an amendment which requires the health information repository to report whether it has corrected inaccurate information that has been sent to it. Then they have to report whether they've corrected it or whether they haven't corrected it. If the health information repository were a custodian, the person would then have the ability to look at the information held by the health information repository to check that the mistake wasn't still on the file.

I'm sure everybody in this Assembly has had the experience of trying to get something corrected or changed and having to do it two or three times because it simply won't go away. In this case, because the health information repository is not a custodian, a person will never actually be able to check whether or not the inaccurate information on the health information repository files has been corrected. They must simply take it at face value. This is just a small example of how this new body, which has the legislative authority to collect personally identifying health information of Albertans, has that legislative authority but is not governed by significant portions of the remainder of the Health Information Act. That's why we have some very serious concerns.

Now, the committee – we appreciated it – did accept our own amendment that in developing the rules, the objectives, the purpose, the functions, all the information that should be in legislation describing what the health information repository does, as all those rules are created by regulation around the cabinet table, at the very least the minister must consult with the Information and Privacy Commissioner. That's good. They must consult. But where these kinds of bodies have been created in other provinces, there has been a much more substantial set of descriptions, rights, obligations, rules set out in legislation. All we have in this legislation is the authority for this body to collect buckets of information and the authority of the government to then through regulation create rules that will govern how that information is managed within the health information repository. So we have some very, very significant concerns.

We talk about how the health information repository is designed for research, but that in and of itself is not even clearly stated within the act. I think we all understand that to be the case, but it's not stipulated in the legislation, so the question is: why not? What other uses may this information ultimately be put to? What legislative limit will there be on those uses?

Those are the kinds of concerns that we have that remain with respect to Bill 52. There's one other set of concerns that I have, but they are not really addressed directly through amendment A1, that I'm speaking to right now, so I'll wait until this amendment has been dispensed with by the Assembly.

Finally, going back to the issue of the electronic health record covered under section B of this amendment, I did also want to mirror the concerns that were identified by the Member for Edmonton-Centre with respect to the whole concept of masking. I do believe that people are given a very false sense of security about what information they are able to control once it goes into the electronic health record. It's very clear to us that there are a tremendous number of situations within which information that a person believes is masked can become available to others on the electronic health record.

We heard that the technology is developing such that at some point it may be possible to mask certain pieces of information but not others. But that information, that capacity, that technology doesn't exist right now. Basically, what happens is that if you as a patient say to your doctor, "I don't want this information widely shared through the electronic health record," everything must be masked. Well, you would think, then: oh, well, that's not helpful either because then nobody ever gets any information. But, no, that's not true because there is a long list of exceptions such that the mask comes off very, very quickly.

I think, ultimately, what's happening here is that people are going to lose a tremendous amount of control over the carriage and the custody of their personally identifying health information. I'm sure some of you may have noticed that just today on the news there was a breach of privacy where a whole bunch of personally identifying health information – this was, of course, just documentary. Nonetheless, a mistake was made. It should be easy to control these things, but a mistake was made, and that information ended up going up and down 97th Street in Edmonton, copious amounts of personally identifying health information about a number of people who were patients at the Royal Alexandra hospital.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Liepert: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I just want to take a couple of minutes because I'm not sure after the theatrics of the last almost hour that we're any wiser on whether the two members are going to support this amended legislation or not.

First of all, let me say that soon after the Premier established the policy field committees, we heard all kinds of comments from friends in the opposition about how these committees were nothing more than window dressing, that they were just going to give government MLAs something to do, and on and on and on, a typical sort of negative way of looking at things. Well, Mr. Chairman, I think that this particular process that we've gone through for the past now almost four or five months has shown that if members of this Assembly want to have a committee actually work, it can work, and this one worked exceptionally well.

We introduced the bill, a bill that was very sensitive, took the time to have the committee look it over, hear submissions, meet with those who had concerns, come forward with some amendments to the point where the chairman of the committee, the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, I believe, today in this House tabled letters from the Privacy Commissioner, from the College of Physicians and Surgeons, from the Alberta Medical Association, all supportive of the amendments and the bill going forward. We have a letter from the president of the Alberta Medical Association, who states in his letter to his membership that they are "strongly supportive" of this particular legislation.

Yet I'm not sure if these two members who've just spoken and spent all of this time – I'm not sure what you do to please these folks sometimes, Mr. Chairman. It boggles my mind when we've got, effectively, the entire province onboard supporting this particular bill, and we have to go through the theatrics we've just seen with these two particular members. So I would just like to say that I think this House should right now support the amendments that have been proposed and move on to other business.

The Chair: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure for me to rise for the first time on Bill 52 and to make some comments about, in this case, the amendments recommended by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford. I will say that health information is extremely sensitive, and we've made significant progress in this province through the electronic health record. Nobody would deny that we now have much better access to information, timely information, transportable information for improved quality care, better access for individuals to the appropriate professional, and more opportunity for effective treatment.

Along with these tremendous benefits in the electronic health record have been the concerns that many of us have and have heard about, whether it's in Canada or internationally, because of the access to information through devious methods and for unknown and perhaps devious motives. The concerns that have been expressed tonight and in the past around this bill and actually quite alarmed the medical profession initially have been and are being addressed in some of these amendments. I'm glad to say that the committee did its work, I think. I congratulate the committee for being so inclusive and actually listening to the different points of view on the issues and coming forward with some amendments that really do address concerns raised by the Information and Privacy Commissioner, by the health professionals, including the Medical Association, and by our own Member for Edmonton-Centre relating to section C, as indicated.

Let me just briefly for the record say that section A, which concerns, again, the questions raised about who gets access and when and to what information by the Privacy Commissioner, will repeal subsection (5)(b) and require that comments of the commissioner be considered and a response be made before disclosing health information to a particular custodian. That gives us a lot of confidence, Mr. Chairman, that at least there is a secondary oversight before that kind of access to very sensitive information is provided.

We recognize that nominal information has to be accessible at any time to researchers to provide statistical analysis, to establish trends in different conditions, and to make prompt associations between particular conditions and particular environmental situations. But apart from that, we cannot assume that people have the best intentions, whether a designated custodian or the minister himself, without having a secondary provision for the commissioner to review it. Section A also provides that the minister or his department, then, must have to perform the impact assessment and consider the comments that the commissioner has made.

On the issue of section B, this largely arises out of issues raised by the Medical Association. The main concern was the power of the minister to trump, I guess, the concerns of professional bodies who spend their lives developing trusting relationships and ensuring the confidentiality of information. It did raise significant questions for many of us about what it was that the minister or the health department might have at its disposal but, more than that, how careful they would be in dealing with sensitive information because they are a third party and don't have any particularly personal relationship with an individual or recognize the significance of some information. This amendment goes some distance in ensuring that information from a regulated health professional is made accessible in an appropriate way but balanced by the rights and privileges of an individual and their confidential relationship with their professional.

Subsection (b), again, makes prescribed health information accessible. It's clear here that the health professional body will be responsible to direct the health professional to make the prescribed health information available through the electronic health record. The minister is given the authority to direct a regulated health professional to make information available only after consulting with the relevant health professional body, preparing a privacy impact statement, and considering the comments provided by the Information and Privacy Commissioner. It also outlines the repercussions of a regulated health professional to follow the directions of either the health professional body or the minister. It further outlines that an authorized custodian may also make prescribed health information under its control accessible to authorized custodians through the Alberta electronic health record.

Subsection (c) also adds a section where a regulated health professional or authorized custodian must consider the expressed wishes of the individual who is the subject to the health information when determining how much of the information to make available through the electronic health record. This is important as it clearly outlines the individual's primacy in deciding what and when and how it can be released.

Subsection (e) outlines that an electronic log must be kept of custodians who use prescribed health information through the Alberta electronic health record: the name or identifying number of who uses the information via the electronic health record, the date and time it occurred, and the description of the information used. This log has to be kept for 10 years. Individuals may ask the custodian or information manager of the electronic health record to view and have a copy of the log. If the individual makes this request, then the custodian or manager must provide it. This is clearly a protection mechanism so that individuals can identify who is seeing their personal health information.

Subsection (e) also adds a section with respect to where a committee must be made that would provide recommendations to the minister on rules regarding access, use, disclosure, and retention of prescribed health information through the electronic health record, clearly important because at least two members of the committee will be from the public, and this will provide some oversight to the rules.

On the issue of section C information may be amended or corrected when it is in a health information repository. This also gives the commissioner some ability for oversight. This was recommended by our Member for Edmonton-Centre and is eminently sensible. The first section, section 72.4, adds correction or amendment of health information by repository, where if a custodian has corrected or amended health information, the custodian must notify the health information repository of the change. The health information repository then must correct or amend the record within 30 days and provide notification back to the original custodian, who must then notify the individual, clearly important in allowing individuals the ability to personally audit their health information and ensure that information is correct and that this change applies to the record that is in the health information repository.

An individual is also given the right to ask the Information and Privacy Commissioner to review a failure by a custodian to notify a health information repository of an amendment or correction. Clearly an important amendment as it was uncertain what type of oversight the Information and Privacy Commissioner would have over the health information repositories: this amendment clearly outlines the oversight the commissioner would have.

The second section added states that the minister must consult, again, with the commissioner in the preparation of the regulations that would govern health information repositories, ensuring that someone with specific knowledge, with concern for the privacy of Albertans would have oversight and be involved in the drafting of these regulations.

Section D simply removes the high penalties associated with unauthorized access to information and removes, therefore, the threat, I think, of inappropriate or unbalanced recourse following access.

With those comments, I would thank the chairman for the opportunity to speak on this and look forward to further debate. I personally will be supporting these amendments.

8:50

The Chair: Any other hon. members wish to speak on amendment A1?

Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question. We will vote on the four parts – A, B, C, D – separately, as we stated at the beginning.

[Motion on amendment A1A carried]

[Motion on amendment A1B carried]

[Motion on amendment A1C carried]

[Motion on amendment A1D carried]

The Chair: On the bill are there any other comments or questions? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona on the bill.

Ms Notley: Thank you. I hate to disappoint the minister of health. You know, it really does disappoint me when that happens. Nonetheless, there is one other set of comments that I'd like to offer on this bill, and they, ultimately, relate to an amendment that I am putting forward. Perhaps what I will do is move the amendment and have it distributed, and then I'll make my comments about the amendment.

The Chair: You can send it to the table, and we will distribute it.

The amendment introduced by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona shall now be known as amendment A2.

Hon. member, please speak on A2.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The amendment that I am proposing is one that would amend section 2 of the current Bill 52. Anyone who'd had an opportunity to read the minority report that our caucus put forward as an addendum to the majority report coming from the health committee would know that what this relates to is the initiative within Bill 52 to add totally privately funded health care providers to the list of health service providers who would have access to the health information and the electronic health record scheme. This amendment that's being proposed to Bill 52 would also change the definition of health service such that it was no longer necessary that that health service receive either partial or full public funding, so that instead it could be a health service which is entirely privately funded.

Now, generally speaking, whenever members on this side of the House raise the concern about the expanded scope of privately funded health care in our province, we're constantly told that we're seeing ghosts, that we're fearmongering, that it's all in our heads. Yet I have to ask: if that's the case, why is it necessary in this particular bill to change the act so that fully privately funded health services and health care providers can get access to this health information scheme? I appreciate that there are already in our system some providers of health care who have historically been privately funded. Those include dentists, for instance. Those include pharmacists in many cases. I don't agree that those folks, if they're providing a health service that's actually necessary, should be privately funded or at least not partially publicly funded. Nonetheless, I know that that's the history, and that's how this system has evolved, so there are some identifiable professions that are often fully privately funded.

However, it seems to me that if we had no plan to expand the scope and expand the number of people who fit within that definition, it would be quite a reasonable thing to simply list those exceptions within the act. Instead, what we're doing is we're changing the language so that any privately funded health care provider and any privately funded health service will now be included. Indeed, between the time that this bill was initially introduced and the time that this issue was discussed in the policy field committee on health issues, you know, two weeks ago, we found two particular health services which were previously publicly funded that are now solely and completely privately funded. So we've seen the list grow even as this bill has been in debate.

Mr. Hehr: Oh. You mean delisting is really privatizing?

Ms Notley: Indeed, delisting is privatizing. Who would have thunk it?

You know, I appreciate that this bill is not the mechanism for the privatization, but it is a vehicle that facilitates the privatization. For that reason I have very serious concerns with the amendments that are included in Bill 52 right now which would ease the transition to adding more and more privately funded health care providers to this arena and ease the transition of delisting. The more we delist, we won't have to keep coming back and changing this legislation every time we delist another service. Needless to say, given the historical position of our caucus on the need to maintain maximum publicly funded health services, this amendment is a concern.

Now, I also raised in the committee another concern that is very serious to me, which I've not been able to receive any kind of assurance or explanation for how it is not a concern, and that is that by including health care providers who are privately funded and health services that are privately funded, we open the door to allowing an individual's employer access to their health information, and we open the door to allowing insurance companies access to an individual's health information, and we open the door to allowing the Workers' Compensation Board access to a person's health information. When I raised this in committee, I was told: "No, no, no. That's not what we're doing. We're just giving the information to the health service provider in their capacity of providing a health service, so that will govern how they use that information because it's only when they provide a health service." But the reality is that the lines are not that clear; they cannot be drawn that clearly.

Ironically, we're going to be talking about the human rights code after this. One area of human rights that this province is desperately behind on is the issue of the duty to accommodate, particularly the issue of the duty to accommodate injured and disabled employees in their workplace. Now, that is an issue which crosses the border between health care provision and employer obligations day in and day out. Services provided through different sections of the Workers' Compensation Board also cross that boundary day in and day out. Insurance company doctors, insurance company rehab centres, rehabilitation centres that people go to often cross that boundary. Not only do they go to those rehabilitation centres to get their back improved, to rehabilitate from, say, a workplace injury, but those rehabilitation centres then also create a report which has significant implications for that individual's ability to gain employment, become re-employed, or to pursue other economic objectives which they are entitled to.

Now this body, this provider, will have access to everything, and they will be able to go back: you know, Joe injured his back six months ago at work, but now the insurance company physical therapist will find a record of Joe complaining about his back 20 years ago. Then suddenly it's all related to the fact that Joe's back has been sore all this time, and he doesn't need to get any further support from WCB or the employer or the insurance company or whoever.

This happens. This happens all the time. This has critical implications for people's very security, for their very economic security, for the very way they live their life. When I said earlier that we were concerned about this issue going through the committee too quickly, this is an issue that is very, very serious, with very, very serious implications, and it has not been fully explored. The law around defining those roles, the health care service provider who works for the employer, is not yet clear. This bill does not find a way to help clarify it for the purposes of this act, so we are moving forward on unlocking people's most sensitive and private information and potentially handing the key to people who have no business having access to this information ever. It is of great concern to us that that's what could happen through Bill 52.

As I stated in the committee, we know that there are roughly about a hundred thousand health care employees who are already sort of subject to the confusion around this. As I've stated before, this is an issue that comes up repeatedly, and although the Information and Privacy Commissioner referred us, I believe, to only one or two actual hearings on the matter, I can say from personal experience that the issue does actually come up more regularly than that. It's often addressed through grievance arbitration because the setting within which this currently happens is one where it's very unionized, and that particular group of employees has a much higher level of protection than the average employee across the province. A hundred thousand employees have a different mechanism that protects them from the wrongs that may be incurred through this bill, but this bill would essentially expand it to the 1 million employees in Alberta, most of whom do not enjoy the benefits of that protection.

This is a very serious issue. As I stated before, when the committee in 2004 reviewed this issue, they said that this particular thing needs to be thoroughly examined just on its own, this one issue of allowing privately funded providers of health services into this arena. This issue on its own needs to be fully considered, and the implications need to be fully considered. The same committee completely rejected at the time allowing the WCB anywhere near this scheme, yet it appears as though inadvertently that's what we're doing. We have never been given the opportunity to fully consider the implications, to inquire, to get assurances, to come up with ways in which we could limit the damage done. As a result, the only way we see that we can ensure that that damage is not allowed to go forward is by going ahead with the amendment that we're proposing today.

The final point that I would make in support of this amendment is simply that as more and more privately funded bodies are able to gain access to this arena within which our very sensitive personal health information resides, we potentially lose even more control in terms of our ability to regulate and to monitor and to protect. Certainly, no question, that which is publicly funded is not by definition the most careful body, but it is something that's closer and easier to monitor should we choose that we need to do that and should we need to do that.

The Auditor General is already looking at these systems as it relates to government bodies. We know, as I've said in the past, that with the registry systems the farther away we get from that body that monitors the safety provisions, the more likely it is that there may be a breach. Obviously, if we're moving into fully privately funded bodies being able to get access to this information, many of which may have head offices that aren't anywhere near this province, again, the risk is increased with respect to our ability to preserve and protect the sanctity of the health information that resides in these electronic health records.

These are the three reasons why I would urge members of this Assembly to support this motion, and I thank you for the opportunity to put it forward.

The Chair: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition, on amendment A2.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. A pleasure to rise and speak to the amendments to Bill 52. Some real legitimate concerns are raised here. When I view any aspect of change to the health care system, I view it through four lenses, basically. Will it improve the quality of care? Will it improve the access in a timely way to appropriate care? Will it improve the cost-effectiveness of our dollars spent in the health care system? Finally, does it protect the rights and freedoms of the individual to their privacy?

This amendment raises some interesting questions with respect to the bill and the amendments just passed, the questions being around whether it's aiding and abetting privatization, whether it's increasing the risk of a breach of privacy, and whether it would decrease the adjudicator access to private health information.

I'm not concerned, frankly, with aiding and abetting private health care. I think we already have a significant degree of private services here. The question is: do people who are fundamentally cared for in the public system have access to the same benefits of an electronic health record, whether they're getting services from a chiropractor or getting services in a hospital, through this vehicle? I believe that they do. I find it difficult to argue that an amendment is needed to suppress private access. I don't think that will in any way affect the rate of progress of private health care delivery in the province, and it will compromise the care of people who are accessing both, whether it's ophthalmic surgery or whether it's chiropractic or psychological services in the private sector. I don't see that the existing bill with the amendments that we have just passed would compromise that.

With respect to the increased risk of privacy breach, obviously the more people that have access to information, the more the risk of a privacy breach, but it's impossible to argue on that basis to restrict information from caregivers whom the individual chooses to take responsibility for their health. While technically true that privacy would be at a little increased risk because of increased numbers of people handling the information, in this case, as the hon. member is mentioning a private provider, it's not somehow logical, then, to conclude that they will be the ones most likely to breach the privacy any more than others, whether in the public or the private sector, providing the services.

With respect to access to private information by an employer or an adjudicator, that does raise significant questions, and I would like to think that Bill 52 has addressed some of this. We simply cannot tolerate a system where an employer could have access both to the health records and to the qualifications for compensation and privacy of their health information. That simply cannot happen under the current situation, and it should not be possible under the new provisions of Bill 52. I don't believe it is any more likely to happen than in the past, and with the new provisions of Bill 52 I think it's less likely to happen that there would be this conflict of interest between an employer and some of the benefits programs, insurance programs, or workers' compensation programs that this employee may be entitled to and compromised if this private information was passed along. So while I share some of the concerns – and I congratulate the member for bringing these issues forward as they are issues that I hadn't thought deeply about to this point; I think they're important areas for discussion – I don't find sufficient justification to support these as a basis for moving ahead with this bill.

Those are my comments on the amendment recommended by my hon. colleague. I'll now take my seat and listen to further debate. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I'll be very brief. I'd just like to begin by thanking the hon. Leader of the Opposition for making a number of comments that I would have made as well in response to the amendment proposed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

First of all, we'll begin with the premise offered by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona that somehow – and I'm not sure how one would arrive at this conclusion – Bill 52 is enabling legislation for future decisions that may be made around insured health care services under the Alberta Health Care Insurance Act. I think that if I was looking for a clue that that might be in the offing, I would probably look to proposed amendments in other pieces of legislation. It is certainly not a policy objective as stated in this bill, and therefore it's not a conclusion that I would draw easily.

In fact, Mr. Chair, as you may know, approximately 30 per cent of health care services are funded through private sources, and often these are not exclusively funded by private sources. They are cost shared with patients, with employers through their employer health benefit plans. In fact, many of the professionals who provide these services that are funded in this mixed way are in professions regulated under the Health Professions Act of Alberta. Dentists were one that was mentioned by the hon. member opposite. Physiotherapists receive funding through employer-sponsored plans and privately. Occupational therapists do; podiatrists do. In fact, many paramedical professions that we regulate as professional disciplines provide services that are funded through these means.

The intent of the bill, Mr. Chair, is to bring to bear under the regulations that govern the collection, use, and disclosure of health information that same oversight in the public interest as we have currently for the regulation of the professionals who offer those services to Albertans on a day-to-day basis. I would submit that that is a responsible and appropriate objective of a piece of legislation as important as this one. I would hope that hon. members would recognize that the funding and the disciplines that provide these services are organized in a way that is substantially more complex than has been suggested here this evening.

On the second point, with respect to inappropriate use of health information by custodians, who may have varying reasons for accessing information, all I can say, Mr. Chair, is that this bill does absolutely nothing to change the obligations of custodians with respect to use of health information. We've seen recent decisions, as recently as a month ago, by the Information and Privacy Commissioner that called individuals to account who, in fact, were authorized custodians who accessed information for inappropriate purposes, employer-related purposes. So we can see that when people do make errors in judgment, knowingly or otherwise, the Information and Privacy Commissioner recognizes those cases and calls those individuals to account.

There is absolutely nothing in this bill, Mr. Chair, that removes the right of any individual to exercise their ability to provide consent or withhold consent for an employer or an insurer or another third party to access personal health information. So, again, really, there's nothing here, in our view, that would cause us to consider support for the amendment. I thank the hon. member for bringing it forward. They certainly were issues that were discussed in committee at length.

With that, I'll take my seat. Thank you.

The Chair: Any other member wish to speak on amendment A2? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you. I'll speak very briefly and then probably call the question, depending on the process. But I just want to respond. Many good points were made. The only point that I did want to identify is with respect to the decision recently made by the Information and Privacy Commissioner. As I'd mentioned in the past to the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, in that particular case the Information and Privacy Commissioner was able to delineate the conflicting role of the health care professional and found that the activity was inappropriate. However, given the rationale and the reasoning upon which the commissioner relied to reach that conclusion, it is truly not clear to me that had that particular health care professional been engaging in the facilitation of a return to work, a duty to accommodate, a workers' compensation claim – indeed, the commissioner himself suggested that had the health and safety nurse been dealing with a workplace injury, the answer might have been different.

So it is because of the very decision mentioned by the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford that I am so deeply concerned about what the implications are for this change to this bill and the scope of the opportunity for these kinds of errors in judgment to be expanded so significantly away from those who simply work for health care employers to those who work for all employers, which is the consequence of the proposed changes to section 2 as it currently stands in Bill 52.

With that final point, I will call the question.

The Chair: The chair shall now call the question on amendment A2.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Chair: Now we go back to Bill 52. Any other member wish to speak? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East on Bill 52.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I'll be very brief. I just would like to make sure that I'm on the record speaking in favour of Bill 52. I think probably remarks have been made prior to this about the work that had been done on this particular bill through the committee the first time.

The Chair: Hon. member.

An Hon. Member: You're in the wrong chair.

Ms Pastoor: Okay. I thought we were in committee so I could . . . [interjection] But I have to speak from my chair. Thank you. I'm in my chair. Thank you for pointing that out, Mr. Chair.

Where was I? Oh, yes. Just that there was some, I think, good work done in the committee. It came out, it came back into committee, and we, I think, went through many concerns that were certainly mine. I'm not a big fan of the world necessarily knowing my business and still maybe am a little apprehensive, but overall the changes that have been made and the amendments that have been brought through as a result of the recommendations from the committee are good. I thank the chair for the work that he did on this committee. I think that it was a lot of work. It was well focused, and everyone had their say in it.

With that, Mr. Chair, I will take my chair.

9:20

The Chair: Seeing no other member wishing to speak on Bill 52, the chair shall now call the question.

[The clauses of Bill 52 as amended agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 44 Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Amendment Act, 2009 (continued)

The Chair: The committee now resumes with considering Bill 44, the Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Amendment Act, 2009. We have amendment A1, proposed by the hon. Minister of Culture and Community Spirit. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre on A1.

Ms Blakeman: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. My thanks for the co-operation of the House in giving us some time to be able to actually read the amendment and take some stock of it. For those of you that are newcomers to the House, you were almost treated to the specialized Official Opposition drone-on as we try to waste time through something until we've got enough time to read it. By adjourning briefly, you weren't subjected to that.

I thank you for your courtesy in doing that although I have to say it was a bit unusual to have government amendments brought forward and us up debating them instantly. Usually there's an opportunity to present them and then adjourn and come back another day or to table them during the earlier part of the Routine so that we've had a chance to look at them for a couple of hours and then come into the House and debate them at night or something else.

It's quite unusual to, first of all, have an evening sitting where we weren't up to speed on staff and be expecting one Parliamentary Counsel to handle all of this and then to have the amendments come onto the floor and have to debate them immediately, so thank you for that.

An Hon. Member: It's not unusual at all.

Ms Blakeman: Yeah. It actually was pretty unusual, especially for the last four or five years.

What we have before us is A1, the government amendment to Bill 44, and as per my request we have severed the two sections for the purposes of voting. Essentially, what we have is that section A is dealing with the very controversial section 9, which amends section 11.1 of the original bill, and that was the section that has been commonly referred to as the parental opt-out section. Some people have called it a parental rights section.

This was the part that was new. Many, including myself, argued that, one, you shouldn't be doing it, and two, if you absolutely had to do it, you shouldn't be doing it in the human rights act because this section is giving direction to the school boards, in essence, and telling them, one, that they have to provide notice to a parent or guardian of a student if they're going to have any instructional material or teaching instruction, any classroom time spent on a subject matter that dealt explicitly with religion, sexuality, or sexual orientation, and secondly, that if the school did receive back a written request signed by a parent or a guardian, that student would be excluded from that instruction, and the teacher could not penalize the student academically, and some additional alternative instruction would have to be provided for them to make up for that.

Of course, what goes with this is that if this section was contravened – we're talking about the human rights act, after all – then that gave the parent or guardian the opportunity to bring a human rights complaint against the teacher or the principal or the school or the school board. I think we have not even begun to comprehend what far-reaching, rolling effects this section will have on our society as we know it.

You know, if you look at this from a parental rights point of view, this is something that a number of states in the U.S. have tried to get into their legislation and that has been vigorously opposed. Here with 72 members of a Conservative caucus voting – well, we'll see if it's a free vote – it's quite likely that the government will be able to with their majority implement this into law. I can see this having an effect on allocation of resources, prioritization of services that are offered by government, depending on whether or not you fall under what is being assumed by this particular clause.

The amendment that they're working on is to say “primarily and explicitly” – in other words, add in the words “primarily and explicitly” – dealing with religion, sexuality, and sexual orientation and a small change around human sexuality. In fact, I had an amendment ready to go that would have done exactly that, add the word “human” in front of the word “sexuality” because it had been pointed out to me by a number of teachers that it would be very difficult to teach biology and some of the other sciences if you could not in fact refer to different sexes because that's how it occurs in nature. You had to be able to talk about that, or it would be very difficult for a teacher to work in the classroom and actually impart that knowledge.

Those two changes have been brought in plus an additional clause that's added in that says: by the way, if this is an incidental or indirect reference to religion, religious themes, human sexuality, or sexual orientation, it wouldn't have effect in the larger picture. What we would have, then, is a parental opt-out section – it would still be in the human rights act, not in the School Act – which would still require notification to parents or guardians about the type of instruction although it's now saying: subject matter which would primarily and explicitly deal with religion, human sexuality, and sexual orientation. It would still require that teachers, on the written request of those parents and guardians, would exclude the student from the instruction. They would provide something alternative. Just to clarify, the subject matter primarily and explicitly dealing with religion, sexuality, and sexual orientation would not apply where this was an incidental or indirect reference.

That amendment does not fix what is in this bill. I think, in fact, that to me this clause is a perversion of what was intended by the human rights legislation and even a perversion of what I think was originally intended by the minister and by the government, which was to strengthen the administrative abilities of the Human Rights Commission and to add in sexual orientation. I cannot countenance this section.

I have gone back into the communities that I deal with and have said: what do you want me to do? Essentially, what I got back from them were instructions saying: “Don't do this. Don't support this.” Here it is:

While I would like to see [sexual orientation] in, I do not want to see it in at the cost of the opt out clause . . . By expressly including sexual orientation in the legislation they are taking back with one hand what they purport to give with the other.

9:30

I think that it also gives a larger message. You know, it was bad enough that we gave a message that the province, although it would begrudgingly offer the service of protection on the grounds of sexual orientation, particularly around housing, employment, and access to government programs and services, there was a sort of megamessage there, “But we don't really like it very much,” because they wouldn't write it into the legislation. Now they've done that, but they've given it with one hand and taken it away with a much larger hand to say essentially with this clause that it's okay to discriminate, that it's okay to have children not learn about certain kinds of people. I just cannot support it, and I think many other Albertans can't support it.

As a result, Mr. Chairman, I have a subamendment, which is at the table, and I would ask that it be distributed at this time.

The Chair: Okay. This amendment is now known as sub-amendment SA1.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, please continue.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Indeed, this is a subamendment, and this is part of what I had to get organized, with the co-operation of Parliamentary Counsel, in no time flat here tonight. Thank you, everyone, for co-operating with that.

Looking at the government amendment, which came in two sections – section A, which was amending section 9, and section B, which is amending section 16, a different section – my sub-amendment SA1 completely strikes out section 9. With that, I hope what I am doing is removing that opt-out section.

Some of the material that I've been reading in support of that are things like the Sheldon Chumir foundation, and they're talking about the legal test for what counts as religion. What we're talking about here is that a family could decide that a student, a child, was not to be exposed to certain concepts, including a concept under that subheading of religion, of many different things. There's been some argument back and forth in this Assembly in question period about: well, of course, you know, it couldn't be mistaken to be such and such and so and so. Well, yes, it can. If you go out onto the street and say to somebody, “What exactly does the word ‘religion’ mean to you, and how do you see it playing out in the context of the School Act?" you would get as many different answers as people that you spoke to.

I was looking for the legal definition, and in my reading through a number of things, I actually ran across something that will serve that purpose for me in the Sheldon Chumir document, that was sent around to all of us, that is dated May 8. They say:

The wording and potential scope of the proposed opt-out is far too broad and vague. Given that the legal test for what counts as religion, which has been consistently pronounced by the Supreme Court of Canada, is "sincerely held belief," there can be absolutely no doubt that all sorts of things could be construed as dealing "explicitly with religion."

They go on to say:

The sincere Creationist believes that much of science, including evolution, deals explicitly with religion in a highly offensive way by contradicting the word of God. They will want to withdraw their children from at least some science instruction and Bill 44 invites them to do so.

I think they have put that very well.

That goes forward under a number of the other headings that are here. I mean, there's an entire discussion to be had around religion and parents withdrawing their children from curriculum or teaching or instruction based on religion, which, as we've talked about, is a sincerely held belief, but also around sexual orientation and human sexuality. I was talking about the sexual orientation because, you know, here we have it now written in as a protected grounds, and then you turn around and say: but, you know, we can withdraw a number of children out of those classes so that they don't come to understand what this is about, that there are people who have a different sexual orientation on the face of this earth and that they have certain protected rights, as do many others.

We end up with children that are not taught analysis and critical thinking and an understanding that there is a diversity in our world and that you need to learn to work with them in many cases. You can choose to absent yourself from many things, but we all live in this world. We're all moving about on its streets, and there are some things that you need to learn how to work with. To simply remove a child from a class is not going to help them.

I've read through a number of education documents, letters from teachers, e-mails, other policy documents, even the School Act itself, which talks about, you know, looking for situations which can challenge children and push them beyond their normal bounds of comfort so that they do learn that there are different things out there and find coping mechanisms for that and are challenged to think and to be critical and to analyze the material that's given to them, learn to cope with that and work within it.

I think it's important that we do take this section 9 completely out of this bill. It is the one large anomaly that is part of this proposed Bill 44 right from the get-go. We're talking about, you know, writing in sexual orientation, as the Supreme Court directed the province to do some 11 years ago now. The rest of what's in this act is a number of changes: moving this from a commission to more of a tribunal way of dealing with things, some discussions around the titles that are being used, you know, substituting tribunal for panel, and some other changes like that.

Having this opt-out section, I've been told by a number of people, was some sort of a swap, a deal in the Conservative caucus, and that may well be. That may well be what that caucus is happy with, but I don't think that gives us good legislation. As I said before, this could have a very, very far-reaching effect on allocation of budget resources, prioritization of who gets money and for what. Even at the most basic level the administration that is required of an individual school to deal with what's anticipated in this clause is an additional resource. Additional money will have to be pulled away from other student-focused learning activities to pay for the administrator that has to go through their curriculum every September and say: okay; these are the people that we're going to have to notify that there are religious themes or a religious connotation or meaning or could offend some people that have sincerely held beliefs in these classes. These are the people that need to be notified about sexual orientation appearing possibly in, you know, the poetry section of the English class, and these are the people that have to be notified about human sexuality. Then every time the school contemplates having a special speaker come in at Christmas or anything else that the school wants to do but is not strictly according to the curriculum they've already notified people about, they have to go through that all over again.

That's no small amount of resource that gets dedicated to notifying a bunch of people about what they're already doing. Here's where, you know, I'm told: well, this is already happening in Alberta, so it's no big deal. Well, if it's already happening in Alberta, then don't put it in this act because this is not where it should be. Aside from the fact that it shouldn't be happening, it should not be in this act.

I think I've stated pretty clearly and with some force and passion why I think it's important that section 9, that is commonly being referred to as a parental opt-out section or a parental rights section, should be removed from this act.

Let me just state in closing that I think that if parents, families, whatever your family unit is, want to, you know, discuss issues at home and have a certain focus on the way they lead their life, that's great. But when we're talking about a public education system funded by a province, by all the taxpayers, where we have a standard and an expectation that students will go out into the world, that we will have a reputation outside of our borders about what the standard of education is – and that's a standard; it means that everybody has that – and then we bring into play something like this, it's just wrong, and I think that it hurts the province. Let me be clear. I'm not saying that parents deciding to educate their children in a certain way is wrong. I think putting it into this act is very wrong.

Thank you for the opportunity to move that amendment.

The Chair: On subamendment SA1, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I want to speak strongly in favour of this particular subamendment because I believe strongly that section 9 of this bill should be struck. I think it is badly conceived, badly drafted, that it's been badly executed and it should be tossed out. That, in effect, I think, is what this subamendment would do.

In some ways it's ridiculous that this issue has come up at all in 2009 in Alberta. I feel like we're back decades ago or even a century or more ago, not in 21st century Canada. Yet here we are debating issues that had been settled long ago and were nonissues until this strange section 9 appeared in what otherwise would have been a good-news bill for the government. I think we're going to end up spending a lot of the evening talking about sex and religion. Those are two topics that tend to stir up pretty strong passions, so I'm looking forward to lots of engagement from people. I can tell you that I'm feeling pretty engaged in this topic right now.

Well, let's start with the sex, Mr. Chairman, the issue in section 9 and in the proposed amendment that talks about – let's see; I've got to get the wording right here – human sexuality or sexual orientation. Now, I'm glad the word "human" is in there because it was a pretty glaring problem before. It's interesting that they chose to put in the word “human” because I think it reflects how poorly drafted this particular piece of legislation was and is unless we turf section 9.

The way it stands right now is that any kind of reference to sexual reproduction could be caught up in this legislation. Now, this amendment bringing in the word “human” would narrow that down, but frankly it should all be tossed out. I had issues brought to me, and sometimes with great humour, by teachers saying: “My goodness. Now we can’t talk about sexual reproduction at all as this bill is proposed.” I had one of them speak to me. Their son had just finished grade 9 biology, and they learned there about plants, Mr. Chairman. And guess what? Plants in their own special way have sex. Plants get it on. There are male plants and there are female plants, and actually there are some plants that are both male and female. I know that may be shocking and perverse and outrageous to some people in this province. [interjections] Yeah, they’re hermaphrodites, in fact, as the Leader of the Opposition just mentioned to me. I thought that same thing.

Now, I’m not as informed on this as the Leader of the Opposition because he’s a medical doctor, but it happens that I have a printout on hermaphrodites. See? Mr. Chairman, if this bill is carried to its logical conclusion, this kind of stuff potentially could be turfed out of schools. So let me just remind people what hermaphroditic means.

A hermaphrodite is an organism having both . . .
Hold your breath.

. . . male and female reproductive organs. In many species, hermaphroditism . . .

And I don’t know if my pronunciation is correct there.

. . . is a common part of the life-cycle, enabling a form of sexual reproduction in which partners are not separated into distinct male and female types of individual. Hermaphroditism . . .

I won’t go into the Greek origins of the word.

. . . most commonly occurs in invertebrates, although it is also found in some fish, and to a lesser degree in other vertebrates.

Now, I won’t go on. There are lots of pages here, but actually the reason that I thought about this is that I was taught about hermaphrodites in school, Mr. Chairman. It’s true. I think it was maybe junior high. Maybe it was high school. I think that was actually an important thing to learn. I’m getting strange looks. Maybe there are people in here who didn’t have that same kind of education, but here in Alberta where I went to public school we were taught about hermaphrodites.

Now, I think we might as well face the truth, though, that not all plants are hermaphrodites. There are lots of ways for plants to reproduce, Mr. Chairman. This is just basic information that would be available to kids, and under the way this bill had been drafted, potentially kids would be pulled out of classes for this. This is just a bio review of plants, plant reproduction. The first sentence: “Plants can reproduce asexually or sexually.” It goes on: “Sexual reproduction in plants involves male and female plant organs. The female structures involved in sexual reproduction are the stigma, the style and the ovary,” and on and on it goes. Other material is all over the place which is fundamental to our teachings of science.

Now, this is only dealing with plant reproduction, Mr. Chairman. We haven’t even mentioned animal reproduction.

Mrs. Forsyth: Oh, no. Animals have sex, too?

Dr. Taft: Yes. I know. It’s quite something to consider, but animals do reproduce sexually. As one of the articles aimed at kids says – I don’t know if I can find it here. I won’t dwell on this, Mr. Chairman, but I think the point here is that the fundamental point of this part of this bill is just misguided. We get the word “human” brought in, so at least – at least – we narrowed things down that much.

But it still raises the question: where is this coming from? Where is this anxiety about human sexuality coming from? I think, more specifically, why did it suddenly emerge in this caucus today or this winter? There’s certainly been lots of talk about the rise of the far right in this caucus, and that’s led a number of people to do a little bit of research. Mr. Chairman, one of the things we found was a speech given by the Member for Foothills-Rocky View before he was actually elected, and I think this speech probably tells much about the spirit behind section 9 of this bill. It doesn’t matter how heavily amended it is, unless we toss it out, as the subamendment proposes, it’s a dismal thing.

I’m going to read you a little bit about this speech. It was delivered to the World Congress of Families. I won’t give the member’s name, but he sits currently as the Member for Foothills-Rocky View. It was delivered before he was elected, so I believe it’s from about ’99. It’s about 10 years ago. I believe he has held to these views, and I think these views have actually shaped this piece of legislation. The speech goes on and on. I won’t read every word of it, but I think there are a handful of key points to be made.

One is about the speech’s references, multiple, to the idea of the natural family. I’ll just give you a couple of examples of that. I’m quoting here from the speech.

Recently, however, the moral dimension of liberal democracy – and the family’s crucial role in it – has been rediscovered by social scientists. This new body of social science recognizes the importance of the natural family to a properly functioning democracy.

It goes on in several places referring to the idea of the natural family. I’ll go on further down. The general idea of the speech is that modern society is being threatened by the move to give gays and lesbians equal rights and by the feminists, so I think that’s the context of this. If I wanted to read the whole speech, everybody would get it, but I won’t subject people to that.

The speechmaker, the hon. Member for Foothills-Rocky View, speaking in 1999, is opposed to these developments. He wants to protect what he calls the natural family, which is an interesting position. I’m going to read a little bit here. He calls the feminists and the gay rights people the new egalitarians. He says:

If the rediscovery of the social value of the family is good news, there is bad news on another front. There is another stream of modernity – represented primarily by the gender feminists and gay rights movement – that target the natural family as public enemy number one. According to the feminist-gay gospel, the great evils of this world are sexism and homophobia, and their breeding ground is the traditional family. Hence, the gay-feminist project has become a social engineering project – to use the coercive power of the state to undermine the existing family and to reconstruct in its place their gender-equal utopias.

I’ll stop quoting for a moment there. Just imagine a gender-equal utopia. My, oh my. Now, that’s a threatening concept, isn’t it, Mr. Chairman? I imagine that’s the kind of thinking that’s behind section 9 of this bill.

Now, I’m going to refer back to this speech, but I’m going to go to something else. I want to address the idea of a natural family because there is this sense that somehow there is a natural family and that there’s only one true family, and that’s a male and a female and kids. But I think the Member for Foothills-Rocky View should probably read some of his western Canadian history. I know he’s actually originally from the United States, but he’s also an academic and a well-read one. I draw his attention, for example, to a recent publication by the University of Alberta Press. It’s an academic publication. It's called The Importance of Being Monogamous, and the subtitle is Marriage and Nation Building in Western Canada to 1915. It is by a woman, Mr. Chairman. Her name is Sarah Carter. What the book outlines, or more than outlines actually – it's very extensive and carefully researched – is the clash of different forms of family. It outlines the very extensive evidence that there were other forms of family in western Canada before this idea of just the nuclear family took hold.

Let's see. I can pick out perhaps, oh, a few quotes. I'm just flipping through the book here, Mr. Chairman. On page 5:

In Western Canada . . . there existed diverse forms of marriage among Aboriginal people, including monogamy, polygamy, and same-sex marriage, and no marriage needed to be for life as divorce was easily obtained and remarriage was accepted and expected.

I'll stop the quote there. But imagine that. There was more than one form of natural family. Or perhaps in the views of some this was not natural. Perhaps the First Nations people before the 1880s were living some kind of unnatural existence. I don't know. Perhaps the Member for Foothills-Rocky View, when he does some more studying, would be able to fill us in a little bit more.

I'll just read a few other quotes here, Mr. Chairman. How about this one? On page 32 of this book:

Some European fur traders wholeheartedly adopted the diversity of Aboriginal marriage law and had a series of wives, or several at the same time. Many fur traders left a wife behind in England or Scotland and at the same time had a wife in the west. Some had several wives in the west.

It goes on at great length. I'll stop that quote there.

Now, this next one is a particularly interesting case. It's on page 37 of this book. Do you know why it jumped out at me? Because it involves a person who was born in 1831 in Fort Edmonton, and Fort Edmonton in 1831 was about a hundred yards from where we're standing right now, very close to home, folks. I'm on page 37. Here's how it goes:

One example was Red River resident John F. Grant, born at Fort Edmonton in 1831, although raised by his relatives in Trois-Rivières following the death of his mother . . . He returned to the west at the age of sixteen and before his death in 1907 he had seven wives and at least twenty-one children.

Now, that is something to contemplate, isn't it, Mr. Chairman?

It goes on:

His earlier wives were from various Aboriginal nations and his last two were Métis.

And on and on he goes.

My point, Mr. Chairman, is pretty clear, that there are many forms of family, and this idea that there's just one natural family, which is espoused at great length by the Member for Foothills-Rocky View, I think needs to be treated with some deep, deep skepticism. But I believe it's the thinking behind section 9 of this particular act.

It's interesting, as you go through the book, that there's a discussion of the influence of the Mormon church on attitudes towards marriage and by other groups as well: Doukhobors, Ukrainians, various others. Many forms of marriage were brought to western Canada, and they didn't all fit the ideal of the natural family, but they were families. And you know what? In some of these cases the notion of an illegitimate child didn't even exist because every child was legitimate. Every child was cared for by somebody. It might have been an aunt or a grandparent, but every child was part of the community.

I'm going to return now to some other points made by the Member for Foothills-Rocky View in his speech. He talks at length about moral relativism, and he says, "The new role of moral relativism in the redefinition of human rights is obvious in such issues as abortion and gay rights." Then he goes on.

Here is the great paradox in this "new improved" version of human rights. Whereas human rights once stood for something objective and eternal, now it stands for the subjective and the temporal. Whereas once human rights pointed toward what is right always and everywhere, regardless of government policy or public opinion; now it means "what I want, here and now."

Interestingly, I think the notion of human rights gets turned around to resist human rights, so the rights of, for example, all citizens to marry somebody they love suddenly get resisted through a perversion of the idea of human rights. That's what I think we're watching here.

He also speaks at length about the role of the courts and how the courts are, in fact, a big part of the problem. I think that's particularly relevant here because what's actually prompted this piece of legislation to come forward at all is a ruling of the Supreme Court of Canada, which most Canadians think was a good ruling. I know people in gay marriages, Mr. Chairman, and they deserve the equal rights of all of us. But when I read this speech, you know, you get the idea that the courts shouldn't have made this ruling.

I'm going to quote again from his speech. It says:

A final distinguishing characteristic of the New Egalitarians is their love affair with non-representative, non-accountable institutions: courts, rights bureaucracies and recently the United Nations. Their recourse to the coercive authority of non-accountable institutions is not by accident.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo on sub-amendment SA1.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chair. It is a privilege to rise and speak to the subamendment which appears to have brought some sanity and some wisdom back to this legislation, and it would actually make this bill a whole lot better. We can see that striking out this whole section 9 would take out the essential piece of the act which has been called the parental opt-out clause or the return Alberta to the 1940s clause or whatever clause you want to use. It's simply one of those clauses that has been put in there. I'll read it because every time I read it, it actually still shocks, stuns, and disturbs me that this is happening in the year 2009 here in Alberta, here in Canada, where we're part of the free world that has adopted science, has adopted a progressive agenda, so to speak.

I look at these words. Well, what the minister was proposing to do was strike out "explicitly with religion, sexuality or sexual orientation" and substitute "primarily and explicitly with religion, human sexuality or sexual orientation." Well, let's look at that first and just sort of look at the merits of that change. Yes, I'll agree with the members that have spoken from this side of the House so far that human sexuality, well, yes, that is at least a basic element to this bill that should have been included. Again, like the Member for Edmonton-Riverview noted, it just goes to how poorly drafted and how badly thought out the entire bill was to actually have made that mistake in the first place.

But I look at this, and don't get me wrong. I was a lawyer, not accused of ever sitting on the Supreme Court. Nonetheless, when I try to look at these words, "explicitly with religion," "primarily and explicitly with religion," again, that's just lawyerspeak. How it's going to dramatically affect . . .

The Chair: May I interrupt you one second?

Hon. members, please, if you carry on a conversation, there's a place out there, the Confederation Room, or if you do it in here, please lower the level.

Hon. member, please continue.

Mr. Hehr: Well, I read that, and essentially it doesn't make that much of a difference to me. This is still being enshrined in an act. It's still "primarily and explicitly." Well, what does that mean? It's open to interpretation, as are the terms "religion," "human sexuality," or "sexual orientation." Like many things that are of scope and substance, religion and human sexuality and sexual orientation are broad-based topics that in an open, modern society take on a variety of dimensions and interpretations by many individuals, groups, and anyone in between. Simply put, they can come up with a whole host of ideas of what those terms mean. So by simply adding those two things to it, I don't believe they adequately do any justice to the bill or change the thrust or substance of what we are subjecting the Alberta population to.

Then I even see more additions put forward by the minister.

This section does not apply to incidental or indirect references to religion, religious themes, human sexuality or sexual orientation in a course of study, educational program, instruction or exercises or in the use of instructional materials.

I'll tell you what. If that paragraph isn't open to a legal interpretation, having people chomping at the bit to go try this legislation in 47 different ways, I really haven't seen a paragraph that looks like that, then. Good luck on this having any sort of clarification whatsoever to the bill. I don't know whether it confuses it more, but it certainly doesn't help the entire situation. The entire exercise here has been wasted. The only sane and sensible thing to do is to move to the motion made by the Member for Edmonton-Centre that can amend amendment A1; that is, striking out section 9 as it exists. That seems to be the only thing that we as reasonable people, which I hope we are, in this Legislature can do in a reasonable society.

They were interesting, some of the comments made by the Member for Edmonton-Riverview. He asked: "Where is this legislation coming from? Who might be asking for this type of legislation to be done?" You know, it struck me. I sort of thought to myself: "Who might be calling for this legislation? Who—maybe from above or below or something like that—might be influencing the current, I guess, Legislature or government at play here?" Really, the only thing I can see here that has come into play is that somehow Ernest Manning and William Aberhart have sent their messages down to the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit and have played a trick with many members on this side of the House and said: we are returning to 1945; we are returning to 1945. [interjections] It's a seance.

Those individuals, it's well known, have a play that was written about seances and how they would, you know, maybe conjure up ideas of how faith and their vision of the world and their vision for Alberta would continue on for the long haul.

An Hon. Member: Permanently.

Mr. Hehr: Permanently. I know.

And this looks like that vision that they had in the early '40s of keeping Alberta, I guess, as a sort of enclave by itself which really wasn't interested in learning the modern ways of science and religion, that we would become a place where ideas were stifled, that really true knowledge really wasn't warranted or we won't recognize other ways except for the models of, I guess, a narrow Christian sect in a one-horse town with only one way of praying and one way of doing things. Well, it looks like that could have happened because, really, that is the only thing that could happen.

You look back to where 1971 was where you really have the emergence of the Progressive Conservative Party. You have people like Ron Ghitter and parliamentarians like Peter Lougheed who said:

"You know, let's throw off the shackles of this type of thinking. Let's get Alberta into a modern world, a modern way of understanding, a modern way of embracing this world view, and to really take Alberta from where it was." I look back to the way it was. At least on the social conservative side of things it was seen by other progressive states as being somewhat backward, okay? I know that's what many people have said, that Alberta at that time was somewhat, I guess, closed minded.

That's why individuals like Peter Lougheed, who when he studied at the University of Alberta—by all accounts at that time a very liberal law school—came out with some of these ideas of moving a progressive social agenda that really saw people embrace different colours, different creeds, different religions, and more of a recognition that we weren't a one-horse town with one steeple and one preacher and we all prayed to the same god and we all married our high school sweethearts and we all just went about our business. Yeah. I guess they realized that, no, things change and the world has changed and the people of Alberta are going to change with it.

So what I can only think that again brings me back to how this legislation got passed is because it's truly a turn-back from where this party was in 1971 even. You look at things coming out of that party at that time were truly progressive pieces of legislation, you know, written by Senator Ghitter. He wrote on tolerance and understanding, a great piece of work that recognizes human differences, recognizes the compassion and caring of all members of the community and their contribution to it, and recognition that society should embrace science and learning and understanding in the classroom. You know, those documents in those early days referenced a learning. You saw in the recent Canadian Press article where Senator Ghitter spoke out and said: "You're right. Something's been lost here." He was actually embarrassed by what had happened.

All I can really say—and I alluded to this the last time I spoke—is that this is, I guess, what you get when you have a governing party that is neither progressive, nor is it conservative. It has become a flag of convenience, I guess, for many people to wave in hopes they'll get elected, and they go in the back rooms and they trade one argument for another and it comes out to some sort of mishmash approach of no direction, no idea of what actually Progressive Conservatism means. It's essentially the big tent party at work. It doesn't know what the heck is going on. So on things like this you get a Social Credit-like legislation that comes into play.

Okay, let's face it: in no uncertain terms this takes us back a long, long, long time ago in a galaxy far away, to quote a famous movie in the 1980s. Let's face it; it does. I think some of the more progressive members—it not only was Senator Ghitter but other members who had been of that party and who have also spoken out. [interjection] Did he? I don't know if he did, but other people have come out.

Anyway, I'm sure I'll get to speak on this more, but that's the only thing I can say. A seance occurred. Ernest and other people who were around a long time ago and who I thought weren't ruling the province are back, and they're having their way, and they're taking Alberta back a few years with this.

Mr. Mason: Bible Bill.

Mr. Hehr: Yeah, Bible Bill Aberhart. Exactly. The Sunday night radio show will be back. Maybe Premier Stelmach may wish to do it, or maybe someone else would—I'm not sure—but it'll be back on the airwaves soon.

Thank you very much for your time here tonight. I'm sure I'll have some more to add a little later.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Mr. Fawcett: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chair. I wanted to speak to this subamendment because I believe that the amendment brought forward by the hon. Minister of Culture and Community Spirit is a positive step towards providing clarity to this section of the bill. I believe that any talk about getting rid of this section and the heightened rhetoric around some of the issues takes us away from what the essence of this particular section in the bill is about. The key issue is: is parental choice and authority over their own children's education a courtesy we afford parents through policy regulation or the School Act, or is it the fundamental right that a parent owns and which properly belongs entrenched in our human rights act?

In my mind, any discussion about how this may or may not affect teachers' ability to facilitate classroom discussions or the administrative processes of school boards is, quite frankly, irrelevant. Like any fundamental right that is enshrined in the act, current practices, systems, and norms must adjust to be in compliance with the rights that are enshrined in the act. It would be a sad day in our province's history when we decided to start cherry-picking which fundamental rights are to be protected or not.

I understand that enshrining something as a fundamental right in the Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Act is not without controversy. Our society is comprised of diverse individuals, and we are not going to all share the same set of uniform values. In fact, it is this act that is charged with protecting those minority groups that do have different values. I recognize that some might not agree with the parental rights and that parental rights are as fundamental as other rights that are enumerated in the act. I also recognize that for some, in accordance with their value system, parental rights are just as important or more important than some of the other rights that are enshrined in the act.

The bottom line, Mr. Chair, is that parents play a fundamental role in the development of our young people. While our public education system is also fundamental to the development of our future citizens, young people spend less than 15 per cent of their time under the age of 18 in a classroom. This puts a huge responsibility on parents to guide, direct, and oversee the development of their own children.

As I was taught, both in school and by my parents, rights and responsibilities go hand in hand. You cannot ensure effective responsibility without the appropriate rights and protections, and vice versa you cannot be afforded certain rights without fulfilling the appropriate responsibilities. Based on the above reasoning, I believe that this clause is as important as any other within the act.

Even further to that, Mr. Chair, there was mention of the United Nations. I can't remember in what context, but if you go to the United Nations declaration of the rights of the child, principle 7 states that "the best interests of the child shall be the guiding principle of those responsible for his education and guidance; that responsibility lies in the first place with his parents."

The UN convention on the rights of the child, article 14, section 2:

States Parties shall respect the rights and duties of the parents and, when applicable, legal guardians, to provide direction to the child in the exercise of his or her right in a manner consistent with the evolving capacities of the child.

Article 18, section 1:

States Parties shall use their best efforts to ensure recognition of the principle that both parents have common responsibilities for the upbringing and development of the child. Parents or, as the case may be, legal guardians, have the primary responsibility for the upbringing and development of the child. The best interests of the child will be their basic concern.

Then article 29, section 1:

States Parties agree that the education of the child shall be directed to . . .

(c) The development of respect for the child's parents, his or her own cultural identity, language and values, for the national values of the country in which the child is living, the country from which he or she may originate, and for civilizations different from his or her own.

Notice that it does say at the beginning of that section: "the development of respect for the child's parents."

Mr. Chair, I do believe that if you look at all of this, this is a fundamental right within our society and, therefore, should be enshrined in this piece of legislation.

Additionally, I simply do not agree with the sentiment that because a similar clause already exists in the School Act, this section is simply not necessary. If this type of reasoning would be acceptable, there would be no need to specifically enshrine sexual orientation into the act as we have already for a decade had protections under the Supreme Court decision. Simply, that just does not wash with me, Mr. Chair. Again, I submit to all the opposition parties whether they think it's appropriate to cherry-pick fundamental human rights, which I believe is what they're doing.

With those comments, that's the reason why I will not be supporting this subamendment and why I believe that the amendment brought forward by the hon. minister is appropriate to further specifically define what the intent of the legislation is.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Under 29(2)(a) am I allowed to ask . . .

The Chair: No. No.

Mr. Mason: Oh, we're in committee. Okay.

Well, I'm going to speak again, but I can't let that particular speech pass without a few comments, Mr. Chairman. The hon. member is saying that the opposition wants to cherry-pick fundamental human rights, but I submit to you that he doesn't understand the concept of human rights at all. Human rights are not something that exist, that are handed down to us; they are something that society as a whole adopts and chooses to make a right because people need to be protected.

Now, people on the basis of sexual orientation are discriminated against. There's no question about it. They're discriminated against for jobs. They're discriminated against for housing. They are discriminated against and bullied at school. There is a reason why we provide and extend that right to people, because there is an actual situation that those people face in their daily lives from which they need some protection. Society is not perfect. Society has prejudices. They go away with education and over time, but in the meantime we need to have protection for that. The same thing applies, for example, to women, who have also experienced discrimination. People with disabilities require some protection because they are discriminated against.

There is no evidence in this particular case that children whose parents have different religious views or different moral views are in some way discriminated against. In answer to questions today in the House the minister was unable to give an example of any particular instance of discrimination which required protection in this case.

I would like to ask the hon. member: if he thinks this is a fundamental human right and we are cherry-picking and choosing not to apply it, why are we not providing a basic human right for children in schools against bullying? We could do that. Or if students have certain disabilities or special needs and the school system does not provide adequate facilities or programs for them, we could protect that as a right and say: those children have a right to those programs and those facilities. This act is not doing so.

To suggest that there are these rights that existed before this act was introduced is absurd. What has happened here is that a particular group in the government caucus has enforced a particular approach or a particular view because they choose and they want to make this a right. They do that for certain particular reasons, and the pros and cons of that can be debated here. The very suggestion that we are cherry-picking human rights and that in some fashion the rights that the government is trying to extend in this act existed before and that we are denying them is absurd. This is the political agenda of a small, far-right faction of the Conservative caucus.

Across the United States fundamentalists and evangelical Conservatives have attempted to impose this very type of approach, and they have failed. They have been prevented because it's not a human right, Mr. Chairman. It's not a fundamental human right at all. It is an attempt to impose a certain view in the school system at the expense of a broad scientific education, which I believe all children are entitled to regardless of whether or not their parents wish to take that away from them under the guise of parental rights.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East on amendment SA1.

Ms Pastoor: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chair. I would like to weigh in on this amendment, and I support it being removed. My remarks aren't going to be nearly as academic, probably, as some that we've heard and that I was actually fascinated with. However, I've listened to a lot of stuff that has been going on since this has been presented, and I still can't get it through my head why it's necessary to put it in this act when, in fact, it is protected under the School Act. I can't get it through my head why it's even being protected under the School Act.

Clearly, I'm a little older than a lot of people in the House. I don't perhaps go back as far as Aberhart; however, what I remember is that even when my children were growing up – I know, certainly, that probably the first sexual education I ever had was in the schoolyard. It wasn't in the schoolroom. It was in the schoolyard. The conversation was in the schoolyard, and the kid that had National Geographic was the kid that knew it all. How can you possibly protect our babies from what goes on in the schoolyard? Horrifying. Horrifying. But what happened was that we could go home and talk to our parents.

One of the things that I guess I learned was perhaps a basic thing right out of the Bible: judge not lest ye be judged. One of the expressions that we had in our house – I am the oldest of six kids – when somebody would tell the other one what to do was: who made you God?

As parents we have to allow our children to grow. Yes, we are responsible for them, and yes, we can guide them, but we can't guide them by protecting them from every single thing. Let them go out. Let them go to the schoolyard. Let them see National Geographic, for Pete's sake. Then let them bring it home, and then let us talk about it.

One of the things that has been brought up on the academic side was about feminists. God forbid we should have a feminist. I'm the oldest of six kids. I was so fortunate to be raised in a genderless family. I'm the oldest, there were four boys, and then my sister is at the other end. If it was your turn to do the lawn, it had nothing to do with your sex. It had to do with that it was your turn for on the chart. If it was your turn to do the dishes, if it was your turn to babysit, if it was your turn to do anything, if your name came up on the chart, it was your job. It had nothing to do with your sex. As far as being a feminist, it was just something that I automatically grew up with, and to this day I'm very fortunate – at least I believe I'm very fortunate – to have grown up in a very open-minded family and also a family that could discuss.

Nothing shocked my parents, at least openly. I'm sure that they were shocked at some of the things that we brought home, but it was never shown openly. It was discussed. Again, it was always: judge not lest ye be judged. This is what we do; this is what we believe. You do what's right. You cannot judge what other people do as wrong.

When I went to high school, I went to a private school, and a goodly portion, well, 10 per cent, of the school population was not of the religion of the school that I went to. We had a large number of Jewish kids in our classrooms. It was interesting to note something, again, that I couldn't get through my head at any point in time. In Winnipeg there was a beach, which was a very important and popular beach, that did not allow Jewish people in up until 1961. So I learned what prejudice was. I learned how wrong it was. I learned how wrong it was to judge someone else until you've walked in their shoes.

Sexual orientation and sexuality. As I said, you know, the best stuff came off the school grounds. Certainly, we learned about the birds and bees in school. We learned how it all worked. Now the kids in school can be taught 10 different ways to do it as long as they don't get caught, and here's how you don't get caught. That wasn't what I learned. However, it appears to be what's out there today. So what? Let your kid come home and tell you what's going on. You know what's going on. Talk to them. Sit down and talk to them. How many times we have seen ads on TV, particularly the ones that go with drugs: talk to your kids. If you're not talking to them, what difference does it make if they're in the classroom or not? I just can't get this kind of thinking through my head.

We are, I think, clearly moving, particularly in the western world, from a strong Christianity base, and we're moving more into secularization. We're moving more into secular societies. I think probably as a fundamental, maybe basic question we should be asking: why is this happening? Why is God allowing this secularism to happen? Why is he allowing what some people consider to be horrible, horrible things to happen? Our question probably, as I had mentioned, would be: why is this happening? I think that probably an answer, perhaps, as a Christian is that we can't know the ways of God. Who are we to know? We should be trusting to do what we believe is right. No matter who you recognize as God, whether it's a higher power, whether it's a Supreme Being, whether it's whatever word you put on God – and there are an increasing number of atheists in our society. We have to wonder why society is changing as it is, but we have to do what's right and not necessarily always perhaps question the ways of God.

I know that this was a little bit more basic conversation than perhaps has been at a different, elevated level, but I still simply cannot get it through my head why anybody would want to take away the joy of learning from any single person on the face of this earth.

The Chair: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise in support of this amendment. It's a very key issue for the bill, clearly one that we cannot support without the removal of section 9. Perhaps as much as anything what many Albertans have told me is that this aspect of the bill reflects a profound lack of confidence in the system, a system that we've created to balance the rights of individuals, the rights of families with the responsibility to provide the most abundant and rich and science-based as well as faith-based education.

I guess the surprising thing for me with this bill has been the perceived need on that side of the House or perhaps elements outside the House entirely that want to see a legalism imposed in the case of any perceived lack of consideration of particular individuals and parents, in this case their right to determine what their child might be exposed to or not. The provision for the parents to opt out has always been there. I guess the question many Albertans are asking me is: what is the impetus to make this a more legalistic approach such that if there's a failure of a teacher or a failure of a school or a failure of a board to acknowledge certain elements of religion or sexual orientation or human sexuality, there would be fines, there would be penalties, there would be potential lawsuits associated with this or at the very least a very embarrassing public criticism of teachers, of schools, of a failure of responsibility and a moral misconduct by a particular school, teacher, or board?

Among other issues, people have raised the question of why this government has lost confidence in the ability of schools and teachers and even in parents to supervise their child and the education they're getting and to provide the climate in which issues are discussed and that if there are conflicts with what people believe at home, they be open and discussed and resolved. Clearly, our history has shown us that by suppressing freedom, by suppressing the open discussion of issues and encouraging dialogue, encouraging different points of view, whether it is on sexual orientation or gender or colour or age, we have to be able to hear those discussions in order to become balanced, nondiscriminatory individuals who can engage the world as it is, with all the range of belief systems and understandings of right and wrong and good and bad.

This government has brought upon itself the approbation, I guess I would say, the dislike and a feeling of being offended by those custodians of our educational system that we have given the responsibility to educate our children. It really staggers me that such an inclusion was necessary and that this government was blind to the implications of what it was doing in this particular instance when the provisions have always been there for parents who identified issues of real conscience that they could by their own will and by their proper communication with the school exclude their child from issues that they felt the child was not ready for or that were contrary to their belief.

That's one dimension of why this must necessarily be amended and this section removed. It will never be supported by this side of the House, and it will never be supported by a large number of Albertans. It will create an unmeasurable impact, in fact, on the culture of education, on the culture of our society, where people are feeling already a sense that there is an intimidation extant in this province around different ideas: political ideas, social ideas, sexuality issues. There is already a chill and an intimidation factor that I've heard from many sources. Whether it's professionals or lay people, religious or nonreligious, there is a sense in this province that to speak dissent is to speak against the state in a most profound way and to undermine the state.

This is a government that has lost touch with the people and lost a sense of what balanced society, open and free speech, responsibility and rights have to do with good citizenship. We have demoralized and, I would say, undermined the democratic process to such an extent in this province, and the example, clearly, is the last election, where only 2 out of 5 people were moved to vote; 2 out of 5 people felt the system was working; 2 out of 5 people felt that dissent and critique were valid and respected in this province.

We have become a culture of sheep, and it's partly because of this kind of philosophy, that we have to enshrine tighter and tighter controls on people, tighter and tighter limits to freedom. In many ways it's really difficult to accept as a 21st century Albertan and Canadian who wants to see us move into the 21st century, whether it's environmentally or politically or, in this case, from a social and public affairs viewpoint.

Mr. Chairman, this is central. We could spend the whole night on this if we choose to. I think if this government can see the error of this particular section and the unnecessary conflict it's creating and the unnecessary added chill to this province and the educators of this province and simply dismiss this section, allow this amendment to go forward, we could move very quickly through this bill. There are aspects of this bill that are very good. They are enshrining the rights of all citizens, including those with transgender issues, sexual identity issues, and different sexual orientations. But this particular aspect of it is simply unacceptable, and it is not going to be acceptable in this province even if you pass this legislation. It is going to create all kinds of tensions and distrust, a further erosion of our culture in terms of open debate and discussion, and again undermine the trust that we have built up in our education system, in our teachers. There is already a process in place, and we somehow as legislators have taken it upon ourselves to enshrine this in a very punitive way in the human rights code.

I hope members are listening. I hope they're thinking about the potential for resolving this issue fairly quickly tonight. This is the key contentious issue in this bill. By removing this part of the bill, we could very quickly move on. You on the other side of the House would have the fundamental parts of this protected, and the rest of Alberta could move forward with the progressive agenda that many in this province are asking for, including teachers, school boards, some religious groups, and the vast majority of Albertans who do not believe that we should be meddling and enshrining in legislation this kind of common-sense direction for parents and families and schools.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for this opportunity to speak. I look forward to the debate.

The Chair: On subamendment SA1 the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I rise to speak in favour of subamendment SA1, I believe it was. This is very similar to an amendment that we would have introduced had we gotten up first. Of course, it's designed to deal with that which is the fundamental problem with Bill 44, without which there is no way any fair-minded or reasonable person could possibly support the bill.

In essence, Bill 44, without the removal of section 9, is, in my view, a capitulation on the part of the government caucus. It's a capitulation to an overall deference to what is throughout the rest of the province a shrinking sense of narrow-minded and fearful examination of the world.

I do believe that, in fact, the last vestiges, in many respects, of the fearfulness and the discomfort and the lack of respect for diversity that drove this caucus to bring this piece of legislation, particularly this section 9, into the House today – I think that it is more dominant in the government caucus across the way than it is throughout the rest of Alberta. I actually believe that Albertans have moved far beyond that portion of this government caucus which pushed the rest of the government caucus into pursuing this very ill-advised course. Nonetheless, in an attempt to quiet the many, many, many critics, the government came forward with its amendment to Bill 44.

Let me just start by pointing out the many reasons why this amendment doesn't do any of the things that its advocates would suggest that it does. One of the major concerns that has been raised about this very ill-advised, ill-thought-out piece of legislation is the implications to the education system by putting in this parental rights clause and creating chaos from classroom to classroom to classroom across the province. The thought was, basically, that by putting it into the human rights code, begging people to litigate on the issue – that's what happens when you put it in the human rights code – and then putting in this very vague language, of course, we're going to have, without question, a chilling effect on the ability of our educators across the province to expose our children to a balanced education, which consists of critical thinking and analysis of complicated issues.

So the government came forward then with this amendment, which they hoped would clarify the problem so that the teachers would not be fearful of speaking about science, the human rights code, why bullying is bad, so that teachers could actually talk about those things in the classrooms without fear of reprisal. The government thought that maybe we can deal with that problem by bringing in this amendment. It doesn't take a lawyer with many, many years – it doesn't even take a lawyer to understand that with the language that they are adding, “primarily and explicitly,” we could probably spend 15 years before the new human rights tribunal, as they would now like to call it, arguing about what “primarily” means. While we're doing that, we will ensure that teachers across the province fail to teach our kids about the human rights code, about why it's bad to bully people because they're gay, and about large tracks of science. That's why it doesn't help.

Now, the other section in there talks about that it doesn't apply to “incidental or indirect references to religion,” et cetera, et cetera, et cetera. Well again, what is “incidental”? What is “indirect”? I'll tell you. It's another 10 years in front of the Human Rights Commission adjudicating what “incidental” and “indirect” are as opposed to “primary”. So it doesn't actually clarify things. It just begs more lawyers to go out and find more clients to spend more time in front of the human rights tribunal. Meanwhile, teachers aren't teaching what I want my kids to learn and what most Albertans believe their kids have a right to learn, and that includes about the human rights code and about science.

Now, I've mentioned the human rights code several times because I am completely of the view that with or without the changes to the legislation being brought forward tonight by the government, the legislation that they are bringing forward right now could well limit the ability of a teacher to go into a classroom and talk about Bill 44 and talk about the human rights code.

Were the remainder of this legislation to pass, we would have a bill which would say: whereas it is recognized in Alberta as a fundamental principle and as a matter of public policy that all persons are equal in dignity, rights, and responsibilities without regard to race, religious beliefs, colour, gender, physical disability, mental disability, age, ancestry, place of origin, marital status, source of income, family status, or sexual orientation. If this legislation passes, that will be in there, but if section 9 passes, a teacher will not be able to teach the code to the students in Alberta, which is just the most inane outcome that I can possibly imagine, that we would, within the very human rights code that we presumably all support, limit the ability of our teachers to talk about it in the classroom.

Let's be clear. The 10 years of interpretive time-wasting in front of the Human Rights Commission: this legislation will not prevent that. In the meantime, teachers will have to question themselves and their principals and their school boards about whether they can teach their kids about the fact that we are on the verge of finally including sexual orientation in the human rights code. Is that indirect, or is that explicit? Is that primary, or is it inadvertent? I don't know. It's in the human rights code. Presumably, we all think that people are equal on the basis of sexual orientation, but apparently when we read that section in a classroom, we won't mention that part of it because it's a section that includes it, so it might be primary. Who knows? That's why on the face of it this piece of legislation is such an incredible embarrassment.

I was watching TV tonight, and I'm sure many people saw the former chair of our Human Rights Commission, Fil Fraser, who I believe was appointed under former Premier Lougheed, talking about how when this human rights code was introduced, Alberta was a leader in the country on human rights and that now, thanks to this, we will be the last-place province in the country when it comes to promoting human rights in our province. He was very, very dismissive of this bill and what it means.

Now, I also think that we won't actually be spending all of our time in front of the human rights tribunal interpreting what is primary, what is incidental, or whatever the language is. It doesn't really matter. The point is: interpreting all these different weaselly words, trying to deal with the communications and political fallout of this really ill-advised piece of legislation. No. We're also going to be in front of the courts and, ultimately, in front of the Supreme Court of Canada. I actually believe that if this passes, there is a very strong case that this code, this legislation, is itself in breach of section 15 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms in this country, and as a result we are going to spend lots of time having the Supreme Court of Canada ultimately telling us that our human rights code is discriminatory. But, hey, it's Alberta, and we have the freedom to create, even if it is the freedom to create a second-class human rights code.

Now, I want to go to some of the points that have been made over the course of the last several weeks. I'm sure I won't get to all of them in the time that I have.

Mr. Mason: Take 10 more.

Ms Notley: Exactly. But I'm sure we'll have lots of time over the course of the evening.

I want to talk about this concept that particularly the Premier always pulls out: the family, that this is about protecting the family, that the family is the basic unit of everything in the province; the family is the most important building block of all that comes in the province.

Mr. Mason: It's holy.

Ms Notley: The family, indeed, is holy. The family is that which is the most important entity that can possibly exist.

Now, that's fine. I love my family, and I believe all people love their family. But here's a question for you. For that child who is 8 years old or 9 years old who goes into the classroom in I think it's grade 1 or 2 and they learn about the family and community, and that child has two parents of the same sex, is that child's family less of a family? Does that child have to be told to give notice to other kids in the class before she starts talking or he starts talking about his family when the class starts talking about what it means to be in a family, what it means to be in a community?

When they draw those pictures – I'm sure there are lots of parents here who have had their kids go through this. They draw pictures of their families. They give reports in class on what their families are. They talk about what the role of a mom is and the role of a dad and a grandparent. They talk about how families treat each other. This is all part of the curriculum. This is the social development in grade 1 or grade 2. What happens to the child whose family consists of two parents of the same sex? Does that child have to apologize? Does that child have to leave the room? Does that child have to give notice to everybody else in her class that she might talk about her family?

Does that show respect for the family as the family unit? No. What that shows is that the whole spin around the importance of the family is simply that because if you really respected family, you would respect that family comes in a number of different forms, sizes, and shapes. You need to construct a bill that recognizes the rights of all families to be treated equally, but we have not done that here. This is not about recognizing family as that important unit in our society.

Now I'd like to talk about another question, and I've raised this before. What is primarily and explicitly dealing with sexual orientation, and what is incidental or indirect reference to sexual orientation? Here is an example. A child goes to school, a happy child, a very well-adjusted child, very active in school activities, more likely to be sort of grade 7, 8, or 9, very involved in a sports team, maybe involved in some of the community activities that happen at the school, a very engaged kid. One day the kid is walking home, but he's still on the school grounds, and four of his classmates come along and beat him up because he's gay or because they think he's gay.

What does the school do? Well, the next day – if it's my school and if I'm a parent in that school, let me tell you it had better be happening very quickly – the principal and the teachers are very quickly bringing everybody together to talk about why this can't happen, why it shouldn't happen, why it can never happen again. You don't just sit in a room if you want it to be effective. You don't just stand there and say: by the way, we're going to beat you all if this ever happens again. No. The way to make sure this never happens again is to talk about the issue. I believe, then, that that assembly would be an incident of a teacher talking about primarily sexual orientation and that it's really not an incidental or indirect reference. It's a very clear reference to sexual orientation.

What happens? Does the teacher have to wait 48 hours before notice can be given to the parents? What if the parents who pull their kids out are also the parents of two or three of the kids that actually perpetrated the bullying and the beating in the first place? What happens there? What does that say about us in this Legislature if we would think for a second to pass a piece of legislation that would actually make us have to stop and ask these questions? To me, it is utterly ludicrous. It is so incredibly disrespectful.

Now, I've also said in the past that I think that, in effect, what we're really doing here is actually reducing the rights of gay and lesbian people in Alberta because, as I've said before, we had symbolically chosen to discriminate against them for the last 11 years, but only symbolically. Thanks to legal obligations outside of the control of the Conservative caucus we were not able to legally discriminate against them for the last 11 years, but we were going to symbolically, finally, accept that probably we should have changed our code some time ago.

Instead, what we're doing is we're actually giving them no additional legal right, but we are both symbolically and legally qualifying and downgrading a right which had previously been given to the gay and lesbian community by the Supreme Court of Canada many, many years ago. We are treating that community differently, and there is simply no answer to that. Even now, in the amendment being put forward by this government, we continue to treat sexual orientation differently from all of the other prohibited grounds for discrimination.

Now, the School Act already deals with the issue of religion, and an hon. colleague stated: well, I don't really care if it's already in the School Act or not; we should still be able to do this. In fact, the reality is that the School Act works. Members on both sides of the House have clearly identified that for dealing with issues around religious education, the School Act is the most rational and logical vehicle through which to address those concerns. It's working. No one is suggesting it's not working. No one. Not a single soul has suggested that the School Act is not working in terms of how this issue is addressed.

There's no need to put religion in here, and previously sexuality had been included in policy. Presumably, because we're putting sexual orientation into the code, we actually think people should be treated equally. I do. I am not convinced at all that all members on the other side do, though. I believe that at the end of the day the reason we have this travesty of a piece of legislation, this embarrassment of a piece of legislation is because there are too many people in the government caucus across the way who still don't believe in the fundamental equality that we owe to people who are gay or lesbian. I think that ultimately that is why we are on the verge of creating the most poorly written and embarrassing example of a human rights code in the country.

I truly wish that those on the other side who know that this shouldn't be happening, who know that this is a wrong decision would show the courage of their knowledge and vote to support this amendment because with this amendment being passed, which was proposed by my colleague from Edmonton-Centre, we would then have a good bill, and it would be a victory. It would be a victory for diversity, and it would be a victory for everybody in this House. The government could actually come out and say: "You know, we're not actually completely controlled by the rural right wing. We have moved out of the '40s into the second decade of the second millennium." You could say that, and we'd be hard-pressed to say that it wasn't true. But if you carry on with this bill as amended, even with the amendment proposed, which basically just maintains the current status – it has no significant change at all – then you will send a very clear message. [Ms Notley's speaking time expired] Don't worry. I'll get up again.

The Chair: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, do you wish to speak on subamendment SA1?

Dr. Taft: Yes, very much. I want to speak enthusiastically in favour of this subamendment. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

I'm going to pick up from where I left off before. I was speaking about the culture within the governing caucus that would lead to a piece of legislation like this coming forward requiring an amendment and then a subamendment such as we have on the floor right now. I believe that a driving force behind this is what some people would say is the real Premier of Alberta, the Member for Foothills-Rocky View, and I think the evidence for his attitudes on this are very clearly laid out in a speech he delivered some 10 years ago, so I'm going to go there.

First of all, I want to address the Member for Calgary-North Hill. I'd like to say to him for starters that although I don't agree with his position, I'm glad he participated. I see there are at least – I don't know – 25 other Conservative members here. I wish they would also participate. I do want to respond with a couple of thoughts in our exchange.

This member probably knows that addressing childhood hunger in Alberta is a real priority for me, and it's a great frustration to me that alone among all provinces Alberta doesn't provide any direct funding to feed hungry schoolchildren. So I guess one of my questions to the member would be: if children are so important to this government, as he indicated, then why won't this government feed children who are chronically hungry in this province through no fault of their own? The member cited the United Nations convention on the rights of the child, but what about the right to food? Do children have the right to food? If they do, why isn't this government doing something to support that right?

Also, you know, I fully understand that on some issues, in some areas, this is complicated. Parental rights have to be sorted out. We're witnessing the struggle with that right now in a deeply troubling case in Manitoba involving a seven-year-old girl who was turning up at school with hate symbols written on her body by her stepfather, and there's a court case right now, which I assume you're aware of, struggling over the rights of parents to raise children in that manner. These are difficult issues. I think that a much more straightforward issue is the right of children to be fed, and I think it's shameful that this government doesn't respect that right.

But moving on from there, I want to go back to this very, very telling speech from the Member for Foothills-Rocky View before he was elected. I want to make sure it's on the record. I was speaking, when I ran out of time an hour or more ago, about his comments on the court system, so I'm going to pick up there. Just to provide context, the speech talks about what he calls new egalitarians, who are, in fact, in his view, people to be opposed and resisted because they support gender equality and they support equal rights for homosexuals.

I'm now going to quote from further down in his speech.

A final distinguishing characteristic of the New Egalitarians is their love affair with non-representative, non-accountable institutions: courts, rights bureaucracies and recently the United Nations. Their recourse to the coercive authority of non-accountable institutions is not by accident.

I'll skip a couple of sentences just for brevity. He goes on to say – and I think this is a remarkable sentence and something we need to contemplate coming from the mouth of a man who is now a cabinet minister. He said:

Just as Lenin had to create the Communist Party as the "Vanguard of the Proletariat" to construct Marx's workers' paradise, so the courts (and other non-accountable institutions) have become the "Vanguard of the Intelligentsia" in the construction of the new egalitarian utopias.

I think that we need to be very alert to the fact that we have a senior cabinet minister who's pushing a bill through this Legislature that consolidates immense power in his hands and that actually has a clause – I'm talking about Bill 36 – that exempts some of those decisions from the courts. Maybe we know why now, don't we, Mr. Chairman?

I want to continue getting onto the record some of the views that this minister portrayed because they relate exactly to this bill. He speaks at length and very forcefully about his views on public education. I'll just quote directly, with no interpretation needed.

The family-choice principle should be extended to primary and secondary education. This can be achieved easily and efficiently by expanding the school voucher programs. The state maintains responsibility for the universal availability of primary and secondary education, but parents are given the power to choose the kind of school they want.

Now, let me continue.

We know that state monopolies provide inferior service in every other field of human endeavor. Why do we continue to support it in education?

Mr. Chairman, these are the words of a man who today is sitting in the cabinet of this government.

I'd like to continue. I'll skip a few more paragraphs here, but I urge everybody else to read it. Mr. Chairman, the importance of those comments relating to this bill are clear. We have a cabinet minister whose history suggests deep, deep suspicion of public education. He says that it's an inferior product, and he advocates ways to get around it. He advocates ways for parents to exercise greater rights. You know what? Today we are seeing that played out through this caucus. This bill is evidently a power play by the supporters of that particular cabinet minister.

I will wrap up my references to his speech by quoting one last section, which relates very closely to this subamendment, this amendment, and this bill. It reads as follows:

On the subject of marriage, I would conclude by stressing the importance of resisting the growing pressure to accept so-called homosexual or gay marriage. Homosexuals have – or should have – the same rights to individual freedom and personal privacy that the rest of us enjoy. But they should not have more. Enlisting the coercive power of the state to force people to "approve" homosexual relations is the antithesis of toleration.

And then he goes on and on at length.

Mr. Chairman, it is deeply troubling to suggest that somehow giving members of the gay community the right to marry is giving them any special right, any right more than the rest of us have. We all have the right to marry. All we're trying to achieve here is equal rights, not more rights. I think we should be deeply concerned that a prominent member of this government is prepared to distort the evidence for that sort of end.

I think this speech and the many other positions taken relating to this attitude from a senior member of this government explain why this bill has been brought forward and why it is so contentious. I think it also explains why there is foot-dragging in meeting the Supreme Court ruling of 11 years ago brought forward through the Delwin Vriend case. I think it explains why, in taking one step forward, we are ending up taking two steps backward through this bill. That's why the subamendment is so terrifically important to support.

I wanted to get a couple of points on the record, Mr. Chairman. Moving on from some discussion around the sexual orientation aspects of this legislation, I'm going to dwell for a moment on administration, and perhaps the Minister of Education will engage in this part of the debate. The subamendment would get rid of this problem that I'm going to put to the Minister of Education. I see that the minister of advanced education is here tonight. Last night he set a wonderful example of engaging in debate. Tonight I hope the Minister of Education follows.

There are, as I think this through, some serious administration issues for schools in section 9 of this bill. If we don't toss that, then these administration problems will arise. Now, I ask the Minister of Education to just think this through with me. Imagine a school, say, K to 9, an elementary-junior high school, with 600 or 700 students. There are any number of schools like this in this province. Every one of those kids in every one of those courses will now need to be entered into some kind of filing system or database by whom, Mr. Minister? He's carefully avoiding me.

Mr. Hancock: No. Honestly.

Dr. Taft: Okay. There will be cost to this. Are we going to be expecting the school secretary to manage this database? As each grade goes through and different components of a science course come up or social studies or religion in the Catholic school system or other things come up at different points in every different grade, every different child's family is going to have to be notified, and if there is a mistake or if somebody is missed, there's the risk of a human rights complaint. So my question to the Minister of Education is: who is going to manage that in the schools? How is that going to be managed? Has anybody thought about the administrative implications of this? The school offices I've been in are already awfully busy.

Is the minister wanting to respond to that tonight? Yeah? Okay. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'll be very brief because most of what I've heard tonight really doesn't warrant a response. The discussion so far has taken a very extreme view of the proposed section and ignores what the amendment really is trying to do, which is to clarify what probably shouldn't need clarification.

It's absolutely absurd to think that reasonable people, much less a Human Rights Commission or a court in this province, would interpret section 11.1 as proposed to mean hermaphroditic plants, I mean, as the Member for Edmonton-Riverview was talking about earlier. That's an absolutely absurd interpretation, and no sensible person in this province would understand that to be what was meant by this section. So that's the type of debate.

To get to the specific question that was raised, in the province now under the School Act there is a provision for parents to opt out of religious instruction or a religious exercise or, indeed, patriotic instruction or patriotic exercises. They can opt out of that. That presumably, although the act doesn't say so, would require some notification if there was going to be religious instruction or religious exercises or patriotic instruction or patriotic exercises so that they would have the opportunity to opt out. Under the mandated policy that we have, parents can opt their children out of what would be notionally called sex ed but what we know in the mandated policy is identified as the health curriculum in grades 4 to 9 and the CALM curriculum in high school, where there's teaching about human sexuality.

Now, in past debates in the House, of course, there's been discussion about whether by not putting human into the act, perhaps we were talking about frogs. Well, again, only a crazy person would suggest that that's what this section means. However, it's been clarified in the act now that it's human sexuality, and that includes sexual orientation. There's clarification now that this is not about some of the fears – some of the fears – that were raised by people having read some of the discussion in the media about evolution and other things, notwithstanding that I've consistently said this is not about looking through a religious lens at Shakespeare or at rocks or at anything else. This is not about the teaching of science or the teaching of social studies. This is about the explicit and is now primarily and explicitly about religion.

Notwithstanding that we've said that over and over again, we put in another subsection by this amendment that's on the floor to make it even clearer that this is not incidental. This is not something that comes up in class that you have to stop the class and give notice on. That's very, very clear in this section, so I hope that members will support this.

To the point the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview asked me about: what database could possibly be required? You don't have to keep a database. All you have to do is what you're doing now, which is that if you're going to teach the grades 4 to 9 health curriculum, when the units of human sexuality come up, you have to send a notice home, which is what they're doing. Nobody has to worry about that. If a parent sends in a written request that their child be excluded from that, it's done now. This is not about a massive horde of kids leaving class. This is not about somebody keeping track of all the kids who have to leave class. This is a very simple process that schools engage in now.

It was raised earlier, for example: in a Catholic school how would you keep track? Could you be excluded? Well, in fact, I know that some jurisdictions now – I presume all jurisdictions now – when the children are registered have the parents sign an acknowledgement that they know and understand that religion permeates the courses of study and the exercises and the activities in a Catholic school and to give their permission at that time.

This is not the type of disaster that the hon. member is talking about in terms of administrative process. The interpretations that are being placed on this section, Mr. Chair, are absolutely absurd.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview again.

Dr. Taft: Yes. Thank you. I appreciated the minister's engagement in this. One of the key points to make here is that while most people will follow common sense, there are lots of people who will not. There are lots of people who will use this issue to disrupt education in the schools. We've seen letters to the editor – and I'll get into those later in the debate, maybe sometime after midnight – from people who have made it very clear that they don't buy into what most of us would consider common sense.

Now, my next question to the minister. Remember that we've raised the stakes if we proceed with this bill, and by putting people at risk who violate this bill if it goes through, if we don't pass the subamendment, they end up exposed to a human rights complaint. So a practical issue, and maybe the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit would respond or the Minister of Education: what if the child's parents are divorced and each parent gives conflicting views? One parent wants their child exempted and one doesn't. How do schools manage that?

Mr. Blackett: Well, there are two things that the opposition member has forgotten. One is that we've talked about the intention and how we would change that wording. The other part that we have in there is that the director of the commission has the ability to ask that anybody who wants to bring a complaint in front of the Human Rights Commission has to have exhausted all the avenues of appeal that they have. In the school board that means they have to have gone to the teacher, they have to have gone to their principal, to have gone to their school board. Whether it's a single parent, whether it's a divorced couple, the school board has an excellent process to deal with those issues.

To say that somebody is going to be dragged to the Human Rights Commission – and that's the big bogeyman – that's not a fact because here, if you look at it, it states explicitly that notwithstanding section 21, the director at any time that a complaint

- (a) is one that could or should more appropriately be dealt with,
 - (b) has already been dealt with, or
 - (c) is scheduled to be heard,
- in another forum or under another Act . . .

And the School Act would apply in this particular case.

. . . the director may refuse to accept the complaint or may accept the complaint pending the outcome of the matter in the other forum or under the other Act.

There is your protection that you have talked about. That's the protection the ATA was talking about. That's the protection the ASBA is talking about. There is an excellent provision and an excellent process already in place, as the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona alluded to. Absolutely believe in that. That's why we made this amendment. That's why this subamendment is absolutely unnecessary because there is a protection there, and we as a responsible government made sure that we put it there.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Well, I read that portion of this amendment, of course, when it was circulated, and I read it as the minister read it out loud now. Frankly, it seems to me to just reinforce the whole idea of getting rid of this entire section because in practical terms it's going to stretch processes out.

You know, I raised kids. My kids went through school. I know how this works. There's a controversy in the school about a grade 4 child attending sex ed, so there's a debate. Then what's going to happen? It's going to work its way through the school process over a number of weeks or months, and then maybe it'll get taken to the Human Rights Commission. By the time it's resolved, so much time has been spent. The curriculum has come and gone. Huge efforts have been put into resolving it.

I think that we would just be better off to chuck this entire section, just not go there. That's why I think the subamendment is important. Obviously, we differ on this.

Mr. Liepert: Let's vote on it, then. If you think it's so good, let's vote on it.

Dr. Taft: Okay. We'll hear from some other people. The minister of health is raring to go. Go ahead, then.

The Chair: The hon. leader of the third party, on subamendment SA1.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much. On the subamendment, and I support it. I think that it's a very good subamendment. I don't think that the amendment that the government has put forward can salvage this dreadful section of this act.

You know, I kind of wonder, Mr. Chairman, about some of the divisions on the other side, how things happened in this caucus that would produce such an appalling clause. I would divide the government caucus into three real parts. There's probably the group that is opposed to this and knows what it is and oppose it, but unfortunately – unfortunately – they're also the people in a lot of cases that have been charged with the responsibility of getting this piece of legislation through. [interjections]

The Chair: The hon. leader of the third party has the floor.

Mr. Mason: You know, they know better, but they've chosen to fulfill their responsibilities and fight for something that they don't actually believe in.

Then there's the big group, I think, in the middle, Mr. Chairman, that really doesn't understand what's at stake here and doesn't understand the motivations and the implications of this piece of legislation. I suspect that that probably incorporates a lot of people in the government caucus. But there is also a group that is pushing this that fully does understand what this is about.

Now, I think if you look at some of the sites of some of the evangelical groups in the United States, the social conservative movement in the United States, and look at what they think about parental rights and why they're pushing it and do a bit of analysis, you'll really get a good sense of what's going on. What really is the thing that's bothering them is the whole question of the United Nations convention on the rights of the child. In fact, in the United States the groups that are pushing the theory of parents' rights are extremely concerned about the impact that a potential ratification of this convention by the Obama administration will have on a number of things.

For example, they're very concerned about its impact on gun ownership because the convention on the rights of the child deals with the protection of children against violence. So they think that this will be used to take away their gun rights. That's one of the things that they're concerned about. They cite cases where courts have found that you can't deport immigrants if they have children who are American citizens, and they want to be able to deport immigrants. There are cases where they've argued that children should not be removed from homes because of the existence of domestic abuse. One particular case they take a lot of exception to is where the Supreme Court ruled that you could not execute a minor for committing a capital crime, and they, of course, want to be able to execute anyone that they want.

They're putting forward a constitutional amendment in the United States, and that constitutional amendment is very interesting. They want this as the amendment:

Section One: The liberty of parents to direct the upbringing and education of their children is a fundamental right.

That sounds like some people in this government.

Ms Notley: The Premier. Pretty much like the Premier.

Mr. Mason: It sounds like the Premier.

Section Two: Neither the United States nor any State shall infringe upon this right without demonstrating that its governmental interest as applied to the person is of the highest order and not otherwise served.

And this is the convention on the rights of the child.

Section Three: No treaty may be adopted nor shall any source of international law be employed to supersede, modify, interpret, or apply to the rights guaranteed by this article.

Now, this has been introduced in the United States House of Representatives by Representative Hoekstra and Senator DeMint. They believe that this will bolster existing family law and codify the fundamental right of parents to, quote, direct the upbringing and education of their children. The threat of government infringement upon parental rights comes in the form of a controversial, legally binding international treaty known as the U.N. convention on the rights of the child. If ratified, as urged by the Obama administration, the treaty would supersede even the U.S. Constitution, they say.

Their promoting this in the United States is very similar in content to the changes that the government is proposing to the human rights legislation. I would submit, Mr. Chairman, that this government has been hijacked by a small minority of people with extreme views with respect to this and that this is a parallel campaign to what is being pursued by the fundamentalist right in the United States.

Now, let's take a look at the convention on the rights of the child. This is from an organization called Save the Children, one of the pre-eminent organizations in Canada, on why they believe that compliance to the convention on the rights of the child is important. They say:

The short answer is that because a healthy, sustainable and secure Canada depends on it. When children and young people are protected, respected and included, they become key contributors in shared social contexts motivating a nation to strive for excellence, whether or not this excellence lies in the field of private sector development, technological innovation, community mobilization, human rights, socio-cultural expansion and so forth. I have seen this time and time again in the programs Save the Children Canada operates here in Canada and throughout the world, when children and young people are valued they establish the conditions that most contribute to human flourishing. We as a nation perhaps best understood this when Canada afforded an opportunity to children to be present at the UN General Assembly Special Session on Children in 2002 to articulate their right to participate in decisions affecting their lives.

To explore what Canadians knew about child rights and [the] role the Canadian government played in fulfilling its obligations to the UN Convention of the Rights of a Child, Save the Children Canada commissioned an Ipsos-Reid study three months ago.

Well, this was more than three months ago now.

The results were overwhelming: from coast to coast adult Canadians scored poorly when quizzed on issues affecting Canadian children. Only 33% of the 1000 interviewed answered questions accurately when it came to Canadian children living with HIV, in poverty, abuse, labour and child care. Seventy one per cent of those interviewed gave Canada a grade "C" or lower in fulfilling its obligations to improve the lives of Canadian children. These results show that Canadians are concerned about Canada's commitment to children's rights, but they also show that more needs to be done to ensure Canadians are learning about children's lives and rights, most notably, the most marginalized and socially excluded.

Mr. Chairman, the point here is that this move that has taken place in the Tory caucus to create a new category of rights is part of a political campaign closely connected to the evangelical right in the United States. Of course, they are connected there through the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development and some of his followers. In my view, this is useful in illuminating some of the rationale and some of the motivation for this particular change.

This change came out of nowhere. As we've indicated before, there is no evidence that these so-called rights were being violated in any way. There were no parents coming forward and saying: "The current system has failed my children. I want to protect my children from learning about certain things that contradict my values, contradict the values we want to raise the child with. Therefore, we need to create a category of rights in order to protect our children and our rights as parents from that." This didn't exist. This was not something that came from the grassroots to the Conservative caucus. The Conservative caucus likes to talk a lot about how they listen to people and how in touch they are and how they reflect the needs and aspirations of Albertans, but there's absolutely no evidence that this came from the grassroots.

This didn't come from people who felt that their rights and their children's rights were being violated and weren't adequately protected by the existing system, but it came from somewhere. That's what I'm trying to perhaps illuminate a little bit for some members tonight, where it came from and what is motivating it. The person behind this is, you know, appearing on, for example, the Huckabee show in the United States on the Fox News channel. You can see that this is part of a broader campaign. I'm not sure that all members of the Conservative caucus who may have ended up supporting this change to the human rights legislation were fully aware of it.

Mr. Chairman, one of the things that does concern me and which I don't think the government amendment will deal with is, in fact, that we do have an excellent system for dealing with these issues today. Nobody is saying and certainly I'm not saying that we don't want to deal with parents' concerns that they may have with respect to religious or sexual education. What I am saying is that we have a very excellent system in place now that's the right kind of system, where there's contact directly between parents and the teacher, and it's resolved right at the front line, right at the greatest point of contact, by actually talking to the people who are educating your children. If you're not satisfied with that, well, then, of course, you can take it up to the superintendent, and if you're not satisfied, you can go to the board and you can go, ultimately, to the minister.

Again, here's a system that is very workable. We haven't had a lot of complaints. That's not where this legislation came from. It didn't come from complaints that the system is not working properly. It came from some outside ideological agenda that's very dominant in certain parts of American politics.

The real problem, Mr. Chairman, is that this section of this bill will short-circuit the existing system, where the parents work closely with teachers and principals at the school level to resolve these sorts of issues. It will allow a parent who has a difficulty or a problem with how things have been handled to skip over all of that, to render it inoperable because they can then bring forward a complaint directly to the Human Rights Commission.

Now, one of the concerns that I really have had about this is certain comments that were made by the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit at one time and that have been reflected by others, which is that people are reasonable and we will expect that people will behave in a rational sort of way, so there shouldn't really be any problem. Mr. Chairman, you don't write legislation on the assumption that everybody is reasonable and rational. I would suggest that if you talk to any teacher, they will tell you stories about parents who are not reasonable that they have dealt with from time to time over the year. You know, it is not only reasonable people who avail themselves of the law. Unreasonable people may avail themselves of the law as well and often do so more often than reasonable people do.

That is what's going to create the difficulty. We're going to have some unreasonable parents or some people who may think they're perfectly reasonable, but they will avail themselves of this law, and it will undermine the relationship between the parent and the teacher and the principal in the school. It will effectively undermine the local school and the delivery of good education at the local level.

Mr. Chairman, I just want to say that I think this amendment is necessary. I think that without it we're going to have long-term problems on our hands. It may give a little bit of comfort to some in the education profession to have the amendments that the government wants to see, but ultimately it doesn't affect the basic problem with this approach, and that is that you're dealing with the Human Rights Commission as a court of first resort as opposed to dealing with your teacher and your principal and resolving those issues at the local level.

I want to just indicate that I think, Mr. Chairman, that we should pass this amendment to the amendment because the government's amendments fall far short of correcting the problems that were created by this legislation in the first place. They certainly don't correct the basic problem, which is to insert the Human Rights Commission into the classroom and, in a way, to protect rights that don't need to be protected. If you're going to protect rights, then I think we could have a real good discussion about what rights of children should be protected. Should we protect children against poverty? Should we protect children against abuse? Should that be in the Human Rights Commission? I've already mentioned programs and facilities for children who have disabilities or other kinds of learning issues. Should we protect children against bullying? Should we protect children against not being fed before they go to school?

If we want to talk about rights for children that should be enshrined in the Human Rights Commission, I'm sure we can come up with far better ones than the ones that this government is proposing. The ones they're proposing here don't protect the rights of children at all; they advance a foreign political agenda, and they don't protect and advance the rights of children.

So I want to urge hon. members to pass this amendment. If we want to have a discussion about protecting the rights of children or protecting the rights of families or even protecting the rights of parents, then I think we should have an open discussion and put all sorts of rights on the table and then sort them out as to which ones should take priority, which ones are more important, which will make a difference in people's lives, which will protect people. But to write into this legislation the right of protecting parents' rights to protect their children against being taught, again, certain things is not a right that anyone has identified as something that absolutely is important from actual parents' point of view. I know it is for the hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development and some of his followers, but it's not something that the parents of Alberta are asking for as opposed to certain far-right groups and certain religious leaders who don't represent, in my view, the voice of parents who actually have children in the school system today.

Like the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, I also raised a couple of boys, put them through the school system. We dealt with teachers. If problems came up, we talked to the teachers. But we never had a problem with teachers trying to ram some sort of ideology down their throats or a religious view or attitudes towards sexuality that we didn't agree with. I thought the teachers were throughout very professional. They were more interested in teaching children to think rather than teaching them what to think. That, I think, is exactly what we want to promote in this school system, in our education system in this province.

Frankly, I think that this bill is counterproductive with respect to that goal. It focuses much more on what you teach kids to think rather than teaching them to think. I think that that is the highest goal of any teacher. In my experience it was relatively easy to resolve the very few difficulties that we ever had with our children's education simply by talking to the teacher. We never had to go to the principal, and we certainly didn't have to go to the school board.

Mr. Chairman, I urge members to vote for this amendment to the amendment.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo on sub-amendment SA1.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chair. It is, again, a pleasure to speak on the amendment as brought forward by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre. Some of the debate that has ensued has sort of brought some more ideas, I guess, to the foreground that I would like to follow up on and bring comment to in an effort to get the minister and members of the House to accept this amendment on what is, by anyone's account, a flawed bill.

I'd just like to sort of pick up on the points brought up by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, who said: yes, we can enshrine any number of rights in legislation to protect children. These are very admirable goals. For instance, for them to have enough food to eat and go to school and learn here in Alberta is a wonderful goal. We could enshrine that if we wished to and all of these things. I don't know. I don't think it would be proper in a human rights act, but I guess we could do it. Or we could say that all children are going to graduate grade 12, and we'll hire them 14 tutors to do so and whatever. We could enshrine that as well. But, again, is that really essentially a human right, you know, or should it be contained in the human rights code? I think the simple answer is: probably not.

I did some brief research. I really do appreciate the fact that the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill did make some comments because it is perfectly correct that this is a difficult issue and that parents do have rights and they do have responsibilities regarding children. But here's the deal. I checked on human rights legislation, the United Nations' as well as any other human rights act in Canada. In the United Nations' bill on human rights there is nothing incorporated on parental rights. You can go and find that in ancillary bills, like the rights of a child, but by no means do you have them in an overarching framework act that guides your human rights. Simply, these have been placed there, and they're out of context. If you look at other legislation dealing with human rights, this is out of context, okay? Just simply put, if you look in any manner of speaking at legislation throughout the world, it is out of place.

If you look even deeper, I think that's where you have the political agenda, where this was made as a complicated trade-off. Really, if we're going to give those people in the GBLT community something, if we're actually going to let them put their name, inscribe it in our human rights legislation, well, tell you what: we're going to have to get a little something back here. We can't really allow this to happen here without some form of payback, something we're able to take to the rednecks or whoever who want to believe, who actually still believe this stuff, that these are secondary, second-class citizens. I believe that is essentially what has happened here. We'll give them this, but I tell you what: you know, we're not going to let this happen. We're not going to stand by and watch this happen in Alberta, where we believe this shouldn't be happening. We're going to make sure that we reference this somewhere in our legislation and put our stamp on that we don't think Alberta is a place for this.

If you look at the context, like I said, laid it out in the framework of human rights legislation, this doesn't belong. You go down the list and say: which one doesn't look like the other one? Well, our act. And it's because it's driven by a specific agenda that doesn't make any sense in this type of legislation. So I'd just like to point that out. It was . . .

The Chair: Hon. member, may I interrupt you? The side conversation level is too high. Please lower it.

Continue, hon. member.

Mr. Hehr: Nevertheless, that was my second opportunity to speak. I notice the troops have been reinforced. I look forward to their taking part in the debate and maybe adding their thoughts to this bill and maybe weighing in on the amendment. We can discuss this. That's a good thing. That's what we're supposed to do.

Thank you, Mr. Chair, for giving me the opportunity to speak. It's been an honour to do so this evening.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Yes. Thank you. On the subamendment. I'm going to make one last point in my support for this subamendment. I'm going to do so, Mr. Chairman, by reading directly from an Alberta Education publication, a very significant one called Guide to Education: ECS to Grade 12. It's a document signed off by the Deputy Minister of Education. It's an important document. I'm going to begin at the beginning — how about that? — the introduction.

Education is the key to our young people becoming full partners in shaping a global future and in shaping our province's and our nation's future. Quality basic education for our young people is key to maintaining Alberta's standard of living and ensuring our competitiveness in the world market. Our education system must focus on what all students need to learn and be able to do to participate successfully in an economy and society undergoing fundamental changes.

The Chair: Hon. member, may I interrupt you? Again I want to remind hon. members that the level of side conversation is too high. Please lower it down, or there's the Confederation Room out there.

Continue on, hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. The last sentence I was reading from this Alberta Education document was, "Our education system must focus on what all students need to learn and be able to do to participate successfully in an economy and society undergoing fundamental changes." I'm going to stop there for a moment. Think about this. We want an education system that teaches students to be able to participate successfully in an economy and to learn what to do to be able to participate successfully. Now, I ask you this, Mr. Chairman: if we exempt kids from learning about religion, how is that helping them to go out into the real world and participate effectively?

Our own caucus and the previous caucus had in it people from a range of religions: Catholic and Protestant, we had a former Protestant minister, we also had a Hindu, and we had a Muslim. In our caucus today we have a Sikh and we have Catholics and we have people who are very active in a number of Christian churches. Mr. Chairman, that's a reflection of the world today. How do we prepare our children for that world if we give their parents the rights to pull the kids out of teachings that might inform them about these various religions? I think, in fact, this provision betrays the very intent of this document.

Then I'm going to continue down this document. "It is a plan for Alberta students to be well prepared for lifelong learning and the world of work." Well, imagine. What if they have to work with people of other religions? Might it be a good thing that they've been taught a bit about those other religions? It goes on.

These initiatives reflect Alberta Education's leadership role in developing programs for students, setting standards for education, communicating these expectations to our stakeholders and supporting improvements to meet student needs.

I will skip a couple of sentences, and then I will finish off with these two sentences, quoting from this Alberta Education guide for K to 12.

Schools have the responsibility to provide instructional programs that ensure students will meet the provincial graduation requirements and are prepared for entry into the workplace or post-secondary studies.

Well, let me ask you, Mr. Chairman, and let me ask all people considering this: how are we preparing kids for the workplace or for postsecondary studies if we can't guarantee what education they've received? How do we know if somebody graduates from grade 12 if they've been exempted from a range of issues? What if they've been exempted from classes on human sexuality? What kind of people are we sending out into the adult world if they haven't had education on human sexuality? What kind of people are we sending out into the world if they haven't had education on religion? This is a betrayal of the responsibilities that the school system of Alberta has.

What about education about sexual orientation? Mr. Chairman, people go through life encountering people who are gay or lesbian. They may not know it. I'll bet you, Mr. Chairman, that there are members of this Assembly who are gay or lesbian, and we work with them every day. It is possible. I bet you it's true. [interjections] Apparently, it's very true. I'm getting all kinds of responses.

My point is, Mr. Chairman, that we need in our society to be able to work and live with people of all kinds of backgrounds. One of the core principles and objectives of our school system is to prepare our children to work with people of all faiths and people who are gay and people who are straight and people who are lesbians. This particular piece of legislation, particularly section 11.1, betrays that purpose. It goes against the very responsibilities of our school system. That's why I'm supporting this subamendment. That's why I think we need to get rid of this aspect of this legislation.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Anderson: I just had to comment on this. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview just commented: what kind of people are we sending into the world that never took a sex education course? Well, I am so afraid to tell this Assembly that I am one of those children that was opted out of sex education by choice. I'd like to ask the hon. members of this Assembly if that lack of sexual education has been a problem for this hon. member and his family of four boys under the age of five? I would submit to you that it certainly, certainly has not been a problem.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

[Motion on subamendment SA1 lost]

The Chair: We are back on amendment A1. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Going back for a moment to A1 and the many things that are wrong with it, we're left with this amendment that the government suggests will somehow address the phenomenal level of concerns that have been expressed by Albertans across the province, whether they be teachers, whether they be school boards, whether they be the parents who theoretically are the subject of the very protective efforts that this government is engaging in but not really so much. Notwithstanding all that, yeah, they brought in this amendment to address those issues, but of course, as we've said, it really doesn't address the issues. It just creates more confusion in a lot of different ways.

Now, it's interesting because earlier the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit had suggested that their new section 16 might help them out a little bit there because, you know, it gives the commission the ability to basically maybe not investigate and hear the complaints quite as quickly or as rigorously as some of us naysaying, fearmongering, negative nellys think that they will. Instead, it gives the commission the ability to decide whether the complaint is one that could be dealt with more appropriately somewhere else or whether it is scheduled to be heard somewhere else, in a different forum, or under another act. So it's not necessarily the case that all these unreasonable parents, of which apparently, according to the government, there are only two in the whole province, will tie up the Human Rights Commission. No, no, no, because there is this great little section in here.

I have to share with you a personal little anecdote about a legal matter I was involved with before I had the joy of being elected to this Assembly. It centred around the question of whether or not the Human Rights Commission had jurisdiction to deal with an issue or whether one of those other bodies should be the place to deal with the issue. In that case it was an arbitration board. Now, I could stand to be corrected, but my rough guess at how much time that particular question – just that one question in terms of who is the body that has the jurisdiction to deal with this issue was a matter that took about eight years to be addressed through the courts. I think that maybe was because leave to appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada was actually denied.

Anyway, if anyone thinks that this section 16 is going to somehow smooth the way and that, you know, all those reasonable people will look at section 16 and go, "Ah, I'm just not going to bother compelling my teacher to be brought before the Human Rights Commission because there's this thing in section 16," no, no, no. Quite the opposite. I think that that very, very, very effective lobby that managed to convince a significant portion of the Conservative caucus to adopt this ridiculous section in the bill, that being section 9, will dedicate the same level of effort to ensuring that every complaint is addressed at the Human Rights Commission that they can make happen.

That will take a lot of resources out of our public education system, and that will take a lot of resources from our general public purse while this matter is adjudicated. It will generally create confusion and chaos and, to review, go back to that whole process of chilling the degree to which teachers in our province believe that they can teach critical thinking, opposing views, analysis, and again, as I've said before, talk about our human rights code without fear of persecution or retribution.

Anyway, that's the problem with the amendment as it stands. It is just inviting more confusion and inviting more litigation and inviting more debate over the interpretation. As I've said before, as long as that debate and that interpretation and that confusion exist, our teachers and, as a result, our children will learn less in our schools.

It's a good thing that we have the freedom – is it the freedom to create? The spirit to create? I can't remember.

An Hon. Member: Spirit to achieve.

Ms Notley: The spirit to achieve and the freedom to create.

Anyway, we've got to be darn creative because we're not going to be taught a heck of a lot. We've got to be coming up with it all up here because we certainly will not actually be taught about it in our schools. That's that.

Because this amendment is so deeply ineffective, what we would like to do is try to limit – limit – the application of section 9 if at all possible. So it is for that reason that I am proposing another subamendment to the first amendment, and I'm wondering if I could have that distributed.

12:20

The Chair: The subamendment is now known as SA2.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, please continue on SA2.

Ms Notley: Thank you. Basically, the rationale underlying this proposed amendment, as I said before, is to try and limit the scope of the so-called parental rights clause in that rather than giving the authority for people to complain about curriculum that deals primarily and explicitly with religion, human sexuality, or sexual orientation, the section would be amended to only include human sexuality.

Where parents, perhaps parents like the parents of the MLA for Airdrie-Chestermere, were concerned that their children might learn things about human sexuality, they would still be able to, well, bung up the system and do all those things that we actually think ought not to happen. Nonetheless, it would still be there, but thankfully they would not have the ability, if this amendment were to pass, to hold hostage our teachers or the majority of children within our classrooms and, therefore, limit their ability to learn about religion and to learn about sexual orientation and, as I've said before, to learn about our human rights code. That is the point of this amendment. Parents would have the right to choose with respect to dealing with when the school decided to teach on issues directly dealing with human sexuality. They would be able to get the notice. They would be able to pull their kids out. They'd be able to take the teacher to the Human Rights Commission if they didn't get the notice. They'd be able to do all of those great things.

Now, in terms of the concerns people here have expressed: well, what about those parents who are concerned about religion? They would still of course have all the protection that they have now under the School Act, that deals with how to give parents the right to pull their kids out of school where there is religious instruction with which the parent is uncomfortable. Of course, as I think has been mentioned before, one of the many reasons why the School Act is a better place for that particular provision to be placed is because the School Act puts the onus on the parent to notify the school board as opposed to requiring the school board to give notice to every parent and then regive notice when the curriculum changes and all that kind of stuff. Administratively, the School Act is a far more workable mechanism.

Of course, the other reason why having it in the School Act is so much more reasonable is that, as we've said before, if you put it in the human rights code, you invite litigation. You invite debate over how the language is interpreted. You invite debate over: well, if this is a right in the human rights code, it's got to have meaning, so it's got to be that when my kid is not in the classroom, they're getting a completely separate course of education and instruction, so you'd better hire yourself another teacher for all those kids that are going to be wandering around the halls because to do otherwise would be to not give full effect to a very substantive right. Why is it substantive? Because it's in the human rights code.

These are the kinds of arguments that get made when you put things in the human rights code. That, of course, is why this amendment would not have this living in the human rights code. It would have it relegated back to that place where it was working absolutely fine up until now without any problems or complaints: in the School Act.

Of course, as I've said before, the other good thing about this is that by not having this reference to sexual orientation in this amendment, we would also manage to deal with that very inconvenient little embarrassment where we're treating certain prohibited grounds differently in the very document which has been propagated to protect people from being treated differently on the basis of certain prohibited grounds. By taking sexual orientation out of this section, we would be able to walk away with our head held high from this very disturbing irony and very disturbing message that we are sending to one particular minority group within our province.

We still have parental rights. Parents who want to be in charge of how their kids learn about sexuality will still have parental rights. Parents who want control over the religious education of their children will still have the School Act. Parents who want to imply either directly or indirectly that it's okay to treat people differently because they are gay will not be allowed to. That's why this amendment would be a good thing. Frankly, I would think that all those objectives are things that people on both sides of the House would want to pursue.

So those brief reasons are the rationale behind this amendment, and I look forward to further debate on it. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview on sub-amendment SA2.

Dr. Taft: Yes. Thank you. I rise to support this subamendment. I am prepared to accept it as a compromise. Obviously, my first choice would have been if the previous subamendment had passed, but it did not. So we're now in the process of trying to look for the second-best solution, and I guess this is probably as good a second-best as we're going to get.

I listened to the comments from the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. I think she sketched out some of the issues pretty well, but I think they need to be reinforced and driven home. One of the things that should be obvious to government members is that if everyone were reasonable, as the Minister of Education suggested maybe they are, then we wouldn't need legislation. He's saying that no reasonable person would ever do anything that disrupted things. The problem is . . .

Mr. Hancock: No. I said that no reasonable person would interpret this as referring to the sex life of plants.

Dr. Taft: Well, the problem is that there are all kinds of people there with different senses of what is reasonable. Some of them, Mr. Chairman, have written letters to the newspaper. I'm going to read just one of those letters here for you. I'm not saying that this person doesn't have a right to these opinions. They absolutely do. I'm reading this to illustrate that there are people who are in fundamental conflict with what's done in schools.

This is a letter that was written to the Edmonton Journal and published May 7, 2009. It's from a person from Spruce Grove. I don't need to read their name into the record, although I guess it's a letter to the newspaper, so I might as well. The name is Claire Helmers. The title for the letter, put in by the newspaper, is: What if Scriptures 101 Was Mandatory?

The letter goes like this:

Rob Wakarchuk states that evolution is a fact, and that there is more evidence to support evolution than there is to support the law of gravity.

He calls the biblical burning bush "mendacious ignorance" that is the "bane of modern civilization."

He claims we need to get into the 21st century by teaching evolution and homosexuality in schools.

I don't know if any of those are true statements about what that person claimed, but this is how the letter reads. It continues.

I wonder if the people in the 14th century said, "This is the 14th century, people. Don't tell me you still believe in God. Get with the times already!"

I've always wondered what the current century has to do with truth.

Then we begin to get into issues where there may be conflict with basic education. I'll continue, Mr. Chairman.

The theory of evolution is as untrue today as it was when it was promulgated in the 19th century, to a great hue and cry of "Don't make a monkey out of me!"

Teaching it and preaching it 10,000 times doesn't make it true, it just makes it familiar and easier to believe.

Why shouldn't a parent who believes that evolution is a lie be able to take her child out of a class that teaches it as fact?

Why shouldn't a parent whose religious beliefs preclude homosexuality be able to remove her child from a class that promotes it as being "normal"?

The letter goes on from there.

The point of the letter, I think, Mr. Chairman, is that for this person evolution is a fiction and a literal reading of the Bible is the truth. Clearly, we have a clash of two belief systems there, and anybody approaching things from a serious, scientific mode is going to say that the underlying structures of those two belief systems are very different.

Mr. Chairman, if we open up our curriculum to the kinds of challenges that are proposed in the legislation, we are going to undermine the learning of our children. We are going to allow children to be pulled out of school and not be taught about things that are scientifically very supported. We have people out there who are going to challenge the curriculum time and again on religious beliefs.

I'll read quickly into the record the definition of religion from the Oxford dictionary. It says here: "a particular system of faith and worship." Well, it's a pretty wide-open definition, isn't it, Mr. Chairman? The point is that people coming to the curriculum from any particular system of faith or belief could cause all kinds of disruption, so that's why I think it's a good thing to pull that exemption out of here. We're not saying that children have to be taught any particular religion, but we are saying that there are fundamental knowledges and fundamental attitudes and fundamental skills that are required for functioning successfully in the modern world.

I spoke when this bill first was up for second reading about a book I read a few months ago, long before this legislation came up, called The Search for God at Harvard. The challenge put out by this book, which was written by an Orthodox Jew, is that you can explore and embrace and study all kinds of religions, and it doesn't end up threatening your own. The experience of this Orthodox Jew who wrote this book was to go to a divinity school where all kinds of religions were taught. He proceeded with some concern, and he discovered over the course of the year that his own faith in his Judaism was reinforced while at the same time he got a new appreciation of the richness of many other faiths.

I think that's the approach that we should be taking in our school system, Mr. Chairman. I think that we should urge and require the children of this province and this country to sit side by side with children of other religions and not give their parents the option of yanking them out of those classes. I think this is an important idea.

I also think it's important to briefly address the difference between religious faith and scientific evidence. There's a really interesting book out called Why Evolution Is True. It's written by a fellow named Jerry Coyne, who for 20 years has been at the University of Chicago, specializing in evolutionary genetics. It's a book that's 250 pages long or so, so I won't read it all. But I think it's worth serious contemplation. He goes on at great length about the difference between knowing something scientifically and knowing something through an article of faith. What we want to do, Mr. Chairman, is keep our school system focused on issues that can be supported by evidence. We need to protect that core.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there's one other concern that I want to raise here, and this relates to the matter of tolerance. Obviously, it's closely related. If we have a school system where parents can pull their kids out because they don't want them to tolerate being taught about other religions, then we have a problem. We're sending the wrong signal to everybody involved in that. In fact, I have to tell you that this entire debate – this entire debate – has sent the whole country and the whole world the wrong signal about Alberta.

I'm going to refer a little bit to the work of Richard Florida, whose work I also talked about in Bill 27. Richard Florida has studied societies that flourish. He's developed theories supported by evidence. Not everybody agrees with them, but they're certainly worth serious thought, and they get serious thought. One of the things he argues is that a key indicator of a society's prosperity and success is its tolerance. The more tolerant a society is, the more welcoming it is to many views and many religions and many sexual orientations, the more that society is creative; and the more creative a society is, the more it flourishes.

I'm just going to read a few items that Richard Florida has written. If anybody ever has a chance to go listen to him, I suggest you do because he's a darn good speaker and very stimulating.

Well, listen, I'll do some summarizing here, Mr. Chairman. Basically, Florida's point is that a tolerant society is a necessary factor in developing a strong creative class, and it's the creative class that keeps a society vibrant and moving forward.

The problem with this bill and the reason I'm supporting the particular amendment brought forward by the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona is that it reinforces, in my view, intolerance. It encourages people to step out of facing and living with their neighbours. It facilitates intolerance. Creative individuals need to feel welcomed in any society if they're going to stay there or if they're going to move there and settle there. If a society doesn't develop tolerance for individuals, if it doesn't encourage diversity, and if it doesn't encourage learning about diversity, then creativity is neither going to develop fully in a particular society, nor is it going to flourish. My concern as an Albertan with this bill, all other things aside, is that we're actually taking steps that fuel intolerance and that we are setting ourselves up for a disappointing future.

Related to tolerance, in Richard Florida's analysis, are talent and technology. Talented people are drawn by tolerant societies. It's as simple as that. Talented people are looking for new ideas. They're looking for creativity. They're looking to embrace, whether it's something as concrete as a range of foods or a range of music. They want a rich stew of society. They want everything there. They want to embrace it, and they want a society that celebrates it. This bill takes us in the opposite direction. Economic prosperity relies on cultural, entrepreneurial, civic, scientific, and artistic creativity.

There are a couple of quotes I'm going to put on the record from Mr. Florida which I think speak to the necessity of supporting this subamendment. This is a quote from a book he wrote called The Rise of the Creative Class.

Why do some places become destinations for the creative while others don't? Economists speak of the importance of industries having "low entry barriers," so that new firms can easily enter and keep the industry vital. Similarly, I think it's important for a place to have low entry barriers for people – that is, to be a place where newcomers are accepted quickly into all sorts of social and economic arrangements.

And then he goes on.

Places that thrive in today's world tend to be plug-and-play communities where anyone can fit in quickly.

I'll end that quote there, Mr. Chairman, and just ask people to consider: what message are we sending to people with Bill 44? We're telling them that this is not a tolerant society, that it's okay for you to be intolerant of other people's beliefs or other people's sexual orientation, and I think that's a serious mistake.

With those comments, I think, Mr. Chairman, that I'll take my seat and listen to responses from others, but I urge everybody to support this particular subamendment. Thank you.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Chair, as I saw my hon. colleague reading from the newspaper, I was flipping through some articles myself, and I thought there was a really good one in today's paper that I'd like to share just to give people something to chew on. It's from Naomi Lakritz in the Calgary Herald.

Bill 44 Debate Gives Parents an Unfair Rap

Since when did parents get to be so stupid that they can't be trusted with raising their own children? To hear some of the opponents of Bill 44 talk, you'd think that kids should be removed from their parents' custody and handed over to schools to raise. The teachers – the same ones who complain at bargaining time that large class sizes prevent them from paying adequate attention to their students – apparently know what's best for all those kids they say they don't have time to really get to know.

This week, the [ATA] passed a resolution which expressed fears that Bill 44 "will have a chilling effect on classroom discussion and instruction." The bill's language will be fine-tuned next week when it goes to committee – as well it should be. Education Minister . . . has promised that these concerns will be addressed via clear guidelines. And [the] Premier . . . said, "Bill 44 confirms the existing situation to opt out of religion instruction and sex education. It does not give parents the right to opt out of other instruction on religious grounds."

Parents have always had the choice to opt their children out of sex-ed classes. This is nothing new. When material about sex – gay or straight – is introduced in kindergarten or the early grades and parents feel it's age-inappropriate, they have every right to object to their kids learning it. As far as "instruction on religious grounds," there is no religious instruction taking place in public schools, by their very nature. And comparative religion courses are inevitably option courses anyway, so the students in those classes are there voluntarily.

In her column Thursday, Janet Keeping, president of the Sheldon Chumir Foundation For Ethics In Leadership, asked: "How are children to develop into thoughtful, tolerant adults, if the education system is prevented from exposing them to a variety of perspectives?" Gosh, it sounds like if we leave it up to pea-brained parents, they're sure to bungle the job of producing such terrific adults.

So a six-year-old who is prevented from learning about sexual orientation because his supposedly narrow-minded parents think his innocence is worth preserving [just] a little [bit] longer, is doomed not to develop into a "thoughtful, tolerant adult?" That's ridiculous.

Marilyn Sheptycki, president of the Alberta Schools Councils Association, worries Bill 44 will shut down debate of challenging ideas, thereby interfering with critical thinking skills and tolerance. Really? Then, students must be awfully limited in the things they're debating, confining themselves only to discussing sexual orientation and never going near politics, science, literature, philosophy or history. Which brings us to a far bigger threat to critical thinking skills than missing a one-time discussion of sexual orientation. That threat is the students' lack of exposure to the ideas of great writers and thinkers.

It goes on to talk about how there should be more study of the classics in school.

Referring to concepts of tolerance and such, Sheptycki said: "The way it is now, teachers will be afraid to have those great discussions in class." Since when is school all about sexual orientation, tolerance and other such topics? Nobody objects to teaching kids to be respectful of others, but whatever happened to the 3Rs?

Reading, 'riting, and 'rithmetic.

And you can't have any kind of "great discussions" when students can make it through high school "without having read any of the classic novels."

The debate about Bill 44 has left parents with an unfair rap. They're being dismissed as bigoted idiots who are presumed guilty of inculcating their kids with all kinds of wrongheaded thinking which it's the school's self-imposed agenda to undo. Nonsense. The school's job is to educate the child in academic subjects, not to undermine the values being taught at home.

Bill 44 is not going to land teachers before human rights commissions. Before it's passed, the language will be tightened to prevent that. Educators should chill. Oh, and while they're chilling, they might want to do some critical thinking of their own – about revamping a curriculum whose paucity of exposure to the classics already does a fine job of keeping challenging ideas out of the classroom.

I thought that that was a worthwhile thing to share. I think there needs to be some perspective brought into this debate.

I read a letter that the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity had put into the Calgary Herald, that appeared in the Calgary Herald over the weekend. I am paraphrasing, but the allegation was that by passing this legislation, we are basically allowing schools to be turned into breeding grounds for intolerance and bigotry, implying, of course, that the only parents that would dare – that would dare – opt their children out of sex education or out of a religion course are bigoted, narrow-minded, intolerant idiots. It's a travesty, but that is exactly the message that has been sent to parents during this debate. As a parent of four children I find it very offensive.

I think it's, quite frankly, disgusting that a parent's tolerance in education can be called into question because they believe that, frankly, they would like to teach their kids in a home setting about these very sensitive topics. I know for myself that I'll be teaching my children all about tolerance and about gay rights and about the need to treat a diversity of people the same and to care for them and to accept them as contributing members of society and as friends and as family, in some cases, as the situations come. I'll teach that to them, but I'll also teach them the value of what I see as traditional family values and how much success and good things that has brought their dad in life. I'll be proud to do that. I think I can give a balanced education to my children on those things, and I believe I can do so in a nonbigoted and completely tolerant way. So I don't need people on this side of the House telling me that I am some kind of uneducated moron. Effectively, that's what this debate has been.

I would also ask the hon. members to think, possibly, why they have 11 seats in the Legislature right now between the two parties. Maybe it's because when these types of debates come, you are unable to identify with a massive group of people out there: voters, parents who have kids. Every time some issue like this comes up, you basically narrow them down and belittle them down into self-serving morons. That's, again, shameful.

You know, I ran for the nomination and won overwhelmingly, as many of the members in this Assembly did, and also ran in the election and won overwhelmingly. The reason I did is because I told parents and families that I would stand up in this Legislature and that I would defend their rights and that I would defend their dignity and that I would defend the rights of their children. That's what I'm doing right now, and I would hope that all hon. members of this Assembly would do the same.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm sure that everybody both here and listening at home and joining us in the gallery . . .

An Hon. Member: Nobody is listening.

Ms Blakeman: Oh, yes, they are. You've got to get on Twitter, my friend. It's just abuzzin'.

. . . really appreciates the participation of the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere because, you know, we just got the debate all happening and woke everybody up and re-energized everybody, and we're good for another two, three, four, five hours here. So thank you so much, Member for Airdrie-Chestermere. It certainly got me re-energized, and it looks like the member from somewhere in Calgary is also going to be joining the debate.

I think what's really interesting in all of this – my question back to the member is: what in the current situation is stopping parents from doing any of the activities that he has just described? As far as I am aware, there is nothing currently that stops any parent from discussing any of these issues at home with their child, that prescribes to them in any way how a family would decide to conduct themselves in their home and educate their children. There is nothing currently that would prohibit that from taking place at all.

So I think: all right, if that's not a problem now, if the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere can move through life as he chooses to and raise his four sons as he wishes to, if there's not a problem, then why did we need this legislation brought before us? And he is a huge proponent of this legislation. So what is it that he felt was lacking in the current situation that somehow was impinging on his ability, was prohibiting him from interacting with his family and his community in the way that he wanted to so that he is such a prime proponent of this legislation? The truth is that even in this legislation – I mean, what the issue is is what's happening at school, not what's happening at home.

I have not heard any of my colleagues talk about what needed to happen at home. That is a different realm. That is not a public realm. What the parents that have spoken thus far in this Assembly talk about wanting to do or have done in raising their children: that's at home. That's not part of what exists today in legislation, and it's not part of what is anticipated under this. So I'm not sure how this whole discussion moved away from what is in front of us in this bill and what is being discussed about what will be discussed or will not be discussed in a school setting. Who is allowed to talk about what is in a school setting. It's not at home.

And I haven't heard anyone stand up in this Assembly and call anyone a moron except for the member who just got up and spoke, who then went on to say that the members in the opposition were somehow shameful. So the only group I've heard casting aspersions and throwing names around here is the very member who just spoke. I have not heard any of my colleagues today or the earlier time in second reading for this debate indicate in any way, shape, or form that any parent was a moron in any choices that they choose to make. It just didn't happen. So I don't know why he feels the need. He's the one raising it. He's the one throwing it around. Nobody that we've heard in Hansard . . .

Mr. Anderson: Actions speak louder than words, member. Actions speak louder than words.

Ms Blakeman: Actions speak louder than words. Hmm. So which action is he referring to? My action in getting up and debating here?

Let's talk about the casting of aspersions on the members who successfully were elected. They're in this House. They're not the problem. They were successful, and they were winners. Frankly, I'm a little tired of hearing the Conservatives constantly get up and talk about how the members of the opposition, who were successfully elected, many of them with larger margins than other people that are sitting in here, are somehow losers. We are not losers, and it's disrespectful to the people that elected us. [interjections] It's disrespectful to talk about people who were legitimately elected and serve time in this House as somehow not being reflective of their electorate and not being the primary choice of their electorate. [interjection] Oh, that's just as bad.

The focus of this bill is not about what people do with their children at home. It's not. It's about what is being anticipated under human rights legislation that is specifically directed towards behaviour that will be allowed or not allowed in school.

Particularly under section 9, considering the amendment that's in front of us right now, it's a subamendment that is talking about discussions around religion, human sexuality, or sexual orientation. Specifically, it's trying to narrow the focus of what would be considered as prescribed or prohibited grounds under this particular legislation and narrow the discussion to human sexuality, which some argue, and I've had them argue it to me, is a slight improvement on the wider scope that actually is in the bill now.

I'm glad I got the opportunity to respond to some of the member's interesting comments, and I'm certainly willing to . . . [interjection] Well, I'm not going to be bullied and I'm not going to be yelled at in this House. I have a right to be here, and I am here. You can mutter under your breath all you want and talk about how somehow my actions speak louder than my words. Well, I have taken action in standing up and speaking in debate on this and supporting what I believe in and reflecting what my constituents believe in. I have the e-mails and letters that are giving me the direction, so I'm very happy to be doing that on their behalf. Part of that is in supporting subamendment A2, which is before us, as proposed by the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, to limit the scope of what is to be considered under section 9, to narrow that down to only being human sexuality. It's a slight improvement on what we have in front of us, but I'm willing to take just about any improvement; therefore, I'm willing to support subamendment A2.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Culture and Community Spirit.

Mr. Blackett: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. A lot has been made about the composition of the caucus and the motive behind this amendment and that somehow there was some other agenda. I'd just like to bring the members' attention to the facts of some of the composition within our caucus. We have former members of the teaching profession: from Edmonton-Castle Downs, the Minister of Aboriginal Relations, the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, the Member for Battle River-Wainwright, and the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie. We have former school board trustees: the members for Edmonton-Decore, Drayton Valley-Calmar, Calgary-North Hill, and our Premier. We have former chairs of school boards: the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs, the hon. Minister of Infrastructure, and the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

I would say that we're quite representative of Albertans, and we're also representative of those people who have experience in the educational profession. We as a caucus collectively saw the need to actually give the parents of those some 600,000 students in this province the ability to be able to opt out of a particular course of study with respect to three specific issues and to be notified.

Now, most of those parents will not pull their kids out of those classes. In our CALM classes that we have in this province, we have a total of 47 students that opted out of those classes last year. How many students do you think will opt out of sexual orientation? Well, it will be zero because there's nothing in the curriculum with respect to sexual orientation. And with respect to religion it will probably be the same amount.

But it is the choice of the parent, the same parent who chooses which type of school that they will go to. Will it be a charter school? Will it be a public school? Will it be a home-school? Will it be a Catholic school? It's the same parents who choose their clothing, the same parents who decide what religion they're going to have. It's the same parents who will decide what kinds of activities and what kinds of friends they will have.

The hon. members of the opposition think that these parents aren't responsible enough, aren't tolerant enough to be able to make that distinction. Well, did you know that we have same-sex marriage in this province? Did you know there was nobody marching in the streets? Did you know that was brought forward by a Progressive Conservative government? Did you know that there are hundreds of those that actually exist in this province? Did you know I actually had a chat with Richard Florida about this?

An Hon. Member: The Supreme Court did it.

Mr. Blackett: Well, no. With respect to same-sex marriage? No, no, no.

You're talking about the fact that we are embarrassing our province because we are showing intolerance. Well, we have shown immense tolerance. There are hundreds of those people. They are in my community. They are my neighbours. They are my friends. That is something that we all in this caucus are able to do. We brought forward the inclusion of sexual orientation because not one single member of the opposition, before we introduced this bill, talked about anything but that with respect to human rights. Not once. I dare you to go through Hansard and pick that out and find it for me. I've got all the different references here. If it's Kent Hehr, whether it's April 16, whether it's March 15, 2008, March 21, 2008, or the Member for Edmonton-Centre, October 28, October 29, November 5, November 19 . . . [interjections]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, are you calling a point of order?

Point of Order

Referring to a Member by Name

Mr. Mason: I am indeed. The minister knows he's not allowed to name members of the Assembly. He should apologize.

Mr. Blackett: Mr. Chairman, I apologize sincerely if I offended the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. That was not my intention.

Debate Continued

Mr. Blackett: At the end of the day, when we responsibly sat down with the members of the ATA, when we responsibly sat down with members of the school boards, the concerns that they articulated on behalf of teachers, on behalf of administrators is that they wanted to make sure that they were able to conduct themselves in a discussion in the course of teaching their students without interference. So we have made sure that there is, if notification is given, an opt-out clause. We have nothing else to do with the teachers or the school boards. We made explicit that indirect or indiscriminate comments with respect to religious beliefs, religion, sexual orientation, or human sexuality are not to be there. We also went as far as to say that the school boards have a fantastic system for mediating disputes. That's there. None of the opposition members seem to want to acknowledge that. They want to talk about the same bogeyman that we talked about three weeks ago.

Right now there will be a provision that the director has, who can say that if a prospective complainant has not exhausted the avenues for appeal – that is, going to the teacher, going to the principal, going to the school board – then they have no merit. Their case will not be heard until that appeal has been satisfactorily exhausted. Other people have mentioned that we should do that. It's a fantastic system. Absolutely. We have faith in it. That's why we have put that in there.

We believe in it. We are representative of Albertans. We are representative of parents, of those 600,000 people, and we are representative of each of those professions, whether it's teachers, trustees, or board chairs. I stand by our caucus, our decision, and if you think for one moment that there is going to be a chance that we are going to waver on this particular bill to get one amendment, you are barking up the wrong tree.

Mr. Mason: I'm just going to be very brief, Mr. Chairman. I want to respond to the minister. [some applause] If I get more applause, it'll encourage me to go on a bit.

I want to respond to the minister because the minister seems to think that human rights and the work on human rights in this Legislature started 19 months ago when he was elected, but there's lots of work that has taken place in this Assembly and some very good work by previous governments of this party. In its early days it was actually a lot more progressive than it is today. You know, the minister seems to think that because the opposition raised the question of protecting sexual orientation and not some of the other weird ideas that he has incorporated in this bill as human rights, we have no right to speak on it.

But I'll remind the minister that my colleague the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona repeatedly challenged him to bring in changes to the human rights code making sexual orientation a protected right, and he said: "We're not going to do it. We're not going to do it." He had a number of different reasons for not wanting to do it, notwithstanding the fact that that was imposed, but finally he did. Finally he did, but unfortunately that little change which he has only adopted, you know, years after the Supreme Court of Canada guaranteed that right – he's brought forward an amendment to this code only after a great deal of pressure and after initially telling the House repeatedly he was not going to do it.

Unfortunately, his bill has been hijacked by the extreme right in his own caucus, who are importing some ideology from an American campaign to protect parental rights against the United Nations convention on the rights of the child. That's where it came from. It didn't come from parents demanding it, and I think that's very clear.

So I just want to respond to the minister that he wasn't going to do this, and then he did it, but unfortunately it has been hijacked. Instead of being a very late and long overdue step to bring Alberta in line with other provinces and the Supreme Court decision, I think it's actually now a step backwards because of these bizarre rights that the social conservatives who seem to dominate this government today have imposed.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I have listened to all of the comments, and I really do appreciate the hon. minister and the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere taking part in the debate. I think it's good that we do so. Just to comment a little bit back in there, I understand very well that both members are parents. They both love their children much, and I really honestly believe both of them do probably fabulous jobs with their children. I believe in their fundamental right to be able to yard their kid out of the classroom any time they don't want them to talk about anything sexual that they don't want, and I respect that right.

But here's what I don't want to happen: I want that right contained in the School Act, where it was in section 50, not in my human rights legislation, enshrined as a right that no other human rights legislation has, and for good reason. You know why? Human rights are rights essential to all humans. Not all humans have children. Not all humans, you know, actually even want children. Not all humans are able to have children. There's a reason why no other human rights act has this: because it's not a human right that you have a child, that you do all these things, that you opt out. There are separate acts, of course, that deal with these things.

I believe the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill brought up the fact that this is contained in the rights of the child in some innocuous legislation, but it's not contained in human rights legislation in Canada, nor is it contained at the United Nations. There are reasons for that. I don't by any means, there's no one in this party – we respect a parents' right to yard their children out of classrooms in this province when they are opposed to something in the curriculum. Okay? Fair enough. Fair enough. But here's what it is: don't enshrine it in human rights legislation and in language cloaked with what can only be seen as borderline innuendo, borderline giving people a slap in the face, saying sexual orientation, and doing it in this haphazard, sloppy manner that we see before us here today.

I think that, speaking to the amendment, by all means, the amendment is one of those things where I believe the hon. member from the third party has struck, really, a middle ground. You know, there's not something untoward here. We're not doing a swap – all right? – that with the right hand we're going to give the gay, bi, lesbian community protection. We're going to name them, like we should have 11 years ago. Okay? We're going to do that here. But if there's a trade-off, we've got to say: "Darn right; we're going to mention somewhere in this legislation that we're not that happy about sexual orientation, that this doesn't happen in our communities, that we're not all supportive of it" and go back to our communities and say: “Hey, look. We stood up on this reasoning. We actually believe in this reasoning. That is why this shouldn’t be in our human rights legislation.”

That’s why I believe, speaking directly to the amendment, this strikes a balance. Hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, if you really are seriously concerned about having your rights enshrined about yanking your kids out of school, then fair enough. I believe in your right to do that and I respect your right to do that, and I know you’re a good parent, but just put this halfway point in the bill. We’re not naming sexual orientation.

If there’s nothing wrong with this, if we’re really, truly saying to ourselves, you know, “it’s human sexuality and all the rigamarole that goes with it” – the male-female bit, the male-male bit, the some other people in strange situations bit – and we’re going to talk about that sometimes in our classroom and we’re going to allow people the right in this thing, I still don’t think it should be in our human rights act, but if you really want it there, to say, “All right, parents, we’re going to give you a nod here, and we’re going to do this,” let’s do it this way. Let’s not do the backhanded approach, where we need sort of a wink and a nod that sexual orientation really doesn’t mean anything, but it’s there. You guys, if you look yourselves in the eye, you know it’s there for that reason, and I believe it’s disingenuous when you say that it’s not there for that reason.

Mr. Blackett: It’s not there for that reason.

Mr. Hehr: Okay. Well, then, let’s just take it out. Let’s clear it out. The hon. Minister of Culture and Community Spirit says, “It’s not there for that reason.” If it’s not there for that reason, let’s take it out. Let’s look at this amendment. Let’s do it. Let’s take out this inflammatory language. If it’s not there, let’s do it.

Mr. Blackett: How is that inflammatory? That’s not inflammatory.

Mr. Hehr: The Minister of Culture and Community Spirit asked me how the language “sexual orientation” is inflammatory. It wasn’t inflammatory when this government for 11 years wouldn’t enshrine it when the Supreme Court decision came down?

Mr. Blackett: I wasn’t here. I wasn’t here.

Mr. Hehr: Yes, yes, yes. I know the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit is many things. I guess, you know, he can turn a blind eye to this and say that that’s not the reason for it, but the history is clear in this province. For 11 years the words meant something. The words “sexual orientation” meant something. It said to people: “We’re not going to believe in these rights, we’re not going to listen to the Supreme Court, and we’re going to deny people the respect they deserve under this legislation. We’re not going to do it.” So for 11 years it meant something, and all of a sudden today it didn’t mean a thing. Well, I think that’s wishful thinking, sir, and . . .

Ms Notley: It’s disingenuous.

Mr. Hehr: . . . disingenuous at best.

Mr. Denis: Shame.

Mr. Hehr: I’m glad you said that because I believe you were saying that to yourself, hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Thank you very much for allowing me to speak on this. I believe this amendment would take out the bad association this province has had with sexual orientation over the 11 years and would truly erase the 11 years where these words have had a meaning.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Do any other members wish to speak to subamendment SA2? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Yeah. Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I’ve appreciated the debate. I’ve listened to both sides here. I was trying to track down the column that the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere was reading by Naomi Lakritz because I thought there was a reference in there to the effect that nobody is going to get hauled before the Human Rights Commission under this legislation. When I combined that with the repeated comments from the minister about how few actual exemptions there are, requests for exemptions and all the other safeguards now written in this amendment, I find myself wondering: why is the government standing on this at all?

It’s clearly almost entirely about symbolism because there are now so many outs and apparently, according to the minister, so many safeguards. Although I don’t read it quite as extensively as he does, nonetheless they’re certainly spelled out now under this amendment more than under the original drafting. But why are we doing this? I think it’s clearly about symbolism, and I think the symbolism involved is – well, we’re going to disagree on what the symbols mean. Obviously, many members on that side think it’s a symbolism of endorsing parental rights. To me and to many other people it’s a symbolism about facilitating intolerance and discouraging shared experience.

I read into the debate some letters to the newspaper, one in particular about a person who literally takes the word of the Bible and dismisses evolution. Fair enough. They’re entitled to that view, but I don’t think it’s a view that should be brought into the public education system.

I now want to read one other letter which I thought really touched on something that’s important. We claim here, all of us, that we’re thinking about the kids. I think we need to think for a moment about that kid who is, you know, the age of 12 or 14 and beginning to experience sexual awakenings and may be beginning to wonder about their own sexual identity if they’re having homosexual sexual awakenings. How does that kid feel in a class where teaching about that subject can be seen as a violation of a human rights code? I think it’s sending the wrong signal.

I want to read just a few sentences from a letter that was written to me as an MLA. This is not a public letter, so I’m not going to read who it’s from, but I will read a couple of key points. It goes like this:

There are two critical points here. The first is that, for children who may be homosexual, they be given good information that helps them understand their feelings and orientation. The obligation to protect and support the child supersedes the obligation to support the religious beliefs of the parents. The second critical point is that, for heterosexual children, they receive good information about homosexuality in a way that does not demean gay people. This does not prevent the parents from providing their children with their views as well.

I think we need to contemplate that for a minute. We need to imagine the child who is at that very vulnerable age and may be feeling sensitive about their own sexual orientation or may not really even understand it. What kind of social environment are we creating for that child? Are we creating one of support and health and tolerance, or are we creating one that’s going to reinforce a sense of oppression or a sense of denial or a sense of confusion or a sense of humiliation? I’m afraid that the symbolism of this bill is doing the latter, and I think that’s an unhealthy situation.

You know, Mr. Chairman, it's just a few years ago that some good friends of ours had a son who happened to be the same age as one of our sons. As he was going through school, he just found he wasn't attracted to girls. He found through high school that, in fact, he was homosexual. It was tough for his parents, and it was tough for him. But you know what? The parents came around and have become very supportive, and the school and the children and his schoolmates were all very supportive. I'm concerned that the symbolism of this bill goes against that. This young man has gone on now to a stellar academic career. He's an undergraduate student in his senior year in a very advanced science program. Too many children who come of age and discover that they're homosexual have quite the opposite experience. They become depressed, they turn to other escapes, or too often they even end up in suicide.

I think that we need to be alert to the power of symbolism. We need to show leadership on these issues, and I guess we're just going to have to disagree on the different sides of the House here about what leadership is. I think that the leadership we should be showing as an Assembly, as people who value a tolerant society, a society that welcomes the world would be to accept the subamendment moved by the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. First of all, I apologize for my raspy voice. I'm a little under the weather.

Mr. Chairman, I'm actually listening very intently to the debate on both sides of the House, and I think some good comments have been made on both sides. But I have to tell you that I'm not very proud of being a member of this Legislature today for the reason that perhaps often politicians are given a bad rap, often unjustly, for finding a wedge issue and then milking it to the maximum for political gain. Perhaps this is one of these days when, actually, we may be earning that stripe by doing exactly that.

One member from across the aisle said that we're sending a bad message to Albertans and Canadians and perhaps the world, and I would agree. But I think the bad message that we're sending primarily is because we have found an issue that clearly polarizes Canadians, definitely Albertans into two very well-defined camps, and now we're going spend all night long here really for no meritorious reason. At the end of this, Mr. Chairman – and I think it's fair to predict the future – when it's all said and done, the sun will rise tomorrow, and the rights that are entrenched there will continue to be entrenched, but somehow we will think that we have secured some support of various groups out there in society that will say: "Yes, these are our champions. They stood up all night, and they fought for our rights."

Well, this is an issue that I'm very passionate about, and maybe because of that the Premier has given me the privilege of chairing the Alberta human rights, citizenship, and multiculturalism education fund. The last number of months I have spent travelling the province and meeting with various minority groups, be it religious, ethnic. Also, I've made a point of meeting with as many gay and lesbian groups as possible to find out, just in case I didn't know, what it is like to be you in Alberta. What kind of experience do you have being a gay person in Alberta, being lesbian or transgendered in Alberta? Mr. Chairman, I have to be honest with you. Frankly, I've learned – and I intuitively always knew it – that it is not easy to be a gay person in Alberta, and it's probably not easy to be a gay person in Canada or anywhere else in the world because there are wrongful assumptions attached to that title, and there is historic lack of acceptance of that community. They're really living a very difficult life. Many never publicly admit to being gay.

Mr. Chairman, whether this government has entrenched into legislation the inherent right that the gay community has in this society early enough or late enough we can debate. The fact of the matter is that that right has been entrenched by the Supreme Court of Canada's decision. If you look at any and all publications published by the government of Alberta since the time of the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada, that right already was entrenched in the literature that the government was releasing. The fund that I chair was releasing dollars to causes promoting acceptance, eradicating prejudice and discrimination against the group. The group was protected except that it wasn't named in the legislation, and kudos to the minister and kudos to, actually, all members of this Legislature – it's irrelevant which side they sit on – for, I hope, passing that aspect of the bill because that is very important.

But what we're doing right now, Mr. Chairman, is that instead of celebrating the obvious, celebrating the fact that we have gotten to the point where we have entrenched it and we're doing the right thing irrespective of the timing, we have found a wedge issue, and we're going to milk that wedge issue, whether parents have the right to remove a child from a classroom. Well, I'm a parent and I'm a teacher, and I can tell you that if there was anything taught in a classroom that I found objectionable, I would have as a parent exercised the right of removing my child from that particular class. I think all members in this Legislature will agree.

Now, if this bill passes as it is on the floor right now, that will not change except that it will be written into the legislation. I'm not sure what the problem with that is. Could it have been written into the School Act? Perhaps. The fact of the matter is that now a practice that has taken place in the province for many, many years – parents have exercised the practice of being able to remove their children – is codified just like we wanted to codify the protection that our gay community is to have in the province of Alberta. It was very important for the gay community. Even though they were already enjoying the benefits of legal protection, it was so important for the gay community to have that codified. They wanted it codified. It didn't change anything. Tomorrow they will not have any more rights because those rights have already been put in place by the Supreme Court of Canada, but they wanted it codified for a symbolic reason. Kudos to them. I agree with them, and I'm glad that they have it codified.

I can by extension also understand why these parents who have objections to certain aspects of curriculum – I personally don't, but apparently there are some who do – want it to be codified: because it also means that much to them. They already have the right of removing their kids, but it means that much to them.

So we have two groups of people, Mr. Chairman, seemingly polarized – I wish they weren't – who were enjoying certain privileges, but now they insist on having those privileges or rights codified. How can you argue that one group is right in their desire to have their rights codified and the other group is wrong in that desire? It simply doesn't make a lot of sense. But we're going to sit for another six hours over here because we found a wedge issue, and the argument, as I'm hearing it, is that we are pro gay and they are anti gay. Well, I haven't polled our caucus, nor do I care to poll any other caucus, but I can tell you – I can speak only for myself – that I don't believe that members of this Legislature are either pro or con. We don't have the right to be pro or con. It doesn't matter how we feel. The fact of the matter is that these are human beings, these are citizens of Alberta, and they have any and all rights and privileges like you and I do, Mr. Chair.

So I would implore the members of this Legislature to reconsider and understand the fact that we have two groups that simply want to codify their rights and have the assurance that one day a different government isn't elected or a new curriculum is put in place that would jeopardize their rights. That's what it's really all about. But if we choose to sit here for a number of hours for simply political reasons and try to prove what big supporters we are of one group or another, Mr. Chairman . . .

An Hon. Member: There'll be no one to service.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Maybe that's right. Maybe ultimately there will be no one to service because we're not doing either group any justice. Thank you.

1:30

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. I'd just like to sort of respond briefly to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs. I don't think discussing human rights and staying up late in the evening is a matter of political gain. It's a matter of human rights and treating people with dignity. I don't buy the argument that this is for political gain.

On our side many people who have contacted us feel this is a very important issue that should be debated, and for him to dismiss it in the manner that he did, that this is for political gain, I believe doesn't serve the teaching community, who have been in contact with us about this bill, the gay and lesbian and bisexual and transgendered community, who have been in touch with us about this bill, the many school boards, who have been in touch with us on this bill and wished us to really try and dig in and try to make some amendments here and battle this.

I don't believe chalking it up to political gain is what we're doing here. We're doing what our constituents ask and what they believe they are entitled to and what I believe the rules of this House allow us to do. I don't see, you know, us getting political gain out of this right now. It might get a line in the paper tomorrow: they stayed up till 5 o'clock. But that's not why we're here; we're here to honestly debate this.

Anyway, if we move to the merits of the amendment and why the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs should actually – I know he didn't talk too much about the amendment, but if I could bring him back to actually why we're a little worried. I, too, congratulated the minister when I spoke on this – I believe it was in second reading – on bringing sexual orientation into the act. It had been 11 years ago when this happened, the Vriend decision. It was one of those things that was brought in and that this government resisted under the words "sexual orientation."

For some reason previous governments and this government as well objected to the words "sexual orientation" being put into our then human rights legislation. That has been rectified now, I guess, because this government had a problem with the words "sexual orientation." Otherwise, if they didn't have a problem with it, I'm assuming they would have done what the Supreme Court asked. Otherwise, call me crazy.

Some Hon. Members: Crazy.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you. I know I asked for that.

Call me crazy, but there was a problem with that language, okay? Let's say there was. I think anyone would be naive not to believe that that, in fact, was the case. Then to wake up today and all of a sudden say: "Those two words don't mean anything. It's blank slate time here in Alberta. We wiped out everything in the past." I know the hon. Minister of the Treasury Board doesn't like to look in the rearview mirror, and it's always straight ahead. These two words don't mean anything anymore. It's straight ahead. Don't look in that rearview mirror. No point in doing that right now. Everything is right as rain here in Alberta. We've got it straight. But, no. Sexual orientation: these two words come up again. They come up again here in this bill, and they cause many people concern. They cause the teaching community concern and other communities concern: the gay, lesbian, bi, and transgendered community, for one, and others of many stripes and what have you.

Needless to say, that is the reason why this amendment is choosing to go down to just the words "human sexuality." Human sexuality. It's enshrined. You can take your children out of class. This is a halfway point where we're willing to meet the hon. member on human sexuality. We take out those two words that for whatever reason this government didn't want in. We take them out. Then you've got human sexuality.

I'll tell you what. It's not the best bill in the world, but, you know, it's put forward. I can live with it. I think, hon. member, I'd like to hear your comments on why you object to just changing this bill from including those words, "sexual orientation," that right up until today this government didn't like for some reason, and we'll now just put these two words in. I'd like to hear his comments on if that would suffice him and allow that to codify these rights. We're okay with it. We've spoken in favour of that.

Those are my comments. Thank you very much, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I'm pleased to rise and join this debate. I have to say that I've listened impassionedly during the day, during the night, and sometimes during the graveyard shift as we are right now with some speeches here, and one of the best speeches I actually heard was from the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs. He makes some good points.

I just want to add a couple of items here to the history. There's a lot of talk here about the Vriend decision. This actually came down from the Supreme Court in 1998. It read sexual orientation into our law. I remember this very closely as I was a law student at the time. Essentially, it's been there for seven years. Many ask: why do we need this? I'll tell you why we do. During some consultations on Bill 52 a group said to me that sexual orientation was not a protected ground of discrimination. That was incorrect. But at the same time it hit me to this point: not everyone understands the intricacies of the law or of this legislation, and this is why we need to add sexual orientation to the provision of the legislation. I submit to this House that you should not have to have a legal background to understand your rights or to be free of discrimination, to be free of discrimination in employment, to be free of discrimination in housing. Our laws must be clear. This is why sexual orientation is being added to section 4, and I'm pleased to support this.

As the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs indicated, there's another side to this coin. That ground against discrimination was already there, but we put it in law. Similarly, parental choice was there in the School Act as it is right now, but at the same time, for the same reason we want to put it into legislation.

Now, Mr. Chair, I don't have the privilege of having children of my own. I do come from a long line of teachers in my family, and I have to say that as a child my parents were the first and the best of my teachers. I learned from a very young age that many people have different values, many people have different families. While everybody may be alike in many aspects, it's up to the parents – not the government, not the state – to raise the children.

It's important also to never be judgmental towards others who may have different lifestyles. This legislation reflects just that: a parent's right to set parameters for raising their own child. I've heard again: this provision is in the School Act; what's the benefit? Well, first off, advanced notification to parents on matters of religion, sexuality, or sexual orientation. This is, again, why this subamendment is unacceptable, striking out religion, human sexuality, and sexual orientation and just leaving human sexuality. Rather, we need to enshrine this clause in legislation.

As I've stated earlier, our own laws must be clear and understood by all, and that's why section 11.1 achieves this: parental choice. Many misconceptions we've dealt with earlier. The Member for Calgary-Nose Hill talked about, at the outset of this debate, that this doesn't have anything to deal with evolution or anything with historical fact in the past.

My submission is that we must oppose this subamendment because it goes against the whole character of this bill. If we're going to respect rights on one end, we also must respect the same rights on the other end. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Do any other members wish to speak?

[Motion on subamendment SA2 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We are now back to amendment A1. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to propose a subamendment to amendment A1, so I will circulate those through the pages.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. We'll pause, then, while they're circulated.

Dr. Taft: Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we will refer to this amendment as subamendment SA3.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. For the record and those of you listening in the gallery and elsewhere, the subamendment reads as follows: be it moved that amendment A1, clause (b), be amended by adding the following after the proposed subsection (3). This would be, then, subsection (4). "No costs incurred under this section by a school board shall be taken from funds voted for the Ministry of Education." That's the full substance of this proposed subamendment.

It seems inevitable that this piece of legislation is going to move through, but when we think through the administration of it, I think we need to get specific here. We need to think about resources. It would be naive to say that there will be absolutely no costs related to this bill getting passed. The amendment proposed is, if anything, in some ways more complicated than the original. Regardless, in either case there are going to be costs, and I just want to enumerate briefly what some of those costs might be.

Clearly, there are going to be records kept for every single child from K to 12 in every school in Alberta specific to this. Each one of those children is going to have to have a form sent home from school, maybe multiple forms because there will be multiple subjects covered in various grades. Those then have to be compiled, sorted, stored, and kept in some kind of bring-forward system so that when the exemption has to be implemented, it's brought forward at the right moment. So there are those costs there. I know from my own experience at schools that school offices are already darn busy places. They often tend to be crowded, too, so there are questions of how those resources will be handled.

I think that beyond that there will sooner or later be cases brought forward. There will be complaints filed. Somebody will slip up. Some school secretary will be sick on the day that an exemption was supposed to occur, and the kid will be taught when the parents wanted them exempted or whatever. It's going to happen. Or maybe it'll be a frivolous complaint. However it happens, there will be a complaint, and then there will be costs incurred for that.

The number of students in school in Alberta – I don't know the exact number. The Minister of Education is here. It's got to be in the few hundreds of thousands. So we can be darn sure that there are going to be complaints filed. When those complaints are filed, the lawyers will get involved, and right away the costs start to climb. They'll climb very quickly, you know. Then we don't know how long this will go. We don't know how many other kinds of people might be entailed, but every step of the way there are going to be costs.

This particular subamendment is intended as an insurance policy, as it were, or as a barrier that prevents those costs from being taken out of the Education budget. I imagine, for example, the school that's closest to where I live. It's a very small elementary school, about a hundred students. They're students from very highly engaged families. It's not hard for me to imagine one of those families at some point filing this kind of complaint. There are lots of lawyers there. There are lots of professionals in that neighbourhood. Well, if the costs of dealing with that complaint came down on the school budget, a little school like that is really going to suffer. It wouldn't take long if there are lawyers involved for the cost to climb into the thousands of dollars.

What we are wanting to achieve by this proposed subamendment is that an action taken under the human rights act does not cost money that's meant to be spent under the School Act. We don't want to see money taken out of the classroom to support this bill. That's pretty straightforward. I hope that members opposite will understand that this is intended to protect the budget integrity of the school system, and I hope they support this.

Thanks, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I appreciate the comments from the Member for Edmonton-Riverview. He has mentioned costs in this subamendment and mentioned lawyers' fees. I'm no longer a practising lawyer, so I can't talk about what lawyers' fees are these days. I have to say that his intent is good, but in practice this amendment is bad. I have to say that because it is going to actually involve more costs in tracking these costs, and there is only one pocket, be it education, human rights, or otherwise. This is just going to result in more administration costs. I don't know how much it is going to cost, but at the same time this is a bad amendment. I would encourage all members to oppose it. I'm not sure where the intent really comes from here. Is this just to give more bureaucrats more things to do? Is this to hire more people in our civil service? I don't know. But this is a bad amendment, and I would encourage all members to oppose it.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I actually think this amendment should be supported. I was trying to figure out how to do a similar, related amendment because what I was trying to do was make sure that even if a teacher had been found in violation of section 9, they wouldn't personally have to pay a cost and wouldn't be liable for any kind of punishment. I wasn't able to successfully convince Parliamentary Counsel that there was a way to do that, but this was the alternative.

I think, actually, the member has done the honourable thing, and that's to make sure that the school doesn't end up having to pay the costs here, that it's not pulled away from educational dollars towards students. I think that ultimately what we're trying to do here is give the students in the education system the best possible experience and make sure that the money is spent on them and not on others.

That's the problem with punishment and liability and responsibility clauses in legislation. I think that often we seem to make two mistakes. One is that in trying to reinforce that this is a serious matter, we put the amounts too high. When these get to be adjudicated in front of a court, the judges look at the punishment, and if it's very high, for example in a monetary fine, they go: well, that's an awful lot of money. So the test is going to be very high to make sure that somebody has broken this law in a vigorous enough way that we're going to charge them the absolute top dollar. What happens, I've found, in a lot of cases is that it's never charged because the test is too high and people don't meet it.

We have to be clear on what we're trying to do with this legislation. From our point of view, it's to try and minimize whatever damage we think is being done specific to section 9, and that is that there is a chill that's being put on teachers about their ability to raise and react to and teach the various prohibited sections, but the cost of it appears to be coming forward on the school board. I mean, who will pay the costs if we have the situation that's described? If the secretary or the school administrator is not there on the day that these notices are supposed to go out in the school, the teacher is now in violation. They're brought up before the Human Rights Commission, and there are definitely costs involved there. Who is liable for it? Do we really want to have the dollars pulled away from the kids in the classroom? I would argue no. That's not what we're trying to do.

I'm more than happy to support the member's amendment, and I urge the rest of my colleagues to do the same.

1:50

Mr. Snelgrove: I guess it's just coincidence that I happen to be sitting here listening occasionally and reading this book called Risk: The Science and Politics of Fear. It explains very clearly what people do when they're trying to misrepresent a position or trying to somehow make an issue that's not real. You can create the fear. Then if that doesn't work, you create the result of the fear or what could possibly happen. That's fine. But, you know, I have to wonder. If a school board or staff or someone in their organization has done something that requires a legal opinion or process, then logically that board or that organization would pay. Or I guess you could go take it from, oh, say, seniors. They're not here tonight, we're not worrying about them, so we'll take it from them. Or maybe from health care. That's a good connection. We can't take it from education. We're not going to tell you where we're going to take it from. We don't even know what it's going to be. We don't even know if it's going to be anything.

I can just about guarantee you that what we've paid the security staff here tonight to listen to their politics of fear is more than will be spent worrying about what they're worrying about. I just think it's ironic that I just happen to be reading Risk: The Science and Politics of Fear, and it's going on right here in front of our eyes.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. Nothing could better represent the politics of fear but section 9 of Bill 44. It raises a question in my mind and surely has in other members as well: what are some people afraid of? What are they afraid is going to happen in the school that their children are going to be exposed to that requires the entrenchment of this in human rights legislation? I'd like to know from the extreme right that's driving this agenda: what is it about these subjects that you fear so much?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre on subamendment SA3.

Ms Blakeman: Absolutely. I'm responding to the way the President of the Treasury Board talked about subamendment SA3. Thank you so much for the opportunity. You know, what I find interesting is why the members in this Assembly are more than willing to accept a legal cost to be covered for our activities through the risk management fund, but when you point out a similar situation for another sector . . .

Dr. Taft: This legislation is creating the risk.

Ms Blakeman: This legislation is creating the risk for other people, actually, but there the similarities end.

While the members opposite can understand and accept and value the risk management fund covering their decisions and any liabilities they may create in doing their job, they don't seem to understand that when it transfers to a different sector like the teachers or the principals or the schools boards but specifically the teachers, which is what this particular amendment was on. I just find it really curious that there's a clear grasp and understanding when it comes to protecting their liabilities with the risk management fund but not to understanding how those liabilities could be created or, indeed, what they will cover for another sector, in this case the teachers.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Yeah. Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I think it is important for us as MLAs to understand that by passing this legislation, we are creating a liability for others that did not exist, we are creating a risk for others that did not exist, and that we are making absolutely no provision to counterbalance that in any financial way.

What's going to happen – and I guarantee it. I'll take the President of the Treasury Board out for a steak dinner sometime on this. I'm sure he'd be thrilled to go with me if this guarantee doesn't work. I guarantee there will eventually be complaints filed under this, and I guarantee that that will lead to costs. All I'm trying to do is make sure that those costs don't come out of the budgets of the schools or on the backs of the teachers. The Member for Edmonton-Centre is absolutely right. We all sit here as MLAs covered under the taxpayer dollar by the risk management fund, but, oh no, we don't want that benefit to go to anybody else. It's good for us, bad for the others. I think that's wrong, particularly when this bill is creating that risk in the first place.

I don't know that there are any other comments on it. Yeah, we have one more comment, and then we can keep moving.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Movement is good, Mr. Chairman.

Well, I'm certainly interested in the point that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview has raised, Mr. Chairman. He's raised the fact that in order to enforce this or in order to accommodate the types of activities that are going to go on, it's going to take resources away from our school system. So any time a parent decides to launch a case before the Human Rights Commission, there are going to be a lot of costs, and they won't all be borne by the Human Rights Commission and certainly won't all be borne by the parent.

You know, teachers are going to have to take time off to prepare for this. The school administration, the school board, and the principal all will have to take time in order to prepare the case and, potentially, to appear. They'll need to take staff time to be interviewed by complaints officers, and depending on where all of it goes, it could have a substantial impact on a given teacher or a given school. That will come not only as a financial cost, but it will come at a cost for the children, the children who will not have the full attention of their teacher because their teacher is busy defending themselves under a human rights act that enshrines a bizarre set of rights that, as far as I'm aware, no other jurisdiction has even thought of.

I think it's well warranted. I don't want my child's education or any of my constituents' children's education negatively impacted even a little bit by this wacky piece of legislation and by charges that might be brought or cases that might be brought by parents who could have just as easily resolved the issue by talking to the teacher in the first place. That's part of the educational responsibility of both parents and teachers as well as schools, and I think that it's worked very well. This creation of the government is in fact going to do just as I think the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview rightly points out. It's going to consume resources that need to go to the education of children rather than being sucked up by absurd and unnecessary complaints to the Human Rights Commission under an absurd and unnecessary clause to this act.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak?

If not, I will call the question on subamendment SA3.

[Motion on subamendment SA3 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We are back to amendment A1. If there are no members that wish to speak, I will call the question. We are doing this in two motions.

[Motion on amendment A1A carried]

[Motion on amendment A1B carried]

The Deputy Chair: We're back to the bill. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

2:00

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I have some amendments at the table. At this point I would like to move the amendment. We're finished with A1, right?

The Deputy Chair: Yes.

Ms Blakeman: Okay. Good. It would be the one that is adding in "aboriginal heritage." So it's adding in "aboriginal heritage" as a prohibited grounds of discrimination. I'll allow time for that to be distributed.

The Deputy Chair: We'll pause, yes, while the amendment is passed out.

Okay. Hon. member, please proceed. This amendment is A2.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. Essentially what this amendment is doing is adding in the phrase "aboriginal heritage" wherever the list of prohibited grounds of discrimination occurs in the act. This is springing directly out of the recommendations that were done by the Sheldon Chumir Foundation for Ethics in Leadership. The point that they make around this is that for aboriginal people it is not clear to them that the human rights legislation is there to serve their people as well as others, that there is confusion as to whether this legislation applies to them at all.

For a number of us that deal with these issues all the time, that would seem to be pretty clear. Human rights legislation is supposed to cover everybody and specifically to cover those groups that have traditionally experienced a particular kind of discrimination, whether that's the withholding of services or difficulties in finding employment or housing. In fact, given the language that we currently have, there's an argument that aboriginal peoples would be covered under the word that's used, race, or under ancestries. Both of those words appear in the list of prohibited grounds and discrimination.

What Sheldon Chumir found was that there is a lack of understanding, that the human rights legislation does apply to aboriginal peoples, and, furthermore, that there's a real reluctance for aboriginal people to go to the commission to take advantage of their services. The foundation goes on to say that this group of people are the group that face the most severe discrimination. This is the group that could most benefit from the commission's services yet is the least likely to seek out those same services. What the Sheldon Chumir foundation believes is that the Human Rights Commission and the legislation could be more useful and accessible. I'll just quote a section.

The Alberta Human Rights Commission must be made truly useful and accessible to Aboriginal people in the province. While we . . . That's the Sheldon Chumir foundation.

. . . recognize the difficulty of responding to this challenge, there are changes that could be made to signal that the provincial government is serious about protecting the dignity of Aboriginal people. For example, in Nova Scotia, discrimination on the basis of "Aboriginal origin" is explicitly prohibited by law.

They argue that aboriginal heritage should be added into the legislation. In fact, it appears as recommendation 12 of their report.

It was one of the areas that really struck me. Clearly, in Edmonton-Centre I have a number of urban aboriginal people that live in the riding, and many of them, I will say up front, are very successful. But there are also those who are not and seem to struggle in many ways to be able to take advantage of the services that are there in ways that people from other identifiable disadvantaged communities don't seem to have the same difficulties with.

So in looking at that and in looking at what was possible under this human rights legislation while we've got it open, I thought this might be an area where we could improve on Bill 44 and what's proposed under Bill 44, and therefore I'm happy to move amendment A2, which does request that Bill 44 be amended in sections 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, and 13 by striking out "family status or sexual orientation" wherever it occurs and substituting "family status, sexual orientation or aboriginal heritage," which brings in that aboriginal heritage phrase and is more inclusive and clearly identifiable to members of that community.

Thank you for allowing me to move that amendment. I hope that I can get the support of the Assembly in passing this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Culture and Community Spirit.

Mr. Blackett: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I applaud the hon. member's intention in this bill. It's something that we had looked at, actually, last fall, when we got the Sheldon Chumir report. We had talked to our legal counsel, and they suggested that aboriginal people, even though they are First Nation people, are covered under ancestry. They didn't feel it was necessary to include a separate area with respect to aboriginal people. So we've gone with the legal advice, and we feel that ancestry as it is included now is sufficient to cover the aboriginal people.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. At some point as a society – particularly, I'm thinking of Canadian society – I think we will need to begin to revisit the basis of how we categorize discrimination. I'm reading from Bill 44 and its reference to the existing act. The existing human rights legislation addresses discrimination specifically in regard to race, religious beliefs, colour, gender, physical disability, mental disability, age, ancestry, as the minister just pointed out, place of origin, marital status, source of income, or family status. This won't get resolved tonight. It may not get resolved for many, many years, maybe not in my lifetime. But the issue of race, I think, is going to have to be hashed out, and it's going to be a very slow process.

What do we mean by race? I was just spending some quick time on the web here because I've actually wondered about that question for quite a few years. I'm struck when I go to the United States. You know, I think I'm figuring out what's going on, they all speak the same language, and then I realize, after I read the newspapers for a few days, that there are some things that are just really different. There's a really different discourse in the United States on some things. Health care is one, guns is another, and race is another. I haven't lived in the States. I mean, I've read the history and so on, but I haven't absorbed that by growing up there. So issues in the United States get cast as issues of race at times when it wouldn't even have occurred to me here.

I don't want to downplay the existence of racism, whatever it is, in Canada, because it's there. Yet is it racism or is it discrimination on the basis of something else? Is it discrimination on the basis of colour or on the basis of ancestry and ethnicity or all kinds of other things? I actually have found myself wondering – gee, I'm going way out on thin ice here – if in some ways the best way to begin to get rid of racism is to stop talking about race. Just let it disappear. Instead, we recognize that there is discrimination on lots of other bases, as I said: colour, ethnicity, religious belief, gender, all those kinds of things. So that's kind of stewing in the back of my mind when I read this proposed amendment from the Member for Edmonton-Centre, which specifically addresses aboriginal heritage.

Actually, I think the minister made kind of an interesting point there although I would never totally go against the Member for Edmonton-Centre because I think so highly of her. But it's a complicated issue. I'm getting really into hot water here. In my constituency there are a number of people of aboriginal heritage, and there are hundreds of thousands in Alberta, and there are millions in Canada. I think we have to admit, whether we call it racism or something else, that there is discrimination against people of that ancestry or of that heritage. I think the idea here of specifically naming aboriginal people is acknowledging that in Canada's experience people of aboriginal heritage have had a particularly broad and systemic experience of discrimination and that if we are to take genuine steps towards addressing that, then maybe we need to take some particular step in naming them and giving them a particular acknowledgement under this act.

So having said all kinds of things there that are wading in all kinds of directions, I think the spirit behind this is a good one. Given the experience of aboriginal people in this country I think this is something that should be supported.

Thanks.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you. It's a pleasure to be able to rise to speak on this amendment and to speak in favour of this amendment as well. It's interesting, you know. The history of how the rights of our aboriginal Canadians are addressed through human rights statements in our country is a varied one, and it's actually been the case in the past that aboriginal heritage has not necessarily been something that has been pursued as prohibited ground for discrimination in part because many aboriginal people themselves advocate more for a parallel system of justice and a parallel system of governance and a parallel sort of polity almost, if you will. They don't necessarily see the mechanism for the amelioration of the many, many systemic and historical injustices that they've had to suffer as being treated equally with all other groups, cultures, races that coexist within the nonaboriginal society. For that reason, for instance, we see in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms actual exceptions to certain parts of the Charter as it applies to aboriginal communities in order to recognize what at the time, anyway, was an acknowledgement of a more collective approach to analyzing rights and obligations and the law and that kind of thing.

As a result, when I first see the concept of aboriginal heritage being introduced, my first response is to hesitate a bit because I'm not a hundred per cent sure that that's what the aboriginal community itself would pursue. Having said that, I think we know that, you know, the aboriginal community itself is not monolithic. There are aboriginal people who are living on reserve and in communities where they're able to engage in that parallel community-building and community-functioning. But there are, of course, many aboriginal people who live, for instance, in the city of Edmonton who are making a go of it within the broader community, as they should be able to. Certainly, we want them to be as successful as possible.

It's in cases like that, then, that we need to analyze whether or not we're doing a good job of ensuring that there is equality being afforded to aboriginal Albertans, and I think most of the statistics really tell the story. We know that the statistics show the state of any measure, whether it be education or health care or income or, you know, the percentage who make up the population within our prisons. We know that the aboriginal community is under great stress in a way that is not proportional to their population, at a rate that is much greater than the actual number of aboriginal people.

Clearly, we're not doing a good job of ensuring that equality. I think that, on one hand, we can't abandon the primary mechanisms through which we can support aboriginal communities in their search for equality, whether it be equality in a parallel system or equality within our system but giving them as much autonomy and support for their parallel situation as they seek. At the same time, I think that this amendment will assist in those cases with the description I think one of the members talked about, or perhaps it was in the Sheldon Chumir foundation report where they talked about aboriginal Albertans describing how they would get jobs in, you know, industry A, industry B but then would have to leave them because they would be subjected to so much racism just simply within the community at large.

We know that that's a problem, and we know we need to do something to improve how we are educating Albertans about the need to treat aboriginal Albertans with respect and dignity and, ultimately, with equality. Just, of course, with the asterisk beside it being that true equality doesn't mean that you're treated the same; true equality means that you're treated in the way you need to be in order for your situation to advance at the same rate that others would.

It's with that in mind, then, that I support this amendment. I think that we need to do a better job. Granted, one might say: well, you know, it's already covered in other provisions of the act. But I do believe we've just spent several hours agreeing to go ahead with the inclusion of a rights clause which is actually already covered in other pieces of legislation. So, clearly, that is not a barrier to moving forward on an issue in an area where we know we need to do a better job and work harder and reach out more effectively to a community that definitely needs our support to ensure true equality within our province.

With that in mind, I do support the amendment put forward by the Member for Edmonton-Centre, and I urge all members of the Assembly to do the same. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's a privilege to rise and speak to the human rights amendment we see before us brought by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre. It is with a note that I found here from the Sheldon Chumir Foundation for Ethics in Leadership, their very good report on human rights and the recommendations that were made therein. This amendment emanates from their recommendations, and I have no doubt that Janet Keeping and her staff, who have studied this issue over the last three years, have a firm understanding of what the human rights situation is and how it can be best accommodated.

Looking at the landscape and the nature of this amendment, it's true that amongst our aboriginal people in Alberta there's widespread confusion as to whether the provincial human rights statute applies to them. In many circumstances it does, but most aboriginal people the Chumir foundation spoke to did not know this. There was also widespread reluctance amongst aboriginal people to go to the commission, in any event. Those are the words of the Chumir foundation.

At the same time, you can almost take what they call judicial notice of the fact that for people, natives, at least in my history and experience and as it goes further to even when I was younger and older, the group singled out most for, I guess, public scorn or ridicule or social commentary or what have you has traditionally been the native population. This has existed for some time, and I don't believe — hey, don't get me wrong. I'm not saying it's always a treat to be other minorities and all that sort of stuff, but I think a special set of ridicule is saved for our aboriginal peoples. This is truly reprehensible yet is seemingly referenced in the work of the Sheldon Chumir foundation.

As the member from the third party just indicated, anything we can do to ameliorate those differences or to rectify those inequities to help a community that is significantly behind the curve in terms of almost any socioeconomic indicator of health, whether that is the amount of time they live on this earth, the amount of education they get, the amount of employability they get, the amount of individuals who graduate from high school — you go down the list, and here in Alberta we'd be hard pressed to find one category that our aboriginal people aren't scoring either the lowest on or near the bottom.

Clearly, we as legislators should have that in mind in looking for opportunities where we can give a hand up to that group to try and do better and to create opportunities for themselves and to be able to access things like the Human Rights Commission when they feel their rights have been trampled upon. That's why I am speaking in favour of this amendment. The minister correctly points out that this is referenced in ancestry, but again this is one of those places where maybe we'd do a little extra, a little bit of a nod to a community that has been disadvantaged and is having a difficult time getting ahead and getting, I guess, some form of social justice or even human rights justice in this province, that we maybe put this in there and offer that opportunity for them.

I appreciate speaking in favour of the amendment. At some point in time, I guess when we don't need it, we could always retract it and say: that's great; our native populations have been restored to a situation that is acceptable. But at this time I don't think we can say that.

So I'm supporting the amendment, and I encourage all other members to do so as well. Thank you very much, Mr. Chair.

Mr. Blackett: Chairman, I'd just like to say, again, that it's very noble. We have to do more for the aboriginal community in terms of awareness of the Human Rights Commission, what their rights are under that commission. I think that is something that the human rights, citizenship, and multiculturalism education fund should certainly focus on.

There are, I think, roughly 600,000 aboriginal people in Alberta. If you single that group out, what are you saying to the 400,000 people of Chinese ancestry or the people from India? They all have long histories of discrimination. Is anybody's more important than another? When you single out one group, then you automatically are leaving others aside. We believe all these different groups should be helped and recognized, and discrimination is reprehensible, but we thought that covering it as one and not singling out one group — because the next group will be coming forward and saying: we should be included in there. All of a sudden we're going to have a list of 50 different areas in terms of protected grounds.

I'll just leave it at that.

Mr. Mason: Well, you know, Mr. Chairman, I would like to speak briefly to this amendment. I guess the minister has just made the point that I think the drafter of the amendment wanted to make, which is: why are you picking and choosing certain groups or certain rights to protect and not others? It occurred to me that that was the case. I think the minister has made the point of this amendment, with apologies to my colleagues in the opposition, better than anyone over on this side, which is to illustrate that the government is picking and selecting some groups that are going to get protection or that we'll be protected from and not others. It's just curious because they've never really explained why those particular groups are included and others are not.

He has just made a really good argument against including some of the things that are included in this bill, which, again, really begs the question: where did this come from? It didn't come from the complaints of parents. It came from a campaign of the religious right in the United States. That's where it came from, and it has found its way into this legislation.

Mr. Chairman, I think it's pretty clear that we should, if we're going to include family status and sexual orientation, also include aboriginal heritage. The fact that the minister has identified that there are lots of other groups that could be included as well, I think, simply outlines the point being made by the mover of this amendment.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Are you ready for the question on amendment A2?

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We are back to the bill. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

2:30

Ms Blakeman: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman, for recognizing me. I had an additional amendment.

Dr. Taft: We even lost the people in the gallery. Bye.

Ms Blakeman: Oh, there goes the last fan of the evening, gone, walking out the door, and we're still here.

All right. I would like to move another amendment, and this is an amendment for sections 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, and 13. It's essentially adding in the concept of gender identity to be another ground that prohibits discrimination. So I'll let that be distributed, and you will call me when you're ready.

The Deputy Chair: Yes. Thank you.

Hon. members, we'll call this amendment A3. Please proceed.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. This amendment is intended to include the concept of gender identity under those areas that are protected under our human rights legislation from discrimination and, let's be honest, specifically protected from discrimination on the grounds of employment, housing, and access to government programs and services. But that does tend to flow outwards and does sort of establish an expectation that any one group that is protected under this would find itself receiving equal treatment in the community.

The reason that I specifically included gender identity is that this is not covered under sexual orientation. I know that currently the Human Rights Commission is accepting cases of gender identity under the auspices of sexual orientation, but they are under no obligation to do so. It's not the same thing.

This is a concept that can be a struggle for people to understand. Gender identity is an issue of being, if you can think of it this way, arbitrarily assigned one body, yet your personality does not match that. We had a very good example of it in the Assembly here when the budget was brought down and the minister announced that he was no longer going to cover the cost of gender reassignment surgery.

We, in fact, have never had surgeons qualified or interested in doing that here in the province, so people have always had to travel out of the province to get that. Believe you me, this is not something that someone does on a whim. This is a series of very painful and complex operations, so you can understand that someone only undertakes that if they really felt driven to it, that it was really something that they had to do in order to lead a fulfilled life.

I know that for some people this seems pretty out there, but those individuals that I work with – and, indeed, there are some members in the House, I think – have come to understand that gender identity is an important part of our lives, and for most of us it's a done deal. It's not a question. It just is. But there are a number of individuals for which it's not a done deal, and it does involve a number of, as I said, very painful and complicated surgeries to match them up with the right body. So gender identity is not about sexual orientation. It's not about who you like or who you want to be with. It's about who you are.

We recognize that this exists as a medical condition. We have until this year paid for the surgery. It was recognized for many, many years in the – I never remember the name of this, and the medical people have all gone home. It's the psychiatric diagnostic manual.

Ms Notley: DSM-IV.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. The DSM-IV is our bible, if you will, of medical diagnosis. I struggle with that because I had never regarded gender identity or transgendered individuals as having a mental illness, and clearly the medical profession has now come to that same point because it's no longer listed. That may be the reason why the government decided that they were no longer going to fund the surgeries, but actually we don't know because we never got an explanation from the minister.

But there's no question that individuals who are transgendered face in many ways a double jeopardy because there are questions about their sexual orientation, but also, I mean, people don't understand what's happening and most people are afraid of the unknown. You know, looking at transgendered individuals, for a lot of people they just don't understand what's going on. As a result there is a great deal of discrimination against them, misunderstanding, some very real difficulties about which facilities they can use or are allowed to use, a misunderstanding about what their place in the family is, et cetera, and then there are all the medical issues that go along with that.

So to me it's very clear that, actually, the two groups of people that in my experience are the most likely to experience severe discrimination and a lack of access to services and a struggle to find appropriate housing and sometimes even employment are people with aboriginal ancestry and transgendered individuals. Clearly, that's why I had the previous amendment and why I've brought forward this amendment.

I know that this is a struggle for a number of people in this Assembly to grapple with this concept, which doesn't mean that it is not meritorious, and I would urge my colleagues in the Assembly to make that leap and to understand that this is a group of people that is in need of protection, that this is a different issue than sexual orientation, and it shouldn't be assumed that they would be captured under that definition. As a matter of fact, I mean, as I said, they are currently, but that doesn't mean that they will be in the future because they are not specifically mentioned under this legislation under protected grounds. I think they need to be. We make ourselves a better society when we recognize the people who are truly vulnerable and are in need of some assistance now.

I would ask people to support this amendment. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

2:40

Mr. Allred: Mr. Chairman, I have not been participating in this debate to date. I've been sitting here somewhat bored by some of the trivia of some of the amendments. But I note that this amendment creates a bit of a redundancy in that the word "gender" is already included, I think, in all of the sections that have been mentioned. So if we add gender identity, I'm not sure that it adds anything to the particular clauses. In fact, I think it causes a lot of confusion. I'll just read section 3 as it would appear with the amendment: whereas it is recognized in Alberta as a fundamental principle and as a matter of public policy that all persons are equal in dignity, rights, and responsibilities without regard to race, religious beliefs, colour, gender, physical disability, mental disability, ity, age, ancestry, place of origin, marital status, source of income, family status, sexual orientation, or gender identity.

Well, Mr. Chairman, I find that very, very confusing. I don't know what the heck the difference is between gender and gender identity, so I would urge members to defeat this amendment, and let's get on with things.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. It's a privilege to stand up and speak in favour of Bill 44 and this amendment, which adds gender identity to the debate. I'd just like to commend my colleague for Edmonton-Centre for bringing forward this amendment. She is always on the cutting edge of human rights and knowing in the right direction they're going and getting there faster than most people can. Really, this is one of those issues that has come up, and the medical evidence is there that gender identity is a real and not a trivial cause. It is there, and it is a struggle for many people, many families, and people really feel like they are left out to twist in the wind with no protection or no rights or no understanding of what they're going through.

I believe that this gender identity addition is welcome at this time for other reasons. You notice in Ontario that when their health minister attempted to cut the funding to transgendered reassignment surgery, well, guess what? They found that a violation of their human rights, citizenship, and multiculturalism act, so clearly it is a violation of a human rights act, at least in Ontario, and by rights it may happen here at some point in time.

Nevertheless, whether that is the case or whether it is or is not there, what I would say is that gender identity is an issue. I believe that this is timely as I believe it will be a matter of course in other jurisdictions soon. It would be, really, truly a feather in Alberta's cap to say, "We were the first to identify gender identity," not like in this one, where it took us 11 years after to identify something so simple as sexual orientation.

Nevertheless, I'm supportive of the bill. I'm supportive of the people who struggle with this issue yet choose to live life according to the way they want to. Just if society could be more accepting, this would go a long way to enshrining their rights and having society move in a more accepting manner, which I think should be the goal of all Legislative Assemblies.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I will allow someone else to speak on the amendment.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you. I'm pleased to be able to get up and join in on this debate in support of this amendment. This is an addition to the list of prohibited grounds which I think the members of this Assembly should give due consideration to.

It's interesting. Gender identity is not an issue of gender per se, nor, as has been pointed out, is it an issue of sexual orientation. People who suggest that it is an issue of either really highlight the need for this to be actually included properly within the legislation. It is a real issue. It's an issue, actually, that affects the estimates with respect to how many people it affects.

I was pleased to be able to attend an awareness presentation at a local church on Sunday where a number of people from within the transgendered community talked about their personal experiences and shared them with members of the congregation as well as members of the public in order to help educate people on what the experience is to be a transgendered person in Alberta. Two of the comments they said right off. They started out by saying, "I'm not gay," or "I'm not a lesbian; that's not what I am; that is not the experience that I have." Then they went on to describe the remarkable number of ways in which they are faced with discrimination day by day in very small sort of almost innocuous ways.

For instance, one person talked about how when she applied for a job and had to have a criminal record check done, she had to give them both of her names. In doing that, of course, she then was compelled to disclose that she had previously been, certainly on the outside, a man. That then allowed for a number of decisions to be made with respect to whether or not that person would get the employment that they were seeking. Another example that was given was the issue of whether transgendered individuals would be given the opportunity to adopt children. Another example of sort of the chronic, systemic kind of challenges they faced was where they would have gone through the process of changing the gender but then for a variety of reasons in a variety of ways were accepted by neither gender or had challenges being accepted by either gender.

So it really was a very informative opportunity for me to learn more about the experiences of these people. I want to say that the folks that were there were very, very courageous to get up in front of a room of, you know, a hundred or so people and describe these very personal experiences in their lives with a view to trying to promote education and promote understanding and promote tolerance.

The reality is that while right now our commissions are in many cases reaching in order to ensure that these people's rights are protected, they're doing it in the same way that our commissions were previously reaching to protect the rights of people whose sexual orientation was different, as directed by the Supreme Court of Canada in the Vriend decision, basically saying that you can read in certain prohibited grounds. So our commission has been reading in this prohibited ground. But like the fact that it was never really appropriate or fair or symbolic or in any way embracing the true equality that people were seeking by our failure to include sexual orientation for so many years, the same really exists with this community as well.

So it is a community that is subjected to a great amount of discrimination. As I say, in the same way gay and lesbian Albertans were protected by virtue of the Vriend decision through the Supreme Court of Canada, without being specifically named in the code in the past, these members of this community will be, too. But it's a question of whether this Legislature would demonstrate more foresight and forethought than they did with respect to the previous addition to the list of prohibited grounds and actually get ahead of the curve. I know it's a lot to suggest that this Legislature might get ahead of the curve on human rights issues, but what the heck. It's late at night, and we can dream. I guess that's what this amendment is about.

In a sleep-deprived fit of naïveté and hopefulness, I urge members of the Assembly to support this amendment in the name of bringing our human rights code up to date. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Do any other members wish to speak?

I'll call the question on amendment A3.

[Motion on amendment A3 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We're speaking to the bill now. Hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, do you wish to move an amendment?

Mr. Hehr: I wish to move an amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. We'll pause and have the amendment distributed, and then you can open.

Mr. Hehr: That would be great.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, this is amendment A4.
The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I bring this amendment. It is again a recommendation by the Sheldon Chumir foundation that returns an element of free speech to our way of life here in Alberta and is, I believe, really the way our society is meant to operate and how we are supposed to best communicate ideas. I look to the Sheldon Chumir foundation, who studied this issue long and hard. I, too, agree with their recommendations, and that's why I bring them forward here. Free speech is a fundamental right in this society that shouldn't be intertwined very easily with our human rights commissions.

I'll go into it further and explain my amendment. I know that from time to time earlier when questions were asked to the hon. minister in this House regarding sexual orientation, I remember hearing the hon. minister of sustainable resources yell back over to our side: what about free speech? I actually believe that the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness also yelled: what about free speech rights? I honestly believe that maybe someone from the back – and I can't be held true here – possibly the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, may appreciate the amendment I am bringing forward as I heard he was yelling something similar when the other ministers were talking. That was just rumour and innuendo. I guess now we'll see where the rubber hits the road.

Let me just talk about this for a second. I quote directly from the Sheldon Chumir foundation.

Many of the most virulent criticisms leveled at human rights commissions over the last few years concern provisions that seek to make statements of opinion illegal. Some of the high profile cases have concerned opinions on the part of the Christian right about the evil (in their eyes) of homosexuality and cartoons and articles perceived by some Muslims to be offensive or even, according to their faith, blasphemous. We do not endorse the sometimes offensive views expressed by people and organizations who have come under attack pursuant to legal provisions such as section 3 of the HRCMA. But we do have grave misgivings about the threats to free expression inherent in such provisions.

Accordingly, they have offered some revisions, which you see before you in the act. Really, these are sort of changes, but the nuances are clear. This will return the wording of our act to the pre-1996 version, which reads:

- 3(1) No person shall publish, issue or display or cause to be published, issued or displayed before the public any statement, publication, notice, sign, symbol, emblem or other representation that
- (a) indicates discrimination or an intention to discriminate against a person or a class of persons, or
 - (b) is likely to expose a person or a class of persons to hatred or contempt
- because of the race, religious beliefs, colour, gender, physical disability, mental disability, age . . .

Et cetera.

Accordingly, the Sheldon Chumir foundation recommends that s. 3 of [the act] be amended to read as it did prior to 1996. This would remove the words "issue," "issued," "statement" and "publication" from s. 3. It would also remove the part of the law which refers to material which is "likely to expose a person or a class of persons to hatred or contempt." In our view . . .
The Sheldon Chumir foundation's view.

. . . this would suffice to remove the menace presented by s. 3 in its current form.

Okay. So what does all this mean? Essentially, what we've seen human rights legislation used for as of late has been some cases that should not be there. For instance, we saw that when the Maclean's article written by Mark Steyn, because it referenced Muslims, found itself before the Human Rights Commission when, really, it was just matters for discussion. The public should be entitled to have this knowledge and should be able to read accordingly. But, anyway, this journalist found himself in front of the Human Rights Commission.

We also have seen other things. An individual printed cartoons making fun of Muslimism. They were in cartoon fashion. The only place in the world where any charges were brought was at the human rights, citizenship, and multiculturalism office. In no other area of the world, to my knowledge, were any criminal proceedings, human rights, or otherwise violations found. This is the only place where this occurred. Really, these are examples of things that shouldn't happen at our Human Rights Commission.

Seriously, we look at this. Whether we abhor what people say, whether we abhor what people print, whether we abhor what people are doing, this always has to be balanced against our expression of freedom of speech. If we look at that, the topic of free speech in any liberal society, if one is not allowed to express oneself freely, this right is seriously impinged upon. In fact, I brought this up the other day. John Stuart Mill argued in On Liberty that a struggle always takes place between the competing demands of liberty and authority. He argued that we cannot have the latter without the former. I'll read this quotation from that famous book.

All that makes existence valuable to any one, depends on the enforcement of restraints upon the actions of other people. Some rules of conduct, therefore, must be imposed, by law in the first place, and by opinion on many things which are not fit subjects for the operation of law.

Freedom of speech: this right is sacrosanct.

Now, let's also remember that free speech is not unlimited, and we do have provisions in our criminal code which limit free speech. There are two occasions that this happens. It's when someone uses speech that is considered hate speech. We have seen examples of our courts stepping in where they have seen examples of this occurring, and they have said: "Hey, we're not going to take it."

3:00

An example of this was in 1990, when Mr. Keegstra, a teacher from Eckville, was espousing what was termed – basically, he denied that the Holocaust had occurred and was teaching this to his classroom. Anyway, he was charged under 319(2) of the Criminal Code with wilfully promoting hatred against an identifiable group by communicating anti-Semitic statements to his students.

Now, there is a defence to this, and that's if the statements uttered were true. Clearly, in this case Mr. Keegstra's statements weren't true. He had no defence, and he was prosecuted. His free speech was limited because it was found to be hate speech. That is how people are protected and how people should in fact be protected. The free speech. We're protected there.

Here's another incident, where Mr. Zundel was publishing stuff that was clearly untrue and was clearly offensive and prescribed hate. He was charged for spreading false news contrary to section 181 of the Criminal Code, which provides that "every one who wilfully publishes a statement, tale or news that he knows [to be] false and that causes or is likely to cause injury or mischief to a public interest is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment." Mr. Zundel was locked up for many years and I think eventually deported. Again, there is the protection for free speech.

The simple fact of the matter is that we shouldn't really limit free speech willy-nilly. Even though these ideas may be repugnant to you and me as we sit here, repugnant to most individuals on the street, we must allow for some form of this debate to go on in society. It's with this debate that we better ourselves, where we get ideas, and where people actually can be exposed and you can see people who are talking this nonsense and you can say to them: "No. This is nonsense." They are not encouraged to do this behind closed doors.

With that being the balance, I would suggest that there are provisions in our Criminal Code which deal more effectively with freedom of speech and when it borders on hate crime, and we should leave it in the Criminal Code context. I don't believe this is handled well through our human rights boards. What happens is that people are dragged to these committees for publishing and sometimes saying things which may be abhorrent but that, nevertheless, they are allowed to say. There's a place for them to be taken to task, and that is through the Criminal Code.

What I will say is that there are very few of these claims made to the human rights jurisdiction. Only 3 per cent of these types of claims go through. More importantly, the justice sort of meted out by the Human Rights Commission is rarely satisfactory to anybody, neither the person who receives the infraction nor the individual who made the claim. You see that in people who have made a claim under this, and it takes five, six years and a whole lot of money, with no really satisfactory results and no really satisfactory end to the issue; for instance, you know, sanctions that are unenforceable, sanctions that really are undemocratic and without limit.

You can see that this amendment essentially is a call, I believe, a step in the right direction of returning free speech to where it should be. I believe it is better served, as does the Sheldon Chumir foundation, through our courts system. I believe that this is a good bill that would allow for us to allow for our society to indulge in free speech and for ideas to be shared yet to espouse ideas that we abhor and bring light to them.

Anyway, sir, those are my arguments. I'd appreciate hearing some members from the other side as there may be some interest in this.

I understand that this bill has not come without some concern from some groups. I have talked to some of those groups, and I understand the uneasy balance that exists, that people, some of the minority groups, believe that their rights are better protected under the human rights and citizenship act. I disagree with them fundamentally on this issue. I believe their rights are protected under the Criminal Code and that we should err on the side of free speech and not stifle this speech when, in fact, it's simply value systems that we don't share.

I understand it's not an easy decision. Nevertheless, if we always took the easy road, we wouldn't get very far, and sometimes taking the easy road actually puts our democracy in jeopardy and stifles things. But those are my arguments, and I leave it open to the House to tell me where I'm wrong or where I'm right or whatever the day may hold.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Culture and Community Spirit.

Mr. Blackett: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Fundamentally the government caucus believes in free speech. We've had a long discussion, both inside and outside of caucus, amongst our members. Though we advocate free speech, we have a tremendous concern amongst many of our members. We have a very diverse caucus, as the Premier has said, probably the most diverse in Canada in terms of ethnicity, gender, background, age. We represent pretty much a microcosm of what Alberta is.

When we have a discussion, it's a free discussion, unlike the allegations that are made that there's somehow this religious right movement that's influencing our policy with respect to section 11. Well, if that were necessarily the case, then this would have been a slam dunk. We would have taken publications and statements out of there.

At the heart of the Human Rights Commission is that we've got to protect people against discrimination, and that's with respect to a combination of things, with respect to employment, with respect to access to services. We felt that by taking publications and statements out of there, there wasn't enough of a safety net that's there in the Canadian Criminal Code. The test to get a conviction by a Crown attorney is very high, and the test to even get a conviction is even higher, and it's not a slam dunk.

There are many different ethnic groups. Many different groups of new immigrants to our province have expressed concern. If you look at the last 500,000 people that have come to our province, probably 60 per cent to 70 per cent would be in those different ethnic groups, and that's where we live. So although we advocate free speech – and you're right; it's only 3 per cent of the cases – we have to make a decision as a caucus. Do we err on the side of free speech? Or do we err on the side of representing and protecting those people from discrimination because we're not comfortable with the safety net that's provided through the Canadian Criminal Code? We had to err on the side of the people that we're elected to represent.

So though many of us individually believe in the principle – I've gone on record as saying that I believe in the principle, you know, I would have thought this would have been one of the contentious issues where people would have said: "Ha ha. There is a right side," and this is the carrot to go with the sexual orientation piece. If you use the logic before, like I said, we would have put this in as a slam dunk, but we actually as a caucus had to look at it, and we think we made the right decision. Over time it may be challenged.

The other part of it is that by changing the commission, the administrative changes can't be overstated. The people who have a fear about many things don't have enough confidence in the commission being able to deal with a case in an objective manner, an impartial manner, a transparent manner, and one that will be done expeditiously. One of Ezra Levant's major complaints is not because the decision was thrown out but because it took 900 days to do that.

Hopefully, in looking at free speech and in looking at the commission, which is headed up by Blair Mason, a person with a great legal mind, one that's viewed universally as somebody that's impartial, hard-working, fair, honest, he will impart that knowledge and that wisdom and that belief through the rest of the commission. We will be able to take those cases, as limited a number as they are, and we'll be able to deal with them in the proper fashion and get the resolution that should be.

You know, sometimes we have to make those tough decisions, as you said, and we can agree to disagree. I don't think that in principle any of us disagree in this Legislature. But this is one of those times we had to make that decision, and we'll stand by it.

Mr. Hehr: I thank the minister for his comments. It was no easy decision for myself to put forward this amendment, too. I am a visible minority although not really of the traditional sort. To many of my friends who have a disability: fine; they're using the access of the Human Rights Commission. I guess at the start it was very palatable. Towards the middle they realized that this was fraught with difficulty, and by the end they had a bad taste in their mouth. That's why I've come to this decision on free speech, almost to save them the frustration with the entire hassle. Still, at the end of the day, I don't believe that the Human Rights Commission can deal out effective punishment that can satisfy either the person being charged or the person being absolved or whatever. I don't believe it is the proper forum for it.

But I understand the minister's comments. The precautionary principle is not always the worst principle. We advocated for it from time to time. It's just that I've come to believe on the balance of probabilities that in this instance the free speech side of this won out on me. Hence, that's where it is. I think that eventually, if these amendments don't work for, I guess, the human rights code, we can always come back, hopefully, with this government or another government. We can see how it works in some other jurisdiction first, so we can ease minority concerns on this issue that their rights are truly protected under our Criminal Code. I think that it would be better served.

Again, I appreciate the minister's comments. He expressed his opinion in an open and fair manner, and I applaud him for that. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak?

Are we ready for the question on amendment A4?

[Motion on amendment A4 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We are back to Bill 44. Any other members wish to speak?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 44 as amended agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

Bill 20

Civil Enforcement Amendment Act, 2009

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Sure. I'm pleased to rise to speak. I feel all invigorated again now that we're on to a new bill.

Mr. Denis: Please don't feel too much vigour.

Dr. Taft: I'm just stretching the truth a bit there, the first time I've ever done that in this Assembly.

Bill 20 is the Civil Enforcement Amendment Act, 2009. It's an act we will probably support, and I think I'll turn the floor over to our critic, the Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I believe I gave comments on this in second reading, and they are similar to those. This is good legislation, and I'll commend the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont for bringing it forward. Essentially, this bill allows for the protection of retirement savings funds as well as disability savings funds, RRIFs or whatever they're called, and all this stuff. In this society we encourage people to save, and guess what? We haven't done a good enough job as a society or maybe as a Legislature or maybe as an education system in encouraging a culture of savings. Maybe this act goes some way to promoting that culture of savings.

What this bill does is protect the civil enforcement of these types of savings devices from lawsuits. Say a person has started a business and worked his whole life to have a thriving business and puts money into RRSPs and RRIFs and whatever it is you call it and all of a sudden something goes south in that business that he's worked his whole life at. Before this legislation came about, a lawsuit could be filed. Not only could that gentleman's company be taken but his entire savings account. What would happen then? Well, that family, that man or that woman – the company would be gone – would be reliant on the government for, I guess, help and assistance and be essentially thrown on the government dole. We don't really think that's a proper result. I don't believe that would encourage entrepreneurialism and/or saving, which are two things here in Alberta that we value, hon. minister of the Treasury Board, right? We value entrepreneurialism and the culture of saving. But there's no joy in Mudville tonight.

Anyway, here we go. If we value those things, go ahead and try and have those things, and I think this bill does it. It brings us up to speed with Saskatchewan, Manitoba, and Newfoundland, who have already implemented these types of bills. Many other groups have recommended these types of ways to keep outside of the legal system people's money that has been saved. We are supportive of it, and I appreciate the member, again, for bringing this forward.

Just as a final comment, this was also recommended by the Uniform Law Conference of Canada. They thought this type of bill was good, and if it's good enough for the Uniform Law Conference of Canada, well, my goodness, it's good enough for me.

Thank you very much, and I'd turn it over to any other member who wishes to discuss this.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak?

Are you ready for the question on Bill 20, the Civil Enforcement Amendment Act, 2009?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 20 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

Bill 23

Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2009

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments or questions to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Just a very short comment. There was one minor piece that we wished to make an amendment to, and I ask that the amendment be distributed. It's essentially with respect to section . . . [interjection] No, it's a very small thing. It changes the date from May 1 to July 1.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we'll pause for a moment while they're distributed.
Okay.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Section 9 of Bill 23 indicates that section 310, sending assessment notices, is amended. Section 310(1) says, "Subject to subsection (1.1), assessment notices must be sent no later than May 1 of each year." The amendment would simply change May 1 to July 1. It provides for a little bit more flexibility in the system so that there's no rushing of deadlines but doesn't really change the import or effect of the act. I would ask for support of that amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Any other member wish to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: You know, again, getting an amendment and having to instantaneously comment on it without being able to consider it, even if it does appear to be simple – I'm just not prepared to do that, actually, Mr. Chairman. I can't support an amendment when I haven't had time to review it.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak?
I'll call the question on Bill 23, the Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2009.

Mr. Hancock: On the amendment.

The Deputy Chair: I'm sorry. I got ahead of myself. You're right. I stand corrected. We are voting on the amendment.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Deputy Chair: Now to the bill. Any other comments? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre on the bill as amended.

Ms Blakeman: We have been speaking against this bill, and at this point I think I would continue that, mostly because it's taking away the right of property owners to appeal decisions that are made by the local appeals boards and that used to go on to a municipal level. This is changing that. It's restructuring how the appeals are heard and decided. Now we're going to have a composite board rather than the levels that we had before.

The problem with the levels that were existing before was that there was a very long backlog in trying to get cases heard – 23,000 appeals were filed last year – and it's over a year for appeals to be heard and decided. There are some additional costs that are associated with that. Both the city of Edmonton and the city of Calgary have tried to increase the fees, and there's been a great deal of push-back on that from just about everybody and their pet spaniel.

The Municipal Government Board, that's available now, seems to be a better solution than what the government is suggesting. The act is silent on who would fund the composite board, and we believe this could create even more bureaucracy and be even more costly for the municipalities than what they're bearing now.

We have heard from a number of individuals with concern over the lack of impartiality that will result from these changes, and at this point we're not prepared to support Bill 23.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak?
If not, I'll call the question.

[The clauses of Bill 23 as amended agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

[Mr. Denis in the chair]

Bill 26 Wildlife Amendment Act, 2009

The Acting Chair: Are there any comments or amendments? The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to provide the committee with information on Bill 26 regarding its most important sections. To be more specific, the critical sections will address spoiled or wasted game meat under section 3 of this bill, amending section 41(1) of the Wildlife Act; on the export of wildlife and wildlife parts the proposed amendments will deal with section 92(3) of the Wildlife Act; giving officials increased access to land to perform their duties, primarily under section 5 of this bill, amending section 66 of the Wildlife Act; and restitution payments for those who incur financial losses when others commit offences under the act, dealt with partially under section 10 of this bill, amending section 96 of the Wildlife Act.

The Wildlife Act is integral to the protection and proper management of Alberta's native and nonnative species for the sustainability of the province's biodiversity and ecosystems. The proposed miscellaneous amendments to the Wildlife Act will clarify and strengthen the legislation in the areas of enforcement, sentencing, and wildlife control measures. Put simply, we need to ensure this act is up to date in order to better address current and future challenges.

Mr. Chairman, we all know that it is disrespectful, wasteful, and illegal to throw away edible game meat. The Wildlife Act requires that big game and game bird meat is not wasted, destroyed, spoiled, or abandoned. There have been many cases involving spoiled meat brought before the courts, but there have been problems proving to the courts what evidence is required to show that meat that was once edible has now become spoiled. In some cases fish and wildlife officers have testified to the poor condition of game meat by stating that the meat was no longer suitable for human consumption. Despite these testimonials the court did not accept the evidence.

The amendments to section 41(1) of the Wildlife Act will clarify what constitutes wastage and the spoilage of big game or game bird meat. To do this, methods to enter evidence will be established and applied in the courts. The amendments will require game meat to be kept fit for human consumption. This will eliminate the defence that any meat in question was intended for animal food, which was the excuse often used. The amendments would also ensure that hunters follow the regulations for exporting wildlife. Currently an export permit is required to export wildlife or wildlife parts. Export permits are not issued for certain wildlife parts such as a bear paws or bear gallbladders.

Bill 26 will also provide the courts with a higher penalty range to deal with those who have been convicted of this offence involving such wildlife. This would help deter the illegal export of wildlife or wildlife parts. Higher penalties will deter those involved in this sometimes lucrative smuggling.

Mr. Chairman, the section 5 amendments are about ensuring that our fish and wildlife officers are able to carry out their other expected duties. At times there have been challenges to the authority of fish and wildlife officers to access land. For example, an officer needs to be given reasonable access to land to respond to the report of dead wildlife in order to determine whether the animal's death resulted from illegal activities.

The amendments will authorize fish and wildlife officers' access to land to respond to reports of dead, injured, diseased, or dangerous wildlife and to monitor hunting activities while still protecting privacy rights. The amendment will authorize access to land, but the act will continue to prohibit entry into any building, tent, or other structure or the search and seizure of any property without a warrant if one is required. This amendment is not intended to infringe on privacy rights but, rather, to give fish and wildlife officers more support so they can perform their expected duties.

In response to concerns of the farm cervid industry about removal of consultation prior to attributing costs, I'm putting forth an amendment to Bill 26. I would ask the pages to deliver the amendment, and then I'll speak to it.

3:30

The Acting Chair: We'll pause just while the amendment is circulated. This is amendment A1.

We're now debating on the amendment. The Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Mr. Chairman, I'm proposing an amendment to Bill 26 that deletes from the bill the amendment to section 60 of the Wildlife Act. Section 60 would then remain as it reads today. The amendment will ensure that Bill 26 accurately reflects the issues of the farm cervid industry and that procedures for dealing with escaped animals under the Wildlife Act will not change.

Thanks for allowing me the opportunity to introduce the amendment. I look forward to discussion on it.

The Acting Chair: Debating the amendment, the Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Mr. Chairman, it's such an honour to have you up there.

My question to the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat: can you just explain a little bit why you brought these changes in, and now you're going back to the original wording? Why the amendment?

Mr. Mitzel: The amendment was brought in because there wasn't enough consultation with the cervid industry, the elk ranchers and deer ranchers, and the imposition that was being created on them had not been under full consultation. After working with them, it was decided that it would be better to leave it exactly the way it is now with the enforcement that they have and move on with that. That is why section 60 will remain exactly as it is in the Wildlife Act now and not be changed as had been suggested prior.

The Acting Chair: Debating the amendment, the Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Chairman, just to speak briefly on this, the captive wildlife or controlled animals that have escaped or were unlawfully released from captivity are dealt with by section 60 of the Wildlife Act and amended in section 4 of Bill 26. Captive wildlife are species native to Alberta and include farmed elk and deer while controlled animals are nonnative species that require a permit for live possession.

We all recognize that at times animals may escape from their enclosure. We recognize that in all cases of these animals escaping, the owner is considered the most appropriate person to recapture the escaped animals. We expect that owners will make a reasonable effort to recapture their animals, and government officials support them in those efforts. However, there have been instances where owners have been unable or unwilling to recapture their animals. Mr. Chairman, when this happens, our officials play an active role in the recovery of these animals, and costs are incurred.

Currently under the Wildlife Act we are able to recover costs such as staffing costs from the owner or operator to recapture the escaped animals. But once the escaped animals are recaptured, there may be additional costs to transport the recaptured animals or destroy them if necessary.

The proposed amendment to section 4 by the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat is timely. I understand that the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, the bill's sponsor, and the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka have had discussions with stakeholders such as the Elk Commission, and they've expressed concerns regarding new provisions that seemingly extinguish consultation with owners in cases where the animals would have to be destroyed. The amendment of section 4 in Bill 26 was designed to provide more flexibility in dealing with escaped cervids. I believe this amendment went too far in streamlining the process.

To ensure Bill 26 adequately addresses the concerns raised by the farm cervid industry, I urge all members to support this amendment. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Acting Chair: On the amendment the Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. It's good to see you handling this meeting in such a fine fashion.

I would just like to speak on the amendment. I appreciate the hon. member coming forward to me prior to us beginning the session and doing his level best to explain to me the amendment. That said, you know, in all good conscience – and I believe it probably is a decent amendment – I need a little more time to think about this, and I'll vote against the amendment.

I would like to say that the hon. member did do his level best to get it to me. But just in all good conscience, so I can run it by this, that, and the other thing, I'm going to vote against the amendment.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Acting Chair: Now back to the bill.

[The clauses of Bill 26 as amended agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Acting Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I move that the committee rise and report bills 44, 52, 20, 23, and 26.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 20. The committee reports the following bills with some amendments: bills 52, 44, 23, and 26. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of this Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur with the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.
The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that we adjourn until 1:30.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 3:39 a.m. on Wednesday to 1:30 p.m.]

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. We give thanks for Your abundant blessings to our province and ourselves. We ask for guidance and the will to follow it. Amen.

Please be seated.

Statement by the Speaker

William C. Semple, Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms

The Speaker: Hon. members, the procession today was led by Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms Bill Semple. Mr. Semple will be retiring following this session. Today was probably the last time that he was in a position to lead the procession into the House.

Bill first served this Assembly between 1980 and 1981, when he was a constable with the Edmonton Police Service and was assigned to providing security at the front door of the Legislature Building. He would return to this building a little more than 10 years later to join the Legislative Assembly security staff in 1992. Bill has served this Assembly since that time and then was appointed to the position of Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms in November of 1999.

To mark this occasion, a farewell tea was held for all this morning at which remarks were given recognizing Bill's dedication and outstanding service to all Members of the Alberta Legislative Assembly. I am sure that I speak for all members when I wish Bill the very best in his retirement.

Joining us today in the Speaker's gallery is Bill's wife of 44 years, Ruth, and his daughter Shandra as well as honorary Sergeant-at-Arms Oscar Lacombe and former Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms Al Gowler.

At this point I would ask them to rise – all of them, including Mr. Semple – and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly. [applause]

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Mr. Goudreau: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you a group of students from Bonanza school. I'm very, very proud to introduce this group because, for one, I don't have very many school groups that visit the Legislature. This group has had to travel, I would say, well over seven hours to get here. Bonanza school is located west of Spirit River but probably closer to Dawson Creek. They're just a few miles out of Dawson Creek along the Alberta-B.C. border. Again I would like to welcome them. Accompanying the group of students are a number of adults: Bonnie Tittford, Penny Lepage, Gary Remenyk, Randy Carlstad, Shelley Moorman. I would like the group to stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Ouellette: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of individuals who are visiting the Alberta Legislature from my constituency, just bordering the constituency of the hon. Member for Red Deer-South. We have with us today 10 students from Destiny Christian school who are seated in the members' gallery, and they are accompanied by their principal, Glenn Mullen. As I have said before, I think it's so important for children to visit the Legislature. As you know, they will be tomorrow's leaders. I would ask them to all rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, I have another introduction today on behalf of my colleague the hon. Minister of Infrastructure and the MLA for Drumheller-Stettler. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group visiting from Altario school. They're grade 6 students, and they are accompanied by their teacher, Mrs. Jinel Ference, and accompanied by their parents, Mrs. Nancy Ference, Mr. Kyle Koch, Mrs. Stacy Evans, Mrs. Laurel Galloway, Mrs. Michelle Kelts, and Miss Jody Evans. They've come an awful long way from Altario. That's, like, a four-hour bus ride. I know that they will also be our new leaders someday in this province. I'd like them to all rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today it's my great honour to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly several dedicated members of the Multiple Sclerosis Society. The MS Society of Canada aims to be a leader in finding a cure for MS and in enabling people afflicted by MS to enhance their quality of life. It is the only national voluntary organization in Canada that supports MS research and services for people with MS and their families. The society is creating hope for today by helping to make life a little easier for those who are afflicted by this disease. Our commitment to a better tomorrow for those with MS is represented through the carnations which each hon. member of the Assembly is wearing today.

It's my honour and pleasure to welcome several supporters of the MS Society today to the Legislature. They are in the members' gallery. I will ask them to rise: Dr. Garry Wheeler, vice-president of the Alberta division; Mr. Steven McLaughlin, volunteer; Mrs. Julie Kelndorfer, director of volunteer resources; and Mr. Darrel Gregory, director of communications. Please join me in welcoming our distinguished guests with the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure for me to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly two very exceptional individuals. They work for me in the Lac La Biche-St. Paul constituency. Sue deMoissac has been my constituency assistant for four years and is doing a tremendous job of taking care of the constituency. Also, Angele Theroux is a STEP student working in the office. She has got her psychology degree and is looking at getting her masters, and I'm very pleased to have her as part of the team. They have risen in the members' gallery, and I'd ask this Assembly to please give them the exceptional warm welcome they deserve.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly one of Alberta's greatest radio voices and a gentleman that is very well known in my home town of Drayton Valley. I'm very proud to have Mr. Dave Michaels of Big West Country radio 92.9 in Drayton Valley in the public gallery here today. Dave plays a very important role in our community, and he does an exceptional job of keeping the community entertained and very well informed on the morning show. I would ask Dave now to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you two members of the Victoria Cross Memorial Park Monument Society. The society is working on developing a monument dedicated to all the Canadians who have received the Victoria Cross. I'll be discussing more about this group and their project leader this afternoon in a member's statement, but for now I would like to introduce Mr. Ron Evans, the president, and Ms Marian Youngs, the vice-president. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm greeting of the Assembly.

Thank you.

1:40

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to rise today and introduce another school group. Actually, this school group is old classmates of mine, accompanied by their wives. The gentlemen in the public gallery were all classmates with me many, many years ago at SAIT in Calgary, and through the years our families have kept contact through various survey conventions and social functions and travel. I'm very pleased to introduce them here in the Assembly today. I'd ask them to rise as I call their names. On the left are Monroe and Ellen Kinloch, Norm and Elaine Mattson, Len and Fredda Leiman. Just as an aside, I would comment that Len and Fredda's daughter Jaren is the best friend of our very own Clerk of Journals, Micheline Gravel. I'd ask the Assembly to give them the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: I suspect that some stories can be told.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to rise today and introduce to you and through you Mr. Jagmohan Singh. Mr. Singh is a retired professor from the university in Ludhiana, Punjab, where he taught electronics. He is in Alberta presenting a history of his uncle Shaheed Bhagat Singh through first-hand anecdotal evidence. Shaheed Bhagat Singh was a famous freedom fighter who was hung by the British government at the age of 21 for his role in India's independence movement. His legacy lives on in the independent Republic of India. Mr. Singh is joined today by his brother Manjit Singh Dhaliwal, who is my constituent. I ask them both to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm just delighted today to be able to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly some of Alberta's truly exceptional fine craft artists. These are all artists who are participating in the Cheongju International Craft Biennale. With them are some staff from the Alberta Craft Council. If I may introduce, please, Linda McBain Cuyler, who is a fibre artist – please stand, Linda – Meghan Wagg, who is a jewellery artist; James Lavoie, who does wonderful glass pieces; Mary Sullivan Holdgrafer, who is a fibre artist; and with her today is her husband, Gary Holdgrafer. Accompanying them all is Tom McFall, our beloved executive director of the Alberta Craft Council, a man that many of you already know, and, of course, Joanne Hamel, who is the project co-ordinator for the Alberta Craft Council. I am going to do a celebratory member's statement in a bit, but please join me in welcoming these wonderful Alberta artists to our Alberta Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly my guests from the Candora Society of Edmonton. They're here on a tour with their instructor to give the class an opportunity to see the Legislature at work. The Candora Society is a nonprofit organization with a mandate to address the needs of low-income residents of the communities of Rundle and Abbottsfield in northeast Edmonton. The name Candora stands for can do in Rundle and Abbottsfield. The Candora Society is community driven, and the focus is on individual strengths and abilities. The society connects individuals to increase understanding of each other, reduce isolation, build self-worth, and enrich the community. They are Nora Makath, Alise Shol, Rita Ayele, Elijah Motende, Zipporah Ogoti, Sibongile Nyathi, Elzamzani Amna, Patrick Chieriro, Monica Pozzuoli, Achol Billeu, and Roger Barba. I'm sorry if I mispronounced any names. I would like them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly. Welcome.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Victoria Cross Memorial Park Monument

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Currently in Canada there is no single monument that recognizes all of the recipients of the Victoria Cross. The Victoria Cross, of course, is Canada's highest military honour for bravery. The Victoria Cross Memorial Park Monument Society has been active in their plans for this memorial since the naming of the park in 1987. In addition to the monument, other ideas for this project have included an assembly area and education stations to inform the visitors of the historical significance of the Victoria Cross.

This monument will be a symbol of remembrance for the brave and valiant Canadians who serve our country and who have fought for our freedom. It will be visible from the ground and from the air, signifying its importance to our past and to our present.

This project is supported and endorsed by the Royal Canadian Legion and the city of Edmonton, and members of the society, I might add, have also applied for funding through the Alberta lottery fund. The Victoria Cross Memorial Park Monument Society is committed to constructing this monument, and I believe it is a great way to recognize our bravest military heroes.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Unintended Victims of Crime

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Concerns about violent crime and gang activity are being heard right across Alberta as well as in my own constituency. As if the senseless loss of human life is not enough, these crimes claim other victims as well.

Mr. Speaker, on January 1 a deadly attack took place at a family-run Vietnamese restaurant, the Bolsa restaurant, in my constituency, and this restaurant had absolutely no ties to gang activity whatsoever. Despite having no connection to crime, this reputable business has been tarnished, in crisis, and it is struggling to keep its doors open.

Last week I had the privilege of meeting with one of the owners, Viet Tran, a resident in the constituency of Calgary-Montrose, as well as Constable Mike Ellis of the Calgary Police Service. Mr. Tran disclosed to us that his business has decreased 30 per cent since the incident at his restaurant. Fortunately, the landlord has given him a break on his rent.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I've extended my appreciation to Calgary's chief of police, Rick Hanson. He recognizes the ripple effect that gang activity has on the community, and he has met with the proprietors of the restaurant we're speaking about today. But it's up to the people of Calgary to support these unintentional victims of crime and not shun them for something that was completely out of their control. As Albertans we need to recognize that violent crime makes victims of us all.

I'd like to reassure Calgarians that this particular business and the family who runs it became caught up in a string of deadly and irresponsible acts, again due to no fault of their own. Sadly, this could happen to any one of us. We need to rally behind each other when tragedy strikes and try to minimize the collateral damage inflicted on each other in the wake of these senseless and violent criminal acts.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Cheongju International Craft Biennale

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As a long-time supporter of Alberta artists I am proud to say that Alberta artists will be heading overseas to participate in the South Korea fine craft cultural tour for two weeks in the early fall.

Now, this tour's highlight is the Cheongju International Craft Biennale, which is fast becoming the largest Asian craft event and for which Canada is the guest country for 2009. We were selected as the guest country, by the way, thanks to the Alberta Craft Council's All About Alberta international exhibition, which started at the Smithsonian Institute and then travelled to the 2007 biennale. The impression our artists left in 2007 prompted this year's honour.

Aside from Canada and South Korea, 50 other nations will present the work of their finest artists, making this a wonderful showcase for our own homegrown talent. Around 50 artists from Edmonton, Red Deer, Calgary, Medicine Hat, Black Diamond, High River, Sundre, Hobbema, Canmore, and Longview will participate, a wonderful range of creative artists from all across the province. Organizers expect that 750,000 people from dozens of nations will visit the biennale at Cheongju, truly a fantastic exposure for our artists.

The biennale will feature a 10,000 square foot exhibition of work by 200 of Canada's leading craft artists; 29 of those artists are from Alberta. We are talking a massive display of works in ceramic, wood, metal, fibre, glass, and so on: sculptures, furniture, jewellery, everything.

The Alberta Craft Council is supported by the Alberta Foundation for the Arts, and many thanks for that. Calgary Arts Development and the Edmonton Arts Council all worked very hard to ensure that Alberta artists would have their chance to shine on the international stage.

Our arts and cultural sector is one of Alberta's most important industries and a renewable, sustainable industry at that. On behalf of the Official Opposition and I'm sure all of my colleagues in the Alberta Legislature I thank all of the artists and the organizations that supported them for taking Alberta's cultural exports across the Pacific to Cheongju.

Thank you so much.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Debate on Bill 44

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Early this morning a controversial and widely protested bill was passed through this House. The government had a choice to debate this bill with openness in the day or early evening, which would have allowed the public to sit in the gallery, the opposition to have sufficient time to make amendments, and the media to report as it happened. Instead, the government hid the debate under the cover of darkness, when most Albertans are busy putting their children to sleep. To the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit: if this administration is proud of Bill 44, why did it choose not to debate until late evening? Why not debate during the day, when people can participate?

Mr. Blackett: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I recall, I was in this House at 7:30 last night, when we started debate, and we concluded at 3:15. We had a long, rigorous debate with exchanges from both sides of the House. If that's not what Albertans want, I don't know what is.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, our provincial image is important. This administration confirmed that with a $25 million investment in a slogan to help our image nationally and internationally. I'm just curious. Can the minister tell us what that slogan is?

Mr. Blackett: Mr. Speaker, Freedom to Create, Spirit to Achieve. You know what? Our slogan and our image are enhanced by many things that we have here. It's enhanced by our arts. It's enhanced by our cultural policy. It's trying to make access available to all Albertans irrespective of where they live and irrespective of their socioeconomic status. It's building capacity in our communities to house the performing arts and visual arts. It's about focusing on excellence, and it's about supporting our cultural industries. Albertans are proud. Albertans have a great image. Albertans are tolerant. Albertans are respectful. The rest of Canada will see that, and we will do everything as a government to make sure that we convey that to the rest of the world.

Dr. Swann: Well, yes, Mr. Speaker. The slogan includes "freedom," the freedom to learn. It's a nice slogan, so it's unfortunate that the passage of this bill is besmirching the reputation of this province. Already internationally people are writing about the unique position this province has taken in Bill 44. What does the minister have to say to our international partners?

Mr. Blackett: Well, Mr. Speaker, we're a free and democratic society, and we're allowed to have a difference of opinions. We're allowed to have different opinions in this House. We're able to debate those opinions. The people of Alberta are free to be able to express their opinions on both sides of it. The one thing that we don't need is rhetoric. We're not besmirching anyone. There has not been one person in this government that has said anything that would in any way be misconstrued as besmirching a member of the teaching profession or the school boards. We have said that we believe in families. We believe in family values, we believe in education, and we believe in a parent's right to impart their beliefs on their children's education.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Community Health Councils

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On May 15, 2008, the minister of health stated in a news release: "It will be important to ensure that local health needs in rural Alberta are met under this new governance model. Community Health Councils will ensure representation at the local level." Currently the future of these councils is unknown and certainly in doubt. We have one provincial health board and an administration that clearly does not like dissent. To the minister of health: why will the community health councils be reduced and disrupted, and how will this affect Alberta's health services?

Mr. Liepert: Well, I wondered how long it would take the Leader of the Opposition to read the Calgary Herald because that was the essence of a columnist – I don't know – three or four days ago, Mr. Speaker. Yes, the Leader of the Opposition is correct that we are going to enhance our community input into the new Alberta Health Services Board, and in due course the Alberta Health Services Board will be announcing the structure of the new health councils.

Dr. Swann: Well, indeed, this minister is disrupting the health councils, one more disruption in a health system that is already on the ropes with change. Is this further destabilizing going to maintain health services and its ability to respond to local needs? We already have these councils. Why do you need to restructure them again?

Mr. Liepert: There's only one individual here who's on the ropes with his own party, Mr. Speaker, and that's the Leader of the Opposition.

Dr. Swann: Why is it that this minister wants to stifle dissent of Albertans regarding the chaos that he has created in the system?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I've said this many times. We've gone through a year where we have made significant changes to the administration of the health delivery services of this province. This is the largest merger in Canadian history, an $8 billion organization and 80,000 employees. I would say that that administrative change has been successful beyond our wildest imagination. It's largely due to the professionals who are delivering services 24/7 in this province and has nothing to do with the rhetoric of these naysayers, who sit here and have nothing good to say. It's criticize, criticize, criticize.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Elective Surgery

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The fact that hip surgery could be considered elective instead of a medical necessity has many of my constituents and citizens from across this province very worried. It raises a simple question. To the minister of health: will the minister table the exact definition of elective surgery and how that determines the urgency of each patient's treatment?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, it isn't the minister who determines the priorities when it comes to surgeries; it's the medical community. I would add to that that if this particular member can show us within the confines of the Canada Health Act where it falls, I'll be glad to sit down with her and discuss it. We have said in this House that we are going to follow the principles of the Canada Health Act. We are doing that, and we will continue to do that.

Ms Pastoor: Actually, probably my question would be the same because we can't seem to find a definition there. Who created the definition for elective surgery? Was it medical professions? Was it the ministry of health? Was it the Alberta Health Services Board? If it was the Canada Health Act, where can I find it on the Internet?

Mr. Liepert: Well, I would suggest that if she wants to find out where she can find it on the Internet under the Canada Health Act, she might contact the federal government. That's a federal piece of legislation, not provincial, Mr. Speaker.

Ms Pastoor: Nice cop-out. Nice cop-out.

Will the minister tell this House what percentage of elective cosmetic surgeries are being performed in Alberta hospitals as opposed to hip, knee, and cataract services?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that that's such a detailed question that if she actually wants the answer to that question, put it on the Order Paper. I'll be happy to get it for her.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Electronic Health Records

Mr. Mason: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. I'm glad the minister is all warmed up.

This Progressive Conservative government can't be trusted with our public health system. Repeated attempts to cut services, privatize, and generally charge more for less represent this Tory government's track record. Now privacy rights of patients have been betrayed in two separate incidents. Why has the minister of health failed to ensure that patient records aren't literally blowing in the wind for anyone to find?

Mr. Liepert: You know, Mr. Speaker, I sent a note to this particular member yesterday because he got all worked up because of some comments the Premier made about his position on the oil sands. My note to him said: what's good for the goose is good for the gander. I keep hearing from this gentleman about: oh, you're privatizing health care; it's American-style health care. Well, I'm not going to use unparliamentary language, but I would suggest that maybe the member over there could learn a little bit from his lesson yesterday.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, disposing of medical records in a Dumpster is like locking them in Fort Knox compared to the risks of the electronic health record system proposed by this minister. The Auditor General has already reported a serious breach of government computers by sophisticated offshore interests. That's the Auditor General. How can this minister assure Albertans that their health records are going to be more secure just because they're stored on a computer somewhere?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think we've had extensive debate on Bill 52, and we've had extensive public consultation. As I said in this House yesterday, we have the Privacy Commissioner, we have the College of Physicians and Surgeons, we have the Alberta Medical Association saying that this is a good piece of legislation. There was good work done to ensure that the privacy of Albertans is protected. The only people who can't seem to figure that out are the two lonely people sitting in the corner over here. I would suggest that that's one of the reasons why there are only two of the lonely ones sitting there. It's because Albertans do not believe in their philosophy of fearmongering and scaring people.

Mr. Mason: I have a feeling we're going to get some company after the next election, Mr. Speaker.

This minister proposes that health information be stored in repositories under the control of private companies. We've already seen security breaches affecting Albertans from the government's wonderful private licence registries. No wonder Albertans can't trust this PC government to look after their public health care system. To the minister of health: when will you admit that your electronic health record system leaves Albertans' health information seriously at risk? Mr. Speaker, people feel about as secure as a teenager in a slasher movie.

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, the way I figure the math, the last time we had a provincial election, the number of seats this party had went from four to two. Now, if I continue that math, we can deduce how many are going to be there after the next election.

I do want to address the issue that the member raises, however. The fact that we have a situation where individuals' personal medical records have been not disposed of properly is unacceptable, Mr. Speaker. Alberta Health Services has committed that they will conduct an investigation into the circumstances involved. As well, it's my understanding that the Privacy Commissioner has agreed to take a look at this situation.

Electricity Transmission Lines

Mr. Marz: Mr. Speaker, at a publicized event last week the hon. Premier told the Sherwood Park and District Chamber of Commerce that our electricity transmission system cannot meet our needs. The system that delivers electricity to every home, farm, business, and industrial site in the province is being described as aging, congested, and inefficient, and that is bringing up concerns amongst my constituents. My question is to the Minister of Energy. Electricity is there when I need it, the lights come on when I turn them on, and I've had no reliability issues – and neither have my constituents – in recent memory. Why do we need the transmission lines, and why now?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, I think that the answer to the hon. member's question lies in the fact that the province of Alberta is indeed a growing, productive province. We have an increase in the consumption of electricity that is beyond most jurisdictions' in North America. We have an aging system that's being held together by a very dedicated group of people at AESO. The opportunity for us to build on and fortify this infrastructure for Albertans is now.

Mr. Marz: Again to the same minister, Mr. Speaker: what are the risks to Albertans if we don't get transmission lines soon?

Mr. Knight: Well, again, Mr. Speaker: what are the risks? I don't want to in any way alarm any members of the House or alarm Albertans unduly. However, we don't have to look very far in our history to understand and see the effect of circumstances where brownouts or rotating brownouts relative to keeping the grid active have affected Albertans. Without an opportunity to continue to move forward on an initiative relative to a very critical infrastructure, those types of circumstances will very likely be repeated.

Mr. Marz: My final question to the same minister. One of the biggest potential delays to a project of this magnitude, as I see it, is that of access to private land. Compensation rates to landowners for siting of transmission towers are significantly lower than those offered for other energy installations such as oil and gas wells and wind turbine towers. Can my constituents be assured by this minister that they will be treated fairly and comparably to other types of energy and industrial installations on the issue of compensation?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, this is a very, very serious concern for all Albertans and most particularly Albertans that are impacted as landowners relative to any type of infrastructure or other build-out that would take place in development. I cannot stand here and indicate to Albertans or to the member that, in fact, we could guarantee or that I could guarantee as the minister that people that are having infrastructure placed on their property relative to a transmission system would be compensated in an equal manner to infrastructure that may be placed there by some other private concern that is not regulated under the Alberta Utilities Commission.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Temporary Foreign Workers

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On April 30, 2009, the hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration made a commitment to this House to provide information regarding the employment standards and the occupational health and safety investigation at the Horizon oil sands site. He certainly did that, and he is to be commended. Now, in this letter that the minister has provided to me, and I quote, Canadian Natural Resources Limited agreed to make $3.1 million available to Employment and Immigration in March 2009 so that these workers can be paid. End of quote. My first question is to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Why did it take two years and, unfortunately, two fatalities before the government of Alberta finally investigated the fact that 132 temporary foreign workers from China were cheated out of at least $3.1 million?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, the information was not available to us till we started investigating the deaths of the workers and what had caused that. Upon investigation – and I need to say that that process is going through the courts – when we did that, that's when we did find out that the employees had not been paid fully.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister. Given that Canadian Natural Resources Limited has to pay twice to try to get the work done, they are also a victim in this matter. Why was there no inspection by employment standards in the four-month period April through July of 2007, when this cheating went on? This was one of the largest construction sites employing temporary foreign workers in the province. Why were you not keeping your eye on that project?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, I will not comment any further than to say that CNRL have been charged with a number of counts towards violations, and I will leave some of the courts to decide those things.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister. Here we have 3.1 million reasons why the temporary foreign worker program is flawed. It's failed 132 workers. It's failed a company that wanted to employ them. Will you now as a result of this despicable record cancel the program completely?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, absolutely not. There's still a great role for the temporary foreign workers that are presently in Alberta, and there's no doubt that as the economy picks up, we will be requiring additional help. We know that in the future we will be short of individuals in all industries and all sectors, and we will be depending on help from outside the province of Alberta, so we will not cancel the temporary foreign worker program.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of the government's actions described in the provincial energy strategy is "to review and streamline the regulatory process for transmission siting." Many of my constituents have either participated in transmission hearings or are landowners who may be directly or adversely affected by the proposed power lines. My questions are all to the Minister of Energy. Could the minister explain what's meant by the streamlining process? Surely you're not about to reduce how landowners' rights are heard.

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, that, in fact, would be what we're absolutely proposing not to do. Process around the siting is always a challenge in many jurisdictions and no different in the province of Alberta. Specific siting for routes is determined within Alberta's open and transparent process for siting. Landowner issues will be heard and continue to be heard, impacts will be mitigated to the extent possible, and all landowners will receive fair compensation. Timely approval for transmission is essential to meet the electricity needs of Albertans.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's fine and dandy, and I'm glad that the minister has mentioned that landowner issues will be heard, but how can you ensure that landowners have the time to share their concerns with your department and with the proposals?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can be sure because, as enshrined in our legislation and in the mandate of the Alberta Utilities Commission, they must listen to landowner concerns. Decisions on sitings will continue to be made through the Alberta Utilities Commission hearing process, and the concerns of directly affected and adversely affected landowners must be addressed. That is, in fact, the law in the province of Alberta.

Mr. VanderBurg: Again to the same minister. You know, with all of this issue about siting transmission lines, communities like Whitecourt have huge, huge load. Why not just build the generation closer to the load? Wouldn't that be much easier than upsetting all Albertans?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, you know, the idea is certainly one that we have explored. The idea of distributed generation, although it is done to some degree in Alberta now, requires some additional technology and work going forward. We believe that in the next two to three decades most certainly the ability for us to have opportunities where generation is done in a distributed manner, where it's closer to load, may very well be effective, but at this point in time technology does not allow us to do that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Energy Efficiency

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This government chases projects that are both capital and time intensive instead of taking advantage of the low-hanging fruit. For example, this government is spending $2 billion of taxpayer money on CCS while wetlands store carbon for free. My questions are to the Minister of Environment. Given that wetlands store CO₂ for free, why are Albertans still waiting for a wetlands policy?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I thank the member for the question because I think she has identified a very common misconception about the storage of CO₂, and that misconception is that somehow, magically, wetlands could absorb CO₂. The fact of the matter is that wetlands do store CO₂, but they don't reduce the amount of CO₂ that we have. The member knows very well that we have an abundance of wetlands in this province and that we have a policy in place that is currently in practice to protect those wetlands and to ensure that they stay there.

Ms Blakeman: You're still missing a big opportunity.

Again to the same minister: why are feed-in tariffs, which would grow renewable energy in Alberta, not included in Alberta's climate change strategy?

Mr. Renner: I'm sorry, Mr. Speaker. I didn't hear her question. What was the specific example? Are we still talking wetlands, or are we into something else now?

Ms Blakeman: Feed-in tariffs.

Mr. Renner: Feed-in tariffs. Okay. Thank you. That's probably something that the Minister of Energy could address, but the fact is, Mr. Speaker, that that is very much something that we would be interested in exploring into the future. For the information of those members who are not familiar with the terminology, it's a process that's used in some jurisdictions where alternative small producers like solar or microwind can feed into the grid at a preferred rate and encourage the development of alternative energy on a much smaller scale.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again to the same minister. Alberta's insulation requirements, the R-value of walls and roofs and basements, are some of the lowest in the country. When will the minister require homes in Alberta to be as energy efficient as houses in other provinces, an action that would actually save people money?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think that's the same question this member asked yesterday if memory serves me correctly. We talked yesterday about the need to review building codes. I would question the premise of the question, that Alberta has standards that are significantly different from other provinces. I remind the member that building codes are set nationally. There is a review under way. We've committed to have a review under way. Again, it's very much part of our strategy to reduce our carbon footprint over time, but it's going to take some time to develop that strategy.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Fish and Wildlife Management

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituents in Bonnyville-Cold Lake are avid fishers, including my husband. This winter part of Moose Lake was closed to fishing. Unfortunately, an infraction took place. After phoning the nearest fish and wildlife officer on duty, we discovered that he was two and a half hours away. By the time that officer got to where the infraction took place, it would have been too late. There are two local officers, but they were not on duty, and unfortunately they did not have their vehicles at home with them. My first question to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development: in order to prevent these situations from occurring, why are local officers no longer on call and able to take their vehicles home with them?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would be happy to try to clarify the situation here. When our officers are on call, they are allowed to take their vehicles home with them and respond appropriately, but when they are not on call, they have to leave their vehicles at their office. The reasons for this policy are twofold. One is economy; we want to make sure government vehicles are used for government business. Two, also there's interest on the part of our officers that when they're not on call, they actually have some peace and quiet with their families. Having said that, in smaller communities with only two officers, it's often difficult to provide 24-hour on-call service.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental to the same minister: what happens to all of the revenues that are collected from fish and wildlife infractions?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The collection of fines under fish and wildlife, like all collection of fines in the province of Alberta, are administered by Alberta Justice and, like these other fines, go into general revenues. I would point out that with the new legislation being introduced this session, the opportunity for creative sentencing will allow, in the appropriate circumstances, for fines to be directed to remedy damages that have occurred. Also, a related point: of the licensing revenues for fish and wildlife 50 per cent goes to the Alberta Conservation Association. That was over $10 million last year.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplementary is also to the same minister. Fish and wildlife officers are doing a great job across Alberta. However, there are a few faults within the fish and wildlife system that impede their ability to effectively do their jobs. How are we going to address these issues of inefficiency?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to second and reinforce the hon. member's recognition of the good work that our fish and wildlife officers do. This is a big province, and there's a lot of area to cover. I would have to stress, though, that our working relationship with the officers is governed by a collective bargaining agreement with the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees, and within that context we're working to achieve better efficiencies, specifically with respect to the vehicle policy.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Land-use Planning

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Land-use planning is of great importance to our province; however, it is also necessary that it be done responsibly and that we get it done right to avoid serious problems in the future. What worries me is the concentration of power and limited judicial review of land-use issues. To the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development: why has this government put forward a land-use policy which concentrates such an abundance of discretionary power in the hands of cabinet and limits judicial review by Albertans? Is this what the government means by open and accountable government?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That, of course, is the identical question that was asked yesterday by another member opposite. Refer to Hansard for that. I believe we'll be discussing this in Committee of the Whole today, and there are some amendments relevant to that question, so I'd suggest we defer until that time.

Mr. Hehr: So you would prefer to not answer any more questions on this issue, hon. minister? Is that what you're saying?

Dr. Morton: I think I would prefer to conduct the business of this House the way it's supposed to be conducted.

Mr. Hehr: If that's the way the minister prefers to do it, I prefer it as well. Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Health System Restructuring

Ms. Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As we have said before, this government can't be trusted to protect health care, and even our most senior medical educators are now expressing their concerns. Last Friday, 13 department chairs from the U of A faculty of medicine wrote to Stephen Duckett. They cite universal cynicism throughout the system and state that "questions are constantly being asked about who is providing the input, how are the decisions made, and who is accountable.” To the minister of health: when will you admit that more and more Albertans simply don’t trust you to run our health care system?

Mr. Liepert: Never, Mr. Speaker.

Ms. Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, the doctors identified the same problems with health care that the NDP does, including the ER wait time crisis and its root cause. The doctors write: “The numbers of chronic care patients who are blocking acute care hospital beds remain a significant problem and continue to be one of the bottle necks for movement of patients out of the ER.” To the minister: how many more experts have to go on the record before this minister will admit that his decision to backtrack on long-term care beds hurts health care?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I’ve answered that question on numerous occasions. This member chooses either to not listen or to recognize that we are doing a number of things relative to ensuring that the acute-care facilities in our province are actually dealing with acute-care cases. We have a number of projects that are under way. I can repeat again, as I’ve done many times, that we’ve also provided additional funding for home care in our budget that we’ve just passed in this House so we ensure that we’re looking after our seniors in the right place at the right time.

Ms. Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, just more and more people are outlining their concerns with where this minister is going.

Now, another reason the Conservatives can’t be trusted with health care is the lack of transparency and the delay in putting forward a budget. The doctors have raised worries over references to alternative financing models in continuing care, and they want to know if the government’s real agenda is to privatize care and force Albertans to pay more. To the minister of health. It sounds like not even the doctors trust you. They want you to be more clear about your plans to privatize health care. Why won’t you be?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I speak regularly to the head of the Alberta Medical Association. He has expressed no such concerns as this member is raising. So I’m not quite sure who she’s referring to, but I would suggest that I could probably find 13 people who would have quite a different opinion than what this member has. We’ll take her 13 opinions, and we’ll live with them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Assured Income for the Severely Handicapped

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Currently the assured income for the severely handicapped program, or AISH, provides significant health benefits to those living with a severe permanent disability. Under the current program guidelines a person can lose these health benefits if they earn over a specific income threshold. My question is to the hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. What options are available to persons currently covered under AISH who might lose their coverage because of an income surpassing this threshold?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, we encourage our AISH clients to work as much as they are able to because employment provides much more for them than just a financial benefit. If an increase in a client’s employment income causes them to no longer be able to have a financial benefit from AISH, the person may continue to receive health-related assistance such as prescription drugs, essential diabetic supplies, dental, optical, and ambulance services through the Alberta adult health benefit administered through Alberta Employment and Immigration.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: if a person previously covered under AISH loses their source of income, how long does it take to reapply for coverage, and are there processes in place to ensure that they never go uncovered?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, we recognize that AISH clients who make the courageous effort to work full-time may encounter health setbacks that prevent them from working full-time. To assist former AISH clients who may again need financial benefits, we have a process to allow them to have their benefits reopened without needing a full application. The process is called rapid reinstatement. It supports clients who have been off AISH for less than 24 months and did not leave AISH because of a change in their medical condition.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. In addition to conventional health needs, many AISH recipients have medical conditions that require special procedures and products such as power wheelchairs and MedicAlert services. If a person loses their AISH medical coverage, will they still be able to receive support for these special medical needs?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, former AISH clients can access benefits from the Alberta aids to daily living program, which is available to eligible Albertans with a chronic medical need. Former AISH clients can access health benefit coverage from the Alberta adult health benefit program. This program offers eligible clients the same benefit coverage as the AISH program.

Civil Recovery of Health Costs

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, the health minister has been front and centre in an effort to cloak the lack of adequate actual police officers on our city streets by introducing policy on the fly that is meant to show that this government is actually tough on crime. The other day the health minister lauded his government’s safe communities initiative; however, in looking through that report, I did not see any reference to people convicted of criminal offences having to pay for medical expenses incurred as a way to deter crime. Accordingly, I ask the minister: what evidence did he rely on that shows that this type of bill will actually reduce crime or lead to healthier communities?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, we can debate the bill all we want in question period, but I would suggest that it’s up for debate shortly, and we’ll be happy to have that debate at that time.

Mr. Hehr: Well, it was announced today, Mr. Speaker, that Calgary drug courts had received $800,000 in additional funding. To the minister of health. To participate in a program, an accused must plead guilty. Isn’t this government sending a mixed message by asking someone to enter a guilty plea as a condition for treatment but threatening to make the same group of people liable for costs associated with health care services?

Mr. Liepert: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Hehr: Can the minister of health tell me how many more civil servants, prosecutors, bill collectors, and hospital administrators this government is going to need to hire in an attempt to recover costs for medical expenses from people at the bottom end of the socioeconomic ladder who commit these crimes?

Mr. Liepert: That sounds like something that belongs on the Order Paper, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Unlicensed Itinerant Contractors

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've been asked by some of my constituents about door-to-door contractors, referred to in law enforcement circles as travellers. It seems like a typical sales pitch among these travellers involves a reduced rate on a particular job, followed by poor-quality work, and the consumer ends up paying considerably more to fix the shoddy outcome. My question is to the Minister of Service Alberta. What are you doing to protect Alberta consumers from these disreputable travellers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What's being referred to here as a traveller is a contractor who moves from jurisdiction to jurisdiction, often performing quick jobs and leaving as fast as they came. Under the Fair Trading Act all contractors who accept money before work is completed or discuss a contract away from their normal place of business, like your home, must be licensed by Service Alberta and post a security deposit. If a contractor is unlicensed or violates the Fair Trading Act with unlawful business practices, such as sending a bill which is larger than what was originally promised, Service Alberta will investigate.

Mr. Quest: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: how does your department investigate the complaints from Albertans stuck with these big repair bills as a result of poor work done by these travellers?

Mrs. Klimchuk: Mr. Speaker, Service Alberta investigates complaints about prepaid contractors and can take enforcement actions, including undertaking director's orders, suspension or cancellation of licences if they have one, and even criminal prosecutions. So it's really incumbent upon the consumer to contact us and to ask questions when they are uncertain when someone wants to do work for them. In 2008-09 we conducted and completed 180 investigations of the work of these so-called travellers. Of these 180 investigations 13 resulted in fines or jail terms.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, since awareness, then, is obviously the most important part of protecting Alberta consumers, my last question to the same minister: what are you doing to educate Alberta consumers about these so-called travellers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, for consumers to know their rights, this is a really important area for them to do their research. We keep in touch with the law enforcement agencies in other jurisdictions, and this is a really good example of the media working in partnership with Service Alberta to make sure that the word is communicated as well. Sometimes these individuals are hard to find and investigate and charge, but we do our best to try to find them. We also have the tipsheet on the Service Alberta website. But I would strongly encourage all consumers that have concerns about door-to-door salesmen: again, you have the power to not sign those contracts and to say no.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Building Construction Review

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. During consultations with the building trades government was warned that proposed changes to the building codes will result in mouldy roofs and walls. Despite these concerns and with no solutions offered, the changes were approved. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: why were the concerns of builders not addressed when making the changes to Alberta's building codes?

2:30

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm not exactly sure how to make it more clear that the high-intensity residential fires had a committee. That committee involved fire chiefs from across this province. It involved municipalities. It involved the Safety Codes Council. It involved the key stakeholders, which were the builders. From those consultations, from that work is where the codes were developed.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think protecting people from fires is important, but it shouldn't be at the expense of building mould-free homes. To the minister again: how much longer will Albertans have to wait until the problems of nonventilated soffits and gypsum boards are addressed and not merely discussed?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, I know that there needs to be a balance. There needs to be a balance with safety. There needs to be a balance with affordability. Thirdly, there needs to be assurance that the technology that's available is being used. That is the key to ensuring that firefighters have the time necessary to respond and also that individuals who live in the residence have the time and the ability to leave their home.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think the government shouldn't wait until mould develops before they do anything about Alberta's building codes. To the minister again: given this government's inaction on leaky condos, what comfort can new homeowners take in knowing that recent changes to building codes will make their homes more likely to develop mould?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, far before there was any change in regulation, there was a handful of individuals that came forward that had concerns about the building practices. I asked my parliamentary assistant to consult with the individuals that did have problems, with, again, the housing key stakeholders, with municipalities, with the condominium association. The building of codes is the work that is done in co-operation with all those involved. Albertans need and deserve to feel safe in their homes, and they deserve to have the best codes in Canada, which they have.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

PDD Community Boards

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The persons with developmental disabilities program provides supports to enable Albertans with developmental disabilities to participate in their communities. Constituents of mine are very upset that certain programs such as the Family Voices/Rotary employment partnership, family resource centre, and inclusive postsecondary education programs have been discontinued in the northwest region. My question today is to the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. Why in the world would the northwest region cancel these programs?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, each PDD community board is responsible for assessing the needs of its region and delivering services to meet their goals within their budget allocations. They must also ensure that caseload and cost-of-service increases are being addressed. It's important to note that there are 9,100 Albertans served through the six PDD community boards, and funding for the program this fiscal year is almost $604 million, up $33 million. The northwest region, which serves about 350 individuals, has been allocated $22 million for the '09-10 budget year.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: if they are meeting their goals, then families are getting the positive outcomes out of these programs that they need. Other PDD regions are bragging about their successes as well with these programs. Then what is wrong with this whole situation when they're achieving the results? The people need these programs.

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, overall the PDD program provides similar supports to Albertans across the province. In this case the programs were not continued because they were not achieving the outcomes established for these programs. The model for the program was taken from another region, where it worked well, but in the northwest region it wasn't working. That's why the local board is working with families in the region to develop a model that will work and, most importantly, to provide the appropriate assistance to clients of the PDD program.

Ms Calahasen: My final question is to the same minister, Mr. Speaker. If families can't access these needed programs and they do not want to leave the northwest region, what alternatives can the minister provide so that these families' children have the same opportunities as other Alberta families in the same situation?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, the PDD program is provincial in its scope, as is the need to set balanced priorities to support the best outcomes across Alberta. However, each regional board is responsible for identifying their unique priorities and to manage their fiscal resources. The northwest board has determined that the highest priority is to support new individuals and those who are at risk. We will continue to work diligently with our stakeholders, including community groups such as the Rotary Club, to find innovative solutions to help people achieve their full potential regardless of which region they live in.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Bitumen Exports

Dr. Taft: Well thanks, Mr. Speaker. The past couple of days I've been asking the Minister of Energy where the bitumen from the Kearl Lake mine will be upgraded, but he doesn't seem to know or he's not telling. Now, Kearl Lake production is so vast that it would fill a 12-storey office building in two days. To the minister: how can the Minister of Energy claim to have a bitumen strategy when he doesn't even seem to know what's going on with over a hundred thousand barrels a day of production from the Kearl Lake mine?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, one thing I can assure the member opposite: it will not be filling any office buildings in downtown Edmonton. Again, you know, it's a very interesting line of questioning because I did answer the question yesterday on where the likelihood is that this bitumen may end up. But let's be fair about the question in the first place. There is a point of severance in the province of Alberta legally with respect to bitumen. Past the point of severance the owner of that property can process it in a manner that they see fit.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, there won't be any office buildings in Edmonton filled with jobs from this because apparently it's all going to be exported to other parts of Canada or the United States.

The minister talks about having no control over bitumen after a point of severance. How, then, can this government claim to have a strategy that will require 70 per cent of bitumen to be upgraded here? It just doesn't square.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, again, the member opposite will know very well about the program that we're currently working with as part of our royalty structure, and that is the bitumen royalty in kind project and process that we're working at. We believe that our opportunities to manage the bitumen barrels that we own on behalf of Albertans will be part of our ability to move this forward. The member begins to lean towards this idea that somehow or another we should actually regulate or somehow change the legislation around how we manage these resources. It's been very clear from the outset of these talks that, in fact, we are not going to do that.

Dr. Taft: All right. So we're not going to regulate. We're not even aware where a hundred thousand barrels a day seems to be going. It's not something you lose track of in the bottom of your briefcase or slip in beside your desk or something. It's a hundred thousand barrels a day. To the minister: when are we going to see a detailed, coherent working strategy to achieve this government's goal of 70 per cent of bitumen upgraded here? When are we going to really see the details?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, we're seeing it in real time. It's happening today. I don't know if the hon. member actually realizes the fact that today nearly 70 per cent of the bitumen that's produced in the province of Alberta has upgrading to some degree in the province, either to SCO level or, in certain circumstances, beyond that to refined products. So when are we going to see it? Right now. Open your eyes. Take a look around. It's happening today.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Federation of Labour issued a report in April of this year with 21 recommendations related to the working conditions of temporary foreign workers, including five recommendations related to the Alberta government. My first question is to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. What is your department doing to respond to the recommendations pertaining to the provincial government that are related to enforcement?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, first, we appreciate that the report took the time to recognize our substantive steps to address concerns related to the program and the workers. We are doing a lot of what the report recommends, and I need to indicate that Alberta is far ahead of other provinces in its support for temporary foreign workers. With our temporary foreign worker advisory office there are employment standard officers visiting workplaces of employers with temporary foreign workers, and the telephone service that we provide is in 170 languages.

Mrs. Sarich: My second question is to the same minister. What are you doing to ensure that the general information meetings are being organized with all the newly arrived temporary foreign workers to provide basic employment and human rights as the recommendations suggest?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, we provide information in person, over the phone, over the Internet, and electronically. The advisory office has held numerous seminars, 24 in fact, in partnership with our supplemental agencies across the province. They teach workers about their rights and responsibilities. We also host how to hire foreign workers sessions as needed for employers, to ensure they know the rules. We work very closely with Service Alberta to communicate with temporary foreign workers, employers, and community groups about the rules that employment agencies need to follow when they're recruiting workers to Alberta.

Mrs. Sarich: My third question is to the Minister of Service Alberta. What are you doing to respond to the provincial recommendation that the Fair Trading Act be amended to deal with restricting brokers who operate in Alberta from charging their recruitment fees and the penalties against brokers who breach the act?

Mrs. Klimchuk: Mr. Speaker, as I said in this Assembly before, there is currently an exemption which allows employee recruiting companies to charge a fee to domestic workers for their services. As I've stated previously, we will be removing this. That will no longer happen. Effective September 1 this exemption will not be allowed. These businesses also will have to be licensed through Service Alberta. The September 1 deadline is enough time to allow businesses to adapt to the new rules, and they can make changes as they need to.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that was 107 questions and responses today. In 30 seconds from now we will continue the Routine with Members' Statements.

North Atlantic Treaty Organization

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This year marks the 60th anniversary of the founding of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, commonly known as NATO. NATO was formed when the North Atlantic treaty was signed on April 4, 1949. Canada was a founding member of NATO, together with the United States, the United Kingdom, France, Belgium, Denmark, Iceland, Italy, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, Norway, and Portugal. It is the longest standing political and military alliance of nations.

As a founding member of NATO Canada has held an active role in the development and implementation of NATO's policies and activities. Initially formed to address humanitarian crises and military instability following the Second World War, NATO was instrumental in maintaining peace during the Cold War and in promoting the free and democratic ideals of its member states in the face of repressive and totalitarian regimes.

Since the fall of the Berlin wall and the collapse of the Soviet Union, NATO's role shifted in the 1990s, and membership has grown to 28 nations. NATO played a key role in ending conflict in the former Yugoslavia and later in Kosovo. Canada was a full participant in these historic military and peacekeeping operations.

Today NATO's forces are engaged in many areas around the world, including Canada's mission in Afghanistan, which is a vital part of NATO's efforts to maintain stability and end organized terrorism in the world. Most recently NATO was involved in the interdiction of Somali pirates in the Gulf of Aden and the Suez Canal.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to recognize the contributions made by the Canadian armed forces and those of our allies and congratulate member nations on 60 years of helping to maintain peace, stability, and democracy in the world.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Drayton Valley Pathways Career Fair

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A few weeks ago I had the pleasure to attend and open the first annual Pathways Career Fair in Drayton Valley on behalf of the hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration. It was very exciting and rewarding to have a role in bringing this wonderful event to my community. This career fair is a great opportunity for students from across the town and county to explore career options and find out what training they will need to enter varying careers. Since the petroleum industry is a cornerstone of Drayton Valley's economy, there was a big focus on the oil and gas sector at this year's event. However, Pathways offers many different streams, from health care to engineering and nearly everything else in between.

Events like this career fair are so very important in today's economy. Sixty per cent of new jobs, that are becoming increasingly technical and specific in nature, require postsecondary training. One of the great benefits of career pathways is that this program enables students to begin and in some cases complete postsecondary certificates while still in high school. Through the generosity of Keyera Energy nearly $200,000 a year is invested in nine career pathways students, including two from our local high schools, both Bryce Knutson from Frank Maddock high school, who will be studying civil engineering, and Kurtis Neigel from Holy Trinity Academy, who plans to study engineering. They have received generous scholarships, summer employment opportunities and have the potential to receive jobs upon graduation.

I would especially like to thank Kevin Thebeau and Cindi Allaby from Keyera Energy for their leadership in investing in our youth. Over 1,300 junior and senior high school students attended this career fair. Special thanks goes out to Patrick Martens, the two school boards and local principals, the town, the county, the industry, and local agencies for making this annual event possible.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Calgary-Montrose School Visits

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Last week during our constituency week I was pleased to visit many schools in my constituency. I met with students in Mrs. Price's class at St. Peter; Ms Gillon, Ms Jones, and Ms Murphy's classes at G.W. Skene; Mrs. Schellenberg, Mrs. Miller, Ms Hontzias, Mr. Kelly, and Ms Campbell's classes at Abbeydale.

It's, indeed, my favourite part of the job because when you visit with these young children, Mr. Speaker, you see something profound in their eyes, and that something profound is hope. They haven't been exposed to the day-to-day negativity we see in our world as much as perhaps some of us in this Chamber see. They see potential, and they see less borders between human beings. We talked about things like bullying and finding ways to take down borders, these artificial borders that we have between human beings.

Mr. Speaker, I asked them to do two things. One was to think about and communicate with me their dreams. These were their personal dreams, dreams for what they wanted to accomplish in the world. I must say that there were some veterinarians, skaters, and even some MLAs in the crowd. Then I asked them to share with me dreams for the world. I think every individual has a responsibility to dream about the ideal world so they can work towards making the world that ideal world. The response was incredible. The students want a healthy environment. The students want a world free of racism and sexism. The students want a world that has more promise than it does today.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Culture and Community Spirit.

Mr. Blackett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the appropriate number of copies of my responses to questions raised relevant to Alberta Culture and Community Spirit's estimates and business plan.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have 28 tablings today. As much as I would enjoy doing them individually, I suspect you might not. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of letters from my constituents and northern communities voicing their concerns with respect to the future of the Edmonton City Centre Airport.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have tablings of five letters received from my constituents opposing the delisting of chiropractic services. The letters are from Doug Banks, Pat, Rob Wells, Lorna Hayes, and Brad Bogstie.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have one tabling today, and it's a letter that I referred to in question period earlier. It's dated May 13, 2009, and it's from the hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration. It is regarding the $3.1 million that I quoted in question period.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter from Verna Yiu, acting vice-dean at the Faculty of Medicine & Dentistry at the University of Alberta, written on behalf of the faculty's clinical chairs and sent to Stephen Duckett, CEO, Alberta Health Services. I referred to the letter in my questions today. It raises a number of concerns about the current direction of Alberta Health Services.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Ms Evans, Minister of Finance and Enterprise, pursuant to the Alberta Capital Finance Authority Act the 2008 Alberta Capital Finance Authority annual report.

On behalf of the hon. Mr. Renner, Minister of Environment, responses to questions raised by Ms Blakeman, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, and Ms Notley, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, on May 5, 2009, in the Department of Environment main estimates debate.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 35

Gas Utilities Amendment Act, 2009

[Debate adjourned May 26: Mr. MacDonald speaking]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to continue.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, we were talking about the Alliance pipeline yesterday afternoon under Bill 35 and the implications of that pipeline. In the time that I have left, I think it's very important that we get some other issues on the record, and hopefully they can be addressed. I know there have been previous attempts to address them.

I've heard, certainly, from constituents from Edmonton-Gold Bar who have property in rural areas. We referenced that yesterday. Of course, on their property they have pipelines that are crossing their land, and they have issues with this bill. Now, we know that this bill is going to result in an application to reclassify I think it's 25,000 or 27,000 kilometres of Alberta pipelines of various sizes. There's going to be a significant shift of the regulation away from Alberta regardless of whether the National Energy Board is sited in Calgary. There are some that say this is a shift to Ottawa's control.

Now, landowners who have been granted rights-of-way or easements for any of these lines are certainly going to be affected. During the course of debate if I could have some reassurances from the hon. Member for Little Bow, I would appreciate it. But how will crossing restrictions be affected by this law?

Abandonment. How will the provincial rules that are now in place – the financial ability for abandoned pipelines always, as we know, rests with the pipeline owner. Landowners certainly have been protected. As soon as this shift in regulation occurs, when a pipeline is abandoned, the ownership of the buried line as well as any and all future legal or financial liability associated with it is placed in the lap of the landowner. I would like to know how this will work with this new bill. We know that many landowners have issues.

Abandonment is not that big of a deal right now, but as these pipelines age and more of them end up abandoned – some of them, Mr. Speaker, would be up to 35 years. Some of them would be over 50 years old. Who knows what is going to happen here? As I understand it, under existing Alberta rules if a landowner ever does get in a disagreement with the operator, he can hire a lawyer to contest what the operator is doing or has done and recover his costs. Under the proposed new rules there won't be any provision for landowners to recover legal costs. If I'm wrong on that, if the hon. member could correct me, I would really appreciate it. If the information that I have is inaccurate or incorrect, please correct us on the public record.

Now, loss of ongoing annual payments. We talked about that a little yesterday. Under existing Alberta rules landowners are entitled to an initial lump sum payment when they grant an easement. In certain circumstances the landowner is also eligible to receive ongoing annual payments. We referred to that yesterday, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Surface Rights Board has ruled in favour of landowners, stating that there are situations when landowners should keep receiving ongoing annual payments on an easement or a right-of-way to compensate them for interference and the overall impact of pipelines. With Bill 35 going through, if it does, as I understand it, there will no longer be any provision for landowners to receive these payments. Again, if that's inaccurate or incorrect, I would appreciate on the record the member's comments.

There are several other changes that landowners have concerns about. They include the depth of cover requirements, maintenance and integrity digs, and a dramatic expansion of what the industry calls the control zone. The control zone is an area on either side of a pipeline that the operator can control and upon which it can restrict farmers' activities. Under the proposed new rules the control zone is much wider than under existing Alberta law and in nearly every case is actually wider than the easement or the right-of-way that exists currently.

Now, landowners have brought these issues not only to my attention but, I think, to every member of the House. Certainly, some of these issues have been brought forward by individual constituents, as I said, who have property in rural areas. If I could get some clarification on these issues that landowners have before we go any further with a different stage with this legislation, I would be very grateful, Mr. Speaker.

With that, I will conclude my remarks on Bill 35 and cede the floor to another hon. member. Thank you.

The Speaker: The floor is open.

Shall I call on the hon. Member for Little Bow to close the debate?

Mr. McFarland: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the comments and the questions. I will have specific answers for the six concerns that you've got. As far as I'm concerned, from what I've had here, the control zones, recovery of legal costs, the abandonment, and crossing restrictions are probably the most important ones. But we'll endeavour to get you specific answers to those right away.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 35 read a second time]

Bill 41

Protection for Persons in Care Act

[Adjourned debate April 28: Dr. Brown]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre to continue the debate.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to speak in second reading to the debate on Bill 41, the Protection for Persons in Care Act. This is an act that has been overwhelmingly frustrating to me and to a number of my constituents because it came in much ballyhooed as the bill that was going to address all of our issues around abuse or suspected abuse of people in care. Generally, the overwhelming majority of people in that situation are usually frail elderly people who are in long-term care facilities, what used to be known as nursing homes. But it also covers off younger people who have lifelong debilitating diseases that have reached a point where they're no longer able to live independently, people with CP, for example, or MS, et cetera.

My experience with this bill was that every time somebody would come to us and say, "We think there has been abuse," usually physical abuse actually, and we raised it in the House or we tried to approach the powers in charge here: well, no, actually, it really couldn't do that, and, no, it couldn't actually ask that question, and, no, it actually couldn't go there. In the end, it was admitted to me on several occasions that this was essentially an educational tool, and it was really there so that it could impart knowledge about how the system worked and the fact that you shouldn't abuse people that are in care, which I would have thought was kind of an obvious one but evidently needed to happen.

To back up the various cases that I've worked on for my constituents, I have now had a closer association with someone who was in care. They had their arm broken. A very frail person had their arm broken. We shouldn't be breaking the arms of people that are in care, especially not in institutional care, long-term care. The facility, I must say, acted with alacrity, launched their own investigation, contacted me repeatedly to give me a status update, gave me a final report, actually, really pulled out all the stops because I was going to have to leave town, and I let them know that, and they really made an effort to let me know what was going on before I had to leave.

The protection of persons in care investigator? I still haven't heard from them. This incident happened the end of November; this is the end of May. Not a word. No written report. No investigation filed. Nobody has contacted me. I'm not hard to find, Mr. Speaker. You know, you could google it and get an address for an office. I'm not hiding under a rock here. It's pretty easy to find me. To me that underlines so much what is wrong with this system. We have a piece of legislation in place that is supposed to be an investigative arm, an educational arm, yes, but also an investigative arm, for when things go wrong and people in our care institutions are injured.

Injured, by the way, also covers more than physical injury. I'm sorry, I'll just quickly look that up because it does cover that: yeah, bodily harm, serious emotional harm, withholding or prescribing of medication inappropriately. I think we've all had calls and cases around, for example, overmedication or psychotropic drugs or a family member is feeling that people have been overmedicated in order to keep them malleable and co-operative. "Non-consensual sexual contact, activity or behaviour." How bad is that that that we would have to contemplate someone in a care facility being a victim of sexual assault? That's just appalling to me, but it's covered in this legislation, which it should be. It also includes misappropriation or converting amounts of money or valuable possessions – that's the sort of financial piece of this – and failing to provide adequate care, nutrition for example, and medical attention or specific care that would result in bodily harm, which was the situation here.

Partly, I think, to me, in having had the facility's report, my understanding of the incident or my analysis of the incident at this point is that they were short-staffed. A staff member attempted to do a two-person transfer by themselves. Even though there are now aids to help people do transfers from wheelchairs or Broda chairs into beds and back out again, still there's a reason why, when it says a two-person transfer, it needs a two-person transfer. But lots and lots of times you're in a facility and you can tell that somebody is going to end up having to be transferred using a mechanical device and one person. That does not fit the rules of what I just described. In fact, I think that's what happened: because of the way the sling was manoeuvred and the fact that it wasn't two people, the individual's arm was broken.

Just imagine being a frail person in a long-term care facility and being transferred to your bed, and they break your arm before Christmas. Wow. Merry Christmas. This resulted in a number of trips, of course, to emergency facilities and then a return to emergency. And you're dealing with someone who is so frail they're on a gurney. They can't be transferred to a wheelchair for transportation – all of these things I've learned – and the emergency can take them on a gurney, but it's a special room, and it's down the hall, and they can't leave them unsupervised. So they actually will not take them unless there is someone in a guardianship role who can meet them at the door of the hospital and stay with them through the examination, the X-ray process, et cetera, and then until the medical personnel are available to transfer them back. You can imagine, given the timing of all of this, how difficult it was to organize to have someone who was in a guardianship or a responsible position to organize all of this, to be at the hospital, and the time involved. It was just a nightmare.

So I'm really interested that we now have this act back in front of us revamped. It's not an amending act. For those that are following along at home, probably 90 per cent of the bills we deal with in here are a such-and-such amending act, so it's amending the original bill. But this one isn't. What's happening here is that this bill is completely replacing the previous version of the bill and, one hopes, updating and improving it. But we're not tinkering here. We're not amending a couple of little sections. This is a total revamp of the bill.

I'm hoping that under this bill we would be able to address some of the long-standing issues that we've found. Essentially, most of the problems that have come to my constituency office and the one that I just described I had to deal with personally were around the actual rigorous investigation and reporting back. You know, I've just reread through this legislation, and some of it's not all that different. Maybe I missed a step. Maybe I was supposed to phone somebody up and say: "Yeah. Broke this person's arm. Could you investigate it?" I don't think that's necessary.

In reading through this act, what I'm getting pretty clearly – and what I got at the time – was that it happened in a care facility. There's a requirement that certain people that are in charge are required to report this, and the report should flow through. There are even requirements that, you know, the report comes back in writing after a certain period of time. In the case I'm describing, it didn't happen at all. Still hasn't. What are we talking – November, December, January, February, March, April, May – six months. Not a word. Nothing in writing.

How is our system failing frail people in care so badly? As I say, I'm not hard to find. You know, my name was on all the appropriate records. It should have been pretty easy to find me if somehow something got lost. You could have just googled it and found a business address and sent the report to me, but nothing. There's something seriously wrong in a system where you can't even get a written report or any acknowledgement that something has gone seriously wrong and we hurt someone. We – a collective we, an institutional we – hurt someone. I mean, just imagine any one of us how much we'd like to have our arm broken going from a chair to another chair. Not much, and we did this to a frail elderly person.

So are we going to get improvements from this act? Yes, what we've got here is more detail about what is supposed to happen in the process when an abuse is filed and as it tracks, almost an audit trail, through the complaints officer to the investigator to the director and then what that decision is. There is some timing that's involved here about going back to the complainant. You can self-complain, by the way – it has to happen within a two-year time period – but otherwise it would usually flow through the institution because that's where most of these people are.

There's a duty that the individual who is a service provider, who provides care, that there is a report that's done. They cannot start an investigation if they feel the abuse is frivolous or vexatious, that the report was made too late. Remember, I mentioned a two-year time period. Then there's an odd clause: "having regard to all of the circumstances, no investigation is necessary." Maybe that's what I got caught in. But nobody followed through and said: this is why you're not getting any kind of a written report back.

My questions would be directed to the sponsor of this bill, the Member for Calgary-Nose Hill. What is the criteria for that decision-making? How can one care provider arrive at that decision, that "having regard to all of the circumstances, no investigation is necessary"? What is the report process that then happens? I'm assuming at some point you'd go back and go: we're not going to do an investigation here, so quit asking. It certainly gives us timelines in connection with other things but not with that decision, "having regard to all of the circumstances, no investigation is necessary." How do we find that out?

The fines levied on individuals and on service providers have been substantially increased from the previous act. But you know what? Because there seemed to be such difficulty in actually launching an investigation under this act, and to be told regretfully and solemnly that it's mostly an educational tool, I'm not surprised that they never – I mean, in our experience, in our casework there were very few that actually resulted in a conclusion, so there wasn't a fine that was levied because there was no investigation that was carried through. So I don't know that it's going to be helpful that there's a bigger fine, and I guess I'd be interested in hearing what the thoughts were behind that.

Now, there are some additional concerns around regulatory powers and, particularly from my point of view, access, use, and disclosure of personal health information by those complaints officers. That became a factor in the case I described as well because they had to hunt me down and needed me to verify that I had guardianship status to be able to access the health files. Well, I didn't, actually, and in my mind the individual was capable. They should go and ask for their permission to get into the files. With great reluctance they finally did, and the individual was able to give the permission to get into those. Once again, how that information is handled and who gets access to it and where the guardians fit into that puzzle becomes really important in these cases.

I'm aware that I'm nearing the end of my time here. I have put some questions on the record that I would like to get answers back to. You know, as I say, I'm hopeful about this legislation. But, frankly, we just have not had good experiences with it either through my office offering services to my constituents – and remember, 14 per cent of my constituents are seniors, so these are not unheard of cases for me – and, clearly, as direct experience with what I would consider to be the failure of an act thus far.

Thank you for the opportunity to put that on the record, and I look forward to getting some responses and participating in debate as it moves through Committee of the Whole.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Additional members to participate? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to be able to rise to join debate on Bill 41, the Protection for Persons in Care Act. This is an interesting piece of legislation dealing with an interesting regime, which by its very nature, I suppose, can't help but be controversial and attract a certain amount of criticism because, of course, it deals with adjudicating in some ways and investigating very sensitive and significant situations for a very vulnerable group of Albertans.

I haven't had a chance to do a comprehensive comparison of this piece of legislation with what's in place, so what I'm going to do at this point is just raise some concerns with respect to what we've seen thus far with respect to the bill and hope to receive some information back from the minister as we move forward into other debate.

It's interesting. My experience with this piece of legislation actually is multifaceted. As someone who has constituents who have tried to utilize the protections afforded through this legislation, I've been able to observe the degree to which complaints can or can't be resolved through the legislation. Of course, we've observed some concerns with the process in that capacity. The other way I've been involved with it is through my previous role working with the nurses' union in terms of assisting staff who are the subjects of the complaints. So I've actually been on both sides of the cases in different contexts with respect to this act.

My experience thus far is that there need to be improvements in the administration of this program in terms of the natural justice provisions both for the complainant as well as the person who is the subject of the complaint. There also needs to be an improvement in terms of the remedial opportunities which are at the disposal of the person doing the investigation because it often seems as though all that really happens is that there are recommendations, which may or may not ever be effectively followed up.

I think one area of concern that we have, assuming that this ultimately reflects an improvement in the overall system, is that this relates solely to dealing with protection for adults who receive government-funded care or support services. Now, in many other contexts in this House we've talked about the strategies that the government is employing right now to open the door for more and more privately funded continuing care models throughout the system. So I am concerned that there may be a point where there are homes that ought to be subject to the complaints and review process under this act which will not be because they are privately funded.

I think that the percentage of privately funded, where the actual resident is paying more and more of the fees, is going to grow. That, of course, becomes a major concern for us. I'm not sure what that looks like right now. I know there are obviously a lot of private-sector providers who still receive public funding. I'm not sure of the degree to which there are any private-sector providers who don't receive public funding. I'm assuming that as long as they receive any public funding, they're under the oversight of this act, but I could use some clarification on that.

One of the other things that happens in this act which is of some concern is the question of the definition of abuse under the act. What we currently have is that abuse is "intentionally failing to provide adequate nutrition, adequate medical attention or other necessity of life without a valid consent." The new definition of abuse would be:

"abuse" means an act or an omission with respect to a client receiving care or support services from a service provider that . . . results in failing to provide adequate nutrition, adequate medical attention or another necessity of life without a valid consent, resulting in serious bodily harm.

On one hand, the definition of abuse is potentially broadened because you're no longer seeking to show intent to abuse. There are examples – and I have examples in my notes here – where seniors received significant bodily injury as a result of a failure of care, but it was ultimately determined that it was not the intention of the provider for the senior to be injured; therefore, the complaint was not sustained. I think at a certain point the intention, particularly of the person who is the direct agent of the injury, is less of a concern because oftentimes – and we've certainly outlined this repeatedly throughout the course of this session – what happens is that there are in effect incidents of abuse not because anyone intends it, or certainly not the direct agents of the injury, but there are forms of injury that occur because there's simply not enough staff to care properly for the residents of these facilities.

So you see people not having their dressings changed. You see people having their dinner delayed such that they're, you know, becoming ill; their health is jeopardized. You see them being kept in bed till 11 or 12 o'clock because nobody can come and help them out of bed. These kinds of things are not things that the direct agents of this type of transgression intend, but at the same time it is something that should be addressed because it's ultimately the outcome of short-staffing, which shouldn't be allowed. Of course, we have no mechanism for measuring what is or isn't short-staffing because the government refuses to put staffing limits in place.

We can have this fabulous little piece of legislation that talks about protection of persons in care, but if we then define abuse in the way it's being defined here, we effectively render the primary source of injury as being something that's not covered under this act.

Now, what's interesting here is that the new act in that sense is an improvement because the new act doesn't ask for intent anymore. So that's good. Theoretically, then, you can now look at injury that arises as a result of systemic decisions in a particular facility that are not the direct intention of the front-line providers. That is absolutely what should happen because in most of the investigations I've been involved with where a front-line provider has failed to adequately care for someone, it's because they were presented with a choice of two competing needs, and they would choose the need that was most urgent. But it didn't undermine the fact that the competing need was also urgent. It's just that it wasn't as urgent as the other one. What really should happen is that both needs are cared for, but it can't possibly happen because we are so chronically short-staffed in these settings, and we're not monitoring it properly, and we're not setting standards. So that is a problem.

In the new legislation we no longer have the requirement for intention, and indeed we do have this idea of abuse meaning an act or an omission with a client, and that's good because that's often how the kinds of difficulties we hear about occur. But the problem becomes that at the very end that omission needs to result "in serious bodily harm." Now, we have the situation with the senior who is in bed, not having their dressings changed often enough, not being toileted often enough, their bedsores become infected, and they end up in the hospital because they've now got infected bedsores which need to be treated in the acute care setting and the infection that results from that.

Now the question becomes: what omission resulted in what serious bodily harm, and who's going to prove that? Well, medical providers. But if that arises as a result of an omission, how is this person going to prove that omission A resulted a week later in serious bodily harm B? I mean, we're going to get into this ridiculous adjudicative model where in most cases the complainants will not have the resources to engage in what becomes, effectively, medical litigation. So it's going to result in a situation where many legitimate complaints of abuse are not founded.

Perhaps the issue is that one ought not use the word "abuse" because the word implies, you know, an egregious intent, and certainly on the part of the front-line workers that is not what's going on. But there is a failure in care. There should be the ability for people to file a complaint for a failure in care or an inadequacy of care or a negligence in care management or however you want to phrase it. It can be phrased in a way that you're not actually suggesting that people are intentionally abusing, but you are still identifying the fact that adequate levels of care are not being provided to a very vulnerable group of citizens within that setting.

That is a concern, and I'd like to hear back from the minister on how she sees us avoiding the litigation that will arise from that criteria being in the definition, that the omission resulted in serious bodily harm, and whether or not the psychological outcomes of the omissions are also included in what constitutes serious bodily harm.

Now, as I've mentioned before, we have tabled in the House about 250 working short forms just from this session that represent about four facilities in the province, so it's a drop in the bucket. We know there is a chronic problem in our care facilities, and we know it's not being addressed. We know those ones haven't even been investigated yet – or last I heard they certainly hadn't been – so that is a concern for us.

I think I'm running out of time.

The other concern that we want to raise quickly is that I am told there is some confusion about whether under this act the person harmed and/or that person's representative is entitled to a copy of the investigation report. It seems to me that they should automatically have a right to that investigation report. In my own experience I've seen investigation reports – and going back to my previous comments, the principles of natural justice and, shall we say, administrative and adjudicative professionalism need to be enhanced within this particular system because we've observed cases where investigative reports are based on third- or fourth-hand anecdotal pieces of information, where that information is never put to the person about whom it relates, basically just very, very sloppy investigative procedures that very clearly, were a person able to observe them, they would be able to counter a lot of the findings. But if they're not given access to these findings, then we lose a really important tool and a very important right.

[Mr. Cao in the chair]

Again, going back to issues of natural justice that exist within this system, there need to be improvements there. If the information I have is correct – again, I'm happy to be told it's not – that investigative reports are not provided to complainants and/or their representatives or the people about whom the complaints relate, then that is certainly a very important concern with respect to issues of natural justice.

The final thing is that it appears to me this legislation is including a provision which is very similar to one that was included in Bill 24 last session, which this caucus raised very serious concerns about, where the complaints officer has the capacity to simply dismiss a complaint. Now, I haven't been able to look at this in enough detail, but I am curious as to whether this is the same kind of process that we had in Bill 24, public trustee amendment act, where a complaint officer could simply dismiss a complaint, and the decision to dismiss was not itself appealable. If that's the case, again, you end up with a very significant amount of gatekeeping, which is not appealable, except of course through the Court of Queen's Bench. Again, to go back, this is designed to deal with the protection of our most vulnerable Albertans, and that's not accessible to them.

3:30

The Deputy Speaker: We have Standing Order 29(2)(a) for five minutes of comment or question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm wondering if the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona had anything else she wanted to say.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you. I appreciate that. I just really wanted to finish outlining my concerns around the process of asking vulnerable Albertans, most often seniors, who are already very ill – they're residing in these care facilities and requiring care – to essentially get representation or themselves somehow manage to get to the Court of Queen's Bench to appeal or to do a judicial review application. I'll tell you right now that 99 out of 100 folks would not even know how to begin that process. Probably 50 out of 100 lawyers wouldn't know how to begin that process. So it means that there is, effectively, no substantial or real avenue of appeal for folks whose complaints are dismissed by a complaints officer.

Again, I welcome correction on this issue. If this provision is not being framed along the same lines as the one about which we had raised concerns under Bill 24, then I'm happy to be told that I'm incorrect on that, but my initial scan of the bill is that we are in fact adopting exactly the same model, which, as I say, allows for a gatekeeping provision which, I would suggest, challenges the rules of natural justice. Certainly, when you're dealing with such a vulnerable population, that is a population for whom the rules of natural justice are perhaps most important.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. member wish to speak in the five minutes?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview on the bill.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. This is a bill that deserves some good public discussion. I would bet there's probably not an MLA in this Assembly who doesn't have some constituents living in facilities that will be covered under this piece of legislation or, at the very least, family members of people who will be covered under this legislation. I know that I've got a number of facilities in my constituency of Edmonton-Riverview that will be directly affected by this and, if I added them all up, probably hundreds of constituents, certainly a few hundred constituents who would be directly affected by this because they do live in facilities covered under this, and they are people who are vulnerable. They are people who are some of the most vulnerable, actually, in our society.

I think this is an important piece of legislation because it's doing something that governments need to do, which is to look after people who are too weak or too frail or too vulnerable to look after themselves. That's a core responsibility of government. Sometimes when we're discussing things and weighing out how to spend money and allocate resources and energy in this Assembly, I find myself wondering: well, is that particular thing a core role for government or not? That helps me sometimes to sort out: well, you know, we could maybe avoid doing that. But there are some things we can't avoid, and I think that protecting persons in care is one of those things that we can't avoid, and we shouldn't.

It's unfortunate that we have to do this because it's about addressing serious harm and harm caused by other people. You know, you'd like to think that when somebody is in care, they're surrounded by caring people and that they won't be harmed. But, in fact, humanity being what it is, every so often there's somebody in a position who shouldn't be there but ends up there and does cause serious harm, and that's why we end up having to make rules. If everybody was reasonable and compassionate and sensible and so on, we could probably do away with most of the legislation in this Assembly. They aren't that way, so we need bills like this.

The intent of this bill is to, as the title says, protect persons in care, and we'd all agree that's an important intent. I wanted to speak briefly about the definition of abuse, which is in section 1(2) of the act. I'm not going to dwell too long on this piece of legislation, but I did want to talk about this in particular. I'm quoting from the act.

"Abuse" means an act or an omission with respect to a client receiving care or support services from a [support] provider that

- (a) causes serious bodily harm,
- (b) causes serious emotional harm,
- (c) results in the administration, withholding or prescribing of medication for an inappropriate purpose, resulting in serious bodily harm,
- (d) subjects an individual to non-consensual sexual contact, activity or behaviour,
- (e) involves misappropriating or improperly or illegally converting a significant amount of money or other valuable possessions, or
- (f) results in failing to provide adequate nutrition, adequate medical attention or another necessity of life without a valid consent, resulting in serious bodily harm.

Now, when I read that, the first phrase that jumped out at me – and it's repeated at least three times in the definition – is "serious bodily harm." I think we need to think about that. Serious bodily harm seems like a fairly low standard to set for abuse. There is no definition in the legislation that I've noticed of what serious bodily harm means, so it's obviously up to interpretation, but when I think about it, there is a lot of abuse that could occur that doesn't end up in serious bodily harm. It ends up in mild bodily harm or bodily harm that's not serious, and I find myself struggling with this adjective "serious." How are we or, under the provisions of this act, how are the investigators and the director going to decide if something is serious bodily harm?

Is a bruise serious bodily harm? If a resident is acting out in a way that a staff member thinks is inappropriate and they get squeezed by the staff member and scratched, is that serious bodily harm? Well, probably not, but gee, it would seem like a form of abuse.

Ms Blakeman: That depends. What if you're a 95-year-old with osteoporosis?

Dr. Taft: Well, of course, as the Member for Edmonton-Centre is pointing out, if you're frail, an elderly person with osteoporosis, something as simple as a squeeze can break a bone. But I'm thinking, actually, that under the scope these aren't just going to be people who are frail elderly. These could be, you know, younger persons in a long-term care facility, or they're going to be people in social care facilities, which includes, actually, a tremendous range of facilities, or people in mental hospitals. I think we need to debate in this Assembly: what is serious bodily harm? Is a slap across the face serious bodily harm? If not, would two slaps be serious? I think we'd all agree that that certainly could be construed as abuse if it wasn't done in self-defence, but in this act it may not actually be defined as abuse.

Now, I can understand why there needs to be some description in there because if it was just bodily harm of any kind, you could end up with, you know, trivial things, a paper cut or something like that. But we may want to consider adjusting this word "serious" to something different – I'm just thinking out loud here – to "nontrivial" or "notable" or something. With the word "serious," one of the first things I come to is when you hear reports of people injured in a car accident. Well, they're critically injured, which means there are actually medical definitions of these terms. I don't know them, but critically injured means you're in a life-or-death situation.

Serious injury is one step up from being critical. That could involve broken bones. It could involve serious injuries that are painful and disabling and medically significant but not critical. Is that how we are to read this word "serious"? In the medical world serious bodily harm could well be taken to mean something quite devastating.

I think that as we go through this bill and consider it clause by clause in Committee of the Whole, we should consider what the word "serious" means. Of course, the extension of that, then, is that the same question needs to apply to subsection (2)(b), which says that abuse would involve serious emotional harm. I understand that there are no black and white definitions here, and I don't think we can set that standard. But serious emotional harm: what is that going to entail, and how is somebody to assess that? How is the director or the investigator to assess serious emotional harm? Is that something that's lifelong? Maybe it's not debilitating, but it's going to be with you for years, a sense of fear. If you're abused by particular people, that lingers for the rest of your life. Would that be serious emotional harm? Or is it something that reduces you to tears? What is this?

I think we're going to have to struggle in this Assembly with these kinds of issues if we're doing our jobs as MLAs. When we pass this, we need to understand that this law will be the guardian, as it were, that protects all kinds, thousands of vulnerable Albertans who will be looking to us. If we set the standards too low, as we may be doing when we say "serious bodily harm," we're not doing our jobs. I hope that some of the members on the other side actually give this some serious thought. We could have a very, very valuable discussion on improving the definitions of this act, a discussion that would give greater protection to people in care and make the jobs of the people who have to enact this bill a lot easier.

I'll keep my comments to that, Mr. Speaker, but I will issue a challenge to members of this Assembly. Please, read those definitions and think about it, and imagine yourself or your parent or your loved one in a situation where it isn't abuse unless it's serious bodily harm. Is that good enough?

Thanks.

The Deputy Speaker: We have five minutes for question and comment. Any hon. member wish to take that five minutes?

Seeing none, any hon. member wish to speak on the bill?

Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 41 read a second time]

Bill 42

Gaming and Liquor Amendment Act, 2009

[Adjourned debate April 28: Mr. Anderson]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a privilege to rise to speak and join debate on Bill 42, the Gaming and Liquor Amendment Act, 2009. I will say that this is one of those bills where I just have to pause and consider and really put my thinking cap on as this has really challenged me on what exactly we're trying to do. Many of the aims in the bill are great. We're trying to protect people who go to bars and restaurants from troublemakers, gang members, et cetera, and we're trying to make places safer for the general public as well as give our law enforcement officials an ability to battle crime, all of which are extraordinarily valuable goals and aims and should be attempted to be done by government. On that account this is a bill that is well intended and fairly well meaning in that respect.

Yet at the same time, Mr. Speaker, I am caught in the crux that while there's a lot we can do to be battling crime – and I'm supportive of many of the measures that we do in here; for instance, more police in the streets. I believe our communities, especially Calgary and Edmonton, other jurisdictions are significantly short-staffed if you compare them to other jurisdictions across Canada that have city sizes and city crime rates similar to ours. So I would, of course, support any move to support our police officers on the streets and add more people to investigate gang crime, investigate gang violence, to crack down on drug houses, to crack down on people who peddle cocaine or people who indulge in gang violence and those type of measures. There's no doubt that this act sort of attempts to do some of this.

What Bill 42 would allow is for bars to collect personal information on patrons as a condition of entry, allegedly in order to identify troublemakers and prevent gang activity. You see, that's the whole thing: identify troublemakers and prevent gang activity. Well, that's a two-pronged objective, and at first glance it seems logical, but to identify troublemakers, you know, again, it's a very broad definition of troublemaker. When I look back at my youth and some of the individuals that I associated with, who played on my junior hockey teams and the like, we might have been identified, maybe, as some of these troublemakers or whatever you might call it.

For instance, after a game we'd all go in with our junior hockey jackets and start drinking a lot and all of that sort of stuff. Well, I think it's fairly easy to say that we might have been seen as troublemakers, especially when there are 20 of us in there with junior hockey jackets after a game and all of that sort of stuff and the testosterone is flowing and you're drinking a lot. The next thing you know, there are 20 of us, so is that a gang? Are 20 junior hockey players in a pub after a game celebrating, all with jackets, team colours, acting like . . .

Mr. MacDonald: It depends on whether you won or lost.

Mr. Hehr: Well, you know, if they won, they'd probably be celebrating, so they'd be drinking a lot. If they lost, well, a good possibility they were trying to drown their sorrows, so they'd be drinking a lot as well.

Ms Blakeman: We're getting your point. There's liquor involved.

Mr. Hehr: Liquor involved. That's more what I'm trying to point out.

Although we know what they are, gangs to us are bad people who are running around with guns and cars and dealing drugs and all those things like that. But very often gang members look like you and me, everyone on the street and don't parade around in a gang like junior hockey players or lacrosse teams or what have you. I'm just open to the possibility that those are loose definitions and are easy to interpret.

3:50

If we look a little further at what we always do in these situations, we have many fundamental rights and freedoms which we as a society cherish, and some of those are freedom of expression, which we had a very long discussion on last night, some of these things are freedom of association, our ability to hang out with whomever we want as long as we're not, I guess, doing illegal or immoral acts or things of that nature and those types of things. Then again, we're not allowed to do these things with impunity. There are reasonable limits that we as a society place on our freedom of expression and our freedom of association. That's what laws like this touch on. Are we reasonably limiting the freedom of expression or freedom of association that we are allowing members of our society?

There's also another way we look at this. The law we craft to battle crime or have safety in a public venue: is this law related to the activity we want to suppress or of that matter? I wasn't a practising criminal lawyer, but it's called the Oakes test. It's where the objective . . .

Mr. Denis: It's constitutional.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you very much. It's not criminal; it's constitutional law. Thank you very much to the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

It means that the objective of the limitation of the Charter right must be sufficiently important to warrant the overriding right. Let's look at that. Yeah, it's important that we protect people from crime, but is this bill doing that enough that we take away this freedom of association and freedom of expression that we're trying to? The means we've chosen to achieve the objective must be proportional to both the objective and the law. The objective is that, yeah, we're trying to reduce crime. And the law is: what is legally permissible?

There's also what's called the proportionality test. Are the measures chosen rationally connected to the objective? Let's look at that. Are they rationally connected to the objective? Does collecting identification in a bar necessarily lead to a reduction in gang violence, criminal activity, anything of that nature? Well, I don't see that in my research, and I have done some on this matter and have looked for this because, like I said, I've thought about this for a long time.

It's not like I came here, put on my civil libertarian hat, and said: I'm not going to support this bill because it's coming from the members opposite. I really struggled with it. But I could see really no place where this is rationally connected to the objective of sort of rounding up gang violence or even stopping violence in bars, which I would hazard to guess happens sometimes by gang members but, relatively, a lot less than we speak of or a lot less than, say, the incidents of 18-year-olds' hockey teams or 20-year-olds' rugby teams or 25-year-olds' university football teams, whatever it is. And I'm not just harping on athletic teams. You know what I'm saying. People of that age who go to the bar drink, get rowdy, have fun, and do that stuff.

Ms Blakeman: That's age discrimination.

Mr. Hehr: It might be age discrimination, but I think people can take judicial notice of the fact that that happens from time to time. I saw a smile come across the hon. minister of agriculture's face, so maybe he knows of what I speak. But I won't sully him with that brush, not I. Anyway, those are the concerns when I look at this bill.

Let's just go to the sectional analysis here, the wording of the actual bill. This is really important, where I've tried to sort of paint a picture here of why I think this might not be the best thing. In section 69.1(1) "gang" means a group of people engaged in a pattern of unlawful behaviour or in creating an atmosphere of fear or intimidation in a community." Yeah, that sounds like a gang. Again, it sounds like a lot of things could be considered a gang, and that's just sort of how it is.

Let's look at another section I have highlighted:

- (2) For the purposes of this section, a person is associated with a gang if the person
 - (a) is a member of the gang,
 - (b) supports, facilitates or participates in the gang's activities, or . . .

That seems fair.

- (c) is in the company of a person described in clause (a) or (b).

What does that mean? If you're with one of these people who are in a gang, are you now directly deemed to have knowledge of this person? Are you subject to, then, police interrogation? Are you subject to be yarded out of the pub? [interjection] I hear some discussion going on in the background. I'm sure the hon. member may be able to illuminate me.

I'm just pointing out: "is in the company of a person described in clause (a) or (b)." So this person isn't really a gang member, but he's in the company of a person who is a gang member or may be a gang, as it says at the top. I don't know who's interpreting this, whether it's a police officer or whether it's Mr. Vickers at the pub in Calgary. I'm not sure.

Now, here's where it comes in. What happens is that you collect this information at the door of the pub and perceivably the police then request the information – I don't know if it's sent to them – and then a police officer comes on the scene.

If anyone is following along or paying attention, then they can look at subsection (4) about when the police officer gets involved.

- (4) A police officer need not rely on personal knowledge in concluding that a person is associated with a gang but may rely on information from others, including but not limited to
 - (a) information regarding
 - (i) any admission of association with a gang,
 - (ii) use of names, signs, symbols or other representations used by a gang,
 - (iii) a person's presence at the scene of unlawful behaviour by a gang, regardless of whether the person participated in the unlawful behaviour.

Did you hear that? A person's presence at the scene of unlawful behaviour by a gang. So I guess if a person's standing there, if a gang or whoever, a hockey team or whatever you have, does something and a person has seen this, they are going to be affected by this.

Here's the next one:

- (v) frequent association with persons associated with a gang,

and

- (b) any other categories of information set out in the regulations.

Well, that seems to me a whole lot of people. The police officer doesn't need the personal knowledge. Those things do give me cause for concern. It doesn't seem that this legislation is drafted with any sort of limitations in mind. It affects a whole host of individuals who may, might, possibly, maybe not, maybe knew the gang member when they were in grade 9, and the gang member is now, you know, 20 years old. If they're at a bar, maybe that guy has subjected himself to some interviews by the police. These things worry me and maybe overly so.

Again, I go back to that basic principle that, you know, we've got to balance these things with what we're taking away. We saw that in the United States, possibly, eight years ago when 9/11 happened. Automatically we started stripping away freedoms or independent liberties. I believe these independent liberties can be taken away in short periods of time – war, insurrection, or what have you – but maybe we can take other measures. Maybe we can do the right thing in hiring police officers or do the right thing on that front. We don't have to quite limit our freedoms in quite a way.

For instance, you know, we do have here section 69.1. It's sort of referenced that this language is so broad that an individual could be excluded or removed by the police if police were told. As for the personal knowledge, no personal knowledge is required if the police were told that an individual has received benefits from a gang.

So say there is someone there who sees some people at the pub who they really don't like and they say: hey, I'll tell the police that this guy has received benefits. Maybe they bummed a cigarette from a gang member sometime or something of that nature. Maybe I'm going overboard with the example, but the simple fact of the matter is that this is overly broad. If you can show me some research papers that say that collecting information at the bar is good for gang violence – I've read some of these books. Never have I seen that really as a way to infiltrate gangs, stop gang violence, do whatever. What I've read is that it's an infringement on our society's way that we do business.

I see a lot of this stuff coming down the pike. You know, we all know we're short of police officers in this province. We all try to put our heads in the sand and say that that's not happening. We make a lot of hay lately in doing stuff: we're going to collect medical fees back from people who do crime, and we're going to start taking personal information to clamp down on crime. These are all great sound bites with very limited ways of actually reducing crime.

There are two ways you do that. One is, I guess, on the enforcement side, and the other side is giving kids an opportunity to do better. That's through things like junior kindergarten, maybe getting people some beds in mental health clinics, getting some individuals drug counselling when they need it, that softer side of the law that also has to be present with the harder side of the law. A little bit of the stick-and-carrot approach. You know, you give them the stick; you get them that mental health bed, you get them the drug counselling, or you get the junior kindergarten going. Yeah, that's going to keep crime rates down and gang activities less. Let's give new immigrants to our cities the support they need to develop second language training and to get jobs. Let's not turn our backs on them so that they're looking to join gang activity. All of these things could be done to reduce gang activity.

Let's make sure our policing is adequate, while at the same time let's be cognizant that sometimes these laws are good, where we can do these things without overly infringing on our civil liberties and with the purpose of being rationally connected to the object at stake: reducing crime or some such matter. I think we should do that. This one, in my opinion, doesn't quite get us there. I appreciated the fact that the legislation did do a lot better on things of privacy; that was an improvement. I know we're getting there on this.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere wish to close the debate?

Mr. Anderson: No. I was going to answer the hon. member's questions. I will not close the debate. Sorry. I was just trying to answer his questions.

Ms Blakeman: We're in second reading, and if the sponsor speaks again, he closes debate. So can the rest of us debate?

Mr. Anderson: I just wanted to answer his questions. That's all.

Ms Blakeman: Okay.

The Deputy Speaker: Who wishes to speak now? The hon. Member for Edmonton Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. All right. I had to fight to get into debate on this one. I guess that's appropriate.

An interesting bill. Thank you for the opportunity to speak in second reading to Bill 42, the Gaming and Liquor Amendment Act, 2009. This is sort of a clean-out-the-fridge bill in a sort of funny way, but maybe there hasn't been an amending act to the Gaming and Liquor Act for some time. We're covering a lot of bases here, so when you want me to speak to the principle of this bill, there's a lot that's being covered.

We start out by amending some sections on the composition of the board. The most salient point of this seems to be that it's removing the deputy minister of the department of gaming – of course, it doesn't exist anymore, so the deputy minister, I guess, who would be responsible for gaming, which would now reside under the Solicitor General – from holding a position on the commission, which they had traditionally.

Then we move into some other administrative details around the chief executive officers not being eligible to vote or to be the chair, which seems to also be a change here. How long members of the board can serve: there's a maximum amount that's being instituted there. The exercise of powers and duties: some certain things can only be done by the chief executive officer. There's a fines section, the power to establish fines. Actually, when you read through to the end of the act, there's a fairly in-depth section that turns up under 91(2.1). It does show up at the end there. And fines imposed by the chief executive officer, under this bill's section 18, in the original bill amending section 93.1. So a number of administrative details about how the commission actually works, and I think they're actually changing the name of the commission to something else.

Then we get to the good stuff. This is a bit of a trip down memory lane because some of us will remember – I'm pretty sure this is what this is about – that there was a plebiscite held in the province around VLTs and that there were a few, a handful, who voted to remove VLTs.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Rocky Mountain House.

Ms Blakeman: Very good. Ten points.

There was almost an instant legal battle that came back from the venue facility owners who had VLTs in their place. I think what we've got here is the end of that era. For any of you who are interested in Alberta history, you should make note of this. Essentially, it's under section 12, which is amending section 48 of the original bill.

All agreements between the Commission and retailers respecting video lottery terminals existing immediately prior to May 19, 1999 and any rights of those retailers . . . are hereby terminated and cancelled in the following municipalities.

In the county of Lethbridge, Lacombe, the MD of Opportunity No. 17, Wood Buffalo, Canmore, Coaldale, and Stony Plain. So that's the end of that agreement with those retailers. Isn't that interesting.

That was such a moment in Alberta history, you know. It was interesting that those communities that did in fact vote to have the VLTs taken out I don't think actually ever did get them taken out. The retailers went to court, and the province agreed that they would leave the VLTs operational while the court battle was on. I don't even know what the end of the court battle was by the end of it all, but it went on so dang long that I think everybody got their money out. The only people that didn't get what they wanted were the individuals that had voted to have the VLTs removed from their communities. So you see what I mean about a clean-out-the-fridge act. There's all kinds of stuff in here.

Then it goes into conditions of liquor licences. It repeals a whole section on liquor agencies authorizing people to act as their representative, et cetera.

4:10

The new section, the good stuff in this bill, if you want to put it that way, starts at section 15, and it is being added under the original bill's section 69: "Risks to public order and safety in licensed premises – gangs." Somewhere underneath me I hope there is playing appropriate theme music along the lines of Jaws or something.

An Hon. Member: I can't hear it.

Ms Blakeman: Hum a little louder. There we go.

It does start out, as my colleague has mentioned, by defining "gang." I think he's right. He raises some reasonable questions. You know, I like fast sports cars, expensive sports cars. [interjection] Well, this pertains because I used to have a black Honda Prelude, the really sexy looking one, and I had incredibly expensive tires and rims on this car.

Mr. MacDonald: What kind of sound system did it have?

Ms Blakeman: It had the sound system. It had everything. I bought it from a young man. Oh, my God, it was a beautiful car, a really beautiful sports car: black and I used to keep it polished up. It just shone like a licorice jelly bean.

Anyway, at that time we were doing a lot of work in one of my communities, and I ended up going to regular meetings with the local beat cops, who used to tease me so much because I would drive up in what they would call the drug dealer car. At that time this was the car that all the drug dealers loved to have. A sad ending to this story; I'll just skip ahead a little bit. One of the first drive-by gang shootings that happened in Edmonton happened not that far from my home in the river valley. And guess what? It was a young man driving that car.

Dr. Taft: Not your actual car?

Ms Blakeman: No, not my actual car – sorry – but exactly the same model and colour and tinted windows and the fancy . . .

Mr. Hehr: Fuzzy dice?

Ms Blakeman: Oh, please, let's get serious. There were no fancy dice. Geez. I'm sorry, Mr. Speaker, but sometimes you've just got to put your foot down.

The point of this is that, you know, I was getting teased by the police officers because I was driving – I had the paraphernalia, if you would like, of what at the time was a very common gang and drug dealer possession. There I was driving the quintessential drug dealer car although I was not a drug dealer and, in fact, was an MLA. But, you know, they all had such a good time with this, when I would drive up to these meetings, about how we were going to combat crime in one of my communities.

So you've got to be careful when you make a definition that is overly broad about how you are going to delegate subjective authority to people on the street, that are going to use that as criteria to decide whether somebody is a gang member or not. Now, I don't think a police officer would have mistaken me for a gang member, but, you know, as I say . . .

Dr. Taft: You'd be a gang leader.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. My colleagues are also teasing me about this.

There's the point. You know, if you want to look at a real close definition of what is being considered here, they start to talk about "use of names, signs, symbols or other representations used by a gang." You have to be very careful when you write legislation that is going to set the criteria that someone on the street, perhaps in the heat of the moment, uses to determine whether somebody might be a gang member or associated with a gang member. That's where the language here gets very interesting. It's one thing to say that you're a gang member and we know you to be a gang member. But to start using language like "in the company of a person" that's a member of a gang or "supports, facilitates, or participates in the gang's activities," that's casting the net a bit wider here, so I think we have to be very careful with this.

My colleague from Calgary-Buffalo had a bit of fun but also some seriousness around, you know, a gang being a group of people engaged in a pattern of unlawful behaviour or in creating an atmosphere of fear or intimidation in the community, talking about various kinds of sporting teams out overimbibing in the community. But I think his point is well made.

We need to be careful about this. Where my hair starts to stand on end is section 16. This is around the collection of personal information by licensees, people that are granted a liquor licence through the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission to operate a facility that sells liquor. This is a big deal. I mean, you're not going to be successful having a restaurant or a bar or a, you know, cool spot to hang out unless you've got a liquor licence, and you are at the whim of the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission as to whether you get that licence. So putting criteria in place here that create either an expectation or a responsibility is significant.

I have done a fair amount of work around the issue of personal information, personal health information, the collection, use, disclosure of health information. What is in section 16 is not going to cut it in my books. What it's allowing is that the licensee – let's call him a bar owner; just allow me that – may, before allowing a person to enter those premises, collect the person's name, age, and photograph. Now, what it does not talk about is a number of things that it must talk about in order to pass muster with this girl and I think with all of us in this Assembly.

Just let me take a slight little tangent here and go: well, I mean, the common argument is that you're knowingly giving over an informed and a blanket consent when you choose to go into this bar. You know, if you don't want to give over that information, go to a different bar. Well, that may not be possible in smaller communities. That may place quite a burden on somebody if they're out with a particular group of people and they don't want to get separated from them. You know, they don't know this city or they don't know that area; they don't want to be separated from that group of people, so now they're going into the bar not entirely willingly and having to give over personal information.

Here's some of the information that needs to be nailed in this legislation before we approve of that. In what manner is that information going to be kept that they have now collected: a person's name, age, and photograph? How long is that information to be kept for? What is the time span? In what manner is it going to be kept? Is it electronic? Is it on a shared database that people could e-mail to other people? Well, they do anticipate that one bar owner can contact another bar owner and share the information. That becomes problematic.

What is the audit trail? How do we tell who looked at this person's personal information? We need to know that. But there's no mention of an audit trail in this section.

Who can they disclose to? It talks about that they can give it to another bar, another licensee, but is there a limit on who they can disclose this information to? Can they sell it? Can they use it for marketing or commercial purposes? No mention of that in here.

Have they got, actually, some kind of written consent, or are they taking the fact that someone has given them the information and entered the premises as some sort of blanket consent? That will not stand up as informed consent. Again, I have a real issue with this.

How will this information be disposed of? You know, is it in paper form? Are we going to put it in a box and leave it in the Dumpster so that we've got people's name, age, and photograph out there? Hello. Identity theft. And this is the government that's participating in this.

So this section absolutely is unacceptable.

There are a number of other things in this bill that I'm sure could be argued and I may even well agree are perfectly acceptable and needed. But what is anticipated here is flat-out dead wrong. You cannot take people's personal information in this day and age and not account for it in a fairly thorough way. We have an entire office of the Privacy Commissioner that's all about that. We have a hugely detailed Health Information Act. And then we're going to have the Gaming and Liquor Act just let bar owners take personal information with no other criteria that they need to adhere to? In my opinion, that's criminal, and I won't support it.

Thank you.

4:20

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, we have five minutes for comments or questions.

Seeing none, then the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, on the bill.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Bill 42 is interesting. I enjoyed the remarks from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, and I certainly would agree with her. Her selection of cars, I'm not going to comment on that, but it must have been a very good car, and it wasn't a Pontiac.

Now, Bill 42 seeks to allow bars, again, to collect personal information on patrons as a condition of entry in order to identify troublemakers and to prevent gang activity. This amendment to the provincial Gaming and Liquor Act would also permit bars and nightclubs the authority to share information about problem patrons with each other. Finally, as I understand it, the intended amendments pose serious constitutional issues and raise numerous Charter breaches that have already been found to run afoul of privacy laws.

I know how some members across the way view the Charter, but this bill is a trend that I see in this spring legislative session from the government. They're exercising considerable authority here, whether it's Bill 19, whether it's Bill 36, whether it's Bill 42. Bill 44: there are some issues, of course, around that. But I don't understand why it would be necessary. I can understand where businesses are coming from, but I don't understand why it is so necessary to have this legislation.

The Alberta Roundtable on Violence in and around Licensed Premises was a round-table that was sponsored by Alberta Gaming in partnership with the Alberta Solicitor General and public safety three years ago. Three years ago there was a report that came out, and one of the individuals who participated as a round-table participant stated regarding admission practices: "You can pick and choose your customers. If you've had an issue with a patron, or think you'll have an issue, don't let them in." That is sort of the free-market approach to this, yet we have the issue here of allowing bars to collect personal information on clients or customers or patrons, whatever you want to call them, as a condition of entry in order to identify troublemakers and to prevent gang activity.

Now, gang activity. The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo gave us quite an outline of what may or may not constitute gang activity, and I would agree with him. It's wide open to interpretation. Any staff, any bouncing staff in any establishment could consider any group to be members of a gang or associated with a gang.

I know information has been collected in the past, and this has been done by bars and nightclubs before without any legislation to enforce the collection of personal identification. I think that if any individual in this province wants to go to a bar or a nightclub and they have a few dollars in their pocket and they want to have a social drink with friends and they're of legal age, of course, then that should be it. But I know we have a lot of issues around certain neighbourhoods with a high percentage of bars and nightclubs in them. We have to recognize that in some situations, in some instances, it's certainly a problem.

Now, there used to be a website – and I apologize, Mr. Speaker; I can't find it, whatever it's called. I'm going to look that up in Hansard. Anyway, it could be in Solicitor General and Public Security, under the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission, or it could be in Community Spirit. However, this website used to provide details on violations of the Gaming and Liquor Act. It would be interesting to have a look at that now. I have tried, along with the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, to find that website, and I cannot. Three or four years ago it was routine. I could find it.

What kind of violations would be on this website? Well, Mr. Speaker, there would be violations posted for overserving of clients or patrons or if there was a fire code violation. For instance, if Joe or Jane's bar had a licence for 250 people and the inspectors came along and counted 325 in there, well, it was a major issue. That would be posted. Overserving, serving underage individuals, serving beyond hours: there were any number of issues that one could identify from that website.

Dr. Taft: Any involving exotic dancers?

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, there was, hon. member. There certainly was. Now, maybe my research skills aren't what they should be, but I'm of the opinion that this website has either been removed or it's been hidden. We've had some good looks, and we've spent some time trying to find this, but we cannot. If that website was available, we could see if there were any patterns, if there were any bars in certain neighbourhoods or nightclubs where there were repeat offences. Then maybe those owners could be made to clean up their act, so to speak. This portion of the Gaming and Liquor Amendment Act would be unnecessary.

Now, when we talk about gang activity, I can see, you know, the sincerity and the effort here to control, limit, or restrict gangs and their activities. But I think we would be better off, Mr. Speaker, if we were to look at the Gaming and Liquor Amendment Act in another way or if we were to look at the Solicitor General and Public Security department in another way.

It puzzles me why I hear so often from people throughout the province about our gambling industry and our casinos and the use of those casinos by organized criminals to launder their money. There have been many ways suggested to me, which I have outlined in the past in this Assembly, as to how we could control the laundering through casinos of large sums of money that has been raised or collected or acquired through criminal activities by gangs. I think that if we really want to put an effort to controlling gang activity in this province, that's one of the places I would like to start.

I'd like to get tough on gangs by controlling where they launder their money that they have acquired from their activities. There are a number of ways of doing that. I would be quite willing to discuss this with the hon. minister or with the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere if they would like because I think this would be in the best interests of the province. I think we could reduce the activity or the activities of various gangs throughout the province.

4:30

Mr. Hehr: Hit them in the pocketbook.

Mr. MacDonald: Hit them in the pocketbook. Exactly. I think we should hit them in the pocketbook.

As the number of casinos has expanded across this province, the number of hours of operation have expanded. It's easier and easier for those criminals to launder their money through our casinos, and I want to see this government put a stop to it. If they won't, maybe the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo will come forward with sensible legislation to restrict and limit their activities.

Mr. Hehr: Or at least suggest it to the Solicitor General.

Mr. MacDonald: Or work with the Solicitor General to get that done.

Now, when we talk about the bars and the nightclubs around the province, whether they're in rural or urban areas, there are a number of interesting things that occur. I drive too fast on occasion, but on occasion I also drive responsible young adults who are going out for a night on the town to their selected location, which is a bar or a nightclub.

I don't know how many other hon. members are driving around late at night, but it's astonishing to see, particularly in the constituency of Edmonton-Strathcona – and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona may have noticed this herself. It will be very, very cold, it could be windy, it could be snowing, but you will see dozens of young people, all of legal age, of course, lined up at the bars on Whyte Avenue or over here in Edmonton-Centre at Jasper and 109th Street.

They're lined up to eventually get into the establishments, and they've got a T-shirt on or they've got a light coat on. I could never understand why they didn't have heavy coats or a winter coat on. I couldn't understand this, so I asked a group of them one evening: what's with this? They looked at me like: wow, where's this guy from? They save money by not having to check their coats. I had no idea that some outfits charge $5 and $10 for a patron to check their coat. These people want a little bit more money to party, so their idea is not to wear a coat. Well, I think it's wrong.

When I refer to the round-table that occurred three years ago, that was one of the issues that was discussed. I'm quoting here again, Mr. Speaker:

Participants faced a number of challenges in implementing these admission practices. Most importantly, the efficient screening of patrons requires sufficient staff numbers to prevent lineups, congestion and the violence that can result. Extra personnel are needed to staff coat checks.

I think it's a means of revenue generation myself.

Conflict can arise if patrons don't want to check their coats, and insurance costs can go up if coats are lost.

Now, when we see the results in the front of the establishment of a group of people between, say, 18 and 30 years old standing there shivering for up to an hour before they get into the place because they want to have that extra $10 to maybe buy a shooter or two, we've got issues. We've got issues how we govern our nightclubs and our bars.

Now, we have to have a look at what the Solicitor General and Public Security in their round-table had to say about pricing and serving practices because I think this is important to this debate and particularly to this bill.

- eliminating the use of glassware and glass beverage containers
- limiting or prohibiting drink specials.

We hear that all the time on the south side, particularly in the Whyte Avenue area, where there's a large concentration of bars in a very compact neighbourhood .

- limiting the duration of happy hours
- limiting hours of service
- monitoring patrons' liquor consumption and refusing service to patrons who are intoxicated
 - Licensees have the right and the responsibility to refuse service.
- promoting food service.

[Mr. MacDonald's speaking time expired] Oh, I'm disappointed. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, we have five minutes for comments or questions?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona on the bill.

Ms Notley: Thank you. I'm pleased to be able to join debate on Bill 42. This is, you know, one of those bills that's difficult to get your head around because, of course, it starts out by appealing to concerns that are pretty universal amongst a lot of people with respect to concerns around their security and their safety in their community and their neighbourhood. There's no question that we've heard a lot in the last period of time about violence in bars and gang problems and all those kinds of things, so bringing forward an act like this certainly does make it appear, at least on the surface, that, oh, we're being tough on crime and that we're taking actions to stop crime.

I'm not necessarily saying that that's not the case, but it's one of those things that is certainly much more complex than just saying: oh, we're giving police more power to enforce antigang activity in bars. Really, what it comes down to is engaging in a much more sophisticated analysis around what the barriers are in terms of enforcement in the bars and particularly in those bars where gang activity is a serious problem. You know, it's not just a question of all these gang members sneaking into these bars and that nobody can do anything about it. There are also issues about sort of the will to enforce in a lot of different cases, and it varies from bar to bar.

It's interesting. Just to follow up briefly on the comments that the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar was making as his time to speak elapsed, he talked about the stakeholder consultations and the various strategies that were being considered to deal with the amount of violence that occurs where there are too many bars or too many people in bars. There's a tremendously complex dynamic there around how you maintain public safety, how you balance people's desire to have bars to go to and the right of bar owners to open bars in places. How do you balance that right against community safety and against community standards and against the safety of the people that are in the bars?

Frankly, there are, as far as I know, much simpler issues that need to be addressed in terms of enforcement within those bars before we get to the point of, you know, ramping it up and coming up with the very sort of high-profile antigang legislation, simple things like insisting that the occupancy numbers are regularly enforced, just simple, simple things like that which don't happen because they're not enforced.

I certainly know this from my own riding, where we do have a very high concentration of bars along Whyte Avenue. There have at times been some real difficulties with respect to certain bar owners that were not prepared to enforce occupancy regulations and were not prepared to enforce drink limits and were doing the cheap drinks and all that kind of stuff. I'm not saying that all bar owners are like that, not by any means. There are other bar owners in the community who are very respectful of community needs, who are engaged in discussion and dialogue with the community as a whole and who are, you know, good corporate citizens. It's not a global thing, but there's no question that there are a lot of issues, and in some of these bars that are problem bars, there are a lot of other things that need to be addressed.

Having said that, though, I'm sort of in the process of trying to quickly engage in a more one-on-one type of consultation with constituents on this issue, but it is difficult given the pace with which we are addressing all these issues in the House, you know, and the fact that we are in night sittings and early morning sittings and day sittings and everything else and apparently some attempt to have this moved through two different readings just today.

Having said that, this legislation certainly does appear to do that which is occurring in a number of pieces of legislation that this government has brought forward, and that is that it's moving to push the legal envelope, as it were. It seems as though, you know, there's a whole second employment strategy, a quiet one, in this government, which is to employ all those out-of-work lawyers, although I wasn't sure that there were a lot of them, to defend this government with respect to the numerous pieces of legislation they bring forward that have constitutional implications. I think there is some concern that this piece of legislation is one of those pieces of legislation that's going to run afoul of constitutional requirements.

Without getting into a position where we are saying that the bill is unredeemable, I do think it's important to talk about some of the concerns that we have at this point with the bill and that have been raised in different settings. We have of course heard from different legal groups that raised concerns. They outline that which I've already mentioned: the likelihood of this bill standing up to legal scrutiny were it challenged in the courts; the question of whether or not the authority being given to bar owners is even really necessary given their common law rights to control access and egress to their establishments and whether or not what we're really just doing is opening the door for them to collect whole bunches of personal information that ultimately isn't necessary; and then, again, the whole additional authority being given to police officers. Maybe this is necessary; maybe it's not.

I certainly would like a great deal more detailed information about where law enforcement authorities think the problems are in the system vis-à-vis cracking down on these problems. We're at this point on the verge of giving police officers the ability to remove people from licensed premises with a very, very broad amount of authority. As has already been mentioned, for instance, a police officer can remove somebody if they believe that they're associated with a gang. They don't have to reasonably believe. They don't have to have evidence upon which they believe it. It can be on a second-hand basis. It doesn't need to be reasonable belief; it just needs to be a belief of the police officer.

Then the whole question is: are they associated with a gang? That can as has already been pointed out involve someone who, you know, has never engaged in any criminal activity and isn't in any way knowingly associated with any kind of criminal activity, whether it's gang activity or otherwise, being removed from premises by a police officer in breach of sort of their fundamental rights under the Charter. That's a concern because it's a very wide net that this legislation is casting, and I'm not entirely sure that it's defensible or sustainable in accordance with other laws of our country.

From the bill, as I said, the police officer doesn't need to rely on personal knowledge in concluding that a person is associated with a gang but can rely on information from others, including information about association, the use of names, signs, symbols, other representations used by a gang, all that kind of stuff. You know, I'm certainly not anywhere nearly knowledgeable enough about what is or what is not gang symbolism and gang dress and gang behaviour, but I do think that there's been a certain popularization of it somewhat in the media, and I think it's not at all surprising that you would see evidence of that in some cases without it actually being backed up by any kind of criminal activity. As well, the courts have previously said that considering someone to be associated with a gang just because they were present when unlawful behaviour took place is contrary to previous legal decisions. So that is a concern.

We've also raised concerns about the issue of allowing bar owners to collect personal information from people before they enter the licensed premises. I know we've heard that the Privacy Commissioner has very reluctantly given I wouldn't say endorsement to this legislation. I think he has very reluctantly removed his objection, but even in so doing, I believe there are still cautionary notes with respect to what he says. Although he gave guarded support to the bill, comments in his news release say that he's not convinced that kicking these people out of bars will make the bars any safer. It's not clear that these measures are actually going to make these bars safer, and there is even less justification for allowing police officers and bar owners to judge patrons on very little evidence.

In a Calgary Herald article he was also quoted as saying that he's worried that people may be put on a collective bar blacklist for reasons that don't merit that kind of sanction. He says that something that gets a person kicked out of a bar one night does not necessarily merit that person being forbidden from entering numerous bars on a permanent basis. These are good points, and I think, again, we need to be careful that we're not, you know, swatting a fly with a sledgehammer.

Now, we had previously the case where the Privacy Commissioner had ruled that bars had to stop scanning people's drivers' licences. However, we are still in a position where we're relying on regulations under the act to define how the bar owners need to collect, use, and disclose this information. So we don't actually have clear protection yet in this bill. All we have are regulations that will outline the fact that we may get clear protection. That's a concern.

Another problem with the bill stems from the criteria that allow a licensee to share a patron's personal information with other licensees. The bill says:

If a licensee has personal knowledge or reasonably believes . . .

At least there we have the reasonable standard injected. Not with the police officers, but we do there.

. . . that a person . . . has, at any time within the preceding year, engaged in an activity referred to [in various sections], the licensee may . . . disclose the person's name, age and photograph to other licensees for the purpose of allowing them to determine whether they wish to allow the person to enter licensed premises.

Now, the question then becomes: how do we monitor that bar owners are using this information for the purpose established? How do we monitor that that information is not being used for secondary purposes? Who out there is going to be hired to engage in these monitoring activities? Of course, when you give people the authority to collect personally identifying information, you then have to exercise the restraint which comes with that privilege of holding that information. Yet it doesn't appear to me that there are any plans afoot to monitor, regulate, or enforce how that information is used. So that is somewhat concerning to us.

Ultimately, the definition of a problem patron can be quite broad. We've heard from the Civil Liberties Association, for instance, that the definition is also very difficult because the way it's drafted, it can be applied very differently by different bar owners in different settings depending on the context. The actual trigger point where your information starts getting passed around to an undisclosed number of other bars is not even easily identified or easily measured. In one bar the trigger point could be down here, and in another bar the trigger point could be up here. You just have no idea.

Maybe just because you happen to walk in the door with somebody wearing gang insignia who happened to start a conversation with you on the way into the bar, so you're chatting with them without having any knowledge that they are or are not involved with a gang, you know – who knows? – suddenly your name is on a list, and it's being shot around to an undisclosed number of bars for, yes, the purpose of ensuring that you don't come in. But, again, we don't even know whether that's the purpose that will ultimately be used for.

We will, ultimately, I suppose, if you complain, if you subsequently discover that people seem to be approaching you with information about you that you can't imagine how they would otherwise have gotten. But, I mean, it puts the onus on the person to investigate and try to figure out why their information is out there in that manner.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, we have five minutes for comments or questions. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much. To the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. You were talking about the collection of information in the bars and nightclubs, and you were concerned about the secondary purposes that perhaps could be used for as that information was collected. I certainly agree with you. I don't think it's necessary that we collect that information. Do you have other concerns about how that information may be used?

For instance – and I'm not saying that this would happen, but I would use this as an example – a number of bouncers in a particular establishment may be very interested in the personal information of young members of the opposite sex, and they could use that information to perhaps ask for a date. There's a lot of information being provided here, and there is no control of it. Do you have other concerns?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you. I mean, the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar makes a very good point, that there are a variety of secondary uses to which that information could be put. Again, as we know, the member himself outlined some of the discussions that occurred in the stakeholder consultation on the operations of bars, and in that consultation it was very clear that enforcement on a variety of issues was complex and difficult to manage. Now within that environment, where we've identified that enforcement – we have staff turnover. You know, it's a very dynamic, shall we say, industry. Into that environment, where alcohol is sold, by the way, so, you know, people aren't always operating in the most wise fashion, we are giving up access to personal information and then hoping that someone is going to be able to monitor and track how that's used in a professional way.

The Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar makes a really good point. There's no question; you may well find that in that particular setting patrons could find themselves being contacted for reasons completely separate from any genuine concern about their criminal activity and more in relation to, you know, the efforts of some people to contact other people because they're interested, whether they be of the same sex or opposite sex. It really doesn't matter.

Yeah. I mean, it all comes down to the fact that there's a lot of information being taken. The rules under which the right to take that information is triggered are very unclear and inconsistent from bar to bar, and the monitoring of the information, based on the ability to monitor within that industry on other standards, makes me very worried that we are not really set up to monitor and protect that information in a way we should. As I've said before, we don't even have the rules for how that will be done clearly laid out in this legislation. Of course, it's all being left to regulation, where we all have to sort of cross our fingers, close our eyes, and hope it all works out okay.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, within the five minutes?

Mr. Hehr: No. I'm all right.

The Deputy Speaker: Does any other hon. member wish to speak? Hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, you already spoke.

Mr. Hehr: Then I'm done.

The Deputy Speaker: Yes.

Hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, do you wish to close the debate?

Mr. Anderson: Yes, I do, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to take a couple of minutes to thank the Assembly and my colleagues for debating this bill. I think it's a very important bill to debate. There was some very good debate and some very thoughtful comments on both sides.

It is a very sensitive issue whenever you're dealing with people's personal information. You know, we have a Privacy Commissioner. We've taken the step to give this legislation to the Privacy Commissioner, and the Privacy Commissioner has made a ruling on it and has said that it does uphold our standards of privacy in this province. Although it's nice to maybe opine on how the Privacy Commissioner came to that conclusion or whether he wanted to make that conclusion, he did make that conclusion, so I believe that this legislation does respect the rights of privacy.

The Member for Calgary-Buffalo raised some concerns about this legislation allowing police to essentially grab people out of bars and question them, you know, for no apparent reason. This legislation gives police no such power. This is not criminal legislation. This is legislation where if police have a good-faith belief that a person is a member of a gang because they have a gang tattoo or they are conversing with a member of a gang for a long period of time, if they are wearing body armour in the presence of a gang member, et cetera, they can take that information into account and can ask that person to leave the premises. This does not mean that they can make an arrest. This does not mean that they can take the person in for questioning. That's not what this legislation does. I think it's important to realize that.

If we read the legislation, it says that a police officer, as the hon. member pointed out, need not rely on personal knowledge in concluding that a person is associated with a gang but may rely on information from others, including . . .

Then it goes through it.

- (a) information regarding
 - (i) any admission of association with a gang,
 - (ii) use of names, signs, symbols or other representations used by a gang,
 - (iii) a person's presence at the scene of unlawful behaviour by a gang, regardless of whether the person participated in the unlawful behaviour,
 - (iv) receipt of benefits from a gang, and
 - (v) frequent association with persons associated with a gang.

There are reasons laid out here. I believe that these are good enough reasons, not to make an arrest, but that's not what we're talking about here. We're not talking about arresting anyone. We're talking about public safety in licensed establishments, where we have had shootings and stabbings and other terrible incidents occur. This simply gives licensed establishments and police the opportunity to make sure that these places are safe places for the average Albertan to go out and have a drink with their friends and go dancing with their date and all that sort of thing. I think that's important. We should be able to do that without getting stabbed. [interjections] I'm going home right after the session, so I'm getting excited.

I also wanted to remind the hon. member that this is a private establishment. A licensed establishment is a private establishment. You have a right to know who is in your establishment, and unless it is on a list of enumerated grounds in the human rights legislation, you have a right to deny them access to your establishment for a variety of reasons. This is not a public place. It's not a park, where you can go at will. This is someone's business. If you come in there and you're a known gang member and you have a well-known gang tattoo and you're wearing body armour in order to intimidate or to do whatever, you have the right as a bar owner to deny access. That's what we have to keep in perspective here.

I think that this is a good example of a community solution to a community problem. We can't just rely on front-line officers to do all the policing, to be all the eyes and ears on the ground when we're talking about violence and gang violence, et cetera. We need to empower businesses and people to participate in the solution, and that's what this legislation does. It does something about a problem that we have, and I would urge all members of this Assembly to support the legislation.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 42 read a second time]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Cao in the chair]

The Chair: I would like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 29 Family Law Amendment Act, 2009

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. It's my pleasure to rise today during Committee of the Whole and speak in favour of Bill 29, the Family Law Amendment Act, 2009. I'm encouraged by the opposition's support of this important legislation, which deals with improvement and necessary change to the province's child support recalculation program, which is targeted to open by the end of this year. It's essential that this amendment be made to the legislation for separated and divorced parents and children of their relationships.

Mr. Chairman, there were no specific issues brought up during the second reading debate. However, I'd like to reiterate some key points of this proposed amendment and why I would submit to you and through you to all members of this Assembly that this has to be passed. This legislation will improve access to justice by enabling the child support recalculation program to provide a simple, low-cost way for parents to keep their child support orders current.

In the discussion we currently heard that this amendment provides appropriate incentive for parents to disclose their income to the child support recalculation program, ensuring that the results of the recalculations are therefore fair. The recalculation program will help ensure that children receive the best support their parents can offer as their financial circumstances change from year to year. Mr. Chair, it will also help child support payers whose incomes have gone down by reducing the amount of child support that they have to pay, a principle again of fairness. It will also help children and support recipients by increasing the child support they receive if the payer's income has gone up. In either case it will help parents meet the obligations they have in law to ensure their child support orders are adjusted to match their incomes accordingly.

I must also add, Mr. Chair, a bit of a human side. Over this weekend I was out with some friends of mine on Saturday night – for those of you who think I'm a stiff, we were watching UFC – and I ran into a young woman who had just had a baby. She was asking me what happens and what her rights are if the father doesn't pay child support. This is exactly what this is about.

If these rights are not available and made clear and simple to an average individual, what often can happen is that these people can fall on the government assistance rolls, which, of course, are paid for by taxpayers. Conversely, if we have a good system like this is going to put on for average, everyday people, we will ensure that children receive the support they need from the people that are required to pay it.

Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the opportunity to once again emphasize the importance of this legislation, which I'm pleased to see members of this Assembly recognize, and I would encourage all hon. members to support this bill through Committee of the Whole.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo on Bill 29.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chair, for giving me the opportunity to speak at the Committee of the Whole stage of this debate. I believe I already provided some comments on this in second reading and again shall do so today.

I would like to commend the Member for Calgary-Egmont for bringing forward this bill. It's not only a well-intentioned bill, but it is, in fact, a very good bill. It allows for people who have been involved in each other's lives who have support obligations either through spousal maintenance or through child maintenance to utilize a system that will make it easier for them to obtain some justice.

What primarily this bill provides is that if a party fails to provide an income tax return, notice of assessment, in short a questionnaire, child support the next year will be recalculated as if that payer's income had gone up by 10 per cent. An additional 3 per cent would be added annually to capture since the order was granted or recalculated. The maximum deemed income increase would be 25 per cent and would be applied to orders where five or more years had passed since income was last determined.

This amendment encourages parents to comply with their obligation to provide income disclosure. It also ensures that one parent's failure to disclose their income as legally required does not mean that the other parent and children are denied services from the program. The five existing recalculation programs – in British Columbia, Manitoba, Prince Edward Island, Newfoundland, and Nunavut – currently recalculate orders granted after their programs were created. Alberta's program will help parties with child support orders dating back to May 1997, when the child support guidelines were first introduced. This increases access to justice even further as Albertans will not have to go back to the court to get new orders so they can participate in child support recalculation programs.

This program is expected to be operational later this year. In discussion with the department it appeared that other jurisdictions were canvassed and that these measures were included so that what was happening would be up and about as quickly as possible for Alberta citizens. The only thing that is not included in the amendment which possibly could be a part of this whole enterprise is the possibility of reclassification from outside this jurisdiction. It was related to me that due to retroactive calculation for maintenance enforcement payments in Alberta in addition to other conflict of laws issues made in this area for further expansion of the act, that can maybe come in at some other time.

What we're looking at here is a good bill. What happened previously when individuals were involved in a relationship and had children – when the federal guidelines were established in 1997, what would happen is that when individuals would finalize their arrangements, separate, and go before a magistrate or even work things out on their own and come up with an order for payment that was due and owing under the guidelines, which is guided by either one or both of the spouse's income, then payments were made thereafter. That's how the system worked.

However, what would happen is that this would go along for a year or so, and either one spouse or the other spouse would inevitably make more money. That tends to be the progression, especially during that time period in Alberta. You have individuals who maybe in 1997 were making, say, $50,000 – that's a decent sum – and they had two kids. If you go to the child support payment guidelines, they would say that you owe X, Y, and Z to your two kids and your spouse. Well, if that's what he was making in 1997, you know, lo and behold, he or she was adventurous, went out and made some more money, and next thing you know, three years later, in the year 2000, that individual was making double that. That individual was making $100,000.

This individual, although well meaning and well intentioned, did not report this to his ex-partner, and he or she was not providing the extra income to go to their children, was merely saying: "I was making $50,000 three years ago, and the money I was paying under the maintenance enforcement program, well, that was good enough. We don't have to incorporate this extra $50,000 that I now make in addition to what I was making three years ago." You know, that individual, for whatever reason believed that his or her family had enough with his payments in 1997.

But that's not how the court system works, Mr. Chair. The court system demands that the rules be followed. So, you know, when one spouse had an inkling that the other spouse had increased his or her rate of pay to $100,000, well, that individual has a right to receive more benefits under the child support recalculation program or what other maintenance enforcement protections that are out there. Of course, the person who made $100,000 wouldn't necessarily want to just give up this money freely and willingly sometimes. The other partner, he or she, would have to go to a lawyer and say: "Mr. or Mrs. Lawyer, I believe my former partner is making significantly more money now, three years later, than he was when the initial order was granted for maintenance enforcement or payment under the child support act, and that individual is not willing to give me additional money. So what should I do?" And that lawyer would say: "Well, what you have to do is, first off, pay me a retainer. If you give me a retainer of, say, $10,000, I can help you." With that retainer of $10,000 that lawyer would get busy, draw up some papers, send a statement of claim or statement of review or a maintenance enforcement review, whatever the case would be, to his or her ex, and that individual who had received this letter would say: "Oh my goodness, it looks like I have to go to court some time to figure this out."

When that individual got his letter from his ex-partner, ex-wife or ex-husband, that individual would then go to a lawyer. Of course, he or she would sit down, and that lawyer would say: "Well, here's what we have to do. You can either agree right now that your salary is $100,000 and probably pay this, or we can go to what's called a hearing. I can represent you there, and we can battle it out in court and really decide how much you make." Well, oftentimes that was the option that was chosen, so $10,000, again, was the fee you had to give the lawyer to take the case. Lo and behold, these two individuals would end up at the courts some time later to discuss how much was due and owing under the new provisions. If we look at that, what was really only necessary was the record of employment and the income tax statement. That would have been filed with the courthouse, and then they could have made a decision from there.

Generally speaking, you know, this is a lot more sensible way for couples to do it. You know the old way of sometimes getting a lawyer and battling for every nickel and dime against a deadbeat dad or a deadbeat mom was not in anybody's best interest. In situations like this now you have this child support recalculation program that exists that allows people to use it and former families to use the program if necessary. If they are unsatisfied with it, they can then decide whether they want to get a lawyer and pursue it further. That is their choice. This, at least, allows some recognition that if one of the deadbeat dads or moms is not filing their income tax, they're at least going to get some increase in the payments due and owing. It just basically punishes wilful laziness or wilful deceit, whatever it is, of individuals who are trying to hide income from their former spouses.

Like I said at the beginning – I'll end with a similar sort of refrain – this is a good bill that recognizes technology, that sort of makes it easier for people to use the system, doesn't infringe on anyone's freedom of expression or freedom of association or anything like that. Bill 29, the Family Law Amendment Act, is simply a good bill that we will be supporting with all the voracity and tenacity and vigour that Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition can bring up.

Thank you for giving me the opportunity to speak, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Certainly, the amendments to the Family Law Act as proposed here in Bill 29: I know that parties in our constituency will be pleased with this. At least, I think that this amendment will encourage parents to comply with their obligation to provide income disclosure annually regarding maintenance enforcement issues. Now, when a party fails to provide an income tax return, notice of assessment, and a short questionnaire, child support the next year, as I understand it, will be recalculated as if that payer's income increased by 10 per cent. An additional 3 per cent would be added for each additional year since the order was granted or recalculated. The maximum deemed increased would be 25 per cent and would be applied to orders where five or more years have passed since income was last determined.

I'm not going to go into the details of this case, but I was just reading a file of a constituent. On Monday I got the information that was provided to me. We're trying to help this individual out. This individual has three children. Thousands and thousands of dollars in arrears are owed to this individual. This individual is just scraping by with the three children, and the spouse is delinquent, not interested in helping out in any way. I think we've got to get very, very tough and diligent on these individuals who are refusing to, essentially, support their own children.

Mr. Hehr: It reminds me of that Kenny Rogers song.

Mr. MacDonald: I'm not familiar with that Kenny Rogers song.

Mr. Hehr: It's a fine time to leave me, Lucille.

Mr. MacDonald: It's a fine time to leave me, Lucille. Okay.

Mr. Hehr: "Four hungry children and a crop in the field."

Mr. MacDonald: "Four hungry children and a crop in the field." Well, in this case there are three hungry children and no crop in the field.

Mr. Hehr: That's what I'm talking about.

Mr. MacDonald: You're absolutely right, hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

However, when we look at some of the steps that have been made, Mr. Chairman, regarding maintenance enforcement issues – and I think it goes back to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud's time as Justice minister – there was significant improvement made to the process. Now, some people may disagree. There may be some individuals who have been delinquent who would strongly disagree with my statement, but something had to be done, and I certainly support the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud, who initiated some of the changes.

The new legislation states, as I said earlier, that if a party fails to provide an income tax return, notice of assessment, and short questionnaire, child support the next year will be recalculated as if that payer's income had gone up by 10 per cent, et cetera. Now, I think this amendment will encourage, Mr. Chairman, parents to comply with their obligation to provide income disclosure. It also ensures that one parent's failure to disclose their income as legally required does not mean that the other parent and, most importantly, the children are denied services from the program.

There are five existing recalculation programs: in British Columbia, Manitoba, Prince Edward Island, Newfoundland, and Nunavut. They currently recalculate orders granted after their programs were created. Alberta's program will help parties with child support orders dating back to May 1997. I can't remember the specific file I quoted earlier, if it goes back that far or not, but it went back quite a few years. Now, this amendment, as I understand it, will also increase access to justice even further as Alberta citizens will not have to go back to court to get new orders so that they can participate in the child support recalculation program. The program, as I understand it – and the hon. member, I believe, talked about it – is to be fully operational by the end of the year.

Mr. Hehr: That's what they say.

Mr. MacDonald: That's what they're telling you. Okay.

Now, in discussion with the department it appeared that other jurisdictions were canvassed and that these measures are included to address what is perceived as a shortcoming of the other recalculation systems. The only thing that I understand has not been included within the amendment is the possibility of reclassification from outside the jurisdiction. If a mother or a dad moves to Saskatchewan or B.C., then what happens in cases like that?

Now, the child support recalculation program. Mr. Chairman, maintenance enforcement conducted a client survey of both the creditors and the debtors. The survey was intended to help maintenance enforcement better understand the needs of clients so that they can improve client service in collections, and I think we need to commend them for that. It's a very, very difficult issue. I know that at our constituency office these are very, very tough files. There's more than one side to each and every story, but you have to deal with it, and people have to support their families; there's no doubt about that. Whether the couple are living together or not, it's very important that the children are well looked after and well supported.

Now, if this amendment becomes law, which I certainly hope it does, we on this side of the House support this effort to ensure, among other things, the smooth operation of the courts and greater certainty for Alberta's maintenance enforcement clients. I think this is a very common-sense streamlining that has been a success in other provinces. As I mentioned, these are welcome initiatives, and the penalties included in the act to ensure the collection of family maintenance remain a priority. We could go through the child support recalculation service, but I don't think that is necessary.

Certainly, when Bill 29 was introduced, the amendment was to ensure that we try to keep defaulters in line, make the new program easier for child support payments to be acquired and distributed.

With those remarks, Mr. Chairman, I would like to conclude by indicating that through our constituency office in Edmonton-Gold Bar we routinely, unfortunately, have files where there are significant outstanding debts owed between parties. Hopefully, this will ensure, even if it's in a small way, that those obligations are always respected and those obligations are always met by either party involved in the family matter.

Thank you.

The Chair: Is any other hon. member wishing to speak on this bill? Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question.

[The clauses of Bill 29 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 30

Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2009

The Chair: Are there any comments, amendments relating to the bill?

Mr. Hehr: Just a comment. It was my understanding that that bill got pulled this afternoon.

An Hon. Member: Bill 31.

Mr. Hehr: Ah, yes. So this is traffic. Nice. I would like to comment briefly.

The Chair: We have Bill 30 now, Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2009. Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered relating to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo on Bill 30.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chair, for the opportunity to once again join in on the Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2009. I had the privilege of speaking on this just yesterday, and it was actually a good discussion.

Mr. MacDonald: You haven't been caught for speeding since?

Mr. Hehr: No. I have not been caught for speeding yet, but I'll tell you what: it was a relatively good discussion between all sides. All sides took part. The hon. minister in his always affable way took part in the debate. We actually bantered on some recommendations and some ideas not only in regard to this bill but possibly future amendments or future, I guess, safety measures that will come into play in our traffic safety.

5:30

There's no doubt that traffic safety is very important to Alberta people. In fact, I was just mentioning the other day that traffic accidents cost Alberta society $12 million a day. Twelve times 365. I don't have a computer here, but if someone could calculate that, that's a lot of millions of dollars. It might even be – is that a billion dollars? It may be. Anyway, a lot of money, a lot of time, a lot of productivity, a lot of pain, a lot of anguish, all caused by traffic accidents.

What any expert will tell you is that one of the primary causes of accidents is speed. People have said this for as long as I've been around: speed kills. If we can find ways to, I guess, limit speeding and encourage effective driving that not only protects drivers from themselves but, of course, protects other members of society from those drivers who tend to ignore the rules and regulations that we are to live by, well, then, so be it. We need to write legislation and laws and hire police officers and in certain instances put up red-light cameras, which we've chosen to do in this act. What this bill does is it allows us now to have a ticket sent out for both running a red light and speeding. I thought that was a good thing. If you're doing both, why not get a ticket for both?

We also had an interesting discussion yesterday, and it was led off by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. It was regarding the issuance of demerits for these types of things. The minister had a fairly good point on this issue. He said: why should we issue a demerit to someone who gets one of these photoradar tickets when it may not be them in the car? Yesterday I thought: "Now, that seems sane. That seems like a reasonable thing to do." For instance, even a minor speeding ticket, say if you're going 65 in a 50 zone through a red light, that's going to be at least two or three demerits. Can anyone help me with that? Let's assume two, three demerits. I'll tell you what. If that happens quite a few times, you can be out of your licence in a fairly quick way.

I went away thinking about that and sort of left that day agreeing with the minister and saying: how foolish was I to throw in with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar when I should be leery of that sometimes? I went away last night, and I thought about this for a second, and I came back. Now I understand the rationale behind the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. Sometimes I get caught up with the always affable minister's expressive behaviour. You know, I must have been so enraptured by his physical presence and oratory prowess that I threw in with him that quickly. But I went back and I saw this.

Now, here's why we might want to consider some demerit system when people get a traffic ticket. When a person would get a photoradar, maybe we issue one demerit, say if they're going 65 in a 50 zone or any time that car goes through the thing, however egregious the offence. Say you've lent your car to your 16-year-old son and he gets caught doing 140 in a 50 zone and, yeah, it's caught on photoradar. We issue that one demerit.

You know, we as car owners have to be somewhat responsible for whom we are lending our vehicles to. Oftentimes it's parents who lend their car to their child or grandparents to their grandson or a gentleman to their girlfriend, yada yada yada, whatever the deal may be. People are constantly lending cars in our society and possibly to some bad risks. This not only affects the people on the road, but I'd hazard a guess that when people are in other people's vehicles, they may not even be as cautious as they are in their own, and that could be a point.

I believe that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar is on to something, where we could find some way to incorporate a demerit system in here. This would not only slow people down. It would work on licensing, and people would get the point even more so than just paying a fine. There would be an actual punishment, if you rack up 10, 12, or 15 of these, where you lose your licence, and that would be fair. You would be in charge of your vehicle, and you would know who was driving it, and it would provide that extra mechanism of safety.

I'm not fully advocating for this yet, but it is an idea that really could be worked to in the future, that something could be managed to keep reducing our accident claims, reducing the costs on society, the costs to our health care system, our businesses, our whole thing like that. I think it's an idea worth exploring, and I'm actually glad for that discussion last night because it made me think about this issue further.

There's another sort of scenario I'd like to continue on. Although we didn't get a lot of thinking done last night because we were debating stuff till 4 in the morning, during the odd moment I was still thinking about this Bill 30, the Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2009. I thought, you know, more about the environmental situation in this province and how as a province, because of our oil and gas industry and because we wanted to grow and prosper and provide jobs for our people and provide our citizens with more wealth and because we have this here and because there is a recognition that this is going to be a CO₂ producing venture that we're undertaking, we should maybe look to being even more diligent with our speeding and maybe what we set our rates at on the highway.

For instance, right now they're at 110. If we move them down to 100, this would not only save lives. It would save a tonne of CO₂ going into the atmosphere. We could be leaders on that front. We'd say: "Yeah, yeah, yeah. We do provide extra CO₂ into the environment because of our oil industry, that we're providing for the world, but, hey, look at what we're doing. We're going to reduce our speeds to try and do our part." Put on top of that that we're putting in California air emissions controls on all our cars, so we're doing better on that. Also, then we're going to add tax incentives for people who buy cars that get over 55 kilometres a litre, all that sort of stuff that just this type of legislation can do. We can be leaders in other ways. Even though I see us growing our emissions through our continued oil sands production, growing our emissions maybe by doing, hopefully, more of our own upgrading of bitumen right here at home, we can reduce emissions in other ways. One of those ways where Alberta can be a leader is maybe on reducing speeds.

Those are my comments. I think it's a fairly good act, and I commend the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti for bringing it forward. Thank you very much.

The Chair: On Bill 30, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much. I, too, listened with interest. I appreciated the comments and the suggestions yesterday from the Minister of Transportation regarding photoradar and why, in his opinion, it would be unwise to issue demerits to change driving behaviour that way as well. I appreciated his input into the debate, but I'm certainly not convinced of that. I think there are ways of doing it. I don't know whose interests are being served here. It certainly could be the rental car industry. It's a big industry. They may have issues that we are unaware of regarding the behaviour of past customers with their vehicles.

Mr. Hehr: And gang members.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, I don't know if I'd go that far.

Certainly, the car rental industry is a big one. Many people may be unaware that in Dallas, Texas, there is a tax on each and every transaction from a car rental agency that is used to pay for a sports stadium. I was startled to find that out. It's megabucks at the Dallas-Fort Worth airport. This is one of the ways that the local government there has raised money to pay for a sports facility. Now, that's a little bit off subject here, and I'm aware of that Mr.

Chairman. Certainly, how the car rental industry would react to an initiative where the driver of a rental vehicle, he or she, who is caught either speeding through an intersection or failing to stop at a red light and the infraction is captured on a stationary camera above the intersection, how this would be policed or enforced, who would be responsible: these are interesting issues. I don't think it's the end of the issue.

As more and more photoradar tickets are given out, it surprises me that the insurance industry is not interested in that information. If the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo was jetting through amber lights as they turn red and had frequent tickets, his insurance carrier may be interested in that behaviour or that chronic pattern. We all know the lobby that the insurance industry has. It's puzzling why they do not want to know more about this because it's an indication of our driving habits.

I can assure the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod that I am worried now. I hope my insurance agent doesn't read yesterday's Hansard and jack up my rates.

Mr. Hehr: That's because we don't have public insurance.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, we could look at that.

In committee this afternoon, Mr. Chairman – and I don't think we discussed it fully yesterday. I have some concerns, actually, about the opening up of the definition of investigators and whether or not this will pave the way for the implementation of an Alberta provincial police force.

Now, I know we've had an exchange. We've had many exchanges in this House, various members, around this whole issue. But this goes back to what I said earlier this afternoon. This spring session there's a lot of draconian legislation, a lot of authoritarian legislation coming through here, whether it's Bill 36 from the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development, whether it's Bill 19 from the Minister of Infrastructure and how Bill 19 relates to Bill 46 from two years ago. There's a lot of legislation which I consider to be authoritarian.

I was reading with interest an open letter to former Premier Ralph Klein that appeared in the National Post on January 26, 2001. It's in the comments section. The byline has the current Prime Minister of Canada, the Rt. Hon. Stephen Harper; Tom Flanagan; a current member of this Assembly, the hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development, who at that time, in 2001, was a professor of political science and an Alberta Senator-elect; we have a couple of other individuals, and we have Ken Boessenkool, who the last time I had heard of him he had worked in Alberta Finance as a former policy adviser to Stockwell Day, who is Minister of International Trade in the federal government. Mr. Boessenkool – I was reading on the Internet the other night – is a potential candidate for the Progressive Conservative Party of Alberta in the by-election in Calgary-Glenmore. This is what I read on the Internet now.

Mr. Hehr: He might be being encouraged.

Mr. MacDonald: He might be being encouraged to run.

There are many issues in this so-called Alberta agenda letter that was presented to Ralph Klein publicly through the National Post, but the third item – and this goes back to our definition regarding investigators – and I'm going to read this, Mr. Chairman:

Start preparing now to let the contract with the RCMP run out in 2012 and create an Alberta Provincial Police Force. Alberta is a major province. Like the other major provinces of Ontario and Quebec, we should have our own provincial police force. We have no doubt that Alberta can run a more efficient and effective police force than Ottawa can – one that will not be misused as a laboratory for experiments in social engineering.

The one thing I would certainly agree with the hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development on here in that statement is that Alberta is a major province. It takes its place next to other major provinces like British Columbia, Ontario, and Quebec. I can't understand how the hon. member at that time as a professor of political science could ever link the RCMP to social engineering, but this is in this article that we have acquired through the archives.

Now, I know there are certain individuals in the province that want a provincial police force. I, for one, think the RCMP is doing a very, very good job. I know the Sustainable Resource Development minister wants to have a provincial police force, but I cannot agree with the hon. member. I think the Mounties do a very, very good job. There certainly are issues with the Mounties in other parts of the country, but I certainly cannot say there are any issues here.

I had the pleasure of going up to K Division not too long ago to ask them to inquire into a matter that I'm still working on, and that's the conduct of the election in Edmonton-Gold Bar. Unfortunately, they couldn't help me out. Maybe they can and will in the future, Mr. Chairman.

I have concern about this issue that some members opposite have with the RCMP, the Mounted Police. I still am asking, requesting that if there is information available, if there has been a cost-benefit analysis done to ensure that we will have improved service at reduced cost if we're to have our own police force, well, show us.

Ideology in some cases with this government has overruled economic common sense. One example of that, Mr. Chairman, would be electricity deregulation, where we're still footing the bills for that one.

I have a lot of concerns about the direction that we're going in. I'm puzzled, again, how Alberta could run a more efficient and effective police force than Ottawa can, than if it's under Ottawa's control. The RCMP certainly are independent. They're like the military. They're independent. They should be independent from political control. All police forces should be independent of political control. And if the hon. member, who obviously supports a provincial police force, has any examples where the Mounties were used as a laboratory for experiments in social engineering . . .

Mr. Hehr: I want to know.

Mr. MacDonald: I want to know. The public would be anxious to know that as well. Anyway, I'm not going to go through the rest of the issues regarding this letter on the Alberta agenda, but it certainly is amazing. It is amazing. I'm not saying it's accurate or that it reflects popular public opinion, but it is amazing. I don't think it reflects the values of this province nor of our country. I will certainly say that.

Mr. Chairman, regarding the Traffic Safety Amendment Act, those are some of the concerns that I do have, and I'm going to watch and see how the Alberta provincial police force unfolds. Every time I go in the fall of the year down here to show respect for police officers who have unfortunately fallen in the line of duty, I do see the Edmonton Police Service present, I do see the Calgary Police Service present, I do see the scarlet tunic of the Mounties present, and in ever growing numbers I see the sheriffs.

Mr. Hehr: They have no oversight.

Mr. MacDonald: I don't know where the oversight is for the sheriffs, but I think the sheriffs are baby steps towards this provincial police force, which I don't think we need. You know, their numbers are growing. The budget for them grows. I know they do some good work, but I'm not convinced that it's in the public interest or the taxpayers' interest to expand any further the role of the sheriffs. Unless, of course, there is a secret – now, this is called the Alberta agenda, but we could have a secret agenda here to implement a provincially operated and controlled police service. I see the hon. members across the way. I don't know if they have not been paying attention, or I don't know why they're silent, but certainly they're stirring there now, Mr. Chairman.

With that, I will conclude my remarks and cede the floor to another hon. member regarding Bill 30. Thank you.

The Chair: Seeing no other hon. members who wish to speak, the chair shall now call the question.

[The clauses of Bill 30 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 32

Alberta Public Agencies Governance Act

The Chair: Are there any hon. members who wish to speak on the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Horne: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chair. In consideration of the time, what I'd like to do is attempt to respond to some of the questions that were raised in second reading debate on this bill yesterday, and I'll just continue to work away at those until time is called.

One of the questions that was raised yesterday, Mr. Chair, by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar was the question of whether TILMA, the trade, investment, and labour mobility agreement, would require harmonization between Alberta and B.C. for rules governing agencies, boards, and commissions. The answer to that question is no. TILMA, as it's known by its short form, deals with trade, investment, and labour mobility only, and its purpose, as I think the House is aware, is to aim to eliminate barriers that would create restrictions in those three areas. It in no way requires harmonization of matters such as those addressed in Bill 32, which have to do with standards regarding governance of agencies, boards, and commissions. Alberta and British Columbia may each independently address the appropriate governance structures for their respective agencies, boards, and commissions notwithstanding TILMA. I hope that information is helpful.

Another question that was raised yesterday had to do with the role of stakeholders under the bill, specifically with respect to the provisions in the bill, Mr. Chair, that provide for the periodic review of the agencies, boards, and commissions and specifically the mandate and roles document, which they're required to create under the proposed legislation. The answer to that question – I think the point was raised by the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood – is simply this: the bill does not outline a formal role for stakeholders in review of that particular document, but that is not to suggest in any way that stakeholder input is not essential to good governance. Stakeholder input will for many agencies form an important part of the agency review process.

As you'll recall, Mr. Chair, the premise of the bill is that agencies, boards, and commissions are responsible to the minister for their functions, the minister whose portfolio includes those ABCs. The minister is, in turn, responsible to this Assembly and to the Alberta public. So what we would anticipate is that ministers would want to proactively seek the input from stakeholders in the course of conducting these reviews. It's an important element of their mandate, and it is certainly likely, as we've seen in other situations under other legislation, that issues such as stakeholder and client satisfaction would form the basis of short-term targets and long-term objectives for the agency as jointly set by the agency and the responsible minister. Ministerial accountability to the Legislative Assembly and the public, as I've said, includes accountability to that portion of the public which are a given agency's stakeholders. This accountability is a key principle underlying this bill.

Mr. Chair, there are a number of other items on the list here that I've made from second reading debate yesterday, and I'd proposed to go through those . . .

The Chair: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt. It's 6 o'clock so the committee is now in recess until 7:30 tonight.

[The committee adjourned at 6 p.m.]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Cao in the chair]

The Chair: I shall now call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 32 Alberta Public Agencies Governance Act

Mr. Marz: Mr. Chair, I would move adjournment of Bill 32.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 43 Marketing of Agricultural Products Amendment Act, 2009 (No. 2)

The Chair: Hon. members, before we proceed, there is an opportunity for declaration of conflict of interest. Does any hon. member wish to take that opportunity?

Seeing none, we will proceed.

Ms Blakeman: I was going to make a joke about not having a conflict because I actually am allergic to beef, but it's not particularly funny. [interjection] Oh, one person laughed. There we go.

Thank you very much for the opportunity to rise and speak to Bill 43 in Committee of the Whole. I do have an amendment, which I have delivered to the table, and I'll come to that in a few minutes.

This has been an interesting debate on Bill 43 because I think it does have its roots in a question of whether the government is willing to allow a particular group of people to pursue their own democratic process or not. What we have in Bill 43, the Marketing of Agricultural Products Amendment Act, 2009 (No. 2), is a situation where we have four agricultural commissions in the province that do not currently allow for a refund to be requested. I think there are mostly agricultural, rural background people here, so I don't need to go into the details of what the check-off stands for although, for those at home, about $3 an animal is what we're eventually talking about here.

So you have the commissions. Most of them allow for the producers to request a refund of that check-off, but the four that don't are the Alberta Beef Producers, Alberta Pork, Alberta Lamb, and the Potato Growers of Alberta. They have not given themselves that, but there is the ability under the Marketing of Agricultural Products Act for producers to hold a plebiscite to make changes to their own commission plan. So if they choose to, they have a venue that is currently available in legislation to make changes to their commission plan. For those that are searching for that, it's in section 24 of the existing act. Bill 43 is looking to change that, basically to override it or replace it, so that all of the commission plans would have refundable service fees. That means that in this case those four producers would not be able to make that decision for themselves. It would be made for them.

Clearly, the producers of those four commissions that are involved in this are not happy about this. They have contacted a number of the government members as well as members of the opposition. They see this as a move that caters to the larger producers, who clearly benefit from those refunds. I mean, if you're running an intensive livestock operation and you've got several thousand head of cattle sitting in your yard, that's a lot of money at 3 bucks a head.

The Liberals are approaching this from a standpoint of saying that, you know, these producers should have the right to make this decision for themselves. We disagree with the government essentially overriding that or stepping in front of their ability to make use of section 24 of the Marketing of Agricultural Products Act to make that decision for themselves. There has been some discussion, some feelings in the community that this is a retaliatory action by the government against certain producers, and we've gone over all of that. For anyone that wants to follow it, it's in the debates that have already gone on in second reading.

The government has said that this is about choice for the producers to basically decide whether their representing organization is doing a good job in the way they're spending that money, and if the producers don't like it, they can request that refund of service. But I think really what it is is that the producers already have this choice through that plebiscite, and the government is basically stepping in and supporting one group over another. They're essentially internally picking winners and losers, which I would have said, generally speaking, politicians avoid doing. We have lots of intersectoral disputes in just about any community we're involved in, and my advice has always been to let those groups decide, not to step in the middle of that and pick winners and losers. But the government chooses to do something else in this case.

I do have an amendment if I could ask that it is distributed at this point.

The Chair: The amendment shall be known as amendment A1.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, please continue on A1.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. This amendment is proposing four changes to Bill 43, and correspondingly the amendment has four sections to it: A, B, C, and D. They are making changes to the respective sections of the bill which exempt the four producer commissions from having nonrefundable service fees, so that's beef, pork, lamb, and potatoes.

Section A of the amendment makes the four producer commissions that are listed exempt from the service fees being refundable. Section B makes the four producer commissions listed exempt from the new proposed sections 23(4) and (5) of the existing act. Section C of the amendment replaces the government's proposed amendments to section 24 of the existing act to make it so that a plebiscite is required for beef, pork, lamb, and potatoes should a plan be amended to change provisions on service fees being refundable. Section D of the amendment adds to the government's proposed addition to section 26 of the existing act, which is the refundable service charges, by stating that this section does not apply to producers of beef, pork, lamb, or potatoes.

The intention is that this amendment would allow those four commissions – beef, pork, lamb, and potatoes – to continue with the service fees being nonrefundable, but it also allows for the producers to decide for themselves through a plebiscite whether or not they want them to be refundable. It's really clarifying the situation because without this amendment Bill 43 takes away the democratic ability or right of those producers to determine for themselves through a plebiscite as set out in the act whether or not their service fees should be refundable.

I can tell by the looks on the faces that those people that are from the rural areas understood exactly what I just said – thank you for that – and I'm sure that there's someone that can respond to the amendment.

We've spent some time on this and have thought about this quite a bit and actually have debated it a fair amount over the last couple of weeks, particularly led off by our agriculture critic, the Member for Edmonton-Riverview, so this is our best consideration of the way to make our way through this situation. We think what the government has done does not honour that democratic process. It doesn't honour the ability of those commissions to make decisions for themselves. We disagree with the government arbitrarily stepping in front and making this decision for them, particularly in this situation where they've been fine. Why the government decided to step into this one at this point has not been made clear, so we would urge all members to support this amendment, and I look forward to vigorous debate.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: On amendment A1 the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Like so many other aspects of governance, there is a situation here where a group of people are having sidelined their right to have a say in their own production both individually through the ability to use a plebiscite and collectively as an association, whether beef, pork, lamb, or potato producers. They have been sidelined by this government with Bill 43, and what we're trying to do with amendment A1 is give them back their voice that Bill 43 takes away.

Now, I realize that the people who are most affected are, unfortunately, in a conflict of interest in terms of debating this bill. Had they been here to speak to the amendment on behalf of the constituents they represent, I would think that they would have been supportive of amendment A1. We have heard before the Ethics Commissioner's ruling from individuals within this House who have concerns. One individual from southern Alberta talked specifically about the problems potato growers had and the number of correspondences he had received in his constituency office.

This, like so many other pieces of legislation, seeks to give back to individuals their collective voice. As so often is the case, the government has gone in favour of the large producer to the detriment of the smaller producers. The big factory farms, as was the case with the BSE crisis, the American producers, the large feedlots had their cattle slaughtered first, and then the smaller individuals were lucky to get what was left, and of course we didn't have sufficient slaughter facilities at that time in this province. They were all American owned. Ranchers Beef came up with an attempt to provide some alternative slaughtering close to Calgary. Unfortunately, it just did not have enough animals to process on a daily basis, and it went under. But that was one of the few opportunities where independent producers tried to have a Canadian, an Alberta voice in the marketing of their produce and the slaughter of their animals.

The pork producers, as we all know, are suffering tremendously through no fault of their own with the flu that is going around and has been falsely attributed to pigs. They need all the help they can get.

With regard to the small beef producers, they're frequently a family-run outfit, and maybe they take on the feeder aspects of it. Possibly they've got a cow-calf operation. But they're, not to make fun of the word "potatoes," in the larger scheme of things the small potatoes. They're the small family farms that Alberta has historically arisen from, and they're being left out. What amendment A1 to Bill 43 attempts to do is give them back their lost voice.

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

Now, for whatever reason this government seems to be afraid of plebiscites. They seem to be afraid to give people their voice. They would rather attempt, either in closed-door cabinet sessions, Lieutenant Governor in Council, call it what you like, to try and control the direction agriculture is headed and not necessarily for the best.

In the second reading of this Bill 43, I talked about the Canadian Wheat Board and the millions of dollars the Alberta government spent trying to undermine that organization, which is prairie-province-wide. It's not just Alberta but Saskatchewan and Manitoba, obviously. When farmers and producers were given the choice, they chose to collectively market their wheat, and they would have chosen, given the choice, had there not be such political manipulation, to market their barley as well. Now with that attempt to beat up our neighbours – Saskatchewan, Manitoba – the bullying is being brought specifically into our province, and the people on the short end of the stick are the people in beef, pork, lamb, and potatoes.

In so many pieces of legislation we've seen go through this House – and those of you who were here last night saw direct evidence of it – when a small group of powerful individuals who manage to gain the government's ear put forward their thoughts, the thoughts of the majority of Albertans are sidelined. In this case it's the small producers, the family farms, the salt of the earth of this province whose desire for a voice through plebiscites has been taken away.

Amendment A1 attempts to give them back their voice, and if democracy is important in this province, I would hope that you would take into account the wishes of the individuals. Those of you who are able to still be here from rural ridings, please look into yourselves, look at your own consciences, look at the correspondence that you've received from your constituents, and vote with the majority of your constituents, allowing them the democratic opportunity to vote on their own livelihood both through their production and through their economic viability.

Alberta was built, as I say, as a province in a co-operative situation. People got together. They raised barns. They helped their neighbours. That was part of the historical Alberta experience. Alberta had a few sort of outlaw types in terms of American whisky traders coming up and individuals monopolizing land and building it up at the expense of their neighbours. It's time to get back to the history of co-operation, and I'm hoping all members present will recognize the democratic right of people to determine their livelihood individually and collectively.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

7:50

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It is my pleasure to rise and speak in favour of amendment A1. I'll just go into a little bit of background. There are approximately 20 agricultural commissions in the province, and they can charge service fees called check-offs when a producer sells products. The majority of the commissions allow for a refund to be requested by the producers under the individual commission plans. However, there are four which don't: Alberta Beef Producers, Alberta Pork, Alberta Lamb, and the Potato Growers of Alberta. However, there is the ability under the Marketing of Agricultural Products Act for producers to hold plebiscites to make changes to their commission plans if they wish, as outlined in section 24 of the existing act.

With Bill 43 as it currently is, it would make it so that all commission plans have refundable services fees without producers deciding for themselves. This is going to take their democratic right away from them. This is like enforcing something upon some of them which they don't want. The producers of the four commissions listed above are upset that their producers were not able to determine for themselves through plebiscites as to whether or not they want these funds to be refundable.

I think the government is not listening. They claim to be consulting, and they claim to be listening to Albertans. That is always the case. When there's a big hue and cry out there, then the government turns around, and they start to change things with amendments. Many of them see this move as catering to big producers, who will benefit from these user funds. Huge feedlots seek to gain an enormous profit, particularly for cattle, at $3 per head. We believe the producers should have the right to decide for themselves whether or not the service fees should be refundable. The government is blatantly acting in the interests of big feedlots at the expense of small family farms.

The bill will take away the democratic right of the producers under the act to conduct plebiscites to amend their plans, determining whether or not service fees, or check-off fees, should be refundable. This act by the government appears to be a retaliatory action against Alberta Beef Producers for criticizing the implementation of the Alberta Livestock and Meat Agency. It is also being made in the interests of big corporate feedlots, who will benefit from the refund of hundreds of thousands of dollars in their service fees, so it is not in the interest of small producers on face value anyway.

The government has said that this is about the choice for producers to determine whether or not their producer organization is doing a good job representing them; therefore, they could request refund of service fees if they feel the organization is not doing a good job. However, the reality is that the producers already have the choice to a plebiscite as set out currently in the legislation. This move by the government is aimed at supporting the interests of big corporate players.

Amendment A1 proposes to make four changes to Bill 43. The amendment has four sections to it – A, B, C, D – which will all be considered together. I think we should all support these amendments because these amendments will go a long way in addressing the concerns of the four producers, and that's the Alberta Beef Producers, Alberta Pork, and the lamb and potato producers. If passed, this amendment to Bill 43 will allow the commissions for beef, pork, lamb, and potatoes to continue their service fees being nonrefundable and would also allow for producers to decide for themselves through a plebiscite whether or not they want them to be refundable. Without this amendment Bill 43 will take away the democratic right of producers to determine for themselves through a plebiscite as set out in the act whether or not their service fees should be refundable, and we strongly encourage all members to support these amendments.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak to amendment A1? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Interestingly, I represent an urban riding but have certainly heard from many, many, disgruntled small beef producers, those that are struggling, those that have struggled through BSE and have managed to come out the other end fairly intact but are still struggling. I believe and they believe that this is really not beneficial for them.

Many of these beef producers are really hoping, and their sons are also hoping – and I know, in fact, of one family where the daughters are hoping – that they will be able to maintain the family farms and maintain the independence that they have known which allows them to work on a small farm. It's the independence that has made this province what it is, and it's the independence that allows instant changes that would better the producers and their production line. They can change it very quickly when it's a smaller organization, and therefore they can benefit. Being dictated to by larger organizations, particularly the people that cut the meat up and stuff, being at the whim of the large corporations is not what the small independent beef or pork or lamb or potato producers want.

Certainly, in southern Alberta potatoes are a huge, huge item. In fact, many of them are at the mercy of the pricing that is involved between Lamb Weston and McCain, so having that little bit of independence that they can have they certainly want to maintain. At least, that's what I'm hearing in my office.

I'd like to just quote, maybe, some statistics. We're not talking, as someone has mentioned before, small potatoes. These are not small dollars. The Alberta industry statistics for 2008: farm cash receipts from cattle sales are $3 billion; farm cash receipts from hog sales, $398 million; farm cash receipts from lamb and sheep, $17 million; farm cash receipts from potato sales, $150 million. This is not chump change. These are large, large dollars, and these are the large dollars that keep the Alberta that we really want to keep. We do want to maintain our rural areas. We want to make sure that we have the small towns, that we've got the small producers that can actually afford to raise a family and not have to have both the mother and the father working off the farm.

The value of beef and live cattle exports is $1 billion. The value of pork and live hog is $342 million. The value of lamb and sheep exports is $164,000, and the value of potato exports is $239 million. I mean, these are large, large dollars, and I think that it behooves us to be able to do all that we can to be able to listen to these producers and do what they're asking us to do.

The broad participation of producers and relatively predictable funding levels enable the Alberta Beef Producers to be an effective voice for the cattle industry in Alberta. That's what they want to do. They want to be able to speak for themselves.

The check-off funds provided the resources to successfully defend the industry against the last U.S. countervail challenge, launched in '98 and concluded in '99. I think we're all very aware of the R-CALF association out of Montana, that may be quiet at the moment, but certainly they have not gone away and have right from the get-go given our cattle producers a hard time.

Our investments in legal and trade advocacy activities were important factors in opening the U.S. border to Canadian beef and cattle after the BSE episode as well as recent improvements in access to Asian markets, Canadian trade policy, and the impacts of the COOL implementation. Check-off dollars also provide significant benefits to Alberta producers through work on policy, regulatory issues, production research, promotion campaigns, animal health and welfare concerns, communications activities, land use, and environmental stewardship. These are very important aspects not only to their production, not only to their industry but to all of Alberta.

Let's look at the production research, promotion campaigns, animal health and welfare concerns. Certainly, those are huge. Knowing what some unfortunate hog farmers have had to go through with the swine flu, certainly these are important pieces of information that they need. It isn't just kept within their own industry. This is information that they share. And they pay for it. I fail to see why this amendment wouldn't be an indication that, yes, this House has listened to what this group of independent producers, farmers, the salt of the earth, the people that are the backbone of our rural areas are asking us to do.

The Alberta cattle industry has a small number of very large producers who would have a great deal of influence if the check-off was made refundable. Cattle organizations would become more accountable to these large producers rather than accountable to all producers. They don't want to be accountable to large producers. They don't want to be swallowed up. They don't want to be dictated to. They want to be able to negotiate on their own. They want to be able to understand the marketplace and be able to stand up for themselves, not be told how much their product is worth. They want to be able to negotiate.

A situation could arise where policy influence would be based on the size of the individual operation rather than the number of producers supporting a position. This would appear to be what's going to happen right now. This bill as it stands really does lean towards these large, individual operations rather than all of the producers getting together and being co-operative as they have done for the last probably 100-plus years in this province. As I said, it would limit the ability of an organization such as the Alberta Beef Producers to represent the interests of all the producers.

I really believe that amendment A1 is important for all of the reasons that I've mentioned, but more important than anything I really believe that if we would pass this amendment, it would prove that this House has really listened to the people that have sent the letters, written the letters, and have asked, close to begging, to please listen to them and to please have this type of an amendment go through, which would give them back the power of their own producers, which is what they want.

With that, Mr. Chair, I would ask that all of those in the House that have the ability to vote on this please really consider what we are doing to the backbone of our rural communities if we don't look at this amendment, show that we've listened, and actually pass it.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak to amendment A1? The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I was here for the discussion during second reading, and I've reread the notes, and I've drafted a bunch of comments on questions and issues that were raised during second reading. Some that have come up during the amendment are very similar. I know we'll probably have further discussion in Committee of the Whole, so I'll save those for the end of Committee of the Whole.

In reviewing the amendment proposed, Mr. Chairman, I really think I need to point out to the members of this House that everything that's proposed in the bill is completely being undone in this. I mean, it's equivalent to simply defeating the bill. Passing this bill is incredibly important, and I think we need to proceed, so I would encourage all members to vote against this amendment.

Thank you.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We are back to Bill 43. Any members wish to speak or comment? The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. There were some questions that came up in second reading, issues that came up during the discussion on the amendment, and I'm sure there will be similar issues or repeated issues that will come up through the rest of Committee of the Whole. I would like to take the opportunity to address a few of those questions.

First, there were a couple of questions from the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne. A question about how producers will be represented provincially and nationally should the majority of producers claim a refund. I'd like to point out to that member that membership in national organizations in all of the 20 commodity groups is voluntary. Each and every commission in consultation with their membership will need to assess the value and benefits that they get from belonging to a national organization just like they will have the ability, should this legislation pass, to decide whether or not they're getting benefit from their provincial association.

I'd like to point out that I know that a few people have commented or said on occasion that it will make it difficult to belong, have a membership in a national organization unless the levy that's collected is mandatory. But, Mr. Chair, the nine other commissions right now that have a mandatory refundable check-off currently support a lot of different national organizations, and they support research. So carrying through with this legislation does not preclude being a member of any national organization.

The hon. member had also suggested that neither the Alberta Lamb Producers nor the Alberta government had been lobbied by sheep producers themselves for a refundable check-off, so he was wondering why the government would include the Alberta Lamb Producers in Bill 43. Mr. Chairman, since 1987 – that's 20 years ago – every single producer commodity commission that has been created in this province has had a mandatory refundable check-off. These four organizations that preceded 1987 that have a mandatory nonrefundable check-off: all we're doing is making our legislation consistent. Quite frankly, it's worked very well for the other nine organizations. There's nothing that suggests that it can't work very well for these four and bring them up to speed with what we've been doing for the last 20 years as we've created new commissions.

There were some other questions, as well, Mr. Chairman. The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie had commented. He had said: big guys are the only ones that want this. I have a lot of letters. Now, I'm not suggesting to the opposition or to anybody in this House that there is only one point of view. I mean, my name is on the legislation. I'm carrying it. I've had less than 50 calls and e-mails and letters out of the thousands of producers that could potentially be affected by this, and there is no clear line of support or opposition. It's about even. In fact, the last letters that have come in in the last few days out of those less than 50 responses I've gotten have probably pushed support for this legislation.

There is absolutely no clear line that big producers are lining up in favour of it and small producers are lining up opposed. There's not even a trend or a tendency. I've had a lot of small producers phone or e-mail or call, suggesting that they support it, and I've had some large producers call, suggesting that they have concerns about it. In fact, some of the lines from some of the comments – and I'm not saying these are all the comments; these are just some.

Just to clarify to everyone in this House that this is not black and white and this is pitting big guys against little guys because nothing is ever that black and white, there is a small potato grower who has said: "Having individual choice in our industry has been lacking for . . . too long. To be successful, an organization, commission, or association requires a membership of solid supporters. Supporters that choose to be" there on their own.

Another comment was made about the potato growers association. The producer said: "We believe in freedom of association (as the Constitution states)" we should have and that "currently we are forced to belong and to pay the levies . . . we whole-heartedly support Bill 43, as we believe that being forced to belong to an organization is unconstitutional. Furthermore, all commissions should have to prove that they show value for producers" and let producers make the choice on their own.

Another one states: "Choice matters. It makes organizations more accountable and responsive to producers. A refundable checkoff is a plebiscite" every year.

The last one I wanted to read – and I want to read this one specifically because it's been argued over and over and over again that the whole point to this legislation is to pit big producers against little ones: big ones support this; little ones don't. "As a paid up member of Alberta Beef Producers, I believe that organization needs this to help them to be more democratic, accountable and responsive to me as a beef producer on my family farm."

This is not corporate versus family or big versus little. There is such a diversity of opinions, and as I said, it's not black and white; there is some controversy. But out of the less than 50 responses I've had – I was actually kind of surprised I didn't get more comments, given that there are thousands of producers out there.

The comment was also made by the Member for Calgary-Currie that without cow-calf guys feeders are sunk, and that's where he left it. I found that very interesting because without feeders the cow-calf guys are sunk, too. I always found this interesting about the supply chain. I hear arguments from cow-calf producers on occasion that say that they're mad and tired of being hammered by the feedlot guys. They don't give them a fair deal. But I hear feedlot guys say that they're tired of being hammered by the packers. And then I hear the packers say that they're tired of being subjected to a U.S.-only market.

It's so strange that in an organization like this there would be different groups along the same supply chain that would consider each other enemies or start to talk about each other like "they're out to get me," or "I'm out to get them," or vice versa. A cow-calf guy has nothing to do with his animals unless he's got a feedlot to put them into, and the feedlot has nowhere to send them to unless there's a packer, and the packer has nothing to do with them unless there's a market to sell them into. Every single one of these divisions within the supply chain has to work together if they're going to be successful. There is no us versus them in this because none of them succeed unless the other one succeeds.

In fact, the Member for Calgary-Currie even made a comment – where is that comment? – that the big guys or the feedlots were going to make servants, I believe it was, of the small guys, or the feedlots were going to make servants of the cow-calf producers that are going to be subject to them. I don't understand how this is going to work when every single part of the supply chain has to be successful or nobody is. If all the cow-calf guys go broke, who's going to fill up the feedlots? I find this very strange. I want everyone to realize that this entire supply chain, this entire industry has a symbiotic relationship of interdependency, and every single one of their successes depends on everyone else along the chain being successful.

The Member for Calgary-Buffalo even suggested that the family farm makes no money, but feedlots always make money. I invite any member of this Assembly from an urban region to come out to rural Alberta, come out to my constituency and answer the phones for a little while and talk to constituents. They'll find out that black-and-white statements like that – that the family farm never makes any money; the cow-calf guys never make any money; the feedlots always make money – are not true. Just two years ago feedlot guys were phoning me in my constituency saying that they were losing a hundred dollars a head. Family farm guys weren't doing too bad three years ago. I mean, these black-and-white statements don't serve the industry well. Every commodity in agriculture has tough times because of the cycle of economics. It's not that one is always successful at the expense of the other.

There was also a comment from the Member for Calgary-Currie – and this is probably the strangest comment I've ever heard in this House – that the little guys care more about the health and welfare of their animals than the big guys do. You know, that's an emotional argument, talking about little versus big, family versus corporate farms. How big is a family farm allowed to get before it's not a family farm anymore? How small does a corporate farm have to be before it's called a family farm?

There's a farmer with 50 cows. He's got a couple of sons that are teenagers that work on the farm, and it's a family farm. Would you define a family farm as three brothers who farm? They have 200 cows that they calve out, and they do grain operations, and they have a small feedlot. There's one right near my hometown. There are three brothers, and it's a much larger operation than much of its neighbours. It's incorporated just like many of its neighbours are. Is it a corporate farm, or is it a family farm? Those arguments about family farm versus corporate farm are meant to be emotional arguments that distract us from the real crux of what we're discussing, and that's the future of the industry.

Another comment that was made was that we will be picking winners and losers. The Member for Edmonton-Strathcona and the Member for Edmonton-Centre commented, and I think the Member for Calgary-McCall, actually, had made a similar comment about it. Quite a few people have made the comment that we favour larger ones over smaller ones, that we're picking winners and losers. Our legislation right now forces all producers to pay. When the discussion comes up about, "Well, if we change this, it's going to favour the big guys over the little guys," intuitively, then, if we leave the legislation the way it is, because it's provincial legislation, we are picking smaller guys, if that's the way you want to argue it, over bigger guys. By eliminating this legislation, we're not picking anything.

Producers individually are allowed to decide what they're going to do with their own money. If we leave the legislation the way it is, we are picking winners and losers, but we're not picking small guys over big guys or big guys over small guys. If we leave the legislation the way it is, we are picking an industry association over the success of the producers and the future of the industry itself. We're securing an organization that may not necessarily reflect producers big or small unless there's some accountability to those producers.

The last comment was about democracy and the plebiscite. The Member for Calgary-Varsity and the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona commented that a plebiscite gives farmers choice: let farmers make the choice; we're taking away farmers' democratic choice. You know, it's got to be said that producers right now still get to vote for their directors. They still get to have those elections and vote for their directors. But I don't know necessarily if the association is always so democratic.

Just two weeks ago we had a discussion in this House about democracy and about the electoral boundaries review. If we're talking about democracy and democratic representation as the focus, then you have to compare the zones that some of these organizations represent. One zone has 3,400 farms in it, and a neighbouring zone has 8,200 farms in it, kind of like a constituency in the city having 80,000 people in it and a constituency in rural Alberta having 35,000. We talked about the need for fairness because of democracy. Even if you go by the number of cattle, there's a zone that has 1 million cattle on farms; there's a neighbouring zone that has 400,000.

If we're talking about democracy, what about some of those principles? Some of those boards have had their zones come forward with motions. In fact, every zone has come forward at some point with the same motions, and their board has overridden those motions. If we're fundamentally talking about democracy, the very board that's sometimes arguing and inciting the opposition members to talk about democracy and our right to choose has itself overridden motions that have come forward out of all of their zones consecutively. I don't know if it's fair to say that we're removing their democracy when they're not always necessarily the most democratic.

The bigger question that we need to ask is whether or not the fundamental purpose of some of these organizations is to be democratic or to drive the industry forward, to make it successful. I mean, imagine if there were choices made by the democratic organization that drove the industry into the ground. Is that good for the economy? Maybe their first focus should be on driving the industry forward, growing it, reaching into new markets, driving the industry ahead. Try and do it as democratically as possible, but when you weigh the two principles, which one is most important, the democracy or the future success of the industry? I think the choice is obvious. It's the future success of the industry.

Mr. Chairman, I think I have addressed most of the concerns. I just want to reiterate that this legislation will make all of our practices around the 13 producer commodity groups consistent by giving the last four organizations the same choice that's already given to the other nine organizations, which function really well and successfully by providing more money for research and by participating in national organizations. It also gives choice, which ensures accountability, leadership, and responsiveness to producers who fund those organizations with their own money.

Mr. Chairman, in absolutely no other business association does this government force businesses to be members of those business organizations. We don't do it for chambers of commerce or any other business association. It's a choice of those businesses which organizations they participate in.

This is not fundamentally about the future of the industry associations. The future of those industry associations is not a choice for this government to make by having legislation that mandates that every producer pay that organization. That is not a choice for this government to make. That choice rests squarely and strictly with the producers who support that organization and their ability to choose whether or not they're going to support that organization. That, Mr. Chairman, is democracy at its finest, it's choice at its finest, and I believe it will create industry organizations that will make sure they're more responsive to the producers that they represent, more reflective of all the producers' needs and opinions that they represent and will make them eternally accountable year after year after year and, quite frankly, make them more effective organizations.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. To the charge of inciting democracy I plead guilty as charged. The future should be determined by the people, by the majority, not the dictates of a privileged minority.

The Member for Lethbridge-East pointed out some important statistics that come from Alberta industry statistics 2008: farm cash receipts from cattle sales, $3 billion; value of beef from live cattle exports, $1 billion; size of the industry in Alberta, 5.4 million cattle and calves; 28,750 farms produce cattle and calves.

Plebiscites are one form of democracy, a form of freedom of choice. The hon. member mentioned that very few individuals participated in terms of e-mailing or writing him letters. That's what I would consider to be the passive approach. What I would like to know is: in preparing Bill 43, how were these producers contacted? Was it just something simply up on the web? Were any polls taken amongst the various producers, 28,750 farms? Were there public consultations held? If there were, where and when did they occur? I'd like some proof that the people were consulted beyond just simply a website or a little ad in a local paper.

The hon. member shared communication, and I'd like to share a communication, too. This was written on May 1, 2009, and I think most members would have received a copy of it. It says:

Dear Honourable Member:

I am writing to you as a cattle producer who is very concerned about legislative action that is taking away my right to choose how my producer organization is funded. On April 28, 2009, Agriculture and Rural Development Minister [fill in the blank] announced the tabling of Bill 43, legislation making service charges (check-offs) refundable for Alberta Beef Producers (ABP) and three other commissions. The Marketing of Agricultural Products Act currently allows cattle producers to choose . . .

Oh, heaven forbid that in a democracy we should have choice.

. . . whether service charges are refundable or non-refundable and any changes in the nature of the service charge should be directed by producers.

They're the ones directly involved. They need to have a voice.

The Act allows the government to conduct a plebiscite to determine our opinion on a matter of this importance.

As a cattle producer, I urgently request that you follow the democratic process that is available to you and conduct a plebiscite of cattle producers on the question of whether the ABP service charge should remain non-refundable or become refundable. This is my industry and my organization. I have a right to make this choice.

Why wasn't this plebiscite conducted? If the results were clear and that's what people wanted, then I could be supportive of this legislation. The cattle producers of Alberta have not given ABP any indication that they want the check-off to become refundable. During the recent plan review ABP circulated a discussion paper which included a question on refundable check-offs. By a 2 to 1 margin the producers responding to this question voted for a nonrefundable check-off. At a recent fall meeting the only resolution on check-offs to pass was a motion to continue with the nonrefundable check-off. It seems clear to Alberta Beef Producers that most producers see a nonrefundable check-off as the best way to support an organization representing their interests and want that check-off to remain nonrefundable. Alberta Beef Producers believe that any change in the collection or distribution of the check-off must be directed by these producers.

Here we have in Bill 43 the government overriding the wishes of the majority. I would like to know: of the 28,750 farms, what was the vote? How many individuals voted for nonrefundable check-offs to be mandatory? How many chose to have their own decision? Without those types of democratic voting statistics, this just appears to be big government back in the business of being in business, and that's clearly not what the people want. If you have any poll results or votes, I would ask you to table them to demonstrate that the people are behind this piece of legislation, or I would suggest that it needs to be further amended.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I just want to make a couple of little comments, and that is that I live in the Lacombe-Ponoka constituency, and it has the largest cattle auction in all of Canada. I'm surrounded by cow-calf producers and some feedlot people as well. I have about, I believe, 20 per cent of the pork production in the province in my constituency. I also have a number of potato farms, fairly large seed growers that produce seed into the provincial market. So I've been talking to some of these people.

There are some concerns about the legislation and not because people are so much against it. I think they don't understand the intent of it, and I think I would like to ask the hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright if he can answer today or maybe in the future, in the amount of time before this legislation comes into effect – I believe it's a year, and in that time there are probably some regulations that have to be put together – what the role of the producer groups could be in consulting with the marketing council or the ministry in the development of these regulations to find out what portion of their check-offs, all or none or what part, how the refundable part of the check-off is going to work. I think these producers want to know these things. I think we should have some of these answers, and if we can assure these people that there's a fair and honest and open process to deal with these check-offs, I think producers' fears would be allayed.

I believe that some of the concerns were about: we're going to lose a voice. But I think this could actually create new voices in the industry, particularly in the beef industry. I look forward to a very bright future for the beef industry if they can work together co-operatively between the different segments of the industry that have I wouldn't say opposing or conflicting interests but different interests that the hon. member mentioned between the cow-calf people, the backgrounders, the feeders, and the packing industry. They do have different interests, and I think it's time that these different groups can work together, each have their own voice, and give this industry much more strength and responsiveness to the market demands not only in Alberta but Canada, North America, and the world. I'm looking forward to some of these assurances for my producers and this government.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Okay. Just a question. The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka lent his expertise based on the fact that he's in the centre of a significant beef-producing area. I'm just wondering if organizations that raise elk, for example, or raise deer are affected in any way by Bill 43, or is that marketing strictly for beef, pork, lamb, and potatoes? Are independent producers of elk or domesticated deer subject to different legislation?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you very much. That is a really good question because I have produced elk, bison, cattle in the past, pork, and potatoes along with barley and canola, so I have paid into all these different commissions. I have never, ever requested a refund from any of them because I felt that the organizations were doing a good job. Your question was: how does this Bill 43 affect those other commissions? It absolutely doesn't affect them at all. They already have the ability to ask for a refund. But I believe that in those organizations, particularly for the elk and the bison, they have a set period of time within the year. All check-offs are mandatory, so every producer pays a check-off and has a set amount of time to request in writing a refund if they wish. I have never ever asked for a refund, and I don't even know anybody in my organizations that have.

These organizations might get a small amount of refund requests, maybe 8 or 10 per cent. What they do in the long term is adjust their budgets to account for that, and they're very successful. They become more accountable. People actually get involved in the governance because they know that when they're involved in the governance, they have a more accountable organization. If the organization is not accountable, some people can actually pull out, or they can form their own organization, a sister organization. They might have, instead of one voice, two voices representing different aspects of the industry.

I see nothing but positive coming out of this. There's going to be a transition period where there's some unrest and some fear, but I think the industries and the producers will get over that if they understand what the intent of the legislation is. I think everything will settle down. I think these industries have a very, very, bright future if they can get everybody working in the same direction.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 43 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? It's carried.

Bill 36 Alberta Land Stewardship Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Chair. I rise to begin discussion at committee on Bill 36, the Alberta Land Stewardship Act. This bill is the legislative means to implement the land-use framework, the most sophisticated land-use regime yet proposed in Canada.

First, I'd like to briefly review the bill. It's a complex piece of legislation. Sections 3 and 4 create the legislative authority to develop and implement regional plans. Further authority is granted under section 51 to establish a regional advisory council for planning regions. Regional plans provide more certainty to municipalities, industry, and to all Albertans, and government will work with municipalities and industry to help align their plans with the regional plan. Sections 7, 8, and 9 provide for the content of these regional plans, including vision, objectives, and policies to achieve the vision and objectives. Section 11 allows a regional plan to alter or amend a statutory consent. This authority is considered necessary to allow regional plans to achieve their mandate to manage the cumulative effects.

In part 2 section 15 of the bill sets out the effect of a regional plan on the provincial government, its boards and agencies and local governments and authorities. It makes it clear that the regional plans are binding unless otherwise provided. The regional plans have the legal status of regulations and in case of conflicts with other regulations take precedence.

Regional plans. Sections 15(3) and (4) make it clear that regional plans do not create any new cause of legal actions in our courts of law except for the commissioner under section 18. I want to emphasize that nothing in this part of the bill alters the decision-making powers or appeal processes created through other laws.

There has been some concern expressed with the sections under division 3, sections 20, 21, 22. Again, I want to emphasize here that what they require is that local governments be in compliance with regional plans and file a statutory declaration stating so, which is to say that local decision-making powers will not be altered by the bill. By way of example, local authorities will continue to make decisions to meet local needs. Municipalities will maintain their authority for municipal development plans, area structure plans, land-use bylaws in subdivisions, and development standards.

Section 19, also in part 2, states that the act does not create any new rights to compensation but recognizes and leaves in place all existing provisions for compensation such as exist in the Mines and Minerals Act or the Forests Act.

Part 3 of Bill 36 sets the legal foundation for the use of four key conservation and stewardship tools. It lays the foundation for research and development for market-based instruments in section 23(a) and for pilot projects in subparagraph 23(b).

Section 25 provides further authority to support conservation, environmental, and agricultural objectives.

Division 2 deals with conservation easements. Conservation easements are voluntary agreements that place protections on private lands by landowners to protect and enhance the environmental and ecological integrity of their lands.

Sections 35 to 43 deal with a new instrument, conservation directives. Conservation directives have the same or similar objectives as conservation easements but may be imposed by a regional plan.

Section 38 creates a right to compensation for landowners who suffer a loss of value as a result of land conservation directives, and this type of landowner compensation, for what are known as regulatory takings, is the first in Canada.

Section 46 authorizes conservation offset programs. Offset programs have been used in other jurisdictions with success.

The last conservation and stewardship tool is the transfer of development credits as described in sections 47, 48, and 49.

Part 4 outlines the regional planning process and the administrative matters, including in section 56 the establishment of the land-use secretariat and its functions in sections 57 to 61. Sections 52 to 55 define and describe the responsibilities of the regional advisory councils. Section 62 contains other functions and responsibilities that the secretariat will handle. Section 61 covers the complaint mechanism. It does not create additional processes for landowners or industry to deal with. Rather, it supports the use of existing processes under existing acts and regulations, including existing appeal processes.

Part 5, the last substantive part of Bill 36, deals with transitional matters, including amendments to other legislation. The majority of sections from 68 to 95 in this part deal with aligning decision-making and planning with regional plans. Importantly, none of the changes alter existing rights to appeal decisions of the government bodies under these other statutes. In fact, sections 76 and 90 include amendments to the Forests Act and the Public Lands Act to require the establishment of fair appeal mechanisms under those acts, which did not previously exist.

Now, having summarized Bill 36 as introduced, there have been discussions with colleagues, communications with stakeholders both in industry and environment that have highlighted the need for some clarification in a few areas of Bill 36. As a result of these discussions I'm proposing some amendments for consideration by this Assembly, and I'll wait a moment for the distribution of those amendments to take place before speaking to them.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, this will be amendment A1, and we'll wait until they're distributed.

Hon. members, the request has been made to have these severed. Hon. member, are you talking about severed in discussion or severed in voting?

Mr. Hehr: We just want the amendments severed for voting.

The Deputy Chair: Severed for voting?

Mr. Hehr: Yes.

Dr. Morton: So should I continue?

The Deputy Chair: Yes, please continue. We will discuss the entire amendment. Then they'll be severed for voting on A, B, C, and D.

Dr. Morton: Okay. Thank you. Members can see that the proposed amendments are indicated as A through I, and I'll quickly describe each one.

Amendment A makes four changes to section 2, the definitions section. The first change clarifies how regional plans apply to Métis settlements in Alberta. A new clause is added following clause (a) to define compensation board. For settlement patented land the term refers to the Métis Settlements Appeal Tribunal, established under the Metis Settlements Act. The tribunal already has jurisdiction over disputes affecting settlement lands. For lands other than settlement patented lands, the term refers to the Land Compensation Board.

The next change to section 2 deals with the definition of effect. In clause (g)(i) the words "the economy" are added before the words "the environment," and the words "a community" are added before the words "human health." These changes, adding "economy" and "community," completely reflect the intention of the land-use framework to strike a better balance amongst the three objectives: economic, environment, and social.

The third change to section 2 amends clause (l) by striking out the words “section 222 of.” Amendment A’s final change to section 2 is clause (v) subclause (iv). These are replaced with a new section adding the words “but does not include a General Council Policy.” Again, that addresses the special circumstances of Métis settlements.

I’ll move, then, to amendment B. Amendment B addresses section 11 of the Alberta Land Stewardship Act. Amendment B clarifies how regional plans will apply to statutory consents. Statutory consents are any permissions required under an act or regulation before an activity is carried out such as permits, licences, and approvals. Section 11 of the bill is replaced with a new section. Subsection (1) of the new section clarifies that regional plans may, to achieve or maintain an objective or policy, call for the amendment or extinguishment of a statutory consent or the terms and conditions of a statutory consent but only by express reference to that statutory consent. In other words, it must be made explicit.

More substantive changes are in the new subsection (2), which requires the government to give notice to the holder of a statutory consent of the objective or policy that is to be achieved or maintained. It also gives the consent holder an opportunity to propose an alternative means to achieve or maintain that policy or objective. This amendment provides additional procedural safeguards to the holders of statutory consents without undermining the objectives of section 11.

Amendment C, again, addresses Métis settlement issues. Amendment C changes section 17(2) by striking out the words “made and approved under section 226” and substituting the words “or anything authorized under or by the Co-Management Agreement, as amended, referred to in Schedule 3.” This ensures that policies made by the Métis Settlements General Council are not adversely affected by regional plans and that Bill 36 does not affect the governance structure created for Métis settlements.

Moving, then, to amendments D and E, Bill 36, as indicated earlier, enhances the conservation and stewardship tools available to protect heritage landscapes, views, habitat, and agricultural lands. Amendments D and E recognize existing responsibilities and accountabilities of ministers when regional plans seek to use these conservation and stewardship tools.

After section 26 amendment D adds a new section, 26.1, to ensure that any tax-based conservation and stewardship tools are implemented only with the approval of the Minister of Finance and Enterprise.

Amendment E strikes out section 32(2) and substitutes a new section to deal with prior notice to ministers for registering a conservation easement. The amendment requires that the ministers of Infrastructure and Transportation in addition to the Minister of Municipal Affairs also receive prior notice of these plans to register a conservation easement. This amendment recognizes the Infrastructure and Transportation ministers’ responsibilities in planning major infrastructure and transportation routes.

9:00

Amendment F deals with section 42 and, again, concerns Métis settlements. In subsection (1) clause (g) is struck out, in subsection (2) clause (i) is struck out, and two new subsections are added after (2). The new sub (3) clarifies the ability of the general council to make a general council policy with respect to settlement patented land. The new sub (4) provides clarity that references in the act to regulations made under section 42 include these general council policies.

Moving, then, to amendment G. It addresses conservation directives. In section 43 the word “nothing” is struck out, and the words “except for section 36, nothing” are substituted. This change makes it clear that municipal authorities are bound by conservation directives and regional plans.

Amendment H adds a new monitoring requirement. It is designed to improve monitoring and reporting on how regional plans are achieving their objectives. The amendment adds a new clause, (c.1), to section 57 of the bill. The new clause calls for the appointment of a committee at least once every five years to evaluate the objectives and audit the policies of regional plans. This type of check was requested both by industry and environmental groups, and the committee will provide an independent assessment of the progress of the regional plans and make a public report to the stewardship minister.

Finally, amendment I is consequential to the definition added in amendment A. Amendment I strikes out references to the Land Compensation Board and substitutes “Compensation Board” in sections 37(2), 40(1) and (2), 41(1) and (2), and 42(1), again, to account for the Métis settlements’ special status.

Mr. Chairman, we all know that Alberta is one of the most beautiful places on earth. Our plains, foothills, mountains, parklands, Canadian Shield, and boreal forest support a prosperous society and a magnificent array of wildlife and fisheries. They also provide an abundance of energy, forestry, and other natural resources that have provided generations of Albertans with good jobs and economic opportunity. Our challenge is to manage and develop our lands in a way that sustains the prosperity of Albertans without undermining the beauty and ecological health of our province.

Bill 36, the Alberta Land Stewardship Act, will help us strike this balance. It will help us define the future of our province so that it will be as good for future generations as it has been for us, which is the definition of stewardship. Accordingly, I would ask all members to support these amendments. I look forward to our debate.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Any comments on amendment A1? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chair, for allowing me to speak on this most important bill and on these amendments that are now before us. If we look at this bill and how these amendments will affect the bill, there is no doubt that we have been waiting for some time for a bill like this to set the land-use framework into policy for beginning to, I guess, divide our province into a more manageable state, like I’ve mentioned before, that the land-use framework references. Rightfully so; we may have reached the tipping point in this province.

We’re all hopeful on this side of the House that this is the start of good things to come, where our environment and our land and our water are all headed in the right direction, that creates a balance between human needs and our environmental needs. I know this has been a difficult task. This is a very large bill that affects a great deal of other bills in this province.

If we look, in particular, at amendment A, what it specifically does is clarify what compensation board means. It’s really rather seemingly small, but it could mean quite a bit. It adds in the words “the economy” and “a community” to the list of the effects as defined in the subsection that is amended.

Currently the definition of effect in Bill 36 includes:

- (i) any effect on the environment, human health or safety, a species or an objective in a regional plan, regardless of the scale, nature, intensity, duration, frequency, probability or potential of the effect, and
- (ii) a cumulative effect that arises over time or in combination with other effects.

The government's intent in adding "economy" I see as maybe to deal with the potential backlash that comes from various groups who say: the regional plans are affecting me, my business economically. Of course, this is going to be a concern. It's a concern for us in the Legislature. It's a concern for Albertans in general. The economy is always a question for us in this House to be concerned about as we want Albertans to thrive in that matter.

Yet I do feel somewhat concerned in this the land-use framework that this organizing amendment in Bill 36, which is going to see the Alberta Land Stewardship Act create the land-use framework, seems to be pointing this out at a rather late stage. That does give me some cause for concern. I know the hon. minister is a very smart man. I'm not saying anything untoward, but this is really just one of those changes that gives me some measure of concern in that: where is the balance here? My understanding of what this act is going to do is to look at a better representation of how we've dealt with our land and our water and our resources. By adding the word "economy" – and I am skeptical – I think this adds more of a pressure that's already existing on our environment. We're already at a tipping point.

Now, when we have this added word, that is going to be of equal assessment with much of the stuff that is going on in the bill, it really is troublesome. There are many cases of economic gratification on land-use decisions. I guess that's the nature of it. We've already seen those decisions made here in this province, and we've seen them before my time in the Legislature.

I read about the Balzac racetrack, the moving of water there, and all that sort of stuff that the land-use framework is going to deal with. Hopefully, in those types of situations of, I guess, chicanery – I don't know whether it was that or not – we're going to err on the side of caution with the land-use framework. That kind of situation is not going to happen. We're going to recognize that water transfers and water areas, you know, you're not supposed to monkey with. I realize I'm just pointing that out as an example. As an example, I believe the Alberta Land Stewardship Act has been brought in to sort of rectify those situations that have come in. I believe this act is going to rectify a lot of those or has been brought in to rectify a lot of those things that have happened, possibly up in the oil sands region and other places.

Yet when this word "economy" comes down, I can't help being, nonetheless, a little more worried, a little more – well, this is all well and good. Yes, it got everyone excited that we've turned the path here to really recognize that we are at that tipping point, that we may already be living beyond our means as a society. We may already be using more water than we should. We already may be using more land than we should. We already might be polluting the air more than we should and all that stuff.

And we're continuing now. We're going to do it. We're going to add more people. We're going to add more economy and all that stuff. I know that's going to happen, nevertheless; those are just the demographics of our world. We're adding more people, and we're a place to have jobs – and I know that – where people are going to come to work and come to settle and all that stuff.

Yet this word – and maybe it's just me being a nervous Nellie or what have you – gives me some concern. Maybe if I am being a nervous Nellie, well, I hope I'm bringing up a situation that we can't support this amendment. If it comes true sometime in the future that everything is all about the economy – this somehow at a late stage in this bill is going forward after much time and much work put into it. All of a sudden we get pressured into putting forward this word, and it changes the balance. Although this is somewhat of a centralization of power, it's an act that people have been calling for and wanting to protect our environment.

I guess those are my comments in regard to this amendment, and I leave it to others to talk about it if they wish. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate this opportunity to make a few comments regarding the Alberta Land Stewardship Act. I want to begin by saying that I fully support the minister and what he's trying to do with respect to the principles and objectives of the Alberta Land Stewardship Act. The establishment of this kind of an integrated approach and in particular the amendments that are before us are of very significant consequence to the aboriginal communities in this province and in particular to the Métis settlements, which I'll get to in a moment.

I think we all know that an integrated approach like this is really necessary to address the cumulative effects of land management and resource development decisions and what a vital step that they are to ensuring a sustainable future for Albertans. But, again, I want to focus in on the amendments as they impact the Métis settlements in particular.

This is a broad framework document, as we all know, and when it was first brought forward there were some areas that caused some concern to me and, in turn, to Métis settlements in particular. I should say to First Nations as well. But the minister was very amenable in listening to the concerns that I had raised, and we had a good discussion. That culminated in an immediate meeting with the Métis settlements and with other aboriginal people. The result of those meetings is now reflected in these amendments that are before us, Mr. Chairman.

Just a couple of points here. We know the importance of land and land management to all of us, but I think it goes without saying that there's an even deeper appreciation primarily because of the ages of history that surround aboriginal people for the respect that they have for these lands: for the land, the air, the water, and everything else connected. As I studied these amendments and discussed them, I found some comfort in knowing that the concerns had been addressed. My concerns were focused primarily on the implementation of the Alberta Land Stewardship Act and how the act might affect the principles and objectives of Métis settlements, of the Métis Settlements Act, which is our own legislation. As we know, the Métis settlements and their lands are unique. In fact, we're the only province in Canada that has specially designated lands set aside. So the amendments which the hon. minister mentioned – and he specifically referenced Métis settlements in his comments – are critical to maintaining that balance that we have and the respect and recognition we have for Métis settlements in our province. I have to recognize that the Alberta Land Stewardship Act is, of course, outside the federal jurisdiction with respect to First Nation reserves. Nonetheless, these amendments will address the major concerns.

Let me just say that the proposed amendments are the result of a number of discussions that I've had with the minister and that the Métis settlements' representatives have had with the minister, and I was privileged to sit in on those meetings and to help arrange them. These amendments reflect the unique relationship that Alberta has had and wishes to continue having with Métis settlements for many, many years to come.

These amendments ensure that the overarching policy objectives that Alberta agreed to in 1985 and in 1989 remain intact. We should all be reminded that the Legislature passed a unanimous resolution in 1985 agreeing to transfer land to and to bring forward new legislation for Métis settlements. This was a historic moment for our province, and we're now improving, if you will, on that history while we're also improving the quality of life with respect to land management in general, I hope, for all Albertans. This is a critical part of Métis settlements achieving greater local autonomy and greater economic self-sufficiency. The proposed amendments to the Alberta Land Stewardship Act ensure that Alberta's commitments under this unique legislation will continue to be honoured and improved upon.

Amending the act in this manner will allow the Métis Settlements Appeal Tribunal to hear matters related to land compensation and to ensure that through these amendments those decisions are consistent with the Metis Settlements Act, which, by the way, already gives authority to the Métis Settlements Appeal Tribunal to hear matters such as loss of cultural value related to land. The Métis Settlements Appeal Tribunal is a culturally appropriate quasi-judicial tribunal whose decisions are appealed to the Court of Appeal directly.

The other amendment to the Alberta Land Stewardship Act, as has been referenced, ensures that the Métis Settlements General Council, which is their governing body, can continue to make laws within their own geographic area, in particular laws related to land, without having regional plans made or amended and without any impact on Métis settlements' ability to make such laws.

I find these amendments to be consistent with our relationship with the Métis settlements and to be consistent with our commitments in the 1989 accord, which was all about helping achieve local autonomy and so on, and to the corresponding legislation that was passed in 1990.

Mr. Chairman, I'm going to take my seat in a moment. But I just want to say thank you to the minister, who has wrestled with these issues now for I think about two years, if not a day more or less, for the numerous meetings that have been held that result in these particular amendments that will help benefit our relationship with the Métis settlements, in particular, but I hope also with aboriginals in general and hope for a speedy resolution and implementation.

My last comment is to suggest that there will still be opportunities for additional input to be given with respect to the implementation of this particular act. We still have some regional advisory councils that will have a role to play. Aboriginals will feature prominently in those as well. Therefore, I'm very supportive of these amendments before us.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity to amendment A1.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Yes. Speaking directly and somewhat generically to the amendment, I want to compliment the hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. I know how hard he has worked. The words that the Minister of Aboriginal Relations brought into it were words like integration and collaboration, and I want to second those comments.

This may appear slightly off topic, but it has to do with the amendment, and it has to do with Alberta land stewardship. I just want to pass out a very large thank you to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development, the Solicitor General, and the Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation. That is because they demonstrated land stewardship over the May long weekend. Through their collaborative integration we had a very successful weekend, and I see that as a terrific example of Alberta land stewardship. The people who wanted to be out to have a good time were able to have that good time. For example, the off-roaders who followed the laws and stayed on the path had a thoroughly enjoyable time, and even those who wandered slightly off didn't seem to be opposed to the finer they got. They realized that they had overstepped their bounds. I'm hoping that this enforcement, this integration, this collaboration that was so successful on this long weekend will be carried on into the future, that this wasn't a one-shot effort.

With regard specifically to amendment A1, the only area that we have trouble with of all the series of alphabetized amendments is section A, and it's kind of a philosophical concern. We do not believe that the environment should be playing second fiddle to the economy. We do not believe that short-term gain that produces long-term pain is acceptable. I know how hard the minister has worked to achieve the balance between the environment and the economy, and I am very appreciative of the five-year review clause that was built in because that will give people a chance to evaluate the success of the plan.

There's no doubt at all, no one would argue the absolute need for a land-use framework in this province. I appreciate, again, all the effort that has gone into the preparation and the moulding and shaping that the amendments to Bill 36, which have just been presented, attempt to do. As I say, I will be voting with my colleagues in favour of all of the amendments with the exception of section A because I do not believe the economy should take priority over long-term sustainable environmental conservation and protection.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. As my colleagues have made clear, we have reviewed the government amendments to Bill 36 and, for the most part, are willing to support them. I've been quickly trying to go through and sort of do a fast comparison about what's being proposed. Yes, indeed, we think that in many ways this is an improvement on the bill as first presented. The sticking point, of course, is that definition that is appearing under section 2, specifically clause (g), which is giving us a sort of list.

I've come to understand that the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development understands effective language very clearly, and I take him seriously. So I know that when he has ordered it with the economy first and the environment second, followed by the rest of the list, that's the prioritization. That's not a mistake. It's not alphabetized or put in that order randomly. That is deliberate, and that is where I have trouble with what is being anticipated in this bill.

This whole bill has been a struggle for me. As the Environment critic for the Official Opposition I'm supposed to be, you know, reviewing acts of legislation to see if it has an undue effect on our environment, proposing alternatives, et cetera, et cetera. Overall, we hear from a number of sources, and in our own minds we understand that we need this bill. We need an overall plan about how we are going to use the land in Alberta. We need some kind of a framework that is going to allow the increasing number of competing demands coming from different sectors: from the municipalities, from the agricultural community, from the oil and gas development and exploration community, from forestry. You know, there are just so many different competing sectors right now that are trying to get their piece and get dominance, frankly, over how the land is going to be used and get the land framework and the use of that land to what is going to help them the most and is going to give them the most advantage. So it's clear that we need some kind of a plan.

This is a sticking point for me, and it causes me great concern. I'm an Albertan. I understand that a good deal of the wealth that I enjoy, that funds the things that are important to me – like the arts, like education, like health care – flows from our industrial sector, particularly oil and gas. I get that. We've certainly talked about royalties and endowment funds and all of the rest of that for a very long period of time. But I think it's a mistake to write a land-use framework that gives the number one position to the economy. That's what we've got. Under section 2(g) – and these are the definition sections that appear at the beginning of the bill – what we have now is:

“effect” includes

- (i) any effect on the environment, human health or safety, a species or an objective in a regional plan, regardless of the scale, nature, intensity, duration, frequency, probability or potential of the effect, and
- (ii) a cumulative effect that arises over time or in combination with other effects.

What we're looking at now, given the government amendments, is a list that reads: “effect” includes (i) any effect on the economy, the environment, a community, human health or safety, a species or an objective, et cetera, et cetera. So as you hear the minister talk about trying to achieve a balance between the environment, the economy, and the social sector, we've now had a prioritization. I read this as a prioritization. Having watched this minister for some time, I don't think this was accidental. I do see it as a prioritization, and that is the problem for me.

It's not because I happen at this point in time to be the Environment critic. Six months ago I was the finance critic. You know, these things come and go. I'm not doing this just because that's the position I'm holding at this time but because I've become increasingly aware as I look at choices that other countries have made. In some cases they get up and look out the window and go: “Okay. I've got a bank account, but – guess what? – there are no leaves on the trees outside,” or “I have to take my children to an indoor facility to play because their asthma is so bad they can't go outside, and given the number of particulates in the air that we have in this particular region, you know, they can't go outside and play or they'll have an asthma attack.”

It's that same argument about health and money. Money means nothing if you are dying of something. It means nothing. I mean, you might have fluffier pillows and more people standing around your bed. You're still sick. You still feel like crap. You're not enjoying life, and you're dying. So all that money isn't doing you any good. It's the same issue here. I don't think we have achieved much if what we do is say that the economy always gets priority and first position and preference as we start to make decisions about allocations of things here.

Now, I understand that we needed to put the word “economy” into this section, because there was already some signalling that those people that felt that they had an economic interest could claim that the framework had no impact on them because there was no right, no ability in the bill to make a decision based on an economic decision. People were signalling that they weren't going to co-operate because the bill didn't have the power to do that or the bill was not giving itself that power.

It's already getting late. This is the second night I've been in here for a long time. I won't belabour the point. We will have an opportunity to come back and talk about this some other time. It would be nice if we didn't have to do this all tonight, but I suspect the government is going to make us do it all tonight.

I think that is the concern. I think we make a mistake if we prioritize or signal that our preference is that the economy comes first in a list of prioritized considerations that we make as we look at land-use planning.

Thank you for the opportunity to put that on the record. I'm certainly willing to support all of the other sections in this government amendment, but I cannot support the section named A in the government amendments. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Chair. I might just respond to the comments that have been made about amendment A. Basically, I appreciated some of the compliments – thanks – from members opposite, but I think you're making a mountain out of a molehill here on the adding of “economy.” If you would go back and look at the land-use framework document, the final version that was released in December, it talks of objectives of economy, environment, and social objectives. That kind of triad is used pretty consistently.

I know that the Member for Edmonton-Centre thinks I'm crafty when it comes to language, but I think that in this case it's quite innocent. I'd point out that in several other sections – like, if you look at section 7 of the act, in section 7(a), talking about information, the wording is “economic, environmental and social characteristics.” If you look at section 7(b), again it talks about “economic, environmental and social opportunities.” In fact, most of that sequencing is just alphabetic, not anything else.

I think I can also say with some certainty that while there are a number of rules of statutory interpretation that apply to specific trumping in general and more recent trumping, less recent, and so forth, sequencing doesn't have any legal meaning at all when you have a series of things like that. I may not be innocent, but in this case the sequencing there is innocent and, I think, legally irrelevant.

I'd point out that there are four components bundled into section A. One of them is adding “environment.” The other three all deal with some of the accommodations for the Metis Settlements Act. It seems to me that it would be a mistake for your caucus to be on record voting against the accommodations that were requested by and made for the Métis settlements.

In light of what I've said about the irrelevance of sequencing and the importance of the Métis settlement components, you might want to reconsider voting against A.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak to amendment A1?

I will call the question. Hon. member, you had asked that all the votes be severed on this. Is this correct?

Ms Blakeman: Yes, please.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. We will go ahead with the voting on amendment A1. We'll be severing them all.

The Deputy Chair: We are now speaking on Bill 36. The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Chair. We have some amendments on section 3(1), that I would like to distribute at this time.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, this will be amendment A2. We'll pause for a moment while these are being distributed.

Hon. member, please proceed.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Chair. This amendment is really one of those simple things. It is just changing two words, from "may" to "shall." But it has a larger context to it in the fact that we could have done this in many situations through the act. As you are aware, there's some concern from this side of the House that there is a tremendous centralization of power that we have seen throughout this bill. We've seen many departments, many acts, many individuals – in fact, the whole province of Alberta divided up now into seven sections with one controlling minister and one controlling decision-maker, a cabinet with very little scrutiny to it at the end of the day.

This minor thing we are trying to do here by changing the language from "may" to "shall" is quite obvious. Instead of having some of that power always residing behind closed doors, always residing in the power of the cabinet, all the power located not in this Legislature, all the power not discussed and debated out there in public, well, this is one of those things that we believe and we're making a symbolic stand here a couple of times – well, it's more than a symbolic stand – a real stand that this type of language should have been more present in the act.

For instance, in this situation it should be happening. You can see that it's very simple, that the Lieutenant Governor in Council "may" establish integrated planning regions under this section, to the Lieutenant Governor in Council "shall" establish integrated planning regions. I assume that this is going to happen. In fact, it would be nonsensical for me to believe that this is probably not going to happen under the act.

However, just some of the stuff in the act that creates this, the overlying central power, is causing me some concern – actually, more than some concern, a lot of concern. I think there's a loss of democracy, a lot of control. Very few people have power over the course and direction of the province of Alberta for a long time. Let's face it, the governing power always has a certain amount of ability to do that. However, in this case it appears that some of this power is not being, I guess, wielded in the manner it was before or wielded differently now in that it goes to the Lieutenant Governor in Council. This is a significant change. We've seen it, I guess, now as a theme throughout, over the course of my Legislature time. I think it will be something new.

For many of the members who were elected here last March 5, maybe we will spend our – hopefully not. Let's not think that. Maybe that is the way things will be for time eternal, this type of legislation, and that's just become a matter of course. Maybe some day in this Legislature we'll forget that at one time things didn't always happen behind the front bench and that at some time things were different in Alberta, that more things were discussed in an open and honest fashion. Maybe that's just me reminiscing about the good old days, which were really not that good. We're maybe not that old, anyways.

Nonetheless, these are the worries we have as a caucus and the worries that I've heard expressed already by the third party. I was going to discuss it in question period, but the hon. minister was right, that we had a chance to discuss this tonight, and I feel glad that he corrected me on my faux pas this afternoon. I had the opportunity to get things out tonight.

That is primarily what the amendment is about. It was a pleasure to be allowed to speak on the amendment. You can gather from my comments why this amendment was made. I open it up to other people if they would wish to comment.

The Deputy Chair: Do members wish to speak to amendment A2? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. I'm pleased to be able to rise and support my colleague the Member for Calgary-Buffalo in the first of his amendments, which appears before the Assembly as amendment A2. Yes, I think you'll see that a number of the amendments that we're putting forward tonight are changing "may" to "shall." In this case we're looking to establish that the cabinet shall establish these integrated planning regions. We think that this is an important component of what's being considered under this, and we would like to see this amendment supported by all members of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Chair. The Member for Calgary-Buffalo indicated that he's concerned that "may" leaves too much discretion for cabinet. In a legal or technical sense he's correct. But the Member for Calgary-Buffalo also said, and I quote: it's nonsensical to believe that this is not going to happen. End of quote. And he's right. This is going to happen.

The hon. member said that he wants more accountability. Well, our definition of accountability is political accountability, and one of the ways we get that is for the opposition parties to hold us accountable. Changing the word from "may" to "shall" simply moves it from a political forum into the courts. On this side of the aisle we think there's more democracy in elections than there is in appointing judges. We think it's actually more democratic to have political accountability. So I'd encourage people to vote against this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Yeah. I understand the minister's point that there's a certain amount of democracy in having the cabinet being ultimately responsible, and it's a fair argument. I think at the end of the day, though, there has to be an apparatus or a body that can evaluate some of the decisions that are going to be made that deal with plans and things on the economy, the environment, the social nature – and I've already forgotten the last one – whereas I think decisions can be made that are outside of these best-laid plans and can go against, I guess, maybe the best interests of what the initial land-use framework was. It can get caught up a lot of times in the political rather than the best use or the best intentions of what this legislation was established to do, which I believe was really to balance things because we are reaching that tipping point. I do commend the minister on using that language again and in his report, the tipping point, which is here and is now and can't be ignored any longer.

Simply having some apparatus like the courts ensuring that, you know, these best-laid plans are followed – I'm not accusing anyone here or anyone in the future, but there have been in the past governments that have done things that have been untoward and gerrymandered with the best-laid plans. Hence, the court is one of those institutions that tries to act as a check. I'm not telling the hon. minister anything new. He has taught classes on this and developed his own theories on what is best, and I have some of my own.

So instead of going around in a circle, I'm going to leave it at that. I think I've made my point, and the hon. minister has as well. I appreciate him taking the time to answer that.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Just a very brief comment. Neither the hon. minister of sustainable resources nor I have a background in law. The hon. minister has a very admirable background in political science based on his years of teaching and having lived on both sides of the border and having seen the application of politics. But I do not believe that changing "may" to "shall" takes it out of the hands of the government and puts it into the hands of the court.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We're now back to the bill. The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you. I would like to move another amendment just to double-stamp the point here. I will be quick, as I know we're in a long evening. If we could just pass out the amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. We will pause for a moment. This will be amendment A3. Is this amendment to section 7?

Mr. Hehr: Yes.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. This will be amendment A3, and we'll pause while it's being distributed.

Please proceed, hon. member.

9:50

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I thought that this was a brilliant move when I did this earlier today. In hindsight now this might not be best. I already made my argument on this amendment, and just to say it again: this is a symbolic move that says there is a lot of power being centralized in this bill, and we on this side of the House are worried about this centralization of power. You can refer to the rest of my earlier notes in Hansard if you want to hear my arguments again, but I'll spare the hon. members that indulgence in the House at this time.

So those are my comments.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's a great honour to stand up and speak in favour of amendment A3, striking out "may" and substituting "shall." Substituting "shall" will definitely bring more certainty and more affirmative action. All of the information relevant to the history of the planning region, its geography, and its demographics must be taken into account and used in the development of regional plans. As an example, information on water supply is essential to any regional plan, so we need to ensure that these elements are considered. With "may" it may or may not happen, so I think with "shall," you know, we are ensuring that it will happen.

I would urge all members to support amendment A3 so that we can bring certainty, and that will bring clarity as well and some affirmative action in this. For those reasons I urge all members to support amendment A3.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Chair. I would oppose this amendment for the same reason that I opposed the last amendment. As the Member for Calgary-Buffalo said, and I quote: it's nonsensical to believe that this is not going to happen. It is going to happen. Changing "may" to "shall" is not going to change anything except, again, open the door to judicial review.

If you want accountability, I think Albertans would prefer political accountability rather than judge-made law, so I would encourage people to vote against this.

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A3 lost]

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd beg the indulgence of the Legislature to stand and speak for the first time to this bill and to get some comments on the record with respect to this bill, which in many respects is progress for Alberta and represents a much-needed dimension to planning in the province after many years of recognizing excessive demands on the land, unfettered development, especially in areas of intense growth and development like the oil sands. It's an area that we have been pressing for years for a bigger plan on.

Failing to plan is a plan to fail, and I think this government is recognizing that. In these times, particularly when we're seeing limits placed upon developments by infrastructure, by social impacts, by limits on the environment, and indeed by climate change, we have to take very seriously the commitment to a broad-based, integrated land-use framework. I applaud the minister and this government for moving forward on this, a challenging and important initiative that has had some consultation. Obviously, some of the consultation has been taken into consideration with the development of this bill, the land-use framework, otherwise known as the Alberta Land Stewardship Act.

I just want to be clear on the record that the principles are vitally important; the practice is also vitally important. For many of the individuals and groups who have reviewed this with us and, certainly, in my review of it, there are some very positive elements and some real concerns, obviously, in the details of how this is implemented and in the regulations. Some of the issues have been raised before in this House. I simply have a need to put on the record some of those concerns, chief of which are the broad discretion of the cabinet and the lack of accountability.

It's clear to us that without a very strong alternate view and an option to appeal and to address some of the political influence that essentially can interfere in land-use decisions, there is a vulnerability to a plan which places so much power behind closed doors. We want to be very clear on record that without more checks and balances and an opportunity for transparency of these decisions – who is benefiting, who is paying, how these issues are going to be honouring the spirit of the land-use framework, that look at cumulative impacts, that look at long-term impacts, that look at not only the economic bottom line but at some of the serious implications for balancing this province in the way of social, environmental, and economic sustainability that Albertans expect of us and demand of us – we have no excuse for not ensuring some checks and balances that protect our future and our children's future.

The guiding principles are there. The implementation raises real concerns. We will be watching closely, as many of the groups in the province will be. There are obviously municipalities, rural districts, industries that also want to see their children and their grandchildren taken care of and want to see a mechanism in which the implementation of this plan is clearly in the long-term interests of the province and is not compromising some of the good principles that have been expressed but are not represented in the actual implementation.

From our point of view, the need to limit the control of cabinet, a political body which has limited science, limited access to thinking in terms of the longer term, based on political interests: we have serious concerns that the checks and balances may not be what they could be, and we hope that some of the amendments that are being recommended will be considered seriously to not only do the right thing but to be seen to be doing the right thing in terms of the public perception.

Albertans want to share in this plan. Albertans have a deep and abiding commitment to the long term and need to have very substantive input into the regional plans, which are very well based upon river systems and watersheds, as they should be. What isn't as clear and isn't as accountable to local citizens and other interests is how their input can truly be reflected in the ultimate decisions that are made for their region.

So I hope that in putting some trust in this government and supporting the essential thrust of this bill, we will see the realization of some of these checks and balances and that, indeed, we will honour the spirit and the reality of the democratic process by ensuring that people do have access to significant influence on how this will be implemented.

With those comments, Mr. Chairman, I will take my seat and continue to listen to further amendments which are constructively designed, again, to ensure not only the spirit of accountability but the reality of accountability.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

10:00

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak to Bill 36? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: I'd like to make an amendment to 52(1).

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, what section are you talking about?

Mr. Hehr: Section 52(1). Sorry.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. Hon. member, we'll pause for a moment while this amendment is being distributed.

Hon. members, this will be amendment A4, as moved by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. This amendment comes straight from the Environmental Law Centre. They've recommended it, so I believe it. It made sense to me at the time. They did some work on this front to try to better this bill. I'll actually even just read into the record what their suggestions are. These amendments would make additional "may" action items into "shall" items. There's no reason why each of these items should not be mandatory.

Bill 36 makes many elements of the process structure discretionary. It is not mandatory that Cabinet establish land-use planning regions, in spite of the detailed descriptions and maps of the intended regions in the LUF document. Nor is Cabinet required to develop land-use plans for any regions that may be created. All aspects of how planning should take place, from the scope of the process to the roles of the governance bodies to the forms of public consultation and communication, are left to be determined by Cabinet.

These are actual suggestions from the Environmental Law Centre. Something to this effect: cabinet is required to make planning regions.

On this one in particular:

A regional planning process must set out the roles of the various governance bodies, establish the terms of reference for the process, specify the required public and stakeholder communication and consultation, and require the development of provincial land-use policies to guide regional land-use decision-making (changing "may" to "shall" for [this] section).

Anyway, this amendment would add the requirement to follow through with this component, so that's why I put this forward. I know that it's very similar to what we had before.

I'd invite some other hon. members to speak out on this issue.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm glad to rise and support this amendment. Again, the challenge to the minister and to this government is to shift from discretionary to required action, especially when this government has so much control over the regional planning councils and, indeed, the secretariat. There is a real conflict between the kind of control that this government is taking over the process and what Albertans are telling us they want to have in terms of not only the spirit of participation but the fact of participation.

Without more clarity and with the power vested in the cabinet, it's clear to many of us that we are vesting in a few people without evidence of their capacity to make these kinds of decisions in the best interests of a particular region way too much power. We on this side feel very strongly that there is far too much control left in the hands of elected representatives, to be sure, but not necessarily representatives of particular areas where regional plans are going to be made.

This is, again, an area that raises questions about the sincerity of this government with respect to democracy, democratic process, appeal processes, accountability, transparency. These are words that we bandy about, but we're looking for evidence in the legislation that we are serious about that. I would urge the minister to consider this afresh and look for ways to send a very strong message that people are welcome, that people's views and people's influence on this process are going to be required, and that there are checks and balances on this government and its arbitrary use of decisions that may or may not be in the long-term public interest.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: Do any other members wish to speak? The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Dr. Morton: Yeah. I'd, again, encourage members to vote against this amendment. I doubt it'll come as any surprise to the members opposite that for the one regional advisory council that's already been appointed and met, we have already created terms of reference. Section 52 is about terms of reference. We've done terms of reference for the first regional advisory committee, and we're in the process of doing them up for the South Saskatchewan. So, again, this is unnecessary, and I'd encourage people to vote against it.

The Deputy Chair: Do other members wish to speak?

Dr. Swann: To the minister. The terms of reference have been created. The question is: who created the terms of reference? How much participation did the local individuals have, and to what extent are they able to make the changes that may well become necessary to those terms of reference?

The Deputy Chair: Do any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Yes. My question would be along the same lines perhaps as the leader. I'd like to have it clarified why the terms of reference would be different for each region.

Dr. Morton: There'll be some similarities in the terms of reference for the different regions, but there'll be differences as well because the different types of environmental challenges that face the different regions vary from region to region. In the lower Athabasca you're dealing with oil sands. There are no oil sands in the South Saskatchewan. In the South Saskatchewan you're dealing with some fairly serious water scarcity issues. Again, while there are some water issues in the lower Athabasca, they're of a very different type. So there'll be some similarities in the terms of reference but also differences that reflect the differences in the challenges that face different parts of the province.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak?

Mr. Hehr: I'd like to move an amendment to 50(1)(c).

An Hon. Member: We're still voting on this one.

Mr. Hehr: Oh. Sorry about that. I apologize, hon. member.

The Deputy Chair: If no one else wishes to speak, I will call the question on amendment A4 as moved by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

[Motion on amendment A4 lost]

The Deputy Chair: Back to Bill 36.

Mr. Hehr: I'd like to move an amendment. It's on 50(1)(c).

10:10

The Deputy Chair: We'll pause for a moment while that amendment is being distributed.

Hon. members, this is amendment A5. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. To officially move the amendment and read it into the program: in section 50(1)(c) by striking out "describe the public and stakeholder communication and consultation required" and substituting "describe the public and stakeholder communication and consultation that must be undertaken during the development of each regional plan."

The hon. minister of sustainable resources pointed out the need to have unique plans for unique regions. He talked about different issues, different challenges; for example, how the oil sands of the Athabasca region are different from the drought-parched areas of the South Saskatchewan. What amendment A5 attempts to do is to give the people who are on the ground in those locations an opportunity to have direct input.

Now, I've noted in previous comments that I appreciate the fact that there will be five-year reviews built into the system. But if you have people onside to begin with, the chances of successful reviews are going to be that much better. In other words, if you plan correctly in the first place, then evaluating the plan should produce the results that were your objectives and priorities. And it's absolutely essential that the people in the region have significant input.

This further clarifies the public and stakeholder consultation to take place during the development of regional plans. It ensures that the public will have a chance to be involved in the regional planning process by including the words "that must be undertaken."

I don't believe that the word "must" requires a court intervention. What it does require is that the people who are most affected by the plan in their region have the opportunity not only to be consulted but to be collaborative participants in the development of the plan. That is the reasoning behind amendment A5.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Chair. Again, a well-intentioned amendment but one that's unnecessary. There are ample provisions already for the public in each region to participate in the development of the regional plans. The regional advisory councils include 15 to 17 members of the communities, that represent a broad cross-section of sectors and interests within each region. Again, looking at the lower Athabasca region, that regional advisory council is already holding forums and open houses in the communities in the lower Athabasca to solicit public input. It's not a question of what might happen; this is already happening. So the amendment is unnecessary. I'd urge members to vote against it.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak?

We'll call the question on amendment A5 as moved by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity on behalf of the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

[Motion on amendment A5 lost]

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's my honour to rise and make an amendment under section 15.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. We'll pause while that amendment is being passed out.

Please proceed, hon. leader.

Dr. Swann: As it's proposed, the Member for Calgary-Buffalo moves that Bill 36 be amended in section 15 by striking out subsections (3), (4), and (5). This will remove sections of the bill that prevent a person from bringing an application or proceeding before the court. As it is currently in the bill, section 15 is, frankly, undemocratic, and clearly we on this side believe with many Albertans that there needs to be more accountability and access to the courts, as there would be under any significant issue in this province. We need a system of checks and balances. Albertans must be given that freedom and that opportunity to challenge decisions that are blatantly wrong. To remove that flies in the face of what this government says that it stands for.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Chair. This is the first time that I've actually had the opportunity to stand up and speak to this bill. I would like the opportunity to say that I realize that the work required to put together a bill of this magnitude was enormous and was certainly very overdue, as we all know. I compliment the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development for shepherding this bill through the multiple other ministries that were involved. I think it's been an impressive show of focus and ability. Is it perfect? No, but it is a good start.

As with everything new it takes time for actions to prove themselves, but I don't think that I see enough latitude for correction outside of the centralized power of the ministry. Despite the explanation by the minister of his differencing between politics and the judicial – I agree that that's the ideal. However, as I see what I believe to be an increasing democratic deficit in the province, I look more and more to the courts for openness and fairness. This is not how the process should end; however, it appears that that's what's happening.

Should this bill be tweaked? Absolutely, and that's why these amendments are being brought forward, certainly, one by one. This particular amendment falls right into the remarks that I just made, that I really believe that there isn't enough outside latitude. Bill 36 has limited avenues for Albertans to challenge cabinet's power and decisions that may be inconsistent with the regional plan. If they're inconsistent, it still allows that power to override, actually, the regional planning groups, that the minister has referred to. Bill 36 has effectively shut the door on Albertans' ability to challenge decisions by judicial review. Judicial review is an important tool because it allows the courts to review laws and decisions made by the government to determine whether they were made fairly, in accordance with required procedures and authority.

Bill 36 also expressly prohibits any individual or group from bringing an application for judicial review as well as any other cause of action related to noncompliance with the regional plan. Instead, all judicial review applications will be channelled through a government representative, the stewardship commissioner, who will determine whether or not the matter may be brought to the courts. That is a tremendous amount of power in one person's hands. I believe that it is way too much. I think that it is overpowering. I also think it would be very intimidating for anyone who would challenge that particular stewardship commissioner. That commissioner will determine whether it would go to the courts, but since the stewardship commissioner would be appointed by the province and will be a member of the provincial civil service, it's unlikely that he or she would bring an application for judicial review against cabinet or a provincial government department or agency for noncompliance with the regional plan.

I think that in a case like this the expression "follow the money" is one that could be used. I think the question again is: who signs the paycheque? That's where the power lies. Who really signs the paycheque here? We can often determine what people's behaviour would be.

Only the courts should be permitted to determine whether an application for a judicial review has merit. This is not the role of a government appointee as it undermines the check-and-balance function of the judicial review process. As my words, I hope, have indicated, I feel very strongly that always the elected political side should take precedence over the courts. I think that when the BNA Act came back to Canada, a lot of that was shifted to the courts, and I think that the power should be in this House. However, I also firmly believe that there must be an open process whereby people can challenge those decisions and not feel intimidated and not feel that they have to knuckle under or, in fact, back off. As I've said before, I think that this is a question of following the money. Who signs the paycheque? You can figure out what their behaviour would be.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I, too, would like to add to the comments by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East. Simply put, this is an example of the power grab, of cabinet's power and authority in not allowing the traditional judicial review process. This is an important tool, and it would allow courts to review these laws and decisions made by the government. These laws and decisions are made by the government, hopefully, in the best interests of the people, and they should be interpreted by the courts. Sometimes if we leave these things in the hands of politicians, there are external pressures that come up from time to time that impact their decisions that may not be within the spirit in which they originated the initial legislation.

That's what judicial review was created for. It's tried to take that temptation out of the hands of politicians who want to gerrymander or monkey with the system to create things. We're all human beings here. We all have pressures. We've got people yelling at us about this, yelling at us about that. It's pretty easy to say: "All right. We'll make this decision this one time. Yeah, it might go against the general principle of things, but it's only one time."

[Mr. Cao in the chair]

Once you start doing those things, once you start not allowing for judicial review, well, that's not very good. At least, that's the perspective I'm putting forward. Many people I've talked to about this bill are worried about that concentration of power and lack of judicial review available to people who are using this framework.

Anyway, those are my comments. I appreciate the chair's time.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Very briefly, this mistrust of the judicial system is a concern to me because that's at the heart of a number of amendments that we're putting forward.

We've just had an hon. member – and I can name him now – Ron Stevens, appointed to the Court of Queen's Bench. I would assume that whether it's a federal government appointee or whether it's a provincial government appointee, these people are chosen based on their capabilities.

When we're talking about the seven watersheds, the DFO, the Department of Fisheries and Oceans, is going to have input into a number of the decisions that will be made, and hopefully it will be of a collaborative, collegial nature. But whether it's, for example, the long-anticipated completion of the southwest ring road going over the Weaselhead through successful collaboration of several government levels, including the band council of the Tsuu T'ina and the Tsuu T'ina Nation voting on the agreement, there is a collaborative process that provides input.

With regard to the judicial process decisions are going to be made, and to suggest that judges have their own intent, that their intent somehow is different and selfish in interpretation – these are people who are chosen from amongst the ranks based on their legal background. They are appointed based on their capabilities. So to suggest that somehow the judicial system is going to operate in opposition to an established government, I don't see that as a problem.

It's checks and balances. We have elected politicians, and we have appointed judges. But who appoints them? It's the politicians. So it's a closed loop, and both have to be there. That's why this particular check that is being proposed in amendment A6 is of such importance. It's a matter of trust. Do we trust the people we appoint?

The Chair: Any other hon. member wishing to speak on amendment A6? The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Chair. What was only hinted at in the earlier amendments is now out in the open for everybody to see. The opposition members would like to see as much of this as possible pushed over into the courts.

Dr. Swann: It's freedom.

Dr. Morton: It's not freedom. It's loss of control. It has nothing to do with the impartiality of the judges. Judges have no training whatsoever in the scientific and statistical analysis that's typical in this type of policy. To move those kinds of decisions over to the judges is to move it into a forum where there's, frankly, no expertise. Judges are trained to make legal decisions. These are policy decisions. They'll be made by responsible ministers working with civil servants who are trained in the various biological and environmental sciences. That's where it should be.

Frankly, I think that if we're just doing political self-interest, confusing who's responsible for public policy by making this all judicially reviewable, that would probably be in our self-interest because then we couldn't be held accountable for it. What we're doing in this piece of legislation is saying that the government of Alberta, at least in this first iteration, in this first 10 years of land-use will make the decisions, and you can hold us accountable. There won't be any confusion about whether it's judges that are making the decisions or not. Frankly, I think this shows a certain amount of courage on the part of the government, and I'd urge members to vote against this amendment.

Dr. Swann: Again, Mr. Chairman, nobody is saying that politicians shouldn't be making policy decisions. What we're saying is that all citizens should have access to the courts when they feel they are being violated, when fundamental values and principles and planning of a community are violated by a particular plan. It's a check and balance. I think most citizens in a civilized, democratic society need and recognize the need for an option. We're not saying it would be used frequently at all, but it has to be there.

The Chair: Any other members wish to speak on amendment A6? Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question.

[Motion on amendment A6 lost]

The Chair: On the bill, the hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I have several amendments that I'd like to put forward, and I'll start with the first one.

The Chair: This amendment is now known as A7.

Hon. leader of the third party, please continue on A7.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. This amendment has several parts. The essential intent of it is to require the government to be committed to its own policy and to require a number of things that currently are optional to become mandatory.

In the first instance, section 5, the entire section, which is entitled Lieutenant Governor in Council Not Constrained, will be struck. Essentially, it now says that a regional plan may be made or amended whether or not a regional advisory council has been appointed for a planning region to which a regional plan or an amendment applies, a regional advisory council or other person has provided advice, or that the secretariat has provided advice with respect to a regional plan. These are all requirements. This section allows the cabinet, essentially, to make or amend a plan regardless of whether or not those steps have been followed. We think those steps ought to be followed, so we're proposing to strike section 5.

Section 50 is amended as well. In this particular case there's a long list of things under section 50 that the Lieutenant Governor in Council may do. This takes the first several, (a) through (e), and makes them mandatory on the part of the government so that the government must authorize the commencement of a regional planning process, a process to amend a regional plan, or a process to review a regional plan. It must set the terms of reference. Part (c) has already been voted, I think, in a Liberal amendment, so you'll see that that part is whited out. But it also requires the description of the role and function of a regional advisory council and the direct recognition, consideration, or development of provincial policies and guidance on how they are to be respected and so on. Those become must do things.

The remaining sections are put in a subsection (1.1) and retain the current status that they have; in other words, that the Lieutenant Governor in Council may do those things.

In section 8 of the bill a similar process is done where section 8(1), which is already a must, adds a number of portions from sub (2) where it currently says that a regional plan "may" do these things. This amendment would make it a requirement to provide for one or more thresholds for the purpose of achieving or maintaining an objective; to name, describe, or specify indicators to determine or to assist in determining whether an objective or policy in the regional plan has been, is being, or will be achieved; and for describing or specifying the monitoring of thresholds, indicators, and policies and so on. All now are moved into section 8(1), that is requirements. The remaining clauses there are moved into section 8(2) and retain the status of "may."

Mr. Chairman, basically, this amendment is designed to increase the mandatory requirements on the government with respect to the planning process. So much of this bill is optional. So much of it gives a wide discretion to the government, wide powers to the government, centralization of authority but also a great deal of latitude and freedom on the part of the government to do what it wishes, when it wishes, and how it wishes to do that.

We believe that the process that has been set out here is generally good, but we believe that municipalities, individuals, landowners, all of the stakeholders need to have greater certainty that these plans will in fact actually be carried out as they are intended and not just turned on a dime or abrogated because the government decides. These are by way of additional constraints on government power under this plan, and I know that many members of different philosophies in this House believe in having constraints on government power.

I would hope that members would see fit to support this amendment. I think that it strengthens the planning process, constrains government power, and democratizes the process of planning in this process.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity on amendment A7.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Speaking specifically to A7 and supporting it, I would refer to this as the do as I say, not as I do amendment because what it does is require the government to follow through. It requires the government to commit to carrying out its stated policy. It requires the government to live up to Albertans' expectations.

Now, I'll wait, obviously, to hear the hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development's reply, but what I see is the intent of amendment A7 is to remove the wiggle room. I don't think that in the wording it brings the judiciary into the enforcement. It clearly points out that the government is responsible to not only itself but to the people of Alberta who elected it to carry out its stated policy.

We do have arm's-length individuals who attempt to keep the government on track. We have our Auditor General, who looks at the financial aspects, and we have the Ombudsman, who looks at the fairness aspects. Basically, I see this as actually empowering the government to live up to its stated policies. If anything, I see it as empowering rather than restricting. It's saying: you've said you're going to do this; live up to your stated policy.

Therefore, I support amendment A7.

The Chair: Any other hon. member who wishes to speak on amendment A7? The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Again, I'd urge members to vote against amendment A7. It's at best unnecessary and at worst pernicious. It's unnecessary because we're doing all these things anyhow, and it's pernicious because it basically takes away the discretion and flexibility that's appropriate in a policy exercise of this scope and novelty. As I said in question period yesterday, there's no off-the-shelf recipe book from some other jurisdiction that has already done something like this. This is uncharted territory. It makes sense to leave discretion and flexibility for the first iteration, or first generation.

I don't see too many youngsters over on the other side there, but there's another generation of political leaders who will probably be here in 10 years on our side. Maybe once we've had a decade of experience with this, some of the changes that the members opposite would like we can firm up, change the may's to musts, but for this first go-round I think the "may" is a much more appropriate approach.

Again I'd urge people to vote against the amendment.

The Chair: Seeing no other speakers on amendment A7, the chair shall now call the question.

[Motion on amendment A7 lost]

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre on the bill.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. I would like to move one of the amendments on behalf of my colleague the Member for Calgary-Buffalo, and that is amending section 61(6). I'll wait for that to be distributed.

The Chair: We'll pause a few moments for distribution of the amendment. It is now known as amendment A8.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, please proceed.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. I'm moving this amendment, which would be A8, on behalf of my colleague the Member for Calgary-Buffalo. This amendment is amending the Alberta Land Stewardship Act in section 61(6) by striking out "or without."

Section 61(6) reads:

If the secretariat is satisfied that there is clearly non-compliance with a regional plan, the stewardship commissioner may refer the matter, with or without a report.

In other words, we would be taking out the "or without," so it would say that the stewardship commissioner may refer the matter, with a report or recommendations, to either or both of the following who have jurisdiction or authority with respect to the matter: (a) a Minister or government department, or (b) a local government body.

The point of this is to require that reports would be provided for cases of noncompliance as compared to reports being optional. I think what this does, ultimately, is give an audit trail, a clear record of where there has been noncompliance. It's a fairly small amendment but, I think, one that would be helpful overall in the bill, and I urge my colleagues to accept this amendment. I think it increases the accountability of the process.

Thanks very much.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity on amendment A8.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. We're awfully reliant in this province on self-reporting. If someone hadn't basically externally blown the whistle on 1,500 dead ducks or hadn't blown the whistle on human waste being released from one of the sites in the oil sands, chances are we wouldn't have found out about them.

Now, there aren't sufficient personnel in either Sustainable Resource Development or in Environment to do the tracking, so what this says is that when there is a case of noncompliance and it has been pointed out, the government is required to follow up on the circumstance. The government has the capabilities to prioritize the reporting, but there's an expectation in this particular amendment, A8, I believe, that the government act upon all reports. If the government doesn't feel it's important to act, then what's the point of the government?

The Chair: Are any other hon. members wishing to speak on amendment A8?

Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question.

[Motion on amendment A8 lost]

The Chair: The hon. leader of the third party.

10:50

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I have another amendment, which I'll provide.

The Chair: This amendment is now known as A9.

Hon. leader of the third party, please proceed.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I move that Bill 36, Alberta Land Stewardship Act, be amended as follows: section 4(1) is amended by striking out “may make or amend regional plans for planning regions” and substituting “must make a regional plan for each planning region, and may subsequently amend any regional plan.”

Mr. Chairman, the intent here is similar to the previous amendment that I raised. The introductory clause, entitled How Regional Plans are Made and Amended, says that “the Lieutenant Governor in Council may make or amend regional plans for planning regions.” Again, we want to hold the government’s feet to the fire with respect to its commitment to establishing regional plans, so we are simply saying that it must make a regional plan, and it may subsequently amend any regional plan. A very simple change, a significant one, and I urge members to support it.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity on amendment A9.

Mr. Chase: Yes. I think it must have something to do with the fact that we’re amending an environmental bill, but I’m going to refer to A9 as the daisy-petal-picking amendment. What the hon. member of the third party is requiring of the government is commitment. As opposed to I may or I may not, he is saying: I must. It’s that type of commitment that our relationships are. Whether they’re our relationships with our significant others or our relationship with our constituents, there is an expectation, a requirement, a commitment. Thank you.

The Chair: Any other hon. member wishing to speak on amendment A9?

Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question.

[Motion on amendment A9 lost]

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I’m rising to put an amendment from my colleague from Calgary-Buffalo on Bill 36, Alberta Land Stewardship Act, in section 18(3)(b) by adding “who is non-compliant,” after “person;”. I’ll wait till they pass it out.

The Chair: Right. We’ll pause for the pages to distribute the amendment. This amendment is now known as A10.

Mr. Kang: This amendment focuses on the power of the court around the conduct of a person. The very broad granting of power in Bill 36 is also evident in relation to compliance and enforcement matters. While it is most common to create offences and penalties in either statutes or regulations, the bill enables cabinet to create offences and establish penalties through regional plans. This distances the penal aspect of the land-use planning system further from this apparent legislation, Bill 36, and makes it more difficult for those who may be subject to land-use plans to determine the legal requirements they must meet to avoid a penalty. Further, the Court of Queen’s Bench is empowered to issue orders dealing with noncompliance with Bill 36, a regulation, or a regional land-use plan.

Under section 18(3) the court’s powers include the ability to make any order to manage the conduct of a person without further limitations. These compliance powers should be enforced in areas of noncompliance and need not be overly broad. The court’s powers in issuing orders to deal with noncompliance should be modified to limit it to addressing conduct causing noncompliance.

I think for those reasons I urge all members to support the amendment to section 18(3)(b). Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity on amendment A10.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. What A10 provides is the rules under which noncompliance would be determined. It spells them out clearly so that a person realizes under what circumstance they’re not being compliant. It takes the mystery out of it, it puts the regulations in rules, and it also requires enforcement. Just simply stating, “you’re noncompliant and, therefore, we’re taking your land or we’re redirecting the usage of that land,” without having the rules is not acceptable. So what, as I say, amendment A10 attempts to do is clearly define the rules of noncompliance and clearly define what the enforcement measures for noncompliance will be. It creates a level playing field, and it creates the rules by which the game will be played on that field.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development on A10.

Dr. Morton: Yes, Mr. Chair. I have trouble saying this, but I actually think this amendment might make sense.

Mr. Mason: It’s just late, Ted.

Dr. Morton: Yeah. Yeah.

All the other subsections to 18(3) – (a), (c), (d), and (e) – talk about noncompliance. This one is open-ended. I think, actually, this would be an improvement, so I encourage people to accept this one.

The Chair: Seeing no other to speak on amendment A10, the chair shall now call the question.

[Motion on amendment A10 carried]

The Chair: The hon. leader of the third party.

11:00

Mr. Mason: Okay. Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I have another – no, Mr. Chairman. I’m not going to make that amendment at the moment.

The Chair: Any other hon. member wishing to speak on Bill 36? Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question on the bill.

[The clauses of Bill 36 as amended agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 34 Drug Program Act

The Chair: Are there any comments or amendments to be offered with this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Yes. Unfortunately, Bill 34 with regard to drug programming has limitations. I do appreciate the fact that the government has, for example, increased funding to recognize I believe it's Avastin for fighting cancer. That's a very important recognition. However, this particular Bill 34 doesn't go far enough in terms of approval of recommended treatments that other provinces have noted, and it doesn't sort of reach out in terms of bringing in at least the other provinces – B.C., Saskatchewan, and Manitoba – and making it a more inclusive program and, therefore, a less expensive program, which would benefit Albertans because of its inclusive nature. Bill 34 just basically does not go far enough in terms of the approval.

Also, within Bill 34 we see sort of vestiges of the concerns with regard to seniors and funding for Blue Cross aspects. Yes, we're pleased that, for example, 60 per cent of Albertans are going to pay nothing or next to nothing, but unfortunately that tab is now being forced on the remaining 40 per cent. Those seniors who have contributed to such an extent all of their lives, contributed both in the aspects of their work and also in their contributions to the economy, are not recognized within Bill 34.

What has happened is that the government has basically done away with health care premiums, which all of us were required to pay, and I'm very grateful that those health premiums have been done away with. There has been some discussion that had we had that extra billion dollars from those fees, we might not be facing the imposed cuts. However, I do believe that health care is a universal benefit. By keeping people healthy, whether it be through proposals like Bill 34 in terms of drug programs or recognizing the preventative, proactive care, keeping seniors in their homes longer, a whole variety of support systems, we'll end up with an improved health care delivery.

There is no doubt that the most expensive increase in health care delivery is in drugs. The sooner we as a province collaborate and co-ordinate our drug purchases and push for a national pharmacare program, the better off we'll be. Unfortunately, Bill 34 doesn't take us sufficiently far in that direction, and therefore we are unable to support it.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wish to speak on the bill? The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I want to say a few words with respect to this. The bill establishes a drug program, but it doesn't specify the contents of it, so it gives enormous latitude to the minister, almost a blank slate, to develop something as he wishes.

Now, I know that the government is concerned about the growth of health care costs. Health care costs grow in significant part because of the rapid increase in the costs of new drugs. There are a number of reasons for this. First of all, some of the biggest companies, with the greatest cash flows and some of the highest profits in the world, convinced the Mulroney government about 15 years ago to extend patent protection for drugs. This was strongly opposed by the generic drug industry, which is largely a Canadian-based industry. But the large and international pharmaceutical companies prevailed on the government to essentially increase patent protection for new drugs from 10 to 20 years.

Now, the effect of that was essentially to provide a monopoly on new drugs for the company, the pharmaceutical corporation, that developed them in the first place for more or less the full marketable life of that drug. By the time 20 years are up, there are usually new drugs on the market, and the drug becomes obsolete. That essentially means that there's no effective competition from some of the smaller Canadian-based generic drug companies. So generics have declined in significance as a result of that. Giving monopolies to the international pharmaceutical companies, of course, has an impact on prices, has an impact on the costs, therefore, to the health care system. Now, that's a federal issue, but I think it was a very, very negative development. Of course, the pharmaceutical corporations promised to do more research and development in Canada, but I think that that promise has largely been unmet.

Now, we buy a great deal of drugs in our health care system. As I said earlier, it's one of the major cost items that we have. We took a look at this a few years ago, and we took a look at different systems that are used, for example the formulary in British Columbia, and so on. But one of the most interesting examples of a drug administration in the western world was in New Zealand. Now, New Zealand is a small country, but it has a population of about 3 million. It's about the size of Alberta in that sense. They were able to make very substantial changes to their costs by introducing a system where all of the drugs for the entire health care system were purchased in bulk, and they used the negotiating power that they had as a bulk buyer to negotiate lower prices with the big drug companies. Of course, they do use generic drugs wherever possible, as well.

We thought that that was an interesting approach and one that might be useful here in Alberta. The research that we did indicated that in the first year this type of system in Alberta could save the health care system $110 million. Those numbers are a few years old now, but we thought that the research was very solid on that. So the question we had was: if you have a choice between reducing your health care expenditures by cutting services to people or charging them more or paying less to big companies that supply you with drugs or some other input for your health care system, which would you choose? We certainly chose and would choose and would urge the government to choose paying less to the big pharmaceutical corporations for our drugs.

In fact, we did a little bit more research in terms of solving the problem that the government is tackling here of the seniors' drug program. The problem had been for some time that prescriptions for seniors were capped at $25 per prescription. Of course, lots and lots of seniors have multiple prescriptions, and as we talked more and more to seniors, we found that it was quite common for seniors to have eight or 10 or a dozen or even more prescriptions, each one capped at $25 a month. But eight prescriptions at $25 per month is still $200 a month.

If you took the saving that you could find and applied it to seniors' drugs, you could in fact reduce the copayment that seniors pay to $25 a month for all the prescriptions that they had, not cumulative but just $25 a month, if they had one or a dozen prescriptions. You could do that using the savings from the bulk purchasing program, and you'd be able to improve the seniors' drug program substantially with absolutely no increase to the taxpayer, simply from the savings that you'd achieved by purchasing your drugs.

Now, I know that the minister is struggling to find some other way to do that. He doesn't want to do it our way, and I guess that's not a big shock to us. Nevertheless, we think that this approach is one of the innovative ways of finding savings in the health care system. I don't think people pay their taxes in order to pay premium prices on drugs.

I think one of the problems that we have with this is not only that there's a group of seniors who now will pay premiums which are geared to income. We continue to believe that a universal system is preferable to an income-tested system. In our view, there is already a very complex bureaucracy established for testing income, and that is, in fact, the income tax system. Of course, in Alberta that's a little different because we have the flat tax. Nevertheless, income-tested programs add bureaucracy and don't add a great deal of equity, in our view. So I want to just indicate that we object to the proposal that this be income tested, and we particularly object to making the drug program optional because we feel that some seniors who feel they cannot afford the premiums will opt out, and I think that that will produce very unfortunate results.

I think there are some positive things. I think the establishment of a single government-sponsored drug plan with a common drug list is a good thing. Currently there are five ministries that provide that coverage, and I think that that consolidation is probably a good one.

Mr. Chairman, I want to say that we're not going to support this bill because we believe it leaves too much power with the minister to determine the program and because of the things that we are aware of about the proposed seniors' drug program not being as equitable or, in our view, as efficient as it should be. The focus, as we say, needs to be first and foremost on cutting costs and negotiating favourable prices with pharmaceutical suppliers and to do that on a comprehensive, system-wide basis. That's the approach that we think fits the bill, and this bill doesn't.

Those are my comments, Mr. Chairman. Thanks very much.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity on Bill 34.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Speaking specifically to Bill 34, the Drug Program Act, I'll be succinct. Society is judged by how it protects its most vulnerable. Seniors, when they're in a hospital circumstance, are frequently referred to in a derogatory fashion as bed blockers. Why would we not want to keep seniors in their homes as long as they possibly could ensure their quality of life? Seniors shouldn't be forced to choose between the cost of a drug or the cost of groceries or the cost of maintaining their homes. There should be support for seniors within their homes. Part of that support is what the government took away in 1994, and that was the educational portion of the property tax that was supposed to be eliminated for seniors once the good times came in, and we've had 14 years of good times leading up to this recessionary period.

The most expensive part of our life, unfortunately, is the end and treating people with dignity and being proactive. The costs of subsidizing all seniors' drugs is considerably less than the cost of daily treatment in hospitals at a cost of approximately $1,800 a day or the palliative care that is only available to seniors who have the extra means to afford that kind of care. We need to allow seniors to not only live with dignity but in their final days to die with dignity, and part of that process – and it becomes increasingly so – is drug support.

My concern is that Bill 34, while it does create a province-wide drug program, which has the potential for saving, puts too much of that expense onto seniors themselves, and it's for that reason that I'm unable to support it.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall on Bill 34.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I also want to speak on Bill 34, the Drug Program Act. I also have concerns with the bill. For seniors the fact is that their income is based on line 150 from the income tax form and the total income instead of line 236, which is net income. For seniors who do not make enough money to pay income taxes, this is not applicable, but income thresholds need to be higher. The fact is that in effect this is an increased tax on seniors and is against the provincial 10 per cent flat tax, and it is primarily sick seniors who will end up paying more.

The fact that what seniors will have to pay will be based on income, they believe, goes against the principle of universality, and seniors believe that it is an invasion of their privacy that they will in fact be revealing their income, whatever they make. Mostly seniors plan their retirements around what they believed would be stable pharmaceutical costs, and with the economic downturn many seniors had major losses on their retirement funds. This plan will mainly affect middle-income seniors while having little effect on low- or high-income seniors.

Changing the Alberta Blue Cross nongroup coverage. There are currently more than 145,000 Albertans who are enrolled in nongroup coverage with Blue Cross, and the premiums for the nongroup Blue Cross have not been adjusted since 1993. Coverage is available to any Albertan and also to the individuals with pre-existing conditions.

Currently the nongroup premiums are $20.50 for singles and $41 for families. Proposed changes in the pharmaceutical strategy would be to increase the premiums for singles to $41 and $82 for families by July 1, 2009. There will be another increase for singles to $63.50 per month and for families to $118 by July 10, 2010. This is a 200 per cent increase from the what premiums currently are. The government has said that a subsidized premium rate will be available and that rates would be released in the coming weeks, in December most likely, yet this information has not been released.

The main reason that the government gave in the pharmaceutical strategy for increasing premiums for nongroup coverage was to achieve alignment with employer and private health insurance premiums, but this is not going to help the people who are vulnerable. They probably will be pushed to the sidelines. Maybe they will end up paying more with bad health, and it will be costing Alberta health care more if the people are not taking their medications if they cannot afford to buy them.

There are other reasons for concern here. Why is the government trying to align government-provided programs with the private insurance companies? The government is not supposed to be looking out for the best interests of the insurance companies; they are supposed to be looking out for the best interests of Albertans. How much money is Blue Cross losing before the premiums will be increased? How much money does Blue Cross stand to make with an increase in premiums?

The government estimates revenues from the supplementary health benefit premium to increase from $25 million to $34 million, an $8 million increase. This is hitting seniors in their pockets. I think seniors shouldn't be paying anything because they paid their dues all their life that they worked. I think we're penalizing the seniors who have saved up some money for their golden years. I don't think it is right to even have any means test put in place for seniors.

An Hon. Member: Who's going to pay for it? Me.

Mr. Kang: Well, somebody's going to pay for you when you're old, so I think we have to show a moral responsibility to look after, you know, the seniors, the vulnerable, the poor.

The Chair: Hon. member, we have a chair here, so please address the chair.

Mr. Kang: Sorry, Mr. Chair. I apologize for that. I think I got thrown off track here. I got interrupted.

Under the old plan 60 per cent of seniors paid less or nothing for drugs, the same as the one announced on April 23, 2009. Single seniors who make between $12,000 and $24,000 will pay more on this plan as opposed to the old one. This is still burdensome to seniors in Alberta. They shouldn't have to pay for the fiscal mismanagement of this government. The middle-income seniors did not see any relief from this change in plan; only a small minority of low-income seniors will benefit.

By being able to opt out of this program, the government is allowing a greater share of the market to be opened to private insurance. I think the government is encouraging the private insurance to come in and fill the void. If they make the government-sponsored drug plan program bad enough, they make it more expensive, it makes private health insurance look good. I think people will fall into that trap, and they will be buying private insurance. Before too long they won't be able to afford it, and I think that they will lose all the benefits they have.

By changing the plan from a deductible system to a premium and copayment system, the government is making it more difficult for seniors to analyze whether they will be any better off with this new system. I think it's causing more confusion among seniors.

For those reasons I don't think I can support this bill, Mr. Chair. Thank you very much.

Bill 35

Gas Utilities Amendment Act, 2009

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity on Bill 35.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I'll be brief, given the hour. I thought I would provide a historical vignette in the form of a brief bedtime story. NOVA, prior to its being called NOVA pipelines, was Alberta Gas Trunk Line. I had the opportunity in 1967 to work for Alberta Gas Trunk Line out of Rocky Mountain House, got a chance to see some wonderful central Alberta area because we covered an awful lot of territory and had some interesting adventures painting the posts, marking the pipelines orange and white. It's always a good idea before you paint the inside of a corral's fence posts to check what's in the corral. That's a good safety move.

In 1968, again working for Alberta Gas Trunk Line, I moved south to Fort Macleod, and we again covered a significant portion of southern Alberta. Just for the record, Alberta Gas Trunk Line was a wonderful Alberta company. It didn't lose any of its brilliance when it became NOVA. While I'm somewhat sad to see the regulation be federal, it does make sense that it be incorporated as part of the existing TransCanada PipeLines.

Therefore, after that brief but hopefully entertaining historical vignette, I'll take my seat.

The Chair: Any other hon. member wishing to speak? The hon. Minister of Energy on Bill 35.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I just want to make a couple of very brief comments relative to this piece of legislation. Of course, I think that it's fair for me to put on the record that, in fact, the legislation became necessary because of an application that was made by TransCanada to move their jurisdiction from the Alberta Utilities Commission to the National Energy Board. The National Energy Board, of course, is the proper constitutional jurisdiction when any of these types of utilities would move product or services across borders, either interprovincially or internationally.

With the advent of a lot of activity in northeastern British Columbia and the possibility of product from that part of western Canada to come into Alberta in order to use the services of the Alberta hub and the systems that we have in place here to process natural gas and the tremendous connections that Alberta has to the North American gas markets, I think it is a piece of business that TransCanada is looking at that will, at the end of the day, Mr. Chairman, certainly benefit Albertans a great deal. TransCanada, of course, has been a very responsible investor in the province of Alberta for many, many years. We believe that their continued support relative to gathering and moving natural gas around the province of Alberta, now in and out of the province of Alberta and certainly into the North American market, is something that we should look forward to and certainly support.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I thank you very much for the opportunity.

Bill 41

Protection for Persons in Care Act

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. This act has been worked on, and I'm very pleased to support it. There are a couple of amendments I'm going to bring forward because there are a couple of areas that I think I would like tweaked on it. This bill completely repeals the former Protection for Persons in Care Act. It provides greater detail to the process that happens when a report of abuse is filed as it goes from the complaints officer to the investigator to the director and the director's decision. The maximum amount for fines levied on individuals and service providers is greatly increased from the former act. The only concerns with this bill, as I have mentioned already, are in regard to the regulatory power and to the access, use, and disclosure of personal health information by complaints officers, investigators, and the director.

This is a very important bill. It has been a long time coming. The Protection for Persons in Care Act, the one that it's repealing, certainly was old. Many of the horrific tales that I heard as a member of the MLA task force in 2005 have triggered part of the thinking behind this bill and why it's important that we work with it.

I also believe that this bill goes hand in hand with a voluntary procedure which is called, of course, the personal directive, which I personally believe is one of the most important documents that people can sign. I also believe they should be signed at the age of 18. A quick example I would use is that many young people are hurt in car accidents, and because there is no signature on who would look after them, it then falls onto the parents, but in fact it isn't really a legal obligation because these directives haven't been signed. Often, unfortunately, the decision may well have to be made to take someone off life support. If that person's wishes have been made in that personal directive, then that's where this would fall in. So I really believe that that voluntary process falls in line with this Protection for Persons in Care Act because under this that personal directive is recognized and actually is protected.

There has been a lot of criticism about this bill, and it's based on some very real, horrific episodes from the past. I think that some of the people feel that this bill isn't strong enough and that, in fact, when people are declared incompetent, they will lose everything and there isn't anything to protect them. Again, as I've said, the personal directive would cut in, and they could be protected.

But I think that as with all new acts they need time to be evaluated. They need time to be worked through, and there is an evaluation process included in this bill. It is a good bill. As I said, I would like to tweak it for the couple of concerns that I had already mentioned, so if I could have my amendment passed out, please, I could address it in a moment.

The Chair: The amendment shall now be known as A1.

Hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, please proceed.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Yes. I would like to move that Bill 41, the Protection for Persons in Care Act, be amended as follows: in section 1(1)(m) by striking out "or" at the end of subclause (vi), by adding "or" at the end of subclause (v), and by striking out subclause (vii). The second part of that would be in section 26 by striking out clause (a), and I will get to that one.

The section states with regard to the definition of a service provider: "Any person designated by the regulations as a service provider." This section needs to be taken out because the definition of who this act applies to, I believe, should be written into legislation and not left up to regulations.

The government's rationale for having this provision is that continuing care is changing rapidly, and therefore they need to be flexible to change the definition of service provider to keep pace with the changes. However, my stance would be that any changes that happen to the way that continuing care is provided should be done in a measured way so that legislation is allowed to keep pace with the changes to the service that seniors receive. By putting it into the regulation, I think it still provides a focus that these changes can be made around. They can all be made under that legislation. It doesn't have to be left up to regulations that can actually be changed, of course, as we all know, by order in council.

I think that with the umbrella that is over what we know as continuing care, that covers long-term care, designated assisted living, enhanced lodges, et cetera, et cetera, we need something that people can hang their hats on, that is absolutely steady. With regulations they change too much.

For that reason, I would ask support for this amendment A1.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity on amendment A1.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Speaking to amendment A1. Our hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, our shadow minister for seniors, has noted that Bill 41 is kind of 92 per cent of the way there. What clause (a) is trying to do is add 4 per cent, and clause (b) will add another 4 per cent and bring the score for this particular bill up to 100 per cent, providing that the House is supportive of the amendment. What it tries to do is what we have frequently argued in this House, and that's to put the information into legislation so that the rules and the application of those rules are clear-cut so that everyone knows what they are. The alternative, putting them into regulation, hides them.

In the interest of transparency and accountability, which is always our main interest in keeping things in legislation as opposed to moving them into regulation, I would urge my fellow colleagues, Members of the Legislative Assembly, to finish their support for seniors that they've begun in Bill 41 and support amendment A1.

The Chair: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I simply want to put on record why we're not able to support the amendments recommended by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East. I recognize that she has some knowledge and expertise in this area. But, very briefly, if we were to follow her first amendment with respect to deleting section 1(1)(m)(vii), which reads that service provider means "any person designated by the regulations as a service provider," we would substantially alter the definition, obviously, of who a service provider can be. I don't think we want to do that because a lot of thought has been put into that definition already.

With respect to the request to amend section 26 by striking out clause (a), I appreciate what the opposition members are saying, Mr. Chair. They don't want the Lieutenant Governor in Council being given the ability to make regulations that would designate a person or a class of persons as service providers, but that, too, is fundamental to the operation of government. I don't think we've had any problems with that in the past, and I don't foresee any problems in the future, quite frankly, with it. The regulations are there. They're very public.

Therefore, unfortunately, I would ask members to not support these amendments.

The Chair: Seeing no other speakers, the chair shall now call the question on amendment A1.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East on Bill 41.

Ms Pastoor: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chair. I will be very brief with the next amendment that I would like to bring forward, so if I could ask you to have it passed out.

The Chair: This amendment is now known as A2.

Hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, please continue.

Ms Pastoor: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chair. I would like to move that Bill 41, Protection for Persons in Care Act, be amended as follows: in section 1(3) by striking out "or" at the end of clause (d) and by adding "or" at the end of clause (c) and by striking out clause (e); in section 26 by striking out clause (b). The thinking behind this amendment is that section 1(3) sets out the circumstances when an act or omission does not constitute abuse, and 1(3)(e) states that an act or omission "in the circumstances prescribed in the regulations" would not constitute abuse. My argument for this is that a definition which is so fundamental to the operation of this legislation should not be left to regulation. The determination of what does or does not constitute abuse should be written into the legislation, where there is some ability for oversight by the public. If the government is envisioning circumstances that would not constitute abuse arising in the future, they should anticipate that fact now and put it into legislation or amend the act in the future when the circumstances do arise.

I think it's very important that we all understand clearly what constitutes abuse. The many horrific stories, sad stories that we heard when we served on the MLA task force could be as basic as the fact that someone isn't being fed. It can be because, as we've heard from the third party with some of the letters that they have tabled, there simply isn't enough staff to toilet people properly, to get them out of bed properly, to in fact insist that they are fed.

My contention, based on my experience, is that abuse can be as a result of not having enough staff. You can't just keep pushing your staff as far as you can, because the mantra that's out there right now is that there's time to do the work, but there's no time to care. That is what bills like this are so important for. There must be the time that people are cared for but with respect and with dignity, and unfortunately those two things do require time.

I think that abuse should be clearly defined on how we would get around, as I've said, abuse being as a result of not having enough staff. That kind of abuse doesn't necessarily have to be verbalized in the legislation, but certainly I think that it has to be recognized that if someone isn't toileted, if they're not being fed, if injuries that they have are not being reported in a timely manner, that is clear abuse. I think that it would be very easy to put it into legislation.

With that, Mr. Chair, I will ask for support for this amendment.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity on amendment A2.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Speaking to amendment A2, what the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East is attempting to accomplish, as I say, is completing the circle on the intent of Bill 41. In 2005 the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East along with the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills and the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka were part of a fact-finding mission that toured the province because of concerns raised with regard to long-term care by Auditor General Fred Dunn. He found that in just a third of the areas that he was able to surveil, there were a number of problems, from individuals who were not professionally trained passing out medications, the lack of patient-to-caregiver ratios, the lack of upholding of professional standards. It was for that reason that the task force toured the province and heard horrendous stories. As the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East pointed out, the abuse in many cases was not intentional. It was out of neglect. Again, the neglect was not intentional. It was due to the fact that there was not sufficient staffing available to provide the care necessary.

Now, as of a year ago January I lost my mother. For the most part she had a very good experience in Cedars Villa in Calgary, very close to the Spruce Cliff area. But even though she was treated for the most part well, if my dad hadn't come in every single night to help get her ready for bed, she would have been up that much longer because there were not sufficient people to get her ready. Because in the latter stages of her life she required a lift and a sling in order to lift her from her wheelchair into her bed, if my father hadn't come in and assisted with that care, again, she would've been very late not only getting up in the morning, potentially, but at night.

My father tried to make it easier for the caregivers, and myself and my wife and my daughter, my sister, and my brother all tried our very best to come in and support not only our mother but the staff in terms of the care for our mother. We would do such small things as setting aside outfits that were of a co-ordinated fashion so that my mother, who had been throughout her life a very meticulous dresser, could continue to have the dignity of having co-ordinated outfits. When, due to failing health, those garments were soiled, we made sure that there were accommodations. In other words, skirts now became more of an apron with little ties in the back.

We did everything in our power to support the system, but that isn't the case for a number of seniors who don't have advocates, who have lost their spouse or have either had no children or do not have children living in the area. They're left to the best intentions of care within the long-term care service providers. What amendment A2 attempts to achieve is to add to that guarantee of dignity, add to that guarantee of respect, add to that guarantee of care. It indicates that it recognizes the shortages as opposed to the shortcomings, and it attempts to address them.

It is my hope that my colleagues in this House will see fit to support amendment A2 and, in so doing, recognize the vulnerability of seniors and the needs for their extra support. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader on amendment A2.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I've studied the amendments proposed by the Member for Lethbridge-East, and I've listened to the comments from the Member for Calgary-Varsity very carefully. I want to just say quickly and briefly that I used to be responsible for the protection of persons in care in a previous ministry, and in that respect I'd just like to make it known that I and everyone that I've met in this Assembly over the years I've been here all care very deeply about people who are in care. However, you simply cannot write into legislation every single thing that needs to be done or every word that has to be incorporated, nor can you write into legislation every definition that you would like. It's just too complicated to try and do.

In many cases some things are actually better dealt with or more appropriately dealt with in regulation, and that includes this case in point. You need flexibility to deal with changing circumstances, and you have to be able to do it oftentimes very quickly, efficiently, expeditiously, and in a manner that, of course, is dignified and in honour of the people being served. That's why it's important to retain the sections in this amendment and not strike them out. I appreciate the spirit with which they were given, but the practical experience that I've had with it and other members here might have had with it would suggest that, unfortunately, we're not able to support this amendment, and we should in fact leave it in.

The Chair: Seeing no other member wishing to speak on amendment A2, the chair shall now call the question.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Chair: The hon. leader of the third party on the bill.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much Mr. Chairman. I'd like to make just a few general comments with respect to this bill and want to indicate that in general this is a positive development, a positive change. It's essentially the old act of the same name, but it creates an expanded legislation regarding reporting of abuses involving clients who are in care. I want to just indicate that section 10, which lists the duties of a service provider, has expanded significantly on what is currently in the legislation. It lays out steps the providers must take in order to protect their clients from any sort of abuse as well as to make it necessary to provide clients with information on what to do when such cases occur. It also clarifies that a service provider will take all steps necessary for client safety. Generally, I think, the act – and I won't get into the details; I have a number of things here in my notes to talk about, but given the hour, I'm going to go over it.

There are a couple of concerns, and here's one of them. The change in this act, or the previous act, says that

“abuse” means an act or an omission with respect to a client receiving care or support services from a service provider that

- (f) results in failing to provide adequate nutrition, adequate medical attention or another necessity of life without a valid consent, resulting in serious bodily harm.

They've added “resulting in serious bodily harm.” So, then, the question is: does somebody have to be badly injured in order for it to be abuse? I think this is a concern, and I would hate to think that you couldn't deal with this or intervene in some way until somebody is badly hurt.

Mr. Chairman, we've tabled around 250 working-short forms from unionized employees working in long-term care facilities in Alberta during this session alone. The problem, of course, is levels of staffing. In our view, in our experience the vast majority of people working in these facilities are caring people who sincerely try to do the very best for the people under their care, and they're so severely short-staffed that they can't adequately bathe people, change people, toilet people, much less make sure that they get all of the companionship and emotional support and so on that they might require. That is the basic problem that we're dealing with.

This act deals with a different kind of abuse, active abuse, and that certainly is far too prevalent, more prevalent, I think, than we believe. As such, it's a positive step, but I would just ask the minister who is responsible tonight about the whole question of including the clause “resulting in serious bodily harm” and whether or not the government would be prepared to consider amending that or taking a serious look at that. I think that it moves a lot of abuse out of the purview of the act. At least, that's my interpretation, which may not be correct, but I'd like to hear otherwise.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Chair, I'd be pleased to forward that on to the minister who is now responsible, but I wouldn't want it to preclude our concluding the debate in committee on the bill right now. There are always ways to look at things later and address them, and I'll undertake to make sure that the point raised by the hon. member of the third party does get addressed.

The Chair: Seeing no other hon. member wishing to speak on the bill, the chair shall now call the question.

[The clauses of Bill 41 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's been an excellent evening of debate, and on that note, I would move that the committee now rise and report Bill 29, Family Law Amendment Act, 2009; Bill 30, Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2009; Bill 34, Drug Program Act; Bill 35, Gas Utilities Amendment Act, 2009; Bill 36, Alberta Land Stewardship Act; and Bill 43, Marketing of Agricultural Products Amendment Act, 2009 (No.2); and that we also report progress on Bill 32, the Alberta Public Agencies Governance Act. I hope I got them all.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bills: Bill 29, Bill 30, Bill 43, Bill 34, Bill 35, Bill 41. The committee reports the following bill with some amendments: Bill 36. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 32. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Those in agreement with the report, please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

Mr. Mason: Sorry, Mr. Speaker. On a point of order.

Point of Order
Reporting Bills from Committee

Mr. Mason: I don't believe the motion from the Deputy Government House Leader included Bill 41, so it couldn't now be reported.

The Deputy Speaker: I believe it is on the list.

Mr. Mason: It's on his list.

The Deputy Speaker: Well, we heard the report.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Yes. Mr. Speaker, just to clarify the point, according to my very thorough and complete notes I did mention Bill 41.

The Deputy Speaker: All right.

I'll put the question again. Those in agreement with the report, please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed, please say no. The report is concurred with.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would now move that the House stand adjourned until 1:30 this afternoon.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 12:08 a.m. on Thursday to 1:30 p.m.]

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Grant that we the members of our province's Legislature fulfill our office with honesty and integrity. May our first concern be for the good of all of our people. Let us be guided by these principles in our deliberations this day. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly on behalf of the hon. Member for Little Bow a group of students and teachers from Calvin Christian school. The Member for Little Bow always talks about how proud he is of the students and how encouraged he is that these are the future leaders of the province. Accompanying the 22 students from Coalhurst are Rose Slingerland, Marvin and Erica van den Hoek, Lourens and Peggy Van Essen, and Tony and Christine Vandenberg. I would ask that the students, the teachers, and the parents from Calvin Christian school rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again it is my pleasure to rise to recognize the third group from E.G. Wahlstrom middle school who are visiting the Legislature this week. Unfortunately, again they are not here, but we won't have an opportunity to be able to introduce them again because they'll be leaving early, and I thought it was really important for us to be able to recognize them. They are accompanied by their teacher, Christina Nuxoll, and they are also joined by parent helpers who are making sure that they get home safe. I would ask that this Assembly extend a very warm welcome to them as they visit the Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly a group of 24 students, teachers, and parents from Thorhild central school. The grade 6 kids are here for the tour and to take in some of the day's festivities. I'd like to welcome Mr. Mike Popowicz, Sharon Lakusta, and Gerald Gargus and their 21 students. I'd ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure today to rise and introduce three very special young ladies in my life. The first is my wife, Liz – 34 years we'll be married next month – and my beautiful daughter-in-law Crystal and our newest granddaughter, a very special young lady, Alyssa. I ask the three of them to stand up and receive the warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. member is aware of the size of the diamond that's required for a 34th anniversary, is he not?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you two ladies who are very, very important to me, one who has been important to me for several years now and one who is about to become very important to me on the 6th of June. I'd like to introduce first of all Ms Anita Zacharias, my constituency manager. Anita and I are no strangers to each other, having worked together in what is, I think, now our third endeavour, starting in Fort McMurray on the Horizon oil sands site several years ago.

With her today I am pleased to introduce to you my new constituency summer student, Miss Natasha Soles. Natasha has a particularly enviable resume. Virtually, it's better than mine; however, I'll highlight it for you and say that she is a member of the TUXIS youth parliament and has also served on the AUMA conference as a youth delegate. Her work experience includes a considerable amount of time with Amberlea Meadows Equestrian Centre. I look forward to a very, very productive summer. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional greeting of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to rise today and introduce to you and through you one of my constituents from Edmonton-Ellerslie, Sandra Badejo, and her mother, who is visiting us from Nigeria, Ewemade Igbinovia. Sandra had a baby last fall, Josh Badejo. Her mother came to Alberta to attend her grandson's baby dedication on November 23, 2008, at Mill Woods Pentecostal Assembly, a dedication which I was happily a part of. The day she arrived, she left 40 degree Celsius temperature in Nigeria and came to minus 30 weather in Alberta. I sincerely hope that Ms Igbinovia is enjoying her stay in Alberta and ask my guests to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you five guests in the public gallery today. First, Sabreena Braich was my STEP student last year and is with me again for this summer and is here today to see question period. She is joined by her parents, Sunny and Balwinder Braich, and her cousins who are visiting from Seattle, Aseem and Navi Cheema. It has been great to have Sabreena helping out in my constituency office, and she has been a great help. I would like to ask Sabreena and her family to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Liepert: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thanks to the generosity of our Department of Employment and Immigration I have the privilege this summer of working with two STEP students. The first, Lauren Hutchison, is a STEP student in my constituency office in Calgary-West and is a second-year sociology student at Mount Allison University in Sackville, New Brunswick. The second STEP student works in our office here in Edmonton and jointly works with the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology. Billy Anderson is a second-year political science student at Carleton University in Ottawa and is also the son of the executive assistant to the minister of government services. One of the jobs that Bill has in our office is that he opens the mail. He had an interesting experience yesterday. I would ask him and Lauren to stand up and be recognized in the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two guests to introduce today. It's my pleasure to introduce a constituent of mine, Steffi Stehwien, and a friend and colleague of hers, Donna Eaton, who are guests in the public gallery today. Steffi is the mother of Aaron Shoulders, who was murdered in 2003 and whose murder remains unsolved in Calgary. Donna Eaton is the mother of another murder victim, Brooke Clapson. Brook's killer was caught, convicted, and sent to prison in 2000 and granted escorted day passes in 2008. I'll be talking about this some more in my private member's statement later on this afternoon. For now I would ask my guests to rise, please, and accept the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House a good friend of mine and his daughter from Vermilion. Dr. Lee Arthur is an instructor at Lakeland College. He's kind of the new face of agriculture. He's into elk ranching. It's a very, very multi-generational family history of agriculture in our area, very strong community people. His wife is a nurse at the Wainwright health facility. It very much reflects what goes on in rural Alberta. They're here today to take the message home that I do show up occasionally to work, and I would really like that Dr. Lee Arthur and his daughter Brigit stand and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

World No Tobacco Day

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak about World No Tobacco Day. World No Tobacco Day is celebrated around the world every year on May 31. Although tobacco is a legal product, this annual celebration informs the public about the dangers of using tobacco and unites people around a common cause to work towards a tobacco-free world today and for future generations. This year's theme, Tobacco Health Warnings, will focus on health warnings on tobacco products that can motivate people to stop using tobacco.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta Health Services is hosting its annual World No Tobacco Day provincial celebration today. This conference offers an opportunity to hear from leading tobacco reduction specialists and also to celebrate the 2009 recipients of the Barb Tarbox award. Barb Tarbox, of course, was the antismoking crusader who spoke to more than 50,000 students about the dangers of smoking before she passed away from lung cancer caused by smoking in 2003.

The Alberta government maintains its commitment to reducing tobacco use in our province. With the Tobacco Reduction Act Alberta has had some of the strongest legislation controlling usage, display, and sale of tobacco products in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta Health Services continues to develop and review programs and services to reduce the usage of tobacco in Alberta, help those who want to quit, and prevent young people from starting to smoke in the first place. The goal of achieving a tobacco-free Alberta is the responsibility of all of us individually. If you are a smoker, consider seeking help to quit. If you are a young person, don't start smoking in the first place and do all you can to discourage your friends from starting to smoke. All of these efforts will help us create a tobacco-free province and enjoy a healthier Alberta as a result.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Unsolved Murder Victims

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Martha and I are delighted to have our daughter, Jenn, back home for the summer after she spent this past school year studying in England, and I'm really looking forward to getting out to Victoria in a little over a week to spend a couple of days with our son, Scott, who decided that after three school years on the coast it was time for him to spend a summer there to fully appreciate living next to an ocean, big bodies of water being rather hard to find in his hometown of Calgary.

Our children are adults now and spend more of their lives under their own roofs than under ours, which is as it should be, but it doesn't change the fact that we miss them and look forward to the times we do have to spend together. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to imagine what it would be like not to be able to see them ever again, and I cannot imagine how much greater the pain of losing a child would be if that child had been murdered and, years later, the murder remained unsolved.

I understand that sometimes police cannot solve the case or that even when they're pretty sure they know who did it, they can't accumulate enough evidence to get a conviction. I understand that no unsolved murder case is ever closed but that they can go cold, that the file gets put away on a shelf pending the discovery of new evidence someday. The detectives move onto other cases they can solve, and, Mr. Speaker, the rest of the world moves on as well. But the case never does get cold and the pain never does go away for the unsolved murder victim's loved ones, and they need to know – we need to tell them – that we haven't forgotten them.

Mr. Speaker, we have the capacity under the Victims Restitution and Compensation Payment Act and the resources within the victims of crime fund, and I propose that the province make a commitment to the families of the unsolved murder victims to make a modest annual payment to them from a memorial fund every year until their case is solved. It's not meant to be a compensatory payout for their loss but a symbolic gesture to remind people like Steffi Stehwien that we haven't forgotten about her murdered son, Aaron, anymore than she has, that we share her pain, and to remind us of our duty to support the police in their efforts to solve these difficult crimes.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Lago Lindo Community League

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to rise today to recognize the upcoming 25th anniversary of the Lago Lindo Community League, a dynamic community league in the city of Edmonton and in the constituency of Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Speaker, 25 years ago, in 1984, Edmonton was a city of 560,000 when the Lago Lindo Community League was formed. The Premier of the day was the Hon. Peter Lougheed. Laurence Decore, for whom my constituency is named, was Edmonton's rookie mayor at the time. The Edmonton Oilers had just won their first Stanley Cup. Three Premiers, four mayors, and almost five Stanley Cups later Lago Lindo Community League and its countless number of volunteers are dedicated to serving all of the people in north Edmonton, including the neighbourhoods of Lago Lindo, Klarvatten, Schonsee, Crystallina Nera, and Joviz.

Through the Lago Lindo Community League their hall remains an essential gathering point for the community and others at large. For example, you will find preschools serving many local families, safety courses for children learning how to ride a bicycle, Red Cross babysitting courses for youngsters looking to enhance their skills and to earn some extra dollars, and numerous recreational and sports programs and events for children and youth. What would a community league be without a hockey rink? Lago Lindo Community League boasts one of the area's best outdoor rinks, with new polymer boards and a separate flooded area for recreational skating.

Mr. Speaker, our local community leagues in our communities are foundational for the role that they play in building strong communities, fostering relationships, and improving the overall quality of life for all those around them.

Lago Lindo Community League will celebrate this milestone and momentous occasion on June 26 to 28. I wish to extend my heartfelt congratulations to all those involved in the continued development of the Lago Lindo Community League over the past 25 years and wish them continued success as they move forward into the future.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Milk and Liquid Cream Container Recycling

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta is committed to reducing waste wherever we can. One way to do this is to increase the number of beverage containers we recycle. Approximately 2 billion beverage containers are sold annually in Alberta every year. Of these, about 500 million containers end up in landfills each year. The provincial recycling rates for milk containers are of particular concern. Currently only 60 per cent of milk jugs and 22.5 per cent of milk cartons are returned for recycling. These numbers are far too low. That is why this government decided to incorporate milk containers into the deposit-refund system, and we are grateful to the dairy industry for their co-operation.

As of Monday, June 1, Alberta will be the first jurisdiction in North America to implement a deposit-refund on milk containers. The purchase of all ready-to-serve milk product containers will be affected, including fluid milk, fluid creams, whipping creams, buttermilk, and drinkable yogourt. The deposit will be the same as the deposits on similar-sized containers already part of the deposit program: 10 cents for containers one litre and under and 25 cents for containers over one litre.

With no net cost to consumers a deposit-refund helps encourage people to take the extra step necessary to return their empties for a refund. We know that most Albertans are supportive of this move. During consultations Albertans said that they would recycle more milk containers if they were part of the deposit-refund system. Adding dairy beverage containers to the deposit system is just one more step in building a culture of conservation in Alberta. We're very proud here in Alberta to be showing environmental leadership in this area and many others as well.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

High School Completion

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I would like to highlight a recent Alberta Education initiative to invest $4.2 million to help keep students engaged, supported, and motivated to stay in school. Through the province's recently announced high school completion framework, school jurisdictions will receive funding to help them identify barriers to completing high school and then develop plans and address the issues. Currently Alberta's five-year high school completion rate sits at 79.5 per cent. The province has a goal of increasing that result to 82 per cent in the next three years.

Mr. Speaker, finishing high school is an important step for young people to create a positive future for themselves, their families, and then their communities. There is no magic formula that's going to make kids stay in school. It is a complex issue. The high school completion framework tackles this complexity by focusing their various programs and initiatives into five categories: personalized learning, successful transitions, collaborative partnerships, positive connections, and tracking progress.

Community collaboration is at the heart of the high school completion framework. We need to work together to ensure that our children complete high school with the skills and knowledge needed to fully participate in the community and workplace now and in the future. Supporting those efforts as well as ensuring that we have the tools and supports needed at the provincial level will all make a difference one student at a time.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Parental Choice in Education

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This administration has rebranded Alberta as backwards and intolerant. We had the chance to wipe away the stereotypes through the inclusion of sexual orientation in human rights legislation, but this Tory caucus could not stomach giving rights to gays and lesbians without some sort of appeasement. This is a shameful way to treat human rights, a sad legacy to leave to our children from the Premier and the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit. To the Premier: why is the Premier reinforcing the stereotype that Albertans are backwards and intolerant with the passing of this parental opt-out clause?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, once again, to reiterate the statement I made in this House some time ago, for an opposition member to rise in this House and make accusations of that sort, looking at the diversity of our caucus from the many ethnic backgrounds and religious backgrounds and colour and creed that have come to run as members for the Progressive Conservative Party of Alberta and actually win quite a sizable majority, that tells me that it truly reflects Albertans, Alberta's wishes, their policies as we advance them here in the House. Once again, I find it regrettable that a member would point to members of this caucus in such a derogatory fashion.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, stifling education through parental opt-out will hurt no one more than our children and reflects a lack of trust both in the system and in the parents and in the children themselves. Why has the Premier chosen political opportunism to appease caucus members over what is best for our children's education?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, once again, in our caucus it's total input for all members. This is a decision that was reached by caucus. It's one that I firmly support. I along with all members of our caucus firmly believe in the basic rights of parents. I stand behind that decision, and I'm not going to waver from it. That's simply put. I can't say it as clearly as what I've just done now.

Dr. Swann: Well, there has never been any question about listening to the caucus. The question is: are you listening to Albertans? School boards, school associations, teachers, parents, religious and human rights groups, and students adamantly oppose this parental opt-out and have sent letters, contacted their MLAs, and have met with government officials, all to no avail. Why have you ignored our population, Mr. Premier?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, first of all, in a previous preamble he said that we were stifling education. That is totally wrong. Alberta is a province that offers the most choice in education, from public, separate education to charter schools to independent schools to home-schooling. In fact, in my visit to Munich we spent close to two hours with five senior cabinet members of government, and their number one question was: why is your education system so successful? How is it that your students are performing so well in comparison to many other jurisdictions around the world? I'm very proud of our education system and will also defend our education system anywhere, not only in this Assembly but anyplace around the world.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Government Aircraft

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. After a few drinks it is important not to drive home. This government obviously recognizes this because following the last three Progressive Conservative Association fundraising dinners for the Premier, this government's MLAs flew back to Calgary following each event on taxpayer-funded planes. To the Premier: please tell the House that it is not government policy to use taxpayer-funded planes to fly government MLAs home following Progressive Conservative fundraisers.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, that is quite a serious accusation to make. I believe it would be very wise for that hon. member to withdraw that because I can tell you that we do have receipts of the costs of chartered aircraft to every Premier's dinner, whether it is in Edmonton or in Calgary or in Lethbridge or in Grande Prairie or in Fort McMurray and every second year in Medicine Hat. I don't know where the hon. member is coming from, but maybe a better choice of words would be better. We just went through an incident this week where you used very wise discretion as the Speaker of this Assembly, and I don't think those are appropriate accusations to make as we are working towards the end of, I think, a very successful session.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the Premier please tell the Assembly who approved these taxpayer-funded flights?

The Speaker: Well, I think, hon. member, we just heard that there were no such things. We're going to have a point of order in here that is going to lead to some very difficult situations.

If the Premier wants to add something further, he can.

Mr. Stelmach: You know, I don't want to go down to the bottom of the barrel, but sooner or later – you know, in this Assembly in the last number of weeks we had serious accusations from the opposite benches. There are a number of them that I let go by, and some of them really hurt, especially when the leader of the third party referred to me as Stalin, something like: Stalinistic era brought by this government. Does he not know my background? Does he not know what that one individual did to millions of Ukrainians, how he starved them out? I let that go by. I'm not letting this thing go by. Either he apologizes or comes up with the proof. Enough is enough.

The Speaker: Okay. During that last interjection, hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, I saw you rise. You're rising on a point of order?

Mr. Mason: Yes.

The Speaker: Now, hon. Government House Leader, I also saw you rise prior to that. Do you want to rise on a point of order, too?

The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the Premier table those receipts, please, that it was chartered?

Speaker's Ruling Questions about Political Party Activity

The Speaker: Hon. member, one of the purviews of the question period is that political party activities are not a purview of question period. There's no requirement for the Premier to table things that happened that had nothing to do with the government of Alberta.

Third Official Opposition main question, the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Victims Restitution and Compensation

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last fall this Assembly passed the Victims Restitution and Compensation Payment Act, which allowed for the seizure and sale of property obtained during the commission of a criminal offence and the distribution of these proceeds to victims of crime. Often the most profoundly affected, whose health, safety, and livelihood are compromised possibly forever, are the loved ones of unsolved murder victims. To the Premier: seeing that homicide investigations often do hit dead ends and may go unsolved for years, will you create a memorial fund under the Victims Restitution and Compensation Payment Act to provide a modest symbolic annual payment to families who are suffering through this experience?

Mr. Stelmach: I'll take the suggestion under advisement.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you to the Premier, and thank you, Mr. Speaker.

To the Premier again. Awards from the victims of crime fund to families who have lost a loved one because of a homicide are only available as a one-time, lump-sum benefit. I would ask that he would consider changing this restriction to allow family members to access a modest portion of the fund's $50 million surplus as an annual award.

Mr. Stelmach: Once again, I believe he's giving some suggestions to the minister who's responsible. I'll take it under advisement.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. Thank you again to the Premier.

This time to the Minister of Justice, if I may: can the minister provide – and if she doesn't have these numbers right at her fingertips, I would appreciate a written answer when she has the opportunity – the exact dollar value of all property seized to date under the Victims Restitution and Compensation Payment Act and the total amount made available to Albertans so far who have been victimized by crime?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member is right; I don't have that information. But I will provide that to you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Alberta Treasury Branches

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, the Alberta Treasury Branches' annual report yesterday confirmed why Albertans don't trust this government to manage their money. The ATB lost nearly $225 million but still paid out $25 million in bonuses for people responsible for the failure. What's worse is that this government stood by and watched while these executives used loopholes in their own rules to put money in their own pockets. How can the Premier condone $25 million in bonus payouts to ATB bankers when they lost nearly a quarter of a billion dollars?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the ATB operates at arm's length from government, and decisions about performance are the purview of the ATB board.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

2:00

Mr. Mason: Well, thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, this government is responsible as the owners of the Alberta Treasury Branches and the people that appoint the board. According to ATB rules, if you lose money, you don't get a bonus, so the ATB brass simply didn't count the losses on bad investments like the mortgage scam in the United States. This is a scandal. To the Premier: will you do the right thing and hold the ATB brass accountable and take away their undeserved $25 million in bonuses?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, as I've said before, the Alberta Treasury Branches board is separate. It's arm's length from government. They made the decision. This is based on whatever understanding they had for the year previous is my information. They've indicated that into next year they will be reducing all of the bonuses to senior executives at ATB, but this is based on the previous year's agreement.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, the fact is that bonuses are paid on a performance basis, and when the losses threatened to vaporize the bonus pay, the ATB brass moved the goalposts. This government is letting the bankers pay themselves four times more in bonus pay than the ATB made all last year. To the Premier: how can you justify allowing the brass to keep the $25 million in bonuses when they only made $6 million in profit?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, most Albertans look at the Treasury Branches as a very solid institution in the province of Alberta. It is for a very good reason kept at arm's length from government so that it can maintain its independence and provide services to Albertans. By the numbers of Albertans that are signing up for services the Treasury Branches are offering, it's obviously very successful. They have reduced their bonuses to the senior executives by 50 per cent and to the junior executives by 25 per cent. They are still offering a record number of services. They have record deposits, record lending. Except for the asset-backed paper issue that many, many banks around the world were involved in, they have done a very good job of providing services not only to rural but to urban Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Electricity Transmission Lines

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Energy indicated in the House yesterday that he is looking at additions or upgrades to the electricity transmission system. I'm sure the minister knows that this is certainly an emotionally charged issue. My first question to the minister is: how can Albertans be assured that these upgrades are really needed?

Mr. Knight: Well, certainly, Mr. Speaker, first of all, I think it's fair to say that the electricity utility system in the province of Alberta, including the generating and transmission of bulk electricity, is an enabler of development in this province. Albertans can be assured that in order for us to continue to develop, this is a basic requirement of that development. We have an independent system operator. The AESO is responsible for the operation of the grid and determining future need. Already we see demand creeping toward 10,000 megawatts, of which we have a capacity to supply about 12,000. We're coming very close to a point in time where these upgrades are absolutely necessary to continue Alberta's development.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister. We've had very few problems with the electricity system in Alberta to date. We certainly haven't had anything like the blackouts they've had in Toronto, for instance. So what's the rush? Why do we need to act so urgently?

Mr. Knight: Again, Mr. Speaker, the situation is quite plain, I think. There is a lot of lead time required in order to build these types of facilities. The system now is clogged to the point where it actually costs Albertans about $250 million a year in lost power relative to congestion in the grid. It takes time to lead into this thing, so I think that the time to act is now.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Finally, again to the same minister. I'm sure he's aware that some people believe there is a plan to export power from Alberta to the United States. What is this all about? Please explain it to us.

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, again – and I've answered this question a number of times – absolutely not. This has nothing to do with us as a province or the ratepayers in the province of Alberta being asked to or being involved in the export of electricity as a commodity from Alberta. Certainly, there are opportunities in the future for the commodity to be exported. At that point in time, of course, people that are independent in the business, privately owned enterprises, will pay their own freight with respect to any export of power out of the province of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta has attracted attention from our nation and from the world for all the wrong reasons. This government's $25 million branding boondoggle will not erase the negative image this government's regressive position on human rights has created. Freedom to Fake, Right to Discriminate is Alberta's new tag line. To the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit: why are you enshrining the right to discriminate on the basis of religion, human sexuality, or sexual orientation in our public school system?

Mr. Blackett: Well, Mr. Speaker, as a black man who grew up through discrimination, why on earth would anybody right thinking believe that I would support discrimination? The Human Rights Commission: we have Bill 44 before us to help improve the administration of this worthwhile commission. We have put money towards it. We have put resources towards it. We have a leader in the hon. Blair Mason who is second to none. We will work on those things that will improve it and restore Alberta's confidence in the institution.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. To the hon. Minister of Culture and Community Spirit: I think you've been set up.

To the Minister of Education: other than your generic blogging, why have you remained silent on the erosion of our secular public school system by a faith-based minority?

An Hon. Member: He's not really black.

Mr. Blackett: You know, I guess I have been set up, sir. Mr. Speaker, my parents told me I was black, and I obviously . . . [laughter]

One thing that we know, Mr. Speaker, in the diverse caucus that we have – we have people of Ukrainian ancestry; we have East Indian ancestry, Chinese ancestry, Polish, German, the whole gamut. None of us are fooled into believing what we believe. We all come here with independent thought, and we should respect the fact that all Albertans, 3 and a half million people, have independent thought, and we should have the courage to be able to believe in what we believe in. It's a free and democratic society that we live in.

Mr. Chase: I certainly wish those wonderful statements were true, and unfortunately, Mr. Minister, I was attempting to ask a question to the Minister of Education. But great on you, leaping to your feet.

To the Minister of Education: why are you spending $4 million on an Inspiring Education road show when Bill 44 clearly indicates how closed minded this government really is?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't think we're spending $4 million on a road show, so the first part of the question is wrong.

What we're doing is going around talking with Albertans, having a dialogue with Albertans about the future of our education system in this province so that the children and grandchildren of this province can have the knowledge, skills, and abilities that they will need to participate in a global community and a global economy. That is very, very important work. We have an excellent education system today where people come from all over the world to take a look at what we're doing now, but we cannot rest on our laurels. We need to build that education system for tomorrow.

The comments that he made about Bill 44 and the School Act, where parents have the opportunity to determine whether they agree with the teachings about religion and teachings about human sexuality or whether they wish to do it themselves: that parents have the right on those sensitive issues to determine whether they're in alignment with what's being taught or whether they'd like to engage as a family in doing those teachings does not besmirch the excellent education system we have today nor the need to prepare for tomorrow.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Electricity is something most of us just take for granted. We expect those lights to come on when we flip the switch. We all know that transmission infrastructure, including major power lines, are a necessary part of providing electricity to our homes, but that has also led to much discussion in our province about the process used to determine where this infrastructure goes. My questions today are to the Minister of Energy. Can the minister explain what his department is doing to proceed with electricity transmission upgrades in the province?

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, I can. The provincial energy strategy, of course, indicated that the government of Alberta would take responsibility for planning a comprehensive upgrade to the transmission system. We will bring forward legislation to do just that. This government will be responsible for planning this publicly needed infrastructure just as we are responsible for planning highways, hospitals, and schools. Again I say: the time to act is now.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that Albertans will have questions about this legislation, can he please explain why he is planning to bring it forward so late in the session?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, we know that Albertans are going to have questions with respect to the issues, and that's why we're planning to bring forward some issues here next week. We want to make sure that Albertans have the opportunity to learn more about the issues over the summer. They can then have informed discussions, and there will be legislation that would be debated relative to the issues this fall.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Assuming that we're unable to bury our major transmission lines as they do in other parts of the world, we can expect landowners to be concerned about overhead transmission lines. Is the minister planning to change the process that allows landowners to bring their concerns forward?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, let me be very clear about this. Absolutely not. The system and the process that we use relative to where sitings occur and what will be built and the timing will not change. That is a process that's directed by the Alberta Utilities Commission. Input from landowners that are directly affected or directly affected Albertans is an essential part of the process. It's their mandate. It's legislated. That absolutely will not change.

The Speaker: It strikes me that that last exchange of questions and answers had to do with debate on a bill that has yet to be introduced. Perhaps it would be pertinent to have the bill introduced.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Temporary Foreign Workers

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 2004 this government imposed special provisions at the Horizon oil sands project. This special provision, called division 8, exempts the project from the Labour Relations Code's collective bargaining provisions. The Christian Labour Association of Canada represented the 132 Chinese workers who were cheated out of over $3 million in wages at the same site. My first question is to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. If a collective agreement was in place, why was no one enforcing it? Thank you.

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, the claims of nonpayment were found out while we were interviewing the Chinese workers in the wake of the deaths of the two workers in April of 2007. That's when we found out that the payments were not made. We're doing regular inspections, and as of that particular time we started our actions to assure ourselves that the payments were made to the workers. Most of that money owing is for overtime or the extra time that the individuals had made on the job site.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I'm disappointed that he didn't answer the question. I'll try another variation of it now. Again, why did the government impose this division 8 deal at the Horizon site, which allowed the 132 temporary foreign workers from China to be exploited and cheated out of not only their overtime but their vacation pay and their regular pay?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, we did not allow anybody to be exploited and cheated. You know, our role is to assure that everybody who's working in Alberta gets their fair pay. The minute that we found out that those things were happening, we launched an investigation. As soon as there were some discussions that there was money missing, we did start trying to make sure that the individuals that are short of money will receive their due pay.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: given that the collective agreement from the Christian Labour Association failed to protect these workers, given that employment standards failed to protect these workers, why did it take so long for this government to finally find out that over $3 million was owed to over 132 temporary foreign workers from China?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, this has been a very, very lengthy investigation. As I indicated, we found out following the investigations that were started in 2007. We identified the shortfalls. We are working on making sure that the individuals that were shortchanged their money are being identified. Since then we've introduced a number of measures to try and minimize that, including a strong advertising campaign to all of our workers in Alberta so that they know and understand their rights when it comes to the workplace.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Métis Settlements Funding

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government of Alberta provides Métis settlements with funds to support their ongoing operations related to governance, accountability, and sustainability. This support is very important to the two Métis settlements that are located in my constituency: the Elizabeth settlement and the Fishing Lake settlement. In addition to this funding I also know that while the government of Alberta and the Métis Settlements General Council currently have an interim funding agreement in place, the settlements are eagerly awaiting a more secure long-term funding agreement. To the Minister of Aboriginal Relations: when will the long-term funding agreement with the Métis Settlements General Council be concluded?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, concluding a long-term funding agreement within four Métis settlements in Alberta is part of the Premier's mandate letter to me. It's based around three particular pillars, which include effective governance, enhanced accountability, and long-term sustainability. Initial work on the long-term agreement has already begun. We do have a process in place that includes a groundwork committee that has been set up to look at the exact issues that would put credence to those three pillars, and we hope to have this all completed by early 2012 at the latest. It could be sooner.

Mrs. Leskiw: My next question is also to the same minister. What type of performance measures are tied to the current interim funding agreement, and what type of performance measures do you expect will be part of the long-term funding agreement?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the performance measures that are part of the interim funding agreement are centred around the three pillars that I just mentioned. They include a vast array of accountability and performance measures such as policy reviews, criteria reviews, strategic plans, development plans, implementation plans, efficiency analyses, training plans for staff, conflict-of-interest policies, and so on. That's just to name a few. What the final document will look like could well be comprised of some of these or all of these or new performance measures as needed.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you. My final question is also to the same minister. Given that our Métis settlements constitute a level of government that is similar to that of our municipalities, why are settlements then expected to provide performance reports on funds they receive from the province while our municipalities are not? Why the selective treatment?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, it's not selective treatment. You could refer to it as special treatment that recognizes the unique relationship that the government of Alberta has with the Métis settlements. The funding that goes to the Métis settlements is governance-related funding whereas funding that goes to municipalities is not governance related per se; it's much more program specific. It's a whole different set of criteria and accountability frameworks. We recognize that the settlement councils are, by and large, younger governments, and we will get to the stage that we're aiming for in our targets and objectives within a couple of years.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Groundwater Monitoring

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week the Minister of Environment claimed that cuts to groundwater testing will not have short-term detrimental impact because "there is plenty of time for us to gather the information." The minister's opinion is not shared by the experts. In addition, the department chopped $12 million from its overall budget without knowing what programs the money would come from. My questions are to the Minister of Environment. Now that we are two months into the budget year, would the minister explain exactly how the department will cut $12 million from its budget?

Thank you.

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, that question is entirely impossible to answer in the 35 seconds that the rules of the House allow for. Let me refresh this member's memory and remind her that we spent about three hours of quality time together over in the Annex about two weeks ago, and I think we went through a great amount of detail with respect to my budget. If there are some issues that are still unclear to her, then I suggest that she sit down with me, and we'll go over it in some further detail at the right time.

2:20

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Yes. Thank you. That is why I asked the question. You were not able to provide very much detail at the time, aside from what you'd cut. Thank you for the invitation.

The next question I have is: given that the budget cuts have reduced water monitoring, how does the minister expect water for life partners to increase their understanding of the state of Alberta's drinking water, aquatic ecosystems, and the quality and quantity of surface and groundwater resources?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, the issue with respect to groundwater monitoring – and she referred to it in her preamble to the first question – is that the information that is garnered from monitoring of groundwater is accumulated over many, many years. When you are having a series of wells that are being monitored, you really don't garner the kind of information that you need over a period of one or two or even five years. It's when you start to compare long-term trends over 10 and 15 and 20 years that you can start to interpret that information. That's what I was referring to the hon. member by saying that whether we reduce the frequency of testing in these wells to annually or biennially, in the long-term it's not going to have a fundamental impact on how we analyze that data 20 years down the road.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Well, thank you. Again to the same minister: given that the information is key to understanding the risks to groundwater, how can the minister know there won't be any detrimental effects if, in fact, the department's collection of information is skipping a few years in that cumulative effect?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, let's remember that most of the issues that we're dealing with with respect to groundwater are to determine the connectivity between groundwater and surface water: if we have pressure on our surface water, is that going to affect the availability on groundwater? The reverse is also true: if we put undue pressure on groundwater, is that going to have an unanticipated negative effect on surface water? I use as an example the experience they had in Australia. When they used too much surface water, they found that they were severely affecting the groundwater that's available.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, by acquiescing to the religious right, this Conservative government is steamrolling the American fundamentalist concept of parental rights into our human rights code. Bill 44 is making Alberta a laughingstock. To the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit: why has the minister surrendered to the religious right and ignored the wishes of the majority of Albertans by moving ahead with Bill 44?

Mr. Blackett: Mr. Speaker, the only embarrassment that we have in Alberta is that we have members of the opposition who can't once stand up and say one thing positive about this province that they live in. That's the embarrassment. There are over 600,000 students in this province, and they have parents, and parents are also representative of this province. They have beliefs that could be on the left side of the spectrum, the right side of the spectrum, or in the middle of the spectrum, but one thing they all believe in: they are the ones responsible for the education and the upbringing of their children.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, this government need look no further than Winnipeg to see how backward Bill 44 is. If it were law in that province, the teacher who scrubbed swastikas – by the way, a religious symbol according to the parents – off the arm of a little girl could face prosecution before a human rights tribunal. So why is the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit pushing a law that could protect the right of anti-Semitic parents to teach their children hatred before protecting the ability of teachers to fight against it?

Mr. Blackett: Mr. Speaker, thank goodness Albertans are educated people. The hon. member should read the legislation before she comments on it. It's absolutely – absolutely – ridiculous and irresponsible to go on with this line about what we are going to do to these people. How is that helping anybody in Alberta, going on with this irrational fear of what will happen? Parents will be notified of the three areas with respect to human sexuality, sexual orientation, and religion and will have their chance to opt out. Many of them probably won't opt out, and that is what it's all about. I don't see where this bogeyman is. Up there? Over there? It's absolutely ridiculous.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, the minister talks of so-called parental rights, but I'm concerned about children's rights to a balanced, expansive education that includes learning about all of our human rights code. Now, American leaders of the religious right must be so proud of their allies across the floor. This government is muzzling our teachers and threatening them with tribunal hearings if they dare speak of evolution or sexual orientation to children. How can the minister justify a law that encourages intolerance under the pretense of parental rights?

Mr. Blackett: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member preaches intolerance because she believes her view, her narrow-minded view, of the world is the way that it should happen: their narrow-minded view and that propagated by the media is the way that we should raise our children. Parents have the temerity, the audacity, to say: I should be involved in that decision-making process. Well, our government stands firmly behind Bill 44. We stand firmly behind parents. We stand firmly behind family values and our communities that made this province what it is today.

Commercial Fishing Quotas

Ms Calahasen: My constituency is blessed to have almost every economic advantage, from oil and gas, agriculture, forestry, tourism, mining, to sport and commercial fishing. Due to the world's economic situation some of these industries are experiencing hard times. Sometimes our own government policies or regulations can also create problems for these industries. One of these is commercial fishing, more specifically with regard to fishing quotas in zone E. When a commercial fishery is open for whitefish, the incidental harvest of for-sport fish can result in the fishery being closed before the whitefish quota is reached. It happens more often than not. My question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. What can your ministry do to make zone E commercial fishing quotas more fair?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the Member for Lesser Slave Lake for advocating on behalf of her commercial fishermen. We've met with those fishermen recently and reviewed the issues there. We understand the problem occurs, as she has explained. There is a quota set for both the target fish, usually whitefish, and the nontarget fish. When too many of the nontarget fish are caught, then the zone gets closed, the area is closed. We meet with the commercial fishermen every year to discuss options and to discuss ways to try and maximize their harvest while at the same time protecting the sustainability of the nontarget fish, and we'll continue to meet with them.

Ms Calahasen: The livelihoods of these commercial fishermen are at stake because of a quota policy that appears to be applied differently. To the same minister: is the sport fishery being managed in favour of the commercial fishery?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The short answer is no. We have to manage our fisheries for all species to ensure sustainability.

It is true that the quota for zone E has been changed recently, but as I said earlier, these quotas are reviewed every year based on data from the previous years. Again, I can assure the Member for Lesser Slave Lake that I'll ask our biologist to meet with the commercial fishermen to review the situation and see what we can do for next year, but I have to emphasize that the bottom line is the conservation of all fish stocks.

Ms Calahasen: I'd love to be at that meeting, Mr. Speaker.

I'd ask the same minister. The commercial fishermen of zone E have also been concerned about ad hoc restrictions which impact their industry, as I indicated. To the same minister: how do officials decide whether to close a commercial fishery earlier, and what do they use to do that?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, the quota for nontarget species in all zones is set before the season begins between zero and 25 per cent, and then there is a monitoring of the catch during the season. As fishermen approach the quota on nontarget species, our biologists meet with the commercial fishermen and discuss alternative ways to reduce the nontarget catch so they can continue to catch the whitefish. The fact remains, however, that once the quota of nontarget fish, the sport fish is met, the season has to be closed.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. According to the Alberta government aircraft passenger manifest, after the Premier's dinner two separate planes left Edmonton City Centre Airport just before 10 p.m. heading back to Calgary. For these two different flights two different reasons were given. To the President of the Treasury Board: what was the supposed news conference or event that one of the planeloads of Tory MLAs was attending in Calgary after the Premier's dinner at 10:30 at night?

2:30

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, every Thursday the government flies MLAs and ministers back to Calgary every week that we sit. That has happened continually. We have never been asked before if that's an appropriate use of government aircraft. It leaves depending on when we're done with our House sitting, and it depends on how the members can align to get the various planes to go. Some may go earlier; some can go later.

As to the exact reason for them going and to what particular event, I'll have to check the records, but the hon. member will know that every flight and every manifest is put on the website for all Albertans to see.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On the manifest it says that the purpose of the flight was to attend meetings and a news conference with government officials. To the President of the Treasury Board again: what were the meetings with government officials about that the other planeload of Tory MLAs had in Calgary after the Premier's dinner at 10:30 at night?

Mr. Snelgrove: Boy, it would be pretty clear to me that if it said that they were going to attend meetings, he could ask them what their meetings were for. Mr. Speaker, as much as I'd like to know – actually, I don't have any interest in knowing. These people in this government are incredibly busy. Many people will know that many worked here Tuesday night until 3:30 in the morning. Several of the ministers were in Medicine Hat by 8 o'clock the next morning or into Calgary. We can't do it without transportation, without airplanes. The hours they put in, the meetings they attend, the people they meet in Alberta: probably second to none.

So trying to raise some kind of issue around the fact that we occasionally have very successful Premier's dinners around Alberta – and our party is very successful at separating our party from the government. It may cause them a little bit of jealousy that they can't seem to interest anybody in Alberta to jump on their bandwagon. The airplanes this government uses are published transparently monthly, and any other questions they have around it are absolutely inappropriate.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's not about jealousy; it's about accountability. I think the MLAs seemed to be especially busy on the Premier's dinner night.

To the President of the Treasury Board again. One of the government MLAs apparently brought along a family member on one of these flights. What is the policy for the government MLAs taking spouses or family members on the government airplanes?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, we have a very, very clear and published document and priorities for how the planes work. The Lieutenant Governor is first and his family and aides. The Premier is second. Cabinet and MLAs follow in order of the urgency of the trip that they're trying to do. We believe very strongly that the sacrifices many MLAs make are enough that if we can accommodate a family member joining them that is not replacing or displacing anyone on an airplane – flying with an empty seat to the same place makes no sense. If we can accommodate a family member, a spouse in air transport that is going already and not displacing any other members, then we're happy to do it. It's very little return for the time that these hon. members spend working on behalf of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Safe Communities Initiatives in Brooks

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government's safe communities initiative is working proactively on the enforcement side of crime reduction but also on the prevention side. Last week I had the pleasure of welcoming the chair of the Safe Communities Secretariat, the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General, to Brooks to visit my constituency. My first question is to the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General. How is Brooks contributing to the overall strategy of the safe communities initiative?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think Brooks is a wonderful example of a community that represents where Alberta is at this year, 2009, and this century. It's a traditional rural community that's introduced industry. There are a lot of new people coming to Brooks. Brooks as a community has given a lot of thought to how they want to build their community, include new people in their community, and define their values as a community. I was fortunate enough to be able to go to announce the SuperKids project, which is a safe communities innovation fund partnership between the RCMP and the town of Brooks to ensure that they're able to talk to kids about what it means to be a wonderful citizen in their community.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I agree with the positive assessment of the community of Brooks.

What kinds of issues is this project specifically addressing in the community?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The SuperKids program is a partnership that was launched within the community in partnership with the RCMP. What the RCMP and schools do is go out and talk to kids about what their responsibilities are as citizens. They do something which is quite interesting. They give children tickets, but they give children tickets for good behaviour. If kids are riding bikes with their helmets on, wearing their seat belt, picking up garbage, crossing the street at pedestrian walks, then the RCMP reward them for that work. The important part of the work is not the rewarding for positive behaviour, but it's the opportunity to have a conversation with young Albertans about what it means to be a contributing member to society.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental to the same minister. The safe communities initiative fund supports a range of projects in communities. I'd like to know: what will be the other opportunities for other communities to also participate in this initiative across the province?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The safe communities innovation fund is an opportunity for us to celebrate the work that communities are doing around this province. It's a $60 million fund over three years. There will be three opportunities for communities to apply for funding. There are some projects that are big, some that are small, but the most important thing about these projects is that they are demonstrations of partnerships between organizations and communities that want to do good work and to support initiatives that are already happening in communities.

SuperKids in Brooks is one example of that. We have programs in Edmonton and Calgary where the police are partnering with social workers to work in schools. We also have projects that are dealing with domestic violence. We're helping kids identify the risks that could come to their lives if they got involved in drugs. But, Mr. Speaker, they are community driven. It is not government telling communities how to make their communities safe but government supporting communities in important work that they recognize needs to be done.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Chiropractic Services

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Health Quality Council reports that nearly a million people sought chiropractic care last year. Low-income Albertans are particularly affected by the delisting recently of this service and are already the largest users of our health care system. It's obvious to Albertans that the minister of health has no idea of the consequences his decisions have on the people of Alberta. To the minister: where does the minister expect those who can no longer afford chiropractic services to take their medical problems?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition used a phrase that said that chiropractic services are largely used by low-income Albertans. I'm not sure who he's been talking to, but the Chiropractic Association of Alberta tells me that about 90 per cent of people who use chiropractic services are not low-income Albertans.

Dr. Swann: I actually said that the poor are the largest users of the health care system, Mr. Minister, not of chiropractic services.

My second question to the minister: will the minister table the medical evidence that was used to determine that chiropractic services should be delisted?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, again, how can the hon. leader make a statement that says that low-income Albertans are the largest users of the health care system? I mean, you know, it destroys the credibility of his question in any case.

Dr. Swann: Clearly, the minister isn't willing to answer the questions.

Did the minister perform a cost-benefit analysis to assess the demands that will result on the health care system from delisting chiropractic?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, we have a number of services that are provided in Alberta that the government does not fund. As I've said in many instances in this Legislature, we had to make some tough decisions. I think, obviously, the Liberals today are in a spending mood; today is not a savings day. But this government has a consistent policy. We brought in a budget. We had to ensure that our budget was prudent in these days of economic restraint. What we've done is made some tough decisions, and unlike the Liberals we're going to stand by our decisions.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that was 90 questions and responses today. To five members: we were unable to get to you.

In a few seconds from now we'll continue with Members' Statements in the Routine.

2:40

Members' Statements (continued)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Aboriginal Peoples

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. June is aboriginal month, and since 1996 June 21 has been celebrated as National Aboriginal Day. As most of the celebrations will happen while the Alberta Legislature is in recess, we would like to take this opportunity to recognize the First Nation, Métis, Inuit, and nonstatus indigenous peoples of Alberta.

We all know that aboriginal peoples were the first to inhabit the territory that we now share with them and that our history together has been a troubled one. While small steps forward have been made towards reconciliation and appropriate recognition, we have a long path yet to travel. Aboriginals still suffer a much higher rate of poverty, don't get the same educational opportunities, and are the victims of racism and discrimination. Because of this, they are overrepresented in our jails and underrepresented in governing bodies such as this.

Thankfully, in recent history the Supreme Court of Canada has recognized the unique status of our aboriginal peoples and has forced Parliament, Legislatures, developers, and other bodies to consult with them on issues that impact on their traditional territories and on their interests. While we have seen progress on this front, all too often their concerns are still, effectively, ignored at the expense of unfettered development.

As our society becomes more urbanized, many aboriginal people are migrating to our cities, where they are experiencing new and unique forms of discrimination, both overt and systemic. In centres such as Edmonton 50 per cent of the aboriginal population has less than a high school education. This naturally leads to greater poverty, which contributes to greater discrimination. We need to do more to support aboriginals working to break this cycle.

But aboriginal month and National Aboriginal Day do not exist merely to highlight the negative. They are also important opportunities to celebrate the rich culture of these peoples and their contributions to Canada and Alberta. Our visual arts, our dance and theatre, our spiritual world view, not to mention our knowledge of the land and our system of law and order all have been deeply impacted by Alberta's original peoples. We owe them a huge debt of gratitude.

Today I want to say thank you to the First Nations, Métis, Inuit, and best wishes for National Aboriginal Day.

The Speaker: Hon. members, on that last member's statement, just to advise all hon. members, on Monday next, June 1, there will be a special event here in the rotunda of the Legislative Assembly at 12:15 to commemorate aboriginal peoples month.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll follow much the same process as I did yesterday. I'd like to table 20 copies and the appropriate number of copies of letters from Albertans expressing their concerns about the fate of the City Centre Airport.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the appropriate number of copies of my response to a question raised in this Assembly by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar relevant to Municipal Affairs hosting expenses at the AAMD and C spring and fall conventions.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of a publication by Plan Canada entitled Welcoming Communities: Planning for Diverse Populations, published by the Canadian Institute of Planners, supported by the Ministry of Citizenship and Immigration Canada.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of my colleague the Leader of the Official Opposition I have a number of tablings. The first is from Ken Markkula with concerns about the WCB that he feels have been ignored by the Premier.

The second is from Gayle Simonson, who objects to Bill 44.

The third, again tablings for the Leader of the Official Opposition, from Steve Schembri, with concerns about AIMCo's investments in Precision Drilling.

Two petitions: one not in order to receive a presentation but one specific to the Alberta pharmaceutical strategy for seniors with people objecting to that and asking the government to scrap it.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table four more constituent letters from individuals expressing frustration with Bill 44. Connie Jensen writes: "It is unfortunate that students have to continue to pay for the narrow mindedness and short sightedness of a government that is fuelled by expediency and ignorance." Doug Germaine writes: "This blatant filtering of public education by the Alberta government is an attack on a child's right to an open and diverse education." Frank Durnford writes: "Bill 44, as it stands, simply institutionalizes intolerance and ignorance." Nancy Lowery writes: "Tolerance comes from exposure to different ideas, views and experiences."

My second tabling, Mr. Speaker, has to do with the decertification of child and youth care workers in Alberta. The letter is addressed to the Premier and was sent by Holly Heffernan, president of the Calgary and District Labour Council Women's Committee. Holly writes: "We are asking your government to reverse this decision and to work with CYCAA to ensure the best possible care is available to our children and youth."

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got five copies here of Alberta government aircraft passenger manifests to support concerns I raised during the question period, so I'm tabling those five copies.

Thank you.

Projected Government Business

The Speaker: The Official Opposition House Leader.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. According to Standing Order 7(6) I would now ask the Government House Leader if he could share with the Assembly the projected government business for the week commencing June 1, assuming there's government business on the evening of Monday the 1st.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes. On Monday, June 1, 2009, we do anticipate an evening sitting, and although I always list these in the order of the number of the bill as per precedent, the timing of how they come up I will comment on as well.

Monday at 7:30 in Committee of the Whole Bill 32, Alberta Public Agencies Governance Act; and Bill 42, the Gaming and Liquor Amendment Act, 2009. For third reading Bill 23, Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2009; Bill 25, Teachers' Pension Plans Amendment Act, 2009; Bill 27, Alberta Research and Innovation Act; Bill 29, Family Law Amendment Act, 2009; Bill 30, Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2009; Bill 33, Fiscal Responsibility Act; Bill 44, Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Amendment Act, 2009; Bill 45, Electoral Boundaries Commission Amendment Act, 2009; and Bill 52, Health Information Amendment Act, 2009.

Now, I just would comment that we anticipate scheduling first at 7:30 Bill 25, the Teachers' Pension Plans Amendment Act, 2009, in order that members who have declared a conflict of interest, as a number did at Committee of the Whole, might be able to arrange to have it dealt with in an orderly time frame there.

On Tuesday, June 2, in the afternoon we anticipate second readings of Bill 46, Gunshot and Stab Wound Mandatory Disclosure Act; Bill 48, Crown's Right of Recovery Act; Bill 49, Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2009 (No. 2); Bill 50, Electric Statutes Amendment Act, 2009; and Bill 51, Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2009; and third readings of Bill 32, Alberta Public Agencies Governance Act; Bill 34, Drug Program Act; Bill 35, Gas Utilities Amendment Act, 2009; Bill 36, Alberta Land Stewardship Act; Bill 42, Gaming and Liquor Amendment Act, 2009; Bill 43, Marketing of Agricultural Products Amendment Act, 2009 (No. 2); and Bill 41, Protection for Persons in Care Act. In the evening under third reading the same list as I mentioned for the afternoon.

Wednesday, June 3, in the afternoon in Committee of the Whole Bill 46, Gunshot and Stab Wound Mandatory Disclosure Act; Bill 48, Crown's Right of Recovery Act; Bill 49, Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2009 (No. 2); Bill 50, Electric Statutes Amendment Act, 2009; and Bill 51, Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2009.

Thursday, June 4, 2009, in the afternoon third reading on those that I just mentioned in Committee of the Whole for the day before.

As is always the case, of course, Mr. Speaker, it would all be as per the Order Paper. I would indicate to hon. members that I mentioned Bill 43, the Marketing of Agricultural Products Amendment Act, 2009 (No. 2), in a number of spots, but my anticipation is that that one will be called first at 7:30 on Tuesday to accommodate members who may have to declare a conflict of interest as per the letter that the Speaker tabled earlier.

So that would be Bill 27 being first at 7:30 on Monday and Bill 43 being first at 7:30 on Tuesday.

2:50

The Speaker: Hon. members, two issues with respect to points of order. First of all, the Government House Leader.

Point of Order

Allegations against a Member

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In question period today, as you and all members are aware, there was a question from the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall to the Premier relative to flights on government aircraft, specifically referencing the flights on government aircraft, as I understand it – and I don't have the Blues; although I'd asked, they're apparently not available as yet – to and from Premier's dinners, which are a party function.

It's under section 23(h), making allegations against another member; (i), imputing false or unavowed motives to another member; and (j), using abusive or insulting language. The Premier actually responded to the first question, indicating that government planes were used for government business. The hon. member, then, in his second question, as though he had not heard the answer to the first question, basically, went on to say – and I don't have the exact wording of the question – again that government aircraft would be used for party business.

Now, Mr. Speaker, that is a very serious allegation to be made. The Premier made it very clear. We do not use government planes for party business, and that, I think, was clarified in a subsequent series of questions later on in question period. I can tell you that I've had the honour and privilege of flying back and forth to attend Premier's dinners across the province, and I can tell you that the nature of the aircraft that are used – let me just say that they are charter aircraft, and they are not government aircraft. In flying back and forth to many of those dinners, not all, unfortunately, I can assure the House and the Speaker that when the Premier said that the party uses charter aircraft to go to Premier's dinners, he's absolutely correct in that. The flights back from those dinners are on planes other than government planes.

The specific point of order that I'm raising, however, Mr. Speaker, revolves around the admonition that you've often given the House, and that is that we are to take what we say in this House and to believe the word of hon. members. The Premier in his first response clearly indicated that we do not use government aircraft for party business and that we do not use government aircraft for Premier's dinners, that we charter aircraft to do that.

Now, the hon. member persisted in his question even after that response by the Premier. It was totally inappropriate to do so. There are other ways of asking questions. In fact, he came back later on in question period and asked questions of the President of the Treasury Board in a different manner, which allowed the President of the Treasury Board to clearly enunciate government policy. But I would ask that the hon. member be admonished for his first series of questions and be asked to apologize to the House for that series of questions in that he very clearly did not listen to the response, continued to cast aspersions on the Premier and, quite frankly, on all members of this House who attend the Premier's dinners on a regular basis.

I would suggest as well that if he had any question or concern about whether there is an appropriate separation of government and party that those are questions that have an appropriate way for both investigating and pursuing, and it's not to raise them on the floor of the House, to cast aspersions in a form of drive-by smearing, to make those public allegations without backing them up in any way or without having the courtesy of listening to the answer and then rephrasing subsequent questions if necessary.

The Speaker: The hon. Official Opposition House Leader.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to respond to the point of order that has been raised by the Government House Leader. I believe that there is no point of order here. Essentially what we have is that the job of the Official Opposition is to ask the government questions that meet the criteria and parameters that are laid out in our various parliamentary books, which I believe in this case he did. Quoting from Beauchesne 409: "A brief question seeking information about an important matter of some urgency which falls within the administrative responsibility of the government or of the specific Minister to whom it is addressed, is in order." I've checked, you know, and we didn't ask if something was correct in a newspaper. We didn't seek a legal opinion. It wasn't sub judice. So the question was in order.

I have the question as the member read it. In fact, it is not specific to any given member. The provisions of Standing Order 23 as the Government House Leader read into the record, you know, are about casting aspersions on a specific member or making allegations against another member or unavowed motives to a member, and the language that the member used in his questions was not specific to any given member. I believe that the opposition should ask questions about circumstances which appear inconsistent, and that is certainly what was going on here today.

So we have a question, and like my colleague the Government House Leader I don't have the benefit of the Blues, but I'm sure that the Speaker does. The question as written was: "Please tell the House that it is not government policy to use taxpayer-funded planes to fly government MLAs home following Progressive Conservative fundraisers." That's a pretty legitimate question, and the Premier did not exactly answer that question, but he did make a statement on the general topic.

Now, the Government House Leader has made much of the fact that the Member for Calgary-McCall then went on and asked a question that he felt shouldn't have been asked. It was a follow-up question and related specifically back to the theme of the questions. The Government House Leader seemed to be saying that the member didn't listen. Well, frankly, it's hard to listen in here sometimes. I actually can recall an exchange between myself and another minister of the Crown yesterday, I think, in which I thought I had pretty good articulation and enunciation, but my colleague across the way didn't hear the question. Of course, we are all adhering to a 35-second rule, so for a member to stand up and say, "I didn't quite hear you; could you repeat it?" that's it. We've lost our opportunity to use that particular moment to ask a question. It happens all the time in this House. We need to be a bit forgiving. As I say, it can indeed be noisy.

The second question as written here was: "[Could] the Premier please tell the Assembly who approved these taxpayer-funded flights?" That is quite a legitimate question.

Mr. Hancock: Not when it didn't happen.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre has the floor.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. The final series was in fact reflecting exactly back on what the Premier had said, and there was a request to provide the receipts showing that, for which the Speaker corrected and admonished the member.

I believe that under these circumstances there is no point of order. There was certainly no attempt to cast aspersions. The language here has been pretty careful, to say: "Here's a situation we've noticed. We have flight manifests." In teeny tiny print, I might add, Mr. Speaker. It's clearly laying out that flights left from Edmonton city centre going to Calgary. The purpose that's listed on the flight manifest is to "attend meeting(s) with government officials." It contains a mix of people – ministers and government MLAs – some of whom live in Calgary, some of whom do not. The purpose, as I said, was to attend a meeting. It's charged to Executive Council, and it did, indeed – the itinerary said that they left at 9:50 p.m., but they actually left at 22:47. Anyway, there are two flights that go off containing a variety of passengers. To us this coincides exactly with the date of a party function, and I think that it is perfectly appropriate that the Official Opposition would question and ensure that these two things were not related. That was the reason for asking the question.

As the government member mentioned, there was a second set of questions on exactly the same theme, in which we followed up to specifically question what was the government policy on members.

The Speaker: Well, let's just deal with the point of order.

Ms Blakeman: Absolutely, Mr. Speaker. I would argue that there has been no violation under 23(h), which is what was specifically mentioned here. It was a question that was asked and the government clearly feels was answered.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Additional comments with respect to this purported point of order?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order. To be clear, why it became inappropriate in the supplementary is the fact that the hon. member would know that if it was a government plane, there would be no receipt. It would be on the government logs. If it was a charter airplane, it would be a party charter airplane, and it would not be under the purview of this Assembly. So to continue to cast aspersions that we are misusing government aircraft and that because there is not the presentation of receipts, therefore it must be real – it was definitely made to try and cast aspersions to bring disrespect to the House, to the Premier, to government, and it is well outside of what should be accepted in here.

The Speaker: I'm not going to go on all afternoon with this thing. I can wrap this up in a moment.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity to the point of order.

Mr. Chase: Just very quickly, with regard to the tabling it clearly states Alberta government flight logs at the top. It was based on the fact that this was logged . . .

The Speaker: There is no tabling. We're talking about – sorry. Sit down, please. We're not talking about any tabling; we're talking about a point of order here. There has been no tabling involved. Something on the point of order.

Mr. Chase: Yes. With regard to the point of order the documents that the questions were based upon were based upon the Alberta government . . .

The Speaker: Well, I'm sorry. I've got to repeat it again. There are no documents. We only have the text of the session. That's all. No document.

Does anybody want to say something more on the point of order? If not, I'm kind of dealing with this matter. We have business to do here this afternoon.

Okay. There's an ambience in this place. There's a mood in this place. It's been a trying week for some. It's been a tiring week for others. There's sensitivity with respect to all sorts of things. But let's really hear and listen to what the Hansard Blues say happened here today.

The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, after a prelude about drunken drivers and drinking and driving, says, "To the Premier: please tell the House that it is not government policy to use taxpayer-funded planes to fly government MLAs home following Progressive Conservative fundraisers." Correct question. In order. Nothing wrong with the question. The response from the Premier:

Mr. Speaker, that is quite a serious accusation to make. I believe it would be very wise for that hon. member to withdraw that because I can tell you we do have receipts of the costs of chartered aircraft to every Premier's dinner, whether it is in Edmonton or in Calgary or in Lethbridge or in Grande Prairie or in Fort McMurray and every second year in Medicine Hat. I don't know where the hon. member is coming from, but maybe a better choice of words would be better.

And then there's something further about an incident this week. Okay. You judge the response.

Then the Member for Calgary-McCall comes again. "Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the Premier please tell the Assembly who approved these taxpayer-funded flights?" At which point in time the Speaker interjected.

Well, I think, hon. member, we just heard there were no such things.

We're going to have a point of order in here [because] that is going to lead to some very difficult situations. If the Premier wants to add something further, he can.

The Speaker should not have said the last thing. That would have negated the second point of order we are going to have.

Then the third question came about when the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall said: "Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the Premier table those receipts, please, what was chartered?" The Speaker interjected and said:

Hon. member, one of the purviews of the question period is that political party activities are not a purview of question period. There's no requirement for the Premier to table things that happened that had nothing to do with the government of Alberta.

And we went on.

That's a legitimate question that was raised. Whether or not the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall heard the answer that came from the Premier, he certainly could not be led to believe the question of receipts or no receipts, and he wouldn't know, as per the explanation given by the hon. President of the Treasury Board, why the government could not charter aircraft as such. So it seems to me that the questions were quite legitimate.

I go back to where I started: the ambience on the fourth day of the week at the end of a session, mood, a lot of anticipation, thinking ahead of oneself, a trying week, a tiring week, and perhaps oversensitivity. That is not a point of order.

Now, hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, on your point.

Point of Order Factual Accuracy

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise under Standing Order 23(h), when a member "makes allegations against another Member," and 23(i), "imputes false or unavowed motives to another Member." The Premier used words to the effect that I had called him a Stalinist. This came out of the question that we just dealt with from Calgary-McCall. It was a bit of a diversion; the Premier wanted to stand up and talk about something that happened quite some time ago. The Premier was quite wrong in suggesting that I had called him a Stalinist. I've got the Hansard here of March 9. I said, "Rural Albertans are furious that a rural Premier and his cabinet would propose such a Stalinist law. To the Premier: why won't you admit that this policy tramples the land rights of rural Albertans?"

I did not call the Premier a Stalinist, but I called the bill such. This was actually subject to a public clarification in the form of a letter to the editor in the Edmonton Journal on March 27 written by the chief of staff for the NDP opposition caucus. It states there:

Mason absolutely did not accuse Premier Ed Stelmach of being a Stalinist. Mason characterized Bill 19 as such, for its authoritarian provisions allowing government to trample the land rights of rural Albertans without compensation or defined right of appeal.

Mr. Speaker, I will always stand up when someone puts words in my mouth and says that I said something that I did not actually say.

Now, having said that, the Premier has also stated that those comments caused him personal hurt. You know, this might be a bit of an unusual situation, where I'm standing up making a point of order to insist on my right to be quoted accurately and correctly and, at the same time, to make an apology to the person whom I'm raising the point of order against. It was not my intention to cause the Premier or any other member or any other person personal pain or hurt as a result of that statement, and I want to apologize to the Premier for doing so.

You know, when I feel an apology is required as a result of my behaviour or what I say, I don't need to be compelled to do it, but I do ask, Mr. Speaker, that you recognize, in fact, that I've been again misquoted by the Premier and had words ascribed to me that I have not uttered. You know, I want to reiterate that I find that unacceptable. I believe that it's contrary to the rules of this Assembly, and I think that the Premier needs to deal with that appropriately.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes. An interesting point of order. First of all, I would like to thank the hon. member for acknowledging that his words could be hurtful to the Premier and to others and for making the apology. I appreciate that, and I'm sure the Premier will appreciate that. I would also appreciate it if the letter, whether over the signature of the chief of staff – I forget the title – or whether over the hon. member's signature, was tabled in the House. That would be quite an appropriate thing, too, to clarify.

3:10

It is very clear that on both March 9 and March 4 – on March 9, as the hon. member indicated, on page 275 of Hansard it refers to a comment by the member that “rural Albertans are furious that a rural Premier and his cabinet would propose such a Stalinist law.” Now, the hon. member can parse that however he wishes, but I think most ordinary readings of that and most people hearing it would hear it in the manner that the Premier heard it. That is referencing the Premier and his cabinet as Stalinist. In fact, if that was not the case, there would not have been a rationale or reason for the NDP chief of staff to write a letter of clarification to the Journal. By the very fact of having written the letter of clarification, they clearly understood that the ordinary person hearing that comment and reading that comment would understand what the reference was or at least, even if that reference wasn't intended, what would be heard.

The second reference that I would refer to is on March 4 at page 221 of Hansard where the same hon. member indicates that “this government is proposing a bill that gives them unprecedented power . . . Joseph Stalin would be proud.”

Again, language is very important. Language is, in fact, critical to what we do. While we all try and use language which is very expressive and we all try and make our point in very memorable ways, we also have to be careful because certain things in world history carry a great deal of hurt and emotional baggage. References to the Holocaust being tossed around can be very hurtful. References to Hitler. These are things that people hold close to them. These are things that have created great hurt to many peoples in the world and should not be used lightly.

I would suggest that “Stalinist” used in any fashion like that very clearly references to people what was referred to. I would suggest that the way in which it was used on both of those occasions would cause that kind of understanding among people hearing it as to exactly what was being said.

Again, I would end by saying that if that was not the case, there would have been no need for a letter of clarification to the Journal. The appropriate thing to do would have been to bring a letter and table it in the House to say: “This was said. It's been misunderstood. It's not what I intended. I apologize for it, and here's a letter saying so.”

I think it's very commendable of the hon. member. I won't comment on the language in which he couched it, but the apology itself, obviously heartfelt. I appreciate that; I think that's commendable. But, in fact, the reference by the Premier was also quite understandable.

I think that's been clarified now by the hon. member's point of order and the context in which he's put it. I think that should end the matter.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just very briefly I'd like to make the point that I think the language at the time, when the statements that are being discussed right now were made by the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, two months ago now, is not actually the issue right now. The issue here is that today the Premier characterized the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood as having called the Premier a Stalinist. That is the issue here today. The point that the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood is trying to make by referring to those previous statements is that that is not what those statements said at the time.

Now, there's been a lot made about the reaction to those statements at the time. As you, yourself, Mr. Speaker, have said in the past, the appropriate response then would have been to raise the point of order over those statements.

As well, with respect to the letter to the Journal, the reason the letter was sent to the Journal was because it was correcting a mischaracterization and a misreporting that occurred in the Journal. It makes perfect sense that the effort was made as soon as possible to correct the record when it was reported inaccurately. That is what the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood did at the time, and that is what the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood is attempting to do now. It is using the tools available to us as members of this Assembly in the House to correct the record where it is possible to do so. It's on that basis that we are asking the Speaker to rule and to request that the statement be withdrawn.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity on this point.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I understand from a number of comments that you have made to me over the last five years the importance of discretion. I also understand the sensitivities associated with ethnicity and race. I'm very aware of that. But sometimes those sensitivities can be simply diversions. If, for example, a member had referred to the Pol Pot regime or Ho Chi Minh or Benito Mussolini, somebody who had some ethnic connection by marriage or by birth could potentially rise up and say: you're defaming me; you're defaming my connection; you're not being sensitive. If somebody called me a wild Irishman, I would actually be proud of that connection, but the point I'm making – and I think you made it earlier with your other comments – is that let's not let the end of a session interfere with trying to whiteout history. Maybe we have to be careful in terms of our historical references. Maybe we should be using words like totalitarian or draconian or autocratic. But I look forward to your explanation.

The Speaker: Well, hon. members, we've had a tradition of decorum in this Assembly for a great number of years. As an example, a quick look at our Hansard basically indicates that since 1987 we've had 14 documents with 21 references to the word “Stalin” used. It depends to a great degree on what the context of it all is, how we're going to deal with it.

Secondly, there are many, many references that we can follow, too. It's the context of everything else. But one thing is true in this Assembly going back a long time. There are certain words that because of the sensitivity of the placement of the individuals in history basically have been withdrawn as the result of a request by certain members or others.

As an example, the word “Adolf” was used on March 3, 1994. One member referred to another member and called him Adolf. That word was withdrawn at the request of the member. On May 27, 1988, the Deputy Speaker in committee basically ruled that it was improper to make disparaging remarks about a foreign head of state when a particular member said, “Ayatollah Khomeini to write a book on religious tolerance.” The word “communist” has been ruled out. One member accusing another member of being a card-carrying commie was considered to be inappropriate. Just less than two years ago the Deputy Speaker, the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, when he was in the chair, caused a member to withdraw the following statement, “The Progressive Conservative Party is becoming partially communist,” in the context of which it was raised and which it was used.

Now, we have a lot of other expressions, too, that we don’t allow. We don’t allow words like coward and cowardly and what have you and all the rest of that.

Today here’s what was said midway through what the reference was from the Premier:

There are a number of them that I let go by, and some of them really hurt, especially when the leader of the third party referred to me as Stalin, something like: Stalinistic era brought by this government. Does he not know my background? Does he not know what that one individual did to millions of Ukrainians, how he starved them out? I let that go by. I’m not letting this thing go by. Either he apologizes or comes up with the proof. Enough is enough.

Well, I’ve sat in this House, and I’ve certainly heard the words “Stalinistic era” used by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood in certain questions and documents in recent days. I’ve never heard, however, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood refer to another hon. member in this Assembly as Stalin. I’ve not heard that used, and it’s not clear to me that, in fact, anybody is suggesting that he did use it. But the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood is denying it and basically saying: I never used it against an hon. member, and I didn’t do that against an hon. member.

I’ll go back to what I said before. There’s a mood, there’s an ambience, there’s a tiring, trying environment that does not bring out the best of everybody. I think that it’s inappropriate for one member to suggest that another member called him that if he didn’t, and I think it would be appropriate for the Premier to reconsider accusing another member of calling him Stalin if he didn’t. I understand the sensitivity. I understand as well the comments put forward by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, who offered an apology. I heard that apology this afternoon for sensitivities. I heard the hon. Government House Leader stand up and say: well, that was interesting, this whole point of order with respect to all of this. I find this not trying. I don’t find this tiring. I just think that we can do better.

We’re now going to move on to Orders of the Day.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Bill 37

Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2009

Mr. Snelgrove: On behalf of the hon. Minister of Finance and Enterprise I’d like to move third reading of the Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2009.

The Speaker: Should I call the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 37 read a third time]

Bill 38

Tourism Levy Amendment Act, 2009

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon.

Minister of Finance and Enterprise I move third reading of Bill 38, the Tourism Levy Amendment Act, 2009.

The Speaker: Shall I call the question, hon. members?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 38 read a third time]

Bill 39

Tobacco Tax Amendment Act, 2009

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the hon. Minister of Finance and Enterprise I would like to move third reading of Bill 39, the Tobacco Tax Amendment Act, 2009.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I think things started to go just a little fast here, so I want to get up and speak to this because I think, you know, it’s important that we don’t miss opportunities because things are going so fast and you’re trying to find your page and just in case some members wanted to have a chance to speak to this.

Mr. Speaker, generally, we’re supportive of the bill. I think that there are some concerns, of course. The section regarding search and seizure without warrant: the officer currently has to believe on reasonable and probable grounds that a contravention of the act has taken place and getting a warrant would cause delay that might lead to the loss or destruction of evidence. The bill would change this section so that the officer only has to have reasonable grounds for that belief. Well, that’s, you know, a bit of a concern that I wanted to highlight.

I think the provision for increasing a penalty on money owing to the Crown because of neglect, carelessness, or wilful default or fraud or evasion – the penalty is raised from 25 per cent of the amount owing to 50 per cent – is probably something that’s good. Fines are increased, and I think that’s something that we support as well.

Overall, Mr. Speaker, I think the bill makes positive changes. We think it’s important for taxes and fines to keep pace with the times so that they continue to act as sufficient deterrents. It’s important for the government to be able to properly enforce the collection or remittance of tobacco taxes so that no one is profiting unfairly from the illegal collection or failure to remit tax.

Mr. Speaker, there is plenty of evidence that raising tobacco taxes is the single most effective way for government to discourage their citizens from smoking. These taxes also need to keep up with wage increases in order to be effective. In 2008 Alberta had some of the most affordable cigarettes in Canada when the price of cigarettes was compared to the average wage. Since we’ve recently had a further increase to our minimum wage, from $8.40 an hour to $8.80 an hour, it’s imperative that taxes rise, too.

The Campaign for a Smoke-Free Alberta has been advocating for tobacco tax increases. A letter they sent to me on November 7, 2008, claims that Alberta’s $2.25 per pack increase in 2002 contributed to a reduction in tobacco sales of 24 per cent in 2003. So this can go a long way towards decreasing the amount that Albertans smoke.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to say in reference to this issue generally that it’s interesting that the government is always prepared to raise sin taxes, particularly when we talk about tobacco and liquor, but not corporate taxes. In fact, the government has repeatedly reduced the effective rate that large corporations pay on their profits at a time when some companies in Alberta even in the last couple of years were making annual profits that exceeded the entire domestic product of some countries. The fact is that the government is always willing to bear down on people who smoke or drink or whatever but not really go after the big money. I'm not saying that we don't want to increase taxes in these areas, because of the deterrent effect, but I do want to highlight the government's drive to reduce corporate taxes as a source of revenue.

The other point that I'd really like to make is that it's unfortunate that the increases in taxes on cigarettes are not being allocated towards reducing smoking in our society and to help people quit smoking, desist. It is, in fact, a cash cow as far as the government is concerned, and I believe that we should be spending more of that increase on tobacco reduction strategies. Simply raising the taxes is not a sufficient effort on the part of the government to control the use of tobacco.

With that being said, Mr. Speaker, I do want to indicate that we think the increases in tobacco taxes are appropriate, and we will support Bill 39, the Tobacco Tax Amendment Act, as a result. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

3:30

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just to get on the record about this bill at third reading. We have had the opportunity to discuss this at second reading and in committee stage. We feel that it's a good bill. We're going to support it. Sometimes brevity is the soul of wit, and you need not say a lot about legislation that the government has essentially gotten right. So there you go.

The Speaker: All right. Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available if there are questions or comments with respect to that lucid presentation by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie. Nobody wants clarification that the government did good or anything like that?

Okay. We'll go on. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I'll be very quick. When this was in Committee of the Whole, I asked a question with regard to the potential hypocrisy of the government raising the tobacco taxes, which I firmly agree with, but also at the same time investing in the heritage trust fund to the tune of $600 million. If Bill 39 is looked at by itself, there isn't a problem. But the government is, as far as I know – and I would love to be corrected; I hope this is not the case because I believe in ethical investing – also talking about launching a lawsuit against tobacco companies to recover health costs. If this is the case, then we have to make sure that our own cage is clean, so to speak, before we go after the tobacco companies, which, as I say, it appears that we're still investing in.

Also, the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood pointed out the importance of using the revenue that is generated from this sin tax for proactive, preventative measures. I would echo those concerns and hope that part of this money that is increased will go directly to AADAC, which is now under the central health board's responsibility, and that we would be using some of this money to advertise and have public school programs for children discouraging tobacco use.

The government's step of putting the cigarettes behind curtains was a very good first step. Increasing the tax is a good second step. Now we need to take the third and the fourth and the fifth steps; that is, get out of the business of investing in tobacco and apply the revenue that we've received towards proactive, healthy living and public education.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Bill 40

Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2009

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you. On behalf of the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill I'm pleased to move third reading of Bill 40, Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2009.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is again another one of those bills that we've talked about at second and in committee. It's a straightforward bill. It makes a couple of changes: ensures eligibility for the Alberta tuition credit, parallels eligibility for the federal tuition credit, and makes changes to ensure that our dividend tax credit is administered in accordance with the existing government policy. It is straightforward, and we have no problems with it. We will be supporting this bill.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Additional speakers?
Should I call the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

Bill 10

Supportive Living Accommodation Licensing Act

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Mr. Dallas: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today to move third reading of Bill 10, the Supportive Living Accommodation Licensing Act.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Sorry to keep you confused as to who was going to jump up on this particular bill.

We are supportive of the direction this bill is taking. We have pointed out in other bills that involved not only assisted living but long-term care that there is a tremendous shortage of qualified staff. It's not out of negligence or deliberate neglect, but seniors continue to suffer whether they're in the assisted living complexes or in the long-term care.

Currently there is a lawsuit that has been allowed to go forward against the government by seniors who feel that the 40 per cent increase that occurred approximately six or seven years back was unfair, so it's very important as we move ahead with legislation that we're not disadvantaging any seniors.

The supportive living is absolutely essential. As I noted in debate last night with regard to a seniors bill, keeping seniors in their homes and supported as long as we can is the way to go. Organizations which the government, to its credit, supports such as Meals on Wheels are ways of keeping seniors not only in their homes but connected. Therefore, in supporting this Bill 10, I would just encourage the minister to look at the vulnerability of seniors and what is best for them, that being to support them within their homes with the types of nurse practitioners, whatever it may be, regular visits to help them maintain their dignity and also their home.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Others to participate? The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, I'm supportive of this legislation, too. I think it does move in the right direction, with note to what the Member for Calgary-Varsity said.

With your permission I'm just going to veer – I don't know – I hope not off topic, Mr. Speaker. This brings up something that I would like to get on the record, which is that not only do we need more affordable and properly licensed and regulated and managed assisted living facilities in this province, but it's become clear to me in conversations that I've had with seniors across my constituency and, you know, across the province that we need to move on from here. This may be a good start, but it's only a start. We need to move on from here with a much more comprehensive continuum of housing for seniors.

I mean, most seniors, Mr. Speaker, want to remain as independent as they can for as long as they can, but one of the inescapable facts is that very often as we age, we do have to move from our own home into some kind of assisted living or designated assisted living or increasingly higher levels of care. Each one of those moves can be incredibly disruptive and incredibly hard on a single senior or a senior couple. Sometimes it separates a couple of seniors, and that can be very, very hard as well.

We need to be starting to wrap our heads around now, not only for the sake of our own aging parents but for our own sakes not all that many decades down the road, a better designed continuum of seniors' housing that allows seniors the ability to go from essentially independent living in, say, an apartment, a suite of their own in a seniors' complex, with meal privileges if they wish to take advantage, with full kitchens for most of the time when they don't want to, on through, you know, a little higher level of care, on through some care that's starting to approach long-term care, right up to the point where some of us are going to need to spend our final months in a dementia ward. Those housing types need to be located in close proximity to one another so that we can move as effortlessly and with as little disruption as possible from one type of housing to another as we need to.

I just wanted to get that on the record because I'm certainly hearing that from a great number of seniors who I've been talking to. I thought this might be a good time, with your co-operation and permission, Mr. Speaker, to allow that to happen.

That said, I'll take my seat and see if others want to join the debate or if we should call the question.

The Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 10 read a third time]

Bill 11 Fisheries (Alberta) Amendment Act, 2009

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Berger: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon.

Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne I rise today to move third reading of Bill 11, the Fisheries (Alberta) Amendment Act, 2009.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure to speak in support of Bill 11. This bill proposes a more punitive penalty for fishery violations and power to the courts to include penalties that bind offenders to return fisheries to their healthy state.

Alberta's fish stocks have been declining steadily since 2000. The main reason for this has been overfishing and loss of fish habitat due to rapid development. Bill 11 hopes to address the issue of overfishing by introducing punitive measures to discourage overfishing. In the event that anglers are charged under the Fisheries (Alberta) Act, strict penalties are introduced. Essentially, this serves as a great deterrent.

The fish resources of Alberta are limited in diversity and abundance by the small amount of suitable habitat due to the relatively small amount of surface water. Surveys in Alberta have indicated that about 800 lakes and 1,500 streams have a self-sustaining sport fish population. An additional 300 ponds are stocked regularly with trout to expand fishing and harvest opportunities. There are going to be economic benefits to sport fishing in Alberta.

The act addresses the deficiency in the existing act, namely the lack of punitive actions sufficient to deter violations of licence provisions. A good measure in this bill is dealing with the punishment of bad land-use practices that have caused the destruction of fish habitat.

Ultimately, these amendments to the Fisheries (Alberta) Act are long overdue as fish stocks have been in decline for years. We are glad to finally see some action taken to protect Alberta's fish population.

One factor that should also be considered is the enforcement of these measures; in other words, more fisheries officers to ensure compliance and enforce the act. Without this element these changes will not be as effective.

For those reasons I'm supporting Bill 11, Mr. Speaker. Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Very quickly. You may have gathered this, but I'm extremely proud of my father, Bryce Chase, and his connection with the Sarcee Fish and Game Association as well as the Alberta Fish and Game Association. Father, as well as planting literally thousands of caraganas around sloughs and lakes for bird and wildlife habitat protection, has also spent a tremendous amount of time dumping stumps into lakes for fish feeding areas.

One of the activities that the Sarcee Fish and Game Association takes on each year is a physically handicapped fishing derby. Father has taken along individuals in wheelchairs, individuals who were in need of assistance due to visual impairment. Rain or shine these annual fishing derbies in stocked ponds have been a highlight for these individuals.
