Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a distinct honour for me to rise today and introduce to you and to all members a truly inspirational Albertan. Walter Twiddy is an impressive leader and champion in collaborative efforts to end homelessness in this province. He's the CEO of NeighbourLink and with his staff and associates works miracles for Calgarians and Albertans every day. If Oprah Winfrey got a hold of him, she'd follow him around for weeks, doing a great series on what he does at home and at work. He's a tireless community volunteer, very dedicated to the Calgary-Lougheed PC Association and policy, good policy, across this fine province. If I were to give you his resumé, it would take the rest of question period. I won't do that, but I will say that I would be remiss if I did not admit that he is a real inspiration in the fact that he's an exemplary family man, who hopes to enter law school soon so he can become even more of an advocate for those living in poverty. Most of all, for me he's a very treasured friend. Mr. Walter Twiddy is in the members' gallery. I hope that you will now stand and accept the warm welcome of your Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have several guests in the members' gallery today. I'm thankful that these visitors have taken time out of their busy schedules to come and watch question period. They are all involved in fundraising for the relief efforts in Haiti, and I will talk about that in Members' Statements. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Mr. Reshamdeep Mundy, Mr. Savi Kachroo, Mr. Inderjit Gill Mullanpur, Mr. Harpreet Sandhu, Mr. Harjinder Singh Ahluwalia, Mr. Navjot Channe, Mr. Gurfateh Brar. I would like to ask these gentlemen to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly participants and friends from the Ethno-Cultural Council of Calgary's leadership engagement action and development project, the LEAD initiative. The key goals of this initiative include to engage committee members and groups to take active roles in addressing the issues that affect them and their communities; to work with mainstream organizations and promote awareness, respect, and participation of culturally diverse groups in these organizations; and to engage visible minority community members in critical understanding, analysis of public policies, and to facilitate their participation in dialogues.

These members are here to observe the Legislature in action and support Motion 505 this afternoon. I would ask our guests to stand as I call your names: Marichu Antonio, director, Babae Council of Filipino-Canadian Women and executive director of the Ethno-Cultural Council of Calgary; Fromencio Bensing and Sheeba Vijayan, co-ordinators of the council; Junior Coco Kalombo, president of the Calgary French youth society; Artan Ravmanoski and Bukurie Mino, board members of the Albanian community association of Calgary; Jean-Claude Jassak and Pierre Hournou, directors of the Afro-Francophone Alberta Rehabilitation-Integration and Care Services; Lily Kwok, executive director of the Calgary Chinese Community Services Association; Richard Lee, director of the oriental music and arts school and Chinese Community Services; Irene Yi, member of the Calgary Chinese Cultural Society; Rahmat Sai, president of the Calgary Afghan community Hambastagi Cultural Association; Quang Trinh, Calgary Vietnamese Youth Group; Jason Klinck and other members from the Centre for Newcomers. I would like to ask the members in this House to extend to them the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege today to rise and introduce the second half of the team from the Ethno-Cultural Council of Calgary's project LEAD initiative. I'd ask my friends to rise as I call their names: Bishnu Subba from the Nepalese Community Society of Calgary and Bharat Regmi from the same organization; Funmilayo Aregbesola from the Nigerian community as well as Bukola Okedara from the same community; Maria Mora from the Peruvian association; Evelyne Kemajou from Portail de l'Immigrant en Alberta; Paul Mayen from the United Sudanese-Canadian Enhancement Society as well as Mario Ayudo from the same organization; and my friend, Fowzia Isse, from the Somali community. I'd ask all members to give these individuals the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today. First, I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a very distinguished young lady, Her Worship Olivia Hoepfner, mayor of Rideau Park school, located in my constituency of Edmonton-Rutherford, where she is also a grade 6 student. Olivia was elected on November 13, 2009, and like all members of this House, Olivia conducted a campaign. Her proposals included asking students to bring a toonie for the Hogar Llanero Brisas del Canada in Colombia, a home away from home where students from the distant plains live while attending school, and the proclamation of two pajama days per year.

In addition to these campaign promises, Olivia also helped organize an Olympic day to support our great Canadian and Albertan athletes and a bake sale where all proceeds were donated to the Heart and Stroke Foundation. Olivia is accompanied today by her parents, Geoff and Tricia Hoepfner, and I would ask all of them to kindly rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of our Assembly.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members Mr. Ron Lau and Mrs. Suzanne Clemens. Both are seated in the members' gallery. Mr. Lau is a member of the Canadian Red Cross Central and Northern Alberta Regional Council, and Mrs. Clemens is the operations manager of the Canadian Red Cross, central and northern Alberta. Both are present today to hear a member's statement I will be presenting regarding the contributions of Albertans through the Canadian Red Cross in Haiti relief. I would ask that both Mr. Lau and Mrs. Clemens rise and receive our traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly three special guests who have come here today to show their concern with some of the policies of the special needs assistance for seniors program, which I will ask a question about later. I would like to ask our guests Carol Kotyk, her son Rick Breum, and her grandson Connor Breum to please rise and accept our warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislative Assembly representatives of the Centre for Race and Culture, Siye Abbenstets and Trevor Gladue. Since 1993 the Centre for Race and Culture, formerly known as the Northern Alberta Alliance on Race Relations, has worked to foster social harmony and cultural inclusion. The centre organized the 17th International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination in Edmonton. The campaign includes a variety of events throughout the month of March to bring public awareness to the fight against racism. My guests are seated in the public gallery, and I would now ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislature my guests Logan McIntosh and Keely Kidner from the University of Alberta water week working group. The United Nations has designated March 22 as World Water Day. The water week working group is a coalition of various University of Alberta environmental and social justice groups who are striving to highlight local and international water issues this week. My guests are seated in the public gallery, and I would now ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Cancer Services

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of the most heart-wrenching moments a person can face in life is when they're told:

you have cancer. They turn to the health care system and count on a co-ordinated, timely, high-quality response. For reasons unknown this government has disbanded the Alberta Cancer Board, which ran Alberta's cancer treatment and research system, including the Cross and Tom Baker cancer centres. To the Premier: given that every other province has an equivalent to the Cancer Board, will the Premier order the Alberta Cancer Board restored in Alberta?

Mr. Stelmach: No, Mr. Speaker. A decision has been made. The Cancer Board is incorporated under the Alberta Health Services Board, and it'll stay that way.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that cancer treatment requires a multidisciplinary approach with pathologists, physicians, surgeons, nurses, why is the Premier standing by while these teams are being dismantled?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, in fact, the opposite is true. We have under the Alberta Health Services Board a good model where all services are put together under one board, and it's a true reflection of all of our medical providers working together, including all of the cancer specialists and all of the various specific programs that are offered. In fact, because of those individuals we are now doing more cancer therapy in outlying rural hospitals, and that will continue in the province.

Dr. Swann: Well, in fact, the opposite is true, Mr. Speaker. There's chaos in the system, with longer wait times, frustration at both the patient and professional ends. Why have these multidisciplinary teams, then, that work together on cancer been effectively separated and instead of one direction now have seven different directions to report to? How is that more efficient and effective?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, in fact, they report to one board. I believe the hon. member is talking about some of the articles in the paper this weekend, where we had some of the specialty individuals speaking, that it would be nice to have a two-week waiting period. The cancer representative responded that that would be great, but the current waiting times for cancer are at about middle of the road for the country of Canada. Can we improve them? Yes, we can, and we will. The minister will be making announcements soon.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

High-intensity Residential Fires

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A high-intensity residential fire report sat for seven months until this government responded to the recommendations. It took another year for them to update fire safety regulations. Last week we saw what happens when government fails to act in a timely way: 300 Calgary residents are homeless due to a massive fire. To the Premier. Requiring sprinklers on balconies and in attics of low-rise buildings should have been an easy task for government. Why did it take this government over 18 months to enact these fire safety recommendations?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, first of all, our sympathies to all of the families. Thankfully, no lives were lost in the condo fire in Calgary.

I can tell you that we had and continue to have very high standards with respect to the codes, and we will continue to improve the codes. The codes that were in place were already above most of the national standards that were implemented, so we were ahead of other provinces. We will continue, once the review and investigation into this fire is done, to see how it started and what else we can do in the future.

Dr. Swann: Again to the Premier: how many Albertans are living in potential fire traps that were built during the year and a half that this government sat on these recommendations?

Mr. Stelmach: None. I think that's quite an irresponsible question.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, 300 people are homeless because this government couldn't make changes to safety codes soon enough. What will the Premier do to help the thousands of Albertans that are in buildings now that were built before fire safety was finally strengthened? What will you do now?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, building codes are very complex. They require, of course, due process on such matters as technical research, all of the matters relating to building and fire science, and also stakeholder consultation and public consultation. We have done a lot of that in terms of introducing the most recent codes. The other thing is, though, that we don't know how the fire started, what led to this. Let's wait for the full report to make sure that we know what issue we're dealing with, and once that report is in, then we'll be able to take that under consideration.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Deputy Leader of the Official Opposition.

Water Management and Allocation

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is World Water Week. When we look at the state of water in Alberta, we see that the communities in southern Alberta have run out of water allocations, the South Saskatchewan River basin has been rated the most threatened river in Canada, and 2010 is projected to be another year of drought, the seventh in the last decade. To the Minister of Environment: why does the minister choose to respect an antediluvian industry-centric system at the expense of the inclusion of new or growing regions?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure I understand the reference that the member makes, but the fact of the matter is that in the preamble the member stated various obvious issues. We are entering a drought. It wasn't my cause. We do have pressure on the South Saskatchewan. It wasn't a result of the government. What is the government doing? We are taking very seriously our responsibility to ensure that we protect the water in the best available way and that we allocate that water to all necessary users.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. To the same minister: given that more water will be pulled out of the rivers if the FITFIR, first in time, first in right, owners are allowed to sell their allocations, why is the minister moving toward a water market which further entrenches this system?

Mr. Renner: Well, I shouldn't have to remind this member because I think she, above all, should know that there is only so much water in the river, so to suggest that more water can be withdrawn is an inaccurate statement. What we're talking about is sharing in the most equitable way the water that's available while, at the same time — and I must emphasize this, Mr. Speaker — assuring that the number one priority is the protection of the healthy aquatic ecosystem, and that is a nature conservation set aside.

Ms Blakeman: No, not true.

Back to the same minister: why is the minister playing both sides against the middle with his insistence on keeping the centuries-old I-got-here-first entitlement and pitting it against the threatened water system of the South Saskatchewan and other water basins?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think that's kind of what politics is all about, isn't it? It's about recognizing and respecting history and putting plans and necessary policies in place to ensure our future. That's exactly what my job is about. That's what I do every day. I balance historical record and future needs.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Code of Conduct for Health Care Workers

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government talks about openness and transparency, but when health care professionals bring forward their concerns or problems, they are referred to the Alberta Health Services code of conduct, which is commonly known as the code. The code is at the heart of AHS bylaws, procedures, standards, guidelines, regulations, policies, and directives on how employers are to conduct themselves. My question is to the minister of health. What exactly can health care professionals talk about with regard to improving our health care system?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the new and improved code of conduct that was brought in in December, pretty much anything and everything that deals with health care from a patient's point of view and from a medical needs point of view. Policy matters: they might want to ask me about, or they might want to ask somebody in Alberta Health Services.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you. Given that AHS provides health service delivery in response to direction received from the minister, will the minister of health send a memo to all health care professionals indicating that they can speak out with their concerns to their MLA, media, and Albertans without fear of being reprimanded?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, as I've said, there is a new code of conduct that the nurses have agreed to. They're fine with it. I've talked with the doctors as well. They are fine with this. They can feel free to talk about any medical issues they want and with whomever they want whenever they want.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Forsyth: All right. Then I'll look forward to that memo going to the health care professionals.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since part of the AHS code tells employees to be open, honest, and transparent, if a health employee believes a policy is harmful to patients, who are they accountable to: Alberta Health Services or the patients in their care?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the health professionals in this first-class system do an awesome job day in, day out under very trying circumstances. They should be saluted. If they have an issue with regard to policy, there's a protocol to be followed just like there is with any employer, and that's very clearly laid out in some of the organizational frameworks. They can talk to Alberta Health Services, or they can certainly write to me if they wish.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The time between being diagnosed with cancer and beginning treatment is torturous for Alberta families. The government's goal is for wait times for radiation therapy to be no longer than four weeks. Last summer more than 40 per cent of Albertans had to wait longer than that. My question is to the Premier. Will the Premier tell the Assembly what the government is planning to do to rectify this situation?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, in answer to the previous question on the same topic I said that the minister is putting together not only a capital plan, but now that Alberta Health Services has a five-year increased funding commitment, they're able to plan better, look at the changing demographics of the province, and also will have good input in terms of the capital requirements over the next number of years.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that the Alberta Health and Wellness projections show that approximately 50 per cent of Albertans will get cancer and that half of them will die from it and given that our aging population finds the Cross Cancer Institute with an increase of 4 per cent in its intake each year, why won't the Premier admit that his current strategy is inadequate and cannot keep up with the rapid growth of cancer rates in this province?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the minister can supplement in terms of his plan.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, we're putting in place some very effective strategies called performance measures and targets to hold the system itself accountable, we've added to that significant dollars in this five-year funding plan, that's going to be rolled out very soon, and we are meeting with doctors, oncologists specifically, to ensure that we're going to get that all corrected.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Setting targets just won't do it. Given that the government previously promised a billion dollars for cancer hospitals nearly five years ago and failed to meet that commitment and given that this government is failing to meet its own targets for oncology care, will this Premier commit to develop a new cancer strategy that includes new capital for cancer hospitals in Calgary and Edmonton and the resources to staff them, making it possible to meet the four-week target for all Albertans who have cancer?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I'll say it again. I've said it so many times that I have it memorized. We're coming out with a capital plan on or about March 31. That will have a good snapshot into what we're doing with health facilities, including cancer facilities and others that are able to be accommodated in the three-year capital health facilities funding plan.

We are also bringing in the radiation therapy corridor. There's a new facility for radiation therapy that'll be opening in Lethbridge, for example, in June. There's one that's going to be coming to Grande Prairie. There's one that's coming to Red Deer.

We're doing a lot to address cancer issues. I agree that there's a lot to be done as well.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Special-needs Assistance for Seniors

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A man was prescribed meal supplements when he was being treated for cancer, and his family was told that the cost would be covered through the special-needs assistance for seniors program. With this information the wife bought the meal supplements. Unfortunately, the gentleman has died, and his widow submitted the claim for reimbursement. My questions are to the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. Why is the benefit for special-needs assistance not reimbursed to the survivor when the claimant has passed away?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I'd like to express my sympathy for this loss to Ms Kotyk and her family. While I can't comment on the specific client situation, I can tell you that the special-needs assistance program assists low-income seniors with one-time or extraordinary costs such as some medical expenses, appliances, and essential minor home repairs. A special need is a one-time or extraordinary personal expenditure that is required to meet the needs of low-income seniors.

Ms Pastoor: To the same minister: why is this department's policy not to make any further contact with the family of the deceased, leaving the family in limbo at a very difficult time?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, once again, I can't comment on a specific case. But once a senior passes away, they can no longer directly benefit from the funding as the special-needs assistance program cannot provide funds directly to the estate. Also, if the spouse of a senior who has passed away is not a senior themselves, they are not eligible for funding from the special-needs program.

Ms Pastoor: They had been told that she would receive it, which is why she spent the money.

Will the minister immediately extend this benefit to claimant survivors and order the department to maintain contact with the family until the claim is discharged?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, I will look into this policy, and I will review what has been said.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week a devastating fire tore through a condo complex in Millrise, which I've visited a number of times since, in my constituency of Calgary-Lougheed. The fire virtually destroyed the building and left hundreds of people looking for somewhere else to live. The residents are left with many questions, including about code changes requiring sprinklers on balconies and in attics. My first question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Apart from what we have already heard, can the minister give us some more details on the impact the new code may have had on this fire?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My sympathies also go out to those affected by the fire. The investigation is under way, and we are trying to figure out how that fire may have spread. Alberta updated its building code and the fire codes last year, ahead of any other Canadian jurisdiction. These codes are meant for people to buy time to get out safely and for the firefighters to fight the fire as quickly as possible. We had very, very high standards before, and now we even have better ones.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is for the same minister. What is the government of Alberta doing to assist the victims of this Millrise fire in any specific and tangible ways?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, we remain in contact with those that have been affected by the fire. The Alberta fire commissioner has also been in contact with the city of Calgary and offered assistance, but no assistance, apparently, is required at this particular time. There's been an outpouring of financial donations, which are also helping provide for clothing and household items and other items that may be required.

Mr. Rodney: My final supplemental is for the Minister of Service Alberta. Why is insurance mandatory for vehicles and not for residences?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Under the Condominium Property Act condominium corporations are required to carry insurance for the overall condominium building, and that will vary from building to building and mainly for specific things, including fire. The insurance for residential units will vary, and oftentimes individuals should as well carry contents insurance with the backup of what the condominium does provide.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Education Achievement Testing

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again the Minister of Education has catered, cratered to the competitive ideology of the Fraser Institute by releasing standardized test scores from across the province, which have a more punitive than celebratory effect. To the minister: what motivational value or educational relevance does publicizing test results given at the end of the previous year for students who have left their division have for either students, teachers, or parents?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, far from cratering to whatever it was the hon. member suggested, the Fraser Institute accesses the information that they publish through the freedom of information and protection of privacy rules in this province. Information that's in the hands of government that is not otherwise protected is available for release to people who apply appropriately under the act. I have no ability to withhold that information even though I disagree with the way that they use it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. What purpose is achieved by permitting the publishing of rank-ordered school test results, particularly for those scoring below the 50th percentile? Does the minister believe that either embarrassment or degradation is a motivator for future success?

Mr. Hancock: I don't think the Fraser Institute report, Mr. Speaker, has any value whatsoever, and I say so every time I'm asked. I think it's a totally inappropriate use of the data, and I wish people wouldn't read it. But I cannot stop them from publishing it, I cannot stop newspapers from publishing it, and I cannot stop people from reading it.

Mr. Chase: Would the investment in time, effort, and money that goes into the preparation, marking, and evaluation of these one-shot wonder tests not be better spent at the classroom level in addressing both students' confidence and competence?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I would hope that our school boards across the province are addressing the issue of students' competence and confidence in their classrooms on an everyday basis and that our teachers are doing that as well. There is very much an appropriate process for assessment of and for learning in the classroom, but there's also an appropriate way – and whether or not the provincial achievement tests are that appropriate way has been the subject of discussion for a number of years and will go on – to be accountable to the public for the $6.3 billion that are spent on public education in this province every year and make sure that the system is working.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffer.

Gang-related Crime

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A constituent came to see me last week expressing deep concern for the safety of her family, especially her two young children. This is because her house is located next to a house that was targeted for two gang-related drive-by shootings within a year's time. Her two young children's bedroom is right next to the house that was involved with the shootings. My questions are to the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security. My constituent wants to know: what is your ministry doing to provide the needed protection to her family and neighbours?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Gang crime is serious and unacceptable to us all, and we're taking actions in our communities to help Albertans feel safe. We've instituted, as you may know, the Alberta law enforcement response teams, developed to combat serious and organized crime, including gangs. They've taken some 2,500 individuals, charged them. They've taken 800 kilograms of drugs, 350 firearms off the street. We operate a SCAN unit underneath the ALERT team, that Albertans can talk directly to. Just visit the website.

Ms Woo-Paw: To the same minister: what programs and initiatives are there to provide information and support to the family members of the gang members?

Mr. Oberle: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned, we have the ALERT and the SCAN resources out there. Constituents are invited at any time to talk to the police. At all times any communications with law enforcement are confidential. I might add that we added the witness security protection program, which will provide short-term protection during the execution of a trial. This could be of assistance to the families. I would also add that the ALERT ITRAC unit can be employed when family violence is an issue in gang membership.

Ms Woo-Paw: My final question is for the Minister of Justice. How is the safe communities initiative addressing the recruitment of vulnerable youth into gangs?

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We know that the safe communities philosophy and this government need to deal with education, awareness well before we look to prevention and prosecution. What we have done is developed a comprehensive gang reduction strategy that identifies the fact that we very often have youth at risk very early in their life. We have a number of partnerships with social workers, police, and principals, the youth at risk development project in Calgary. We also have a number of SCIF initiatives that are dealing with youth in communities around the province to identify the particular risks in communities that will avoid decisions with respect to gangs.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Checkstop Program

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Random roadside sobriety testing in Australia and New Zealand has been very successful in curbing drinking and driving and likely would be in Alberta if it was employed on a more frequent basis. To the Solicitor General. Right now in Calgary it only has one unit to handle its checkstop program. How do you think a municipal police force can hope to make any impact without the proper resources to test more motorists?

Mr. Oberle: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member would know or should know that the Calgary Police Service provides municipal policing, not the department. We work with the department. He will also know that one of the reasons we announced our integrated traffic model to be deployed across Alberta is that it will give us 19 locations across the province, a critical mass sufficient to man checkstop or vehicle safety checks.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Everyone agrees that a visible presence for Alberta's roadside checkstops is a surefire way to improve traffic safety, but current strategies are infrequent and episodic. Will the Solicitor General take a strong stance and commit to long-term projects to eradicate drunk driving in addition to regular increases on holidays and other festive occasions?

Mr. Oberle: Well, I think we did commit and we are committing,

Mr. Speaker. As I said, we've deployed units across the province. We are absolutely going to be able to increase checkstops, holiday checks, all of those things.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, thank you very much for the opportunity to ask my third question. An increase in checkstops means a corresponding decrease in fatal accidents. When will this ministry and this province provide police with adequate funding to deploy checkstop units on a regular basis throughout the province?

Mr. Oberle: Well, I'm dead convinced that I answered that question twice now, Mr. Speaker. We just announced the deployment of 19 integrated sheriff-RCMP stations across the province, which will provide us with a critical mass to be able to do checkstops, vehicle safety checks, those sorts of things. We will be enforcing impaired driving.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Postsecondary Education Affordability

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many postsecondary students across Alberta are concerned about their current financial situation and accumulating debt. My question today is to the hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology. Given the current economic recession, job prospects are uncertain. Many graduates are having to continue their studies. What assistance can new graduates get to pay their student debts and tuition fees if they extend their studies?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, we've been working with the students over the last six years, the last three on the affordability framework. As resources have allowed us, we've been ticking off the things around affordability that are important to the students. Obviously, in Budget 2010 we made some improvements to the programs, including higher lifetime loan limits and a new, more flexible repayment assistance program. Really, in answer to the hon. member's question, the new, flexible repayment program is going to be very valuable to our students in the coming years.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same hon. minister: what efforts are being made to regulate mandatory noninstructional fees at Alberta postsecondary educational institutions?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, we have had this question in the House a few times now as it relates to ancillary fees. Most of these fees that we're hearing about are just proposals at this stage. We are keeping a close eye on that situation. We do want to ensure that any fees that are of an instructional nature are certainly kept within the tuition fee policy. If there is a need – and I've said this to the students – to regulate noninstructional fees, we've actually asked the students to work with us and the postsecondaries to draft a possible regulation.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same hon. minister: how do the current loan relief program and the new repayment assistance program meet the needs of students with a large student debt?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, the focus is on providing all of the eligible students with the assistance that they need to help meet their costs, and that includes the cost of tuition, the cost of living, the cost of books, all of those things. We ensure that the debt above a set of thresholds is actually forgiven for qualifying grads to help ensure that the students have a manageable debt load at the end of their studies. The repayment assistance plan is going to provide even more flexibility to grads struggling to make loan payments as they enter the workforce, and we'll continue to monitor that affordability framework.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, last week 400 Calgarians were left homeless by a disastrous condo fire. It appears the fire began on a balcony and spread to the complex's attic. Thankfully, no one was killed, but residents are asking why this government delayed implementing a 2007 report calling for mandatory sprinklers on balconies and in attics. The Millrise condo complex was built in 2008 and did not include such sprinklers. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: why did it take from October 2007 to May 2009, 18 months, to implement these recommended building code reforms?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, I think Alberta should be commended, not criticized, for being proactive and taking action to protect Albertans. Building codes are very complex and require due process. We have to do the technical research on building and fire science and the stakeholder consultation. That always takes quite a lot of time, and a lot of public consultation is required before those are accepted.

Mr. Anderson: To the same minister: given that it only took this government one month – one month – to accept the recommendations of the 2007 royalty review panel overhauling the regulatory regime of our most important and complex industry, why then did it take seven times longer to accept the few but important recommendations regarding balcony and attic sprinklers in the 2007 fire prevention report?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta already has one of the strictest fire codes in the country. There is no doubt that updating our building codes took some time, but we're over two years ahead of any other jurisdiction across Canada. There is no doubt that it took some time, but we wanted to make sure that we were getting it right.

Mr. Anderson: The minister should have acted faster, Mr. Speaker. My final question to the same minister: was there any lobbying on government that caused the one and a half year delay in implementing these fire safety building code recommendations, and if so, by whom?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, I'm not aware that there was any lobbying, at least not to me.

Mr. Speaker, it's very misleading to say that 300 people are homeless due to building and fire codes. Building and fire codes are meant to help slow the spread of fires and protect the individuals. We need to look at what caused the fires in the first place and how those fires spread, and these are the things that we're looking at.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Building Construction Review

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government had an opportunity to introduce new standards for home and condo construction, but instead they chose to do nothing. Now housing starts in Edmonton and Calgary are triple what they were at this time last year, and Albertans have no new protections against shoddy building practices. To the Minister of Service Alberta: why is this government leaving thousands of new home and condo owners at risk of the same kinds of shoddy construction practices that hurt Albertans during the last housing boom?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As previously said by the Minister of Municipal Affairs, building codes are in that area. But I can address the issue of the Condominium Property Act, some of those areas that we will be doing consultations on in the spring of 2011. What's really important here is that there are issues across different ministries, and we need to make sure that we look at all the issues and come to a good decision.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. More consultation, more consultation, but there's no action. Why is the minister not moving now to protect new home and condo buyers by speeding up her reviews of the fair trading and condo property acts?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Fair Trading Act and the Condominium Property Act are both very cornerstone pieces of legislation for this government. Under the Fair Trading Act there are a number of areas where we've been able to go after individuals and charge individuals. The Condominium Property Act has a working committee that is working very hard right now with a number of stakeholders to move forward when we do the consultation in the spring of 2011.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: why isn't the minister releasing the results of the study of residential construction practices that his department did two years ago?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, we consulted with stakeholders such as builders, municipalities, fire chiefs, building and fire experts, and the public from January through August of 2008. Those final reviews and recommendations by the Safety Codes Council were made to us in September of '08 and accepted in October of 2008. The original schedule for adoption in January of '09 was delayed until March of '09 because of the technical complexity of the regulations. We are looking at the drafting and approval and passage of those amended regulations.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Consultation on Employment Agencies

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Service Alberta has launched a consultation on regulations related to employment agencies in the province. Apparently, it is intended to cover issues such as whether employment agencies should be required to disclose to their clients the types of fees agencies are or are not allowed to charge and what extra services these agencies should be allowed to offer. My question is for the Minister of Service Alberta. Is this consultation an admission that your ministry's regulations haven't properly protected the clients of employment agencies?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to this consultation that was just announced today, this is going to be a consultation that will go until the end of April, April 30. What's really important is that there are many examples where we have been able to enforce and charge individuals. What we want to do is improve and update the regulations to ensure that they're effective as we move forward as the economy recovers in the months and the years ahead. This is a really important consultation.

Mr. Xiao: My first supplemental to the same minister: given there have been examples of a worker being charged fees by employment agencies despite the fact that it's against the law, will you address this as a part of your consultation?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Service Alberta takes allegations of fees being charged to workers very seriously. This consultation will give our investigators even stronger tools to ensure that our regulations are being followed and, as well, encourage individuals to come forward when they are in situations that are untenable.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Xiao: Yes. My last supplemental to the same minister: shouldn't this review have happened several years ago, when our economy was booming and the foreign workers were flooding to the province? Isn't reviewing the regulation at this point too late?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is a good time to review it. It hasn't been reviewed for about 10 years. We know the economy has changed in Alberta. We know there are different challenges and different labour areas. We know there are many foreign workers that are working here in Alberta and will continue to come. This is about the future and doing the right thing.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Wood Buffalo Municipal Issues

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week while I was meeting with the mayor and councillors from the region of Wood Buffalo, I was surprised to learn that the Minister of Municipal Affairs has not even spoken with them since taking office. This municipality is home to thousands upon thousands of workers who are indispensable to the health of our province's economy. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs. It's been almost three months since he took the job. Why has the minister not even met with Wood Buffalo municipal officials?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, that answer is rather easy: because they haven't asked to meet with me. I want to indicate that upon becoming Minister of Municipal Affairs, I did meet with quite a number of municipalities across the province. Just recently we concluded the very, very successful conference of AAMD and C where all of the rural municipalities were represented. I will upon request meet with them if they want to talk.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that their most pressing need is for the provincial government to accept their census methodology so they can receive the amount of funding they're entitled to, an amount of funding that relates directly to the number of people who actually live in Fort McMurray, why has the minister done nothing to solve the problem?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, I need to make it clear to this House that we've got 359 municipalities. Each and every one of them is special in their own way, and each and every one of them has particular issues. As they address those issues to me, I work with them.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I'm only asking about one of them today.

Given that the municipality doesn't have enough experienced planners on staff to develop Parsons Creek so that Fort McMurray can have housing available for the next boom, which could start in, oh, I don't know, six months, what is the minister doing right now to help them fast-track this process?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, it's my understanding – and that's made available through other municipalities – that some of that particular land is available. We work with all municipalities, including Fort McMurray, with the existing programs and support services that we have, and we'll continue to do that with them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Supports for Disabled Persons

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're a province that prides itself on independence and self-initiative. Many people believe that if you want a better life, it's up to you to work hard. However, for some Albertans, including those with disabilities, this is a lot more difficult, if not next to impossible. My questions are for the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. Minister, what are we doing as a government to help Albertans who may have very limited options for earning an income?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, I agree that we are a very proud province, and we can be proud of our support for those most in need. This includes the assured income for the severely handicapped program, or AISH, which provides monthly financial and supplementary health benefits to about 40,000 adult Albertans with severe and permanent disabilities. To support those AISH clients who can and want to work, we have income exemptions in place that allow clients to earn some employment income and still receive a level of AISH benefit.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the same minister. Because mobility is another concern and because a disabled man in my community is struggling to repair or replace his wheelchair, is there any help available to obtain wheelchairs or other assistive devices to help Albertans with disabilities?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, our government's commitment to those most in need can also be seen through many of the programs delivered by my ministry, including the Alberta aids to daily living program, or AADL. AADL is a $113 million program that provides financial assistance to approximately 80,000 Albertans each year to purchase medical equipment and supplies such as wheelchairs. Clients can also receive assistance with repairs to equipment provided by AADL.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Patient Safety Report

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Alberta Health Services finally released the independent report into incidents at the Alberta Children's hospital. The report suggests a picture of a physician with a chronically difficult personality overruling a nurse and ordering her to give a small child a potentially life-threatening dose of painkiller. The management of the Children's hospital appears to have failed to prevent the situation even though warning signs had accumulated. To the minister of health: if this situation can happen at the Children's hospital, what is the minister doing to ensure that it is not happening elsewhere?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, there are about 80 recommendations in that Health Quality Council report which was released on Thursday. I can assure you that Alberta Health Services is doing everything within their powers and in their capacity to address not only those four incidents but other recommendations that will help prevent those kinds of incidents in the future.

Dr. Taft: Well, the minister has said that he has read the report cover to cover. He'll know, then, that this report uses some pretty startling language such as "ineffective," not inappropriate, "not respectful," and on page 28 speaks of "disruptive behaviour by physicians that interferes with the provision of safe patient care." Given that five months have passed, have policies been put in place in those five months to fix the problem?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I don't know if that exact section has yet been addressed and implemented, but I can tell you that immediately upon receiving the report, even before it was made public, staff, professional providers, and others at the Alberta Children's hospital acted immediately on areas where they could, and a lot of those recommendations were implemented almost right at that time.

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, given that it's clear from the report that there is a particular physician whose behaviour has contributed heavily to the problems with a large overdose of painkillers to a very small child and given that this behaviour appears to be ongoing, has the minister ordered any special measures be taken to deal with this particular physician?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, no, I haven't. If it's an issue of that gravity, then there is certainly a mechanism in place, and it's called a complaint to the College of Physicians and Surgeons. They are the ones who deal with doctor discipline and actions against doctors or comments about performance or diagnoses or whatever it might be.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

School Closures

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Education has spoken publicly in this Legislature of the importance of having community services integrated in schools and schools being integrated into the community, yet schools are still being closed in the inner city. The school boards are saying that it's the province that's pressuring them to close. My question is to the Minister of Education. What Alberta Department of Education legislation or regulations are contributing to schools in the inner city being closed?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, actually, there are no legislative policies or regulations which would contribute to that type of decision-making.

Ms Blakeman: It's the utilization rates, and you know it.

Mr. Hancock: Utilization rates do not actually contribute to the idea of closing schools. Utilization rates are utilized with respect to whether or not new schools are needed.

What might actually impact a school board's decision is the plant operation and maintenance funding formula, which funds on a per-student basis. So if you don't have enough students in a school or if the school is larger and more difficult to heat and operate, that might actually impact a decision.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: how can government possibly encourage schools to pursue wraparound service partnerships when the schools that are pioneering such practices in older, often higher social needs communities are the first schools up for closure?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Actually, I'm glad that we have the trustees from Edmonton public school board here today so I can say yet again what I've said in the past in this House. The city centre school project in Edmonton public, which was put together a number of years ago, demonstrates exactly how to do it. They created a better opportunity for education for the children in that area. Yes, a couple of schools were closed, but the receiving schools were renovated, and what they've created are partnerships with the community to provide better supports for those students.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you. To the same minister: what can your ministry do to encourage services such as children and family services and community health services to be offered within the school walls?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Quite a lot of work is happening with respect to so-called wraparound services. There are some 35 mental health capacity building projects across the province, which are piloting those kinds of projects. Again, we also should be encouraging – and I have been encouraging – Children and Youth Services, Health, and other community agencies to actually co-locate, where appropriate, with schools. In fact, that can also have another benefit, and that is that if excess school space is used for other public purposes, it actually can be taken out of the utilization formula.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Assured Income for the Severely Handicapped

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Questions are being raised in my constituency of Edmonton-Ellerslie about how AISH supports Albertans with disabilities; specifically, what happens to AISH clients' benefits when they enter an institution like a hospital for extended periods of time. My questions are to the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. Is it true that AISH clients lose their benefits soon after being admitted into hospitals?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, I'm glad I have the opportunity to provide members of the Assembly with factual information about our support for AISH clients who are admitted to institutions. If an AISH client is temporarily admitted to an institution, he or she continues to receive AISH benefits for three months while receiving treatment, and this can be extended for up to six months in total. This continuation of AISH benefits makes it much easier for clients to transition back to the community and their homes.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My next supplemental to the same minister: what happens then? After the six months does that client get off AISH?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, clients in an institution more than six months stop receiving AISH as they have their basic needs taken care of by the facility. They are again eligible for AISH when they are discharged, and they can be eligible to have their benefits rapidly reinstated. This means the client's file can be reopened without the client having to apply or undergo another medical assessment.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My final supplemental to the same minister: looking at the longer term, what happens to AISH clients when they become seniors? Do they continue to be supported?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, there's no question that we continue to support these Albertans as they become seniors. As it has been for many years, when AISH clients become seniors, they transition to being eligible for both federal and provincial seniors' benefits. In Alberta we have one of the most comprehensive packages of seniors' benefits in the country. This package includes the Alberta seniors' benefit, which provides a monthly cash benefit to supplement federal income programs as well as the dental and optical assistance programs.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill, followed by the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Postsecondary Tuition Fees

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With the close proximity of the University of Calgary to my constituency I've been getting lots of feedback from students about the proposed market modifiers for some postsecondary programs that will result in huge tuition increases. My question is to the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology. What is driving the postsecondary institutions to come forward with these proposals? Is it because there was already a gap between revenues and the cost of delivering this program, or is it a result of the tuition cap policy?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The proposals are being presented to us based on what has happened over a number of years with the tuition fee policy in the province of Alberta. At the outset let's be clear: this is about something that at this point in time is speculative. These are proposals that have come forward; we're reviewing them. Some institutions have put forward proposals where they believe that an anomaly existed when we froze tuitions back in 2004. We're still reviewing those proposals.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate that answer. Again to the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology: is a tuition cap policy appropriate when we're competing with other jurisdictions who don't have such a policy while also striving to maintain high postsecondary program standards?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, that's an excellent question. It is a very difficult balancing act. We look at the affordability framework with our students. We look at the partnership between postsecondary students, the taxpayers, and society and the economy. We have to balance those things. We are as a government fully committed to the tuition fee policy. We have a top-notch, top-quality postsecondary education system. We need to make sure that it's accessible and affordable. By limiting annual tuition fee increases to the consumer price index, we're ensuring that the increases are predictable so that students can plan.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do appreciate the minister's comments there, particularly at the end, because I know that a lot of my constituents have come to me lately with some concerns about drastic increases in fees. We've seen that on the Alberta nongroup plan benefits. My question is to the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology in his capacity as Deputy Premier. What is the overall strategy that this government is doing to protect our constituents from massive increases in one year?

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There's kind of a mixture of apples and oranges when we're talking about Blue Cross coverage, but those are costs and fees that are of a different nature. I can only say that as it relates to regular fees that the government has control over, we try to make sure that it's a recovery basis. We try to ensure that it's fair, that it's reasonable. Certainly, sometimes you have to catch up if you don't do it on a regular basis, and that's something we need to take into consideration. The only thing I can say on the tuition fee policy is that we stand by it a hundred per cent. This year the institutions wanted to make cases for exceptional fees. We're going to look at and review those. That's the only thing I've agreed to.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the hon. President of the Treasury Board wishes to supplement an answer given the other day. That will then allow a member on I think it was the Official Opposition, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, to raise a question with additional response.

The hon. President of the Treasury Board.

MLA Remuneration

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last Thursday the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar asked about the authority to fund work on government committees after an election. I want to point out to you, as is stated in the guidelines on dissolution of the Alberta Legislative Assembly, that government committees, boards continue to operate until their remuneration is changed by order in council, ministerial order, or resignation from the appointment, meaning that these continue to operate, as government does, until the day of the election, so they are funded as such.

There is no retroactive payment involved. They simply operate under a new order, and that was OC 187/2008, which identifies if there are changes in the fee schedule or changes in membership. So to his question of retroactivity, there is none. As to paying retroactive payments back to any of these government members, there is not. They simply exist until the new order in council.*

The Speaker: That allows an additional question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Back to the President of the Treasury Board: what we're interested in is the paper trail that validates what the government has been ascertaining. Could we please get a copy of all the orders in council and ministerial orders that track the appointment of the individual members to those cabinet policy committees? You've given us one. If we could get the rest of them, please.

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, all orders in council are public. I'll be happy to work with the hon. members and find which one would identify the authority that committed originally to fund these committees that was replaced by OC 187/2008.

The Speaker: Hon. members, there were, with those last three exchanges, 121 questions and responses in the Assembly today. Twenty individual members were recognized: nine from the Official Opposition, two from the third party in the House, one from the fourth party, and eight from the government private members.

In 15 seconds from now we'll continue with the Routine with Members' Statements.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Haiti Relief Efforts

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to recognize the fundraising efforts for Haiti by some Alberta businessmen. As you know, an earthquake hit Haiti, which led to the deaths of many and the loss of homes and essential infrastructure. As always, we Canadians did what we could to try and help this devastated nation. Our Prime Minister, the Right Hon. Stephen Harper, and our Governor General, Michaëlle Jean, supported and provided aid to the people of Haiti. Our own province showed leadership on this issue by donating $500,000 to the Red Cross.

At the same time, the United Sikhs organization went to Haiti with six doctors and many volunteers to prepare and distribute food to the people of Haiti. The local Sikh community here in Alberta also fund raised for the cause, raising approximately $60,000. Our first religious leader, Guru Nanak Dev Ji, taught us to give 10 per cent of our earnings to those who need it most, and we take that seriously. The Sikh community in British Columbia also managed to raise $1.5 million to help the victims in Haiti.

Earlier today, Mr. Speaker, I introduced Rashamdeep Mundy and Shavi Kachroo to the Assembly. They own a company called Bell Connections, and they have 13 locations in Alberta that provide jobs for many. I am happy to say that they are holding an event on April 11 to raise money for the relief efforts in Haiti on top of other charities they are involved in. They're inviting all the Members of the Legislative Assembly to the event. They have invitations for all MLAs. Tickets are $5, and all proceeds will help the earthquake victims. They will match all funds raised out of their own pockets on top of paying for the entertainment themselves. I would like to thank them for their efforts. God bless them and their families.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

World Water Day

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Water is the very essence of life itself. No creature on this planet can exist without it. In addition, our industries – oil and gas, agriculture, transportation, recreation, medicine – and every aspect of life in Alberta revolve around water.

On this World Water Day Albertans are faced with a chilling prospect. Parts of our province, particularly the South Saskatchewan basin, will run short as our need for water outstrips supply. Already people in southern Alberta are piping water between river basins. We're now scrambling to revise our century old licensing, based on who got there first. A responsible government would have anticipated this problem many years ago, but this administration doesn't seem to know the meaning of planning for the long term. A responsible government would ensure that water sources are protected and complete an inventory of Alberta's surface and groundwater, establishing a comprehensive, effective water quality monitoring program.

Safe drinking water is a fundamental human right. A responsible government would require more transparent approvals for coal-bed methane projects and require independent scientific analysis of changes to groundwater quality and quantity. A responsible government would act now to deal actively with the risks of climate change, which increases the severity of droughts and floods, with the associated impacts on fresh water supply, management, and treatment. A responsible government would protect wetlands with a no net-loss policy. We would protect our supply of drinking water by always giving priority to basic human needs as well as to ensure in-stream flows. We do not support a water market.

Albertans, particularly farmers and other rural residents, already know through bitter experience that fresh water is increasingly precious. In recent years they fought against interbasin transfers and demanded that this administration do a better job of protecting Alberta's water. I hope this World Water Day the Premier will follow the advice of Albertans and act to preserve this province's most precious resource.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Kinosoo Performing Arts Association

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Saturday, March 20, I attended the 30th anniversary celebration for the Kinosoo Performing Arts Association in Cold Lake. Approximately 300 guests were in attendance to celebrate the success of KPAA and to listen to an incredible performance by the Chevelles from Lethbridge. This celebration was truly a milestone for Bonnyville-Cold Lake because it showed how many individuals are willing to support the arts in my community.

The Kinosoo Performing Arts Association was founded in 1979 with a mission to strengthen and invigorate this community through performing arts, and over the past three decades this vision has become a reality.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta communities benefit greatly from hosting professional entertainers, especially rural areas that only get up to four or five special acts a year. It gives residents of all ages an opportunity to go to a show or concert and take part in a new experience.

I want to thank all the volunteers and members of the community who've supported the arts by helping out in the KPAA organization and by purchasing tickets to the incredible shows that they bring to our area. I believe that performing arts is vital to the growth and development of all communities, and I would like to congratulate them on 30 years of success in the Cold Lake area.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Red Cross Haiti Relief Efforts

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to acknowledge the work of Albertans who have joined with the Canadian Red Cross to respond to the desperate needs of the people of Haiti following the devastating earthquake of January 12.

From January 13 to February 16 alone dozens of Red Cross volunteers in eight offices across Alberta put in nearly 5,000 hours processing donations. During the early days staff and volunteers worked long hours to accept generous donations from children as young as four, seniors, church and community groups, and the business community. To date donations from Alberta total more than $3 million, including the $500,000 donated by this government to the Haiti disaster appeal. These funds will help to ensure critical needs for food, water, temporary shelter, and medical services can be met in this struggling island nation.

But Alberta's response doesn't stop there, Mr. Speaker. Today some 68 Canadian Red Cross members are among 600 international delegates sent to Haiti to support this massive humanitarian mission, the largest single-country disaster response in Red Cross history. Included in this number are four selfless, caring Alberta Red Cross delegates: Dave Bateman, Iain Logan, Dr. Dennis Filips, and, departing today, Leslie Leach, who will take on the role of head of operations as Red Cross begins the work of constructing temporary homes for 30,000 Haitians left homeless and facing the fast-approaching monsoon season. This operation is part of a 10-year plan to help rebuild Haiti, and more Albertans will be part of this long-term mission.

Mr. Speaker, I know that Alberta's Red Cross staff and volunteers are grateful for this amazing outpouring of generosity, and they are honoured by the trust that Albertans have shown in them, but I also know that this House and all Albertans are even more honoured and, indeed, humbled by their amazing commitment to helping fellow citizens in need whether here at home or abroad.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Brian McKeever

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise in the House today and recognize Canmore's Brian McKeever, an incredible Albertan athlete who recently wrapped up his 2010 Paralympic participation yesterday by winning a third gold medal.

Brian started skiing at the age of three, was competing at the age of 13, and at the age of 19 this gifted young man began to lose his vision. While some would let this kind of obstacle end their career, Brian persevered. If his participation in the 2010 Winter Paralympic Games isn't a demonstration of his determination, then perhaps his legacy is. He has now participated in three Winter Paralympic Games and won a total of 10 medals.

There is no doubt that many young Canadians have followed his story, resolving to pursue their own dreams of achieving an Olympic or Paralympic medal in spite of a disability or a challenge. Brian is truly an inspiration to any aspiring athlete, and his incredible perseverance and successes are a victory for all Canadians. I know I speak for this entire Assembly as I wish heartfelt congratulations to Brian, his brother and guide Robin, and to all our country's Paralympic athletes.

Thank you. [applause]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

World Water Day

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today is World Water Day, established by the United Nations to focus the world's attention on our water and encourage countries around the world to take action to safeguard the quality and quantity of this essential resource. This year the theme is Clean Water for a Healthy World.

On World Water Day Albertans can be assured that our province has some of the best and safest drinking water in North America, and we're always working to ensure it stays that way. The water for life strategy is the province's long-term strategy for managing Alberta's water resources. The strategy, combined with the water for life action plan, demonstrates government's commitment to ensuring a healthy and sustainable water supply for the environment, our communities, and our economic well-being.

Since 2004 the government of Alberta has completed 23 key actions set out under water for life. These achievements have totalled about $600 million. This morning the government announced further investment in Alberta's water sources. A two-year $500,000 provincial grant will enable the newly formed Athabasca Watershed Council to help build a common understanding of the issues and opportunities within their watershed. This marks the 10th watershed planning and advisory council in the province and yet one more partner contributing to the achievements of the water for life goals. I commend the Athabasca Watershed Council as its members embark upon the road of leadership, stewardship, and education.

I encourage all Albertans to help protect our precious water resources not only on World Water Day but each and every day. Thank you.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On February 9 this government tabled Budget 2010, a budget that helps put Alberta in the strongest financial position of all provinces as we head into economic recovery. We have and will continue to have the most innovative and competitive economy in Canada, and we will have the best infrastructure in North America.

Mr. Speaker, some have criticized this government for running a shadow deficit when it comes to capital. Nothing could be further from the truth. The government's capital investment is not hidden. The government publishes the information as part of its annual fiscal plan and quarterly updates. The Alberta government follows accounting standards set by an independent, nonpartisan national body.

Others such as TD Bank Financial Group endorse our reporting methods, as seen in their 2010 Alberta Budget document. TD Bank states that capital investment is rightly excluded as an expense in the year that it is booked but, rather, is expensed through annual amortization over time as the asset is employed to benefit Albertans. This is also the best time to invest in our public infrastructure. Current deflationary pressures mean lower costs for capital projects and present opportunities for additional cost containment in capital projects, meaning that this is the best time to invest in our public infrastructure instead of putting it off like some would like us to do. TD Bank also points out that our sustainability fund was used as intended, to protect Albertans' programs from sudden drops in our volatile revenue.

Mr. Speaker, this budget is good for Alberta. It lays the foundation for our future prosperity by building the infrastructure of tomorrow, and it does so in a responsible and cost-effective manner. I will be pleased to table TD Bank Financial Group's 2010 Alberta Budget document after question period.

Thank you.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater.

Bill 9 Local Authorities Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2010

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce Bill 9, the Local Authorities Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2010.

This government is committed to promoting integrity and public confidence in the local election process by setting appropriate election standards. These proposed changes clarify and support the fundamental principles of the act. The proposed amendments will assist electors and designate their one residence for the purpose of voting in a general election. The amendments will also help ensure an open and transparent process for campaign contributions and, among other things, extend the in-force date of some provisions related to campaign funds to allow more time for the candidates, municipalities, and election officials to comply with the new rules, ease restrictions on modest, self-funded campaigns and on donation caps, and ease requirements audits on financial statements. If adopted, the act would make amendments to the Local Authorities Election Act, the Local Authorities Election (Finance and Contribution Disclosure) Amendment Act, 2009, and the Municipal Government Act.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 9 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that Bill 9 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: The hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Bill 15 Appropriation Act, 2010

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 15, the Appropriation Act, 2010. This being a money bill, His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, from the delivery of the budget back on February 9, 2010, by the Minister of Finance and Enterprise five all-party standing committees of the Legislative Assembly have spent some 72 hours reviewing and debating the budget. This budget truly strikes the balance between focusing on Alberta's priorities while eliminating spending.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 15 read a first time]

The Speaker: Hon. members, I must advise that under Standing Order 7(7) "at 3 p.m. the items in the ordinary daily Routine will be deemed to be concluded, and the Speaker shall notify the Assembly."

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Might I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to suspend the provisions of Standing Order 7(7) for this afternoon?

The Speaker: On the motion put forward by the hon. Government House Leader I'm only going to ask one question: does anybody disagree? If you disagree, say no.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This afternoon I had the privilege of introducing leaders in our First Nations and Métis communities in this province, leaders whose purpose for education has been in alignment and people who have made very significant efforts to improve the educational outcomes for First Nations and Métis students in the province. Today I am pleased to table two documents that evidence that kind of leadership.

The first is a First Nations, Métis and Inuit Education Partnership Council document, which was executed effective October 13, 2009, involving myself as Minister of Education, the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology, the Minister of Aboriginal Relations for the government as well as the grand chief of Treaty 6, Chief Eddy Makokis; the grand chief of Treaty 7, Chief Charles Weasel Head; the deputy chief of Treaty 8, Chief Rose Laboucan; and President Gerald Cunningham and President Audrey Poitras from the Métis Settlements General Council and the Métis Nation of Alberta Association, respectively. The agreement forms a partnership between those parties for the pursuance of First Nations and Métis education in the province.

I also would like to table a historic memorandum of understanding which was executed effective February 24 of this year between the grand chiefs of treaties 6, 7, and 8, being, again, Chief Alan Adam, Chief Makokis, and Chief Weasel Head as well as myself as Minister of Education and then signed as well by the Minister of Aboriginal Relations and the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Affairs and also by the federal Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, Chuck Strahl. Again, a historic document where all of these parties are coming together to emphasize the importance of education and particularly of eliminating the achievement gap for First Nations and Métis students in our province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I haven't been a great fan of the current budget process as we're debating millions of dollars a minute in many cases. At this point I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of questions that I was not able to ask the Minister of Environment during our 2010-2011 Environment estimates due to time constraints. We had an hour and 20 minutes split between us, and I still couldn't get through all questions. I look forward to receiving the minister's written response.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As indicated in my member's statement, I wish to table the requisite five copies of the TD Bank Financial Group's 2010 Alberta budget document.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. March 21, 2010, marked the 80th anniversary of the designation of the wild rose as Alberta's floral emblem. First Nations and early settlers depended on the wild rose for a host of remedies and other domestic uses. I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of a document outlining the importance of the wild rose in Alberta.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am tabling a single letter written and signed by Gloria Singendonk expressing concerns about the potential closure of Sir William Van Horne vocational high school in my constituency of Calgary-Varsity. This school has served students for over 40 years, keeping them in school and allowing them to graduate because of its special programs. She sent this letter to the minister on March 1 and indicates: "Neither he nor his office has acknowledged receipt or honoured my request for follow up."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of 56 postcards signed by Albertans calling on the provincial government to keep its promise to build 600 new long-term care beds. The postcards are part of a campaign sponsored by the Canadian Union of Public Employees.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'm pleased to table copies of the School at the Legislature report card 2008-2009. This is, as we heard today, a Legislative Assembly educational program for grade 6 students cosponsored with community partners Priority Printing, Access Media Group, CKUA radio network, Via Rail Canada, and the Edmonton downtown Rotary Club.

Are there others?

Hon. members, I'm going to call Orders of the Day momentarily, but as Monday is private members' day, there's a request that will be made momentarily by a member to switch a position on motions for returns, I do believe. That motion for a return is under motions. I advised the hon. member when he talked to me some days ago that what he should do is send a letter, a memo, to all members of the Assembly advising them that he would rise on this day and request such unanimous consent.

All members will know that we do have a process. It was outlined by myself in a memo to all hon. members on June 15, 2009. The time frame outlined in that process is now past, so I'm now going to recognize the hon. Member for St. Albert with his request for unanimous consent.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I respectfully request the unanimous consent of the Assembly to change motions other than government motions 507 to 508 and 508 to 507. I have consulted with the Member for West Yellowhead, who presently has number 508, and I have sent memos to all of the House leaders as well.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Is any hon. member opposed to this request? If so, simply say no.

Orders of the Day

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Cao in the chair]

The Chair: The chair would like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Workers' Compensation (Firefighters) Amendment Act, 2010

The Chair: Are there any comments or questions? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I'll be very succinct. From the first reading through the second reading and now into committee members of my caucus have supported Bill 201, the Workers' Compensation (Firefighters) Amendment Act, 2010. As we have noted for the record, it follows in the tradition of the good work done by a former MLA for Calgary-North Hill, Richard Magnus, in terms of extending protection to firefighters. It takes that protection one step further, acknowledging activities that may have occurred while fighting fires – chemical inhalation, et cetera – that had the unfortunate circumstance of leading to varieties of cancers. By providing firefighters and their families, I might add, with this protection, we are valuing the work they do on a daily basis on our behalf in terms of protecting not only us but our property as well.

I mentioned during the debate during the second reading of this bill that I would like to see the types of benefits that have been provided for firefighters extended to other first responders, including paramedics and police. There is no doubt that when there is a fire, it is the firefighters who have the primary responsibility and potentially put their lives at the greatest risk. In carrying out the support services, whether it be the paramedics or the police officers who are in the vicinity of the chemicals that are unfortunately being let loose into the air, I would like to think that at some point in the near future their valuable contributions and the role they play as team members of emergency services be recognized.

The government is also bringing forth legislation to protect individuals involved in search and rescue operations. These bills work together extremely well to provide protection, in some cases in the case of liability, in others with regard to medical recognition of injuries suffered.

Therefore, to conclude, Mr. Chair, not only myself but the members of the Liberal Official Opposition are supportive of Bill 201, Workers' Compensation (Firefighters) Amendment Act, 2010, and look forward to seeing it proclaimed.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I was prepared to open debate, but I'm quite pleased that the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity opened debate, and I certainly thank him for his words of support for Bill 201. I'd like to thank in addition to the colleague from Calgary-Varsity all colleagues from both sides of the House for sharing their thoughts and comments over the course of second reading.

I'd like to just quickly review the primary components of Bill 201. Mr. Chairman, the bill was designed to provide further coverage for firefighters under the presumptive legislation we currently have in place. Specifically, section 2 of Bill 201 requires that section 24.1 of the Workers' Compensation Act be amended by adding subsection (4.1). It reads:

The Lieutenant Governor in Council must make a regulation under subsection (4)(a) designating primary site esophageal cancer and primary site testicular cancer as primary site cancers to which the presumption in subsection (2) applies.

Furthermore, Mr. Chairman, section 2 of this bill will add an additional subsection, that being (4.2), requiring that "a regulation made under subsection (4.1) may be subject to the requirements of subsection (4)(b) prescribing periods of employment." That speaks to the length of time that a firefighter would have been exposed over the course of his career prior to being eligible for this coverage. This is important to note as we must follow guidelines that have already been put in place with regard to the length of employment before coverage applies.

The final component of Bill 201 is section 3, which reads: "This Act comes into force on Proclamation." As with other private members' bills, Mr. Chairman, it is imperative to do this to ensure time for the needed consultation by the department affected, in this case that being the Ministry of Employment and Immigration.

Mr. Chairman, presumptive legislation can be seen all across Canada, and as stated in our earlier debate, Alberta was one of the first to introduce such legislation, in 2003. For that I think we have the former member from Calgary Mr. Magnus – I guess I can say that; he's no longer a member of the House – that was the champion of that piece of legislation at the time.

Mr. Chairman, Bill 201 is simply adding to this legislation and to the good work that was done at the time as more scientific research has come to light. To this point firefighters and researchers have indicated links to esophageal and testicular cancer. That is why Bill 201 has come forward: to help assure those that protect us that they will be looked after should their worst fears come true and they are diagnosed with either of these cancers.

Mr. Chairman, according to the International Association of Fire Fighters there are approximately 10 firefighters that lose their lives annually as a result of job-related cancers in Canada. Many have attributed the increase in cancers to the greater use of synthetics in building materials. The risk is not necessarily from the inhalation of fumes; rather, it is the absorption of these dangerous chemicals through the skin. The uniforms that these men and women wear in doing their job are designed to breathe, and as such, although that is a good feature to have, the reality is that it also allows some of these materials to be absorbed into the skin of these firefighters.

I'd like to take this opportunity to address some of the questions brought forward by my hon. colleagues during second reading. I thank the hon. members for Edmonton-Gold Bar and Calgary-Varsity for raising the issue of extending presumptive legislation to other professions – the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity just raised that again – including all responders. While I believe that there may be cause for this, Bill 201 is specific to firefighters because of the evidence that has been presented to governments across North America. I might also mention, Mr. Chairman, for the benefit of the hon. member, that what we are doing by Bill 201 is amending an existing piece of legislation that already exists that is specific to firefighters.

Now, at some point in the future you, myself, or someone else may very well want to bring forward another piece of legislation that would address these other responders. I might also add: it has been brought up by many members in this House that it would be desirable to extend this protection to volunteer firefighters as well. I, too, would agree, Mr. Chairman, that that is very desirable because, as we know, a large portion of the firefighting community right across this province is comprised of volunteers. But at this time this particular piece of legislation will be amending what is already in place for full-time firefighters. I'm certainly looking forward to the opportunity where we may one day be discussing something specific to volunteer firefighters.

Cancer is a devastating disease, Mr. Chairman, and I imagine that each of us has been affected in some way by cancer. I believe that by passing Bill 201, we can provide comfort in a time of uncertainty to firefighters and their families. I believe that we all recognize the importance of firefighters to our communities and just how vital these brave men and women are. Many of us have had experience at the municipal level as mayors, reeves, and councillors, and these roles have put us in direct daily contact with firefighters. Many members spoke of personal stories where firefighters were called on to save their homes, barns, businesses, and animals, and as a result those members may have an even greater appreciation of firefighters.

Last year Edmonton lost two of its finest to cancer all in the course of two weeks. These were two captains, Mr. Chairman. In fact, it was the sixth in the span of a few years. This is an all too stark reality, that reminds firefighters of the hidden dangers of their jobs. Not only that, but one of these fine men passed away from esophageal cancer and was therefore not eligible for WCB benefits.

I believe that each of us in the Assembly has met a firefighter and has seen the immense impact that they have in our communities. These brave men and women have put their lives on the line every day to protect all Albertans. Firefighters do more than just fight fires. They attend medical emergencies, attend chemical spills, aid in natural disasters, and provide educational tools to the community.

Mr. Chairman, the firefighters of this province have been very instrumental in having esophageal cancer and testicular cancer added to the presumptive list of cancers that are currently listed in regulation. They have been advocating for these changes to government for several years. You might remember that during second reading we were graced by some probably 50 members in uniform in the gallery from all across this province. As well, we had a delegation here from the city of Winnipeg, showing how important this is to the firefighter fraternity all across our country. By adding the aforementioned cancers, we're giving firefighters just a little more peace of mind.

I would like to thank all Alberta firefighters for their dedication to the people of this province. Mr. Chairman, Bill 201 would extend presumptive legislation to include esophageal and testicular cancer. By doing so, firefighters and their families across this province will indeed have more peace of mind.

Mr. Chairman, I look forward to the committee debate on Bill 201. Again, I thank all hon. members for their concern for these firefighters, and I thank the members for their participation and kind words.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Firstly, I would like to commend the Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon for bringing this exceptionally important bill forward and having this debate in the House. Certainly, we on this side and I do support Bill 201. It's a protection for those who protect us, and unfortunately some have died in the performance of that duty. They are exposed to all kinds of different pollutants and toxic materials, in particular in the form of inhalation.

My colleagues have also put forward the idea that first responders could be included under this legislation, and I agree. The reason that I do is because in Lethbridge we have a very effective firefighter-paramedic dual service. It is extremely effective, and it should remain intact. The most important part of our emergency service is the dispatch, and to centralize it out of local areas I think is a mistake. I think we need to have dispatch that can act instantly and understand who they're talking to and where they're actually going.

But, Mr. Chair, I have digressed. I'll be very brief. I think this is a very important bill. We should all support it. In passing it, not only will we protect those that protect us, but we also will recognize and respect the firefighters and the job that they do for us.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's an honour to rise today and participate in Committee of the Whole debate on Bill 201, the Workers' Compensation (Firefighters) Amendment Act, 2010, brought forward by the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon. I really don't need a prepared script to speak to this particular bit of legislation because in prior lives I have worked and served on a number of volunteer fire departments. I know the risks and also the rewards that firefighters face when they're looking after the protection of both life and property of those that they're charged to take care of.

Alberta firefighters provide a service to Albertans that, you know, really is vital, Mr. Chairman. It's necessary for us, I think, to talk about what the risks and rewards are that are in place for some of these people. The amendments that we have in Bill 201, particularly when you talk about the presumptive cancers for firefighters, take into account the realities of the work and the realities of the job. My biggest concern with the whole issue – and it's very well identified in the bill – comes from the fact that as a volunteer firefighter you never really know what's burning until you get there. You never really know what's in the flammable materials that you're dealing with.

Standards have changed a lot, Mr. Chairman. You know, all departments, both volunteer and professional, do everything that they can do to protect their members. There have been, in days gone by, times where it was not uncommon for volunteer members particularly to be directly exposed to toxic materials on scene; for example, to enter into a scene without wearing proper self-contained breathing apparatus. They got in, they got the job done, and they got out. Standards today are quite a bit different than they were in the early 1980s.

We have one case that I think we all know of in Saskatoon where a number of firefighters responded to a fire at a dump not knowing that the University of Saskatchewan had dumped radioactive waste at that particular facility. The upshot of that was that since that fire in the 1980s, half of the people that responded to that fire have in fact died of cancer.

You don't enter into a scene and you don't do that particular kind of work thinking about the consequences of your actions, necessarily; you do it for a wide variety of service reasons. At the end of the day we do need to afford these folks protection, and we do need to make it so that they do not have to prove a direct correlation between the particular disease that they have and the time that they served as a volunteer or as a professional firefighter.

Eliminating the requirement for correlation is a huge step forward. Expanding that list of presumptive cancers, you know, to include esophageal and primary site testicular cancer is going to help them all. It gives everyone a little bit of confidence as they're in that particular situation and makes sure that the people who do the jobs that we ask them to, in fact, carry forward and get those jobs done.

Mr. Chairman, it's an important piece of work that is done by firefighters in this province, and I would urge all members to support this particular piece of legislation. Again, I thank the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon for having the foresight and the courage to bring this forward.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I just wanted to put on the record, as I have previously done, my thanks to the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon not only for bringing forward the legislation but working with the opposition parties in terms of clarification.

I appreciate the fact, as he has explained, that this bill is very specific to firefighters and that it is, in fact, an amendment to a previously established act. I very much appreciate his comments with regard to the need for legislation follow-up to extend to other first responders. The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East pointed out that you can't separate the job description for a number of individuals in the case not only of Lethbridge but in a variety of volunteer firefighting organizations in rural areas throughout the province. Hopefully, when that volunteer answers the call, that protection will extend to them.

I also have previously pointed out and just would want to emphasize that as well as looking after firefighters' and first responders' physical well-being, we need to be cognizant of their mental well-being. I would encourage legislation to be brought forward with regard to providing posttraumatic stress treatment for our first responders, which is the equivalent to what the RCMP and our military are already experiencing.

On a lighter note, Mr. Chair, I'd just like to share on the record my firefighting experience that occurred in the summer of 2003 when the Lost Creek fire was raging in the Crowsnest Pass, and all throughout the Kananaskis area fire bans were in place. Now, as one of my responsibilities in working for Cataract Creek, I had a large water tank on the back of my pickup truck. Being a concerned citizen, I noticed what I took to be a raging fire on the Eden Valley reserve. Because I felt that this matter needed to be attended to directly, I didn't stop at the band office. I thought I'd better get there and try to put this out to whatever extent I could. When I got to what I thought was a house fire, it turned out that it was actually a garbage fire. So I stopped by the band council chief's office and apologized for almost attempting to put out their garbage fire, which would have caused considerable confusion for reigniting.

My experience was not nearly as dangerous as those faced on a regular basis, but it is important for the front-line firefighters. At some time in the near future, hopefully, we'll recognize the need to protect first responders through government legislation as opposed to private members' bills.

Thank you again, Mr. Chair, and thanks again to the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon for bringing forward this very progressive, protective legislation.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise today and join debate on Bill 201, the Workers' Compensation (Firefighters) Amendment Act, 2010. As my colleague from Leduc-Beaumont-Devon mentioned, firefighters certainly are among the most highly respected of all of our professions, and I think there is very good reason for that. They're often, of course, the first responders at a wide variety of emergency scenes. They do play an integral part in keeping Albertans safe and willingly put themselves in the path of danger in order to protect our homes, our businesses, and our lives on a regular basis.

Mr. Chairman, during second reading debate on Bill 201 the Assembly heard about the bravery and dedication of Alberta's firefighters. We've heard about many of the hazards that these men and women face in order to keep us as Albertans safe. In my home city of Calgary 21 firefighters have died in the line of duty, and 12 of those died as a result of compensatory cancer. During debate we also heard about career firefighters who have developed esophageal or testicular cancer and who are not covered under the current workers' compensation legislation, and we heard about the added toll that this lack of protection has taken on our firefighters and on their families.

The Workers' Compensation Act is a scheme of legislation that provides Albertans with no-fault compensation for workplace injury or illness. It does however take away the right of an injured or an ill worker to sue for any pecuniary losses which might have occurred as a direct result of those injuries or illness if it was incurred during the course of their employment and during the course of their duties on the job. The act provides benefits, including money paid for lost wages, health care, and other associated costs. It is a disability insurance system that's designated for those people who have been injured or made ill because of their work-related illness or injury.

Mr. Chairman, I think it's worth noting that eight types of cancer are already recognized in provincial regulations for firefighters with respect to presumption. They are leukemia, brain cancer, bladder cancer, lung cancer in nonsmokers, ureter cancer, kidney cancer, colorectal cancer, and non-Hodgkin's lymphoma. The fundamental problem from an evidentiary point of view is that many cancers arise from many, many different types of causes. Those causes can be both ultimate and they can be proximate. It's very difficult, if not impossible, for us to know exactly what the causes of those cancers were and when they might have arisen. The result has been that it's been extremely difficult for our firefighters to muster the evidence necessary to show that there is a nexus between the various types of cancer and the exposure to toxic compounds that they encounter in the course of their employment, sometimes years and years before a cancer arises.

Bill 201 would amend the Workers' Compensation Act to expand that list of cancers which are presumed to be work related, or presumed, in other words, to be an occupational disease for firefighters. The bill would amend section 24.1 of the Workers' Compensation Act by adding subsection (4.1), which states that the Lieutenant Governor in Council must make a regulation under subsection (4)(a) designating primary site esophageal cancer and primary site testicular cancer as primary site cancers to which the presumption in subsection (2) applies.

Under the proposed amendment firefighters who develop primary site esophageal or primary site testicular cancer would then be assured coverage under the Workers' Compensation Act. The presumption created would be that the dominant cause of these specified diseases is, in fact, the work environment, the work environment encountered by firefighters in the usual course of carrying out their duties.

The wording of the presumption is detailed in section 24.1(2) of the Workers' Compensation Act, which states:

If a worker who is or has been a firefighter suffers an injury that is a primary site cancer of a type specified in the regulations, the injury shall be presumed to be an occupational disease, the dominant cause of which is the employment as a firefighter, unless the contrary is proven.

The upshot, Mr. Chairman, is that the subsection eliminates the burden of proof that had been previously put on the firefighters to show that specified types of cancer are in fact caused by their employment.

Mr. Chairman, statutory presumptions relating to the causation of certain cancers in firefighters were first conceived in this House in 2003 by my Calgary colleague, the hon. MLA for Calgary-North Hill at the time, Richard Magnus. Since that time in 2003 we have accumulated more and more scientific evidence, and more and more research has been done which has shown us that primary site esophageal and testicular cancers may be linked to the toxic substances encountered by our firefighters. Accordingly, I would submit to my colleagues that it is reasonable that they should now be included in the list of work-related cancers. By incorporating the most recent scientific data and research available into the Workers' Compensation Act, Bill 201 will help to protect the quality of life for Alberta firefighters and their families.

The research has pointed to plausible links between the incidence of these cancers, as I mentioned, and the working conditions of firefighters. The lead study in this was a 2006 meta-analysis that was done by a group of researchers led by a group at the University of Cincinnati. It was published in the Journal of Occupational and Environmental Medicine. What it did was a statistical analysis on a whole number of epidemiological studies showing how various risks of cancer were correlated with various professions.

What the researchers found in this 2006 study in the Journal of Occupational and Environmental Medicine was that the incidence of prostate cancer was 28 per cent higher and testicular cancer was 100 per cent higher among firefighters, an astounding number. They also in that study concurred with the finding that the rates of occurrence of non-Hodgkin's lymphoma and multiple myeloma were over 50 per cent greater among firefighters than in the general population. Mr. Chairman, these are very shocking numbers.

In my respectful submission, by including these two additional types of cancers in our province's existing presumptive legislation, we would eliminate the onerous burden of proof and ensure that Alberta firefighters who develop cancer as a result of their job will receive the compensation and protection that they deserve.

For firefighters and their families facing the physical, emotional, and financial hardships caused by cancer, WC benefits can make a very significant difference in their quality of life. In my submission, it would be only just and fair for us to update our workers' compensation legislation to reflect this new information. Because the Workers' Compensation Act is founded on those principles of protection and fairness, it's incumbent upon us as legislators to ensure that it is up to date.

Mr. Chairman, this is an important piece of legislation whose time has come. Bill 201, and specifically section 24.1(4.1), would go a long way toward strengthening the Workers' Compensation Act. It will protect these valuable members of our communities and show them that we place a high value on their contributions. I wholeheartedly support this legislation, and I urge all of my hon. colleagues in this Legislature to support the expeditious passage of the bill through the House and to protect our firefighters.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the opportunity to rise today and join in the Committee of the Whole debate on Bill 201, the Workers' Compensation (Firefighters) Amendment Act, 2010. First, I'd like to sincerely thank the Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon for his work on this piece of legislation.

Bill 201 amends the Workers' Compensation Act to include two additional cancers that firefighters may claim under workmen's compensation. Specifically, section 24.1 of the act will be amended to include subsection (4.1), which reads:

The Lieutenant Governor in Council must make a regulation under subsection (4)(a) designating primary site esophageal . . . and primary site testicular cancer . . . to which the presumption in subsection (2) applies.

Mr. Chairman, adding these two cancers to the current list of cancers that firefighters may claim for under workmen's compensation is a continued show of support and respect for all the brave men and women throughout our province that serve in this capacity. Our government has always been a leader in supporting our firefighters with presumptive legislation, ensuring that they do not have to prove that the dangerous environments which they are exposed to over their professional career are the cause of a serious illness.

In 2003, for example, the Workers' Compensation Board, also known as WCB, presumptive legislation for firefighters act received royal assent in Alberta. Alberta was the second province in all of Canada to pass this type of legislation, which recognized certain cancers as work related. Alberta was the first province to recognize seven forms of primary site cancers which are more likely to develop in firefighters than in the general population. The list of primary site cancers which are deemed an occupational disease by the Alberta government has since expanded to eight. These cancers include brain, bladder, ureter, kidney, colorectal, lung, leukemia, and non-Hodgkin's lymphoma.

Mr. Chairman, this government recognizes and appreciates the work of our province's firefighters as they risk their own personal safety to protect Albertans' lives and property. In addition to their personal safety, research shows that our provincial firefighters are also risking their long-term health when they are exposed to the toxic environment of a fire.

It's interesting to note, Mr. Chairman, having met a lot of firefighters that serve right here in the capital city of Edmonton, that when they come out to celebrate the retirement of their peers, there isn't one individual that I have met as of yet throughout the years that said that they did not want to serve in this capacity. In fact, if they had the time and energy and not further responsibilities at home, they would continue their service. But the years of service that they put in are those that are very respectful, and it's a service that has immense impact to the communities all across the province.

Furthermore, according to statistics compiled by the Workers' Compensation Board, approximately 75 per cent of work-related firefighters' deaths have been due to cancer. In the absence of presumptive legislation the firefighters that have already so bravely served the province would have to prove that their work environment was the cause of their illness. This is why presumptive legislation for firefighters is so important. It negates the need for a firefighter suffering from one of the aforementioned primary site cancers to prove that their illness was, in fact, work related. I am so proud to stand in this Assembly and say that this government took a leadership role in providing presumptive legislation for firefighters.

This leadership role was not only displayed in the passing of the legislation but also in the scope of the legislation as eight primary site cancers are included. This government has also recognized that different primary site cancers are more likely to develop with the number of years one is exposed to a fire's toxic environment. Mr. Chairman, section 24.1(4)(b) of the Workers' Compensation Act states, "Prescribing periods of employment for the purpose of subsection (3) which may be different for the different diseases designated under clause (a)." Essentially, this means that as a firefighter's career progresses, they are more prone to different types of primary site cancers. Imagine a firefighter who has served this province for over 20 years developing a terrible illness such as kidney cancer. Our government was one of the first in Canada to recognize that this illness was an occupational disease, that it was due to numbers of years of exposure to toxic chemicals, and not simply to ask the 20-year veteran, "Which fire did you contract the disease from?"

Mr. Chairman, I would like to draw the committee's attention back to Bill 201, specifically section 2, which adds subsection (4.1) in section 24.1 of the Workers' Compensation Act. This section legislates that both primary site testicular and primary site esophageal cancers be added to the presumptive list of cancers that firefighters may claim under workers' compensation as a work-related illness. It was already mentioned that as research surrounding these types of cancers that firefighters are more prone to evolves, so too should our presumptive legislation. The study of both primary site testicular and esophageal cancers show that these cancers are more prevalent in firefighters. Thus these two cancers should be added to the current eight primary site cancers that are currently covered under workers' compensation.

As stated, Alberta has taken a leadership role in presumptive legislation. Bill 201, the Workers' Compensation (Firefighters) Amendment Act, 2010, displays a continued commitment to our province's firefighters and continues to uphold Alberta's position as a leader in this particular area. It also recognizes the bravery of the men and women who expose themselves to flames, toxins, and chemicals to protect Albertans and their property from the damaging, potentially fatal effects of smoke and fire. No one can imagine what that is like.

I would like to voice my heartfelt support for Bill 201 in Committee of the Whole stage, and I would like to encourage all my colleagues to support this piece of legislation as well. Mr. Chairman, I look forward to the remainder of the debate. I would encourage all to support this valuable bill.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm also very pleased to be able to join the debate today in Committee of the Whole on Bill 201, Workers' Compensation (Firefighters) Amendment Act, 2010. As with all of my colleagues, I want to thank the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon for bringing forward this very important piece of legislation. As you have heard, if this legislation is passed, it would then include primary site esophageal cancer and primary site testicular cancer under the qualifying cancers that firefighters may claim for under workers' compensation. Currently the list of presumptive cancers is set by regulation. As such, Bill 201 would amend the regulations to include these two additional cancers.

Our firefighters along with all other men and women in uniform deserve, of course, our highest respect for their service to Albertans. Time and again they put themselves in harm's way to protect our friends and family and other loved ones, so it's our duty, I think, as legislators to do what we can to support and protect them. While the latest equipment and technology help protect firefighters from fire, they can't guarantee protection from esophageal and testicular cancer. However, this will help provide them with some comfort, knowing that they and their families will receive the support that they deserve in their time of need.

Section 2 of Bill 201 adds the following after section 24.1; the new subsection (4.1) would say:

The Lieutenant Governor in Council must make a regulation under subsection (4)(a) designating primary site esophageal cancer and primary site testicular cancer as primary site cancers to which the presumption in subsection (2) applies.

We've heard the facts in previous debate about the recognition that there is a linkage between certain types of cancers that firefighters suffer and the fires that they fight. This legislation directs the Lieutenant Governor in Council to cover these types of cancers which have been identified as significant risk factors for firefighters.

As has been mentioned in the debate, Alberta has been a leader in this area, but I thought it might be helpful and provide some context to talk a little bit about what's happening in other jurisdictions. Numerous other provincial jurisdictions and states in the United States have implemented similar measures to formally recognize the link between firefighting and certain forms of cancer.

For example, the government of British Columbia has amended their list of cancers covered under their workers' compensation to include testicular cancer. That was in 2009. The British Columbia firefighters association is working with their government to have esophageal cancer also covered.

In May of 2003 the Assembly of Saskatchewan passed Bill 18, which expanded the list of cancers that are covered for their firefighters. That list was expanded again in 2005 with the passage of Bill 25, which included numerous cancers, including testicular cancer and lung cancer.

Manitoba has the distinction of being the first province to enact legislation for firefighters to provide them with protection in this area. That was after consultation with firefighters and studies and other research. In 2002 Bill 5 was passed by the Manitoba Legislature, which granted automatic benefits to firefighters should they contract certain cancers after a specific number of years on the job. That act was further amended to include esophageal cancer and testicular cancer just last June, in 2009.

Again, as members have mentioned, there's been some more recent research. I think the momentum of the research is growing, and there seems to be more and more recognition of this linkage. One can go back to the mid-1990s, when the government of Ontario did a study of 5,000 Toronto firefighters: that was for the years between 1954 and 1989. At the time that was a landmark study, and it confirmed statistically that firefighters develop certain types of cancers at higher rates than other workers. That prompted quick legislative action from the Ontario government, and they issued some guidelines at the time for the handling of firefighters' brain cancer and leukemia claims before the Ontario Workplace Safety and Insurance Board. Today firefighters in Ontario who develop esophageal cancer are also covered under the Ontario Workplace Safety and Insurance Act. Then there have been more recent changes in the fall of 2009, interestingly, which extended this presumptive legislation to part-time and voluntary firefighters as well as fire investigators.

New Brunswick has added testicular and esophageal cancers to the list of cancers, and they did that just last June.

Now, the United States has 43 states that have enacted legislation that allows firefighters and EMS providers who develop certain injuries, illnesses, and diseases to qualify for workers' compensation and other benefits. Of those 43 jurisdictions 26 states have cancer presumptive legislation enacted for firefighters, states like Alabama, Alaska, California, Massachusetts. Of those states 13 have broad or nonspecific language that can be interpreted, really, to cover all cancers. Another 11 states cover site-specific cancers that would relate to specific organ systems. So if you develop cancer in one of those named organ systems, it's presumed that the cause was your job, the firefighting. Another eight states have pending cancer presumptive legislation, including Florida and New Jersey.

So you can see, Mr. Chairman, that many jurisdictions, in fact probably most jurisdictions, in North America have acted in one way or another to cover firefighters should they develop cancer after a certain period of time on the job. I really feel that it's appropriate and it's timely for this Assembly to continue with its efforts and provide our firefighters and their families with the peace of mind that they deserve so that they're not going to have to fight yet another battle to receive benefits should they be stricken by one of these terrible illnesses. This is the least we can do for people who risk their lives for us daily.

I want to thank you for the opportunity to speak to this. I encourage all of my colleagues here in the Assembly to support this legislation.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise today and join in the Committee of the Whole debate on Bill 201, the Workers' Compensation (Firefighters) Amendment Act, 2010.

This act is being proposed by the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon. I, too, would like to thank him not only for the idea behind Bill 201 but for the well-thought-out wording of the legislation.

Section 24.1(2) states:

If a worker who is or has been a firefighter suffers an injury that is a primary site cancer of a type specified in the regulations, the injury shall be presumed to be an occupational disease, the dominant cause of which is the employment as a firefighter, unless the contrary is proven.

The subsections stated in this act spell out a scenario where our firefighters are decisively protected from two very real and very deadly forms of cancer, these of course being primary site esophageal and primary site testicular cancer. Moreover, this creates a scenario where these diseases are assumed to be a result of a firefighter's environment.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that the wording proposed by this bill goes far and beyond its literal interpretation. While I recognize that the wording addresses a very specific concern, primary site cancers, I also recognize that this legislative change has many far-reaching benefits. For example, this piece of legislation, specifically subsection (2), reaffirms our commitment to Alberta's firefighters. This subsection can also enshrine Alberta's traditional place as a leader in presumptive legislation. However, I would argue that the greatest benefit of this legislation is how it supports vital, essential services in Alberta. After all, that is what firefighters are: a vital service.

For me personally, firefighters are all heroes in my eyes. Each firefighter knows that when he or she leaves their home in the morning, they may be called on to risk their life to save another. Mr. Chairman, for the most part, when we think about the services provided by firefighters, we conjure up images of brave men and women running into an inferno to save a trapped resident. This, of course, is true; however, it's not the full extent of the services operated by these brave men and women. They're often the first responders to vehicle accidents and are trained to provide life-saving services to people in need. They are front-line rescue workers who regularly save people from harm even if there is no fire, and they also are active members of the community and travel from school to school teaching about fire safety and how to treat fire with respect. In simple terms the services provided by these men and women are vital to the overall health, safety, and wellness of our communities.

Mr. Chairman, this is perhaps why Bill 201, specifically subsection (2), is so important. We as a legislative body need to create an environment that is not only welcoming to these personnel but is actively concerned with their health and welfare. We need to create an environment that recognizes that firefighters can be injured every day on the job even if they don't appear so, and we need to create an environment that looks after those who have risked their lives for our well-being.

The sad reality is that primary site testicular and esophageal cancers do disproportionately target firefighters, and until we have a cure for these diseases, they will continue to disproportionately kill our firefighters. This is our opportunity to return their dedication and commitment to saving others. Until the time a decisive cure comes, I say that it falls to us to offer supports and protection for those who have done so much to protect us. Extending workers' compensation benefits to firefighters who have contracted these types of diseases is a strong statement that this government will support those who are injured in service to the people of this province.

I would encourage everyone to support Bill 201, that supports those who would bravely support all Albertans. Thank you.

The Chair: Any other hon. member wish to speak on the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I am pleased to stand today and join Committee of the Whole debate on Bill 201, the Workers' Compensation (Firefighters) Amendment Act, 2010. This bill is being proposed by the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, and I would like to thank him for this inspired and beneficial legislation.

Bill 201 will amend section 24.1 of the Workers' Compensation Act by adding subsections (4.1) and (4.2). These two new subsections refer to our current presumptive legislation and regulations as well as how this bill will amend them to include two new cancers.

Mr. Chairman, the objective of this bill is to include two new cancers in the presumptive list of cancers that firefighters may claim under workers' compensation, specifically without the trepidation that they would not be covered for primary site testicular and esophageal cancers under the Workers' Compensation Act.

The Workers' Compensation Act with regard to firefighters uses presumptive legislation to determine compensation entitlement, application, and payment. The act protects firefighters who are diagnosed with a cancer where the primary site is among those listed in presumptive legislation by defining the illness as an occupational disease, meaning in essence that their occupation can cause cancer.

Mr. Chairman, without this legislation and the proposed amendments firefighters are exposed to consequences beyond the dangers they normally face. To me, the most important part of this bill is the reference to requirements in subsection (4.1). For the sake of clarity, this section reads as follows:

The Lieutenant Governor in Council must make a regulation under subsection (4)(a) designating primary site esophageal cancer and primary site testicular cancer as primary site cancers to which the presumption in subsection (2) applies.

Again, in the case of Bill 201, particularly section 24.1(4.1), these illnesses would be primary site testicular and esophageal cancers. With this type of legislation firefighters are no longer placed under the burden of proving what fire they may have developed cancer from, like they would have prior to our current legislation.

Mr. Chairman, there are currently eight cancers recognized by the Alberta government and the Workers' Compensation Board as more likely to develop in firefighters than the general population. These cancers include bladder, brain, ureter, kidney, colorectal, and lung as well as leukemia and non-Hodgkin's lymphoma.

In order to qualify under the primary site cancer regulation, a firefighter must prove a minimum period of exposure to the hazards of firefighting. Mr. Chairman, it is the amount of time employed before a firefighter can initiate a claim, as referenced directly from the bill. For example, to qualify for compensation for leukemia, the firefighter must have been a full-time member of a fire protection service for five years. For compensation for brain cancer it is 10 years. For bladder, lung, and ureter cancer it is 15 years. For kidney, colorectal, and non-Hodgkin's lymphoma they must have been working for a fire protection service for 20 years.

As mentioned earlier, there are specific minimum employment durations allotted with different specific cancers. This lets the firefighters know that after prolonged exposure to the harmful effects of smoke inhalation and toxic substances absorbed through their skin, they will be supported. This also gives firefighters peace of mind, knowing that they and their families will be protected. Additionally, this lets firefighters go to work with the assurance that they are supported by their government and that if they were to develop primary site testicular or esophageal cancer, this legislation would ensure that they receive care and compensation.

The idea of presumptive legislation in regard to cancer as shown in section 24.1(4.1) is solidly supported by scientific evidence. Some of the most recent evidence has shown that primary site testicular and esophageal cancers can be caused by lasting exposure to toxins when fighting fires. Essentially, Mr. Chairman, Bill 201 – specifically, the addition of subsection (4.1) to section 24.1 of the Workers' Compensation Act – is an attempt to update our current legislation and regulations to reflect new and ever-emerging scientific evidence and enhances our current legislation, and I believe that this bill succeeds in that aim.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, I would like to extend my heartfelt thanks to all of Alberta's firefighters and applaud them for their hard work and personal sacrifice. They truly put their lives on the line to protect Albertans and their property. The dangers a firefighter faces do not end when their shift or their careers are over. The prolonged effects of their occupation can cause serious health conditions and consequences.

I fully support this beneficial and well-thought-out legislation and would encourage all members to do the same. With that, I will conclude my comments and look forward to the remainder of the debate.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to rise today and join in the debate on Bill 201, the Workers' Compensation (Firefighters) Amendment Act, 2010. This legislation was brought forward by the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, and I would like to thank him for his vision and foresight in bringing forward this very important piece of legislation. Bill 201 seeks to enhance the Alberta Workers' Compensation Act by expanding the presumptive cancer list for firefighters.

I find section 2, which amends section 24.1 of the Workers' Compensation Act, adding subsection (4.1), particularly interesting. Subsection (4.1) states that the Lieutenant Governor in Council must make a regulation under subsection (4)(a) designating primary site esophageal cancer and primary site testicular cancer as primary site cancers to which the presumption in subsection (2) applies.

This means that Bill 201 would expand Alberta's presumptive cancer list to include primary site esophageal cancer as well as primary site testicular cancer. Mr. Chairman, this is significant because in serving our communities, firefighters are the first to respond to emergencies and are exposed to a multitude of known and unknown dangers to their health and well-being. By adding subsection (4.1), it would ensure that firefighters are fully covered under the Workers' Compensation Act.

Mr. Chairman, subsection (4.1) specifically makes reference to primary site esophageal and testicular as research is starting to show that these two cancers can develop in firefighters after regular exposure to harmful toxins over many, many years. In fact, according to the Environmental Protection Agency in the United States there are more than 70,000 substances listed as toxic. When these toxins combine, there are approximately 70 million possible toxic combinations. This is why the addition of subsection (4.1) is also necessary. This subsection would help protect firefighters from these toxins.

The role of firefighters in society is one that cannot be taken for granted. They perform various roles, and our safety is always their primary objective. Firefighting includes specific roles that fall into three categories – preventing, protecting, and responding – not to mention that their role is expanding, Mr. Chairman. Preventing fires includes conducting visits to schools, colleges, youth and adult groups, actively engaging all community members in order to promote fire safety awareness. They respond to incidents involving fires, road traffic collisions, chemical leaks, floods, terrorist incidents, rescues of trapped people and animals, and rail, air, and marine transport incidents.

Mr. Chairman, if firefighters are the first on the scene, they may provide emergency medical services as well. Firefighters protect our businesses and our livelihoods. From motor vehicle accidents to forest fires firefighters are always there for us. The role of the modern firefighter is constantly changing to meet the needs of the community. That is why they are held in high regard around the world. They risk their lives in order to protect others, and they do this without hesitation. In this way their role is one that society cannot live without.

Every Albertan and community knows the importance of firefighters, and section 24.1(4.1) highlights this. It is difficult to fully thank firefighters for all their honourable work as words alone cannot describe our gratitude. Their role in society is invaluable. However, designating esophageal and testicular cancers as primary site cancers to which presumption applies is one way that society can show our respect for firefighters and their families. Firefighting is a profession that is exposed to various challenges and risks. Therefore, it only makes good sense to amend the Workers' Compensation Act to include section 24.1(4.1) as written in Bill 201.

Their profession is selfless, to say the least, Mr. Chairman, as they are truly our heroes. Section 24.1(4.1) may seem minor but would be an additional safety measure to protect the lives of our firefighters. Essentially, section 24.1(4.1) would be one way for Albertans to give back to our firefighters and is another way to honour and protect our firefighters as they continually protect what is most precious to us, our lives and the lives of our loved ones.

I look forward to further debate on Bill 201, the Workers' Compensation (Firefighters) Amendment Act, 2010, and am very pleased to say that I will support this legislation. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure for me to join this Committee of the Whole debate on Bill 201, the Workers' Compensation (Firefighters) Amendment Act, 2010. I would like to commend the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon for his leadership in bringing this legislation forward.

Mr. Chairman, all members recognize that this bill addresses a very serious work-related health issue for firefighters in our province. Through the amendments proposed in Bill 201, our government will be taking steps to strengthen Alberta's presumptive legislation framework and improve support for some of our bravest workers. We've paved the path to provide these benefits to firefighters, and this bill will extend similar compensation for additional primary site cancers.

We know the importance of safe workplaces to Albertans and Alberta business. Alberta firefighters can rest assured that we'll continue to improve support for these individuals and their families. We will ensure that those who are afflicted by work-related injuries have access to reasonable compensation. However, Mr. Chairman, as with all legislation, it needs to strike the right balance.

of the Workers' Compensation Act by adding subsection (4.2). This amendment will establish that benefits for designated primary site cancers will respect corresponding periods of employment. Mr. Chairman, the priority here is to compensate firefighters who may be suffering from an illness that was caused from their efforts to protect our communities. While I support extending compensation for the cancers outlined in this bill, I believe it's also necessary to ensure that the benefits go to those who carried out such duties over a certain length of time.

With this section we are enhancing our presumptive legislation for Alberta full-time front-line firefighters because they bear the greatest consequences from their dangerous work. These brave men and women protect the communities that are the foundation for the tremendous quality of life our province affords. Bill 201 aims to compensate those who are ill as a result of engaging in hazardous situations to aid others. Mr. Chairman, we know the hazards that fire scenes present and the consequences that can result from exposure to fires. When it comes to a certain category of occupational diseases that we're looking to compensate for, I think it's only appropriate to respect the period of employment determined by professionals.

The Workers' Compensation Board has appropriate guidelines for the forms of cancers that fall into the category of occupational diseases. These guidelines allow for a degree of accountability and assess those who apply for benefits to determine their compensation eligibility. These guidelines are reasonable, Mr. Chairman. In a case where a firefighter is applying for worker benefits for a serious disease such as leukemia, they can look to the guidelines, which state that a firefighter seeking compensation for this illness must have worked full-time for a period of five years. It's also been noted that a claimant who is suffering from one of the eligible primary site cancers must not have smoked a tobacco product in the 10 years prior to the date of his diagnosis.

Mr. Chairman, Alberta is once again taking progressive action to strengthen our presumptive legislation. However, in doing so, we recognize that there need to be certain parameters set around employment periods for those forms of occupational diseases. I believe that the benefit table that the WCB has established serves as an appropriate guide. With the addition of subsection (4.2) we're respecting reasonable standards for time of employment. If individuals are to be eligible for workmen's compensation benefits, they must have been employed in the profession for an acceptable period of time and also taken efforts to protect their own health.

Alberta has long been known as a welcoming place for workers and will continue to ensure that the health and safety of those who choose to work in our province remains a top priority. However, we know that some of our professionals such as firefighters are exposed to higher risk situations. These risks carry consequences, as many members have noted in the discussion on this bill, but with the amendments that we are moving forward, our government will again be taking steps to support firefighters and their loved ones.

Mr. Chairman, I believe subsection (4.2) sets reasonable standards for eligibility. Therefore, I will be supporting Bill 201 so that it passes the Committee of the Whole stage.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Does any other hon. member want to join the debate?

Seeing none, the chair shall now recognize the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon to close the debate.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's my pleasure to offer some concluding remarks for this Committee of the Whole on Bill 201, the Workers' Compensation (Firefighters) Amendment Act, 2010. I would sincerely like to thank all hon. colleagues on both sides of the House for their comments and questions throughout this important debate. Committee of the Whole debate grants members of this Assembly the unique opportunity to examine key and fundamental aspects of legislation and, if necessary, propose amendments to improve them.

Bill 201 is clear and concise. It seeks to require the Lieutenant Governor in Council to add esophageal and testicular cancer to the list of eight cancers currently covered under the province's presumptive legislation. Mr. Chairman, these provisions build on the work this government has already undertaken and will ensure that firefighters are protected from the unseen dangers faced on the job. By adding these cancers, Alberta will keep up with other jurisdictions in Canada who have already added these cancers to their legislation. It is very important that legislation is updated as new research becomes available. The reality, Mr. Chairman, is that there has been extensive research, as a matter of fact. I certainly won't try to indulge the House with any of the details, but this is some of the material that we worked from to bring us to where we are today.

Again, I just can't say enough about the value of the work of these brave men and women who, of course, continually put themselves in harm's way. What I think is remarkable, as many who have spoken before me have said, is the dedication of these individuals. Even in light of this evidence of the hazards of this job, we know that every day these individuals get up and cheerfully go about their business, the business of protecting you and me, our families, our property, our assets, and our places of work. We just can't thank them enough.

I believe that what we have done so far under the original bill and what we seek to do under Bill 201 as we move forward from this point will certainly verify the support and certainly the high regard that we hold these individuals in. I would say that even though it's very significant to these individuals, Mr. Chairman, it's really such a small thing that we can do to add this extra layer of protection for these individuals. They put their lives on the line, certainly, and not only their lives but the welfare of their families, too, as they go through their work every day. Bill 201 would build on what we've done so far.

All around North America in the last five to 10 years there has been an increasing number of long-serving firefighters and veterans who've been unfortunately diagnosed with cancer. Mr. Chairman, the research is showing that there is a strong correlation between their job and these various cancers.

I would sincerely like to thank all the firefighters of Alberta for their service and commitment to their communities and to all of us.

I want to thank you for allowing me to share these concluding remarks, and again, Mr. Chairman, I thank all my colleagues who have spoken so eloquently to this bill from both sides of the House. I look forward to their support of Bill 201.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wanting to speak on the bill?

Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question on Bill 201, Workers' Compensation (Firefighters) Amendment Act, 2010.

[The clauses of Bill 201 agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 202

Mandatory Reporting of Child Pornography Act

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I am grateful to stand in this House in committee to speak strongly in support of Bill 202, the Mandatory Reporting of Child Pornography Act. I want to thank the hon. members of this Assembly for their thoughtful responses during second reading. To tackle a problem of this magnitude, we must all work as one to achieve our goal.

Mr. Chair, this bill will make the reporting of child pornography mandatory when someone comes across it, adding another weapon in the fight against this terrible woe. It is not a knee-jerk reaction to a dreadful problem but a measured and reasonable response that is increasingly common at the provincial level. It will take measured, deliberate, and sustained co-ordination to stamp out this problem.

As much as I want to see the proliferation of child pornography end immediately, I know it will be a process. This bill doesn't pretend to solve all the issues of child sexual exploitation, but it does reflect my approach in the past: step-by-step progress on the elimination of harm to children. As elected officials we know how complicated the legislative process can be. Even issues with a broad consensus don't lead to decisive action. Care must be taken in response.

Child pornography is a growing menace. It destroys children's lives, and it leads to a lifetime of suffering, of damaged relationships, of heartache. This is an industry, Mr. Chair, an industry with revenues in the tens of billions of dollars annually, and the sexual deviants who sexually abuse children for money or to satisfy their sick perversions are actually on the leading edge of organized crime.

I don't think there's any ambiguity about what child pornography is, but just in case any member of this Assembly is not sure, the Criminal Code of Canada is quite clear. The focus is on sexual material. There is a concern between nudity and sexuality, Mr. Chair, but the fact of the matter is that child pornography is exclusive sexual material involving acts, not poses. We are not talking about innocent family photos here, Mr. Chair. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity can rest assured that his family photo collection is safe, that his family heritage won't be left in tatters. Museums and cathedrals will not be torn down brick by brick when it becomes obligatory to report child pornography.

We are not the first province to propose this type of legislation, and we should not be the last. Albertans are reasonable people. They can see the difference between an innocent family photo and explicit pornography involving children.

Privacy is a cherished value to Albertans and an essential element of freedom and choice, but every principle has its limits. Rights are limited by their effects upon other individuals and the community. For example, sexual offenders do not have the freedom to live wherever they please. The rights of offenders in general are curtailed in terms of travel.

The only question this bill asks of Albertans is to do the right thing: report pornography material involving children and let qualified law enforcement professionals take over. This is not a scourge that we can fight alone. We must all work together. Past cases have met with not only national but international co-operation to bring these children from harm and monsters to justice.

There are great organizations in Alberta fighting this problem together. The ICE, integrated child exploitation unit, is a combined effort between the RCMP and Calgary and Edmonton police. The child at risk response team, CARRT, is another joint effort for the protection of children. Cybertip is a national effort to curtail online exploitation of children. The federal government has been working on legislation towards increasing protection against child exploitation. In fact, Mr. Chair, they have been working on this issue since 2002. Bills C-46 and C-47 are slowly moving through the committee stage while we speak. As they are national in scope, they require the diligence to get the national execution correct. We do have a partner in Ottawa that understands the issues at stake.

We should not waste any more time. We have the power to do something at the provincial level. We should think globally, and we should act locally. Many Internet companies voluntarily forward information in regard to sites peddling child pornography. We should build on the goodwill in the broader society and take the steps that other provinces in this great country already have. This bill has the support of law enforcement and so many law-abiding Albertans. With the support of the Assembly we can make a difference in this war.

Mr. Chair, I will now table an amendment which speaks to a concern from the government on the coming into force, moving that date from July 1, 2010, to December 31, 2010. The government indicated that they could not get the regulations in place by July 1, and as a former minister of the Crown, delaying till December 31 gives the minister and their staff lots of time to get regulations in place.

The Chair: Hon. member, you have an amendment, so we'll pause and distribute the amendment.

Hon. members, this amendment is now known as amendment A1.

Hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, please continue on amendment A1.

4:30

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Chairman, as I noted earlier, I have been pleased to table the amendment, which speaks to the concern from the government on coming into force and moving that date from July 1, 2010, to December 31, 2010. The government indicated that they could not get the regulations in place by the 1st of July. As a former minister of the Crown, delaying till December 31 gives the minister and his staff lots of time to get the regulation in place.

With that, Mr. Chair, I'll move acceptance of my amendment A1.

The Chair: On amendment A1, the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chair. Speaking to the amendment, I'm speaking in favour of the amendment for the various reasons that the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek put forward. If the government's only concern about enacting this legislation was having sufficient time to do so, then the hon. member through this amendment has provided the government with the time to take action. In her explanation the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek pointed out that while the federal government is in the throes of putting forward legislation, it's taking an awful long time for that legislation to work its way through the system. We've had the situation of the proroguing of Parliament, which no doubt slowed down the process even further. I would like to think that Alberta is on the front lines of combatting child pornography.

Now, previously when I spoke to child pornography, I spoke about clearly identifying abusive pornographic imagery. I accept the premise that under the law such imagery – pornography, child abuse – can be identified, that there are not only federal laws but provincial laws which deal with the identification of child pornography.

Because it has such a terrible effect on children, who, obviously, are the ones being abused by adults in a position of power, with no respect for the children they're abusing, I believe that we need to move forward with this legislation.

Canada has laws where it will prosecute citizens who take their pornographic interest, desires, abuses outside the country's borders. If such laws are on the books, surely within our own country we can be more proactive in terms of legislating against pornography. Therefore, at this point I support the amendment and would look forward to speaking to the bill as amended.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Chairman, thank you very much for the opportunity to rise to speak to this amendment. You know, I have to express appreciation to the hon. member, first, for bringing forward this legislation and for her career, which has been devoted to ensuring the protection of children in so many different ways, shapes, and forms. This is, again, just another example of her dedication. I admire and I respect the member and appreciate her bringing it forward.

I do have to say, though, Mr. Chairman, that the member recognized that the government needs time to produce the regulations, to make sure that when the legislation comes into effect, the regulations are in place for the operation of that legislation. It's critical.

But it's not just the timing to make the regulations, Mr. Chairman. Our ministers have indicated that they're working very closely with the federal government, who is planning on reintroducing some legislation that fell off the Order Paper last session. They really are concerned. They want to make sure that our legislation, our regulations will mesh with the federal legislation. As well, we have to make sure that this legislation and the regulations that would support it mesh with all of the other legislation and regulations that we have in our provincial Legislature that help ensure the safety and protection of children.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, always – always – we hear, oftentimes from the opposition members but from Albertans in general, that when we make the legislation, we do consultations. It's equally important to make sure that when we produce the regulations, we consult with those who will be impacted. There are law enforcement officers. There are lawyers. There are all sorts of systems in place that we need to consult with to ensure that this legislation is appropriate and that the regulations around it are operational so that they can still perform their duties.

Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the member bringing forward an amendment that changes the date from July 1 to December 31, which gives another six months, but I have some personal concern that putting a deadline on it may not allow us to do all of the consultation that's necessary because we may be forced to comply with a deadline instead of forced to get it right. No matter what, whether it's legislation or regulation, the most important thing we can do as members that represent all Albertans is to make sure we get it right the first time so we don't have to continually bring it back. I encourage all members of this House to defeat this particular amendment.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thanks, Mr. Chair. On the amendment itself. I don't think there are too many members in this House that would dispute that this legislation is needed. I think we can derive that from the speeches that have been given on the bill. I guess we're talking about timing here. I would say that, you know, I've read through this act. There are 11 sections in it. These are not very difficult areas to figure out the regulations for. This is not an overly complex statute. This is not an overly complex bill. We're talking about mandatory reporting for child pornography. It's pretty basic.

There is some work to do, for sure, and I think the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek realizes that. But, I mean, let's go back. It took this government exactly one month to adopt the recommendations for a new royalty framework and a few months thereafter to put in place the regulations, which they have since changed in the last year about six times. If we can do something like that in such a short period of time to our most important and complex industry in this province, surely we can find the time in the next eight months or nine months to do what we need to do to bring in the regulations for this very, very simple bill.

Again, for the fire code recommendations, that were alluded to in question period earlier today, it took roughly seven months to adopt the recommendations, and it took roughly the same amount of time thereafter to put those into place. Well, again, this is far, far more simple than that. Giving eight or nine months for the department, for the Solicitor General's office – it would be the Solicitor General's office, I imagine – to institute these regulations I think is more than enough time, and if they can't, then there is something wrong.

The point is that we cannot wait any longer than eight or nine months. We have got to move this file forward. The abuse is happening everywhere. The proliferation of it has increased, and there is no point in delaying this. We understand the government needs time to put the regulations in. No one is disputing that. But surely eight or nine months is enough time. I hope we can move forward with this business. We obviously need to do this. Everyone in this House seems to agree that we need to do this, so let's move forward, get it done, and have something in place by December of this year.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I guess I'm astounded at the arguments that are being presented on the time that's needed and the appreciation. I just want to read into the record what the priorities of this government are: Bill 1, Alberta Competitiveness Act; Bill 2, Professional Statutes Amendment Act; Bill 3, Fatal Accidents Amendment Act; Bill 4, Dangerous Goods Transportation and Handling Amendment Act; Bill 5, Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act; Bill 6, Emergency Management Amendment Act; Bill 7, Election Statutes Amendment Act; Bill 8, Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act; Bill 9, Local Authorities Election Statutes Amendment Act.

An Hon. Member: Relevance.

Mr. Hinman: Just pay attention. It'll be very relevant. If it's taken you that long and you don't understand, that's the whole problem. You guys miss the whole picture day in, day out. Not only don't you act; you don't think.

Mr. Chair, Bill 10, Victims Restitution and Compensation Payment Amendment Act; Bill 11, Witness Security Act; Bill 12, Body Armour Control Act; Bill 13, Securities Amendment Act; Bill 14, Traffic Safety Amendment Act.

Here we have Bill 202, a private member's act, who's been working on this for years, Mandatory Reporting of Child Pornography Act. This government has failed to act, and this government fails to want to recognize it now and says: we need more time.

We've known of this problem for years. To put it off, to say that they can't in nine months get the regulations in place is appalling. It's shameful to the people of Alberta, but more shameful is that kids are going to suffer the consequences because we failed to act here in this House. It's unacceptable. We need to move on it. We know this is happening. It's not a question of: "Oh, is this something that's going to come up in the future? Is there going to be, you know, a new fire started?" Mr. Chair, we need to take this amendment. This is being gracious. This should have been Bill 1 for this government, not a private member's bill.

The purpose of government is to protect our life, our liberty, and our property. The purpose of our justice system is to ensure that we protect those who can't protect themselves. That's what we're doing as a society. We want to protect our most vulnerable. We want to protect our children from these horrible individuals that perpetrate these crimes that destroy their lives going forward. What could be more important than this, than to refocus this government and get this bill passed?

It's unacceptable for this government to vote against this and say: we can't do it in nine months. We could go on for 50 minutes on the things that they can seem to do and the damage they want to cause. Let's do something that's good, that's going to look out for our children in the future, and send a loud and clear message that we're going to do something.

Every level of government should be working together to get something done and not every level pointing to the other one, using excuses: well, we can't do it; you don't understand. No, I do not understand. Especially, those poor little children that are getting abused will never understand. We need to do something. We need to pass this. To use excuses: we need more time; we need to consult. What? We're going to consult with those little ones to see the impact? We know, Mr. Chairman. We need to do something. We need to do something today and not delay.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. I had to think about what I was going to say for a few minutes. I appreciate the Member for Battle River-Wainwright's comments. I'm quite taken aback.

One of the things about Bill 202, Mr. Chair, if I may tell you, is that it's a bill that I actually have been working on for a year, and it was a bill that I was working on when I was a government member. It was a bill that I sat down with with the former Solicitor General and the Minister of Justice, who both said that they supported this particular bill.

I have in my hot little hand, Mr. Chair, a briefing note that happened to come from the government when I brought this piece of legislation forward. At no time – at no time – under the strengths, weaknesses, opportunities, and risks on this piece of legislation is it ever mentioned about the regulations. What it does say is that it will enhance the protection of children from sexual exploitation, thereby contributing to ensuring safer communities. The bill could increase the discovery and apprehension of predators.

Weaknesses. It says that it could increase the number of reports made to local authorities, who are limited in what they can do if the materials were not created locally. It would create the burden of a number of unnecessary reports that are made to local authorities.

Opportunities, Mr. Chair. The bill could demonstrate the government's commitment to protecting children. The bill could ensure that Alberta is a leader in child protection. Then it goes on to some issues about some risks in regard to it could be constitutionally challenged.

Well, I've been a member of this House since 1993. I brought a very innovative piece of legislation through this Assembly called the Protection of Children Involved in Prostitution Act. The Premier of the day knew that it could be constitutionally challenged and supported having it constitutionally challenged because it was protecting our children in this province.

Mr. Chair, I understand that the July 1 date on the original Bill 202 might have pushed the limit for the department. I accepted and thought about extending it to December 31. I would be more than willing to help the government through the regulations. I would be more than willing to talk to the stakeholders in the community.

I want to reiterate, though, Mr. Chairman, that the stakeholders in the community support this piece of legislation. I have never brought forward a piece of legislation since I have been here, since 1993, without consulting with the people that the particular bill would affect. That's why the private members' bills that I've brought forward in this Legislature have been successful in this Legislature. I work from the bottom up, not the top down. That is why the people in this province have supported the private bills that I have brought forward in this Legislature: the Drug-endangered Children Act, the Protection of Children Involved in Prostitution Act, the drug-endangered children apprehension act, Amber Alert. All of those have come forward because the stakeholders in this province have been consulted. Bill 202 has been consulted with the stakeholders.

We're giving the opportunity to bring this innovative piece of legislation forward to this government, asking them to accept it. I spoke to the Member for Battle River-Wainwright. He explained that the government wasn't and couldn't do the regulations by July 1. I said, "No problem; we'll give them till the 31st of December," which is already – what? – eight or nine months. How many other children are going to be affected while we wait eight or nine months more?

I've been working with Cybertip. Manitoba has this legislation. Ontario has this legislation. While some of them have not been proclaimed, they have also done a lot of work. I've also worked with those provinces that have brought this piece of legislation forward.

I would like to ask every member of this Assembly to support the amendment that we've put on the table.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East on the amendment.

Ms Pastoor: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chair. I would like to stand up and support this amendment. I'm sorry that I have to support this amendment. I'm sorry that the government has not done anything on this when they've known for a year that this Member for Calgary-Fish Creek has been working on it. Surely to heavens this government has been aware of this problem for the last 20 years. This isn't something that cropped up last year; this is something that's been around for 20 years. The fact that we wouldn't be able to move quicker I think really is appalling.

So I am supporting it. I'm, as I say, disappointed that we have to wait this long, but if something will happen, then, yes, it's a good amendment.

The Chair: Is there any other hon. member wishing to speak on amendment A1?

Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment A1 lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 4:49 p.m.]

505. Ms Woo-Paw moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to encourage ministries to evaluate their cultural competency, share best practices, and integrate cultural competency activities into their annual plans to further the government's goals for equitable access to services, a diverse and prosperous economy, and a high quality of life for all Albertans.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed my honour to rise in the Legislature today and open debate on Motion 505. Alberta has always been a province of great cultural diversity, started first by over 50 First Nations groups, followed by the many pioneering communities, to the recent waves and diverse sources of immigrants. Our province has benefited from having this diversity of people socially, culturally, economically, and politically in the development of this great province. We've benefited from the rich array of experiences, skills, and perspectives these people brought as well as their unwavering determination to overcome the hurdles to their shared desire to succeed.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta encompasses 47 First Nations, 134 reserves, three treaty areas, eight Métis settlements, and is now home to one of the largest, youngest, and fastest growing population of aboriginal people in Canada. There are three distinct peoples with distinct histories, languages, cultural practices, and spiritual beliefs amongst the 250,000 here in Alberta.

Our province has also experienced a lengthy period of dramatic population growth. While much of that growth has resulted from migration within Canada, the number of immigrants choosing Alberta as a new home has also risen dramatically. According to the 2006 census 16.3 per cent of Alberta's population, about 550,000 people, were immigrants to Canada. Between 2001 and 2006 Alberta's immigrant population increased by 20.2 per cent. According to Statistics Canada this was more than two times higher than the growth of the Canadian-born population, which grew by 8.7 per cent during the same period. The major sources of immigration to Alberta are Asia and the Middle East, followed by Europe and Africa.

Mr. Speaker, as the social fabric of our society evolves, so must our institutions. When population diversity continues to increase rapidly, the capacity of organizations to reflect and respond to these changes must also keep pace. Public institutions need the tools and resources to become more responsive to diversity as they propose law and policy and deliver programs and services. In the coming decade it will be increasingly important that the government implement cultural competency as a core business requirement for effective governance and service to the public.

Motion 505 addresses the government of Alberta's goals around supporting immigration as a means to attract and retain the skilled and knowledgeable workforce necessary for continued economic growth and prosperity in the province. It recognizes that continued effort will be required to ensure that government organizations are able to respond to and leverage our increasing diversity by government employees who bring global experiences and approaches to the workplace; developing work environments that embrace employees' differences and meaningfully use their attributes to enhance the performance of the government; developing government law, policy, and programs that respect and accommodate Albertans' diverse perspectives and traditions; and delivering programs and services to Albertans in ways that acknowledge and respond in new ways to the diverse needs and traditions found in different communities.

Mr. Speaker, Motion 505 is also developed against the backdrop of our government's policy framework on supporting immigrants and immigration to Alberta. This framework was developed in 2005 in order to lay out a more integrated and concerted approach to attracting and retaining immigrants. The framework recognizes that immigrants are vital to sustaining the prosperity and continued development of Alberta's economy now and in the future.

This framework incorporates four key strategic directions for government action: building welcoming communities where immigrants have the opportunity to participate fully in social, cultural, and economic life; attracting increasing numbers of immigrants to Alberta; expanding programs and services to support immigrant integration; and helping immigrants access labour market opportunities. This progressive policy framework recognizes the need for co-ordinated policy and program responses from a number of ministries as immigration issues are interlinked with human resources, settlement services, education, health, economic development, and housing.

The purpose of Motion 505 is to strengthen the ability of ministries of the Alberta government to better include and serve an increasingly diverse citizenry. Government organizations are urged to assess their current level of cultural competency so that we know where our strengths are and where we need to develop plans and strategies to address shortcomings, to share their best practices so there is continued learning throughout this process, and to incorporate evolving approaches to cultural competency into their planning and operations in order to sustain their efforts in development.

Mr. Speaker, cultural competency is the ability to function effectively in cross-cultural situations. It enables people to interact with others with diverse cultural values, beliefs, customs, and practices with respect, appreciation, and effectiveness. Within an organization is the capacity of that organization to work effectively with culturally diverse populations by integrating cultural diversity into all aspects of the organization's values, structures, policies, and practices.

Mr. Speaker, a culturally competent organization is one that recognizes people's culture as an integral part of his or her well-being and that demonstrates openness and acceptance of differences. Employees in such organizations feel that their culture is understood and respected, that their world views and different life experiences are seen as adding value to the performance of the unit or organization. Other characteristics of a culturally competent organization are the acknowledgement of cultural diversity in the community and an organization's ability and commitment to collaborate with culturally diverse individuals, groups and organizations; utilize cultural expertise among community leaders and elders in planning and delivering services; and having its organizational roles and services understood and respected in the community.

An example of this is the recent Inspiring Education dialogue with Albertans on the future of public education. The committee included membership that reflected the cultural diversity of the population. Hence, some culturally specific sessions were made possible so that the voices and perspectives of diverse groups were included in this very important visioning process. If this type of inclusive practice is incorporated into the regular process of the ministry in future engagement, then inclusion of diverse groups will be a sustained, regular effort rather than sporadic or by chance.

Mr. Speaker, culturally competent organizations also possess the capacity to identify and remove barriers preventing culturally diverse people from having access to services. These organizations develop outreach strategies to ensure participation by culturally diverse people and provide culturally appropriate methods of service delivery, and cultural diversity is incorporated in all aspects of service delivery from assessment, planning, intervention, and evaluation.

Many of our ministries and departments have made great efforts to develop culturally sensitive and multilingual information materials, whether these are information on children's services, housing, family violence, or health services, just to name a few. These efforts would be even more effective if we had stronger working relationships with our growing diverse communities so that we would have greater understanding of the barriers people experience in accessing this good information, which perpetuates a lack of access to needed services and support. Stronger and more meaningful working relationships with our communities would enable our government to develop even more effective outreach strategies. Maybe the best places to leave our brochures are the various community gathering places such as places of worship, restaurants, coffee shops, grocery stores, and where people do their laundry.

Mr. Speaker, the development of cultural competency affects both internal organizational culture and practices and external relations and service delivery of our government. Implementation of cultural competency in the ministries of the government can bring positive results for government in both areas. Our government will improve lines of communication with our growing communities, enjoy a higher retention rate of our newcomers in the province, as well as have the talents, skills, and potential of all employees of the government more fully used to achieve government objectives. More satisfied and loyal employees in government ministries will give us greater retention of skilled workers in a competitive market.

Mr. Speaker, Motion 505 is about strengthening our government's capacity with comprehensive cultural competency development in order to achieve our stated goals and policies of ensuring equitable access to services, a diverse and prosperous economy, and a high quality of life for all Albertans. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure today to rise to speak to Motion 505, cultural competency development, brought forth by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay. Cultural competency is a set of behaviours added to some policies and procedures that enable institutions and organizations to effectively work with and serve diverse cultural communities. Motion 505 urges the government of Alberta to evaluate their current level of cultural competence to find new ways to better represent Alberta's diverse population. I believe that this is extremely important to strengthen cultural competency and understand the day-to-day planning and operations of an organization.

Mr. Speaker, as the daughter of a Ukrainian immigrant Motion 505 hits close to home. I saw how my parents were treated in the workforce, and standing here today, I know we've come a very, very long way. We have developed many commendable programs that seek to grant all Albertans equitable access to services, a diverse and prosperous economy, and the opportunity to receive a higher quality of life. However, I know that more progress can be made in creating a more inclusive approach to cultural competency in government services, workplaces, and communities.

Mr. Speaker, I represent a constituency that comprises many different people from many different backgrounds and cultures. Two of the most prominent ones in our area are the French and the Ukrainians. With the oil sands being one of the most profitable industries in my community, we have many foreign and transient workers who live there. My constituents would benefit greatly from improving how we serve diverse cultural communities.

The major priority of this government is to support immigration by attracting and retaining a skilled and knowledgeable workforce. By having culturally appropriate government services as an incentive to retaining newcomers in the province, we can make them feel more at home. Government will then have the capacity and the reputation to attract employees from immigrant communities that were not previously recruited, immigrants with a wealth of knowledge that in the past have made this province what it is today.

As a former teacher I believe it all comes down to how we educate our students and staff. In fact, when I applied for my first teaching job, I felt I was discriminated against because I was Ukrainian. This hurt a great deal, but I did not let it stop me from becoming a teacher. I am thankful for the positive developments we have made over the years to prevent discrimination in the workplace from occurring, and I would like to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay for initiating debate on this very important issue.

Mr. Speaker, the government of Alberta can be a leader in improving cultural competency in this province, and it must start in our own offices and programs. As our population grows, it becomes more diverse. We have not always kept pace with reflecting and responding to these changes. I believe that Motion 505 could be the first step towards strengthening the connection between different cultures and communities. I support this motion, and I look forward to the remainder of the discussion this afternoon.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's also my pleasure to speak to this Motion 505, and I want to acknowledge the efforts of the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay in bringing this motion forward. I think it's a very worthwhile debate. Just by virtue of the consciousness raising that happens when a motion like this gets discussed, I think she should be congratulated.

The motion reads:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to encourage ministries to evaluate their cultural competency, share best practices, and integrate cultural competency activities into their annual plans to further the government's goals for equitable access to services, a diverse and prosperous economy, and a high quality of life for all Albertans.

It's probably tempting for people, for all of us and, I know, even myself when I saw this motion, to think about immigrants. One right away goes to thinking about people who come from other countries to make a new life for themselves and their families, the struggles and the barriers that they run into as they start out that process, and for good reason. Probably most of us are either children or descendants of immigrants or even, actually, immigrants. I think we probably all have our stories to tell from our own families, the kinds of challenges that they faced coming from another world, so to speak, with a new language, new customs, and so on. They all overcame those barriers and hardships, and Canada is known for that. In fact, it's a uniquely Canadian thing that people came from many different backgrounds and have become part of a country that has welcomed them all.

I had the great opportunity a week or so ago to be part of a lunch with the new Italian ambassador. I was very interested to hear him talk about some of the people he has met of Italian descent in Canada who have managed to be very successful here. They have completely embraced Canadian life, Canadian customs and traditions, yet they've also been extremely successful in preserving their own culture. Again, he described that as a uniquely Canadian trait.

We do live in a multicultural society. It's increasingly diverse. We also have an expanding economy, so we need immigrants. We need skilled people to come from other parts of the world and adopt Canada as their new home. But what about those people who don't come from somewhere else? What about the people who were born here and face the same kinds of barriers that immigrants from other parts of the world face? Of course, I'm talking about our First Nations, Métis, and Inuit people.

I've had the opportunity in the last year and a half to visit a lot of aboriginal communities, and this issue has become something that I've become very interested in. The reason for my visits is that I'm on a committee that's focused on the participation of aboriginal people in our economy and in our workforce. It's been said that up to 80 per cent of people in some aboriginal communities are unemployed. This is a very complex problem. It has many, many challenges. Among the foremost challenges are education – actually, that was already referred to by the hon. member who led off the debate here – housing, transportation. Many other issues also come into play: child care and so on. But in my discussions with leaders and people from these communities racism comes up a lot. Unfortunately, that's still an issue that aboriginal people are having to deal with in our communities.

This is the youngest, fastest growing population in Alberta, aboriginal people. They are a huge, untapped natural resource, both for themselves and for all Albertans. It's very important for our government to provide services not just to aboriginal people but to all people, no matter where they come from, in a way that is respectful and is sensitive to their particular needs.

Now, our government has done a lot of good work in this area, and one could take quite a bit of time in debate here listing off the various initiatives that various government departments have undertaken, but I won't do that. I'll just say that the motion here really is supportive of those many initiatives, and I very much support the motion for that reason.

There may be some who would say that the motion has the feel of being more involved in institutional navel gazing or that maybe it's going to be something that is going to have cost implications that could be prohibitive. I would just say that my mother always said that it doesn't take any more time or money to be nice to somebody and to be sensitive, and I think that's really what we're talking about here. It's just a raising of consciousness, really, to have our government departments act in this uniquely Canadian way, which respects people no matter what background they come from. That has to be based on an awareness of what their particular challenges and issues are.

I think that our government is leading the way. I would just say that this motion further supports that direction, and for that reason I'm very supportive of this motion. Again, I want to thank the Member for Calgary-Mackay for bringing it forward.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'm going to call on the hon. Member for West Yellowhead, but might I have your permission to introduce some very special visitors to the Assembly this afternoon?

Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

The Speaker: In the Speaker's gallery are representatives of a number of agricultural societies that happen to exist north of Edmonton. We have representatives from the Barrhead Exhibition Association and Agricultural Society; the Pibroch & District Agricultural Society; PACO, the Progressive Agricultural Community Organization; Clyde & District Agricultural Society; Fort Assiniboine Agricultural Society; M.T.M. Agricultural Society; Westlock & District Agricultural Society; Morinville and District Agricultural Society; Highridge and District Agricultural Society; and Linaria & District Agricultural Society. These are all agricultural societies within the constituency that I have the honour of representing. I'd ask them all to rise. Would you give them the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Motions Other than Government Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to talk on Motion 505, which is sponsored by the MLA from Calgary-Mackay. Cultural competency can be defined as a set of behaviours, attitudes, policies, and procedures that enable an institution or organization to effectively work with and serve diverse cultural communities. Alberta has become an increasingly important destination for skilled immigrant workers in Canada and in my riding of West Yellowhead.

I want to talk particularly about Jasper national park. This is a region which attracts visitors from all over the world and, because of that, has also attracted many skilled immigrants on an annual basis who come and work in the hospitality and tourism industry. Mr. Speaker, culturally competent businesses have been able to attract and retain skilled immigrants, which has been an advantage in a tight labour market, especially in Jasper. Businesses in Jasper have attracted, supported, and promoted a diverse pool of employees who bring global experiences and approaches to the workplace. Many workplaces in Jasper have developed work environments that embrace employees' differences and meaningful user attributes to enhance the performance of their business.

Motion 505 promotes further cultural competency in the ministries of the Alberta government, and I think that's a positive step. As illustrated in Jasper, cultural competency can create connections to new communities through outreach and consultation. Cultural competency in government improves relations with cultural communities through the provision of services that recognize and respond to cultural differences.

New Canadians, Mr. Speaker, see a culturally competent government as respectful and helpful. Cultural competency improves lines of communication between government and diverse communities. Social programs are more effective when services are better able to address the real needs of the diverse clients that they serve. Culturally appropriate government services serve as an incentive to retain newcomers in this province. A culturally competent government provides a positive international image of Alberta as a destination of choice for skilled immigrants, which is important to Alberta's long-term economic growth.

Employment and Immigration has been working with industry stakeholders to support implementation of industry-led workforce strategies specific to each sector. Many of these actions support employers in creating welcoming workplaces and building on the talents of a diverse workforce.

Mr. Speaker, the world has become a small place, and it is important to all of us to understand and welcome all who come to this great province. It is through them that we will continue to grow and be the province that we are today.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's also my privilege to rise today and speak to Motion 505, and I would like to thank the Member for Calgary-Mackay for bringing this motion forward. I want to highlight a few aspects of this motion and also, first of all, point out the fact that this is a motion and that, as such, it raises an issue for us to discuss and urges the government to take some action. In that regard I think the matter of raising this issue as important to our government, as important to our society, is extremely important.

There are three things that this motion basically talks about. It urges the government and its ministries to evaluate their cultural competency, share best practices, and integrate cultural competency activities into their ongoing activities. I think that's important, and as the Member for West Yellowhead talked about the definition or a possible definition of cultural competency, I want to repeat that because I think it's also significant in terms of what's important about this motion. Cultural competency can be defined as a set of behaviours, attitudes, policies, and procedures that enable an institution or organization to effectively work with and serve diverse cultural communities.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Speaker, that's us, that's Alberta, that's Canada, and will be on an ongoing basis. When I look around this room, whether it's on the floor or the people observing this discussion this afternoon, we've all come from somewhere. We've all chosen to make Alberta our home. We've come here to work, to live, to play, to raise our families, and that's important.

I think the matter of the definition of cultural competency is important to this motion. If it was a bill, we would have to spend a lot more time clearly defining what we meant, but I think that basically what this definition means is that we're going to work together, we're going to communicate with each other, we're going to understand each other, and at the end of the day we're going to push ourselves to the middle. This isn't about each of us standing off in our corner and highlighting our own cultural uniqueness. It is about celebrating what is unique about each of us, but it's also about celebrating what we want to do together as Albertans and as Canadians. I think on that basis this is an important initiative, and I appreciate the fact that the Member for Calgary-Mackay asked me to speak on it.

My constituency of Strathmore-Brooks, as likely every member in this House could say, is certainly a culturally diverse community and one that has been that for many, many years but has seen that that's ongoing because of the aspects of industry that happen in our community. Certainly, Lakeside Packers, which has been a large beef packing operation in the Brooks community for many years, has drawn a broad range of people from diverse cultural backgrounds to work and live in the community. I say that carefully because that business has been a draw but only an entry point into the community for many people, as are all of the businesses. The cultural diversity of our community has expanded dramatically.

I think this bill really allows us to highlight some of the things we already do well and urges us to continue to do them well. There are many initiatives in the Brooks community that deal specifically with the fact that a relatively high percentage of our population has English as a second language. When I look across this floor, I expect that many of us would say the same and have either ourselves or parents who learned English as a second language.

That's one of the services in the Brooks area that's extremely important and, I think, speaks to one of the challenges, one of the things that's important about being competent culturally. It's extremely important that new immigrants, people who come to this province, come to this country, are able to communicate. The initiative to provide resources to assist people in becoming competent in the English language, I think, is a very proactive and important thing and one of the services that is provided through a range of services in the Brooks community. The public library has become an important entry point for a range of community services that assist immigrants in the Brooks community.

I think one of the other things that highlights the importance of competency in this area is the fact that, as people come to this country from a range of different backgrounds and other countries, we celebrate democracy in this country. We celebrate freedom. We celebrate the supportive authority that we have through our police commissions, through the police services in this country. But one of the things that I've noticed in Brooks and has been raised with me also in discussions is the fact that not everyone has that understanding.

One of the things that's important is helping communities – and by communities I mean groups of people who may have come from other countries – to understand what it means to be free, what it means to have confidence in police authorities. I can only speak as someone who takes that for granted, but not everyone can. I think some of that kind of reality is why it's important for us to be competent in integrating people into our society.

At the end of the day, Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier, this is very much about pushing ourselves to the middle because it's also about encouraging new immigrants into this province and into this country to be aggressive about integrating into Canadian society. Everyone who comes here from somewhere else has something to offer in terms of cultural diversity and an opportunity to better understand what freedom and what democracy mean in this country, what an opportunity there is to work and to work in order to support one's family, whether that's here in Alberta, here in Canada, or the support that for many immigrants also goes back to their homeland to allow families to flourish over there.

The whole matter of cultural competence, I think, is important. I think what I like about this motion is that it raises the issue. It allows us to celebrate diversity, celebrate the things that make our communities strong but also make our economy strong because we recognize that every year we'll have additional people coming to this country who choose to make Alberta home. I think that's one of the things that is similar about all of us, and it's important that we keep pushing each other to the middle in that. It's not about sitting off to the side and being isolated. It's about working together.

For all of those reasons I support the initiative, the spirit of this motion and thank the Member for Calgary-Mackay for bringing it forward.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to speak on Motion 505 as it deals with cultural sensitivity and support. I'm not going to go too far back in history, but the reality is that in one of the last ice ages, basically, the first people crossed the Bering Strait and became the inhabitants of this nation. They were the first line of immigrants, as far as I'm concerned. We don't have a whole lot of fossil evidence of individuals being here before, but everyone who has come since is basically an immigrant, and some have adjusted better than others. I think it's an extremely important role of this government to assist with cultural accommodation. It's very important that people's customs and cultures, that are part of adding to the Canadian fabric, be honoured and supported, and of course we would like to think that any kinds of warring or negative interaction is left behind in the country of origin. For a lot of reasons that's why people immigrate to Canada, for the safety factor and the economic opportunity.

But, Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out that the Minister of Education is considerably more excited about a recent memorandum of understanding that has been shared with Chuck Strahl, the federal minister of aboriginal affairs, and with the grand chiefs of treaties 6, 7, and 8, who were introduced earlier in this Assembly. When I had an opportunity to talk about that memorandum of understanding with the minister and Carolyn Buffalo, who is the chief of the Montana First Nation, which is the smallest nation operating out of Hobbema, there was concern about the speed at which culturally sensitive agreements are made. The minister didn't seem to be at all worried that this was kind of slow moving.

While it was a positive target, it seemed to be going very slowly. I, on the other hand, have concerns because, for example, we had back in 2000, 2001 an aboriginal policy initiative, and there were some very significant members of First Nations and Métis settlements involved in that particular policy. Well, flash forward nine years, 10 years, and here we are at the beginning of a memorandum of understanding that will, amongst other things, create a cultural centre, which will then develop educational policies, which will then produce improvements in terms of aboriginal students moving forward not only culturally but through the education system.

Now, contrast that principle with the reality of what happened with the Northland school division, where in a very paternalistic, patriarchal way the whole board of First Nations elected officials was disbanded. A person who had previously been in charge – I believe the gentleman's name was Colin Kelly – was sort of given the job, along with three appointed individuals, of trying to improve the educational participation rate of First Nations students. I see this just personally as an extension of – basically, one individual was a representative. He was a First Nations adviser to the minister of aboriginal affairs in B.C., so he had a degree of First Nations background and legitimacy. But I frequently see us not getting past involving First Nations directly in moving forward.

I've talked a lot about First Nations, but I see English as a second language students, who I had the privilege of teaching over a 34-year period, as being in a similar circumstance of isolation, educationally speaking. I'm hoping that Motion 505 is going to address this. Only 52 per cent of First Nations students graduate within a five-year period of entering high school. In terms of English as a second language students we had dropout rates of up to 75 per cent. So it's absolutely essential that when we encourage individuals to participate in the Canadian fabric, we arm them with every possibility to do so.

In the case of successful circumstances such as the turnaround at Hobbema, it was involvement of the children in culturally sensitive programs. Carolyn Buffalo, for example, indicated that there are Cree language specialists and there are Cree cultural specialists that are part of the successful programs operating out of Hobbema. A very successful program is operating out of the Stoney First Nation on the Morley reserve, where children's cultural sensitivities are being embraced, and it's part of the program. As a result, we see the school being crowded to the point that additions will have to be made. That's a statement of success.

For our ESL students to be successful, they need to have more time and more support to learn the English language, and we should not be expecting them, early on in their English as a second language process, to be tested at the grade 3, 6, 9, and again at the 12 levels with standardized achievement tests that are heavily language and culture based. If we're going to provide the support for, first, the children of immigrants because we know that it's easier to learn a language as a child, we have to then move toward supporting the families.

Now, this government has cut back the funding when it comes to First Nations. The government has frozen the funding for ESL, English as a second language, instruction, so we're going in the wrong direction. We've seen, for example, in the Justice department a cutback on First Nations probation officers. We've seen a cutback in FNMI funding in the Education ministry. If we're going to be culturally sensitive and take it a step further to be culturally supportive, then we have to set timelines. We have to go beyond the discussions. While you can't ask for funding in a private member's motion or private member's bill, we can at least have timelines and check-offs knowing that we've been successful. An example of one of the programs the government provided funding for was to help with the Sudanese community: $85,000 as part of the crime and communities task force was provided to the Sudanese community to help integrate their youth to a greater extent. It's programs like that that have budgets attached and timelines that are absolutely essential to welcoming individuals.

The government also cut back in terms of bringing foreign doctors into our service. They cut back the number of training spots from 60 to 40. If we're going to embrace the world and provide opportunities, whether it's the temporary foreign workers whose rights have been squashed, whether it's adding the 12 cents to the minimum wage where so many first immigrants experience employment, we need to be doing better in this province. We need to be speeding up the nominee process as opposed to just looking at temporary foreign workers.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased to rise and speak to Motion 505 on cultural competency and development as proposed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay. Motion 505 urges this government to encourage ministries to evaluate their cultural competence, share best practices, and integrate cultural competency activities into their annual plans.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta has been and continues to be a province built by immigrants. Alberta has been a land of opportunity for hundreds of thousands of immigrants from around the world, myself included. While we may come from many nations and backgrounds, we are all bound by common values, values such as freedom and democracy, a positive and can-do spirit, love for our friends, family, and our fellow citizens, and a belief that if you work hard, you can achieve your dreams.

As an immigrant myself, I recognize the good intentions of this motion. After all, our country is stronger when we share our culture and heritage with our fellow Canadians. However, in return for this acceptance I also feel that it is the obligation and the responsibility of immigrants to learn the language, the culture, the business practices of their new country and share their cultures with fellow Canadians. I always say that Canada is not my country of birth; it is my country of choice.

For myself, when I came to this country, I studied in order to be a better businessman. I chose to go to NAIT while I was still running my business to study all the courses offered in NAIT's business program, and I studied economics at the University of Alberta to learn how business is conducted in this country. That education enabled me to become a better businessman, a better entrepreneur, a better Canadian employer.

A side story, Mr. Speaker. When the election was called, all of a sudden I got a phone call from a former employee. You know, I hadn't encountered her for many years, but she wanted to become a volunteer in my campaign. She told me it was because she really enjoyed the years that she worked for me.

You know, Mr. Speaker, this system has been working very well for Canadians. Through hard work and strong education there is nothing an immigrant to this great country cannot achieve. The goal of the government should be to ensure that all Albertans have the tools to succeed in an environment of cultural understanding and tolerance. Essentially, this means an inclusive attitude that empowers those of all backgrounds. This is particularly important because of the great diversity of our country.

Government has implemented many policies that provide all Albertans an equal opportunity to succeed and to achieve their dreams. The Alberta Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Act protects Albertans from discrimination and helps to ensure that we all have an equal opportunity to earn a living, find a place to live, and enjoy public services. The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and the Canadian Multiculturalism Act promote cultural understanding and equality. In Alberta our government continues to work to ensure that diversity and understanding are reflected in the workplace.

The Ministry of Employment and Immigration has led the development of a comprehensive labour force strategy called building and educating tomorrow's workforce. This strategy and other initiatives in our government are helping to support employers in creating welcoming workplaces and building the talents of a diverse workforce.

Mr. Speaker, I'm proud to live by the principles of inclusiveness. My constituency of Edmonton-McClung is a home to Edmonton's largest Jewish community as well as strong Russian, Ukrainian, Muslim, Turkish, and Asian communities. Before and after the election I spent 13 months knocking on over 18,000 doors, talking to people from door to door, talking to those with different cultures and different backgrounds. This experience has helped me to be an effective representative for my constituents. I simply asked those who I had the opportunity to meet to vote for me if they believed that I would do a better job of serving them as their elected representative.

Mr. Speaker, I applaud the intention of my hon. colleague from Calgary-Mackay. However, I feel that our government is already making significant progress on a number of initiatives that are working to ensure tolerance and cultural understanding in the workplace. I feel that a government should work to promote policies inclusive of all Albertans. Furthermore, I believe there are many opportunities outside of government for Albertans to promote cultural understanding and tolerance.

Myself, Mr. Speaker, I have been doing this since the mid-90s. Every year I help finance and organize multicultural events. Very recently, last November, I had 3,000 people in the Jubilee Auditorium. We had more than 400 performers on stage. They came from 20 different cultural backgrounds. That's the way to promote cultural understanding, to share our values, to share our differences.

Mr. Speaker, we must continue to work to foster cultural understanding and tolerance in our province while remaining mindful of the common values that bind us as Canadians.

Before I end my remarks, Mr. Speaker, I just want to tell a story. I had a conversation with a group of Sikh people today that had been introduced by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning. I talked to this gentleman very frankly. I told him I'm going to speak against this motion. I explained my reasons. Do you know what he told me? The gentleman, Savi Kachroo – and he even put his telephone number here – said he totally supports what I am trying to say. Because we came to this country, we have every obligation to make this country a better place by integrating with mainstream society.

And he said: you as legislators should take a balanced approach; you should stay on a higher attitude to make sure that all Albertans, all Canadians are being treated fairly, equally.

Mr. Speaker, I know this is a very sensitive issue and a very emotional issue because I myself have gone through so much. I'm not saying this world is perfect. People say, "David, you should be very proud. You have been very successful in business. Now you are successful in politics." I say, "Yes. I am very proud of what I have achieved, but I'm more proud what I've overcome." There are a lot of issues we need to deal with. There are a lot of difficulties we need to overcome. But for the reasons I just talked about, Mr. Speaker, I will not be supporting Motion 505.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay, do you wish to briefly comment?

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you very much. Mr. Speaker, I'll be very, very brief. I just want to say thank you to all my hon. colleagues who spoke to this motion. I really appreciate the level of interest and vigour demonstrated through your debate. You spoke with great insights, and you spoke from your hearts, and I appreciate it.

I don't have time to respond to all these great comments. I just want to end by addressing to the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks to emphasize what integration really means. The most democratic and equitable type of integration is the type that is a two-way street, where we come together in the middle, respecting each other's differences and building, actually, our unity through the recognition of our diversity and differences. I really appreciate your point. I appreciate all of my colleagues' points.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Seeing no other hon. members wishing to speak, the chair shall now call the question.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 505 carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that the Assembly now stand adjourned until 1:30 tomorrow afternoon.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:58 p.m. to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, March 23, 2010

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Grant that we the members of our province's Legislature fulfill our office with honesty and integrity. May our first concern be for the good of all our citizens. Let us be guided by these principles in our deliberations this day. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What a great pleasure it is to rise today in order to introduce to you some very special guests who are here from Blessed Kateri school in the riding of Edmonton-Mill Creek. Accompanying them today are their teachers, Joel Piché, Ray Brooks, and Ms Darlene Payne. There are 61 visitors altogether, three classes. I would ask all of them to now please rise, and let us greet them with some warm applause.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour and privilege today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly 54 grade 6 students from Brander Gardens elementary school located in my constituency of Edmonton-Whitemud. Accompanying the students are their teachers, Natalie Gago-Esteves, Matthew Thiessen, and teacher assistant Cindy Lee. I had an opportunity to meet with the students earlier, and they asked very tough questions, perhaps even tougher than those asked in question period. They are seated in the public gallery. I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Marz: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to rise today and introduce to you and through you on behalf of myself and the honourable and generous Minister of Transportation a group of very hard-working and forward-thinking municipal representatives from central Alberta. They are here representing the South Red Deer Regional Wastewater Commission as well as the Mountain View regional water system and are seated in the members' gallery. They are Warren Smith, councillor for Olds; Julia King, mayor of the town of Penhold; Judy Dahl, mayor of the town of Olds; Al Kemmere, reeve of Mountain View county; Cody Berggren, mayor of the town of Bowden; Patt Churchill, councillor for the town of Innisfail; and Dennis Cooper, councillor for the town of Penhold. I would ask that they all rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly three ladies from the Terra Centre for Pregnant and Parenting Teens. Over the past two years I've been fairly involved with this organization and have learned first-hand of the great work that they are doing for young moms in need. I'll be speaking more about Terra in a member's statement later this afternoon. For now I would ask these ladies as I say their names to rise to receive the traditional greeting of the Assembly: Ms Erica Pitre, grade 11; Ms Mellisa Johnson, grade 12; and Ms Laura Slomp Booy, the youth leadership facilitator. They are standing, so let's give them a little greeting.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour for me to rise today and introduce to you and through you Mr. Gurpreet Gill from my constituency of Edmonton-Ellerslie, who is here to observe the question period today. He had the opportunity to meet several of my colleagues earlier this afternoon, and I hope he enjoyed it. At this time I would ask him to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly members of the media from my constituency who have come to take in the sights and sounds of our Assembly and to meet with the Premier. From the Athabasca Advocate I'm pleased to introduce Ross Hunter, Lauren Den Hartog, Chris Cain; from the River radio station Chris Byrne; and from the Smoky Lake Signal Nathan Taylor. If there is anything you need to know about our constituency of Athabasca-Redwater, these are certainly the folks who know it. I'd now like to ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

It's also my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two very special people, Gary Sampley and Laura Jurasek. Gary is executive director of the Edmonton Epilepsy Association, and Laura has just been named president of that body. Laura has been a special blessing to my family in her role as a dedicated nurse practitioner at the Stollery children's hospital in the pediatric neurology ward. They're here today to help raise awareness for epilepsy, which I'll talk about in my member's statement. Having a child with epilepsy can be hard at times, and I want to sincerely thank Laura, Gary, and all those involved with the Stollery children's hospital and the Edmonton Epilepsy Association and ask that they please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Berger: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and to all members of the Assembly three people from the Mosquito Creek Foundation in Nanton. They are part of the volunteer board overseeing the operation of our local seniors' lodge and two self-contained housing entities. In the past few years this group has gone above and beyond their respective duties. When the local medical clinic was offered for sale, they set about fundraising and bought the clinic as well as the house next door for future expansion. They then stepped up and borrowed to partner with the province to build a 30-bed designated assisted living facility onto the lodge, repatriating individuals who were living away from their friends and family.

Mr. Speaker, they are seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask them to rise and remain standing as I call their names: Lynne Foden, chief administrative officer; Leigh McNeill, board chair; and Rick Rogers, vice chair. I'll now ask the House to recognize with a thunderous applause the contributions that these people make to our seniors.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure today for me to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly two outstanding citizens of Red Deer, Mayor Morris Flewwelling and, accompanying him, the director of development services, Paul Goranson. They are in the Legislature today as part of their visit to Edmonton to meet with various government officials. Mayor Flewwelling has served the citizens of Red Deer on city council and as mayor for over 25 years. In addition to this, in 1997 he received the Order of Canada, Canada's highest civilian decoration, for his distinguished volunteer service and leadership of national significance in heritage preservation. The hon. Member for Red Deer-North and myself have been fortunate to work with these gentlemen over the years, and I'm honoured to introduce them in the Assembly today. They're in the public gallery, and I will now ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Terra Centre for Pregnant and Parenting Teens

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to rise to talk a little bit more about the organization that I just introduced, the Terra Centre for Pregnant and Parenting Teens. Since 1971 Terra has provided programs and services to help pregnant and parenting teens gain confidence and develop the skills required to raise healthy and happy babies.

Terra supports approximately 600 clients and their children in the Edmonton area each year with a staff of more than 60 people in three different locations. They offer 12 programs, which include individual counselling, home visitation, parenting support, group activities, services for dads, clothing exchange, childhood development activities, prenatal classes, housing support, and a child care centre at the Braemar school.

Last fall I helped Terra raise some 120,000 diapers for their Baby Heroes campaign. Along with the support of many others in the community our contribution to their campaign gave some 120,000 diapers to mothers in need.

Terra is just an incredible organization that helps young parents return to school, make career plans, have healthier relationships, and helps with the community supports that they need. I would like to thank the organization, especially the young ladies who are here today, for the tremendous work that they are doing in supporting their cause.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater.

1:40 International Purple Day

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Approximately seven years ago I awoke in the middle of the night to my wife's screams for help. I found her leaning over our infant son, who, to my shock, was in full convulsions, eyes rolling back in his head. It was terrifying. As a parent at that point you'd give anything to access the best treatment and the most dedicated health care professionals in the world, and I'm glad to say that, thankfully, that's what we have here in Alberta.

Epilepsy is characterized by a number of recurrent and unprovoked seizures that can occur at any age, as was the case in my family. Mr. Speaker, this Friday, March 26, is International Purple Day, which caps off March as Epilepsy Awareness Month in Canada. Purple Day was founded in 2008 by then nine-year-old Cassidy Megan of Halifax, Nova Scotia. The name for Purple Day was taken from epilepsy's internationally recognized colour, lavender. Purple Day was established to increase awareness about epilepsy and has succeeded in a short time. It launched internationally in 2009, and now there are 15 countries world-wide participating in 2010 Purple Day activities. Epilepsy affects 50 million people world-wide and 40,000 here in Alberta. One of the major initiatives that Purple Day seeks to achieve is to demystify epilepsy and seizures in general. They occur when the normal electrical balance in the brain is lost, with cells either firing when they shouldn't or not firing when they should.

I know I have acknowledged their presence here today already, but I want to thank all of the truly amazing staff at the Stollery children's hospital and the people at the Edmonton Epilepsy Association for all their dedication and help and support.

For more information please visit the Purple Day website at www.purpledayer.org. I urge my colleagues to wear purple this Friday in support of this great cause.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

REAP Calgary

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, several days ago I had the pleasure of attending the REAP sustainability breakfast. REAP stands for Respect for the Earth and All People. It's a collection of 20 Calgary businesses that are working toward a more sustainable Alberta. The breakfast was held at Green City Motors, a very cool business that specializes in electric bikes and scooters. REAP encourages citizens to shop locally for the environmental benefits, to keep Calgary's local business scene thriving, and to provide good wages for Calgary workers.

REAP produces an online magazine and holds educational workshops to inform Albertans about the benefits of a sustainable society. Their work to date has been very impressive. I encourage people to visit www.reapcalgary.com to see what these folks are doing. It's exciting stuff. I had a great time learning about REAP and its efforts to promote sustainable living. I'd like to thank Stephanie Jackman in particular for all her hard work and, in fact, I think you could say, visionary work in organizing REAP and keeping it going.

The 21st century has presented humanity with perhaps its greatest challenge yet: learning how to live sustainably in the area of global climate change, maintaining prosperity while being kinder to our world and the biosphere it supports. I'd like to thank the folks at REAP for doing their part.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Barons Centennial

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Originally called Blainey, the village of Barons was incorporated and the first council elected on June 6, 1910. This community became the centre for many wheat farms, and at its peak the grain elevators had a capacity of more than 1.2 million bushels. More than a dozen world and reserve grand wheat and durum championship holders were from the village of Barons.

Over the years Barons has been home to many other notables:

John Turner, who built the Paul Bunyan cultivator in 1935; Lloyd Johnson, who manufactured the Johnson blade; and Victor Erdman, who manufactured the Victory blade. All these pieces were designed to help prevent soil erosion during the Dirty Thirties. Then there's Dr. Mark Grant, who helped develop one of the first winter wheat varieties at the Lethbridge research station; and Jason Turner, who along with his figure skating partner Jamie Salé competed in the 1994 Olympics in Lillehammer, Norway.

Not unlike many rural communities the seven one-room schools in the district were combined into a larger school, Barons consolidated school, which was established by this Legislature in 1915. It was one of the last to operate in Alberta. The school was also featured in the film Superman, filmed on location in 1977. The 1987 movie Betrayed was also partially filmed in both Barons and Carmangay.

Barons No. 1 discovery oil well blew in November 21, 1950, and for years produced oil and employment. In recent years in co-operation with the Alberta government and the Lethbridge Northern irrigation district the new 10,000 acre Keho-Barons irrigation project, a fully enclosed pipe low-pressure irrigation system, became a reality.

From July 9 to July 11 this summer Barons will celebrate their centennial year, Mr. Speaker. I want to thank all the hard-working individuals and the community there for their pride and dedication in making this a reality.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Oil Sands Image

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to speak about the environment and, basically, the bread and butter of my constituency, the oil sands capital of the world. We have a very rich history over the past 40 years, dating back to AOSTRA and, of course, the Alberta Research Council in terms of the scientific advancements we have made. But with a two-and-a-half-year-old son it is clear we have much more work to be done.

I often have said in the past that we need to save labels for planets, not for people, because any time that we actually start labelling people, we're disenfranchising them. We're actually pigeonholing them and, really, like a boxer saying: you go into this corner, you go into this corner, come out, and let's fight.

I know that the Minister of Energy's comments when he talks about how we're going to counterattack some comments on what environmentalists have done, are well intended, but I think that in today's 21st century we need to be more strategic. What I mean by that is that rather than wearing a hat with a lightning rod on your head and going over to Brussels, it may be more strategic, similar to the national oil sands task force that we created back in 1997, to build partnerships, working together and lowering the rhetoric because with every counterattack there is usually another attack.

I do believe that that would hurt my constituency in the oil sands, that I'm very proud of. It is the bread and butter of this province and of my community. Let us be strategic as we go forward and not be like a Jethro Bodine. I know the Minister of Energy clearly is well intended, but his statesmanlike approach has been more a little bit of a rumble-tumble type of approach. We need to be strategic as we go forward. This is the message that I've heard from industry. We want to move forward in a strategic way in terms of celebrating this rich resource that we have been blessed with.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Helping Hands of Hope

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure for me to rise today and recognize an incredible new charitable organization here in the city of Edmonton, namely the Helping Hands of Hope foundation. The foundation currently supports individuals across the globe living in poverty in some very unique ways.

Firstly, for seniors in Vietnam who have lost their eyesight, this organization provides the needed funding for them to receive cataract surgery, giving them back their independence and allowing them a renewed chance to assist their families with things like child care and food preparation. These surgeries can actually raise the standard of living of an entire family in Vietnam.

The organization's second project targets those living below the poverty line in Nepal. The Helping Hands of Hope foundation provides clean water to these people by donating BioSand filters, which can remove up to 99 per cent of the harmful contaminants. Further, the organization works with the people to teach them the proper use of filters, along with sanitation and hygiene practices. Altogether, this donation, which amounts to a total cost of $40, contributes to these individuals' health and well-being and prevents the spread of disease.

Mr. Speaker, last Friday the organization hosted their inaugural fundraiser, the first annual Global Fest, which featured exceptional food and multicultural performances. I had an opportunity to be in attendance at this event as the foundation's first guest speaker. It was a privilege and honour to meet all the compassionate women who are the driving force of this organization, namely Lise Durand, president, founder, and director; Randal Wong, cofounder and director; Debbie Bildfell, secretary; Tam Duong, executive member; Dr. Patricia Sigurdson, treasurer; and Karen Smith, events coordinator.

They have been working tirelessly as a group of women to see that they achieve their goals. Thank you to this organization for their determination and humanitarian efforts. I wish them all the best continued success in their future endeavours.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. deputy Leader of the Opposition.

Pharmaceutical Benefit for Seniors

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Adding to the increasingly long list of government health mismanagement is the July 1 implementation of the new seniors' drug plan. The government hasn't updated the website since fall, and seniors are left questioning what these changes mean for them. Most seniors are on fixed incomes, and if they can't afford or struggle with the increase, then their families will have to step in and pick up the tab. To the Premier. Seniors want to know: why do they have to pay for their health premiums, for drugs or not, when the rest of Albertans don't?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I believe 80 per cent of the seniors' drug coverage is carried by the taxpayer. There are some changes with respect to income levels, et cetera, but we're continuing to work through that particular area. We want to make sure that everyone is treated fairly in the province of Alberta. The minister may have some further information on it, but we're working through some detail.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Back to the Premier: how will seniors who already have pharmaceutical plans like the Alberta Retired Teachers' Association or Veterans Affairs be notified to opt out of this program, or is everyone required to opt in? What's happening?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, as I said, we're working through further details. Our main priority here is to make sure that those that cannot afford to pay have a program there that will support them. We're working out the details in terms of some of the other income levels and some of the other issues that come forward in this particular area.

Ms Blakeman: Mr. Premier, it's three months away. Given that the average income of seniors living in rural areas is much lower than seniors living in cities, why did the government choose the rural income level as the marker at which seniors will have to pay the new monthly premium? This disadvantages urban seniors, who have a higher cost of living.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I'm not quite sure where the hon. member is coming from in terms of rural income levels and urban. I think there's quite a mix. I know that there are a lot of people living in larger urban areas that are struggling as seniors, and that's why we're looking at a much broader range, to make sure that everyone in this province is treated equitably.

Teachers' Unfunded Pension Liability

Ms Pastoor: Mr. Speaker, in 2007 this government signed an agreement with the Alberta teachers. At the time the Premier wrote to ATA, "I pledge to seek the Legislative Assembly's support for the necessary funding to enable the Memorandum of Agreement's full execution." Now the government is sending mixed signals about its willingness to live up to the agreement on teachers' wages, and school boards are more than concerned that they soon will be footing the bill. To the Premier: will the Premier, please, clearly articulate how his government is going to provide ongoing funding for this agreement?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't think there's anything unclear about it at all. We clearly indicated to school boards, in fact just yesterday, that the full 5.99 per cent increase on the average weekly earnings from last year, after arbitration, will be funded in their budgets and annualized. I've also indicated to them that the anticipated increases for September 1 this year and next year, we understand, now have to be calculated based on the average weekly earnings index. Now I have to work with the ATA and the Alberta school boards to figure out how we're going to do that, not on a one-year basis but over the period of time.

Ms Pastoor: Well, to the Premier, but I'm sure it'll go to the Minister of Education. You've answered part of this, but failing that, failing taking the responsibility for the arbitrator's ruling could force districts to reduce staff or cut services. Is that right?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, what I've indicated to school boards is that we are anticipating, in fact we know, that there's going to be an increase in our student population starting last year and moving forward over the next number of years, including perhaps up to 10 years. We'll see an increase in student population. It would be imprudent to cut back our teacher numbers in that period of time, so I've asked them to plan their teaching staff, teaching ratios, on the same basis as they had last year. I understand that may require them to draw on operating surpluses this year or even in some cases run a deficit. But over the next two or three years we'll sort out exactly . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member. [interjection] The hon. member has the floor.

Ms Pastoor: A good segue into my question. How can the Minister of Education expect school boards to survive off their reserves indefinitely, especially when some boards lack reserves and the Minister of Education has been clawing back money even from those that have it?

The Speaker: There are no preambles in questions.

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, school boards across the province are in an excellent fiscal position because of how well they've been funded in the past. We know that they had last year $440 million of operating reserves. Now that's down to about $360 million, still sufficient to be able to finance their operations. Some school boards don't. We've said that we will work with them to make sure not that they can run a deficit just indiscriminately, but if they need to run a deficit in order to finance the cost of teachers going forward, we'll work with them on that.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

High-intensity Residential Fires

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We have had at least four massive condo fires in Alberta in relatively new buildings in the last seven years and an untold number of examples where a house catches fire and takes out, oh, six or seven houses with it. In May 2008 the government announced immediate action to require sprinklers for balconies, attics, and crawl spaces in multifamily buildings, but it took almost one year to actually make the required changes to the building codes. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: why did it take a year for this government to take "immediate action" to improve fire safety?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The changes to the Alberta building codes were adopted on March 12, 2009, and came into law just a little later, as they always do. Now, this allowed us time to adjust building and inspection practices and development plans and infrastructure. There are technical complexities that are required of the regulations, and the drafting, approval, and passages of the amendment regulations were completed, and it took time. It was completed, then, by March 2009.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, given that the government made the point on May 23, 2008, of saying that we would not wait until the model national codes were amended because the high rate of building activity in this province made it such a priority to act right away to save lives and property, why did everything then go dark for 10 months? Why did it take so long?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated yesterday, we were very proactive in taking actions to protect Albertans. We've got the strictest fire codes in the country. We've updated our building codes more than two years ahead of any other jurisdiction. That's two years over and before any other province. We took time to do a good job with consulting stakeholders and the public and to do the technical work that was needed. We wanted to assure that we would get things right.

Mr. Taylor: Two years ahead of the national code and one year too late for the 300 people who were burned out in Millrise last week.

Was this delay of immediate action because of pressure from the home building industry, and does the government think that pressure was warranted?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, there are normal transition periods that are happening out there, and we have to transition and work with the industry to allow that to happen. I want to emphasize the fact that we had some very, very high standards before the codes came into place, and now we have even better standards. Again, I re-emphasize: we're the most stringent standards in the country.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Funding for Special-needs Foster Children

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Every day goes by, and Albertans observe that this government doesn't know whether they're spending or cutting. We hear from front-line workers and service providers about problems in the departments. We read about waste and mismanagement. We know that leadership starts at the top. My question is to the Premier. Why didn't this Premier get the minister of children's services to cut her ministerial and deputy budgets to show leadership instead of asking the department to take cuts?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, all ministers took the action. There's over $40 million worth of reductions in ministerial reductions across management positions in government, so that's $40 million more to put into front-line services.

Mr. Hinman: Mr. Speaker, they continue to scare the people of Alberta. Foster parents, agents, and patients have all witnessed this government's cutting. My question to the Premier: will the Premier assure this Assembly that the highly respected CEO of region 6 is not demoted or fired because this minister claims her directive wasn't followed?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, those may be personnel matters. I don't know the background information of what had transpired or didn't transpire. Those are personnel matters and not open for discussion in terms of a policy discussion, and that's what question period is all about.

Mr. Hinman: But there's something that isn't sounding right here.

Some Hon. Members: Question. Question.

Mr. Hinman: "Question. Question." Why don't you listen for a second or two?

If we're to believe the minister's version of the events, she must produce original documentation that confirms the direction that she gave to the staff. When will she table the documents to this Assembly?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, taking this on a bit more serious note.

When we start dealing with the lives of children under our care or those of foster parents, that go out of their way to support children that in some cases have been abandoned by their family, when some of these issues come forward, it's unfortunate that some choose to play politics with a very serious situation. Had anyone who had notice of this, either a foster parent or the member of the opposition, come directly to the minister and raised this issue, we would have been able to deal with it immediately rather than having some foster parents live through agony strictly for a political purpose.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Oil and Gas Royalties

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Conference Board of Canada, a well-respected economic research organization, says that natural gas prices are on the rise, actually projecting industry revenue to increase almost threefold in this year alone, and they made those projections before the latest royalty backdown by this government. Will the Premier admit that the cuts to royalties are completely unnecessary and that growth is dependent on market price, not the very limited royalty increase that his government previously brought in?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, once again, the same projections that have come back and forth over the years. I remember that just last year or two years ago projections were that oil was going to be at $200 a barrel; the very same year it went from $72 to $147 and back down to $35. So projections are projections.

We live according to the best information available, and we're going to use those various pieces of information that come forward to government and make the best projections in terms of our budgets not only for this year but the rollout over the next two to three years.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Premier cut royalties by $785 million a year – and that's just the latest cut – and given that the Premier is trying to sell his multibillion dollar gift to the oil and gas industry as a job-creation measure and given that it is clear that prices will drive the market, not royalty adjustments, will the Premier admit that his royalty giveaway will not create more activity or more jobs but simply pad the bottom line of oil and gas corporations?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I know that a change in policy will grow a much larger pie, and the slice of the pie that we have will be even larger of a much larger pie, and that is the future income that will support all of the programs and services that all of us enjoy in this province. Some of that revenue will be generated to cover those costs.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. His pie is half-baked.

Given that the Conference Board of Canada expects gas companies to see profits of more than $8 billion a year by 2014 and given that the projection was calculated before royalty rates were lowered yet again, why does the Premier continue to insist that his oil and gas friends needed another royalty rollback when clearly they did not?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, once again, misinformation on behalf of the member. When we look at overall generated profits, he's not saying that all of those profits were generated in the province of Alberta. In fact, we lost competitiveness. Many of those profits were generated in different parts of the world, different countries. So that's why we had to look at the changing market conditions, the price of natural resources, some of the innovation and new technology that's necessary to get at gas that is in an aging basin here, in the western sedimentary basin in the province of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Provincial Deficit

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today the Minister of Education suggested that perhaps school boards may have to run deficits. AHS is running a deficit; universities are running deficits. Does the minister of finance – my question is to him today – plan to have a road map on how he figures out the elimination of these deficits so that future generations will not be burdened with this incredible deficit burden?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, we certainly do. The question of the teacher compensation was sent to arbitration, and we're respecting the outcome of that. I believe the Minister of Education reported that in the two out-years there are some challenges. We'll be looking to the Teachers' Association, as we will to all of the public sector, to work co-operatively with us and do what's best for all Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What is the minister of finance, in terms of his estimates of the accumulated deficits for the fiscal year 2010-11 for these entities, anticipating relative to their deficits?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I didn't particularly understand the hon. member's question. We projected a $4.7 billion deficit for this year. That's revenues minus expenditures over revenues. If he has a specific question about a portion of the budget, he'd have to give me that either in writing or as a second question.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister of finance taking a similar approach, hope and prayer of gas prices rising and oil sands prices rising, to the Getty era, and is this not a very dangerous precedent for the minister of finance to be following that road map?

Dr. Morton: Well, in fact, Mr. Speaker, we're doing just the opposite. In the 48 hours after the budget was released, all of the chartered banks and several other financial institutions released reviews of the Alberta budget. Every one of those reviews said that our estimates and our projections on oil and gas were accurate and consistent with theirs and, if anything, a little on the conservative – i.e. cautious – side. So we're on very solid ground there, sir.

Court Service Caseloads

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, as I'm sure the Justice minister is aware, it is extremely rare to hear a sitting judge criticize the administration of justice, as was the situation in Medicine Hat just last week. Judge

Fisher noted that a lack of funds was to blame for the haphazard court service in Medicine Hat. My question for the Justice minister is this: is the judge correct in noting that the justice system is faltering in Medicine Hat?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That was an interesting comment made last week by the judge that the hon. member has referred to. We, in fact, did consult as to what was going on that day in court, had a conversation with some of the people who worked there. Our understanding at the time is that the sitting judge had recently spent some time overseas looking at the possibility of implementing a particular docket court model. His comments, we understand and have been advised by the people who work for the Department of Justice, were with respect to the process that he would like to see introduced, that would actually improve the administration of justice, and we're happy to always consider those.

Mr. Hehr: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's an interesting spin, but Bill Cocks, a former Crown prosecutor, was also quoted in the Medicine Hat News as follows about this government: you can talk about being tough on crime and being a law and order government, but if you don't put . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, remember? You signed the document: no preambles. Remember? You signed that. You're a man of integrity, I believe, so let's get to the question.

Mr. Hehr: I hear you.

Well, then, to the minister: why aren't you addressing the gridlock facing the courts in Medicine Hat, Alberta, like all of these people are asking you to?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, in fact, we are. The mean times in Medicine Hat are five days better than in the rest of the province, and we'll continue to improve the administration of justice right across the province.

Mr. Hehr: Well, Crown prosecutors, defence attorneys, and the judiciary don't seem to agree with the hon. minister. So, really, who's right? Are you right, or are these people just talking for the sake of talking?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, my assessment of the day, based on conversations that have taken place in our department, is that there were three people who made very different comments with respect to an incident. I understand that the hon. member is characterizing them all as being the same; in our opinion, they're not.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Integrated Land Management

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I understand that over the last few years there's been considerable collaboration between the forestry and the energy sectors to share access roads, thus reducing the environmental footprint of resource development in the green areas of the province. My question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. How much land has been saved from destruction as a result of this co-operation between these two industries?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, to give a definite answer relative to the acreage would be a bit difficult. Integrated land management is an approach that we've been working with for a number of years, and it is used by industry regularly now in the province of Alberta. The idea is very simple. What we want to do, of course, is to work together to plan the operations on the landscape and minimize linear disturbance. We've got about a 45 per cent reduction in the road and linear disturbances proposed in areas like the Kakwa.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: how are you and your department able to get these diverse groups working together to achieve this example of integrated land management?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, this is a team approach. Just to give you an idea of some of the associations and so on, the Alberta Chamber of Resources, the Association of Petroleum Producers, and the Alberta Forest Products Association are some of the people that are involved in integrated land management planning, and of course it goes beyond that to a number of the major players that are active on the landscape.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Allred: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: since land-use planning is a major initiative in your department, how does this collaboration fit in with the land-use framework?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, thank you very much. That is going to be a very key piece as we move forward. Of course, I think that the member knows that the land-use framework discussions and the work that we're doing now with respect to this initiative is a huge piece of business for all Albertans. Integrated land management will be one of the supporting tools that we use in the land-use framework in order to properly manage landscapes in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Distracted Driving

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Hundreds of other jurisdictions have distracted driving legislation, including seven provinces, 18 states, even China, India, and Russia. The Minister of Transportation explains his lack of action: "There's no [use] putting in a law that doesn't cover the actual problem." To the Minister of Transportation. Places like Washington, DC, saw a 43 per cent reduction in phone use because of their legislation. Why does the minister think that distracted driving legislation doesn't work?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I absolutely never, ever said that distracted driving legislation doesn't work. I said that we have to put together the proper legislation in order to address the big picture and all types of distracted driving. If you look at 90 per cent of the other places, all they've done is taken a one-off and said, "Oh, we're not going to allow cellphones," or "Oh, we're not going to allow texting machines." Yes, those are a distraction, and they're a problem, but there are a whole lot of other distractions out there, and we have to address that whole big picture.

Mr. Kang: How long will it take for the minister to get to the actual problem, Mr. Speaker? Given that the minister's other excuse is that there's more distraction than just cellphones, has the minister looked at New Hampshire's law, which includes eating and applying makeup?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, again, he's talking of a one-off. Now we go and address eating as a problem. I agree with him that all these things are a problem. It's to be able to put them all together. If you cannot make it effective and if you cannot make it enforceable, then we shouldn't pass it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's the question I'm asking you: when are you going to make it effective, Mr. Minister? When are you going to make it the law? Given that the distracted driving legislation is not like reinventing the wheel, how much longer will Albertans have to wait before the minister begins to take this seriously? How long?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, we're not talking about reinventing wheels. In fact, there is no wheel in this particular instance because nobody has brought out the effective one that does it right, that makes sure we address it all. We have to get that through that hon. member's head: quit asking the same question, and help us get it right.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Affordable Housing in Fort McMurray

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question may not be as exciting, but I'll try. Affordable housing and homelessness is an important issue for the good people of Edmonton-Meadowlark. In 1993 I was studying there for about a month, and you could get a house for $500. A lot of empty houses. Then came the boom and the oil sands activity. There was a big need for housing. When oil was at its peak, there were a lot of homeless in Fort McMurray. Now the oil sands have cooled, and housing has cooled. My question to the Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs: why does your department insist at this point in time on building a big housing unit at Parsons Creek in Fort McMurray?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much. I have to say that there's no possible way that I could match the last performance in the answer. However, I do have some information for this member in and of itself. We're preparing for the next phase of growth. If we go back, in fact, to 2007, if we look further back, we've had the highest economic output that we've had in a long time. If we wait until we get to that point again, all that is going to happen is that we're going to be two years behind. This is part of the plan. Mr. Speaker, we're ready. By 2012 we're going to have exhausted the amount of land at current rates in Fort McMurray.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, my next question is to the same minister. There's a substantial amount of money that could probably be better spent in some of the major cities, specifically in Edmonton-Meadowlark, to address the issues of my constituents of chronic homelessness. Instead of building fancy new condo communities . . .

The Speaker: Remember the preamble thing we just talked about? The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Phase I of Parsons Creek actually includes about 20 per cent in Fort McMurray of affordable housing, and that's roughly where we're going. This is part of our plan. Fort McMurray is an important part of our economy, and we're looking to ensure that, in fact, all Albertans benefit from this. In fact, through transfer payments all Canadians benefit from our plans here.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Sherman: My apologies, Mr. Speaker. Thank you.

My last question is to the same minister. This project was desperately needed three years ago. Does this minister have a long-term housing plan for this province and for the good people of Edmonton-Meadowlark, and does he anticipate problems instead of reacting to them?

Mr. Denis: Yes, Mr. Speaker, we do anticipate problems. Any issues, any problems that we look at are decided on an individual basis. We're working with the RM of Wood Buffalo to address any environmental concerns and also any housing concerns. This member, if he likes, can go and drive his blue van right up there and take a look at it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Cancer Services

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Cancer diagnosis and treatment require a tightly co-ordinated team that includes pathology, radiology, surgery, pharmacy, nursing, and other services which the Alberta Cancer Board used to provide. The previous minister of health disbanded the Alberta Cancer Board, and that cancer care delivery system is being dismantled. Cancer pathology is being folded into general pathology, cancer pharmacy is being folded into general pharmacy, and so on. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: will the minister do the right thing for Albertans with cancer and restore the Alberta Cancer Board?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the Cancer Board, the Mental Health Board, and AADAC were all amalgamated within the bigger picture of Alberta Health Services and the one superboard, as it's sometimes referred to. But I take the member's question very seriously, and I will undertake to have a look at the comments he just made.

Dr. Taft: Well, that was a pretty weak answer, Mr. Speaker.

Given that one of the awful lessons from botched cancer pathology scandals in Newfoundland and elsewhere is that cancer pathology is very specialized, why isn't the minister taking action to make sure that Alberta's cancer pathology team isn't dismantled?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I don't believe there's any dismantling in the system. In fact, we're looking to augment it and hire more oncologists. There's quite an active recruitment process going on right now. I think that people in this province have grown accustomed to the fact that the oncologists we have in the two larger centres that treat cancer patients, not to mention the three that are coming on stream through the radiation therapy corridor, provide outstanding service. I think they need our support at this time.

Dr. Taft: Well, those oncologists are calling me, and they're expressing the concern, so this minister had better look into it.

How does the minister expect a fractured system, in which pharmacy, pathology, surgery, nursing, radiology, and all other services are reporting along different lines, to shorten wait times?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, part of that is exactly the point of having one centralized board, so all of that information that was just alluded to can be looked at, can be collected in a consistent fashion with consistent gathering of information so that we can come up with that province-wide plan that will help improve things, not make them worse. We're trying to work hard to get things better. That's why we've added the money to the budget, and that's why we're coming out with a more predictable and stable five-year funding plan. We're going to fix that.

Cultural Competency Initiatives

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Statistics Canada is projecting rapid changes to our population over the next 20 years. Major growth areas would include the aboriginal population, and it's projected that about one-third of Canada's population would be a visible minority. Learning about effective integration and development of inclusive communities speaks to the need for two-way integration. My question is to the Minister of Education. You have initiated the Inspiring Education visioning process, and you have spoken about transformative change to our educational system. I would like to know what transformative concepts and ideas you or your ministry have discussed relative to . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. In addition to Inspiring Education, of course, we're engaged in a number of areas: the School Act review, which is ongoing; setting the direction for children with special needs; the FNMI Education Partnership Council—I introduced the chiefs and the presidents yesterday in the House—the tripartite MOU that we've signed with the treaty chiefs and the federal government; workforce planning; and Speak Out Alberta. There are a great number of initiatives. The Inspiring Education initiative has told us that Albertans want an education system that addresses the different learning needs of different communities.

The Speaker: Sorry. We have to move on.
The hon. member.

Ms Woo-Paw: To the same minister. Numerous studies from jurisdictions across the country talk about the need to integrate cultural competency into the operation and practice of institutions. I'd like to know what your commitment is to this requirement.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, we want to move beyond acknowledging cultural diversity in creating equality to a more inclusive model that promotes equity and involves all cultural elements in our community in a meaningful way. We have a commitment in the School Act on diversity in shared values. We have guidelines for recognizing diversity and promoting respect to ensure that all learning resources, including visuals, promote respect and understanding for all members of society.

Ms Woo-Paw: What authority and opportunities does the ministry have to ensure that school systems meaningfully and systematically incorporate and implement cultural competency throughout the organization?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, helping students become culturally thoughtful and respectful starts in kindergarten and before and continues right through the system. We have to ensure that our curriculum is infused with the principles of our heritage and the principles of our cultures, particularly with respect to First Nations and Métis students in the province. All Alberta students need to know and understand that cultural heritage, not just the FNMI students. Through broadening their understanding, teachers and administrators are able to see how important cultural competency is to areas of curriculum and development for all students.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Foster Care System

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last Wednesday during Children and Youth Services estimates the minister repeatedly denied there were plans to cut funding to foster parents of special-needs children. She was surrounded at the time by nine senior ministry staff, none of whom uttered a peep about the planned cuts that the NDP subsequently discovered and reported on yesterday. My question is for the minister. How can Albertans trust your claims of protecting vulnerable children when you clearly can't keep up with what's going on in your own ministry?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The member is correct: at Committee of Supply I made it very clear that my understanding was that there wouldn't be any reduction in foster support services or resources in that. That was because of the direction that I had given two to three weeks previously not to reduce the supports or services or funding to foster care. I can assure you that I realize, too, and knowing that the buck stops at my desk, there are at times things that are not understood in the way that they're put forward, and this is just one of those cases.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, notwithstanding that the Premier seems to believe it's inappropriate to discuss some of these contradictions in public, given that the minister has repeatedly assured the House that cuts to her ministry would not affect families when, in fact, that was exactly what was planned at the time, how can the minister fail to see the absurdity of her assurances and refuse to admit that cuts to her ministry will negatively impact the level of care provided to Alberta's children?

Mrs. Fritz: Well, as you know, Committee of Supply is a three-hour meeting. We did discuss this ministry at that meeting for three hours and, in particular, the area of child intervention. As I let this member know and other members at the committee, I trust what my staff has brought forward as to the change and the shift in practice of the way that child intervention is occurring in the field through the good work of 1,600 front-line workers. I trust that. I've assured you, Mr. Speaker, and the Assembly previously that I'm monitoring this closely. If I see that it's different, I will go back through the right processes if more funding is required.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that this ministry has been plagued by repeated cases of negligent treatment toward foster families and their children and given that the minister's tarnished credibility grows darker each time she's asked to take responsibility for a foolish policy she doesn't know anything about, when will the minister launch an independent, public inquiry into the foster care system and do away with the political leash she maintains on the children's advocate?

Mrs. Fritz: You know, Mr. Speaker, it's always interesting how somebody can make a quantum leap to where we're into a public inquiry. Simply because there was a direction from me as the minister not to cut resources or supports or funding to foster care, especially for children with special needs, and an individual in the field did not follow through with that direction, now we're into: we should have a public inquiry of the whole system. The answer to that is categorically no.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Strathcona.

Online Driver Licensing

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans move around a lot. In 2006 in Edmonton alone we had over 97,000 intraprovincial migrants. Each time they change addresses, the Traffic Safety Act requires people to change their driver's licence in person and to fork out $22.50. In comparison, Saskatchewan folks can update their billing and address information online 24/7, or in Ontario their self-serve kiosks allow people to change their drivers' licences for no charge. To the Minister of Service Alberta: does the minister have any plans to make driver's licence changes more accessible and cost-efficient?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. During these past two years this ministry has had excellent discussions with many of the registry agents across Alberta. One of the challenges is to provide better service to Albertans – and that includes online services as well as more locations across Alberta, so it is a very serious concern – and to balance that with the protection of Albertans' information. We are certainly looking at a number of different areas.

Ms Blakeman: Well, yes, it is a challenge, and yes, it's in the private registry system. So what exactly is the minister going to do, and when can we expect the government to deliver service that at least equals Saskatchewan's?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, on the whole issue of online fees, with the registry agents that do provide those services in Alberta, we are on the lower end of the scale. That's something that I've been working on very hard because, again, it's about providing Albertans with better service and making sure they can do things that are convenient from their home, making it more convenient for Albertans but also making sure that the information is protected, whether it's a driver's licence or whether it's any other items that Albertans need to run their businesses or their homes.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms. Blakeman: Okay. Well, back to the same minister. Since issuing changed licences to people who have undergone gender reassignment continues to be done on a case-by-case basis and takes so long, I wonder if there isn't more at play here. When will that process be moved into the 21st century?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That is with respect to the Vital Statistics Act, which has not been updated for about 50 years. That is something that we are currently working on, looking at that act and updating it. That's been an important dialogue, too. That is something that we'll be bringing forward fairly soon.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Property Taxes

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier and this government have both stated that there will be no new taxes or no tax increases, a promise affirmed by the Minister of Finance and Enterprise in his budget speech, yet many Albertans are reporting an increase in their property taxes this year. To the Minister of Finance and Enterprise: why are these people paying higher taxes when you yourself promised that taxes would not be going up?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, we did promise that taxes were not going up, and we have kept that promise. When it comes to the education portion of the property tax, we have actually cut it by 13 per cent, and this would be the 17th year in a row that we've either frozen or cut that portion of the property tax. However, that's only one-third of property taxes. The other two-thirds is municipal, and we have no control over what municipalities do with their portion of the property tax.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental, then, to the Minister of Municipal Affairs: given that property values have generally decreased in the last two years, why are property taxes increasing?

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The market value on which the rate is applied is not the current value. Rather, it's the amount that a property might have realized if sold on the open market as of July 1 of the year prior to the taxation year. Mill rates are adjusted to ensure that the revenue remains stable in spite of price fluctuations seen in the housing market.

With respect to education property tax the education mill rate is applied on a province-wide basis and reflects average property values for the whole province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question, then, to the Minister of Education: how much is raised through education property taxes, and is this amount guaranteed to fund education priorities in our province?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Yes, Mr. Speaker. All money raised under the education property tax goes to the Alberta school foundation, and it is used to fund education across the province. We raise about $1.6 billion in property taxes, which is more than 25 per cent of the amount that they spent on education through the provincial spending, and there's an additional $199 million that's raised by opted-out boards.

U of A Sustainable Development Campus

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, last November I raised some questions in the Assembly on an exciting report done by the Urban Land Institute into the development at the U of A's south campus. The report advocated a bold goal for the south campus that by 2035, if everyone on Earth lived like the proposed community at the south campus, we'd arrest climate change and live sustainably within the limited resources of our planet. To the Minister of Environment: last November 17 he said that he expected to receive the final report shortly, so has he now received it?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, thank you. And thank you to the member for this question because, frankly, I had forgotten that this report was under way. I'm pleased to advise the member that we have received a draft of the report. It was received a couple of weeks ago. Our staff are providing some additional input, and we should have that complete in the next two weeks. We then would expect that the university would be in a position to release the final draft of the report in three weeks to a month.

Dr. Taft: Well, that's great news.

To the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology: given that last November 17 the minister said that this report would be circulated widely among Campus Alberta and officials in his own department, has this happened, and has the report had an impact?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, indeed, the advice from the report actually makes up part of the University of Alberta's institutional access plan and, as such, will be spread throughout Campus Alberta. In terms of the advice that was given and some of the ideas that were there, by all indications it was a very successful symposium to develop the kind of advice that Campus Alberta can look to for sustainable innovation in the future. We will incorporate that in each institution's individual access plan for their capital.

Dr. Taft: Again to the same minister: does the Department of Advanced Education and Technology place any standards for sustainability on new buildings built by universities, and if so, will he make them public?

Mr. Horner: Well, we do, I guess, depend upon the boards of governance and the executives at all of these institutions to work with us in terms of the capital plans. As in the case of the University of Alberta, we expect that they're going to be doing their work in terms of the type of capital plan that they want to put forward as it relates to the access plans that we have. It's about student placement, Mr. Speaker, and it's about sustainable communities for students to do what they need to do.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Harmonization of Oil and Gas Royalties

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The competitiveness review and the resulting changes to the royalty structure were applauded by industry and are key to our government's economic plan going forward. Some industry voices, though, are calling for the harmonization of royalties between Alberta and its energy producing neighbours, B.C. and Saskatchewan. My question is to the Minister of Energy. During the extensive consultation and development process of the competitiveness review, was the harmonization of royalties between the three provinces considered, and if so, what were the outcomes of this discussion?

Mr. Liepert: Well, the short answer to that, Mr. Speaker, is no. Those discussions did not take place. But we have to remember what we've gone through for the last year: it was a competitiveness review; it was not a royalty review. The competitiveness review concluded that there were a number of areas that we needed to take action on that would frankly make us one of the most competitive jurisdictions in North America. We've announced some. We're commencing others. I'm not suggesting that at some point in time we wouldn't have those discussions with our neighbouring provinces, but that was not discussed at this stage.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With TILMA and the western economic partnership being clear indicators of our intentions to reduce barriers to investment and make business investment decisions easier, would it not make sense to extend this to royalties in our largest industry? What is the rationale for not doing so?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have to remember that TILMA stands for the labour mobility agreement. I think that we've made tremendous strides in ensuring that we have the ability not only for labour to move back and forth across provincial borders but for business to actually operate back and forth across borders. There's still lots of work to do there. You know, as I said earlier, royalties are only one part of it. We're always open to discussions with other provinces, whatever will make it easier for workers and also for businesses to operate.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last supplemental, again to the same minister: with the task force on regulatory enhancement under way, reviewing regulations pertaining to the energy industry, will their considerations include harmonization of regulations between the energy producing provinces pursuant to the goals of TILMA and the western economic partnership?

Mr. Liepert: Well, first of all, I said from the very beginning relative to the task force that's going to commence its work very shortly that there is nothing that is off the table, Mr. Speaker. I would suggest that if through the consultations some good suggestions come forward that we could pursue with our neighbouring provinces of B.C. and Saskatchewan, we would certainly entertain that and look forward to some of those recommendations.

Chronic Wasting Disease

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, the Alberta Fish and Game Association indicates that there is no reliable province-wide system in place to monitor chronic wasting disease, a disease that, if it spreads, could be irrevocably detrimental to Alberta wildlife. To the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development: how can the minister claim that there is a reliable province-wide monitoring system in place when surveillance is based largely upon voluntary submission of heads by hunters?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think that this surveillance program, in fact, is quite robust. In the last hunting season we had about 4,860 heads submitted that were tested, and out of those, there were 12 that were found to be positive. It still indicates a relatively low density of the disease and still concentrated on the eastern side of the province of Alberta. The program is spread across the province, so I think it's quite robust.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the minister's budget has been cut this year along with 112 SRD staff and the disease boundaries are expanding, how will the minister be able to ensure that adequate testing will be done?

Mr. Knight: Well, again, as I said, what we have here is co-operation with the hunting community. Mr. Speaker, it's the hunters that actually help us with respect to this issue. It doesn't matter how many fish and wildlife officers there are on the ground. As long as we have and continue to have a good working relationship and the co-operation of the hunting community, the program can continue.

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, given that hunt farms are a major cause of the spread of chronic wasting disease, why is the minister expressing support for hunt farms at Alberta Fish and Game Association meetings?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, I don't know where the member gets his information from. I don't recall him sitting at any table where I may or may not have made comments relative to the issue. However, what I will say now to this House and to all Albertans is that there is a ban in place in the province of Alberta relative to hunting cervids on farms. That ban remains in place.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Oil Sands Image

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The oil sands have again come under attack by environmental groups to give the impression that Albertans don't care about the environment. The other day one such group launched an online video game that shows the oil sands in a very unfair and negative light. The Minister of Energy has spoken recently about fighting back with the facts on a national and international scale. My question to the Minister of Energy: when is he going to launch this much-needed counterattack against these outrageous messages?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, despite the fact that the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo does not want us to be out there publicly defending our oil sands, we're going to. It's not just going to be the government that's going to do that. Later under tablings I'm going to table – I happened to notice just before question period today in the Hill Times a number of advertisements put on by the labour council of Alberta, by various companies in Alberta, by the Forest Products Association, all trying their best to counter this propaganda campaign.

Mr. Sandhu: My first supplemental to the same minister. I noticed in the media that a major buyers/sellers conference is taking place in Edmonton over the next two days. There are a number of Ontario and Quebec companies here seeking business, and I would like to know if the minister will be meeting with these companies when they are in Edmonton?

Mr. Liepert: Well, as a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, I know that the Premier today is addressing this buyers/sellers forum here in the city of Edmonton. I am meeting tomorrow with the minister of industry from Ontario, who is here as part of that mission. I plan to ensure that she has a full understanding of not only how important the oil sands are to Alberta but to the rest of the country. They're important in two ways. As the member says, we have Ontario suppliers here selling to the oil sands, but probably more importantly the federal government has significant tax revenue that comes from Albertans and Alberta businesses that goes to the federal treasury that ends up in equalization payments to other provinces.

Mr. Sandhu: My final question to the same minister: does the minister plan to ensure that employees of these companies that supply goods and services to the oil sands are made aware that their employment is directly tied to a vibrant oil industry?

Thank you.

Mr. Liepert: Well, as I've said before, Mr. Speaker, I think it is important. It's not just governments that have to understand that the vibrant oil patch — a strong Alberta makes a strong Canada. There are many who work in manufacturing in central Canada whose livelihoods depend on exports to the province of Alberta. The oil sands and the oil industry are purchasers of billions of dollars' worth of goods from Ontario and Quebec every year. It's going to be our job to ensure that those who work in these particular facilities understand that.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that concludes question period for today. There were 114 questions and responses from 19 different members. Of the 19, nine were Official Opposition members, one was the third party, two from the fourth party, one from the independent, and six from private government members.

Tabling Returns and Reports

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, I have a letter from the Alberta Fish and Game Association and the appropriate number of copies that go through some of the points they bring up on chronic wasting disease and how they believe the disease could be more effectively monitored here in this province.

Thank you very much.

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned in the last answer to my question, I have five copies of three particular advertisements that appear in the Hill Times that I'd like to table with the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona on behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Ms Notley: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a news story in which the Conference Board of Canada says that any increase in drilling rates will be because of higher prices, not the royalty rollback. This information relates to the questions that the member asked earlier today.

As well, I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of 24 postcards signed by Albertans calling on the provincial government to keep its promise to build 600 new long-term care beds, as part of a postcard campaign sponsored by the Canadian Union of Public Employees.

Thank you.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mrs. Klimchuk, Minister of Service Alberta, response to a question raised by Mr. MacDonald, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, on February 17, 2010, Service Alberta main estimates debate.

On behalf of the hon. Dr. Morton, Minister of Finance and Enterprise, responses to questions raised by Mr. MacDonald, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar; Mr. Fawcett, the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill; Mr. Hinman, the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore; and Ms Woo-Paw, the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay, on February 24, 2010, Department of Finance and Enterprise main estimates debate.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 15 Appropriation Act, 2010

The Speaker: The hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and move second reading of Bill 15, the Appropriation Act, 2010.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: That was quick, Mr. Speaker. Thank you. It's my pleasure to rise and join in second reading debate on Bill 15, the Appropriation Act, 2010. This, of course, involves a tremendous amount of money: $39 billion in operating expenses, $7 billion in capital expenses, a deficit of $4.7 billion. I see the President of the Treasury Board is shaking his head at me right now. Okay. [interjection] I didn't hear that, but anyway maybe Hansard did.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie has the floor if he wishes to take it.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I was saying, a tremendous amount of money involved in the running of this province for 12 months: $39 billion in operating expenses, and we are running a deficit this year of some $4.7 billion. There have been many concerns expressed by many members in numerous parties in this House about the notion that we've gone into deficit spending now, and there doesn't seem to be a clear plan to take us out of deficit spending, just a promise that we'll be back in the black in three years. That's kind of a vague promise in our view over here on this side of the House, a kind of vague, trust-us sort of promise that somehow, God willing and the creek don't rise, everything will be fine again in three years.

Now, I have to do a bit of a balancing act on this, Mr. Speaker, because after all, I recognize and I think most of us in this House do recognize that stimulus spending done at the right time can have a positive impact on an economy that's in recession. There's certainly some stimulus spending in the capital budget, a great deal of stimulus spending in the capital budget, in fact.

I think the government has done the right thing by putting extra money into health care, although I'm still waiting to see what the plan is around that. Right now it appears more like the minister of health wanted to use his Visa card, and the bank said: no, you've got to clear the outstanding balance before we'll let you use it again. I got a chuckle out of the minister of health on that one. That's where a good chunk of the extra money in health has gone, but there's also money above and beyond that for investment in the system.

I think, Mr. Speaker, it's fair to say that we have a shortage of doctors, we have a shortage of nurses, and we have a shortage of hospital beds in this province, at least open hospital beds. We certainly have a bizarre situation in Calgary, where we have a number of new hospital beds that have been opened over the last year, and a corresponding number of old hospital beds have been closed down because when this government went through its capital planning exercise around money to invest in capital build for the Calgary health region, it somehow forgot, failed, otherwise messed up the notion that when those capital projects were done, in order to operate them, there would need to be a corresponding envelope of operating money, which didn't materialize.

I think there's no question, Mr. Speaker, that in order to overcome at least some of the problems that we have in health care in this province, it's going to require an extra investment of money, as we've seen in this budget. So that's good. But it's also been, I think it's fair to say, a politically expedient thing for this government to do, to find a bunch of extra money to invest in health care, because health care has become a great concern to an awful lot of Albertans, including older Albertans, who are more likely to vote.

I wouldn't be making this comment, I guess, Mr. Speaker, if we hadn't been through the debate and the turmoil that persons with developmental disabilities and their loved ones and their care providers had to go through earlier this year around plans, that were at least temporarily thwarted, to cut spending to PDD. We've got problems with Children and Youth Services. We've got cuts happening in other areas, and it's interesting to me that the cuts that we see happening in this budget tend to be cuts in areas where people are perhaps a little bit marginalized anyway, unlikely to vote, unlikely to cause trouble for the government if the government cuts their money.

Still we have a $4.7 billion deficit, and still we have a tremendous amount of money being spent. It really is stunning, the amount of money that we go through in the run of a year. I'm left to wonder whether this government has really gone through its operations with a sharp pencil and done everything that it needed to do, that it should be doing to determine where wasteful spending is happening and where spending could be at least redirected to areas of higher priority.

I don't think, Mr. Speaker, at least not to my satisfaction, that this government has yet succeeded in defining or putting out for province-wide debate what are the core programs and services that are considered to be sacrosanct, beyond being touched, beyond being cut. I think that if you define core programs and core services, you say: "These are the things that Albertans hold most dear. These are the things that are most important in terms of public works and public services for the public good. These are the things that we must – we absolutely must – spend money on. These are the things and the people and the programs and the services we absolutely must invest in."

Then, by definition, by default, the programs and the services that do not fall into the basket of core programs and services are those where you can go back in and take a second look and say: "Well, when times are tight, when people are hurting, when the health care system is in a mess and needs to be fixed, needs to be triaged at least and, hopefully, made better, when we have some of the problems that we have in this province right now within the context of a sluggish economy, which is recovering, albeit slowly, where are the areas where we actually can cut? Is this an area that we really need to spend money on this fiscal year?" I don't think that's been done yet. I have not seen a whole lot of evidence as we went through the budget debates, the estimates debates, over the last five or six weeks or so. I've not seen a lot of evidence, a lot of clear definition of what is a core program and what isn't.

I will speak entirely personally now, and I'll be very interested to hear what some of my colleagues on all sides of the House say about this. It's been again this year an interesting exercise, going through the estimates debates as we have in the evening in the various policy field committees, because if you are the Official Opposition critic on a particular department, it does give you the opportunity to sit with your counterpart, with the minister, and get into some fairly – depending on the minister, depending on the bureaucrats surrounding him, depending on the time and the tides and everybody's mood – detailed, in-depth discussion about why the money is being spent in the way that it is and what the priorities are. You can actually, from time to time at least, learn a fair amount about what's going on, not always, but from time to time, again depending on the minister, depending on the critic, depending on the time and the tides and the whole shebang.

I do find that a rather interesting way to go about it. However, I can't help but note that we still, when all is said and done, give each department, each ministry, whether it is Health and Wellness at $15 billion or Service Alberta at about $350 million, equal time. Three hours of debate for the ministry starting each night at 6:30, ending each night at 9:30, with the Official Opposition critic getting first crack in a back-and-forth exchange with the minister for an hour, a five-minute break for coffee or juice, and then we're back at it with the member of the third party and the critic from the fourth party and then a back and forth between opposition and governing party members of the committee. At the end of three hours we're done.

Now, we have the opportunity, of course, we being anybody on that particular committee or anybody who is sitting in on that particular committee for that department's debate on that evening, to submit a number of written questions and a reasonable expectation of answers back from the minister within a couple of weeks. I haven't been keeping track, by the way, Mr. Speaker, as to what the delivery rate has been on that promise, but I know that a number of ministers over the course of the last few weeks did promise to get back to us with written answers in a couple of weeks, so hopefully if those promises haven't been kept, they will be acted upon with this gentle admonition from this critic on this side of the House.

Still, when all is said and done, you come to a situation where debate on a total of $39 billion worth of spending is governed entirely by the clock. Nearly half of that budget, $15 billion in Health, was debated in three hours. We may have debated this budget department by department, ministry by ministry over the last five or six weeks, but the Health and Wellness budget is $15 billion. The operating budget is $39 billion. Health and Wellness got three hours just like every other department got three hours. We did a huge chunk of this budget in three hours, and at the end of three hours it was like: well, okay, there you go; that's all the time we have for that.

Now, that approach works just fine when you're doing a radio talk show, I guess. You know, when you're doing a radio talk show, you are all powerful, and you can decide three weeks hence that you're going to bring the topic back if you feel like it again. But it doesn't work so well, in my opinion, in the public interest. I don't know that the public interest is at all served by saying that we will devote three hours and only three hours to debating the estimates of the ministry of health, especially this year – especially this year – when there's been a significant additional investment of public dollars in health care and especially this year when health care is in such an obvious mess. We have gone through a failed restructuring of the system. I think it's a failed restructuring of the system.

I think the current minister of health spends all his time undoing the work of the previous minister of health. I mean, it's kind of an ongoing process because, of course, the work put into motion by the previous minister of health is carried on by the Alberta Health Services Board and CEO. They're still in place, and they're still, you know, beavering around and doing their little thing reorganizing the health ministry, while the current minister of health is coming along behind, aided and abetted sometimes by the Official Opposition health critic and critics from the other parties, who are pointing out: "Hey, you know what? The way we do cancer care in this province now isn't working anymore. The way we do this isn't working anymore." Nobody knows anything in health care in terms of who reports to whom or who's supposed to be accountable or take charge or make the final decision and have the buck stop on their desk for this or that particular area of health care, and the poor minister of health is running around after Stephen Duckett and the Alberta Health Services Board trying to put a leash on that pit bull that got out of its cage.

For this we're spending $15 billion, and we spent three hours debating it. I don't think that's enough, Mr. Speaker. I really don't. Now, there are other ministries, the Ministry of Energy, for instance, where I felt as though that was time reasonably well spent. I felt that questions were answered, so I'll give high marks on that to the Minister of Energy. There are other ministries that probably got full and adequate debate within that three-hour time frame.

Mr. Speaker, it would be better – it really would be better – if we would adopt the approach taken by so many other jurisdictions in this country and simply start debating the budget and keep going on it until it is done. If we need to call the minister of health back for another session in a couple of weeks' time after we've finished questioning him for an evening, we could do that, and we could get supplementary answers to our questions; likewise with the Minister of Education or the minister of advanced education or the Minister of Municipal Affairs or any other ministry.

We have attempted to shoehorn these many billions of dollars into a very tight framework for debate, and the bottom line, Mr. Speaker, is that when the time has elapsed, the debate is finished whether the public has been served by that debate or not. I don't think that's a particularly wise or proper, appropriate stewardship of the taxpayers' money in the province of Alberta. I don't think we're being proper stewards of the people of Alberta's money.

I think we should take a long hard look over this fiscal year at a different approach to doing this. We spend a tremendous amount of money in this province. We still spend on a per capita basis well above many other jurisdictions in this country. We don't give it the full and complete debate that it needs. We don't know, and we will never know if we continue to debate the budget according to the rules that we have been using, where we're getting value for our money as taxpayers, whether we're getting value for our money as taxpayers, where things can be tightened up, where more money needs to be allocated. There simply isn't enough in the system to look after our foster children or our elderly or our sick. We don't know.

When you look at the actual budget, the budget for Alberta Health Services is one line. What does that mean? What does that mean? Nine billion dollars, you know, for Alberta Health Services. Well, gee, that's nice. What does that mean? Where is that going? I'm not sure that anybody can answer that question, quite frankly, given the performance of Alberta Health Services over the last year, but it sure would be nice to give it a shot and see if we could find out. It sure would be nice to get a budget document that actually breaks that down.

It sure would be nice to have the feeling that when the nine health regions were collapsed into the Alberta Health Services superboard, it wasn't just an opportunity to fudge the numbers a little bit further. I think fudge, Mr. Speaker, I will freely admit, gets a little close to the line in terms of unparliamentary language, but there is a degree of obfuscation that one suspects could be going on there in that there is this massive amount of money as a line item in the budget, and we really don't know how it's allocated, how it's broken down.

I think that we should. I think that the people of Alberta have a right to know how their public funds are being spent on public health care. Public health care is an extremely, extremely important thing to the people of Alberta, to the people of Canada. But as much as we love our public health care system in this country, in this province, it's also extremely important that we know where our public money is going and how it's being put to use and that we as citizens can look at that and be able to make an informed decision as to whether we are getting value for our money or not.

We may like public health care. We may love publicly funded health care. But that doesn't mean that as citizens we're prepared to stick our heads in the sand and say: "Well, okay, Mr. Minister, government of Alberta; however you want to spend our $15 billion on health care, that's all right with us. We don't mind waiting 13 hours in emergency. We don't mind the fact that 1 in every 4 Calgarians can't find a family doctor. We don't mind the doctor shortages that exist in so many other parts of the province. We don't mind that primary care networks, PCNs, should have been set up in more locations, I think, than they have been so far, that it seems to be an awfully hard slog and an awfully slow process to get those things set up." We do mind that we have to wait so long for health care. We do mind that we have to wait so long to find out why that thing that is hurting us is hurting us and what to do about it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise and speak to this Bill 15, the Appropriation Act, 2010. You know, every time we talk about this topic, I guess, we come back to the same thing. It's just that the spending of this government over the last several years has been out of control. It's been a long, hard road for sure. I mean, we've been spending more than we should for a very long time. I think everyone in this Assembly realizes that.

A lot of people in this Assembly, certainly on our side and definitely on the other side as well, campaigned on trying to bring our fiscal house back in order and get our spending under control, so this year, this budget, was an exceptional opportunity to make good on that campaign promise to try to get our spending under control and to try to show fiscal leadership. I remember during the 2008 campaign listening to the Premier speak about balancing the budget.

One of the things that he brought forward and he campaigned on was that under his watch we would not run deficits. Under no circumstances would we run deficits. He was very strong on that. I remember going to the doors of the people in my community and saying: this is what this Premier and this government stands for, no deficits. We were going to be good stewards of the books. We were going to be good fiscal managers. That's what we were going to do.

A lot of people in my constituency who were very unhappy with some of the direction of the government at that time with regards to the Royalty Review Panel and things like that said that they would support the governing party at that time but that they needed to get their act together on the financial side and on the energy side as well as on health care and a few other issues or else they would not support the government in the future. So I said that I would advocate those things as hard as I possibly could and have attempted to do so over the last two years both in and outside of the governing party.

As I look at the spending in this bill, the reason I'm so worried about this, Mr. Speaker, is that like many people in this Chamber I have children of my own. I don't have grandchildren yet, but many people here do have grandchildren. I have four kids; they're all under the age of six. The first is just entering kindergarten at Nose Creek elementary in Airdrie.

You know, I look at them – and it changes your perception on life when you have kids, obviously – and one of those things that you think about is what their future is going to look like. You start thinking about some of the advantages that you have in life, some of the good things that you have in life, and the opportunities that I've had in life, which I believe are many compared to other people in the world for sure. I think many people in Alberta have a lot of those same opportunities, so we really live in a blessed land, and we're lucky to live where we live.

When I look at the opportunities I've had and then I look at my kids, I ask: are they going to have those same opportunities? Are they going to live in a place where when they go get a job, they can be assured that (a) there is going to be a good job out there for them if they educate themselves? And (b), when they get into the workforce – say they want to try a business, or they want to save for their retirement or whatever it is, or they want to raise their family and they want to have kids of their own – are they going to be taxed to death, or are they going to live in a jurisdiction that allows them to flourish as a family and allows them to flourish as individuals and as entrepreneurs and as people? These are the things that I think a lot of us, a lot of parents – and I'm not the only parent that feels this way – think about.

This is why I have such a problem with this bill and with this government right now. They have lost their way on this issue, this issue of generational fairness. They have failed on so many accounts to save for future generations. I mean, they have not invested virtually a cent, if anything – I'm talking about from 2008 on here – in the heritage fund. They have raided the interest from that fund. They haven't replenished it when it went down in value last year even though we had a great year this year investment-wise.

They have saved nothing for our future. In fact, they have been draining the sustainability fund from where it was not so long ago at $17 billion or 16 and a half billion dollars or whatever it was down to – I believe the number is going to come in at about $8 billion this year. They're projecting it to be down to $2 billion by 2013, and that's under some pretty rosy scenarios. That doesn't include the $6 billion in debt from 2008 to 2013 on infrastructure debt that they're accumulating as well. If you took that out, the sustainability fund would be no more, and we're back into the Getty years of debt financing. I just look at that, and that's unacceptable to me, and it's unacceptable to parents my age in most regards, I would say, because this is our future we're talking about.

I mean, look at what is going on in the United States right now. What an absolute gong show. Thankfully, we're not at that point, but here is, you know, a situation where you have the largest nation, our biggest trading partner literally spending themselves to death, where very soon they're going to be in a situation – I mean, you already see it with their currency devaluing – where, with the baby boomers retiring, their kids are going to be completely unable to pay this bill, totally unable to pay this bill. The harder they work and earn money, it's still going to be harder because the currency that they're making is going to be devaluing that whole time. They're in a huge, huge pickle.

Thankfully, and somewhat luckily in our case but also thankfully, we've had governments in the past who have been more responsible than that. Obviously, we've had the means of massive oil reserves, which has helped us, and we do not find ourselves in a position where we have massive debt. We're taking on a little bit of debt right now for sure, and it's a problem, but we are still at a point that if we set ourselves aright, if we turn the corner, if we put the proper plans in place, if we rein in spending – we're not talking about massive cuts; we're just talking about limiting spending to inflationary pressures plus growth pressures – and if we started doing that today, we would be able to pull this out of the fire. We would. We are in a position where we can do so. Past governments have put us in that position to do so. The people of Alberta have put ourselves in that position to do so.

However, in this budget and in this bill I don't see any realization of that urgency. I see more of the same. I see more spending on more social programs. I see we're spending two times more than the next closest province per capita on infrastructure. Well, infrastructure is great, Mr. Speaker, but someone has got to pay for it. What right do we have as legislators in this House today to pass that bill on to our kids for the next 10 to 20 years? That's what we're doing.

It's like we're taking out a huge mortgage on a house, and then we say, "Oh, well, we're going to give the kids a house." Well, great. What if the kids can't afford to pay the mortgage because all the baby boomers aren't paying taxes anymore? What are they going to do then? Who is going to buy their house? No one is going to buy their house. They're going to be left in a situation where they can't afford to keep up the infrastructure that has been built. They can't afford to keep the schools open that have been built and hire the teachers and the nurses and the docs and the home care workers and all those people that need to keep up the infrastructure. They won't be able to afford it because they won't have the tax base for it. It's plain and simple. That's why we can't get so far ahead of ourselves on infrastructure spending.

This year the book deficit that the government is proclaiming is $4.7 billion, cash in, cash out. There has never been an accusation that they're doing anything illegal with their bookkeeping, but as any creative accountant can do, you can make numbers look better than they are using generally accepted accounting principles. You can do it. I would say that I think it's very clear that this year from their books we are spending $7.6 billion more in cash going out than in receipts coming in from taxes and revenues and oil and gas revenues, et cetera.

So that's the situation we find ourselves in: a $7.6 billion cash deficit, just an astronomical figure. And that doesn't include the AHS deficit that may be being incurred right now. I assume it's being incurred. It's been incurred. For the last however many years there have been debts in the health system, so I'm assuming there is more debt there. The municipalities are increasing their debt loads. The postsecondary institutions are increasing their debt loads. You have the teachers' liability; we just took that on. That's not included in that deficit number, nor should it be, but that's another liability that our kids have to pay for. You know, it goes on and on and on.

I guess I would say that if we were serious about tackling this problem, we would address it in this budget and in this bill. I simply don't see it. I don't see any commitment by this government yet, not only to balancing our budget but to do so in a way that is actually proactive rather than cross your fingers and hope to God that natural gas prices increase, that drilling increases, that oil goes above a hundred again, that the dollar stays below 95, or whatever. I think the target was 95. I mean, it's all about hope. It's all about just kind of slowing down the rate of increases to about 6 per cent or 5 per cent, still way above inflation and growth. Slow it down a little bit and hope that the economy catches up.

Well, that hasn't worked for a lot of countries. It hasn't worked for Japan. They've tried that; didn't work. They're still in a stagflation situation. I don't think it's going to work for the United States either. I think they are in huge trouble. I think that in Canada, although we're in less trouble, we too have issues. We basically took on as much debt as we've paid off over the last 10 years of hard work. We've basically taken it all back on over these last couple of years and in the next couple of years.

What are we leaving to our kids? I just don't understand how we can sit here in the most richly blessed, resource-wise, province in the country and maybe even in the world in some regards . . .

An Hon. Member: We could be.

Mr. Anderson: Could be. We're right up there

. . . and just continue to kind of ignore and hope. I mean, at the end of the day, Mr. Speaker, when this bill comes due, when our kids have to pay for this mortgage, when they have to pay for this massive amount of infrastructure that we're putting on the line right now, when the mortgage comes due, they are going to be the taxpayers. They are going to be the ones with the four kids in school. I am going to be nearing retirement, and a lot of the folks here will be nearing retirement or retired and enjoying themselves, and they won't be paying very much tax, that's for sure.

What are we going to say to them? "Oh, sorry. Oops. You know, it's unfortunate we haven't saved anything from our oil and gas resources that are now obsolete because other technologies have occurred that we're not as reliant on." This is in 30 or 40 years from now. "We haven't saved much of anything there, but we've built all these great schools and great postsecondary institutions. I know you can't afford to hire teachers to teach in them anymore, but at least you've got the building." That's the situation we're going to find ourselves having to tell our kids in 30 or 40 years if we don't get our act together on our finances. Let's not repeat the same mistakes that have been repeated over and over again by countries and jurisdictions.

Look at Argentina, for example. Look what happened to them. The people don't know this, but a hundred years ago Argentina was actually kind of battling it out with the United States for the second largest economy on the planet. At that time England was first, and Argentina and the United States were going at it for second. They had a very prosperous economy, but they got into subsequent governments. They have rich resources. They had everything. [Mr. Anderson's speaking time expired]

I hope we can take that into consideration as we move forward.

The Deputy Speaker: We have 29(2)(a) for comments and questions. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere if he could just finish his little history lesson on the Argentine economy and its fall from . . .

Mr. Hancock: And how the extremists ruined it.

Mr. Mason: Yes. Was it the right-wing ones or the left-wing ones?

Mr. Anderson: I am absolutely tickled pink, literally tickled pink – pardon the pun – that you would give me that opportunity. Basically, what happened is that they had governments that successively built in huge, massive entitlement programs, huge entitlement programs that slowly but surely the people could not afford to pay. They continued to raise taxes up, up, up, up again. They drove out business, couldn't afford to pay for the social programs. There became huge civil unrest. Obviously, there were a lot of different factors.

The point is that when you get into a situation where you let your spending run out of control, when you build in a group of social programs and infrastructure that you cannot afford to pay, it leads to, well, not only the downfall of economies, but it leads to civil unrest and a whole bunch of other bad things. We're not there at this point in Alberta, for sure. No one here says that we are. But if we continue down this road, that's where we're going.

Look at what is going on with our closest neighbour. These things are happening today. I have family – well, it's on my wife's side – that live in the United States right now. They're in Missouri, and it's not a happy place to be: double-digit unemployment, no real prospects, part-time work for the most part if there is anything new. I mean, it is bad news, and that is happening all over the United States right now.

We have got to get a focus here. I mean, what we should be talking about today is not approving, you know, a whack-load of spending. What we should be talking about today is: what are we going to do to get our province on track for the next 10 to 20 years, starting now, not starting in 10 years? That means controlling our spending, putting money aside and building that heritage fund so that the interest from the heritage fund can eventually decrease our reliance on oil and gas, nonrenewable revenues. Who knows? If we built it large enough, it might even decrease our reliance on income taxes, both personal and corporate, and as those came down – you want diversification? Start lowering your income and corporate taxes. That's diversification. That's where you'd get more business coming in.

Mr. Mason: Argentina is the question.

Mr. Anderson: Well, it kind of led into that.

Anyway, I think that's the discussion that we need to have. I hope that after this bill inevitably passes and this budget inevitably passes, we can start turning our focus immediately to the job of protecting the future for our kids and start thinking a little bit more about future generations rather than ourselves and the here and now.

Thanks, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you very much. I know that this hon. member often criticizes me that I don't quite understand because I don't have kids yet, but I do know this, Mr. Speaker: when I eventually do have kids, I want to raise them right here in Alberta.

This hon. member has criticized pretty much every government in North America for the amount of money that they're spending over the last couple of years. I want to know from this hon. member: if he's not happy with the United States and not happy with the Canadian federal government, with the amount of money that they're spending these days, where does he want to take his kids to raise his kids? I mean, this is what the governments are doing. This isn't something that's isolated to Alberta. That's my question to the hon. member, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Anderson: Well, the hon. member needs to clean his ears out. He always did have a problem listening. Never once did I say that about him not having kids. I don't know where he gets that from. I never said also that I didn't want to raise my kids in Alberta. You know, where he got that from, I don't know. What I said is that I'm worried about their future. I'm worried about what will happen if we continue down the road that we have continued down.

We've got to start setting an example, hon. member. It's our generation. It's the young guys and their kids and their grandkids that are going to get hammered with this bill. I mean, are you saying by your comments that what the United States is doing is the right way to go? Is that what you're saying?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to be able to rise and speak to this bill and comment a little bit about what has already been said and where we believe that things could be done a little bit better, a little bit differently going forward, comment a little bit about what has happened in the past, and maybe come to some sort of consensus in here as to what will make Alberta not only a better province a year from now, five years for now, 10 years from now but 40 years out.

I believe it was the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie who noted right off the top that the Alberta budget is a very large number nowadays: $39 billion, I believe, is what were spending. By no small means is that a small chunk of change. A lot of that comes from royalty revenues; some of that comes from personal income tax; some of that comes from corporate income tax; some of that comes from user fees. There's a whole mix of things that we do in Alberta that goes to raise that amount of money.

There's even some of that money that has not been raised from those sources. What is on the books is $4.3 billion in debt, and if you believe what some other people are saying in this House, the actual number in actual debt is closer to $7 billion. I would agree with the hon. members who have spoken before that no one is accusing the government of falsifying the books, but there are ways of accounting that make things look rosier than they are. If you look at some of the debt that is acquired, it would probably be closer to $7 billion. If you look at other debt that's in other areas, if you look at what is owed to the teachers on their liability, well, that's another $6 billion or $7 billion. You get the point, Mr. Speaker. We're starting to get to the point where things aren't adding up, where things are getting to the point where we're not able to live within our limits or live within the amount of money that we currently have.

If we talk about some of those things that have been talked about, let's go back to the estimates process, which – I will also follow the lead of the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie – is a very interesting process and, I would agree for the most part, is a reasonable process set up to discuss various departments and to allow us to have a one-on-one conversation with the hon. minister about how the various departments are being run, what is going to happen in those departments in the coming year, talk about some of the programs and directions that they're going to take Alberta in and what they're going to do for the Alberta people with the money they've spent.

I for one have mostly enjoyed those debates. You can learn a lot. You can get into some contentious areas. I think there's a learning process that goes on for both sides. I will say this: I don't believe it's in the best interests of the Alberta people to limit debates to three hours in certain areas. I agree with the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie that we may only need three hours for a department like Service Alberta that spends a relatively small amount of the whole Alberta budget. But is three hours reasonable to discuss I believe it was $15 billion that we spend on health care or whatever large number it is? I don't know.

I know what other jurisdictions do. They allow the opposition members to take as much time, get as much detail out of the minister as they're able to and ask questions back and forth that, hopefully, lead to a better and more effective way for the opposition parties to understand what the government is doing. When the opposition parties understand a little better, it's helpful for us to do our job and more helpful to the Alberta people in the fact that they will know more about how their governments are running their various departments. I would suggest that maybe we have to look at those ways that other jurisdictions are currently running their debates, and maybe we could go to those types of formats. It doesn't appear that this has been an overly heavy legislative session, where we were forced to deal with a whole bunch of things on the agenda that needed to be done. This way it could have been facilitated, I think, in a very easy fashion, should we have wished to do so, and we could probably do that in the future very easily.

I also note in this little bit of a history lesson given to me by some of the members of my caucus who have been here longer and studied some of the budgetary process that if you look at the detail given, I guess, in the budgets in previous administrations here in Alberta, if we go back years ago, say, to the '70s and '80s, the type of line item you would get from a minister's department was much more detailed than it currently is. Just for those reading along, for instance, right now what we get for a line item in terms of the health budget says that X amount is being spent on health care this year in the province of Alberta. That's what we get. There's no more breakdown of where that money is being spent, what programs it's being spent on, what money is going to XYZ area of the province, what is being spent on, let's say, cancer care and, let's say, other care.

I don't know how to most effectively do that. Nevertheless, I have been told – and I am actually going to go review this stuff at some point in time – that the budgeting detail was much more complete in the good old days, if you want to call them that, where you were able then to ask your minister more detailed questions about various line items that were in their budget. At least, from the people I've talked to, that was much more helpful and led to a much easier time in understanding where money was going in the province and would maybe help both us and the government. Those are some things, hopefully, that we can work on in the future in this province.

I'd like to turn to some of the comments now that have been made on both sides on what we essentially have here, which is the either $4.3 billion in debt we have or the $7 billion in debt we have. Whichever number you choose to use, it appears there is a deficit, and it appears to be that if oil and gas prices stay where they are, that deficit would be a structural one. It appears that what we are doing to eliminate this structural deficit is to close our eyes and hope and pray that oil prices and natural gas prices will rise and will allow us to continue to spend in this fashion and go ahead and live in this way. Maybe, you know, I don't know if that's all that wrong. I believe, following these energy forecasts, that that could in fact be true. But at the same time, we have to realize that budgeting on those things and even relying on those things happening is far from often what happens.

I think we here in Alberta have gone down a path that could be somewhat precarious. We have chosen, I guess, not to raise revenue although there was some speculation that that was going to occur. The means to do that would be either to raise income tax, which would have, I guess, some repercussions around. There was some talk about having an increase in liquor taxes, which got stymied. So we're not going to go down the path of raising more revenue. Fair enough. You know, in the zeitgeist of the time, or whatever it is, it is difficult for governments to do that, and I understand that.

At the same time, then, let's not kid ourselves. If we're not going to raise income tax and we merely rely on oil and gas revenues, we're caught in a box here of just simply snowing through these oil revenues. And, hey, guys, I guess we can look at ourselves and say: if they're coming out of the ground, let's snow through them as quickly as we can, keep things going as well as we can, and that's how it is. Fair enough. That looks to be like what we've done over the last 40 years. We've done that. We're essentially the lowest taxed jurisdiction in Canada by a long way. Has that necessarily led to a diversified economy? Not from what I read, not if you believe what the experts have said. That hasn't led to a diversification of the economy. I would disagree with the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere in suggesting that that is one of the things that happens. If you look here, what we have is that we're continuing to set ourselves up for snowing through these resource revenues.

Now, I think the way we have to do things in this province if we really want to get better is to, one, get on the savings plan. Let's face it. Everyone knows that, hopefully, we can save in the future. Hopefully, we can set up some sort of savings plan similar to what some oil-rich jurisdictions have, areas like Alaska, areas like Norway, and other institutions who haven't just simply spent every last dime that they brought into the coffers and said: we'll have a big party today and worry about it later. Because guess what? Despite what we think, that doesn't really work.

You know, this government has got to do one thing: realize that we have got to get on a savings plan and do it through having Albertans pay for more on their own or be honest with the people and say, "We're not going to do that; we're going to limit what we spend, only spend what we bring in and run things that way" or, in another case, simply ignore the fact and snow through the revenues. Those are the three options. We can choose to do those things. Herein going forward I think those are some of the things we need to wrestle with.

I appreciate that spending was put forward into health care and that most of our commitments to education were kept and those things. I believe those are two fundamental things that will help Albertans going forward. The two basic things a government should be involved in are making sure people are healthy and making sure people are well educated, so I applaud those budget decisions to do that. At the same time, I recognize that some other decisions were made to cut funding from the area of some of our social supports, some of the people who, as the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie said, may not be as likely to vote or may not be as likely to rock the boat.

We see some of the cuts to the hon. minister of housing's department, who I see over there – I had the privilege of sitting in on his debates – and some of the other ministries, I guess, indeed, that were being cut. Yes, those decisions have to be made, but those areas that got cut are a little less likely to rock the boat and got cut because of a revenue shortfall primarily made up of an oil and gas boom-and-bust economy that we continue to ride up and down and go from the ebbs and flows. We find ourselves continually at this point seemingly every 20 years. We go from being very well off. . . [Mr. Hehr's speaking time expired]

Thank you.

3:40

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Hon. member, that was some very good information that you gave there, and I was just hoping that you could expand on those last comments because I think that you were cut off, and I was riveted by that discussion.

Mr. Hehr: Well, actually I thank the hon. member for allowing me to continue, but despite him being riveted, I think I've pretty much said my piece, so I will pass it along to another member unless they would like to ask a question of me. There you go.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Mr. Quest: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I'll be brief. Just a couple of questions or comments. This one always concerns me when I hear from some of the opposition parties talking about debt. My question to the member would be: when you write a cheque from your chequing account, just like we're drawing down our sustainability fund, and you've got cash in your chequing account, are you creating a debt? I'm having some real difficulty with this concept. We've created this fund, the sustainability fund, over several years to cover us off for times of low energy revenues, and we're now drawing down on that fund. How is that creating debt?

He commented that depending on higher energy revenues in the future is precarious and then touched on raising taxes, so I'm kind of wondering what taxes the Member for Calgary-Buffalo would suggest we raise. Is he looking at a sales tax or higher income tax?

He talked about savings plans and Norway. My understanding is that Norway has a 20 per cent sales tax, a 1 per cent net worth tax, among the highest corporate income taxes in the world, all in place to build this giant savings fund. Of course, again, you can't pass on this: they are a country. We are a province within a country that last year, I understand, transferred out something like $20 billion into the federal system as part of our commitment to the country of Canada.

I guess, just to back up, my question would be: is drawing down on a cash surplus debt? Because I don't understand that. And I'm just wondering what sort of taxes the hon. member would suggest that we put in place if he's concerned about us counting on higher energy revenues on the future.

Thank you.

Mr. Hehr: Well, I thank the hon. member for his question. I guess, you know, if we're looking at the true definition of debt, we wouldn't. We're not sustaining a debt because we have created a sustainability fund. But at the same time, I will point out that I don't know if we've been as diligent as we could be on moving forward on our Alberta heritage savings trust fund. We've had a trust fund here that has been stagnant for years and, in fact, is worth less than it was 25 years ago. So we haven't really moved forward on that.

If we're going to snow through this sustainability fund, like some people say, in the next two years – hopefully not, you know; hopefully, we can get through this without it – then, in fact, we are going to be at square one. So I would agree that temporarily, I guess, we do have money in the bank to cover this, but like I said, that wiggle room is getting pretty precariously thin – okay? – and I understand that.

I guess you're asking me a pretty good question there on raising revenues. Let's face it. It's never an easy thing to do, but if I were in charge, and if I had a chance to look at the books, and if I analyzed all things and found ourselves in a structural deficit, the way I would honestly do it if we needed the money is go to a progressive tax system that went over and tried to design things where the wealthy in this province, say, people making over $200,000, would pay progressively more income tax. I believe that is the way most North American economies are running. I believe that that's where the other provinces are going. I believe that it's a fair and reasonable way to go. You know, I'm fair with standing on that principle.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: We have 14 seconds.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd move that we adjourn debate on the bill.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 9 Local Authorities Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2010

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of my colleague from Athabasca-Redwater I rise today to begin debate on Bill 9, the Local Authorities Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2010. I'm moving second reading.

These legislative changes are proposed to improve the processes involved with municipal elections. By way of background, Mr. Speaker, in a 2008 court decision the judge noted that the act is unclear about where a voter is to vote when they occupy more than one residence. A proposed amendment will clarify that when a voter has more than one residence, he or she may designate only one place of residence for the purposes of the act. In addition to the existing rules, the voter will determine one residence for the purpose of voting based on the following criteria: the residence address shown on the person's Alberta Registries identification card or Alberta driver's licence, the residence address where the person's income tax documents are addressed and delivered, or the residence address where the person's mail is normally addressed and delivered. This amendment will promote public confidence and integrity in the election process by requiring specific criteria to be followed.

There are also several additional amendments that would ensure that the new rules and requirements in the act are clear, practical, and workable. One amendment would clarify that a commercial service does not include services provided by volunteers who receive no compensation in relation to their time or services.

Another amendment relates to entirely self-funded campaigns. For these campaigns, which would be up to and including $10,000, a bank account and public disclosure is not required by the candidate.

There's also an amendment that proposes to change the campaign contribution limit to $5,000 per year.

Mr. Speaker, we're also proposing in this bill that the current provisions requiring that candidates' surplus trust funds be held by the municipality will not come into effect until December 1, 2011. This amendment would allow time for candidates, municipalities, and election officials to comply with these new rules.

Another amendment I'd like to highlight is that a bank account for contributions from any person other than the candidate, like a corporation, trade union, or employee organization, is only required if the total amount of the contribution or contributions is greater than $5,000. This amendment will avoid burdensome administrative processes for many candidates.

Lastly, there is an amendment to remove the requirement to have statements on campaigns of over $10,000 audited.

In closing, I'd like to encourage all members to support this legislation. I look forward to the discussion that will ensue.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and join second reading debate on Bill 9, the Local Authorities Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2010. This is an important piece of legislation because it corrects so many of the mistakes made in a private member's bill last session: Bill 203 from 2009. Although we'll reserve judgment on this until we've been through committee stage, I think that if it turns out that we're satisfied that Bill 9 takes care of the numerous problems in Bill 203, we'll probably on this side of the House be quite pleased to support it as we go on.

Certainly, on first glance it does take care of some of the problems. My hon. colleague who introduced the bill on behalf of the Member for Athabasca-Redwater outlined some of the changes that are being made. I think that those changes, on the surface at least, do make it much more possible for those people who plan to run in the municipal elections this fall to actually be able to somehow figure out how to do that and pay for it and report on it.

In initial checking around with the municipalities involved – and it tends to be the bigger municipalities, Mr. Speaker, who are most concerned about this legislation – their first glance at it is favourable as well. We will be checking further as we get deeper into debate about this. The issue, for instance, that campaign contributions do not include services provided by a volunteer who receives no compensation directly or indirectly: well, that's fairly important. I mean, the nature of a volunteer is no compensation. You know, that's a contribution in kind. That should not be something that anybody tries to put a dollar value on. That meets with the approval of people at the municipal level whom we've talked to.

Also, the point about waiting until December 1, 2011, to amend the timeline for provisions requiring that candidates' surplus trust funds be held by the municipality: it's important that that change has been made.

Now, interestingly enough, and we may get a little deeper into this at the committee stage, according to the government this amendment will allow time for affected parties to comply with the new rules. According to the people that we're talking to at the municipal level, what this should do is allow time for municipalities and organizations like the AUMA, that represent them, and the provincial government to actually consult about these new rules. In the time between when and if we pass Bill 9 in this spring session of the Legislature and a year from December, hopefully the consultation will result in some negotiations that perhaps change or clarify how the heck the candidates are going to access these trust funds before elections because that is not yet clear.

Now, I have one question that I would like to put on the record and get an answer to perhaps at the committee stage, perhaps even later on in second reading debate, on behalf of the city of Calgary.

That's the question about bank accounts. Just give me one second, if you would be so kind, Mr. Speaker, to turn to the appropriate page, which I believe is page 6 of the bill. Yes, it is. This would be section 2(1). The Local Authorities Election (Finance and Contribution Disclosure) Amendment Act, 2009 is amended by this section. Under (2) section 3 is amended

- (a) by repealing the new section 147.2(2);
- (b) in the new section 147.3(1)
 - (i) by repealing clause (a) and substituting the following,

And I'll just read part of this into the record.

- (a) a campaign account in the name of the candidate's election campaign is opened at a financial institution for the purposes of the election campaign as soon as possible after . . .

And it continues on from there.

Well, the words in question here, Mr. Speaker, and what I want to get the question on the record about, are "a campaign account in the name of the candidate's election campaign." Now, it has been suggested to me, of course, that that's no problem for us at the provincial level. When we're running for re-election, we have constituency associations behind us, and those constituency associations have boards of directors. So when you walk into a bank branch and you say that you want to open a campaign account for the so-and-so — you know, put the name of incumbent MLA here — campaign, the bank won't have any problem with that because all the i's are dotted, the t's are crossed, and the paperwork is already in order.

At the municipal level, so it was suggested to me, this is becoming increasingly difficult to do, if not impossible, because municipal candidates don't have constituency associations behind them, don't have boards of directors, so the argument goes that they must open bank accounts in their own names rather than in the name of their campaign.

I'm suspecting here, Mr. Speaker, that the answer that I need to get back is probably just a clarification or an explanation of the wording in the bill rather than the necessity to change the bill. I suspect that the research has already been done, since this is a government bill, and that, in fact, at the municipal level it is entirely possible, and there would be protocol to follow, to open a bank account in the name of the candidate's campaign. The only thing that needs to be done is an explanation of what protocol is to be followed. The possibility exists that it will be more difficult for municipal candidates than it is for provincial or, for that matter, federal candidates, so I am going to need an explanation, a clarification around that question if I can.

Many of the proposed amendments to Bill 203 that are contained in Bill 9 I think are solid. They deal with such things as self-funded election campaigns that can include the candidate's own funds up to and including $10,000 for the purposes of the candidate's election campaign and that that is not a campaign contribution, and the candidate is not required to open a bank account or file a disclosure statement. That applies to many, many municipal election candidates, especially in smaller jurisdictions. There's the clarification in section 147.3 that a candidate who accepts third-party donations does not have to open a bank account until and unless those contributions total in excess of $5,000. The candidate is still required to file a disclosure statement.

There are other amendments that set out the process for when a campaign disclosure statement is required, what sort of information is required, what the timing is for filing the campaign disclosure statements, all that. These are all things, I think, that not only can we live with, but they do go a fair distance towards clarifying and correcting some of the problems that were inherent in Bill 203.

Just to close, Mr. Speaker, as I say, depending on what others have to put on the record and what comes back in Committee of the Whole, we may be looking at challenging other aspects of this bill, or we may not. I don't know. We'll get to that in the fullness of time. As a general statement, I'd like to say that the sense that I am getting from the consultations that I've undertaken with municipal people is that we wouldn't even be here today debating Bill 9 if a proper process of consultation had been undertaken before Bill 203 appeared on the floor of the Legislature in the last session. That was Bill 203 from 2009. I'll go further and say that the same criticism has been levelled about Bill 203 this year, which has yet to begin second reading debate. That's the one about municipal franchise fees.

In both cases the feeling amongst municipal representatives is that these things, these pieces of legislation, these private members' bills, although there was consultation to a degree, kind of appeared without much consultation, without enough consultation. Now, I don't know and I'm not going to stand here and propose exactly what enough consultation looks like to municipal representatives although I will freely admit that it's much more difficult to carry out the level of consultation when you're bringing forward a piece of private member's legislation as an individual with a researcher or two helping you out than it would be if the Ministry of Municipal Affairs was undertaking legislation like these sorts of things.

I think that if we're going to be bringing forward private members' bills like Bill 203 from last year, like Bill 203 this year, perhaps we need to sit down as an Assembly and figure out a better consultative process so that private members can sit down, perhaps at predictable intervals with representatives from a cross-section of municipalities. Whether that's done through AUMA and AAMD and C or how it's done, I don't know; that's a topic for another debate. If we don't wrap our heads at this level around the notion of how we're going to carry out that consultation, I think it's a safe bet, Mr. Speaker, that we're going to continue to run into the sorts of problems that we had with a piece of private member's legislation that require, then, next year a piece of government legislation to go back and solve some of those problems.

I understand there was a unique situation this year in that Bill 203 got proclaimed before, perhaps, it should have been proclaimed, before some of the work had been done on it, and that that necessitated Bill 9. Nevertheless, we are going back and redoing some of the work that was already done, largely because it wasn't done fully and completely the first time around. Bill 9 will certainly take care of a lot of those problems, maybe all of them, but it's too bad that we sort of have to go over this same ground again.

Those are my comments, Mr. Speaker. I look forward to the comments of other members of the Legislature on Bill 9 although I see from the instructions before me that those comments are supposed to come at another time. It says here at the bottom of my sheet that I am supposed to adjourn debate now, and we'll pick this up at another time. So I would move adjournment of second reading debate on Bill 9.

Thank you.

Bill 13 Securities Amendment Act, 2010

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose on behalf of the hon. Minister of Finance and Enterprise.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and move second reading of Bill 13 on behalf of the Minister of Finance and Enterprise, Bill 13 being the Securities Amendment Act, 2010.

Bill 13 furthers the work that Alberta has done in modernizing, streamlining, and harmonizing securities legislation over the past five years under the 2004 provincial-territorial memorandum of understanding regarding securities regulation. This bill includes amendments to ensure Alberta assists Canada in meeting its international commitments that strengthen regulatory enforcement and that further harmonize the registration regime in support of the passport system.

I'd like to start with some brief comments on the federal government's move to a single federal securities regulator to put these amendments into context. Last July the federal government launched the Canadian Securities Transition Office to lead all aspects of the transition to a single federal regulator. This February Alberta filed a reference with the Alberta Court of Appeal to clarify whether the federal government has the authority to establish a federal securities regulatory regime under the Constitution. Alberta is also intervening in support of a similar reference launched in Quebec last summer. Alberta took these steps because this is such an important constitutional question.

This is not so much a disagreement on how to regulate securities. It's more about who should regulate securities, which goes straight to the heart of provincial powers under the Constitution. In fact, since 1932, the first time this issue came up, securities regulation has been a matter of provincial jurisdiction. We believe provincial securities regulation has served Alberta well and that it's in the best interests of Albertans to continue to regulate securities provincially.

Acceptance of federal authority over securities regulation under the federal trade and commerce power would have implications far beyond securities regulation. This could impact many areas that are currently considered to be provincial jurisdiction as matters of property and civil rights, including large parts of the financial services sector such as pensions, insurance, credit unions, and other provincial financial institutions. That's why Alberta is proceeding with its own reference and supporting the Quebec reference as well.

Moving on, the global financial crisis has heightened the importance of international co-operation and harmonization. Bill 13 includes amendments to assist Canada in meeting its international commitments in several areas. These areas include the adoption of a new regulatory oversight framework for credit rating organizations and the transition to international financial reporting standards, or IFRS, in Canada on January 1, 2010.

The proposed regulatory oversight framework for credit rating organizations was developed by provincial securities regulators as part of a world-wide response to the recent global financial crisis. The proposed framework is in line with international standards and is intended to strengthen the ability of provincial securities regulations to protect investors.

Under the new framework credit rating organizations must apply for designation and comply with a recently revised international code of conduct. Credit rating organizations will continue to be responsible for developing the methodologies and assumptions in the credit ratings process, but they'll have to make them publicly available to allow the market to test their validity. This will help us to better protect investors across Canada who rely on credit ratings when making investment decisions.

With the reporting on January 1, 2011, Canada will join over a hundred countries world-wide that have adopted IFRS. The proposed amendments will replace references to Canadian generally accepted accounting principles, or Canadian GAAP, with the new IFRS terms. IFRS is fast becoming the global language of accounting for public entities, making it easier to conduct business internationally and raise funds through easier access to global markets.

Increasingly Alberta and Canadian businesses operate and compete in a global capital market in which investors and regulators want the ability to compare financial information across borders. The move to IFRS will mean that our issuers' financial information will be readily comparable with companies in other countries. We must act now for Alberta companies to reap these benefits.

The remaining amendments are designed to ensure that our legislation continues to be harmonized, streamlined, and up to date. These include amendments to strengthen regulatory enforcement to provide a timely means of dealing with issuers that refuse to rectify, clarify, or explain misleading disclosure. This will be done by broadening the powers of the Alberta Securities Commission and its executive director to issue a cease-trade order in instances of faulty disclosure.

A further amendment will address an artificial distinction between costs associated with an investigation and those of a hearing. This will facilitate cost recovery in securities enforcement proceedings.

Finally, further amendments will support the registration reform initiative. Registration is the last significant area of securities regulation to be harmonized. These amendments will ensure that Alberta registration provisions are harmonized with registration provisions elsewhere across Canada.

Alberta was the first jurisdiction to enact many of the legislative requirements necessary to support the new registration regime that came into effect September 28, 2009. The new national registration rule streamlines, harmonizes, and modernizes registration categories and requirements across Canada, including a new indicator for when dealer registration is required and registration requirements for new classes of registration.

As a result of recent refinements to the new national registration rule, additional amendments will be required to ensure that the Alberta registration regime continues to be harmonized with other Canadian jurisdictions.

Mr. Speaker, as I said, these amendments will ensure that Alberta assists Canada in meeting its international commitments and will support Alberta's continued commitment to ongoing securities regulatory reform. I encourage all of my colleagues in the Assembly to support Bill 13.

I'd now like to move adjournment of the debate. Thank you.

Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2010

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Culture and Community Spirit on behalf of the hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Blackett: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Minister of Transportation I'm pleased to provide some comments and move for reading Bill 14, the Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2010.

This bill will amend the Traffic Safety Act. The Ministry of Transportation is not looking to change policy, just to make a correction. Section 162 of the Traffic Safety Act deals with the allocation of fines. The basic rule is that fine revenue will go to the Crown first and then be allocated. This has not changed.

Since late 2005 fine revenue has been allocated to those municipalities that pay for policing in their areas, the who-pays-for-policing model. Prior to the who-pays model fine revenue essentially went to urban municipalities for offences occurring in their areas and to some other areas such as municipal districts, Métis settlements, and

First Nation reserves if the offences occurred on their local roads. This is what we are looking to correct.

In 2004 the Highways Development and Protection Act was passed but not proclaimed until January 1 of this year. That act amended section 162 of the Traffic Safety Act, which simply updated its references. However, during the time between the Highways Development and Protection Act being passed and proclaimed, amendments to the Traffic Safety Act were made to introduce the who-pays-for-policing model. When the Highways Development and Protection Act was put forward for proclamation in late 2009, the 2005 amendment to the who-pays-for-policing model was overlooked, therefore reverting to the prior model based on geography.

This corrective amendment will reinstate the following. Where the offence occurs in an urban municipality that is required to provide its own policing for populations greater than 5,000 people, the municipality will get the fine revenue. Where peace officers are employed by a municipality, the municipality gets fine revenue from offences where those officers issued the ticket. The Ministry of Transportation is running reports to verify numbers. It appears that the impact of the unintentional change will be relatively low in the cities, larger towns, those with populations over 5,000, and urban service areas of specialized municipalities, again, with a population of over 5,000 people such as Sherwood Park and Fort McMurray. They already pay for their own policing and receive the fine revenue under either funding model, so that did not change.

Since the province has been paying the policing for smaller towns, villages, summer villages, municipal districts, Métis settlements, First Nation reserves, specialized municipalities, and the two large urban service areas I have already noted, they were not getting revenue since late 2005, excluding of course the municipalities that employ their own peace officers. We're working with Alberta Justice to determine what the impact has been.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 10 Victims Restitution and Compensation Payment Amendment Act, 2010

[Adjourned debate March 17: Mr. Oberle]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise and speak to this bill called Bill 10, Victims Restitution and Compensation Payment Amendment Act, 2010. This bill attempts to widen the scope of the Victims Restitution and Compensation Payment Act following the Supreme Court finding that it is, in fact, constitutional to file a civil suit to recover some of the costs of a crime. The bill also broadens the Crown's ability to file suit to reclaim costs and to take away the profits of criminal acts so that they cannot be used to commit further criminal acts.

Like I said in an interview a couple of weeks ago when this legislation was being brought forward, I appreciate this act. I believe it is moving in the right direction and this province is moving in the right direction in regard to the Victims Restitution and Compensation Payment Act. There is no doubt that one can only applaud the civil forfeiture, or the ability of the government to go after criminals who have been able to garner income, garner property, garner wealth from their criminal acts. This act allows the Crown to restrain and seize the illegal profits and property of crime and compensate Albertans victimized by criminal activity. This was recently legitimized by our Supreme Court of Canada in Chatterjee and Ontario. Like I said, I think it's a good thing.

Another thing I'd like to talk about also is that it allows the province to compensate more and different groups who are victims of crime. It allows the government to be able to make payments to groups who are working in crime reduction, who are working with victims of crime. It also extends the ability of this government to compensate municipal governments who have found themselves having to pay for the costs of criminal activity through whatever various deeds are undertaken. It also allows them to pay out funds to people who need to pay for various things. Like I said, by at least rectifying compensation to cities, it allows them to pay for things like drug cleanups and drug house cleanups and things of that nature, that were starting to add to the costs of city budgets and without access to this fund would have impacted their ability to serve their constituents.

Like I said, this is a good act, one that I fully support. It's another opportunity for this province to stand up and say that crime doesn't pay and an ability for us to go out and take the funds back from people who have gained wealth through illegal means.

I thank the hon. minister for allowing me to speak to this, and that's enough out of me.

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and support Bill 10, the Victims Restitution and Compensation Payment Amendment Act, 2010. This bill will allow law enforcement the means to seize proceeds of crime through civil courts. Criminals are more organized than ever, and our law enforcement agencies need powerful tools to match. The roots of organized crime run deep, and we must do whatever we can to help our police enforcement agencies. Taking the assets of a drug dealer or a gang member is and should be a priority. The property seized will be put to victims' restitution and send a clear signal that not only will criminal behaviour not be stomachached, but the wealth generated will be taken away.

Mr. Speaker, as I travelled the province as chair of the safe communities task force, I heard heartfelt messages from Albertans across this province about how they felt that the criminals had more rights than the victims. To those unfamiliar with the criminal world, or the dark side, at the time of my travels there were 54 criminal groups identified, and you can bet that as I stand here on March 23, 2010, there are way more than 54.

Mr. Speaker, recommendation 8 of the safe communities task force report was to develop, enact, and enforce legislation allowing the province to seize money and property gained through the proceeds of crime and use these resources to fund victims' compensation, crime prevention, and crime programs.

Bill 10, under section 24, indicates:

44(1) Subject to the regulations, the Minister may make payments or grants from money that is paid to the Crown under this Act for any one or more of the following purposes:

- (a) compensation of victims;
- (b) programs that benefit victims;
- (c) prevention of illegal acts;
- (d) provision of compensation to the Crown or prescribed public bodies for costs incurred to protect the safety or health of persons or to protect property as a result of illegal acts;
- (e) other purposes provided for in the regulations.

My only concern with this, Mr. Speaker, is one word, and that would be “may” versus “shall.” While I’m not a lawyer, that one word makes a world of difference and gives the government the leeway on how the proceeds of crime can or should be spent.

Victims of violent crime strive to regain what was lost, either money or psychologically. Recovery from a violent crime can include time off work, meaning lost income, and in some cases victims can become disabled. Victim programs can offer help preparing for court appearances, preparing victim impact statements. The safe communities task force spoke to the importance of stable, long-term, three-year funding for community-based social agencies with proven outcomes.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 10 talks to what is important for Albertans. They want the bad guy to pay up and those who have suffered at their hands to be fairly compensated.

Mr. Speaker, I’m going to continue to listen to the debate on Bill 10 and hear what the rest of the members have to say about that. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available if anyone wishes to speak.

Seeing none, any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It’s my pleasure to rise in the House and speak to Bill 10, the Victims Restitution and Compensation Payment Amendment Act, 2010. I think many of us in this House have family, friends, acquaintances, people that we know, people that we care about that have been victims of crime. I think about some of the constituents that I’ve had the opportunity to consult with and talk with over the last couple of years. Of course, in Chestermere we had – what was that fellow’s name? The name escapes me right now. Anyway, he basically set up this huge Ponzi scheme, and many of my constituents in Chestermere were greatly affected.

An Hon. Member: It may have been Milowe Brost.

Mr. Anderson: Brost. That’s right. Brost was his name. Thank you, hon. minister, for that.

Many of my constituents were ripped off. It wasn’t just people in Chestermere, though. It was other people in Calgary as well. There are, obviously, lots of people who have been victims of various crimes. Just a few weeks ago I had a couple in my office who had been taken advantage of by what looks to be some sort of organized crime rip-off scheme. Then, of course, there’s violent crime. We all have constituents who have had to suffer through that, and many of us have had to kind of see the effects of that on them. Many of us have had friends and family that have seen first-hand just how damaging it is, not only financially but psychologically, to be a victim of a violent crime or a financial crime because of organized groups and the effect that that can have on people. It’s not a good thing; that’s for sure.

I commend the Justice minister for bringing this bill forward. I think it is a good piece of legislation on the whole. I have a few issues I’d like to see addressed or, I guess, a few concerns that I think it would be nice to have some explanation from her on, but in principle this is a very sound act.

What the passage of this bill would give to law enforcement is the necessary tools to seize proceeds of crime through the civil courts. Obviously, criminals have become far more sophisticated than they have ever been, and law enforcement, of course, needs the tools to match that sophistication.

Fighting crime is increasingly becoming a battle that takes place against the financial infrastructure of the criminal underworld. Of course, proceeds of crime are not socked away neatly in a locker. You know, there’s not a big treasure chest of money and things that have been stolen anymore. Mostly, these proceeds of crime are often laundered. They’re often put into assets. You’ll see them in real estate. You’ll see them in tangible assets. It’s not the old money being hidden in the cave and then come back later and get it. It’s a very, very different type of threat that we’re working against right now. It’s become very sophisticated. Seizing these assets I think should be a priority for the government. The property seized I believe should be used to compensate victims of crime and to send a strong message that not only will the criminal behaviour not be tolerated; the wealth created, down to the last penny, will be taken back.

I had the opportunity of working with the former Solicitor General. It was a good time, and I learned a lot from him and his devotion to cracking down on organized crime. He brought forth a number of very solid, very good, effective laws and initiatives, not just laws but initiatives, that really, I think, have organized crime in this province on their heels quite a bit. So I applaud the job that he’s done, and I would say that the current Solicitor General has very, very, very large shoes to fill, literally as well as figuratively.

People who are not familiar with the criminal world may think the property in question that we’re dealing with here is just guns, drugs, flashy cars. But often the money generated by the drug or gun trade is used to invest in more mundane property that has a high volume of cash transactions, like a bar or a restaurant. This illegal money appears to come out clean, but that could not be further from the truth. In actuality, these assets stem from a tainted trail of violence and corruption.

This means that a method must be put in place for victims of crime to retrieve their property. All too often victims of crime are never made whole again. I don’t think this bill is going to make victims whole again, but it will give victims at least some small victory and some small amount of comfort and financial wherewithal to cope with the financial, psychological, and potentially physical effects of the crimes that they have had imposed upon them.

Grants under this legislation will be made available for victims of crime as well. Victims of violent crime, in particular, often struggle to recover what was lost financially and emotionally. Recovery from a violent crime can mean time off work, meaning a loss of income for extended periods, in some cases victims now paralyzed or on the brink of losing their houses.

Victims’ programs can offer help preparing for court appearances and victim impact statements, which are vital services in the pursuit of justice. They also help to provide financial benefits and the resources to seek restitution.

I do have some concerns about this bill that I would like the Justice minister to address at some point. The danger with any type of legislation, you know, when you’re giving strong powers to the Crown to enforce legislation such as this, is that there can be slip-ups. We have had a situation recently where there was a bit of a slip-up. Property is sometimes seized in haste under this type of legislation, which can create more victims in the process. So we have to be ever vigilant that we do not compromise the civil liberties of our people in the pursuit of our war against organized crime.

One issue that cropped up recently was with Patricia Thomson, who is an elderly woman in Calgary. She had her condo actually seized by the government when her son had committed a crime. He had used her address in a fraud scheme, but the property itself was never involved in the actual committing of the crime, and of course

Ms Thomson never had anything to do with it. This was a decision by Justice Alan Macleod, who rightly ordered the property returned to her. He did say that we need to guard against allowing this legislation to be used for fishing expeditions by police and law enforcement. So that's key. I think we all understand that, and I would imagine we're in agreement with that. I'd like to make sure that the Justice minister and the Solicitor General are aware that these things are happening and that they'll make sure that it's not being used in order to just basically go on a fishing expedition.

That's important for many reasons. I mean, it's important, obviously, because we don't want bad things to occur, but the assumption of innocence until guilt is proven is a very important part of our legal system. We just have to make sure that we don't find people guilty by association. So as long as we can make sure that that is taken care of, I think this bill will be worth supporting.

I think that one of the things – and I think where we would deal with it is in a bill like this – has to do with the surplus that is in the victims' fund right now. I know that there are some tricky issues that have to be dealt with there, but I really do think that we need to find a way to make sure that those funds are being used as much as possible. I don't think it makes a lot of sense to have a huge, massive surplus of these funds in place at any one given time. Having a big surplus means we're either spending too much on a program or we're not spending enough on it. We shouldn't just have it there. It's not supposed to really be a sustainability fund. I would suggest that those funds should be used to help victims or for victims' services.

I think of, you know, Airdrie, where the local MP, Blake Richards, has a hockey classic. He calls it the Wild Rose Hockey Challenge, Wild Rose as in the federal constituency. It is, indeed, wild rose country, that constituency, no doubt about that. That constituency puts on, basically, a fundraiser for victims' services. So we did that, and many hon. members in this Chamber participated, and we raised about $10,000 for that cause. This year we want to raise $50,000, and I would ask the hon. members from all parties that play hockey if they would sign up for that so that we could do a good turn.

But my point is that they are hurting for cash. They always are because there is just so much involved with victims' services. There are so many victims to help, and there is just never enough money to go around for those programs. I think that maybe we could look at using the surplus funds from that to help victims even more and to help the programs that assist victims. So I hope that's addressed and that we look at that.

However, on the whole, as I've said many times, I support this bill. You know, we have to make conducting illegal activities as difficult as possible, and this bill, though not perfect in my view, moves us definitely in the right direction so long as the minister ensures that those aforementioned issues are taken care of.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I'll sit down.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, any other members wish to speak?

Shall I call the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 10 read a second time]

Bill 11 Witness Security Act

[Adjourned debate March 17: Mr. Drysdale]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a privilege to rise and speak in favour of Bill 11, the Witness Security Act. This is legislation that will establish a provincial witness security program in Alberta in investigating and prosecuting gang-related crimes. It's increasingly difficult, especially in cases when individuals are unwilling to come forward and give evidence because they fear retaliation. Alberta's Witness Security Act will provide short-term protective services to witnesses who agree to give evidence; for example, in gang-related investigations and particularly homicides. This legislation will complement the federal witness protection program and address the needs of witnesses who require long-term protection and identity changes.

I think this is great legislation that has been brought in, and I think it comes in a timely fashion, when gangs are continuing to infiltrate Alberta. This will allow our police officers, our men and women out in the field, to use another tool to hopefully get gang members or even regular citizens to report crimes by people who are dangerous offenders, who may threaten and intimidate witnesses to criminal acts. It's my firm belief that that's probably happening out there in some cases. This legislation, hopefully, will go some way in stopping that intimidation process, allowing people to do the right thing and to come forward and give evidence on criminal endeavours throughout the province. It may also help some gang members turn over a new leaf by allowing them a way out of gang life, allowing them to be able to turn their back on criminal endeavours and start with a fresh slate.

It's good legislation. I'm glad that the Minister of Justice brought this in. I'm very impressed with the work the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti did to carry this bill forward, and I thank him for that hard work. I'm proud to support this bill in this government's continued battle against gang-related crime.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure to rise and speak in support of Bill 11, the Witness Security Act. I think this is a bill that's going to complement the current federal witness protection program by establishing a provincial program that's tailored to the particular needs, in my mind, of Alberta Justice. The legislation will allow the Crown and local police agencies to provide short-term security for witnesses who are feeling a little bit apprehensive about testifying in court.

Mr. Speaker, the Witness Security Act that's currently under the federal act works very well. I remember when I was in estimates with the Justice minister, and one of the questions I had put to her about this particular program was: who is going to pay for this particular act? At that time, if my memory serves me right, I recall her telling me that it was up to the police. I then said to the minister that whether the province pays for it or the police pay for it, it's still taxpayers' money. I mean, as a government we do give money to the provincial police force, and we also give money to the municipalities, who in turn will be paying for the police force. We were trying to get some costs in regard to what this would cost the province to enact this particular piece of legislation. Because it's new, I wanted to find out, you know, if the minister had any idea of how many people would be entering the witness program, if she had any idea who would be entering the witness program, to get some kind of idea of the resources that were required.

There's no doubt that we need to have something like this. I think it is important that we do protect witnesses who've got some apprehensions or some concerns about going to court. You can tie that into gang-related activities, where you've got one gang member deciding that they want to testify against another gang member. The fear of intimidation amongst the gangs or organized crime is something that a particular individual who has decided to come forward and testify against another gang member, quite frankly, should be concerned about. One just needs to read the papers and see how they are taking care of another gang member when they don't like interference on their drugs or any of the trafficking or prostitution that they're doing. They simply decide to take them out in the streets, which, again, is a problem for the general public.

We support this bill and like what the minister is trying to do. I think she's done an admirable job in trying to do what's important to Albertans and bringing forward what needs to be done, especially when we're dealing with the issue of organized crime and gangs because, quite frankly, they're out of control in this province, and they need to be addressed.

What I think needs to be answered from the minister are some of the things that she's set up on the witness security co-ordinator, on the witness security panel. I'm sure that as we listen intently to the debate, she'll provide us with more information.

Is there going to be any collaboration between what the federal government is doing under their witness program compared to what we will be doing under our witness protection program? We have federal RCMP in this province that are here – and I don't know the exact numbers – that are dealing with some of this criminal activity, so where does the money kick in from the federal government? Where does the money kick in from the provincial government? Is there going to be a co-ordinated approach with the federal government in regard to this witness program, considering that we have specialized teams in this province who are under police jurisdiction that are going after these gangs?

I know that when I was the Solicitor General, I formed the IROC team, which is the integrated response to organized crime. I'm not sure if that's still in place, but it was hugely successful in going after these. I had the opportunity at the time to be able to see some of the takedowns, see some of their plans and actions on taking down organized crime. I know that the former Solicitor General was just as strong in carrying that forward. If I recall – and he may want to respond – I think he expanded it.

So I don't think that we need to have: this is the federal government; this is the provincial government. What is the federal government doing in their witness protection versus what the provincial government is doing in their witness program? Are we going to have a co-ordinated approach with our federal government? I think those are some questions that I would like to have answered to find out exactly what our responsibility is under provincial jurisdiction versus what the federal government's is under their federal jurisdiction. There is no question that we want to get rid of organized crime and gang-related activities, obviously, but for peace of mind for me I need to know exactly the parameters of what's going to be operated on.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I'll sit down, and I'll listen to the debate. I look forward to the minister possibly in committee addressing some of those issues.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think it's important that whenever we're talking about the justice system, we need to really take a second, close look and see: are we doing all that we need to do to ensure that the people of Alberta are protected in the best way possible? Too often when I go around speaking with Albertans, I hear the common complaint that we're always protecting the perpetrator and never the victim. Too often even witnesses fall into that category. They become the victims.

I'm pleased to speak in favour of Bill 11. We need to have the Witness Security Act, but on the balance of trying to look at justice – and I very much look at that as on the balancing scale, you know – it's supposed to be blind, and we want to make sure that we have full restitution to the victim. Here, though, with the Witness Security Act, one of my concerns is the length of time that we may have to protect a witness. We're concerned, and we need to do that, yet are we looking at strengthening or perhaps increasing the time that we need to have the victim protected from those that have perpetrated such crimes? Too often it seems like the time that the criminal has to pay isn't in comparison to the time that we need to protect someone. I think that that's another area where perhaps the dangerous offenders act – again, I realize that lots of this is federal, but we need to look at that. Why do we let someone out if, in fact, we still have to protect the witness or the victim in those areas?

Again, another concern. The added expense in order to protect a witness, over and above the expense of incarcerating an individual, is something else to look at. Really, what we want to ensure when we're protecting the witness – and, again, we do have to pay perhaps an extra price for that. We want to encourage people to come forward. It's critical in our system. Too often people are looking the other way; they don't want to be involved. They're concerned, you know, about what's going to happen to them if they get involved. This is a step in the right direction to say: "No. We as a society want to ensure that we will protect you. We want you to come forward. We want you to be a witness. We want to reduce the criminal activity and increase that by having witnesses that are willing to come forward." Too often it's very frustrating in our system that those who can and should provide witness will not come forward.

There are a few other areas. Again, I believe that this will help increase the effectiveness of police in their investigations, to have a tool now that's added to their tool box to say: well, look, you know, we can offer you this protection. Then they can give that security to people. It increases the ability of prosecutors to get the job done and put violent offenders, especially gang members, behind bars. That is an increased area that, again, we're just having reference to here in these other bills, that, you know, we're up I think from 54 to perhaps in the 80s now, one of the government members was saying. That's a concern. What are we going to do to step up the justice side in order to prevent these ongoing problems and the growth that continues to go in that direction?

I do believe that, again, this is an important bill. We're sending the message out there that we're willing to pay that price as taxpayers to improve our legal system and incarcerate those individuals that think that they can use the intimidation factor: if you do this, you know, I'm going to get you. Again, we have far too much of that going on.

There are just so many areas, though, that seem a little bit vague. What kind of investigative powers does the co-ordinator have? What resources will they have to carry it out in section 3 or section 4? That makes it a little bit questionable. Is this all that we need?

Again, with the bills that are coming forward here quickly, we don't have time to do all the research that we want to do. The government has the advantage of doing that research, but as opposition members we need a little bit more time on some of these issues. I would hope that we just wouldn't bulldoze ahead and vote on this just because the government says: oh, we've got it right. I have a problem with that. Too often the government says that, whether it's on the royalty prices, whether it's putting a cap on tuition, whether it's looking at PDD individuals and saying that we need to reassess them. They say that they've got it right, but there isn't enough thought going into these. The question is: what happens? What's the domino effect? Are there unintended consequences?

I would hope that we just wouldn't push forward and vote on this, that we'd have a little bit more time to do some more research and investigate these things to see, "Are there some other areas that we need to prepare for?" rather than just jump into Committee of the Whole and not have the time to do that research. I would hope that we just don't go off to move on it, that we'd adjourn that debate.

I'll sit down and see if there are other members that have some concerns or some provoking thought that we should be considering on Bill 11. I thank you for being able to address this.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is important legislation. This is legislation that this government believes very strongly in. I appreciate the comments from the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek. There is no doubt that since this government was elected, we have made it a priority to address safe communities from a number of different angles. We've dealt with awareness, education, prevention, prosecution.

We have not shied away, Mr. Speaker, not only from the prosecution, but we have also ensured that where possible within our limited provincial jurisdiction we were very aggressive in developing legislation in partnership with our stakeholders, who include members of the public, communities, victims' groups as well as the police, who are very strong partners of ours, around pieces of legislation that will have an impact in terms of stopping gang violence.

The reason, Mr. Speaker, that we have this legislation now – and I would refer hon. members back to my comments with respect to this when I introduced this bill earlier – is that we have a relationship with the police where we have a great deal of respect and trust in the work that they do. What the police have told us is that while there is an existing federal witness protection program, it is very costly, and it takes a very long time to have a person admitted into that program.

Now, Alberta is changing very quickly right now. Criminal investigations with respect to organized crime and gang violence are pieces of work that need to be responded to in a very different way than they have been in the past, Mr. Speaker. What the police have found is that they have the opportunity now to identify people who might be prepared to come forward and provide evidence with respect to gang activity and violence, but very often these people feel that they don't have 48 hours, three or four days, to think about exactly what their choices are and what their options are.

What the police have told us is that they need to have a system in place that allows them to offer protection to individuals while they make up their mind about how they're going to conduct their affairs, Mr. Speaker. They need some time where they can have some protection and think about what choices they want to make with respect to providing evidence. This is usually with respect to investigations that are taking place in the heat of the moment.

Now, the reason that this is so important is that while we have a federal program that is funded federally and we have provincial activity that takes place right now where the police do, wherever they can, work in co-operation amongst jurisdictions in the province, between the RCMP and other municipal policing forces, and they do very often now have the opportunity to assist people by removing them to a place where they are able to have a couple of days to think about what they want to do, they have not felt that there's been a system in place that actually acknowledges what the activity is, Mr. Speaker.

If we actually look to what this legislation does, it's putting in place a process that ensures that when people decide that they want to avail themselves of the protection of the police so that they can make a decision, there's actually an agency in place and there are people in place who can look to the situation, take a look at the nature of the crime that these people may be providing evidence with respect to, ensure that the people who may be witnesses have their rights protected within the system.

You will see in the legislation – and we can get to that in Committee of the Whole, which, I would suggest to the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, is the place to ask some of these questions – that people who may decide to be witnesses have the ability to opt in or opt out of the program. What we're doing is taking it from what it has been, which is a function of policing operations in the province, into a system where a witness can take a look, make a decision, enter the program, and at their choice decide when they may choose to exit the program, Mr. Speaker.

There's a lot of activity that's going on in the province right now with respect to this. Police are always co-operating with RCMP, with other federal counterparts across jurisdictions to ensure that witnesses, where possible, have some protection while they make up their mind about how to testify or whether to testify. What this does is it provides clarity and a framework that is no longer completely in control of the policing agencies, which is what the policing agencies have told us will improve the system, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek under 29(2)(a).

Mrs. Forsyth: Yes. Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I want to thank the minister for standing up and speaking to some of our issues. I think that what's important about democracy is clarity. Some of that clarity wasn't so clear prior to us getting up and asking questions. What the minister has provided is, of course, some clarity, and we appreciate that.

A couple of things. I was madly taking notes. The minister is exactly right that in committee we have the opportunity to take this one step further and ask. Again, some of my concerns – and I addressed that in the beginning when I spoke up – are about the federal legislation. The minister spoke very passionately that the reason why the federal wasn't working was because it was costly and it was the length to get into the witness program, if I understood her correctly. I guess I'm going to ask the minister again to respond to: what is she doing at the federal level to ensure that the federal government has this ability to be tough on crime? How is she going to move that forward and say, "Look, we know it's costly, and we know it's lengthy to get in"? Quite frankly, that's inexcusable if we're trying to protect not only Canadians but Albertans.

If a province like Alberta can come up with a bill or a law that is going to, one, have police identify criminals who are prepared to come forth and, two, the ability to provide them witness protection in a very short period of time, as she indicated, if they need protection for 48 hours to think about it, I am having trouble, quite frankly, understanding why the federal government can't do that. It makes perfect sense and perfect logic to me.

If I may, Mr. Speaker, I want to on the record thank the minister for standing up and speaking very passionately about how much she believes in Bill 11, the witness protection act. I appreciate, quite frankly, her clarity, and I look forward to some more debate when we get to committee. I think it's important as an MLA to be able to answer these questions for my constituents on why we're bringing this forward. I think the debate and the discussion have been, quite frankly, in my mind, very good. I just wanted to thank the minister. I'm sure she'll provide the answers in regard to the federal. I look forward to hearing more about how the police have identified, quite frankly, criminals in this province that have said that they're prepared to come forward but that they just want that little bit of a safety zone so that they can think about whether they're going to testify against their associates.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Does the hon. minister wish to respond?

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The first thing I'd like to say, just to clarify, is that although this is legislation that is available to the police, if we are fortunate enough to pass this legislation, to protect people who may have been involved in criminal activity and are coming forward as witnesses, it is also a system that's in place for any person who may be a witness to a crime. So I wouldn't want this legislation to be characterized as legislation that's being put in place to protect only people that have been involved in criminal activity but any person who may be a witness and may need to make a decision about whether or not to provide information to the police to carry on with the investigation and the prosecution.

I know that very often people in this House and in this province have heard comment particularly with respect to the passing of federal legislation. I would carry that on to the federal witness protection program, that we do see that as these programs become bigger and are more national in focus that the legislation the federal government may want to pass with respect to a law and order agenda needs to impact more jurisdictions in more ways, that we as a provincial government are quite frustrated sometimes by the length of time it takes to do this. What we can do and what we continue to do is to urge our federal colleagues and to support them wherever possible in improving the system, passing legislation. The hon. member may know that I was fortunate enough to have the opportunity last fall to appear before a Senate committee with respect to two-for-one legislation to deal with some of these issues.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary – or Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Calgary? Oh, man.

Mrs. Forsyth: Hey. What's wrong with Calgary?

Mr. Anderson: Nothing is wrong with Calgary. I just don't want you guys getting any ideas that you're going to be annexing us or anything like that.

It's an honour to stand and speak in favour of Bill 11, the Witness Security Act. I also want to commend the Justice minister for bringing this legislation forward as well as the Solicitor General with Bill 10. I think that this government overall has done a very good job on the Justice file. I think we're moving in the right direction, and I think that's something that as opposition we will continue to support.

We're going to have some differences on Bill 12, and we'll discuss those because as with anything, we can go overboard, but Bill 11, for sure, is a solid bill. Obviously, for the benefit of my constituents I'd like to speak to why I support this bill and maybe bring some interesting factoids to their attention. This act will complement the current federal witness protection program, which is interesting because the federal program was actually put in place in 1996. Doing research on this bill, I was just amazed that it took until 1996 to have a federal witness protection act, which is really mind-blowing. The one in the United States was brought in in 1970. It took 26 more years to bring in one in Canada. I don't know if that's because we're more safe up here from organized crime or if it's because we're a little bit naive or because our justice system was lacking through the '80s and '90s. I'm not sure. It's probably a combination of things.

It is good to see Alberta take a leadership role in this. You know, everyone has heard these stories. You hear them in the States from time to time where people will be witness to a crime, and they'll just stand around, and they'll not do anything about it, or they're afraid to talk with police. You see this all the time in some of the larger centres in the United States. I'm sure it happens here, too, where people essentially will be afraid. I mean, they will be absolutely petrified to come forward because they know that they will be marked men and women if they were to do that. What happens is that people's hearts almost become cold to some of the crime in those areas. It's almost a survival tool because they have to kind of become callous and cold to witnessing crime because it might drive them crazy if they care too much about it. So they kind of have to compartmentalize it and stick it on the shelf because if they were to come forward, they would die. That's often how it happens.

Even though we have a witness protection program in Canada and the United States, it doesn't mean that it gets used a lot. I mean, it's an expensive program. There are still situations where people are still afraid to come forward, so I'm happy to see that we're taking a leadership role in this. I will say, too, that there are all types of examples in the United States with regard to this program and how effective it's been. Obviously, our program here in Alberta is going to be a little bit different if this law passes than the one in the United States because we have our federal legislation.

Basically, the witness protection program came out of essentially trying to deal with the Mob in the United States, organized crime down there. Everyone has seen, of course, The Godfather movies and some of the things that happen there, where basically the government needed to prosecute these criminals, but they just couldn't find people willing to testify against the Mob. Surprise, surprise. You know, you have that classic scene in one of those movies where there's a guy who wakes up, and there's a horse head in his bed with him. It's scary, very scary stuff. That's why they introduced legislation, because of the intimidation that was going on and, of course, the killing that was going on of witnesses who wanted to leave the Mob and otherwise would leave the Mob, and they wouldn't testify against their former bosses because they weren't willing to take the risk.

Since 1970 7,500 witnesses and more than 9,500 witnesses' family members have entered this program and have been protected and relocated and given new identities via the U.S. Marshals Service. It has had a lot of effect, obviously, for those 7,500 people and their 9,500 family members because I don't doubt that many of those individuals would not have survived had they testified against their former bosses or would never have left and would have continued on in the crime. So this is an absolutely essential piece of Justice infrastructure that we need.

There is a problem we have in Canada, and it would be nice to see the Justice minister speak to this because she probably more than anyone else here would understand it because of the circles that she travels in with other Justice ministers around the country. There was a recent Italian mobster named Francesco Di Carlo. He admitted to the media several months ago that Canada was essentially known in the organized crime community as a bit of a safe haven for organized criminals. I mean, obviously, I don't know if we want to take the word of an organized criminal on whether that, in fact, is true. It does seem, though, that organized criminals are taking advantage of our lax laws in Canada on organized crime.

Obviously, a lot of this is not under the purview of the provincial Justice minister, so I'm not laying blame, but I really am curious to see what we're doing to alter some of this federal legislation. I really do believe that it needs to be stronger, that we do need some very low- or no-tolerance policies for organized crime. A lot of these guys we just kind of let run around. I mean, you look at the Hells Angels, you look at some of these other groups, and essentially they're out there, and they're kind of doing their thing.

We've tied up our police force and our justice system so much and made it so difficult to get prosecutions on some of these individuals or, once we prosecute them, to keep them in jail that it really has brought our justice system into a bit of disrepute. I wonder what the reasons are for that. Is it because our judges are too lax in their sentencing? Is it because our laws need more mandatory minimums and need to be tougher? Is it because we're not putting enough police resources into it? Is it because we're tying their hands with too much procedure and too many loopholes that essentially allow these criminals to walk free early?

The Justice minister talked earlier about the two-for-one sentencing and how that has been a big problem where people will get credit for time served. She has obviously talked a lot about addressing that issue. It would be nice to have a good discussion about some of the things that this government is doing to move that file forward, understanding, of course, the limits that they have. It being mostly a federal jurisdiction, there is very little that we can do as a province, but there obviously are some things we can do.

I wonder if it would be in our interest for the Justice minister to maybe put forth a kind of a plan or a blueprint for the type of justice system that we would like to see in Canada, just, you know, in your spare time, Minister. I know you have so much time. You put something together to that effect and then decide how we would like to arrive at this justice system. So figure out what type of provincial laws need to be changed, figure out what federal laws need to be changed, and really proactively pressure our federal MPs to change those laws.

I mean, maybe we could be a little bit more proactive with the type of justice system that we want to see in Alberta even though we're not in complete control of our destiny on that issue. I would like to see that. Hopefully, if we had a good enough kind of master plan of what we want our justice system to look like in the end, some of the reforms we would like to see, and we got other provinces, B.C. and Saskatchewan to start, to buy into this, it could be quite a powerful thing.

I know that the Justice minister is always talking about working with other jurisdictions. The previous Solicitor General talked about that as well, about working with other governments in pursuit of the same goals on defeating organized crime, gang violence, all those types of things. I think that would be good, but it would be nice to kind of have a blueprint for what success looks like. I mean, we have some recommendations from task forces on some of the things we need to do, but I don't know if we really know what our goal is. Do we have any goals? What is it going to look like when we come out the other end? What are we trying to achieve? We seem to kind of sometimes run around and put out fires rather than have a proactive approach.

I'm assuming the safe communities task force fits into that. I'm assuming the Safe Communities Secretariat fits in there, but again I don't think the average Albertan, let alone the average member in this Assembly, really knows what the end goal looks like for the justice system in Alberta. Obviously, this is probably a piece of what the solution is, but I think that, again, we need to figure out what the master plan is.

Those are some of the things that I'd like to see answered by the Justice minister either now or in Committee of the Whole. Other good things about other – and I'll bring some of these questions up in Committee of the Whole, so I won't read them out here.

I do want to end by saying again that I absolutely support this legislation. I support the intent behind the legislation. I think that the Justice minister and the former Solicitor General have done an excellent job over the last two years in bringing forth piece of legislation after piece of legislation that is making our communities safer. Again, congratulations to them.

Those are my remarks, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, does any other member wish to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood to speak on the bill.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I just want to speak very briefly to Bill 11. I think that the goals of the legislation are laudable. The protection of witnesses and particularly those who witness crimes committed by gangs is very important as intimidation is often the cause of people failing to testify and thereby preventing convictions of people who are criminals and dangerous people often as well. Strengthening the witness protection is an excellent goal, and I think that the bill does a relatively good job of doing that. This is, I think, something that is needed.

I note, Mr. Speaker, that previously a similar type of legislation was introduced in Manitoba and I believe also in Saskatchewan. I certainly think that there is a growing body of crime-fighting legislation in this province that was pioneered particularly in the province of Manitoba. Of course, the NDP government there has been a leader in this country in developing stronger legislation to increase community safety, to ensure that the police can do a good job, and to make sure that criminals are constrained from carrying out their activities with impunity. Because of the effectiveness of the program in Manitoba and probably, I think, in Saskatchewan as well, I think that this piece of legislation is a good one, and we're prepared to give it our support.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Any other members wish to speak?

[Motion carried; Bill 11 read a second time]

Bill 12 Body Armour Control Act

[Adjourned debate March 17: Mr. Quest]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, it's a great pleasure to rise and speak in favour of Bill 12, the Body Armour Control Act. On balance this is a good bill that looks to fight some of the criminal element that has been moving into Alberta. It's meant primarily to be directed towards gang members and individuals who are looking to, I guess, seemingly do nefarious deeds across this province with impunity and feel protected from doing their various deeds by wearing this body armour. What we've learned from police officers is that this has become a growing gang symbol that both identifies and serves to be almost a little bit of a machismo sort of thing. They wear it to strut around and throw their nose up at authority and to almost enhance their reputations in the community.

I also say that on balance it is a good thing because there have been some rumblings from some civil libertarian groups as well as some elements of the criminal defence bar that suggest that this bill is too much of an infringement on civil liberties in the fact that people should have a choice to purchase this body armour, that they should be allowed to buy it, and it should be within their own purview to purchase this stuff and to wear it to protect themselves. I understand those arguments. Still, on balance I believe this bill does more to protect society than it does to erode our civil liberties. In this instance I am not too worried that this is going to do anything to bring down the democratic state that exists here in Canada. You know, one never knows. One has to be on the lookout for encroaching on that civil liberty. But in this case I do not believe that we have that much to worry about.

You know, this bill also gives police another opportunity, another investigative tool. If they find an individual who has this stuff on and they don't meet one of the exemptions, that leads them to believe that this is illegal. They can continue their investigations. They can use this tool as a further means to isolate known gang associates from their communities.

I appreciate this bill and the object of the legislation. It's going to make it more difficult for gang members and other criminals to possess and obtain this body armour. The legislation will allow police to perform search and seizure activities when they believe there will be probable cause that an individual is in possession of this body armour. That's a good thing.

The legislation will still allow individuals who have a professional reason for possessing body armour to have and obtain it. We're talking about some of our security guards, some of our police forces, some of the other individuals who are involved in dangerous activities. I think it allows them a legitimate purpose to have the body armour. I think that's a good thing that we can do.

There was a sense when seemingly jumping to the question phase of this legislation a little earlier – you know, I think I understand why it is there, but there is an exemption for individuals who, merely by the factor of owning a gun permit, are given an ability to, I guess, possess this body armour. Although I understand, I go: there are other ways to identify a gang member a lot of times, criminal records and all those sorts of things here. For a person to order a firearm, a check has to go through many of these things that would weed out gang members. It just seemed to me to be a little bit of a one-off just to have that point-blank exemption.

If there were some of those more valid reasons – I understand people who are hunting. I've heard now from hunters who want this when they're out hunting. Maybe it's the Dick Cheney rule. You know, when you're going out, swinging a bunch of wild turkeys with your buddy, it's better to have body armour on so you don't get shot in the behind. Maybe this is good. Maybe that's why we have the Dick Cheney amendment here. Maybe that's what it is: to protect our hunters from themselves. It was just sort of like some banter going around in the office, you know. But on the whole if I get some clarification on that, I think it's good legislation.

Actually, I thought the three bills that were brought in here – bills 10, 11, and 12 – were moving in the right direction. I think it keeps us on the offensive on some of these things. The minister is working, seemingly bringing in a lot of things that the police want, which is a good thing. If we can make some changes to the way policing is done and work with the police officers to eradicate or try and limit gangs and crime in our society, I think that is a good thing.

So I'll leave that one question out there. It's a fairly good bill. It was an honour for me to speak on it today, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to add a few comments. I appreciate the comments from the Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

I actually received a call a couple of weeks ago on this topic from a constituent of mine who lives not far from me. This person was a gun owner, and I fully support the rights of responsible gun owners. He had indicated that he was worried that he would not have access to this. I took some minutes to explain to him what the problems were that we were having with gangs, in particular in the city of Calgary, how these gangs would actually go and wear this body armour almost as a way of taunting other people, almost as a way of status.

I also explained to him that the legislation in British Columbia was very similar, if not identical. He actually understood exactly where I was coming from on this issue. I think that it's incumbent upon all members to go and explain that we're not trying to go and deny someone his civil liberties, as the Member for Calgary-Buffalo has talked about. Rather, we are actually trying to reasonably curtail the activities of organized crime, the activities of gangs. This is not the be-all and end-all, Mr. Speaker; rather, it is a piece of the puzzle.

I want to just talk briefly about a particular situation that happened in my constituency. We all know of the murder of Keni Su'a and several other people at a restaurant on 94th Avenue and Macleod that happened on January 1, 2009. That really opened up my eyes to the fact that gang activity is not just a downtown issue like in the Member for Calgary-Buffalo's constituency. It's a matter that attracts all attention and demands vigilance throughout all facets of our province, not just in these downtown areas.

I represent a suburban constituency, and we had murders right there, just blocks from where I live. It really shakes a person up, specifically, what's going on. This is a piece of the puzzle, and I wanted to commend the Minister of Justice and Attorney General for introducing this, but I also want to issue a challenge. Where that gang shooting happened on 94th and Macleod is on the border between the constituency of mine and the Member for Calgary-Glenmore. I appreciate a lot of his comments about crime and justice, many of which I completely endorse.

This is something, clearly, that goes beyond party lines. I am agreeing with a member of the Liberal caucus on this as well, so I'm hoping that I can work with the Member for Calgary-Glenmore just toe to toe on this issue and to do what we can to stamp out gang activity in the city of Calgary and in the province of Alberta.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, hon. members, may we briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

Introduction of Guests (reversion)

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce today in the House somebody I've known most of my life, somebody that was my political adviser in high school as I ran for prime minister of Lester B. Pearson high school. I must say that we succeeded, Mr. Speaker. Our party was the new world order based on the world wrestling federation, at that time the most popular movement. That adviser is none other than Robby "Rabbit" Ravinder Hundal. I would ask Robby to receive the traditional warm welcome of our Legislature.

The Acting Speaker: Next speaker. Anyone wish to speak? The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, right after I just said all these nice things about the Justice minister and all the great legislation that she's bringing forth, I'm going to say that I totally disagree with this next bill, Bill 12, the body armour act.

You know, it's a difficult balance that you need to create in society between fighting crime and maintaining civil liberties. There's a very delicate balance, and you can really get it out of whack if you start going down a certain track. This bill does that. I know that, obviously, the police are asking for this, and I respect that position. I respect that they want that. The police also asked for the gun registry. They're in favour of that as well. We always want to make sure we're giving the police, our men and women in uniform, the tools that they need to do their job and to keep us safe, but we can go over the line, and this bill takes us over that line, in my view.

We just fought as a province for years along with other governments to repeal the long gun registry, and the reason we did that is because we found that it was a completely ineffective tool for keeping guns out of the hands of criminals. All it did is implement a very onerous and wasteful bureaucracy on your average farmer or gun owner. There was just no reason for it. It didn't take guns out of the hands of criminals, so it was a huge expense and for nothing in return.

This bill essentially does the same thing as the gun registry. You cannot own body armour unless you have a permit. [interjection] You know, it's funny, the Education minister making light: who wears body armour? I actually know a couple of women that do when they go for walks. It's actually true. It's not Kevlar, but it's a stab-proof vest that they use. They're worried, of course, of being taken advantage of and being stabbed. These are people I know, so there are people that do it. If the Minister of Education doesn't know anyone, I guess that's the way it is, but some people do use this.

I guess my point is that, you know, we were so against the gun registry here because of how unnecessary it was and because it did infringe on our civil liberties and the rights of gun owners. We were against that, and that's actually a weapon you can use to hurt somebody, a gun. I think that's pretty clear. We're going to, essentially, make it illegal to own body armour, which you cannot use as a weapon. What are you going to do? Throw the body armour at somebody? No. It's not a weapon. It's a purely defensive piece of equipment that you can use.

This, I believe, is an infringement on our civil liberties. This goes too far. We have the right in our society to protect ourselves; that simple. In Canada we have a little bit of a different way of doing it than the United States, where they've kind of taken it to the nth degree. We have bans on handguns, and that's good. We have these other things, but there is still a line there. We still have civil liberties here with regard to the ability to protect ourselves.

Now, people say: oh, well, criminals go into bars or gangs go into bars, and they wear these vests, and that just intimidates people. Well, okay. If somebody is caught with a vest while they're involved in a crime, when they're assaulting somebody, when they're involved in a drive-by shooting or whatever it is, or they start a bar fight and they have this on, sure. Put a penalty on that. Increase their sentence by two years. Make it something that aggravates the offence, whatever. You can do that. But you don't ban protective vests from the average citizen. It goes way, way, way over the line.

What are we going to? Just because someone gets intimidated by something, we're going to ban it? Like, the Minister of Infrastructure has got that big beard on, and that's kind of intimidating. Are we going to ban big beards in bars? I mean, come on. It's silly. You know, somebody comes in with a shirt hiked up here, and they're showing off their muscles to everybody. That intimidates somebody, so we're going to ban that? I mean, it's just juvenile to do this.

Ms Pastoor: That sounds nice.

Mr. Anderson: That's right. That would be a good thing. We would never want to ban that – right? – hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Anyway, I do think it is absolutely going over. You know, you're taking a sledgehammer to this when all you need is a fly swatter. It just doesn't make sense. I think that this government needs to think that through a little bit. There are people that this does affect. These are not the types of people that are going to come and march on the Legislature Grounds because some of them are embarrassed that they use the stuff, that they use the equipment, the protection. Some of the people have privacy issues. They don't want to say: I wear a knife vest out. This isn't as small a number of people as individuals in this Assembly might think. So that would be one thing.

In fact, you know, it's funny. The person who invented Kevlar was actually a pizza delivery man, if you can believe it, by the name of Richard Davis in the 1970s. While delivering pizza, unfortunately, tragically – well, it was good that he survived this – he was attacked, and he ended up killing his attackers. There were three of them. He actually had a gun with him and ended up shooting them. I don't know. For whatever reason it was – I would assume because he thought that that was not a very good thing to have to be forced to do – one of his solutions to that was establishing a company called Second Chance. He started it out of his garage in the 1970s, and since then he's manufactured these vests, and they've saved thousands of lives of police officers and other people through the years. The very inventor of this invention did it because he was attacked in a public setting randomly, so he went about and did that.

You know, there are some pretty rough areas in some places in Calgary, in certain areas. If somebody wants to go for a walk and walk their dog and they're worried because they think they might be targeted for whatever reason, should they not be able to wear that type of protection? What's wrong with it? There's nothing wrong with it, and I think that to ban it – I mean, it's like the gun registry, too. Did the gun registry cause criminals not to have guns? Do you think that a gang member is going to go and register his Kevlar vest? I mean, come on. He's not going to register his Kevlar vest. Why would he do that? [interjection] Exactly. He's not going to do it, so this is just a total bureaucratic waste of time.

An Hon. Member: Soft on crime.

Mr. Anderson: That's right, hon. member. I am soft on crime. Exactly. That makes a lot of sense.

You know, it absolutely goes beyond the line. Let's start bringing things back to where we are discussing what we should be doing that's really going to stop crime. For example, why don't we start talking about – oh, I don't know – mandatory minimum sentences for some of our offences in this country? We're talking about it. Well, let's actually do something about it, okay?

An Hon. Member: That's federal law.

Mr. Anderson: No, it's not all federal. There are mandatory minimum sentences we could do here for certain offences. I'm thinking of drinking and driving, things like that. After you do it five times, maybe you should get some kind of minimum mandatory sentence for that, okay? There are things that we can do. [interjection] Again, the Education minister doesn't seem to know how serious drinking and driving is, which is a little alarming. We'll definitely have to talk about that.

Going back to the subject matter of the bill. I'm assuming that's why you're on the edge of your seat. I think that we've got to realize that self-defence is a basic human right, and having a defensive piece of equipment – I mean, what are we going to do? What if people start wearing helmets into bars? Are we going to say that you can't wear a helmet because it protects you in a fight? There are so many different things that you could say that you could apply this law to on other pieces of equipment. It doesn't do the job. It will do nothing to help the safety of Albertans, nothing whatsoever. All it will do is waste money, and it will cause ordinary citizens to have to go through getting a permit and all that sort of thing: do I fall under one of these exemptions, blah, blah, blah? That's all it's going to do. It's just going to annoy people, and it's going to cost money.

Sometimes I feel I have to wear a Kevlar vest after being in here every day. I mean, it's tough. Sometimes I'm worried. So we all fear for our safety once in a while, Mr. Speaker, and we've got to make sure that we protect that basic human right.

The money, too. Setting up any kind of permit system costs money. I don't know how much this permit system will cost. If government is involved in it, I'm sure it'll cost a lot. Whether it's $100,000 or $1 million or $2 million or $3 million, let's spend it on more police officers, or let's increase the number of ICE teams that we have battling child pornography. I mean, let's use the money in a way that's actually going to help protect people, that's actually going to help protect children and real individuals. You know what this is? This is a let's do something to look like we're doing something law. That's what it is. You know: we've got to bring in a law and order agenda; we've got to do something that is impressive. So they bring this in, and it's just painful to watch.

Mr. Hancock: It's painful to listen to.

Mr. Anderson: Well, you can leave. You're welcome to leave,

Minister of Education. There's nothing keeping you here if you don't like what you're hearing.

What I would say, too, going back to that earlier argument that was yelled across the way, is that we can actually spend this money improving our laws here; for example, drinking and driving. Yeah, it's a Criminal Code offence. It's also an offence under our traffic laws. That's where you could actually do something provincially with mandatory rules and requirements to cause people to rethink some of their actions. Doing this just absolutely will have no effect whatsoever.

You know, I would challenge. I would say: can somebody explain to me on that side of the House how this is any different from the gun registry? Just what's the difference other than with one you can shoot someone and kill them, and the other one is a purely defensive piece of equipment? What is the difference between asking someone to register their long gun and asking them to register their defensive vest? Are you in favour of the long gun registry? Come on, Minister. You know you're not. So why on earth would you be in favour of a bill like this, which is essentially setting up a long gun registry for safety vests in Alberta? There's no reason for this whatsoever.

I look forward to some of the questions. I know that the Minister of Education is probably raring to go with some questions. But I absolutely will be voting against this bill. I think it's an infringement against civil liberties, and I think that there's no reason why the average person shouldn't be able to protect themselves using a stab vest or bulletproof vest or anything like that.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I find it funny that earlier on in the afternoon this member got up and was so concerned about what a bad province this was going to be if the government just kept spending money and money and money. I'm just wondering because, you know, it's going to have a huge impact on the future of his children. I'm just wondering if he's less concerned about the amount of money that the government is spending as opposed to some of the stuff that's happening on our streets as far as gangs that are shooting each other.

I'm not sure this member honestly understands why these members wear these bulletproof vests. They don't wear them to intimidate anybody. I don't think a bulletproof vest intimidates anybody. They wear them because they go out there and they shoot and spray bullets everywhere in an attempt to kill each other. Unfortunately, we see a number of examples where innocent bystanders are hurt. I'm wondering: how does this jive? You're talking about wanting to make Alberta a better place for your kids. Tell me: wouldn't this make Alberta a better place for your kids to have this in place so that these guys couldn't run around spraying bullets everywhere and killing innocent people?

Mr. Anderson: That was probably one of the most illogical arguments I've ever heard in my life, but I will attempt to address it. Mr. Speaker, absolutely, we should have . . .

The Acting Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, but in accordance with Standing Order 64(3) the chair is required to put the question to the House on the appropriation bill on the Order Paper for second reading.

[The voice vote indicated the motion for second reading carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 5:45 p.m.]

[Ten minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

For the motion:

[Motion carried; Bill 15 read a second time]

Bill 12
Body Armour Control Act

[Debate adjourned: Mr. Anderson speaking]

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, there are three minutes left under Standing Order 29(2)(a).

Mr. Anderson: I notice that the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill is talking a lot about kids lately. He brings them up a lot. I'm wondering if there's something on his mind. He keeps bringing those things up.

You know, what he has to understand is that correlation is not causation. I think it's funny that he would say that outlawing, essentially, or permitting bulletproof vests is going to somehow stop people from spraying bullets at each other in gangs. I mean, I don't understand how on earth he makes the leap there.

You know, hopefully, one day if I want to have more kids, I'll have a daughter. If that daughter was going out for a jog or out for a walk and she wanted to wear a stab vest or something like that, how would it make it better for me to make that more difficult for her to get that vest? I don't understand what the correlation could possibly be between those two, between making Alberta safer and effectively making a vest registry. I'm completely clueless.

Obviously, the hon. member would like to see the gun registry kept in place because, surely, that would help with guns. I mean, those are exactly the same arguments that you hear from the Bloc Québécois and the Liberals. You hear those exact same arguments in favour of the gun registry that you're hearing in favour of this bill. The only difference is that a vest isn't dangerous to anybody, and a gun is. That's the only difference between the two. I think that should answer the question regarding that. We should just be increasing the overall penalties that we impose on people for using those in a crime. That's where we should be focusing our efforts.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, it is now 6 o'clock, and the House stands adjourned until tomorrow afternoon at 1:30.

[The Assembly adjourned at 6 p.m. to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Wednesday, March 24, 2010

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Welcome.

Let us pray. Grant us daily awareness of the precious gift of life which has been given to us. As Members of this Legislative Assembly we dedicate our lives anew to the service of our province and of our country. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a good friend of mine, His Worship Alan Hyland, who is seated in your gallery. Mr. Hyland served as a Member of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta. He was number 497 for 18 years. He was first elected on March 26, 1975, and re-elected in 1979 and 1982 for the constituency of Cypress. He was re-elected for the constituency of Cypress-Redcliff in 1986 and 1989, and he served until 1993. That same constituency is now Cypress-Medicine Hat, which I have the honour to represent. Mr. Hyland is also currently the mayor of Bow Island. I would like all members to join me in welcoming Mr. Hyland once again to our Legislature.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly some very special guests on behalf of the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations, as she is out of the House today. I would like to welcome the grade 6 class of Mills Haven school, and I'll read into the record the parent volunteers and the teachers. We have two teachers, Mrs. Irene Kolomijchuk and Mr. John Murphy. We have parent helpers Mrs. Sandra Chomyc, Mrs. Roxanne Miskiw, Mrs. Corinne Wiseman, Mr. Neil Ganske, Mrs. Jackie Francis, Mr. David Hauf, Mrs. Jenn Matz, and Mrs. Christine Maletz. Please join me as I ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Vandermeer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and to all members of this Assembly students from the Abbott elementary school, located in my constituency. The students are accompanied by their teachers, Adele Edmondson and Nicole Christian, and parent helper Cheryl Johner. They are seated in the public gallery, and I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood I am pleased to introduce to you and through you 15 students here from R.J. Scott elementary school, which is within the constituency of Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. They are here today to observe what's going on in our Legislature, and they are sitting, I believe, in the public gallery. They are accompanied by their teacher, Miss Robyn Davies, and I would ask that they now stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour today to rise and introduce to you and through you a good friend and a prominent member of the community, Mr. Radhe Gupta, president and CEO of the Rohit Group of Companies, seated in the members' gallery today. At the Canadian Home Builders' Association's annual awards of excellence the Rohit Group was recognized with many awards, including the most prestigious Edmonton home builder of the year. The Rohit Group is also known for being very active in building affordable housing units, as seen in the Greenview community. He is joined today by his wife, Krishna Gupta – please rise as I call out your names – his son Rohit Gupta with his wife, Neelam Kainth, as well as associates Russell Dauk and Dennis Mack. They're good constituents of Edmonton-Whitemud as well. Please give them the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Berger: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and to all members of this Assembly two gentlemen who have been very active volunteers in the pursuit of promoting safe and environmentally sustainable recreational trails and trail use in Alberta for all user groups, from hikers right through to snowmobiles. Their vision is to provide the opportunity for people to view and enjoy Alberta's unending beauty and natural landscapes through responsible trail development and use. I would ask them to rise as I introduce them: representing the recreation trail user coalition, from the constituency of Drayton Valley-Calmar, Mr. Brent Hodgson; and representing the southwest trails advisory council, from my constituency of Livingstone-Macleod, Mr. Glen French. I ask the Assembly to give them the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very happy today to be able to introduce four great Camrose volunteers and community leaders who are seated in the members' gallery. They're here today to have lunch with me to discuss the Bailey Theatre project, which is the restoration of Alberta's oldest performing arts theatre. I'm going to be making a member's statement a little bit later about this theatre, but right now I'd ask that they all stand as I call their names and remain standing. They're the president of the Bailey Theatre Society, Dan Olofson; vice-president, Ross Shuman; director, Gerry Piro; and architectural adviser, David Roth. I'd ask that they receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed an honour today to rise and introduce some wonderful constituents and dear friends of mine, the first of whom is Joginder Brar, who is a resident of the fabulous constituency of Calgary-Montrose; as well as Mr. Lakhvir Singh Brar, who conducts business in Calgary-Montrose; Mr. Jatinder Singh Tatla; Mr. Satish Narang; and Mr.

Harjinder Ahluwalia. They have risen already, and I'd ask all members of the Assembly to give them a warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two brilliant young students from the University of Alberta. The first is Kevin Tam. He is the outgoing president of the University of Alberta Conservative Association. The second is Adam Risling. He is the incoming president of the U of A Conservative Association. These two young men are fourth- and third-year political science students with aspirations of careers in politics and possibly becoming Members of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta. I'm hoping that one of them will take my seat, and then there will be another one of them who will need another seat. These students are our future leaders, hoping to bring change and inspiration to the people of Alberta. With young people like these two gentlemen, our future is bright indeed. I encourage all members of the Assembly to listen to them because they might replace them one day. I'd like the members to give these young people a warm welcome, and I'd ask Adam and Kevin to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

1:40 Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Lauren Woolstencroft

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today is a very proud moment for us. I rise to recognize the recent accomplishments of the daughter of a former Legislature Building staffer. Dorothy worked in Premier Lougheed's office from 1975 until 1979, when she and her family, Mark and Frank, relocated to Calgary. Two years later Dorothy's daughter was born. She was missing her left arm below the elbow and both legs below the knees. Dorothy says that her daughter got her prosthetic arm at six months. "It was always said to us that if she thinks of herself with two equal arms, that's how she'll grow up. The same with her legs. She grew up with that idea. She's very strong." And Dorothy Woolstencroft's daughter Lauren surely is.

At age 14 Lauren started skiing. In 1998 she joined Canada's para-alpine ski team, winning over 50 medals, including eight World Championship titles. In recent weeks Lauren Woolstencroft has been a media hit. Twenty-eight-year-old Lauren triumphantly scored five gold medal wins during the 2010 Vancouver Paralympics. Despite what many of us may view as a challenge, to Lauren her powerful spirit has shown us all that it can be done.

Mr. Speaker, I stand to give recognition to a tremendous Paralympic athlete and offer heartiest congratulations to Lauren Woolstencroft. This is a proud moment for this Assembly. To Dorothy and the entire family: we commend you for your support in Lauren's life accomplishments. Best wishes, Lauren. Maybe we will see you in Sochi in 2014.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Bailey Theatre Society

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This coming Saturday is World Theatre Day, something that probably a lot of us didn't realize. Theatres across Alberta have been a vital component of their communities for many, many years, and Camrose is no exception. I can remember as a kid spending a lot of time in the local theatre, the Bailey Theatre. Besides watching movies, we did stuff like lick on suckers and try to stick them to the screen and dropping popcorn from the balcony. Then there was always going out on a date.

The Bailey Theatre was originally called the David Theatre. It has been an institution in Camrose for over a hundred years. It is actually Alberta's oldest performing arts theatre. In its early days it was home to vaudeville performances, silent movies, and in 1935 it had its first talkie. It continued to be an integral part of the community during the war years, providing entertainment and dances and so on. However, it kind of fell on tough times in the mid-1990s, when a multiplex opened in town. Eventually, it could no longer compete and was forced to close.

But there has been a dedicated group of people working to restore this theatre for years, and they are getting closer. The Bailey Theatre Society is a nonprofit society formed in 1996, and they've been working hard to open the doors again. Due to their tireless efforts this oldest performing arts theatre in Alberta may soon have a new lease on life. It's an Alberta gem, not just a Camrose gem. When it opens, it'll be a tourist destination, and beyond that it will again be the heart and soul of the community.

I want to thank the people who've been working so hard to make this a reality. I'm looking forward to attending many performances there myself, and I invite all of my colleagues to come to Camrose and have a look.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

School Closures

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Fifteen public schools have already been closed in Edmonton since 2002. Almost 7,000 student spaces have been eliminated. Enough already. This afternoon I ask again that the Edmonton public school board halt all actions to close the five public schools in Edmonton's central neighbourhoods that they are contemplating voting on closing next month.

There are two reasons for my request. First, a proper assessment of the new census data collected last year by the city of Edmonton has not been done. This data reveals an increase in the number of preschoolers residing in our city. We have seen an increase of over 9,200 preschoolers, or a 30 per cent increase, in the last four years. The conclusion that must be reached is that there will be more students in the very near future, not less, and not all of them live on the edge of the city.

Second, the province is finally making changes to the flawed utilization rate. These changes could be announced on May 3, less than three weeks after the planned vote on these public school closures. Why use a flawed utilization formula, which penalizes the very schools under threat of closure?

Citizens have asked me directly what they pay locally and what we pay together across the city in education property taxes. For instance, locally Capilano district pays annually over $1 million in school taxes, but they could lose their school under the Edmonton public school system. Edmontonians last year paid $316 million in school taxes, an increase of $55 million, or a 20 per cent increase, in the last five years. Taxpayers cannot understand with these increases why it is necessary to close more public schools. In fact, many are considering as a form of tax protest supporting the separate system.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Fraser Institute Elementary School Report Card

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Fraser Institute has just released its 2010 report card on Alberta's elementary schools, which rates and ranks schools' performances primarily using grades from standardized achievement tests. This report has elicited applause from some but skepticism from others as to the usefulness of these rankings. Obviously, some schools do better than others, and that's for a number of differences. We cannot just simplify our approach to outcome measurement.

However, it is my personal opinion that this report card is not an end in itself but a beginning of a process that should lead us to ask some very important questions about education in our province and in each individual school no matter whether they're at the top of the rankings or at the bottom. In fact, I believe these questions will be different for each individual school in its unique context and bring to light much broader and substantive information about what works and what doesn't work in our schools and what success looks like for each individual student. Facilitating a comparison is not a bad thing if we maintain perspective. It can help schools and school boards with their decision-making, and it can help students and parents as well.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to congratulate the many schools that attained a high standard, particularly those in the Calgary region, which comprise 66 per cent of the top 5 per cent ranked schools. Of particular interest for me was the Capitol Hill elementary school, which is located in my constituency of Calgary-North Hill, which was ranked number 9 out of the 642 schools across the province. This is quite an achievement, that could be shared with school staff, teachers, students, and parents. I will not apologize for offering my congratulations to them for their hard work and commitment to academic excellence.

Mr. Speaker, overall this report card suggests Alberta is providing leading-edge education for our children. Again, we should not apologize for that. I applaud the Fraser Institute and similar groups in Alberta that contribute to policy dialogue that provides us food for thought and valuable insights into important issues and an opportunity to celebrate our successes.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Honeybee Industry

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, I rise today to highlight the importance of Alberta's honeybee industry. I want all Albertans to understand how vital this industry is to Alberta's economy and to our quality of life. You may ask: what's all the buzz about? The honeybee is considered a keystone species. We eat the food they produce, we eat the food they pollinate, and we eat animals that also depend on the plants they pollinate. Some sources suggest that up to 70 per cent of global food crops depend on the honeybee.

In Alberta our honeybees not only help to feed us; they feed the provincial economy. In 2009 Alberta's industry generated nearly $45 million in honey production. In fact, we are Canada's largest honey producer. In terms of pollinating canola, clover, and hay, the value is over $350 million.

However, as important as this industry is, it faces some serious challenges. Unusually cold conditions, mites, and disease threaten the survival of colonies across the province.

But there is good news as well. Alberta's beekeepers and the Alberta government are working together to ensure the long-term success of this industry. This government is studying the causes of winterkill, developing a honeybee pest surveillance system, introducing an integrated pest management system, and developing effective treatments. In addition, the bee industry has access to several business risk management programs that meet their unique needs. I encourage all beekeepers to participate in honeybee production insurance, the AgriStability program, and AFSC's new winterkill insurance program, the first of its kind in western Canada.

Mr. Speaker, our government will continue its efforts to protect the health of our honeybees and the beekeeping industry. I encourage all Albertans to consider the importance of this key industry when they enjoy their next meal because the success of our agricultural sector and the nourishment it offers owes a lot to the humble honeybee.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Role of Auditor General

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We believe the Auditor General has done everything in his power to be effective and appropriate in his role. A report written by a former deputy minister of Executive Council was distributed this morning, and given the statements in this report, it's hard to believe it's anything more than a partisan attack advocating for the Auditor General to be muzzled. To the Premier: does the Premier agree with the claim in the report that in the last six years the Auditor has overstepped his mandate and impinged on government's policy-making role?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I haven't read the report. I don't know what document the hon. leader is referring to. All I ask is an opportunity to look at it, and I can comment further on it. I certainly haven't seen it, and I'm not quite sure which body put it out.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, we'll table the report today. The report blames the Auditor for the government's failure to act on his recommendations. Does the Premier also blame the Auditor General for his government's failure to act on recommendations?

Mr. Stelmach: Once again, I'm not sure what the hon. Leader of the Opposition is talking about. The report: we'll have a look at it. But it's written by someone that's not a part of government, not an officer of the Legislature, nor a member of Executive Council. When people leave this office, they're certainly open to their opinions.

Dr. Swann: Well, I'm asking the Premier for his opinion.

Again, Albertans deserve a strong Auditor that ensures accountability rather than being a puppet of the Premier. Will the Premier commit to expanding the role of the office of the Auditor General as opposed to what is being recommended, to reduce its role?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, once again, I can't respond to something I haven't seen. Again, this is a report written by someone who has retired from government. There are many authorities, different think tanks that put out reports just about every second day, and I'm not going to be commenting on all of them. I'll have a look at the report and see what the report says.

Speaker's Ruling Item Distributed to Members

The Speaker: The report in question was provided to my office by a consultant to the University of Alberta who was doing a special report for the department of economics, as I recall. He asked as a courtesy if I would provide it to all members for their information. The author is not related to any agency of government. He did it for the University of Alberta.

Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Pharmaceutical Benefit for Seniors

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday, when questioned on the new seniors' pharmaceutical plan, the Premier responded that they're still working on the details, details of a plan that was announced in 2008, changed in 2009, will be implemented in three months, but is still a confused mess. To the Premier. At an income level of $24,000 seniors begin to pay premiums that total almost $400 annually. Does the Premier agree there is a program in place to assist those fixed-income seniors that will soon have to pay another premium they cannot afford? Is there a program in place?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we have, if not the best, one of the best seniors' supports programs in the country of Canada. We will continue to support seniors with respect to prescription drugs, eyeglasses, dentures. We do provide other programs in terms of supporting seniors with improvements in their homes, whether their hot water tank goes or a furnace. They can all apply, you know, as low-income seniors for support. Those programs will definitely continue.

Dr. Swann: Well, again to the Premier. Seniors still do not know whether they have to opt in or opt out of this program. Which is it? Or do the details still need to be worked out?

Mr. Stelmach: I know that the present policy is in place, and that is supporting seniors. I believe something like 80 per cent of prescription drugs are covered by the taxpayer. About 60 per cent of seniors are supported through various programs in terms of the cost of their pharmaceutical needs.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. These changes are going to end up making private insurance companies more money because now they can drive up their rates. How is giving Alberta seniors the choice between paying the government more or paying the insurance companies more a real choice?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, once again the hon. Leader of the Opposition is making a supposition, a prediction that's not based on fact. We will work through these details in time.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Economic Diversification

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last night David Emerson, the chair of the Premier's Council for Economic Strategy, suggested Albertans should be content to be hewers of wood and drawers of water. From Aberhart to Manning to Lougheed, past Premiers have worked hard on economic diversification with report after report on the benefits. An Alberta Liberal government would be implementing many of these recommendations. Why has the Premier abandoned the long-standing pursuit of economic diversification?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, just before I answer the question, that is a misrepresentation of what was said yesterday by Mr. Emerson. It's too bad, again, misrepresented here in the House, a person that many Canadians look up to, well experienced in the business sector, and then to have his words misrepresented here is, well, certainly not the way we do politics in this province.

With respect to diversification, if the hon. member would just look at the whole speech, read what ideas are coming forward in terms of dealing with the huge economic global shifts and what we have to do in terms of adding value to our natural resources, it's not simply just taking a two-by-four and converting it to a door jamb. There are other things we can do on the productivity side to improve our competitiveness.

Dr. Swann: That's what we're suggesting, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's workers are some of the best trained and educated in the world. Don't they deserve better? Don't they deserve better than foraging for other countries' benefits?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, one of the things that was said by Mr. Emerson is that he was commending Alberta to look to international and national experts in various fields to look 10, 20, 30 years ahead and see what we must do over the next few years to prepare for these huge global economic shifts. As I said, sometimes it's not politically advisable to do that because we might have to look at long-term policy changes to make sure that the best workers, the safest workers that are here in Alberta will continue to have jobs well into the future.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the Premier commit to confirming economic diversification as a basic tenet of Alberta's development and to taking real action?

Mr. Stelmach: It's already started. Bill 1, the Alberta Competitiveness Act, is one step in that direction. In order to attract investment from other parts of the world, we must be competitive not only to reach out to more people working but also in terms of the investment that's necessary to drive the diversification in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Funding for Special-needs Foster Children

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday in question period the Premier accused opposition members of politicizing the issue of children in foster care. As a brother to a formerly orphaned sister and as someone who has personally assisted family members with caring for foster children, I take exception to this Premier's insinuation that holding this government accountable for how they are protecting children is somehow out of line. To the Premier: will he commit to Albertans that he will make it his number one priority to clean up what appears to be a very serious problem in the ministry of children's services?

Mr. Stelmach: First of all, I don't accept the insinuation by that member of what he said. I was very clear yesterday. There were further comments made in the media and in the news conference yesterday in terms of when the member heard about this and when it was brought to the floor of this Legislature. All I said was that it's totally inappropriate to have people, foster parents and in this case children with autism, agonizing three, four, five days before this matter was brought to the House. That is not appropriate. You can still bring it up in the House in question period. You can hold news conferences. You can do everything you want, but advise the minister of what's happening there because it's not fair to the foster parents of this province.

Mr. Anderson: To the Premier: given the minister of children's services has said that she had instructed her staff not to cut funding for foster care, which she says was ignored, will he or the minister table that order and disclose any disciplinary action taken against staff on this issue so that this House and Albertans can verify the minister's version of events and be assured that action is being taken to better protect children in foster care?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, in terms of the front-line staff I have great confidence in Children and Youth Services. With respect to the management my understanding is that the CEO has tendered resignation and will be pursuing other things in terms of opportunities.

Mr. Anderson: To the Premier, last question: will he commit to Albertans today that before this government considers cuts to those who care for our most vulnerable kids or to the disabled or to the mentally ill or any other highly vulnerable Albertans, he will first roll back his own salary, his cabinet's salaries, his chief of staff's bloated salary, his massive office budget, and cut the hundreds of millions in corporate welfare handouts proposed?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, with respect to the member I already last year said I'd be reducing my salary by $12,000; every cabinet member, $6,600. In terms of the bonuses, that has been eliminated. That's over $40 million. As per Members' Services we have not accepted the average weekly earnings for the last two years. That has been held down. All those savings have been accrued. I will say one thing, though. There were never, ever any cuts to the services. That is inappropriate. In fact, the budget has been increased close to a million dollars, $910,000, so the statement made by that member is absolutely irresponsible.

Children and Youth Services Budget

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, we have just learned that the CEO of region 6 of Children and Youth Services resigned today. This comes two days after government blamed staff for cuts to foster care and several weeks after government subjected region 6 to an effective rollback of 6 per cent. To the Premier: will you admit that it's your government's refusal to accept responsibility for the unavoidable consequences of your budget cuts that has created the crisis we are dealing with now?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, there are no budget reductions. In fact, the budget has been increased by $910,000.

Ms Notley: Now, notwithstanding this Premier's failure to understand that it is actually the role of opposition to shed light on matters the government wants kept secret, given this government's fantastic claim that the children's services ministry can absorb $34 million in cuts without affecting front-line services to children and given that this has been shown repeatedly to be false, why won't the Premier accept responsibility and admit that no matter how many staff he blames, children in care cannot be properly protected at the same time government cuts funding?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, in fact, yesterday I was very emphatic during the news conference that any hon. member – government side, opposition – can bring anything forward to the Assembly. That's not the issue. But to keep it – keep it – under wraps, knowing quite well that this information was given to that member, and holding it secret for five days and agonizing families needlessly is not appropriate. Like I said, just go out and ask the parents. Would you like to sit and have that information and keep people under that agony for five days and then raise it here in the House? You still could have raised it here on Monday. You could have had five news conferences during that period of time, but you should have notified the minister immediately.

Ms Notley: I'd like to raise a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Now, given that the Premier and his minister remain willfully blind to how a policy to reduce child support actually impacts defenseless children and given the Premier's penchant for blaming outsiders for exposing the incompetence of his insiders, why won't the Premier set an example of responsible leadership and commit to protecting every dollar that is currently funding kids and families served by the Ministry of Children and Youth Services?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we will continue to protect and support children of this province in the care of the government. There are over 9,200 children that are under the care and supervision of the government. I can tell you one thing. At the end of the day any report or suggestion that we have cut the budget is not true. In fact, every member is free to have their own opinion and also have their own version of the facts. But at the end of the day the budget has been increased by $910,000, so it's totally inappropriate to say that we cut the budget.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, I've got notice that you want to raise a point of order. Will it be about preambles?

The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Residential Building Codes

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. During the 18 months, one and a half years, that this government knew sprinklers should be on balconies, in attics, and crawl spaces in multifamily housing before they did anything about it, over 20,000 housing developments were started in this province. We all know what happened in British Columbia when they had frenzied growth and inadequate building codes: a billion-dollar repair bill to fix leaky condos. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: given that Alberta was experiencing one of the highest levels of multifamily housing starts in 27 years and the government failed to strengthen building codes at that time, what liability is the province now facing for this government's lack of action?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated yesterday, previously we had some of the strongest and best building codes of any other jurisdiction. The additions and the changes that we've done, again, were two years ahead of any other jurisdiction as well. I'm very proud to indicate that we have the best building codes in the country.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thought this was question period, not storytime. The fact remains that those building codes: you sat on the changes for 18 months.

B.C. provided interest-free loans to fix their shoddy construction. Will this minister enact a similar program for condo boards to upgrade their buildings to improved standards?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, we are looking at some of the causes of those activities. At this stage I can say that we're not looking at providing any financial assistance towards renovations.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Then what is this minister prepared to do to keep insurance companies from holding condo boards hostage in Alberta if they don't retrofit their buildings to match the new regulations?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, it's always difficult to go retroactively. Our new building codes are meant for new construction, and as we move forward, we're going to have stricter and tougher standards. We're not going to retroactively look at that. We had done that with the fire alarms and found it extremely difficult to retrofit buildings even to accommodate that portion.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Health Facilities Infrastructure

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. A Calgary newspaper has raised concerns recently about the physical condition of our health infrastructure. Sure enough, our own government's Infrastructure business plan states that the condition of health facilities is expected to decline in the next year. My question is to the Minister of Infrastructure. How can you claim that the maintenance of health facilities is well funded when your very own business plan is forecasting a decline?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, taking a long-term strategic approach to our infrastructure planning is what Albertans expect of this government. We are using internationally recognized standards to evaluate the maintenance needs across the province, and this helps us measure our facilities and be able to plan ahead. We need to ensure that our capital plan funds are invested in the proper areas. The health facility maintenance is well funded . . .

The Speaker: Maybe we can move on.
The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you. To the same minister: with 2 per cent of health facilities in poor condition should my constituents be concerned about the condition of health buildings and, in particular, Calgary hospitals?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, in order to have the best infrastructure in North America, we need to measure the condition of our facilities, and we're doing exactly that. We previously had nine separate health regions which used different evaluations for those buildings. The methodology varied. What we have done now is taken all of those buildings into one system, an international system, and we have consistent information.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you. To the same minister: what is the go-forward for the next few years, and are we being responsibly proactive in addressing our maintenance challenges?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, I believe that we are acting very responsibly by ensuring that the maintenance of our health facilities is well funded. Because of our maintenance investment we're projecting that the condition of our health facilities will improve. This is a goal for our government. It is an evaluation, and we expect that 95 per cent of our health facilities will be in good or fair condition. That is a very positive direction.

Grizzly Bear Protection

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, the Endangered Species Conservation Committee has now recommended for the second time that the grizzly bear be listed as a threatened species. This comes as no surprise to anyone except, possibly, the minister. The status report, complete with a DNA study paid for by the taxpayers, is finished. The committee has made its recommendation. There are no more excuses to delay action. To the Minister of SRD: why won't the minister take the necessary steps to save the grizzly bear?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, the fact of the matter is that we are. In fact, we will take the opportunity that has been presented to us now by the receipt of the information from the endangered species committee. We will have an opportunity for all of our government colleagues to take a look at that information and determine the appropriateness of our actions following that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for that answer. With that answer are you saying that you'll be listing the grizzly bear as a threatened species?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, what I said was that I'm in receipt of the report, and we are going to look at the report. The government and government members will have an opportunity to also look at the report, and then we will make the appropriate decision at that point.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A similar report was given in 2002, when the science backed the same sort of information this one has given you. When can we expect a decision from your government, then, on if your government will follow this recommendation to make the grizzly bear an endangered species?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, for the third time, I am in receipt of the information, very well done. By the way, this has been going on for a number of years, back to, probably, the late '90s. I have the information, and government members will have an opportunity to advise me with respect to what will be the appropriate decision we will make at that point.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Temporary Foreign Workers

Mr. Benito: Mr. Speaker, my first question is to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Many foreign workers who are working temporarily in our province want to stay permanently. What is your office doing to help them become permanent residents of Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can't blame them; I think anybody who comes to Alberta would love to stay in Alberta.

We're working very closely with the federal government. Right now our government has issued about 4,000 certificates nominating workers, so approximately 10,000 Alberta temporary foreign workers have been allowed to stay here in this province.

Mr. Benito: Back to the same minister. Being a proud immigrant to this province myself, I can understand why a temporary foreign worker would want to stay here. Can you provide clarification on who gets to stay?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I guess I'm an immigrant, too. The jury is still out on whether I'm a skilled or unskilled worker, but I guess that remains to be determined.

Number one, they have to have an employment contract or secured employment in this province, and for a foreign worker to stay, they have to meet all of the requirements set forth by the federal and provincial governments and meet all the criteria. But employment is the number one prerequisite, and obviously there has to be a need, economically speaking, for this employee to stay.

Mr. Benito: My final question is to the same minister. Are all foreign workers currently working in Alberta eligible to apply for permanent foreign residency under the Alberta immigrant nominee program?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, not all, Mr. Speaker. Number one, as I said earlier, they have to have full-time employment. That is a must. They also must fall into the skilled or semi-skilled category. The skilled category would include individuals like pharmacists, accountants, engineers, and plumbers and welders. Semi-skilled are individuals working in the food processing and hospitality industry, truckers, and others. Those are the two large, overarching categories that they must fit into.

Funding for Postsecondary Education

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology has been playing word games with information about this government's funding for universities. Well, the game is up. The province's cuts to the University of Alberta will be public in the next few days. To that minister: why hasn't the Minister of Advanced Education been honest with the public and openly told people that the government's funding for the U of A is going to lead to serious hardships?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, I take exception to the insinuation that I haven't been honest with this House. That is entirely not the truth, and the hon. member should probably retract that statement.

Dr. Taft: Well, since the minister has already been briefed on the U of A's budget, will he now have the guts to tell this Assembly how many staff positions at the U of A are going to be lost because of this government's cuts?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, the University of Alberta's budget, when you remove prepaid amounts from the previous year, when you take the new funding framework plus the EPE that was in there last year, is at a zero base budget from what the granting program was last year. The hon. member is quite aware, as I think it's been widely reported in the media, that there are other, extenuating circumstances that have affected the U of A's budget. Quite frankly, we fund about 63 to 64 per cent of what the operating budget is at the University of Alberta. The hon. member, I'm sure, knows this.

Dr. Taft: Well, Mr. Speaker, the word games continue. The facts will be clear by the weekend. Given that this minister knows that enrolment at the U of A is going to be cut because this government has failed to keep its word, how many student spaces will be eliminated at the U of A this fall, Mr. Minister?

Mr. Horner: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, the growth at the university, as per the previous meetings I've had with the provost at the university, is going to be slowed. The growth: that is not a cut; it's slowing down the growth at the University of Alberta because of the economic condition that we're in. We look forward to the years to come to renew the type of growth that we've had in the province, second to none I would add.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Anthony Henday Drive

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today the government announced that construction would begin on the Cameron Heights interchange. The traffic congestion on the southwest section of Anthony Henday Drive has been a source of ongoing concern and frustration for my constituents and for all Edmontonians and Albertans who use the ring road. My questions are to Minister of Transportation. When will motorists finally see some relief from the gridlock on Anthony Henday Drive?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, the province is delivering on its commitment to complete the Edmonton ring road by 2015. I'm pleased to say that construction on the Cameron Heights interchange will begin later this year and that it will open to traffic in the fall of 2011. That removes the final set of lights off the Anthony Henday and makes sure it will improve traffic flow and safety for all of our motorists.

Mr. Xiao: My second question is to the same minister. With the construction already under way building interchanges at Lessard Road, Callingwood Road, and Stony Plain Road, is there a concern with adding yet another construction zone on the Henday at Cameron Heights?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, our contractors have to follow very strict rules on safety standards and keeping traffic moving through construction zones. We appreciate the patience that motorists in Alberta have during construction, and we believe that the small delays will yield large gains. As the Premier has said, investment in infrastructure is critical to our economic recovery, and as the Minister of Transportation I would like to . . .

The Speaker: I'm going to recognize the hon. member.

Mr. Ouellette: Okay.

Mr. Xiao: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can tell the minister that, you know, this is a great problem in my constituency. While my constituents are enthusiastic about these new interchanges, they have also expressed a concern over the noise coming from the ring road. My final supplemental is to the same minister.

The Speaker: Hon. member, you have raised the question.

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think he was talking about noise. The noise levels on the Anthony Henday are below all of our levels. The department measured the sound levels near the homes on the southwest section, and the levels are below the provincial guidelines of 65 decibels. These levels are also expected to remain there for the next 20 years, and this member darn well knows that that's the way it is.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Residential Addiction Treatment Funding

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When I was a member of the government, I had the privilege of chairing the Alberta Crime Reduction and Safe Communities Task Force. One of the key principles behind this task force was putting a top priority on children, youth, families, and communities. The very first recommendation was to increase the number of treatment beds for alcoholism, drug addiction, and dual diagnosis of both mental illness and drug addiction. My questions are to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Since the Premier has agreed to implement all of the recommendations from the safe communities task force, why are you limiting the addiction treatment room and board fees to only six weeks?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, this member is speculating about what I may be doing. I have not indicated that we will or will not be limiting. However, I am in consultation with our minister of health. We want to make sure that Albertans who require this treatment will receive it. Keep in mind that this ministry only pays for room and board in treatment centres, not for the actual medical treatment of addictions.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, the minister doesn't understand that addiction treatment takes months to help someone, not a few weeks.

What is the minister doing to resolve the funding questions, as he alluded to, between his department and Alberta Health and Wellness?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, this minister understands it very well. This minister also understands – and I find it surprising that a member of that particular political party wouldn't – that I have to live within the parameters of my budget. It sounds like it's a spending day on the other side. We are proud in supporting Albertans who need help. We are paying for their room and board in residential rehabilitation facilities, but obviously there has to be a limit on how long an individual can stay in a rehab centre.

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Speaker, it's not about spending. It's about doing what is right for the people of this province.

Since people suffering from addictions need structure and certainty, when will this minister give the agencies and clients the funding they need?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, spending is spending is spending. When they're asking to spend, it's doing the right thing. When I'm spending, they're saying that we're spending too much or spending like drunken sailors.

Mr. Speaker, we are committed to supporting Albertans who are recovering from addictions. We are paying their room and board. Obviously, there has to be some form of cap on how long a person can stay in a rehabilitation facility. I will be working with the minister of health to make sure that the limit is adequate for individuals to recover and become productive members of our society.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Education Property Tax

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Page 68 of the fiscal plan for Budget 2010 states that the province of Alberta will collect in education property taxes $1,592,000,000. My first question is to the minister of finance, please. Does the amount to be collected, $1,592,000,000, include the $199 million collected by opted-out school boards?

Thank you.

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I don't know the answer to that specific question, but I'd be happy to get the answer to the member.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I guess the hon. minister of finance was an elected Senator-in-waiting, and now I can see with that answer that he's not selected as the Premier-in-waiting.

The Speaker: Is that your question? You don't have a preamble. The hon. minister.

Mr. MacDonald: Given that $69 million more in education property taxes . . .

The Speaker: Hon. Minister of Finance and Enterprise, I recognized you about 20 seconds ago.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, first of all, in response to the first question, on page 128 of the estimates documents the $199 million that's collected by the opted-out is clearly not part of the $1.6 billion that's collected on the property tax. Clearly, page 128 of the Education estimates would show that to the hon. member.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. To the Minister of Education, I believe. Given that $69 million more in education property taxes will be collected in the 2010-11 fiscal year as a result of a new development, why are we failing to live up to our five-year contract that was negotiated with the teachers of this province?

Mr. Hancock: Nobody is failing to live up to the five-year deal that was negotiated. The deal has been implemented through 63 school boards, making agreements with 63 school locals. We went to arbitration on a disputed clause in the section when Stats Canada decided to change the way they formulated the calculation of average weekly earnings. That's been resolved. We have indicated to the school boards that they will be funded for the full 5.99 per cent increase that resulted from that, and as we go forward, I've indicated to the school boards that we'll be working with them to meet the needs of that contract over time but not specifically in one year.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Catholic School Funding

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many of my constituents place a very high importance on Catholic education, feeling that it instills the values which they want their children to grow up with. However, the Minister of Education is now talking about revising and even replacing the School Act. My first question is to the Minister of Education. What assurance can the minister give Albertans that we'll continue to benefit from Catholic education?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, of course they will. It's a matter of our provincial constitution that minority rights education is there. That's been exhibited across the province with respect to Catholic school education in many, many jurisdictions. I've been asked this question a number of times by school trustees. I've assured them over and over again that we respect choice in education, that we don't have any intention to change the constitution of Alberta relative to that right, and that there will be Catholic education. Instilling hope, respect, dignity, and humility in young people is a task for all educators but particularly true for Catholic educators.

Mrs. Leskiw: My first supplementary question is to the same minister. How can the Catholic school boards expect to be affected by the changes in the School Act?

The Speaker: Is there a School Act before the House, or are we speculating about the future here?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think it's an appropriate speculation given that I have advised stakeholders and the public of Alberta. We've gone through the Inspiring Education process, and one of the outcomes of that process will lead into a discussion of a new education act or new school act to be introduced sometime in the future in the House. I've asked stakeholders and Albertans for input into that act. With respect to Catholic schools I would hope that they would embrace that discussion and they would look at what's happening in the act as it affects Catholic education.

Mrs. Leskiw: Given that section 9 of the Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Amendment Act, 2009, comes into effect next fall, what effect will this have on Catholic schools, Mr. Minister?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, one of the concerns, of course, of Catholic schools or any school that deals with religion is with respect to that section of the act which says that parents must have notice if a teaching or a lesson is primarily and explicitly about religion. Of course, religion permeates what happens in a Catholic school, so we must make certain that, yes, they need to give notice where a subject is primarily and explicitly with respect to religion, but we also need to look at whether parents could be notified on an omnibus basis that if they're registering in a religious school, they ought to expect that religion will be present.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Residential Addiction Treatment Funding

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. A coalition of addiction treatment centres is alarmed by funding cuts made by this government to residential addictions treatment programs. These cuts, as the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek has indicated, would impose a one-size-fits-all standard. My first question is to the Minister of Employment and Immigration now that he has had time to think about the hon. member's questions. Why is the minister limiting funding to six weeks of residential addictions treatment when best practices in the field suggest that some patients simply need a longer time to recover?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Up until recently this ministry has paid $15 per day for the cost of room and board of an individual in a residential facility for treatment. That amount has been increased now to $40 per day. Also, the average length of stay has increased quite significantly. The majority of clients are released for medical reasons out of these facilities within roughly the same time period. We are working right now with the ministry of health to find out what best practice is, what length is required. But keep in mind that we don't determine the length of recovery; we determine the room and board costs, and that's what we pay for.

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: how can the minister justify these cuts on the basis of cost savings when addiction treatment centres are warning the government that artificial time limits will probably just land patients, unfortunately, right back into treatment in the very near future?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, what this department is doing is not only paying the room and board for the person in treatment, but while that person is in treatment, fully supported by this department for room and board, treatment paid for by Alberta Health Services, we also support his or her family with a full set of benefits for being at home and for their room and board and cost of living. So the benefits are rather generous. We do what we can to support these Albertans who are suffering with substance abuse, and there are limits to what we can do with taxpayers' money.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, speaking of limits to taxpayers' money, how can the minister justify these supposed cost savings when at the same time we can send the Minister of Justice and the Solicitor General to New York City at a cost of over $36,000?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, how do you answer a ridiculous question like that? The fact is that we have very compassionate front-line workers in our ministry that provide individuals with as much assistance as possible. Obviously, being a government, being custodians of taxpayers' money, we have certain limitations, and so we should have. But to answer a ridiculous question, juxtaposing someone's trip to New York with recovery that costs millions of dollars . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Driver's Licence Advanced Road Tests

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I understand that in order for Alberta drivers to progress from a driver's licence to a full class 5, they must first take an advanced road test. However, these tests are not available in many centres that you and I represent in rural Alberta. To the Transportation minister: can you explain this regressive policy?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, graduated drivers' licences were introduced in 2003. Advanced road tests were announced at the same time and implemented in 2005. I'd like to be very clear that I fully support the GDL program and the advanced road tests, that the hon. member across here has no idea about. As of January '09 all road tests, with some exceptions of commercial vehicles, must begin and end at registry agents, and the class 5 . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Whoa, whoa, whoa. Sit down.
The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It seems, given that answer, that this is an attempt at centralization, moving services away from rural Alberta. Can the minister confirm this?

Mr. Ouellette: Absolutely not, Mr. Speaker. These tests are done to ensure drivers are well tested. We have to remember that driving is a privilege in Alberta. This test is a very rigorous test and includes many challenging components to ensure an active traffic environment that includes higher speed zones, a minimum number of traffic lights, marked and unmarked crosswalks, highway entrances and exits, lane changes, et cetera.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that this minister is a champion of fairness for all Albertans, can he ensure that this policy does not discriminate against rural Albertans? I think it does.

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, this isn't about rural versus urban. This program ensures that new drivers have the skills and experience to get behind the wheel and safely operate a motor vehicle. This is about proper education and training. [interjections] I want to say that you can take a basic test anywhere, but if you want to advance test, we have now changed the program. We make sure there's an area somewhere within 60 minutes of any residence in Alberta. We want to make sure that people are safe. Rural Alberta has bigger collisions than anywhere else, and we want to make them be able to drive in the big city.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Farm Worker Exemptions from Labour Legislation

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Why do I feel that it feels like the last day of school in here?

Agriculture is one of the most dangerous industries in Canada, with each farm injury costing an average of $10,000. This is money that comes directly out of the farmer's pocket and the health care system because this government excludes paid farm workers from mandatory WCB coverage. To the Minister of Employment and Immigration: why does a trucker working for a corporate farm or a farm not have WCB coverage when that same trucker working for a trucking company does have that coverage?

The Speaker: The hon. minister, please.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, the simple answer is because a trucker doesn't live in his truck, and a farmer lives on his farm. The difference between farmers and other employees is that there is more work being done on a farm; there are people who actually live on a farm; children play on a farm. Putting an occupational health and safety umbrella over all of that would not be responsible. But we are looking at this with our Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, and some development will take place.

Ms Pastoor: I'm going to try something else here. Given that in Justice Barley's 2008 report he recommended that paid farm workers be covered by the Occupational Health and Safety Act, does this minister accept that recommendation?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I said a number of times, over and over again, to this member that the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development and I are looking at the report, and we will make recommendations that achieve two things: keep our farmers safe but also keep them in business because the only way to make sure that a farmer doesn't get hurt is just to put him out of business, and we are not willing to do that.

Ms Pastoor: Well, after all of that it actually sounded like a no.

To the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: do we have a date for the release of the farm safety report? I need something a little more specific than: in due time.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member and the opposition requested the report, and we informed them that we would release it to them. It's just in draft form. It's expected out fairly shortly.

Mr. Speaker, while we talk about that report on farm safety, it is refreshing to see that the incidents are down dramatically this year, and we're very happy to be able to invest over $700,000 in future training for safety out there.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Calgary International Airport Development

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the proximity of the constituency of Calgary-Mackay to the International Airport in Calgary it is important for my constituents of Calgary-Mackay to be able to access the airport in a timely fashion. One option to facilitate this is the proposed airport tunnel. My question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Can the city of Calgary use the municipal sustainability initiative allocation to fund this project?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The municipal sustainability initiative gives municipalities the discretion – and I emphasize discretion – to determine which projects and activities will be funded based on their local priorities as long as those priorities meet and are within the scope of the MSI program guidelines. The program encourages municipalities to take a very long-term approach to planning for capital projects that will have a significant and lasting impact upon their communities.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is for the same minister. Does the province have any role in determining what the local priorities are?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, the answer is no. Determining those local priorities is up to the individual municipalities. That's what the municipalities asked us when the MSI programs were designed. It's up to the city of Calgary to determine how they might spend their $254 million in MSI funding this year, and it's up to them to determine how they'll spend their $3.3 billion over a number of years. We've recently approved some changes to the program that will give those municipalities added flexibility.

The Speaker: The hon. member?

Ms Woo-Paw: No.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

2:40 Summer Employment for Students

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Recent media reports are predicting another tough year for Alberta students seeking summer employment. Some of my constituents are concerned that they or their children will be unable to find a job at all, leaving them unable to cover the costs of their postsecondary education. My questions are to Employment and Immigration. Is the outlook for summer job hunters in Alberta as bleak as reports suggest it is in other parts of the country when we're comparing them?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, a good question because students probably are gearing up right about now, thinking about summer employment. But we have to put it in perspective. Number one, let's consider the fact that Alberta has the third lowest unemployment rate in all of Canada, which is something to be very proud of. That unemployment rate right now, as we speak, hovers around 6.9 per cent, which really means that 97 per cent of Albertans who are willing and looking for work will find employment.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental to the same minister: what is being done to help students find summer employment?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, a multitude of things, Mr. Speaker, are being done. This ministry, in particular, has the labour market information centres scattered throughout the entire province not only providing students with technical assistance on how to apply for work, how to look for work, and preparing their resumé's but also linking prospective employers with employees. We also have the Alberta learning information centres and, most importantly, a well-known program, STEP, the summer temporary employment program, which is subsidized by this government, topping up students' wages. So the future is not bleak for our students.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My final supplemental to the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology: is financial assistance available to students who may not be able to find enough work during their summer and be able to save for their postsecondary education?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Obviously, we do have a very comprehensive student financial assistance program, which we've talked a lot about in this House, that is designed to bridge that gap between the students' resources and what's available. We do expect that students would contribute based on the number of months that they are available for work. Under the student finance system, for a student with three months over the summer the expected contribution would be around $1,080; for two months it would be approximately $720. Students with less would still qualify. It's all part of the student financial package that we have under the affordability framework.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that concludes the question period for today. There were a total of 112 questions and responses from 19 members. Of the 19, nine came from the Liberal Party, two from the Wildrose Alliance, one from the New Democrats, and seven from Progressive Conservative members.

In 15 seconds from now we will continue with Members' Statements.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Oil Sands Industry

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Like many members of this House a key part of our learning takes place when we leave the Assembly and meet face to face with Albertans. One of my most valuable learning opportunities came when I was able to visit Fort McMurray and tour the oil sands. The oil sands are truly a marvel of technology, human innovation, and ingenuity, and as each new project comes forward, they change how they operate and how our energy resources are extracted. Can more be done? Absolutely. Is industry making progress? You bet. Do we all want a healthy environment? Of course. Do we want to build partnerships? Yes.

But, Mr. Speaker, we all know that there are some groups who want to play games with some very serious issues. Some groups resort to childish pranks or breaking the law because their views are not resonating with Albertans. Albertans do not like it when outside groups or rabble-rousers try to diminish our accomplishments, our expertise, or the degree to which we care for our energy and environment resources. What truly matters to Albertans is that people do what they say they are going to do and that companies live up to their words and that government sets a fair playing field.

Many of us know the good work that the oil sands industry does and will continue to do well into the future. We know that oil sands operators have reduced the CO₂ intensity by 27 per cent since 1990. We know that oil sands operators are conserving and using energy more efficiently. We know that new projects are going to dry tailings to treat processed waste. We know that reclamation practices are improving. These are just a few of the things we know about our oil sands industry, Mr. Speaker.

While some continue to ignore the facts about one of our province's most significant industries, we should take comfort in the truth, that Alberta's oil sands industry is doing its part to ensure that new technologies, new environmental practices, and new practices come forward so that industry can do even better. That is why not only does industry prosper; Albertans will prosper.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to table five copies of Scotiabank's Fiscal Pulse, that had some positive things to state on this government's prudent budget and fiscal plan, mentioning that the province is better equipped going forward thanks to this budget holding the line on taxes and protecting priority programs. Scotiabank states that the economic assumptions underlying the 2010 budget estimates are generally conservative, especially nominal GDP levels, real GDP growth in 2010 and 2011, and oil prices.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today. The first is a letter regarding Alberta Hospital Edmonton. It is from a constituent named A. Willis. A. Willis is very concerned about the government's plans around Alberta Hospital Edmonton. I have permission to table this e-mail.

I also have another e-mail regarding Alberta Hospital Edmonton. This is again from a resident of Edmonton-Gold Bar expressing her deep concern about the government's plan regarding Alberta Hospital Edmonton. It's signed by Donna Morrow.

The last tabling I have this afternoon I would encourage all hon. members to read. I appreciate this information bulletin from the Speaker's office earlier today to our office in the Annex. This information bulletin is dated March 2010. It's titled An Auditor General Who Is Both Independent And Accountable: Working Effectively within Alberta's Westminster Model Democracy, by Ron Hicks. It's a good read.

Thank you.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, I have two tablings today. I'd like to start by tabling the appropriate number of copies of an e-mail I received from Matthew Hildebrandt. He's a graduate student concerned with the high cost of postsecondary education. He asks that the government stop allowing postsecondary institutions to use market modifiers and other noninstructional fees as a loophole to cover institutional deficits.

I'd also like to table the appropriate number of copies of 63 postcards signed by Albertans calling on the provincial government to keep its promise to build 600 new long-term care beds. This is part of a campaign sponsored by the Canadian Union of Public Employees.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The two documents I'm tabling relate to questions raised several days ago by the Leader of the Opposition. The first is the appropriate number of copies of a government news release dated April 13, 2006, indicating that the government of Alberta is providing $4.6 million to help develop 60 new affordable supportive living units in Grande Prairie.

The second is a page from the 2006-07 blue book, the government expenditures, indicating that Chantelle Management Ltd. was in fact advanced $2.3 million in public funds.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed my pleasure to present the requisite number of copies of an agreement I had with the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky, where he agreed under junior A hockey to wear the Oil Barons jersey, which he is proudly wearing today with his suit jacket on. He could take off the suit jacket if I were to get unanimous consent, but I won't ask for that for today.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Hockey Jerseys for MLAs

The Speaker: To the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo and the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky, you were both here in the House last week when we had the issue about pies. You noted the generous reflection of the hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake, who, when challenged with the opportunity to bring all members a pie, did. You've also heard in the past when the chair has chastised hon. members for playing dress-up and has challenged the hon. member who wanted to play dress-up and the one who challenged that hon. member to deliver to all Members of the Legislative Assembly a facsimile, or a copy, of the same. There are 83 members in the Assembly, hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo. You could return with 83 – a variety of sizes would be fine – and that would be in keeping with the spirit of the whole session. In fact, it seems that the hon. members agree with the chair. There's nothing further on it, hon. member.

2:50

Mr. Boutilier: Will the hon. Speaker recognize the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo?

The Speaker: On what point would that be?

Mr. Boutilier: On the point of the commentary made about this member.

The Speaker: It was a complimentary one. Just deliver all members with a copy of the sweater, and it will be fine.

Mr. Boutilier: Okay. Well, thank you. I misunderstood the commentary, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Just bring the sweaters, and we'll move forward.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of the hon. Mr. Hancock, Minister of Education, school jurisdictions' audited financial statements for the year ended August 31, 2008, sections 1, 2, and 3.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona on a point of order.

Point of Order Allegations against a Member

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes. I rise on a point of order under section 23 of our standing orders. In particular, I refer to sections 23(h), (i), and (j), and those read as follows:

A Member will be called to order by the Speaker if, in the Speaker's opinion, that Member

- (h) makes allegations against another Member;
- (i) imputes false or unavowed motives to another Member;

- (j) uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder.

I rose, Mr. Speaker, in response to the comments made by the Premier in question period. I believe it was in response to the questions I put to him at that time. I, of course, as you know, don't have the benefit of the transcript in front of me; however, my recollection is that there were roughly three suggestions or statements made by the Premier.

First of all, the Premier suggested that I made misleading statements to the House when I suggested that funding had been cut to the Ministry of Children and Youth Services. I would just like to remind the House that records already tabled in the House include the budget documents, which outline a roughly $34 million cut to the Ministry of Children and Youth Services; an $8 million cut, roughly, to region 6; and within region 6 a $400,000 cut to the line item related to foster care services provided by region 6.

The second thing that was suggested is sort of a foundational thing, Mr. Speaker. There were two, I would suggest, inaccurate comments made by the Premier, which subsequently founded a third comment, with which I took the most offence. The second suggestion was that I had information that I somehow inappropriately held onto for five days, during which I could have raised that information in the Legislature.

I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that there is absolutely no way that the Premier could have that information, in part because it's factually incorrect, and that certainly between the time I became aware of the information of which the Premier speaks and the time that I made that information available to the public, there were no sittings of the Legislature during which I could have raised the matter. In fact, I raised the matter before the Legislature next sat, and just as a side note, had I even waited until that first day, I would not have been able to raise the matter because on that particular day, as a result of our changes in question period, I don't have a question. Nonetheless, that's not really relevant.

The point is that between the time I became aware of the information and the time that I made that information public, there were no sittings of the Legislature, and in fact it was not five days that I had that information in the first place; it was roughly three and a half days.

Regardless, all of that then led to a final statement by the Premier that suggested that this member was somehow personally responsible for causing suffering experienced by vulnerable foster children. The Premier went on to specify that I caused suffering on the part of autistic children in foster care. I would like to suggest, Mr. Speaker, that that is, at best, the most outrageous statement that I have heard in this House since I have been here and that there is no foundation upon which the Premier could make that statement based on what I said previously. I would suggest that it is an unfounded allegation that is designed to insult and to bring disorder to the House and that it is false. It amounts to an allegation under subsection (h), it imputes a false motive to myself, and it amounts to being abusive and insulting. As I said before, he had absolutely no foundation for making such a statement.

I would go further, Mr. Speaker, to suggest that it is particularly – how do I say this in an understated way? – perplexing that the Premier of the province, as a result of his role, has unrestricted access to the information that he accused me of withholding and causing suffering as a result of. It's deeply ironic and raises questions, frankly, beyond this particular point of order.

Nonetheless, at the end of the day I would suggest that all three of the criteria under section 23 have been met, and I would ask that you rule in my favour and/or that the Premier return to this Legislature and apologize to me.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader on this point.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While I can understand the hon. member's concerns that she has raised, I would suggest to her that her concerns arise more because she wasn't listening closely to what was being said than to what was actually said, and I say that for these reasons. First of all, her first point is with respect to the budget. Well, if she looks at page 82 of the estimates, it's very clear from the line with respect to foster care support exactly what the Premier was talking about: a $910,000 increase in the budget to foster care. That's the number he used. That's very clear, and it's very easy to find. I found it within a matter of seconds, to be able to analyze where he was coming from, saying that the budget had gone up. Very clear in what he said, very clear in what he meant, and very clear to be able to find the supporting document.

You can go to the bottom line of the budget and look for a different number; you can go to one other page to look for a different number. The Premier didn't use that process. He basically pointed to the foster care budget and said that it went up by $910,000, that it wasn't cut. That's factually correct, and it's evidenced on page 82 of the estimates booklet.

With respect to her second point, that she held the information for five days and didn't raise it, again, it was clear if you listened to what the Premier was saying, the full intent and import of what he said and, actually, what he directly said. I'm going to put it in my words rather than his. What he's saying is that every member of the Legislature has a duty to Albertans, and that duty is to make sure that we do our job and that when something comes to light that we get information on, that we know about, that should be corrected, we should act on it immediately.

If there was a meeting on Thursday morning and the hon. member knew about the information that was exchanged at the meeting on Thursday morning, after the estimates on Wednesday night, where the minister said clearly in the estimates that there were going to be no cuts to service, and then she heard on Thursday morning that there were cuts to service, the first thing she should have done in the interests of those Albertans affected would have been to call the minister's office and ask what was going on because there are vulnerable Albertans who are being hurt by that. That was the import of what the Premier said. That is what he meant, and it's pretty clear. I think that any reasonable Albertan would expect that kind of behaviour.

He didn't say that she shouldn't raise it in the Legislature. He didn't say that it was inappropriate. In fact, I think I heard him say that it was quite appropriate to raise it in the Legislature. What he said was that if you're acting in the interests of Albertans, when you get that information, you should first act to make it right. People should not sit, having inappropriate information or having something that's not supposed to happen, having it remain uncleared up for that period of time.

Now, the hon. member has made it clear that she didn't actually know on Thursday and that that wasn't information that was available. The implication of both the press conference and the exchange in the House on Tuesday led one to believe, led me to believe and I think led members to believe that that information was available to her on Thursday. She has cleared that up. I accept that. She only knew it for three and a half days, not five days. Still, it would have been appropriate for any member of the House getting that kind of information to call the minister's office and say: "You said on Wednesday night that there weren't going to be cuts to foster families, and on Thursday your department did cuts to the foster families. What gives here?" That was what the Premier said. He wasn't saying to the hon. member anything other than that. Quite frankly, I think he's right.

Mr. Boutilier: Dave, your nose is growing.

Mr. Hancock: There could be a point of order on that, perhaps.

With respect to the third comment, and I think it was a subset of the second one, and that is that the hon. member believes that she was accused of being personally responsible for Albertans' suffering, I think again it was very clear. I was sitting here. I heard the exchange on Tuesday, and I heard the Premier today. It was very clear that what he was saying is that Albertans were put in a position – according to the information that was presented to the House, there was a meeting on Thursday where they were told that their foster care payments were going to be cut, and that was going to cause them undue hardship and concern. That was the issue that was being raised by the member.

The import of what the Premier said was very clear. Why would you let people have that view, if it was the wrong view, for five days when you could have corrected it immediately? Why would you let them stay worried about their payments if you could have sorted it out? That's the clear import of what he said. He's not suggesting that the hon. member caused their suffering. He's saying that she could have relieved their suffering. And she could have.

Mr. Speaker, there's no point of order.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I draw to your attention Standing Order 7(7), but I've ruled in the past that if we're dealing with a point of order or point of privilege, we will just simply ignore that and go beyond 3 o'clock. I'm, quite frankly, prepared to deal with this matter and rule. If there are hon. members who want to participate, I want citation and I want directly to the point and the question at hand, not what members may have thought they heard, which is not what I have heard myself and have in front of me.

The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere after the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, who rose first.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, I followed the exchange in question period with interest. I would like to point out to all hon. members Beauchesne's 484(3).

In the House of Commons a Member will not be permitted by the Speaker to indulge in any reflections on the House itself as a political institution; or to impute to any Member or Members unworthy motives for their actions in a particular case.

In the exchange between the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona and the hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville this afternoon . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member said 48 what?

Mr. MacDonald: I said Beauchesne's 484(3), Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Okay. Go ahead.

Mr. MacDonald: Certainly, it would be my view that the Premier violated Beauchesne's 484(3). I think the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona had every right to bring that issue up again in the Assembly.

I would also like to point out, in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, page 40 of the fiscal plan, services for children, youth, and families. As I heard the exchange, and as I understood the exchange, I think this is important.

Program expense for the Ministry of Children and Youth Services is budgeted at $1.1 billion in 2010-11, a reduction of $36 million or 3.1% from the 2009-10 forecast. The Ministry will focus spending on its most vulnerable clients, including at-risk children, youth and families.

Child Intervention Services and Foster Care Support. The combined 2010-11 budget for these programs is $545 million, a reduction of $27 million or 4.7% from 2009-10. A stronger focus on measures such as increased permanency and family enhancement supports is expected to improve outcomes and reduce costs in Child Intervention Services. The budget for Foster Care Support is increasing slightly to $163 million in 2010-11. This will support about 5,400 foster child placements.

So that certainly recognizes reductions in the budget. For the Premier to get so sensitive whenever questions are asked . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, please. The chair knows when the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona raised the point of order. It did not come after any of what the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar is talking about. We have to be relevant with these things.

Mr. Anderson: The citation is the Standing Orders 23(h), (i), and (j), as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona pointed out. On the first point if you look at page 91 of the government estimates, clearly there was a reduction in region 6 for foster care. There's no grey area there. That is exactly what the document says. There's no doubt on that first point.

The Speaker: Hon. member, that's not what the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona raised the point about. You're talking about an entirely unrelated matter. [interjection] No, no. I have what I have. I know what was said.

Mr. Anderson: Okay. Back to the point. There was a direct quote made by the Premier of blame on this hon. member for withholding that information for a five-day period. That is not true. First of all, she knew the information shorter than that, and she gave it at the first possible moment in this House. The Premier also said that same thing, Mr. Speaker, about this member as well. We did not know about this until the Monday.

The Speaker: If you want to raise a point of order, you raise one on your own. Just deal with the one we have in front of us.

Are there additional comments?

Okay. Let's be very, very clear here because words are very, very important. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona rose and said, "I'd like to raise a point of order, Mr. Speaker," for what was said just prior to that, which caused the intervention for the point of order. So here's what the Blues say:

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, in fact, yesterday I was very emphatic during the news conference that any hon. member – government side, opposition – can bring anything forward to the Assembly. That's not the issue. But to keep it – keep it – under wraps, knowing quite well that this information was given to that member, and holding it secret for five days and agonizing families needlessly is not appropriate. Like I said, just go out and ask the parents. Would you like to sit and have that information and keep people under that agony for five days and then raise it here in the House? You still could have raised it here on Monday. You could have had five news conferences during that period of time, but you should have notified the minister immediately.

That's what was said in the Hansard by the Premier. These are the Blues.

Immediately after that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona said, "I'd like to raise a point of order, Mr. Speaker."

So the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona gets up and makes three points under Standing Order 23(h), (i) and (j). The first one has to do with budget matters. There's nothing in this response that I see related to any kind of budget matter at all. The point of order was not raised on a previous question, which it could have been, and then I would take a different view. But I have to deal with the facts at hand. There's nothing in here in the response from the Premier which caused the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona to rise.

Secondly, for the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona to say she did not have an opportunity on Monday in this House is not correct. At one time both ND members were given the choice of having a question each day. They subsequently signed a piece of paper to me saying that they wanted one question per day. That could have been the question of the day. It does not belong to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, nor does it belong to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. It belongs to their caucus. They can make the choice as to who does it.

Thirdly, I see nothing in here about suffering with respect to this. So if there was a point of order, do it on the previous question.

On the other hand, to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, how do these phrases play out: "Notwithstanding this Premier's failure to understand," "government wants kept secret," and "given that this has been shown repeatedly to be false"? There very well may have been others who might have risen on 23(h), (i), and (j) with respect to this.

Now, look. The standing orders are pretty clear. All of the documents we have are very, very clear. In the House of Commons Procedure and Practice, the second edition, you can go to page 634, and there's a quote there: "A Member may not direct remarks to the House or engage in debate by raising a matter under the guise of a point of order." So on this point at this time, where this is raised, there is no point of order. Maybe a point of clarification.

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 15 Appropriation Act, 2010

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It is my pleasure to kick off debate in Committee of the Whole on Bill 15, the Appropriation Act, 2010. It is kind of interesting that in the last five minutes here on a point of order we've debated the budget more than we do in the times we've had before in actual relevance to a budget. It is a little bit surprising that we will come in here and spend more time talking about how much time they don't have to debate a budget than actually debating the budget. But that's their privilege. Or we could spend time talking about Argentina or Missouri, all of the other things that affect Albertans and their budget. But it's certainly within the purview of the opposition to spend their time as they choose. That's all right; it's entertaining reading.

It is kind of interesting. At our estimates, Mr. Chairman, of Treasury Board, where we had an informative discussion with the critic from the Liberal Party, we talked about some issues that were important to him. We had an opportunity to talk to a member of the New Democratic Party. You know, the Treasury Board is a small department. It doesn't spend a lot of money, but it does have a responsibility for looking after the spending side of government, for helping develop a capital plan, you know, for the oil sands secretariat, and corporate resources, so a few pretty important responsibilities on behalf of the people of Alberta.

You know, we never had one question during my estimates from the Wildrose Alliance Party, not one inquiry. I find it surprising that they would want to come here and then debate the budget . . .

Mr. Anderson: Point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Snelgrove: . . . on a point of order as opposed to actually debating the budget in the process that's been provided. Although I will give the Member for Calgary-Currie . . .

The Deputy Chair: We have a point of order, that I'm going to recognize.

The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere on a point of order.

Point of Order

Referring to the Absence of Members

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Chair, this hon. member has obviously been a member of this Assembly for a long time, and he should know full well that it is out of order to say that a group of individuals are not at the budget estimates. He knows full well that they have put us on committees, that oftentimes there are conflicts, and we cannot get a member to a budget committee every time. That was the case in this case. It's easy for him with his 68 MLAs to say that, but in this case he is out of line and he should be, you know, ashamed of himself for doing that. But that's what he does. I noticed that he only speaks to the Wildrose Alliance caucus on these things, which I think is very interesting. He was out of line, and he knows he was out line. I just wanted to put it on the record that there was a conflict, and that is why the Wildrose Alliance could not be there that night.

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Chairman, let's be perfectly clear. I didn't suggest at all that they weren't there. I never said that they weren't there. I said they never asked a question. They can get the Blues, or they can listen. That's exactly what I said.

Back to the point, Mr. Speaker. I take the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie where he says — or you can dismiss this point of order. Do what you want. We'll finish.

The Deputy Chair: On the point of order. The hon. Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I won't reiterate the points that the hon. President of the Treasury Board has. I just want to talk a bit about a precedent of this House. I recall a speech last year when the hon. Solicitor General, as he now is, talked about empty seats at the other end of the House. He didn't identify the empty seats. The convention is that you do not identify a member if he or she is absent or has been absent.

I would respectfully submit to you that there is no point of order at this time.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, I was listening very carefully to this as well. The hon. President of the Treasury Board did not say that they were not there. He said that they didn't ask a question. There is no point of order.

Continue.

Debate Continued

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I will take the advice from the Member for Calgary-Currie and talk to our colleagues about the point he presented. Health is hugely important to all of us. To give it the same time as some of the smaller departments is a valid point that I agree with. It's an agreement that was decided upon by the House leaders, but I'm sure that good women and men from both sides of the House can address that issue and be a little bit more reflective of the importance of it. So I'll accept that in that context.

Mr. Chairman, I just look forward to what I'm sure will be a lively and spirited debate through committee on Bill 15.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's going to be quite the afternoon it looks like.

I just thought it was important that I rise to explain my opposition to the budget and the reason that I won't be supporting it. I fully understand that the wheels of government need to continue and that there are huge programs that have to proceed. I fully expect that the budget will pass, but I thought I would raise my concerns.

I would like to see it improved, frankly. I'm the Health and Wellness critic, and I thought I would begin by explaining my concerns with that budget to the Assembly. It's a very generous budget. There is quite a significant increase from last year, in some ways a startling increase. When the finance minister announced the budget, that particular one raised a lot of eyebrows.

I appreciate that the President of the Treasury Board is following here because my single biggest concern with the whole budget is that there is simply one line for Alberta Health Services, base operating funding. I'm on page 240 of the estimates. That one line is $9,037,593,000. When I think, "Okay; here I am as a critic, as a Member of a Legislative Assembly, and as a citizen; how do I hold the Minister of Health and Wellness and this government accountable for that $9 billion?" which is, after all, a quarter roughly of the entire provincial budget – that's the money that goes to Alberta Health Services – there is really no way of doing that in a meaningful manner. There is no way, for example, of knowing how much goes to the Foothills hospital or the University hospital or how much goes to preventative care or cancer care or whatever. It's just one line with an absolutely massive amount in it.

When I compare it to history, even a couple of years ago there was considerably more detail. There were lines in the budget for each regional health authority, so you could see how much went to the Calgary health region, Capital health, north, west, wherever they were, and also to the Cancer Board and to AADAC. At least you could rise and say to the minister or the Premier or whoever, "Why is the budget for the East Central health region going up 10 per cent while the budget for Palliser is going down?" or whatever it was, and you could have a discussion. There is no way of doing that with this scale of information. I just feel as an MLA that when it's all lumped together like that, we've lost an ability to hold things to account.

My memory – and maybe it's getting foggy – from many years ago, say from the health budgets of the late '80s, is that there was even more detail and there was an itemization of how much went to long-term care and how much went to acute care and how much went to capital and operating and so on.

I think I got the idea across to the President of the Treasury Board on that. Of all the single concerns I have with these hundreds of pages, that is the biggest one because it involves so much money and absolutely no level of detail.

I also need to raise a second significant concern with the health budget, and it relates to the first one because we have no detail. I have yet to figure out how the numbers add up. I am quoting from a speech here from the chairman of Alberta Health Services, Mr.

Ken Hughes, from just a couple of weeks ago, to the chamber of commerce. He repeats something in here which Dr. Duckett and I think even the minister has said. I will quote from the speech, page 5. Alberta Health Services has "captured $700 million annually in cost savings in non-clinical areas." Seven hundred million dollars annually.

I look at these numbers, and I think: "Okay. We've formed Alberta Health Services. They're telling us that they saved $700 million in operations, yet they need an immense increase of funding, a $1.3 billion increase in funding, in 2010-11 compared to '09-10." I want to understand: if they've saved $700 million and they need $1.3 billion more, what's going on here? It's hard for me to get my head around that. Again, there's no detail here.

I can't help feeling, Mr. President, that the wool's getting pulled over my eyes somehow here because if they've really saved $700 million, there's no possible way they ought to have needed a further $1.3 billion to cover their expenses. So that is a related concern. I have asked when I've had the opportunity for Dr. Duckett to explain this, I've asked the minister to explain it, and I've never got anything close to an explanation. So maybe the President of the Treasury Board – and you know what? That would be fantastic if you could explain it.

Could I ask how many minutes I have in this?

The Deputy Chair: Thirteen.

I will also raise a concern as a legislator and a citizen about the handling of capital expenditures, and this has come up most vividly in terms of capital spending on health projects. We're being asked here to vote in Bill 15 on capital spending, yet we're also told that the list of capital projects under health care isn't complete. That just doesn't seem like good budgeting to me. We're being asked to allocate money. I'd like to assume that there's a solid basis to that request, but I'm told in this Legislature by the Premier and the Minister of Health and Wellness that there isn't because the list of capital projects is a work-in-progress. How the heck do we come up with the numbers for capital spending in this budget when the list is a work-in-progress? Now, you could say: well, we chose a number for capital spending, and then we'll spend to that number. That is a way to proceed with a budget. I'd prefer a budget that was built, as it were, from the ground up. So that's further unease I have with this budget.

I am also the critic for aboriginal affairs, and I am concerned, as anybody on the committee who reviewed that budget will know, that the business plan is written in such a way that, again, it's impossible for anyone to really know if the goals in aboriginal affairs have been met. They're vague. They wouldn't pass, you know, a first-year university course on business planning as goals because there's no way to measure them. They're kind of feel good, "We'll hold meetings, and we'll sign memorandums," but there's a lot of money in there, and I would like to see something that I could really count or hold the government to measure for. An example would be to improve aboriginal unemployment by 1 per cent or reduce poverty by 1 per cent or whatever it would be, just something that was measurable. Nothing in that business plan for aboriginal affairs can be measured, and nothing, therefore, can really be used to hold the minister to account. I am very concerned about that, and I cannot in good conscience support that.

One other detail, and this will not be a surprise to the President of the Treasury Board: this budget contains millions of dollars that are going to go to horse racing. I would ask the President of the Treasury Board or any other members of this government: have they read George Cuff's review of the horse-racing industry? This was an internal government review, and it is absolutely condemning of what's going on in that industry. It's a dying industry with virtually no hope of recovery. Over the last decade we have poured hundreds of millions of dollars into that. Those hundreds of millions of dollars could have gone into anything else. Fair enough; give them three years to transition to a new model. But those three years are long gone, and we're up into around 10 years and truly hundreds of millions of dollars. I cannot condone or support that anymore.

My last concern, and many members of this Assembly will know that this is dear to my heart: we've got to get off this fiscal roller coaster. You know, if the President of the Treasury Board ever wants to sit down and chat with me, I'll happily chat with him. But somehow or another we as leaders of this province have to figure out how we can get a stable foundation under provincial funding because the roller coaster of surges of spending and then dramatic cuts is counterproductive and it doesn't reflect the reality of human needs. People getting cancer need treatment whether the price of oil is high or the price of oil is low. People waiting for a hospital in Medicine Hat or waiting for a trial in Medicine Hat at the courthouse, their needs are there whether natural gas prices are up or down.

That's true across this whole government. If we want to build a genuine world-class university in Edmonton or Calgary or anywhere else in this province, we've got to be providing long-term, stable funding so that when people we might be attracting – who knows? Nobel prize winners some day. Those people are going to look hard: "Where am I taking my family? Why am I moving from Cambridge to Edmonton?" They're going to look hard, and they're going to say: "Boy, it looks great right now, but every five years this boom goes bust. I could lose everything I'm doing when I move there, so I'm not going to move." On the other hand, they could say someday: "Those universities have an endowment fund that secures their future forever. I will move there." And as they move here and as knowledge gets generated and new businesses are started, we diversify the economy.

That's just one example. I just desperately want a government to come forward with a plan that gets us off the roller coaster. We've advocated on this side of the House for many years taking a portion of royalties, bite the bullet, sell the vision to the public, and stream that portion of royalties into endowment funds for government services, for education, or for whatever. I mean, there are many ways to solve this issue, but this budget hasn't, for me, provided any of that vision.

Those are the reasons, Mr. Chairman, that I can't support this budget. I would appreciate any comments from the President of the Treasury Board to engage me.

Thanks.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thanks, Mr. Chairman, and thanks to the hon. member. A couple of things around the statements. I think, you know, it's such a large number with Alberta Health Services – and as we agreed, it's very important – but it's dealt with in the same way that the universities are, for example, where we don't show in our budget what the university would spend line item by line item. We show how much we gave them. Or municipal grants, where to follow up on how it is spent would require work, but you'd have to go through the municipal system to see theirs. Alberta Health Services, you know, is still relatively new. They release their audited financial statement normally some time in June. At that point – now, that doesn't get the same opportunity for debate in here,

I'll grant that – that's where you'll have the opportunity to look through their financial statement and see if their priorities are reflecting our business plans.

I think that in many ways by establishing and moving to the consolidated statements, it will bring together a better opportunity for you to compare within the same document where those numbers are. It is extremely complicated. I'm not sure how they would include it in our budgeting cycle, but it certainly is reported. I guess that's where we need to be thankful that we have the Auditor General, who takes an independent look at their books, too, and is able to comment.

The hon. member talked about: what are we going to accomplish with our aboriginal policy and our expenditures? I think it's spelled out fairly clearly in what we call the Measuring Up or Striking the Right Balance documents, where we identify the strategic priorities and the business plans of that particular department.

It's also important to not look at the numbers in there necessarily as our dollars. It's much the same as horse racing. I know we've gone through this, and I doubt they're ever going to be happy, but the fact is that in the aboriginal gaming contract the increase in the revenues they generate in their casinos on reserves is pooled and given to them. That has grown substantially over the last four years, more than the other casinos, who have seen, actually, a decline for whatever reason; it's not for me to decide. The fact is that that increase in funding is a commitment on an existing contract to allow them to maintain their increase.

Horse racing is exactly the same. There's an agreement where they're allowed to have slot machines, and the amount that goes to Horse Racing Alberta from the Alberta government is a zero gain to this government. We only return to them what their agreed-to, contracted amount is, and it shows up in our budget because we have to account for every penny we spend. If they go back to the revenue from sources, they would see that, in fact, the taxpayers of Alberta, except when they voluntarily go into a facility and drop their dollar in that machine – it's the only support they get outside of the agricultural part of them that would be eligible for other ag programs they may exist in. But on the line items that they refer to, there is no tax dollar money going to the horse-racing industry. You guys have said it enough; I don't mind. They actually believe it, so it's working with some people, but the fact is that it doesn't happen.

The hon. member's capital plan projections. One thing we need to be able to do is be flexible. You know, when we've gone from the regions, who had their own special interest in promoting their region or developing infrastructure in their region to serve – from East Central we were in a bit of a spot because of not having a large centre, Camrose and Lloydminster being the two largest. It probably wasn't the most efficient use to try and rebuild a centre in Camrose to take the normal trade from Edmonton.

I think, fortunately, we said: let's really look at not what we want in health care, but what we need in health care. Do we have the staff available to run what we're going to build? And there were errors. There were projects that were lofty goals to build billion dollar hospitals in areas that weren't even full. Their hospitals aren't even fully staffed now. I have to give the previous minister credit on this for saying: hold it. A lot of times in political life it takes more to say: no, let's not build it unless it's right.

We've seen the same thing in our seniors' facilities, where we've said that it is just unconscionable now to continue to build facilities where a couple can't stay together because of the different needs of that couple. You could have a mother or father with a stroke or some debilitating disease. It's so much healthier for them to be able to have their spouse of decades with them, and we couldn't do that before. You know, you have to say: hold it. You've got to suffer the backlash of saying: what are you stopping mine for? It's because I think we truly believe that we've got to build facilities for the next generation, not for the last generation. The last generation are going to be living in them, but they want to live together, and they have different needs.

I respect the hon. member's interest in this. I think it is above board. He has continually offered suggestions about it. The accounting, the reporting, is complicated. I think he would agree that the most important part is delivering the health care system in a practical way. Yeah, let's account for the money, but none of us really wants to be saying that money drives the way we do it. Let's do it right. Let's report it. Let's come back here for the appropriate amount of money.

As you can see from the budget, we've said that they clearly need the room to establish a prudent and go-forward health care system. They needed the stability and the predictability. If you consider wiping out their deficit, moving the starting line to what it would be, and adding 6 per cent, it was a lot of money to clear those up. But if we can maintain – and we intend to – our five-year contract to 6 per cent each year, we will achieve something that you'll see no other area in Canada will achieve without massive downsizing of their system. I don't think that's what Canadians want. Certainly, it's not what Albertans want.

I appreciate the comments of the hon. member.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I listened with interest to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview and the hon. President of the Treasury Board. First off, I would like to say that I have to commend the hon. President of the Treasury Board. Since we've had budget estimates, second quarter for grants and supplies and services in the blue book is now online. I appreciate that. This is a man of his word. He told us at budget estimates – and I don't want to get a point of order here. I'm certain he told me at budget estimates that this would happen, and sometime over the weekend it did happen. I didn't get an opportunity to go through it in a lot of detail to see what was added from the first quarter of 2009-10, but there were a few items in there that were certainly of interest.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview was talking about Alberta Health Services in the budget, and I, too, am looking forward to these financial statements, Mr. Chairman. They will be released hopefully not on Canada Day like last year, when they were so guilt ridden that they put it out on a long weekend in the summer, hoping no one would pay attention because, of course, their bonuses and severances and their lavish payments were all included in that. It was certainly an act that I considered of guilt and shame because they knew that money wasn't spent accordingly or the way it should be. Some of it, at least, was wasted.

Certainly, in the blue book, as we're discussing this budget, I see an amount for the Vancouver Olympic organizing committee for $2.1 million. That's a significant sum.

I see McKinsey & Company, health care consultants or management consultants on any number of issues world-wide, in this province they are invoicing Alberta Health and Wellness in the first six months of the year for $1 million. Previous years they've also been active with their invoices. I have no idea what would be in the budget this afternoon for Health and Wellness for McKinsey & Company, but it's certainly an invoice of interest because, of course, they were originally the group that was, in my opinion, charged with developing this long-term health care strategy. We see where it has gone off the rails. We're hundreds of millions of dollars in the red.

I know that in this budget we are trying to get back to a balanced budget. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview talked about the $700 million that Mr. Hughes mentioned in his speech at the Chamber of Commerce. Certainly, before this budget is passed, we should have the details on how this $700 million in savings has been achieved, if at all. I flat out don't believe it. I'm going to need to see that breakdown line by line and where the $700 million in savings was realized.

Those are certainly some of the questions that I have. This government still has a tendency to spend money in the oddest of places. I would use the million dollars to McKinsey as an example. We shouldn't need them anymore if we're in this cease-and-desist pattern with Alberta health care restructuring.

In the course of budget estimates this year there were some interesting statements from other ministries as well, Mr. Chairman, Service Alberta for example. It was with a great deal of interest that I learned from the hon. minister in charge of Service Alberta that we were gradually getting away from the practice of leasing any number of items, and we were now buying them instead, if I can remember correctly what was stated during the course of debate.

I will use cars as an example. Last year in the blue book I noticed where Londonderry Chrysler had received $3 million from the government. The minister informed me through the course of debate that this was for a number of cars. The government got a real good deal on vehicles from Londonderry Chrysler, and the Department of Service Alberta was getting rid of a lot of the leased vehicles that they had. I would like to know, particularly with Bill 15, how widespread this practice of buying instead of leasing now is with all the government departments. How much money is going to be saved by buying, not leasing, and how much money have we squandered or wasted in the past by leasing?

Now, we do know, if we look back into Public Accounts – and I would stand corrected if any member has the information – that the Jim Pattison Group was leasing a large volume of vehicles to the government. I think the annual bill was in excess of $19 million. If these practices are no longer viable, how much money are we saving with this new plan of buying instead of leasing?

Certainly, there are other issues that I would like to bring forward at this time. The President of the Treasury Board, Mr. Chairman, talked about the importance of the Auditor General. Whenever we look at the size of this government's budget and we look at the fact that it was only last year that the government – well, to put it in perspective, I think we should go back to the response to the Auditor General. This is in the fiscal plan, Budget 2010. We can see where there are any number of recommendations by the Auditor General that have been accepted. Most of them have been accepted. Some have been accepted in principle. Some of them are under review. We can see where the Auditor has done a lot of very, very good work.

But when we look at what has happened in the past, there were two suggestions by the government that were rejected because somehow they felt that the office of the Auditor General was straying into policy. I could never understand that, and I could never understand the reasoning behind this. When we look at the size of the budget that we're dealing with here and we look at the size of the budget deficit, $4.3 billion, I think we need to be encouraging the office of the Auditor General to keep a much closer eye, not a more distant eye, on the books of each and every respective department.

Now, I was astonished to see that a former senior member of this government – and I should say that this gentleman, Mr. Hicks, was a public servant. He retired effective September 5, 2008. He had served as a deputy minister of Executive Council in the Alberta government for four years. This individual is quite well respected. But I certainly hope, when you look at the back of the fiscal plan and you see the responses to the Auditor General, the good work that the office does, that the government is not contemplating taking seriously any of these suggestions by this former Deputy Minister of Executive Council.

Now, this gentleman feels that Alberta's Auditor General in recent years has broadened his mandate, Mr. Chairman, by pushing systems audits beyond critiques of government systems of evaluation and reporting into criticisms of the policies and programs government meant to measure, even into a medium to propose policy and program alternatives. He has impinged on government's policy-making role. Well, I would certainly disagree with that statement. To suggest that the Auditor General has essentially bypassed the Legislative Assembly and reported directly to Albertans – for example, releasing reports to the media at the same time that he shared them with the Assembly – is simply not true.

Mr. Chairman, you as chairperson of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices are the person to receive the Auditor General's report whenever it becomes available.

The Deputy Chair: Bring it to the bill.

Mr. MacDonald: I certainly am, Mr. Chairman, when you realize that in the fiscal plan we address directly – this is the fiscal plan here for the budget, and the appropriation bill is simply all about the budget all the time. These responses to the office of the Auditor General from October 2009 are very, very important because if the public is to have confidence in this whole budget process, they have to have confidence in the job that the Auditor General is doing.

The chair of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices, which is the hon. member, is the first individual to receive – in fact, I believe you receive it in advance of the press conference or media gathering that the Auditor General hosts to explain the recommendations and the findings of his office. Now, I think it's unusual. I considered this report, Mr. Chairman, a tight muzzle and a short political leash on a very respected office, an independent office of the Legislative Assembly.

Hopefully, hon. members are going to read this information bulletin and file it away, Mr. Chairman, and let it gather dust like it should because we have to ensure that the Auditor General has scope to do his work. If we look at this budget and we recognize that the $4.3 billion deficit – if this Progressive Conservative government is to control its wasteful spending habits, we need an office that's going to do systems audits. We need an office that is going to be able to function. It cannot be restricted or limited in its ability to provide its auditing function and reporting through the hon. member to all members. Certainly, the Public Accounts Committee has a great deal of interest as well in the reports and the recommendations of the Auditor General.

I would encourage all hon. members in the course of debate on Bill 15 this afternoon to just quickly have a look. If you only have an opportunity to read the executive summary and the recommendations, have a quick look at them because the author of this report is suggesting that there needs to be immediate discussion, debate, and decision on the role or the mandate for Alberta's office of the Auditor General. I think the office has been doing a great job, just an exceptional job. They should continue without any restrictions and limitations put on them or even the suggestion that somehow they're not working in an appropriate manner. Even the suggestion is inappropriate.

Now, Mr. Chairman, when we look at any of the amounts – whether it's in Tourism, Parks and Recreation or Transportation, Treasury Board, Service Alberta, Health and Wellness – when we look at these millions and millions of dollars that we are requesting here, we also have to look at the back of the fiscal plan, at the direction, the suggestions that have been made, the recommendations by the office of the Auditor General, the government's response.

We only have to go to the disclosure of termination benefits paid. We are talking in this budget that we've got $30 million in the budget of the Treasury Board for layoffs. Hopefully, there will be no layoffs. I personally don't think there need to be any layoffs because of the age of the civil service. The average age of the civil service is not getting up there, Mr. Chairman, but certainly there is a large percentage of them over the age of 45. I think that through natural attrition or retirement individuals are going to be moving on to other things, maybe going up the Amazon, touring around the world. Who knows? I wish them well, and I wish them long life and good health whenever they do retire. But I think there is a natural progression there, and there is no need for these layoffs that are suggested.

The office of the Auditor General was discussing the disclosure of termination benefits paid. The Auditor's office recommended that the Ministry of the Treasury Board "increase transparency of termination benefits by adopting disclosure practices for Alberta public agencies that disclose termination benefits paid." This is a recommendation that's under review. It hasn't been accepted; it hasn't been rejected. It's under review. I would have to ask why at this time. We've got a $30 million allocation there, and I think the government should deal with that.

Now, another one, of course, is electronic health records. This gets back to my first point about buying now instead of leasing. What other audits is this government doing to find some economic efficiencies? Road maintenance is first to come to mind, Mr. Chairman. Down in the southeastern part of Alberta, in your neighbourhood, I don't know who does the road maintenance down there, but there are basically five big contracts throughout the province. The bill is over $300 million annually. Is this money being well spent? I think it's $330 million. Now, there may be – I could be wrong – more than five of these privatized road maintenance contracts, but I think that in light of the information that was provided by the Minister of Service Alberta, this would be a good place to start.

Another place that we could look to see if all the money has been used wisely is in electronic health records. We see there are issues in Ontario. We see through Public Accounts that some of the same enterprises that were busy in Ontario with electronic health records are also doing a little bit of work here. Whether it's consulting, I don't know. IBM is a fine example. They have one contract that's at least $100 million if not more. Are we getting the best bang for our buck with that contract? We could look into those and perhaps save ourselves a lot of money and not have to nickel and dime people who unfortunately have addictions.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Is there Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

The Deputy Chair: No.

Mr. Hinman: No. Okay.

Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's a privilege to stand up and to address Bill 15, the Appropriation Act, 2010. I would like to go on the record that I'm very much against this. This is a train wreck of a spending spree that this government is going on. We'll continue discussing that and go forward.

We put out our own Wildrose Alliance balanced budget initiative. We put a lot of work into that and have to question how much the government actually put into wanting to have a fiscal balance. I kind of get a kick out of the Budget 2010: Striking the Right Balance fiscal plan. The right balance is balanced. It's not a deficit budget. Again, it's a long-term problem that they worked into this, much like an unhealthy individual who has been overeating or smoking or not exercising for too long and then all of a sudden to say: well, you can't expect me to lose 150 pounds in one day. Well, no. And we can't expect the government to be able to balance in one year.

If we go back again to the Canadian Taxpayers Federation, and we look at the 2003-2004 budget, which was around $22 billion, I believe, had we followed that forward at a population plus indexed to inflation, we would have a balanced budget this year. But because of the spending habits – and each of the finance ministers, I believe, if we went back and listened to their speeches, would say that this spending is not sustainable. We're very lucky to have the sustainability fund, but it's a real concern.

On page 2 when we look at the fiscal summary and we go back just to 2008, $36.6 billion, a deficit of $850 million, and did they say they were going to do something? "Oh, no. You know, the fair weather of Alberta is going to change and we'll be fine. We won't do anything." In 2009-2010, $4.7 billion. The real problem with this is that we still continue to have smoke and mirrors about what the true deficit is.

I spoke back in 2003, 2004, 2005 when we were having surpluses. We had a law back then. We had to pay off all of the deficit before we put money into the other areas. The law was that any surplus funding must go to pay off the deficit but because of the general accounting practices, which we all agree are there and we can follow, we can manipulate the numbers. It's kind of like going on your credit card to buy now, pay later in 24 months and saying: oh, no; I don't owe anything. We assumed the entire deficit for the teachers' pension plan back in January 2008, which at that time was estimated at $6.8 billion. Again, because of general accounting practices we don't need to have this in the budget, yet it's: buy their votes now, and we'll let the next generation in 24 or 40 years from now pay the $50 billion or $60 billion that we're going to owe. It's very irresponsible to not have it in our plan how we're reducing that deficit funding for that. Again, we're just not addressing or going forward on those like we should.

The fiscal – I don't know; how you can even say fiscal in this budget is hard for me to understand. There's nothing fiscally responsible about it. It just goes on and on with the spending. They talk about, you know, the 17 ministries that have a reduced budget. That's great. They've reduced it in 17, and that's important.

The question I go back to – again, this goes back before my time. There used to be a group in this House that was called the Deep Six. From what I was told, those were fiscally responsible individuals. Now we're so deep in debt. The Deep Six are all gone but one, and that one is our Premier. The other ones are gone, no longer here, so you have to wonder if this wasn't a wolf in sheep's clothing saying, "Oh, I'm fiscally responsible" yet thinks nothing of having a $4.7 billion fiscal debt with a real $7.6 billion cash to revenue debt and saying that we're being responsible. It's irresponsible, and it's unacceptable.

As we go through the various parts of the bill, I guess I'd like to point out and ask the correction on page 1 of the Appropriation Act, section 1(2):

From the General Revenue Fund, there may be paid and applied a sum of $34 871 252 000 towards defraying the several charges and expenses of the Public Service classed as expense and equipment/inventory purchases for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2011, as shown in the Schedule.

Under capital investment:

From the General Revenue Fund, there may be paid [out] and applied . . . $2 141 055 000 towards defraying the several charges and expenses of the Public Service classed as capital investment for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2011.

What I find amusing is that they just act like this is a simple, one-line budget, that, oh, it's just, you know, $34 billion, and, oh, it's just $2.1 billion in one line. I've never run a $38 billion budget business, but in the businesses that I have run, when we sat down and went over the budget, we did it line by line, item by item. We had the priorities. I have to ask the President of the Treasury Board: how does he feel that the elected members are supposed to have any real input when, in fact, we just have a line item like that?

Again, several members have referred to it. I'll refer to it as well. We look at Alberta Health, a $15 billion budget: three hours to go through it and say, oh, that's going to be adequate; oh, we're going to have to come up with some new ideas. I would even be so bold, Mr. Chair, as to say that if we really want to make some difference and to see what we have in the budget, on the Treasury Board there should be the eyes of the opposition so they can look at those things. Again, this is behind closed doors – I want to say smoke and mirrors – where they go through the line items and they bunch them all together and then say: oh, isn't this wonderful? You know, $2.1 billion being spent here, and then they expect the opposition to be able to go through that. We need a lot more details.

I want to go back and refer again to the 17 ministries that had reductions, which is good. It's interesting that when this Premier came to power, I believe when he formed his first cabinet, he only had 18 ministries, and he said that he was going to, you know, trim down and get things under control. I believe it was six months later it ballooned to 24 ministries.

Mr. Anderson: Well, they have to give Thomas one.

Mr. Hinman: Yes. We need to give them some doubting Thomases, bring them in, add them in here so that we keep everybody happy.

But the problem is that we continue to grow at an incredible rate. The spending is out of control. The behaviour is out of control. But the real problem is the priorities. They always want to stand up and point their fingers, and say: oh, spending; oh, cutting. No, Mr. Chair. It's about priorities. That's how businesses are run. Every business can always spend more, but you still have to prioritize. You have to look at your return on investment. You have to look at where we need to put that money. I'll use a small business. Maybe it's on fire insurance. They look at: do we have the capital to replace this building or this piece of equipment if it burns down? No? Then it's a priority to say that insurance is number one. Maybe it's new technologies that we need to look at and adapt, realizing we're falling behind and can't be competitive anymore. So we need to look at that.

In our big budget here in the province, to look at the priorities, there's no question that for Albertans it's health care, it's education, and it's our legal system to protect the citizens and to ensure that we're doing the right thing at the right time and not falling behind. There are just so many areas.

Our colleague here from Calgary-Fish Creek brought forward Bill 202 about reporting child pornography, and the rhetoric that came from the government was: where would you put that in the budget? You prioritize it, not say that we don't have the budget to do that. Our little ones are our most important people that we protect. It's human nature to protect them, yet this government is so inhumane, they say: "Well, we don't need to worry about them. Instead, we're going to pass a bill that's going to give us protection from gangs by saying they have to register their bulletproof vests." Their priorities, Mr. Chair, are just way out of order, and they don't understand.

Another interesting dilemma that we have is: what are the contracts? I mean, we always hear about P3s and how we're saving money. The Member for Edmonton-Riverview again brought up the Alberta Health Services Board, saying that they saved $700 million. Well those savings should be line-by-line items to say that this is where we've saved it rather than just a line saying that we've saved that, but we're spending $2 billion more.

The depth that we can go into this budget is not sufficient. The time that we have to go into this budget is not sufficient. We need to look at these things and go through and say, you know: where should we prioritize?

Let's talk for a minute about infrastructure. Isn't it interesting that now for, I think, three or four years we're spending almost double what any other province in the country is spending? Again, we've got huge amounts that we're going to spend and say that now is a good time to spend, yet they weren't responsible enough to say when it wasn't a good time to spend. So now that we have no cash, they say: oh, we need to borrow to do that. When we were in a race, the government caused inflation, saying: here's $18 billion in an 18-month time period; if you don't spend it, you're going to lose it. That isn't good budgeting. It's not looking down the road.

I've gotten up and spoken many times about the priorities of the infrastructure and what we should be doing. I'll put it out again because obviously it hasn't sunk in yet that there is another way. It's just: "Spend. Don't worry. Be happy. Someone else will pay in 24 years, and we won't be here." I'd say "two years and we won't be here" would maybe be more appropriate at this time at the rate they're going. But the debt will be, and they're going to pass it on, and that's wrong.

What we really need to do with infrastructure: we need to have a public list and say, "Here's highway 63, and here's what we're going to do in the next five years," have that out there and what the estimates are. "Here are the schools that are needed. Here are the overpasses that we're going to use, that we're going have to have in there." It seems like it always switches gears because there's a new political wind blowing. All of a sudden: "No. We need to have something down in Innisfail" or "We need to have something up in Grande Prairie" or "We won't worry about Calgary now; they're kind of a writeoff, so let's focus on some other area." They continue to prioritize. [interjection] Yes, and they're getting pushed out, and they're not happy about that. So they're redividing the centre of the universe and actually getting rid of some ridings in there, which is sad to see, from the Member for Calgary-Currie. As the barracks went their way, so will the riding. It was a sad demise, again, where there wasn't good co-operation between governments.

You know, another part of long-term planning – like I say, I'm very grateful that this government wasn't able to spend $17 billion. They couldn't find the place to put it, so they put it into what I call their slush fund. They call it a sustainability fund, but a sustainability fund is one where you look at the ups and downs. You can cover that, but it's going to be chewed up in two, three years maximum and say: oh, that was sustainable.

Going back to the infrastructure, we're going to go into the same I want to say dive that we went into back in 2003, when all of sudden they said: oh, we need to cut infrastructure. They almost cut it in half. It decimated the industry so that they weren't able to carry on their business, and then it wasn't good. We're going to run into that same wall again because they're spending so much on infrastructure and saying it's a good time to do it, building up business here and the people that are working in that area, only to find out in two, three years max, I would say, that we can't spend $8 billion, $6 billion a year. Then all that industry is going to collapse again.

Sustainable and long-term growth is to say, you know, "What can we pay for the next 10 years, and what are our projects?" to have that list there so people are competitive and realize that there's a long-term project that's going to go forward. But again this government just continues to have one flop after another flop after another flop, and the infrastructure collapse is going to be one more flop that the people of Alberta are going to have to deal with because of the way this government is balancing the right balance on their budget, which is nothing but a joke because it's a major deficit that doesn't need to be, nor should it be, so out of balance with our revenue that's coming in on a year-to-year basis.

It's interesting. You know, there's a quote, going back, by Winston Churchill that's kind of applicable here because you might ask why I'm giving this quote: "We contend that for a nation to try to tax itself into prosperity is like a man standing in a bucket and trying to lift himself up by the handle." Why would he say that? This government says, "Oh, we're not going to raise taxes," which is good, but the problem is that the reason governments have to raise taxes is because of the spending that they got themselves into and the deficit and then realizing, "Oh, now we have to pay back our debt."

We need to realize that if this government is saying that they're not going to raise taxes, then they need to prioritize their spending. Just because the Wildrose Alliance puts forward a new idea or says we need to fund PDD or education or health care in a new way, it doesn't mean we want to increase spending. It's prioritization. The sooner this government realizes that, the better off the Alberta taxpayer is going to be, the better off our children are going to be, the next generation, our health care, and our education system. We have to do better.

Another paraphrase, by P. J. O'Rourke, a civil libertarian: giving money and power to government is like giving whiskey and a car and keys to a teenage boy. This is very applicable here at this point. This government's had a lot of money in the last five or six years, and they've blown it. They didn't follow a disciplined savings plan. It was spend, spend, spend. "Oh, my goodness. We've got a problem. Where are we going to spend more money? Well, okay. We'll put it in a slush fund so we can buy some votes. We'll offer the teachers: you know, we'll take your whole pension plan; we'll pay for all of it." In fact, they wouldn't even pay for their own share, which was the right thing to do, three or four years ago. There should have been $4.7 billion put into that pension plan to give them and the taxpayers the surety that that's going to be taken care of. That's a major, major debt that's being carried by future generations. That is just simply wrong and needs to be addressed.

"What this country needs are more unemployed politicians." That was Edward Langley, 1928 to 1995. Again, it will be interesting to see who's unemployed in the next election. We'll go forward and see what the people of Alberta want.

Another fun one to go back to, Mark Twain: no man's life, liberty, or property is safe while the Legislature is in session. I will agree that too often the longer this House sits, the more damage they continue to do to the taxpayers of Alberta. I'm looking forward to the two-week break, where we won't have some more ridiculous bills coming forward at the expense of taxpayers, much like we're going to see with wanting to register more protection equipment, where we've learned so much on just trying to register dangerous weapons. It just never ceases to amaze me what the priorities are and where the spending goes here in Alberta.

In going back again to look at, you know, a few of the line items that we're looking at here in the budget, it's important that we look at those items and analyze them and say: do we need to spend that amount of money? There's an interesting idea about budgeting. It's called zero-based budgeting. It changes the whole dynamic of how a business is run and operated. What zero-based budgeting is: we look at every item, and we say, "Are all of those things needed again?"

The International and Intergovernmental Relations: $24 million in expense and equipment. What is that expense and equipment that we're spending there? Perhaps that's what we should have in front of us when we go into committee so that we can go through those lines and say: "You know, these are tough times. Maybe we should cut that by 50 per cent this year and do a little bit better."

We've got the Service Alberta expenses. Capital investment: $110 million. What is that capital investment? Is it really needed? That's what the eyes need to take a look at and scrutinize. Should we prioritize this? Could we put that $110 million off for another four years? We don't know. I don't know what the $110 million is that they want to spend it on.

Expense and equipment/inventory purchases under Service Alberta: $349 million. [Mr. Hinman's speaking time expired]

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you. It's a pleasure to be able to rise and join in debate on Bill 15 at Committee of the Whole.

An Hon. Member: Now we'll get the opposite side.

Ms Notley: Yes. Now we'll probably end up with a different take on things, no question about it. It makes for very interesting debate, without question. Hopefully, I won't get into too much of a back-and-forth with the previous member. We've been known to do that on some of these issues.

Nonetheless, let me just start by saying that I'm not in a position right now, nor is our caucus, obviously, to be able to vote in favour of this bill and to be able to vote in favour of the budget that it enables. There are many reasons that have already been laid out, but I think that I want to sort of step back just a second and speak more generally about this.

In my view, this budget is really about choices. The question is: where do you get your money? What do you choose to spend it on? You know, I'm not going to sit here and complain about the deficit and then complain about what's been cut and then not bring it all together because I do think that ultimately that frustrates people that are listening. They want to know: "What's your answer? How are you going to do this?"

I will say that I think that ultimately this budget should be different, and the first way it should be different is that the revenue side needs to change. I'm pretty clear on that one. I don't think I quite agree with the analogy that the previous member was referring to. Nonetheless, I think it's a question about where we find our revenues and, in that, what giveaways, I would suggest, are not linked to revenue generation.

I'll just sort of generally speak to those. I'm not going to get into a lot of detail with it. As has already been stated many times by the leader of our caucus, our caucus does not support the recent change to the royalty rollback, the step back from the previous commitments made by this government and this Premier going back as far as to when he ran for the leadership of the party that is currently in government. At that time he agreed with people like Peter Lougheed and with people who were identified by numerous polls, well over half of the province, who believed that we needed to start receiving our fair share of the royalties generated by the industry which dominates so much, certainly, of the discussion in this province and that, certainly, plays such a key economic role.

There were, of course, back at that time a number of experts that came together. They were appointed by the government. These were people that the government hand-picked. They were at the time described by the government as experts in the industry, who knew what they were talking about, so we could trust them and we could rely on them to come to us with a report about how best to capture the maximum resources in the best interests of Albertans. That panel came together, and they made recommendations about how best to do that.

Almost immediately the government decided to step back from those recommendations and not follow through on those recommendations because they were asking just a bit too much from the oil industry, notwithstanding that the panel itself, by the government's own description, was a group of very well-informed experts in the area with many relationships with the industry. Nonetheless, the government did go ahead and reluctantly agreed to implement a program that was a modified and watered-down version of that report. So off they went, and they implemented that program.

Since then, not including the most recent step back by this government, there have been six reductions in our royalty collection scheme. Six. The government has backed away from its original promise, that it made in the election, six times. One of the outcomes of that, of course, is that our revenues have come down. Now, of course, we know that we stand to lose, ultimately, about another $750 million a year as a result of the most recently announced revenue giveback to the oil industry. Clearly, when that happens, you start to have a shortage in terms of where your money is coming in, and there's no question that there is a shortage there.

Now, the next thing, of course, that this government has also done is that they've embarked upon a long process of ensuring that the most well-off Albertans pay the least amount of tax in the country, not all Albertans, just the most well-off Albertans. They introduced a flat tax, that anybody who's ever read anything about tax policy knows is regressive and unfairly penalizes those with lower and middle incomes and at the same time gives the greatest break to the wealthiest and most powerful in the jurisdiction in question. That's what this government decided to do, so we've got a flat tax, and we give up roughly $4 billion a year, give or take, as a result of that flat tax. We are certainly able to say that rich people in Alberta pay the least amount of tax of anywhere else in the country. We cannot say that about middle-income Albertans, we cannot say that about low-income Albertans, but we can certainly say it about rich Albertans. That's a choice that this government has made. As I said, it goes back to choices. That's not, however, a choice that I support, and I don't ultimately believe it's a choice that's in the best interests of the province.

A final example, not by any means a gargantuan one but one that still irks when we get into talking about tens of millions of dollars, is the fact that the government round about this time last year announced that it was going to collect a hundred million dollars a year in terms of an increase in liquor tax, and then for some strange, inexplicable reason in the middle of the summer they backtracked on that. There were, obviously, some very effective backroom meetings between the industry and whomever makes these decisions in government. Of course, the details around those meetings were never explained, the rationale for the step back was never explained, yet again we end up with a hundred million dollars less on our revenue side. So we have a problem.

I absolutely believe we need to fix that problem. I don't agree with the previous speakers that government provision of service is all bad and that we must eliminate it in all cases. I think government has a role to play in providing equality of opportunity for all Albertans. Unfortunately, right now in Alberta we have the unfortunate distinction of having the largest gap between rich and poor in the country, and that's because our government takes such a hands-off approach to so many issues and so many matters that would ensure that that gap was reduced. The larger that gap, the lower the overall quality of life for people in that jurisdiction. You know, studies have shown that to be the case quite consistently.

Let me just say, then: what do those choices result in? Well, the first negative thing that they result in is a deficit. Let me just point out very briefly – I mean, people always want to talk about the tax-and-spend New Democrats. But, as has been pointed out, maybe not so much on the record but off the record, by some colleagues on the very other end of the spectrum from myself and my colleague in the NDP caucus, in fact the records show that the history of governance in Canada demonstrates that the greatest number of balanced budgets or surplus budgets have been brought in under NDP governments. NDP governments don't like to run deficits, and I'm not a fan of trying to run deficits. That's not good governance. That's not in the best interests of the people you're elected to serve.

The record speaks for itself. Since 1986 the greatest number of balanced or surplus budgets have been brought in by New Democrats, followed by Conservatives, followed by Liberals. I would refer you to the government of Canada's Ministry of Finance documentation to support that assertion because, indeed, it is true. A deficit is not a good thing, and we're not advocating deficits.

With respect to this budget, because of course we've cut our revenue and we're forgiving revenue left, right, and centre, what does that mean for what we're doing for Albertans? Well, we're making a lot of cuts in this budget, and we've had a lot of discussion about those cuts over the course of the last two months. I'd just like to highlight the ones that I am, well, I won't say most concerned about – I'm concerned I might run out of time before I have an opportunity to go through all the ones that concern me – but some of the ones that jump out at me at this point.

First of all, Education. What are we doing in Education? Well, there was a small increase to the Education budget, but when you take into account inflation and the population growth, it's actually a 2.8 per cent reduction. That was before you take into account the implications of the arbitration award, which has received a lot of attention and discussion in this House, as well as the negotiated agreement for salary increases with the ATA and other school board staff, which exceed the rate of inflation quite significantly. In fact, what's happening is that we're looking at probably closer to a 3.8 or maybe even a 4 per cent reduction in the Ministry of Education.

What does that mean? Well, it means that notwithstanding that the minister has agreed that the cost of the arbitration will be funded for this budget year, he has very clearly said that the cost of the arbitration for the year forward will not be covered, nor will the negotiated increase in salary, which is a much bigger piece. I believe we're looking at about a $130 million shortfall, roughly; my numbers might be off a little bit. What does that mean? In many cases that may well mean that class sizes go up and that pressures will be brought to bear on school boards, who are trying to provide an appropriate education for our children. This is a huge problem.

Our education system is probably the single most effective means of addressing that income gap, that wealth gap, that opportunity gap, which is so huge in this province. Public education is the most effective means of dealing with it, and we're going backwards. The government's own report identified that we need to reduce class size. We're setting things up so that we're going to go backwards, and we're going to grow class sizes. That is a problem. That is not good for Albertans. That's not good for the future economic health and prosperity of this province.

I'm also very concerned that these cost pressures are going to be brought to bear on our education system at the same time the government is embarking upon a process with respect to the education of special-needs children that will basically reduce the clarity of the rules, reduce the transparency of the funding models, and enhance the discretionary allocation of resources in order to bring about additional support for children with special needs within our education system. Well, that is a problem.

If you do that kind of thing, if you allow for more discretion and less clarity at a time when you're bringing cost pressures into place, I can tell you without any exception, without any hesitation that what you will do is that you will create a situation where special-needs children receive less support in the classroom. I'm very concerned that that's exactly what this budget sets up within our education system. So that's a concern.

In terms of things that don't exist now in the education system – and we're talking about cuts. I want to stop talking about cuts for a second. I want to talk about improvements, improvements that aren't even considered in this budget because everybody is pulling their hair out over the deficit and the fact that we don't have enough revenue.

What kinds of improvements? Well, for years and years and years experts throughout the world have said and, indeed, the government's own appointed experts and reviewers have said that full-day kindergarten would have a measurable effect on the educational outcomes of Alberta students. We know that we need to do that because we know in Alberta we have the lowest transition rate from secondary to postsecondary education. Part of that can go back as early as kindergarten, without question. Everybody knows the quality of your early education has huge implications for how it unfolds over the course of the next 12 years. Most provinces have full-day kindergarten. We don't. Many provinces have junior kindergarten. We don't. We should. We don't.

Another thing that we don't do enough of in this province is the provision of hot lunch programs. Time and time and time again we hear about kids coming to school hungry, having not eaten, and they're particularly hungry on Monday morning because they've been home for the whole weekend. Again, the research is unquestionable on this, the import and the merits of providing this kind of support in our school system, yet we had the Minister of Education in budget estimates speaking glowingly of the lovely charities that we have out there that are so kind to occasionally pick up food on their way to school for those extra children. Well, you know what? That's not how you feed kids. You don't feed kids based on the unpredictable, discretionary charity of people who may or may not be in any given community at any given time. We need a fully funded school lunch program to ensure that our kids are given the equal opportunity that should be afforded them through our public education system so that they're not coming to school in a situation where they are destined to do poorly.

That's the kind of thing that I would actually go forward in. I would increase funding to support those kinds of things, and I would suggest that we have to have a budget that would support it. I think that in the long term it would bring about much better outcomes for our province and for our kids and, ultimately, for those adults that they become 15 or 20 years from now.

Children's services. We've had a lot of discussion about children's services in this House over the last few weeks. Thirty-four million dollars has been cut from children's services, $27 million of that from children's intervention services specifically. Again, the government is making a choice when it chooses to give $750 million to the oil industry, when it chooses to give a hundred million dollars back every year to the liquor industry, when it chooses to ensure that we have the lowest taxes for the wealthiest Canadians here in Alberta. It makes a choice, and one of the consequences of those choices is that we cut $34 million from children's services, and children suffer. They don't, by the way, suffer because of political advocacy on their behalf. They suffer because the government has made a choice to withdraw support from a certain area within our purview.

What we're going to see is less support for foster homes, and we're going to see less support for children at risk. I could get into a real discussion about – I mean, I guess the only thing is that we've of course put this issue to the minister, and time and time again we are provided with explanations that are simply not logical. Oh, well, it's not going to be a problem to deal with this funding cut because we're actually going to have more foster parents. Well, then we find out that, no, we have a bunch of new foster parents, but the number of additional foster families is nowhere nearly as great as initially presented to us by the minister.

Or we're going to be able to move children from these very expensive group homes to these so-called new foster homes, and that's how we'll save money, except we know that kids that are in group homes are there because they need them and that it's not in the best interests of children to move them out of group homes as a mechanism of saving the $34 million that this government has decided has to be cut from this ministry.

Then we're told that, oh, well, we'll be able to save money through the outcome-based objectives and the lead agency plan, except we know that those plans are at a very early pilot project stage, and it is fanciful to imagine that they would be implemented in a way that would actually bring about savings unless they're done so in a way where the directive is to implement savings. The only way that happens is, again, by cutting services.

We've had explanation after explanation, and none of it adds up. It's very frustrating because ultimately, as I say, it all goes back to choices, choices made by this government to put money in some places and not in others.

Advanced education, another critical area which plays a huge role in ensuring equality of opportunity for all Albertans. Without getting into a lot of detail on it, again, we have a budget that has shifted the cost of advanced education from government to students. We have reduced the number of grants, and we've increased the amount we want students to go into debt. We're telling students to pay more. At the same time we're inviting, receiving – who knows what verb we have to use, but applications are flowing in from universities hoping to be able to dramatically increase tuition for certain professional programs.

What's the outcome of that? The outcome is simple. The outcome is that lower income Albertans will not have the same access to these programs. They will be discouraged from fully participating in the advanced education system that we claim to be so proud of because the cost will go well beyond their means. They simply will not be able to secure the kind of debt that this government believes they have an obligation to secure because we are removing ourselves from the responsibility of providing an affordable university or postsecondary education to our children.

Health. Well, health is an interesting one because, of course, we had the government throw in a whole bunch of money to health at the last minute. Frankly, I think it was probably one of the most political decisions that this government has made since it's been elected, and that's saying a lot because practically every decision is a political decision. Nonetheless, a little bit of extra money for a little while: we'll see how it turns out. The problem is that we still have a huge crisis in health care. There are so many areas that I could talk about, but the one I will talk about since I have, I believe, 30 seconds . . . [Ms Notley's speaking time expired] Oh, not that, even. Okay.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. It gives me a great deal of pleasure to be able to stand up and debate and get on the record a few things in regard to the budget. I'm going to start off with the question that I asked in question period today to the Minister of Employment and Immigration and was somewhat ridiculed in regard to: are you spending or are you saving?

You know, Mr. Chair, I've been around a long time in this Legislature, and sometimes that's good news and sometimes it's not so good news because it kind of ages you. I will tell you that my previous background was drug and alcohol counselling, so I feel that I know a fair amount about what's going on with that particular area. I can tell you that the fact of the matter is that six weeks isn't long enough, and the southern Alberta group that is concerned about this knows that. They have professionals that deal with this. The minister spoke about the cost for the beds. Well, I can tell you that at the far end of it, it's much more costly if we are having them incarcerated or if we're having them in our health care system because of their alcohol or drug addictions and their mental issues.

You know, it's like what's been bought up before. It's called prioritization. Let's just talk a little bit about prioritization. I'm going to focus just on ministerial staff and minister's budgets and exactly what's happening in some of the budgets. There has to be some credit given to the government and not so much credit on the others. I'm just going to talk a minute – and I'm going to find my budget – about the minister's office in regard to priorities.

Priorities of the minister's office is very interesting because if we look down the line at all of the ministers – for example, Aboriginal Relations' minister's office budget was flatlined. Advanced Education took a deduction, which I think is showing leadership, quite frankly. Agriculture stayed the same. Children and Youth Services stayed the same. Education stayed the same. Energy stayed the same. Finance stayed the same, which I find interesting from the Finance minister because he stood up in this Legislature talking about how he's going to balance the books, and he can't even do anything on his own budget. Health, Municipal Affairs, Tourism's budget didn't change whatsoever in the minister's office. Transportation didn't change whatsoever. So it was interesting.

I'm going to focus on setting priorities in this government. I'd like to talk just briefly for a minute on Executive Council. I just want to talk very shortly in regard to priorities of the Premier's office in regard to their Public Affairs Bureau, which has stayed the same again, but the spending, which I find very fascinating, is on branding, which is $9.6 million last year and now is $7 million this year. I still can't figure out what we're branding and why we want to brand it and have never really ever been given any sort of rationale behind that so that I could say: "Yeah. I support that. We need to get Alberta branded." Public Affairs Bureau: huge, $14.3 million. I could go on and on in some of those, you know?

The hon. member behind me talked briefly today about children's services, and it was interesting to hear the debate in the House in regard to the description of cuts and not cuts. You know, Mr. Chair, I was a former minister of that department, had the honour and privilege of being the minister of children's services for two years and, quite frankly, am quite appalled about what's happening in the recent developments. I listened to my colleague behind me, and I don't necessarily agree with the NDP all the time, but I certainly can tell you that she's tenacious. She's like a little dog with a bone when she gets on an issue. We talked about the times, the five days or the three days. Quite frankly, it's irrelevant. The timing is irrelevant in regard to when this issue was brought forward.

As a minister of the Crown – and I was told that under the previous leader – you are responsible for what happens in your department. That particular ministry is 24/7. We spoke in estimates. We talked about some of the things. You know, I'm getting all sorts of e-mails right now in regard to the CEO of region 6, and I want to put that on the record. I had the honour and privilege of working with that particular individual when I was minister, and he's an upstanding employee. I always found that his heart was in the right place, and his number one priority was always the children in this province.

For someone to say that there haven't been any cuts in the ministry, if you go to the minister's budget, no. But then you have to start digging deeper down in regard to region 1, region 2, region 3, region 4, and all the way through. What's always fascinated me is the fact that, you know, it was pointed out to us today about the foster care support, but if you go to region 6 and see the cuts there, it's beyond my comprehension, quite frankly. When I spoke to the minister in estimates, I asked her about her own ministerial budget and asked her why at that particular time she didn't show initiative or, quite frankly, leadership in making cuts within her particular budget.

You know, there are a whole bunch of things that can be questioned in this budget. We talk about the oil and gas. I found that conversation always very fascinating when I was previously a member of the government and for two and a half years was speaking to the previous Minister of Energy about all of my concerns, what was going on in this royalty report. I have hundreds of pages, actually three file folders full of documentation that I sent to that particular minister at the time, saying: "Please don't do this. Think about what you're doing." I have kept that because I think it was important.

I had many conversations with the previous Minister of Energy, and we had some good conversation, and I know he got it. He got what was happening in this province and what was happening to the oil and gas industry. I appreciated the fact that he took the time. You know, I put a group of people together the December of I guess it would have been '08, and they drove down to meet with him. There was a group of them that I'd put together right from the big businesses to the small business to voice their concerns about what was happening.

Two and a half years, Mr. Chair, and the government finally wakes up, and they say: "Hmm. Maybe we made a mistake on the royalty, and maybe we realize all of the money that's leaving this province, going to B.C. and going to Saskatchewan. Oh, wait. We're losing investor confidence. Where's that going?" Two and a half years later they all of a sudden wake up. They have this competitive review, and they say: "Gee. We get it." There is not an MLA in Calgary that doesn't realize the potential and the devastation that has happened in that economic engine of the oil and gas sector and not only in Calgary; it's all the way through.

I mean, I have a son that started off as a rig pig. He would phone me, and he'd say: Mom, I'm in wherever. I'd say to him: where is that? So he would explain it to me. I think we forget about all of the things that we've been doing, particularly in the regard that they're using their hotels; they're using the gas. [interjection] It's a little hard to try and focus when you've got several conversations going on around you, quite frankly, Mr. Chair, including one of my own colleagues.

An Hon. Member: It's your own member.

Mrs. Forsyth: Yes, I know.

And all that they're doing to these small towns in Alberta. You know, they're eating in the local restaurant, they're in the motels sleeping, they're gassing their trucks up, they're having a beer in the local bar, and all of a sudden that's drying up all over the province. So finally the government saw the light. Two and a half years later they saw the light, which is two and a half years too late.

Now they think they've saved it, but the haven't dealt with the royalty curves. That's very important. They have to get investors' confidence back in this province in that regard. The Energy minister can hobnob with all of the people that they want, but I think that, you know, in any relationship it's building trust back and getting those particular individuals onside. For me it's just priorities, and that priority was lost somewhere in regard to all of the things that were happening.

Mr. Chair, while this budget is going to go through because the government has a majority and we're three of us, we want to get on the record what we consider – and we've been ridiculed again on our balanced budget, but I think it's important to talk about priorities. It's not our priorities, as in the Wildrose caucus. It's Albertans' priorities and what Albertans are telling me.

It's been a fascinating process from sitting in government to coming over to a member of the opposition and something that I never dreamed in a million years, being elected since 1993, would be where I thought I would be. Quite frankly, after a lot of soul-searching and thinking about who am I exactly serving and why am I here and who am I responsible for, it was very clear to me that the constituents of Calgary-Fish Creek and, quite frankly, the constituents of Calgary and – let's go one step further – the constituents of this wonderful province that I love so much weren't being listened to. I could give you 101 examples. I could give you 101 examples of waking up in the morning and finding out about decisions that the government has made virtually without any caucus input. I'd be more than willing to put those on the record also.

Mr. Chair, we want a budget that reflects the prioritization of Albertans and what Albertans have clearly articulated are their priorities. I can tell you that there has not been one person in this wonderful province that has come to me and said: "Yes, you need to spend $7 million on branding. That's important for Albertans." Nine point six million dollars the year before.

I want to say, Mr. Chair, that I appreciated having the time to be able to speak for a few minutes, and I'm looking forward to listening to others.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm happy to rise and speak to Bill 15, the Appropriation Act, 2010, the budget. I talked in second reading a lot about, you know, some of the things that this government has done or has not done to get us into the pickle that we're in financially. I'd like to focus a little bit more on the types of things I would like to see in this bill as we move forward or at least maybe in future budgets as we move forward. Hopefully, in this budget we could find a way to do it. I doubt they're going to accept these ideas, but we can at least put them on the record. I think that it's important to put it on the record.

I would say, Mr. Chair, that the Wildrose Alliance caucus did put together an alternative budget, some ideas, some amendments, some things that we would like to see in the budget. At the time we didn't have any research staff. It was just three people working really hard and getting, you know, volunteer accountants and volunteer economists to help us with the draft. It took a lot of time and a lot of effort to do it, so I wanted to make sure that it was a matter of public record as things we would like to see in this bill this year and if not this year, next year.

Budget 2010 we feel is a stunning illustration of the profound mismanagement of our province's finances by this PC government. According to Budget 2010 the government of Alberta is expecting to spend roughly $38.7 billion dollars, as illustrated in this bill, against revenues of approximately $34 billion. This implies a budgetary deficit of $4.7 billion. An additional $2.8 billion in capital investment, as it is termed, which we've debated in this House for some time, is not accounted for in the government's current deficit projection. That is seen on page 18 of the government of Alberta's fiscal plan.

This brings the government of Alberta's real cash deficit to roughly $7.6 billion, which it plans on financing using debt, which is now estimated at $4.425 billion over the last couple of years, and draining the province's sustainability fund from roughly $15 billion last year to $8.2 billion this year and, optimistically, down to $2.8 billion by 2012. Virtually all the savings will be eliminated by 2012 according to the government's own rosy projections. This vast swath of red ink, Mr. Chair, is similar to that of Budget 2009 and is evidence that this government has yet again failed to bring spending under control despite repeated warnings to do so or face the prospect of higher taxes, a return to massive debts, and an erosion of the Alberta advantage.

A Wildrose Alliance government would not permit this to happen. Although Albertans expect their elected representatives to protect front-line social programs, health education, PDD while providing critical public infrastructure, they also expect their government to responsibly protect the Alberta advantage, live within their means, and prioritize needs before wants. Although erasing a $7.6 billion cash deficit in one year is not practically possible without heavy cuts, the Wildrose Alliance opposition caucus believes the government can cut the cash deficit by approximately $4.7 billion, to roughly $2.8 billion, a 62 per cent reduction from the government's projected cash deficit of $7.6 billion, by implementing the following spending adjustments.

Again, Mr. Chair, we are not proposing overall budget cuts; we are proposing an increase. We're just making sure that the increase is within the rate of inflation plus population growth and making sure that it is spread into the areas that are most needed, for the most vulnerable Albertans, while putting off some of the things that can wait a year or two. That is what we feel is important.

How would we do this? As was mentioned earlier by my colleague from Calgary-Glenmore, right now we spend over twice as much on infrastructure in this province – and we have for the last several years – than the next closest province on a per capita basis. You know, it's nice to build infrastructure. We all like good roads. We all like good bridges. We all want lots of different infrastructure. But we don't need it all at once. It's just not necessary to have it all at once.

It's funny. The government doesn't want to include the infrastructure in the deficit number, the cost of the infrastructure, this year roughly $3 billion. Well, if that was the case, if it was really a cash-neutral or revenue-neutral idea, then why don't we just build $40 billion in new roads and bridges or $100 billion? The reason is because the cash still has to come from somewhere. It still has to be paid. In this case it's being taken out of the sustainability fund through debt financing. But the money still has to come from somewhere, and this government doesn't understand that. They think that the more you spend on infrastructure, it's just great. It's like you can spend as much as you want because it doesn't really affect the end deficit number. What a great deal. It's fantastic. Well, yeah, except that this infrastructure is being paid for by debt; it's being paid for by draining our savings.

Anybody with kids and grandkids who does not want them to have to deal with this huge debt that is going to be put on them in the future, who wants their kids to have savings so that they can offset the decline of oil and gas revenues over the long term: those kids are going to be out of luck. Our kids are going to be out of luck if we do not turn this ship around and change some of our habits.

What we would like to do is spread that massive infrastructure budget over a period, rather than a $20.1 billion capital budget over three years, and instead extend that $20.1 billion capital budget over four and a half years. So an additional 18-month extension on that capital budget. This would yield savings of nearly $2.8 billion in 2010 and – this is important – stretching it over four and a half years as opposed to three years, that $2.8 billion, would still put us in a situation where we are still spending more. It would put us slightly above that of British Columbia. It would put us way ahead of Ontario. And it would actually put us only behind Quebec, which we're essentially sponsoring right now, and Newfoundland on a per capita basis.

We're not talking about not building any roads or bridges or anything like that. We're just talking about slowing it down for a bit. And I think that that's important because as we come out of this recession, as we have been – we've been coming out of it for a while now, for several months – the bigger danger is going to be inflation. If we keep on driving inflation by these massive infusions of capital expenditure, you know, we're going to be doing a disservice to the population. So we have to be very careful. That's why it's so important to make sure that we have sustainable infrastructure spending rather than breaking the budget and spending way more than the next closest province is. It's just not good for Alberta.

You know what? I remember that a couple of months ago I got a document in my constituency mailbox, and it explained some of the roadwork that was going to be done in the constituency of Airdrie-Chestermere. It was several millions of dollars – several millions of dollars. I looked down the list. There was the finishing up of the underpass. That one is a priority for sure, so good on doing that. Then I looked through some of the other things – and these are good things to have – but there were road widenings, there was another overpass in a less populated area, there was some repaving of roads. Anyway, it totalled quite a bit of money.

You know what? My constituents, I am sure, would rather see a balanced budget and put off that road paving and road widening for a year and a half, for just 18 more months. I think they'd be willing to do that. I'm sure they'd be willing to do that if it meant that if everyone did that same type of thing, had that same type of mentality, we could balance the budget.

If we cannot spend near the top of the provinces in infrastructure spending, if we can't do that and still have good roads, then obviously the Infrastructure minister doesn't have his priorities straight on what to do. But I think he's a good minister. He knows how to do it. He'll be able to work within a $5 billion infrastructure building budget. I'd think he'd still be able to make sure that we had good roads and good bridges. We might have to wait 18 months for a few things, but surely we can do that.

It's to make sure that our kids aren't burdened with debt and aren't burdened with a whole bunch of infrastructure they can't afford to pay for or to maintain and to make sure that we're not draining our savings, to make sure that we're saving a little bit more in the heritage fund and building up that nest egg so that we can decrease our reliance on oil and gas as we go forward. That's a very big part of the budget that we'd like to see changed.

The second major point, major line item is with regard to health care and education spending. If we just kept increases this year in health care and education spending to the rate of inflation plus growth – we'll use the government's number, 3.5 per cent. If we increased the health care budget by 3.5 per cent and education by 3.5 per cent, if we just did that this year, that would save us $1.33 billion. We're not talking about cutting things. We're talking about increasing. We should be taking advantage of some of the economies of scale as we increase in population. It would save us $1.33 billion if we would just show a little restraint.

No one wants the '90s-style Ralph Klein slash-and-burn cuts. You know, at the time that might have needed to occur because we didn't have any ability to borrow money at a good rate. Maybe that had to happen. Well, now it doesn't have to happen. We don't have to slash and burn. But we will return to the situation where we may have to slash and burn if we don't get our spending under control. Health care and education is a good place to start. Three and a half per cent is a lot of money. It's many millions of dollars, many tens and hundreds of millions of dollars. If we could just restrain those two departments alone to inflation plus growth, that would yield us budgetary savings of $1.33 billion. We're already, if you include the infrastructure spread over four and a half years instead of three, getting up to roughly $4 billion in savings just for this year alone, which is quite an accomplishment and something I think we should do.

There are other things. You know, again, it's needs versus wants. We all want mass transit infrastructure. Very important. It's important to reduce emissions of all kinds, and mass transit is a great way to do it. It helps build the economy. It helps get labour to where it's needed faster and cheaper. It takes cars off the roads, so you don't have to build as many roads. These are all very good things. I think every party in here supports mass transit infrastructure, and to the government's credit I think they've shown that they support mass transit. That's a good thing. No one is disputing that.

We have this Green TRIP initiative, and I don't think there's any one constituency that would benefit more from Green TRIP funds than Airdrie, potentially. In Airdrie, you know, we think that we're large enough and we're connected enough to Calgary with regard to our people working in Calgary. We think that a commuter rail system in the next 10 to 15 to 20 years would be a good idea. We'd like to start planning for that and buying the land for it and all that. We understand that. But, again, we are in a time when we cannot afford that right now. The $70 million afforded to that Green TRIP initiative can wait a year or two. We don't need to do that right now.

Another idea, of course, is the absolute most wasteful program this government has by a mile, the $2 billion carbon capture and storage experiment. Absolutely brutal. The people of Alberta don't want it. It doesn't matter if you're a Conservative or a Liberal. Nobody wants this program. It's just all meant for window dressing, you know, to try to placate environmentalists. It's all to kind of help our image. It does nothing to really help the environment.

What we should be investing in with regard to green technology and that sort of thing is incentives. We should be incenting people to use geothermal and giving tax breaks for those types of things. That's going to do more than this ridiculous stick-hot-air-in-the-ground idea. It has never been tested at this large scale. It has been used for enhanced oil recovery in Saskatchewan and other places for sure. On small scales it has worked, but the scale that this government is talking about will cost tens of billions of dollars to implement. A hundred million dollars this year for carbon capture and storage. We can do without that forever. Certainly, we can do without it for a year.

The venture capital fund. You know, Ralph Klein was many things to different people, but I'll tell you one thing he always said, and he said it over and over again: government should not be in the business of being in business. But that's what we keep doing. Every time I look at a press release from this government, it's about a handout to incent some company somewhere to do something. That's not our business. If you want to incent business, lower taxes, lower regulation. That's how you incent business. What you don't do is go running around the province handing out money. That's not what a Conservative government does. That's what liberals do, not the Liberal Party but liberal-minded folk. That's what socialists do. That's what happens. We don't need these corporate welfare handouts. We shouldn't be picking winners and losers. That is wrong-headed. Governments have no business in doing that.

They talk about wanting to diversify. I've got an idea. Why don't we start growing that heritage fund to the point where the interest therefrom can decrease our reliance on oil and gas revenues each year and eventually lower taxes? Let the private sector decide what the great new technology, the great new idea is. Give them that ability. The way to do that is to lower taxes, not to try to pick winners and losers and, you know: what about this; what about that? You know, it's just simply not the case.

I hear the excuse for it once in a while from government members that, oh, well, the oil sands never would have been developed if we hadn't gotten our noses in that; if we hadn't handed out those grants, it never would have happened. Baloney. It would have happened. It might have happened two or three years later, but it would have happened.

You know, every time I hear about government diversification or our government trying to diversify the province through handing out grants, I can give you a hundred examples where it hasn't worked, and I can't think of more than one or two where it has.

Mr. Hinman: It's like playing the lottery.

Mr. Anderson: Exactly. It's like playing the lottery. Once in a while you hit it, but most of the time it has been an absolute waste of money.

That's what I feel about some of these corporate subsidies. Those equal about $210 million this year. We could get rid of those permanently. Surely, we could delay them.

And there are others. We could reduce the size of cabinet from 23 to 16. They started with 18. You know, there is no reason to have 23 ministries. I'm not going to embarrass the particular ministers by mentioning the ones that could go. [interjections]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere has the floor.

Mr. Anderson: I might start with the Minister of Employment and Immigration for sure.

An Hon. Member: What about housing?

Mr. Anderson: Housing would be up there. You're right. It could merge.

Anyway, absolutely there are all kinds of things that we could do to merge. [interjections] These ministers are very upset. They got more upset about that last point, Mr. Chair, than any other point. That's hilarious. They're worried about themselves, obviously.

In any event we could merge these ministries from 23 to 16. That would save us $44 million this year, $44 million if we did that. That's just off administration alone.

We could end this direct subsidization of horse racing to the tune of $25 million per year. [interjections] Some of the members over there, Mr. Chair, just don't seem to . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere has the floor.

Mr. Hinman: The Liberals look good now.

Mr. Anderson: Yeah, the Liberals apparently do look good now, that's for sure. They look good to a lot of people right now compared to these folks.

The other big thing is the Public Affairs Bureau: $7 million at least we could cut from that. I think it's a $15 million budget. We could at least cut $7 million out of that. Then, of course, there are the salaries. You know, I look at guys like Ron Glen, the chief of staff of the Premier, and I think: here's a guy who's making more than his boss. What has he done to warrant a $400,000 salary? How on earth could he possibly warrant that? I look at the Deputy Minister of the Executive Council, to the Premier. You know, he might be a very skilful individual, but why is he making more than his boss? It doesn't make any sense. The reason is because this government thinks they have their own little personal piggy bank to reward their friends with, and that's what they do. It's shameful – shameful – that the chief of staff, that the deputy minister make more than the Premier. I mean, that's insane. It's absolutely amazing to me. You know, I just don't understand how it's even defensible, but some ministers do believe it's defensible, I guess.

These proposed adjustments are needed, Mr. Chair, very much so. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs.

Mr. Denis: Yes. Mr. Chairman, I'd like to just make a motion for unanimous consent of this House so that when we do come to a vote on Bill 15 in Committee of the Whole, if a standing vote is requested, the bell time be reduced from 10 minutes to one.

The Deputy Chair: On the motion as proposed by the hon. Deputy Government House Leader that the interval between bells be one minute when it comes to a vote on this bill in Committee of the Whole, does anyone not want this to happen?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's important that we get back to the most important bill that we're passing, the appropriation bill, and the need to speak to that. My hon. colleague from Airdrie-Chestermere has been putting out a few solutions on what we should be doing to balance the budget. I want to throw out a few more ideas. If we had a Treasury Board where the opposition were part of that, there are a lot of innovative ideas that come from Albertans. [interjections] He left. He was so disgusted with the way it was working. Who wants to operate under a code of silence? [interjections]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, the Member for Calgary-Glenmore has the floor, and the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore will address the chair.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I want to go over a few ideas on what we should be doing. I guess I want to go back and refer to a comment about the unfair, regressive tax, the flat tax. There's nothing further from the economic truth than that. What we actually want to do and need to do, which this government doesn't understand, is: what are the principles of taxation that grow the economy?

You know, the Premier has said: oh, we're not going to tax our way out of this recession. But that's exactly what he did: tax our way deeper into this recession by saying that we weren't getting our fair share and that we needed to take more because these guys have made more. When they had an $8 billion surplus and didn't know what to do with it, he said: well, we should have $9.4 billion, and if we raise the royalty tax, look at all the extra money we're going to get. People who don't understand economics think that by raising taxes, money comes in.

We had the hon. member talking about missing $4 billion of tax because we have a flat tax here in the province. It's just the opposite. If you actually go back and look at the revenue to the Alberta government and the federal government, it has almost doubled in the last five or six years since we instituted the flat tax. The reason is because wealthy individuals will move to low taxation areas. Corporate headquarters move to areas with low taxation. That's what Premier Klein envisioned and realized when he announced that we were going to drop our corporate tax from 15 per cent to 8 per cent. But somewhere along the way there, around 11 per cent, they got sidetracked because they thought they needed to spend more money.

We need to continue looking at how we reduce the tax and get it down there so that corporations set up their head offices here, so that businesses are set up here. We want industry here in Alberta. We don't want to be shipping out our produce not vertically integrated, using all advantages of the produce that we have, whether that's wood, agriculture, oil and gas. All those areas should be vertically integrated here in Alberta. Why? Because the tax structure is an incentive for them to come here.

Let's talk about a few of the problems, what we should be doing. We really should be putting pressure on the federal government. I remember a few years ago when the finance minister said that we were going to implement a six-month capital gains exemption period. The reason was that if someone had some capital gains, they could move that over into a new area that had an opportunity to grow.

The most important thing in growing an economy is having capital available. You don't want to punish capital. You want to reward capital by instituting and putting pressure on the federal government and saying, you know: "You talked about a six-month window. Let's go with a one-year window so that the innovative Albertans, innovative Canadians who come up with ideas can actually move their money from something that has worked but is trapped there, move the entire amount into the new area and grow.” We really should be looking at that. What are we going to do to attract capital? The capital cost allowance is what allowed Alberta to develop their oil from the oil sands. It was a great opportunity for entrepreneurs, big business to come in and to raise capital because they were going to get a fast return on the money.

Let’s talk about an area that I’ve talked about before. We have an RRSP, a registered retirement savings plan, one of the good things the government did going years back, realizing we have an unfunded liability with the Canada pension plan. Let’s get these people excited about helping people to help themselves. What we’ll do is have an income tax deduction for people who want to open up an RRSP. That’s the type of tax incentive that allows people to help themselves and move forward, and that’s what we need to do if we’re going to get ourselves out of this recession quicker.

If we were to have a capital investment and inventory savings plan, when a business might sell a portion – or let’s take a rancher or farmer who because of the drought, the bad times, needs to sell off some of his land, maybe some of his cattle. We made a concession a couple of years ago during the drought and allowed them to have a two-year time span to replace that. If we were to develop a capital investment and inventory savings plan, what people could do is put that in there just like a registered retirement savings plan, tax free, and then when an opportunity comes along, they could draw that capital. Maybe it’s for the film industry, that we have an opportunity here, and you want to draw that capital and put it in there. That’s what we need to look at, some new tax incentives that don’t cost the taxpayer but actually bring in capital so that we can grow the economy.

We should be looking at having a discussion that education isn’t free. It’s very expensive, yet I think everybody here in this House would agree that it’s worth it. We want our children to go. We want ourselves to be able to upgrade and to become more educated so we’re more competitive in the world. But how do we do that? We keep talking about that we need to increase taxes. We need more money to go there. Well, there are actually some pretty innovative ideas out there on what we could do. Let’s take the RRSP concept again. If we were to tell students that after you graduate, you can have an income tax deduction on your income if you pay it off to your student loan, all of a sudden it becomes affordable. When they have the income coming in, when they’ve got their job, they can pay it down at an accelerated rate. Then all of a sudden they realize that, you know: I can take an extra year or two because when I get out, I’ll have the opportunity.

Another interesting idea that’s out there is an actual education trust fund, which members in this House have talked about. Actuaries that I’ve had a little bit of involvement with say that the average cost of your education is about 1 and a half per cent of your income in the long term. So if we were to set up this education savings fund, people who went to university and graduated actually could sign on and say, “You know, I’d be interested in paying a 3 per cent premium on whatever income tax rate I’m at. I’ll pay a 3 per cent premium that would go into the education savings fund.” Then that fund would be available for other people to go, and it would start to grow.

Those are ideas that people, if they can’t afford it, look at. Let’s say that you’re in the arts, and you’re going to become a piano teacher, and there isn’t a great opportunity to earn a lot of money. Maybe their tax rate instead of 19 per cent would be 22 per cent. For a successful businessman at maybe 49 per cent it would be 52 per cent. But the idea is: let’s get some funds in place that keep it affordable.

Another area in order to save money and be more efficient is that we need to look at a new funding formula with municipalities. We have these cap in hand, where you always have to go and ask, you know, the provincial or the federal government for money because they’ve taken it out of our communities. I just want to go over a few numbers here. Back in 2006 the city of Calgary, the individuals there, paid $5.1 billion in personal income tax out of the city of Calgary; they paid $2 billion for provincial income tax: $7.1 billion left the city of Calgary in 2006. I haven’t been able to get the numbers for how much corporate tax came out of Calgary, but I’m sure that it is one of the higher areas because of the corporate towers and the businesses that are there.

The other interesting thing though, Mr. Chair, is charitable giving: $434 million was donated by Calgarians to nonprofit and charitable organizations. That is phenomenal at that rate. Albertans want to give to good causes, and I put forward and truly believe that Albertans will give their money to charitable organizations and nonprofits at a far greater – what would I say? – rate if, in fact, the government would just step back a little bit and say: “You know what? We’ll give you the same tax breaks that we give to political donations.” Let’s even step it up one higher. What if we were to say, “You know what? Ten per cent of your income, maybe 15 per cent, whatever it is, if you’d like to give that to a charitable organization that’s registered and accredited out of the provincial or federal government, that would be an income tax deduction.”

There’s a phenomenal organization in Calgary that deals with youth that have addiction problems. It’s called ARC. They raise, I believe, 70 per cent of their own money, and their success rate is phenomenal. The government does give some, but what would happen if we were to change, where successful businesses, successful individuals could give 10 or 15 per cent of their income to a facility like that? You would see that the great facilities that are working would continue to grow, and we’d actually fill that void and help organizations to help the people that really need it.

We need to step back and rethink: how are we going to run our budgets? How are we going to provide the social services that we need to the people here in Alberta? I think that if we go back and look, government isn’t the answer, though so many in this House seem to think that, “Oh, I can look after housing, and I’m going to be able to help that. Oh, I’m going to look after immigration and employment, and I’m going to be able to help those areas. Oh, I’m going to look after tourism, and all of a sudden it’s going to flourish,” like those things couldn’t happen without these ministers. The bottom line, Mr. Chair, is that we can and we will do a lot better if government was to step a little bit to the side.

There are a couple more quotes here that I want to put out. “The government is like a baby’s alimentary canal, with a happy appetite at one end and no responsibility at the other.” That’s what this government has been like. There’s just been a lot of . . . come out the other end that isn’t in our best interest, and there isn’t a diaper to catch it and do something with it. We have a problem. By the way, that was Ronald Reagan. Who else would come up with something like that? Awesome saying. So remember that you’re not wearing a diaper, and it’s a mess.

“A debt is just as hard for a government to pay as it is for an individual. No debt ever comes due at a good time. Borrowing is the only thing that is handy all the time.” Will Rogers. It’s just a real problem.

I wanted to turn for a minute now to the government’s fiscal plan. On page 3 we have: “2010-13 Capital Plan supports $20.1 billion in projects.” The first question I would ask: is that sustainable? Can we and do we need to spend another $20 billion from 2013 to 2016?

I think the answer to that would be no. We need to look at it more. This money that we have, the revenue coming in, doesn't need to be burning a hole in the government's pockets, thinking: if we don't spend it, you know, what's going to happen to this money?

It's not being spent well. You know, we have health, school, and postsecondary facilities: $4.4 billion. Have we gone through a line-by-line item to see and check if we really need to do that for infrastructure? We have hospitals that we can't open, we can't finish because we don't have the money. It has not been good budgeting. Municipal infrastructure support: $5.2 billion. We have the Green TRIP, again, an area where we should have tax incentives for people who want to go green, not the government picking and choosing a few that in all likelihood – and of course the big one; we'll get to that in a minute – aren't going to work. It's just wrong.

Other capital expenses: $4.7 billion for carbon capture and storage, housing, and one that I'm really in favour of that we really should be looking at for the future, water infrastructure. But what that doesn't include – when I've done a little research, it's not about water storage. We don't need to be storing CO₂; we need to be storing H₂O. Why are we not looking at off-stream and on-stream areas where we can and should be developing dams? We're already at a critical stage. There is climate change going on. That is something that we can all agree on. What's causing it is definitely up for debate. [interjection] The hon. member doesn't think climate change is happening? I mean, just what happened with the weather today versus the day before, we see climate change. It's been ongoing since this earth began.

Let's look at this other capital expenditure, though, carbon capture. Why would we spend $2 billion on something that in all likelihood is just going to be another magnesium plant, that we can say is a government boondoggle. It's a silly thing to be spending money on. We shouldn't be doing that.

Again, I want to go back to water infrastructure, water storage. That's where the budget should be prioritized. We haven't built a dam since the Oldman River dam.

An Hon. Member: Wrong.

Mr. Hinman: A major dam. We've had a few small storage ones, but we need some major water storage. I'll grant, hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod, that, yes, we've built a few, but you have to acknowledge that they've been very small in comparison to the Oldman River dam and the need that we have.

The fact of the matter is that we have more and more water coming in a shorter and shorter period. If you look at emergency spending, whether it's Okotoks, High River, the different cities, because of the huge amount of water that's been coming in a short period, if we're going to be wise in the use of our resources, we need to be able to store it. It's critical. It's smart. It's something that we should be looking at. That's a project in infrastructure that would again be looking at people's future and the development of Alberta.

Now we get to the really alarming point, direct borrowing: $1.5 billion directly borrowed in 2009-2010. Why are we borrowing money? Capital projects is why, they say, which includes an estimated hundred million in Alberta capital bonds. Overall in the three years we have a $3.3 billion plan to borrow. It's wrong, Mr. Chairman. Those are the things that we should be debating and talking about in this bill. Why are we going out and spending that kind of money? I do not understand other than the fact that there's no accountability.

I want to go back, though, to municipalities and the importance of why we should be changing the way we're redistributing our tax here in the province. We need to be setting an example in working with the federal government. They're taking the lion's share. Going back to the Calgary example, $5.1 billion to the federal government in personal income tax, $2 billion to the provincial government in personal income tax. What I believe we need is to set up a formula, just like the government has now done with the fuel tax. There's a percentage that comes back. What if we were to say that 30 per cent is returned to the area that generates that money, 30 per cent to the province, and maybe 40 per cent to the feds? All of a sudden we have sustainable communities.

You look at an area like Fort McMurray, which has contributed billions and billions of dollars to the Alberta and federal governments in revenue, yet they've got a stranglehold on building the seniors' facility. They can't put the education, the bridges, the roads in there, yet the money came from there. We need to realize that that percentage needs to go back to those areas, and all of a sudden they're sustainable. We really need to address this. It always kind of amazes me how each level of government says: "Oh, we're the only one that's accountable. We can't trust municipal government. They wouldn't spend the money right." We need to set the rules and regulations and say, "Well, here's some money for this road," or "Here's the money for a C-train or an LRT," or "Here's a little bit of money in designating it." What we need to do is to return that money to that municipality and let them prioritize where they need to go.

I kind of got a chuckle a few years ago. I was up in Grande Prairie. They had potholes that were just terrible, and they needed to address it.

Mr. MacDonald: How big were the potholes?

Mr. Hinman: So big that I can't say it. It was embarrassing how big they were. You went over into B.C., they were good. In Grande Prairie I don't think we lost any vehicles, I don't think we lost any people, but we lost a lot of money because of the cost of driving and hitting those potholes and the damage that it was doing.

The problem was they applied to the provincial government, said, "We need some extra money," and they said no. Yet the next year the provincial government comes out with this idea of, oh, we'll have a pothole fund to go to these areas. Well, Grande Prairie had already spent the money, so they didn't qualify.

The problem, where we're really having the deficit, is the democratic deficit. That's the problem. Let's get to the root of this. Are we as elected representatives accountable to the people who elected us? Are we at the local level, the provincial level, the federal level? No, we're not. We need openness and accountability. If we were to put recall in place, we don't need to worry about the money that goes to Calgary or Airdrie or Grande Prairie. The local people can hold their elected people accountable through recall if they're spending the money wrong. To think that a bigger government that's further away is going to hold us responsible: it doesn't work. They don't understand the priorities. We need to change, and we need to look at that.

What we need to do is have a formula, and we need accountability. Again, what we need are open documents. If you go and talk to a councillor in a smaller town, let's say Airdrie . . .

Mr. Anderson: A smaller town?

Mr. Hinman: Well, I mean, compared to Calgary. I'm sorry. It's a tenth.

. . . with a hundred-million-dollar budget, those people that are elected there to make those decisions go through that budget line by line, and that's what we need to be doing. We need to make sure that . . . [Mr. Hinman's speaking time expired]

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you. Well, there's just so much. I wish we had more time, and I'm sure the members opposite wish for more time as well.

You know, you brought up democracy, and it was in a different context, hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, but there is some truth to that on our budgeting, actually. Part of democracy, of course, and having a healthy democracy is transparency. How many times have we been sitting in this House and I'll say or somebody will say: "Look, we need to balance the budget. This is what we need to do"? Then you'll have government members saying: "Oh, what schools would you blow up? What hospitals would you blow up? What would you do to achieve a balanced budget here? Oh, it would just be absolutely the worst thing ever if you were given the reins because you'd just blow everything up" or "You wouldn't build a school for the rest of all time" or something like that. It's an amazingly silly argument, and it's one that's made over and over and over again, but we're used to hearing it over here.

Part of a good budgeting process would involve transparency. Part of that would mean making the infrastructure list of projects for education, for health care, for infrastructure, for roads, for all things. If we're going to build something, it should be on a list. It should be on a priority list, a specific one. I know that there's a 20-year capital plan, that there's a three-year plan, a five-year plan, and all that, but those things get mixed up so much. There's got to be a master list of projects and the order that they are going to be built in as capital becomes available for them. If we were able to do that, we could as a government, as a House start having conversations about what things can wait, what things can wait a year and a half or two years or three years or four years or more, and what things we need to move up.

The classic example of that is the airport tunnel. That's a priority project, and this member, the Member for Calgary-McCall, has been just very adamant about that. It's also important to the community of Airdrie. But it's so difficult as an opposition member to have the discussion and have the debate and say: "Look, if we move this airport tunnel up on the capital list, we could do that, but what could we take out, or what could we delay?" It's so difficult to do that because there's no transparency. We don't know what the exact priority list is, so it's very difficult. I mean, there are things, I know, in my constituency that could wait 18 months, 24 months, or even longer. I'd be willing to have that conversation, but it's difficult to do that when we don't have the list in front of us. There's also no accountability.

What happens is that the giving out of infrastructure becomes highly politicized. I know it's highly politicized, and people in this House know it's highly politicized. Now, a lot of times political decisions are made that are good, and they end up being the right decisions. But oftentimes they're not the right decisions, and we have bridges to nowhere in this province. I drive through Innisfail every time on my way to work up here at the Leg. There is literally a bridge to nowhere in Innisfail. It's unbelievable. It's funny because this Minister of Infrastructure even admitted to me once that he didn't know how that got built there so quickly or in front of the Airdrie underpass. But the point is that there's no transparency. There's no accountability. How can we possibly know what can wait and what can't wait?

The Calgary airport tunnel is a priority project. It should be a priority project. But we can't skyrocket the deficit even more than it is, so we've got to find other places that we can delay or that we can wait for. In order to have that conversation, we need a transparent priority infrastructure list. I would really hope that in the future we could do that. It would mean that politicians, regardless of who's in government in two or four years, would absolutely have to be accountable for what they do. They couldn't just slide a project at the last minute into the budget and say: now it's a priority.

I mean, we've seen this already with health care. Some of the priorities have changed a lot in the last couple of weeks. The minister is saying: it is a priority. Alberta Health Services is saying: it isn't a priority.

Mr. Danyluk: How would you know that?

Mr. Anderson: Well, it's in the media, hon. member. The minister of health is quoted as saying that a certain project is now a priority, and it wasn't a priority before for Alberta Health Services.

As we go forward, it's important to have that transparency so that we can know where to give and where to take, so that we can have accountability, so that money isn't wasted.

You know, I'd like to move quickly, with about seven minutes left here before the vote, and talk about the hidden cash deficit in this budget and in this Appropriation Act. Obviously, the government of Alberta is claiming a $4.7 billion deficit in Budget 2010, but of course that's not the whole story. There's at least one set of expenses that is not included in this budget deficit. The total capital spending is projected to be $7.2 billion, yet only $4.4 billion of that in infrastructure spending appears in the budget as a line item expense. An additional $2.8 billion of capital investment in government-owned assets is not included in the government's quoted deficit number.

Now, what I'm not alleging is that anything illegal is happening by this. They are following generally accepted accounting principles. There's no doubt about that. That's not what the argument is. The argument is that they seem to be saying – and it says right on page 18 of their fiscal plan – that that money, because it's offset as an asset on the books, is therefore okay. It doesn't expand the budget deficit number from $4.7 billion to $7.6 billion. Under that logic, again, we could build $30 billion, $40 billion, $50 billion in new infrastructure – and I'm sure that the Minister of Transportation would love that – and we'd still have a $4.7 billion deficit. We could build not just the ring roads that we're building now, but we could build three more in each city, and we would still be running a $4.7 billion deficit. If the province wanted the airport tunnel, we'd build that. We'd still be at the same budget number for deficit, $4.7 billion. It makes no sense.

The only reason we know it's happening, essentially – and we see the damage of it – is the sustainability fund. The sustainability fund is going down by $7 billion this year. If you have a $4.7 billion deficit, that doesn't equal the sustainability fund going down $7 billion. On top of that, there's an additional $1 billion in new debt. So that's $8 billion in deficit financing that this government is using not just for the $4.7 billion stated deficit but for the additional $2.8 billion, that they're not counting as an expense because it's offset as an asset on the books.

That, to me, is not as transparent as it should be, to say the least. We need to start having a debate. What happens next year or in 2012? You know, the government, of course, is going to be back in the black. Well, hopefully, they are back in the black. I sure hope so. But when they say that they're back in the black, are they really back in the black, or will they still be going into debt further and draining the sustainability fund further? If they continue in the current accounting practices even when they get to surplus – let's say that it's a $100 million surplus – if they're still spending $3 billion on capital, that actually means that we are still in debt by $3 billion or that we're still in the hole $3 billion on a cash basis.

That money is going to come out of the sustainability fund, that money is going to come from debt, and that is the not the legacy that I think this government, any member in this House – who wants to leave that legacy? Who wants to leave that legacy to our kids: no sustainability fund by 2012, or $2 billion left, having used virtually all the interest from the heritage fund for the last however many years; no building of the heritage fund except by, you know, a few inflation-proofings. We lost all that when the market crashed, and we haven't rebuilt it up. That's the legacy that this government is going to leave to our kids in 2012.

Now, obviously, democracy is a great thing. Now that there's a little bit more democracy in this province, I'm assuming we're going to move towards more fiscal accountability in one way or another. However, the position that this government has put our province in is just totally unacceptable. They take credit for those who went before them, for the parties and the leaders that went before them, for their successes, and they blame everyone else but themselves for the current state that we find ourselves in. There are a lot of fiscal conservatives in this House. There are some in every party, I think. Well, maybe not in every party, but there are in most parties. I looked over my shoulder.

Mr. Hinman: They claim that they'll be fiscal conservatives.

Mr. Anderson: They claim it. That's right.

The point is that we all want to see fiscal responsibility, so let's move towards that. The way to start is to put in place a long-term fiscal plan, Mr. Chair, where we restrain our spending. Obviously, the current ministers are incapable of doing that, or at least their ministries are. Maybe it's a bureaucratic problem. Maybe it's their bureaucrats that are giving them a hard time. I don't know. But they can't seem to restrain their spending. They sure haven't over the last 10 years and certainly not over the last three years. The biggest spending spree has been in the last three years.

If that means that we need to institute a cap on increases and spending at the rate of inflation plus growth, then maybe we need to do that. If we do that, as we recover, we can put more away into the heritage savings trust fund, we can build back up the sustainability fund, and we can build that heritage fund to the point where the interest earned there will reduce our reliance on nonrenewable oil and gas revenues. It will allow us to decrease taxes over the long term and diversify our economy. That's what we need to accomplish. The current methods of running around putting out fires, overspending: it has to stop. I sure hope that we can begin moving in that direction as we move forward.

I'm going to make a motion now, Mr. Chair, to reduce the time of the bells on a standing vote to one minute from 10 minutes, if that's okay, with the unanimous consent of the Assembly.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. If I can phrase this for the hon. member, pursuant to Standing Order 32(3) the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere has requested unanimous consent to waive Standing Order 32(2), which calls for a 10-minute interval between bells, and shorten it to one minute. So I'm going to ask one question. Anyone who is not in favour of that, please say no.

The Deputy Chair: Pursuant to Standing Order 64(4) I must now put the question proposing the approval of the appropriation bill referred to the Committee of the Whole.

[The voice vote indicated that Bill 15 was approved]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 5:45 p.m.]

[One minute having elapsed, the committee divided]

[Motion carried]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, pursuant to Standing Order 64(4) the committee shall now immediately rise and report.

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 15.

The Acting Speaker: All those members of the Assembly who concur with the report, please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed, please say no. So ordered.

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 1 Alberta Competitiveness Act

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar on behalf of the hon. Premier.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure for me to rise today and move third reading of Bill 1.

I would like to thank all members of the House for the great debate that we have had on Bill 1.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On third reading of Bill 1, I'm not convinced that this legislation was necessary from the start. I'm not changing my mind and at the last moment going to support this supposedly flagship bill. This bill to me indicates just how light the agenda is on that side of the House. Certainly, we can be competitive with our taxation rates, with our productivity rates, with our royalty rates without having this notion that was provided in Bill 1.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: I'd also just like to go on the record to say that this is a sad day, to think that Bill 1 is the flagship bill. It's an embarrassment to the people of Alberta to say that we need a bill to be competitive. We used to have the Alberta advantage. It's very sorrowful that this is the first and the flagship bill of this government.

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wish to speak?

The hon. member to close debate.

Mrs. McQueen: Close debate. Question, please.

[Motion carried; Bill 1 read a third time]

Mr. Denis: By popular demand, Mr. Speaker – we are late in the day and late in the hour – I would move that we call it 6 o'clock and that the House stand adjourned until 1:30 tomorrow.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:53 p.m. to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. From our forests and parkland to our prairies and mountains comes the call of our land. From our farmsteads, towns, and cities comes the call of our people that as legislators of this province we act with responsibility and sensitivity. Grant us the wisdom to meet such challenges. Amen.

Hon. members, tomorrow is the 50th wedding anniversary of His Honour and Mrs. Kwong. I know that all members will want to join with me in extending to them the very happiest of happy occasions. [applause]

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to the hon. members of our Assembly the students of Gateway Christian school. They're here today to observe the Legislature and observe the members here in the House. I'd like to introduce their teachers, Mr. Jim Driedger, Mrs. Klaaske deKoning, and Miss Nicole Stolte, and dedicated parent helpers Mrs. Burzuk, Mrs. Oosterhof, Mrs. Bouch, Mrs. Loney, Mr. Trost, Mrs. Burke, Mrs. Moca and her mother, Mr. Schultze, Mrs. Stewart, Mrs. Boorse, Mrs. Vander Leek, and Mrs. Rademacher. This is a group of brilliant young children that will make us very proud in the future. I would ask them all to rise and accept the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to introduce to you and through you 32 members of the Girl Guides of Canada, Alberta Council, and the 4-H, who are participating in the 39th Alberta Girls' Parliament from March 24 to 28, 2010, in Edmonton. This unique program is modelled on the Alberta Legislature, and the delegates come from all over the province. They are accompanied by their adviser, Melanie Reichle; Cindy Fendall, activities co-ordinator; Shannen Hoffman, registrar; Faye Greenslade, facilities co-ordinator; parliamentarians Shannon Robertson and Caitlin Lyster. They are seated in the members' gallery this afternoon. I would ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome from our Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you. It is my honour and privilege to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly some of the immediate family members of the late Father Michael Joseph Troy. The late Father Troy was a well-respected leader, leaving a legacy of tremendous contribution within the Catholic community here in Edmonton, the capital city of our province. Father Troy's family join us today after travelling from Dublin, Ireland. This is a very difficult time for this family as they are here for the funeral of their beloved brother, uncle, and friend, and it is with heartfelt compassion that I introduce to everyone here in the Assembly the following family members, who are located, Mr. Speaker, in your gallery. I would ask them to rise as I call out their names: Mary Farrell, Father Troy's sister; Tom Farrell, nephew of Father Troy; Paul Farrell, nephew of Father Troy; Betty Farrell, Paul Farrell's wife; Marie Hogan, Father Troy's niece; Deirdre Rhattigan, Father Troy's niece; Bernie Finnegan, Father Troy's niece; Gerry Finnegan, Bernie's husband; Angela Farmer, Father Troy's niece.

They're also joined by some of my immediate family members and a close friend of our family: Tony Sarich, my brother-in-law; Susan Sarich, my sister-in-law; Nicholas Sarich, my nephew; and Bob Fillion, a close family friend to the Sariches and to Father Troy. I would ask everyone to give them the traditional warm welcome of this Legislative Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure on behalf of my colleague from Athabasca-Redwater to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly 19 students, teacher Mike Popowicz, teacher assistant Sharon Lakusta, and three parent helpers who have travelled from Thorhild Central school to Edmonton today. I met with them earlier, and I want to compliment the teachers. They had the students very well prepared on the questions that they asked, and it was something that I'm going to definitely pass on to the member. They are seated in the public gallery today, and I would ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to introduce to you and through you on behalf of the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations a group of residents from the Silver Birch Lodge in Sherwood Park. I'm not sure if they've actually arrived yet, but if they are here behind me, could they please receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As you might imagine, it takes a very persuasive woman to get someone like me to do yoga for the first time in public in West Edmonton Mall. Today I would like to introduce to you the team behind the yogathon for Haiti. These ladies held a five-hour yoga event in West Edmonton Mall and raised over $6,000 for the Haitian earthquake relief. I'd ask them to stand as I introduce them: first of all, my very dear friend and constituency board member, Ms Elissa Scott; and Ms Tiffany Burns, an accomplished documentary filmmaker and the event's producer. Ladies and gentlemen, I'd ask you to please give them the traditional warm greeting of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my great pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the House two members of the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees, sitting in the public gallery. They've come here to witness the tabling of the petition calling for Alberta Health Services to stop contracting out security services. Please stand. They are Cherelyn Stefaniszyn, provincial executive for AUPE local 57 and staff at the Red Deer regional hospital centre, and David Climen-haga, director of communications, Alberta Union of Provincial Employees. Please give them our warmest welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll be doing a private member's statement on this individual later, but I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Connor Yuzwenko-Martin. Connor is an active member of Rapid Fire Theatre's famed improv troupe, which plays Friday night Theatresports. He is seated in the public gallery. He is accompanied today by his interpreter, Nicole Sander, and by his friend Ryan Giroux. I would ask them to please stand, and I would welcome them to the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly my guests from the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees: President Guy Smith; antiprivatization chair Karen Weiers; from Calgary local 95, chapter 13, Chair Theresa Crabtree and Secretary-treasurer Cindy Tolley; and antiprivatization committee members Dusan Milutinovic and Lois LaRose. They have come to the Legislature to see the tabling of their petition to end contracting out of security services in health care facilities so Alberta can better protect patients. My guests are seated in the gallery. I would ask now for them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislature my constituent Hunter Mulawka, who is joined this afternoon by his mother, Jodi, and father, Brian. Hunter was the proud recipient of a trip to the Olympics that was awarded to him from the ATCO celebrating excellence program, which was partnered with the Alberta government. Hunter's application was selected out of thousands which were submitted from children in grades ranging from 4 to 12 across the province. This is not the first time I've had the opportunity to meet Hunter. He's an extraordinary young man. I commend his parents for spending the time to bring him to the Alberta Legislature to see democracy in action. I would ask that they rise now and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Father Michael Joseph Troy, CSSp

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with a heavy heart I rise today before the Assembly to pay tribute to a long-time family friend of 32 years, the late Father Michael Joseph Troy, Congregatio Sancti Spiritus.

He was born in 1917, Dublin, Ireland, and passed away in Edmonton, Alberta, on Friday, March 19, 2010, at the age of 92. Father Troy entered the Spiritan novitiate in 1936 and made his first profession as a Spiritan in 1937. Perpetual vows followed in 1940 and ordination to the priesthood in Fribourg, Switzerland, in 1947. From the moment Father Michael Troy stepped off the ship's gangway in 1958, he kissed the ground and said, "Hello, Canada," and he never looked back.

Father Troy was a charismatic leader, an academic, legendary, and an inspiration to us all. He was an outstanding missionary and priest. He lived his life making the world a better place for everyone. No mission was impossible for Father Troy. Given all of his accomplishments, from being a founding father of numerous organizations to his tireless work with charities to climbing Mount Kilimanjaro in his mid-60s, Father Troy was larger than life itself. He lived every moment to the fullest extent.

He held true to the proud charisms of the Spiritans' tradition. Father Troy concentrated his work on the social justice and spiritual needs of so many individuals, families, and communities. His arms were always held wide to embrace and love others. Father Troy touched the hearts of many and taught us that we are part of God's family.

A recent example of how he touched my family's heart was during the baptism of my great-niece, Sophie Sturko. Father Troy had gifted a holy picture of the Immaculate Heart of Mary, which he had received from his mother and carried with him on his life's journey. His wish for Sophie was to live a life full of love and compassion for humanity and to pass down the blessed image and devotion to the next generation of her family. This act of generosity serves as a subtle reminder to us all of the importance of passing down family traditions.

Father Troy was a humble man who throughout life always put the needs of others before his own. Whatever you may have gifted to Father Troy, he always found a way for that gift to be passed on to those in great need. In his last weeks and days Father Troy had a difficult time accepting care from others. He was always concerned that someone else was more deserving of the time and attention.

Mr. Speaker, Father Michael Joseph Troy passed away on March 19, the day which commemorates St. Joseph. According to the Bible St. Joseph was a man of faith and obedient to whatever God had asked him to do, without knowing the outcome. Father Troy was that embodiment. Father Troy was well known for saying: the best is never over; the best is yet to be. Let the good times roll.

Today it is with heartfelt, great sadness that Father Troy has left us behind, but we honour him by celebrating his life, acknowledging that he has touched the hearts of us all.

Thank you. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Connor Yuzwenko-Martin

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Earlier I introduced Connor Yuzwenko-Martin, a smart, funny, cute-looking young man who excels at improv theatre and successfully auditioned to become a member of Edmonton's famous and world-winning Theatresports troupe. Connor is also a student at the University of Alberta, taking political science, and is active in campus life, including the OUTreach group.

Oh, did I forget to mention that Connor is deaf? Well, it doesn't affect his energy, his willingness to participate, or his creativity, so it's not the first thing that you notice. Only when you realize that he has an interpreter with him does the penny drop.

Connor's integration into campus and theatre life illustrates a part of society's struggle with the commitment to barrier-free access. While we have capital budgets to ensure that the infrastructure is built to accommodate people with mobility issues, we often don't have operating monies to accommodate access for people with sight or hearing barriers. Thus, Rapid Fire Theatre and GM Karen get big smoochy kisses from me for insisting on opening their audition process to Connor and for taking the step to pay for his interpreter so that he could be on stage every Friday for Theatresports, a huge commitment at 120 bucks a pop. Today our very own visitor services has stepped up with their commitment to barrier-free access, and I'd like to thank them and recognize them.

Oh, yeah. Did I mention that Connor is gay? It's interesting that still today an impairment of sight or hearing or one's sexual orientation makes one a member of an invisible minority. They are all still subject to discrimination, to barriers of access, and even to questions of personal safety.

So kudos to you, Connor, and to those who support you.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Earth Hour

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This Saturday marks the third global celebration of Earth Hour, started by the World Wildlife Fund in 2007. We are encouraged to turn off our lights for one hour in support of action against climate change. The real value of Earth Hour is the awareness it raises, and its success is a result of how easy it is to take part.

Last year Earth Hour reached more than 1 billion people in 80 countries around the world, and in Canada more than 10 million people switched off their lights. I intend to take part, and so does the government of Alberta. As a symbol of the government of Alberta's commitment to take action to address climate change, all nonessential lights in the Legislature Building and the McDougall Centre will be shut off during Earth Hour. The Alberta government continues to reduce its environmental impact by improving energy practices, promoting recycling, and implementing environmental programs that ensure sustainability. I encourage my colleagues and all Albertans to support the global lights-out initiative by turning off the switch at 8:30 on Saturday evening.

Earth Hour alone, Mr. Speaker, will not accomplish what is needed with regard to our action on climate change, but it is an important step in dimming human impact on the environment.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Funding for Human Services

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today my questions are for the Premier. Does the Premier accept the fact that the oil and gas industry is a boom-and-bust industry?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the oil and gas industry is just like any other. It depends on world markets. It depends on technology and innovation to access some of the more difficult sedimentary basins that we have in Alberta. Of course, it's an industry that has been hit very hard, as have other industries, forestry, and agriculture, because of this unbelievable economic downturn.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Does the Premier also accept that human services such as health and education are not boom-and-bust industries?

Mr. Stelmach: Protecting the vulnerable is not an industry. It is something that we do for people. It is something that we do to protect the vulnerable in this province out of compassion, and we do it to the best we can given the revenue stream, trying to find a balance in other budgets to provide as much money for taking care of the vulnerable in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that our province's largest source of revenue is a boom-and-bust industry and given that services such as health care and education and other human services need stable funding, how does the Premier justify making decisions on which services to cut and how much given the revenue of the past year?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, once again, prudent financial planning has not only paid off a huge accumulated debt in years prior, but we have set aside two savings funds. One is the heritage savings trust fund. That is for our grandchildren. That fund is coming back up closer to its original value of $17 billion. Then we also have a cash surplus fund, which we call the sustainability fund, that we're using today to cushion the blow to our revenues, and that is going to sustain our social programs.

Vancouver Winter Olympics Advertising Costs

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Vancouver Olympics and the amazing performances of our athletes created excitement and inspiration across Canada with a wave of patriotism that still lives. Now we are starting to see some of the bills for this event, created not only by athletes but by politicians and partying. This government has recklessly claimed that $70 million in advertising benefit has been achieved, as if it was a fact, through the train and other services, yet we all know that this kind of advertising benefit is notoriously hard to measure. To the Premier: can the Premier tell Albertans what metrics were used to determine the number, and if he can't, will he promise to quit using $70 million until he can confirm it?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, you know, it's amazing. People outside this province have recognized the value of the Alberta train, recognized the value of Alberta House, all of the people that we've attracted from different corners of the world. Again, just to quote:

Alberta Hitchin' Its Hoss to B.C. Games Train.

You have to hand it to the Albertans. First, they stole our Olympic train . . . you know, the sole train now operating on the scenic railway line between North Vancouver and Whistler, wrapped in Alberta's new promotional materials.

That's Jon Ferry from the Vancouver Province.

Dr. Swann: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, I'd ask the same question: what metrics are you using to make sure that Albertans got value for that multimillion-dollar expenditure? What metrics?

Mr. Stelmach: I'll give another metric here.

The Hottest Olympic Ticket Isn't the Hockey Final.

What the wily Albertans figured out even before the closing ceremony in Beijing in 2008 is that they weren't going to fork out hundreds of thousands of dollars hosting VIPs at gold-medal events that they are almost certain to watch.

With the train, they not only have their guests' full attention by taking such good care of them, they've attracted all kinds of media coverage.

Media coverage: that's a measurement of success.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, we now know that the much-vaunted Alberta train was really a ghost train. It was only around half full, even with the added presence of Tory MLAs and their friends and staff riding for free. Why did the government wait until just days before the games to begin selling tickets?

Mr. Stelmach: Once again, misinformation. The train was full. In fact, people were wanting to get on as one of the sole ways of getting from Vancouver to Whistler.

You know, Mr. Speaker, here again we just heard a member's statement about the value of arts and culture to this province. It is a value. It's part of the industry. I think the $6 million that we spent on culture, advertising Alberta, is money well spent, and it helps the artist that the hon. member introduced in the House earlier. That's where the expenditures and the support are going.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Health Facilities Security Services

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government is proceeding to contract out yet another service of our health care system with no regard for consequences on patient and worker safety. No proof has been shown that could justify getting rid of in-house security. We have been contacted by a range of people, from nurses to patients, who feel that this change is actually going to provide less public safety and less quality of care. To the Premier: in the interest of public safety and quality of care will the Premier immediately order Alberta Health Services to stop contracting out security services?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the minister is much closer to that file and has more information on it.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, under the old model, as it's sometimes referred to, many areas of the province virtually had little or no security whatsoever, and in the new model all care sites are going to have access to the kind of protective services that are important to their area.

Dr. Swann: Well, speaking of the rural hospitals, Mr. Speaker, that's some of the people we heard from. Security staff are an integral part of their health care delivery team. They know the staff. They know the patients. They know the community. This improves patient care. To the minister: why will the minister not take action and reverse this unwise decision?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, one of the things that we're doing in the security operation centre that will help monitor the situation being referred to is having some live feed television monitors put in place. That, too, will help provide the kind of added security that is necessary, particularly in those centres that I mentioned earlier that have little or none.

Dr. Swann: Well, this government doesn't seem to understand health care, and it doesn't seem to understand human security and human relations. Will the Premier come clean and do what his minister of health could not this week and tell Albertans how many jobs will be lost throughout the province with this change?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I can't tell you if their jobs will be lost or not. All I know is that this will be a better system. It'll be much more efficient. Also, any savings that we can muster in that particular area will go directly into front-line health care services.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Children and Youth Services Budget

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government definitely doesn't understand the difference between needs and wants. They are spending billions pumping hot air into the ground while Alberta's most vulnerable are facing cuts. The minister of children's services claims that she gave a clear directive that was ignored by a respected CEO in region 6. Now he allegedly has gone on to pursue other opportunities. To the Premier: when will he table proof in this House that the minister actually gave that direction so that Albertans know with certainty that this staff member isn't being used as the minister's scapegoat?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I believe the member was here for estimates, and those estimates were before the House. I can't recall the debate and when the estimates came here, but they were here. He can refer to Hansard for all of the questions with respect to the respective areas of her budget.

Mr. Hinman: Oh, Mr. Speaker, you might as well say that we cut off a finger, but we gained two pounds, so we didn't lose anything.

Today we learned of more cuts to vulnerable Albertans. Again to the Premier: given that the agencies supporting the disabled are raising concerns about million-dollar cuts to their funding, can the Premier explain why this government is so intent on punishing community-based agencies that compassionately deliver services to disabled more effectively and efficiently than government does?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance and Enterprise has rolled out exactly how much the budget has increased in all of the social areas. We've had to reduce some budgets in some ministries, but we're maintaining the budgets in PDD and in foster care. Those are part of the most vulnerable, and we will move dollars around within the overall budget to make sure that we do take care of the vulnerable.

Mr. Hinman: He'd better look at the regional budget; it's not the overall budget.

Again to the Premier: how many social agencies in Calgary will be forced to close as this government continues to direct funding to their $7 million branding initiative, their growing, bloated bureaucracy rather than to community-based organizations and front-line workers?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member is really scraping the bottom of the barrel now. He's having to go around and look at different regions to try to play with numbers and confuse Albertans. There was an actual spending growth for the demographic growth in seniors in the budget. I suggest the hon. member look at total figures, not wander around trying to pick out little misleading figures from this region or that region.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Funding for Foster Care

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On May 9, 2009, 11 foster parents wrote a letter to the Premier, the minister of children's services, the CEO of region 6, and their government MLA. They were concerned that government had broken its promise to maintain funding levels for foster parents who actually adopt foster children. Nine months later this funding disparity remains. Why won't the Premier admit that by contacting government, these parents got absolutely no help?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I don't recall the letter from May, I think, of '09. All I know is that on the particular issue that was before this House and that occurred over the last few days, the minister took firm and decisive action in this file. We kept our word. We said that there would be no cuts to foster supports and for those that are looking after children especially with disabilities like autism, which is very difficult on foster parents. That is where we're at today, and the minister will proceed with respect to working with all of the regions.

Ms Notley: Well, given that the Premier has suggested that it's up to foster parents to brief him and his minister about government policies that threaten funding for foster children, why won't the Premier admit that he is effectively blaming foster parents for the fallout of his own decision to cut funding to the Ministry of Children and Youth Services?

Mr. Stelmach: Actually, the reverse: I'd like foster parents to come directly to the minister and to their MLA in case there is misinformation given by any service providers out there that we contract. They come to the minister. That is the process. I invite all foster parents that may have some maybe misinformation or wrong direction given to them by the particular region to come forward and advise the minister so the minister is fully well aware of what's happened.

Ms Notley: Well, given the Premier's illogical take on who is responsible for the effects of this government's plan to cut funding for children in care in the Edmonton region, why won't the Premier admit that his blame game has a chilling effect on foster parents and staff and will increase government secrecy rather than promote transparency and public accountability, which presumably we all want?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I have tremendous respect and admiration for parents who come forward and open their homes to foster children. Those are very, very difficult situations for many. I would say that rather than criticizing some of the foster parents in this House, we all work together to encourage more foster parents because, as I said earlier, we have over 9,200 children in the care of government. That is a serious matter, and that's why we need the support of foster parents and government to work together.

Alberta Health Services Budget

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, for many months the Alberta Health Services superboard has claimed $650 million to $700 million in annual efficiency savings since taking over the health regions, but I'm beginning to think these claims are bogus. We've asked in writing, in meetings, in committees, and in the Legislature for details. At most the replies have accounted for less than 10 per cent of the claim. In other words, Alberta Health Services has fallen 90 per cent short on accountability. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: will the minister either provide details on where this $700 million came from, or will he finally admit the claims are bogus?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I'm well aware of the comments made by Alberta Health Services regarding the savings that they anticipate will be made. They remain in that estimated figure of $600 million to $700 million. As soon as I receive that information in a little more detail, I'd be happy to provide it to that member.

Dr. Taft: Well, will the minister explain what seems to be a contradiction in that the superboard says that it's found $700 million in annual savings but still needed a $1.3 billion top-up? Was, then, the total deficit of Alberta Health Services really $2 billion?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, $1.3 billion was not a top-up, and the member should know this if he pretends to know anything about health care. It was a deficit.

Ms Blakeman: You won't give us the information.

Mr. Zwozdesky: I've given the information, hon. members. The hon. member over there knows it. If you've read estimates, you'd have it.

The point here is that if you were looking for $1.3 billion of savings, if we hadn't covered it, I challenge this member to tell me where he would find those cuts because you won't find them, and you know darn well you won't.

Dr. Taft: Well, since we're challenging each other here, Mr. Speaker, if the $700 million in savings which Ken Hughes of the superboard claimed again just a couple of weeks ago in his speech are not true, I challenge this minister to hold Ken Hughes to account. Will he do that?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, that information will come out. It's been offered publicly that there's a commitment to say it. [interjections] If you'd just keep quiet for a moment, I'll finish answering the question.

The point here is that there are savings going forward here as part of the five-year funding plan, and they've identified those areas, and we will see them. So just hang tight. Don't get too excited over there. It'll happen.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Crowsnest Creek Diversion

Mr. Berger: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the Minister of Environment. During the flood of June 1995 the Crowsnest Creek overflowed its banks and took a new route, threatening the Canadian Pacific rail line near Summit Lime Works. To mitigate this threat to the rail lines, CP Rail had contractors divert the flow, which inadvertently cut the flow to Island Lake, turning a healthy, fish-bearing lake into a stagnant slough. What action did Alberta Environment take on this issue?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, this is an ongoing issue that I've had discussions on both with the current MLA and the previous MLA for Crowsnest Pass. The history on this is that there was a diversion that was put in place in about the 1940s that was destroyed by the flood in 1995. What actually happened was that the river returned to its natural course. What CP did was remove the silt that had accumulated over that period of time so that the river could be accommodated. They did so under approval of Alberta Environment.

Mr. Berger: To the same minister: given that this had the effect of taking away the flow and that the water level of Island Lake is now very low, is there anything Alberta Environment will do to rectify this situation?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have a number of instances around the province where we have requests from communities to build diversions or protect erosion problems caused by nature. We've taken the position that we don't get involved in funding those kinds of projects. However, we would welcome any application to come forward from the community should they wish to restore this original diversion, which would in turn restore the levels in the lake.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Berger: Thank you. My third question is to the Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation. Given that your ministry has a day-use park on the lake and an overnight campground immediately adjacent to the lake, will you take measures to ensure that someone makes this lake a lake again?

Mrs. Ady: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is right. We do have about 40 camping stalls and a day-use area at Island Lake provincial recreation area, and re-establishing the lake levels would be a very big enhancement to these campgrounds. We're very supportive of that, and my ministry would be willing to work with Sustainable Resource Development and with Environment to see if anything could be done.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Community Grant Programs

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The community facility enhancement program and community initiatives program continue to take six months or more before groups get a response despite years of promises from the ministry that that will be fixed. Groups continue to get form letter rejections which give no indication of the criteria by which they are judged, what the priorities are for any given grant cycle, or what they could do to improve their chances next application. To the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit: why does there continue to be an absence of any kind of verifiable and consistent criteria so groups can understand how their applications are judged?

Mr. Blackett: Mr. Speaker, there are criteria that are obviously given to each and every applicant as they apply for their particular application, whether it's CIP or CFEP. That means that they have financial criteria to meet. We have to look at the viability of the project. We have to look at community support and those interests, and our community liaison officers indicate that right at the outset. There will be 80 per cent of the applications denied because of the tremendous amount of ask that there is out there. We don't have the time to go through each and every application that is not approved and let them know exactly what the criteria that weren't . . .

Ms Blakeman: You've got a due diligence checklist, not eligibility requirements.

Back to the same minister: if it's not accurate, then why do groups continue to be told that problems with CIP and CFEP funding applications should be taken to government MLAs to be fixed?

Mr. Blackett: Well, I don't know about government MLAs. There are MLAs there on the opposition benches from each and every party that have come to me and asked for help with respect to a constituent's application, and I have done so. I have government members who come to my office and ask for assistance, and we do so. You know what? We are trying in our department to come up with improvements. We have a quarterly grant processing program that we utilize now.

An Hon. Member: Your nose is growing.

Mr. Blackett: The hon. member who is talking about noses growing: at least that paragon of virtue over there actually went out, had the temerity to indicate on his website how much money he gave out, which was contrary to the rules that are already on there.

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Education: given that schools are the heart of the community and the Edmonton Federation of Community Leagues supports a moratorium on closures until a comprehensive review can be completed, will the minister commit to meet with the Minister of Municipal Affairs to discuss common interests, please?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, that's hardly supplemental to CFEP, but I'll see if I can connect it to CFEP in some way. The short answer is that I meet with . . .

The Speaker: I don't know the connection either, and the hon. member signed a document saying that they wouldn't do that, so I don't get this.

Education System in Finland

Mr. Allred: Mr. Speaker, one of the best ways to enhance Alberta's competitiveness is to maintain our world-leading standing in education. Other countries recognize the extraordinary importance that education will play in their economic future, and their students are leaping ahead of Alberta students. I was pleased the other evening to go to hear an educational consultant from Finland speak in St. Albert. To the Minister of Education. Finland has what is, very simply, the best education system in the world. Notably, unlike Alberta, they have no state testing or school ranking lists. When will Alberta follow their lead?

The Speaker: We have to get a response from the minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, Pasi Sahlberg has been on a tour around Alberta a number of times and is quite an expert on education and well worth listening to, and I've heard him a number of times. Finland is actually recognized as one of the best systems in the world, but it's more than just a question of not having tests. In fact, in the opportunity I had to meet with six jurisdictions from around the world who are rated among the top 25 in the world, the common thing that we found about all jurisdictions that are excellent is excellence in teaching. All the rest of the things that they have are quite different, and we can be strong in different areas, but it's excellence in teaching which draws them together. [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that Finnish students are in school for far fewer hours than Alberta students yet their achievement is much higher, are you considering reducing the number of hours Alberta students spend in school?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's not actually a question of hours. Yes, Finland does have a lot shorter number of hours for their students. Also, their students start later. They start at age 7, which develops a maturity that has worked very well for them.

Of course, as the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona has been shouting at me, they have child care and other things at the earlier ages, which is supported. Suffice it to say that Finland does very well. They have many different things in their system which are different from ours and different from other successful places in the world, and they have some things that other places do which do not give them the results.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Allred: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: why does Alberta's education system not follow the Finnish model, where teachers spend more time collaborating with each other than anywhere else?

Mr. Hancock: Well, in fact, Mr. Speaker, that's a very good question. Again, when I had the opportunity to be in Singapore to look at the Singapore system and meet with ministers of education from around the world, one of the things that became very apparent: professional development, selecting the best teachers, educating them appropriately, making sure that they're well inducted into the profession, and making sure that they have good, solid opportunities for professional development throughout their professional life is what helps to create excellence in teaching. That amount of time that they have in Singapore and in Finland for teachers to get together to learn from each other and to build their professional practice enhances their education system, and we should be looking very closely at that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Residential Building Codes

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Minister of Municipal Affairs said that he's not looking at applying building codes retroactively because to do so would be too difficult. Well, it hasn't been too difficult for Ontario to bring buildings up to code. Ottawa alone has retrofitted over 2,000 of them. In British Columbia it wasn't too difficult for them to fork over $670 million in interest-free loans over 12 years to fix their leaky condo mess. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: if it isn't too difficult for other provinces to protect condo owners from fire and water, why is it too difficult for this minister?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, Alberta doesn't have the same types of issues that British Columbia had. We don't have, as far as I'm aware, leaky condos. Certainly, there are some issues with the envelopes around some of our homes, but we're not dealing with some of the issues that B.C. and other provinces are dealing with.

Mr. Taylor: Whoa. Talk about splitting hairs.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that in recent years cheaper construction materials have been used in building multifamily housing and the Canadian Association of Fire Chiefs claims that that stuff burns faster and hotter, if the minister won't look at retrofitting buildings with sprinklers to solve the problem that we have in this province, what will he do?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, we are still working on our building codes. As I've indicated all week to this hon. member, we do have some of the strongest and best building codes anywhere in the nation. We continue to review those, and we are well ahead of other provinces and the national building code in doing those things.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, last time the building associations weren't consulted about the changes to Alberta's building codes. Will the minister commit to immediately working with building associations to strengthen fire safety and to tabling the results in the House?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, that was part of the whole process. We do consult with industry. We do consult with building individuals as well as individual homeowners. Because of that particular process, it takes us a while to bring in additional codes.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Health Services Decision-making

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since the creation of the Alberta Health Services Board my constituents have voiced concerns about loss of local autonomy or influence with regard to decisions made impacting rural hospitals. Some decisions are best made locally. My first question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. What is being done to ensure that the local organizations like hospital foundations have input into how the funds they have raised are spent locally and in a co-ordinated manner?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, health foundations and other fundraising groups at the local level are an extremely important part of what we're doing in terms of delivering the best-performing, publicly funded health system in Alberta. Foundations here locally, for example, have helped build the world-renowned Stollery children's centre, the Mazankowski Alberta Institute, the Lois Hole hospital, which will be opened more vigorously very soon. There is ongoing consultation that AHS is doing with foundations and other local community groups. They'll be doing that over the next few months and working out a plan in that regard.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question to the same minister: is there a mechanism in place for front-line health workers to have input into the system with good ideas and best-practice suggestions?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Yes, Mr. Speaker, there are a number of mechanisms or initiatives in place. In fact, one of them deals directly with employee submissions. There is a program called action your ideas, for example. It's more of an initiative than a program through which employees can feed in, and I believe that something in the order of 700 submissions were recently received. Quarterly staff sessions with the CEO is another mechanism. Finally, our health advisory councils, one of whom I met with yesterday, rounds out the three that I had in mind.

Mr. Doerksen: Again to the same minister, Mr. Speaker: have there been cost efficiencies or other efficiencies gained as a result of the organizational structure of a single health board for Alberta?

Mr. Zwodzesky: Mr. Speaker, there are a number of cost savings. Unfortunately, there was so much yelling and shouting from the opposition that I didn't get a chance to answer this a little earlier. There is a target there, a real one, of between $600 million and $700 million due to the amalgamation of nine regions into one. There are huge savings in HR and finance and payroll and other administrative areas, and more information on that will come out when it's provided to me.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Oil Sands Emissions

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In a speech on Tuesday the Premier stated that emissions from the oil sands have been cut by 38 per cent since 1990, when the truth is that they've actually increased more than 300 per cent. The Premier's staff rushed to his defence, saying that the information they provided to the Premier wasn't clear. To the Minister of Environment: will the minister explain to the Premier the difference between intensity and absolute reductions before environmentalists, the NDP, and maybe even the roaming peahen are blamed for keeping information from the Premier?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, I can assure this member and all members that I don't need to explain the difference to the Premier. He's well aware of it, and he indicated that when he answered the question.

Ms Notley: Well, given that emissions have actually increased more than threefold over the last 20 years, why won't the Minister of Environment set the record straight and admit that intensity targets don't equal absolute reductions and that any statement otherwise, even if made by the Premier, is pure spin?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, the end target, of course, is absolute reductions. How do you get absolute reductions? You get them by advancing technology, by ensuring that the technological advances reduce the intensity, and over time as you reduce more and more intensity, then you can accommodate some additional growth. If we could have twice as much or three times as much economic activity with 10 per cent emissions, we would have absolute reductions.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that the Premier claimed a 38 per cent reduction when, in fact, we have a 300 per cent increase, will the minister commit to contacting each of the oil sands suppliers at the National Buyer/Seller Forum, where the Premier gave the misinformation, correct the record, and report the emissions information in absolute terms, not intensity spin?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, the record is intact. There is no need to correct the record. The facts speak for themselves. There have been dramatic reductions in intensity in the oil sands regions, and I suggest to this hon. member that there is not a person at the buyer/seller conference that doesn't understand that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Beach Corner Road Intersection

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Local residents are angry about changes that were made to the intersection of 16A and Beach Corner Road just west of Stony Plain. They claim that changes have caused poor visibility, traffic congestion, and a parking nightmare. To the Minister of Transportation. There's a blind spot at the intersection because of the uneven pavement. Will the minister listen to these citizens' concerns and correct the problem?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, if there is a problem at 16A and Beach Corner, as he's talking about, we will have engineers out there looking at it, I will get a report from them, and we will make sure that we correct the problem if there really is an unsafe problem. I'm not fully aware of the problem, but if there's an unsafe problem out there, we'll be looking after it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Why did the minister put a roundabout at this intersection that is only good enough for small trucks to turn around and not for semis with 53-foot trailers?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I don't know about the particular roundabout he's talking about, but let me fill you in a little bit about roundabouts. The same thing happened in Sylvan Lake. We have a roundabout that was put in at the junction of 11A and highway 20. Originally, I got a bunch of letters saying: if you put this roundabout there, we'll never vote for you again, and on and on and on. Since then I've had a whole bunch of letters saying: "Wow. Does this ever work well. It works great. Thank you very much for pushing ahead with it." That particular one, the circles are designed to drag the trailers over . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We've got hundreds of residents writing letters otherwise about this intersection. That is poor planning. So far we have only heard that the minister is reviewing this issue. When will the minister finally get around to fixing this poorly planned and dangerous intersection?

Mr. Ouellette: Holy moly, Mr. Speaker. I've heard it all now. Why, oh, why would people give hundreds of letters to the opposition and none to the Minister of Transportation? It doesn't make sense to me.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Clean Energy Research

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many of the experts I met with during my recent mission to Europe were very impressed with our government's financial commitment to CCS technology but had questions about how we are funding and supporting other types of green energy research. To the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology: can you explain what other areas, outside of CCS, we are funding?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, many of our European friends are very impressed with the amount of resources we are putting toward CCS. In fact, the investment in green technology in this province is going far beyond just CCS technology. We're working on tools to reduce energy intensity, as was mentioned earlier. In the oil and gas sector we're working on water and water research. We're working on nanotechnology, which I've talked a lot about in this House, on solar cells and photoelectric cells. We have a demonstration project right here in Edmonton on municipal waste.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: how are we ensuring that we address this critical gap between the lab and the street when it comes to clean technology development?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, that is something that many jurisdictions around the world are working with and struggling with. We have taken some of the best practices from around the world, like our innovation vouchers, and we've used that to connect to the lab, to prototype the lab to the marketplace. Our new connector service is extremely important for small up-and-coming companies. I mentioned earlier, in my previous answer, about the municipal waste project demonstration and where CO₂ is being injected into older gas wells and older oil wells. We're going to enhance oil recovery. These are business-case scenarios that work for real businesses.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Finally, again to the same minister. We are a province of 3 million people, and clearly these are issues that are being looked at all over the world. How are we making sure that we are not duplicating efforts of other research groups around the world who are also looking to solve these technical challenges? Who are we collaborating with?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, very interesting in the sense that we are obviously getting a lot of, you would say, international press on some of the things that people think we're doing wrong. We're also getting a lot of attention about the things that we're doing right, especially in greenhouse gas emissions or the environment and reclamation. This has attracted attention from the University of Hamburg, the Helmholtz institutes, and Rice University in Texas. We have a lot of collaboration around the world that is ongoing. They're coming to Alberta to seek us out so that we are not duplicating efforts around the globe.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by the hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Temporary Foreign Workers

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, studies, reports, audits, and this government's own information confirms that the temporary foreign worker program is leaving newcomers to Alberta vulnerable to abuse and exploitation. To the Minister of Employment and Immigration: when will this minister end the abuses by ensuring that there are no more second-class citizens in Alberta's workforce?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is a good question because it's a matter that's very, very important to me not only as minister but also personally. Resources are now put in place not only allowing but encouraging foreign workers to report any and all conduct that may be unbecoming in the province. Not only are we putting out the information in English, but we are now capable of accepting complaints in more than 150 – that's one, five, zero – languages. Every time a complaint comes in, it is being duly investigated.

Mr. Hehr: The minister claims that he can do nothing about this program, but a suggestion I have is: why doesn't he go to the federal government and renegotiate our immigration accord to eliminate this toxic program?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I object to the language. A program that gives people in different countries a chance to come to this fabulous province and earn a good living and, by doing so, assist our economy and its growth is definitely not toxic. There is nothing toxic about foreign workers either. They are individuals that are protected the same way as all Alberta workers are protected. But it is a federal program. Some aspects of it are administered by the province, and I'm doing my utmost and our front-line workers are doing their utmost to make sure that all workers are well protected.

Mr. Hehr: I agree with the minister's comments in that the people are here doing great jobs and great work for our community. They're good enough to serve lunch at our counters, to help me get out of bed, to do other things in our community. Why aren't they good enough to become citizens of this great province right off the hop?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, again a very good question. My suggestion to this member would be that, come the next federal election, he run as a Member of Parliament and raises that question there because the issuance of visas and permanent resident status is federal. However, I will be raising issues within the program to the federal government, the government who created this program in the first place and administers the program.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Rural Family Physician Recruitment

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm hearing and receiving calls from my rural communities. Community medical clinics are being converted into walk-in clinics in order to accommodate the shortage of doctors for all these patients these offices receive. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: why is Alberta Health Services pursuing this conversion when these efforts prevent my constituents from booking appointments ahead of time, especially considering they have to travel long distances to reach those clinics?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, as private practitioners physicians have the freedom to choose their style of practice and the office hours that they keep. Some of them are actually deciding to become members of the team approach called primary care networks, and those primary care networks are proving extremely effective. In fact, most of them, if not all, would boast same-day ask, same-day access type of service.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, and thank you to the minister. This just magnifies the difficulty we have in retaining qualified family physicians in rural communities. To the same minister: what are we going to do to encourage retention and attract doctors to rural Alberta?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, there are several things that are being done. There are several incentives within the program that are all part of the rural physician action plan. For example, we do have programs for rural physicians specifically wherein education and research are supported, training opportunities are provided while locum opportunities allow them to take a breather, take a day off, take a vacation, and so on. We also have the business cost program, which provides funding directly to help them run their offices, and in several cases many rural physicians receive a special premium for medically insured services that they provide.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have a number of foreign-trained doctors who are looking for accreditation. I'm wondering what the minister is prepared to do to work with the College of Physicians and Surgeons to get that accreditation so that they can fill the shortage that we face in rural Alberta.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, not long ago I met and have had several conversations recently as well, I should say, with the College of Physicians and Surgeons. I raised this very issue. I know that our medical residency programs have actually increased every year since about 2004. This year, for example, there will be 50 of these spots. We also provide funding to help encourage some of these international applications to be filed and to help them navigate the system in Alberta. So we're doing a lot to help with the issue raised.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Manufacturing Outsourcing to Korea

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last October 6 a South Korean steel fabricator signed a deal with Imperial Oil worth $250 million to manufacture at least 200 production modules for the Kearl oil sands project at Fort McMurray. These plant modules manufactured in South Korea will be provided by July 2011. My first question is to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. How many construction and steel fabrication jobs were lost here in Alberta as a result of this $250 million order being placed in South Korea, not south Edmonton?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have to thank this hon. member for setting this up so perfectly for me. First of all, I've been itching to be able to stand up and report to this House that Statistics Canada has reported today that the number of Albertans on EI right now in Alberta has dropped by 14.8 per cent. That is 10,040 fewer unemployed Albertans, and we are leading Canada right now in recovery. That perhaps addresses your question in some part.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that many of the EI recipients have been unemployed for so long that they have exhausted their benefits, I'd better ask the minister of finance. Does Imperial Oil get to deduct the construction and shipping costs of these modules from South Korea from the royalty payments that they pay here in Alberta?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I have to wonder what world the hon. member is living in. It's called the global economy. Does he want to actually put a wall around Alberta and say there is no procurement? What does that do to a province like Alberta that exports oil and gas, cattle and wheat, coal and timber? We're an exporting country. It's about free trade. Does he want to repeal the free trade agreement, too?

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, this is the minister that wanted at one time to build a firewall around Alberta.

Now, again to the minister of finance: does Imperial Oil get to deduct the construction and shipping costs from South Korea from their corporate tax payments?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I'd be more than happy to provide bus fare for the hon. member to go right down Jasper Avenue to the buyer and seller forum . . .

Mr. Lukaszuk: One way, please.

Dr. Morton: One way, perhaps. There are 500 people from all over the world, Ontario, and Quebec here to do the supply chain into the oil sands. It's good for Alberta. It's good for all of Canada. You want a little wall around it. Welcome to the global economy is what I say to that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays, followed by the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Canadian Forces Liaison

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For the first time in many, many years Alberta has an elected representative acting as liaison with the Canadian armed forces. That liaison also happens to be the Deputy Premier and the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology. All my questions are to our new liaison to the Canadian armed forces. Isn't this role already filled by the MLAs who have a presence in their constituencies?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think it's fitting that this question does come from a member who spent a considerable amount of time serving his country in uniform. I congratulate the member. I would also say that, in fact, the role that MLAs are playing, representing the over 12,000 men and women who create the footprint in the province in Alberta and a billion dollar economic consequence to this province, has raised the point that we should have that kind of liaison to the Canadian forces, and indeed I commend those MLAs for doing that. That's part of the reason why the role that I see as the liaison is a co-ordination effort.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Is this an added component to the Deputy Premier's role, or is there some overlap with the government's research or postsecondary agendas?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, because it was new, we did take a little bit of time to try to ascertain exactly what other provinces were doing with their cabinet liaison roles. We've kind of developed this based on what the Canadian forces would like us to have as this kind of a role. What we found during those consultations is that there is a considerable amount of overlap with our department from the perspective of apprenticeship training, the postsecondary system, from leadership training as well as, interestingly enough, on the research side. Alberta companies are working on a number of innovative projects both on the health side and from the Campus Alberta side but really interesting is body armour, Acticoat bandages, and IED imaging.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question: when will these potentially life-saving innovations be out in the field helping our soldiers?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, we're working on, actually, a first of its kind agreement with the Department of National Defence on trying to bring some of these very innovative solutions to the field. Certainly, the military is very interested in this given the amount of casualties we see from IEDs. We are developing a much closer relationship with the Canadian Forces in the research component as well as the training component. We hope to see some very good results in the very near future, and obviously that's for the benefit of all Canadians.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As we have already heard today, security personnel are an important component of our medical delivery system as they ensure that medical staff, especially emergency room staff, are able to attend to their patients in a safe and controlled manner. My constituents have been telling me that Alberta Health Services is planning to reduce or eliminate security personnel in hospitals in Lacombe and Ponoka. My question is to the minister of health. Why are you pursuing this policy, Mr. Minister, and how will you ensure the safety of health care workers in my community given that they're often under threat of violence from patients who may be suffering from mental disorders or alcohol?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're always concerned wherever the issue of safety of patients or safety of staff and other workers at our facilities comes into question. In fact, as I understand it today, this new model is going to address those very issues in a much more vigorous way. That will include more co-ordination, a more streamlined approach to it, and an equitable securities service provision province-wide. This is a good thing because it should lead to a broader protection for more people. However, I do recognize that every community is different, and I have pointed that out to the Alberta Health Services decision-makers.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Prins: Thank you. Again to the minister of health: will you ensure that the level of security offered by the new providers is as good, if not better, than before?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, that is exactly the intention of the new model that will be coming out very soon. We know that safety is of utmost importance to workers and to others involved. We also know that the new protective services model will offer a combination of different types and forms of service deliveries in terms of protective services. People will be able to use a combination of community peace officers and contract security officers, who are supervised by team leaders. The number of positions will obviously vary from site to site, but I will keep that in mind in my future discussions.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final supplemental again to the same minister: how soon will our medical staff in Lacombe and Ponoka know about these new measures?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, Alberta Health Services told me last night, I believe, that on or about May 1 of this year they will have this system fully implemented. I think it's important to recognize that there are some spots in the province where perhaps a slightly different approach or a different model might need to be considered, and I think the hon. member has raised two that might be considered in that regard. Again, I will pass that on to Alberta Health Services to ensure that our health facilities and the people working in them feel safe and secure and protected.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that was 114 questions and responses today coming from 19 different members: nine from the Official Opposition, seven from the government private members area, two from the fourth party, and one from the third party.

Earlier today one of the members participating in Members' Statements extended the time frame from two minutes to three minutes and 20 seconds, which is now going to cause us potentially a problem coming up with Standing Order 7(7). So I will not advise members that it's 3 o'clock when it is 3 o'clock; I would advise members that it's 3 o'clock when it's 3:01:20.

We will proceed with Members' Statements in 15 seconds.

Seniors Advisory Council Chair

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to welcome the new chair of the Seniors Advisory Council for Alberta. The council is a government appointed body that reports through the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports on matters relating to Alberta seniors. The council gathers information on issues important to seniors, which in turn is used to develop advice on policies, programs, and services for seniors. The council also co-ordinates the annual province-wide Seniors' Week celebrations in June, where Albertans show their appreciation for seniors and their contributions to our communities. In addition, the council participates in research projects and supports community-based workshops for seniors and front-line workers.

Mr. Speaker, during my time as chair of this council I had the opportunity to see first-hand how the work of the council and its members can make a difference in the lives of seniors in Alberta. This includes the government's decision to increase the income thresholds for financial assistance provided to low-income seniors through the Alberta seniors' benefit and special-needs assistance for seniors' programs. I also had the privilege to chair the provincial Demographic Planning Commission, which met with Albertans to capture their views on the needs of an aging population.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank the members of the Seniors Advisory Council, both current and past, for their many contributions and services. As chair it truly has been a privilege to work with the hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. Her support has been instrumental to the council's success and is deeply appreciated.

I know the Seniors Advisory Council under the expert guidance of the new chair, the hon. Member for Strathcona, will continue to engage with seniors and continue to bring their challenges, needs, and ideas forward to this government.

Thank you, sir.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Fire Service Exemplary Service Medals

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to acknowledge recipients of Alberta's fire service exemplary service medal awards. I had the pleasure of attending ceremonies in Edmonton last week where the Premier and the Minister of Municipal Affairs presented the medals, and I had the honour of presenting these awards during the ceremonies in Calgary. Presentations were made to firefighters to recognize special achievements or distinguished service.

Mr. Speaker, as we are all aware, firefighting is dangerous and difficult work. Firefighters risk their lives daily so people in communities across Alberta can feel safe and secure. They make tremendous sacrifices. Their selfless dedication is a true reflection of Albertans willing to support and protect their neighbours. Albertans admire and appreciate the dedication and service of these individuals, so on behalf of all Albertans I extend a heartfelt thanks to these individuals for helping make our community and families safe.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Tartan Day

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and share with this Assembly the exciting news that April 6 is Tartan Day. Tartan Day is recognized all around the world as a celebration of Scottish culture and heritage. During these events participants engage in several Scottish themed activities, including highland dancing and pipe bands.

As some of you may know, a tartan refers to the pattern of colours and designs used on Scottish kilts. Each clan in Scotland has its own unique tartan, and they are often treated like a sacred coat of arms. Being of Scottish ancestry myself, my clan's tartan is blue and green. In fact, the famed Black Watch wear the Campbell tartan.

Alberta also has two official tartans, Mr. Speaker, a dress tartan and a regular tartan. Our regular tartan is green, gold, blue, pink, and black, with each colour representing a different part of Alberta's landscape. The green represents Alberta's forests; the gold, our wheat fields; the blue, our clear skies and lakes; the pink, our wild rose; and the black, our coal and oil. The dress tartan includes the same colours as the regular in addition to white, which is in recognition of our winters.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to recognize the invaluable contribution of Scottish settlers to our history and our cultural makeup. For example, young highlanders were instrumental in the founding of Edmonton House, which is Fort Edmonton, sited on this very location. Culturally their contributions include sports like curling and golf. It is worthy to note that during the period of 1905 to 1970 of our 432 MLAs that sat, 109 were of Scottish descent.

I would now ask all members of this House to join me in wishing everyone a happy Tartan Day.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Water Management and Allocation

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's World Water Week, and our province is on the brink of a water crisis. In the north the people of Fort Chip and Fort MacKay are afraid to drink the water of the Athabasca River because of contaminants from oil sands development, in central Alberta farmers close to coal-bed methane development can light their tap water on fire, and in the south last year 10 counties declared states of emergency due to drought.

This fall the Minister of Environment will be amending the Water Act to use market-based measures to allocate water. This will expand the current water market system in southern Alberta to cover the entire province. The recommendations we've seen so far will preserve the right for senior licence holders to make decisions about who gets allocated water, remove government oversight and regulation of the transfers, and only allow the public to comment on certain water transfers. Instead of a system that prioritizes water use for ecosystem health and basic human needs, this government will let the right to water be sold to the highest bidder. If there's anything that Albertans know, it's that the highest bidder is not your average, hard-working Alberta family.

By implementing water markets across the province, this government is continuing on with business as usual, commodifying Alberta's resources to promote industrial growth no matter what the cost. Albertans know that the first in time, first in right system is no longer working, and we desperately need an alternative. The government, however, is not planning on consulting Albertans until the summer, when they've already drawn up their plans for the new legislation. The government has already ignored its treaty obligations to First Nations by starting the Water Act review without their free, prior, and informed consent.

Decisions about water are too important to rush. This government needs to involve all Albertans in the water review through a robust and meaningful province-wide consultation process that presents a range of options to Albertans, not just water markets. Most importantly, this government needs to realize that water is not just another resource to be bought and sold on the market. Water is a basic human right. Water is essential to life. Instead of letting money decide where water goes, this government needs to allocate water by priority uses to protect our water for Alberta families, ecosystems, and future generations.

Thank you.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm just delighted we still have guests here to witness this. I'd like to present a petition signed by thousands of Albertans who are asking that the Legislative Assembly urge the government of Alberta to "direct Alberta Health Services to immediately stop the contracting out of Protective Services; and to direct Alberta Health Services to maintain quality in-house security services to better protect patients and staff.”

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have 12 postcards and the required five copies of them from teachers expressing their extreme displeasure in the decreased funding for education based on class size and the downloading of the extra dollars required from the arbitrary decision for the teachers’ salaries onto the school boards.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’d like to present a petition as well on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, which reads similarly to the previous petition.

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to direct Alberta Health Services to immediately stop the contracting out of Protective Services; and to direct Alberta Health Services to maintain quality in-house security services to better protect patients and staff.

This petition has 824 signatures from all parts of Alberta.

Thank you.

2:50 Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Culture and Community Spirit.

Mr. Blackett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the appropriate number of copies of my written responses of March 19, 2010, to the questions raised during Culture and Community Spirit’s estimates and business plan debate on February 22, 2010.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. Do you have a tabling?

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings. The first is the appropriate number of copies of an e-mail I received from an Alberta foster parent who forwarded to me a copy of a message she sent to several people in Children’s Services and the Premier last May. Her concern is with cuts to funding for adoptive parents. I referred to this in my question earlier today.

My second tabling is the appropriate number of copies of an online petition started by Veronika Muendel, calling on the government to keep the liquid cytology cervical cancer screening labs in Lethbridge, Red Deer, and the U of A hospital. The petition has gathered 1,432 names. Many of these have included comments such as: “If it wasn’t for having this lab, I for one wouldn’t have known that I had cancer cells, and had them removed as fast as possible.”

Thank you.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Horner, Minister of Advanced Education and Technology, response to Written Question 30 asked for by Mr. Chase on March 15, 2010.

On behalf of the hon. Mr. Danyluk, Minister of Infrastructure, responses to questions raised by Mr. Hinman, hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore; Mr. Mason, hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood; and Mr. Allred, hon. Member for St. Albert, on February 23, 2010, the Department of Infrastructure main estimates debate.

On behalf of the hon. Mr. Goudreau, Minister of Municipal Affairs, pursuant to the Special Areas Act the Special Areas Trust Account financial statements dated December 31, 2008.

Projected Government Business

The Speaker: The hon. Official Opposition House Leader.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. At this point I would ask the Government House Leader to share with us the expected government House business for the week following our constituency week breaks, which would commence Monday, April 12, government business commencing April 13.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On April 13 under government bills for second reading we anticipate Bill 9, the Local Authorities Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2010; Bill 12, the Body Armour Control Act; Bill 13, the Securities Amendment Act, 2010; and Bill 14, the Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2010, depending on progress. In Committee of the Whole Bill 7, the Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2010; Bill 10, the Victims Restitution and Compensation Payment Amendment Act, 2010; and Bill 11, the Witness Security Act.

On Wednesday, April 14, under Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole Bill 9, the Local Authorities Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2010; Bill 12, the Body Armour Control Act; Bill 13, the Securities Amendment Act, 2010; Bill 14, the Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2010; and for third reading Bill 7, the Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2010; Bill 10, the Victims Restitution and Compensation Payment Amendment Act, 2010; Bill 11, the Witness Security Act, depending on the Order Paper.

On Thursday, April 15, for third reading bills 9, 12, 13, 14, and as per the Order Paper.

The Speaker: Hon. members, just as a supplement to that, the House reconvenes on the 12th day of April. The 12th and 13th will also be MLA for a Day, so it will be busy with respect to that, but as importantly we will do a special brief ceremony in honour of the late Mr. Babcock, who was the last connection that Canada had with World War I. So there’ll be many military people here as well as we deal with that matter.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Bill 15

Appropriation Act, 2010

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance and Enterprise.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’d like to move third reading of Bill 15, the Appropriation Act, 2010.

Since February 9 we’ve had six weeks of constructive debate on the estimates. I believe that the majority of the members have concluded that the estimates strike the right balance, and it’s time to pass the Appropriation Act so that the government of Alberta can get on with its business when the new fiscal year begins on April 1, which is one week from today.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to get an opportunity to speak to the appropriation bill. It's going by so fast, you've got to move quick here, and I didn't move fast enough before.

In third reading we are speaking to the anticipated effect of the implementation of the bill, in this case the anticipated effect of the budget, which is what the appropriation bill is. There are a couple of observations I have about the process this year. In fact, the minister of finance alluded to it in his opening comments, that they felt they'd really spent enough time on this, and they'd like to move on.

Not surprisingly, I have a very different take on that in a couple of different areas. I continue to underline my concerns with the way the estimates debates are set up in Committee of Supply. Although, certainly, some of my colleagues are fans of moving it into the committees and the more informal setting, I'm not particularly a fan of that, but more than that is the lack of time to debate.

Some people could jump to their feet and say: you know, we can prove that you've actually got more time now than you did many, many years ago. I would say: yes, and what was the budget then? We're now debating a total budget of many billions of dollars. I think it's sort of in the $35 billion range at this point. I think that when I first started, it was $17 billion. We essentially have the same amount of time, so we're debating twice as much money in the same amount of time. When I started in 1997, there were under 20 departments, and we're now dealing with 26 departments.

The way this is set up right now is that it's essentially one department each time a committee meets, and two committees meet every night, which makes it difficult for people who want to represent their constituents on more than one issue at a time without dashing back and forth between committees. Of course, there's a speakers list, which the committee chair is holding, and your chances of getting on the speaking list in two committees in one night are slim to none.

So we are debating far more money in the same amount or even less time, and now what we've had is – and the government occasionally says: oh, well, if you're complaining about debating the Health budget, which is, again, several billion dollars . . .

Dr. Taft: Close to $15 billion.

Ms Blakeman: . . . close to $15 billion in the same amount of time that you're debating a much smaller financial commitment from some of the others. The response is: well, I mean, you could just forgo debating the other departments and split your Health debate into two nights. Well, you know, I'm charged by my constituents to be here and to pay attention to all ministries. Granted, you may not give them all the same weight, but I don't think it's appropriate to not examine the budgets of a department just because the government refuses to give more time to a larger department. So the effect of what we are seeing now is that we're debating the effect, the outcome, of a budget process which is twice as much money in the same or less amount of time, and significantly more departments are being debated.

Then the new process, that I noticed this year, was a reluctance and/or an attempt to influence and/or a flat-out refusal to answer the questions that we were not able to have enough time to get on the record and have a back-and-forth discussion with the minister. It has become, unfortunately, traditional that certainly members of the opposition and occasionally members of the government backbench will find that the clock has run out on them, and in the last 90 seconds they will say: "Well, here are the rest of the questions I had. I'll just read them into the record." The ministers and their staff would take those questions and would produce them as written answers and mail them to us usually some time in the summer. Seeing as we're supposed to be voting on the final version of the bill today, getting responses to questions in three or four months' time is not incredibly helpful.

What we were seeing is that we actually had a staffer from a minister's office come over and meet with some of the Official Opposition staff, and he indicated that he really just didn't see what the value of these questions was. He didn't understand it himself, so he really didn't think that we should be asking them, and did we understand that some poor sod in the minister's office or department was going to have to answer these questions? Well, yes, I do understand that, and I'd like an answer. That's why I'm asking the questions. I don't have enough resources, either personally or in our caucus, to be able to be making up questions just as a make-work project for ministerial staff. I ask the questions because I want the answers.

In response to the observation from this individual that he didn't see the value in these questions and didn't understand how it all pertained to everything, I thought: well, am I not remembering things accurately? It seems to me that I'm getting a heck of a lot less information in the budget documents than I used to get. I went to the library and pulled the debates for Health, which is a big ministry, but it's also a consistent ministry. It hasn't disappeared and reappeared. For example, you know, those of us that have been here long enough know that consumer and corporate affairs, the purpose of it and the legislative responsibilities, are now under Service Alberta, but if you were trying to compare the consumer and corporate affairs budget, you'd be hard-pressed to do it.

Education got grouped in with Advanced Ed and then taken apart again. Culture, near and dear to my heart, completely disappeared when it got taken into community development along with seniors and gambling and AADAC and horse racing and a whole bunch of other things. Health was a department that was Health in 1985, it was Health in 1995, it was Health in 2005, and it's Health today.

As I started to compare these, I thought: "No. I am right." There was significantly more information available about where the money was going, how it was being broken down, how many FTEs there were. Way back when it even said how they were distributed, like for each program how many staff worked there. These are some of the questions where I now find myself saying: "Well, what are these programs that are funded under this one line item? How many people worked there?" Well, you can find where the FTEs are if you go to a completely different set of books, and it's in the back of the government business plan. You can actually get a listing of the FTEs by department but not broken down by program.

If you want to know how many people were actually working in a particular program, if you happen to know what the program is, believe you me, you're not going to get it out of these budget documents. We have such a roll-up now that in some of the departments you're getting maybe 10 breakdowns, and that's it. Well, actually, in Health you've got $9 billion in one line item. No explanation. Nine billion.

An Hon. Member: It's not that much, Laurie.

Ms Blakeman: I'm absolutely serious. In this budget document on page 235, for anyone following along at home, vote 8.0.1, base operating funding for Alberta Health Services, $9,037,593,000. That's it. No explanation of how that breaks down. I don't know how many people that covers. I don't know what programs or services are delivered under that $9 billion. It's $9 billion in one line item.

So back to the nice young man that came over and said that, well, if we could just come up with, you know, five questions that we'd like to write down, he could make sure that they would get answered for us, which rather made our staff giggle, the thought that we would only have five questions. This is what we're now trying to deal with: a lot more money in the budget, more departments, less time to debate it, less information in the budget. Do I really want to be standing up there and begging a minister to tell me, you know, what the programs are that are funded under this particular line item, how many people are working there, and all of the other kind of really plain, factual information?

You know, there's nothing nefarious there. There are no tricky questions there. I'm not going to be able to jump out and sucker punch somebody based on giving me some very straightforward information from breaking down some programs into a number of different line items. There's nothing tricky there, but for some reason there's a big conspiracy theory here that we have to hide all this information and roll it up and roll it up and roll it up in line items until I'm sure the government would be delighted if they could manage to come forward with a budget that had one line item and it was the whole damn budget and that's it, thank you very much, go home.

What's the effect of this budget? The effect of this budget is that we are able to show Albertans less and less information every single year. They're able to access these documents and glean less and less and less information every single year.

You can also roll into this the supplementary supply budgets. Now, it will be very interesting to see in this budget year of 2010-11 if there actually is a supplementary supply budget. Boy, that will tell us some stuff. In the past, you know, as this House has often heard me debate, we've had two supplementary supply budgets – that's been very common – with over a billion dollars allocated in those. That's $2 billion extra a year, and for that we get a whole three-hour afternoon to debate it. I don't understand why the government is so reluctant to let maybe members of their own backbench – I don't know – certainly members of the opposition, members of the media, members of the public actually look at the budget document and be able to tell what's going on and how the money has been allocated. That's part of the transparency and accountability.

If you won't give us the information up front, it does make it much harder for us to come back to you during one of your wonderful quarterly updates and be able to hold you accountable through that information if we couldn't tell what was going on the first time. This is not for any lack of intelligence on this side. You know, I regularly sit in a caucus with two people who have "doctor" in front of their name, one from an academic background and one a medical doctor. I mean, I'm not sitting here with stupid people, and I'm not sitting here with lazy people.

Mr. MacDonald: You notice I'm not in that group.

Ms Blakeman: No, no. I included you in the second group. Come on.

That's the effect of what I see as the point we've come to with this bill. I don't understand what the problem is. I don't understand what the government is afraid of. The government has an overwhelming majority here. They're going to get their budget passed; there's no question about that. What is the problem in giving everybody else enough information to be able to verify what the government is saying? Wouldn't that be easier, actually?

If the government makes a statement, we can all look at the documents and go: "Yeah, there it is, right there. No problem." But it does cause people to see conspiracy because we look at these budget documents and go, "I have no idea what's included in that budget," and the minister or the Premier says: "This is the way it is. Just trust us. Take our word. It's in there." Well, no, I'm not willing to trust you or take your word.

I mean, this afternoon we had an exchange between the Member for Edmonton-Riverview, who's the critic on Health and Wellness, and the minister of health about: "Verify for us, give us the proof, show us exactly where the claim is being made by Alberta Health Services that they have found efficiencies of $700 million. Show us where this actually is." We get a very roundabout statement: "Well, don't worry about it. In the five-year plan you'll see where it is." I'm waiting for that one. Maybe that's where we get the one-liner that explains the entire budget and breaks down absolutely nothing.

I continue to wonder what else is going on here, and you guys aren't helping me. You're not assuring me. You're not making it easy for me to believe what you're saying is true. You make it really hard. You know, the media says to me: "Laurie, you know, try and get all your questions spoken out loud during those exchanges with the minister because we're following along. Make sure that they table the responses in the Assembly." In the past, when they've just mailed it to our offices, the media were following along. They saw a question; they see no answer. They don't know what the response was, and they have no ability to dig around and find it because it wasn't made public.

So I'll give you credit on this one. By having them now tabled in the Assembly, they become a sessional paper, and citizens from Alberta and the media, members of the opposition can get access to the written responses from the ministers. I hope those are good, clear responses because everybody is going to be looking at them now.

That's the observation that I make from this budget, and there have been a number of others. See, this is the other part of this whole process that just strikes me as neutered to the point of silliness. You know, the government has organized to have all of the various estimates debates in Committee of Supply voted on on one day, one big vote. The concession there – and I was one of the ones negotiating it at the time – was to allow any member, actually, to request that a department be pulled out. If we wanted to support the whole budget but just could not support what was going on in Infrastructure, for example, we could vote no to the Infrastructure budget and yes to the rest of the budget. Well, I'm sure that when we did that, it actually didn't cross our minds that we'd end up with a situation where we didn't like what was happening in individual departments but we didn't like the whole budget either, and the government made sure that none of these votes were debatable at the time.

We now have this interesting little exercise that we go through where we pulled out all of these departments. We vote no, no, no to them, and then there is the final budget. In this case, in trying to allow the government to get on with its business and make sure that people get paid and that certain programs that we think are really important that protect vulnerable Albertans and, you know, invest in our economy and things like that could move forward, we supported the overall budget. You know, it really does become a very odd exercise when you're just pulling these departments out and there's no additional time to talk about it or to talk about why you've pulled it out. It's not as though you've got that time back in that original Committee of Supply estimates debate, in which the Official Opposition is getting an hour of back-and-forth.

I had a situation where I was asking a 30-second question in context, and the minister was giving me a four-and-a-half-minute response, God bless him, but at the end of an hour I hadn't even put half of the questions that I had on the record. You know, nobody was deliberately being obstructive in that particular case. My questions were fairly short, the minister's answers were very thorough, but at the end of an hour I'd managed to get about nine questions on the record. Considering that I'm talking about the Environment portfolio, what is probably, certainly for our rebranding exercise and our image and our economy, incredibly important to Alberta, that's all I could get out of it. Then the third and fourth parties get 20 minutes. Then it goes to any other member that wishes to speak, which tends to be the government backbenchers. So you're not able to get a heck of a lot of information in that whole exchange. This is a flawed process that gets more and more flawed.

Two last things I want to put on the record are both concerned with safety. I've had another request from my snowmobiling buddy Rudi Haak, known as Haakeye, wondering why we do not make helmets mandatory in Alberta for any off-highway vehicle. I agree with him. The rate that we are killing kids riding on all-terrain vehicles because they're not required by law to have helmets I think is truly a huge problem.

The last issue is about . . . [Ms Blakeman's speaking time expired]
Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology.

Mr. Horner: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure for me to rise and speak to this bill in third reading. I have to say that one of the things that I wanted to do was to talk about the fact of talking to my constituents about the balance that we have in terms of our spending, the balance that we have in terms of, frankly, some of the areas where we've shaved some of the spending in 13 different departments. I think it's important that Albertans understand that if you were to remove the things that we did on the health budget, overall we're well within the population plus inflation type numbers that we hold as a policy for this government. Certainly, Albertans hold health care as probably their number one priority, and I think it's important that we recognize that.

I think it's important, Mr. Speaker, to the hon. member's comments, that environment is very high on the list of priorities for this government and how we are projecting ourselves to the world. I think the budget reflects the priorities of Albertans. It certainly reflects the priorities that I see and hear from my constituents, and I'm very pleased about that. I've had some very positive responses from them as it relates to what we're doing.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I would move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 2

Professional Statutes Amendment Act, 2010

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to move third reading of Bill 2, the Professional Statutes Amendment Act, 2010.

This bill, if passed, would paraphrase the Health Professions Act by requiring professional regulatory organizations to consult with the ministers responsible and consider their comments prior to removing or approving a program of study for registration requirements. This omnibus bill would ensure that this provision is included in the Architects Act; the Engineering, Geological and Geophysical Professions Act; the Land Surveyors Act; the Professional and Occupational Associations Registration Act; the Regulated Accounting Profession Act; and the Veterinary Profession Act.

If passed, Bill 2 would also update the language in the Agrology Profession Act and the Regulated Forestry Profession Act, both of which have similar provisions already in place.

I appreciate the participation of Assembly members, and I thank all members for their thoughtful comments and discussion.

I move third reading of Bill 2, the Professional Statutes Amendment Act, 2010.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to speak briefly to Bill 2. We're opposing this piece of legislation. It's unnecessary. It doesn't have support of professional associations if they speak candidly. Frankly, it doesn't have support of all members of the government caucus either. This is an example of redundant, pointless legislation. I have no idea who is driving this or why, but I do know and we do know that there's not much support for this out there in the community; there's not much support for it here in the Assembly either. I'm sure it'll pass because the government will use its heavy hand to force it through, but the simple fact is that this is just an unnecessary piece of legislation.

It feels like make-work activity here. Maybe that's what happens when you have so many members in a government Assembly. This is probably more of a candidate for the eyes and review of the Member for Battle River-Wainwright, who I think is going to chair a red tape review or stupid rules committee or something. Maybe this bill should come back next year to be eliminated because it, from all our information, is quite unnecessary, so this will not gain our support.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Is any other hon. member wishing to speak on the bill?

Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 2 read a third time]

3:20

Bill 4

Dangerous Goods Transportation and Handling Amendment Act, 2010

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South on behalf of the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Bill 4, the Dangerous Goods Transportation and Handling Amendment Act, 2010, is an important piece of legislation to industry. It is not adding to the regulatory burden for industry. Rather, it provides protection to industry by harmonizing our legislation with the federal government's, which was amended in June of 2009. These rules already exist as mandated by the federal government.

Matching provincial legislation to federal legislation as much as possible helps to achieve standard conditions for the movement of dangerous goods within provinces and across Canada. By mirroring the federal legislation, we are able to ensure our place in enforcing the rules and monitoring industry. If we did not mirror the federal government, we run the risk of losing our jurisdiction over industry in Alberta and our ability to enforce the rules as we see appropriate. This legislation actually provides some protection to industry here. The changes are minor and mainly administrative in nature. This legislation will help ensure to industry that it continues to be business as usual in Alberta.

I'd like to thank the members for the debate and support this bill has received so far.

It's now my pleasure to move third reading of Bill 4, Dangerous Goods Transportation and Handling Amendment Act, 2010.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre on the bill.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to speak in third reading on Bill 4, the Dangerous Goods Transportation and Handling Amendment Act, 2010. When the members of my caucus had spoken to this bill earlier, we had raised a couple of concerns around the time limit for prosecution, and this is a sort of ongoing theme that I've seen a number of times now. It seems that when it's in the government's favour, then it becomes two years at a maximum, but when the government wants to control the process or they prefer it a different way, it flips around. In this case what we've got is two years or when the alleged offence first comes to the attention of the director, whichever comes later. You can end up hanging some people out to dry here for a very, very long time if it comes to the attention of the director some way into the process and they take some time to investigate it.

I'm seeing this particular clause turn up more and more often. It isn't the first time I've seen it. I have a concern about that because I don't see the particular justification for it. You know, this is a petroleum province. We transport that product back and forth across this province all the time, lots of it. We need strong environmental protection, strong cleanup, accountability, the resources to enforce it, the monitoring and enforcement around it. I think some of the clauses in this bill work against that.

The second piece that we had raised at the time was the director ordering the $10,000 administration fee payout. I really question this. I'm sure it's legal. Well, no, I'm not sure it's legal. It's not as though this government hasn't put forward legislation that, in fact, wasn't legal before. But this is like a get out of jail for free card. It's like, you know, a discount coupon that seems to be issued here because if the director is of the opinion that a contravention has occurred, they can go directly to the person and say: "Look, you can pay this administrative penalty right now. If you don't, then we're going to go through the whole process. If you're found guilty at the end of it, then you're into a much higher penalty." I found that really odd. They can pay this administration fee. It's not a fine. It's not a levy.

What is it they do in the courts where they plead guilty without appearing to plead guilty? No contest or something? That's what's going on here. I mean, either you did wrong or you didn't. Sorry, I don't know what the legal term is, but you know what I'm talking about.

Mr. Hancock: Nolo contendere.

Ms Blakeman: Okay. There you go. I pretty much had it right.

Yeah. They can pay the fee outright, or they can appeal and take the process. But if that goes against them, well, they're in big trouble.

It's probably, you know: if I got caught with this, no, I wouldn't be saying that. Well, let's say someone gets caught with this, and they look at this on a balance and go: "You know what? This is the cost of doing business. I can far more likely convince the director that this is an administrative error. I'll pay the 10 grand, and I'm out of here."

Those were the issues that we had with this bill. I mean, I'm not going to go to the mat on this one. In particular, the first issue that I raised I'm seeing happening repeatedly in what the government is doing. I raise my eyebrow in question of what the real outcome of that will end up being, not to the good of the Alberta public, I am arguing.

Thank you for the opportunity to speak in third reading, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Is there any other hon. member wishing to speak on Bill 4?

Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 4 read a third time]

Bill 6

Emergency Management Amendment Act, 2010

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay on behalf of the hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to move third reading of Bill 6, the Emergency Management Amendment Act, 2010.

This bill introduces changes that will help protect Alberta's emergency partners, especially search and rescue teams, from liability claims. Search and rescue groups are an important part of our emergency system, and they need to know that they can do their jobs without worrying about unnecessary lawsuits. The amendments will also support municipalities by formalizing regional co-operation among communities. This will help municipalities provide a cross-jurisdictional response to a disaster, better serving their residents during a crisis. By supporting these amendments to Bill 6, we're demonstrating the government's commitment to providing safe and strong communities.

Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the support that Bill 6 has received from both sides of the House and anticipate support with third reading. I thank all members for their comments and discussion.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre on Bill 6.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am, again, pleased to rise and speak in third reading on Bill 6, the Emergency Management Amendment Act, 2010. Now, this bill I am pleased to support. I think this is designed to better protect search and rescue workers and the organizations from lawsuits. Considering the very close to home tragedies that we've seen with the avalanches in B.C., this particular act probably has much more meaning for us today than it might have when it was first introduced. This had been an issue, I think, that had been raised, certainly, in the media, the protection that was available for search and rescue organizations and their liability. This should allow for protection for them as well as the regionalization of emergency management responsibilities.

I'm expecting that those organizations will get protected. I'm expecting that we will have better regionalization of those emergency management responsibilities. I know that my colleagues have already spoken to this bill in favour of it. We in the Liberal caucus have always maintained that local decision-making is generally preferable, and this bill certainly enhances that opportunity here.

Just one last plea that I have is around search and rescue. One of the most important things for us living here and tending to play across the mountains in B.C. is avalanche awareness and training.

Mr. MacDonald: Particularly for snowmobilers.

Ms Blakeman: Well, for snowmobilers and others that are going to be in the backcountry where they're in that area.

I'm aware that this government withdrew or minimized its funding to the Avalanche Centre some time ago, and I wish they would reconsider that. I think that's an excellent organization that does excellent work and was more deserving of support. I know that the argument at the time was: well, you know, that's a B.C. problem, and we're in Alberta, and we don't need to be funding that. Yeah. But a lot of Albertans, as we know, go across that Great Divide into B.C., and it does affect us. Our access to that kind of information, training, equipment, and all else that goes with it is very important to us.

I appreciate what's being done here around the search and rescue groups. I know that they will appreciate it. I actually have a dog at this point that probably could do search and rescue, and I don't have the time to do the training, but my hat's off to those search and rescue groups that do work with dogs. It's a tremendous commitment from the owners. I know that they train every single week, and then when they're asked, they get on a plane with their dog and fly all over the world in order to dig through and hopefully find people still alive but sometimes not. I'm really glad to see that organizations like that are getting some support through this bill.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Does any other hon. member wish to speak?
The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose to close the debate.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank all members who participated in debate on Bill 6. I'd like to thank members from both sides of the House that have in fact spoken in favour of this bill. This bill will help protect Alberta's emergency partners, especially search and rescue teams, from liability claims. These groups are an important part of our emergency system, and they need to know that they can do their jobs without worrying about frivolous lawsuits. The amendments will also support municipalities by formalizing regional co-operation amongst communities. This will help municipalities provide a cross-jurisdictional response to a disaster, better serving their residents during a crisis.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I'd once again like to thank everybody for speaking to it, and I anticipate their support.

The Deputy Speaker: Seeing no others wishing to speak on the bill, the chair shall now call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 6 read a third time]

Bill 8

Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2010

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to rise for third reading of Bill 8, the Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2010. I think we've covered most of the issues around this act. I don't think there have been too many significant ones. I'd just remind everybody that this Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act is generally amended every single year. It ensures that Alberta maintains a fair, equitable, and competitive tax regime.

Most of the amendments are primarily of a housekeeping nature, Mr. Speaker. Three of the particular measures that were of more significance than of a housekeeping nature were a clarification of the rules which allowed corporations to file returns in currencies like the U.S. dollar or the British pound in responses to changes that were made to federal legislation; the second one was changes to the regulation-making authority in the act to ensure that new refund interest rates can be made applicable to prior periods; and the third one was a change that brings Alberta legislation in line with the federal fairness provision, allowing the minister to waive interest or penalties in certain situations.

I believe I've addressed most of the questions or concerns. I urge all members to support this bill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the comments from the Member for Battle River-Wainwright. We will support this piece of legislation, but I do want to make comments about some things that I wish were in it that are not. That could be because similar kinds of issues have been brought forward in previous versions of this legislation.

The Member for Battle River-Wainwright quite properly noted that pretty well every year this bill comes before us so that we can address a range of corporate tax issues. In the past we've addressed things like royalty deductions and scientific and research and experimental tax credits and those kinds of things, and I wish that roughly parallel matters were in this year's version. Maybe they'll be in next year's. The new parliamentary secretary – is that the right? – assistant for finance might take note of this.

My comments relate to two issues. This member, in particular, will know that this is something very close to my heart, and that's the sustainability of Alberta's prosperity, the sustainability of Alberta's economy. I have a deep, deep concern that we're living on a kind of energy bubble in this province and we're not doing enough to either save for the future or to diversify. I am concerned that initiatives around sustainability aren't there, and I'd like them to be there. Some of those might have to do with how we handle corporate taxes.

I'm just going to ask in the context of this piece of legislation for the parliamentary assistant to perhaps take some initiatives to look at a couple of issues related to sustainability so that when this bill comes before us next year, we might see something different. I think it would be very valuable for this member to actually take a look at the long-term trends of corporate profits in Alberta compared to other provinces and other jurisdictions of the world. We could either look at corporate profits before taxes or corporate profits after taxes. But either way, if the member takes a hard look at this – and maybe he and I can sit down at some point outside of this Assembly and share some information – I think he'll find that corporate profits in Alberta measured as a percentage of the GDP or measured on a per capita basis are absolutely enormous, far, far beyond other provinces'. That's not necessarily a bad thing. I mean, profits get reinvested. Profits create jobs. We'd certainly much rather have profitable corporations than losing corporations. But there is a question of balance here.

The first time I took note of this issue was actually in a report by the TD Bank. It was one of their reports that called Alberta a northern tiger or western tiger. I think it was northern tiger. They made note in there about Alberta's corporate profit to GDP ratio being something like 22 per cent. In other words, 22 per cent of Alberta's whole gross domestic product was corporate profit. They commented on how high that was compared to, say, Ontario, which is a huge corporate centre, or anywhere else in Canada. It caught my eye, and it kind of worked away in my mind. I ended up doing some other research on this, and, lo and behold, the TD Bank is right. We do allow our corporations in this province to make huge sums of money, and they've been doing that for a long time.

There's a dynamic here that needs to be considered. Big profits are great, and they might indicate really well companies or wonderful innovation or something like that. But if there's an effective marketplace where there's genuine competition, profits are always brought back down to a mean because everybody else starts competing and bringing those profits back down to an average. What we've seen in Alberta, I suspect, is no correction on that. In fact, we've seen corporate profits over the last 20 years rise and rise and rise and rise, not just in dollar terms but as a proportion of the economy.

I'm not sure if I was very clear with the member there or anybody else – the minister of finance might be listening – but I think that it's time to have a debate in this province around corporate profits. I link that to the issue of sustainability because one of my concerns as a citizen of this province is that the incredible wealth of Alberta is going somewhere. We have a GDP here that's per capita way bigger than anybody else's, but I don't know where it's going. I don't see it. I mean, we spend quite a lot on government services, but we're not out of line with anybody else there. Albertans are prosperous, but I'd really like to know where this great huge amount of wealth in Alberta is going. I'm concerned about that, not because I need more wealth particularly, Mr. Speaker, but because we need to be accumulating some of that to save for the future. This is an issue, in my view, of sustainability.

The second question that I wanted to raise in this context of corporate profits is around economic diversification. I did note in my opening comments that when this legislation has come before the Assembly in previous years, we've addressed things like royalty deductions and tax credits and things like that. The Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar today raised a very interesting issue, which is the fact that we now have Imperial Oil and Exxon contracting to South Korea to build huge vessels, enormous vessels, that will be used in the Fort McMurray area. They're going to be loaded on ships, brought over the Pacific, barged up rivers, trucked through the United States – Idaho, Montana, and so on – all the way to Fort McMurray while we have people in south Edmonton and probably in Red Deer and Calgary who are some of the world's best metal fabricators looking for work.

You know what? Where does that fit into corporate taxes and corporate royalty deductions? We let Imperial Oil deduct the costs of that from their royalty payments, so we're actually paying, as the citizens of Alberta, for hundreds of millions of dollars of work to go to South Korea. I think we need to rethink that. I know that there are metal fabrication shops in Alberta looking for work. I think if we want to build the long-term diversity and strength of this economy, we don't just want to roll over all the time for Imperial Oil and Exxon and the other companies. Sometimes we need to take a stand and say: "Hey. For the privilege and right of doing business in Alberta, there are some conditions. One of those might just be fabricating your material here, or, at least, we're not going to give you a royalty credit, royalty deductions, and a tax deduction for doing it in South Korea." That doesn't make sense.

Those were two issues. Just to quickly summarize – maybe the Member for Battle River-Wainwright and I can sit down at some point – I would like there to be a debate on the scale of corporate profits in this province. Secondly, I would like there to also be a debate about how much we allow huge corporations to deduct from their royalty payments or their tax payments for work that they're contracting to other countries. It just doesn't necessarily make sense. It needs to be justified to me, Mr. Speaker.

Having said that, maybe we'll have that discussion before this bill comes back next year. For this year I'll tell you that I think we expect to support this.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Seeing no other hon. member wishing to speak on the bill, the chair shall now call the question.

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 13 Securities Amendment Act, 2010

[Adjourned debate March 23: Mr. Olson]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity this afternoon to discuss Bill 13, the Securities Amendment Act, 2010. [interjections] Shall I continue, Mr. Speaker?

The Deputy Speaker: Yes, please. You have the floor.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. This further harmonizes the passport system that originated from the 2004 memorandum of understanding between the federal and provincial governments, excluding Ontario. Certainly, Bill 13 makes amendments to support Canada's conversion to the international financial reporting standards, creates a framework for regulating credit-rating organizations, and allows the Alberta Securities Commission to impose sanctions for late filing of disclosure that are similar to what occurs in B.C., in Vancouver. There are also, as I understand it, amendments to ensure that Alberta's registration regime is harmonized with other provinces.

Certainly, whenever members of the general public or the investment community talk about securities, they always talk about the national securities regulator or what we have or have not worked out across the country. Some provinces have taken their issues to the courts, and that's fine. That's their prerogative. But whenever we think of securities and security legislation, the number one issue is the fact that currently there are 13 provincial and territorial securities regulators across Canada rather than a single national regulator.

Mr. Flaherty, the hon. Minister of Finance in the dominion government, has been quoted as stating that Canada is the only industrialized country without a single securities regulator. The Globe and Mail reported that Canada is one of only two countries in the 103-member International Organization of Securities Commissions without a national overseer.

Now, over the last few years all the provinces, excluding the province of Ontario, have begun to implement a passport system which mutually recognizes the rules within each provincial regulator in order to facilitate transactions across each and every border. The federal government has been advocating for a national regulator with resistance, as I said, from B.C., Alberta, and Quebec. British Columbia has recently softened to the idea, but Alberta and Quebec continue to oppose any implementation of a national regulator. This whole national securities debate and discussion will unfold with different legislation.

Certainly, with Bill 13, as I understand it and our research concludes, these amendments will allow for the harmonization or mutual recognition of securities regulators in Canada. Amendments have been made every year since 2004 to securities legislation across the country to bring the language of the legislation onto a common baseline. I understand there is a lot of back and forth between provinces over legislative changes. As one province would amend their legislation, then others would have to re-amend their own to bring it in line with others and so on. The passport system is continually updated and harmonized as other jurisdictions amend their respective regulations.

Now, the Alberta Securities Commission regulates individuals and entities in Alberta that advise in securities, trade in securities, or raise money through issuing securities. The basic element of a securities regulator is to protect investors. We know through international financial events that have occurred in the last two years that some investors – no other way to put it – have been fleeced by regulations that have not had the interests of investors first and foremost but had the interests of a number of promoters, some of whom now have a chance to consider their actions from the confines of prison. Hopefully, some of those high-profile cases will send a strong message that all laws will be vigorously enforced and that those that break them will pay the ultimate penalty, which is the loss of their freedom.

That being said, according to Department of Finance officials Canada's securities regulations officers are very good at regulation. Canada has a good record on this front, whether it's the banking sector or the investment community. We have a very good record, and we need to maintain that record. All governments as regulators, or the ones that make the law and the ones that are willing to enforce the law, can ensure that both investors and promoters have confidence in the system. To date when we have each province and territory with a commission of one sort or another, each dealing with their own securities regulations, it seems to be working. We'll see what the future unfolds. But, certainly, Mr. Speaker, when we look at Bill 13, it's something that, hopefully, each and every member of this Assembly will support.

I certainly at this time would like to thank the hon. minister of finance for the opportunity that has been provided to our research staff to have a discussion on this bill. With that, I will conclude my remarks. Hopefully, we will see this bill passed, and hopefully in the future there will not be any scandals in this country or this province like what is currently unfolding on Wall Street and some of the other major financial capitals of the world. We have to have a sound regulatory process. Hopefully, everyone can work together and design and implement and enforce the regulatory process. That's, again, good for investors and good for promoters. I'm confident that can be done and this country can continue to be rock solid as far as the financial investment community is concerned.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other hon. members to join the debate?

Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 13 read a second time]

Bill 14

Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2010

[Adjourned debate March 23: Mr. Blackett]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much for this opportunity, Mr. Speaker. We are willing to support this bill. It's a minor change but I'm sure one that any municipality that has to pay for its own police force will appreciate because it's correcting a hitch in the git-along that happened when there was some other legislative work done and we ended up with fines.

An Hon. Member: What was that? Sorry.

Ms Blakeman: A hitch in your git-along. You're from Alberta. You know what that means.

It resulted in a situation where fines that were levied upon drivers misbehaving on the highways, for example, were allocated to the municipality in which the deed was done rather than the fine going to the municipality that was paying the police officer or bylaw officer who was issuing the fine. We have a very particular way of allocating finances to municipalities to pay for their police services. I don't know that everyone always agrees with it, but at least it was improved from when I was the Solicitor General and Justice minister critic way back when, in which it was quite unfair.

Anyway, this is a fairly minor change that does tie the fine to the municipality that provides the funding for the police force. It basically realigns the Traffic Safety Act with the Police Act. I know that the minister had approached me, I think, hopeful at one point that it could have been under miscellaneous statutes, which is a minor change. Nonetheless, it is a change, so not appropriate for miscellaneous statutes. I'm very happy to support it in second reading as a stand-alone bill: Bill 14, Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2010.

Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. member wishing to speak on the bill?

Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 14 read a second time]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Cao in the chair]

The Chair: The chair shall now call the Committee of the Whole to order.

4:00

Victims Restitution and Compensation Payment Amendment Act, 2010

The Chair: Are there any comments or questions? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I know that my colleague the critic for Justice has spoken to this bill. I'm struggling a bit more with it. I had hoped to see something happening under this that would deal with the enormous surplus that has been created in this fund, and that's not being addressed in what we have before us. Instead, it's designed as a disincentive, and it's really meant to increase the power of the province to go into civil court and get the proceeds of crime, which will likely further enhance the victims of crime fund. My frustration for that is that so far we seem to have a government policy of just hoarding money in that fund rather than using the money to benefit Albertans. God knows, there are enough of them that really need the money from this fund.

Now, there seems to be a way of distributing this fund that does deal with the sort of established or – I don't know if it's appropriate to say – more common ways that we think of a victim of crime. For example, my colleague was a bystander and was hurt in the commission of a crime, and, you know, he receives payment out of that fund to assist him. That we seem to have gotten a handle on.

But when we look at things like funding for sexual assault centres, I had to campaign long and hard in order to get the government to provide operational funding to sexual assault centres because at that time they didn't get operational funding. They had to patch together, stitch together a patchwork of different project and program funds in order to be able to pay for what they were doing, with the most bizarre rules and regulations. You know, they could get money to pay for counselling for someone but only if they were going to court. If you walked in and said, "Well, I don't know if I'm going to go to court on the sexual assault that I've suffered," well, then, you know, they couldn't pay for your counselling. It's just stupid.

I'm a little frustrated by this bill in that, you know, it's the result of a Supreme Court ruling where they found in relation to Ontario's Civil Remedies Act that it was constitutional and within the province's jurisdiction and right to establish mechanisms by which to recoup money from crime. They can sell property and seize things, and they can also kind of realize capital gains and things like that. It's expanding the scope of the Victims Restitution and Compensation Payment Act, allows for broader purposes. This is more of what I was looking for: that it would allow public bodies such as municipalities to apply for the costs of crime, including recovering the cost of destroying or modifying dangerous or illegal property. Again, that's about getting the money, not about spending the money, and I do not understand why we continue to hoard and gain.

When I was the Justice critic, they had a surplus of $3.5 million – and I think it went up to $4 million – in the victims of crime fund at that time. We're now – what? – eight years down the road or 10 years down the road, and it's $45 million, I think. It's 10 times that amount. Why are we hoarding this money? Now this is going to give the government the ability to go and get more of it.

You know, I understand the point behind it. I know that my colleague is supportive and has put us on record as a caucus as supporting this. I still have not had my questions answered about why this fund doesn't implement some of the things that we clearly need to have implemented and done in this province around victims, around prevention, around bullying, around hate crimes, around education, all those opportunities that could be enhanced through this fund, and still the government sits on it going: "No, no, no. We can't spend it on that program, only on this one." And the money continues to rack up.

I'll support the bill, but I sure don't understand why we can't see something in front of us that dealt with how the money would be expended for the benefit of the province and for prevention purposes and victim support more than what we've seen.

Those are my concerns around that bill. Thank you for letting me put them on the record.

The Chair: Does any other hon. member wish to speak on the bill?
Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question.

[The clauses of Bill 10 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 11 Witness Security Act

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Mr. Chairman, it would be difficult to disagree with this bill, I think. When we're dealing with issues of protecting people who have the courage to step forward and support justice by disclosing information or otherwise sharing material with the Crown prosecutor or others that will lead to an arrest and then prosecution, I think we need to support those people. If at times those people are endangered because of the stands they've taken, I think that as a society and a government and a Legislature we need to make sure those people are protected.

I think that at a time when we're seeing increasing concern with organized crime in Alberta – with gangs, with related issues, sometimes gangs with national and international ties – we need to make sure that we do everything we can to prosecute those people and to drive them out of this province. If that means supporting witnesses who will testify or share information against them, then let's do it.

The way we look at this bill, this legislation establishes a provincial witness protection program, and it's a good idea. My comments on this are that short and that clear. I can tell you that I enthusiastically support this bill. I think it's the right move, and I'm confident our entire caucus does.

Thank you.

The Chair: Does any other hon. member wish to speak on the bill?
Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question.

[The clauses of Bill 11 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

4:10

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'd move that the committee rise and report bills 10 and 11.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bills: Bill 10, Bill 11.

The Deputy Speaker: Having heard the report, does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 15 Appropriation Act, 2010 (continued)

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, we've had a lot to say about Bill 15. There are a lot of issues outstanding with how this government develops its budget and what's exactly in the budget. Certainly, whenever we are looking at ways for this government to reduce its deficit, there are a lot of suggestions that could be made. One is the size of the cabinet. We've talked about this earlier. We could also reduce the number of MLAs. We're going up to 87. It's sort of ironic that at the same time that we're going to expand the number of MLAs, we want teachers to work harder, we want nurses to work harder, we want doctors to work harder for less, but we're going to get more MLAs.

Alberta Health Services. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview talked about that yesterday at length and again today, the $700 million in efficiencies. It's in the speech, but you're going to have to show us.

One thing that we never heard from the government since – and we had a vigorous debate in budget estimates. We were promised a lot of information in writing from the minister of finance – I'm still waiting – on how we could control our farm fuel benefit programs to make sure that farmers that are eligible are getting the money, not individuals that are ineligible. That's a hundred-million-dollar program. If we could find $30 million in efficiencies there, that would work.

Biofuels. The megabucks that are going into that: perhaps we could have a value audit on that, Mr. Speaker.

The travel and the hosting. Now, we are looking at the tab coming in for the party in Vancouver. Are we just transferring some of the travel and some of the hosting costs to other people within the department so it doesn't show up in the Alberta Gazette? [interjections] I'm sorry, sir? The Minister of Transportation: it's the first time all week I haven't heard him whenever he spoke.

Now, we could certainly stretch out the budget, Mr. Speaker, the budget for capital projects. The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere talked about that yesterday. I think there are efficiencies in that budget if we were to spend a little less . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, it's 4:15. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member, but in accordance with Standing Order 64(5) the chair is required to put the question to the House on the appropriation bill on the Order Paper for third reading.

[Motion carried; Bill 15 read a third time]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In light of the progress today I would move that we adjourn until Monday, April 12, at 1:30 p.m.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Statement by the Speaker

End of an Era

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Hon. members, in place of prayers today the House will in a moment commemorate the end of an era. In the Speaker's gallery today are a number of distinguished leaders in our province. As I call out their names, I'd ask them to rise: Lieutenant Colonel Rick P. Coates, commanding officer, the King's Own Calgary Regiment; the Hon. Daniel P. Hays, honorary colonel, the King's Own Calgary Regiment, and former Speaker of the Canadian Senate; Regimental Sergeant Major Emmett Kelly, the Calgary Highlanders; Colonel Robert J.S. Gibson, honorary colonel, the Calgary Highlanders; Lieutenant Colonel Wayne A. Lockhart, commanding officer, the South Alberta Light Horse; Colonel Stan Milner, honorary colonel, the South Alberta Light Horse; Colonel Dennis M. Erker, honorary colonel, the Loyal Edmonton Regiment; Lieutenant Colonel John Stanton, honorary lieutenant colonel, the Loyal Edmonton Regiment; Mr. Bill Fecteau, command chairman, Royal Canadian Legion, Alberta-NWT Command; Lieutenant Colonel Thomas Bradley of the Edmonton Garrison; Major Timothy Tattrie of the Edmonton Garrison; Chief Warrant Officer Keith Jones of the Edmonton Garrison; Master Warrant Officer Russell Vida, Edmonton Garrison; Sergeant Justin Redmond, Edmonton Garrison; and Corporal Grant McKenzie, Edmonton Garrison.

I'd like to place the significance of their presence and this event in context. On this day 93 years ago a battle that in many respects defined this nation concluded with victory after three days of intense combat. Vimy Ridge evoked in the 48 battalions of the Canadian Corps, who rose as one for the first time on April 9, 1917, a pride in a singular achievement. In our country and in this province that growing sense of patriotism was widely embraced.

To that point and thereafter much was given by a generation that we remember and mourn today. From this Assembly we remember Lieutenant Joseph Emmett Stauffer, MLA for Didsbury and Deputy Speaker, who was killed in action at Vimy on April 10, 1917. Alberta had over 48,885 men enlist; 6,140 were killed, and 20,000 were wounded during World War I. Alberta's population in 1917 was 496,525. Nearly 10 per cent of Alberta's then population enlisted and served in World War I.

In the Speaker's gallery today there are representatives of well-known Alberta regiments: the South Alberta Light Horse, the King's Own Calgary Regiment, the Loyal Edmonton Regiment, and the Calgary Highlanders. All fought at the Battle of Vimy Ridge and carry that Battle Honour. In the first Great War, of the 18,796 who served in these four regiments, 3,884 were killed in action or died of wounds and 9,960 were wounded. Few communities or families within our borders were untouched in some way by that conflict.

With the death on February 18 of this year of Canada's last World War I veteran, Jack Babcock, the living link with all who served sovereign and dominion in that pivotal event has been severed forever. Many of a generation that was young, confident, and full of promise gave much that we might be here in this place today. They are now all gone. Our direct link with them has ended, but we will remember.

I would ask that you rise for the Last Post and Reveille, played by the King's Own Calgary Regiment bandsman Master Corporal David Ramsey of Calgary, and the Lament, played by Calgary Highlanders piper Private Cameron Drummond from Strathmore. In the moment of silence that will follow the Last Post, would you please privately pray for all of the innocent victims of war, the Holocaust, genocide, and Poland's lost leadership.

[The Last Post was played, followed by a minute of silence, after which the Lament and Reveille were played]

1:40

The Speaker:

They shall grow not old, as we that are left grow old:
Age shall not weary them, nor the years condemn.
At the going down of the sun and in the morning
We will remember them.

Hon. Members: We will remember them.

The Speaker: Hon. members and ladies and gentlemen, I will now invite Mrs. Colleen Vogel to lead us in the singing of our national anthem. She's in the Speaker's gallery.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'd now ask our very special guests from the Canadian military to rise and be recognized. I've introduced them all. Gentlemen. [Standing ovation]

The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise today and introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly His Excellency Justin Hugh Brown, making his first official visit as High Commissioner from the obviously wonderful country of Australia, and with him the honorary consul from Calgary, Paul Nelson, who is accompanying him today. We've had over 70 years of relationship with Australia, and it is noteworthy that Alberta's entrepreneurial spirit is very much the same as the Australian entrepreneurial spirit. Along with some Members of this Legislative Assembly and special guests we were privileged to host them for lunch today. I would ask that they now rise and that this Assembly give them the warm Alberta welcome, please.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour for me to rise today and introduce to you and through you Mr. Sewa Singh Sekhwan, Minister of Information and Public Relations and NRI Affairs, from Punjab, India, seated in your gallery today. Minister Sekhwan was the chief guest yesterday at the eighth annual event for Des Pardes Times newspaper and is joined in your gallery today by Mr. Gurbhinder Singh Sandhu, publisher and editor-in-chief of Des Pardes Times. Also joining the minister today is his son, Jagroop Singh Sekhwan, who is in the members' gallery today, and two of his daughters, Dr. Jiwanjot Kaur Sekhwan and Dr. Akal Kaur Sekhwan. I ask all of my guests to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

My second introduction is a group of friends and members of the community joining us today as well, beginning with prominent businessman and friend Gurcharan Dhaliwal, Manjot Kaur Sandhu, Mr. Amar Bhasin, Mr. Gagan Vidhu, Sam Pandher, Parap Singh, Kamal Layel, Mr. Amarjit Pancchi from Winnipeg, and, joining us from Calgary, Jagdeep Singh Sidhu. I ask my guests to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Hon. members, I have a very long list today, and surely we will come up against Standing Order 7(1), which says that the question period should begin at 1:50. I'm also advised that there are a number of members who want to participate in a ministerial statement. I'm going to ask the question if there's unanimous consent that can now be given to waive Standing Order 7(1), which will preclude the question period from beginning until probably 2 o'clock so that we can continue the Routine with introductions and then process and continue with Ministerial Statements. Is any member opposed to waiving this standing order? If so, say no.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, it's a pleasure for me to rise and introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a group of grade 6 students from l'école Broxton Park school in Spruce Grove. They are accompanied by a number of the parents and their teacher helpers as well as Jen and Ali, the daughter and granddaughter of my constituency assistant, Carol Stewart, in Spruce Grove. In the interests of time I would ask them to rise – they are in the public gallery, I believe – and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 18 students who attend school daily in a unique concept of schooling called live online. This program is offered by the Edmonton public school board, but in this case it's home based in my constituency. Grades 4, 5, and 6 come to school by logging in online. This week they are participating in the School at the Legislature from April 12 to April 16. The students are accompanied by their teacher, Elaine Blanton, and helpers and parents Sherri Fraser, Barbara Ek, Jo-Anne Price, Abdulgani Salman, Chris Power, Sandy Mackenzie, Grace Stewart, Carla Feldberg. They are seated in the members' gallery. I'd like to ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise in this Assembly and introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly nine students and their instructor from St. Mary's University College, located in the constituency of Calgary-

Shaw. I had the pleasure of speaking to their class on March 3 of this year, and I have to say that their political insight and knowledge are incredible. I fully expect to see some of them here as members of this Assembly someday. I'd ask you to please welcome first their professor, Dr. Marco Navarro-Génie – I'd ask you to please stand as I mention your name – and students Amanda Achtman, Daniel Boutette, Laura Carrier, Chelsea Glover, Taylor McKee, Sarah Moss, Laura Reuben-Spear, Melanie Wedel, and Martha Zweifel. I hope I've got all of your names right. I'd ask all of you to please give them the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got a couple of introductions to do this afternoon. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a number of municipal leaders from the Athabasca, Redwater, and Fort McMurray areas. I had the pleasure of meeting with them through the hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater over the noon hour today. I'm very grateful for their dedication and tireless effort in serving and representing their communities.

With us today are Bill Nimmo, mayor of Gibbons; Dave Franchuk, mayor of the town of Smoky Lake; Charles Newell, reeve, county of Thorhild; Karen Melnyk, town of Bon Accord; Jim Neathway, town of Redwater; Brian Bahry, deputy reeve, county of Athabasca; Donna Troyer, mayor, village of Waskatenau; Don Rigney, mayor of Sturgeon county; Paul Sinclair, reeve, municipal district of Opportunity; Roger Morrill, councillor, town of Athabasca; Jim Giancola, deputy mayor, village of Boyle; and Mike Allen, acting mayor of the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo. They are in the members' gallery, Mr. Speaker, and I'd ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted to introduce to you and through you today to all members of the Assembly Mrs. Loreen Morrison and her granddaughter Ms. Stephanie Wertz, both from my constituency of Edmonton-Rutherford. Mrs. Morrison recently celebrated her 80th birthday. She has had a lifelong interest in politics, and I'm delighted to welcome her on the occasion of her first visit to the Alberta Legislature. I'd ask all colleagues to please join me in extending our traditional warm welcome to my guests.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly 14 of 102 members of the Edmonton chapter of the Entrepreneurs' Organization, a network of young small-business owners representing a wide cross-section of industries with the goal of growing and learning from one another in order to increase business success and enrich not only their personal lives but the lives of all Albertans. These are young people who have an idea and a dream, a dream to work hard and create jobs for this province and for this province to succeed. Really, the backbone of this province is small business.

They are here today meeting with me and other members of the Assembly, some of whom were also small-business owners prior to getting elected. Taking a keen interest in how our government operates, they are seated in the members' gallery. I would ask them to rise as I call their names: Kyle Powell, Clive Oshry, Ken Nichols, Dwayne Pohranychny, Joe Cairo, John McLaughlin, Michael Bacchus, James Keirstead, Kevin Lang, Wes Patterson, James Ward, Craig McEwen, John Trapp, and Noah Jones. I'd like all of my colleagues to give them a warm welcome to the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Mr. Sam Johnston from Magrath, Alberta. Mr. Johnston has indicated to me that he wanted to come today as a token of his appreciation on behalf of the council in Magrath for all the support they receive from the government of Alberta. We're happy to have him here. He's seated in the members' gallery. I would ask that he please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce you to three constituents from the fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre. Heading up the Edgerton clan, of course, I'd like to introduce to you someone you all know, and that's Kelsy Edgerton, who is one of the pages here in the Legislature. With her today, coming again to visit us, is Amber Edgerton, her sister. Amber, would you please stand. Amber is, of course, a young skier. We're joined by elder sister Alyssa, who is also an award-winning skier. I would ask the three of you to please stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of myself and my colleagues from Lethbridge-West and Little Bow it is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly the winner of the Lethbridge public library's Caught Reading photo contest, Miss Hannah Forster, who is seated in the public gallery. The intent is to promote literacy and show that reading is a way to connect with the world. Of the 203 applicants this year, whose photos depicted everything from Braille to bus stop signs, it shows how literacy impacts our daily lives. Hannah won this trip to the Legislature, which was sponsored by both the Lethbridge-East and Lethbridge-West constituency offices, but she is also the constituent of the Member for Little Bow. Hannah's photo, entitled Anywhere, Any Time, is a depiction of the gift of literacy, and I will table the picture later on. Hannah's younger sister Shelby is the model in the picture and is here today in addition to their mother, Donna. This is their first visit to the Legislature. I would ask that they now rise and receive the warm welcome and congratulations of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly my guests from Parents against Closure of Schools. PACS is a group of people who have been affected by the recent closure, sector, or sustainability reviews initiated by the Edmonton public school board. My guests, who will be rallying at the Edmonton public school board offices tomorrow evening, are seated in the public gallery. I would now ask them to rise as I call their names and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly: George Tsoukalas; Dennis Deans; Pam Mollison, Len Mollison, their children Aurianna Mollison and John Mollison; Michael Izard; Douglas Thivierge; and Chantelle Oudshoorn. Please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly my guests Lisa Maxwell and Kyler Tebbutt. Lisa was born in Australia, grew up in Calgary, and is currently working as an engineer in Calgary. Kyler is from Edmonton. He studied mechanical engineering at the University of Alberta and is now working on an MBA at UBC. They are both in Edmonton to celebrate Kyler's baba's 90th birthday. My guests are seated in the public gallery, and I'd now ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Boutillier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, it's a pleasure for me to introduce a constituent of mine who is a long-term resident, a former chamber of commerce president. He also just recently joined with me in presenting to Hockey Canada to host the Royal Bank Cup in the upcoming years. He's an active member of our community. I'd like to ask to rise Mike Allen, representing Fort McMurray, the oil sands capital of the world.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce a number of individuals who are here, all of them working with the Parkinson Society in one part of the province or another. I'll ask them to rise as I call their names, and perhaps we could then welcome all of them at the same time at the end: Mr. John Petryshen, CEO for the Parkinson Society of Southern Alberta; Myles Rusak, director of fund development; Judy Deverill, client services co-ordinator; Leslie Cleary, volunteer event co-ordinator; Alison Wood, PD client and volunteer; Ed Langlois, PD client and volunteer, and Darlene Langlois, accompanying Ed; Helen Mak, PD client and volunteer; Jim Haiste, board of directors, and Catherine Haiste, who is accompanying Jim today; Marguerite Wieler, who is the program manager; and Sue Vienneau, who is the PD client representative with the Parkinson's Society of Alberta. Marguerite is with the movement disorders clinic. They have all risen. Could we all please thank them by warmly welcoming them here today.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Goudreau: Well, thank you again, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure as well to introduce one of my constituents who has travelled to be at the Legislature today – she has travelled from Donnelly – Mrs. Rhonda Clarke-Gauthier. Both she and her husband, Daniel, farm a very, very modern family farm south of Donnelly. She is a proud mother of two sons, who are also involved in public speaking and part of TUXIS parliament. Rhonda is very involved in the 4-H club at various levels and is involved as well through her church. I'd ask her to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: I'm going to recognize the hon. the Premier to participate in Ministerial Statements. I understand that the hon. Premier and the hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration will be doing this jointly. There is a translation of the words that the hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration will provide in his native tongue of Polish, and all members should have a copy of that.

The hon. the Premier.

Loss of Polish Leadership in Plane Crash

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to express the profound sadness Albertans feel at the loss of Polish President Lech Kaczynski and the many other Polish leaders who perished in a plane crash in Russia last weekend.

Many Albertans enjoy close ties to Poland. Over 170,000 Albertans are of Polish heritage, including members of this House and many people here in our capital city, which is home to the largest Polish population in western Canada. In my own family my wife, Marie, is of Polish descent, and I know from experience, as many of you do, the tremendous closeness and strength of the Polish community in Alberta. This community stands united today mourning the tragic loss of life and potential.

In addition to President Kaczynski and his wife, Maria, nearly 100 political, military, and religious leaders were lost in this tragedy. The scale of this loss is nearly unimaginable. It represents so much knowledge and wisdom, the collective experience of a generation of leaders. Recovery from such a loss will be difficult but not impossible. I want the Polish community in this province and our brothers and sisters in Poland to know that Albertans stand with them. We share their loss and mourn their leaders, and we will support them as they move forward from this terrible tragedy.

Poland's history has included more than its share of hardships, including the very tragedy that its leaders were under way to commemorate in Katyn when disaster struck. Poland is also rich in culture and the values of family and faith, values its people have shared with our own province and which remain just as strong today both here and in their homeland. Those are the values that will help Poland emerge from the shadow of this disaster and continue on its path as a valued member of the world community and a treasured friend to our province and country. Poland's lost leaders will never be forgotten, and their legacy will be a country that remains and always will be strong and proud.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration will provide remarks in Polish, the translation of which will be circulated at the conclusion.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Shortly after the tragedy occurred, our Premier issued a letter of condolence in the Polish language addressed to the Premier of Poland, and for the benefit of Poles throughout Alberta, Canada, and in Poland thank you for allowing me to read this letter. [Remarks in Polish]

[Translation] On behalf of the families and government of Alberta, we express our heartfelt condolences on Poland's loss of President Lech Kaczynski, the President's wife Mrs. Maria Kaczynski, and the members of the Polish delegation and plane crew who were traveling with them to Katyn.

As families, we can only imagine the sorrow that you must be feeling in the loss of so many of your country's brightest fathers, brothers, mothers, sisters and friends. Their work had impact across your country, and it was followed with great interest by the 170,000 Albertans of Polish origin whose family, business and cultural ties with Poland are strong.

And as a government, we appreciate the challenges ahead as you work to replace the political, security, financial, legislative, and cultural knowledge which these strong leaders represented. We are confident that talented people will carry on the important work that they had started.

As soldiers in international missions, as partners in security, as colleagues in business and trade, and also as friends, Albertans have been proud to stand with the people of Poland. This is a difficult time for your people and government. Our prayers are with you, now as always. [As submitted]

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank the Premier and the Minister of Employment and Immigration for their eloquent tributes to the Polish government and its people.

This Saturday, as my colleagues mentioned, a tragedy struck the nation of Poland. Ninety-six passengers, mostly senior government officials, perished in the skies over western Russia. It is an especially sad coincidence that such a catastrophe would occur during the first legitimate attempt to heal the 70-year-old wound that resulted from the Katyn massacre.

The tragic events that occurred in the Katyn forest in 1940 and resulted in the murder of 20,000 Polish officers by the NKVD had divided these nations for a generation. Because the Soviet Union refused to admit responsibility for the massacre and the postwar communist authorities in Poland forbade any discussion of the topic, no reconciliation began until Mikhail Gorbachev admitted Soviet responsibility in 1990.

Since that time the lines in the sand drawn by the Polish and Russian governments regarding Katyn have begun to move. Poles have come to view Russia's recent attempts to heal the pain caused by Katyn as a significant step on the road to improved relations. I sincerely hope that this tragedy which has befallen the Polish nation, although it comes at much too great a cost, will promote reconciliation between these two great nations and deepen the meaning and understanding of the underlying events at Katyn.

I ask you my colleagues in this Assembly to stop for a moment and spare a thought for the victims, the Polish nation, and Alberta's large Polish community in the wake of this terrible tragedy. Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I anticipate additional members will want to participate. Unanimous request will have to be given. I'll ask one question. Does any member in the Assembly object to additional members participating? If so, say no.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The news of the loss of many of Poland's most senior leaders in a plane crash on Saturday is terrible not only for the loved ones of those who lost their lives, not only for the people and nation of Poland but for us in Alberta as well. This province has been enriched by the important contributions and participation of people of Polish heritage over our history, and there are probably few of us who do not have family or friends with this heritage.

I extend condolences to the Polish people and to all Albertans of Polish descent, personally and on behalf of Alberta's NDP, at the time of this terrible event. It will be a great challenge to move forward in Poland with so many people gone who carried the skills and experience vital to strong leadership, but we know that this is a nation with great reserves of strength, and its time of mourning will be followed by a courageous recovery.

To Albertans of Polish background and to the people of Poland I add my voice to that of the many Albertans who share the sadness and the pain at this time, who say that we care, that our hearts are with you in this difficult time. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. April 10, 2010, will be a day that Polish people will never forget. Polish President Kaczynski and many influential Polish leaders perished in a plane crash in Russia. On behalf of our caucus we would like to express our sympathies to the Polish communities.

We wish that we could turn back time and delete this tragic event from our history, but, sadly, we cannot. With time the Polish people will recover from this devastation. Now it's time for reflection and coming to terms with the pain that we have all recently suffered. Thousands have gathered in mourning, lining the streets, carrying flowers, candles, and Polish flags in memory of those that were lost in this horrible plane crash.

Mr. Speaker, tragedy brings people together, and once again our hearts go out to the family and friends of the Polish people who lost their lives and to those sharing in their loss. Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Government Decisions

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government flies by the seat of its pants. It has no long-term plans, only reactions to issues of the day. It has flip-flopped on everything from cuts to foster parents, persons with developmental disabilities, ambulance dispatch centralization, Calgary cancer centres, the seniors' pharmaceutical plan, postsecondary tuition, and more. To the Premier: how can Albertans depend on anything you or your ministers say when there seems to be so much confusion and backtracking on the part of your administration?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we just approved a budget before we broke for the Easter break. The budget and the documents with the budget clearly articulate Alberta's position. We will be back in the black in three years. We will be in the best financial position of any province in Canada, and we will lead this country out of its recession.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, with respect, I'm talking about flip-flops, Mr. Premier. Given that the decision to cut critical services profoundly affects Albertans, why does this government continue to release policy before ensuring that it's the right decision for Albertans and you won't have to change it in the next week or month? It's about flip-flops.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we've had to make difficult decisions with this budget to find a balance between the loss of revenue that we've seen as a result of this recession. We've also been able to tap into a cash surplus fund, the sustainability fund, to cushion the blow to the revenue and protect the programs that help the most vulnerable Albertans. They're in a variety of programs, including health, and I believe we're still the only jurisdiction in Canada to provide an increased five-year funding commitment for health. I can tell you that we're not changing any position on that.

Dr. Swann: Well, in fact, the reverse is happening, Mr. Speaker. Given that seniors have been left completely in the dark, unable to budget for their future pharmaceutical costs, and postsecondary students still don't know if they'll be able to attend school this next semester, will the Premier admit his mistakes and apologize to Albertans for this consistent pattern of flip-flops?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we continue to have some of the best programs for seniors in the country of Canada here in the province of Alberta.

With respect to tuition fees, we kept our promise. We said that tuition fees would not increase more than the CPI, the consumer price index. There were some adjustments made as a result of tuition fees set much lower going back to 2004. The minister made those adjustments, and the minister may want to speak to those adjustments he made last week.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Cataract Surgery

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With three days' notice this government reduced cataract surgery capacity by reducing the number of publicly funded cataract clinics in Calgary from five to two. This created an even greater bottleneck for people to get access to the care they needed. The cataract surgery system in Calgary has been thrown into chaos. To the Premier: why was there only three days' notice given to some cataract surgery providers in Calgary that their cataract surgeries were going to be terminated?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, because of the decision that was made, I believe over 2,100 additional cataract surgeries will be able to be completed in this province. Again, as to the details the minister may want to supplement.

Dr. Swann: Well, given that the best way to handle this would have been to let the facilities complete the surgeries that had been booked and then not book any additional ones, why did the Premier not order this action to be taken? What's the explanation?

Mr. Stelmach: All I can say is that no surgeries have been cancelled. I don't know where the hon. member is getting the information, but no surgeries have been cancelled. In fact, 2,100 new surgeries have been added.

Dr. Swann: Well, clearly the Premier doesn't know what's happening in Calgary.

Will the Premier immediately order the minister of health to begin plans to start a publicly funded cataract surgery centre in Calgary as a way of bringing stability and consistent cataract surgery to Calgarians?

Mr. Zwodzesky: Mr. Speaker, there are a couple of facilities in Calgary that are very public that do certain ophthalmological procedures. The bulk of those procedures are cataracts, and they have typically been competed for by facilities who submit bids so that Albertans get good cost effectiveness at the same time as they get good quality and good patient safety. We're working now on the second blitz. As you may recall, we did a preliminary blitz back in February. That included 2,230 additional surgeries, 750 or more of which were cataracts. We're just looking at other ways to shorten the wait times that exist.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Health Services Executive Bonuses

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Last week Alberta Health Services' workforce engagement survey was released. The results revealed what everyone working in our health care system knows: there is no trust in upper management. Only 10 per cent of physicians and 28 per cent of employees responded that they have trust and confidence in senior leadership. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Will the minister ensure that this important feedback from front-line workers is taken into consideration when Health Services executive bonuses are determined?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, there are a number of people who work double time and triple time to help retain the excellent service that we provide to Albertans through our health departments. Now, there are some issues to do with what the member just mentioned. We are looking at those. I've already discussed those with the board chair and with the CEO, and they will put in place strategies to increase and improve their communication if that's where the gap is or to design policies that perhaps better reflect what Albertans require.

Dr. Taft: Well, Mr. Speaker, clearly everybody in the system and many outside it know the system is breaking down, so my question to the minister is: why do senior executives in Alberta Health Services, who are already getting paid hundreds of thousands of dollars a year, need bonuses to do their job?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the system is not breaking down at all. For heaven's sake, we just added the best long-term planning capabilities that this province has ever had. There's a five-year funding plan that's coming, which will provide additional 6 per cent increases in the first three years and an additional 4.5 per cent increase in years 4 and 5. That will bring about stability, that will bring about predictability and sustainability, and in the end it will deliver the best-performing publicly funded health system in the country right here in Alberta, just as our Premier said.

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, the issue right now is the question of bonuses for managers who are clearly failing at their job. Given the abysmal staff survey, the policy confusion, handing this government a $1.3 billion deficit, will the minister ensure that not a single executive bonus is given to these managers out of the '09-10 budget? Will you just stand up to them and say no?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I can tell you that everything in health care is under one form or another of discussion or review, and I will add to that list the issue that has just been flagged. You have to provide some incentives for people – certainly, you do – but at the same time you also have to provide some assurance that they're on the right track, and that's what our five-year funding plan will do.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Last week I had the opportunity to meet with constituents in Calgary-Fish Creek and many Calgarians. They wanted to discuss with me what they considered a bad decision made by the government. It relates to the recent announcements by the government to reduce the number of operating rooms for cataract surgeries from 10 to four. My question is to the Premier. Can he please explain how awarding a cataract surgery contract to a company that doesn't even have approved or accredited operating rooms is supposed to help Albertans?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, in the previous question I indicated that there's actually an increase in the cataract surgeries. The minister can again outline the plan for cataract surgeries in the province of Alberta.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, there are a number of people providing fully medically insured ophthalmological services in Calgary. We'll see how the bidding goes, but they will continue to have the opportunity to do that when we roll out the second blitz very soon.

Mrs. Forsyth: Given that you started with 10 operating rooms to perform critical cataract surgeries and you reduced that number to four, do the math, and you take away six. How does the Premier expect Albertans or Calgarians to believe that this will only have a minimal impact on those who are waiting for surgery to give them proper sight?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I've received phone calls from some of the individuals involved at these surgical facilities, and the ones that called: I answered their calls, spoke with them. They said that every patient on their list has been phoned and has now been scheduled with a new time. In most cases they're very close to where they were scheduled before. But let's not make any mistake about it: every suite that is providing medically insured ophthalmological services is fully accredited.

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Speaker, they've been phoned, they've been scheduled, but it's been delayed again.

Will the government do the right thing and continue to fund the current cataract surgeries, cornea transplants, and eye surgery providers until all of the new providers are accredited in September, Minister – approved, up and running – so that no Albertan is delayed in getting their critical eye surgery?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member is probably talking to the expansion of two or three or four or more operating suites that are coming into one particular winning-bid facility. That being the case, I'm told that they're expected to have that completed some time in May or June and that accreditation, which is done by the college, will follow very shortly thereafter.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. There's a backlog of people waiting for cataract surgeries in Alberta, and guess what this government's response was? Typically, their response was to reduce the number of facilities where surgeries are paid by the public system for those procedures. The people who were expecting to have these surgeries done immediately were stunned to hear that their long-awaited surgeries were called off and that they're back on a wait list. My question is to the Premier. Why has this Premier been so short-sighted that he has delayed surgeries for those who are living in the darkness with cataracts?

Mr. Stelmach: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I said before, we're actually doing more. As the minister has outlined, we're looking at a process of not only improving the quality but increasing access to cataract surgeries. The minister has worked with Alberta Health Services, just articulated the plan in terms of what will be happening, and this is all part of trying to bring more people access to various health care programs in the province. He has worked very closely and is on his path to increasing the number of surgeries, not reducing them.

Mr. Mason: Well, Mr. Speaker, this Premier and the truth are often strangers. How does less become more? Given that hundreds of Albertans are continuing to have their lives negatively impacted by cataracts and given that this government has just reduced the number of facilities performing this life-enhancing surgery, will the Premier admit that he has caused undue stress on Albertans who are patiently waiting to have their vision restored by forcing them to wait even longer?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, it is in the best interests of Albertans to seek the best value for the health care dollar. That is what the process has been all about. It's about getting good-quality service, making sure that the costs are comparable. This is what the minister has done. We will continue to look at every other opportunity as to where we can increase access to various health care programs in the province of Alberta yet do it within the dollars that we have to work with.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this government continues to create chaos in our public health care system by making decisions that increase wait times and given that any increases to wait times will only cause further distress to patients and their families, will the Premier take immediate action to reverse this decision to make sure that people who need cataract surgery to see properly get it in a timely fashion?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I can't see how the hon. member can say we're creating chaos. We're the only jurisdiction in North America that has actually rolled out a five-year increased funding proposal commitment to Alberta Health Services. That's the only jurisdiction in Canada to do so. How in the world – you know, I don't know where the member is coming from, saying that people don't have any predictability or even access to health care. We're the only jurisdiction that's increasing for five years.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Postsecondary Tuition Fees

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, this government has subjected postsecondary institution students and their families to a six-month-long experiment. Last October a trial balloon was floated to see if tuition could be significantly increased in a number of academic programs, but the government was forced to pull back last week due to sustained political pressure. To the minister: now that the minister has created a precedent for adjusting tuition rates outside of regulation, how can Albertans be certain tuition won't be adjusted again one or two years down the road, perhaps to correct errors from 2010?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, there are a lot of inaccuracies in that preamble that would take me a lot more time than you're going to allow me to answer. Suffice it to say that the students who worked with us on this process from the start, as admitted to by the president of CAUS during our press release when we announced this, worked with us to ensure that we were only doing this once. That was my comment, and that is the reality.

Mr. Chase: In the former reality CPI was the only increase, so here's our new reality, which changes every day.

Given that in grade school you have to show your work on any mathematical calculations, why is this minister not bringing forward any information about the criteria or evaluation process he used to assess tuition rates?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, it's interesting that the hon. member seems to neglect the fact that I spent an hour and a half with the students prior to announcing to anyone else what we were doing in terms of the modifiers. I explained to the students, actually about six or seven months ago when we started this process, exactly what the criteria were going to be, how we were going to assess it, and then showed them that day that that's exactly what we did. They seemed very happy with the process.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. minister of advanced education reduced and delayed the pain, but it's there in 2011. If the minister ever gets around to creating a regulation for mandatory fees, why should students believe that it will be enforced when they've seen tuition regulations discarded when convenient?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member seems to be speaking like he's talked to the students and this is what they are telling him to say. That's exactly contrary to what is actually happening. We're working very closely with the student associations across the province, including those associations like ASEC, which represents about 100,000 students roughly, that had no tuition increase at all other than CPI and, in some cases, not even CPI. The fact of the matter is that the CPI cap on tuition in Alberta holds, one of the few in the country to actually hold with what they had committed.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Noninstructional Postsecondary Fees

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Several weeks ago the University of Alberta approved a new mandatory fee for students, and now I hear that the University of Calgary is considering to do the same today as the board reviews their budget. My questions today are for the hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology. What value is there in having a tuition fee policy when institutions within Campus Alberta can increase other fees whenever they like?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, that actually is a well-worded question for a change, which is good. The tuition fee policy is a policy which we fully endorse and which we're very committed to. It does help to ensure that our tuition rates across the board are only going to go up by the CPI, which is the 1 and a half per cent. That said, I agree that we do need to look at how we regulate noninstructional fees within the system because they do add to our affordability framework, and we are going to look at that.

Mrs. Sarich: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: given that students are still having concerns, how can the minister reassure students that their concerns are indeed being heard regarding the fees? [interjections]

Mr. Horner: Well, hon. members, we believe in postsecondary. It's unfortunate you don't.

My department is in constant dialogue with the students. We are constantly working with them on the processes. In fact, as I mentioned to the hon. member, we met with them for a good period of time to talk about what we had structured around the modifiers. We've also invited the students to draft a regulation that we might be able to look at. That regulation was presented to me last week, and we've now circulated that to other student associations for their comments as well as to the postsecondaries. It's a collaborative Campus Alberta approach, Mr. Speaker.

Mrs. Sarich: Again to the same minister: will this regulation be in place for fall 2010?

Mr. Horner: As I said, Mr. Speaker, we just recently received a draft from one of the student associations. We're going to be working with them throughout the summer to work with the intricacies of the affordability framework, the tuition fee policy, and whatever that new regulation will look like at the end of the year. That being said, it will probably not be in effect for 2010.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Employment Supports

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The unemployment rate in Alberta was 7.5 per cent in March, which is 25 per cent higher than the government's projection for this fiscal year in the budget we just concluded debating. To the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Has the high unemployment rate increased demand for training programs to help unemployed people here in Alberta find permanent work?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Any time an Albertan loses a job my heart goes out to them. It's obvious that work has not only a monetary value, but there's a moral value to having employment. My department, the Department of Employment and Immigration, is doing a number of things. Number one, we are now linking employers throughout the province who are still looking for workers with unemployed Albertans by way of hosting, through our 59 offices throughout the province, job fairs. We're also providing training, upgrading to individuals who need additional skills.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Again to the same minister. Speaking of those upgrades to skills, given that there has been a 7 per cent budget reduction in your department this fiscal year, where will you find the money to train these unemployed people so that they can find permanent jobs in this province?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's obviously a spending day on that side of the House. Spending more money is not always the answer to a problem. What I'm doing right now with the department is reprofiling the dollars that I have, and we are now focusing on skills that actually lead to employment. Again, in co-operation with employers we're finding out what skill sets it is that they're looking for, and those are the practical skill sets that are leading to employment that we are providing to unemployed clients of ours.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister. Let's put Albertans back to work permanently. Why is this government allowing so much manufacturing like the steel modules for Imperial Oil's Kearl Lake oil sands project to be done in South Korea instead of here in Alberta, where we could put so many people to work constructing those modules right here?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would like to welcome this member back to Canada, to a country where we don't tell businesses what to do and how to do it. Our role as government is to create an environment where the private sector can prosper and create jobs. We don't tell businesses what they manufacture, how they manufacture, and where they manufacture. We make sure that we are as competitive as we can be so that most of that work is done here in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Avastin Treatment for Cancer

Mr. Marz: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Several Albertans suffer from very serious cases of brain cancer, and most of them are nearly desperate for help. One of my constituents feels that based on what he has read and researched, Avastin could be a very effective treatment for his particular case of brain cancer. My questions today are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Why won't this minister fund this drug, Avastin, as part of an approved treatment for brain cancer?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, there are processes and protocols that every province has that it follows. This is all part of a larger national network. To my knowledge no other province, no other territory is yet able to fund Avastin for purposes of brain cancer treatment, otherwise known as glioblastoma. As soon as that process is completed, then we'll consider it here.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what is holding up the process for ultimate approval of Avastin for brain cancer patients?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, these are very complex and difficult decisions, obviously. The very first step in the process is for Health Canada to review any particular drug that has been suggested for purposes of safety of use and effectiveness of use. They have just completed that first step. Now it's gone over to the joint oncology drug review committee. That's another process. They look at some of the similar stuff, but they also look at the cost-effectiveness of it. As soon as that step is completed, we then get a recommendation to Alberta Health and Wellness.

Mr. Marz: To the same minister again, Mr. Speaker: given that many Albertans are under the impression that Health Canada has already given approval based on recent announcements this past couple of weeks, how long will it take for Alberta to eventually fund this?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I'm actually grateful to the hon. member for phrasing the question in that very sensitive way. In fact, only the first stage of about a three- or four-step process has now passed with approval at the Health Canada end. It will still take a few months for the joint oncology drug review committee to do its work in this regard, and after that it will take a few months for our local Alberta provincial drug committee to do its work in reviewing, and ultimately within a few months after that we should be in a position to say yes or no.

Funding for Policing

Mr. Hehr: Although law enforcement is an inherently dangerous occupation, violence directed towards the RCMP in Alberta has become a common occurrence, as illustrated by the recent swarming and beating of two RCMP officers from the Peace Country. Mr. Speaker, how can the Solicitor General keep telling Albertans that their communities are both safe and adequately policed despite Alberta's funding for police initiatives being in the bottom third of Canadian provinces over the course of the last decade?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, the member will know and should know – it's been explained to him enough times – that the direct comparison of the number of police officers is very unfair. We have additional sheriffs, peace officers that we employ in law enforcement. I might comment that I think it's somewhat irresponsible of the member to draw conclusions about what happened at the Cadotte Lake reserve without having the full facts of the investigation before him.

Mr. Hehr: Well, Mr. Speaker, an assault like this is shocking and unacceptable. My specific question for the Solicitor General is: does the Peace Country have adequate police personnel?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, the police resources of this province are among the best in North America, and I'm very pleased with their performance.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Hehr: Well, Mr. Speaker, Alberta is rapidly approaching a 2012 deadline to renew the service delivery agreement with the RCMP. Just for the record, is the Solicitor General planning to replace the RCMP with an Alberta police force, or is this agreement going to continue?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I've said, I believe, in this House before, I've said to that member in estimates, and I'll say it again for the purposes of this House that the contract with the RCMP is under negotiation right now. We will not be replacing the RCMP as a provincial police force in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne, followed by the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Affordable Housing

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. In Whitecourt-St. Anne the economy has slowed down, but still we have some problems with low-income housing. There are just not enough units. My questions are to the Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs. Can you tell me how many low-income people in this province you're helping out with your housing strategy?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This is a good-news story for all Albertans. In fact, we are helping 80,000 people right now with their housing issues. That is three times the amount that we were having over the last three to four years.

Thank you.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, that's a fair amount of people to take care of. How are you going to take care of them with a 19 per cent reduction in your budget?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This member is quite correct. We are being fiscally responsible. I'm very proud of that. It is a hallmark of this government. We have a 19 per cent reduction – why? – because, simply, we have eliminated a transfer to the municipalities, the last three-year commitment. We've eliminated that on a go-forward basis. If the municipalities want to come and ask us for additional funds, it has to go on an individual case-by-case basis and in the best interests of the taxpayer.

Mr. VanderBurg: My final question is to the same minister. With your very aggressive goal of 11,000 units, how are you going to do that with this budget?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, we're on track for 11,000 affordable units by 2012. The transfer to the municipalities had absolutely nothing to do with that specific end of the program. We are in the best interests of Albertans being compassionate to individuals and compassionate to the taxpayers.

Fiscal Responsibility

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, last week Albertans were again bombarded with news regarding this government's mishandling of our economy. Our unemployment rate is now at 7.5 per cent, a 16-year high. Dropping natural gas production and a high loonie mean coming deficits have likely been underestimated by billions of dollars. We have the second-highest per capita debt of any province. We have the highest per-person spending of any province. I could go on. To the President of the Treasury Board: will you confirm to this House, as the finance minister said last week, that if your government doesn't get its budget balanced by 2012, it will have no credibility with Albertans?

2:40

Mr. Snelgrove: That is coming from the master of no credibility, Mr. Speaker, so I'm happy to respond. If you want to take a look at it and try and pick statistics out of all the negative press you're getting from across the country and the economies that other people are operating in, you can always find bad news. If you want to look for good news, people are coming to this province because they know there's an opportunity in the future to get a job. Very few provinces and hardly any states have that opportunity. They've got a chance to bring their family, to get a job, to raise them in a decent place, with a good standard of living, and they're coming to Alberta. So I don't know where he should go.

Mr. Anderson: I think the minister just said that the finance minister has no credibility. Maybe I was wrong.

To the same minister: given that U of C economist Frank Atkins and many other qualified economists and accountants have found the true cash deficit for Budget 2010 to be $7.6 billion, does this minister agree that it is this deficit number that needs to be balanced by his government in 2012? Or is that too hard for you?

Mr. Snelgrove: I don't make up the accounting rules. There are a bunch of very intelligent accountants from across Canada that set out the gold standard for how we have to account for money we spend. Every penny we spend is accounted for. The retiring Auditor General has repeatedly said on this stage and on the federal stage that our books are the gold standard that other provinces hold themselves to. So if the hon. member doesn't understand, won't understand, or won't listen to the budget as it's presented, I can't help that. Mr. Speaker, every dollar we spend is accounted for under the appropriate accounting principles.

Mr. Anderson: The sustainability fund is going down by $8 billion this year, and he says it's only a $4.7 billion deficit. Get a calculator. Honestly.

To the same minister: given that this government's own budget predicts our $16 billion sustainability fund will be drained to virtually nothing by 2012 and given that this government has spent every last cent of interest earned from the heritage fund over the last decade, will this government finally start listening to the majority of Albertans, who want a spending restraint and savings strategy that doesn't involve prayer and luck?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, this province has taken interest from the Alberta heritage savings trust fund and invested it in Albertans. We've built over $40 billion worth of infrastructure over the last eight years. We've paid off $25 billion worth of debt. We created a $15 billion sustainability fund so that we don't have to borrow to operate our government. We are in the best financial situation of any province in this country by a landslide. I quite honestly don't understand what's wrong with that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Environmentally Sustainable Oil Sands Development

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In situ technologies have the potential of making the oil sands more environmentally responsible. While some companies are really taking a lead on environmental standards, there are no best practices in place because of weak regulations. With no hard targets, effective monitoring systems, or regional environmental thresholds in sight, there won't be a level playing field any time soon. My questions are to the Minister of Environment. How bad does our reputation have to become for the minister to realize that protecting the environment is good for business?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, this minister recognizes that today. There is no need for this member to become concerned that we need to let the situation deteriorate before we act. We started acting yesterday.

Ms Blakeman: Back to the same minister: given that the out of sight, out of mind approach does not protect the environment nor create certainty for business, will the minister strengthen environmental regulations before approving any further in situ projects?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, the aspect of environmental regulations, like any other regulation, is ongoing. We constantly are strengthening our regulations to reflect current technology, and I see no reason why that won't continue into the future.

Ms Blakeman: Well, we have nothing concrete. Okay.

Given that we're hearing of up to 80 in situ projects waiting for approval and given that we are in a slower period of our cyclical economy, why isn't the government seizing this opportunity to get some best practices and stronger regulations in place?

Mr. Renner: We are, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Southwest Calgary Ring Road

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many Calgarians and Albertans are very pleased that the southeast Calgary ring road project is going ahead and that the P3 contract has been awarded at a savings of a billion dollars over time. Meanwhile, people have been talking about a bypass or ring road in southwest Calgary since the 1950s. I know that there has been a lot of progress in the recent past on this issue, but I've heard concerns that also recently there has been a stalling in the process. To the Minister of Transportation: how much further ahead are we on this issue than we were half a century ago?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's good to see that the hon. member recognized how great a P3 project we just announced last Friday. It's going to save hundreds of millions of dollars for Albertans and create hundreds of jobs. But I can also sympathize with the member's frustration, and he's reflecting, I'm sure, feelings of a lot of other Calgarians. Everyone knows that the province presented a deal to the Tsuu T'ina, and they voted against it. We respect that, but . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is for the same minister. I know he has more to share with us. Many studies on the southwest Calgary ring road have occurred in the past 50 years; we still have no road. How is the current study going to get us closer to actually driving on a southwest Calgary ring road?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I said, we respect the decision that the Tsuu T'ina made, but we're working very diligently along with the city of Calgary. My officials and my departmental guys and the administration of Calgary are doing a study. Actually, they've started to go ahead with their interchange at Glenmore, which will free-flow Glenmore. Any extra to that, if that's where the study shows a ring road should be, we will contribute to that. I do think we're moving ahead.

Mr. Rodney: My last question is for the same minister, and my constituents understand it is a tough one. The minister hinted at this in the first question. Although the planning is done for the route through Tsuu T'ina lands, will the minister be making another offer to the First Nation to get the project going? If not, what other routes are being considered, and when will they be made public?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, we have absolutely no plans to start any type of negotiations. As I said earlier, Tsuu T'ina had made a decision. We will respect that. By the same token, if they need an explanation, I'm here to listen. But there are no plans to move forward with any of those negotiations. We will carry on with the city of Calgary and work on moving ahead that way.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Agricultural Rail Services

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Rail lines are essential for the success of Alberta's agriculture industry and the sustainability of our rural way of life, but the cost of agricultural rail services is steep. Services have been cut, and rail lines, like grain elevators, are disappearing across the prairies despite the visionary efforts from groups like the Battle River Railway New Generation Co-op. My questions are to the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development. Why is the minister waiting for the federal government to conduct a full review of the system instead of taking a proactive approach to protect our rail lines?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I share the concern with respect to the rail lines with the hon. member opposite. In fact, this past year through our rural development fund we funded a process of research and work with the communities in excess of $500,000 to try and maintain the rail lines. The abandonment of rail lines is a federal area of responsibility, and I, like the member opposite, am very concerned that we keep those rail lines for our residents.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. In addition to that question, to the same minister: I know that you have done that, but what else is in the books as you're going forward?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, I met with a representative from the short line in question this past week and met with the president and a board member from the review committee. We are presently looking at the report, and they're working with producers to see what sort of producer car possibilities there are because we all recognize that rail, steel on steel, is the most energy efficient and environmentally responsible way to move goods.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. What else has the minister done to encourage and help the actual producers to take the issues into their own hands as we have the great example from the Battle River railroad and as other producer groups have done in Saskatchewan? They have done these things. What other things have you done to actually help the producers go forward so they can do it themselves?

Mr. Hayden: Mr. Speaker, we've been supportive with producers, but we've also worked with groups outside of moving commodities towards the viability of these rail lines. A prime example within my constituency is Alberta Prairie Steam Tours, where the tourism opportunities were able to keep rail on the ground. That's one of the areas where I've been in discussion with groups, to see if there are possibilities outside of producer cars to make these rail lines viable.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

2:50 Dental Infection Prevention and Control Standards

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Dental Association and College is working with Alberta Health to improve the standards of infection prevention and control. It has come to my attention that many dentists are concerned that the new rules set for January 2011 are overreactive and unattainable. My question today is to the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness. What is being done to ensure that infection prevention and control rules are reasonable, practical, and enforceable?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, provincial infection prevention and control standards were in fact implemented in 2008, and they apply quite specifically to Alberta Health Services and to their contracted service providers. Now, we also have the Alberta Health Professions Act, which actually establishes the Alberta Dental Association and College as the governing body of the dental profession here in Alberta, and that includes practice and conduct standards. A lot is being done to ensure that the standards are reasonable, practical, and enforceable to the members involved.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same hon. minister: who will pay for the initial cost and high operating cost for each clinic to comply with the new set of rules?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I'm quite certain it's the clinics themselves because, of course, patient safety and the safety of the people providing the services are at the heart of these standards, and the costs that are associated with providing the best infection and control practices are embodied therein. The bottom line is that they pay those costs, and they also ensure the services are provided safely.

Mr. Cao: My last supplemental question is to the same hon. minister. How does Alberta Health Services co-operate with the dental professional community to develop reasonable and attainable standards that will keep Albertans smiling?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I would assume and I would hope that the relationship is good between the two bodies, but we have to respect that there are differences of jurisdiction here. The standards that I just mentioned in the first question speak to that. Nonetheless, I am quite confident that the provincial infection prevention and control standards that apply to AHS staff and services also apply to their contracted service providers, so I'm quite sure that the dental college is doing its best to ensure that those protocols are followed.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Foster Care Maximum Placement Levels

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. According to the minister there are 100 foster homes in this province that have more children than their classification allows. The minister has stated that these homes will be reassessed to ensure proper supports and services are being provided to them rather than making a commitment to halt this practice. To the minister. Rather than creating more placements or encouraging family enhancement where possible, this government chooses to disregard maximum placement levels. Why?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We don't disregard maximum placement levels. In fact, there are very clear criteria for placing children into homes that are already level 1 or level 2 homes. If the homes for level 1, level 2 each have a licence and if the children are siblings and you'd like to keep them together, if you want to put the children into a licensed home, you need another licence in order to do that. You're right, hon. member: I am re-evaluating the situation.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Again to the minister: what findings have emerged from the reassessment process to this point?

Mrs. Fritz: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are a number of criteria that I've asked the staff to look at. One is to actually see the exact number of homes. I can tell you that that assessment will take some time. According to the staff it's going to be very detailed. I would think it's going to be at least three to six months in order to do that. When I do have the criteria come back, as I've said to you before, hon. member, I will share that publicly.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Given the time limit the minister has just put forward, will the minister table information in the fall session showing the number of foster and kinship homes exceeding their approved limits and what extra measures are in place to support these vulnerable children?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I consider that to have already been tabled when we discussed it in Committee of Supply. As I indicated – and you were there, hon. member, because you asked the question – the staff have informed me that it is 100 homes. As I said, I've asked for an assessment of the homes that are in place now to be certain of an accurate number and a number of criteria regarding the placements in those homes.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Twinning of 50th Street to Beaumont

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Beaumont is a community of 12,000 people in my constituency, located five minutes south of the city of Edmonton. It's the only community of its size not serviced by four-lane access. Secondary highway 814, or south 50th Street, is a narrow two-lane road that serves as the main north-south access into the community. It also serves residents as far south as Wetaskiwin. It's very dangerous and a great source of frustration for my constituents. To the Minister of Transportation: when will your department support the twinning of 50th Street?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, the province recognized the importance of twinning 50th Street through the town of Beaumont to highway 625, which is a distance of about four miles. In fact, the province has already provided $3.5 million to the town of Beaumont for this cost-shared project, and we continue to work closely with the town as they continue with the design and costing of the project.

The province will also provide additional support for the twinning when some funding does come available.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rogers: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituents certainly appreciate that there is some progress, but their patience is wearing thin. Can you give me some reasonable timeline, Mr. Minister?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, the southern portion of this roadway falls under the jurisdiction of the town of Beaumont and not the province; the northern section of the road falls under the jurisdiction of the city of Edmonton. It doesn't make sense to have an incomplete project. What we need here is a co-ordinated response between the town of Beaumont and the city of Edmonton. That is why my department will be looking for the town of Beaumont to work closely with the city of Edmonton so they can co-ordinate this project together.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The current economic climate and recent experience would suggest that an opportunity exists to get this road built much cheaper than expected. Why can't we take advantage of this timing, Mr. Minister?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, my department has been taking advantage of the reduced construction costs. The reduced costs have allowed us to stretch our dollar and complete more work. As with all of our highway construction projects, we need to balance the needs of this project with other priority projects across the province. We also have to make sure that we're all on the same team here, that we work with the city of Edmonton and with the town of Beaumont together with our department, and hopefully we can move this project ahead and get it done for the hon. member's constituents.

Fish Creek Provincial Park

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, on the weekend it was reported that a new trail had been opened in the west end of Fish Creek provincial park at a cost of $126,000 while those who venture off the trail in the future will be fined $172. Meanwhile, a much more pressing issue for managing the park is maintaining and restoring the very integrity of the natural ecosystems in the park and reversing the rampant spread of invasive species and woody perennials. Native grasses, herbs, and flowering plants need the intervention of fire, grazing, or cutting in order to maintain a stable grasslands ecosystem. My questions are for the Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation. Given the continued degradation of the grasslands in Fish Creek provincial park, what is her department doing to preserve and restore the grasslands in that park?

Mrs. Ady: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member talks about a park very dear to my heart, very close to my home. It has 3 million visitors a year, a very popular park. After the flood we were able to go in and renew the infrastructure there and, I think, improve the park.

Relative to the grasslands, though, we took the park over in 1975. The fescue at that time had already been broken, if you will, because it had been used for ranching, so I know there's very little fescue left, Mr. Speaker. We are watching that, and we'll continue to monitor the fescue that's left in the park.

Dr. Brown: Well, the minister is aware that there were 80 million buffalo on the plains of North America before the cattle came along. They were grazing it long before the white man came along to the country. What will her department do? Given the fact that she spent $126,000 on a trail, how much money is she going to spend to restore the grasslands?

Mrs. Ady: Well, Mr. Speaker, the $126,000 that we spent on the trail I think was very well-spent money. We had a bunch of dirt bikers making trails throughout the park and destroying it. We were able to put barriers in the way so that they could no longer get on some of those trails, regenerate them, as well as keep them on the trails to preserve the very park that they want to enjoy.

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, given the ongoing lack of action in protecting that park's ecosystem that's been going on for years now, will the minister make the necessary changes in park management to effect some real change to bring back and restore the native grassland habitats in our provincial parks?

Mrs. Ady: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member has a good point. I mean, we are looking right now at the Glenbow Ranch, which just got added. It, of course, has got pristine fescue, and we're going to be using it a bit as a classroom, if you will. There's an institute that's been formed that will help us have a better idea of how to manage grasslands in other parks. But the management is only following a management plan, and we do need to review that management plan.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that concludes the question period today. Nineteen hon. members were recognized. There were 114 questions and responses: nine came from the Official Opposition, three from the independents, and seven from the government.

Now, we're up against Standing Order 7(7): "At 3 p.m. the items in the ordinary daily Routine will be deemed to be concluded and the Speaker shall notify the Assembly."

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: My apologies, Mr. Speaker. I was just sidetracked here. Are we on Notices of Motion?

The Speaker: No, sir. We are on the Speaker alerting the Assembly to Standing Order 7(7).

Mr. Zwozdesky: And have you done so?

The Speaker: I have.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Shall we just carry on with private members' business, then, Mr. Speaker?

The Speaker: Well, sir, that's entirely up to the Assembly. The standing order simply says that "at 3 p.m. the items in the ordinary daily routine will be deemed to be concluded and the Speaker shall notify the Assembly." Usually when that happens, one of the Government House Leaders rises and says: might we have unanimous consent to conclude the Routine?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Sorry, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if we could seek unanimous consent of the Assembly to proceed with the regular Routine.

The Speaker: Well, then the chair will bring such question to the Assembly, and the chair will ask it in this way: does any hon. member object to the continuation of the Routine to its conclusion? If so, say no.

[Unanimous consent denied]

Orders of the Day

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, may we revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It gives me great pleasure to introduce through you to all members of the Assembly a group of firefighters that are here today to witness debate on third reading of Bill 201, the Workers' Compensation (Firefighters) Amendment Act, 2010. We are joined today by the fire chief of Edmonton, Mr. Ken Block, and Deputy Chief Dale McLean as well as firefighters from the Leduc Fire Fighters Association, local 4739; the Medicine Hat Fire Fighters Association, local 263; the Edmonton Fire Fighters' Union; the Alberta Firefighters Association; the Calgary Fire Fighters Association; the Spruce Grove Firefighters Association; and the Fort McMurray Fire Fighters Association. I would ask that our guests rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, do you have a guest?

Mrs. Forsyth: No. I want to start the debate.

The Deputy Chair: We haven't called the committee to order yet. The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I just want to reintroduce some of the members who are still here from the Parkinson Society – a couple of others have joined them – and just explain to them that, unfortunately, we're not able to proceed today with the reading of private members' statements to salute the Parkinson Society and also to salute the Holocaust memorial because one opposition member spoke out. I just don't know if he understood the gravity of that or not. I thought they deserved to have an explanation for where we're at in the House proceedings.

The Deputy Chair: Okay.
Do you have a guest?

Mr. Anderson: We did not know that it would mean no members' statements, so we would like to ask unanimous consent, if possible, to revert to Members' Statements.

The Deputy Chair: We are in Committee of the Whole, and I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 202

Mandatory Reporting of Child Pornography Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm pleased to speak to you and other members of the Assembly regarding Bill 202, the Mandatory Reporting of Child Pornography Act. I was encouraged to hear the government members express their support to combat child pornography and to give the public and law enforcement communities another tool to rid our homes and our communities of a truly vile and evil form of child sexual exploitation and abuse.

I appreciate the feedback that we have been given so far. One comment that was brought forward was that the government was concerned about a bill that had a proclamation date. Frankly, I cannot see how the idea of a proclamation date has become the issue that the PC government has made it into. If you don't have a plan, you fail. If you don't have a date to focus government staff, law enforcement, and agencies on, then you also fail. As my friend from Calgary-Glenmore is so fond of saying: if you fail to plan, you plan to fail.

Without a proclamation date, Mr. Chair, this government is simply trying to look like they are supporting measures that will fight child pornography, but they are not actually committed to putting a law in place. This is the intent of what their so-called concerns are, and that is what Albertans see them for.

Now, I'm sure that they will start to say soon that they want flexibility. Well, I will show you once again that I'm willing to be flexible to get a law passed that Albertans will support. I am willing to be flexible to get a law passed that will protect Alberta's children from sexual deviants. I'm willing to be flexible so that the PC government can show Albertans that it will support a bill that makes sense and can be implemented smoothly, effectively, and quickly. In keeping with this desire to get a law passed that will be implemented, I am coming before you today to propose an amendment to Bill 202. Mr. Chair, I'd like to propose a friendly amendment to Bill 202 that states that Bill 202 will be implemented no later than March 31, 2011. This gives the government no more excuses. It gives the government a full year to put this bill into effect.

Since we last debated this bill, even more cases have come forward, horrible cases where children have been abused for the sexual gratification of some pervert. Recently we learned of an international child pornography ring in 20 countries where 73 people were charged. In the Edmonton Sun a Crown prosecutor noted that at any given time in Alberta 10 to 20 adults are before the courts, charged with online luring, for enticing a child to either pose nude or meet for sex. Also, an additional 70 to 80 people are before the courts . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, are you moving an amendment?

Mrs. Forsyth: Yes.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. We'll have it passed around.

3:10

Mrs. Forsyth: Oh, it has been passed.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. Hon. member, please proceed. We're speaking to amendment A2.

Mrs. Forsyth: Yes. Thank you.

An additional 70 to 80 people are before the courts for possessing or manufacturing child pornography. This is just in Alberta, and this is just those targeting our children. This is what needs to be known, Mr. Chair. It is time for the government to stop playing games with a bill that is supported by law enforcement, child protection advocates, and, quite frankly, the public. I would like to put the motion on the table, and I'd like to truly see where the government stands.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, speaking on amendment A2.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Speaking directly to amendment A2, what the hon. mover of the amendment has provided the House is the luxury of time. The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek has noted the concerns expressed by members of the government that in order to properly enact this legislation, more time is required, even though time would have been available over the summer and through the fall as this bill came to the potential of further debate. It is absolutely reasonable that this extension be granted.

The problem is real. In second reading I spoke to my support for the intent. In Committee of the Whole I spoke on my support for not only the intent but the purpose and the need for this bill, given the abuse that happens on a daily basis to Alberta children. This provides the government with the extension they need to do whatever research or take whatever measures are necessary to make sure that the legislation is thorough and enforceable. I encourage members of this government to support amendment A2.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak to amendment A2? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Directly to the amendment I will be very brief. I think that this is an excellent amendment, and I don't think that we can be too fast to get good legislation and good enforcement to be able to keep these kinds of scummy people off the streets and away from our children.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I feel it's very important and critical at this time that we reflect on the purpose of why we're here as legislators and what our first and most important role is. To me, as a government the most important thing is to ensure that each member of our society is protected by the laws and the courts of this country. If there's a problem there where people are not being protected, then it's our first duty to ensure that that law is put in place to protect those individuals.

We've got a number of bills before us – I've read them into Hansard already – that this government has brought forward and said: these are our priorities of this sitting. Yet this is an ongoing problem that the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek has been working on for years, and this government has failed to act to protect the children of the province of Alberta. They've come up with excuse after excuse, saying that they can't do this; they can't do that. They've had years to prepare for this. One year is more than enough. They should have been able to get it done by this fall, but in order to bring them on board, we've made this amendment to give them one full year, which is far too long to leave our children unprotected. We need to act on this, and it needs to be passed in this House.

Starting with the very first bill this government came out with, they said: oh, it's very important that we're competitive; we need to pass a bill for that. In fact, their actions are against that. What we need is action on Bill 202 here. We need to protect the most vulnerable in society, that being our children. We don't reach the age of consent or the age of voting until 18. Consent again is another area in this country – we've been trying to raise it – where it has been very difficult, and it shouldn't be.

Our children are first and foremost in our society. We need to protect them. We understand that, so why are we not getting behind this bill? Why it is still being held back is incomprehensible to me. I would urge all members to stand up, to speak on this if needed, but, more importantly, to vote to get this passed so that we can start protecting our children. The heinous crimes that are going on are unacceptable. We can't say that it's someone else's responsibility. Whether it's federal, whether it's a world-wide situation, we need to start right here in Alberta, right now today, go on to third reading and pass this in order to protect our children. So I would urge all the members in this House to vote for this amendment.

Again, let's not kid ourselves. The reason this amendment is being put in there and why there's a proclamation date is because we have to get it done. If you don't have a date, it's not going to happen. To say, "Oh, well. We've got to look at things. We'll look at it. We'll consider it next year" isn't the solution. We put in a date. One year is more than ample time to get this in place. We need to pass this.

I would encourage all of the members of this House to do the right thing, to vote for Bill 202 in this amended state. Let's start protecting our children, starting March 31, 2011.

The Deputy Chair: Do any other members wish to speak to amendment A2? The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Griffiths: Yes, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the members and their comments about why this amendment should be supported. I would like all members of this House to realize, however, that changing the date through an amendment, to March 31, 2011, gives us more time for consultation and to make sure that the regulations are done properly. Suppose that the regulations are done by this fall, in 2010, and we could proclaim the legislation now; we would be forced to wait for several more months before it became law. The point, that I've suggested many times in this House, is that as soon as you put a date, it puts restrictions on how much time you have for consultation, or if the consultation is done, now you have a certain amount of time you have to wait before it becomes law. We could be protecting children by proclaiming it the second the regulations are done.

This is entirely a focus on getting it done right now instead of it getting done right. That's what we have argued in this House over and over and over again. I encourage all members not to support this amendment.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Chair, the original proclamation date was July 31. During the debate it was said that we didn't have enough time to do that.

You know, Mr. Chair, what I find truly, truly amazing – and I was a minister of the Crown for six years, and I know how easily things can be done. I guess one must ask the Minister of Justice how many lawyers she has in her department. How many meetings does it take? Who opposes it? Who do we actually need to consult? All of that has been done.

You know, I respect my colleague from Battle River-Wainwright. I like my colleague from Battle River-Wainwright. We've had this discussion. You know what? I have no problem if the Assembly decides to defeat the March 31, 2011. I have no problem with that. Then if he is talking about the summer to consult, we could have the member bring an amendment forward for September 1, 2010. I'll be right up there with you, buddy.

Mr. Chair, I've been around a long time. I'm just waiting to get some stats from my research to find out how many private member's bills have been in this Assembly and, quite frankly, how many have been passed. That has been very, very few.

I know that my colleague the Minister of Justice supports this bill. I sat down with her in November. I sat down with the former Solicitor General at the same time, in November, and they both supported it. At that time they both indicated that this bill was important to have because our federal government has been dicking around with it for months and months, in fact, since 2002.

If my colleague from Battle River-Wainwright wants to bring an amendment forward, wants to make that date September 1, I'll be the first one to stand up and support it. They didn't like December 31, 2010.

The other thing that's very interesting is that there is nothing stopping an amendment from coming before this House in the fall session, saying: we want to make an amendment on this particular piece of legislation for September 1, 2010. I'm sure we'll all stand up and applaud.

Mr. Chair, we're trying to work with the government. Quite frankly, I don't trust them on their private bill process and getting bills done. I'd be more than willing to work with my colleague from across the way, and if he wants to say September 1 – I know he's a father of two young guys, and I know he in his heart supports this. So if we're going to argue about a date, then have the Member for Battle River-Wainwright bring forward a date, and if he says September 1, 2010, I'll buy him a beer.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak on the amendment? The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Yes, I'd like to comment a little bit about the comment from the good Member for Battle River-Wainwright. It would be a very simple and favourable amendment to say on or before March 31, 2011. We're not against that. Again, it just seems like they're bouncing the ball back and forth to say: now it's too slow; now it needs to be forward. A simple, friendly amendment to on or before March 31, 2011, could easily come forward.

The point is that we need to get this passed, and to keep using dates as an excuse is just pathetic. We need to pass it. We need to get it done. It doesn't mean that it has to be done March 31, 2011. We could proclaim it at any time if the government so decided.

I'd urge all members to vote in favour of this or to make the amendment. Like I say, we can do it down the road, but it should be on or before March 31, 2011, and not excuses saying: "Oh, we need to get the date locked down," or "It has to be sooner now," or "That's too far away." We need to pass this, and then we could amend it just as they have with the Municipal Government Act. We passed one last year, and now we have a government bill that's trying to correct that mistake. I just can't see it. Changing it now and saying, "Well, September is long enough" is a poor reason not to pass this today.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak to the amendment?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment A2 lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 3:22 p.m.]

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright on Bill 202.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure for me to rise today and speak to Bill 202, the Mandatory Reporting of Child Pornography Act, brought forward by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek. I commend the hon. member for her devotion to the protection of our province's youth. This bill is just yet another demonstration of that commitment that she has always had, and I'd like thank her for bringing it forward.

Mr. Chairman, there are several sections of this bill that make reference to items to be defined in regulation. Section 10, for example, states that the Lieutenant Governor in Council may make regulations pertaining to the designation of reporting entities, reports made to reporting entities, and the duty of those reporting entities.

Like legislation, Mr. Chairman, the drafting of regulations takes time and takes full and appropriate consultation with the appropriate stakeholders and co-ordination with existing provincial and federal laws. I couldn't imagine jumping the gun and creating regulations without consulting police, prosecutors, and others in the justice system who will have to operate within those regulations. I doubt that the member who introduced this would approve those measures either for any government legislation.

Almost every single element of the justice system has emphasized how critical this legislation is, and again for that the member should be commended. But just as heavily they have all emphasized how important it is to get this right the first time. They have emphasized how important it is to properly consult in the drafting of the legislation and the regulations with stakeholders and members of the justice system. Mr. Chairman, they have also emphasized how critically important it is to ensure a co-ordinated federal and provincial strategy since the Internet does not know that there is a boundary at the edge of the province of Alberta. We have to consult appropriately to make sure everyone is aware, onside, and that the regulations are drafted effectively.

This brings me to section 11, which reads specifically that "this Act comes into force on July 1, 2010." Indeed, we've had some amendments that have changed the date. The challenge is that it's still a date. We know that the amount of time between now and July 1, 2010, will not suffice to see this bill through the committee and third reading stages let alone carefully draft and approve the regulations.

I'd like to bring forward an amendment to this section. The amendments are at the table, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: We'll pause for a moment while the amendment is distributed. This will be amendment A3.

The hon. member.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. This amendment proposes to strike out "on July 1, 2010" and substitute "on Proclamation."

As I previously mentioned, it takes time to draft the regulations appropriately. Further, in this case it may be substantially complex because it is somewhat of a stand-alone act. We'll need to ensure that the regulations are therefore aligned with other child protection laws such as the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act as well as their accompanying regulations. In addition, Mr. Chairman, it's important to take into consideration the federal laws and regulations, just as we've been advised by different segments of the judicial system, that along with other provinces' bills are similar in nature and co-ordinated as such. The bill as amended will ensure that we have time to complete the necessary consultations.

The bill's intentions are nothing but honourable, and there is nothing in this amendment that says that anyone in this House does not support the intent of this bill, but in order for it to have the desired result, we need to ensure that all elements that support the legislation are in place before it actually becomes in place. Mandating reporting will only be effective if it's clear to whom the report should be made, what the report should include, and a clear protocol for what happens once that report has been issued.

Mr. Chairman, things would have to come through regulation which come through the consultation with members of the judicial system. These items require time, so I believe it's important to amend the bill to come into force upon proclamation so we don't set a false deadline on when to achieve it; we actually do it right.

The members across the way will probably suggest some strange things, like that we don't care about kids. They may talk about how many children may be hurt because of the time this takes. It's all intended to rile up emotions, Mr. Chairman, and make us look like we are bad guys. That's part of the politics that I've always disliked that often occurs around here, the games.

They won't mention, however, that changing the proclamation date where you have to have five or six months before you can actually proclaim the legislation even if the regulations are in place could hurt children. They won't tell you that if the regulations aren't drafted right and there are some people who are producing child pornography or observing child pornography, they get off because we don't have the regulations done right. That's equally harmful, Mr. Chairman. It is awful, and it would be equally awful if meeting a deadline became our focus because we might wind up with regulations that, not properly drafted because of deadlines, meant those who are abusing children could get off scot-free.

The debate is fairly over whether this is best addressed right or whether it's addressed right now. That's a fair debate, whether we should hurry up and get it done or we should make sure we get it done right. I want to get it right. I believe the members across the way want to get this done correctly, too. I believe we all do. To assert that anyone in this House does not want to protect children or that this is some game being played for politics or to suggest that anyone in here wants to delay and just let people who are producing child pornography or observing child pornography and failing to report it and children are being harmed – that we would want to support anybody getting away is absolutely ludicrous, Mr. Chairman. At the risk of getting called out of order, I suggest it's asinine, too.

Mr. Chairman, I encourage all members in this House to support this amendment. I encourage all members to trust that every single person in this House wants this bill passed, wants children protected, and this has nothing to do with politics. This has to do with getting it right to ensure that children are safe, and I encourage all members to support this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: On amendment A3 the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Well, I listened very intently, and I find the whole conversation very interesting. Since 1972 we've had 1,411 private members' bills go through this Assembly, with less than 50 per cent of them receiving royal assent.

I guess what is more amazing to me than anything is the fact that how things change when you're with the government and you're not with the government. I had lengthy conversations with the Minister of Justice, and I had lengthy conversations with the Solicitor General, and I don't pull these things out of my head, Mr. Chair, in regard to dates and in regard to support on this. You know, I talked at length to both ministers when I was with the government, and frankly they were the ones that encouraged me to bring the bill forward, and they were the ones that encouraged me and helped me draft this bill. In fact, it's amazing when you have government members' research and you still have copies of that documentation, and they talk about the fact of the length of time it's taken the federal government to get to this serious situation.

We've tried to work within the confines of what you can as a small opposition, and we've tried to work with the government. I remember the Member for Battle River-Wainwright calling me in regard to how the private members' bills committee had actually looked at this bill. They supported this bill. They didn't like the date of this particular bill at the time, which was July 31 in the private member's bill. I said: "Okay. Well, I'm fine with that. How about if we put a date on that particular piece of legislation?" I know exactly how this government works – exactly how this government works.

Mr. Anderson: Or doesn't work.

Mrs. Forsyth: Or doesn't work. If this bill is so important and they care so much about the children in this province, then bring the darn thing through as a government bill. I'll be the first one to stand up in September and support them on this particular piece of legislation, and I'll be going out and telling all Albertans how important it is this government cares about the children of this province.

You know, they talk about the regulations, and they talk about the identity process. I had lengthy conversations with the Minister of Justice and the previous Solicitor General in regard to that process. They wanted that left open so through regulations they could identify who they would use, whether it was the ICE team or whether it was Cybertip or one of those places. Hey, I'm not the minister. That's their responsibility, and I was okay with that. Not having a proclamation date bothers me, but we have a lot of this on record, so that's good, and I'm going to be after the government. The Member for Battle River-Wainwright said: maybe in September we'll have it. Hallelujah. I'll look forward to that. We will stand up as a member of our caucus and quite frankly applaud them and support them on that. I'll listen to the debate, and I'll continue to hear what they have to say.

We're put in a very difficult position about supporting the amendment in regard to no proclamation date. But you know the government: they're only as good as their word. So we'll listen very carefully to that, and possibly the Solicitor General today will stand up. I've got articles from him when there have been busts about how his number one priority is the protection of children. Maybe we'll see this bill passed in September, or, quite frankly, maybe the Minister of Justice or the Solicitor General or even the minister of children's services will bring this bill forward under a government bill in October, when we come back to the Legislature. I'll continue to listen to some more of the debate.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. Very specifically on the amendment A3. The hon. Member from Battle River-Wainwright has put forward an amendment that suggests that "Bill 202, Mandatory Reporting of Child Pornography Act, be amended in section 11 by striking out 'on July 1, 2010' and substituting 'on Proclamation'." I understand the member's desire to get things right the first time. I would wonder how, for example, it took God six days according to Genesis to create the world, and on the seventh day He rested. In order for God to be acceptable in this Assembly, I would suggest that He should have got it right the first time, on the first day. However, as human beings and speaking specifically to amendment A3, yes, we require time to get things right. But here's a reality: every day it takes us time to get it right, another child or a group of children is going to suffer from the abuse.

Later today we're going to be debating Bill 201, the Workers' Compensation (Firefighters) Amendment Act, 2010. It was recognized that the firefighters act wasn't sufficiently inclusive, so an amendment was brought forward which strengthened Bill 201, which no doubt will get passed. That is what was attempted with the amendment, extending the time period. However, if we extend it forever or until such a time that the federal government gets it right and we concur with the federal government, in the meantime a tremendous amount of potential abuse time elapses.

I, like the Member for Battle River-Wainwright, being a former teacher, very much want to have things done correctly. That's the whole basis of how we approach our classes: we try to set things up so that the students will be successful. But we also realize that as human beings, as Robbie Burns would say, the best laid plans of mice and men "gang aft agley." In other words, we don't necessarily get it right the first time, but we have a parliamentary procedure to strengthen previous legislation.

Now, the hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright, in proposing amendment A3, stated how important this issue is, how important protecting children from abuse is. I believe that everyone in this Assembly believes that protecting children from abuse is important. But, folks, we have to get on with the job. If we support amendment A3, we've just delayed the job instead of getting on with it. Granted it may not be perfect – and I raised concerns about the need for setting deadlines and dates and putting things into regulation – but how much longer do we have to wait?

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek was formerly, as she noted, a member of this government. She served in two ministries.

She worked with previous ministers of this government in terms of drafting this legislation. Having a good idea should not be relegated to which party you belong to. We are on record – whether it's the Wildrose, the Liberals, or the NDP – of supporting good legislation. Example: Bill 201, Workers' Compensation (Firefighters) Amendment Act, 2010.

I want to echo what the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek said. She hopes that maybe the championship will come through the hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright in terms of protecting children. I would like to think that maybe it would come from the hon. Minister of Children and Youth Services. It could very well come from the Minister of Justice. But this legislation is needed, and if it is brought forward by the government and the government corrects whatever bits and pieces of regulation they feel are missing, or if there is a deadline that they feel needs to be changed to allow the co-operation with the federal government, whatever it is that members of this government believe is necessary, I hope that when we come back this fall, that legislation will be proposed as a private member's bill, even given the number of times private members' bills are not put forward into legislation.

If you truly believe, as I believe you do, that children are important and need to be protected, then I implore you to bring forth the legislation that you feel is necessary to achieve that end this fall. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I guess I'd like to start off with that I don't doubt the hon. member in his saying that there isn't a member in here that doesn't think this is important, but it goes a step past that. It's about priorities. Priorities really are walking the walk, not talking the talk. To say that one is sincere and then not want to put in a proclamation date is not sincere. This is the whole crux of the problem, that they are making these declarations. First it was too soon, July 31. They just all voted against one for March 31, 2011. Now they're making the declaration: oh, maybe it's going to be September. So they do know the time frame that it can be. Why would you get up and say, "Oh, maybe we could do it in September"? If so, I think a simple amendment could have been brought forward: on or before March 31, 2011.

This amendment is unacceptable. It's unacceptable to the children of this province. It's unacceptable to the parents of this province. It's unacceptable and it's shameful that this House is going to pass a bill as important as 202 with no proclamation date. There's no commitment to that. It's just wrong.

I want to read into the record again the priorities of this government and where they feel the importance is on bills and legislation that we're passing. Once again I say that the most important bills and legislation that we should be passing are those that are protecting the most vulnerable, those that are protecting our life, our liberty, and our property, yet if we go through this government's wonderful roster of bills, it's embarrassing. The most important bill to this government after they destroyed the Alberta advantage is to say: oh, we're going to proclaim a bill, Bill 1, the Alberta Competitiveness Act, and now we're wonderful again. That's the priority of this government, the Alberta Competitiveness Act, when in fact all of their actions are destroying the competition in this province. That's their priority.

Bill 2, Professional Statutes Amendment Act. That's their priority in trying to look after the professionals, not the children of this province. This good Member for Calgary-Fish Creek has been working on this – is it eight years?

Mrs. Forsyth: Probably longer.

Mr. Hinman: Maybe longer. Eight years, and this government has refused to act on that. To say they're sincere – they're not, Mr. Chairman.

Bill 3, Fatal Accidents Amendment Act. This one has some importance here on how we're going to treat those that are from fatal accidents. That's number three. Again, no children's protection act here.

Bill 4, Dangerous Goods Transportation and Handling Amendment Act. They say that this is their priority, not protecting the children and those who want to use them for their sexual gratification but dangerous goods. There is no danger with pedophiles or for those people that are bringing in this stuff, but dangerous goods: that's a priority of this government.

Bill 5, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act. Why? Because they couldn't get their act together. Even though this government said they're going to start presenting the budget in February so that it can be ready by the year-end, they needed a supplemental act. That's the priority. We're talking about the date on amendment A3, and they say that they can't have a proclamation date, yet all of these need a proclamation date.

Bill 6, Emergency Management Amendment Act, needs a proclamation date. Gonna get one.

Bill 7, Election Statutes Amendment Act. I mean, a huge, thick one. This is almost as thick as five other bills, and they're sitting there saying . . .

Point of Order Relevance

Mr. Oberle: Point of order. Mr. Chairman, I need to ask what the relevance of this is when he lists, which all of us have, the outline of the number of government bills coming before the House. Is the member aware that we're talking about private members' business, more specifically the actual Bill 202, more specifically than that a proposed amendment to that bill? We're not talking about government legislation, government direction, government planning. At the moment I would ask that you call the member to order.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, the chair understands what you're attempting to do here. We're talking about proclamation, and you're equating the proclamation of all bills – government bills, private members' bills – and the time it takes for proclamation and working that way through. I would encourage the hon. member to please stay on topic and stay with amendment A3.

Mr. Chase: May I speak to your encouragement?

The Deputy Chair: No.

Mr. Chase: Okay. Thank you.

Debate Continued

Mr. Hinman: I appreciate the counsel from the chair, but I think it's critical for the people of Alberta to understand the priorities. They say that they're sincere and that they want this. It should have been Bill 1 if they're standing up and saying they're so sincere about it, that we're going to protect the children. This government has brought forward no bills to protect . . .

Point of Order Relevance

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Chairman, point of order. Could you please explain to that member the difference between government business and government priority and private members' bills and the motion, the amendment, that's on the table right now? He doesn't seem to understand it.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, you do not have the floor.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Chairman, it's a question of relevance. We are not talking about government business, government priorities. They have every day the question period, all sorts of avenues. Section 459 of Beauchesne, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, a moment ago I talked about what I perceived to be the relevance you were trying to put with government bills and private members' bills and proclamation. We are on private members' bills, and we are on amendment A3, that says to substitute "on Proclamation." I'm afraid it doesn't have anything to do with government bills; it is a private member's bill.

Debate Continued

Mr. Hinman: I appreciate that, Mr. Chairman.

Speaking to amendment A3, that the Mandatory Reporting of Child Pornography Act be amended in section 11 by striking out "on July 1, 2010" and substituting "on Proclamation," I'm referring to my specific notes by the Member for Battle River-Wainwright, who says: we're sincere; we want to put this in here. He talked about section 11, and he specifically spoke about a date and that we couldn't put one out until we've done all of this homework. He says that all of the members in this House understand it, yet they're not putting a date to it.

I guess I'll go back to a talk show host that we hear so much of on the weekend, that it's about relationships. She always says: if you don't have a ring and a date, you have no commitment. If you don't have a date, there is no commitment from this government, and that's what it's about. Twice we've had standing votes on dates where this government has stood up and voted against it. One they said was too early. Now they're using, to me, the naïveté of saying: it's too far away; we're going to do it earlier. So they do have a time frame in which they say that they can get this done.

This amendment should say: on or before March 31, 2011. To say anything else – and to say that this has nothing to do with government bills: it has very much to do with government bills because this government has failed to protect our children, so a private member has had to do this. That's why I was going through the priorities of this government and showing what their priorities are, whether it's in our budget, where again they lack the understanding of prioritizing and say, "Oh, this is okay; we're going to put $2 billion into CO₂," and then have a huge deficit. It just goes on and on.

If you go through and look at the priorities of this government, which are their bills – and I would suggest to the hon. Member for Peace River that if he doesn't think that that isn't prioritizing, then he should go and study a course on prioritizing and find out a little bit about it. There's a huge difference between talking the talk and walking the walk. This government has failed to pick up the banner and say: we're going to protect our children. We have 15 bills. Not one of them is protecting the children.

A private member who worked inside the government struggled to bring forward a government bill and was never able to. Perhaps by an act of providence here she has Bill 202. We're debating this, and this government wants no proclamation date. Make no mistake about it: no date, no commitment. You can't fool yourselves that it's anything else than that. I have to say that I'm astounded when this government talks about having free votes in the House. You're all of one mind. I would say that you don't mind whether or not you pass this bill. I'm sorry. That's the fact of it. That's how Albertans are going to see this, that you don't mind when or if this bill ever gets passed. That's why your amendment A3 is to have no proclamation date. There is no commitment on the part of this government.

He talks about section 10. Again, he's referring to it taking time in the need of having no proclamation date. This government has passed many, many bills, hundreds of bills. They understand the process. They know what it needs to do. They say: to get it right. Absolutely, we want to get it right. If this government was so good at getting everything right, we wouldn't be here passing any bills because they got it right 10 years ago, five years ago, two years ago. Why are we in here passing all these bills all the time? Because we can't get it right. There are problems. So don't say that we can't pass a bill until we get it right. We might as well not pass any more bills and just live with what we've got.

We need a proclamation date, Mr. Chair. It's critical that amendment A3 gets defeated, because there is no proclamation date. To say anything else is just foolishness, naïveté. Dates are always a challenge. Should we say that we're going to have the next Winter Olympics, but we're not going to declare the date until our athletes are in a position that we really feel they can win, and then we'll call an impromptu date and say: oh, everybody, come back to Canada for another go-round? No. There's always a date. The challenge is to be prepared by that date and not say that we can't have a date because it's too challenging. We need to have a date. No date, no commitment.

It's almost comical that they put out a date when they're going to be back in the black when they don't even acknowledge their deficit. Why bother putting out a date? Back in the black in three. At least they're declaring something. Why? Because they know that the people of Alberta need a date.

I mean, this is just unbelievable to me that we're being challenged on the fact that there's a date: it's too soon; it's too far away. No. What it is is that you don't mind whether this bill gets passed or not. That's the truth of the fact. If that truth hurts, it's supposed to. When the truth hurts, it's supposed to, and it's supposed to act on your conscience. For anybody to get up and vote for this amendment, I hope that your conscience burns every time that you think of a child who has been molested because we have failed to try and do all we can to protect them. [interjections] Moan and groan, but think of those children that aren't protected.

This is just unacceptable. We need to have a date, and anything less than a date just speaks to the fact that they're the ones who are politicizing this. They're the ones who say that, oh, we're politicizing it. No. We brought the bill forward. We're the ones who are working on it. We're the ones that are committed to a date. We want this government to be committed to a date.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Chair, that was quite the speech there and quite the way to get wound up. I wonder if I could just dial it down a tone here and point out that the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek and the Member for Calgary-Varsity in their comments praised Bill 201, the Workers' Compensation (Firefighters) Amendment Act, 2010. I wonder if either one of them noticed that section 3 of that bill says that this act comes into force on proclamation. [interjections] I have the floor, Mr. Chairman.

Then the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek said in her comments and in feeding comments to her neighbour there that she knows the government process; she used to be in the government. That's true. Then she would have noticed that all of our private members' bills on our side say that. The member would know this, that the Alberta Legislature is probably the most effective Legislature in Canada for passing private members' bills. One of the reasons that that clause is very effective in private members' bills is that it prevents a mishmash of overlapping and poorly drafted legislation. It allows the government to go back to the drawing board and incorporate good ideas. I think the member has been thrown a huge bone here but is not interested in the fact that we are actually interested in passing her bill.

The other thing the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore said in his comments, fed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, was that the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek has been working on this legislation for at least eight years. That strikes me as odd because that would take us back to the time that the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek was actually the minister. So where was the legislation at that time? We're going to stand here and be accused of doing nothing?

I think honestly, Mr. Chairman, that the speech by the hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright was heartfelt and true. This is a very common process that we use here. I think there are a lot of people itching to support this legislation, and that member is standing in the way. I don't understand why.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I would move that the House now rise and report progress.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

Mr. Fawcett: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 202. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Having heard the report, all those in favour of the report, please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed, please say no. So ordered.

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would seek unanimous consent of the Assembly to revert to Routine, beginning with Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees and working our way on through there. That would help address some important business of the House at this time.

The Acting Speaker: On the request for unanimous consent, those in favour?

Mr. Chase: I'm just asking for qualification. Could you list the business and the reports that you'd like to get back to so that I can be supportive of your intent?

The Acting Speaker: There's no debate on the motion.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, if I could just quickly, it's exactly as on the Order Paper: Presenting Reports followed by Presenting Petitions followed by Notices of Motion followed by Introduction of Bills, Tabling Returns and Reports, and Tablings to the Clerk.

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: I'm sorry, hon. member. There is no debate in a request for unanimous consent. It's quite clear that consent is being made to get back the Routine starting at Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees and going through to the conclusion of the Routine.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Select Special Auditor General Search Committee I am pleased to table the committee's report recommending the appointment of Mr. Merwan N. Saher to the position of Auditor General for the province of Alberta. Copies of the report are being distributed to all members of the Assembly today.

The Speaker: Thank you very much. Concurrence in that report is not required.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to provide oral notice of the following motions:

Number 1:

Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 3(9) the spring sitting of the Assembly stand adjourned upon the Government House Leader advising the Assembly that the business for the sitting is concluded.

Number 2 is with respect to a FOIP referral.

Be it resolved that

- (1) The Standing Committee on Health be deemed to be the special committee of the Assembly for the purposes of conducting a comprehensive review of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act as provided for in section 97 of that act.
- (2) The committee must commence its review of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act no later than July 1, 2010, and must submit its report to the Assembly within one year of commencing its review, including any amendments recommended by the committee.
- (3) No additional remuneration shall be provided to the members of the committee for the purposes of this review.

Thirdly,;

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly concur in the report of the Select Special Auditor General Search Committee and recommend to the Lieutenant Governor in Council that Merwan N. Saher be appointed as Auditor General for the province of Alberta for a six-year term.

Thank you.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling the required five copies of the teen category winning photo from the 2009 Lethbridge public library's Caught Reading photo contest. This picture, entitled Anywhere Any Time, was taken by Miss Hannah Forster, who was introduced with her mother and sister earlier this afternoon.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk Assistant: I wish to advise the House that the following document was deposited with Office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mrs. Jablonski, Minister of Seniors and Community Supports, responses to questions raised by Ms Pastoor, hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, Mrs. Forsyth, hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, Ms Notley, hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, and Ms Blakeman, hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, on February 17, 2010, Department of Seniors and Community Supports main estimates debate.

The Speaker: We're now concluded that section of the Routine. Shall I now recognize the hon. Deputy Government House Leader to request that I leave the chair and that you return to committee?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Yes, may I request that of you, Mr. Speaker, so that we can go back to private members' business.

The Speaker: I don't feel slighted at all.

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, I'd like to call the committee to order.

The Deputy Chair: We have under consideration amendment A3. Any comments or questions? The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I don't at all believe that there are members in this House that don't understand the importance of child pornography or are not against child pornography. That is absolutely clear. We don't want to descend into an area where we're accusing each other of not caring about that issue or not thinking that it's wrong or whatever. However, where we have a very legitimate disagreement is on the priority or the urgency that this government is showing for this bill. That's where the difference of opinion is.

You know, I just cannot believe that the hon. Solicitor General would stand up and actually, after all the work that this hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek has done in the protection of children for years . . .

Mr. Oberle: Eight years, right? Eight years.

Mr. Anderson: Much more than that hon. member over there has done, much more than anyone here has ever done. He has the audacity to stand up and question her on it. It's just beyond belief. The smugness, the arrogance is just, well, indicative of this government, and it's indicative of why Albertans have totally lost faith in this government, that type of smugness.

Mr. Chair, it is with absolutely great sadness that we're going to have to pass a bill that doesn't have an implementation date. It's wrong. I don't care what the history of private members' bills is. I couldn't care less. What I do care about is that we pass a bill with an implementation date – with an implementation date – and get this legislation put into law as quickly as possible. That's what I care about.

The reason I care about that, Mr. Chair, is because I know of children and I know of individuals that have been affected by this scourge that is child pornography and child abuse because of the road that child pornography leads to. I think many of us in this room know of people who have been affected by this and have been absolutely scarred beyond almost any hope of rehabilitation. So I don't understand.

I can understand, you know, if it's a complicated bill. I mean, if it's like the royalties, which took seven months to implement, from accepting the findings of the Hunter report to actually saying: this is what we're going to do. It took them seven months there. Lots of complications there. I can understand that it takes a long time to do that, but they still did it. They didn't get it right, but that's beside the point. The point is that some bills do require some time.

This is a very simple law. It is very simple, and it is very urgent. It is needed. The longer we wait on this law, the longer certain children will suffer. That's just the way it will be. This is another tool that we need to give our law enforcement right now.

Now, I'm not going to sit here and say that these other 15 bills here, that were passed or are going to be passed, are not important. They are important. Well, some of them are important; some of them I disagree with. Some of them were important, and we needed to pass them for sure. What I don't understand is that there's such an urgency to pass those bills, yet there's not an urgency to see this through and make sure that not only is it passed, this anti child pornography bill, but that it is also proclaimed into law as soon as possible. There is no reason not to do this, Mr. Chair.

The former minister of health, the current Minister of Energy, when he was going to reform the health system and centralize services into Alberta Health Services, had a 30-, 60-, and 90-day plan. This is the biggest budget that we have in government, the biggest department: a 30-, 60-, 90-day plan. Well, that's okay. It was quick. Again, not very good but quick. You've got to give him that. They got the bureaucrats in there working, and they got that thing done. And you're telling me that a bill that's about three pages thick, that has very, very few things actually being added – but what is being added is very important – that March 31, 2011, isn't enough time to implement them? Is that some kind of bad joke? I just don't understand this.

I would like to see the Solicitor General or the Justice minister stand up in this House, one of the two, and tell us when this is going to be proclaimed. If they're going to say that they don't want a proclamation date because they don't want to set some kind of precedent, fine, go ahead, but at least tell this House when we can expect, when the children of this province can expect to have this bill passed. I am sick and tired of politicians sitting on their butts, doing nothing on this issue, Mr. Chair. It is absolutely embarrassing. This is probably the biggest issue we're facing.

Every report that comes out in the media over the last several years on this subject says that this problem is rampant. It is absolutely rampant. It is one of the most disgusting, sickest problems of our time, and it is not a minority problem. It's not like a small, little: oh, a few people do it. It is unbelievable to me and to many people in this House that many people in our society, even in Alberta – even in Alberta – are participating in this stuff, in this filth. We need to be doing everything we can. That should have been Bill 1. If they wanted to take this and soup it up and do even more with it or whatever, then that should have been Bill 1 or 2 or 3 or 15 or 16. Instead, we're going to shut the House down here after this week. We're going to shut it down, and we're going to put this off, and we're going to put a whole bunch of other things off for whatever reason. I mean, this is ridiculous. Let's pass something on this that's effective.

This former minister and current member has been working on this for years. The Solicitor General, of course, makes light of that because he hasn't done a darn thing yet. She has, and he hasn't. Until you do something, then maybe you should just cool it.

The point is, Mr. Chair, that we need to pass this. We need to pass this bill right now and with a proclamation date so that right now, from this point on, at the end of this session, when they read the bills that have been passed, when they proclaim them into law, we can know that the clock has been set on getting this bill implemented. I will be, obviously, extremely disappointed.

Every week I write an article or opinion piece for my local papers. It's like a weekly blog. Many of us in here do. Not once in the whole time I've been here, with the exception, probably, of when I crossed the floor, has one article elicited as much response and definitely as much uniform response as this one. I've never seen anything like it. You post it on there, and all of a sudden there were, like, a hundred responses to it. It was unbelievable. On Facebook. On Twitter. On the website itself. Through e-mails coming in. People saw this in my local community, and they said: "You know what? That has to be passed and implemented right away." Not one person disagreed. I guarantee that if you polled Albertans, I bet you it'd be 99 per cent that would agree that this thing needs to be passed immediately and that it needs to be proclaimed into law probably immediately, definitely within the next few months, because it is that big of a problem.

Now, Mr. Chair, I am, again, not saying that the members on that side of the House are for child pornography or something like that. Definitely I am not saying that. But there is an urgency issue here. There's an urgency issue that needs to be addressed, and I want to see some urgency from this government on this issue rather than some smiles and some snide remarks. That's what I'd like to see. So far all I've heard is snide remarks, and all I've seen is smiles. That's unacceptable, especially on a serious subject, where people are dying and having their innocence stolen from them as we speak. We're going to close the House up and leave. Why don't we sit down here and start having a real debate and start working together as a House and as a team on how to figure out a way to better protect our children? That is what I care about.

It's unbelievable, Mr. Chair, the smugness and the arrogance. It just blows my mind. That's why Albertans are leaving. That's why I left. That's why this member left, and that's why people continue to leave, because of the arrogance and the smugness. Their priorities and their urgency do not match the priorities or urgency of Albertans, and frankly they don't match the priorities and urgency of a lot of the people in that backbench right now. Sorry. Oh, that's an offensive remark. Sorry. The private members.

I know for a fact that there are many private members over there that want to support this bill. They want to support this bill, and they want it proclaimed immediately. You know, maybe the Deputy Premier doesn't want it proclaimed. I don't know, but I'll tell you one thing for sure: they're not going to vote that way because there's no semblance of democracy over there, and they know it. That is unacceptable.

If there was really a free vote in this Legislature, this bill would be passed. It would be proclaimed within months. But it's not going to be because you're too busy thinking about yourselves and no one else.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I was really going to let this go by, vote on the amendment, and get on with the bill because I think there are lots of members in this House who believe that the subject matter of the bill is important.

The hon. member has raised a whole lot of issues and talked about arrogance and smugness and all sorts of things that are quite irrelevant to the fact that this government in this province has done more for the safety of the community, done more for the protection of children, done more on all of those fronts than any other government in the country. I can say that as a former Attorney General and as a former Solicitor General and as somebody who sat with the hon. member when some of the best legislation on child protection was actually drafted and put through this House.

What this hon. member doesn't know because he hasn't got the experience – but his seatmate ought to know – is that passing bills that don't work together, passing bills without the regulatory framework ready to go is not good law. Good law is done carefully and done properly. This is a good bill. I hope that I get the chance to vote in favour of this bill, and I'm going to sit down quickly so that I can, but I couldn't let the hon. member deride the work that's been done by many members in this House, by this government on the safety of our community and the protection of our children, including some good work from the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek before she went astray.

The Deputy Chair: On the amendment, the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. You know, I'm compelled to get up and speak again because I've listened very intently. I appreciate what the minister is saying. You know, Minister, you and I worked together when I was the Solicitor General and you were the Minister of Justice, and we had some good times travelling the province and pushing through a lot of things. I remember how adamant you were at all of these FPTs about raising the age of consent.

You know, we have now four provinces that have got this act: Manitoba, Nova Scotia, Ontario, and one other one that doesn't come to mind. So the lessons are learned in those particular provinces, and I've talked to them.

It's interesting that my former colleague from Peace River is in the paper January 28 saying, "Keeping Alberta's children safe from those who would prey on them is a vital function of ALERT." It was after a bust on child exploitation. Then we had the comment about throwing us a bone. Throwing us a bone would have been bringing this legislation forward as a government bill with a proclamation date.

Then he referred to Bill 201, our firemen that are waiting up in the Assembly. Quite frankly, you know, I've been around long enough, when the former member Richard Magnus brought forward the original bill. We actually, all three of us, spoke in support of Bill 201. I'm hoping that the firemen get a proclamation date in regard to their bill because I think it's darn important, supported at work with the firemen in Calgary on the original bill, I think it was, that Calgary-North Hill Richard Magnus did such incredible work on.

What's interesting to me is for the Solicitor General now to sit and talk about a comment my colleague made about eight years and that if I had been on this issue of child pornography eight years ago, it would have probably been passed. Well, let's backtrack a few years. The Amber Alert I brought forward, first in Canada, and then took it right across the country. The high-risk offender that is in his department right now, doing the thing that was important and monitoring these sex offenders when they're in our neighbourhood and hurting our children. I don't see him coming up with anything. I put together the IROC team, the integrated response to organized crime, to deal with all of these issues. You know, I brought in DECA, the Drug-endangered Children Act; PCHIP, the Protection of Children Involved in Prostitution Act. This minister has been there since January. I'd like to know what bright ideas he's brought forward.

Mr. Chair, I will accept the fact that the government of the day does not like the idea of a proclamation date. I will even accept the fact that on the bill originally it said July 31, and that might have been pushing the envelope a little bit. Then we brought forward an amendment on December 31, 2010. The same member got up and talked about: we need to study this. How many lawyers do they have in this government? How many people have to be consulted on the issue of child pornography? We left the regulations open so that the Solicitor General could talk to his ALERT team and use them, or he could use Cybertip if he wanted. Then we said: "Okay. We'll go to March 31, 2011." "No. Can't be done." My Battle River-Wainwright colleague over there said: "Okay. We can have this done by September." I think he said that; I don't have the Blues in front of me.

You know what we're going to do, Mr. Chair? We're going to hold them to their word in September, and I'm looking forward to coming back in the fall session, which is October, I do believe, unless it's changed again. I'm going to look forward to them bringing forward the regulations. I'm going to look forward to third reading on this particular piece of legislation. I'm even looking forward more to proclamation. I'm going to watch and I'm going to monitor and I'm going to talk to the people that have talked to me on this particular piece of legislation to hold them accountable, especially when the Minister of Education talks about the fact that they've done more than any other government in this province.

Well, I was chair of that task force. I know what Albertans were telling me. I travelled across this province listening to what Albertans told us. We brought forward a very good, concise report, and I want to thank the team that I travelled with because they worked very hard to make sure that what we were doing would make Alberta probably one of the safest provinces to live in.

We are probably close to running out of time. I'll look forward to voting on this. I'll even look forward more to the fact that this government has said that they like this particular piece of legislation. They don't like the proclamation date on this piece of legislation. They need to do more consulting. They need to talk to more people; I'm not sure whom they're going to consult. They need to deal with the regulations. Well, the Minister of Justice and the Solicitor General at their next FPT can talk to the provinces, and I would suggest that they talk to the minister responsible in Manitoba, Gord Mackintosh, a great guy. I worked with him when he was the former Solicitor General in Manitoba. He'll tell them how it's done, very succinctly and very easily. They can keep us abreast on that.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: On amendment A3, the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It is a privilege to speak on the amendment by the hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright. Speaking on the amendment, I think that this has been an important bill that should and could have been passed with July 1. I appreciate the history lesson given that, generally speaking, bills passed on the government side were on proclamation. Now, it looks like this bill should be passed, and it could be passed in some sort of time and in some reasonable fashion. I hear the government side indicating that they will work hard on this bill and that they support the intents of this bill and the merits and that they feel they can have it done by the September legislative sitting.

Well, on the record here my only hope is that it comes to fruition, that the government looks at this bill, looks at the merits of this bill, and comes out with a bill of their own making ready to pass in September. I thank the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek for her hard work on this, and I hope the government does bring this forward, and in September, given the statements made here today, I'm assuming that that will happen. I can trust that the Solicitor General, who has spoken in favour of the merits of this bill, and the hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright will remind themselves of that sort of due date, if we can call it that, and that we'll see this on the Order Paper come September, and I look forward to that.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I have got to clarify some of the comments that I made since it appears that in this short amount of time since the last time I spoke, there have been a lot of comments attributed to what I said that are not accurate. Never once did I mention the word "September." I talked about the fall, and my comments were that the original legislation calls for July 1, 2010. The first amendment called for December 31, 2010, and then the subsequent one called for March 31, 2011. I'd argued that July 1 was too soon. I had argued that December 31 was perhaps too soon as well. I'd argued that March 31 might give us enough time.

But if perchance it all went smoothly and we were done this fall, which could be September or October, if we were done the consultations in the fall, it would be a crying shame to wait until March 31 – as the opposition claims, kids are being persecuted all over the place – to actually proclaim it as law. It would be nice if the consultations ran smoothly and we were done this fall. It would be nice if we could proclaim it instead of waiting until March 31. Those are the comments I made, not that we would have this done by September.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you. I really appreciate the fact that the member has clarified that it would be a crying shame that we'd have to wait for March 31, 2011, on this private member's bill. Yes, it would. So to take away the crying shame, the government can bring a government bill forward in the fall, in October if they want. They can ignore this little private member's bill. They can bring a government bill forward in the fall as one of their number one priorities come October. They can have it passed and they can have it proclaimed because they've done all the studying that they can on this private member's bill. Ignore my private member's bill completely; take all the credit for it under a government bill. And guess what? Everybody will be happy, and more importantly the children in this province will be safe.

Where I'm failing to comprehend everything is: consult, consult, consult. You know, the government must have a room somewhere in the universe that is full of consulting papers. It must have five rooms. I don't know where they send them. They consult till the cows come home, and the cows are still wandering around somewhere. It's amazing to me how they always use the word "consult." They're consulting. They're consulting. I don't even know how many times we're consulting this session.

To the Member for Battle River-Wainwright, forget the date. Whether it's July 31 or December 31 or March 31, if this is a priority for the government of Alberta, then do the right thing, and the right thing is: bring a government bill forward in October, when we're back in session. We will proudly stand up and support the bill. We'll get it through. I've seen the bills go through click, click, click, click, very quickly from second to committee to third. We'll bring the new Lieutenant Governor in, and we'll get him to proudly sign off the proclamation.

You can forget the private member's bill. I'm sure the Solicitor General cares so deeply about children. He quoted on the 28th of January how deeply he cares about children. He has a wonderful staff within his department, that I had the privilege and the pleasure of working with when I was the former Solicitor General. Not only that, but he has an ALERT team, that can give him all the information he wants in regard to all the hard work that they've done. He can bring the bill forward under his name and show that he's doing something when he's the Solicitor General of this province.

The Deputy Chair: On amendment A3, the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Yes. Just a few more quick comments on why we need to vote against amendment A3. The hon. member obviously has a listening problem because the amendment would be on or before – I'm speaking to you, to the hon. member – March 31, and that puts the whole problem at rest. You need to realize that the people of Alberta will be very disappointed if, in fact, they don't bring it forward by this fall. We should have been able to have this done this spring. They knew about this private member's bill. The work should have been done, and it hasn't been. They fail to recognize that, and they won't admit to their own shortcomings.

Just to go back to saying that they need to get it right, they didn't get it right with our new royalty framework. They didn't get it right with the new centralized health board. They didn't get it right on all these things, but they passed those bills, Mr. Chairman. For them to use the excuse of having to get it right, it's unacceptable and not there. When we had so many problems with the new royalty framework and they realized that finally, they said: oh, we're going to release the Competitiveness Act, and it'll be this fall. We had to wait until March. It was four, five months after they said: oh, we can get it done. That was critical to our economy. So for them to say, "Oh, we're going to get it done," Albertans question this government on its ability and its priorities to get it done. We need to have a date. On or before March 31 is an easy amendment that could have and should have been brought forward, not saying: no proclamation date.

We should be voting against this. Anybody that votes for this should be ashamed. We need to defeat this and bring it back to the other amendment: on or before March 31, 2011. It's unacceptable to say that we don't need a date and that they're going to work hard. Their record doesn't support it.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Chairman, I just need to point out that – I don't know – it's kind of a silly debate. We've fallen into a hole here, and we're not gaining any ground. The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek said that if we bring forward a government bill this fall, we could ignore this little bill. That would be true if we pass this amendment. If we keep the date in the bill, in fact it's not true because at that point the bill is in force, and we have to pass a bill to repeal the bill. So the member is incorrect with that.

The second thing, Mr. Chairman. I would like some example from any opposition member over there – it doesn't matter which one – of any point in time when we were debating a government bill when they said: "You know what? This bill might be a little bit flawed, but we should pass it, and we can fix it later." Or maybe we could have an example of one point in time when the opposition suggested: "You know what? You've probably consulted enough. You don't need to consult any more." I don't think you're going to be able to come up with such an example. It's just simply not there.

It's a silly debate. We're just talking about a bill coming into force on proclamation. If, indeed, the government consumes that subject area into a government bill, done deal. That's exactly what the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek was talking about.

Mr. Anderson: I have to answer the hon. member's questions. It's my duty. Actually, Minister, during the debate over the Competitiveness Act I clearly said on the record that the act, the spirit of the act, was needed, that we need to be more competitive as a province. I didn't think it was a perfect bill for several reasons but that we should pass it anyway. So, you know, Bill 1, and you can keep going from there.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity on the amendment.

Mr. Chase: Yes. I'm rising to call the question, Mr. Chair. We have other extremely important bills to deal with, Bill 201. I'm calling the question on the amendment. That's what I'm asking for.

The Deputy Chair: I'll call the question on the amendment, hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. That's what I'm suggesting.

The Deputy Chair: If there are no other speakers, I will call the question.

[Motion on amendment A3 carried]

The Deputy Chair: This takes us back to Bill 202 as amended. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Yes. I don't want to prolong this because I very much want to get ahead with Bill 201, but I'm looking for clarification. It can come from the House leader; it can come from the chair. Is it possible to delay further discussion of this bill by suggesting that it not be read now but be read six months hence? Is that legitimate?

The Deputy Chair: No.

Mr. Chase: It isn't?

The Deputy Chair: No.

Mr. Chase: Okay. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: I will call the question on Bill 202 as amended.

[The clauses of Bill 202 as amended agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? That is carried.
The committee to now rise and report.

Mr. Hancock: I would so move, Mr. Chair.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill, Bill 202. The committee reports the following bill with some amendments: Bill 202.

The Acting Speaker: All those members of the Assembly who agree with the report, please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed, please say no. So ordered.

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 201 Workers' Compensation (Firefighters) Amendment Act, 2010

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with pleasure that I rise to move third reading of Bill 201, Workers' Compensation (Firefighters) Amendment Act, 2010.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

I would just like to sincerely thank all hon. members from both sides of the House for their eloquent support of this bill and for what it means to the members of our firefighting fraternity in this province, and I want to thank the firefighters that have sat through a rather interesting Committee of the Whole debate. It's been said that passing legislation is like making sausage: we do grind through it. I thank you for your patience.

Mr. Speaker, I would forgo the rest of my comments and ask all hon. members to use the time remaining to us today to support passage of Bill 201 for third reading.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Wildrose Alliance caucus I'd like to stand and say that we fully support Bill 201. It is a very needed bill. It's the responsible thing to do, and I commend the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon for having the foresight and for consulting with his constituents and with the firefighters to get this moving on. On behalf of all three of the members of this caucus, we support the bill.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. To echo the hon. member from the Wildrose, we the Official Opposition of the province of Alberta have supported this bill throughout its second, at Committee of the Whole, and now in its third reading. We see the value of this bill. I am pleased that they, basically our heroes in the Legislature here today, will have the protection that they so richly deserve.

The only comment I would make is that I hope that we push in further legislation, whether it be through amendment or through another bill, the same type of protection for other first responders, including paramedics and police.

Thank you very much, and I look forward to the vote.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other member wish to speak on the bill?
Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 201 read a third time]

4:50 Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 203 Municipal Government (Local Access and Franchise Fees) Amendment Act, 2010

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today to open second reading debate on Bill 203, the Municipal Government (Local Access and Franchise Fees) Amendment Act, 2010. I bring this bill forward with the intent of achieving clarification and transparency around municipal local access and franchise fees. To this end, Bill 203 proposes a standardized formula or calculation method for determining municipal access and franchise fees.

Specifically, Mr. Speaker, the formula would require that franchise fees and access fees be based on the quantity of energy consumed whereas the rate is charged on a per unit consumed basis. By having all municipalities calculate their fees based on per unit energy consumption, rates would then be more easily compared between municipalities.

Mr. Speaker, I must emphasize that this bill would not specify a particular rate for any municipality, nor would it place any limits on a rate a municipality could charge. I recognize that the situation facing each municipality is different, and this does leave the flexibility for municipalities to implement their own rates.

Mr. Speaker, I recognize that the revenue generated from these fees serves a purpose for municipalities and that the intent is not to place a limit on the revenue that municipalities may raise. That is an issue between the individual municipality and their specific citizens; however, Bill 203 would simply ensure that these fees are collected in a fair and transparent manner.

Allow me to provide a brief explanation of these fees, Mr. Speaker. Local access fees are, essentially, fees charged by the municipality and collected by the utility operator in lieu of property taxes for land in which utility infrastructure like power lines is located. This would be true for franchise fees except for natural gas and the pipelines that distribute that natural gas. So, in simple terms, local access fees and franchise fees are property taxes for power lines and gas lines. These fees are charged by the municipality to the utility companies through an agreement, who then pass this charge on to the consumer on their monthly power bill.

Mr. Speaker, there has often been some ambiguity surrounding these fees as it can appear that they are being charged by the utility operator rather than the municipality. As a result, constituents have even referred to this to me as a hidden tax.

Bill 203 proposes to clarify the situation surrounding these fees by introducing three amendments to the Municipal Government Act. First, it would create a standardized fee calculation formula, which is, as I have said, based on the quantity or volume of power or gas consumed. Thus, municipalities would charge a set dollar amount for each kilowatt hour of power consumed. For example, a municipality can set the rate at 5 cents per kilowatt hour, and if a consumer uses 100 kilowatt hours of power, their fee would be $5. This would be the same for a municipality that decided they want to set it at 10 cents per kilowatt hour. At a hundred kilowatt hours of energy consumed, their fee would then be $10.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 203 proposes to use this formula because it provides an easy comparability and better equips citizens to assess these fees as municipal voters. Currently in Alberta there are three main formulas used to calculate these fees. The first formula, the one used by a majority of municipalities, is a formula that determines the fee from a percentage of the total delivery or distribution cost. The problem with this formula is that distribution costs can vary significantly from municipality to municipality. One municipality can charge an access fee of 10 per cent, but because their distribution costs are more expensive, the citizens would be paying more than a municipality charging 15 per cent. There is some logic behind this particular formula, but it does make it very difficult to compare across the different municipal jurisdictions. Essentially, this formula cannot easily be compared.

The second formula used in Alberta bases fees off a percentage of the total monthly utility bill or the total cost of electricity delivered. The problem with this formula should be very obvious. It ties access fees and franchise fees to the shifting commodity prices, not exactly in line with the original intent behind these fees. As well, this also provides significant challenges, particularly to small-business owners, when electricity prices increase. Yes, the fee would decrease when electricity or natural gas prices decrease, but when it comes to business and financial planning for that business, it causes significant problems when electricity or natural gas prices go up, and they are not just obliged to pay those increased commodity prices but also get tacked on an additional increase on their fee.

The third formula, Mr. Speaker, in use is the consumption-based formula being proposed by this bill.

Mr. Speaker, the second amendment proposed by Bill 203 would require that the local access fees and franchise fee revenues be clearly disclosed on municipalities' annual financial statements. Now, it is true that municipalities must already list total fee revenues. Bill 203 would simply require access and franchise fees to be listed separately from general fee revenue. Again, this would facilitate transparency and an open dialogue about the revenue generated from these fees.

Mr. Speaker, the final proposal made by Bill 203 is that any rate changes be advertised at least 90 days prior to those changes taking effect. Municipalities would be allowed to do this either in their local newspaper or somehow online. Advance notification would ensure that municipal residents are fully informed of any changes to these fees and give them the opportunity to consult with their local elected representatives if they have any concerns as well as allow businesses and households to plan for the increased fee charge.

All three of these proposed amendments are designed to allow Albertans to better understand these fees and make it easier for all Albertans to be engaged in the discussion and the decision-making process on what the level of these fees should be. At the very least, Bill 203 can lead a productive dialogue about access and franchise fees that I believe is well warranted. After all, if citizens are clearly informed about property tax changes, why would local access fees and franchise fees be any different?

Mr. Speaker, I would now like to touch briefly on the last key element put forward by Bill 203, and that is the coming into force date. As I mentioned, there are several formulas already in place across Alberta, and many of these are the result of multiyear contracts drawn up between municipalities and utility companies. It is not the intent of Bill 203 to nullify these contracts with no regard to the agreement made between these two entities, so Bill 203 proposes to allow municipalities with current contracts a grace period until January 1, 2015, to come into compliance with the legislation.

Mr. Speaker, simply, Bill 203 is concerned with creating an atmosphere of transparency, not creating burdensome scenarios for municipalities.

In closing, I'd like to stress again that Bill 203 will not limit the revenue that a municipality could generate from local access fees and franchise fees, nor will it even require municipalities to collect these fees at all. Rather, this proposed legislation simply aims to create a situation where municipal residents can easily compare their fees with those charged by their municipal neighbours and, as a result, appropriately assess the fees within their own municipality. Bill 203 is in the best interests of all Albertans. I believe that there is a great deal of support for taking a closer look at local access fees and franchise fees.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I will conclude my comments. I look forward to future discussion.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Yes. I see time is running out on further discussion on the second reading of Bill 203. I will look forward to the fact that it survived the process and will continue on into the fall, at which time we'll have the proper time to continue our discussions.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: It's 5 o'clock, so we shall not continue the debate on Bill 203. We'll continue on business of the day.

5:00 Motions Other than Government Motions

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Willmore Wilderness Park

507. Mr. Campbell moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to not bring forward changes to the Willmore Wilderness Park Act which would restrict traditional land uses such as outfitting, trapping, hunting, and fishing.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to talk about Motion 507. The Willmore wilderness area is in my riding just north of Grande Cache, and it encompasses over 4,600 square kilometres of land. The purpose of this motion is to ensure that the government of Alberta continues to recognize as is the Willmore Wilderness Park Act. This act promotes the management and conservation of resources within the Willmore wilderness park and provides the legislative assurance of traditional activities like outfitting, trapping, hunting, and fishing. Activities like hunting and fishing are key elements of conservation, and it is those who participate in these activities who are the conservationists. By continuing to support their activities, as Motion 507 urges, the Willmore wilderness park will continue to be preserved for future generations.

Mr. Speaker, I think it's important to note that Grande Cache became the home for a number of aboriginal families in 1905 and 1906 after they were asked to leave Jasper national park, and today, you know, a hundred years later, many of the descendants of these families continue to hunt, fish, and outfit in the Willmore.

The Willmore is still a pristine wilderness area but does have some pressures. The mountain pine beetle has the capability of destroying the old-growth forests that line the river valleys within the 4,600 square kilometres.

Mr. Speaker, this is an area that is for the most part self-governed. Of course, SRD patrols through fish and wildlife officers and parks has their officers patrolling, but it's the people who use the landscape on a regular basis that understand its true value and keep its integrity intact. It is these people that clean the trails and look to see that those using the area do so in a responsible manner and at times help those who are not experienced and get themselves in trouble.

This is a true wilderness area fraught with dangers for those not properly equipped or experienced in outdoor activities. In my own experience of over 25 years of guiding, I could spend the whole afternoon talking about people who've had to be rescued or supported because they were not outfitted properly or were outside of their capabilities. The Willmore is one of those areas, Mr. Speaker, that can provide that.

This area is also located on the Continental Divide. The divide provides many streams and rivers that supply water to the Peace and Athabasca rivers. Other rivers within the park are the Sheep, Jackpine, Smoky, Berland, Sulphur, Muskeg, and Wildhay. In many of these rivers and streams within the park are Rocky Mountain whitefish, rainbow trout, and bull trout.

Mr. Speaker, this park was created in 1959, when local residents were concerned about the amount of roads that the oil and gas sectors were developing through the region. Norman Willmore, who at the time was the MLA for Edson, lobbied for and eventually had the area declared a wilderness park where trapping and fishing would be permitted; however, all motor vehicles were restricted from the area. The only permitted transportation is by foot, horse, or bicycle. These regulations were reflected in the Willmore act.

Mr. Speaker, the current situation we face is that Alberta Tourism, Parks and Recreation along with Parks Canada and B.C. Parks have been considering a new nomination for UNESCO world heritage status of the Canadian Rocky Mountain parks, which could include the Willmore wilderness park along with other protected areas that are adjacent to the current UNESCO designation. I quote from the Alberta Tourism, Parks and Recreation website.

Alberta Parks is in early discussions with Parks Canada and B.C. Parks on the possibility of expanding the current Canadian Rocky Mountain Parks World Heritage Site. Should the expansion have clear benefits, the project committee will consult with the public, affected stakeholders, communities, First Nations and Métis, and government departments in both provinces before proceeding with submission of a re-nomination package to UNESCO.

Parks Canada states:

Four other contiguous protected areas on the Alberta side would also merit consideration in a re-nomination of this site [the Canadian Rocky Mountain Parks World Heritage Site]. These include the Ghost River and White Goat Wilderness's (IUCN category I), Peter Lougheed Provincial Park, and the Willmore Wilderness Park. All of these offer high quality habitat, equivalent and complementary in value to the existing World Heritage site. The inclusion of these six additional contiguous provincial protected areas would result in a 13-park World Heritage complex and an approximate 25% size increase [in area].

Mr. Speaker, I think it's important to understand what the Willmore Wilderness Park Act says.

In this Act,

- (a) "land" means land of the Crown in right of Alberta;
- (b) "Park" means the Willmore Wilderness Park established by this Act.

Under part 3 of the act, Use of Park, it states:

The Park is dedicated to the use of the people of Alberta for their benefit, education and enjoyment, subject to this Act and the regulations, and shall, by the management, conservation and protection of its natural resources and by the preservation of its natural beauty, be maintained for the enjoyment of future generations.

Also, part 4 of the act says under industrial activities:

No person may conduct any industrial activities, including, but not limited to, mining, geological and geophysical explorations, water management, hydro-electric power and pulp and paper mills, saw mills and other forestry related industries, within the Park.

I think that the park and the act as it stands now will serve the province of Alberta well. I know that in my riding there has been unanimous consent by the people in the Grande Cache area to leave the Willmore as it is. I've also attended a number of functions, Mr. Speaker, across Alberta put on by the Willmore wilderness foundation, where people have continued to say: "Leave the park the way it is. Let us be stewards of that land. We use it, we know what we're doing, and we have to look after it as it should be."

Mr. Speaker, I think that when you look at the UNESCO sites, there are a number of things that I have concerns over. One is the protection and management. Protection and management of world heritage property should ensure that the outstanding universal value and the conditions of integrity and/or authenticity at the time of inscription are maintained or enhanced in the future. All properties inscribed on the world heritage list must have adequate long-term legislative, regulatory, institutional, and/or traditional protection and management to ensure their safeguarding. This protection should also include adequately delineated boundaries. Similarly, state parties should demonstrate adequate protection at the national, regional, municipal, and/or traditional level for the nominated property.

Mr. Speaker, you know, I've spent some time dealing with UNESCO sites, being that I live in and represent West Yellowhead. I also live in Jasper national park, which is a world heritage site. I can talk to you about when we were involved in the Cheviot mine and trying to get that mine going south of Hinton, which was an expansion of the Cardinal River coal mine. I can remember the letter I got from the UNESCO world heritage people saying that the Cardinal River mine should not go ahead because of its proximity to a world heritage site. That mine is in production today, employs over 300 people, and is one of the main economies of the town of Hinton. It is also a wildlife sanctuary. There are grizzly bears, there are elk, there are deer, there are moose, there are wolves, and there are cougars all within that mine site. Sheep: actually, people pay up to $250,000 for the minister's permit to shoot bighorn sheep, which come off that property of Cardinal River.

The other thing that concerns me, Mr. Speaker, with UNESCO's designation is buffer zones. Wherever necessary for the proper conservation of the property an adequate buffer zone should be provided. For the purpose of the effective protection of the nominated property a buffer zone is an area surrounding the nominated property which has complementary legal and/or customary restrictions placed on its use and development to give an added layer of protection to the property.

Mr. Speaker, when you look at the size of the Willmore wilderness area, it's 4,600 square kilometres. When you get outside of the Willmore area, especially to the east and the south, you're into Grande Cache and the eastern foothills of the Rockies. One of the important economic developments that is happening across this country now is shale gas. Shale gas deposits are prominent within the Grande Cache and area south towards Hinton, and I can tell you that companies like EnCana, Talisman, CNRL are all working towards developing those areas. Those areas are also a major economic boom to this province. As we see conventional gas prices start to decline and we see oil prices up and down, we need the shale gas. Also, we have coal mines and coal mine deposits all along the eastern slopes of the Rockies.

If you look at a buffer zone, Mr. Speaker, what would be considered adequate? Is it one mile? Is it five miles? Is it 10 miles? Is it 20 miles? In the Grande Cache area the town of Grande Cache butts right up against Willmore wilderness park. You have Foothills Forest Products that, if they were within the buffer zone, would go under. That's 265 people unemployed in the town of Grande Cache. You've got Grande Cache Coal, which butts up right next to Willmore wilderness area. That would be over 500 people out of work in Grande Cache. You have ConocoPhillips, EnCana, CNRL, Talisman, you know, that employ hundreds of people in the Grande Cache area.

The only thing that wouldn't be affected – and I don't know if that's true or not – would be the jail. We have a federal institution in Grande Cache that employs about 300 people. That would be the only economic employment in this community. Also, it would affect, you know, right down along the eastern slopes.

Mr. Speaker, while I'm talking about the Willmore wilderness park, I'd be remiss to also not talk about Y2Y, which is Yellowstone to Yukon. These areas also employ the eastern slopes. This is something that we as a government and all our colleagues in government should be aware of.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I want to applaud and support the hon. Member for West Yellowhead for bringing forth this legislation. I will be voting in favour of it, but I do have reservations that I want to get on the record. First off, if we had the accomplishment of our land-use framework, for which I want to offer a bouquet to our current finance minister, the MLA for Foothills-Rocky View, for getting the discussion going – if we actually had a land-use framework bill in place with all its regulations, then this Willmore wilderness park, that's the subject of Motion 507, would be dealt with under designated land use.

At the same time I'd like to offer a challenge to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development, the MLA for Grande Prairie-Smoky, to follow up the work that was begun by the hon. Member for Foothills-Rocky View but has yet to be completed. With the sustainable resources network based on six watershed regions being the basis for land use, I think a lot of the conflicts between land usage will be dealt with.

I'm hoping that at some point this government moves from the concept of multi-use to priority use. You know, without going Roger Miller on you, there are certain activities, roller skating in a buffalo herd being one of them, that you cannot do simultaneously in the same area. Right now in Alberta we have over 350 parks and protected areas, yet only 40 of these have management plans. So for the Willmore wilderness park to be protected, the enforcement has to be there as well to ensure that the traditional usages, as the hon. member has pointed out, since the early 1900s are maintained and protected. What we do need is oversight through a management plan, and we need the enforcement through combination and cross-ministerial co-operation between the ministries of Sustainable Resource Development and Tourism, Parks and Recreation, and we need also, obviously, co-operation through the Ministry of Environment to ensure that the pristine and natural nature of this area is preserved.

Now, the hon. Member for West Yellowhead pointed out what the act states. I would like to add to it. The Willmore Wilderness Park Act also permits the Lieutenant Governor in Council to make regulations increasing or decreasing the size of the park. I hope there is never a thought of decreasing the size of the park. Most importantly for myself and the members of my caucus, it prohibits industrial activity in the park, including but not limited to mining, geological and geophysical exploration, water management, hydroelectric power, pulp and paper mills, sawmills, and other forest-related activities. In other words, it keeps it at its historical purpose, which was the conservation and protection of its natural resources.

The point of this act is to allow First Nations and Métis and, to a degree, guiding outfitters to continue to practise their historically approved activities within the park. I understand, but I will come from the other side of the debate, about making it a world-protected site, because I believe that with the proper enforcement, that would potentially add extra security to the area because there would be a global standard in terms of the protection of this wilderness area.

I do want to raise, however, some concerns that were brought to us by the Alberta Wilderness Association concerning Willmore wilderness park because I want to have them on the record. Hopefully, this motion will address these concerns. Willmore wilderness concerns:

- A management plan that addresses key concerns for the Willmore, including wildlife, watersheds, wilderness protection, fire programs, trail system maintenance and recreation is urgently needed.

As I stated before, we have over 350 parks and protected areas and very few management plans to guarantee that they are kept in a maintained manner. I know you can love a park to death, but in this case the park, to some degree, has not been managed and enforced to the extent that I believe it deserves.

Another concern that the Alberta Wilderness Association brings forward:

- Pressures for inappropriate resource development such as commercial recreational use. Recreational developments including a downhill ski operation, golf course and alpine village, as well as new roadways for off-road vehicles have been proposed in and near Willmore Wilderness Park.

Now, the hon. member talked about a buffer zone, and hopefully that will be part of this motion because it's absolutely essential that we don't have overlap and cross-purposing within this natural site.

The Alberta Wilderness Association also has concerns over

- commercial sales and inappropriate development of registered traplines that include increased and out-of-season use of ORV's and the growth in size and numbers of associated cabins.
- Non-commercial recreational use [is a concern]. Trails must be maintained for the safety of park users and to limit their impact on the park. The rules of the area, including a prohibition on off-highway-vehicle use must be enforced.

In other words, we've got this pristine jewel; let's maintain it in its pristine, natural state.

- Pressure to remove boating prohibitions for the section of the Smoky River in the park.

As I stated to begin with,

- lack of official stewardship is allowing trails to become eroded in some areas and unsafe in others due to lack of maintenance.

I've seen that in my own personal experience working in Cataract Creek. The danger of not maintaining pathways means that you end up closing them, and you limit the recreational experience.

- Backcountry guardianship is almost non-existent and few parks people know the Willmore, except perhaps from aerial overviews.

We talk about police feet on the beat. Well, we need people, conservation officers and SRD, regularly patrolling this area along with the people that usually sit on a regular basis and provide their input and observation and their love turned into enforcement.

- Lack of fire has allowed the former excellent wildlife habitat of the area to become overgrown with shrubbery and trees and poor for ungulates in particular. Fire hazards are also building to the point where conflagrations may be supported once the area burns. A program of controlled burns to create habitat and relieve fuel loads is important.

Fire suppression is also nature suppression.

- Species at risk such as the grizzly and mountain caribou are not receiving adequate official attention.

These are the concerns, and I believe they're just concerns that the Alberta Wilderness Association has put forward. However, it is my belief that by working with associations such as the Alberta Wilderness Association, the government can accomplish this.

I will end as I began. The important work begun by the current finance minister, the Member for Foothills-Rocky View, must be followed up on by the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development, the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky. This is something that is of value to all Albertans, whether we live in the north or not. We need to designate our parks and protected areas, and we need to protect them.

Thank you for allowing me to contribute.

The Deputy Speaker: The chair has a list of speakers here. The first three would be the hon. Solicitor General, the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, and the hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House.

The hon. Solicitor General.

Mr. Oberle: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to participate in this debate. I thank the hon. Member for West Yellowhead for bringing forward this very interesting topic that kind of hits near and dear to my heart as a practising forester in the province of Alberta for many, many years. It's kind of interesting that we've always set aside pieces of land in our province and around the world to protect although it was always poorly defined exactly what protect meant. Certainly, Alberta has a history and examples of protected areas. Jasper and Banff are jewels of our national parks system. Wood Buffalo park: we've had protected areas for a very long time.

The discussion around protected areas and what they should be and what they provide and all those things was refined greatly over the years. Somewhere around the time that the United Nations released the Brundtland commission report, there was a world-wide effort to start talking about protection of ecosystems, functioning ecosystems, functioning populations, those kinds of things. There was a mad rush, you know: Canada's convention on biodiversity and those sorts of things.

We've talked about protected areas more and more. Somewhere along the line we've towed along this very old concept that we can increase the level of protection for a piece of land by being increasingly restrictive of its use. In some places it's a park. We can put trailers and have weekend camping, but nobody is talking about protecting an ecosystem in that case. We might be protecting a scenic view shed or something like that.

By being increasingly restrictive of use, eliminating industrial activity and eliminating hunting, fishing, trapping, other uses up to the point where we would build a chain fence or a wall around a piece of ground: now it's really protected. And that might, in fact, be true if our objective was to protect some static entity; historic rock paintings, for example. It could be very clearly demonstrated that if humans weren't allowed anywhere near it, that's how it's going to last the longest, and if you allow people up to touch it, that's how it's going to last the least. In that particular case, being very restrictive of access does in fact lead to increased or more rigorous protection.

What about if the value we're trying to protect is not static? Ecological values – for example, functioning ecosystems, functioning populations – are not static, and simply putting a fence around them doesn't preserve them for future generations. That's been proven in spades. You know, some of that thinking came out of Cape Breton Highlands national park, where they allowed a system to evolve that was all over-mature spruce and fir. The budworm came in and cleaned it out, just wiped that park out in a matter of weeks at way higher levels than normally would have happened because we didn't intervene and create a population situation there that would have handled a spruce budworm outbreak.

You may be able to make the argument that we're setting ourselves up for disaster from fire or pine beetle in some of our parks by doing exactly the same thing: refusing to intervene. But you'll notice that in Jasper park, for example, they've been quite proactive over the last few years about habitat maintenance or landscape vegetation maintenance. They're doing burns. They're actually doing single-tree logging events. It's wonderful, and they're trying to maintain a condition for future generations. That's the point of protection when it comes to an ecosystem. It's a dynamic system. You have to decide what future condition you want and then: what action and tools do I need to take in order to make that future condition hold true?

In just ignoring it, it isn't going to happen. The only thing that you know is that it won't stay in its current condition. It's going to change. Our forests are dynamic, and the populations that live in them are dynamic. So we require management plans. I agree with the hon. member and the hon. Member for West Yellowhead. We do require management plans because we want to define what condition we want to maintain this protected area in and what we have to do to ensure that it stays in that condition.

The "what do we have to do?" requires some form of intervention. It's often habitat intervention, controlled burns or some other disturbance, that will alter the vegetation pattern on the landscape, but it could be population intervention as well. In that regard, I wholeheartedly support the efforts of the Member for West Yellowhead in that I believe that hunting, fishing, trapping, those activities, are highly effective management tools and can be used in accordance with a management plan to make a system unfold the way we want it to unfold, which will give us the future desired condition that we want, which is why we protected the area in the first place.

Merrily sticking our heads in the sand, putting a fence around something, and saying that it's protected will not work. We need active management tools, and the tools that the hon. Member for West Yellowhead defined are certainly part of a wide tool box of interventions that we could do in order to achieve a desired condition in a protected area.

I strongly support the member's motion, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, followed by the hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure and an honour to rise today to speak to Motion 507, proposed by the hon. Member for West Yellowhead. At first blush, when I looked at this, it looked like a negative motion, a move that would not bring forward changes. But on a closer look at it, it's apt. It's very apt. This motion focuses on preserving the Willmore Wilderness Park Act. I'll go a step further, then, from what the other hon. members have said. It's been suggested – and I think the suggestion could possibly be true – that by the inclusion of the Willmore wilderness into the UNESCO world heritage site designation, there may be no need for the Willmore Wilderness Park Act once this designation is made.

Therein, Mr. Speaker, lies the problem. As we've been discussing, the Willmore Wilderness Act was passed in 1959. It was an act promoted by locals, introduced in 1959 by Norman Willmore, the MLA for Edson. This act established the Willmore wilderness park, where traditional land uses, including trapping, hunting, fishing, and outfitting, would be permitted and preserved. This act also restricts all motor vehicles from the area, where the only permitted transportation is by foot, horse, or bicycle. The Willmore Wilderness Act was clearly legislation created by the people for the people of Alberta. It was created so that there would be assurances of the proper management and conservation of resources within the park as well as ensuring the perpetuation of traditional activities such as outfitting, hunting, fishing, and trapping.

Alberta has a rich history of locally driven environmental legislation that protects our environment as well as traditional land uses; for example, the Wilderness Areas, Ecological Reserves, Natural Areas and Heritage Rangelands Act, which became law in the late 1990s. This act defines and preserves significant ecological areas across Alberta. They were divided into wilderness area designations with respective specific regulations. Similar ecological reserves, natural areas, and heritage rangelands had their own distinct regulations as well, with ecological reserves being the most restrictive.

I was a part of the discussions for the areas in my part of the province; namely, the southeast of Alberta. I co-chaired the committee that looked into all the applications and met with stakeholders to determine the significance of each area and then recommended the approved areas for designation. Our committee was charged with not only coming up with appropriate areas but were given parameters that stated there must be a certain percentage of Alberta lands designated in both ecological reserves and in natural areas.

At the beginning, Mr. Speaker, there was no mention of heritage rangelands. This particular designation came up when the committee could not come up with the desired percentage for natural areas. Our committee agreed to the new designation with restrictions: one, that it would remain under Alberta agriculture, as the grazing leases were then; second, that all existing uses would be maintained. Since then, heritage rangelands, because it's within an all-inclusive act, is now under Alberta Tourism, Parks and Recreation. The mandate of this ministry is somewhat different from the mandate of Agriculture.

Another example. The Alberta Hunting, Fishing and Trapping Heritage Act is another example of legislation that protects our traditional land uses and also our cultural values. This act created a statutory right to hunt, fish, and trap that could be defended in court. I had the honour of bringing this act forward and having it proclaimed. Again, this is legislation that many Albertans support, specifically because it's part of their heritage. That's why so many Albertans support the Willmore Wilderness Park Act, not only because it was established by locals but because it has proven effective in maintaining and sustaining the Willmore wilderness park.

The Willmore Wilderness Park Act is a clear example of locals pursuing environmental sustainability in a way that maintains traditional land uses. Willmore park, Mr. Speaker, is considered one of the best-kept secrets, in large part due to the act that regulates it. The land stewardship of this park is exceptional, which may be why some have suggested it be incorporated into a UNESCO world heritage site. If for the past 50 years the Willmore Wilderness Park Act has led to effective management of this park, there is no need to change it. I support the act as it is now. It doesn't need to be amended or abolished to fit in with any international guidelines or regulations. The present act is a strong piece of legislation that will ensure the environmental sustainability of this park as well as the traditional land uses well into the future.

For me, the concerns far outweigh the advantages of being a UNESCO site. I thank our hon. colleague from West Yellowhead for introducing this motion, and I do not have anything whatsoever against UNESCO or the strong mandate that they have and the prestigious recognition that designation as a world heritage site would bring to the Willmore wilderness. What is of concern to me, Mr. Speaker: as I noted in my example of what has happened with the heritage rangeland designation, being now administered by a totally different body from what it was originally intended with a vastly different mandate, these grazing lands are now under parks administration. This is what I fear may happen: to a much larger degree it's an organization – and I'm talking about UNESCO – not located in Alberta and not having the same knowledge of the history and values of Alberta and Albertans who would suddenly be in charge. I'm sure the intent is to have things remain as they are right now, but as my previous example showed, I'm suspicious of management by people who are not from here but, rather, from around the world and with headquarters in New York.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I would urge all members of this House to stand in support of Motion 507. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Lund: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the hon. Member for West Yellowhead for bringing this very important topic to the floor of the House. I had the privilege of being in the Willmore wilderness along about '57, '58, in that time frame. I was one of those bad guys with industry going into that pristine area.

Mr. Groeneveld: Still are.

Mr. Lund: Okay.

I had the opportunity to be in that area again a couple of times not that many years ago, and I was really pleased to see how little things have changed and how this act actually has protected the area. As the Member for Peace River was talking about with an ecosystem, with an area of that size certainly you are able to protect an ecosystem and have it work. Of course, it's over 50 years since it was proclaimed a provincial park by Dr. Norman Willmore. Incidentally, I believe he was the minister that was killed in an accident between here and Edson on the highway. I remember that situation was a very sad occasion because he certainly knew the portfolio that he had and did a lot of good things with it.

When you look at the activities that are permitted in that area, it's very, very important to recognize that our parks act is a very protective piece of legislation. It does give the opportunity for management plans that can vary some, but it restricts a lot of the activity that would tend to destroy an ecosystem. As the Member for Peace River was talking about, these things do change, so there are times when perhaps we need to intervene. I remember about 15 years ago or so, when rabies was going rampant and a lot of the wildlife was dying from that disease, there was some intervention in that case to try to limit the area that was being affected.

But I'm really worried if we start turning these things over to, say, UNESCO. For the life of me, I don't understand why some Albertans would be supporting this particular move. It's not a lot different than the Y to Y, the Yellowstone to Yukon, concept. That would be taking a strip all along the national parks from the Montana border clear up and through Alberta and on into Yukon. This concept, of course, was something that we dealt with back in the year 2000, even with the national parks. I remember meeting with one of the superintendents. He suggested to me that we should have a buffer zone in Alberta for the park, and they would manage the buffer zone. I said: that's fine as long as we have an area inside the park that we would manage. Of course, that wasn't acceptable. So it was a one-way street. With so many things like this, that's really the way it works.

The people in Alberta that promote this sort of thing: you have to look at where they're coming from and what their ideas are. Quite frankly, they are in the minority, and this is the only way that they feel they could get the opportunity to govern, not just to have input – we provide them input – but actually get the opportunity to govern. When you look at the park act, when you look at what it's done for the Willmore, I don't believe they could manage it any better. I think it's just wonderful the way it's currently being managed.

To think about turning this over to an organization like UNESCO – I remember an incident that we had down at Dinosaur provincial park where an oil company drilled a well just inside the park. If I remember right, it was 70 feet. That was an interesting one. It created a huge, huge incident. Because it's a UNESCO site, it got international play. Quite frankly, it was a stupid mistake that somebody made. If you look at the boundary of the park, it's right along the lip of the valley except for this one little place where there was a quarter section that came up maybe a hundred feet and then back over, just a little triangular area. Somehow the surveyors missed it. The well went in. They drilled. It started producing. Then somebody discovered that, well, really, it's on the edge of the park. It was one of those wells where there was no surface disturbance. The road that came into it: there was some disturbance there. They managed to reseed with the natural grass so that all you would see as you were coming up to it in a helicopter would be this little green strip. That's all you could see. But it was an international event, and that was all because it had been turned over to UNESCO.

I'm really pleased that we have this opportunity to nip this in the bud. There are areas like the one at Dinosaur provincial park.

There's access to the area. If you'd turned this over – there are some that are saying: well, it's a great thing to do because of tourism. Well, really, that means that you're going to have to have the access in there, and you're going to have a lot more people accessing the area. Of course, they're not satisfied with just leaving it in the wilderness state. There are a lot of things that happen if you have too many people going into an area.

I'm very pleased that we are going to pass this, I would hope unanimously, to send the right message out that this motion is a good motion and that we don't want to change it. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed an honour to rise and speak to this motion, Motion 507, on the Willmore wilderness park. I'd like to thank the Member for West Yellowhead for bringing forward this legislation as it looks like good legislation for both the park and the people whom this act is meant to serve and to assist in their way of life. For instance, traditional land-use activities are an important way of life for the aboriginal communities in the Willmore area, and we should not be seeking limitations on these practices without good reason. We heard some of those good reasons brought up by the Solicitor General, that these forests and these areas do not live in isolation, that you don't just put up a fence or a brick wall, that these forests and wild areas don't prosper in that way. It takes interaction in the way they've always been used and have interaction with, I guess, other beings and other activities to make these wild areas flourish.

Now, the second component of that is that although we like to have these areas that have all this activity going on in them to sustain the health of the area, there's a tipping point when there is too much human interaction. That's why conservation organizations such as the Alberta Wilderness Association believe that consumptive activities like hunting and trapping are sustainable, but they have to be managed properly under the values of healthy wildlife populations and biodiversity. That's where this act and our protection of this park have to be co-ordinated with our Sustainable Resource Development department to monitor the effects of any activity in the Willmore wilderness park.

Like I said, I agree with this act. I agree on having healthy, active wild areas such as the Willmore wilderness park. They have to have some of these activities. We also have to monitor these as Alberta is 3.5 million people, heading for 5 million people. Lots of activities with industry are going on in that area and industry that should go on in that area, but with all that activity, with us doing some of these things, it needs continued monitoring and continuing enforcement. The boots-on-the-street analogy by my hon. colleague for Calgary-Varsity was very right. Without adequate enforcement these good things we do in this Legislature become meaningless.

On that note, I would encourage some of these things to be done through our land-use framework and through the development of our policies and practices through that framework and the various divisions that are laid out in there.

There are also some areas that are noted for improvement from those in the park itself. Willmore wilderness park needs an updated park management plan that addresses a number of concerns voiced by environmental and conservation groups. A draft plan was apparently prepared in 1980 but not finalized. Like I said, the government needs to move forward on the implementation of the land-use framework, and consultative mechanisms with aboriginal populations need to be renewed and strengthened in advance of any discussions about traditional land-use activities.

Nonetheless, despite these reservations and despite this advice, if I could call it that, to the government, I think this is a good step forward and will allow for sound forestry management and sound management of the Willmore wilderness park as well as allow for traditional usage by our aboriginal communities of many and much of the wilderness and streams and for trapping and the like.

Nevertheless, those are my comments. Thank you very much for allowing me to speak on the record on this very good motion.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti, followed by the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased and honoured today to speak to Motion 507. The purpose of Motion 507 is to ensure that the government of Alberta continues to recognize the Willmore Wilderness Park Act as it is. The Willmore Wilderness Park Act promotes the management and conservation of the resources within Willmore wilderness park and provides the legislative assurance of the traditional activities like outfitting, trapping, hunting, and fishing.

Activities like hunting and fishing are key elements of conservation. Hunters and fishers are true conservationists. By continuing to support their activities, as Motion 507 urges, the Willmore wilderness park will continue to be preserved for future generations. Albertans have exemplified their dedication to conservation, and as such Motion 507 promotes that Willmore wilderness park stay fully within Alberta jurisdiction. The Willmore Wilderness Park Act has proven effective in maintaining and sustaining Willmore wilderness park for the past 50 years and will continue to do so in the future.

Mr. Speaker, I've been going to this park since the 1960s as a boy with my dad on horseback trips, and I can attest to you that this park has been maintained and is in as good a state today as it was 40 years ago. In fact, I have pictures of the side of a mountain from a friend of my dad's from the 1930s, and looking at the same site last year, the site looks better today than it did then because back then it was burnt. The whole side of the mountain was burnt black and didn't look that great, but it looks good today, I can tell you. In fact, it's even harder to find the old trails. Like, there used to be trails from the natives and the hunters from years ago back there. Now you can't even find the trails on horseback. It's grown back into its natural state.

I suggest that we leave the park in the control of Albertans, as it is. It's beautiful back there in the mountains, the intersection mountain where the Alberta-B.C. border is and where it bends to go south. If you get up on that mountain, you can see a long ways, and you can see no sign of man or interference. I'd like to keep this for my children and my grandchildren.

I would like to thank my colleague the Member for West Yellowhead for bringing Motion 507 forward. I fully support it, and I encourage all members to support it.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

5:50

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's also my privilege to rise today and speak in favour of Motion 507. I would like to also thank the Member for West Yellowhead for bringing this motion forward. I've listened with interest and intently to the presentations that have already been made this afternoon and certainly support the sentiment that has been expressed. I have to admit that I have not actually been in the Willmore wilderness park but had the opportunity to visit it online to view some of the absolutely fabulous pictures that have been taken and put online with regard to Willmore.

While I haven't actually been to the park, I certainly support the principle that other members have brought forward here this afternoon. When you look at an area that's 46,000 square kilometres and it has been protected by local input and the dedication of local residents of that area for more than 50 years and hearing the other members who have talked about the way that this park has been preserved and protected by the existing Willmore Wilderness Park Act, I see no reason why we would want to further restrict activity that has gone on in that area for very many years.

I had the opportunity to go on the Willmore Wilderness Foundation website. The mission of that organization is to preserve the history of the area, focus on the advancement of education of the park, restore historical pack trails and sites, and enhance the use of the Willmore wilderness park for Albertans and visitors alike. That is a success story that I certainly want to support.

Again, the principle of not adding further restrictions when there is not a need to do that, I think, is something that we need to respect. I want to thank the Member for West Yellowhead for bringing that issue forward. It's one that he certainly knows well and has a great deal of experience with, and I appreciate his asking me to make some comments with regard to this this afternoon.

Mr. Speaker, I certainly support the intent of this motion and look forward to being able to support it. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Do any other hon. members wish to speak on the motion?

Seeing none, the chair shall now call on the hon. Member for West Yellowhead to close the debate on Motion 507.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Motion 507 may not be popular among certain environmentalists who have urged a greater global control over Alberta lands and especially the natural lands, but I can say that Motion 507 will instill confidence in Albertans who are concerned about the ramifications of transforming the Willmore wilderness park as a UNESCO world heritage site.

The Willmore Wilderness Park Act has proven effective in maintaining and sustaining our Willmore wilderness park. The Willmore wilderness act is an example of locals pursuing environmental sustainability in a way that maintains traditional land uses. Mr. Speaker, the Willmore wilderness act is popular among many of the locals in the Grande Cache area as well as many Albertans from all over this great province who participate in activities in the Willmore wilderness park.

I would ask all my colleagues to support this motion, and I would like to thank all of my colleagues who spoke today on behalf of it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 507 carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:54 p.m. to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, April 13, 2010

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon and welcome back.

Let us pray. Guide us so that we may use the privilege given us as elected Members of the Legislative Assembly. Give us the strength to labour diligently, the courage to think and to speak with clarity and conviction and without prejudice or pride. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Hon. members, today in the Speaker's gallery and in the members' gallery and in the public gallery are a number of special guests. The Royal Canadian Legion, Alberta-NWT Command, takes a keen interest in promoting Mr. Speaker's MLA for a Day program. We're very appreciative of both their financial support and their involvement in this annual event, which began yesterday afternoon and will conclude later this afternoon.

In the Speaker's gallery are Mr. Bill Fecteau, the Legion's command chairman. I'm going to ask him and the other individuals that I identify to all rise. Mr. Fecteau is accompanied by the students' chaperones: Rod Stewart, president of the Vegreville branch and past command vice-president; Joyce Stewart, past president and executive committee member, Vegreville branch; Ted Latimer, district 8 commander, Alberta-NWT Command; Donna Latimer, a member of the Onoway branch; Karen Bruens, past district 3 commander, member of the Vegreville branch; John Ferguson, past president, Canmore branch, and member of the Cochrane branch; Gloria Rogers, president, ladies auxiliary of the Alberta-NWT Command; Sharon Fedak, first vice-president, ladies auxiliary of the Alberta-NWT Command.

Seventy-eight students joined us yesterday and today – that's a record number – as participants in the MLA for a Day program. Yesterday the participants spent time with the Royal Canadian Legion, debated a resolution in this Assembly last night, and toured the Legislature Building. This morning they were here in this Chamber sitting in your chairs, and a very special seminar was held for them. They also visited with a number of members in their offices today and joined us for lunch prior to Oral Question Period today.

These young people are seated in the members' and public galleries, and the Legion members are in the Speaker's gallery. I'd ask all of them now to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two very special guests: Krys Kunicki-Tadman, a constituent of mine, a wonderful friend, and a tireless volunteer, along with her cousin Krystyna Tichnow, who is here from Poland visiting Alberta for the very first time. Along with visiting a number of places in Edmonton and around the province, they'll be enjoying a tour of this beautiful Legislature Building later this afternoon. Given the tragic events which took place in Krystyna's homeland on the weekend, may we extend to her and her family both our heartfelt welcome and our heartfelt sympathy. They're seated in the members' gallery, and I'd ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome.

Mr. Speaker, I also have the honour and privilege of introducing to you and through you to members of the Assembly a hundred enthusiastic, bright, and inquisitive students from St. Mary/St. Monica school in my constituency. St. Mary/St. Monica is a school that I brag about a lot when I'm talking around the province to people about education. We have a hundred students accompanied by their teachers Thérèse Coates, Michelle Armstrong, Jesse Diachuk, Tracee Laba, assistant Amanda Sergeant, and student teachers Brian Vaughan, Stephanie Hay, and Samantha Dudar. I mention student teachers particularly because St. Mary/St. Monica stylize themselves as a professional learning school because they do so much to help educate teachers in our province. They are seated in the members' gallery and the public gallery, and I'd ask them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a great friend, colleague, and, of course, our leader of the Wildrose Alliance Party, Ms Danielle Smith, and her wonderful executive assistant, Ms Shannon Stubbs. If they could please rise. Danielle is travelling the province meeting and listening with Albertans across this great land, and it's an honour to serve with both of them. I'd ask that the Assembly please give them a warm reception.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour and a privilege to introduce to you and through you to our Assembly parents of our current page Rayleen Nicolajsen. They are here observing Rayleen in her role as a page during her last session here at the Alberta Legislature. Joining us today in the Speaker's gallery are her father, Steen Nicolajsen, and her mother, Colleen Nicolajsen. Steen works as a quality control officer and service co-ordinator for Ackard Contractors, and Colleen is the account administrator at North Pointe Community Church, which is in Edmonton-Castle Downs. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly my good friend and constituent Mrs. Patricia Bencz, the executive director of the Our House Addiction Recovery Centre. Our House is a long-term facility for men over the age of 18 who have been in addiction for an average of 20 years. They've spent about 160 days in other facilities before coming to Our House. Often these people come in with concurrent disorders. It's the 25th anniversary of the facility. It's a very tough job. Patricia, I want to thank you very much for doing it and would ask everyone to join me in the traditional greeting.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Holocaust Memorial Day

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a great honour and a privilege for me to rise today – actually, it should have been yesterday – in commemoration of Yom ha-Shoah, also known as Holocaust Memorial Day. This year Holocaust Memorial Day fell upon Sunday, April 11, in accordance with the Jewish lunar calendar.

Mr. Speaker, the Holocaust was one of the worst atrocities committed in the history of mankind. The lives of over 6 million Jewish men, women, and children were senselessly ended in addition to countless others who were systematically persecuted and annihilated at the hands of the Nazi regime.

On November 16, 2000, the Holocaust Memorial Day and Genocide Remembrance Act was proclaimed by this Legislature so that we may do our part to ensure that these innocent victims will never be forgotten. While we cannot change history, we must all do our part to learn from the tragedies of the past and never permit them to happen again.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Public Service Pension Plans

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Retirement is a critical time for every Albertan. Albertans make great efforts and work very hard to plan their retirement, setting aside funds to carry them through their golden years. Some use RRSPs, some have employer pensions. Members of Alberta's public service depend upon plans such as the Alberta teachers' retirement fund, the public service pension plan, and the local authorities pension plan.

These plans should have provided dedicated public servants with benefits sufficient to ensure a comfortable retirement. The Alberta Society for Pension Reform, however, claims that this government has let them down. In a statement delivered to all MLAs, a statement I encourage all members to read, these pensioners state that the Alberta government promised pension benefits of 60 per cent of preretirement income after 30 years of service and 70 per cent after 35 years of service. Members of the public service pension plan and the local authorities pension plan, furthermore, were promised that cost-of-living increases would keep up with the actual cost of living. Finally, and most importantly, the Alberta government guaranteed the payment of these pensions.

The society claims that the Alberta government has broken each of these promises. They go on to call these three government of Alberta pension plans among the worst government pension plans in Canada. According to the society the Tories took this retirement savings and used the money as general revenue to pay off the debt and build infrastructure, leaving the pension funds empty. Furthermore, cost-of-living increases were scaled back, co-ordinated benefits were slashed, joint life pensions were reduced, and during the '90s many workers were forced into early retirement, further reducing their benefits, in some cases up to 16 per cent. Now the government will no longer guarantee the payment of pensions.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I would urge all hon. members of this Assembly and others interested to please visit the albertapensionreform.ca website for more information on this issue.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

League of Ukrainian Canadians Anniversary League of Ukrainian Canadian Women Anniversary

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour for me to rise today and acknowledge the upcoming milestone celebrations on April 17 of two very important organizations, namely, the League of Ukrainian Canadians, Edmonton branch, 60th anniversary, and the League of Ukrainian Canadian Women, Edmonton branch, 55th anniversary.

Mr. Speaker, the League of Ukrainian Canadians was first established under its original name, the Canadian League for the Liberation of Ukraine, at a founding conference on December 25, 1949. The league held its original name until 1991, following the dissolution of the Soviet Union, when Ukraine was proclaimed an independent country. The League of Ukrainian Canadians is well known for many political advocacy and public engagement initiatives to increase democracy and human rights for the Ukrainian people and also for raising the awareness of Ukrainian history, of which commemorating the Holodomor genocide in Ukraine of 1932-33 serves as one significant example.

Mr. Speaker, the League of Ukrainian Canadian Women also began at the founding conference on December 25, 1949, then known as the women's association of the Canadian league. The Edmonton branch was established in 1954, and in 1991 the organization was formally known as the League of Ukrainian Canadian Women. Over the past number of years activities have included the promotion of Ukrainian cultural heritage, education, humanitarian activities, and raising the spectre of women's challenges and issues in the Ukraine. The work of the Edmonton branch of the League of Ukrainian Canadian Women includes advocating for the release of political prisoners, organizing the funding and building of the Ukrainian Youth Unity Complex, located in Edmonton-Decore, and the creation of the Verkhovyna Choir, a gem in Edmonton's cultural landscape.

Mr. Speaker, I commend all the individuals in the past, present, and future involved in both of the organizations and Edmonton branches for their tireless commitment and dedication to raising peoples' consciousness as it pertains to Ukrainian history, heritage, culture, challenges, and issues.

Heartfelt thank you, Dyakuyu, and God bless these organizations as they celebrate their milestone anniversaries in the years to come. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Request for Unanimous Consent to Complete the Routine

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Premier's director of media relations, Jerry Bellikka, posted on Twitter that I had denied consent to recognize the Holocaust. I also got a call from a reporter saying that an MLA of this government was shopping the same story to various media outlets. This accusation is defamatory, it is patently false, and it is disgusting. I would highly suggest Mr. Bellikka retract the statement immediately.

Mr. Speaker, a few short months ago my sweetheart, Anita, and I visited Israel for three weeks. It is a beautiful nation with wonderful people of all faiths. One of the highlights for us was our visit to the Holocaust museum in Jerusalem. We walked reverently through that sacred place, taking in the heartbreaking display of the Nazis' evil and barbaric treatment of innocent Jewish men, women, and children. It was an amazing experience, one that Anita and I will cherish forever.

The Holocaust was one of the most horrific events in history. Six million Jews were murdered by Nazis out of blind racial hate and for no other reason. I want everyone to know that I, for one, will never, ever forget.

Mr. Speaker, the Premier's communications team has a long history of being inept, but this is something more. I remember the days when the Paul Martin and the Jean Chrétien Liberals used words like anti-Semitic, racist, anti-immigrant, redneck, scary, and sexist to describe the parties of Preston Manning and Stephen Harper. I never thought that this Premier's office would resort to the methods of Martin or Chrétien. People that have no new ideas or anything of value to add to the public discourse often resort to personal smears and fearmongering, and if history is any indication, Albertans will reject outright any party that resorts to such tactics.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Recognition of Slave Lake Constituents

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It has been said that the heart of a volunteer is their strength, their dedication, and their humility. For this reason I rise today to recognize the tremendous work of five of my constituents. Of course, all of them are really great.

On Friday, March 19, I attended the Alberta Association for Community Living President's Reception, where Barb MacIntyre from Slave Lake was announced to become the president-elect of AACL. Ms MacIntyre truly is one of a kind: always involved, always concerned, always doing something to advance AACL's agenda but also never afraid to give praise as needed to others or to nominate individuals from our community who have done some great things.

One individual at that same time was recognized. AACL presents yearly awards to individuals, organizations, and businesses that promote the concept and spirit of community inclusion for people with developmental disabilities. Mr. Tyler Warman from Boston Pizza in Slave Lake was honoured because of his conscious, proactive decision to hire a staff member with a developmental disability and do whatever it takes to support them. Through his example Mr. Warman has become a leader in our community by proving that people with developmental disabilities can be valuable employees and team members.

On March 27 I was honoured to be joined by the Member for West Yellowhead to help present fire services exemplary service medals to three of High Prairie Fire Department's most distinguished members: Mr. Dan Gillmor, with 24 years of service; Mr. Kenneth Melnyk, with 26 years of service; and Mr. Anthony Belli, with 30 years of service. We are incredibly grateful to have Dan, Ken, and Tony protecting our community, anticipating our most feared moments when we are not able to help ourselves in a dangerous environment but rely on their courage and their strength, putting our lives in their hands.

To all five of my constituents: you are the heart of our community for being exemplary role models and leaders whom we can all be proud of. Congratulations, and thank you for all that you have done and all that you continue to do.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Organ Donor Week

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I stand today to recognize Organ Donor Week, which takes place April 18 through 25 of this year. Organ donation has always been important to me. That is why I introduced Motion 518 this session, which urges the government to require Albertans to declare on the back of their Alberta health card whether or not they want their organs donated.

Becoming an organ donor is not difficult. All you need to do is carry an organ donor card in your wallet and discuss your wishes with your family. In 2008 there were 4,330 people on waiting lists for organ transplants in Canada, and of those, 215 people died while waiting for their organ transplant. Of the 2,083 transplants that took place, 1,541 were made possible because of organs from deceased donors. Organ donation is one of the last acts of charity you can make. In fact, one organ donor can save the lives of eight people and assist the lives of nearly 50 more. It is a way to turn a tragic event into a miracle for others.

There are more than 4,000 people waiting for an organ donation now, and each week five Canadians die waiting for the organ donation that does not come in time. I urge all members of this Assembly to consider organ and tissue donation and to discuss their choice with their families to declare their intent on their Alberta health card.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'd ask all of you to join with me in recognizing the birthday anniversary of one of our members today. It's an anniversary for the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, and I do want the hon. member to know that she should fear not: her secret remains with me. Happy birthday.

Clerk, hold the clock. Prior to the question period today I'd like to make a brief statement.

1:50

Statement by the Speaker

Rotation of Questions and Members' Statements

The Speaker: Hon. members, the chair wants to advise members of certain modifications that are required to the rotation of questions during Oral Question Period and to Members' Statements as a result of further changes in the composition of caucuses within this Assembly. Given the number of changes to the rotation and to the seating plan so far this session, the chair has attempted to integrate the new independent member into the rotation of questions and members' statements with a minimum of disruption to the existing order.

The Member for Calgary-Currie is entitled to the same number of questions as the other independent member, the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo. The Member for Calgary-Currie will be entitled to one question a week. In the rotation scheme used in the Assembly, today is considered day 4, and the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo is entitled to ask a question. Tomorrow, April 14, is day 1, and the Member for Calgary-Currie will be entitled to ask the sixth question. This position had belonged to the Official Opposition. To be clear, the only change to the question period rotation will be the substitution of the Member for Calgary-Currie to ask the sixth question on day 1.

Similarly, the Member for Calgary-Currie will be able to participate in Members' Statements on the same basis as the other independent member. Accordingly, his first opportunity to present a member's statement will be on day 31 of this session, which is Wednesday, April 21. This position had belonged to the Official Opposition.

The chair has provided revised calendars and outlines for the rulings just provided to all members.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Health Services Executive Bonuses

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Last year Alberta Health Services handed out executive bonuses when they had a projected deficit of $1.3 billion. The letters outlining the bonuses said, "Many of the typical individual and portfolio performance measures used to establish this payment were difficult to measure . . . and [not consistent] during this year of transition." To the Premier: how can the Premier defend a bonus of $129,000 of taxpayers' money for one person when your documents show you cannot measure the performance of that person?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the Alberta Health Services Board has taken decisive steps to overhaul the process of executive contract negotiations. The most important step is the establishment of a standardized contract for senior executives, which will cover all of the senior executives in Alberta Health Services.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Does the Premier support Alberta Health Services handing out bonuses larger than most Albertans make in a year as a reward for creating a $1.3 billion deficit while public-sector employees are facing wage freezes?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could address that on behalf of the Premier. We have to keep in mind here that stuff that occurred two or three years ago is a matter of history. What's more important is how we're going forward. When we have individuals who are handling a $10 billion budget, approximately, we have individuals who are looking after 400 different health facilities in the province, we have individuals who are helping to manage or work with approximately 90,000 employees across the province, it requires us to be very competitive in who we hire and how we hire.

Dr. Swann: Again to the Premier, Mr. Speaker: will the Premier order an immediate halt to the bonus system for Alberta Health Services' executives and restore some semblance of public confidence?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, with respect to executive bonuses we took a very big decision last year. We cancelled all senior level management bonuses within the government, which is $40 million. Alberta Health Services is following up on the leadership that this government has shown and is going to renegotiate all of the contracts and look at a consistent approach to all senior executive positions within Alberta Health Services.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. My first question is to the Premier. Given the information he's just given that there will be standardized contracts and given that he did the right thing and cancelled bonuses for other public executives, will these standardized contracts contain bonuses, or will he take a firm stand and ensure no bonuses are paid on any of these standardized contracts as they are negotiated? Which is it?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the Alberta Health Services Board has a mandate to negotiate senior executive level contracts, and they will look at the most appropriate model used to bring about efficiencies and improve access to health care. That's why we have appointed the board. They have the responsibility. If it's going to be top down all the time to every organization like that, we won't get the kind of achievements that we require in getting efficiencies in the system.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. My question, then, is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. It's a matter of public record that this minister will sign off on the contracts of senior executives in Alberta Health Services. Will this minister do the right thing and refuse to sign any contract that has a bonus?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the bonus system, as I indicated, is part of being competitive to attract the very best people into the most senior positions. However, in view of the difficult economic times we're in, it should be noted that bonuses paid out at the executive vice-president level or at the senior vice-president level are limited to 20 per cent only of their total yearly contracts.

Dr. Taft: Again to the Premier: given that the public experience of Alberta's health care system is a huge deficit, long waiting lists, overcrowded facilities, and a staff and physician satisfaction survey that is absolutely devastating, why won't he do the same thing he did for his deputy ministers and other public servants and eliminate bonuses in the health services system? Why not? What are they doing?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, as I said before, the decision rests with the Alberta Health Services Board. They will look at the best way to manage their senior executives. This is an issue that we dealt with within government. It brought about a savings of over $40 million. This came as a request from me and our government to our senior officials, who, by the way, did not contest. They just simply said: look, even though there's a contractual obligation, we're willing to give up our bonuses in order to achieve the savings in government that are necessary.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Small Business Assistance

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recent numbers show that insolvencies are up 9 per cent in Alberta and that there has been an almost 80 per cent increase in bankruptcy proposals over the past year. Now we find that Alberta is becoming a very minor player in venture capital markets, attracting only 6 per cent of venture capital dollars. We now have a situation where less and less money is going into building the economy. More and more people are suffering through the current crises, and all we get from government is increasingly hollow claims that Alberta will be the strongest economy and the first to recover. To the Premier: what will the Premier do to increase the availability of venture capital in Alberta?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we have taken bold steps to increase the amount of venture capital invested in the province. It first starts with the money that's invested in research. Then it leads to further commercialization of those ideas. In fact, we've set aside a hundred million dollars to attract much of the investment to Alberta. There were recent announcements, and there will continue to be more in terms of money coming to the province. We're on the right track.

The other thing, Mr. Speaker, is that we are debt free operationally. We don't have any debt in the bank to pay. We're keeping our taxes low. We're not increasing them. That is what attracts business to this province.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What is the Premier doing to deal with the fact that we have the highest per capita number of bankruptcies in the country?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we also had the hottest economy a number of years ago, when oil was $145, $147 a barrel. Those are some of the issues that the government, of course, is dealing with, but now the economy has settled down. There are very good green shoots in the economy coming forward, and we're going to see a good recovery not only in the number of businesses moving to Alberta but continued flow of people to Alberta because they do see this as a land of opportunity.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, when will the Premier admit that his do-nothing approach is only causing more and more pain for Alberta families and small businesses?

Mr. Stelmach: Well, Mr. Speaker, in terms of doing nothing, here we are a jurisdiction that said: no new taxes and no tax increases, no fee increases; we eliminated health care premiums for all Albertans. Those are all savings in the pockets of Albertans to be reinvested in the economy. I declare that compared to all jurisdictions in Canada, we have taken that leadership role, and we will continue. We will be the first to be in the black by 2012-13.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

2:00 Electricity Transmission System

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government uses words like "consult stakeholders and affected Albertans," but they believe the way to do this is to design fancy brochures, websites, and radio ads set up by their lobbyists, campaign teams, and party executives. Many Albertans describe the PC government as the old boys' club, nepotism, and party patronage. This government is telling Albertans that their Rolls-Royce power plan is a great deal and is needed, but Albertans are saying no. My question is to the Premier. If the Alberta Electric System Operator is an independent . . .

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I believe the question is with respect to the Alberta Utilities Commission. The Alberta Utilities Commission has the jurisdiction to decide where transmission lines are to be located. They also have the jurisdictional ability to work with landowners in terms of reasonable compensation for the construction of the power lines. They also have, of course, control of the cost of transmission because that is still one part that is regulated under the Alberta Utilities Commission.

Mr. Hinman: Well, it's clear that their new needs assessment program is what their party connections need, not what Albertans need. [interjections] Oh, hang on to your horses.

The Speaker: The hon. member signed a document to me not too many weeks ago agreeing that there would be no preambles. Why did he break his word? Proceed with your second question.

Mr. Hinman: Mr. Speaker, to the Premier: when the companies run ads to promote their power plans, does he believe that it should also be disclosed that the people in those ads are also members of the PC Party's executive?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, there was a comment made earlier, I believe, with respect to the fact that there isn't an increased demand for electricity in this province. That is totally bogus. Last March, when most of the province had about minus 35 degree weather, our demand on electricity in this province was in excess of 9,000 megawatts. When we were at minus 52 this last December – and most of the province was under the same weather system – our demand increased just within a number of months to 10,236 megawatts. So what that member has said is totally wrong.

Mr. Hinman: Well, the Premier needs to be informed a little bit better. [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. member has the floor.

Mr. Hinman: Given that the Premier knows so much, I'll ask him this question. Since this government takes very good care of its political allies, will this PC government let their campaign manager stick Albertans with a 30-year power purchase agreement so they can build an expensive nuclear plant here in Alberta?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I'm not quite sure where the question is going, but in terms of the nuclear policy for the province, we have not denied anyone any fuel source, whether it be wind, water, coal-fired, or even nuclear power. For any applications for nuclear, decisions will be based on a case-by-case basis, and of course the federal government has the most jurisdiction in this particular area. Really, the province plays a very minor role in terms of nuclear power.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

School Closures

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Parkdale, McCauley, Eastwood, Fulton Place, and Capilano schools are five schools that are on the chopping block tonight. At the same time, the Edmonton public school board is not getting any new resources to support the six schools that they are opening this September. The government is forcing school boards to shift resources from older schools to new ones. I want to ask the Minister of Education why he is forcing school boards to choose winners and losers when the families pay the price.

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, nobody is forcing anyone to choose winners and losers. What school boards do is make sure that they provide the best possible educational opportunities for all the students they serve within the resources that are available. It's totally wrong to say that there are no new resources for new schools as much as it's totally wrong to say that the closing of older schools that have lost their student populations is simply a money issue. It's about educational programming, and school boards are in the best position to determine how they can best provide educational programming for their students.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, given that it's absolutely clear from talking to the school board that they have to shift resources, both financial and personnel, from old schools to operate the new ones and that is the primary reason for these school closures, why won't the minister admit that his government's policy is forcing the school board to close these inner-city schools?

Mr. Hancock: Well, I wouldn't admit that, Mr. Speaker, because it's totally wrong. It's not a given that we're forcing school boards to move their resources. School boards have a number of physical resources, called schools, and they have a number of financial resources, and they have, of course, students that need to be served. They have the job of making sure they provide the best possible educational programming for the students that they have to serve. That's why we have local school boards, to meet that local need.

Mr. Mason: Well, he's going to be the minister of busing, not education, in a minute, Mr. Speaker.

Given that the school board is struggling to find ways to support staff for these new schools, it sure looks like they're going through the motions with the school closure process. I want to ask the Minister of Education to ensure that the Edmonton school board in this case but school boards around the province have the resources to operate new schools so they don't have to close old ones. That's what's happening, Mr. Minister.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is putting the opening of new schools and the closing of other schools into the same package in a very inappropriate way. New schools have been asked for in areas where there is an abundance of students and where an abundance of buses are moving those students longer distances to go to school. They have the resources. If there are students for those schools, then they have the resources to hire the teachers for those schools. That is not a problem. Where school boards do have a problem is keeping open a large number of buildings, many of them old building envelopes, many of them inefficient, paying for the resources to keep those schools open and provide the broad base of educational programs that are necessary for the students.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Education Funding

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wasn't sure if . . . [interjection] To the person across the way who said, "Quack, quack," you look like a duck.

Having said that, I spoke to students today from my constituency, three high school students. We've heard the government say that education is an investment, not an expense. As a follow-up, schools are being closed, programs are being cut, yet there's a contradiction: the government is blaming school boards. To the Minister of Education: can you please explain this contradiction? Why are you blaming school boards for the lack of funding by this government?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, nothing could be further from the truth. First of all, I don't know of any school in that particular member's jurisdiction that's been closed. In fact, we're trying to open them as fast as we can. The reality is that we have school boards in this province, and we have school boards in this province because we believe that the connection to the local community is a very important part of the educational process. If we're going to have school boards, we cannot be constantly second-guessing the decisions that are in their purview to make and taking those decisions out of their hands just because people don't like the decisions that are being made. They have to balance it, and they have to make tough decisions.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Boutilier: Yes. Thank you. Given the comments by the Minister of Education I want him to commit to this Assembly that he will not cut education in Edmonton or in Fort McMurray or in any one of the MLA's constituencies. Because he believes education is, in fact, an investment, not an expense, why don't you cut somewhere else, such as your own salaries, the 33 per cent you're giving yourself?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I don't know where this hon. member has been for the balance of the session that's happened so far when we've spent time talking about it. There are only two budgets that I know of – there may be more – that have gone up in this province. One is health, and the other is education, clearly indicating to the public of Alberta where this government's priorities are.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that he says that education is an investment, yet universities are being cut back, programs are being cut back, schools are being closed in his very own constituency, my question is: commit to this House that there will not be any further cuts to schools, laying off of teachers because of the commitment to education to those three young people that are in the gallery.

The Speaker: The hon. minister. [interjection] The hon. minister has the floor.

Mr. Hancock: What an absolute absurdity, Mr. Speaker, an absolute absurdity. Will I commit to this member that no teacher will ever be fired? It's just a few short years ago when we heard: how do we make sure that we have the best possible teachers, and how do we make sure that those that aren't the best teachers find other things to do? It would be absolutely absurd to guarantee to this member that there would never be any change in life or any change in the world. What I can say is this: education is a priority for this government. We've increased the funding, and all school boards have had access to that money.

The Speaker: I'm going out tonight to check if there really is a full moon.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. On October 26, 2009, the former Minister of Health and Wellness addressed the Public Accounts Committee, and he said: "Under the new model that the board chair [of Alberta Health Services] outlined earlier, the board is responsible for hiring, but the final sign-off comes through my office. So I guess it's joint, but the final signature is [the minister's.]" My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Will he exercise his authority as minister and refuse to sign any contracts that have performance bonuses in Alberta Health Services?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the bonus arrangement that may be in place between the CEO and the president of Alberta Health Services is between him and the board. If there are performance bonuses, and I suspect there are, with executive vice-presidents or senior vice-presidents, that's a matter of those vice-presidents and the CEO. What I can tell you is that there are very specific performance measures that are in place right now that deal with increasing access, shortening wait times, and providing Albertans with the outstanding health care excellence that they are accustomed to receiving.

Dr. Taft: Well, how are those performance measures working so far, Mr. Minister?

Why is the salary of the Deputy Minister of Health and Wellness frozen, and why is that bonus frozen but this minister still allowing the senior executives of Alberta Health Services to have a bonus? Why the double standard?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, it's true that bonuses are frozen for senior members of the government. Alberta Health Services is, of course, an arm's-length organization. They operate very much with their own scenarios, and they're doing a pretty good job of handling some very difficult and challenging circumstances. However, the important thing is that there is greater certainty today, that there is more stability, that there is greater predictability, and the five-year funding plan coming forward will ensure it.

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, this is the minister who boasted about being hands on and getting in there, and we know he's meddled and interfered and stepped into all kinds of decisions. Will he do the right thing and end this distorting system of bonuses that get paid to one very select, already incredibly wealthy section of the public service? Bring it to an end. Do the right thing.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I've indicated before and I want to stress this again: you have to engage the best people you can possibly find when you're administering about a $10 billion operational budget comprised of taxpayer dollars, when you're managing over 400 health care related facilities and you have a workforce totalling approximately 90,000 people. Those people are working very hard, and so too are these top-level managers.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Agricultural Assistance for Drought Recovery

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Eight years ago we had the worst drought in the province's history, and quite frankly we've had a lot of dry years between then and now. This is making farmers very nervous, especially this spring, when we've started off very dry. To the minister of agriculture. Every single farmer in this province knows that we've never lost a crop in April, but they're nervous, they need confidence, and they want to know what your department has done to prepare for what may be another very bad year.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It has in fact been a very, very difficult year on top of several before it. This past summer, as an example, we experienced the worst drought conditions since the Dirty Thirties, and this past winter, according to Environment Canada, the prairie provinces received precipitation that was at a 60-year low. We are working with the programs that we have to try to assist the farmers in any area that we can with respect to risk management and other areas.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this may be a very unique situation and another serious drought year, what programs are in place to help farmers through this now in the spring and in the fall?

Mr. Hayden: Mr. Speaker, we have in place a number of risk management programs that take into consideration the crop yields, as an example, the financial situation over a five-year period that a farmer experiences, insurance for pasture, insurance for forage. Those risk management tools are in place. We also have programs in place for Alberta producers that are outside of what some of the other provinces offer.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given the fact that AgriRecovery is specifically designed to help with drought disasters like the one we may have this year and it's being negotiated with the feds as we speak, what assurances are there in place that AgriRecovery will be there this year if farmers need it?

Mr. Hayden: Mr. Speaker, the drought situation that I spoke about previously shows in many areas in the province the most extreme conditions of drought that we've experienced, as I say, in many years. There has been tax deferral allowed by the federal government in approximately 50 of our rural municipalities in this province, which indicates the severity of this problem. We are working with the federal government on AgriRecovery, and I'm hopeful that we can conclude our discussions with the federal government and move towards helping the producers out there as quickly as possible.

Legal Aid

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, when this government had a choice to make between scaling back services for the rich or taking away services from the poor, even the least sophisticated observer was able to predict the outcome. In order to save approximately $5 million, Legal Aid Alberta is predicting that more than 6,000 people will be turned away this year. Will the minister confirm this? Are 6,000 or more economically disadvantaged Albertans going to be denied legal assistance by your pilot project?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Absolutely not. Legal Aid and the government of Alberta almost two years ago decided that it was time to consider whether or not the traditional model for delivering legal aid in this province was really serving the interests of people that needed legal services but couldn't afford them. We decided that we wanted to launch pilot projects not to completely transform the system immediately but to see whether or not it might be possible to put a system in place where we could provide different levels of legal advice and legal support to people depending on what they needed when they came in contact with the legal system.

Mr. Hehr: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that the hon. member's limits for an individual to receive legal assistance have now been dropped by $6,000, how are these people now supposed to get this legal service if they're not eligible to get the service?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think that's exactly the point. What we've done this year in conjunction with the Legal Aid board is that we've developed a system where we're going to support public defender positions, legal aid clinics, enhanced support to law information centres, and two pilot projects around the province which will allow people who need to access a lawyer to come to a clinic to get advice and then to decide how they want to pursue their rights. Now, if they do decide that they want to pursue their rights, then they will fall into the traditional legal aid system, will be able to get a certificate and have legal advice provided.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given what I said before, that roughly 6,000 Albertans will no longer be eligible to even qualify under legal aid, where are these people now supposed to go to get legal services?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, it's not the case that they won't be able to qualify. It's the case that they will not be able immediately to obtain a certificate because Legal Aid and the government of Alberta have decided in consultation with stakeholders that in some cases people are better served by receiving legal advice and general directional information through courts. The law information centres in Alberta, which were established two years ago, have served over 150,000 people in the past 12 months alone, people that needed legal information, legal direction, and access to a lawyer.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Pharmaceutical Strategy

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The second phase of the Alberta pharmaceutical strategy that was announced in October 2009 includes expanding the role of pharmacists and introducing a new payment model for pharmacy services. Although many pharmacists welcome the change to providing more professional services, the lack of communication about the new payment model, scheduled to be implemented this July, is causing some concerns. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Where is the ministry at relative to the comprehensive transition plan that is supposed to be in place to support pharmacies to make the proposed changes?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, a very solid question, indeed. We are at a very good place with respect to the overall pharmaceutical strategy. Once it's fully implemented, it will save Alberta taxpayers tens of millions of dollars. We've provided a $75 million transitional fund to help get there. That includes about a $5 million fund for rural and remote communities. It will also include an additional payment of about $3 for filling a prescription in the first year, $2 in the second, and $1 in the third year. So there's a lot going on there plus the additional services model.

Ms Woo-Paw: To the same minister: when can pharmacists in Alberta expect to hear from Alberta Health Services about the transition plan and the role of the new payment model?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, they're actually hearing a lot about it right now because we have a good program in place to ensure that they're kept up to speed. The transition allowances that I just talked about are effective April 1. As part of that, there is an expanded services model, which is just being finalized right now, that will compensate pharmacists throughout the province for additional work that they do on patient consultations, on medication reviews, and on things like immunizations.

Ms Woo-Paw: What mechanism is in place to ensure ongoing, timely communication, consultation, and monitoring between your ministry, Alberta Health Services, and the pharmaceutical sector?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, we've implemented a pharmacy transition team. This pharmacy transition team deals with issues of identifying how to better serve the public and how to keep more money in the pockets of Albertans, for example, and how to compensate pharmacists for the good work that they're doing. It's a model that we place a lot of faith and store in, and it has built into it things like effective monitoring on a very regular basis.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Funding for Apprenticeship Training

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last month the unemployment rate for young men in the province of Alberta aged between 16 and 24 was 15 and a half per cent, twice the rate for the general population. My first question is to the minister of advanced education. Given that labour market analysis is indicating that we're heading for a shortage of skilled workers in this province, hopefully as the economy improves, why did the government allow the number of apprenticeship spots to actually go down here in Alberta last year? We've got unemployed people. Why aren't we training them?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think that if the hon. member were to look at the statistics in a lot more detail, what he would find is that during the down period, which in some areas of the economy we're still experiencing, companies aren't hiring a lot of new apprentices. So first-year apprentice numbers and second-year apprentice numbers are down. Secondly, we don't choose when that student is going to show up at the doorstep. In fact, if they have their second-year ticket or their third-year ticket, they may indeed not go to school this year. If they were very fortunate and maintained their employment, they may decide to stay working.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's an interesting response.

Again to the same minister: given that so many apprentices have built up such a large number of hours towards the completion of their apprenticeship during this last period of high employment, why are you cutting your budget now, when these individuals should be trained so that they can get permanent work whenever the economy turns around? Bad policy.

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, knowing the relationship that this hon. member has with many of our tradespeople, I'm sure that he's not advocating that we would force tradesmen to come to school at a certain period of time outside of their selected periods of time when they want to work, and we're not going to do that. Indeed, the apprenticeship program has always been based on the number of apprentices that want to get in that particular year at that particular time of the year. If there are no spaces at that particular time of the year, they move to another part of the year. We're working with the apprenticeship board and all of our institutions to ensure that those spaces are there.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, this government is forcing many of these apprentices into longer periods of unemployment through bad public policy.

My next question is to the minister of labour. Why is the department cutting . . .

The Speaker: Whoa. Whoa.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes?

The Speaker: Were you unaware of the comments I made earlier about preambles?

Mr. MacDonald: I didn't consider that to be a preamble, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: But I did. I did, sir. So you've asked me the question, and it has been responded to.

The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Medicine Hat College Degree-granting Status

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A young constituent of mine, in fact a number now, recently shared with me news that the University of Alberta is planning on cancelling the arrangement they have with the Medicine Hat College that has given Medicine Hat students the opportunity to complete their education degree at the college, never having to leave their community. To the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology: if this in fact happens, will students currently enrolled in the program be forced to go to Edmonton or Calgary to complete their degrees?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A very good question. We are aware of the issue at Medicine Hat College, and I think it's important to note at the outset that no final decisions have been made on any of the two-year programs that were under discussion. One of the important aspects of Campus Alberta is the ability for colleges and institutions to partner with everyone across the system. There are always opportunities for students to explore to remain in their communities and learn, as the hon. member mentioned, or for the institution to partner together with other institutions to deliver that program. We're confident that that's going to take place.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the point that the hon. minister just made, how will you ensure that Medicine Hat College continues to receive degree-granting education programs?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, we are actively engaged with the partners that are currently delivering the two-year program. We're going to continue to work with those parties to ensure that students are going to be able to follow their dreams on those degrees wherever they may be. That is, indeed, a part of the Campus Alberta process. We are working on a couple of scenarios that are being explored to ensure that the program will be ongoing beyond the 2011-12 date that is out in the media.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As it's my understanding that the U of A has received stable funding from the province, why would they be permitted to remove this program?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, no decisions have been made on the removal of any programs at this point in time. This year we did take the first steps toward introducing a new funding formula that does provide additional flexibility for our institutions across Campus Alberta. It also gives all institutions greater flexibility to collaborate with each other and to meet student needs throughout the province. We certainly hope to encourage that kind of activity and behaviour throughout the system, and we'll be following up with that as we move forward.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Eastern Irrigation District Licence Amendment

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Eastern irrigation district has applied to change their water licence so they are no longer limited to just using their water for irrigation. Why? Because right now they're breaking the law. In their own application they admit they've already signed several agreements selling rights to use the water for other purposes. My question is to the Minister of Environment. Why has the minister failed to prosecute when it's clear that the Eastern irrigation district is breaking his own Water Act?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's pretty clear that water that is under the licence of an irrigation district is designated for agricultural purposes. The reality that the member needs to understand is that in the areas that are served by the Eastern irrigation district there is very little opportunity for access to off-stream storage other than that provided by the irrigation district. So there are some limited uses for acreages and the like that do not fit the exact law.

The Speaker: The hon. member. [interjection] The hon. member has the floor.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that it's generally the understanding that when there's a law, we expect it to be written well enough for people to follow it and given that there is clearly a limited supply of water in the area and given that the EID is clearly trying to profit off this shortage at the expense of the broader public need for the water through this application to change the law after the fact, why won't the minister act to prevent the illegal use of Alberta's precious and limited water supply and ensure that this application is denied?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, we are in the process right now of reviewing the policy with respect to the ability for irrigation districts to expand the use. We will be changing that policy to recognize that in very limited circumstances there are appropriate times that irrigation districts should be able to redesignate the water to appropriate uses in those individual circumstances.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that the minister has actually made a number of empty promises to make the water policy public and to consult with Albertans on any changes, at least seven times over the last year and a half, and given that the situation I've just described highlights the extreme dysfunction of the current system, why won't the minister tell Albertans today exactly when and where his policy will be made public and the time and place of the consultations that will follow?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would be more than happy to advise the member and all members of that exact information. Unfortunately, I am not in a position to do so at this point in time. We do have a process that needs to be followed, and we do have work that is under way. I will advise the member and all Albertans when the time is appropriate.

Postsecondary Education Funding

Mr. Chase: Mr. Speaker, Alberta has the lowest postsecondary enrolment rate in Canada, at only 14 per cent. The consequences of this government's cutbacks to postsecondary education can be seen in the budgets recently passed by universities and colleges, who are forced to increase fees on students, cut programs, and run operating deficits. To the minister: is the minister satisfied with the strategy of simply downloading the province's deficit to our universities and colleges, who then pass it on to our students?

2:30

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, we haven't downloaded anything. We're working in collaboration with our institutions and with our student bodies. In fact, as I said in the House in answer to questions of this hon. member before, we have been working very closely with the student associations throughout the province to talk about the tuition cap and how we protect it going forward. We had to fix some problems that were within the system dating back to 2004. So working collaboratively with the student bodies we fixed the problem and protected the cap, one of the few provinces in Canada that still maintains a CPI cap. This year tuition levels will be 1.5 per cent as compared to Manitoba, up to 5 per cent, as compared to Ontario, 3 per cent to 8 per cent, as compared to even Saskatchewan, which could be as high as 5 per cent. We think we're doing very well for our students.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm not sure that the minister's sentiments are shared by students going into pharmacy, engineering, and business.

Does the minister think it is acceptable for universities to charge students mandatory fees ranging from $300 to $450 because this government isn't willing to provide sufficient operating funding to postsecondary institutions?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I was searching for the letters that I received from, as an example, the Pharmacy Students' Association, which actually requested that we approve the request from the university for the increase as a market modifier because they realized the value of their investment and the taxpayer investment. They requested that we do that. I also have a letter from the engineering students at the U of A Faculty of Engineering suggesting that they believe that it was the right thing to do to fix the error so that we can move forward into the future. So to suggest that we're not collaborating and talking to the students is blatantly false.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I don't think you'll get the same letters if you take that route for medicine, law, and education.

Is the minister going to stand idly by while institutions like NAIT, due to lack of government funding, are forced to eliminate over a dozen programs, some of which had full registration and are unique in western Canada?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, any programs that are going to be eliminated have to get the approval of the ministry. In fact, as we understand it right now, the particular institution the hon. member is talking about is reviewing it, as I would suggest every institution in this province should be reviewing every program they're delivering to ensure that it's meeting the needs of the student, the taxpayer, and the economy, not the institution's, because we serve those three clients, not the institution.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

ProServe Liquor Staff Training

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When reducing the regulatory burden for businesses, the interests of small businesses should also be given due consideration. The Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission made it mandatory for staff at all licensed premises to take a course called ProServe. Some say that this is an unnecessary regulatory burden. To the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security: does everyone working in a liquor store or restaurant have to take this training?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission introduced ProServe in 2004 at the request of liquor industry stakeholders asking for a standardized training program. Effective January 1, 2010, ProServe is mandatory for all staff that are selling, serving, or advising customers on choices of liquor. Yes, it is mandatory, and as I say, it was requested by the industry.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can a business owner, given the fact that so many of these businesses are owned by families, call in a family member to help in the case of an emergency and have that employee serve the public without taking this course?

Mr. Oberle: They can do that, Mr. Speaker. The staff that aren't serving, selling, or advising on liquor don't have to take the course. Certainly, they can call in a family member in the event of an emergency, but I would point out that it's probably in the best interests of the store owner to have everyone trained. There are various avenues of training, it takes less than a day, and it costs as little as $25.

Mr. Bhullar: My final question to the same minister, Mr. Speaker: can a liquor licensee be penalized for employing someone without this training?

Mr. Oberle: Yes, they can, Mr. Speaker. The exception being new employees, who have to take the training within 30 days. Prescribed in the regulations there are penalties and fines up to and including the loss of a licence. I'd point out that the AGLC does not have a history of heavy-handed enforcement but rather one of working with their clients. I believe that they would do so in this case as well.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government abandoned its commitment to fund a five-year agreement with teachers. Now, with the 2010-11 academic year approaching and no extra money for teachers' salaries on the table, school boards, students, and families are about to feel the crunch. To the minister: with the Calgary board of education considering eliminating 150 positions to cover its $21 million shortfall, what plans does the minister have to prevent layoffs?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, we have not abandoned our commitment. In fact, we're fulfilling our commitment. We fulfilled our commitment to the 5.99 per cent increase after we went through the arbitration process. That's been done. What we haven't done is put in a 3 per cent increase for salaries this year, the September 1 adjustment. What I've said to the school boards is that we need to work that out over a longer period of time and they should work with me, the school boards and the ATA, with respect to how we go into a longer term agreement.

In the meantime I've asked them to consider not laying off staff at the classroom level, the teachers and the support for the classrooms, and to manage it over a longer period of time.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You can't extend a five-year contracted agreement and pay people gradually.

How can the minister continue to advocate for student-punishing Band-Aid solutions such as boards running temporary deficits or drawing on small reserves when the real problem is an ongoing funding shortfall from this province?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, there's $340 million of operating reserves in this province among school boards. Not every school board has them, but across the system we have a very healthy financial statement. What I've said to school boards is that we need to draw on those surpluses or perhaps run a short-term deficit in order to help us work on a longer term agreement to deal with not just salaries but also other areas to make sure that the education system is strong for teachers, for the profession, for the school boards, and for the province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Clawing back committed surpluses seems to be the new raison d'être of this government.

Given that school boards in Medicine Hat are considering eliminating full-day kindergarten programs to cover their shortfall, will the minister admit that by not honouring the teachers' wage agreement, this government is pushing Alberta even further away from meeting the recommendations of the Learning Commission and doing nothing to reduce our one-third dropout high school rate?

Mr. Hancock: No, Mr. Speaker, I won't admit that at all. Again, for the benefit of this member and for the benefit of anybody on school boards that hasn't heard me say it before, I'll say it again: we need a longer term approach. We're working on that longer term approach. That longer term approach will deal not just with salaries for teachers but also professional development and curriculum and other things that are in the best interest of students, in the interest of teachers as a profession, in the interest of school boards, and in the interest of the province. We'll be working on that over a longer term, and in the short term we're asking them to draw on their very healthy reserves.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Special Education Review

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. After engaging over 7,000 Albertans, the Setting the Direction for Special Education final report was submitted to the minister over 10 months ago, yet we still have not heard any response from the government. To the Minister of Education: is the delay in the government response an indication that you're backing away from a commitment to a truly supportive and inclusive education system that Albertans obviously demonstrated they wanted?

Mr. Hancock: No, Mr. Speaker. I can understand the hon. member's frustration in that he chaired the task force and did an excellent job with the stakeholders in getting that report. But I would also say that it does take time to get policy approval and to put implementation plans in place. We're working very, very strongly interdepartmentally to make sure that Health, Children and Youth Services, and Education work together. This is a major shift in philosophy, from a diagnostic model to a learning-based model, and we need to take the time to do it right.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Given the fact that there have been no increases to the funding for special education since 2008, how do you explain the Edmonton Catholic school system's recent announcement to integrate every child in every classroom?

2:40

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, we should be clear that it's not about integrating every child into every classroom. Inclusive education is about making sure that every child is included in education and has the appropriate learning opportunities for that child. That is different from the concept of any child in any classroom. That would not be possible.

The process that the Edmonton Catholic school board is engaged in, as I understand it, relates primarily to students with mild and moderate needs, and those children very often can be included in classrooms with appropriate learning plans and learning profiles. If they're engaging in doing that ahead of the . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My final question to the same minister: since the boards are taking the initiative to move towards inclusive education on their own, is that a sign that the sector is anticipating cuts to special education?

Mr. Hancock: No, Mr. Speaker. They shouldn't be anticipating cuts to special education, nor should they necessarily be anticipating significant increases. What they should be anticipating is that we should look at the resources we have and make sure that we use those resources in the most appropriate way. That's what this design is all about. It's not the fifth review of a funding formula. It's about looking at how we can do things better with what we have and how we can make sure that every child is included, has the opportunity to move from where they are to where they can be and achieve their full potential.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Funding for Persons with Developmental Disabilities

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [The members sang Happy Birthday] Thank you very much. Actions do speak louder than words, so thank you for that.

The minister of seniors' actions have shown a lack of support for people with developmental disabilities, and the lack of support is directly translating to decreased care. To the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports: will the minister immediately reinstate the funding that is needed so that the Calgary area PDD service providers will not have to cut services?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, the budget for the PDD program this year has not changed. It remains the same as last year, at $597 million. I understand that there may be some cost pressures that we have to be cognizant of. I would say to you that maybe there's a way that we can do things a little bit differently so that we can make the $597 million stretch. I'd like to say that $500 million of that budget goes directly to our service providers for 9,200 people.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. To the same minister. Part of the reason for the cut is to direct funds toward unfunded pension liabilities. How can the minister justify cutting front-line services and supports for this reason?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, there have been no cuts in PDD. The PDD budget remains the very same as last year. Like I said, I understand that there may be some funding pressures, but there have been no cuts. I've asked our PDD boards, I've asked my department and my divisions to look very carefully at their own budgets so that they can find the efficiencies that will help us make that budget stretch as far as we can so that the savings can go directly to the front-line services of our PDD clients.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. Are some of those funds going toward unfunded pension liabilities, not necessarily from the PDD but out of your department?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, what I can tell you is that of the $600 million that we have in the PDD budget, $500 million goes directly to our service providers. The other $97 million goes to direct services, to the PDD boards, and to my PDD divisions. I would say to you that we have one of the very best programs in Canada, most generously funded. If you compare us to B.C. and Ontario, our PDD clients receive more in funding than clients in those other areas.

The Speaker: Well, hon. members, that concludes question period, and a rather energetic one, I might say. There were 18 hon.

members recognized today, made up of nine from the Official Opposition, four from the independents, and the remaining five from the government caucus, for a total of 106 questions and responses.

In 15 seconds from now we'll continue with the Routine.

Hon. members, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a couple who have come about 450 kilometres today. Dick and Izzy Ellis are from Champion, Alberta. Dick is the manager of all the solid waste and transfer stations and recycling program, and Izzy is a small businesswoman and an accomplished singer. They're here today on business. Dick is going to be meeting with some of our colleagues on a significant solid waste energy project that involves 60 municipalities in southern Alberta. I'd ask that they please rise and receive the warm welcome from all of us.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today it's a real pleasure for me to rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two outstanding constituents of mine, the hon. Shirley Cripps, past MLA for Drayton Valley, and her lovely daughter Christine Cripps-Woods. Today is an even more special day because one of the two MLAs for a day that I had the pleasure of hosting was Christine's daughter, Shirley's granddaughter, Erin Cripps-Woods. If you would please rise. Let's show her the traditional warm welcome.

Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Standing Committee on Private Bills has had certain bills under consideration and wishes to report as follows. The committee recommends that Bill Pr. 1, Community Foundation of Lethbridge and Southwestern Alberta Act, proceed in the Assembly; that Bill Pr. 2, Canada Olympic Park Property Tax Exemption Amendment Act, 2010, proceed with amendments; and that Bill Pr. 3, Lamont Health Care Centre Act, proceed with amendments. As part of this report I will be tabling five copies of the recommended amendments to bills Pr. 2 and Pr. 3. I request the concurrence of the Assembly in these recommendations.

The Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Speaker: Opposed, please say no. The report is carried.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a couple of reports to table today, the first one being that of the Alberta Institute of Agrologists annual report. The appropriate number of copies are here with me.

The other one, Mr. Speaker, is the 2009 ASET, Association of Science and Engineering Technology Professionals of Alberta, annual report, with the appropriate number of copies.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today. The first is a letter I received from the Edmonton public school board regarding the ongoing school closures. This letter, among other things, indicates that the school board was willing to pay at least $580,000 to hire a consultant to conduct the sector reviews and organize the closures.

The second tabling I have is information provided to me by the Alberta Society for Pension Reform. Again I would urge all hon. members to have a look through that if they could, please.

The third tabling I have is a letter that I received from a constituent, Mr. Marc Ranson, regarding Alberta Hospital Edmonton. It's recognized as a world-class facility, and Mr. Ranson certainly hopes that that continues.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I have a couple of tablings today. First of all, I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter from the Eastern irrigation district to Alberta Environment concerning its licence amendment application. The letter shows the purposes the irrigation district would like added to its licence include municipal, commercial, and industrial water uses. This document relates to the questions asked earlier today by my colleague the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of 78 postcards signed by Albertans calling on the provincial government to keep its promise to build 600 new long-term care beds. The postcards are part of a campaign sponsored by the Canadian Union of Public Employees, which has gathered signed postcards from approximately 2,500 Albertans.

Thank you.

Orders of the Day

Government Motions

Committee Membership Changes

13. Mr. Hancock moved:

Be it resolved that the following change to

- (a) the Standing Committee on Community Services be approved: that Mr. Allred replace Mr. Johnson;
- (b) the Standing Committee on Public Safety and Services be approved: that Mr. Johnson replace Mr. Griffiths;
- (c) the Standing Committee on the Economy be approved: that Mr. Griffiths replace Mr. Allred.

Mr. Hancock: A brief explanation, Mr. Speaker. This supports the appointment of the Member for Battle River-Wainwright as a parliamentary assistant for finance and, thus, the desire to put him on the Standing Committee for Economy and the other resulting changes. I would ask for the support of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to move an amendment to Government Motion 13. There are copies of the amendment at the table. I move that the motion be amended:

- A. By striking out part (c) and substituting the following:
 - (c) the Standing Committee on the Economy be approved: that Mr. Chase replace Mr. Taylor as deputy chair and as a member of the committee, that Mr. Griffiths replace Mr. Allred;
- B. By adding the following after part (c):
 - (d) the Special Standing Committee on Members' Services be approved: that Ms Pastoor replace Mr. Taylor;
 - (e) the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing be approved: that Ms Blakeman replace Mr. Taylor.

The Speaker: Just a second, hon. member.
Please proceed.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Given the changes in some of our caucus duties and in some of our caucus membership I'm taking advantage of the government motion before us to put those changes through.

I also see on the Order Paper that we now anticipate having Government Motion 14 moved soon, which is anticipating the adjournment of the government business over the summer. Therefore, I'd like to make sure that I can offer some certainty to my caucus members as to what duties they will be expected to be performing and on what committees over our summer break. So I would ask the co-operation of the House in approving the changes that my caucus has put forward.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just in speaking to the amendment, obviously, these changes are brought forward subsequent to the original motion having been put on the Order Paper and thus come forward as an amendment. I don't have any problem supporting this amendment.

I would have to say that I have not heard from the Member for Calgary-Currie with respect to any particular desire with respect to committee assignments in the House. We'll obviously want to accommodate him, should he come forward, in terms of some committee assignment. I would understand the Official Opposition wanting particularly to make a change with respect to the deputy chair position on a committee, et cetera. So recognizing that there will probably need to be additional changes, I would certainly support these on an interim basis.

The Speaker: Look, some might argue that it is inappropriate for the chair to raise some questions with respect to this, but the chair is going to. The chair has to protect the integrity of hon. private members. Where is there an appointment, then, for the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie on any of the committees? If I understand, this session may be rising shortly. I don't know that for sure. Notice has to basically be given. If this Assembly rises tomorrow, the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie is ignored until the fall. There's something in my body that says that this is not right.

Now, I don't want to get involved – I'm sorry – but I've got to get involved to protect the integrity of private members in this Assembly. I can understand that changes are there, and I can understand the desire in certain caucuses to do certain things, but there's always been a tradition in here that every hon. member must be able to participate in at least one, perhaps two committees. If the Member for Calgary-Currie is not protected here, and there's no opportunity to deal with him until the fall, there is something wrong with that in my humble opinion. I'm sorry. I'll apologize for it. I'll even resign my position for having said it if the hon. members think that the Speaker has gone too far. But there must be a protection for the integrity of hon members.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate your comments. I had some very similar concerns. This motion was coming forward today, and the amendments came forward at the last moment. I would be happy if you would entertain a motion to adjourn, allowing this to go over for another day. Then the Member for Calgary-Currie could participate as he has not to date. I mean, the events have just happened quickly, and obviously people are moving to make changes quickly in anticipation of assignments over the summer. I'm certainly conscious of that and would be happy to move, if you would entertain it, or to have someone else move to adjourn debate on this at this point, and we can bring it back tomorrow with perhaps another amendment.

Ms Blakeman: I'm happy to support that, Mr. Speaker. I can't speak for the Member for Calgary-Currie any longer. He's not a member of my caucus. I certainly did not want to exert power over him and make a choice as to what committee he might choose to sit on, but I do have to move forward and look after my own caucus colleagues, and that's what I've done. If the member needs time to consult with the Speaker and with the Government House Leader to look after his own interests, frankly, that's beyond my responsibility and beyond my power to influence. I need to work with my own caucus colleagues. I'm happy to wait.

Thank you.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Adjournment of Spring Session

14. Mr. Hancock moved:

Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 3(9) the spring sitting of the Assembly stand adjourned upon the Government House Leader advising the Assembly that the business for the sitting is concluded.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps we can anticipate more success with this motion.

This is one of those perfunctory motions, which often were moved at the very beginning of a session, to set up the process for ending a session. I'm not sure I understand even the need for it anymore, but I'm told that there is a need for it. I'd ask the House to support it so that when we actually do finish the business of the House, we can adjourn until the fall session.

[Government Motion 14 carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

FOIP Act Review

15. Mr. Hancock moved:

Be it resolved that

- (1) The Standing Committee on Health be deemed to be the special committee of the Assembly for the purpose of conducting a comprehensive review of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act as provided for in section 97 of the act;

- (2) The committee must commence its review of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act no later than July 1, 2010, and must submit its report to the Assembly within one year of commencing its review, including any amendments recommended by the committee;
- (3) No additional remuneration shall be provided to the members of the committee for the purpose of this review.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appear to be on a roll. As the motion indicates, there is a statutory review called for by a special committee of the Legislature. We have now in place policy field committees of the Legislature. In looking at those policy field committees, the Health one appears to be an appropriate one to deal with it because of their interaction between the FOIP Act and the Health Information Act and for other reasons. The structure is in place to do this sort of work and, therefore, rather than striking yet another committee, to ask the Health Committee to take on this task seemed to be an appropriate direction.

The Speaker: This is a debatable motion.

Ms Blakeman: I certainly understand the need to strike the review of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act. That is a requirement under section 97 of that act, that a comprehensive review be in place and commenced by July 1, 2010, and then its report be submitted within one year to the Assembly. I am less settled in my mind that using the policy field committee, now known as the Standing Committee on Health, is the appropriate vehicle for this. Generally, what we've had when the FOIP Act has been reviewed in the past is that an additional committee has been struck with representation from all of the parties.

I'm aware that this Standing Committee on Health, in fact, has not been called for any meetings in I think over a year, so its agenda is fairly empty, and it can accommodate the request to take on the review. I have some concerns about whether all members would be able to be notified and that there would be the wider knowledge of the calling of the committee. I'm aware that there have been some adjustments on the secure websites for the various members who are assigned to these policy field committees and that there was an agreement that all members could get access to a sort of general committee, but I think there are still some restrictions about whether members who are not assigned to the committee can get access to information that's to be distributed and agendas and such.

Also, I'm not as confident that the choice of putting this review into the Committee on Health is the appropriate place for the review to happen. The review itself must happen and should happen and is very important to happen as freedom of information and protection of privacy is one of the most critical services that the government offers to citizens, the opposition, and the media in this day and age. I think a number of people would argue that there need to be some changes and recommendations made to that act. I'm just not entirely comfortable with it going to the Standing Committee on Health. Maybe others can help allay my concerns around that, but I wanted to put that on the record.

I understand the need for clause (3), which is about no additional remuneration, which makes sense if it's going to a committee that is currently already staffed by members and that their remuneration is accounted for. I just think that we may have other members who are interested in participating in this particular review, and I'm most concerned not that they be paid but that they get free and open access to the committee. Any member can attend a committee, and they have a voice but not a vote. I just have some concerns that this is not as open as I was hoping for.

Thank you for the opportunity to put those remarks on the record.

The Speaker: Others? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much for the opportunity to participate. What I find somewhat ironic is the fact that we're going to send to the committee the idea of personal information, yet as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre pointed out, some of our own MLA access to standing policy committee information is somewhat limited or potentially compromised. That's the first issue that I want to echo that the hon. member brought forward.

As for the selection of the Standing Policy Committee on Health I, too, would appreciate some more justification or explanation as to the choice of this particular committee. I agree with the hon. Government House Leader and with my own House leader that, obviously, this has to take place. FOIP is extremely important both for the protection of individuals' information and also for the governance of this province because information is absolutely essential in making decisions.

I am not quite sure, though, as I say, about why the Health Committee. For example, my experience of being a diligent member of the Committee on Community Services has indicated that while we work hard and we collaborate and do good work on behalf of the citizens of this province, it seems to me that that is a committee that could potentially also shoulder that duty. So I look forward to the hon. Government House Leader indicating his preference, based on the amount of duty that committee members have on the four standing policy committees, on why he believes this is the best fit for the FOIP review.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think it's appropriate, perhaps, for you as chair to shed some light on the differences between standing policy committees and select special committees. Contrary to what both of the members from the Liberal opposition have argued, in a standing policy committee, actually, the information that is available to members of that committee is available to any member of this Legislature. Simply show up at the meeting and sit at the table and put your time in, and you will receive any and all information that is available to any member of the committee. The only exception is that you don't get to vote if you're not a member sitting on that committee. But members of this particular caucus, being the Liberal caucus, will be on that committee.

If we were to appoint a select special committee, Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that only members of that select special committee would have access to any information that is made available to the committee. Nonmembers of that committee would not be able to sit in on their meetings and definitely, obviously, would not have a vote either.

They're arguing for actually less access to information than they have right now. All you need to do is simply attend the meetings, and you'll have access to any and all information you want. If you get a select special committee, you're neither attending the meetings, nor are you getting any access to information. Mr. Speaker, I guess they have a little confused understanding of the two committees.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to get in on this discussion. I previously served as a member of the Select Special Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act Review Committee, and I would submit first of all that the selection of the Standing Committee on Health as a substitute for this committee is a mistake. The work of that committee was fairly intense, and it had regular meetings for a fairly extended period of time. It was quite a bit of work, and it required people to really focus. We heard from different organizations and individuals, and there was, I think, a considerable amount of effort that went into that process.

The act calls for the creation of a select special committee. I question the appropriateness of or even whether or not, Mr. Speaker, it's in order to place a standing policy committee in the position of what's called for for this review committee under the legislation, so I am going to oppose this. I think that, you know, the Government House Leader has a responsibility to work with other House leaders and with the Speaker to canvass the caucuses and make sure that an appropriate composition is established for a select special committee. I don't know what the Health Committee has done to annoy the Government House Leader that he's going to make them do this, but it's important work. It's stand-alone work. What the Government House Leader is suggesting, in my view, is inappropriate.

The Speaker: Others?

Then the Government House Leader to close the debate.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just a couple of words. I think that any committee we establish is going to have a limited number of members of the House on it. This particular committee has two representatives of the Official Opposition, one representative of the third party on it. As I indicated in my opening remarks, there is a symbiotic relationship between the Health Information Act and the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act. There are a number of good reasons to do it in this format.

All members of the House now, as a result of some discussions that we had prior to one of the previous amendments to the standing orders – there was an agreement that I don't think was put in the standing orders but has certainly been put into practice – get notice of committee meetings. I know I get notice of all the committee meetings, and I assume everybody else gets that same notice and has access to the information at the committee meetings. It is actually broader access than we would have in a normal select special committee process. We don't get notices of the select special committee meetings, nor are we invited to participate in select special committees or attend select special committees normally.

This is, in fact, a good forum to do this. I appreciate the remarks from the leader of the third party, but this is a better way, in my view, than adding a number of members to yet another committee. We've got a structure. We've got a process. We've got a research process. We've got a methodology. It will work well. So I would commend it to the House to support this motion.

[Government Motion 15 carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Auditor General Appointment

16. Mr. Hancock moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly concur in the report of the Select Special Auditor General Search Committee and recommend to the Lieutenant Governor in Council that Merwan N. Saher be appointed Auditor General for the province of Alberta for a six-year term.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Select Special Auditor General Search Committee reported to the House. It's now my privilege to move the motion.

The Speaker: This motion is debatable if anybody wishes to. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I want to applaud the committee's choice of Merwan N. Saher for our new Auditor General. Mr. Speaker, it is my hope that Mr. Saher will receive more support from the government in conducting his business.

The week prior to our two-week break for Easter saw us having received pamphlets or a paper, I guess it would be, from the Speaker sort of pointing out that the Auditor General had potentially, according to the paper's author, overstepped his bounds and that he had gone beyond the simple mathematical accounting into potential policy development areas. I personally don't share that concern, and I am hoping that the government will honour Mr. Saher with the support that I have seen eroding for our previous Auditor General, who was forced, unfortunately, by a cutting of funding to either delay or completely avoid certain areas that he had wished to investigate. I'm looking forward to tomorrow's final release from the Auditor General, whom I have great respect for, and of course I wish him well in his retirement.

I'm hoping that in terms of the professed transparency and accountability and the important role of the Auditor General and as a member of Public Accounts, every form of support, including funding, will be provided by this government to assist Mr. Saher and the members of his department in successfully continuing the auditing role that we have grown accustomed to with our past Auditor General, Fred Dunn.

I have had the opportunity to wish Fred a successful and enjoyable retirement, but I would like to take one more opportunity to applaud the work that Mr. Dunn has done on behalf of all Albertans and at the same time wish Mr. Merwan Saher all the best with the hope that all parties, including the government, will support his efforts to hold the government to account on behalf of Alberta citizens.

Thank you.

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, I want to speak to the appointment of Merwan Saher in a positive manner. As a member of the audit committee we have the privilege of working with the Auditor General's office as they establish and develop their business go-forward plans. I don't believe that many understand the very complex nature of them developing and coming forward with where they believe their best efforts are and how closely they work with the office of the internal auditors.

It was a privilege to work with Mr. Dunn. I can say, and I think Mr. Dunn would agree, that we didn't always have to agree on issues. The important thing was that he had complete, unfettered access to government books and had the opportunity to fulfill the mandate of his position in a very respectful way.

I can tell you from working with Mr. Saher on the audit committee that he has handled himself very graciously, respectfully, and competently. I think the citizens of Alberta will be well served by him. I look forward for as long as I'm in the capacity of President of the Treasury Board to continuing to maintain a very positive and productive relationship with the office of the Auditor General. I want to thank the committee members for their support of this gentleman.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Others?

[Government Motion 16 carried]

The Speaker: Just as an addendum to this decision, Mr. Saher will now become an officer of the Legislative Assembly of the province of Alberta. He will be responsible to this Assembly via the Speaker, and it will be the Speaker who will sign his contract.

Private Bills Second Reading

Bill Pr. 1 Community Foundation of Lethbridge and Southwestern Alberta Act

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill on behalf of the hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Dr. Brown: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Member for Lethbridge-West it's my pleasure to move second reading of Bill Pr. 1, the Community Foundation of Lethbridge and Southwestern Alberta Act.

This bill will establish a new charitable foundation for Lethbridge and southwestern Alberta. It is in fact modelled upon the Calgary Foundation legislation, which our Legislature previously passed as a private bill. I am in full support of it, and I certainly would encourage all of the other members in the Chamber to support this legislation. It is a facilitating piece of legislation which will enable Lethbridge and southwestern Alberta to encourage donors to participate in many, many charitable causes and good works in that part of the province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, would rise in support of Bill Pr. 1. What it does, I think, is reflect what's happening in our province, that our cities are growing and that we are incorporating the area around us. This would enable that exact thing to happen so that the dollars can be collected for this very, very successful community-oriented foundation. The money has gone to very many worthy causes in Lethbridge and certainly in southern Alberta. For those reasons I would support this.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Speaking in support of Bill Pr. 1, I just want to have on the record that this government has been down-loading a tremendous amount of their responsibilities onto nonprofit organizations and in this case municipalities to do the charitable service work that is absolutely necessary.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

I would like to see the type of support beyond just the words and the legislation indicated in Bill Pr. 1 in terms of active funding support for organizations and municipalities. We've had a situation whereby the former agreement with municipalities in terms of capital funding has been delayed and placed over a longer time period. Therefore, the cities' and the municipalities' ability to deliver program services has been basically delayed as well.

We've also seen through cuts, for example to PDD, local nonprofit organizations scrambling to provide service for an ever-growing number of individuals. While I understand the intention and support the intention of Bill Pr. 1, it's extremely important that the government's role of supporting especially those most vulnerable be recognized and that an expectation that municipalities or local communities pick up to a larger extent their efforts in supporting their local citizenry be recognized and shared as a government responsibility.

So thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to speak. The balance between government support and subsidies and local initiatives and recognizing the strength of those local initiatives has to be taken into account or we're going to burn out our volunteers, our nonprofits, and the people who do this good work that to a large degree Bill Pr. 1 is destined to support.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. member wishing to speak on the bill?

Seeing none, the chair shall now call on the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill to close the debate.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity always manages to find the dark cloud in every silver lining.

This bill is a good-news story. It reflects a community that has already raised $13 million under their existing act in a community foundation. They distribute over $400,000 every year to good purposes. This is not meant to replace government services. This is the charitable works of people that are contributing willingly their own money, companies and individuals in that part of the province. It's a good-news story.

They want to modernize their legislation. They want to provide more flexibility to encourage private donors to give to these charitable purposes, and for that purpose they've set up a foundation which enables them to have the flexibility so that a donor doesn't have to go out and set up their own charity in order to provide for a specific purpose which they might wish to donate money to.

This is a very, very good news story, Mr. Speaker, and I would urge all members to support it.

Bill Pr. 2

Canada Olympic Park Property Tax Exemption Amendment Act, 2010

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move second reading of Bill Pr. 2, Canada Olympic Park Property Tax Exemption Amendment Act, 2010, and urge all members of the Assembly to support it. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Several weeks ago, after the 2010 Olympics came to a close, I think that all of us in this Assembly were extremely excited over the result of our team, so I absolutely would support this, which I believe will help our Canadian athletes in the future.

I did, actually, want to give some remarks on what I think this will do for our athletes and kind of bring it back to the 2010 Olympic Games. I wanted to do this in the House after the ministerial statement on the issue but was denied unanimous consent and thought I would put it into the record at this time as it is relevant to the question at hand, and it is a very positive news story.

Like most Canadians I found myself enraptured by the amazing spectacle that was the Vancouver 2010 Olympic Winter Games. I can honestly say that, personally, I have never been so proud to be Canadian. From watching Alex Bilodeau win our nation's first gold medal at home to witnessing the already iconic overtime win of Sidney Crosby to secure a world-record 14th gold at a Winter Olympics, I was amazed by how many of our athletes performed under pressure and how Canadians from coast to coast rallied behind them and behind our country.

I was worried at first, like many of you, when the games opened with the tragic death of a Georgian athlete, malfunctioning equipment at the opening ceremonies, and some early athletic disappointments. Cynics used these early challenges as an opportunity to criticize our Own the Podium program as proof that Canada was too cocky and prideful and was receiving its just deserts. Some international media even went so far as to say that Canada's games were turning into an utter failure.

However, as it is with most things in life, it's not whether we face adversity that determines who we are; it is how we respond to it that matters. Canadians responded. Our athletes performed at levels unequalled by any country at any Winter Olympics ever. Our people ignored the cynicism, volunteered, cheered, e-mailed and voiced support, took to the airwaves to promote, and waved the flag and sang the anthem with enamoured pride.

Some athletes didn't win gold but did our country just as proud as if they had. Who could have been more proud of Airdrie's own Mellisa Hollingsworth, who, in risking it all for a golden finish, lost control of her sled and a medal? She could have safely held back and secured a silver or a bronze, but that wasn't good enough for her. She taught us that it is better to have done all we can to achieve our potential rather than to hold back and settle for something less. From my viewpoint Mellisa's tearful and humble apology to her fellow Canadians was one of the turning points of the games. Her words reminded us that we, athletes and countrymen alike, were in this together, and nothing short of our best would be enough or would do.

And their best was exactly what our athletes gave. The final week of the Olympics was a stunning display of Canadian accomplishment, from the inspired and emotional performance of Joannie Rochette skating so beautifully for her mother, who had just passed on hours previous to her competition, to the fortitude of our men's hockey team, who managed to fulfill the hopes of an entire nation. Canadians piled up victory after victory on our way to a golden world record.

It is often said that it is not how you start in life but how you finish that matters. Maybe there is a lesson in that for our country. Our history has been a mix of good and bad, disappointment and accomplishment. We've seen petty differences divide us and great causes unite us. But whatever our history – and it is useful to be mindful of it – it is just that, history. What matters now is what we become. Will our nation squabble or will it build? Will we settle for mediocrity, or will we devote ourselves to setting an example of excellence for all the world to follow? If Vancouver 2010 is any indication, I think I know the answer. Thank you, Canada.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffer.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a privilege to speak on this Bill Pr. 2, which will allow for the Canada Olympic Park property tax exemption. I would like to thank the hon. colleague from Airdrie-Chestermere for regaling us with a little bit of a past-performance glimpse at how well our nation did at the last Olympic Games. I, too, will echo his sentiments that the Olympics and athletics in general bring our nation together, our communities together, make not only children and adults better, but I think they provide us with an opportunity to celebrate as a nation.

Sports also provide young, old, and middle-aged people with opportunities for healthy exercise. The Olympic Games inspire people to get off the couch and get active and get busy in their communities. I think that is one of the things that will be accomplished by extending the tax exemption amendment to Canada Olympic Park. Hopefully, these athletes will continue to train there, strive there, thrive there, become medalists through their training there, and continue to inspire a nation to better itself and to become physically fit and to look at the possibilities.

I'm proud to speak in favour of this bill, and I'd like to thank the sponsor from Calgary-Bow for bringing this bill forward. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill had indicated my capacity for finding I believe it was a dark lining in a silver cloud. I want to sort of continue in that designation that I've been given but provide a little bit of background. When I was a young boy growing up in Saskatoon, there was a radio show called Beefs and Bouquets. I would like to hand out some beef and bouquets associated with Bill Pr. 2, the Canada Olympic Park Property Tax Exemption Amendment Act, 2010.

3:30

First off, the bouquet. I would like to add a bouquet to the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow for putting her name to this bill. I'd like to offer a much larger bouquet to the government in general for its renewed support for the Olympic program. Six years ago there was concern about the maintenance of the Olympic facility. It seemed that the federal government in the last number of years, whether Conservative or Liberal, was not providing the funding for sustaining and maintaining Calgary's 1988 Olympic legacy. I want to provide a bouquet to this government for continuing to provide that support of funding. That was the bouquet.

The beef. The beef, Mr. Speaker, is the way the spending was done towards our Olympic promotion. I wouldn't be at all surprised if one of the several thousand dollars' worth of iPods that were given out on our luxury train contained pictures of the grizzly. Now, what I find ironic is that the grizzly, which is a national object of strength and is found in dwindling numbers in Alberta, would not receive the equivalent funding that the distribution of iPods received as part of an Olympic event.

So the beef and the bouquet of Pr. 2.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, maybe I could draw to your attention that we are talking about property tax exemptions for the Olympic Park. Thank you.

Mr. Chase: The area where we are talking about this property exemption amendment is for Canada's Olympic Park. Therefore, let me continue with why I support Bill Pr. 2, Canada Olympic Park Tax Exemption Amendment Act.

As the Liberal critic for Tourism, Parks and – yes – Recreation it is extremely important that we offer every opportunity for the Olympic Park property to flourish, and part of that flourishing is not being subject to taxing.

However, Mr. Speaker, as with the bouquet and the beef, new plans are being made, to which I hope to offer a bouquet, within this Olympic Park property, and that's the idea of a film studio. Now, here's a big bouquet to the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit, who is, I gather, supporting and cheerleading and potentially the key person putting this potential into reality. I'm glad he was listening to our hon. House leader, the Member for Edmonton-

Centre, our representative for Culture and Community Spirit, because we need to support the film industry. However, Mr. Speaker, I am hoping that there is no suggestion under Bill Pr. 2, the Canada Olympic Park Tax Exemption Amendment Act, that a profit-making film studio, as opposed to a ski jump or the new hockey rinks that are coming up or the expansion of the gymnastic facilities at Olympic Park, would be subject to that same tax exemption. We want to promote the film industry, but commercial properties need to be taxed in a commercial fashion.

I indicate that reservation. I hope it's completely unfounded. Mind you, I would find it hard to consider that I would bring something that was irrelevant, unfounded, or not directly related to the discussion at hand. But I put that on the record, Mr. Speaker, because while celebrating our Olympic legacy and promoting our parks, including the wonderful oval that is located in Calgary-Varsity, we must be true to our word. Nonrecreational, non sports-related activities should not be exempted, even if they are located within this property designation.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to all members for understanding the relevance of the points I have made with regard to supporting Bill Pr. 2.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to stand up in support of Bill Pr. 2, the Canada Olympic Park Property Tax Exemption Amendment Act, 2010. I think that there are a few important things to realize. Again, there are times when we step forward and move forward and it's positive, and other times we're taking steps back. This is a bill that's moving forward.

Why I say that is because competition really is important. Canada has been at a disadvantage in the past because of not having the access to money and the facilities that the athletes have needed in order to compete in the Olympics. We have done that and have stepped up and have given them some pretty good facilities and whatnot but often at the taxpayers' expense. It's a sad situation when we have governments that continue to think that we should tax anything that moves, anything that breathes, anything that exists and be able to hold it back. We're kind of digressing that way in Alberta here where we continue to increase taxes – whether it's municipal, provincial, or federal or user fees – and they are not being used in the best way possible. What's important about this is that this is a tax exemption, which allows the cost to be controlled in a better way.

It's exciting that way to realize how well we were competitive at the Olympics. Now we need to put that competitiveness into the fact of being able to build facilities and having more and greater access for our athletes. But we need to continue looking at this and realize, you know: where do we go from here, and how do we ensure that there's more money that is going towards our athletes that represent us? Then the question is: well, should that be taxpayers' money, or should we create exemptions and opportunities for business and athletes to raise that money? It is important. So it's exciting to see that we're looking at some tax exemptions, we're looking at reducing taxes and not wanting to think that governments can try and capitalize or control all these facilities.

To me it's important that we look at this and the fact that we're looking at exemptions and say: where else can we increase some exemptions and charitable donations towards the athletes or to training facilities or to clubs that are wanting to further increase the access for Alberta athletes and Canadian athletes to continue to train? It's exciting that we're moving in this direction. I know it's just a clarification bill because there was some worry that some capitalists might come in and take advantage of this tax exemption area. This bill definitely clears that up to ensure that it isn't going to happen. Like I say, I'm in favour of this and am looking forward that this will continue to help Alberta athletes compete in the world and that we'll go forward and be able to continue to show that we can be competitive not only in sports but in business as well.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to stand up and support this bill. I think that as a Canadian I am no different from anyone else who probably, when the Olympics were first talked about a number of years ago, went: oh, yeah, whatever. I think one of the important things that happened, of course, was having the torch relay across the country, that got everyone really involved with this. As time went on and I realized that I wasn't going to go to the Olympics, there was an opportunity for people to watch the Olympics on the big screen at a movie theatre, so I bought what was called the passport and enjoyed, thoroughly enjoyed. In fact, at one point I had the entire theatre to myself, and the theatre manager brought me popcorn and coffee, so it was really quite nice.

I really am not digressing here. One of the things that did happen was the hockey game. The theatre was much fuller at that point. There were six little guys sitting about four rows in front of me. They could not contain themselves with the excitement that they got over watching the hockey game and screaming and yelling and carrying on. It was wonderful because of just the feeling inside that movie theatre: (a) it was Canadian; (b) of course, it was hockey. But it was also these little guys, that knew that they could grow up to be that hockey player that was on that big screen. It was interesting that at the end we all stood up and sang O Canada like everyone else had done across Canada. It was wonderful.

My point is that I think that in this country, where we have a huge obesity problem with our young kids, the more we can provide places for them to play sports – they don't all have to be Olympic athletes. That's not what it's about. What it's about is that people have a chance to join teams and to play different games. There are rec leagues that are highly competitive, but there are also leagues where people just come out to have a good time. What I think of often is the senior men's hockey. Today as I got one year older, I can appreciate that they don't have the same kind of bodychecking that they used to have when they were maybe 15. Nevertheless, they do play. We get our communities going as a community by being able to play sports.

I think one of the other things that is a very important distinction is the fact that the land would be exempt only if a nonprofit facility is on it. I think that's a very important distinction that is clearly put out in this bill.

With those remarks, Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Member for Calgary-Bow for bringing this forward. I think it's a very important bill and one that for many decades to come will be felt by the citizens of this province for the good of all of us. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Is any other hon. member wishing to speak on Bill Pr. 2?

Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill Pr. 2 read a second time]

Bill Pr. 3

Lamont Health Care Centre Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise today and move second reading of Bill Pr. 3, the Lamont Health Care Centre Act.

The Lamont health care centre is a combined acute-care auxiliary hospital and nursing home facility located in Lamont, Alberta. It is operated by a board of management established as a corporate entity by a ministerial order under sections 4 and 5 of the Hospitals Act. The purpose of the bill is to allow for continued operation of the facilities subsequent to amendments under the Health Facilities Accountability Statutes Amendment Act, 2007, which will remove the opportunity for the board to continue after that act is proclaimed in force. The enactment of Bill Pr. 3 will ensure that the corporation, under the name of the Lamont health care centre, will continue to operate the integrated facility in the same manner as the board of management has done so successfully since 1992.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise in support of this bill. I think everyone knows where I stand in terms of health care centres and, certainly, as people age, how much they need a place to be able to go to, even sometimes if it's just to be able to talk about a small problem. There is a nursing home here and also the acute-care hospital, so it can create that continuum for people who perhaps just need a little bit now. But even if they have moved into the nursing home part, they have access to that acute care that they may require off and on as they age and go towards the end of life.

One of the reasons that I think it's very important that this passes is because if it does not pass, there would be a need to resign all the contracts, rehire all the employees in order for the facility to be incorporated again, and I think that that would be very, very disruptive to a health centre that has been very successful. Mainly for that reason I think it's very important that we all understand how important it is to pass this bill.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. member wish to speak to the bill?

Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill Pr. 3 read a second time]

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 9

Local Authorities Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2010

[Adjourned debate March 23: Mr. Taylor]

The Deputy Speaker: Any hon. member wish to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Someone else is going to go.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, then.

Mr. Anderson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm just going to speak in favour of Bill 9. I think that Bill 9 is a very important bill. It's a bill that the hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater brought as a private member's bill last year, I think. It had apparently some work that needed to be done on it, and that's fine. That's, I think, a good indication of what the parliamentary process should be like, you know, that we have bills that are referred to committees, they're studied, they're debated, and if we have to kind of reset and make it a government bill and look at it again, I think that's perfectly legitimate. I would like to compliment the Member for Athabasca-Redwater on starting the process forward on this, and then we have this bill in front of us.

Our caucus has some disagreement on this bill. I'm going to be voting in favour of it, and I think there is going to be just one other that's going to be voting against it. I think we have 15 bills before the House, and I think on about one-third our caucus has a split vote. I think that comes from what I like to call the novel idea of having free votes in the Legislature. It's something that we need to examine because out of those 15 bills from the government side I've seen exactly not one of them stand up against them. It's kind of sad.

The content of this bill, speaking to Bill 9, is just definitely – I believe it's needed. It's needed for several reasons, really. You've got to have some controls, I believe, in place with regard to campaign finances for several reasons. First, you don't want any politician to be especially beholden to any corporation or individual.

We see this in the United States all the time. I mean, the special interests are so powerful there, and the reason they're so powerful is because, honestly, in order to run kind of a standard campaign in the House of Representatives, it takes close to $500,000 for a competitive campaign down there every two years. So you can imagine how important it is, especially in these competitive districts, for these representatives. They have to have continued support from the same donors for years and years and years and years to make sure that they, you know, can be elected every time, they can be competitive down there. Obviously, there are very noble representatives down in the United States, as there are in democracies across this world, but I think there is a lot of influence peddling that goes on there because of the special interests.

We do see this with a lot of the pork problems that they have down in the United States with little projects and special exemptions and lobbies that affect the final outcome of the bill during the actual bill debate process. It's not to make the bill better generally. It's generally because in order to get a vote, a certain Senator or a certain House member will make a deal and say: well, I really need to satisfy this person or this lobby, so I need this in there, and then for that you get my vote.

Well, that's not, I don't think, the appropriate way a functioning democracy should work. Obviously, we should debate bills and policy based on their merits, based on statistical information, based on facts. Of course, those facts are often disputed. But, again, that's part of the debate, and I think that's healthy. By having campaign limits, I think you take out a lot of those donation limits, you take out a lot of that influence peddling that does go on in other democracies.

I singled out the United States and perhaps unfairly. This does happen in other democracies, obviously, where there are no rules to this effect. A lot of the new democracies out there don't have these rules, and there are a lot of problems that stem from that and a lot of corruption.

I think that, you know, having these types of limits is very, very important in any healthy democracy. We have these types of limits provincially. We have them federally as well. We also just passed a bill that third parties have these limits as well during election periods. These are all examples of, I think, good legislation.

Constitutionally the province has jurisdiction over the municipalities to kind of provide a framework for municipalities. Obviously, the province has decided to give a good deal of autonomy, almost complete autonomy, to the municipalities to run themselves. I think that's a positive thing. However, I do think that there is a space where, when it comes to the overall framework of how municipalities are governed from an electoral point of view, it is important that the province exercise its authority and make sure that things are fair and that the people are being elected fairly, the process is fair for electing town and city councils, et cetera. That would include, in my view, election finance law for municipalities. I think that this is very important for that reason.

The other reason is this. Even if there is no corruption, even if people were to – say there was no limit on the amount of contribution, and let's say somebody donated a million dollars to a mayoral candidate for Edmonton or Calgary in the next municipal election. Even if that mayoral candidate went on to win and was a sitting mayor, even if that mayor didn't do anything at all based on that donation, I think the public would think that that mayor would be pulled into that special interest. It's kind of like we don't want to bring the administration of justice into disrepute. It's kind of the same. We don't want to bring our democracy – we don't even want the appearance of, you know, impropriety or the appearance of evil or not doing well or whatever. We want to stay as transparent and above board as possible so that people don't get cynical about the political system. They probably will get cynical about the system on other accounts, but hopefully not on this account.

I actually do think that if you asked the average Canadian about our political system with regard to campaign finance and special interests and lobbyists, I think if you compare the reaction – I have seen polls on this, but I don't have them with me, unfortunately – people do actually have a higher degree of confidence in the Canadian-Albertan system of actually putting caps on campaign contributions than the average person would in America, where virtually everyone down there when polled says that: yeah, special interests have an undesirable effect on the politics of the nation. I think, again, having this in there will actually strengthen the reputation of municipal politics, just as these election finance laws strengthen the reputation of provincial politics and federal politics.

Now, there is one difference. I'm glad to see that the Member for Athabasca-Redwater chose to go down this path. I don't think it's wise to make a spending cap on political campaigns. I think there's a fundamental difference between capping what you can spend on a campaign and capping what can be donated to a campaign by any one individual, and I think that's a very important distinction. If somebody can raise a huge amount of money from many, many donors because they have very popular policy and people want to get behind that policy on a massive scale by sending, you know, their $100 or $50 or $500 cheques, that's a good amount of money, but it's not enough, I don't think, to sway a politician, incorrectly anyway. I would say that having that limitation is a good thing to do. But having that ability to get behind something with the kind of grassroots support in that way I think is a good thing.

I think that if someone can raise a million dollars or $2 million or $5 million because, you know, 10 per cent of the electorate donates $50 to them because they think it's such a great idea – you know what? – I think that's totally above board. I think they should be able to spend that on advertising their campaign. I think that's wise because instead of forcing the municipal politicians to try to appease four or five developers or four or five people of a certain group, they're going to try to have a more broad mass appeal to many different people and many different interest groups, et cetera. I do think that it's an important distinction to make. Again, I really do like the provisions of the bill in that respect.

I do know that there were some concerns expressed by the AUMA and the AAMD and C on this bill, in particular the predecessor to this bill, and I do feel that they have some warranted concerns. Perhaps the House could have consulted a little bit more broadly at the front end with this and maybe alleviated some of their concerns. But I will say this, that last year when the bill was first brought forward kind of as a first draft as a private member's bill, the push-back was quite substantial, and I've noticed that with the second version of this bill, Bill 9, the push-back has not been nearly so acute. I mean, there are some people that kind of have their noses out of joint. You know: why don't you trust us to govern ourselves? That type of thing. Fair comment.

At the end of the day I think for the reasons expressed that it's a good bill, that the government did go through the proper consultation process at the end of the day, and that we should pass this bill into law.

With that, I would again congratulate the hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater. Those are my comments.

Thanks, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thank the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere for filling in when I didn't have my crib sheet in front of me. He did a very excellent job, and I was able to glean a little bit from what he said as well. I, too, would like to congratulate the hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater, who brought forward this bill and worked through this bill and has seemed to come up with a fairly decent solution to what we would like to see at municipal elections, which is more fair, more thoughtful, more transparent local elections.

I think this bill goes a long way to ensuring that. It eliminates almost what I call the old Wild West days, I guess, of municipal elections which had very little accountability in terms of how much people could donate to a campaign, how much companies could, how much individuals could, how much developers could, how much architecture firms could. Whatever the company or the individual who had an interest in municipal politics wanted to give to a certain candidate, well, it seemed like the sky was the limit.

I'm not saying that there was anything untoward being done or whether or not special deals were made. That's not for me to say, and I would hope that none of that happened. But we must remember the Caesar's wife rule, that we here in politics have to follow. We can't only be pure; we must be seen to be pure. That means that it doesn't matter whether we say that no one is buying influence with us, that none of our electoral donors get extra sway with us. If we don't limit the amounts, if we don't publish these amounts, if we don't have some way of limiting them, people just don't believe you. They believe that you are in the pockets of the big-money people, and regardless of what you do or what you say or how you govern or whatever it is, people have the perception that politicians are in the pockets of people with money.

This bill tries to stem people's minds from racing to that conclusion, and I think that's a good thing. I think that for far too long it has been viewed that a way for people to have influence with politicians was to donate large levels of money. I think we'd be naive in here to suggest that that hasn't happened from time to time in Canada, the United States, or otherwise, maybe even here in Alberta, but this act at least goes towards limiting that occurrence happening in the local election authority.

Like I said, these limits seem fair and reasonable. If people want to contribute to a campaign they can, up to $5,000. It seems like a fairly reasonable level that wouldn't tempt a politician from doing the right thing. It opens up an individual who is running a campaign to seek a variety of donors and people who would back his or her campaign. It really works on a good basis of fairness.

I think it also allows for an incumbent not to have too great of an advantage. Many times in civic politics we've heard of some campaigns having a large head start on people who want to get involved in the political process. I believe this will go a long way to solving this difference and to narrowing the gap between people who wish to challenge an incumbent for a position. I think that's a good thing. Encouraging people to run in the democratic process is what legislation should be all about. Again, I applaud the Member for Athabasca-Redwater. I believe this is a good step.

There's one thing we could have also just possibly looked at. I've talked to some aldermen in both cities who thought this might be a good idea. It's that we could at some time possibly just adopt almost the provincial rules, where we deem the local municipalities in their local elections in a similar fashion to the way we do provincial elections in that we have a rule that possibly would provide a tax writeoff for those individuals who are donating to political campaigns, with limits on a yearly basis. That may be something for us to explore in the future.

We already have a system in place, but I think that with municipal governments becoming more and more important in the structure of the way Canada and Alberta are evolving — more people are living in our municipalities; it's the local government that touches their lives more so than us up here in Edmonton — it may be something to look at in the future. I leave that for us to ruminate on and to think about for the future.

I thank you for allowing me time to speak on this. Again, it's a good bill. It's a good start.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of questions and comments.

Seeing none, then the chair recognizes the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just want to be brief in speaking to this bill. I think it is a good bill, but there's one part that does disturb me, and I will speak about that at the end. What this bill does is it clarifies that volunteer services where the volunteer receives no compensation either directly or indirectly is not deemed a contribution for purposes of disclosure, which to me reads in a very backward sort of way because I think that the minute you've paid a volunteer, you've defeated the word, the definition of volunteer. Volunteers aren't paid. It's there, and it does recognize what a volunteer really is.

The other thing is that it clarifies that a candidate whose campaign is self-funded has a funding cap of $10,000, is not required to open a bank account, file a disclosure statement unless he or she had a surplus from a previous election, which I think is all very fair.

One of the other things is that any person, corporation, trade union, employee organization, et cetera, can donate $5,000 before it's actually having to be recorded. Now, these amounts sound large, but really for any of us and all of us in this House who have had to pay advertising bills when we are having campaigns even at the municipal level, they're horrendous. Just even trying to get your name out there, just trying to get a banner on a newspaper is very, very expensive, and I'm not talking about radio and television. I think that these numbers are very fair in terms of starting out without having to be able to disclose them.

It amends the timelines requiring candidates' surplus trust funds to be held by the municipality. I think that's fair as well. I think there's also sort of a good suggestion in here that if there's money left over and you're not running again, you can donate it to a charity or back to the municipality. I would suspect that probably the charities would have a better crack at it than perhaps the municipalities.

One of the things that really troubles me on this — I know that it's been reviewed, and I know that it's been talked about at the municipal level, but I don't think it's been gone into in enough depth — is the fact that it clarifies residency rules in that a person may be a resident of only one place at a time for the purpose of voting. I certainly know that there are many, many people in this province that have lake-front property — in fact, it may just be a block off the lake-front — where their residential tax is probably higher than their house taxes in whichever city they live. I'm not sure how we get around this business of voting twice, but I really believe that if you're a taxpayer in a municipality or in a jurisdiction, you should be allowed to vote in that municipality. You're a taxpayer. You should have a say in how your dollars are going to be spent where you are a resident.

I would like to suggest that that one clause be looked at again. I would just leave it out there for a future date. I certainly recall as a younger person in Manitoba that my parents were allowed to vote in both places because we did have lake-front property, which was outside of Winnipeg.

I would just like to see, I think, this conversation resurrected at the municipal level. I guess I would like it reversed. I would hope that the conversation around this would in fact have that happen. I'll leave that out there.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I think this is a very timely bill and would support it. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, anyone under 29(2)(a)?

Then the chair shall recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

4:10

Mr. Hinman: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to rise and speak about Bill 9, but I'm not in favour of this bill, with all respect to the good Member for Athabasca-Redwater. I sometimes feel like government just does things to do things, to try and look busy.

I guess what I'm going to start off with as the first thing is that jurisdictionally it's called bureaucratic growth. They think that they need to be busy, so they start to do things, and it's not productive, and again we start meddling in areas that we don't need to be meddling in. To the President of the Treasury Board: you might have a better understanding of that.

The first thing that definitely came up a lot last year with Bill 203 was the fact that there wasn't any government-to-government consultation, and we've heard a lot about that. What Bill 9 was to do was address that. They went out and spoke with various stakeholders to see what the problems were. It's just interesting to me, what I want to call some of the double standards or the idea that we need to have one shoe fit all feet, and it just doesn't work.

The first thing, I guess, that I'd like to address on this bill is the example that we're going to have a $5,000 limit. If you look at the different municipalities, whether it's a little area that has, you know, 75 people in a small village that are voting, 300 people, or Calgary or Edmonton, approaching a million or 600,000 or 700,000 people, it's a very different campaign for someone who has to run that. If you look at someone who is trying to put out three mailers to everybody in Calgary, what's the actual cost of doing that? It's immense compared to someone who's running in a little community with 300 people, yet we're going to apply the same campaign limits.

The part that concerns me the most, I guess, is: why is it that we as MLAs and our parties are allowed a $15,000 contribution, yet here we're saying to another jurisdiction, that we're not running in, that we're going to limit you to $5,000? I don't find it appropriate in this bill for us to impose a limit saying that this is the amount that should go there or the idea that at a certain amount, $5,000, none of us are subject to bribery and that we wouldn't do anything for that but that at $15,000 or at $25,000 we would. It seems like what they're implying is that, you know, while this is the limit — they only want you to receive this much — it's above board, but if it's over that, it's not.

One of the policies that we have — and I think it's a very good one — and what's important in an election is the transparency and the having to record and make that public. That's the balance and check that's in there. If an individual wants to spend an enormous amount of money because they've been blessed and have that and they want to run for public office, I think that should be, you know, something that should be considered. Again, I'm not sure — and I'm sure someone will clarify this for me — but I believe that if, in fact, someone decides to run and they've got a little bit of a campaign war chest and they don't use it all, the provisions are such that if they're still thinking about running, they can keep that.

But I'm a little bit concerned. The real problem with that, though, is if someone wants to support someone to run in a municipal jurisdiction and they get a campaign fund — and some of them have some substantial ones — which other people look at and say, "Well, we can't go up against this individual; look at how much they have." I've certainly run a few campaigns. If you look at your competitor's bank account, you might think: "Holy smoke. Can we accomplish this? Can we go up against them?" I say, "Absolutely you can." Why limit your competitor because of what you have? That's part of the freedom of opportunity and for people to try.

The concern that I have is that if there is a campaign fund, we at the provincial level, most of us, are members of a party, so people can contribute to that party $15,000. I know that they say: Oh, no; you can only contribute a thousand dollars to an individual. That's not true. You contribute to your party, and it gets funneled over to your campaign. If someone wants to donate $15,000, it's very doable because we have the legal process of doing that, and it's recorded, you know, as a donation to the provincial party. But we have no mechanism here where we, in fact, can pass that fund, which has been created in that district, on to the next person who runs, and there it is by political party. Who's to say that if someone is running and they say, "You know, I want to step down" and if someone else of that same political philosophy wants to run, they can't acquire that fund and continue on? There is no contingency to pass it on to another person.

I don't see the reason or the purpose in prohibiting that because in political parties, which are above municipal government, we have that ability. Here is another limitation that doesn't allow a group of individuals that maybe are looking to change the political landscape in a community to create a fund where they can give it to different individuals and support them. So it's another what I consider flaw in the bill, where we're being short sighted.

I guess that when we were debating private member's Bill 202 about getting it right and how important it is — well, it's kind of funny that here, on a subject that's not nearly as important, we could put out a private member's bill and then the government's bill the next year and not seem to be too concerned about getting it right, that if we've got to go at it three or four times, that's okay. But in here the purpose of legislation to me is to protect our rights and to protect those who can't protect themselves. We're falling short, I feel, in this province when it comes to our children and pedophiles and pornographic areas.

An Hon. Member: Relevance.

Mr. Hinman: Very much relevant, although that's the problem, that guys don't see it. That's why I have to keep speaking on it. You don't understand the relevance of passing bills even if they don't get it right. The reason why we're doing Bill 9 is because you didn't get it right with Bill 203, and the relevance will never be understood by you. That's why Albertans are going to get rid of you, because you've lost your connection with Albertans. Anyways, that's another problem.

It's interesting. You know, one politician that I have a lot of respect for, that was a true statesman that put his country before himself, ran six times before he got elected, if my memory serves me right. It's important, like I say, for people to build up those war chests so that they have access to it. That man's name was Abraham Lincoln. Ran many, many times before he finally got elected. Most people will say: well, if you've lost once or twice, that's political death.

Mr. Hehr: I think he might have lost 28 times.

Mr. Hinman: I didn't know it was that many. Churchill was another one who lost several times.

Anyways, we need to look at some of this. We kind of addressed volunteer time, yet some of the pay that this government pays to its political connections – this includes clarification on volunteer time, that it doesn't need to be accounted for as a political donation. A company with all its subsidiaries has a total $5,000 contribution limit, he said. Again, I look at that. Well, it's the rate that you pay some of your bureaucrats. I mean, if they were to walk into an office and do a little bit of work and help on a campaign, that could be a $10,000 bill. Should they be banned because of what they get paid working for the government? If they're working on someone's campaign, I would think that that would be a great limitation.

There are just areas in here. Like I say, perhaps the biggest one is: do we really need to be that paternal government that looks down on municipal government and says, "You know, you guys just can't do it right; we need to step in here"? Because then I ask the question: well, then, do we want the federal government to come to the provincial area and say, "You're just not doing it right, and here is the legislation that we want to impose on you"? The federal government has limited donations to a thousand dollars, so should they come in and say to the provincial government, "No, no; you have to live by what we have already passed"? It is constitutional separation of powers, but each level of government should be accountable to the people they represent, not the government above it.

We really need to take a long look at some of these and ask the question: is this really necessary? [interjections] Would someone like to have some time on the floor? I'll sit down and then get up again here.

There are just so many areas here that, though the intent is good – and, again, we all want to improve democracy. I think the key to democracy and improvement, though, is transparency and accountability. There is a slight improvement here on transparency, yet there are more restrictions than worrying about: are we completely transparent?

Again, if we really want true accountability, something that I will continue to bring up until we finally bring this to the citizens of Alberta, true accountability is recall. The most disappointing thing when I go and talk . . . [interjections] Mr. Speaker, therein lies the problem. They laugh about it because they don't want to be accountable. That's a sad day when we have elected people, and they're going to twist it and say by-elections. I don't know of a single person that crossed over to join this government that ever stepped down . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, address the chair.

Mr. Hinman: I will, Mr. Speaker, but sometimes a person can at least look to change the landscape, to see the foolishness that's going on and the smirks on their faces and the comments that they're making. It is shameful. Hon. minister of housing, it is shameful.

The fact of the matter is that accountability, Mr. Speaker, is the most important thing. I ask the question: how are you accountable, then, if you don't have recall? I'm always amazed that the people say: oh, the next time there's an election, I'm accountable. Well, who gets hired and what it says on their contract – I mean, even when we hire someone, we have 30 days where we can give notice.

The number one thing that I find when I talk to people at the door is that they say: "You know what? It doesn't matter who we vote for. You're all the same. Once you get in there, you do whatever it is you want to do, and we have to wait till the next election before we can do something." I will tell you, hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, that that's why people disengage in democracy, because they don't believe that once every four years is enough. They say: "Why bother? Why listen to your propaganda for 30 days when, in fact, you're not going to honour it, and there is nothing that I can do about it as an individual?" That's what happens.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, address your speech to the chair and the bill.

Mr. Hinman: Mr. Speaker, I'd be happy to. I don't know whether you consider it rude or not, but when they're asking me questions, it's a great opportunity to respond to them. I'll respond to you, then. If you'd like to relate that to the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, perhaps he'll get that and receive it from the chair. It's doubtful, though.

Anyway, you know, a concern that most all of us have here, though, is to say: "Well, we want to engage and improve democracy. How do we get people to get engaged?" Yet I see this Bill 9 as one that's prohibitive because it limits people that want to go in there. It's an uphill battle. They say: "You know what? I can't go up against the incumbent. They've got all this money raised." Sometimes it's only a few individuals that realize that we can make a change. They come together, and they want to fund and help one. Like I say, the hypocrisy where we can receive $15,000 but on the municipal level say, "No, we're going to limit you" I find hard to swallow, especially when you look at the large municipalities and the mayoralty races that go on. I mean, how do you send out a brochure to hundreds of thousands of individuals and tens of thousands of households when you're so limited?

Again, because Albertans have become more and more, I guess, disconnected from what they believe is a democratic process, we need to bring them back. Two ways are transparency, so people really can see what's going on, see that when the government is advertising something, who's paying for that, Mr. Speaker, who's involved, what the political connections are on these people – we need to have all of those things, not just the money that's donated but perhaps all of the goodwill that's being donated behind the scenes and the consultation. We supposedly have, you know, a bill that has the lobbyists that are registered, yet it's very easy to circumvent that because you go to an event, and they come up and talk to you.

The long and the short, though, Mr. Speaker, is that this bill isn't necessary. I don't see the point in passing this. Again, it's restrictive on the freedoms of people who want to run. We need transparency. We need accountability. I find that if those two bills were to come forward, I could very much support those, but I'll have to vote against this bill.

I appreciate the time. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes for questions, comments.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I just want to learn a little bit more about this constitutional division of powers for Alberta municipalities, if he could extrapolate on that, because I sometimes look for entertaining reading to put me to sleep. If I get that Hansard later on and read about it, that will just do the job. So can you extrapolate on this constitutional division of powers for Alberta municipalities? That's a novelty to me.

Mr. Hinman: I'd be happy to address that. First of all, one of the things that we need here in the province is a constitution. We need to have one. That's kind of the basis, what democracy is based on. We're a constitutional democracy, which therein puts out the plan and whose responsibility it is to do what.

The best government is always the government that's closest to the people. So if you are writing up new constitutions, the first thing that you would look at is: what's the responsibility of each level of government? One of the problems that we have is the redistribution of tax dollars. I'll speak here on the province of Alberta because we're always upset with equalization payments that we see leave the province and the grief that that causes us because we have a booming economy, yet the money was leaving so we couldn't build the roads, the overpasses, the schools because we just didn't have it. Even with the amount of money that we have here in Alberta, it is a tough job to try to balance the budget.

If you look at the money that's being generated from each municipality, it actually comes from those local municipalities. I mean, we're blessed here in Alberta because of the resource revenue. But in Calgary alone in 2006 $7 billion left the city in personal income tax. A very small percentage of that came back to the municipality of Calgary to do as they saw fit and needed there. With Fort McMurray, the number escapes me now, but just millions and millions of dollars left Fort McMurray in income tax. The same thing with the resources: the money came to the province, yet Fort McMurray doesn't receive very much in comparison to what they've contributed to the Alberta economy.

If we were to have a constitutional formula on the actual sharing of the tax dollars generated from an area, it would change the whole dynamics. It would take the politics out of governing. In fact, the economic reality would kick in, and in areas that are doing well, that money would come back.

We seem to get a few grasps of these things, for example the fuel tax. We were upset with how much was leaving. Years of lobbying, and finally a percentage of the fuel tax comes back to the jurisdiction that is there.

The reason why you need a constitutional democracy is that you need to outline whose responsibility it is and not have one level of government overstep and step into the next level, saying: oh, we're going to look after you in that area because we don't think you're doing a very good job. Here in Alberta we should understand that better than anywhere because of the number of times that we're subject to the federal area in areas that are not even in their jurisdiction, yet they come in, or we abdicate those responsibilities.

Such things as the pension plan. We've given that over to the federal government. There is an unfunded liability. Again, we're putting an inordinate amount of money in that's not going to be there when, in fact, Albertans need it. So this constitutional division of power is critical. We don't have it. It's not structured right.

Because of that the democratic deficiencies continue, and it's just not in our best interest. It's actually a pothole in that economic road where we can't go as fast as we can and the expansion isn't allowed. It's frustrating to different municipal governments because they not only don't have the freedom to run their own elections how they want to do it, but also the funding, the economic prosperity that an area is generating, leaves that area and doesn't come back. Then you have the next level of government wanting to impose their decisions on how it should be run: "Oh, we'll give you money back, but this is what you have to do; you need to put it into potholes" or "You need to put it into water processing" when, in fact, they don't need that. That's not their priority, yet it becomes that next level of government's priority.

Again, like I say, we're overstepping our bounds, I feel. I think that local people can make their own decisions on how they want to run municipal elections. If they can't, let them learn by their own mistakes rather than having the paternal government step in and say: this isn't good enough; here are the rules and regulations that we're going to impose on you. It would be much better if we had a constitution that outlined those areas in a better way.

Perhaps the hon. minister for immigration doesn't even know what a constitution is. I hope that enlightens him a little bit in the direction where he's going.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll just sneak in here. It's a novel idea, this constitutional separation of powers. I just wonder if the member then would advocate, seeing as how we're going to set up an intraprovincial transfer system, that we allocate our schools and hospitals based on the cities that produce those income tax revenues and we don't put provincial facilities in towns that don't produce the income tax revenues. That's what you just argued for. Would you continue with that train of thought, please?

4:30

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, the five minutes for 29(2)(a) have ended.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity on Bill 9.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I know how it hurts, and I feel the hurt of being cut off. [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Calgary-Varsity has the floor.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. And what a wonderful, democratic floor it is to have.

Bill 9, the Local Authorities Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2010. This is another example of the government realizing that they got it wrong in the first place, so now we're going to try and fix it.

Now, we had this debate yesterday, basically, on Bill 203 and time limits and proclamations and fixing. But specific to Bill 9 what Bill 9 is trying to do is that after the fact, with consultation taking place after the previous Bill 203 was passed, all of a sudden Conservative government members realized that not only had they sidelined the AUMA, but those rural members realized that they had discounted the interests of the AAMD and C, that these whether they were urban or rural municipalities did not want to be treated as though they were children. They didn't want to be patronized. They didn't want to submit to a patriarchal management system in this case, what they were allowed to do and what they weren't allowed to do in terms of the local authorities elections.

Now, we've got a real mixed bag in this province when it comes to elections. Within our own provincial election process we have to be highly accountable in terms of every single dollar that we receive. We have rules laid out as to at what point a constituency association can turn over funding to a provincial candidate. For the most part our monetary system of accepting campaign donations is quite well regulated, but the same could not have been said of our municipal counterparts.

Unfortunately, the government with its previous Bill 203, that Bill 9, the Local Authorities Election Statutes Amendment Act, is trying to correct – while I'm supporting it, it still does not have the same common ground as is necessary. Whether it's a leadership election for a party, whether it's a municipal election for a school board or for an alderman, councillor, whatever you wish to call it, we need to have all our rules accountable, transparent, and I would suggest the same or have the same validity to them so that the need to fix previous legislation, such as Bill 9 is trying to accomplish, would not be necessary.

I do appreciate, Mr. Speaker, that the government is trying to correct the mistakes made in Bill 203, which almost flipped the accountability of municipal elections on its head. It made it so restrictive that individual politicians would be restricted in terms of their campaigns. They were restricted in terms of the donations that could be provided.

Now, specifically in Bill 9, things that are changing are a candidate's own campaign funds. Up to $10,000 is exempt from most of the rules pertaining to campaign funds. What that does is that if you have an inheritance or you have individual wealth accumulated through a previous business, you're in a much more advantageous position than somebody who, you know, has a strong sense of social justice but doesn't have as large a bank account. So we're still playing somewhat fast and loose with what people are allowed to earn or bring to their campaigns.

Volunteer services are not considered campaign funds and so do not need to be accounted for in disclosure statements.

Limits for contributions are determined on a yearly basis, not a campaign period basis.

The potentially negative thing about this bill is that it restricts where a person can vote. For example, they'll no longer be able to choose to vote in the municipality of their summer home. For a government that in this latter case believes in democracy and individual rights, prohibiting a person from voting only once in the area that they wish to influence the outcome to me seems to be rather restrictive. I don't believe in the opportunity, obviously, of, you know, not only voting but voting often. That doesn't make sense. But if a person is already contributing, based on their major residence, to the well-being of that municipality and the majority of their taxes are going to that area, they should be able to say: well, I enjoy my experience those months out at Pigeon Lake or Lac La Biche or wherever it is; therefore, I would like to get more involved in the local politics and in the choosing of the representative in my summer village. But we're saying: no, you don't have that right.

In the same way, Mr. Speaker, we're saying to university students that you only have the right to vote at the address that is attributed to your parent who is paying your tuition. Again, we're not being forthright in offering choice. Yes, you can only vote once, but you should be able to vote where you feel the greatest impact on you personally takes place. If that's on a university campus or if that's a summer village, you're voting once in a municipal election. You should be allowed that opportunity.

Now, last session Bill 203 was passed with great consternation from municipalities, as I've included. We and I'm sure every member here have received feedback from the cities of Edmonton, Calgary, Red Deer, St. Albert along with a number of counties that already have comprehensive disclosure rules in place. Bill 203 basically ignored the good work and the accountability that was already there. So I would ask the minister proposing Bill 9, the hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater: which municipalities is the individual concerned about that necessitates this particular bill? Or going back last year to Bill 203 in the first place, you know, the old expression, "If it isn't broken, why are you fixing it?" applies.

Going through the various sections of the bill, section 1 amends the Local Authorities Election Act.

Section 3 stipulates which municipality a person can vote in if they have multiple residences. I've noted this restricts their right to choose. They have no right as to their tax designations, but they can be funding both a summer cottage and helping that district as well as helping the municipality where their main residence is. As I say, they don't have a choice. The municipality a resident can vote in will be determined, in order of priority, by their driver's licence, the address on their tax return, or their mailing address. There are concerns about having a lack of choice about which municipality a person can place their vote in. Why did the government not consult about this provision?

Section 4(a) exempts volunteer services from being considered a campaign contribution. Here we have the unlevel playing field. Whether it's as federal politicians or as provincial politicians, we have the ability through our campaigns to provide tax receipts for goods in kind or services in kind, yet there is no recognition of financial or energy contributions of volunteers. Section 4(b) is simply an administrative change. Section 4(c) sets out the distinction between person and candidate, which is important because it allows for the distinction between a candidate's own contribution to their campaign versus other contributions they receive. These latter changes are positive.

Section 5. This section sets out the rules that govern a candidate's own contribution to his or her own campaign. The candidate will be able to contribute up to $10,000 to their campaign without having to open either a campaigner account or to have to disclose the amount that was contributed or to disclose their campaign expenses to the municipality. Prior to this amendment a candidate's contribution to their own campaign was treated the same way as any other contribution, which meant that it was limited to $5,000.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 9, the Local Authorities Election Statutes Amendment Act, is resolving that previous problem. The amendment is fair, but then the cap of $10,000 is only meaningful when a candidate doesn't receive any outside contributions. They could easily contribute $20,000 to their campaign. There doesn't seem to be a way to make sure that people are being honest. I can't believe that this is an intended or even an unintended consequence of the intention of this bill, which is now attempting to clear up the problems that existed with Bill 203.

Section 6(a). This change effectively raises the limits of contributions. Section 6(b) aligns with an administrative change in section 5. Again, section 6(c) is more in alignment so that there's a flow to Bill 9.

Section 7 does three things. It stipulates that disclosure requirements are necessary only if a candidate's campaign funds include funds from outside sources. It takes out the auditing requirements for campaign contributions exceeding $10,000. It states that if a candidate doesn't run in the next general election, the candidate shall – in other words, there's a compulsion here – donate the surplus funds over $500 to a charity of their choice or to the municipality the candidate ran in. This does not apply to a candidate's campaign funds if they were the sole source of those funds, which is fair. Again, in terms of level playing fields, we have as provincially elected officials the possibility of maintaining to a degree a war chest, but it would be my hope that the majority of individuals, whatever funding exists after their campaign is over, I would hope, would put it back into the constituency account to benefit the governance of the constituency.

Section 8 is primarily administrative changes.

Section 9 changes "is" to "may," referring to the application to a court. When charges of noncompliance are made, the municipality may be named.

Section 10 sets the time when these new rules will be in place, not until December 1, 2011.

Section 2 excludes the candidate's contributions, and it adds two clauses to the conditions of a councillor's disqualification from council: failing to file a disclosure statement in the appropriate time or not being relieved from their obligation by a court order. These are good things. In terms of specific enforcement, the requirements of accountability, these are positive changes.

Mr. Speaker, I know that there are other members who will wish to address Bill 9. It is a step in the right direction. It goes a direction in terms of correcting the potentially enthusiastically speedy passing of private member's Bill 203 this past session.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for comments, questions.

Seeing none, the chair shall now recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow on the bill.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to say a few words regarding Bill 9 and essentially refer back to one of my constituent's concerns in this area. I think that I would actually like to quote what he says here, the possibility of allowing part-time residents in another municipality to be allowed to vote there.

Cottage owners who spend up to half the year living at their cottage have no voice or effective representation through the elected councilors if we can't vote there, despite living there for significant parts of the year, paying taxes there and contributing to the local economy and local community.

It doesn't sound like a really big problem until you look at it from the cottagers' point of view. They are there as part of the community, contributing members to part of the community for a large part of the time, and often they have a very emotional attachment to their cottage, way more than the place that they have to live in in the city when they have to work. If it was only a partial problem – in other words, well, if they made a big effort, they could possibly vote there – that would be one thing, but to be totally excluded from the ability to vote where you look at your home being I do believe is a problem, and it could lead to a situation where you've got a council that would be essentially overriding the wishes of a large part of their constituency.

I just wanted to bring this up. There are concerns out there, and I would like us to really look at that. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Again, Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of comments and questions. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I very much appreciate your reading into the record your constituent's concerns. I've had constituents who have property just outside of Sundre. There's a trailer park outside of Sundre. They are charged for electricity and water for this recreational property. In their case it's simply a trailer in a sort of recreational area. They have to pay taxes for water that they only receive at best five months of the year because the water table is so high that the freeze of the ground occurs early in the fall, and the ground is still frozen into late spring. While they pay municipal taxes, they're not receiving the value or the service. In order to get around this, they've previously been allowed to move their trailer off the spot, and then this trailer wouldn't be considered a secondary residence taxed at that rate.

It's not right, as you've clearly pointed out, that these people are disenfranchised. What are you recommending in terms of resolution for this disenfranchisement, hon. Member for Calgary-Bow? What should be done?

4:50

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-Bow if you wish.

Ms DeLong: I am concerned about this, and I think that it is something that we should look at very carefully and possibly reconsider.

Mr. Marz: Just a question for the member. Is the member advocating, then, that if a resident of my constituency, for example, had a residence in Calgary, where he worked part-time, or in Edmonton – for example, MLAs have condos up here – and perhaps has a cottage at the lake as well, they should be able to vote in multiple places, or should they declare what their principal residence is and vote in that one place?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow if you wish.

Ms DeLong: Although, you know, there is a difference in weight of vote in different parts of the province, I do not believe in voting in more than one location. So, yes, I do believe that we should be specifying a location to vote and then be restricted from voting in the other place.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In my constituency I have quite a few farmers that live in a house in the country. They've stopped farming, but they own a business in town. They get to vote in the country in the municipality, but they don't get to vote in the town where their business is. Likewise, there are many young families who are farmers who live in town because it's good for the kids, but their farm, their business is out in the country. I'm wondering if the member thinks it's important that we tie where the person votes to their residence, or maybe it should be optional where the business is. It's perhaps, quite frankly, where the member's interest is, not just where they live.

Ms DeLong: I don't think that I could come up with a very valid opinion when it comes to whether a business should be allowed to be a location to vote, but there is a difference when it comes to residence because people do have more than one residence. Just because mail goes to a certain residence, that doesn't mean that that is the most important residence to them, nor does it mean that it is the one that they care about the most or even that has the most value to them financially. I mean, I can understand the residence piece, you know, that we ought to be able to select which residence we vote in, but to go that next step and say – unless you're actually living in your business. I don't really understand that issue well enough.

The Deputy Speaker: We have six seconds. Any other hon. member wish to speak on the bill?

Seeing no other, I will call on the hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater to close the debate.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just call the question, please.

[Motion carried; Bill 9 read a second time]

Bill 12 Body Armour Control Act

[Debate adjourned March 23]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and speak on Bill 12. I don't think anyone can argue that keeping Alberta safe is the number one priority. Yesterday we debated in the Legislature the importance of getting it right, and we talked about the importance of consultation. I would like to get some clarification from the minister on several issues if I may. Hopefully, the Minister of Justice will read Hansard.

Mr. Speaker, I think what's important about democracy and the opportunity of having the last two weeks to be at home: you move around the province, you move around your constituency, and you have some debates about what legislation is important and other legislation that's not so important. I had the opportunity to talk to people. In fact, it was interesting. For Bill 12, which I honestly didn't think would create that much debate, I've had a lot of calls. We've had a lot of e-mails on that. I've had a lot of discussion on Bill 12. So for me second reading is to get some clarification from the minister. The notes that I've taken are notes that I've heard from across the province. It's from what people have called me about. It's some meetings I've had. So I would really like to get some clarification.

I would like to ask the minister: who have you consulted with on developing this legislation? As I indicated earlier, we talked a lot about consultation. I'd like to know who was consulted on this legislation, how much time was spent on the consultation. One of the things that's been interesting is: did you consult with those selling the body armour? Many of the people that we've talked to to get some clarification from them have not been called. They haven't been consulted. In fact, they haven't even been asked for their advice or their opinion. They heard about this Bill 12 but have not been called, haven't been consulted, haven't even been asked for their advice or their opinion.

It's important to note that there are a number of individuals employed in dangerous industries that are not exempt from the permit application process such as taxi drivers or local shop owners.

If a shop owner or a taxi driver feels unsafe performing their daily duties and wishes to apply for a permit, the bill does not touch on what criteria must be met by that individual in order to be approved or even considered for a permit.

Mr. Speaker, another concern is the registrar and its duties to report illegal activities. Now, I understand the Alberta Solicitor General and Public Security will administer the application process. My concern is that Bill 12 does not mention whether or not the registrar is responsible for informing police authorities if an application for a permit is thought to be connected with criminal or otherwise illegal activities. If an individual applies for body armour and is thought to be involved in a gang or crime ring, what requirements are in place for the registrar to report that individual?

Another question relates to the fee an individual would incur to apply for a permit. Bill 12 is very vague in stating in section 6(2)(b), "be accompanied with the prescribed fee."

Mr. Speaker, what or where does the bill deal with Internet sales? How do you plan on dealing with that? If you type on the Internet "body armour" or "bulletproof vest," it brings a host of companies where you can purchase body armour online. What is ironic and to me interesting is how many came up and how easy it is to purchase. What is even funnier is what is under legal terms of sale and website use. I'm just going to quote from one of them.

Legal Terms of Sale and Website Use

We only sell to law-abiding adults.

Body armor is a purely defensive item but, regardless, we are very sensitive to the possibility of vests being misused by criminals.

By buying a vest from us, you certify that you are a law-abiding adult with no felony convictions.

Now, that's ironic. If you go down further in reading that, it assumes no liability. It tells you about the shipping and handling. It tells you all about the bulletproof vest. It tells you all about the body armour. You can even send your size. So a criminal can type in here: yes, I'm a law-abiding citizen; my name is Joe Blow, and I want this. How are we going to control that?

Mr. Speaker, I also have some questions that I want to have the minister respond to. How many employees will your proposed registry have? How much will it cost? Couldn't these employees and these dollars be put to better use on front-line policing? Another question, and this is from a police officer: is a provincial stat offence going to stop gang members from obtaining body armour? Another one from a police officer: under exemption 4(h) who can set up businesses, and what is stopping organized gang members from setting up the business and selling it to other organized crime gang members?

Mr. Speaker, I know and I realize the importance of keeping our communities safe. I had the honour of chairing the task force, travelling this wonderful province and talking to hundreds of people about what's important to them to keep their communities safe and what they wanted to see. We put forward many, many recommendations on that. I support the concept of the bill; I truly do. But we need to get clarification. We talked about that in-depth yesterday in regard to getting it right.

I'd be more than pleased to have the minister respond to the questions. I think they're important. These are the questions, quite frankly, that Albertans have asked us. These aren't the questions that the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek pulled out of her hat and said: "Okay, well, I need to understand this." These are some of the questions, as I alluded to earlier, that the police have asked me to get clarification on. I'm sure other members of the House have received some e-mail in regard to some of the questions, things that have come in with regard to this particular piece of legislation. I can only tell you that it's important to get some answers.

I know that some of the police have written because I've got a copy of one of the e-mails that was sent to us that was addressed to the Premier, and it was addressed to Minister Redford. He says very clearly that he's a police officer. He says: I'm being blunt; this is typical political legislation to make headlines but does nothing to solve the problem and has unintended victims; I'm a cop in this province, and I'm involved in gang enforcement. Basically, he went on to ask some questions, some of those that I've brought forward, in regard to the questions that I'd like the minister responsible to answer if those can be answered, Mr. Speaker. It's what we discussed yesterday. It's about clarity. It's about getting it right.

I think there are some important cost factors that need to be answered in this particular legislation. I don't for a minute believe that in my four years as Solicitor General and in all the years, and I use this lightly, that I worked the streets – I've been involved with police on the streets on the issue of drugs and alcohol and child prostitution. There is no way on God's green earth that anybody is going to convince me that gang members or organized crime are going to willingly go and purchase body armour.

I like some of the things that are contained in the bill: allowing the police to do searches. My concern is, again, the innocent victims that are going to be taking up time in regard to trying to purchase body armour: the taxi driver, the pizza driver that's serving pizza in some of our unsavory districts in this city.

So I look forward, again, to getting clarification from the minister. Maybe this is one of these bills that is perception versus reality, one that it might be worthwhile to send off to one of our policy field committees and listen to what, you know, we hear when we go into one of those policy field committees. I sit on that particular policy field committee, and I would love the opportunity to be able to ask the people that come in front of us, whether it's Chief Hanson, who I have a great deal of admiration for and support, as I do the chief here. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, all of the chiefs in this province and all of the police in this province do an unbelievable job under very, very difficult circumstances. I think it's an opportunity for us to have them come forward. We can ask them some questions. We can ask the legal beagles, that we have a lot of in this government, and get some answers from them.

I think it's important to consult with the people that sell this equipment. As I mentioned earlier, of the contacts that we made with people that sell the body armour, none – none – have been called. None have been asked. They're reading what they read in the paper.

I look forward to hearing from the Minister of Justice in regard to the questions that I've asked.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of questions and comments. The Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm not the Minister of Justice, but I am a bit of a legal beagle, as this member has mentioned. I first want to commend this member for her complete and total dedication in her time here to law enforcement in this province. That being said, I do want to make just a couple of points. I do believe that we have got this bill right. I would submit to this member, respectfully, that we can't use just the fact that we may not imagine every type of law school textbook view as to what may happen as an excuse for inaction.

This bill does allow an individual who has a legitimate reason to have body armour to obtain a licence. It is not a registry. It does have some bipartisan appeal, as the Member for Calgary-Buffalo had indicated his support before. Again, I do see a dead horse in front of me, Mr. Speaker. I'm not going to flog it.

I, too, have spoken to many members of the Calgary Police Service who have indicated to me that what will happen is that these gang members will actually use this body armour as a way to taunt people, as a way for status, as a way of identification when they have no legitimate reason to actually have it.

As well, there is similar legislation in British Columbia. This is not a registry; it's licensing.

The final comment that I want to make, Mr. Speaker, is that we do not need to ask criminals or consult gang members about whether or not they like this bill. I'm about keeping the streets safe, and I'd say to the members of that caucus that they should be about doing the same.

Thank you.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, now he's got me going because not once did I say to consult with gang members or did I say to consult with organized crime, you know, and I want that on the record. I talked about consulting with the people who are selling body armour. I think they should be part of the process.

Mr. Speaker, it's amazing to me that yesterday I listened all day in regard to Bill 202, the mandatory reporting of child pornography, about the importance of consulting, the importance of getting it right, the importance of getting the regulations right, all of that stuff. You know what? I support this bill. I just need some clarification because what's important is that these questions came from Albertans. These are questions that I heard from police officers. These are questions that I heard from people that are involved. In fact, some of his lawyer friends are even confused about this particular piece of legislation. It's just a matter of getting clarification. I don't think there's anything wrong with that. I think it's important.

We can go back. I can talk to the police officers that brought up to me section 4(h): "a business owner, or an employee of a business, who in the ordinary course of that business or employment purchases, sells, transports or otherwise deals with body armour." This came directly from a policeman about setting up the business: who is managing that business, and what's stopping Joe Hells Angel? Don't ever kid yourself. The Solicitor General knows of all of the businesses that are set up for laundering money and everything as legitimate businesses. The police, that he works for, know who they are. What's stopping the Hells Angels from setting up a business and selling to whomever they want?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, it's well and fine that the hon. member has asked some questions of the Justice minister seeking clarification, and I expect that in due course of this debate those questions will be answered. That's reasonable and part of the process here.

I just want to clarify for the House, because my name or, at least, my title was brought up, that actually I don't work for the police forces. I provide oversight to the police forces in this province, and in the course of my duties here not one policeman that I'm aware of has expressed a concern about this.

By way of seeking clarification, I just wondered if the hon. member is aware that Chief Hanson, whom she mentioned in her previous discussion, Chief Boyd, and Deputy Commissioner Knecht all stood on the podium, as the Minister of Justice announced this bill, expressing their strong support for it. I want to clarify that.

Again, in no way to interject, I believe the Justice minister would provide you with the clarifications that you seek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member is well aware . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Sorry, hon. member. The five minutes have ended.

Does any hon. member wish to speak on the bill? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to make a couple of very brief remarks. I'm not sure that I can really understand what we're doing. What are we doing in Canada, what are we doing in Alberta, what am I doing in Lethbridge talking about body armour, for Pete's sake? Why am I not protected in our country so that I can go out of my house at night and walk down the street and not have to worry about if I can get body armour or not? This is insane. Why are we not safe in our country?

Yes, the baddies might get body armour. But I heard some of the conversations that were going on with this bill before, and they were talking about their daughters wearing body armour. No. This is wrong. We should have more police forces out there. We should be able to leave our houses and be safe and not even have to worry about body armour.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of comments or questions. The hon. Solicitor General. [interjections]

Mr. Oberle: Stow it, would you? I have a question for the hon. member.

Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. member is aware that we're talking about a situation of constantly evolving organized crime here. Quite frankly, I think everybody, including that former Solicitor General over there, would agree: you can't arrest your way out of this problem. It's a very broad problem. It involves several departments in our government; it involves education, social assistance, and all sorts of areas. It also involves being nimble to stay ahead of organized crime, who in every society in the world, not just in Canada, has been very nimble at getting ahead of the police.

So while you may criticize – and you have, and that's fine – the policing element of this, all I ask is that you recognize that you cannot arrest your way out of this problem. For every gang member you put in jail, two more will sprout. You know, it's a very complex problem. [interjections] If those guys would stow it and listen to honest debate . . .

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Yes. Thank you. I can appreciate the Solicitor General's remarks. However, I think my remarks are going to come from the same place as when I stood up the first time: what on earth are we doing admitting that we're losing out to the bad guys? This isn't the Wild West. This isn't John Wayne. Or maybe I should be saying, "Where is John Wayne?" because he did beat all the bad guys. Why are we not beating the bad guys? Why do I have to wear body armour in Alberta?

The Deputy Speaker: Under 29(2)(a). The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere has the floor.

Mr. Anderson: Well, I just wanted to ask the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East. I'm just curious what she thinks about the fact that, you know, members on this side of the House and members on that side of the House at one point or another have said, "We're against this gun registry, and we're against farmers having to register their long guns," et cetera, and rightfully so, and then they turn around and say that we need to register body armour.

Mr. Denis: It's not a registry. It's a licensing system.

Mr. Anderson: It's a licensing system, just like the gun registry is a licensing system. It's the same thing.

The point is, hon. member, that I'd like to know: what do you think about that apparent contradiction? It just seems like a total, bold-faced contradiction that they would be supportive of a body armour registry and the costs involved in that and not supportive of the gun registry and the cost of that. It makes no sense to me.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. It does appear to be certainly a contradiction, but let me just take this the next step further. I mean, if our police officers have lasers, the bad guys are going to have lasers. Now, in protecting someone who is protecting me and my family – certainly, we should be protecting anyone that's in our protective services, and unfortunately that could come down to even ambulance drivers when they're picking up God knows who. The point is: what are we doing admitting that the bad guys are beating us? I think it's wrong.

Mr. Oberle: I'd like to ask the hon. member where exactly it says in the legislation or where anybody said in the debate that we're giving up and declaring defeat to the bad guys. I think you've talked about wishing to feel safe in your community. If you look around, we have, compared to other countries or other jurisdictions, better crime statistics, right? We're certainly not at the lowest end of the totem pole in that regard. What we're trying to do is stay ahead of the bad guys, and we're talking about the bad guy that sits in a bar with body armour on, strutting it, letting everybody know how important he is. That's the guy we're targeting. There are legitimate exceptions for people that require body armour for their work.

We talked about drawing parallels. What is the parallel between this and the gun registry? The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere would admit that there are legitimate uses for long guns, and I agree with him. There are legitimate uses for long guns. Where there are legitimate uses for body armour, we're going to allow it. What we're talking about is nailing the organized-crime individual, who does not have a legitimate reason to wear one.

The precedents abound. We have all sorts of prohibited weapons that we do not allow in our society because they're deemed to be a danger to society; nunchuks, for example. [interjection] Hon. member, you're a lawyer, for God's sake. [interjection] You prove it. The hon. member would assert that there are legitimate reasons to own long guns, and I would agree with him. That's why we said that the long gun registry isn't right.

The Deputy Speaker: The five minutes under Standing Order 29(2)(a) have ended.

Any hon. member wish to speak on the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to rise and speak against Bill 12, the Body Armour Control Act. I'm somewhat amazed that the discussion is going on here. You'd think that we were talking of weapons of destruction, and I don't even want to mention that. There are vests that are being used that aren't in the best interests of society, and many Canadians have lost their lives because of those. But we're talking body armour, not an explosive vest where people are going to be walking into facilities and killing other people. I think there's a huge difference between these two.

Let's go back to some basic problems of this government, again, about getting it right or being intrusive in individuals' rights. That's the basis that we need to be looking at. Again, it's constitutional. We don't have property rights. [interjections] We don't have property rights, and it's a problem.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, please address the chair.

Mr. Hinman: I am speaking to the chair. I just had a kink in my neck, and I had to move it. I'm getting whiplashed here from the left.

We have a problem here in the fact that we seem to think that we can somehow have the safety to society by registering body armour: "Wow. We'll register it, and now all of a sudden we're going to be safe." We use the excuse that, well, now if there's someone walking around with it, we have a legitimate reason to stop that person. It gives them the ability to do that, and that's why we pass many laws. I don't always think it's in the best interests of the freedom of society. It's a safety issue.

The gun registry started off with the simple thought and the beauty of having a safe society if we just registered guns, that all of a sudden we're all going to be safe and that this is going to take a giant leap forward. Well, we had handguns registered for a long time. I believe it was in the '30s when we registered handguns. They're still a problem, and crimes are being committed. The problem that legislators seem to get caught up on is the fact that "Oh, if we pass this, law-abiding citizens are going to follow the law," and when 80 to 85 per cent of the people follow the law, it usually works pretty good.

But the problem is that it's those that aren't law abiding that cause the problem. The bureaucracy said, "Oh, we can do this gun registry for a million dollars." We've spent over a billion now, and it hasn't stopped crimes with guns. Now we're taking this huge leap and saying, "Oh, if we start registering or" – excuse me – "licensing," like it's some big new, novel idea that has nothing to do with registration – it's registration, just in a different cloak. To think that now gangs are somehow not going to wear them for fear of the police stopping them – the thing is, though, they'll probably be the most legitimate ones and be able to hire a lawyer to say, "I have these people that have threatened my life, and I need to get it." They'll probably have legal reasons to wear these licensed vests, where people that maybe live in a neighbourhood where they don't feel safe want to go out and get one. They don't want it registered or licensed because then the police might think: oh, this person is gang related. So the offence is: "Okay. Why would this individual want body armour?" Like I say, all of a sudden they go into questions.

This is just, again, bureaucratic bloat. This is the idea of safety that supercedes our individual rights, and it's wrong. We don't need to register, we don't need to license body armour. Again, there are just so many areas where we look at it, and it's just so troubling to me for us to think that by registering this, we're going to be able to identify gang members or stop them on the street and prohibit them or arrest them or fine them in doing this.

If we want to start to get to the root of the problem, it's when someone perpetrates a crime that we need to act strongly. That's where we're strong on crime, not soft on crime. It's when it's actually happened, when someone is, you know, perpetrating a criminal activity. That's where we want to be strong on crime. In B.C. I believe it's an offence to wear it during or in attempting a crime. That's a bill that is worth passing. It's an offence. Again, we kind of supposedly had this law that if, in fact, you use a gun, there's an automatic five- or 10-year extension on the crime. That's strong on crime, when someone has actually carried it out. Then you get these individuals and you put them behind bars, and they're not just rotated out to perform another ongoing crime the next day because they can pay a fine and they're making money.

There are just so many areas here where we need to take a step back and realize that this isn't going to solve the problem. It's going to bloat the bureaucracy. It's going to cost taxpayers money, and it's not going to address the problem in any sense. We shouldn't pass this bill. Perhaps that'll be one of the better things. This government seems to be kind of stalling out. The whispers in the halls are that perhaps tomorrow or the next day we're going to recess for the summer, and that'll be a good thing because some of these bills that shouldn't be passed won't go through. It wouldn't surprise me if the government doesn't push them through quickly before they go for their summer break in hoping to establish . . .

Mr. Anderson: Spring and summer break.

Mr. Hinman: Spring, summer, fall. It'll be an extended one, to my understanding.

We need to look and ask the question: why are we passing these laws? Who is it really going to affect, and how is it really going to help? Again, we can't just be passing these laws because of the perception that this is going to make us look good or the perception that, "Oh, Alberta is stepping forward" or so that the police chiefs can say: "Well, you know, this is going to help safety in the city here. We're going to be able to pull over these people that are wearing body armour." Like I say, I think that you'll find that the people that should least be wearing it will be the ones that have the legal licence to wear it.

We're not going to help our situation here, so I would hope that we would reconsider this and that the nays would outvoice the yeas in this for the benefit of Albertans and to realize that we need a bill so that when someone is perpetrating a crime, that's where we're tough on it, not for having a body vest or wearing a body vest for whatever reason they may desire to do that. It's wrong to think that licensing these is going to make Alberta safer. It's not. It's wrong to think that gangs are now going to limit their use. It's not going to happen. They're still going to have them. They're still going to be walking on the street. It's not in our best interests.

I hope that we don't get into licensing this and having to hire a lot more individuals and licensing agencies and tracking and trying to follow through. Like I say, I hope someone who has a legitimate concern and wants to be able to silently buy one because of the area that they live in or something isn't going to go on a list and then all of a sudden be questioned by the police: "Okay. Who are they associated with? Why have they bought body armour?"

Mr. Hehr: Are you a Communist?

Mr. Hinman: Are you a Communist? Again, that brings up another interesting point, hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo. Government seems to love to have lists. I went and listened to some of the Holocaust memorials, and one individual that was speaking said that the Holocaust was the most documented thing in history. They know every person, every area because of a list.

When government has and develops all these lists, it usually isn't in the best interest of the people. It isn't in the best interest of freedom. The government, when they have a list, thinks they have power. They try to use and manipulate those lists. Lists are not good in government's hands. We don't need them. There are a few legitimate reasons: for a census. But why do we ask the questions we do? We ask far too much. We're intrusive in this country, and we need to be backing off. We don't need one more list of those people that are legally identified to wear body armour.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of comments and questions. The hon. Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I just have one question for this member. He talks a lot about the Constitution. I'm wondering what sections of the Constitution he's referring to.

Mr. Hinman: I would urge the individual to get the BNA Act, 1867; the Westminster Act, 1931; the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, 1982, and do a little bit of his own research. That's one of the problems in this House. I feel that individuals are given papers, and they don't even know where they come from. If he doesn't know the Constitution, whether it's section 91 or 92, whether it's federal or provincial or where they are, that's his problem. I suggest that he go home and do a little bit of his own work and understand what constitutions are for and why they're important.

In a democratic Constitution our rights are to be protected. That's the most important thing: to protect our rights and not have lists and safety things and not to write up a Constitution to say that government knows best. That's what happens with a lot of those tyrannical governments. They write up a Constitution, and they say: "You know what? We'll provide you protection. We'll provide you shelter. We'll provide you food. We'll give you safety." That's exactly what we provide to people that we put in jail here, and many dictatorship governments provide that same thing. That's the onslaught, the reasons why they say that if you give us complete control, we'll give all these things. It doesn't happen. It's wrong. We want to have our freedoms protected here, not a Constitution where they take away our property.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, we tried to get rid of the gun registry, so we got rid of that. Now we're bringing in the body armour registry. Do we need to bring in a knife registry, hon. member, to make things safe or perhaps a big rock registry or – I don't know – a steel-toed boots registry? You can do a lot of damage with those. At what point do we stop registering things and just spend the money policing our streets and actually doing the things that will keep our citizens safe? Why the need to spend all this money on bureaucracy to register something that can't hurt anyone? The people that would actually use it in a crime would never think to register. Are there any reasons? Can you think of any?

Mr. Hinman: Well, I think the biggest reason, like I say, is the falsehood in thinking that they're going to go forward. Just think for a minute what we could do here in Canada if we had a billion dollars to put police officers out on the street rather than registering a gun. We need to be tough on crime, and that's going after the perpetrators. We protect the criminal far more than we protect the victims. This registry, again, is protecting the criminal. It's not going to protect the victim. The reason why is because we're going to be putting good money into a very poor return on our investment in trying to protect the people of Alberta.

Again, like I say, the biggest boondoggle is to spend a billion dollars for a gun registry. Think what that would do if we had police officers throughout Canada that were out there going after the perpetrators of crime and being able to do investigations rather than being able to scan through huge, long lists of gun registry.

5:30

Again, you know, you hear so many rumours. I hear, like, over 30 per cent of the lists of the gun registry aren't accurate. Again, how restrictive are we going to be or how careful are we going to be when people go in and register? I mean, right now we have a major problem with our health care, with false declarations and paying out there. It's going to be the same. There are going to be lots of people that will probably go in, say who they are, be able to get a licensed vest, and in fact it isn't theirs.

Again, are we going to pass a law that if someone buys a vest, they've got to track it and report in? I'm not sure that it's in here that they've got to report where that vest is. Is it in the law here that if I buy one and have it, I can sell it on the black market and have to register that? There are just so many things that can and will be expanded. We're just going to create more chaos, more problems, and not solve any.

Trying to register body armour is just wrong, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Mr. Fawcett: Yeah. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I know that the hon. member and his colleague have thrown out there some very absurd examples and seem to really miss the point of the difference between a registry and a licence and that sort of thing. I'm wondering if the hon. member is so ideological that he believes that we should not issue drivers' licences or people shouldn't have to register their cars or stuff like that. I mean, ideology can only be taken so far. There are certain realities that set in in society. I'm wondering what the hon. member thinks of that.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) time has ended.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity on the bill.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. As a former teacher I can't help but see a connection between the sort of giddy atmosphere in this Assembly today and equating it with children sort of one day out from Christmas holiday or the summer holiday. But at least today there is less confrontation, and there is more give-and-take. Yes, there are some accusatory back-and-forths, but generally it's a better day than it has been on other occasions, so I look forward to contributing to the quality of the day and, hopefully, the quality of the debate.

I am mixed as to the degree that I support the legislation. Beyond a doubt I want to do everything in my power as a legislator to support police forces, and if even in a small manner this Body Armour Control Act would do that, I could see myself supporting it. But we've had some interesting arguments come up from a variety of different parties and individuals as to the effectiveness of this particular piece of legislation. In sort of side conversations from one of my Calgary-Varsity constituents, who's a representative in this Assembly, he seems to think that this is not the instrument to achieve the protection that's necessary, and because he's a Calgary-Varsity constituent, I tend to have great faith in his opinions.

I was rather pleasantly surprised, for example, by the hon. finance minister, who is a member of the Calgary-Varsity constituency. I've already praised yesterday his work on the sustainable land-use framework and hoped that the efforts he put into it were continued. I also am fortunate to have the hon. minister of aboriginal affairs as a Calgary-Varsity constituent. There is value – regardless of whether you're from Calgary-Varsity, have that honour and privilege – in this House.

With regard to body armour and specifically Bill 12, I can't help but think that there are numerous times when all of us probably wished that we had body armour. I think it might even be more appropriate for my rural colleagues, who, going up to a farmhouse at night, aren't absolutely certain of the reception they're going to receive and might wish to be included in the group that was allowed to wear the body armour.

For example, when I first ran in Calgary-Foothills, it included some outstretched rural countryside, and that German shepherd came bounding up to my father and greeted him with a little bit of a nip as opposed to a lick. I'm sure my father would have wished that he was wearing body armour when he was distributing pamphlets.

I know that when I ran, for example, in 2001 against the former Treasurer Pat Nelson, the 2001 federal election sort of crossed over during the provincial period, and as I was door-knocking in Calgary-Foothills, the question that I was repeatedly getting was: are you a federal Liberal, or are you an Alberta Liberal?

An Hon. Member: They're the same thing.

Mr. Chase: And then there was that kind of comment: they're the same thing. So I jokingly said: well, if I were a federal Liberal, I'd be wearing a blue UN helmet and a flak jacket because I know the reception I might get from an individual such as yourself. I mean, that was in jest.

But the reality, as the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East pointed out, is: how far do we go in terms of providing safety to our community? I agree with her that we have to take individual initiatives in terms of protecting our own well-being and our own property without aggressively getting in the face of some other individual. I understand the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore and the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere are concerned about the effectiveness of a list in terms of being a deterrent.

Where I disagree in terms of the listing is with the long gun registry. That's something that a lot of police forces felt had some value because when there was a call, they at least could look on their computer and on their registry. If it was a domestic dispute or whatever and there was a registered long gun, they had a sense of what they were getting into. I agree that the expenses associated with the registry were exorbitant. I would rather have seen outfits like fish and game clubs, who enjoy the benefits of long guns, doing the registering and passing that information on.

In terms of the listing we could pass this law. I don't know that any police officer would be that much better protected in the carrying out of their duty because the fact that a person is a criminal tends to mean that they disobey the laws. All of a sudden if we make a law against the prohibited acquiring of body armour, does that mean that, you know, whether it's a list or a registry or whatever, somehow they're not going to acquire that armour? Maybe with the passage of Bill 12 Crown Surplus, for example, won't be able to sell flak jackets. I'm assuming that that would be a logical consequence. Or they might have to do some kind of an internal search as to what kind of convictions this individual who wishes to purchase the armour has.

I mean, we can go to protective measures which we can beyond a doubt agree to. Then we have those intrusion circumstances. For example, at a bar a person has to provide all sorts of identity, indications for a search as to whether they're allowed to come into that establishment. I believe in – and pardon the expression – a just society, but I do not honestly know whether this would serve police.

Now, having said that, it is indicated, and I'll just quote:

"Policing in our province does not exist in a vacuum," said Calgary Police Chief Rick Hanson. "We simply cannot do what we do without the support of the Province. We appreciate the ongoing efforts of [the] Justice Minister . . . and Solicitor General," whose name will remain unquoted so that I don't offend our rules, "in providing us with the legislation and tools we need to address the investigative and operational challenges we face – particularly in the fight against organized crime."

"As a police agency, we support any amendments where the goal is to protect citizens and officers who serve those citizens," said [in this case] Edmonton Police Chief Mike Boyd. "We are especially pleased to see the Province expand its efforts in our fight against organized crime across Alberta."

Well, I have great respect for both chiefs Boyd and Hanson, and they believe that this would contribute to their, I would suggest, enforcement or protective arsenal. I gather, you know, my mind should be absolutely clear, and beyond a doubt I would be, without question, supporting the legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I value these concerns. I value the concerns of the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, who worked on the community and crime task force but seems to have reservations about this particular piece of legislation. So I'm left in a quandary, but I don't want to prevent other individuals from expressing their concerns. Please, please do participate.

Thank you for the opportunity.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes comments, questions. The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Yes. I appreciate the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, and I have a question. He made a comment that the police, if there's a domestic dispute or something of that nature where they're called to a house, look to see if in fact there's a gun there. My understanding with the policemen that I've talked to is that they never make any assumptions, that they go in every house assuming that they have a long gun or a gun in there.

So really, what is the value of having the registry when, in fact, it actually presents a form of security thinking – "Oh, we're okay to go in here; there's nothing registered" – when in fact the criminals who have those don't register them? It gives you a false sense of security. Often you let your guard down, and it jeopardizes the policemen's safety because they all might hear on that, "Oh, this house has no registered gun," so they're not quite as vigilant, I guess, in protecting themselves going in. Again, this is this false sense of security that's allowed.

The other problem that happens with registries. I've met a couple of individuals here in the province where a mad neighbour or ex-spouse or something reports and says: "You know what? That individual has unregistered guns in there?" Then they're brought in at 2 in the morning. The SWAT team comes down on there. This one individual's 80-year-old mother was living there with him. So what we do is we actually get into this police state where intrusion into the home is elevated, and we don't have that protection of privacy. I wonder if you've thought of those and the fact that: does that registry actually perhaps endanger the police and other people because of the fact they make this assumption that it's okay and, again, let down their guards? What might be your comments on those, hon. member?

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, we are talking about armour, body armour, not about gun registries.

Mr. Chase: Yes. Thank you. With regard to a registry in general – whether it's body armour, whether it's a gun, whether it's a vehicle – the police, when a call goes out, try to gain as much information as they possibly can as they're rushing to respond. They always have to assume the worst because their lives and the lives of their partners and the lives of the people potentially they're serving are always at risk.

The ability to access that information I don't think lulls or provides a false sense of security, but it does provide them with information. For example, whether they're running a licence plate on a highway stop or whether they're running a background check on an individual whose residence they've gone to, there is going to be a record as to how many other disturbances or how many other calls there have been to this residence. After a fact, it does provide them with some background research, which, if it's possible to be even more cautious, would be helpful.

Mr. Speaker, I realize we're talking body armour, but I can't help but think of the communication breakdown in Mayerthorpe, where because the communication wasn't provided, four young Mounties lost their lives because the information wasn't available. If this information helps the police force in carrying out their duties, then I will probably at the appropriate time support it. But I understand the quandary.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I guess I just have to ask the question. There are two things to look at here. I do believe that it provides a false sense of security because you think you know and you let your guard down. It doesn't increase your check and your guard; it actually reduces it. It's just human nature that, "Oh, there's nothing there," and it actually lowers our guard on that.

The other question I have for the hon. member. We're concerned here. We have a fiscal deficit here, a cash running debt of over $7.9 billion. Would it not be better for our police force to be able to actually have people that are effective fighting crime than to spend any amount of money on a registry? I mean, we've got to be fiscally responsible here. Where's the best, you know, return on investment for fighting crime? I just don't see that with a vest registry. It just seems like we could utilize it so much better.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) has ended.

Does any other hon. member wish to speak on the bill?

Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 12 read a second time]

Private Bills Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Cao in the chair]

The Chair: The chair shall now call the committee to order.

Bill Pr. 1 Community Foundation of Lethbridge and Southwestern Alberta Act

The Chair: Are there any comments or questions? The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. A few comments are in order, I believe, regarding Bill Pr. 1. This bill has been reviewed by Senior Parliamentary Counsel and by the Standing Committee on Private Bills, which has recommended that the bill proceed.

This bill does replace the existing legislation, which was established in 1966, establishing the Lethbridge Community Foundation. As I stated in second reading, Mr. Chairman, the existing foundation has been very successful. It has acquired some $13 million in endowments and continues to grow. The new foundation established by Bill Pr. 1 updates the legislation. As I mentioned, it is modelled after the Calgary Foundation's legislation. That legislation established our own Calgary Foundation, which has been very successful. It was established in 1955, and presently has assets of some $270 million.

There are three areas of change that are encompassed in the new act, Bill Pr. 1. First, and most obvious, is the name change to reflect the area that's actually covered by the work of the foundation, which is southwestern Alberta in addition to the city of Lethbridge. Secondly, it updates the governance. And, thirdly, it adds protection for the donors in the form of additional disclosure and enhancing the information that's provided to donors.

I would like to call the question.

The Chair: Shall the chair call the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill Pr. 1 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill Pr. 2 Canada Olympic Park Property Tax Exemption Amendment Act, 2010

The Chair: Are there any comments or questions? The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I wish to advise the House that the Standing Committee on Private Bills recommended that the bill proceed with amendments, friendly amendments, by the way. I would ask that the chair now direct the amendments to be distributed.

The Chair: The amendment is now being circulated.

Ms DeLong: While it is being distributed, I thought I might say a few words.

The Chair: Yes. Continue, hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much. This Legislature and, in fact, all of Canada owe Canada Olympic Park an enormous thank you. The success that we had in the 2010 Olympics, not just for the regular Olympics but also the Paralympics, was due to the work that was done at Canada Olympic Park over the last several years. Though we owe them an enormous vote of thanks, the Olympics are all about fairness, and it wouldn't be fair if we were to give Canada Olympic Park some sort of advantage when it came to being a profit or a nonprofit. I just wanted to assure you that when we were putting this bill together, we were simply streamlining the process for defining whether or not part of the park would be profit or nonprofit. That is simply all that this bill does.

I would ask everyone to please support this bill. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East on the amendment.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Chair. If I can get another clarification on this. The exemption from the property tax: how is that changing from before you brought in this amendment? Is this not being explicit, that it's only nonprofits that are exempt?

Ms DeLong: Yes, it is. It is very explicit, and that's what this bill does. It just makes that explicit. The process that is being created for analyzing whether something is for-profit or not-for-profit is just being made more explicit. It's not actually changing.

Right now COP actually pays $30,000 to $40,000 per year in property taxes, and it will be continuing to pay $30,000 to $40,000 per year in property taxes for things like any facility that has alcohol. Anything that is essentially nonprofit is excluded and will continued to be excluded.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity on the amendment.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Yes, speaking to the amendment. Again, I'm wanting to be supportive, but I'm seeking clarification. Activities of a profit nature take place on the Canada Olympic Park property site. For example, an antique collective from across the province, I gather, rents or leases space in Canada Olympic Park. That is a commercial venture, which I suppose you could say that if the money from the lease goes back to support recreation, then it would probably be a legitimate activity.

Where I'm having concerns would be this line in part A, section 3, section 2.

For so long as the Lands and Improvements or any portion thereof is held by CODA and used or intended to be used by CODA in connection with sporting and recreational purposes inclusive of the cultural, educational, administration, facilitation, support and advancement of sports and recreation, any Lands and Improvements shall be exempt from property taxation.

Maybe this is self-explanatory, but I . . .

The Chair: I hesitate to interrupt, hon. member. It's four minutes to 6. We will now rise and report because of the time limit. Would you like to put a question quickly so that we can rise and report?

Mr. Chase: I would suggest that the strength of this amendment, which I'm sure you want to be included, should be allowed to have whatever further debate. I'll willingly sit down.

The Chair: We will adjourn the debate on this bill, and we'll rise and report.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I move that the committee rise and report Bill Pr. 1 and report progress on Bill Pr. 2.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bill: Bill Pr. 1. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill Pr. 2. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Having heard the motion by the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, those in favour of the report, please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed, please say no. So ordered.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:59 p.m. to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

[The Speaker is in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Welcome.

Let us pray. We give thanks for Your abundant blessings to our province and to ourselves. We ask for Your guidance with our deliberations in our Chamber and the will to follow it. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members a long-time journalist here at the Alberta Legislature. I think he's still trying to get through the X-ray equipment to sit in the gallery. I'm sure that most members would know Jim Macdonald, who is retiring soon after a long and storied career in the news media. The role of the news media is very important. It's an important one in our society. They are the eyes and ears of the public for all of the lawmakers here in the Assembly. They ensure that we're accountable for the decisions we make. Reporters are also an important part of the democratic process both here and in free countries around the world.

Here at the Alberta Legislature we have a group of reporters in the press gallery whose job it is to report on the activities of the government and of the opposition parties, and of those, Jim Macdonald is the dean of the press gallery in Alberta. He first joined the Legislature press gallery in 1983, just shortly after you did, Mr. Speaker. He's well connected, well informed. As the recipient of many of his questions Jim is one of the most determined reporters I've ever encountered, sometimes finding a half dozen ways to ask the same question.

Jim wears many hats in this building. He's a reporter. He's the guy who has yelled at a lot of cabinet ministers. A social convener, he organizes the annual press gallery golf tournament. He puts together the annual press gallery Christmas party, which is one of the hottest social tickets in town. Indeed, because of the Christmas party Jim is single-handedly responsible for more bad comedy skits on videotape than any other person in Alberta history. I dare say the press gallery and, in fact, the Legislature won't be the same without Jim's booming voice echoing down the halls.

I know all members wish Jim well in his retirement, and we thank him for many years of service in the media and service to Albertans. When Jim's colleagues and friends give him a proper send-off – and I'm sure they will – I'd ask to be invited so I have an opportunity to go off the record with him.

He is seated in the gallery and is joined by his wife, Bernadette DeSantis, and his children, Jake and Erin. I'd like them to all rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Ouellette: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great honour today to rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a group of very bright individuals from my constituency of Innisfail-Sylvan Lake. We have with us today 90 grade 6 students from Fox Run school in Sylvan Lake, who are seated in the members' gallery. They are accompanied by their teachers and parent helpers, and I'd like to thank them very much for bringing the children up here today. As I've said many times before, I think it is so important for Alberta children to visit the Legislature. As you know, they will be the leaders of tomorrow. I would ask them to all rise in the gallery and get the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly some very special individuals who this past weekend participated in Alberta's first-ever Stick It to Alzheimer's hockey fundraiser as part of the Scotiabank Pro-Am in support of Alzheimer's research and treatment programs. It was my pleasure to referee the final game on Sunday, April 11, in St. Albert and to have participation as well from the hon. members for Edmonton-Meadowlark, Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, West Yellowhead, Calgary-Hays, Athabasca-Redwater, and elsewhere.

Numerous NHL all-stars were there to help glorify the occasion, and I would like to introduce some of them who have joined us here today and earlier today made a special presentation to our Premier. Would they please rise as I call their names, and then we'll applaud all of them at the end: Mr. Brian Benning, Mr. Al Hamilton, Mr. Dave Lumley, and the legendary Glenn Hall. Joining them is an amazing goaltender from the U of A Golden Bears alumni who himself raised an enormous of money along with Greg Christenson and numerous other people, Mr. Derek Shybunka. These good folks and a number of colleagues and other Edmontonians and surrounding area people helped raise a record number for Canada of over $1 million. Let us thank them and applaud them. Thank you, gentlemen. The game ended in a tie, which calls for a rematch next year.

Mr. Speaker, it's also my pleasure to introduce to you and through you a number of guests that are visiting Alberta and Canada for the very first time. They are students from the Lviv Classical Gymnasia in Ukraine, which translates as Lviv classical school. They are here as part of an exchange program which Alberta is proud to have with Ukraine and with our Ukrainian bilingual students from Balwin and from M.E. LaZerte here in Edmonton. They are accompanied by their teacher, Yuriy Dzala, who is also the principal, and Hanna Vatsaba, who is a teacher, and by local teachers Luba Eshenko and Tetyana Kachenyuk and local consultant Melody Kostyuk. There are 16 students with their helpers and other exchange people. I would ask all of them to rise and receive a thunderous Canadian and Alberta welcome. [Remarks in Ukrainian]

[Translation] I would ask you all to please rise. [As submitted]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly a group of true heroes seated in your gallery. Although I will speak in a moment in a member's statement about the Honours and Awards Investiture at Edmonton Garrison, I'd like to ask some of the recently decorated soldiers that are here with us today to rise and remain standing while I introduce them: Sergeant Matthew Pronk, who received the Mention in Dispatches, which recognizes valiant conduct, devotion to duty, or other distinguished services; Warrant Officer Derek Thompson, who was also awarded the Mention in Dispatches as well as the Chief of the Defence Staff Commendation, which is awarded to those who perform a deed or activity beyond the demands of normal duty and under exceptional circumstances; Warrant Officer Robin Crane, who is also a previous recipient of the Mention in Dispatches as well as the Chief of the Defence Staff Commendation and the Medal of Military Valour, which is awarded for an act of valour or devotion to duty in the presence of the enemy.

Others who were also awarded the Chief of the Defence Staff Commendation are Captain Johnathan Hallett, Warrant Officer Kirby Vincent, Sergeant Mike Van Den Broek, and Master Corporal Kyle Ho. Warrant Officer David Shultz is a recipient of the Chief of the Defence Staff Commendation and the Star of Military Valour for distinguished and valiant service in the presence of the enemy.

Accompanying the soldiers are Edmonton Garrison base commander, our friend Lieutenant-Colonel Tom Bradley, and Regimental Sergeant Major Keith Jones as well as Corporal Kelly Thompson, the wife of Warrant Officer Thompson; Maggie, the wife of Master Corporal Ho; and Sharon, the wife of Sergeant Pronk.

Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased these folks took the time to have lunch today with me and the Minister of Justice and Attorney General along with hockey legend Glenn Hall. I know all of my colleagues will join me in thanking and congratulating these great Albertans and Canadians with the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed an honour for me to rise and introduce a great number of people, but I'll start, sir, with two folks that I look up to and respect immensely. The first is Major Harpal Singh Mandahar, who is the regimental major of the Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry here in Edmonton. The second is Major Harjit Sajjan, who is with the B.C. regiment. They both have risen. I welcome you both to the Assembly and ask members to give them the traditional warm welcome.

Next, Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure to introduce a series of individuals from Calgary here to celebrate the first-ever Vaisakhi celebration at the Alberta Legislature, the first of which is Mr. Hardyal Singh Mann from the Council of Sikh Organizations, Mr. Avtar Rehill, Mr. Harjit Singh Saroya, and Mr. Joginder Singh Parmar. Next, Mr. Speaker, from different media sources in Calgary we have Mr. Ranjit Singh Sidhu, Jagpreet Singh Shergill, and Suvinder Singh Gill. From the Dashmesh cultural centre seniors' organization Mr. Sukhdev Singh Khera, Mr. Jaspal Singh Sindhu, Jagmel Singh Mallhi, Lachman Singh Pandher as well as Mr. Avtar Klair, Satinder Singh, Sewa Singh, and, lastly but not least, my grandfather Mr. Jagir Singh Bhullar and my father, Baljinder Singh Bhullar. They've all risen. I ask the Assembly to give them a warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today we celebrate Vaisakhi for the first time in the Legislature, which I will speak more about in my member's statement. I have five special guests in the members' gallery. They are members of the police force that I would like to introduce to you and through you to all the members of the Assembly. The first one is Sergeant Robinder Gill. Please rise. Amardeep Pandher, Namrata Gill, Ravideep Khangura, and Constable Tirth Sehmbi. I would like to ask these five young men and women to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance and Enterprise.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege to introduce to you and through you some of the officers of Advocis, the Financial Advisors Association of Canada. They're here today for Advocis day at the Legislature. I'd like to acknowledge the following individuals: chair of the national board, Ms Terry Zavitz; chair of the Alberta provincial advisory committee; Mr. John Liston; vice-chair of the Alberta provincial advocacy committee; Mr. Kenneth Doll; and president and CEO of Advocis; Mr. Greg Pollock. I believe they are in the public gallery. If they would all stand up. Welcome to the Legislative Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a rare time when I can introduce to you and through you individuals from my constituency. Today I have the great pleasure of introducing Mr. Brian Holmberg, the economic development officer for the town of High Prairie. He is seated, I believe, in the public gallery, and I'd ask that he rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Unfortunately, today with the way the weather is in southern Alberta, the small school from Milo, Alberta, was really looking forward to being here to meet with you and especially to see all of the special guests that have been introduced, but the weather has not permitted them to be here. I guess they're stuck in a snowdrift. I would like to acknowledge and recognize in absentia the school from Milo, who were going to be here and, hopefully, will come see you in this fall session or early next spring.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Mr. Les Stahlke, who was here today to have lunch with me and talk about issues of board governance. He's well qualified to speak about that. He's written three books on the subject and has been practising as a consultant since 2000. He represents over 200 organizations world-wide. He got his start as a bush pilot and a Lutheran clergyman in Fort McMurray in the 1960s. He's also worked in east Africa. He's led a very interesting life. Today he's working on board governance issues. Most importantly and the best thing I like about him is that he is the grandfather of my daughter-in-law. If he would please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you two individuals who are very well known to everybody here in the Assembly. The first is my former assistant, Brock Mulligan, who is now the communications director for the Alberta Forest Products Association, and his boss, Brady Whittaker. I'd ask them both to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly representative women and children and supporting members of the Family Litigation Advocacy Association. The association was formed to advocate for family members who have left abusive relationships and now are trapped in the endless legal nightmares in part caused by inadequate and now reduced legal aid services, arising from further cutbacks. I ask that my guests from the Family Litigation Advocacy Association rise as I call their names: Joan Jagodnik, Iga Speur, Nancy Karvellas, Madina Elamki, Yasmine Elamki and her young children, Ayah and Khaled, as well as Kadyja Assiff and her children, Deeyan Assiff and Yasmine Assiff. I'd appreciate it if they could receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've just been informed that two more of my guests have arrived in the Assembly. I'd like to introduce Mr. Ram Chahal and his wife, Surinder Chahal. Mr. Chahal is, I believe, the past president of the World Sikh Organization. I believe they're sitting in the public gallery.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Vandermeer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour today to introduce to you a hard-working member of the constituency of Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. He's a long-standing member. His name is Steve Robson. I'd ask him to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My international guests from Lviv, Ukraine, have arrived now with some local hosts, and I would ask that they now rise and be acknowledged by the Assembly. [Remarks in Ukrainian]

[Translation] I welcome you again with a warm and friendly bow of thanks. [As submitted]

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater.

Canadian Forces Honours and Awards Investiture

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This week we celebrated the end of an era, but in many ways that era continues. The legacy of our veterans is one of service, dedication, sacrifice, and freedom. Although all of our WW I veterans have now left us, these qualities live on today in Alberta and in today's Albertans and Canadians.

On March 25 the Deputy Premier and I, at the invitation of Canada's Chief of the Land Staff, Lieutenant-General Leslie, had the great honour of attending the Honours and Awards Investiture for the Canadian Forces at the Edmonton Garrison. I've introduced a few of the recipients today. The stories we heard that night of the dedication and courage of 59 individuals was truly amazing. I'd like to read part of one example from the program, which I will table.

Sergeant Steven Corcoran commanded the lead section of a patrol during an ambush in Zhari District, Afghanistan. Despite injuries from having been shot twice by an insurgent lying in wait, he returned fire that helped disrupt the ambush and dragged himself to a position of cover for medical attention. He continued to direct his soldiers from his stretcher, providing reassurance and instilling confidence in the face of a significant threat.

Mr. Speaker, these heroes and their families and others like them have made the difficult, dangerous, and sometimes devastating choice to serve, the same choice many of our forefathers made and the same choice that has secured our security and our future and our freedom. Like our forefathers, we owe them a debt we cannot repay, but on behalf of all my colleagues and all Albertans we want them and their families to know that their dedication does not go unnoticed, and we are so very, very grateful.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Health Services Executive Bonuses

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This government clearly needs to deal with the rich sense of entitlement that has been created among senior executives in Alberta Health Services. The fact that bonuses larger than the average Albertan earns in a year were handed out at a time when the health care system was in turmoil is something the Premier should be very concerned about. To the Premier: how bad would the performance of the health care system need to be in order for no executive bonuses to be handed out?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we just entered into a long-term funding agreement with Alberta Health Services. The minister is now in the process of entering into negotiations for performance-based measures like improvement in access, quality of care, and many others. The minister is on top of the file, and he'll take the questions with respect to the bonus issue.

Dr. Swann: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, given that the '09-10 bonuses have yet to be determined for Alberta Health Services and the performance of the health care system in the last year has been nothing if not appalling, will the Premier commit here and now that no executive bonuses to Alberta Health executives will be paid out in '09-10? Yes or no, Mr. Premier?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, this issue comes under my purview, and I want to tell the House that Alberta Health Services has responsibility for this particular part of this file. It deals with employee packages, some of which are inherited from previous local health authorities in the province and perhaps some of them that were created under the new Alberta Health Services. Nonetheless, the entire system is under some review by the Alberta Health Services Board.

Dr. Swann: Well, again to the Premier, Mr. Speaker. Your skin is on the line, Mr. Premier. Are you or are you not going to stop this executive largesse to Alberta Health Services executives?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I indicated yesterday very clearly what the process is going forward with this matter. We are having this discussion between myself and the Alberta Health Services Board on looking into how that review can result in a system that everybody feels very proud of. We have an excellent group of people who are working very hard to deliver health services, and they were delivering them during the worst economic downturn in Alberta's history since 1930. They are working very hard right now, I can assure you.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Provincial Public Image

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's reputation in this country and abroad is suffering. While the Premier touts local newspaper articles on the Alberta train as a success in advertising Alberta to the world, the Premier continues to take actions that damage Alberta's reputation for environmental and democratic stewardship. To the Premier. The rest of the world is taking notice. If a few positive articles in B.C. and Alberta newspapers on the Alberta train count as $70 million worth of success, the cost of 70 Super Bowl ads by the way, then what is the value of all the negative publicity around the world from this government's mishandling of tailings ponds, cancer rates in Fort Chip, and policies like . . .

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, a lot of work has been done with respect to the environmental file in all of the oil sands development. There is more to be done, and we are very adamant in working with the ERCB that we deal with tailings ponds. Although there is no evidence of any seepage – and I must say that water has been monitored in the Athabasca River since 1971 – these are issues that we are dealing with, and over time we are going to move to dry tailings ponds, which will remove a lot of the site of the tailings ponds presently.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, in reference to another move that damages Alberta's reputation as a modern democracy, did the Premier or anyone else from his office instruct the PC majority members on the Public Accounts Committee today to restrict and limit the authority of the chair of Public Accounts?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I'm not aware of what happened at Public Accounts this morning. If there was a matter that the chair or the opposition is unhappy with, there's a way of bringing it forward. There is a process. Usually those matters are dealt with by the Speaker of the Assembly.

Dr. Swann: Again to the Premier: does the Premier recognize that all of this bad publicity, backtracking, and backroom shenanigans such as we saw today in Public Accounts have effectively cost Alberta taxpayers $25 million? That is the price of negating the government's bloated $25 million greenwashing campaign.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the government of Alberta will have a parallel process in terms of working with other jurisdictions around the world to get the facts out with respect to all oil and gas development in the province of Alberta. The fact that we do have the most stringent environmental rules and regulations, the fact that we're the first jurisdiction in Canada to actually be able to measure carbon, the fact that we have a carbon levy, the fact that we've set money aside in a carbon levy fund to deal with issues especially tied to research, we are leading the nation if not, indeed, North America in this area.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Legal Aid

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Justice minister was playing the role of the ostrich, burying her head in the sand but insisting that cuts to legal aid funding would not affect service delivery. Well, today the legal community is asking her to come up for air as these changes will deprive impoverished citizens of legal representation, and this will result in wrongful convictions, inappropriate sentencing, and unfair custody and access rights decisions. Accordingly, my question is for the Justice minister. Are these critics right in saying that because of these cuts many low-income Albertans will not receive adequate legal representation?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, in fact, the hon. member is not right. We have a system in Alberta where we are ensuring that we are able to provide access to justice and appropriate legal advice to everyone that needs it in this province. Now, one thing I know as a lawyer is that lawyers don't like to see a lot of change, but just because change is something that people aren't sure about doesn't mean that it's not a good thing, and we're proceeding.

Mr. Hehr: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Justice minister has determined how the Legal Aid Society should operate and oversee aspects of this service delivery. Doesn't this undermine the confidence and the impartiality of legal aid and bring our system of justice into disrepute? Don't forget that you're also responsible for public prosecutions.

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, the Legal Aid board is an independent board. The Legal Aid board oversees how it decides to spend its money. The Legal Aid board also has a role in public policy discussions about what legal aid should look like. We participate in that discussion. The Legal Aid board makes the decision as to how they will proceed, and it's a fully transparent system.

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, given that Legal Aid Alberta has been forced to reduce eligibility requirements to, quote, remain sustainable and legal aid is an essential service provided to Alberta's most vulnerable people, why are we casting them aside for the sake of sustaining a business model?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, legal aid that is provided in this province is much more extensive than in many other provinces in this country. We fulfill our obligations both as a matter of public policy and as a constitutional issue, and we will continue to do that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

School Construction in Airdrie-Chestermere

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Rocky View school division and especially the city of Airdrie are at a crisis point with regard to school infrastructure. Airdrie students are holding math classes in the library, the gym, and in some instances in the hallways. Trustees are even considering busing kids into soon-to-be-closed inner-city Calgary schools. The division is now begging for $5 million for 20 new portables to make a secondary temporary portable school in Airdrie. To the Education minister: would you please reallocate just one of the 32 newly announced P3 schools to Airdrie, the fastest growing city in the province?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, with respect to the ASAP program, that's a process that takes a significant amount of time to put together. It is at its final stages, and announcements will be made soon. The school division that the hon. member has referred to has a school in that project. Their top priority school is going to be built at Langdon, as they asked.

Mr. Anderson: That is completely out of touch with reality. You need to get your facts straight.

Given that since 2005 Edmonton public has decreased in student population by 1,000 yet has received 10 new schools and given that during that same time Calgary received six new Catholic schools yet their Catholic student population went down by 700 students, why wouldn't Airdrie get another school when their student population has risen by 1,500 students since 2005, yet they've only gotten one public and one Catholic . . .

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. minister. [interjection] The hon. minister has the floor.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There's a very complex process of determining priorities for building schools. Unfortunately, in this year I didn't have additional capital dollars to build new schools. Quite frankly, if we had followed that member's advice, we would have even taken the capital building program and stretched it out over a couple of more years, and it would be even longer before he got schools.

Mr. Anderson: Thirty-two schools if they're put in the right place: that's what you need. Thirty-two schools in the right place.

Given that Rocky View is projected to add 3,000 additional students in the next three years, most of them in Airdrie, and given that Airdrie's projected population will be 70,000 people by 2025, will the minister commit to come to the table with the local Rocky View trustees to discuss a short-term and long-term strategy for solving what will shortly become an emergency if you don't take action?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, finally, a reasonable question. Absolutely. That's my job, to work with Rocky View and work with every other school board to try to deal with the issues that they have. In fact, there are solutions for Rocky View that we're working on, and I believe that we'll be able to accomplish some great progress in that area. There is no question that there are urgencies across the province with respect to school populations, but that does not decry the need for the ASAP 1 and ASAP 2 schools that have been built. It's not pitting one against the other; it's dealing with all of them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Signage on Highway Rights-of-way

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On several occasions the Minister of Transportation was asked specifically about why his department removed antinuclear signs on public rights-of-way and private property. Time after time the minister hid behind vague statements of departmental policy. Now we have department e-mails that reveal the truth, that the removal was political and that antinuclear signs were targeted. My question is to the Minister of Transportation. Will he finally admit to this House that the signs were removed because they oppose nuclear power in Alberta?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, we've said in this House a number of times — I've had a number of questions about it — and our policy has always been exactly the same: if there are noncompliant signs, our maintenance people are supposed to go take them down. As far as I know, that's exactly what happened up there. There were a bunch of noncompliant signs in the right-of-way, and our guys went and took them down.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, this minister knows that the Member for Peace River lobbied him to take down those nuclear signs.

Given that the antinuclear signs were removed but other signs that violated the same policy were ignored, why won't the minister admit that there was political interference on the part of the Member for Peace River and that the minister acted to silence antinuclear protest?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I watched the same CBC announcement that he watched last night, and it absolutely had nothing to do with political interference. In fact, it even said in the article that the hon. Member for Peace River had an inquiry from a constituent about a sign, and when he went and talked to someone from our department, that's what happened. That's what they made out of it. But our policy has always been the same: if they're noncompliant, take them down.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, given that e-mails from the ministry show that antinuclear signs were specifically and politically targeted and given that it resulted in the removal of antinuclear signs by this minister's department, why won't the minister apologize for withholding this important information and set the record straight, that the government tried to silence antinuclear protesters and that this minister is covering it up?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I just said that I watched the same CBC — that's where I saw the e-mail he's talking about. It said no such thing. I don't know where he's getting that from.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Foreign Investments in the Oil Sands

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Premier. Let me first say that I can still see him from the back of the room.

I want the Premier to join me in putting Albertans first, and he can start by assuring all Albertans that the recent information they received on foreign ownership of their resources in the oil sands will not prevent value-added job creation in the province of Alberta. Will the Premier tell Albertans that the recent developments will have zero adverse effect on the future potential of the oil sands to produce value-added jobs in the area of upgrading, or is he going to allow Alberta to fall back into Canadian history, where we were drawers of water and hewers of wood?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, a good question. I believe the member is referring to a recent purchase of 9 per cent of Syncrude for about $4.67 billion. We are proceeding with our plan to keep adding value to the production out of the oil sands. This agreement, from what I gather, what I know, has not asked for any of the bitumen to go directly to the country of China. Remember that this is buying a part of a share of an existing operation in the oil sands.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, can the Premier categorically state that there will be no loss of ownership of the resource and control and decision-making authority around a resource so critical to all Albertans?

Mr. Stelmach: I am not party to the agreement, and I haven't read it. Even if I did, I'm not a lawyer. It'll take months before this agreement will be approved by both the federal government and, of course, I believe, the Chinese government as well. It just shows that we have a tremendous resource in the province of Alberta. A 9 per cent stake in Syncrude, $4.65 billion: that's a lot of jobs that are going to be created in Alberta as a result.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, since I along with most Albertans these days am not convinced that this government always has our best interests at heart, can the Premier give Albertans specifics as to how he proposes to protect our ability to control the resource of the Alberta oil sands for all Albertans for generations to come?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we just changed significantly the royalty on the oil sands. This is the first time in history, I believe, in the province that the oil sands royalty has exceeded natural gas and conventional oil as well, so that tells us that we are on the right path of creating this additional wealth.

With respect to value-added there will be an RFP that will be completed. I believe the examination of that RFP will be concluded sometime in June, and we will have further news on the value-added file.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Capital Bonds Investments

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We've not heard much about the Alberta capital bonds that were being sold to Albertans last February, and my constituents are telling me that this government has had ample time to make some decisions. My question to the Minister of Infrastructure: what's being done with the money collected from the sale of those bonds last February?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, the funds are being used to support the capital plan and the government's commitment to increase accommodations options for seniors. In fact, the money from the bond sales will be used to build and upgrade a thousand continuing care spaces. Let me repeat again: a thousand, over a thousand. The investment addresses priorities for this government. We are looking at 13 facilities, and we are helping seniors stay in their communities and age in the right place, close to their family and friends.

Mr. Dallas: Mr. Speaker, my first supplemental is to the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. A thousand is great, but I'm sure that's not enough to finish the job. How did you prioritize these projects, and where will they be located?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This announcement reflects the government's commitment to meeting the changing needs of our seniors. After researching demographics and identifying communities with the greatest need, we selected 13 projects in 11 different communities, and that will help develop and upgrade 1,000 affordable – affordable – continuing care spaces. These priority projects cross the spectrum of continuing care and are expected to be completed or well under way by 2012. With this $105 million investment, the province will have approximately $520 million invested towards developing and upgrading close to . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Dallas: Mr. Speaker, my second supplemental question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Seniors in my community want to know how new community continuing care accommodations are actually going to affect the health care system that provides for them.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, this will be a very, very positive impact, one of the more significant positive impacts that we've announced for seniors, because more than 1,000 new or upgraded spaces will be provided. That means that about 700 seniors who might at the moment be in an acute-care bed in one of our hospitals could be moved to an appropriate setting in the community. As well, there will be additional good news following as soon as I've completed the Alberta health facilities capital plan. That will come out very shortly as well.

2:10 Health Services Executive Contracts

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, executives at Alberta Health Services are paid large salaries and then bonuses, and now today we learn they are paid premiums on top of the bonuses. Plus, they get gold-plated retirement packages without contributing to them. It's become a private feeding frenzy on the public purse in an organization that is struggling badly to do its job. The Minister of Health and Wellness has reversed policies by Alberta Health Services on pharmacy, bed closures, surgeries, ambulance consolidations, so why won't he reverse the pay policies of Alberta Health Services and bring it into line with the rest of the province?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I assume the hon. member is talking about contracts. That's a lot different than some sort of a plan or a policy change or some other initiative. Contracts are contracts. We have to adhere to them.

Dr. Taft: I'm hoping the contracts are in line with some kind of policy, and our policy needs to be changed.

Does the minister buy the line from Alberta Health Services that it's a good idea to pay premiums of up to $79,000 a year to staff who are already getting huge salaries, bonuses, and retirement plans? Is that a good idea?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I think I indicated yesterday that the policy is under review by Alberta Health Services. They are the ones who are responsible for recently created contracts and/or recently created policies regarding those employment contracts. They're also reviewing contracts of the past, those that they inherited from one of the three provincial boards or from the nine health authorities.

Dr. Taft: To the same minister: given that the salary range for provincial deputy ministers, who run entire departments, goes up to $253,000 plus benefits and a car, if this is good enough for a deputy minister, why isn't it good enough for an executive at Alberta Health Services?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I think that if the hon. member took the time to take a look at health systems across Canada, perhaps elsewhere, he would realize that these salaries are in line with those top-level executives who are outside the government stream at an arm's-length level. But I can assure this member that no bonuses will be paid unless specific performance targets are met in accordance with the recently revised standardized contracts that Alberta Health Services has now put in place.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Adult Guardianship and Trusteeship

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of my constituents is having difficulty navigating the transition from children's disability supports to adult disability supports. One of the challenges is that when a child becomes an adult, a parent is no longer legally able to make decisions on the child's behalf. My question is to the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. How can we streamline this process for parents of children with disabilities who require guardianship after they reach adulthood?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, under the former Dependent Adults Act an individual did have to be 18 before the application process for guardianship could be started, so that did create some transitional problems. However, we have improved the situation with the new Adult Guardianship and Trusteeship Act, under which an application for guardianship and trusteeship can be made at the age of 17. This is a significant improvement in legislation, and I hope it will go a long way to relieve the frustrations of parents of children with disabilities.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is to the same minister. Regarding the AISH application process, if an applicant has a cognitive disability rather than a physical disability, would he or she still be eligible for AISH?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, for someone to be eligible for AISH, they must meet both the financial and the medical eligibility criteria. For the AISH medical application it's the physician who chooses and completes the sections of the application form that are most relevant to the individual's disabilities. If an individual meets the program eligibility, they will be eligible for AISH regardless of what type of disability they have.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My third question is to the same minister. Can we do something to reduce the time-consuming and complicated process that parents need to go through to apply for support for their adult children with disabilities?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, the Premier has given me the mandate to lead a review of social-based assistance programs so that services are more effective, appropriate, and easier to access. To do this, we are consolidating the screening, intake, eligibility, and assessment for AISH, the PDD program, and family support for children with disabilities. Currently, for individuals who are eligible for PDD supports, we are working with other government service providers to assist families in the transition from child to adult services.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Cabinet Policy Committees

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On March 18 the President of the Treasury Board stated that he would report back to the House on the retroactive payments made to Conservative MLAs for sitting on internal cabinet policy committees. He has not yet responded to me with a report. To the President of the Treasury Board: why did the government pay $42,000 in retroactive payments to Conservative members for sitting on the internal cabinet policy committees, and who authorized that decision?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, for the hon. member to suggest that I did not report back to him on that issue is completely untrue. The next day it was read in here. The exact fact was that those people are authorized under the memorandum that came in October '08 and stays in place until it is replaced by a concurrent or follow-up OC, which may change membership on the different committees. They are all operating under OCs, that are publicly published and announced. For him to suggest I did not report back is false.

Mr. MacDonald: He did not report to the questions that I asked him, and he knows that.

Now, since the government is unable to provide a ministerial order showing the appointment of all Conservative MLAs to the five internal cabinet policy committees, will the President of the Treasury Board explain what was done to authorize these members to be paid? Was there a secret ceremony, a private swearing-in, or what?

Mr. Snelgrove: We put the little candles out around the room, and we sing Kumbaya and chant, and it would make sense to him.

Mr. Speaker, there wasn't a ministerial order. In was an order in council. None of the pay involved was retroactive, because the work on committees as well as cabinet members continues whether there is an election or not.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The taxpayers are not impressed with your response to date, hon. minister.

Again, will the President of the Treasury Board clarify whether funding for these cabinet policy committees, reported as a line item in various department budgets, is paid for support staff, members' payments, or both?

Mr. Snelgrove: As everyone who paid attention while we went through budget deliberations would understand, the department that has the chairman of the standing policy committee funds the total cost of that policy committee through one ministry to make sure that it is streamlined in the most effective way. It does include membership on the committee, support staff, materials, or travel that might be necessary.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Capital Bonds Investments

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today the government announced that $105 million is being invested in seniors' accommodation across the province. Fifty million dollars of this funding was made possible by Albertans who bought capital bonds. This is such good news that I thought I, too, would ask a question of the Minister of Infrastructure. Why are the capital bond funds being directed to seniors' accommodations?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, preparing for an aging population is a priority for this government. Investing capital bonds in seniors' accommodations supports that priority. In fact, it was very clear in the discussions in this Chamber, the importance of supporting seniors' housing. Seniors have told us very clearly that they want to stay together as they age and in a more homelike setting than the traditional long-term care.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister, and I think he partially answered some of my question. My next question is: what will these facilities look like, and will they actually meet the great need that exists for seniors' housing today?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, each facility is going to be unique. Most of the projects are new facilities. Some of them are renovations. The investment addresses the priority needs of the communities. The details of each of the projects will be announced in the very short future.

2:20

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Finally, to the same minister: what assurances can the minister give to this House that this is not just another great-sounding announcement but that these facilities will actually be built?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, today's announcement will allow us to move forward with 1,000 new and upgraded spaces. Providing seniors with accommodations that best suit their health and personal care needs is a priority, as I said, of this government. These projects will be completed or well under way by 2012. That's the assurance, that those projects are starting and those projects are going to be done by 2012.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Cataract Surgery

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Last night I had an excellent conversation with an eye doctor who is absolutely horrified at the actions taken by the government as it relates to cataract surgeries and cornea transplants. The health minister likes to talk about two arms: one arm is the department, and the other arm is the delivery of health services. My question is to the minister of health. Can the minister tell us if one of his arms inspected all or any of the facilities, and how can you inspect a building that hasn't even been opened yet?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, this question was asked of me by a few people involved in the system. I said that I would have a review of that done, and we're looking into that right now. In fact, I'm going to be doing some of it this weekend.

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Speaker, that's unacceptable. They've awarded a contract, and the building hasn't even been done.

My next question is to the minister of health. Since the government likes to talk about competitiveness, Bill 1, why have they shut down surgical theatres and facilities and given a monopoly over contract surgeries to a small group? How is that competitive, Minister?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member's preamble was actually very incorrect. The facilities that have been awarded the contracts do exist, but at least one of them is expanding. There's a fundamental difference there. That expansion is expected to be completed sometime in May or June. It will be inspected by the college, and we hope it will be accredited – we're sure it will be – shortly thereafter.

Mrs. Forsyth: My final question today is again to the minister. The minister has told this Assembly that there is a second blitz coming on cataract surgery and cornea transplants. What does this mean, and how will these procedures get done without all of the skilled professionals who've now been let go because of your decisions?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, this was a fully transparent, open, publicly tendered process, that closed on January 15. I assume that the hon. members know that. However, to answer the question about the blitz, we did a very successful first blitz, which added – added – 2,230 new surgeries to the system. About 750-plus were specifically cataract surgeries. That now is going to be piggybacked on by a second blitz, which I will be announcing very soon. In the meantime, between those two blitzes we have the ongoing year-long eye surgeries, that will now continue.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Suncor Emission Incident

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This government does not protect the people of Alberta from chemical emissions. Instead, they rely on self-regulation by industry and on companies to tell them what it means for Albertans when incidents occur. The government has no idea what and how much toxic and carcinogenic chemicals were released into the air. Government officials are reduced to begging the responsible company for information. To the Minister of Environment. It has been a month. Can the minister tell us the amount of chemicals released into the air that Albertans breathe from the Suncor incident on March 15?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, I don't have that information at hand, but I'm sure that given an appropriate amount of time I could have that information brought forward from my department, and I'll be happy to provide it to the hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: To the same minister: what is the reason that we lack the expertise in the Department of Environment to be able to tell Albertans the potential effects of a thousand kilograms of a catalyst that was released? We had to go and ask Suncor what it was.

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's ludicrous. We have all kinds of technical expertise within our department. What we don't have – and it would be ridiculous for us to have – is our top technical people at every licensed facility in the province 24 hours a day, 365 days a year just in case there is an incident that needs to be recorded. The member is absolutely right: we depend upon industry to advise us of these incidents. At the same time, we don't only depend on it; we require it, and we will hold them accountable if they do not.

Ms Blakeman: You don't know what happened there.

Back to the same minister: why does the government choose to rely on a weak self-reporting policy rather than monitoring and expertise done by ministry staff? Is it money? Is it lack of political will? Why? This jeopardizes the health of Albertans.

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I answered the third question in the second question. It's the same reason that we don't have auditors that are employed by the government of Alberta ensuring that at the end of the day people record the numbers correctly in their books so that we can ensure the taxes they pay at the end of the year. We have audits. We have a process where we do unannounced audits, and we have a process where we do regular audits. That's how we hold them accountable.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta Health Services recently announced that there will only be four eye surgery facilities delivering ophthalmological services in Edmonton and Calgary. What isn't clear, however, is what the impact of this decision will be on other parts of the province and Albertans living in other communities. My first question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. I've had constituents concerned about delays with regard to their surgeries. Are there surgeries, in fact, being delayed or cancelled, and what is being done to expedite previously scheduled surgeries?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, no surgeries are being cancelled. For the surgeries that may have been scheduled in facilities that did not win a bid pursuant to the RFP process back in January, they are phoning all of their patients so that the doctors who were going to perform those surgeries will still perform them, albeit in different and still-approved facilities. The impact should not result in any significant delays whatsoever.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. This was a competitive process, I understand. Now there are only four facilities delivering this service. Will there be adequate service providers in the future, when there may be future bids on this issue?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, there were about 10 facilities providing the services. They were all invited to bid. Those who won the bid, which is the customary way this is done, will continue to provide those services. The doctors who were scheduled to perform them in other facilities will now simply perform them in one of the winning bid facilities. In the process, because these were competitive bids, they have saved $1.4 million for Albertans, which means that many, many more eye surgeries will be able to be completed within this next year. It's very good news for those people.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will this process be repeated in other parts of the province for other service providers, or will there be a similar impact in other rural communities in the future?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, eye surgeries in all other locations in the province are not impacted or affected by these four winning bid facilities in Edmonton and Calgary. If surgeries were scheduled in other parts of the province, they are untouched by this decision.

Secondly, I will be having a meeting with the ophthalmologists very soon to discuss related issues and, in particular, what new opportunities will be there for those who did not win one of the bid facilities' contracts. I'll be announcing that as part of the second blitz within a few days.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Strathcona.

Rent Supplement Programs

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A constituent on AISH brings home $1,188 and spends over 60 per cent of it on rent. She applied for a rent subsidy but was turned away because she was, quote, low priority. To the Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs: how is it that this woman is low priority for this government?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm not aware of the specific situation, but I will have my department follow up with this particular member with a response in a timely fashion.

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, and I will share that information, although I'm sure she doesn't stand alone.

Given that over 10,000 people are on a wait-list for rent support, which means that they spend more than 50 per cent of their income on rent, how can the minister defend the huge cuts made to rent supplements over the past two years when rents are always increasing?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This member is actually not correct that rents are always increasing. They have increased over the past couple of years, but we've actually seen a decline to the rents this year. That's why we have budgeted somewhat less, about $13 million for rent supplements, than we have. This member should also know that we are actually helping 80,000 people every month with their rent, and every month 800 new people were able to transition into this system.

Ms Pastoor: Well, 80,000 plus 10,000: that's 90,000 out there that need it.

Given that keeping people in their homes costs less than having that person become homeless, why is the minister unwilling to properly fund rent supplements, a move that saves taxpayers money in the long run?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, I again would challenge that member's last comment. In fact, we do properly fund these items. We fund to the extent that we actually help three times the amount of people that we did only three years ago.

But I would like to welcome this member. I guess she's my new critic.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Twinning of Highway 21

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Highway 21 runs through my constituency, and it's a very busy highway. I'm of course pleased that twinning is taking place. However, it is taking a very long time. It was supposed to be completed last fall, but it's still a construction zone with no final surface and other work not finished. My question to the Minister of Transportation: why is this taking so long?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, the province has invested $115 million to complete 12.8 kilometres of highway 21 twinning. I would like to tell the hon. member that it takes a little while to spend $115 million. We opened two of those lanes in December, and while most of the twinning is done, the final paving, the tree planting, and the landscaping work can't be done during the winter. As soon as the weather permits, we're going to be getting that done for the hon. member.

The Speaker: The hon. member. [interjections] The hon. member has the floor.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's good to hear. My next question to the same minister. My constituents are concerned not only about getting the final work done finally, but constituents are raising issues with the timing of the lights and the noise. I'm wondering what you're going to do to address those issues.

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, the department has been monitoring the four new traffic lights since they were installed last December. We've been making some adjustments through the winter months to try to improve the timing and the left turn signals. The department will continue to closely monitor the operation of these traffic lights and make further adjustments as they're needed. As for the noise concerns, my department completed a study in 2005 that projected the noise levels would be below our provincial guidelines.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just one more time, when will this stretch of highway finally be completed?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, we'll be completing the final paving and finishing work on 21 twinning as soon as we possibly can, weather permitting, this summer. We've already seen reduced traffic congestion with the opening of the twin lanes late last year, and we're now into the final stretch of construction on this project. When this $115 million upgrade to highway 21 is complete, motorists will benefit from improved traffic flow and increased safety.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Water Use by Oil Sands Projects

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. An in situ project's plan to use only brackish water at a 2 to 1 ratio and no surface water isn't working out well. They have struggled with steam shortages since their start and are now planning to make an application to draw 17,000 cubic metres from the Clearwater River just to keep phase 1 of their facilities running. To the Minister of Environment: what kind of approval guidelines are in place when a project can get this far in but be that far out on its water usage? How can a project get this far off base on their water use?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are two approval authorities associated with the development of in situ. One is the ERCB, which is responsible for a number of the operational side of things, and one is Alberta Environment, which is responsible for water. We have a policy in place, a policy that we hold very strictly, and that is that there needs to be a total commitment to brackish water, to saline water, before surface water would even be considered for a project.

Ms Blakeman: Well, back to the same minister: given that the volume of water needed and used is key in oil and gas development, what is the government's break point, where it says no, no more water, no more surface water? Where does that point come?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, that point comes in conjunction with our in-stream flow needs assessment that is in place and has further development under way, whereby we have in place now, as you know, a series of red, yellow, and green stages of water flow. That is phase 1. Phase 2 will further define and further restrict the ability for projects to withdraw water, and projects like this, should they be using fresh water, would have to have off-stream storage.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Back to the same minister: given that an ERCB directive, Requirements for Water Measurement, Reporting, and Use for Thermal In Situ Oil Sands Schemes, finished its public consultation phase a year ago, why has it not been approved?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest she ask the Minister of Energy, who's responsible for the ERCB.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Municipal Sustainability Initiative Funding

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Last week I met with two of my city councillors, and they indicated to me that $190 million worth of projects over two years may be delayed. My questions are to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Does city council have the flexibility to move its priorities?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, the answer is yes. There's already a lot of flexibility within the program guidelines. We also recently approved changes that give all municipalities added flexibility, and that's greater access to borrowing. Like the province, most municipalities are taking a balanced approach to budgeting, and our government is still a hundred per cent committed to providing Edmonton with its full $2.1 billion MSI allocation.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My first supplement to the same minister: has the city of Edmonton received sufficient funding to support projects that make a difference to Edmontonians?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, the city of Edmonton has committed over $618 million of current and future MSI funding to 52 accepted infrastructure projects. In fact, just this past Saturday the new Centennial bus garage opened in southwest Edmonton, and the city estimates that this $99 million project will use $89.3 million in MSI funding. That's about 90 per cent of the total project cost. This new facility is a major investment and the first new transit facility to open in 25 years.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My final supplement to the same minister: if municipalities such as the city of Edmonton take advantage of current low construction costs, would the money they save still be available to them for additional projects?

Mr. Goudreau: Well, absolutely, Mr. Speaker. The example I quoted, the Centennial bus garage project, met its goal of coming under $100 million. The city saved $10 million in MSI funding that can support other qualifying projects. There are also many provincial funding sources such as Alberta Transportation for other projects such as the upcoming opening of key LRT lines in the city of Edmonton.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Cellphone Tower Siting

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. While cellphone towers are certainly a necessary part of our communications infrastructure, they can impose a cost on communities in which they're located. I'm sure that many of these problems could be avoided or minimized if there was appropriate consultation to determine the best site to locate these towers, but if the information that I'm getting from my constituents in Calgary-North Hill is right, this is not happening. My question to the Minister of Municipal Affairs: since the issue falls within both the municipal and federal jurisdiction, is your ministry doing anything to assist municipalities in dealing with the federal government on this issue?

2:40

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, I just would like to clarify that Industry Canada has the final authority to approve the location of all telecommunications antennas and towers in various cities and municipalities.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is to the same minister. Does your department have any standards or guidelines for public consultation by municipalities regarding the siting of these or similar structures that affect communities?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, as I said, this falls under the jurisdiction of Industry Canada. I do know that new guidelines were introduced by Industry Canada at the start of the 2008 year to control tower locations and to give the public more say. Telecommunication companies must contact the city. I understand the new guidelines say that the public should be notified, environmental laws have to be obeyed, and concerns addressed. In Calgary, for example, community consultation takes place if the location and height are outside the city policies.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question to the same minister: since the provincial government is the direct link between municipalities and the federal government, does it not make sense to have uniform provincial standards for community consultation between municipalities and the federal government in regard to this issue?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, while the member is right that it's certainly an issue, again, between the federal and municipal governments, I'm prepared to look into the process to see if we can gain more information to see how we can move this forward.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that concludes the question period. Nineteen members participated today. There were 114 questions and responses. Eight came from the Official Opposition, four from the independents, and seven from the government members.

We will continue the Routine in 15 seconds from now with Members' Statements.

Western Cup

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, Alberta is home to thousands of gay, lesbian, bisexual, and transgendered Albertans. People are doing incredible work every day to strengthen and grow all aspects of our social, cultural, and political progress.

I am very proud to say that my constituency of Calgary-Buffalo has a very healthy community of LGBT Albertans. Just a few days ago they proved it by helping to organize a terrific event right in downtown Calgary.

From April 1 to 3 members of Calgary's LGBT community hosted the Western Cup, one of the premier gay multisport events on the continent. I was fortunate enough to attend the closing dance. They put on a terrific show, and I had a wonderful time. I might add, Mr. Speaker, that they've been doing this for 28 years now, with 450 athletes participating, making the Western Cup North America's oldest LGBT multisporting event.

Athletes competed in volleyball, running, badminton, hockey, even dodge ball. They also hosted the Canadian Gay National Curling Championship this year, a new milestone. If you'll forgive the pun, they really do rock.

Events like this one demonstrate how Albertans in the LGBT community are really giving back to their province with events that draw tourists, promote physical fitness, encourage healthy competition, and promote universal human rights. I am very proud of these participants, the volunteers, and sponsors and organizers who made this event possible.

I look forward to next year's Western Cup, and I encourage all Albertans to check this event out.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Vaisakhi Day

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to share some background information about Vaisakhi, which is celebrated each year on April 13 and all over the world.

Vaisakhi is one of the most important dates in the Sikh calendar. It is the Sikh new year festival, celebrated on April 13 or 14. It also celebrates the year 1699, the year Sikhism became a religion.

I am proud to say that earlier today we celebrated the first-ever Vaisakhi at the Legislature. All Canadian Sikhs are very, very proud of you, hon. Premier, and all members of this Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, you hosted this event, and a great time was had by everyone who came. I hope you enjoyed the food. The food and entertainment were great, and I thank everyone who helped make this event such a success.

Vaisakhi is widely celebrated as a traditional harvest festival in several northern states in India. This festival also celebrates the harvest of the wheat crop, which is very important in rural India. Celebrations start before dawn when Sikhs come to their place of worship, which is called a gurdwara. There is a huge parade/celebration in India and around the world each year, and processions through towns around the world are also common. Edmonton's event is taking place on May 23 of this year. I hope all members of this Assembly come and take part.

For Vaisakhi Sikhs reflect on the values and morals taught to them by their gurus and celebrate the birth of the Khalsa. I would like to wish everyone a happy, happy Vaisakhi.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Energy Efficiency Rebate Program

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Improving energy efficiency and increasing conservation are key components of Alberta's climate change strategy. As part of our approach one year ago the province announced a $36 million investment in energy efficiency rebates for consumers. We expect the program will help us work together to reduce emissions by one million tonnes, the equivalent of taking 200,000 cars off the road for a full year, and we're well on our way. Since the program's inception in April 2009 Albertans have responded with phenomenal enthusiasm and have received more than $10 million among approximately 50,000 rebates.

Recently our federal counterparts announced changes to the federal EcoEnergy retrofit program. I want to assure Albertans that there are no immediate changes to Alberta's provincial rebate program as a result of the federal government's changes.

I would like to thank our partners at Climate Change Central, who have played a critical role in the success of this program.

Mr. Speaker, as Alberta developed its climate change strategy, Albertans made it clear that they wanted to play their part in addressing climate change, and the success of this program demonstrates that they are. As a result of this program Albertans have become more energy efficient, they're saving money, and they're helping to reduce greenhouse gas emissions. After all, environmental stewardship is a shared responsibility, and the success of this initiative demonstrates that Albertans are willing to do their part to create a more sustainable future.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Excellence in Teaching Awards

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Educators across our province rise to the challenge and do outstanding work to encourage children and youth to find their passion, to develop their learning abilities, and to enjoy their lifelong learning journey. Alberta's excellence in teaching awards program provides us all with an opportunity to give special thanks to teachers and principals from across the province who have played an integral role in enhancing learning experiences and successes for children and youth.

Nominees for the excellence in teaching awards are teachers and principals who use creativity and innovation to motivate learners to succeed. They show leadership and work collaboratively with their teacher colleagues to create a dynamic learning culture for all students.

This year out of 338 eligible nominations 136 teachers and principals were selected as semifinalists. They will be honoured at a special celebration dinner later this month and have access to $1,500 for professional development. From the group of semifinalists 23 award recipients will be selected and formally honoured at a dinner and awards ceremony with the Education minister in Calgary on May 29. Of the 23 award recipients 20 will receive a provincial excellence in teaching award and will have access to $4,000 for professional development to further develop their teaching skills. Three recipients will receive the SMARTer Kids Foundation innovative use of technology award, which includes a comprehensive technology package.

The excellence in teaching awards, Mr. Speaker, have been celebrated since 1989, with more than 8,200 teachers nominated and more than 400 who have received awards. I am honoured today to say special thanks and heartfelt congratulations to recognize all the teachers and principals across the province for the great, tremendous work that they have done. Congratulations to all of the recipients.

Thank you.

Cataract Surgery

Mr. Hinman: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. After taking on his latest portfolio, the Minister of Health and Wellness has finally told members of this Assembly that health care in Alberta has two arms. The problem is that they certainly do not lift or work together. Whatever this government touches, it causes disruption, instability, and too often outright chaos. No workable structure, no functioning system – only chaos and confusion – no vision, no planning, no surprise that Albertans are questioning this government's competence and ability to get things right.

This government has centralized decision-making, and their process of awarding contracts is flawed, to be polite. The results will not improve eye surgery for Albertans. The Premier and the minister of health tried to minimize the impact that changes to eye surgery times are having on the people who need these important operations. Too many people with vision problems are waiting and not able to drive and go about their important daily activities.

The request for proposals from eye clinics has worked well in the past. The new process is only driving out surgeons, their equipment, and their talented staff. In a year from now the new bids are going to be through the roof as they add all kinds of true capital costs and equipment costs in their next bids that in all likelihood were not included in this proposal. If they were, then assemble the inspection teams and release the detailed report showing the marks for both the price and the equipment and the facilities that are used.

Does the minister even know what a diamond blade knife is? Which blade would he want to be used on his eyes? Nobody needs an economic and business cornea transplant more than this government.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. According to Standing Order 30 I'd now like to give oral notice that at the appropriate time I'll be raising the following issue under the Standing Order 30 provision, which is, of course, the emergency debate provision, and that is:

Be it resolved that the ordinary business of the Legislative Assembly be adjourned to discuss a matter of urgent public importance, namely that the change to Public Accounts requiring the chair of Public Accounts to obtain the signature of the deputy chair for all correspondence directly undermines the authority and autonomy of the chair and diminishes the established powers of the chair.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have distributed copies of the motion to the table.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Bill 16 Traffic Safety (Distracted Driving) Amendment Act, 2010

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, I rise today to request leave to introduce Bill 16, the Traffic Safety (Distracted Driving) Amendment Act, 2010, commonly called distracted driving.

I'm very pleased to bring forward this important piece of legislation. The increased use of cellphones behind the wheel is cause for concern for many Albertans as it poses a serious safety concern, but drivers can be distracted behind the wheel for many reasons other than talking on their phone. This legislation goes beyond a simple hand-held cellphone ban. Bill 16 amends the Traffic Safety Amendment Act to ban the use of hand-held cellphones, other electronic devices such as GPS, and other tasks such as personal grooming while driving. Hands-free devices or devices that require only one touch will still be allowed. Exceptions include the use of cellphones in emergency situations and for emergency personnel and for commercial purposes. This legislation aims to improve safety on our roads by encouraging drivers to keep their hands on the wheel and their attention on the road.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 16 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that Bill 16 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children and Youth Services.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Social Care Facilities Review Committee I'm pleased to table five copies of their 2008-09 annual report. I'd also like to take the opportunity to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays for his expertise in chairing the committee. It's an excellent report.

The member did indicate that the vast majority of the recommendations and responses from people were positive regarding the services that they received in a social care facility, Mr. Speaker. I know you'll be pleased to know that all of the issues that were identified by the committee have been or are currently being addressed through ministry programs or in consultation with the local child and family services authority.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of my responses to questions that had been raised during the February 16, 2010, Standing Committee on the Economy review of estimates of this department.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the appropriate number of copies of the Honours and Awards Investiture program for the military presentation of the Mention in Dispatches, the Chief of the Defence Staff Commendation, and the Canadian Forces Medallion for Distinguished Service. There are amazing stories of dedication and courage in these programs. The Deputy Premier and I were very honoured to attend this prestigious ceremony on March 25, 2010, at Edmonton Garrison.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As chairman of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices I'm pleased to table five copies of the report of the Auditor General of Alberta dated April 2010. Copies of this report have been provided for distribution to all the members.

I have another tabling, Mr. Speaker. As committee chair I'd also like to table five copies of the privacy impact assessment requirements for use with the Health Information Act, prepared by the office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner. This document provides new requirements for health care custodians in their preparation of privacy impact assessments.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm trying to retable something that I incorrectly tabled before. It is a letter that does not appear to be signed, but on the back of it is the transmittal requirements on the e-mail. This is a letter from constituent Mike Smit, a PhD candidate in computing sciences, expressing his extreme concern about proposed user fees and how that is going to challenge students even more. He came to Alberta because of the tuition cap, and he is really concerned about the loopholes.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings, one of which was incorrectly done, and now I'm doing it correctly. I'm tabling the required five copies of the teen category winning photo from the 2009 Lethbridge public library's Caught Reading photo contest. This picture is entitled Anywhere, Any time and was taken by Miss Hannah Forster.

My second tabling, Mr. Speaker, is the appropriate number of copies of 12 postcards from Lethbridge teachers, which are only a small part of a larger number for the postcard campaign. These teachers are upset over the reduction in funding related to class size and wish that the Ministry of Education would reconsider that decision.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My tabling consists of copies of letters and accompanying permission to table from Colin Cantlie, a hard-of-hearing Calgarian, and from Snookie Lomow, the national executive director of the Canadian Hard of Hearing Association, to Dr. Sam Shaw, president of NAIT, regarding the proposed cancellation of the captioning and court reporter services program. They both emphasize the vital importance of this program, which is unique in Canada, extremely successful, and absolutely necessary for the social and economic benefits of inclusivity not only in Alberta but in all of Canada.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today. The first is the appropriate number of copies of a CBC news story concerning the removal of antinuclear signs in the Peace River area. The story relates to the questions asked by my colleague the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood earlier today.

The second tabling is the appropriate number of copies of 124 postcards signed by Albertans calling on the provincial government to keep its promise to build 600 new long-term care beds. The postcards are part of a campaign sponsored by the Canadian Union of Public Employees.

The third thing I'd like to table, Mr. Speaker, is the appropriate number of copies of a petition with 728 signatures calling for an independent review of Children and Youth Services and its contracted agencies.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mrs. Klimchuk, Minister of Service Alberta, response to Written Question 14 asked for by Mr. Kang on March 15, 2010.

On behalf of the hon. Mr. Horner, Minister of Advanced Education and Technology, responses to questions raised by Mr. Chase, hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, and Ms Notley, hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, on March 9, 2010, Department of Advanced Education and Technology main estimates debate.

On behalf of the hon. Ms Redford, Minister of Justice and Attorney General, responses to questions raised by Mr. Hehr, hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, Mrs. Forsyth, hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, Ms Notley, hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, and Mr. Elniski, hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, on February 24, 2010, Department of Justice main estimates debate.

Request for Emergency Debate

The Speaker: Hon. members, I advised the Assembly earlier that I would not draw the members' attention to Standing Order 7(7) if we had a point of order or a question of privilege or a Standing Order 30 application. We have such a one from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre. The chair has the authority to limit the amount of debate with respect to these, and in light of the question that will be raised and the research that I've done in the last two hours, I think I will today exercise the option to limit the debate on this question.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, proceed.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Can you share with me what you are limiting it to? Do I have a time limit?

The Speaker: Well, I'm not going to have 48 members participate.

Ms Blakeman: Oh, okay. The number of participants rather than the time.

The Speaker: Yes. No, you certainly have every right. Proceed.

Public Accounts Committee

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Okay. The notice of motion has been distributed. I'll admit that I'm finding this a bit of a challenge because I've only been able to purchase one of the new versions of the House of Commons Procedure and Practice, and it stays here in the Assembly, so I'm not able to give you the references in the newer version. If you go online, it doesn't give you page numbers, so the references I'm giving you hearken back to the Marleau and Montpetit version. Sorry about that. It's expense.

The Speaker: That's not a problem.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Briefly, Mr. Speaker, this morning the government members on the Public Accounts Committee voted to radically change the independence of the Public Accounts Committee beyond the scope of anything anticipated by parliamentary process or tradition. The committee as far back as I can find has been chaired by a member of the Official Opposition. This is outlined in Beauchesne 781 and Marleau and Montpetit 768. I found it in the new edition but no page number.

Other than the requirements of tabling the report in the Assembly and, of course, the majority vote that is held by the government members, who are a majority on the committee, no other constraints have been listed or are traditional in a parliamentary process to be placed on the chair of the Public Accounts Committee. This has been changed this morning, essentially assigning voting veto power to the deputy chair, who is a member of the government caucus, regarding correspondence.

When I looked at M and M 588 regarding the scope under which Standing Order 30 could be positioned, Mr. Speaker, each legislative committee determines how they operate, but a Public Accounts Committee is unique, and such a change, therefore, is of utmost importance. When we're testing the importance and the urgency that's outlined, I would argue this is very important.

No attempt has been made to contact me as the House leader of the Official Opposition to negotiate institutionalizing this change across all of the committees, so I see this specifically directed at controlling the chair of the Public Accounts Committee, who, as we know, is a member of the Official Opposition.

Under Marleau and Montpetit 584 we're testing for whether it's specific, whether it's urgent and important, and whether it requires urgent consideration. I would state, Mr. Speaker, that given that this is the last week of spring sitting – potentially, I suppose, it could be the last day or the second-last day – and that this change, that has now been passed by this committee, affects the operation of this committee over the next six months and there is no other opportunity to address it, it is urgent that the matter get debated now.

The Public Accounts Committee is the venue by which MLAs, the media, the general public, even members of government view the government's spending decisions in action and view the outcomes. So when I looked at the test in Marleau and Montpetit 585, "that is immediately relevant and of attention and concern throughout the nation," being that this is a customary committee across all of the Westminster traditions, I argue that, yes, it is of attention and concern throughout the nation. I'm sure that others will be watching this.

It's not relevant around chronic conditions or work stoppages, so I'm not going to argue that.

I noticed that there is a prohibition against highly partisan issues, that they're not usually approved. Yes, Mr. Speaker, I believe this is to be viewed in a partisan context, but the enormity of this decision demands a public debate and explanation. This was not a negotiation. This was a coup d'état, guerrilla warfare, and it is a pernicious way to silence an opposition voice on government accountability. When I look to the parameters set out in Beauchesne's 387 to 393 on emergency debates, it's indicating the primary issues are urgency and specifically whether there's an opportunity for the debate of this matter to happen under rules and provisions of the House. No, I do not see an opportunity.

We tried to raise a question this afternoon, to which we did not get an answer. This issue is not before the courts, where it could be examined there. It was not mentioned in the throne speech. There's no bill on the government Order Paper that would address it. It's not appearing in any government press releases or backbencher caucus media releases. There isn't a private member's bill on it or a motion. It wasn't addressed in the budget. There is no notice on the Order Paper for any supplementary supply budget that might somehow give opportunity for debate on this, no government motions, no motions other than government motions. So there is no opportunity to debate this in any other context that I can see. It's not appropriate for a written question or a motion for a return.

I notice under Beauchesne's 389 that the matter needs to be "so pressing that the public interest will suffer if it is not given immediate attention." I draw the Speaker's notice once more to the imminent end of session and the lack of opportunity for this to be discussed in any other way. Section 390 is looking that discussion could take place immediately.

I think that parliamentary process puts the Official Opposition member as the chair precisely so that no government or no Premier's office has direct control over the committee or over the chair. It is intended to be a committee that has robust inquiry, and I would argue further that it has the power to challenge. With the chair being a member of the opposition, it's less likely to take any gentle prodding to silence itself. I think that constraining the chair by instituting a veto power in conjunction with the government member as deputy chair for any correspondence is a major change, Mr. Speaker. It affects both the perceived and the real operation of this committee.

I looked at the new House of Commons Procedure and Practice under your criteria for a decision, Mr. Speaker, and I have looked at some of the tests there. I've talked about that it does not fall under the administrative responsibilities of government, nor is it within the scope of ministerial action. It is addressing only one issue, and it's certainly not reviving discussion on a matter already debated. It didn't come before this House. This is a legislative committee, Mr. Speaker. It wouldn't normally come up by means of a substantive motion, and it's not involving the administration of a government department. I've checked the other criteria that you're basing it on, and I don't see that it fails on the basis of any of that.

I would argue that I've shown it does meet the other tests that are required here. I'm aware that you have a limit on the number of speakers, and we're mindful of the time today, so I would argue that it is critical that the Assembly, seeing as no other opportunity is being given, discuss this. It has a profound effect on this committee and its ability to operate without being muzzled or directed by government. Therefore, I would argue that it is debated in this Chamber under the Standing Order 30 provisions.

Thank you very much for the opportunity to raise this.

3:10

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. Government House Leader, do you want to participate in this?

Mr. Hancock: Sure. I was observing. Usually I go second, and then I don't have a chance to respond to others, so I was waiting to see if others wanted to go. I'm happy to participate, Mr. Speaker.

Obviously, the test for Standing Order 30 is urgent public importance. I'd submit that it's neither urgent nor publicly important. It's not urgent . . . [interjection] Well, let me explain. It certainly is an important step, but the question of public importance is another issue. Urgent: is it something that can only be dealt with now, can only be dealt with in this way? No. It's not. In fact, the Orders of the Day are more urgent than this particular issue.

What we have here, Mr. Speaker, apparently, is a situation where a committee which is in control of its own procedure, a committee which is in charge of its own agenda, has obviously raised some concerns with respect to the actions of its chair in setting that agenda or in dealing with its issues. There are a number of ways that a committee can deal with that. They can sanction the chair by motion, they can ask for the removal of the chair by motion, or they can do something short of that to express displeasure with the chair. It would appear that they've done something short of that to express displeasure with the chair. Obviously, the committee is concerned that the chair has used his authority in correspondence that he's sent out and gone beyond what the committee has sanctioned him to do or asked him to do. So this would clearly be simply a committee dealing with its business within its committee.

The hon. member as a member of the House has every right to send out any correspondence he wants to send in his own right, but he does not have the right to send out any correspondence that he wants as chair of the committee, purporting to be acting on behalf of the committee if, in fact, the committee has not sanctioned that action. So the action of the committee in passing a motion suggesting that the chair cannot act unilaterally on behalf of the committee is clearly within their purview, and it doesn't constitute a matter of urgency for this House.

There are other ways in which it could be dealt with. If the chair or the committee had some concerns, certainly, the committee could report to the House and then ask whether the House concurred in its report, and there would be an opportunity there for the House to take other steps if they thought there was a problem.

It's not a matter of urgency, and it's not a matter of public importance, Mr. Speaker. Not that the committee itself, the Public Accounts Committee, isn't publicly important; of course it's publicly important. It's one of those accountability structures of a parliamentary democracy that is very important. It's also very important that it be seen to be acting appropriately. If the committee members had concern about the correspondence being sent out by the chair on behalf of the committee, obviously they have some concern.

So it hasn't met the test of . . . [interjections] Mr. Speaker?

The Speaker: You have the floor.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview seems to think that this has something to do with something . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: You have the floor, and the chair is listening to you very attentively. Ignore others.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you. I have the chair's permission to ignore Edmonton-Riverview, and I will take that advice.

Dr. Taft: I'm used to it.

Mr. Hancock: You should be.

Mr. Speaker, Standing Order 30 is not the appropriate route to deal with this particular issue. If the committee has concerns about its operation, there are many avenues which it can use to deal with those concerns. It's chosen one relatively minor way to provide a sanction to its chair for stepping outside the bounds of his authority as chair. It's a gentle slap on the wrist, if you will, to a chair.

Ms Blakeman: For what?

Mr. Hancock: For stepping outside of his bounds. Obviously, the chair has been sending out correspondence that the committee didn't like or else it wouldn't be asking for the cosign. [interjections] This is not the situation for bringing forward evidence. People are yelling at me to prove it, and I don't have to prove anything at this instance. If they had a concern about something that needed to be proved, they could bring forward a question of privilege and go to Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing and ask them to investigate the matter, I suppose. That might be one option.

They could have a discussion in their committee with respect to the operations of the committee. They could have a robust discussion as to why the chair should or should not be able to carry out duties unilaterally and do things unilaterally. There are a number of circumstances which have been brought to my attention, which I am not prepared to disclose at the moment because I don't have any written evidence of them and they would just be rumour and innuendo on my part. I'm not going to get into this issue of what the actions were. There would be appropriate places to discuss that kind of action. That appropriate place isn't here and isn't now.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I indicated earlier that I've been studying this matter since a few minutes after 11 o'clock this morning, when the Standing Order 30 application arrived in my office, which certainly met the time requirement with respect to this matter. I'm always also cognizant of the traditions and the heritage of this Assembly and other Assemblies of the British tradition. I arrived very early to a conclusion that I would not put the question forthcoming because of some very important historical traditions with respect to Legislative Assemblies. I am prepared to rule. I think there's a time requirement with this, and I'm going to point out some other things as well. I'm prepared to rule whether the request for leave is to proceed.

I first of all indicated it certainly met the application for the time, but there are several reasons why the request for leave to adjourn the ordinary business of the Assembly under Standing Order 30 is not in order. First of all, it's very clear that this matter arose in the Standing Committee on Public Accounts. This issue concerns the procedure of the committee.

It is the chair's understanding that the motion was found to be in order by the chair of that committee. I've read the Blues with respect to this. Further, a vote was held. Then, as far as I can understand in looking at the Blues with respect to this meeting which occurred this morning, there was no appeal of the chair's decision to basically go forward with the call for the vote. The vote was called, and as I understand, there was no appeal reported in the matter of the committee then.

Traditionally what we've always accepted – and I certainly have in the 13 years that I've had the privilege of being the Speaker – is that the committee essentially conducts its own affairs within the committee. There are procedures that could have been followed and still can be followed to challenge the decision of the committee. They may not have been made this morning, but they certainly can be made at a subsequent meeting of this committee. House of Commons Procedure and Practice expresses this view on page 1047.

The idea that committees are “masters of their proceedings” or “masters of their procedures” is frequently evoked in committee debates or the House. The concept refers to the freedom committees normally have to organize their work as they see fit and the option they have of defining, on their own, certain rules of procedure that facilitate their proceedings.

So they may have a proceeding today, and at a subsequent meeting they may change that proceeding. They can certainly have the right within the committee to do that and for members to deal with it.

Secondly, there is nothing in here that suggests to me – and, again, I have to be very careful about the words I'm going to say – that this is being raised as a point of privilege with respect to any matter. It would have to depend entirely on what the issue is because once again House of Commons Procedure and Practice at pages 149 to 152 in the second edition certainly has a chapter on privilege in committees, and we have a Practical Guide: Committees of the Legislative Assembly, which all members have with respect to such matters. I also would like to point out our own standing order of our Assembly, 30(7)(e), which states that a motion in this Assembly cannot deal with anything based on the question of privilege within a committee, going back again to the concept and the belief that the committee is, in essence, master or mistress of his or her own domain.

Thirdly, we did a very, very quick review of minutes of committees of this Assembly going back several years. Now, this is not conclusive, but on June 27, 2007, in the Standing Committee on Government Services there was a motion that was moved and was carried. It said that the chair and the deputy chair of the Standing Committee on Government Services “in conjunction with committee staff be empowered to prepare a press release and a list of stakeholders” for presentation at the next committee meeting. There was an event three years-plus ago. I'm guessing that the chair of that committee, the Standing Committee on Government Services, was a government chair and that the deputy chair – I don't know if it was an opposition member or not.

Then on October 31, 2007, tabling and release of the committee's final reports, there was a motion agreed to by the Standing Committee on Community Services that, once approved by the acting chair and the deputy chair and after tabling the final reports on bills 31 and 41 in the Legislative Assembly, a final news release be sent out and the final reports be made publicly available on the committee's website. That indicates it was agreed to.

We have minutes here from November 2, 2007, printing and tabling of final reports, et cetera: agreed by the Standing Committee on Government Services that the chair and deputy chair be authorized to work with support staff to prepare and approve a news release regarding the committee's final reports on Bill 1, the Lobbyists Act, and Bill 2, Conflicts of Interest Amendment Act, 2007.

In addition to that, I guess there's a fourth issue that I had to raise with respect to this. Standing Order 30(6), the one we're dealing with, provides that “An emergency debate does not entail any decision of the Assembly.” In the chair's view, the wording of the application violates this rule when it states that the changes to Public Accounts requiring the chair of Public Accounts to obtain the signature of the deputy chair for all correspondence directly undermines the authority and autonomy of the chair and diminishes the established powers of the chair [in the end].

Methinks that this committee of Public Accounts will meet again.

Mr. MacDonald: We don't know when.

The Speaker: Well, I suspect there will be another meeting. I'm just guessing.

Ms Blakeman: How do we know? We can't call it without permission.

The Speaker: Well, I tell you what: if in six months hence there's no additional meeting of the Public Accounts Committee, let's have the committee come and visit with me, and we'll arrange to have one.

So I'm not going to put the question today. I've given a number of reasons, but the primary reason in all of this is that I really believe that if committees are to function and if participation on a committee is to be considered important and to be important – and I understand members actually compete with one another to be on some of these committees, and I suspect that a few minutes from now we're going to have a debate about membership on these committees. Committee membership is extremely important. Servitude on that committee is more than just important. I'm going to ask the committee and look forward to the committee looking at this matter as it continues to evolve with respect to this matter.

Orders of the Day

Government Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Committee Membership Changes

13. Mr. Hancock moved:

Be it resolved that the following change to

- (a) the Standing Committee on Community Services be approved: that Mr. Allred replace Mr. Johnson;
- (b) the Standing Committee on Public Safety and Services be approved: that Mr. Johnson replace Mr. Griffiths;
- (c) the Standing Committee on the Economy be approved: that Mr. Griffiths replace Mr. Allred.

[Adjourned debate April 13: Mr. Hancock]

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've been advised that since this matter was under discussion yesterday, there have been ongoing discussions between the Government House Leader and the Official Opposition House Leader as well as the Member for Calgary-Currie to facilitate and accommodate the participation of the Member for Calgary-Currie on standing committees. To that extent, I would like to propose a subamendment to the amendment that's currently before the floor.

The Speaker: Okay. It will be circulated as you proceed with it.

Other members might want to just be apprised of this. Look at Votes and Proceedings, which should be on your desk. If you look at page 4 in Votes and Proceedings, you will see the original motion, Motion 13, and then you will see the amendment put forward by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre yesterday. That's included on that page. As I understand now, hon. Deputy Government House Leader, you will now introduce a subamendment. In essence, there'll be three items we'll be talking about. Please proceed. That matter is being circulated.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't think it requires any explanation. It's self-explanatory. But for the record I will read the subamendment into the record. I would like to move that amendment A1 be amended as follows:

- A. By renumbering part A as part A.1 and adding the following before part A.1:
 - A. By striking out part (a) and substituting the following:
 - (a) the Standing Committee on Community Services be approved: that Mr. Allred replace Mr. Johnson, that Mr. Taylor be appointed to the committee;
- B. By striking out part A.1 and substituting the following:

- A.1 By striking out part (c) and substituting the following:
 - (c) the Standing Committee on the Economy be approved: that Mr. Chase replace Mr. Boutilier, that Mr. Chase replace Mr. Taylor as deputy chair, and that Mr. Griffiths replace Mr. Allred;
- C. By striking out part B and substituting the following:
 - B. By adding the following after part (c):
 - (d) the Special Standing Committee on Members' Services be approved: that Ms Pastoor replace Mr. Taylor.

That is my subamendment, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we will now proceed with discussion on the subamendment just introduced by the hon. Deputy Government House Leader. If any member would like to participate on the subamendment, we'll take them one at a time.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. As this is a subamendment to my amendment, I'm fine in supporting what has been put forward here. I was not in a position and it would have been highly irregular for me to have chosen the committees that Calgary-Currie would have sat on, and it wasn't for me to negotiate that. I just had to look after my own caucus, which is what I was attempting to do. It looks like all necessary arrangements have now been made, and I think that the subamendment works out fine as far as we're concerned as well.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Shall I call the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on subamendment SA1 carried]

The Speaker: Shall I now proceed to call the question on the amendment?

Hon. Members: Question.

The Speaker: Is that fine with everyone? Okay. On the amendment put forward by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre and found on page 4 of Votes and Proceedings for today's purposes, will all hon. members please say aye who support it as amended. We'll get to the motion as amended later. Right now we're dealing with the amendment. Everybody knows what it is: what was put forward by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre yesterday.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

[Government Motion 13 as amended carried]

The Speaker: Thank you very much for your co-operation, by the way, with respect to this. It solved some issues that needn't become issues. Good work.

Private Bills Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill Pr. 2
Canada Olympic Park Property Tax Exemption
Amendment Act, 2010

The Deputy Chair: We are dealing with amendment A1. Any comments or considerations or questions or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? May I also remind the Assembly that Pr. 1, Pr. 2, and Pr. 3 were debated fully by all parties at other committee meetings.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre on amendment A1. Pr. 2 is the Canada Olympic Park Property Tax Exemption Amendment Act, 2010.

Ms Blakeman: Yes. Sorry. We are debating Pr. 2, and it was amended yesterday. Yes. Thank you very much. My concern around this private bill was really to ensure that it was not possible to manoeuvre away from the public ownership of this land and the facilities on it with the protection of the tax status with it and manoeuvre that and roll it over into a private company.

3:30

I know that one of the things that has been talked about around this land – the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit had talked about negotiating some of this land to be used as a film studio, but the understanding is that the film studio would likely be a private endeavour. I think we'd need to be very careful and very knowledgeable before we got to the point where the protected property tax status of this land would be extended to a private entity. Even if it is an entity that we value and would like to see integrated into our film industry in Alberta, I think we'd have to be really careful about that one.

I understand that they have petitioned for the exemption on the new land, and that's fine with me. I'm just looking for the reassurance that it would continue to be protected as public ownership or not-for-profit ownership and that that special tax status would not be extended to a private entity or corporation. Those were the concerns that I had. If that's going to be embarked upon, then it needs to come back here as a very wide-ranging discussion because if we open that door, there's a lot of different things that are going to walk through it that want that same kind of tax status and protection that would normally be considered a private entity or a private industry. That's my concern around this issue.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Do any other members wish to speak to the amendment? Should I call the question on the amendment as proposed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Deputy Chair: We are now back to Bill Pr. 2 as amended. Any comments or questions with regard to this? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you. I, too, rise with just one or two concerns, of course, about what this bill is seeking to achieve. Obviously, in principle the objectives of CODA are those that we should consider supporting, but it looks to me like we are looking at abdicating our entitlement to significant tax revenue or roughly 70 per cent of what's there right now, based on what is currently exempt and what would become exempt under this piece of legislation.

It appears to me that the limits on ensuring that we're not ultimately giving the benefit of this tax exemption to those who are utilizing this resource as a means of earning profits in one form or another are not clear enough in that the exemption simply exempts lands or improvements that are for the purposes "solely of a for-profit commercial nature." But it would seem to me that with the inclusion of that word "solely," in essence you could have a development that anticipates or contemplates a partial for-profit component that would still enjoy the benefit of the tax exemption which is being extended under this legislation. That seems to me to be providing a benefit to a particular group of potentially for-profit players at the expense of others, and it doesn't seem to make sense to me, really. I mean, we ask everyone else to either pay property tax or to incorporate that particular cost into their business plans, and I'm not sure why we wouldn't do that in this case.

Quite honestly, probably the biggest problem that we have here is the inclusion of the word "solely" in the exemption from the application of the tax-free status in that it allows for an 80 per cent for-profit development to forgo paying taxes. That seems to me to be not in the public interest, hence our concern with this bill.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak to Pr. 2?

Ms DeLong: I just want to take a moment to reassure the people who are concerned about profitable enterprises being able to get a tax-free status under this bill. If you look into the details especially of the amendments, you will see that we have very, very, very carefully and explicitly taken that out.

I ask everyone to please support this bill.

The Deputy Chair: Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill Pr. 2 as amended agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed?

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Deputy Chair: That is carried.

Bill Pr. 3
Lamont Health Care Centre Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I wish to move an amendment to Bill Pr. 3, the Lamont Health Care Centre Act. With your consent I'll dispense with reading the amendment while it is distributed and just offer a couple of quick comments to highlight the nature of the amendment. This bill was reviewed by the Standing Committee on Private Bills, and I would like to thank the chair of the committee, the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, and the members for their very thorough review.

The amendment which is being distributed deals with two issues that arose in the course of the committee's review, Mr. Chair. First of all, the protection from liability clause for the members of the board of management of the Lamont health care centre, which will be continued under the proposed legislation. Secondly, the amendment deals with section 11 of the proposed legislation, which deals with the terms of dissolution of the corporation, again subject to passage of the legislation.

The Deputy Chair: We are speaking to amendment A1. Any comments or questions with regard to amendment A1?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. If I may ask the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, just to be clear here because I was at the Private Bills Committee meeting, where this was discussed: is the amendment that he's brought forward here entirely in line with the discussion at that committee? There have been no changes or anything?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Horne: Yes. Mr. Chair, I can confirm that this amendment is identical to what appears in the report of the committee.

The Deputy Chair: Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Deputy Chair: Any comments or questions on the bill as amended?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill Pr. 3 as amended agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? That is carried.

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

Bill 7

Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2010

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments or questions regarding this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm just confirming: how many minutes do I have to speak?

Ms Blakeman: Twenty.

Dr. Taft: Twenty. Okay. Thank you.

There are many parts of this bill that I have a desire to comment on, but I'm going to focus my comments this time on one particular issue, which to me is of very, very deep importance. That has to do with the part of this bill that allows the piloting of electronic voting . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, I wish to advise that we are speaking to subamendment SA1. When we last adjourned, we had subamendment SA1, which was moved – I don't know if you have the wording there – which said to strike out the words that follow “section 44.1(1)(g)” and substitute “by striking out subclause (iv) and substituting the following”:

- (iv) advertising by the Government required to address public safety, the provision of adequate health services or to communicate employment opportunities to the public.

Dr. Taft: Okay. Thank you. It's been a little while since we debated this bill.

This subamendment was one brought forward at our suggestion. We agreed with the spirit of the original amendment, which was to strike government advertising during an election campaign. But as we thought about it, we thought: well, you know, we need to think this through because if there's a public emergency or if the government wants to recruit people or things like that, there are select purposes for government advertising that would be legitimate whether it was an election campaign or not.

That is why we proposed this subamendment. It would allow some of the crucial advertising of government to proceed during an election campaign if it addressed very, very specific, well-defined issues of public safety, health services, or employment opportunities. Otherwise, it would still achieve what the original amendment intended, which was to disallow advertising that, frankly, can be unduly partisan in glorifying the achievements of the government during a campaign, which is simply unfair.

That was the idea of our subamendment, Mr. Chairman, and I would urge all members to support it. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Any other comments on subamendment SA1? The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Yes, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate being able to stand up to make a few more comments. The amendment and the part that I have a concern with is where it says: anything that the government sees as a threat. It's always tough to make a bill and to see how far we need to expand it.

Do you have a copy that I could see because I don't have mine in front of me.

Ms Blakeman: There are the two pieces. There's yours, and there's mine.

Mr. Hinman: Is the threat there, though?

Ms Blakeman: No.

Mr. Hinman: Did you remove it after I talked to you?

Ms Blakeman: I don't know.

Mr. Hinman: That the government “address public safety, the provision of adequate health services or to communicate employment opportunities to the public.” That's important, and we agree with this amendment in the fact that it needs to go forward, but I'm just not sure if further in the bill, when it talks about things that it can advertise, everything has been struck.

The one other area that concerned me – and we'll do a little bit more research on it here as we're going – is the threat for public safety because one of the things that I've learned in opposition is that this government very much sees the opposition as the threat and would want to bring that in as advertising and use it as a legal loophole to . . .

Dr. Taft: They don't look too threatened yet.

Mr. Hinman: Well, it is a threat, nevertheless, whether they're aware of that or not.

At this point in the middle of a campaign they could wake up and realize that they have some problems, so I think that we need to be very careful in what the government can and will advertise during an election. It needs to be very limited to addressing public safety in a real sense. You know, like I say, if there's a pandemic coming out, if something happened up north, whatever it is, it's critical that the government does put forward the concerns and the safety of the citizens first in a nonpartisan way.

We see the value of this amendment, to restrict it to be very limited to public safety and not just the whim or the arbitrary decision of the government to think: oh, this will help if we talk about some arbitrary falsehood, whether it's about water or the environment or something else that they seem to try and promote and advertise as "Oh, this is safe; this is a new procedure; it's okay to go forward" or to somehow enhance their campaign along with some public advertising to say, "This is safe" or "This should be promoted" or "This is a new program that we should adopt." It could be anything. For example, right now we see numerous advertisements going out on Bill 50 and the fact that this is a good thing, and it's needed here in the province, when, in fact, a needs process should be going forward. We're concerned about that but think that this amendment is good. We'll be voting in favour of this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere on the subamendment.

Mr. Anderson: On the subamendment. The hon. member keeps saying: we want to vote in favour of this. I just want to clarify that he wants to, and I also do want to vote in favour of this amendment of my own free will. I just came from a caucus where I didn't have that freedom, so please let me express it.

I do absolutely support this amendment. I was confused earlier. This is an amendment to the amendment that I originally brought forward. I think it actually makes my original amendment stronger, so I very much do agree with it.

Obviously, if there's a public safety concern, you know, if there's tainted drinking water or tainted beef or tainted something, we need to be able to get that message out to the public even if it's during an election period. The same, of course, with health services, as my hon. colleague talked about, with regard to H1N1 or whatever possible thing could come up, and opportunities for employment as well. Those need to be out there. Obviously, jobs need to be filled during the election.

Now, as with any statute it could be abused. I know that there are some people over on the other side of the House and on this side of the House — we have a diverse group in here — that believe that some things are a threat to public safety; for example, CO₂. Some people would say that is a threat to public safety. So we've got to make sure that, you know, it doesn't become a campaign issue, and they say, "Oh, well, we're going to put all this advertising into saying what a great job we're doing on carbon capture and storage" or "What a great job we're doing on X, Y, and Z because it's a public safety concern" and therefore find a way around the purpose or the intent of this amendment.

I think the intent of this amendment is public safety, meaning a real and imminent threat that we need to deal with in the right here and now or else people will be injured, people will die, homes will be lost, et cetera, immediately. If that is the spirit of the amendment — and I'm sure it is — then I have no problem supporting it as it does strengthen the legislation.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak?

I'll call the question.

[Motion on subamendment SA1 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We are now back to amendment A1. Hon. members, any questions or comments on amendment A1 as proposed by the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere? The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Okay. Yes. As I noted earlier, we do absolutely support this amendment, and since I introduced it, that would make sense. The reason for this is very simple. First of all, there is no one in the province of Alberta, no entity in the province of Alberta that has more ability to spend money than the government of Alberta. It has the most capital and the most money of any entity, organization, or otherwise in the province. It's a huge amount of spending power, and what I continue to see — and you see it in all governments, frankly, across the country — and something I disagree with is when they use advertising to promote something that they're doing, and really it is partisan. I mean, in effect, it is a partisan advertisement, but because they don't put the logo of the party on the site and it's the government of Alberta logo on the site, then it's therefore okay.

It's a tremendous, tremendous waste of money and resources and very unfortunate. Really, in my view, any such public relations exercises should not be allowed. If it's an issue of public safety, as was pointed out earlier, if it's a health issue or whatever, severe weather warnings and advertisements for programs to get over a drought that's occurring, I totally understand that and support that. But I heard on the radio a couple of weeks ago how wonderful Budget 2010 was. "Oh, Budget 2010. It's going to help us do X, Y, and Z, and it's going to cure all ills, and its going to do this and that." You know, of course, many of us in this Chamber, including some on the government side, I know feel that that budget was an absolute disaster. That's a matter of debate, though. I agree with that. Some people think it's great; some people think it's a train wreck. We can agree to disagree.

Why should we be using taxpayer funds to promote a budget? There is no public interest in doing so. No one is going to escape harm because they hear on the radio how great Budget 2010 is. So it's an important distinction to make between relevant government advertising that is being used to promote a public purpose or a public good as opposed to just government spending money on advertising to promote their own interests.

Even in a nonelection period I have a problem with that type of advertising, a huge problem with it. During an election period that is absolutely unacceptable. I'll tell you that I can picture it now, and you can take this to the bank. If we go to an election in 2012, it is probably going to work out something like this. They're going to pass the budget. They're going to claim that it's balanced. It won't be, because they won't be including the cash deficit. Anyway, they may claim it. If they're lucky, they may get back to a book balance, and then they will immediately drop the writ and then charge off. I can just see the advertisements from the government of Alberta: Budget 2012, back in the black; the first jurisdiction to do this.

Whether that's true or not, you know, you can just see it. You can just hear the airways and just millions and millions of dollars being used for that purpose. Well, in my view, that would be, especially during an election period, just a gross misuse of public funds, and it would be extremely undemocratic, even more undemocratic than doing it in a nonelection period.

Mr. Chair, this is all governments. I mean, this PC government does it all the time, but they're not the only government in this country to do that. There are others. The provincial and, frankly, the federal government, both parties, do this. It's something that we need to improve and we need to be an example of in this province, that we will not do that, that public monies will be used for nonpartisan purposes and not for partisan purposes specifically with regard to advertising the wonderful, great things that the government is doing when, really, there is no public interest in doing so. There's no reason.

Obviously, people have to let the public know about different programs and those types of things, and I understand that. Like I said earlier, if there is a drought relief program or if there is some program that people need to access, there is a place for that. It shouldn't all necessarily be on: "We're so great. We're so great. The government is dealing with this problem, and this is the program and so forth." But if you need to put out materials about certain seniors' support programs that are out there and things like that, how to access them, how-to sheets, that's totally legit, totally legitimate. Frankly, that's what an MLA's office and website is for. There are other things to do that, but it just seems that with government they never go halfway. They always seem to, you know, go: "Oh, great. We've got this thing that we need to advertise. We need to tell everybody how great we are." And they go all out. They get it on Hockey Night in Canada. They get it on TSN during the Olympics or something. I mean, it just goes on and on and on. I just don't see the purpose of that, and I think it's wrong.

Again, I would like to see those things cleaned up in this government and also in other governments. There's no place for that type of partisanship during an election period. There's no reason that we're struggling to find health care workers to fill the different pieces of infrastructure that we've built in the health care system when we are, you know, thinking about cutting $70,000 from Alberta Hospital, although thanks to one of the hon. members across the way who managed to put a stop to it. When we're here trying to make sure that we're cutting and trimming and trying to be efficient, before we do anything, especially to vulnerable Albertans, maybe the first thing we should be looking at is: what's the stuff that's really not helping anybody? This type of partisan advertising is the type of thing that is going to hurt or is completely useless to vulnerable Albertans or to any Albertans, frankly.

You know, again, I think of education. I think of what I brought up in the House earlier with the school issue in Airdrie right now. I mean, it really is something else. I know every jurisdiction has their issues, but this is a serious, emergent situation in a town that's gone from 20,000 to 45,000 people in just about 10 years and continues to grow at an incredible rate. People don't seem to realize that, and that's why I try to bring it up. The point is that $15 million would build us a school in Airdrie. Meanwhile, we're spending even in my constituency, other than the rathole replacement in the south of Airdrie, we're still spending tens of millions. I think it's something like $50 million in road improvements in Airdrie-Chestermere. Well, I've talked to my constituents about this. Sure, there are some that want them. I want them. But they would be willing to put that off if it meant $15 million for a school. They'd be willing to put off 30 per cent or 50 per cent of those road improvements a couple of years if it meant getting a school built in Airdrie.

When we can't even build the amount of schools that we need, that means we're spending money in other places that we shouldn't be. If there's one place, one area where we should not be spending that type of money, it's on political advertising or semipolitical advertising during an election period or before an election period.

With that, Mr. Chair, you're looking at me as if you want to hear from somebody else, so I will sit down and let my hon. colleagues speak to this. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak on amendment A1? Hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, do you wish to speak on amendment A1?

Mr. Hinman: Yes. I just need to be on the record. I was very disappointed that the last amendment didn't pass. Government advertising is a real concern, and it needs to be restricted. I just once more have to go on the record saying that this is wrong. There are just so many areas where they're going to look at twisting the rules a little bit and saying, "Oh, this is okay; we're talking about the health of Albertans and the importance of CO₂ sequestration" or "We're talking about the safety of Albertans; we're looking at needing to spend $15 billion on a Rolls-Royce power line." Those things are very potential. This is about advertising and who is doing it.

It's a real concern to me. I think that government advertising needs to be restricted. We've put two amendments forward, are very disappointed that the government has voted those down. I very much see that this is going to be voted down as well because it's going to be even more restrictive than the last one, which was a good amendment to ensure public safety.

I just have to be on the record once more. It's one of these things that really should be a standing vote – but we're not going to go for that – to show the accountability of people saying: "Well, no. We think government should have the arbitrary decision of deciding those things." I just have to speak in favour of this amendment and hope that we'll come to our senses and put Albertans first.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you. I will attempt to be brief on this because I know there are other speakers that want to get on to other issues. However, I do want to rise to speak in favour of this amendment. This is a government that has been in power, by the time we get to the next election, for 40 years. There are deeply, deeply embedded patterns of behaviour within this government and their relationship with the public service that are very, very poisonous, frankly, to the health of our democracy.

One of those things, of course, is the way in which government will very conveniently use their Public Affairs budget to promote their political objectives, and there's no question that that happens more and more during an election. There are so many different ways that you can identify that. One member has talked about how, you know, we were quite surprised to hear little jingles and ads on radio stations promoting the budget just a month and a half ago. I have to say that I thought that had taken it to a new level.

I look at the government website, and I see that the colours look remarkably similar to the Conservative Party colours, as does the font. Interestingly, the website itself features the Premier. What does the Premier's face have to do with the policy issues that are talked about on this particular public service government website?

Nothing. The reason the Premier is there is because he's their political leader, at this point in time anyway, and that's the person whose profile this money is being used to enhance.

As it is, there's a tremendous inequity, a tremendous malaise in terms of democracy in this province. Of course, we already have election financing rules that ensure that we are the Wild West of vote buying here in this province, and the last thing we need is to also give this government the opportunity to do advertising on political issues over the course of a political campaign. So a limitation on that would be completely reasonable and would be a sound understanding of a level playing field and fairness. Should the government choose to vote this amendment down, then clearly it will be another example of them once again rejecting the notion of a fair playing field and their full commitment to equal democratic participation.

I urge members, as a result, to actually support this amendment because I think it's one that's much needed to improve the equality and fairness of our democratic process. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak on the amendment?

If not, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Deputy Chair: This takes us to Bill 7. Any comments or questions on Bill 7? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you so much, Mr. Chairman. I will be speaking in the next several minutes to section 4.1(1) of the bill, which is on page 4.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, I hate to interrupt, but may we revert to Introduction of Guests for a moment?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I would like to introduce to you and to all members of the Assembly some very special people to me: my wife, Pauline Prins, and my son Wayne Prins and my daughter-in-law Renée Prins from Fort McMurray.

Thank you very much.

Bill 7

Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2010

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, thank you for indulging us. Please proceed.

Dr. Taft: I'm happy to do it.

We'll try again. I am speaking, as I was saying, Mr. Chairman, for the next several minutes specifically to section 4.1(1) of the bill, which is on page 4. This section of the bill allows the Chief Electoral Officer to test in a by-election the use of election procedures and equipment that are different from those which are required by the act.

I know from what I've read and heard that one of the options being considered is electronic voting, Internet-based voting. I have thought about this, and there have been some discussions in our caucus on this. My comments are strictly my own, but I do feel very strongly about this, Mr. Chairman. In this Assembly we have discussions on things that are good or things that are silly or things that are pointless or uninformed or misguided, depending on our feelings. I actually think that in considering this – and this may sound melodramatic – we have to consider evil. I think it's incumbent on us as legislators, when we weigh the pros and cons of electronic voting, that we actually get down to some of the most unsavoury and difficult aspects of human nature, including, as I say, the word "evil." That's not a word I use lightly.

There are, Mr. Chairman, I suppose many views of history, two of which I'd like to mention. One is that things are advancing, that over the long haul we're on this move as a civilization to better and higher and happier levels, that as one generation leads to the next and one century leads to the next, things are just on this constant process of improving. On the other hand, there's a sense that history is actually just an unending struggle. It's a contest; it's a struggle of often many forces at once between right and wrong and good and bad and enlightenment and darkness and however you want to put it. But it is an unending struggle, and the outcome is always in peril.

Mr. Chairman, my particular view is that of the second. I'd like to think that history is on this unending course to paradise, but my reading of history is that, in fact, we are in an unending struggle, a contest. In light of that, I think that the advances and freedoms and prosperity that we enjoy right now require constant vigilance. It requires far-sightedness. It requires toughness and discipline. History is absolutely filled with dead civilizations. We think probably immediately of the western heritage of Rome. For those of us who have been to Italy or many parts of the Mediterranean, you can walk through glorious ruins of a civilization.

Of course, before Rome in our tradition there was Egypt. Before Egypt there was Persia, and on it goes back. Or you can travel around the world. You go to South America. Go to Machu Picchu, where my wife hiked about three years ago and brought back photos that are just breathtaking. How was this done? This was a civilization that was actually lost to human knowledge until, you know, a hundred years ago or so. Of course, other places come to mind. Angkor Wat, Borobudur in Indonesia, where I spent some time about a year and a half ago: spectacular civilizations completely gone.

I cannot help but go to those and think: well, what's in store for our civilization? Are we so brilliant, are we so exceptional that all the rules of history that have applied to everybody before us do not apply to us? I can never come away feeling that confident. I feel that sooner or later this civilization that has been so generous to all of us will be lost, and it's our responsibility as citizens and as legislators to keep it alive and healthy and vibrant for as long as possible.

To me, democracy, which really is what is underlying Bill 7, has to be understood in that context. We think that democracy is ancient. We think of ancient Greece, you know, the golden age of Athens and Plato and Socrates and the citizens of Athens, all of whom were male landowners, meeting and hashing out the details in their wonderful temples and stadiums. But that golden age lasted barely a lifetime, really, before Athens was conquered by Sparta and essentially wiped out.

We think of the Magna Carta, and we say: well, democracy as we've known it has been around at least since the Magna Carta, 800 years. But I can tell you that the Magna Carta, the political society at the time of the Magna Carta, bears virtually no resemblance to what we enjoy today. At the time of the Magna Carta that was really just a product of raw political muscle coming to a compromise between barons and the monarchy. Sure, it laid the route for democracy, but to think that democracy as we know it now is anything like what was around 800 years ago is misguided.

What we have today is a representative democracy in which everybody over the age of 18 has the right to vote. That's a remarkable achievement. We have to remember that it's in the lifetime of probably just about every member of this Assembly that First Nations people got the right to vote. Think about that for a minute. It's in our lifetime, the early 1960s, that First Nations people got the right to vote, and it's in the lifetime of the former Lieutenant Governor, Norman Kwong, that Chinese people got the right to vote here. It's not even a hundred years since women got the right to vote here. Our democracy is extremely brief. It's not this great, long, ancient tradition. It's brief. We have a responsibility to nourish it, and we cannot gamble with it.

I did a little bit of math. If we were to imagine about 10,000 years of human civilization since humans began gathering in villages and so on, and if we were to take that as a day, then in the period of time since Alberta women got the right to vote, it's 14 minutes to midnight. It's that brief. In a long, long stretch of human history democracy as we know it now is but a moment.

We need to protect our right to vote, and we need to protect its credibility. That's why I'm opposed to the sections in Bill 7 that allow and encourage and facilitate the Chief Electoral Officer to move to electronic means of voting.

Canadians tend to be naive. We are the Dudley Do-Rights of the world. We go in, and we think: well, everybody is going to play fair, and nobody is going to be dirty, and we'll all follow the rules. I went to a movie the other night. I wouldn't recommend it. It wasn't a very good movie. It was called Dining with Stella, and it portrays in many ways the terrible naivety of Canadians in other cultures.

The world is not a nice place. The world is filled with evil and threats and dangers, and we need to recognize that. Even in our own province in the last decade there was a major voting scandal in Calgary, the ward 10 voting scandal. Well over a thousand fraudulent ballots were cast. How was that caught? It was caught because they were ballots. It was caught because an official paying attention noticed that ballot after ballot had a consistent signature, and they were all physically delivered at the same time to the same place. That's how that was caught. To the credit of that official she blew a whistle. The police were called in, and actually a former member of this Assembly very nearly got drawn into that. I believe his house was actually raided. But we don't need to go there. My point is that there are people out there who will deliberately set out even in our own province to cheat an election in the most blatant way.

There are, of course, much smaller examples. We've had them. I bet many members have. The former Member for Edmonton-Decore, Bill Bonner, who was in an extremely close election call in 2001, ended up in a situation where there were dozens and dozens of special ballots, all with the same signature. The former Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie was actually a returning officer there, too, and after the election saw documents that were special ballots supposedly signed by one of his constituents. They were dated, and in fact that constituent was in India when the election was conducted. Somebody had fraudulently signed those ballots. So we cannot be naive. We cannot be naive.

The great risk, the potentially fatal risk to democracy with electronic voting is that there is no physical record. There's no opportunity to audit. Everything is just buzzed into this black box, and out comes the result. Who's to say if it's accurate or not? Of course, we'll hear from some members: well, we can do our banking electronically, so why can't we vote electronically? This is where the matter of evil comes into this. I think: let's not be naive. Imagine a situation, again in most of our lifetimes – I'm talking like I'm an old guy here. I guess I'm getting that way. Imagine the cold war and the Soviet Union and the interest those countries might have, if they were still going today, in hacking into an electronic voting system and rearranging the results. It could happen.

In fact, there was just a major story that broke the other day. I brought a copy of it, Mr. Chairman: Internet Spy Ring Uncovered. It talks about a group of Canadian researchers, actually, largely Canadian. They were also working with U.S. researchers. They were able to uncover a spy ring that had hacked into the most secure databases in the world; for example, the Indian military and the Indian nuclear establishment and the United Nations and the offices of the Dalai Lama and several other countries. They were able to trace this spy ring eventually back to a big city in China called Chengdu, but the researcher said there is "no evidence in this report of the involvement of the People's Republic of China or any other government in the shadow network." So we don't actually know who was this spy ring, but we do know that they were able to hack into the most secure electronic systems available.

We also have to think: well, what about organized crime? I mean, imagine – imagine – a voting system that could be hacked into by organized crime or by a foreign government heavily invested in the oil sands who, for example, is wanting royalties changed or environmental standards reduced or increased. Who's to say that that could never happen? We have to remember – and there's been compelling evidence of this in the Assembly the last few days – that Canada is a nation at war right now. Right now. Well, are we so absolutely confident in our electronic security that we think that our enemies in war might not try to hack in and fiddle around with an electronic voting system?

This is an age, Mr. Chairman, where people deliberately set out to plan to fly fully loaded airliners into skyscrapers. That's the extent that people will go to violate a society. So do we actually think they're not going to go so far as to try and hack into a voting system, particularly when the stakes are so high? We in the province of Alberta own some of the largest petroleum reserves on the planet. What a tempting target: to hack into a voting system and get control, get a friendly force in place through an election. There are fundamentalists of all types out there, Mr. Chairman, who believe that regardless of the cost, regardless of the rules that are broken or the lives that are paid, they are right, and they will stop at nothing, including, in my view, hacking into electronic voting systems.

Of course, who's the scrutineer? Who's to say if it even happened? What if it's a vote in which, you know, six or eight votes are the difference? Well, how would we ever know if it had been stolen? Or even if it was 6,000 votes or 600,000. How would we even know if the election had been stolen?

What's kind of perverse in all of this is that even if the fraud didn't occur, who would actually trust the system? What if it was a close vote and absolutely legitimate? The question nonetheless would always nag at the public and nag, at least, at the losers: was that election true and honest, or was it stolen from me? Close votes, controversial plebiscites, surprise outcomes: all of that would be constantly in doubt, and that doubt, in my view, Mr. Chairman, would eat away at the public faith and confidence in our entire voting system.

Mr. Chairman, you can tell that I am deeply, deeply opposed to any movement towards electronic voting. It's a cheap way out of what's a pretty straightforward problem. There are much better ways to get people to vote in higher numbers than they do. This is, you know, potentially a deal with the devil. The stakes could not be higher. We're not talking about losing some money or losing some lives. We're talking about losing, potentially, a civilization.

I want to drive home this message. We would only need to lose that election once for everything to be changed. All we would need is for one government to come in here on the basis of a fraudulent election, and all our laws are up for grabs. Our freedoms, our wealth, everything we do is up for grabs and can be rearranged in the course of a single term so that we would never again be able to reclaim them. I don't want to get too dramatic, but there are dramatic examples, shocking examples of that sort of thing happening in history. The stakes are high beyond measure.

I think that we need to rein in any change in legislation that would advance us toward a voting system that cannot be physically audited, that cannot be handled in as concrete a way as counting up ballots, Mr. Chairman. I would ask all members here in this Assembly to think long and hard before they choose the easy option of saying: well, it's Internet voting; it'll increase voter turnout. But what's the risk? I think the risk ultimately is of our democratic civilization.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak on Bill 7?

Mr. Hinman: I would just like to commend the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview because it's another area that I also feel very strongly about, and he's been very eloquent in expressing the importance of the physical evidence. This really is a concern to me as well, so I want to speak a little bit on that.

He talked about three key elements here. There is one other one, you know, that is often brought up, that makes me nervous when it comes out. The first one is the traceability. It's absolutely essential in a free and democratic society that we have traceability of the election ballot. The only way that you can have that traceability is with the physical evidence. We need a ballot where one has to actually go in and mark. Perhaps there are some areas where we can make it more efficient, but we have to have the physical ballot that would come out. You know, some places in the States have used a punch machine so that the marks are even, and I can understand some of those areas. But the point is that there's a physical ballot.

The key that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview keeps going back to and what is so key is that it needs to be tamper-proof. Electronic boxes are not tamper-proof. You could even have it set up and someone could go, "Oh, we tried 10 votes," and you could run it through and see the 10 votes, that they were all accurate, and say, "There's nothing wrong with that." But a computer programmer could go, "You know what? We'll let the first 3,000 votes go through as they are, and then we're going to have a little program in there that's going to kick in and distort it so it comes out with the things that we want." Even if we think that we've got it covered and are looking, there isn't that physical evidence, which to me is so, so critical in having the confidence of the people that it's there. So tamper-proof is just incredibly important.

You know, in our democracy when we get up to vote, one of the blessings that we have is that we can get scrutineers in place. Again, what's the value of a scrutineer if there isn't the physical evidence to watch and know what's going on: when someone comes to put in the ballot, to actually watch them put it in and to know that they're not putting in two or three, that they don't have some code whereby they can go in and put in several. There are so many areas.

Again, if we want to look at as the numbers increase that we can say, "But we want to have a quick tally when it's over," I believe there is an electronic way to do that, much like a parking ticket. If you were to mark it and put it through a machine, the scrutineers can watch that as it goes in and comes out and falls into a box, just one has come out, just like a credit card receipt. There it is, and it goes in. It could be electronically calculated, but the physical evidence is still there.

In order to safeguard democracy, to ensure the confidence of the people, that tamper-proof, physical evidence has to be there in order that one can have the confidence and realize, you know, "I'm going to go vote, and I know that it counts," not thinking, "Oh, there's some corrupt way; maybe they're stuffing the ballot," which we often hear of. Again, the scrutineers can be watching to ensure that that's not there.

There are just so many areas where people are frustrated when it comes to democracy. They already say that their vote doesn't matter. We're not addressing those things in this bill. I think there is actually an amendment coming on how we engage Albertans to say: my vote does make a difference.

There are a few areas that I've talked to people about, and I believe I actually shared this last time I was here, with the Member for Edmonton-Riverview. I wasn't successful, but, you know, if at first you don't succeed, try and try again. One of the things that I think Bill 7 – and again it's a bigger scope. If we really want to increase the participation of Albertans so that they think – well, let's use the example of the Green Party, that has now been deregistered. Many people said, "Why should I vote for them? They don't have a hope of getting in." Down in my by-election in Calgary-Glenmore I ran into some supporters of the New Democratic Party, and they just thought, "Well, you know, my vote really doesn't matter." It's important that people feel like their vote counts, and there's nothing in here. But, like I said, I think there's going to be an amendment coming forward saying: "How do we promote democracy? How do we engage Albertans so that it makes a difference?"

If you believe in a philosophy – and there are several different philosophies in this House, out there. If we were to change the dynamics to where it's not arbitrarily decided by Members' Services how much funding a caucus gets for research – when I was in here in 2004, had the average been $5 for every Albertan that voted for a party that got a member in, it was amazing how the research would have worked out. But you look at one party that maybe gets 250,000 voters. They've got some support, yet if they don't get the MLAs in, their research funding is dramatically dropped. If, in fact, we were to engage Albertans and say, "You know, if you vote and a member of that political party gets in, your vote will count for $5 worth of research funding to go to that party," all of a sudden Albertans would say: "You know what? I believe in the Wildrose party. I believe in the Green Party. I believe in the political party of the Progressive Conservatives. So I'm going to vote so that they get extra research money to promote their philosophy and those that I support." Those areas aren't in here, and then it slows it down.

Again, if in fact we were to have electronic voting, it would be one more area where people – again, that discouragement gets in there – think: you know, my vote doesn't count, and I don't have confidence that, in fact, that black box is really accurate, that my vote went in and it showed there. There's absolutely no physical proof after you hit the button that you even voted. You'd have no confidence. So people would get to think: why should I take the time to go down there when I don't trust the system? We really do need to look at how we are going to engage Albertans, how we get them to come out and make them realize that their vote does in fact make a difference. Electronic voting I think would be a discouragement. The doubt would start to step in. It would grow, and it would be just a real problem for Albertans to get out and say that it's worth the effort.

Again, to follow up on the Member for Edmonton-Riverview, you know, the struggle that he talked about – and it's always enjoyable to listen to him talk about history and what's gone on in civilization. The battle has gone on as long as man has been on the Earth that we know, this battle between communities, this battle between people, this battle between good and evil. One of my favourite writers, Frederic Bastiat, who wrote in the early 1800s, wrote a treatise called The Law, and in there what was kind of profound to me is that he talked about that it's human nature that we all want to progress, that we all want to do better, but what's also human nature is that we want to do it in the easiest way possible.

So if, in fact, we don't have the law to protect life, to protect people's property, to protect their freedom – it's terrible to live in those societies where there's anarchy or where there are tribal laws. We have wonderful Canadian soldiers right now trying to give that quality of life to people in Afghanistan and to protect their quality of life and not thinking: some arbitrary ruler from the next town over doesn't like our town, so they're going to wipe us out, or we need to be serfs to that tyrant. Democracy is so profound.

Another one that's often quoted is Alexander Tytler, and I'll just paraphrase him. He said that democracy is doomed to fail. The average democracy only lasts between 200 and 250 years, and at that point the political parties become astute enough to realize that the way to get votes is to promise the most from the public purse to the majority of the people. Eventually with the debt of that country the economy of that country fails, and democracy is lost. It's another area where we need to be very careful. There are areas in South America where the debt is just astronomical, and the struggles that it's put on those people are terrible. [interjection] I mean, it's very important because we want people to get out and vote. The question on Bill 7, which was recommended by the last election officer, is: do we need to do something in order to engage Albertans? Only 40 per cent, 50 per cent are coming out and voting. What's this bill lacking in order to excite Albertans to come out and vote?

Again, if we look back to the birthplace of democracy, which we call Greece, it's in turmoil right now because of the fiscal debt. There are riots. Their quality of life is going to be drastically affected. When the people do not come out and vote, that becomes a problem.

We talked about good and evil, whether it's freedom versus serfdom. You know, do we have prosperity? Those are all important things that we need to look at when we come to the Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2010. What is it that we need to amend that's going to make the next election more engaging for Albertans? As I go through the dozens and dozens of recommendations, those that would really engage Albertans have been left out, that confidence.

Again, going back to the electronic voting, which is in here, I think we need to bring an amendment forward. I thought they were going to bring that so that we could actually come to a vote on this and eliminate it. We just cannot afford to have a trial of something like electronic voting because the problem is that if we have that trial, people will say: "Oh, look. It was successful, so we can go down." Just because it works the first time doesn't mean that with that evil, that desire to have power and control, all of a sudden people will realize: "Ah, now we can do it. We'll let this grow. We'll show that it's successful. It'll move out there." We really do need to remove the electronic voting option in there so that we're not even tempted to go down that route and set ourselves up for failure.

There are so many things that we just need to do here in Bill 7. It's very disappointing to me that we don't have set election dates. At the municipal level we realize the importance of that. It's set. The term is set. People going in know that it's for three years. Those people that want to run in the municipal election this fall know that it's coming up, and they plan. They're making announcements every day, those people that are running, those people that aren't running, and that's critical. Yet the dilemma that Albertans are in right now is: when is the next provincial election? The Premier has said it over and over and over again: oh, it's March 2012. Well, if that's what it is, then pass the regulation, pass the law, and set it for every four years and go forward.

The fact of the matter is that he's being less than fully open with Albertans because what he says is: "Well, I still have my joker, and I'll play it when it works best for us. Retaining power and control is the most critical, and if something was to come up, we need to be able to slap that down on the table and say, 'Wow, here it is.'" For myself, I just see this idea coming out, you know, the feeling or the sentiment of the House that we're going to be dismissed for the break until this fall, and I just have to ask: what is the reason?

I look at the last time they called the snap election, in the spring, when, in fact, he said: we're not going to have one for four years, until the fall. You know, it won't be until November of '08. And what do we have on February 3? He called an election and caught – well, he didn't catch people off guard. But I've mentioned this before, that if at the Olympics we were to say, "Oh, gosh, we've got them up and ready" and tell all of our athletes that we're really going to jump it up six months and we train so that we have peak performance in six months, what advantage do we have over the other athletes to announce to them, "Oh, you've got to come here in 30 days because we're having the Olympics"?

Set election dates are critical, and they're not addressed in this. It was recommended to this government that we have set election dates. Again, you have to ask the question: what are the arguments for not having set election dates? Yes, there are some, but are they good ones? I don't think they carry the weight that we need them to. A lot of people say: "Well, if you have a set election date, that last year is kind of lame. Everybody knows it's coming, and we're just not going to participate, and the government is going to spend a bunch of money.” But people are aware, and they see that. I don’t see that problem in municipal elections. I think it’s fine to have set election dates. We need to address them. If we were to do that, in fact, I think that would raise the confidence of Albertans in the democratic process and why we should be elected.

Once again, I just want to go back to engaging Albertans on why they should vote and the importance of changing the way we fund the parties that are represented here in the House. If, in fact, we were to tell them, “You vote; you have a member get in; they’re going to be supported by you,” like I say, with the numbers that I’ve crunched, $5 for every voter that votes for a party, there would be a reason to get out and vote. Instead, those people say: well, we’re never going to win, so why should I bother voting? Why? Because you’re funding the research that shows people and educates Albertans why this is a better way. Each one of us in here is here because we believe that we can make a difference. We’ve heard from our constituents, from our businesspeople and others that say: “You know, this is a problem that we have here in our society. I’d like to see this changed. How do we do it?” Well, you run for government. You get involved in government and change rules and regulations.

I agree with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre. We need to have a system set up where those people that want to promote the arts are able to and do not have to struggle in the tax system to where there’s no advantage. Why do we pick one business and say, “If, in fact, you’re going to develop the oil sands, we’ll give you a credit to do that,” yet we don’t allow it for the film industry? We don’t allow it for wind or green energy. You see them come crawling to the government, and the government picks and chooses, as they did this last year, and says: “Well, ethanol is the way to go. We’ll give $300 million to ethanol.” You have to ask why.

People run because we think: here’s this wonderful idea on how to improve our democracy, how to improve our safety, how to improve our economy. Yet we don’t excite Albertans with those options with what we currently have here. We just need to somehow reach out and ask the question, “Okay; what is it that we do to promote democracy, to promote the people here in the province?” and say: “You know what? Your vote does make a difference.”

When I went out door-knocking, that was the one thing that I enjoyed the most. I’d ask someone: “Well, do you believe your vote makes a difference? Have you voted in the past?” The ones that would say, “No, it really doesn’t matter who we vote for; once you guys get in there, you’re all the same” got me excited. We could have a debate. “Why do you feel that way?” It inevitably went back to the point that was: “Well, once you’re in there, there’s nothing we can do. You’re no longer accountable in any way or form to me until the next election, whether that’s three years, three and a half, five years. There’s nothing I can do.” So I would tell those people: “Well, no, there is something. You can count on me. I believe in accountability. If you’re not happy with me, if one-third of the constituents sign a petition saying that they’re not happy with what I’m doing, I would step down. I’d allow a by-election.” There’s nothing in this bill for accountability.

Mr. Liepert: How soon?

Mr. Hinman: Always, Mr. Liepert – I apologize – Minister of Energy. I apologize, Mr. Chair. I responded to the heckling; I should have paid attention to the chair.

The Deputy Chair: You’re speaking through the chair.

Mr. Hinman: They’re distracting sometimes. Thank you. It’s always good.

That is one of the other things that I would have done. There are several people in here – the Minister of Energy is one – that I would have gone after and said: “You know what? He’s destroying our health care. Let’s see if we can recall him.” There’s no mechanism, but I believe that his seat would be very vulnerable with what damage he’s done here in the province if, in fact, we had that.

There’s nothing in here to have accountability of elected individuals, Mr. Chair, and we need to put that in here if we want Albertans to be accountable. If, in fact, we have that accountability, all of a sudden people are engaged, and that’s a great blessing for democracy. We need people to be engaged. We need people to believe they can make a difference. If they don’t believe it, they don’t participate.

That’s one of the other things that’s interesting about human nature. To paraphrase Einstein, he said: the definition of insanity is to do the same thing over and over again and expect different results. The people have elected this government over and over. They’ve been expecting different results. There are some new parties out there now that are different, and people are wanting to engage. It’s exciting to them that they have an option now to do something different, and they can vote on that. Is the process set up that’s going to engage them? Bill 7, the Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2010, doesn’t address that. It goes over all kinds of little details. They’re looking at the details.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Yes. Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I rise to propose an amendment, actually.

The Deputy Chair: We have the amendment here, and I’ll have the pages pass it out.

Dr. Taft: Yes. I’ll wait a moment.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. This will be amendment A2. Please proceed.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I think most people have a copy of the amendment. I’m moving for the Member for Calgary-Buffalo that Bill 7, Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2010, be amended in section 12 by striking out the proposed subsection (7).

Now, I’m sure that for those of us who have read this act – and I know it’s a hefty act, and it’s not always the most exciting – I bet many of us have been a bit startled by section (7). In case you haven’t read it, I want to read it into the record. It’s on page 12 of the bill, subsection (7), and it says, “For the purpose of tracing the unauthorized use of the list of electors, the Chief Electoral Officer may have fictitious voter information included in a list of electors provided under this section.” In other words, what we are doing here is authorizing the Chief Electoral Officer to put phony names and information on the voters list.

In principle, of course, I have a lot of trouble with that. I’m just really uneasy with us authorizing an officer of this Legislature to put fictitious information onto the voters list. I think it’s just a bad approach generally, and I also think there must be better ways of checking the accuracy of the voters list and of who has voted and who hasn’t.

I think this is a pretty straightforward amendment. I haven't heard any justification for us authorizing an officer of the Legislature to essentially lie. If there is a justification from a government member, I'd like to hear it because maybe it's a good justification. Otherwise, I think that on principle we should be loath to authorize deceitful ploys by officers of the Legislature, especially when it's something like a voters list. I think we should encourage, instead, the Chief Electoral Officer to find other more straightforward and honest ways to confirm the authorized use and the accuracy of the voters list.

This is really a pretty straightforward issue. I hope somebody from the government rises to speak to this issue, for or against, because I'd be curious to know what the justification for that is. I'd be equally excited if somebody from the government actually spoke in favour of us making this amendment.

With those brief comments, Mr. Chairman, I'll take my seat. Thank you.

5:00

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you. I really appreciate this amendment coming forward. I understand the concerns of the hon. members for Edmonton-Riverview and Calgary-Buffalo, and I'm going to address one of those because I've experienced the problems of not doing this. What I think is important in having this and why we do it: first of all, it is announced so that political parties know that there are fictitious names. I've personally been on lists that I know people are using illegally. The problem is that a lot of people want to get the electoral lists. They want to get their hands on them, and they use them for purposes that are evil, as the Member for Edmonton-Riverview used, or – what would I say? – the integrity isn't there. Voters lists are very valuable in different areas like that. I think what's important on this, though, is that people realize that and say: you know, these names aren't all guaranteed. When someone gets hold of that list or something, we can trace it back and actually charge them for the criminal act of using a voters list illegally.

I see your point and your concern. To me, I would consider it entrapment if, in fact, we weren't made aware that those things were in there, but being aware that they're there, we're only going to use them above board and for the election. There would be nothing wrong if, in fact, you make that call or you do those things. But it's after the election that we have such people, and there are several. You know the problems going on in Calgary with electoral balloting and phony names. If those people that put in for special ballots used one of those phony things, we can attach it and track them. I understand your concern about entrapment, and I agree with that. Entrapment is wrong. But being aware that they're doing that would hopefully only get those people, then, that are using it for less than proper reasons. So I think that there are some valid reasons in doing that.

It's just amazing to me the mining of lists. I just actually got a phone call today on my BlackBerry from a 505 area code. Well, where on earth is 505? Well, this came from a list of a company that I was dealing with that I know they obviously gave out. There's only one company where it came from. I know that when they gave it out, they assured me that that number wouldn't go out. How do we stop that? I mean, we have passed legislation now for demon dialing and those areas and for people being able to get off the list, yet we're still not able to go after these people that are using it for the wrong purposes.

I don't feel that it's entrapment, because we're aware of it. I think that there are some good possibilities with it, but it's always excellent to bring up those ideas. That's what's great about this process, that we can think: "Oh, I've never thought about that. That is a new idea, something that we need to consider." With the 83 members in here there's been a lot of experience, and we as a House want to draw on that experience to ensure that we get the best bill forward and, again, that we protect those people on the list.

I really feel that this adds a level of protection to the voters. I'm still amazed that some of the people actually don't even want to vote because they don't want to be on the list. They say: "No. I know what goes on." So anything that we can do to assure people about being on the voters list. Again, when we fill out our income tax, that's one of the questions they ask: will you allow us to update and put you on the voters list? Again, the reason why they ask that is because of a number of citizens who say: you know, I don't want to be on that list because of the abuse of that list.

I really feel that we need to do our due diligence. We want to make sure these lists aren't abused. I think that this is actually a good section in here that will reduce the abuse and misuse of the list, like I say, those people that want to do it for unscrupulous reasons other than for contacting and engaging people in the democratic process. I must say, you know, that that list is so valuable to try and contact people. When there are missing parts in that list and we're not allowed to use it or that list is less than accurate, it's not as effective as we want. Again, we want to reach out. We want to try and touch every Albertan in one way or another, and having an accurate list is so critical to that.

As much as I appreciate the thought going into this amendment in saying that we should strike subsection (7) from section 12, I'd have to speak against this amendment and think that, no, I want to capture those people that are using these lists for less than democratic purposes.

Again, it's just one of those areas where lists are powerful. They're information now. Just like electronic ballots are bad – we don't have it – having an electronic list and people getting out and using it: I want to catch those perpetrators. I want to exercise the full limit of the law, which perhaps isn't even strict enough in here for misuse of electoral lists. I want to protect the elector. I want to make sure it's there, and if this helps it, awesome. I'm excited about that and want to go there. I hope that perhaps brings up and spurs a little more discussion on this amendment and how and why we should vote for it or against it.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I am in favour of this amendment although I agree that the Member for Calgary-Glenmore raised some good points. This is the issue. I think that we are trying to balance public confidence in the electors list, the integrity of the electors list, and make it a useful tool to help promote democracy, to draw out voters, to mail to them, to call them, et cetera, to get them engaged in the process. The list itself: we really want it to work for us.

Where is it being abused? Well, in a couple of places. I don't think I've actually been in a place where I saw it, but I certainly heard that provincial lists, for example, were used in federal elections or were used in leadership campaigns, and that's inappropriate. You have heard me stand and speak in this House quite a bit that we must only use personal information – and certainly the information on a voters list is valuable information and valuable personal information – for the purpose for which it was collected, not for a secondary use, not for another campaign, not for a leadership campaign. That's one of the places that the electoral list gets abused.

The second part of it, actually, is people's belief in the integrity of that list and in the use of their personal information. The reason that I support this amendment is that I think we need to get at the root causes of how these lists are being jeopardized or misused. What I see in this legislation is that it's treating a symptom, not the disease.

Let me break this down a little bit. I can remember when electors lists used to be posted publicly. In my community it used to be posted on a telephone pole or an electrical pole near the community league building. It was a sheaf of papers, and it was kind of stapled up there. It actually broke information down in such a way that it described whether someone was married or single. It gave that kind of information and, of course, the address where they were living and their full name and, I think, a birth date as well. People who were fairly trusting and, I guess, hadn't learned by experience would give their full name.

At one time we had a single woman living with us in our house, and she duly gave out her full name. So there it was, Alice Brown, and the address indicated she was single and female. My father took one look at that posted up on that telephone pole and went, "Ye gods, that's a dumb thing to do because we've just advertised that there is a single or unattached woman at this address, and that could really cause her some problems." She learned that lesson, I'm sure, and never did it again. She would start to edit the kind of information that she gave out.

A lot of us learned that we can't control where these lists are going. I don't give out my home address to anybody for any reason now. Even though they say, "Oh, this is your home address?" I say, "That's where you can contact me." I won't give a home address because I can't control how they're going to use that information, and that kind of attitude flows through into whether people are giving us information for an electoral list.

We need to be able to reassure people that either the way we collect the information or what the information is will not subject them to unpleasantness or danger or difficulty, which is important. We have to try and safeguard against the list being used in ways that the information was not collected for. I see that as the problem, but I think that what the act does in section 12(7) is create another whole problem.

I know that my hon. colleagues opposite go into election campaigns with just buckets of money, and I'm sure that's a very nice experience. I can tell you that those in my caucus and in my party that have run for political office don't go into election campaigns with buckets of money, but they do often go in with a lot of volunteers. We work the electoral lists hard over and over again. You know, you've got to talk to people. So if we end up with an electoral list that now has fictitious people seeded into it, how much time am I going to spend in an election campaign with my volunteers desperately trying to search out Sue Higgins, who is a fictitious name? We will keep trying because in my constituency people move around a lot. Sue Higgins is probably in Edmonton-Centre still, but she has moved maybe twice, maybe three times.

You know, still, 50 per cent of my constituents will not be there at the next election. Anyone who was there and voting in March of 2008 will not be in the same location in March of 2012. They will be either out of the riding or in a different place in the riding. So our campaign works those lists hard. We keep looking. We will keep trying to find our fictitious Sue Higgins because, you know, there are only so many people that we can entice out to participate in the democratic process in Edmonton-Centre. They're pretty valuable to us, and we'll keep looking. To my campaign that's cruel punishment, to make somebody keep looking for a trick that's in there to try and stop me from doing something I wouldn't do anyway.

I know those lists aren't supposed to go anywhere else, and I will protect them because I believe in that. I have spoken so often in this House that we are only hurting ourselves when we wink and look the other way and allow people's personal information to be used for a purpose beyond that for which it was collected, and this is a perfect example of why you don't let that stuff happen. But as my colleague said, evil happens. I think there's a shorter version of that or slightly different words with a more colloquial expression that starts with an "s," but essentially things go wrong. People disobey because it's easy and convenient.

I cannot believe that this is an effective way to stop that. I mean, it doesn't stop it. It doesn't stop people from taking that paper copy and walking out of a provincial campaign office, putting it in a file folder and taking it out and walking it across the street to a federal campaign office. It doesn't stop them from doing that. Supposedly, you know, if Sue Higgins turned up on some federal campaign list, it could then be tracked back to my campaign. But then what? Who was the person that walked it across? That would be very difficult to be able to track, given the number of volunteers we're working with. So, you know, I'm putting up 30 people that are all now going to have a suspicion cast upon them because they might have handled that voters list where this fictitious name has been seeded into it.

One, it takes a lot of extra effort from our volunteers, and we don't have a lot of volunteers. Now, you know, maybe this is a strategy from government because they've got a lot of money and they can pay people. Well, opposition members, I think, for the most part don't have a lot of money and don't have a lot of volunteers, and maybe this is meant to make it harder on us. I don't know. I don't think that addresses our problem with lists being used for things they shouldn't have been used for. Putting a phony name in there doesn't stop the thing from going wrong in the first place. Supposedly it's a way of tracking it back, but as I've just pointed out, you don't actually track it back. You track it back to a whole bunch of people. What are you going to do? Lay charges against all of them? I don't see how this is going to be effective.

The second one is that people won't co-operate. They won't give us information and they won't give us a good electoral list if they don't trust what we're going to do with the information. Again, I don't see how seeding phony names into an electoral list that's distributed to provincial campaigns is going to help us convince people of the integrity of that list and that we will protect it on their behalf. It does nothing to address the original problem there, which is that lack of trust.

I think those things need to be addressed in other ways, not in some weird, after-the-fact action which in and of itself creates a whole other problem, and that's the problem I've outlined, that campaigns try to find these fictitious people and keep pursuing them.

That's why I encouraged my colleagues to bring that particular amendment forward. I heard the arguments that the Member for Calgary-Glenmore raised around this, and I think a lot of what he said is valid. But, again, it doesn't address the problem. It just deals with it after the fact, and I think it deals with it in a bad way.

Actually, when I first got this act way back when and started going through it — you can see all my sticky notes and little notes beside it. When I actually get to this section, what I've written in the side is: "This is stupid. Has it been tested?" I'm sorry; it is. I mean no disrespect to whoever came up with this — and I haven't been able to find it mentioned in the recommendations from the previous Chief Electoral Officer — but I think it is stupid. I think it's going to cause a lot of work for people that are just well-meaning volunteers, and it's not going to address the problems that it was put in there to address. It doesn't actually target the source of the problems.

Thus, I am supporting the amendment that's in front of us, and I appreciate the opportunity to outline why I'm supporting it.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I listened to the hon. member's comments with interest. The first thing I would like to say and I would like to remind members of this House is that our fundamental approach to the amendments to this legislation was to consult with the Chief Electoral Officer and the former Chief Electoral Officer, who are experts at running the administration of elections. What the Chief Electoral Officer told us was that this was a step that would assist the office of the Chief Electoral Officer to manage the control of the lists. It has been used in British Columbia. They have consulted with other systems which have used this and found it to be effective. What the original amendment in this legislation is trying to address is not necessarily the manual management of a particular name or address but the wholesale selling or distribution of lists electronically.

Now, I'd like to just think for a moment about one of the things that the hon. member talks about very passionately, which is controlling personal information, and you did refer to this in your comments. I think that that is the fundamental principle of what we are trying to do. The first thing that the Chief Electoral Officer wants to do is to ensure that these lists are not a commercial commodity. We would be very concerned, as would the Chief Electoral Officer and I think every member of this House, if we found that for some reason someone who was able to obtain a list because they were somehow involved in a political process as a registered candidate did something with that list like sell it to a magazine subscription company. That's the picture of what this is trying to address.

Now, there's no doubt that as we look at how campaigns are run and how elections are managed, there are a number of volunteers. I think that most people in this House and most political candidates would celebrate the fact that they have well-meaning and solid and trustworthy volunteers. Although there is a possibility that some of the scenarios that have been referred to could happen, I would just like to advise the House that, in our discussions with the Chief Electoral Officer, the recommendation of both the current Chief Electoral Officer and the former Chief Electoral Officer was that they have found, in consulting with professionals that manage elections across the country, that this is an effective approach to ensure that the integrity of the list is protected and that there are ways to track the list back to the campaign who has received the list. I think that's the fundamental principle behind the amendment.

Now, some of the things that have been referred to are certainly pieces that could go wrong. There's no doubt about that. I know that when we're in this House and we're talking about legislation and different scenarios, one of the things that we all like to do is to sort of chase the logical path of activity that could lead to that scenario which is the most unlikely but still possible. However, we as a government agreed to include this amendment because we believe that it gives some further confidence to the process by having people know that the office of the Chief Electoral Officer is actually able to trace those lists back to sources.

Therefore, I would urge the House to oppose this amendment. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to have an opportunity to participate in the debate on this amendment to Bill 7. Certainly, Bill 7, as it winds its way through this Assembly, needs to be changed. When I first had a look at this bill regarding specifically this section, and we're dealing with the unauthorized use of the list of electors, I wrote: how will this work?

I certainly can understand where the hon. Minister of Justice is coming from with her explanation. I was looking for examples of unauthorized use: certainly, the idea or the notion or the proposal that a complete or a partial electoral list could be sold to a magazine distributor or any number of other data banks, whether they're in this province or country or held somewhere overseas. Voter information should not – and I acknowledge that – be used in any way. Has it been in the past? I suspect so. Is this the best way of dealing with these violations or these unauthorized distributions of complete or partial electoral lists? I don't know. But to have the Chief Electoral Officer put fictitious voter information on a list seems quite unusual and seems a different way of trying to solve the problem.

Now, perhaps in the course of debate the hon. Minister of Justice could tell me and tell everyone in the House: would there be different lists or different fictitious voter information included in a list of electors that's given to a respective political party? Would each political party get a different list? Would different constituencies? I'll use my own as an example. In the next election in the information that's provided to the Wildrose Alliance campaign team, would there be a John Doe and a Jane Doe and a Jack Smith on that list, and would there be a Peter Brown . . .

An Hon. Member: A Hugh MacDonald?

Mr. MacDonald: There would be one, hopefully, on the list. Not two, like there was the last time, hon. minister.

But you know what I mean. Is that how the Chief Electoral Officer is going to trace this to see which respective political party has been given the complete list? If it shows up in Australia or in New York City or in Toronto in a data bank for an unauthorized use, is that how I'm to understand that this section would work so that the Chief Electoral Officer or his officials can identify specifically which party in which constituency sold or distributed that information in an unauthorized manner?

I'll cede the floor if the hon. member would like to respond to that. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. We've had extensive discussions over months with the Chief Electoral Officer. Although I have not had that personal conversation with the Chief Electoral Officer, my understanding is that in terms of the administration of the lists and of the office and the list system that he is prepared to compile with this amendment, there are protocols that have been used in other provinces and other jurisdictions that do apply that principle. Now, whether or not your specific example is exactly the way that that principle would be applied, I can't speak to the detail of that. But it does speak to that.

It's not simply a matter of being able to identify that the name came off an electors list but to actually be able to manage the source of the original list. That's the intent. In fact, I'm not sure that if we were to pursue this further, the Chief Electoral Officer would necessarily want to provide a tremendous amount of detail with respect to exactly what the security features would be since that would then possibly allow people who were trying to circumvent the security features to do so. But it is our understanding that that is the intention, that is the protocol, and that is the way that this has been applied in other jurisdictions.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate that from the hon. member.

Certainly, whenever we compare the past to the present, we think that in the past the electoral list for a poll or a division would be displayed somewhere publicly for all to see. The information would be gathered during the enumeration and displayed in the period leading up to the election. With the information that would be available in the past, certainly times have changed, and I think they've changed for the better. The information that would be posted would be personal information, in my view. Marital status, occupation, whatever: it would be listed there. Certainly, with the new voters lists and now that we live in the electronic age, there is more individual privacy.

That being said, I still can't understand why this section is necessary. We look at the Chief Electoral Officer, the gentleman that's occupying the position at this time. There was a reluctance in the past, in my view, Mr. Chairman, to enforce the act to start with. I'm disappointed to have to say that, but certainly there was, in my view, a reluctance. I'm going to mention specifically cases of improper reporting or recording, and I'll use the Progressive Conservative Party's foundation fund. I brought that to the attention of the office. Nothing was done. Absolutely nothing was done. After the last election I was disappointed. I brought forward some information regarding polling and activities at a mobile polling station and the use of—or in this case the voters list wasn't used. So all the information that we're talking about here wasn't used in the conduct of the mobile poll.

5:30

I don't have any confidence whatsoever in the Chief Electoral Officer or in Elections Alberta to enforce the act and also the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act. So it has to be proven to me, Mr. Chairman, that there will be a new attitude at Elections Alberta. Certainly, whenever I've brought up these issues, I was audited. A random audit. I don't know if you or your constituency was audited, but I stood up and spoke out, and suddenly I got a registered letter: you are being audited. I had nothing to hide, and that was proven in the audit.

The Minister of Energy is shaking his head over there, so I can only assume that he was not audited. Is that correct?

Mr. Liepert: I have no idea. I couldn't care less.

Mr. MacDonald: He has no idea, and he couldn't care less. Okay.

Well, I will certainly continue with my remarks on this amendment, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate this amendment from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview because regardless of the detail of this bill we look at issues around permanent, unique identifier numbers. We look at this idea that we need to have fictitious voter information included in the list of electors provided under this section. There are a lot of questions. There certainly are a lot of questions about this entire act, but this amendment specifically deals with this section. I support, I appreciate the hon. member's response, but I don't think that this is the proper way to deal with the unauthorized use of the list of electors. I think there are better ways of doing this without going—this could be a witch hunt. I'm not convinced that—and I'm sorry—all political parties will be treated the same.

Mr. Liepert: It's the bogeyman.

Mr. MacDonald: No, it's not, hon. member. It's not like that.

An Hon. Member: Just trust us.

Mr. MacDonald: Just trust us? Yes. I've been around the block once or twice, and that's not going to happen, hon. member. No. Elections have to be run fairly, and each and every party and each and every constituency and each and every voter in those constituencies must be treated fairly.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I will cede the floor to another hon. colleague. But please, hon. members, consider supporting the amendment as proposed by my colleague from Edmonton-Riverview because it certainly answers the question that I had: how will this section work? In my view it doesn't, and if we amend this and strike out the proposed subsection (7), I think that we're doing everyone in this province a good deed.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: On amendment A2. The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. There has been some certainly interesting discussion on this, and it has brought up some more questions. I think that seeing as how we're having amendments to the electoral statutes, it's kind of interesting to me to hear the Minister of Justice talk about the Chief Electoral Officer and the past Chief Electoral Officer and the experts that they are, which I don't doubt at all that they are experts. But it's interesting that we had 183 recommendations and so many weren't adopted, yet this is one that was, so all of a sudden we should accept it at face value.

There is a disagreement. I do agree with the Minister of Justice on the importance of protecting the integrity of this list. One of the questions that I'd have to ask the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre is—again, I very much agree with her in the fact that we always need to get to the root of the problem—how do we solve it? Because too often we do put things in there that really don't solve the problem. We wouldn't agree on this, but the gun registry hasn't solved the problem of illegal use of guns. So here we're on the other side. Again, registering or licensing bulletproof vests to say, "Oh, now we've registered bulletproof vests, and we're going to be able to squash the gang problem" I don't believe really addresses the problem of gang activity.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, we're speaking to amendment A2. Amendment A2.

Mr. Hinman: Yes. Thank you. We'll bring it back in. My question is: is there a solution for fraudulent use of the voters list that's better than this one? I am very concerned. I said that I've seen this fraudulent use of it happen in the past.

I have another question for the Minister of Justice. Okay, I have a lot of volunteers that have helped me as well. I'm not always there at their computers. Everybody signs a little document saying: I will not use this document for improper uses. But what happens if someone takes one from my campaign and goes out and uses it, and they trace it back and say that the Member for Calgary-Glenmore has illegally used this list? Who is actually accountable, then?

Ms Blakeman: You've got to ask her.

Mr. Hinman: Well, I've directed that towards the Minister of Justice, and I hope that she'll clarify that before we vote on this amendment so that we'll know what it is.

Also, I have to admit not knowing everything. What does the actual act provide? What is the penalty if, in fact, you are caught illegally using this? Again, is it the actual possession? I mean, I met an individual the other day who unbeknownst to her received one of these phony hundred dollar bills and went to use it and was denied. She had to pay the price. She didn't know who she got it from.

Again, my concern with this list. Like I say, I agree, but I want to make sure the checkpoints are on this fraudulent use of electronic lists or even whether they have the paper one that they print off and take. What is the penalty, and who would actually be held accountable? Does it go back to the actual member who's running? Is it the person who has the list illegally, or do they have to provide where they got the list from? We want to know where the accountability is actually going to be held ultimately. If that's not in there to protect those people that haven't used it illegally, is that a concern? You know, it's something that's kind of interesting to me.

Another analogy that I look at is if, in fact, you loan your car to someone else, it's your insurance; you're accountable. So if you loan your car, you've got to be careful. Again, because I was the owner and signed for that list and someone else is volunteering and using it – if they voluntarily use your car and go and get in an accident, to me it should be their insurance that would be held accountable, not you.

Some clarification by the Minister of Justice would be wonderful on this to know what is the penalty, who is ultimately held accountable for this so that we could make an informed decision on whether we should vote for this amendment or whether we should allow the bill to go through in the current state and, like I say, hopefully add to the security of that list.

Once again, to both the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar and also the Member for Edmonton-Centre: do you have any other ideas on how to provide assurance to the electorate that have put their names on the list that there isn't abuse of that list? If so, I would really love to hear it because I think that, again, we should look at an amendment, then, or something to come forward because we want to do it right.

The government says that they want to do it right, so let's continue this discussion and see: well, what do we do to protect the integrity of that voters list? What do we do to protect the candidate from not being held accountable because of someone else who has maybe infiltrated as a volunteer for less than good purposes to try and slander, perhaps, the campaign team and use it to say, "Ah, this team, look at what they've done," when, in fact, we don't know which volunteer took it? Does the Member for Edmonton-Centre or Edmonton-Gold Bar have any ideas on how we could and should protect the integrity of that list?

Ms Blakeman: I don't actually know of specific examples mostly because I just don't have the resources to get that kind of information for you. I have attended two of the COGEL conferences in order to soak up information like what you are seeking, what are the success stories across Canada and the United States, which are, obviously, the closest ones to what we're looking at.

I think the personal information one continues to evolve as people end up having bad experiences with prohibited use or unexpected uses of their personal information. They are reluctant now to give us full information or to give us unadulterated information. So they change something in their name so that they can tell what, you know, list it came off, literally. It's the same sort of scheme as what's being described here.

I think there are two things to that. One is continuing education of people not giving out personal information as easily as they do now and to be much more careful about it and understand what's important. I would argue that the democratic process is pretty important and the electors list is a good place to have information.

Two, I think we need to be really testing what kinds of information we collect in order to have vibrant, vigorous electors lists. I know one of the problems that we've had across the country when people say, you know: "Why do you guys keep enumerating? Why can't you all share a list? Why isn't there a permanent voters list?" Well, there have been a number of attempts to do that, actually, but each level of government collects information in a slightly different way. For anyone that's ever spent too many long nights trying to make databases go together, it has to be the same. If one group has collected information that includes gender on it, when you put it with the other one that doesn't, you end up with gobbledygook. You have to collect the information and input it in the same way to make those databases work back and forth.

I think that is something that various levels of electoral officers are trying to achieve municipally, provincially, and federally, so eventually we should end up with a sort of living permanent electors lists. But we have to figure out who needs information, in what way, and why because governments use electors lists for purposes beyond elections as well. That still has to be worked out.

Frankly, I think in a number of cases we underresource the chief electoral officer to be able to do that kind of work. When we get budgets brought before us as the Legislative Offices Committee and we restrict – you know, I think this year it was an arbitrary 2 per cent or something. Everybody was limited to that. Those were sort of the instructions that had been given to the government members that were on that committee. Sure enough, they brought forward a motion in every case and said: this is what we're going to restrict the budget increase to. It does not anticipate this kind of need for ongoing work and for the funding of that, and I disagreed with the government's just doing a blanket hold the line on that budget as a result.

The protection of privacy is a longer one. I don't know how you stop the list from being electronically – unless there's some kind of an electronic watermark. Without injecting fictitious information, is there not another way to do an electronic watermark? Which is also what you could do on paper. For example, that's how you work with money. You know, you can test it to make sure that it's the real thing. I mean, clearly, the government is not worried about paper versions of this getting out. They're worried about electronic versions, which is a lot easier. Overall what we're looking to do is trying to stop human deviousness, humans deliberately disobeying the instructions and doing something they're not supposed to do with the list. I'm sure there are lots of criminologists and lots of jurisprudence that would like to deal with that one.

I don't think this is the way. I think it's going to cause a lot of work for innocent campaigns that they didn't need to do. If there is another way to mark those lists beyond inserting fictitious names, I think that's the way to do it. I think they've caused as much grief as they're going to solve with this particular solution.

Thanks.

The Deputy Chair: Do any other members wish to speak on A2? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Certainly on A2, Mr. Chairman. I was listening to the comments from the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, and I can certainly understand where the hon. member is coming from. I remember campaigning when he was very success ful in the by-election, and in any campaign that was operating there, it is possible a volunteer – I'll use that as an example – could make a mistake. In that information on the voters list, if we had this bill as the statute from which we conducted the election, there could be fictitious voter information on the list and only on the Wildrose Alliance list. A campaign volunteer could make a mistake, or the campaign headquarter's computer could be hacked. Then what would happen?

I was looking through the act to see what would happen. Is it possible that someone could argue an election result should be overturned? Or could a successful candidate who is not, let's say, a government member or a Progressive Conservative Party member be somehow burdened with defending themselves in the courts because for whatever reason the government didn't want to live by the result? Now, I'm not saying that this would happen, but it's an example.

Another example that I would like to bring up, Mr. Chairman, is the whole issue of demon dialers. What happens if any political party – and many do; I don't. I don't appreciate getting calls at my house from the demon dialers at election time regardless of which campaign it is. There are some things in this world that I will not accept, and demon dialers are one of them.

An Hon. Member: What's your phone number?

Mr. MacDonald: My phone number is in the book, hon. member. You can look it up. You seem to have a lot of time over there. I know the phone book is fine print, but you're young. [interjection] He's distracting me, Mr. Chairman, and I apologize.

Now, the demon dialers. I believe the Wildrose Alliance Party used the demon dialer, particularly in the last week of the campaign there. I know they did. Oddly enough, it wasn't the Conservatives that were the target of their demon dialer; it was us because the Conservatives were, essentially, out of the race by that time. Let's say that any political party or any campaign – and I assume we have to give the voters list to the company that owns the demon dialer operation. What happens when or if – hopefully, it wouldn't happen – the demon dialer then sells that information to a marketing outfit or, the example that was used earlier, a magazine distribution company?

What happens in the case of that information being provided in good faith to a third party; in this case, the operators of an outfit that conducts phone calls, 30-second to one-minute long messages, to each household? Or if we carry on with the practice of putting e-mails on the voters list, which I object to – hopefully, we're going to get a chance to discuss the whole issue of e-mail and how it should or should not be used on the voters list. Hopefully, we'll get a chance after we finish with amendment A2, Mr. Chairman.

But specifically with the demon dialers, if anyone across the floor or if anyone in the Wildrose Alliance caucus has any suggestions as to how we would deal with this matter, as I explained it, if Bill 7 was to be the law of the province. Who is responsible for the conduct of the demon dialer? I would certainly like an answer to that question before we have a vote, Mr. Chairman, on this amendment.

Now, when we talk about the information that could or should be provided on a fictitious voter information list, would that or could that include an e-mail address? E-mail is a very convenient way of having voter contact with a significant number of constituents at once. I have always wondered, Mr. Chairman – and I know different members do it differently, and different political parties do it differently. The information that is provided and the information that we collect during the course of a term, particularly e-mails: hopefully, they would never be used during an election. They are collected routinely in the course of our business, and certainly we collect lots of e-mail addresses from constituents. I'm hoping that sometime after we conclude our debate on amendment A2, we will deal specifically with this issue.

This is an enforcement issue. I think we should deal with it. Just as if there was to be a violation of section 12(7) if we were to leave it in, what exactly would happen, Mr. Chairman? Is there a small, modest fine for a violation? Is there a threat that a member could see the election result overturned? I don't know. I've tried to follow this through the act. I think that's a valid question. But if we were to remove that section, as suggested by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, then we wouldn't have to worry about it.

I do have concerns, as I said earlier, about election results being overturned. We only have to think of Edmonton-Castle Downs in the 2004 election. I'm still not satisfied with that result. I've had an opportunity to look at some of that polling data . . .

Ms Blakeman: Neither am I.

Mr. MacDonald: You're not satisfied either?

Ms Blakeman: No.

Mr. MacDonald: No? That was quite a little ordeal in Canadian elections history. I think that in another few years historians will have a look at that election and the conduct of that vote.

Anyway, Mr. Chairman, I don't want to be chastised by the chair. We are dealing with amendment A2, and we are dealing with the issues that the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore was talking about; that is, in the case of a campaign volunteer, regardless of which party, making a mistake or if a computer is compromised and the information is taken. Or what happens in the case of the third-party demon dialer who gets the information in a sincere way from a campaign and distributes or broadcasts the information for a profit?

If we could have answers to those questions . . .

The Deputy Chair: I hesitate to interrupt, but under Standing Order 4(3) the committee will now rise and report.

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bills with some amendments: Pr. 2 and Pr. 3. The committee also reports progress on Bill 7. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: All those members of the Assembly who concur with the report, please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed, please say no. So ordered.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that the House now stand adjourned until 1:30 tomorrow afternoon.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:56 p.m. to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. In our mind's eye let us see the awesome grandeur of the Rockies, the denseness of our forests, the fertility of our farmland, the splendour of our rivers, the richness of our resources, the energy of our people. Then let us rededicate ourselves as wise stewards of such bounty on behalf of all Albertans. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Hon. members, I am pleased to introduce to you today officers of the Salvation Army in Alberta. These men and women represent the front-line leadership of an organization that has given unstinting care, compassion, and spiritual guidance in Alberta since 1883. Their commitment is underpinned by a deep and abiding faith, yet they serve all with utter and absolute dispassion and complete inclusion regardless of religion, creed, or ethnic background. Over the years the Salvation Army has supported individual members, events here at the Legislature and in constituencies across our province, and, indeed, rendered assistance beyond our borders. We are grateful to them for all that they do for those in need.

I'll ask them to please rise as I call out their names, and the recognition should be given after I introduce all. In the Speaker's gallery today: Major Fred Waters, divisional commander for Alberta & Northern Territories; Major Wendy Waters, divisional director of women's ministries and area commander for Alberta & Northern Territories; Major Sandra Stokes, area commander, Alberta & Northern Territories; Major Roy Langer, divisional emergency disaster services director; Captain Pam Goodyear, divisional secretary for public relations and development; Captain Bram Pearce, divisional youth secretary; Captain Gordon Taylor, corps officer and community services director from Grande Prairie; Captain Randy Hale, corps officer and community services director from Fort McMurray; Captain Mark Stanley, executive director of the Salvation Army's Addictions and Residential Centre here in Edmonton; Major Brian Beveridge, corps officer and community services director from Lethbridge; Major Edith Beveridge, corps officer and community services director from Lethbridge; Ms Karen Livick, chief operating officer for Salvation Army community services from Calgary; Mrs. Karen Diaper, communications co-ordinator and government relations liaison; Mr. David Dickinson, executive director, Salvation Army community and family services organization here in Edmonton; Mrs. Louise Charach, Edmonton Citizens Advisory Board chairman.

Seated in the public gallery are members of the Salvation Army advisory board: Mr. Don Dixon, Mr. Tom Dixon, Mr. James Tingley, Mr. Don Jones, Ms Emmy Mills, Ms Joan Rossall. If they would rise as well, please.

Also in the public gallery are hard-working staff of the Salvation Army: Major Sandy Langer, Major Bev Call, Mrs. Darlene Burton, Major Harold Aitkenhead, Major Christine Aitkenhead, Mrs. Karen Coley, and Ms Brandie Howey.

I'd like all of our guests to rise and receive the warm welcome of our distinguished members of the Alberta Legislature.

The hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a great group of visitors from Alexander First Nation in my constituency. They are representing Alexander skills link, which is a great tie to the future of this province and to the future of aboriginal peoples. They are accompanied by group leaders Ms Sarah Catley, Mr. Colby Arcand, Mrs. Marsha Arcand, and Mrs. Dale Morin. They are, I believe, seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, once in a very long while you find a staff member who not only does their job efficiently and has a smile for everyone but also becomes a friend. I've been very fortunate in finding just such a person. I'd like to take this opportunity to introduce a dedicated member of my office, Ms Deb Young. Deb has been a valued member of this government for nearly 30 years. Deb followed in her mother's and father's footsteps: Allie Dancey, who worked for the departments of Transportation and Agriculture, and Fred Dancey, who worked with the department of Treasury. Deb has been a valued member of my Legislature office team since I was appointed minister. I know that many members in the Assembly know Deb, and I know that they will join me today in wishing her the very best as she has announced that she will be retiring from government. I want to take a moment to recognize Deb's efforts on behalf of not only myself but the government of Alberta for the past 30 years. Every day Deb has demonstrated wisdom, strength, dedication, and commitment. I know that our office will not be the same without her, and we will miss her. Deb is seated in the members' gallery. I'd ask Deb to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a smart and talented young constituent and her family. Kaitlyn Graham was the recipient of the ATCO Olympic challenge award. Alberta students from grades 4 to 12 were invited to submit a composition in their own words on how they will pursue leadership and strive for excellence in sports, arts, culture, education, or community involvement. Two of the award recipients went to the Olympics, but Kaitlyn won the best prize, a laptop computer. In her future she plans to be an animal doctor, a veterinarian. After that, I've asked her to consider a career in politics, so she plans to join me in my constituency office to be a junior MLA on some Fridays to see what we do in our jobs. Kaitlyn is joined here today by her family: her father, Garnet; her mother, Sharon; and her brother, Kelton. They're seated in the members' gallery above, and I would ask them to now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour and privilege to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly very special representatives from the League of Ukrainian Canadians, Edmonton branch, and the League of Ukrainian Canadian Women, Edmonton branch. As indicated earlier this week in my private member's statement, these two organizations are commemorating the 60th anniversary for the League of Ukrainian Canadians and the 55th anniversary for the League of Ukrainian Canadian Women, Edmonton branches. There is no denying that the dedication, commitment, and numerous achievements gained by these two organizations over the decades were and will remain very extraordinarily meaningful. My heartfelt thanks and appreciation to all those individuals from the past, present, and into the future who have truly made a difference for the Ukrainians and the Ukrainian community within Edmonton, our province, and across the globe.

I would now ask my guests, who are seated in the members' gallery, that as I mention your name, please remain standing. Representing the League of Ukrainian Canadians, Edmonton branch, are Jaroslaw Szewczuk, past president and political and educational co-ordinator; Hryhoriy Procki, original organization member; Stefan Romaniuk, original organization member; Orest Cyncar, original organization member. An individual, Mr. Peter Dackiw, who has served 21 years as president of LUC, could not join us today, but special recognition for him is well deserved today. Representing the League of Ukrainian Canadian Women, Edmonton branch, we have Ivanna Szewczuk, president; Natalia Talanchuk, vice-president, president for 18 years, and original organization member; Vera Kindzersky, treasurer; and Lidia Simcisin, board member.

I would ask that the Assembly please join me in giving the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour for me to rise today and introduce to you and through you two good friends from the United Cabbies Association of Edmonton and constituents of Edmonton-Ellerslie, seated in the members' gallery, beginning with Balraj Manhas, who is the president of the association. Joining him is Gurdip Waraich. They are here today to talk to a number of our colleagues about issues with the cabbie association. I'd like them both to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. For my second introduction, once again it's an honour and privilege for me to rise to introduce to you and through you a good friend, Mr. Avtar Kang, from the constituency of Edmonton-Ellerslie. Joining him today are two individuals. Visiting the first time in Edmonton from India are Mr. Prem Singh Aujla and Mr. Hari Singh Aujla. I would ask my guests to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two people from the Realtors Community Foundation: Mr. Curtis Stasiuk, the president of the organization, and my good friend, constituent, and co-conspirator, Ms Jill Didow, the executive director. The Alberta Realtors Community Foundation donated $394,000 to a wide variety of lesser known organizations last year. This money was largely raised as a result of the contributions and efforts of some 3,200 Alberta realtors. They are a largely unsung organization. I don't see them in the members' gallery; they must be in the public. I would ask them to now rise and receive the traditional greeting of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and to all members of the Assembly a few guests from the seventh floor of the Leg. Annex: my leg. assistant,

Marshall Thiessen; another leg. assistant, Tracy Arnell, who works very hard for the members for Grande Prairie-Wapiti and also Red Deer-South; and a very special guest visiting the hon. Member for Red Deer-South, Monty the bear from Red Deer Sunrise Rotary. Monty is up here today enjoying a tour of the Legislature and spending time with his MLA. I would ask that they all rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Calgary Chinatown Centenary

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Starting this summer, Calgary Chinatown will start to celebrate its centenary. Chinese immigration to Canada began in the mid-1800s. Many came to work on the unnerving western leg of the Canadian Pacific railway and started settling in Calgary once the tracks were finished. The first Chinatown was on the eastern edge of town, close to the railroad track. The second one was near 10th Avenue and 1st Street S.W. as the community grew in size. Then the community was evicted when property values surged in the area about a decade later. These families had to find a new location as they were not welcome to live in other established communities. Like many other parts of Canada at that time, Chinese faced severe discrimination and violence. The third, the current Chinatown, was established in 1910 at the north end of the current Centre Street Bridge.

While today's Chinatown continues to serve its role as a social enclave, especially for newcomers and seniors, it is also a focal point for cultural experiences for Albertans of all backgrounds. Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to say that both the city of Calgary and members of over 25 Chinese organizations are actively preparing a growing list of celebrations and festivities that is as diverse as the people who embrace Chinatown as part of their community. The city of Calgary will invest a total of half a million dollars to support Chinatown's beautification; exhibitions, including a digital commemorative project on the Chinese community; a youth engagement initiative; and an expanded Chinatown Street Festival. Other initiatives include the Chinatown historical buildings restoration project and a wide array of cultural programs and probably a banquet or two or three.

Mr. Speaker, I believe many hon. members in this House would agree that we are fortunate to witness this significant milestone for Chinatown, and I encourage all members to try to take in a few events in the months to come.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Government Accountability

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. These are dark days for accountability and transparency in Alberta. It's incredibly sad that a Premier who once claimed to believe in those ideals has flip-flopped so completely, serving his own personal agenda at the expense of truth, clarity, openness, and fairness to the people of Alberta. The actions of this administration have served to draw a dark curtain over government, hiding the actions of an administration that has lost the trust of Albertans.

Yesterday the Auditor General delivered his latest report, a report that this administration tried to bury with a good-news story about distracted driving legislation. The Tories have been trying to silence the Auditor General for months. They've ignored hundreds of recommendations; publicly chastised the Auditor General for speaking out; restricted the office's budget, causing the deferment or cancellation of a number of important audits, including occupational health and safety and water quality; and distributed in this House a paper by top Tory Ron Hicks that calls on the government to severely curb the powers of the Auditor General.

Yesterday the deputy chair of the Public Accounts Committee, the Tory Member for Calgary-Lougheed, was granted veto power over the chair's actions, neutering the entire purpose of that committee, whose mandate is to oversee government spending and ensure that public dollars are being used responsibly and in the public interest. Of course, the chair is an Alberta Liberal who tries to hold the government accountable. Yesterday in question period the Premier claimed not to know what went on in Public Accounts, a claim I frankly find unbelievable. I believe that Tory members of the Public Accounts Committee were directed by the Premier to give the deputy chair his new veto power in a deliberate attempt to silence a prominent source of aggravation to the ruling party. Predictably, our call for an emergency debate was dismissed.

Mr. Speaker, these Third World, banana republic tactics are a farce. They shame Alberta. Even former Tory MP John Williams called this administration's restrictions on Public Accounts, quote, shocking, and that was before this latest move.

I'd like to close by thanking the Alberta bloggers who are following the story. They are proving themselves to be a valuable addition to the fourth estate, showing as always . . . [Dr. Swann's speaking time expired]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka. In calling on the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, may I also wish him happy, happy birthday on his anniversary.

Lacombe Ford Atom A Rockets Lacombe Curb-Ease Pee Wee A Rockets

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hockey season in Lacombe concluded with outstanding results for two highly successful teams, the Lacombe Ford atom A Rockets and the Lacombe Curb-Ease pee wee A Rockets. Both won provincial titles and returned home with gold victory medals. After winning the zone 4 banner for the second year in a row, the Lacombe Ford atom A Rockets are the first Lacombe A atom team to win gold in provincials. They were undefeated in regular season and in playoffs and won provincials 5 to 1 in a hard-fought game against Taber.

The atom A team roster were players Justin Verveda, Dayton Playford, Chase Broderson, Elijah Funkhouser, Tyson Maris, Levi Glasman, Isaac Kingma, Tyler Masko, Matty Parton, Beaudon Rider, my next door neighbour Bradley Hellofs, Justin Paarup, Matthew Stegmaier, Jarrett Brandon, Eric Pecharsky, and Jordan Gill. Their coaches, and their parents, are Troy Rider, Darin Gill, Shawn Playford, Steve Parton, Kevin Broderson, and manager Greg Pecharsky.

The Lacombe Curb-Ease pee wee A Rockets also took home a provincial championship and unforgettable memories, winning the gold medal game 9 to 1 against Wainwright. Lacombe pee wee A Rockets team roster is Travis Verveda, Spencer Otto, Jesse Richardson, Kacey Straub, Zach Knight, Ty Wagar, Ty Glasman, David Luymes, Shae Reynolds, Colby Sissons, T.J. Brown, Cole Leggett Tyler Bell, and Tony Kozak. Their coaches are Allen Brown, Ralph Bell, Dean Otto, Shawn Wagar, and manager Mike Kozak.

Please join me in giving a great round of applause to these dedicated and prepared athletes and their very supportive coaches and parents for their record-setting seasons.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Speaker's Ruling Members' Statements

The Speaker: Hon. members, during one of the members' statements earlier this afternoon the hon. Government House Leader rose to advise that he wanted to raise a point of order. I'd just like to advise again that we've had this process for members' statements going back to the major reforms that were made in 1994, and we have always agreed in the past that there would not be points of order arising out of members' statements. So I just provide that as advice and see where we proceed.

Mr. Hancock: A point of clarification.

The Speaker: We'll deal with it at the conclusion of the Routine. Hon. Clerk, let's proceed.

1:50

Oral Question Period

Health Services Executive Bonuses

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What the Premier and minister of health do not realize is that by failing to take action and put an end to the extravagant bonuses handed out to the Alberta Health Services executives, they agree with giving these people handfuls of taxpayers' dollars as a reward for bringing the health care system virtually to standstill. To the minister of health: will you or will you not put an end to the system that erodes public confidence?

Mr. Zwozdesky: I don't know if I've heard such a silly question in this Chamber in all the years I've been here. There are no policies in place to erode the system. What we have is an excellent system of health that we're still trying to improve. We've done that by providing additional dollars, by streamlining some of the processes, and by continuing to provide Albertans with the very best health care possible in these difficult circumstances.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that contracts don't guarantee bonuses, why are bonuses being given out to Alberta Health Services senior executives for poor performance? Why?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, there's no poor performance associated with any of this. What there is are very specific, targeted performance measures, very specific benchmarks. Everybody is going to be very accountable. That's where we're at today. I'm not going to comment on stuff from the past, which is where the hon. leader appears to be living at the moment.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, why is it that this minister is going to wait for yet another review when he already knows what everybody in Alberta knows and wants him to do? Will he or will he not do the right thing? Put an immediate end to executive bonuses and guarantee that not a single bonus payment in '09-10 will be made in Alberta Health Services.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I think I clarified quite clearly that what we're doing is honouring the commitments that were made, contractual commitments from a previous era. That is being done as we speak. I think it's important for people to know that there are a lot of streamlining costs that point to very outstanding performance.

For example, instead of 12 CEOs, now we have one. Instead of 66 senior vice-presidents, we have seven. That has saved millions of dollars, that are going back into providing outstanding care for Albertans across the province.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Health Services Executive Pensions

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, the story goes on. The executives at Alberta Health Services not only have rich six-figure salaries; they also have two pensions. Count them: two, the local authorities pension plan and the supplemental executive retirement plan. The second, the supplemental executive retirement plan, does not require any employee contributions. To the minister: why are these executives so special that they are entitled to two pensions, one of which is totally paid for by taxpayers?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I indicated that all of this is under review, as are all the roles, responsibilities, and the very mandates of some of the positions he's talking about. What has to be kept in mind here is that while these individuals have been transferred from previous authorities into the new Alberta Health Services, they have inherited additional work. They are being compensated for that additional work because there's an increased workload, there are increased responsibilities that come with it, and we want the very best people occupying those positions.

Dr. Swann: Well, we know from documents that the Towers Perrin group has been working on this review for 10 months, Mr. Speaker. How many of the executives at Alberta Health Services are entitled to these gold-plated retirement plans paid for by taxpayers?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, to my knowledge the SERPs, as they're commonly referred to, are under review, and I'm not sure if they haven't even already been eliminated. But I will look into that.

Dr. Swann: Please do, Mr. Minister.

Given that the old executives who were simply transferred to Alberta Health Services are still entitled to these gold-plated retirement packages, what is the minister going to do to change the policy and this abuse of taxpayer funding?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's not my policy, but I am ultimately responsible, and I've said that I will look into it. These are policies that were brought into place by Alberta Health Services. It's the board that reports to me. It's the board that is responsible for overseeing the overall direction that it's going. But I have to account for it, and I will look into it.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Occupational Health and Safety Compliance

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. April 28 marks the International Day of Mourning for workers killed or injured as a result of workplace accidents or diseases. Yesterday the Auditor General revealed that 110 orders for noncompliance with occupational health and safety legislation were suspended during a period when three Albertans a week were dying from workplace-related injuries or accidents. To the Minister of Employment and Immigration: why did the government suspend 110 occupational health and safety orders at a time when three Albertans a week were dying on the job?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of the first things I have done as a new minister is that I invited the Auditor General to meet with me some two months ago and give me an overview of what his perception of the department is and what issues he perceives there to be. He has given me an oral report, exactly identical to the one that we have here in writing, giving me a two months' head start on addressing some of these issues. As a matter of fact, I am proud to report to you that for the last two months I have been addressing any and all issues in this report, and I'm taking them very seriously.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister. If you're going to address these issues, the first thing I would suggest you do is release the number and the list of all employers who have been allowed to cheat the occupational health and safety . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. Well, I am glad that this member brought this question forward because one of the reviews that I'm doing right now is whether I am able to release not only the records of employers who are underperformers but all employers in Alberta so that Albertans can take a look and see how their place of employment is faring and whether they choose to work or not work for that particular employer. There are some complications relevant to getting accurate statistics, and there are some issues relevant to freedom of information legislation, but I am working through it right now. You will get an answer on it very shortly.

Mr. MacDonald: I appreciate that, hon. minister. Again to the same minister: why did the government allow those 63 employers to cheat our occupational health and safety laws for so long, when the death rate in this province at that time was 166 workers?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I cannot give this member an accurate answer about what happened, but let me tell you about what will happen. As you may know, I spent a good part of my pre-elected life representing injured workers, so I take occupational health and safety very seriously. One thing that I will be doing is making sure that those who willingly choose to ignore the law will be dealt with appropriately.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Cataract Surgery

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The people of Alberta waiting for cataract surgery as well as those who provide those surgeries have been blindsided by this government with less than four days' notice. Bill 11 required full and proper disclosure of all awarded health care contracts. Will the minister do the right thing and table all the RFPs in the House that were issued for cataract surgery facilities before the end of today?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I'm going to be having a meeting with the ophthalmological surgeons and the ophthalmological facility providers very, very soon, and I'm going to be looking into some of these issues surrounding that RFP. To the best of my knowledge it was open, it was fair, it was transparent, and it yielded some excellent results that have resulted in lower cost prices for the provision of ophthalmological services in privately held facilities still paid for by the public purse. That means $1.4 million of additional surgeries will be able to be done in addition to the 30,000-plus already in the system.

Mr. Hinman: Well, his knowledge is not complete, Mr. Speaker.

Given that Alberta Health Services has called an emergency meeting on the cataract foul-up, will the minister immediately issue a 60-day extension so those existing services can resume? Then we'll wait until we know what the right course of action actually is because the current one is wrong. We need a 60-day . . .

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I don't think the current system is wrong at all. It provides outstanding services. What occurred here back in January, on January 15 to be exact, is an RFP closed. All service facilities doing ophthalmological surgeries were provided an opportunity to submit a bid. Bids came in from those who wished to participate, and those who didn't obviously didn't have a chance to win the bid. But the point here now is that I'll be meeting with those folks very soon, and I'll be listening to what some of those concerns are, and if there is something that can be done, we'll do it. For example, there is a second blitz coming up at the end of April, May, and June.

Mr. Hinman: Mr. Speaker, this is a four-day foul-up that's going to impact forever. Given that the eye doctors are telling us that the government's latest health care foul-up has cut competition and choice for Albertans, will the minister do the right thing and let surgeons and staff decide where they best care for patients and those surgeries as they did in the past? The bid was put out, and then they chose whether or not they wanted to perform that surgery, not the minister of health.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, patients requiring eye surgery still have a choice of which physician they want to do it. As long as it's being done in the accredited facility, all of those facilities that are there, be they in Calgary or Edmonton – and let's be clear: we're only talking about Calgary and Edmonton – those facilities in those two locations will still take whichever accredited ophthalmologists can do the surgeries and the patients who choose them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Workers in Alberta know that this is a dangerous province to work in, with a workplace fatality rate that's 16 per cent higher than the national average. In 2008 166 workers died at their job. The Auditor General's report released yesterday shows that this government refuses to prosecute employers who chronically endanger workers, resulting in deaths and ruined lives. My question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. What possible explanation can there be for this Tory government to refuse to prosecute rogue employers who systematically break the law, causing injuries and death to Alberta workers?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are really two available approaches that the ministry has when dealing with employment, one being education. Through education, actually, we have achieved very good statistics. Alberta has one of the lowest injury rates in Canada and the lowest workers' compensation premium rates. However, being a teacher I know that education sometimes falls on deaf ears, and there is room for enforcement. I will be very seriously considering right now enforcement on those who choose to ignore the rules.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, the Auditor General's report shows that the government actually manipulates information to hide the real story of reckless employers who endanger workers. We've had minister after minister who cries crocodile tears about worker deaths, but this department is participating in a deliberate support for continued dangerous workplaces. Why won't the minister stop his empty words about caring and instead take strong action to crack down on these dangerous employers who are instead currently getting refunds . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister. [interjection] The hon. minister has the floor.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, empty words. In the last two and a half months I have met with organized labour, with unions. I have met with groups of employers. I have met with my department staff, put in place a task force that will be looking at enforcement, that will be looking at releasing information. This is not an arena where you point fingers at each other. As a matter of fact, employers, employees, and government are in it together. We all have our skin in it, and it's our job to make sure that Alberta is the safest place to work in.

Mr. Mason: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that when people break the law, they are not protected by freedom of information laws, will this minister stop hiding behind FOIP and today release the list of all employers who chronically break the law and endanger their workers? Do it today, Mr. Minister. Stop hiding.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, this member is actually asking me in the Legislature right now to break a law in pursuit of those who are breaking the law. I cannot do that. But what I can undertake to the House is that the moment – and it won't be long from now – I know that I can legally release the list, I will definitely release the list.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Last year the office of the Auditor General deferred an audit on workplace health and safety because this government limited the resources of the office. That happened during a year when 166 Albertans lost their lives as a result of injuries or disease. My first question is to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. How many lives would have been saved or how many injuries would have been prevented if the Auditor was allowed to do his real work last year instead of having to defer it for a year?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, again I have to thank this member for this question. Read the newspapers for the next few days, and you will be seeing that this department will be releasing ads advertising positions, hiring front-line workers to inspect places of employment.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. That should have been done two years ago.

Again to the same minister. Of the 166 . . .

An Hon. Member: Yeah, yeah, yeah.

Mr. MacDonald: Yeah, yeah, yeah, you say. These are lives at stake here, hon. minister, and you should be ashamed of yourself.

Of the 166 workplace fatalities recorded in 2008, how many were the responsibility of the 63 employers noted in the Auditor General's report and allowed to cheat occupational health and safety laws?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, nobody is allowed to cheat. Let's make that apparent. Those who are cheating or are perceived to be cheating will be dealt with accordingly.

I cannot release the number of casualties in those particular places of employment because, like I indicated earlier, at this point in time I cannot legally release the list, but I will be releasing the list the moment I find out that it is appropriate for me to do so. When I release it, I will make sure that it is an accurate list, so you will know, hon. member, who are the employers who follow the rules and who don't follow the rules and why.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Speaking of following the rules, again to the same minister. Will the minister demand that the employers, the 63 employers who cheated on occupational health and safety laws and received grants, incredibly, from this government for their actions will have to repay the rebates that they were given from their WCB premiums? How is that fair?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, another thank you to the member. Thank you for bringing up the premiums. What the member is I imagine referring to is the COR program. One of the things I have done, having met with the Auditor General two months ago, is that I'm having a thorough review of the COR program because the purpose of this program is to reward good performers and make them more competitive and punish poor performers to make sure that they are not competitive in the market, bidding for contracts against employers who actually follow the rules.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Chateau Estates Access Road

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have long been advocating for my constituents in Chateau Estates, and through that work the Ministry of Transportation has promised to connect a road between 84th Street and 100th Street N.E. The land has been bought and a promise made. Can the minister tell my constituents when the road will be built?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, I want to assure this member that I'm very aware of his concerns and intend to fulfill the promise I made to him and his constituents. This member is very much aware that there are issues with gas pipelines that cross the road alignment, and my officials are working with the pipeline companies to modify the pipeline crossing so that we can get going on this road. I assure this member that the road will be built.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister tell me why these issues have not been resolved after so many months given the fact that I was given the same responses a few months ago from the minister?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I share this member's frustration, and I had hoped that this would be resolved by now. However, it's a very complex legal agreement that we're working on with the pipeline companies, and it's taking longer than we had anticipated. Perhaps this member can talk to some of his friends in the legal profession and try to get them to speed up a bit. However, I want to emphasize to the member that this road will be built as soon as we can, and that's my guarantee.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhullar: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will take that guarantee to the bank, Minister. Do you have any idea on a completion date?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can assure the member and his constituents that this government is addressing their access concerns. The new road will provide reasonable access for the area for local traffic while maintaining all the safety and design standards for the nearby Stoney Trail ring road. I know that this particular member works very, very hard for his constituents, but how many times do I have to keep telling him that we're going to build the road?

Income Support for Emergency Housing

Ms Pastoor: Mr. Speaker, we have heard from a number of constituents that their rent support has run out and that the income support has turned them away, telling them to move to cheaper accommodations, but affordable housing is all too rare, and rents have not come down. To the Minister of Employment and Immigration: Albertans are not receiving the housing support they need from this government, so how much of the income support budget is going towards emergency housing?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I cannot give the member the actual percentage, and that's something that I would gladly get back to her on if she is looking at percentages from the budget. I can tell you one thing. We do provide assistance for individuals who find themselves in a difficult position, and part of the assistance is a housing allowance that provides for rent. What percentage of the overall budget is the housing allowance? That's a very technical question, and I'll be glad to come back with the actual numbers.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. I look forward to that answer.

Given that since this minister has taken over control of the homelessness and eviction prevention fund, no one has any idea of how big the cuts have been to the program, will the minister make this information public?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, how much more public can my budget be? I was in estimates. I'm not sure if that member attended estimates or read the Hansard, but I have gone through estimates line by line, and members of the opposition could have asked me any questions that they want. I can table a copy of this ministry's budget in the Legislature at the next opportunity, and she can look through it. All the numbers are for public consumption.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. Same minister. Given that other provinces like Ontario and B.C. make this information and much more information about income support public, why is this government keeping Albertans in the dark? It isn't always clear in the budget. It comes across just as lines.

2:10

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, the member comes from Lethbridge, and I understand they had some electricity problems in southern Alberta, hence the darkness. We have a budget that we have tabled in the House. I have gone through this ministry's estimates line by line, open to anybody's questions. I can table the budget of this ministry that itemizes every single expenditure. We also have the blue book that shows every contract expense the ministry has. I'm not sure how much more transparent I can be other than asking the member to come to my office, sit down with me, and I'll discuss it with her.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Auditor General has reviewed government's health and safety program and flagged a number of concerns, as has been brought up many times in this House. My questions are to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. In particular, the Auditor General recommends that government take action against employers who repeatedly fail to comply with occupational health and safety laws. Will the minister act on this recommendation?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated earlier, not only will I act, but I already have acted, and I'm determined to continue to do so. One of this government's priorities is to make sure that Alberta is competitive. Being a safe place of employment makes you very competitive. You attract workers, you retain workers, and your WCB premiums are low. They are already the lowest in Canada, but I know that we can do even better than that, so that's something that I'm committed to and will continue working on.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My first supplement to the same minister. The Auditor General talked about suspending compliance orders at the end of the fiscal year. Why would officers be allowed to try again next year as a way of enforcing safety?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, as I said earlier, my energy as a minister is limited, so I will apportion now and into the future what I am doing and what I will be doing. I know for a fact that education was one of the priorities of this ministry, and I will carry on with the educational component because it has been serving us exceptionally well. There is room for improvement. I accept that. I will never argue with any statements that the Auditor General has made. I take them under advisement, and I will continue acting on them.

Mr. Bhardwaj: No other questions.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. The uncertainty continues to swirl around Alberta Health Services' decision to consolidate cataract surgeries in fewer clinics. There are serious concerns that the emphasis was more on cutting costs than on protecting public safety. My question to the Minister of Health and Wellness: is it true that the clinics that won the cataract bids are reusing the equipment they use in cataract surgeries, or are they meeting the same standards as cataract surgery in public hospitals, which is to use disposable equipment?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, there are very specific standards regarding that particular question, and I discussed it with some ophthalmologists, in fact, on the weekend. In some cases they use stainless steel, and those particular blades are chucked out at the end of the operation. In other cases they might be using diamond blades, and in those cases they can be sterilized and reused. That's my understanding from the ophthalmologists. They are very closely scrutinized in that regard by the college.

Dr. Taft: Okay. Well, when the minister is looking into it, he should ask about the use of cannulas and other equipment in addition to the blades.

What does the minister say in response to reports that Alberta Health Services is planning to close the cataract surgery program in Wetaskiwin? Is this true?

Mr. Zwozdesky: I haven't heard any such news whatsoever. In fact, I'm surprised to have it raised, but I can assure him that it'll be looked into immediately.

Dr. Taft: To the same minister. Given that there are growing reports that Alberta Health Services is planning to save money by charging patients for the lenses that are implanted during cataract surgery, will the minister reassure Albertans that he will put a stop to any such plan?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, again, speaking with ophthalmologists over the last couple of weeks, I've asked some of these same questions. There is a standard lens that is provided and covered, paid for by the public payer. That's us, essentially. If, however, the patient wants or requires an upgraded lens, then they simply are asked to pay the difference, but that is a patient's choice. Otherwise, they have a standardized lens that works perfectly well in most cases. But, again, some of it is patient choice.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Employment Supports for PDD Clients

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Some of my constituents have been asking me about employment supports for people with developmental disabilities. Employment can give us a sense of pride and purpose and connects us with others and to our communities, so it's very important that all people get to experience this, but it's often very difficult for people with disabilities. My question is to the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. What are we doing to help employers and engage more employers to connect with people with developmental disabilities who are actually interested in working?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We all know that employment gives us more than just a paycheque, as the hon. member has stated. Our persons with developmental disabilities program through the six PDD regions provides funding to a number of employment agencies and employment initiatives across the province. This supports about 3,000 individuals with developmental disabilities to access PDD employment supports programming. One such initiative is the Rotary employment partnership, which helps to connect employers and potential employees. There are approximately 80 PDD-funded agencies in Alberta, 15 of which are in Calgary, that provide similar employment supports.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Woo-Paw: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second and final question is to the same minister. How can we tell if our existing employment programs for these people are actually doing what they are supposed to do?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government is committed to persons with disabilities. This commitment includes helping Albertans with developmental disabilities if they wish to find work. Province-wide about 65 per cent of PDD-funded individuals who want employment have found jobs. I believe the number is even higher in the Calgary region at 70 per cent.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Long-term Care Funding

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At last count more than 1,700 seniors were on a wait-list for long-term care. In the last election government promised 600 new long-term care spaces. Instead, two days ago the chair of Alberta Health Services wrote that as of September 2009 there has actually been a net decline of 70 beds since the last election. To the minister of health: why is the government investing public funds in for-profit private facilities that won't offer the care that is desperately needed by at least 1,700 Albertans?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, what we're doing is providing thousands of more spaces. In fact, I think it was just yesterday that the Minister of Infrastructure released a headline that said that seniors will benefit from more than 1,000 continuing care spaces. The fact is that there are new technologies. There are new changes that are coming forward, and they're helping seniors find appropriate accommodation in a community care setting.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that at least 1,700 Albertans have been medically assessed as requiring long-term care, not some form of lesser care but long-term care, and given that every extra day or week they wait causes more suffering for them and their families, why won't the minister tell us today exactly how many, if any, of the spaces announced yesterday are going toward the 1,700-bed needs deficit or, at the very least, toward the 680-bed deficit . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, what the hon. member has yet to understand is that yesterday's announcement dealt specifically with the capital bonds and, I think, some ASLI, the affordable supportive living initiative, dollars as well, which is in a different ministry. However, there will be other announcements coming out very soon addressing long-term care spaces. If they'll just be patient for that, it will come, and Albertans, I'm sure, will be very pleased with the news that accompanies it.

Ms Notley: Well, given that more than 1,700 Albertans are still waiting for long-term care at last count and given that their needs simply can't be met within a level 1 or 2 or 3 supportive living environment, why is this government investing up to $50 million of Alberta citizens' money in for-profit companies, who charge up to $3,500 per month for rooms that simply don't meet the needs of Alberta's most vulnerable seniors?

Mr. Zwozdesky: I assume that's to me. Mr. Speaker, the fact is that for the $50 million that exists in this year's ASLI budget, the minister of seniors would tell you that parlays into about a hundred million dollars of investment. Other people in the community, the builders, are bringing in their own money to help make those projects a reality, and additional stuff paid for by the health budget will be forthcoming very soon.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Child Intervention Services

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A month has passed since I asked a series of budgetary debate questions, including concerns over the cut of $27 million from child intervention services. In 2008-2009 less than 260 families of the approximately 13,000 Alberta children in custody received family enhancement services. Last year over 90 per cent of children taken into custody were not reunited with their birth families. To the minister: when will I receive written answers to the budget debate questions?

2:20

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have addressed that question in the Assembly, and I can tell you that I have not changed my approach with that. I will not be providing any further answers to Committee of Supply. I consider those answers to have been complete at the time, and that's just the way it is.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm glad that the minister admitted on the record that she will not fulfill her ministerial duties to provide answers to budgetary questions.

Why is so little focus and funding support committed to birth families compared to the financial costs and emotional trauma associated with custody? It's grab first, support second.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's absolutely incorrect. This member knows that. I've addressed that in the Assembly as well. We had a Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act come into place in 2004, and this member knows that as well. That act is where the caseworker goes to a home along with the support worker, and those workers assess the home with the family. Many children that previously may have been taken into care immediately stay with the family while they provide support to the family. It's a complete new way and approach of handling the child and family and youth care, and it's a good way.

Mr. Chase: That gives very little comfort to the 13,000 children in custody and their families.

How can the minister justify cutting $27 million from child intervention services when there is $15 billion remaining in the sustainability fund? How is this cruelly unnecessary cut either in the best interests of Alberta's children or their broken families?

Mrs. Fritz: You know, Mr. Speaker, honestly, the way that you dismiss the good work that's being done out in the field is amazing. The child, family, and youth enhancement workers are working very hard along with the lead agencies. They have a lead agency model where they go together and where they assess families, they provide the services as they're needed, and they assist children. Immediately they protect children and they care for children, and they're very thoughtful in how they do this. I was on Friday at two case reviews with both the lead agency and the caseworkers, and there were approximately 20 people involved. You know, hon. member, that this is working.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Alberta Schools Alternative Procurement Program

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Public-private partnerships, P3s, have repeatedly, both in Alberta and around the world, shown to provide value for money, yet the Auditor General released his report yesterday, noting that the province did not demonstrate to Albertans that the ASAP P3 provided value for money. My question is to the Minister of Infrastructure. What is the province doing about this?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, let me be very clear that the Auditor General very much concluded in his report that, in fact, it did provide value for the money and also that it was the lowest bid and the risk allocated was appropriate. In fact, there were $97 million of savings in ASAP 1. What was recommended was that a better job needed to be done in demonstrating that value to the public of Alberta. Now, we accept this, and we're going to do a better job.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My supplemental to the same minister: speaking of posting a value-for-money report for ASAP 2, are you saying that the second-phase project is providing value for taxpayers?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, in fact, the value is going to be provided in ASAP 2. The final details from the signing will take place very shortly, and we will announce the cost of the project and the final savings. As I was going to mention before, we are following up with a value-for-money report, and it will be on our website very shortly.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental to the same minister: was it presumptuous of government to move forward with a second-phase project even before we actually had the analysis of the first phase?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, not at all. In fact, we did save approximately $100 million. We were on track. We delivered the project, in fact, 18 months ahead of schedule, schools to be opened up for next fall. The process has been recognized nationally and provincially and also with the Conference Board of Canada. Why would we not do it again? It is a good process, and it does provide value, as the Auditor General has stated.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Arts and Culture Funding

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Our arts organizations were told last summer that cuts might be 10 to 15 per cent, but they should hold on as things might change. Yet here we are in the new fiscal year. The budget cuts were 19 per cent, but groups are still holding on and haven't been told and are trying to budget for their 2010-11 seasons without knowing their final numbers. Contrary to the minister's written response, there is a fair notice policy for grant suspension; it's just not being used. So my questions are to the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit. When will arts organizations be given the final grant numbers reflecting the 19 per cent cut?

Mr. Blackett: Well, Mr. Speaker, I had stated in estimates that we would be working through those through our arts department, the Alberta Foundation for the Arts. The organizations will be notified of the amount that they will be receiving in short order.

Ms Blakeman: Well, he's the minister of culture. Does he not understand the timelines that most of these organizations are working upon? They have to release their seasons, do all of the media, print brochures, hire people, even choose which shows. How long is he going to make them wait?

Mr. Blackett: Mr. Speaker, our staff in our department has been in contact with many of these organizations on an ongoing basis. We have said that most of the money that will be found will be realized through savings or efficiencies. It will not go to grant reductions to those organizations. We're trying to work through that to make sure that is the case. Right now my department is giving me no indication that any one of these organizations will not be funded to the extent that they were last year.

Ms Blakeman: I'll be interested in how 20 per cent can be found out of administrative.

Given that the AFA has an actual fair notice policy to inform and work with struggling groups that may see their funding cut, why is the minister not following a similar policy to work with organizations that lose funding because of these government cutbacks? You're not going to find it in administration.

Mr. Blackett: Well, to answer the question, the comment that the hon. member made, last year we had a reduction of $8.9 million. We were able through efficiencies to realize the savings, and we were able to fund every one of those not-for-profits to the level that they received a year before, as promised in the budget last year. I see no reason that we won't be able make that commitment to them this year. We'll see in due course if my words speak for themselves.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I represent Nisku, which is the home of a very large manufacturing workforce. As such, I was very interested in the Auditor General's review of this government's health and safety program. My question is to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. In particular the Auditor General notes that half of the employers who fail to comply with the Occupational Health and Safety Act also continue to hold a certificate of recognition, or COR, indicating that they meet established standards. Will the minister tell us how such bad performers can obtain and, in fact, keep CORs?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The main prerogative of the COR program is to enhance and promote safety at a job site. Many employers who are in high-risk categories that naturally had higher rates of incidents would sign up for the COR program. However, then there was an expectation that they would improve their rate of injuries. As long as they were improving their rates of injuries and working with the educational programs, they could maintain that COR status. However, if there is no improvement and if they are not working within the parameters of the COR expectations, indeed they should not be permitted to have the COR status.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rogers: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the minister: even if the COR holders improve, why would they be given rebates on their WCB premiums for good health and safety performance when they refuse to comply with Alberta's health and safety requirements?

2:30

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, the Workers' Compensation Board rewards participants of COR because what it really says is that they are willing to change their practices, that they are willing to adapt their practices and become safe performers. There is some initial incentive for those employers. But as time goes on, the Workers' Compensation Board only rebates the premiums based on performance. So if there is no improvement in performance, there should not be any additional rebates, nor should they hold the status. That is part of the review that I'm doing right now.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rogers: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the minister: maybe your review will answer this, but if an employer does not comply, why can't you simply revoke their COR?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I most definitely can. That's something that I am looking into right now. Let's be frank here. Injuries are simply unacceptable. I don't even buy into the term "accidents."

They're not accidents; they're incidents. If you were to turn time back one minute on every incident, it wouldn't occur because they're preventable. Now, my job is to make sure that we reward good performers and definitely not reward those who choose not to comply. That is as simple as it gets. That's something that I'm very committed to, and that's something that I will be working on as time goes on.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Royal Alberta Museum

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Getting clarity out of this government can be elusive. We have a federal MP announcing in a mailing an $85 million contribution to the Royal Alberta Museum, and then we have the Minister of Infrastructure saying that the capital plan does include the Royal Alberta Museum and the minister of culture saying that $83 million over three years will pay for a building design and maybe collection purchases. Yikes. To the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit: how do Albertans figure out where our museum is, how many will be built, who's paying, and when it will be built? How are we supposed to know?

Mr. Blackett: Mr. Speaker, as I've said before in this House, I believe that the government of Alberta committed to the Museum of Nature on the Glenora site in the neighbourhood of $240 million. We are in principle looking at a two-museum site. The first, the Museum of Nature, is on the capital plan; it has been deferred out a number of years. The federal government has not made an announcement. They have not contacted our office and indicated that they're making any announcement, so I'm not sure what the question is.

Ms Blakeman: Okay. Well, how much of the $83 million in funding for the Royal Alberta Museum is from the federal government? You have it in print here. Is the province's entire budget really federal money?

Mr. Blackett: Well, Mr. Speaker, the reference "you have it in print" is a reference to a publication that is not something produced by the government of Alberta. If it's something that the federal government has produced, ask them the question since they are the ones who produced it.

Ms Blakeman: Is the minister saying that the $83 million that appears in his budget is 100 per cent money from Alberta taxpayers through provincial government coffers?

Mr. Blackett: As we said in estimates, I believe that $30 million was promised by the federal government in 2005, and the $50 million remaining, if I remember correctly, was going to come out of the Department of Culture and Community Spirit of the government of Alberta.

Health Professions Scope of Practice

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, the Health Professions Act and the Pharmacy and Drug Act amendments came into force last year, giving qualified pharmacists the right to prescribe certain drugs. Nova Scotia has also showed some initiative in this area by allowing nurse practitioners to do some prescribing of drugs. There have been suggestions that Alberta's health care system could be made more efficient if we broadened the scope of practice of some of our health care professionals. All of my questions are for the Minister of Health and Wellness. Can the minister advise the House whether his department or Health Services has any plans for initiatives to expand the scope of practice of our health care professionals?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, we in fact addressed some of this through the Vision 2020 document, that was provided to all members and to the public a year or two ago. Nurse practitioners have in fact been able to prescribe medications since the 1990s. Now, in addition to that, we're also doing a review, a pilot, right now with pharmacies and pharmacists across the province to see what sort of expanded scope of services they can have and where we can compensate them for doing that. They already, for example, are able to prescribe some drug treatments, and they're also allowed to extend or continue prescriptions made by other health practitioners. This is very much a timely subject, and I'm grateful to the hon. member for raising it.

Dr. Brown: Will the minister assure Alberta's health care professionals that all of their professional governing bodies would be consulted before he makes any changes in the scope of practice of any of the health care professions?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Yes, Mr. Speaker, that's done as a regular feature of the work that we do. In fact, whenever any legislative amendments are contemplated by this minister, we will ensure that people such as those suggested will be contacted. For example, any changes that may come forward are also brought to the Health Professions Advisory Board for their input. They receive submissions, and so do we.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Rural Physician Recruitment

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have recently learned that my local medical centre in Cold Lake will be losing three of its physicians. Losing three doctors in a city the size of Cold Lake is a serious concern for my constituents as it will affect timely access to quality medical services and procedures. Specifically speaking, the loss will mean that the emergency and operating room of our health centre will be short-staffed. My first question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. What is your ministry doing to ensure that these positions are filled as quickly as possible so that delays in accessing medical procedures can be avoided?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, we have a very active program, RPAP, which is the rural physician action plan, and through that Alberta Health Services very aggressively does whatever it can to recruit doctors both from local or national sources or from other locations. They offer an extremely competitive compensation package along with other incentives for people to relocate. My understanding is that at least two physicians are currently on the bubble for Cold Lake, and we're working on the third one.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you. My first supplemental is to the same minister. As rural, remote communities have a harder time attracting doctors than metropolitan centres like Edmonton and Calgary, what incentives does this government currently provide to attract and retain doctors to rural communities, and do you think these incentives require improvements?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, having grown up in rural Alberta, I know how important this issue is there, and it's important throughout the province. That's why we provide specific funding, for example, to third-year medical students in order to help them complete their third year of clinical rotations in rural areas. We also fund a dedicated family medicine residency program to train physicians in rural communities. We offer other incentives like that as well.

Mrs. Leskiw: My last question is to the same minister. Given that we have a number of medical graduates from Alberta seeking employment within our province, what is your ministry doing in order to retain and provide employment opportunities specifically to Alberta-born medical personnel wishing to practise here?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, we provide additional incentives such as the business benefit program, which sees us covering some of the office overhead for medical grads to situate themselves in rural Alberta. We offer assessment honoraria. We also pay relocation expenses of up to $10,000. So there's a lot going on. Just recently I also spoke with some folks about a possible bursary program and what could be done to augment that because we understand how important it is for rural Alberta to have the best people possible.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Access to Laws and Regulations

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Having access to the laws of the land is one of the hallmarks of democracy, yet Alberta's Queen's Printer charges copyright fees to organizations that want to reproduce Alberta's laws and regulations. These fees range from $250 to as much as $3,000 per year. My constituents and the Canadian Publishers' Council have contacted Service Alberta expressing opposition on behalf of many organizations to these fees. My questions are to the Minister of Service Alberta. Why are these copyright fees in place?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The member is correct: access to Alberta's laws and regulations is very important. That's why I've decided to cancel these copyright fees. The copyright will still continue to be owned by the Queen's Printer, but organizations will be allowed to reproduce Alberta's laws and regulations without paying a fee, and the Canadian Publishers' Council is being made aware of this. One thing I want to stress is that despite these copyright fees Albertans have had and continue to have free access to all laws and regulations on the Queen's Printer's website.

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: when will the new policy be in place?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This takes place immediately. No further copyright fees will be charged. Existing copyright agreements with specific organizations will continue to be in place until they expire, but there will be no new agreements on fees.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will changing this policy have any impact on government revenues?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The revenues from copyright agreements averaged about $20,000 per year. This is not a lot compared to some of the other revenue that we get from the Queen's Printer. Regardless of the revenue loss, the most important thing is that this is the right thing to do. Citizens of Alberta deserve to have access to the laws of our province, and this decision helps ensure this.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that will conclude the question period for today. Today 20 hon. members were recognized for 114 questions and answers: nine members from the Official Opposition, three from the independents, and eight from the government caucus.

In 15 seconds from now we'll proceed with the Routine.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Kevin Koe Rink World Curling Champions

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, I'm very proud to rise today to recognize the tremendous accomplishments of Alberta's Kevin Koe rink at the 2010 World Men's Curling Championship. On Sunday, April 11, Kevin Koe's rink dominated the Norway team at the world championship final in Cortina d'Ampezzo, Italy, from the very first end, finishing with a 9-3 victory.

This world championship win caps off a dream season for the local rink, who curls out of the Saville Sports Centre right here in Edmonton. Over the past year they claimed their first Alberta provincial championship, their first Brier, and now the world championship. The Brier and the world championship wins are even more impressive as Koe, a Grande Prairie resident, is the first skip in 38 years to win both the Brier and the world championship on the first try. They now join an illustrious group of Alberta Brier and world champion curlers, including Kevin Martin, Randy Ferbey, and Pat Ryan.

The achievements of the Koe rink and their amazing run to win a provincial, national, and world championship will be remembered for years to come. They are not just champions here in Alberta but, to quote our good friends in Italy, campioni del mondo, which means champions of the world.

Mr. Speaker, I invite all Members of this Legislature to join me in congratulating skip Kevin Koe, third Blake MacDonald, second Carter Rycroft, and lead Nolan Thiessen on their world championship. Albertans are incredibly proud of your efforts.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Katharine Hay

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'd like to pay tribute to a young Albertan who passed away too soon but in her short time with us made a real impact on me and on the province. Katharine Hay passed away last month in Edmonton from complications of kidney disease at the age of 24. Katharine served as a chair of the New Democratic Youth of Alberta, was the NDP candidate in Sherwood Park in the last election, and was an excellent event organizer and fundraiser. She travelled to British Columbia during their last provincial election, working to re-elect Cariboo North MLA Bob Simpson.

In addition, Katharine was a talented biathlete, excellent cross-country skier, and participated in cutting-horse shows as a turnback rider. During the past year Katharine was enrolled in NAIT's radio and television arts program, pursuing a career in radio news. Katharine did all this and more in spite of having to battle kidney disease her entire life. She showed how courage and determination can change lives and, hopefully, can contribute to changing a province.

At a time when young people are often discouraged from getting involved in public affairs and frustrated by a political system that does not speak to their concerns, Katharine showed that politically engaged youth could make a difference. I know her example inspired others to become involved as well.

Before her passing Katharine was preparing to run in the Kidney Foundation of Alberta's annual give the gift of life fun run and walk. Many of her friends will now be running and walking in her memory at Rundle park on April 25. Donations for Team Kat now exceed $3,700 and can be made online at www.kidney.ca.

Katharine has left an indelible mark on me, on our party, and on our province. I am very proud to have had her on my team.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Parkinson's Awareness Month

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Monday, April 12, each member in this Assembly was presented with a tulip from the Parkinson Society of Southern Alberta. As Parkinson's official flower, the tulip reminds us of the importance of research. Much has been accomplished in this field, but a cure has yet to be found.

Mr. Speaker, April is Parkinson's Awareness Month, and I urge all Albertans to do what they can to help raise awareness about this disease and to make much-needed donations. Parkinson's is the second most common neurodegenerative disorder after Alzheimer's disease. While Parkinson's has significant effects on the body, it leaves the mind untouched. Approximately a hundred thousand Canadians live with this debilitating disease and are affected by tremors, slowness, balance issues, and muscle rigidity. The average age of diagnosis with Parkinson's is 60, but it can affect people as young as 30 or 40.

I would also like to acknowledge the work of the Parkinson's societies of southern and northern Alberta and what they do for individuals and families who live with Parkinson's. Supported by volunteers, donations, and dedicated staff, they provide counselling, support groups for people with Parkinson's and their caregivers, learning resources, referrals, peer programs, in-service community awareness programs, and speech therapy. Parkinson's is not easy to live with, but nonprofit organizations make a world of difference for many Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

World Health Day

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to rise to speak about World Health Day, which was celebrated last week on April 7. Alberta's theme for the celebrations was Healthier Communities for a Healthier Alberta.

World Health Day is an opportunity to encourage all Albertans to take an active role in improving their health and making their communities healthier places to live, work, and play. Creating safe environments, taking personal responsibility, and investing in our health and wellness is a core foundation of building strong communities and a vigorous province. Albertans participating in their wellness reduce the rates of preventable injuries and chronic diseases, which lessens the need for future and further treatment and expenditures.

Current statistics tell us why improving wellness is such an urgent issue. Fifty per cent of Albertans are at a higher risk for chronic disease due to being overweight, obese, and physically inactive. More than 20 per cent of Canadian children and youth aged two to 17 are either overweight or obese, and the number of people diagnosed with type 2 diabetes, a preventable illness, has more than doubled in the past 20 years.

Last spring I had the pleasure of participating in the Communities ChooseWell awards ceremony recognizing a record 162 Albertan communities that challenged their residents to eat healthy, be active, and have fun exercising. I know these community challenges inspired and motivated residents, Mr. Speaker. In fact, many of these programs and activities still continue.

World Health Day reminds us that we need to have the power to make healthy choices that dramatically impact our lives. I encourage all Albertans to make healthier food choices, incorporate at least 30 minutes of physical activity into every day, and join with family, friends, neighbours, and co-workers to make our communities safer and healthier.

In short, let's get Albertans eating right, moving more, getting enough sleep, having a little bit of fun in a balanced life, and being kind to one another.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to Standing Order 30, less an hour, I'd like to give oral notice . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, unfortunately, I cannot permit you to proceed as your application would violate one of the fundamental rules of our Assembly, and that is Standing Order 30(1). The hon. member chooses to submit a proposal for a notice under Standing Order 30. Standing Order 30(1) clearly states:

After the daily routine and before the Orders of the Day, any Member may request leave to move to adjourn the ordinary business of the Assembly to discuss a matter of urgent public importance when written notice has been given to the Speaker at least 2 hours prior to the sitting of the Assembly.

The sitting of the Assembly commences at 1:30 p.m., so the Speaker would have needed to receive in his office by 11:30 such a request. I received the notice from you at 1:10 p.m., and by that time the member had already been notified by at least one table officer that it would have been inappropriate to proceed, so on that basis we are not proceeding with this application.

2:50 Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table a report from my constituency office regarding correspondence we've received in regard to Fort Chipewyan. This is essentially a form letter. I've repeated the central part of the note, and it was sent to me on behalf of the following people: Janelle Morin, Ali Grotowski, Jennifer Taylor, Alicia Hibbert, Shaun Mott, Jason Youngren, Eddie Biggley, Melissa Horner, Ann Hazlett, Jolanda Thomas, and Jade Zalaskyh.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first tabling is the requisite number of copies of correspondence from postsecondary students Nikita Ora Tetarenko, Alastair MacKinnon, Stephanie Maddison, and Julia Rees, all expressing their concerns about the increasing costs to students and their ability to complete their educational plans.

My second set of tablings is from concerned Albertans Irene MacDonald, James and Jamie Hogg, and Erin Stolte, all expressing the same concerns specifically related to medical schools and the reduction in medical school seats.

My next set of tablings is from Albertans Brenda Herring, Khrysty Greif, Alicia Motuz, Lindsay Verrier, and Darlene Abbott, all supporting the proper funding of high-quality education, with Mrs. Abbott particularly upset about public education funding going to private schools.

I'm tabling a letter from Erika Thompson expressing serious concerns about the draft K to 12 arts education curriculum framework and which details a number of those concerns.

My final tabling, Mr. Speaker, is an e-mail from my constituent Janet Castonguay, a dental hygienist who loves her job but who has suffered a work injury only to find that her employer is not required to protect her through either WCB or private insurance. Employment insurance, unfortunately, only covers 40 per cent of her wages for a maximum of six weeks, and Janet doesn't understand why high-earning professional businesses are not required to provide protection for employees.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. First, I'd like to table approximately 2,300 postcards signed by Albertans calling on the provincial government to keep its promise to build 600 new long-term care beds. The postcards are part of a campaign sponsored by the Canadian Union of Public Employees and are in addition to the 570 postcards tabled by the Alberta NDP caucus in the past few weeks.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank you for your accommodation in us not having to photocopy five copies of all of those.

The Speaker: The chair will make a comment with respect to that last comment. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood has tabled 2,300 documents. Having been advised of this, it seemed prudent on the basis of the protection of the trees of the province of Alberta and the environment of the province of Alberta and the greening initiatives of this Assembly that it would probably be appropriate on this occasion to permit a single tabling of each document, 2,300 as opposed to the 16,500 that would have been required. This is not precedent setting.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Maybe I shouldn't have mentioned it at all. I also have two other tablings. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter from Alberta Health Services which includes a breakdown of the province's continuing care beds into auxiliary hospital, nursing home, designated assisted living, and other categories. The document relates to the questions asked by my colleague from Edmonton-Strathcona earlier today.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of an online petition started by Veronica Mundell calling on the government to "keep the Liquid Cytology Cervical Cancer screening labs in Lethbridge, Red Deer, and the [University of Alberta] Hospital." The petition has 1,317 names. These are in addition to the 1,432 names tabled previously. Many of these have included comments such as: I have been personally affected by cervical cancer in my life and was so thankful that I did not need to wait for weeks or months to get my test results back because Lethbridge has its own site.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The chair cannot let the hon. member go further without further comment with respect to his comment about: perhaps I shouldn't have mentioned this. The chair would like to advise the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood that transparency is always more appropriate than surreptitious action and undercover activity, and it's the philosophy of the chair that transparency will be the mode of the day.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of the hon. Mr. Oberle, Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security, responses to questions raised by Mr. Hehr, the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo; Mr. Mason, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood; Mr. Boutillier, the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo; Mr. Kang, the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall; and Dr. Brown, the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, on March 17, 2010, in the Department of Solicitor General and Public Security main estimates debate.

Projected Government Business

Ms Blakeman: Under Standing Order 7(6) I would request that the Government House Leader please share with the Assembly the projected government business for the week commencing Monday the 19th, government business commencing on the 20th.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Tuesday, April 20, in the afternoon under Government Bills and Orders we anticipate being in a position to discuss Bill 7, Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2010, in Committee of the Whole. We anticipate that, following today's progress, the remaining bills 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, and 14 will be in third reading. We'll proceed in third reading on those bills or as per the Order Paper.

On Wednesday, the 21st, we would anticipate that bills 7, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, and 14 would be in third reading. We would proceed in that order on those bills in third reading and as per the Order Paper.

On Thursday, April 22, we would proceed with those same bills as per the Order Paper.

The Speaker: During the Routine today the hon. Government House Leader advised that he would want to rise on a point of order. The chair did intercept that and did indicate that the chair had not really been very enthusiastic about receiving points of order with respect to members' statements. The Government House Leader indicated he would rise on a point of clarification.

Point of Order

Explanation of Speaker's Ruling

Mr. Hancock: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Under Standing Order 13(2) "The Speaker shall explain the reasons for any decision on the request of a Member." In order to ask for that clarification, under 13(1) "The Speaker shall preserve order and decorum and decide questions of order." In House of Commons Procedure and Practice it refers to members' statements.

In presiding over the conduct of this daily activity, Speakers have been guided by a number of well-defined prohibitions . . .

- all questions raised must be on matters of concern but do not necessarily have to be on matters of urgent necessity;
- personal attacks are not permitted.

On page 422 of House of Commons Procedure and Practice there's another provision which indicates, of course, as is standard in the rest of our standing orders, that one should not refer to a person who is not a member of the House and therefore not able to defend themselves.

Now, I understand that our order of precedents and practice over a number of years has been that points of order are not raised during members' statements. In fact, we pride ourselves on having an opportunity for members' statements to allow any private member of this Assembly to have two minutes' opportunity to discuss a matter that's of importance to them or their constituents. Actually, House of Commons Procedure and Practice indicates some statements. For example,

- congratulatory messages, recitations of poetry and frivolous matters are out of order.

That has not actually been followed in recent practice, and we've certainly seen that in this House, but the others have been.

Mr. Speaker, if your ruling is that points of order can never be raised with respect to a member's statement, then I would ask you to clarify how proper decorum in the House is to be maintained when, as the Leader of the Opposition did today, a personal attack on the Premier's integrity and honesty is raised. As the Leader of the Official Opposition did today raise the question – and I don't have the benefit of the Blues. I asked to see if I could get some transcription, but I couldn't. But he did refer to "top Tory Ron Hicks." Well, Ron Hicks has been a chief deputy minister of the government and a stellar civil servant for a number of years. I don't think the Leader of the Opposition would have any information to ever suggest that he was a member of the Conservative Party or was partisan in any way.

So it was entirely – I could go on. There are other things, but I know that this is not exactly a point of order. It is a point of clarification. There have to be some limits. Mr. Speaker, if you're not going to intercede during members' statements to call people to order when they breach the rules, how, then, are we going to make sure that people cannot do during members' statements what is clearly inappropriate?

The Speaker: The hon. Opposition House Leader.

Ms Blakeman: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Also on 13(2), asking for the Speaker to explain, I've been reviewing some of the Speaker's previous comments, and I'm very much in mind of the consistent set of comments that he gives us at the beginning of every session in which he makes note on a point of order that a member should refrain from making editorial comments on the matter under consideration. We've had a great deal of editorializing thus far considering that it's not a point of order. So that door being opened, I'm going through it.

I have a copy of the Leader of the Official Opposition's statement, and I cannot find in his statement where anything was directly attributed to the Premier. We've talked about the actions of his administration. Certainly, the Premier is the head of the government who administers, so I don't see that that is a false statement to make. As I went further through this, it talks about that the leader believes and finds something not believable and, you know, talks about his belief that there may have been instructions from the Premier's office given to the deputy chair around that veto power. Just looking at these remarks, it's not saying that the Premier said anything, frankly. It's talking about his administration. It's talking about his political agenda, which he certainly has and publishes on a regular basis through the Public Affairs Bureau and through press releases and through banners that are put up when he speaks.

Regarding the third party that was mentioned, frankly, I'm a little surprised to hear the Government House Leader saying that he sees it as a bad thing that someone would be named as a Tory. My understanding is that all of the members of government are a member of that party, and I thought he would have been proud of that. I don't know that calling someone a Tory in this province is a bad thing, and I don't think it was delivered by the Leader of the Official Opposition with any malice. It was stated more or less as an observation.

There are so few opportunities for members who are not in the government to have control of the floor for a few short minutes to make statements. I think it's been one of the hallmarks of this particular Speaker's influence on this Assembly that the two minutes granted to private members has been protected by the Speaker and continues to be protected by the Speaker. I'm aware that he has held to that ruling through a number of challenges. I hope he continues to do that. He's certainly taken the opportunity – and I'm mindful of a couple of specific instances – to ask members to be careful of that special privilege that is granted to them in that points of order have not been entertained. He's done that on more than one occasion that I can remember, and I think that's perfectly appropriate.

I would argue that there is no point of order, definitely, and I would not usually require any point of clarification. The Speaker has been pretty clear that he protects that time but it needs not to be abused, and I don't believe it was abused today.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we could go on for quite a period of time. However, let me just give a little bit of background with respect to this and make some comments. This was raised as a point of clarification. I would draw members' attention to some statements made by this chair in days gone by with respect to this.

First of all, just a little historical perspective. The concept of members' statements was introduced in this House in 1993 as the result of discussions between the then Government House Leader, who happened to be me, and the House leader of the Official Opposition. The gentleman's name is Grant Mitchell. He became the Leader of the Official Opposition.

One of the agreed-upon principles that we had when this matter was introduced to the House, and these are words that I gave on May 18, 2005:

One of the agreed principles we had was that we would ask all members in the Assembly to deal with the highest degree of civility with respect to these statements, to not bring into question any other member, and to deal essentially with thoughts that they had. [And] in replacement or evenness for that, no member would rise on a point of order or on a point of privilege.

This matter was revisited on April 5, 2006, and then on May 3, 2006.

As I recall, going back to 1993, there have been three interventions with respect to members' statements, today being the fourth.

So if you take a look at all of the members' statements that were uttered in the House and given in the House, in essence, for the most part members have been very, very good about observing these general principles that we had. Every once in a while there is some violation of that. That's really a reflection more of the individual giving the statement than it is on the House or the process of members' statements. The chair will protect the integrity of members' statements, give members the widest possible latitude in dealing with this, and ask them to follow some certain principles.

If anybody should be upset for what was said in the House today, it's me. I quote from the Leader of the Official Opposition, "The Tories have been trying to silence the Auditor General for months . . . and distributed in this House a paper by top Tory Ron Hicks that calls on the government to severely curb the powers of the Auditor General." The government did not distribute such a paper to anyone; the Speaker did. The Speaker did because a former member of the Official Opposition, who is now the dean of the department of economics at the University of Alberta, has a student by the name of Ron Hicks in a course to do a public seminar on public accountability. This one individual, Ron Hicks, came to me, because the audience that probably would most likely want to read this paper would be men and women of the Alberta Legislative Assembly, and said: I would like, as a courtesy, to provide to them a copy of my report, my paper, prior to the seminar that would be held in I think it's the early part of May in which this matter will be raised as an opportunity to hear it first.

It's not any top Tories that distributed this. The chair did it, and he did it as a courtesy to a former member of the Official Opposition, who has a student by the name of Ron Hicks. So, you know, if anybody should be angry, it should be me, but I'm not going to get angry. I'll still recognize their right to say certain things, but I'm going to repeat what I said before, that was arrived at in consort with a person who I believed had integrity and still has integrity, Mr. Grant Mitchell, who is a former Leader of the Official Opposition.

One of the agreed principles we had was that we would ask all members in the Assembly to deal with the highest degree of civility with respect to these statements, to not bring into question any other member, and to deal essentially with thoughts that they had.

Today's statement was a reflection of the individual, and remember that.

Ms Blakeman: Under 13(2) I'm just asking for clarification on your recent statements just so that I am clear because you repeated it in a couple of different orders. The request to distribute the information that was distributed came from a former member of this House?

The Speaker: No. I never said that. I said a "student."

Ms Blakeman: It came from a student but not from a former member.

The Speaker: That's correct. That's what I said.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the clarification.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Cao in the chair]

The Chair: The chair shall now call the committee to order.

Bill 9
Local Authorities Election Statutes
Amendment Act, 2010

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to make a few comments with regard to Bill 9, the Local Authorities Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2010, in committee today. I want to thank all members who participated in second reading of Bill 9. I appreciate the positive comments during second reading from members of all parties who spoke to the legislation and its measures to achieve fairness and transparency.

Before I respond to specific questions raised during second reading, I'd like to speak about the clarity these amendments will bring to municipal elections. Bill 9 will also address concerns we've heard in conversations with municipal leaders and other Albertans over the last year. They have commended the government for listening to their concerns and responding in a timely manner through this proposed legislation.

Bill 9 recognizes that self-funded campaigns can go up to $10,000. This provides flexibility in that one size does not fit all, as was suggested by a member opposite. Those campaigns do not have to follow the same guidelines as larger, donor-funded campaigns. For those larger campaigns it sets individual campaign contributions at $5,000 per year. That means candidates can receive donations from any number of donors. All those donations will be subject to disclosure, and a receipt will be issued for any aggregate donations over $100.

It's important to note the flexibility for rules around bank accounts, which also recognize that campaigns come in different sizes.

It's also worth noting that there is not a campaign spending limit proposed in this legislation as exists in some provinces and some municipalities. There was a suggestion during second reading debate that we adopt provincial regulations around municipal election campaigns with respect to the carry-over of surplus campaign funds. But as you are aware, Mr. Chair, in municipal elections candidates seek public office as individuals and not as political party candidates. Each candidate has their own philosophy and policies. Therefore, surplus donations are treated accordingly and are required to be donated to charities and municipalities if the candidate is not running for office in the future. This is a fair and reasonable framework for all elected officials and provides accountability for Albertans.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie had raised the question about the requirement for opening bank accounts for candidates. Specifically, he wanted to know whether candidates would be required to open a bank account in their own name rather than in the name of their campaign. Mr. Chair, financial institutions each have individual processes to determine what name is required to open a bank account. That being said, the legislation is workable as it is presently before us today.

Members also raised questions about residency requirements with respect to electors owning more than one home. I'd like to make it very clear that this provision will not affect any voter rights for property owners in summer villages. The proposed amendments will clarify the existing rules that when a voter who has more than one residence in all other types of municipalities other than summer villages, the person's place for voting will be determined on the basis of the following criteria: the home address where the person's mail is delivered, the address to where the person's income tax correspondence is sent, the address shown on a driver's licence or registries identification card.

This further clarity was required due to a court case in May 2008, when the Alberta Court of Queen's Bench ruled that the election was valid despite 11 voters failing to meet the residency requirements under the Local Authorities Election Act. However, the judge stated that the act does not expressly address the issue of where a voter is to vote when he or she owns or occupies more than one residence. This proposed amendment to the act will resolve that issue. All electors will still have to either be on a voters list or make a statement of eligibility declaring that they are eligible to vote in that election, and an elector's eligibility can still be challenged in the courts, of course, which was previously the case as well.

The definitions in the new legislation also clearly set out what a campaign contribution is, what a campaign period means, and who is a candidate. Bill 9 will clarify that a commercial service does not include services provided by volunteers who receive no compensation in relation to their time or services.

Our election process, as was stated during second reading debate, needs to be open and accountable. This legislation will provide greater consistency and fairness for all Alberta municipalities. Mr. Chair, the proposed changes support the principles of openness and transparency while ensuring practical delivery. Previously it was optional for a municipality to pass a bylaw requiring candidates to prepare and disclose to the public a statement of their campaign contributions and expenses. Now all candidates must file a disclosure statement with the municipality. This ensures consistency in reporting for all Albertans.

In closing, I want to urge all members to support Bill 9 and thank them for their comments. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I was beginning to worry that I wasn't actually going to get a chance and be here at the right time to be able to speak to this bill because I'm quite interested in the process and what has happened here. I also see a sort of repeated process or strategy that comes from the government or through the private members who sit on the government side around discussion of issues that affect all of the municipalities in Alberta without a rigorous consultation process that involves them. I think this is the second or third one where that can be argued. We certainly had a situation where last year the 2009 Bill 203 – of course, our bills are all renumbered, so there's now a different 203 – which was around municipal financing, went through the House very quickly and then was proclaimed to the shock of many.

As I looked at some of the things, you know, I went to the city of Edmonton disclosure bylaw, and it is very thorough. It goes on for some 10 or 11 or 12 pages with various attachments that go with it on how and when everything is to be filed, a definition of what is meant by a gift, who is meant as family, campaign expenses, honorariums, how much money has to be itemized, anything over $300. There was a municipality that in some ways has more thorough campaign finance disclosure rules than we had at the time – there is a bill before us currently – than we have even to this moment for provincial disclosure.

I'm wondering who was supposed to be the recipient of this being put onto the municipalities. Who were they really trying to get at? It was surely painted with a very broad brush stroke. Nonetheless, that's past history. It passed. We now have the amending act in front of us. At least the government recognized that something needed to be done and it needed to be addressed.

Two things are outstanding and I want to make sure are clearly on the record. One is that the larger municipalities have been asking for some time to be able to have legislation passed which would give them the choice of enacting tax-free deduction legislation for municipal campaign contributions – and that was not included in this act – for trying to solicit donations for any of those people that are trying to run.

Let's face it: in the big cities you're not talking chump change. You know, in Edmonton the ward sizes currently are dealing with 120,000 to 140,000 individuals that a candidate is trying to influence to vote their way. That's a lot of money to get things in the mail to them, signs, and all the rest of it to try and make people aware of what you're doing. This is without a party apparatus behind them. So it would be soliciting donations without any kind of an incentive that is enjoyed by provincial and federal politicians but is denied to municipal politicians. I question why that was not included in this legislation, particularly because it's something that has been repeatedly requested.

The ire of the municipalities over not being consulted was pretty clear, and I probably don't need to go over that again. I think there's another municipal act that's up around franchise fees, and I wonder how much consultation took place around that one. I believe that's also a private member's bill. So I see the pattern being repeated even when the point has been made pretty firmly.

The transparency and disclosure laws. In the city of Edmonton the first one was passed in 1993, and they've continued to operate on that. I did quote to you from it a bit earlier, and I notice that it was most recently revised in 2001. They've kept on top of their legislation, and I think that if I was them, I'd be a little peeved with this sort of Big Brother knows best attitude.

I believe that the audit requirement was addressed in this legislation, which was something else that definitely needed to be looked at. Thank you for looking at the candidate's own campaign funds and allowing that to be brought forward and particularly clarifying the rules around the volunteer and valuing the volunteers' time because, well, certainly as happens on this side of the House, volunteers are really the biggest resource in a campaign. If we had to value their time and not go above a certain limit, my campaign would certainly be sunk on that. So thank you for addressing and clarifying that they are not campaign funds.

As well, thank you for addressing the issues around contributions being viewed over an annual basis rather than on a campaign basis because, as I said, in some of the larger municipalities and cities – Red Deer, Lethbridge, Medicine Hat, Edmonton, Calgary, Fort McMurray, Grande Prairie, for example – I think candidates are trying to raise sizable amounts of money. You usually can't do that in one shot at it, so most of them have some sort of annual fundraising campaign.

I think you got rid of the problem with the surplus. Yeah, you did.

I think those are the issues that I wanted to put on the record right now. Mostly because there seems to be some sort of under-the-waterline battle going on here between the government and the municipalities – and I'm never quite sure who they're trying to get at, who the government is trying to control – I wish that there could be a more consistent approach to this. You know, by far the majority of our population live in urban centres now. To continually go about things where either backbencher legislation, private member's legislation, or government legislation is brought forward without dealing with those people who are representing the majority of our population, who are living in urban centres I think is short sighted and very problematic, so I'm glad to see that at least this bill has come forward which would correct some things.

I'm going to stop talking now because I'm really hoping it's going to get passed today. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much. I appreciate the opportunity in getting to participate in the debate on Bill 9, the Local Authorities Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2010, this afternoon. Certainly, I have heard from municipal leaders across the province. I have heard their dissatisfaction with this initiative. When I think of this government's feeble efforts to improve our own financial disclosure statements and the laws that govern those statements, I find it quite ironic that we would serve this legislative initiative on various corners of the province and give municipalities these changes without adequate consultation. I'm pleased to hear, or at least I understand, that there will be amendments to this, but certainly I can only gather that the hon. member heard from the same individuals that I did regarding this proposed legislation and is rightfully considering their opinions.

I don't know what happened, but when you consider this bill and what we're trying to do here with improving the accountability of donations to the municipal level of elections, that's a good idea, I think. But in the future I would certainly ask members of this House to consult thoroughly and diligently with our other partner in government, and that's the municipal level.

Again, Mr. Chairman, we look at Bill 9, and we see the proposed amendments. If we're going to be accountable ourselves, that's fine, and if we ask others to be accountable, that's fine. But when we look at the rules that govern the elections of each and every member of this Assembly, I suggest that we fix those rules first, make some necessary changes to those rules. Let's have a look at our own contribution limits. Let's look at who can give us money. Should we look at eliminating donations from corporations, trade unions, entities that are not on the voters list and just limit campaign donations to individuals whose names appear on the voters list? Perhaps we could do that; that would be one suggestion. Limits on the total amount that can be donated during a campaign or a calendar year: perhaps we should look at that as well. Until we do that, I can understand why municipal leaders are so suspicious of this initiative.

Now, there are those – and I realize this is coming out of another private member's bill – that indicated to me that they thought this was a matter of a dispute between the mayor of Calgary and this government, and this was one way of ensuring that the mayor of Calgary listened to or respected this government more. Now, I don't know whether that's true or not, but certainly more than one civic leader brought that up to me. The civic leaders, regardless of whether they're in smaller centres or larger centres, had a lot of questions initially about this bill, and we'll see if they are satisfied with this legislation as it proceeds.

3:30

Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the opportunity to get my comments and my observations on the record. Certainly, in the information that has been provided to me and the commentary that has been provided to me by many different people, they don't understand the tone, I shall say, of this bill.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. Again, it's always a privilege to rise and to debate the various bills that this government has brought forward. Bill 9, the Local Authorities Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2010, is one that I do believe needs more debate and more thought put into. As we too often see, these people won't protect our children from pedophiles and other things and they need to get it right, yet they bring forward many bills like this that I question. Did they get it right? Did they consult the stakeholders? I have to say on this that I don't think that it's right yet, that we need to do more thought on it and more research and, certainly, consult the local authorities on this for municipal elections. Why is the provincial government needing to step in? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar just referred to this as being an ongoing dispute between the province and the mayor of Calgary and the things that have gone on there. Again, we're trying to limit them.

One of the things, Mr. Chairman, that I always look at when we're passing new legislation and something that I deeply believe is that the proper role of government is to protect our freedoms, not protect us from freedoms. This, to me, is a bill that is protecting the government from freedoms. Overall, I realize the importance of laws and legislation and regulations, but we need to look at, you know, why we are doing this. Again, it's trying to limit those that want to run for office and constrain them in ways that I don't know that we need to do.

It's just a concern to me. It is addressed in here in several places in the bill, and these are areas where I agree. The important thing to me when people are running for office is the reporting of the money that was spent and the reporting of the money that the individual received and who it came from. That part of the legislation I very much agree with. Then after that, though, on the outside, you know, do all these other little details need to be in there that are there?

The area that I'm probably most concerned about is that when you're going up against an incumbent or a new area, often those other people do have a great deal of money. It's interesting. As I look around the world and see some of the great philanthropists, two of the individuals right now that I just have a world of respect for are Bill Gates and Warren Buffett and the work that they're doing in Africa. I think that they'll do more good than many, many nations all together will do with the wealth that they've acquired.

The relationship with Bill 9 here . . .

Ms Blakeman: Yeah. Try and get back. It's a long road. Start walking.

Mr. Hinman: Now, I'm surprised. Even you are questioning me on that.

These philanthropists want to do great work. I think that there are a lot of individuals in society who also realize that there are problems in government. They're willing to run. We've had an individual in Calgary who has spent a lot of money that we saw and know what he did. I just see no reason to restrict wealthy individuals who want to fund their own campaign, to say that you can only put out $10,000. The important thing is that it's accountable and that we know what money is being spent, that other candidates and stuff can counter that, and that it's an open and honest race.

Why? Because if someone has connections or perhaps has given political promises to thousands of people – and maybe only a few, but they have the influence over thousands of people – we can get a hundred thousand donations of $1,000. Yet if someone who has their own wealth – let's say that Warren Buffett or Bill Gates was living somewhere here in Alberta, and these are great philanthropists and felt, "I could do a good job," and they wanted to spend their money and not ask other people, why would we want to limit them and say, "You can't do that and spend your money"? I think that this is a flaw in the bill that we really need to address.

Again, going back to the principle of what government's basic role is, I think that is to protect our freedoms as citizens and how we want to interact or what we want to do in a community. That restriction on philanthropists and money: it shouldn't be restricted. Whether they want to spend it on trying to get elected or put a message out during an election, I don't think that that's wrong. What's critical – and this bill includes that – is, in fact, the openness or the accountability of where the money was spent.

On that, Mr. Chair, I would like to introduce an amendment to Bill 9, which amends sections 1(5) and (6)(b). I will wait for copies to be distributed, then.

The Chair: We will pause for the distribution of the amendment. This amendment now shall be known as A1.

Hon. member, please continue on amendment A1.

Mr. Hinman: Okay. Thank you, Mr. Chair. I am proposing to strike out section 1(5), the candidate self-funded election campaign. Secondly, I am proposing an amendment to section 1(6)(b), which amends the maximum amount of self-funds a campaigner can contribute to their own campaign. The purpose of this amendment is to strike the $10,000 limit and recognize that self-funding is not a campaign contribution. This means that a candidate can contribute an unlimited amount of money to their own campaign during an election year.

Mr. Chair, some might argue that this amendment excludes a candidate from filing a disclosure statement on the amount to which they fund their own campaign, but this is not the case. Section 147.11(7) and the proposed section 147.4(1)(c) state that a candidate is required to disclose "the total amount of money paid by the candidate out of the candidate's own funds." Quite simply, I believe that if a candidate has enough money to fund their own campaign and wishes to spend over $10,000 of their own money, they should be free to do so. What's important, though, is that they need to show accountability on where this funding is being put.

Again, when the Member for Edmonton-Riverview was talking yesterday about the problems of evil and them trying to get in and cause problems, there are also those who are for the good. [interjections] You brought up the constant: we need to be on guard. Again, to paraphrase Edmund Burke, all good people have to do is nothing in order for evil to flourish. To me that's a very true statement. That's what we as legislators come in here for, to try and, you know, increase the safety and the prosperity of our community and to get rid of the derelicts. The people that are causing problems we want to eliminate, but we would not ever want to limit philanthropists and their money and the good things that they want to do in our society. One of those things that they might want to do is run for office.

Now, I realize that this is a two-edged sword. You can say: well, a corrupt individual can also now spend an unlimited amount of money. That is true. But the important part and why I support the other parts is that the openness and accountability of where that money is spent, to me, is what is critical. The population here in Alberta, we're not ignorant of the facts, and if the information is presented in front of us, I have great trust in the people of Alberta to elect those individuals. Like I say, for those who are running against such a candidate, whether they be good or perceived as bad, the critical point is: are they being accountable on where the funds came from and where they're being spent? To me, we don't need near the restrictions that we see in this bill in saying how much can come in and whatnot.

Again, I spoke also a little bit earlier about it, that, you know, it seems kind of ironic that as MLAs we can receive through the loopholes of legislation $15,000 a year into our campaign.

An Hon. Member: What?

Mr. Hinman: Okay. I'll rephrase that. The way that the legislation is written, an MLA or someone who wants to run to be an MLA can receive $15,000 a year from a contributor. [interjection] Yes. It's the regulations. We can call it what we want, but we write the regulations to have those things allowed, so why would we not allow that at the municipal level? Especially on the fact that many municipal people run in a much larger area than we ourselves are running to represent, yet we're restricting the amount of money that's coming in to them.

I just feel that we need to take a couple of steps back and look at the reality and realize that one shoe doesn't fit all. Let's at least be fair. If people can contribute $15,000 to a political party that can then be directed to an individual's campaign and $30,000 in an election year, why would we limit someone at the municipal level and say, "Well, we're allowed to, but you're not"? I see that as a little bit hypocritical in that area, so I'd like to level the playing field and ensure that all people have that.

Once again, the purpose of this amendment, though, is to ensure that someone that wants to give back to their society, they don't want to ask other people to support them, they've been very blessed, they're wealthy, and they'd like to run and to put that choice forward to the people in our community – I think it's critical that we accept this amendment and go forward and realize that this will actually enhance and perhaps allow people that want to run that otherwise wouldn't because they're not going to go out and ask people to make those contributions, yet they themselves would be willing to give of it. We should allow this.

I'll sit down and listen to the response on this amendment.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I've had the privilege of serving at both the provincial and the local level, and I'm going to speak a little bit about this amendment, particularly (b)(1.1), the addition of "money paid by a candidate out of the candidate's own funds for the purposes of the candidate's election campaign is not a campaign contribution," et cetera.

In fact, I think the hon. member that spoke is looking through the glass at the wrong end. It is not important to conduct an election for the benefit of the candidate. It is important to conduct an election for the benefit of the voter and for the voting public, and the voting public can be highly influenced by a disparate display of how the candidates are presented.

Mr. Chairman, if the one that has been privileged to invest a million or several funds on their behalf has been able to saturate the media in such a way that they have been able to get elected and the other candidates have not been able to get that same display of media influence, at the end of the day if the one with the greater display of influence through the media or any other source is able to get elected, you are ill advised as another candidate to cry foul, especially if your voting capacity has been that much less. Challenging the vote at that time is going to be very difficult to do because, obviously, the one that has had the most influence in the media has been able to display that they have won.

Then it could be construed by the voting public that the only person or persons that will be elected are those that are able to fund that kind of an election. What the hon. member is suggesting is that the only thing that's important is how you display how you dealt with that money. But when a candidate comes forward and presents that money, as long as the candidate presents that money, it opens the door for the candidates themselves to gather all kinds of monies from their friends and family and put it through because where that source of money has come from is not important in this amendment. Rather, what this amendment suggests is that as long as I put it forward as a candidate, that's all that matters.

I think what we're trying to do is not establish a playing field that benefits the candidate. We're trying to establish a playing field that benefits the electorate in such a way that the electorate is free to choose, unfettered by undue influence which, in my view, this amendment suggests.

Mr. Chairman, I've gone through several elections time and time again from 1977, over 30 years' worth of elections. It could be too long. But one of the things I'm going to tell you is this. At the local level – and all politics are local – they look very carefully at how clearly one displays how they present themselves.

I think there would be huge distaste if a philanthropist or anybody else with excessive means was able to saturate in a way that others could not to the local media or to the voter. I think they would be offended, not necessarily just by that candidate's capacity but by the people like us that would enable a rich person, regardless of where those funds have come from – a rich person – to better their lot in life or their influence over the electorate over anybody else. That, Mr. Chairman, in this democratic society runs contrary to all the moral and ethical principles that I've always understood good government prevails to provide.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I certainly do want to speak on this amendment, that's put forward by the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, because I found much to object to in his speech, quite frankly, and I find much to object to in this amendment.

I share a municipal background with the hon. minister of finance. We served in municipal government in the greater Edmonton region at the same time, so my experiences are similar to hers. Having dealt with some of these issues myself over the course of four terms on Edmonton city council, I can tell you that this amendment would in fact make the situation very, very difficult.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore seems to believe that it is inherently preferable to have people with great wealth representing the citizens in a municipal council and perhaps also in other orders of government. He talked about people who are blessed to be wealthy, that we want them to serve and so on, and then in the next breath he talked about eliminating the derelicts. I don't really know what he meant by that, but it certainly didn't sound good to my ears because I might be considered by some here to be a derelict to be eliminated.

I have fought all throughout my political career for the right of ordinary people to participate in our political process and to represent the ordinary people who elect them. It's something that I find, you know, is very much part of the reason that I got involved in politics in the first place. Everybody from all walks of life has a right to participate in politics and to be elected to political office. In fact, it should be encouraged. Many occupations are overrepresented in politics, lawyers being the most obvious example. There are fairly few lawyers among the population, but there are lots of bus drivers, there are lots of nurses, there are lots of teachers, there are lots of construction workers, there are lots of workers in the arts, and they do not have the same level of representation in the halls of power in whatever order of government you're looking at.

What the hon. member is proposing and what he is saying gives a huge advantage to those people with wealth because they get a special exemption. They can spend their own money and as much of it as they wish, but people who don't have that money cannot because they are restricted in their ability to raise funds by the rest of the restrictions in this act, which, in my view, are justified. It creates a special advantage for those who have considerable wealth.

This is based, quite frankly, on the system we have right now in the United States. This is exactly the exemption that exists in the very limited sorts of restrictions and regulations of campaign financing in the United States. The issue of money has ruined American politics and has turned it from something that once represented the people of the United States into something that is beholden to special interests, where politicians spend almost all of their time raising money and in which people with great wealth call the shots. The exemption around personal contributions has led to the case in the United States where most of the politicians in that country are millionaires or billionaires.

I think I saw a report that showed – and I may be overstating this slightly but not by much – that almost every single member of the United States Senate is a millionaire or a billionaire. The ordinary people of that country have been excluded from the political process because, as the hon. minister of finance was saying . . .

An Hon. Member: Intergovernmental affairs.

Mr. Mason: Oh, sorry. They switched them, didn't they? Yeah, intergovernmental affairs.

She said, you know, that money has a real influence on the results of elections. You just have to look at them over there and us back in this corner to realize the importance of money in elections. That's why it's an important part of democratic reform to start trying to level the playing field so that it's the ideas and the character of the candidates that determine the results and not the people that support them.

What I want to say in the strongest possible terms is that I believe that we should reject this amendment. This is an antidemocratic amendment that is dressed up in the rhetoric of democracy, and it's exactly the opposite of what it purports to be. This is freedom for millionaires, and it is undemocratic for the rest of us.

Mr. Chairman, I urge all hon. members to oppose this amendment. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm going to speak very briefly on this amendment. I don't want to extend this debate, actually. I think it's really important for the municipalities that we pass this bill. Really, this is a special exemption but in drag, if I may use the vernacular of the fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre, because that's what it is. It's purported to help everyone but really just helps a very few people. To me the essence of democracy is that the elected representatives are a mirror to the people in our society. This amendment would make it very, very difficult for a number of individuals in this Assembly to be able to get elected.

To me it is a sign of your success as an individual member to be able to get other people to support you financially. Frankly, I've never put any money into a campaign because I think it's about whether I can garner that support from outside, and if I can't, then I don't deserve to be here. I find unlimited self-financing really just opens the door to have this become an even more exclusive enclave than it is. The likelihood that we would have gender representation, racial representation, religious representation in this House, even differences of sexual orientation, becomes much more muted than what we already have. I would argue that what we've got here is not exactly a mirror holding up to our current society.

So I will not be supporting this amendment. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore on amendment A1.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Certainly some interesting discussion being brought forward and some need for some clarification. I think that I would start off that very much the reason why I've brought this amendment is for the public good. I believe in a level playing field, so I guess the question that one would have to ask, with the discussion that's going on here, is that if someone has worked hard, has been ingenious in his area and earned a lot of money, and they've said that, well, your punishment is that you're not allowed to use it.

You know, in some parts of the world it's very difficult to have a choice on a vehicle. "No. This is the only one that we build. This is what you have to have." Whereas, in North America people with wealth have been able to choose and buy as they please.

It's limiting freedoms that I'm speaking about. It's interesting that the minister of intergovernmental affairs has said that, you know, it's not in the best interest of the people. I would very much take that on the other side. It's the other way around. We want people to have that opportunity if they so can. I didn't say that the money didn't matter. It very much matters, and receiving money from people and then using it in your campaign without declaring it would be against this act. So it wouldn't be family members and stuff giving people money and being able to put it in that way. The tracing of where that money came from is critical – it's in this bill – and it's also critical where the money was spent. I don't think that she's accurate on that.

I find it very interesting, especially sitting on this side. I think that if you go back to my first election that I ran, people said: "Oh, you can never go up against the big Tory party and win. It's just an impossibility. Don't waste your time. Don't waste your money and other people's." So I ran a campaign that was very fiscally responsible and was able to win. It's not all about money.

The hon. member also mentioned, and I agree, that people are astute. If we have someone that people consider corrupt or they don't appreciate the way they're spending a lot of money, I don't believe that our local citizens are so foolish as to say: "Oh, this is wonderful. We'll vote for him."

If you actually go back and look through the municipal records, there have been a lot of individuals who have spent an awful lot of money compared to other ones, and they weren't successful. It's not all about money. I've never spent more money than those that I've been up against, referring to the government, the Tory-nominated candidates. So you can't say: oh, look how much money they spent, and they won. I do very much agree with the idea she says: well, you know, if they spend enough money and they saturate the airwaves and the paper and everything else, what chance do you have?

If, in fact, this government really wants to do something and we want to create a level playing field, then what we should do is pass legislation that actually limits the amount of money that can be spent on each citizen that you're trying to get votes from. That would make far more sense to me, to ensure there's a level playing field, to limit it and say, "Well, you can only spend $5 per voter," rather than saying that you can't spend your own money. Again, it's looking at the situation and what the real problem is here.

I guess perhaps it was a poor choice of words when I used the word "derelict." I was thinking more of a huge ship that's taking on water and sinking and is not being of a lot of value than of the human nature. What I mean is those people that are less than quality citizens. People realize that, you know, there are some shady deals going on. Like I say, I don't think that the citizens are so naive as to not be able to detect that, especially when there's an obscene amount of money being spent on a campaign. It doesn't mean that they're necessarily going to get it out there, yet it's important that often we can put out a message to the people. So I just don't see that that's needed.

Again, talking about the undue influence of the money being spent by a party, I mean, we can just look at the provincial elections and the enormous spread between the amounts of money. So if, in fact, we want to do anything, let's limit it, then – you know what? – to the lowest common denominator. We check with each candidate and say, "How much money do you have to spend?" and limit everybody to that. That wouldn't be the freedoms that we want. It's, like I say, a concern to me.

The other thing is that I did not say: those with great wealth. I said those that had great wealth, the opportunity to use it if they so desire. I am not an individual of great wealth. Again, I came in; I ran on very tight budgets to get in here. There are those with money who might want to try and buy the airwaves. There are those that, you know, want to put in the effort, the sweat equity, to actually meet the people they're representing. Who should we choose? I believe it's those that have put in the sweat equity, that they meet at the door, that they know. I think that's represented by many of the people in here. They didn't get in because of the amount of money that they spent. It's because of the people that they met, the concerns that they were able to address, the sincerity of the individuals, and the ideas that they had to solve the problems of the people that they met with. I believe in a free and democratic society. That would make the difference. One of the benefits of municipal elections is that people know when those dates are coming up, so they can campaign on that. It's an area to look at.

I think that my motion has been taken in the wrong way. This fear that someone that has more money is going to beat me: I don't think there would be too many people in the opposition that would even run if that was the case because of the intimidation of the war chest that the governing party has in each of their constituencies as well as the deep pockets that the party has as a whole. Like I say, if spending money is wrong and we're saturating the airwaves and everything else, then we should look at legislation that actually limits the amount of money that a campaign can spend on the citizens that actually have the ability to vote, if that's what we're wanting to look at is caps. Perhaps that is something that's of value to look at to ensure that we have a level playing field.

That's really what this is all about, a level playing field, yet not saying that. Too often we have this mentality. I believe in raising the bar and having a standard, but I have a real problem on lowering the bar, saying that we have to lower the bar and prohibit this from going over. That's what we're doing. We're lowering the bar for individuals that may want to spend their own money on what I call a very worthy cause. Let the citizens make that decision.

Full disclosure is the key. Where did the money come from? How is the money spent? Again, the most important thing when it comes to municipal elections, provincial elections, and federal elections is the accountability clause. Here again, to me, the major flaw that we have with democracy here in Canada is that there is no accountability or next to zero accountability after someone is elected, that day after they can change their colours, they can change their party, they can change whatever they want, and there's no accountability to the people. [interjections]. That would be correct.

What we need is recall. I'll always campaign on recall and accountability. Eventually one day I believe that that law will come into effect here in the province of Alberta.

The Chair: Hon. member, we're talking about amendment A1.

Mr. Hinman: There's so much noise that I couldn't hear you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: We are talking about amendment A1, that you introduced.

Mr. Hinman: That is correct. Some people are caught up in movie actors and things, and that's fine, but we'll get back to: do we want to limit the freedoms of individuals? If we want to limit them, the real way is accountability, and that is about how much money is spent, where it's spent, and where that money came from. That's the important part in this area.

I'll listen to see if there are any other questions that people might want to bring forward on this, and we'll have the question.

Hon. Members: Question.

The Chair: Seeing no other hon. member wishing to speak on amendment A1, the chair shall now call the question.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Chair: Now we go back to the bill, Bill 9. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I just want to make a few comments with respect to this. I've also had discussions with municipal officials who have had concerns with this particular piece of legislation. I want to just raise a few questions.

I think one of the issues that is clarified, that I think is very important, is the question of volunteer work provided to a candidate. In my view, political campaigns ought to be based not on money but on the work of volunteers. Someone who works for their community and is consistently trying to improve the quality of life for the citizens and to improve the communities that they represent is most likely to have people who are prepared to come forward and work on their behalf. To allow any suggestion that volunteer work has to be assigned a value and calculated on the books and limited in some way by legislation I think is wrong. So I want to say that I particularly think that's an important aspect.

The limit on campaign contributions I think is very important. I want to say that the biggest problem, in my view, getting back to the question of money and its corrosive influence on politics, that I have seen is money from the development industry in municipal politics, especially in the big cities. The development community has millions, if not billions, of dollars at stake in decisions of municipalities. For example, a simple zoning decision on a piece of land can increase its value four or five times, so there are huge financial stakes for developers and landowners in municipal politics.

Now, I believe municipal politics is mostly about land. It's mostly about land and its uses, its plans, and services to property. So it's natural that those that have great financial stakes in those things would pay a great deal of attention to it. Not having limits on campaign contributions gives a disproportionate amount of influence to developers in terms of municipal politics, and I think we ought to go further than this bill does and eliminate developer financing of municipal elections altogether, and I think you can eliminate lots of other sources. We've certainly taken the position at the provincial level that corporate donations as well as union donations should be eliminated, that contributions should come from individual citizens and citizens of the jurisdiction. So having an opportunity to limit campaign contributions is very important.

We've already dealt with candidates' contributions to their own campaigns. I certainly think that the limit that's included in this piece of legislation, this act, in terms of individual contributions to your own campaign is still too high, but it leaves a question of what you do with deficits once you've run a campaign, and I'm not convinced that the bill deals with that adequately. With respect to that, I think that there were some things in the previous bill that created the concern in the first place. It was Bill 203, the Local Authorities Election (Finance and Contribution Disclosure) Act, 2009, which was passed, and it was perhaps a little bit hasty.

I think that by and large this act corrects the problems that existed there, but I do think that it's very important for democratic reform in our province and elsewhere that we establish some real, clear principles about election financing, we recognize the role that finance plays in the outcome of the political process, and we make sure that it's based on citizens rather than on special interests and that everyone in the public has a clear idea of who is contributing to whom.

Provincially I don't think we're there yet in this particular piece of the legislation. We still have, for example, a failure of the government to deal with the whole question of leadership campaign donations. We've got the situation where the Premier and the minister of finance – I mean the real minister of finance; I don't mean the minister of intergovernmental affairs this time – have still not completely disclosed the sources of their funds from their leadership campaigns, nor has the leader of the Wildrose Alliance been prepared to disclose where she got her money from in terms of her leadership campaign. This is a huge loophole, and it will allow special interests to get in there and in an insidious way, and you never know how they've influenced the decision-makers. That's something that has to be dealt with.

In my view, in the end putting some overall spending limits on campaigns, as has been suggested by the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, is probably a good idea. That levels the playing field even further. But in the meantime we certainly don't want large, large contributions from special interests to dominate it.

Mr. Chairman, I just want to indicate that on balance I think that this bill repairs some of the errors that may have crept in when the Legislature adopted Bill 203. I'm pleased to see that the government has been listening to municipal governments. I do believe very, very strongly that the municipal order of government needs to be respected and consulted when any changes affecting its operations are made. That didn't happen in Bill 203, and I regret that very much, but I think that that aspect has been corrected by the government in bringing forward this bill, Bill 9.

As a result, on balance I think that it's a step forward, and I'm prepared to support it, Mr. Chairman. Thank you very much for the time.

The Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It would appear that there's going to be more debate and perhaps more amendments to this bill. In the interests of making progress, I would move that the committee now rise and report so we can move on to some other items.

[Motion carried]

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 9. Mr. Speaker, I'd wish to table copies of all the amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Speaker: All agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Welcome back.

Let us pray. Give to each member of this Legislature a strong and abiding sense of the great responsibility laid upon us. Give us a deep and thorough understanding of the needs of the people we serve. Amen.

Hon. members and ladies and gentlemen, I am now going to invite Mr. Paul Lorieau to lead us in the singing of our national anthem. I would invite all to participate in the language of one's choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly a wonderful group of 30 grade 6 students from Westbrook elementary school, located in my constituency of Edmonton-Whitemud. Accompanying the students is their teacher, Michelle Huot, and parent helper Juliana Shim. This group of students is here for the whole week participating in the School at the Legislature program, which we just celebrated recently in this Chamber. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I'd ask them to please rise and receive the typical warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 13 bright and dedicated students from St. Matthew Lutheran school in Stony Plain. They're joined by teacher Gary Skoye and parents Donna Panchuk, Ellen Hoffman, and Richard Archer-shee. This class is here today to learn more about the workings of the Alberta Legislature. They're seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask that they be given the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As we salute our volunteers across the province this week during National Volunteer Week, it gives me great pleasure to rise today on behalf of the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly four individuals who exemplify the spirit of volunteerism. These individuals are Stars of Alberta volunteer awards recipients. This program recognizes extraordinary Albertans whose volunteer achievements have contributed to the well-being of their community and fellow community members. I'd like to introduce Lorne and Phyllis Anderson from Stony Plain, who are the foundation of the volunteer program in continuing care at WestView health centre. If they could rise, please. I'd like to introduce as well Ms Tessie Oliva from Edmonton, who is a well-respected leader in the Filipino community and in the larger multicultural community in Alberta, and, finally, Mr. Bill Diachuk from Sherwood Park, our friend and former MLA and minister, who donates much of his time to a variety of community organizations throughout the Edmonton region as well as internationally. I would ask them to all rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Webber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you an accomplished businessman, a constituent, and a friend, Mr. Ravinder Minhas. Mr. Minhas is the president and CEO of Mountain Crest Brewing and the founder of the Minhas Craft Brewery, so he's got pretty "damn good beer." He has many accolades to his name, some of which include being awarded the Alberta centennial medal, being named one of Canada's Top 40 under 40, and standing as a semifinalist for the Ernst & Young entrepreneur of the year award. I saw Ravinder last Thursday. I had a great visit with him. It's good to see you, Ravinder. I ask that Mr. Minhas please rise and accept the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

OQP on Montana Access Channel

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Legislature has truly gone international. I've had occasion in the course of my duties as co-chair of the Montana-Alberta Bilateral Advisory Council to travel to various cities in Montana and was recently surprised to note that, on the Montana Access channel, question period from the Alberta Legislature is televised for everyone to see. A year ago the directors of the Montana Access channel met with me when I was in Helena and asked about our televised proceedings. I explained that question period was televised, and I gave them our communication contacts, and it is happening now every night at around 10:45.

Mr. Speaker, there's a significant difference between our Legislature process and the Legislature process in the United States. For one thing, all Legislature proceedings, whether in their House of Representatives or their Senate or any of their committee hearings, are broadcast live. Residents in Montana can tune into the Access channel and watch and hear everything that is done in the Legislature from gavel to gavel. I guess we have something a bit similar in our video and audio access to the Legislature and certain committee meetings, but they're not broadcast the same way on television other than question period.

Mr. Speaker, Americans find our question period fascinating. The Americans I speak with are intrigued with the unicameral system we have and our British traditions as well. One thing they also ask about are our rules for House sittings. I've explained that we sit every year in the spring for up to 60 days and in the fall for about 20 days. In Montana the Legislature sits for 45 days once every two years. Some Montanans feel and have expressed that their Legislature should sit for only two days once every 45 years.

As I said, Mr. Speaker, there's such a difference, and perhaps that is one reason why our system is so fascinating. Our audience is indeed larger than some expect it to be. It's true that people do watch question period, and we should be proud – well, maybe sometimes – that people actually do.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

An Alberta Liberal Government

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. An Alberta Liberal Government. The cornerstones of an Alberta Liberal government are inclusivity, accountability, transparency, and balance. Our central pillar is sustainability. The most important resource to an Alberta Liberal government is our human resource. While our nonrenewable resources have served us well in the past and with collaborative oversight will continue to serve us well into the future, the value of these commodities is set externally by global demand, over which we have little control. What is within our control is the maximization of our human resource potential.

From conception to our final shuffle off this mortal coil every Albertan should be regarded as an investment opportunity. The investment begins with prenatal health support availability and concludes with being able to face death with dignity. Early diagnosis, whether of disease or disability, improves treatment or, at the very least, management of the challenges presented.

Throughout life, access to education is a key predictor and promoter of success. An Alberta Liberal government will make funding for optional half-day kindergarten a priority, followed by the secured investment in optional full-day kindergarten. An Alberta Liberal government views investment in First Nations and immigration support as a key component in achieving economic stability. Working collaboratively, an Alberta Liberal government will reach out through the development of respectfully relevant curriculum to engage students in affordable learning opportunities from junior kindergarten through postsecondary graduation to the promotion of lifelong learning accessibility. An Alberta Liberal government believes that a sustained investment in our human resource potential will result in predictably high returns both economically and in our overall quality of life.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

National Volunteer Week

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Throughout the province, in every community, there are thousands of humble Albertans strengthening our communities with their common act, volunteerism. Every year tens of thousands of Albertans from all walks of life give their time and energy in the hope of building a better and more caring community for us all. Their efforts provide valued assistance for those with physical or mental illnesses, new Canadians, children, seniors, and families. These wonderful and generous people do amazing work and help so many others. We see these people every day, volunteering in our schools, on the playground, in our hospitals and shelters, and on our children's sports teams. These individuals are the true meaning of community spirit.

This week is National Volunteer Week, a time when the spotlight deservedly shines on these humble heroes and shows just how much their efforts contribute to the quality of life we enjoy in this province. I would like to ask this Assembly for its unanimous support in recognizing April 18 to 24 as National Volunteer Week in Alberta. Mr. Speaker, may this time be a reminder of how we as individuals all play a vital role in our communities.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Armenian Genocide

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On April 24 of every year the first genocide of the 20th century, the brutal annihilation of over 1 and a half million Armenian men, women, and children, is remembered around the world. The genocide of innocent Armenian people and the failure of the world to recognize and condemn the actions of the government responsible for this atrocity inspired Adolf Hitler to commit the horrific massacre of 6 million Jewish men, women, and children. Given that the world did not hold the perpetrators of the Armenian genocide accountable for their crimes, Adolf Hitler reasoned that the world would not hold him accountable, and he proceeded to commit unspeakable crimes against humanity with impunity. "After all," Hitler said, "who remembers the Armenian genocide?"

Every year in April we also remember the Jewish Holocaust and in November we remember the Ukrainian famine and genocide, known as the Holodomor, because it is important to remember.

On April 21, 2004, the Canadian government recognized the Armenian genocide. This recognition by the Canadian government is a monumental step towards eliminating future genocide. As long as nations in the world continue to deny genocides and to accept alterations to the facts of history, we will face future systematic annihilations of entire cultures.

Mr. Speaker, it is not enough just to remember. We must also act. As we honour the memory of those who suffered in the many massacres that have darkened the history of the world, we can reaffirm a commitment to eliminate racism, violence, hatred, and persecution. We also can remember that hope survives amongst these atrocities. The world has been blessed with many accomplishments of the Armenian, Jewish, and Ukrainian people in science, medicine, education, arts, and other professions. Today in the province of Alberta we enjoy the many gifts and contributions of those from the many different cultures and countries who have helped make this province what it is today and the world a better place.

Mr. Speaker, if anyone in the history of the world should ever ask again, "Who remembers the annihilation of the Armenian people?" we can say, "We remember."

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Calgary Stampede

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Preparations are in full swing for the 2010 edition of the greatest outdoor show on Earth. From July 9 to 18 Stampede Park will become the third-largest city in Alberta as over 1 million visitors take part in the festivities. The Calgary Stampede will bring economic spinoffs to the entire province in the neighbourhood of $350 million.

People come from all over the planet to experience this authentic western showcase. Whether it's the afternoon rodeo or one of the Rangeland Derby or grandstand shows or one of the hundreds of other activities, there is truly something for everyone.

One of the new events this year that's bound to be a crowd favourite is Cowboy Up. It's an extreme cowboy competition in which the horse and rider run an obstacle course designed to replicate the ranch environment at incredible speeds. With must-see events like this, the best bet is to plan your Stampede experience with the new online tools to get the most out of this incredible celebration.

The Calgary Stampede is much more than just a 10-day event. The organization is active 365 days a year as it invests over $2 million annually into youth and education programs which focus on future leaders while promoting and preserving western heritage and values. At the end of May Stampede Park again will host 4-H on Parade, the largest event of its kind in Canada. Over 600 young competitors will be coming to town.

Thanks to funding from the government of Alberta the expansion of BMO Centre was completed last June, realizing the dream of the 2009 WorldSkills competition, which benefited the entire province. Truly, investing in the Stampede is investing in the community.

Just five years into its 20-year development plan, the Calgary Stampede continues to execute its vision of building a world-class year-round gathering place in the heart of Calgary, and I encourage everyone to come on down and be a part of it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Seniors' Service Awards

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize the thousands of volunteers in Alberta who make our communities a better place to live. April 19 to 25 is National Volunteer Week in Canada. I think it's important that we take time to recognize the many dedicated volunteers who exemplify the true can-do spirit of Alberta.

As the recently appointed chair of the Seniors Advisory Council for Alberta one of my first tasks was to chair the nomination committee for the minister's seniors' service awards. I was truly inspired as I learned about the many wonderful volunteers who provide invaluable services to our seniors. These Albertans will be honoured at a special ceremony in June at Government House as part of the week-long Seniors' Week celebrations taking place across the province from June 7 to 13.

Volunteers are a diverse group that span the spectrum of age, nationality, and area of giving, but they all have one thing in common, the desire to make a difference in the lives of others. In doing so, they strengthen our country and the many communities across our province. Today I encourage all members of this Assembly as well as all Albertans not only to thank volunteers for their contribution but to consider how we, too, can volunteer.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

PNWER Energy Horizons Institute

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A couple of weeks ago myself and several other hon. members of this Assembly completed the Pacific NorthWest Economic Region Energy Horizons Institute course.

The purpose of this institute is to educate legislators on the North American energy infrastructure and delivery system. This included delving into complex issues associated with electricity, natural gas, petroleum infrastructure and regulations, and economic and environmental policies and regimes as well as the interdependencies and interconnectedness of the North American energy sector. The requirements of this course were that each participant participate in 60 hours of instructional time as well as four webinars.

Mr. Speaker, the Pacific NorthWest Economic Region and the National Conference of State Legislatures partnered with the University of Idaho and the U.S. Department of Energy to create the institute, which is also supported by Alberta's Energy department and various other industry organizations. I cannot speak for my colleagues, but for me this was a very valuable experience. Even though I have a previous educational background in energy economics, this was certainly very helpful in the emerging trends that we have to deal with here at the Legislature.

Energy policy is very important to our economic competitiveness, Mr. Speaker, and the emergence of environmental policy as a global priority means that legislators and policy-makers must understand these issues to make responsible and informed policy decisions. This is very useful information that I received at the institute, and it will definitely help as we discuss these issues as they come before the Legislature.

I hope that all hon. members will sometime and in some form benefit from such education. I feel very fortunate myself to have been able to participate in such an informative course.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Public Accounts Committee

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In the last couple of weeks we've seen the Tories lobby for undermining the Auditor General. We've seen them attempt to neuter Public Accounts, one of the most important legislative committees that exists. This committee is by definition to provide a public account of the spending and actions of the government of Alberta. Reporters, columnists, and bloggers across the province wrote over the weekend that Alberta is facing a, quote, doomsday because of this decision to neuter the opposition chair of Public Accounts. To the Acting Premier: does the Premier support the decision to allow the vice-chair the ability to veto all correspondence by the chair of Public Accounts?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Premier neither supports nor doesn't support decisions that are made by a committee of this Legislature because it is a committee of this Legislature that reports to this Legislature. I'm sure they will have more discourse over that in the future.

Dr. Swann: Well, it's very hard to believe that such a major draconian decision wasn't in the apparent awareness of the Premier. Again to the Acting Premier: does the Premier honestly expect the opposition and the public to believe this?

Mr. Horner: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, the committee meets. It has a chair; it has a vice-chair; it has members of all parties. They are open to discuss a number of issues. The Premier isn't briefed nor does he brief the chair before those meetings happen.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, does the Acting Premier agree that it was proper for government members to do this, to, in the words of the Government House Leader, quote, slap the wrists, end quote, of the chair of Public Accounts?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, there was no attempt, in my view, and not being a member of that committee, it's difficult for me to give my opinion as to whether or not I agree with the decision of that committee. I'm sure that that committee had very strenuous debate about the motion that was put before them. In fact, I'm sure that it was written in Hansard, as the hon. member rightly knows, and I'm sure that they will probably have further discussion about a number of issues that that committee is responsible for.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Education Funding

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This government constantly boasts about how much better off Alberta is in weathering the recession while refusing to honour teacher contracts, repair aging schools, or adequately support special-needs education. To the Minister of Education: if this government isn't willing to carry out its educational obligations such as bargaining in good faith with our teachers, will you at least provide greater autonomy to locally elected schools boards so that they can provide for their needs?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I don't know where this hon. member has been, but we have not breached any contracts. We have not breached anything in faith with the school boards or the teachers in the province. In fact, we've totally honoured the contracts. What we haven't done this year is budgeted for a 3 per cent increase to the school boards' budgets, and I've done that in the context of talking with school boards about how we work on a longer term plan to deal with the pressures faced by school boards in meeting their negotiated obligations as well as looking at how we better utilize the resources within the system.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With the combined Calgary school board infrastructure debt now exceeding a billion dollars, why is the minister not taking advantage of the reduced labour and material costs by investing a portion of the multibillion-dollar sustainability fund to correct a decade of government neglect?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member will well know, you can only spend the sustainability fund once. You can't spend it over and over again on every single priority he wants to bring forward. I would be the first to argue that school infrastructure is an important priority for us. We've moved forward on the alternative procurement program 1, where schools are going to be available even earlier than was anticipated and available for opening this fall in both Calgary and Edmonton, nine schools in each jurisdiction. That's pretty good. ASAP 2 is progressing towards a very quick announcement, indicating we've made good use of resources, a good use of the public purse in putting schools where we need them.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Swann: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Given that our most vulnerable students are those with special needs, why is this government fostering greater uncertainty by freezing their per-pupil funding grants and recklessly abandoning a coding system for special-needs children?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member should go back and read the good report that was done by a task force chaired by the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, which clearly sets out a change in direction that's needed with respect to how we assure that every child in Alberta is included in the education system and that every child in Alberta has the opportunity to maximize their own personal potential. That takes some work to move. Some people would move it ahead of that process, but this is not an easy process. It's going to take time. It's going to take some work to implement. It doesn't behoove anybody to jump ahead of the process, to talk about removing coding or making changes, those sorts of things. Funding is, of course, important, and funding is being provided.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Occupational Health and Safety Compliance

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Eight years ago a government press release announced major amendments to the Occupational Health and Safety Act that allowed for the publishing of names of employers with the best and worst safety performance in the province. Last week the Auditor General flagged a group of 63 employers who repeatedly broke workplace safety laws. To the minister of labour: why has the government failed to follow through on its commitment from eight years ago to publish the names of employers who repeatedly break workplace safety laws?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, thank you for that. The minister of labour: I wasn't sure exactly whom he was talking to.

Mr. Speaker, let me make this abundantly clear yet one more time to this House and for the benefit of anybody who is listening. I have made a very clear undertaking that I will be releasing not only that list of 63, that were randomly identified by the Auditor General, but I will also release a list that has perhaps between 500 and 600 employers, which we consider to be targeted employers, that we are keeping a close eye on. I will release a list of all employers and their statistics very shortly.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister. Given that eight years ago Bill 37 was introduced – there were amendments to the legislation – it's clear the government made a commitment to publish the names of bad employers who were breaking the law. Why has this government failed its commitment from eight years ago?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, unlike that member, I will not be dwelling on the past, but I will tell you what I am doing and what I have been doing since I became minister of this particular department. The moment I met with the Auditor General, which was some two months ago, I made it very clear to my department that we will be releasing the list. However, I want the list to be meaningful so that when you look up the name of your employer, you will be able to know how safe or unsafe your employer is. I simply will not throw a copy of the yellow pages onto your desk. I want the names of employers to have some meaningful information attached. It will be done.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government fails to enforce the law to protect workers. Again to the same minister: has the minister ordered any of the 63 employers who failed to comply with occupational health and safety orders to establish joint worker-management safety committees, and if not, will he do so now?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, one thing I can assure you of is that under this Premier's and my watch we will be making sure that occupational health and safety is a priority. It is obvious that I have made occupational health and safety a priority since that was one of the first instructions I gave to my department. Any employer in this province who chooses not to follow the Occupational Health and Safety Act will be dealt with accordingly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Cataract Surgery

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Earlier today I learned even more troubling information about the government's cataract surgery plan. We have now learned that some of the successful bidders who were given multimillion-dollar contracts to perform cataract surgeries are now trying to get out of their contracts. They did not understand how much work would be required, and they do not want other surgeons using their facilities. My question is to the minister of health. Mr. Minister, have you got knowledge of this development, and if so, what are you going to do about it?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I have not heard of that particular complaint or rumour or whatever it might be. What I can tell you, however, is that last week, having spoken to a number of ophthalmologists, I said that I would convene a meeting so that we could get everybody into the same room and talk some of these issues through just to take away any uncertainty that might exist and also provide some hope where it might be needed.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question again is to the minister. Since some of the doctors are suggesting that Alberta Health Services has not followed a proper bid and contract award system, will the minister ask the Auditor General to evaluate the cataract surgery contracts to get to the bottom of this matter immediately?

2:00

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, that's a pretty serious allegation. I don't know if it can be substantiated or not; we'll find out. The fact is that we had a very open, accountable, and transparent RFP process. That's a request for proposals. It closed on January 15. In addition to looking at the costs on a per procedure basis, it also included other issues such as the speed with which these surgeries could be done, the quality assurances that could be given, the safety of the patients, the recovery times based on previous engagements, and so on. So there's a lot that went into those contracts.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the minister of health. Given that Bill 11 requires that Alberta Health Services must disclose information on awarded contracts, will the minister table the complete cataract surgery RFP facility evaluation and terms of the winning bid so members of the Legislature can get to the bottom of this mess?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, whatever is in the legislation and doesn't violate the privacy laws I'd be happy to make available at the appropriate time.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

School Facilities in Beaumont

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. The town of Beaumont is rapidly growing, and their school can't keep up. They've lost their music and computer rooms to provide more classroom space, and they have one portable, but their school still is far too small. Now, grade 3 students carry their desks across the street every day to a fully liquor licensed facility, Club Beaumont, which they are using as classroom space. Why has the Education minister failed these children by refusing to include Beaumont in the three-year capital plan when a new school is obviously needed?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The situation in Beaumont is indeed one that I've been paying very careful attention to. I've instructed the department to work with the school boards serving Beaumont to try and find some early solutions with respect to the growth that's happened in that particular area and to work with us to find resolutions for those students not just this fall but in the longer term.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that their classroom, a community hall, is used for bingos and weddings at night and, therefore, the eight-year-old children are carrying their desks across a busy street twice a day, how can the Education minister possibly pretend that he is striking any kind of balance when children are left to study in a licensed hall because this government refuses to build a permanent classroom for them?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member dwells on the issue of licensing as if it had any relevance to the issue. What's really relevant to this issue is the students crossing the street on a daily basis and not having an appropriate facility for them to engage in in their school. We're working on that issue with the school boards involved and working very hard to try and find both the capital resources necessary to deal with that and working with them in terms of what their space requirements are in the immediate term and how we can maximize the use of the resources we put in so that they're not just stopgap, that they're available for the longer term.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I think we're finally getting somewhere with this minister.

Given that all these children are left to carry their belongings back and forth to a makeshift classroom and given that the government keeps saying that education is one of their top priorities, why won't the Education minister put his money where his mouth is and ensure that these kids have a properly equipped school for education so they're not doing this, Mr. Minister?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The picture that the hon.

member is holding up in violation of the rules as a prop was actually published sometime last fall, so he's very, very current on the issue.

Mr. Speaker, this is one of those challenges that we face. There's a challenge that we face. There's no question about it; I won't back away from it. We need school facilities in Beaumont, and we need school facilities in Airdrie, and I'm working to get those done.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Water Act Licences

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. The Auditor General's recent report drew special attention to issues regarding water, including a lack of monitoring, serious recurring instances of noncompliance, and an extreme backlog of applications for water licences. The bottom line: the government's systems are weak, and this increases the risk to drinking water, the ecosystems, and finally, use by agriculture and industry. To the Minister of Environment. The minister has repeatedly responded to concerns I've raised about cutting monitoring staff by saying that it's not a problem. Does the minister still stand by this claim?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think we're trying to compare apples and oranges in this particular instance. What the Auditor General's report refers to is the ability of our officials to have follow-up from the point of issuing a licence to then following up. In that regard we have accepted the recommendation of the Auditor General, and we will be putting it into play so that there are closer opportunities for checks and balances from the point of licences issued to the follow-up and compliance side.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that the Department of Environment cannot transfer a water licence until its noncompliance issues are rectified and given that 75 per cent of the backlog of unprocessed water applications are not current, relating directly to compliance issues, how is the minister going to rapidly deal with the backlog of over 3,500 water applications?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, the backlog that's referred to is a valid number. What is not clear in first reading is the fact that a number of these applications are unnecessarily open, I would suggest to you, because they haven't been closed. If that's confusing, I don't blame you for not understanding. But the fact of the matter is that applicants will apply, they'll be requested for further information or clarification, we never hear back from them, and then we have a file that's left open.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. And people wonder why we have an issue around water here.

Given that this administration has demonstrated a clear inability to monitor licence holders and, therefore, cannot assess levels of noncompliance, how can the minister even consider compounding these problems by introducing a water market?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, the fact that we are in the process now of reviewing our water allocation policy fits very well into the issues that were raised by the Auditor General. You have to remember that the process, that has been in place for a hundred-plus years, is one in which there was a presumption of unlimited resources of water. That presumption no longer applies. That's the reason why we are talking about reviewing the water allocation, and part of that review of water allocation will have to be a process whereby we can verify that the licence holders are withdrawing water that is appropriate to their licence.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Asia Pacific Trade

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta is working hard to tap into the huge economic potential in the attractive Asia Pacific region. However, recent reports have hinted that Canada missed an opportunity regarding a major free trade deal, the trans-Pacific partnership, or TPP. My first question is to the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. Why was Canada excluded from these negotiations?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Japan is also one other country that is endeavouring to become part of these negotiations. In the initial instance there hadn't been the robust interest of a number of countries to participate. Now that there is, the original countries haven't developed a way to re-enter into renegotiations or the addition of new members. So it's vitally important that our federal government engage and say: "All right. Although there hasn't been a process for adding these countries, we wish to be involved." We're joining another list, including Australia and Peru.

Mr. Rodney: My first supplemental is to the same minister. There must be a list of potential negative effects for Alberta if Canada is indeed excluded from the final deal. Can she give us some details and her thoughts and actions on exactly that?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, of course Canada, and Alberta in particular, wants to eliminate trade barriers, has been very anxious to see that free trade exists, and we believe very strongly that this has to be pursued. I should point out that we have had bilateral agreements with other countries. We'd like to see that engaged in in a larger dimension. We look with some degree of satisfaction to the addition, most recently, of an Australian consul in Alberta, showing the continued acceleration of trade with these other partners. We're hoping that we'll be able to see elimination of these barriers.

Mr. Rodney: My final question is to the same minister. Obviously, a sad conclusion would be to see Canada not involved in TPP negotiations at present, but if that indeed was the case, what other trade initiatives is this minister's ministry looking into?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, we're looking at several other opportunities with the European Union, but I should also point out that with our Premier and the Premiers of B.C. and Saskatchewan and a western partnership that we're following up on, we should soon see more expansion in Shanghai. That's targeted for about the middle of May. We're doing our best to develop other markets, looking still further beyond the EU to possible expansion of relations in Brazil and Morocco and in Ukraine as well.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Gravel Extraction Management

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. There are a number of proposals for new gravel mining projects currently on the table, including yet another proposal for mining in the Red Deer River aquifers and one at Wizard Lake. There are grim long-term environmental concerns, including contamination of groundwater, which affects drinking water, and loss of habitat for fish and wildlife and the negative effects on communities regarding recreation. To the Minister of Environment: when the province can't currently track the effect of the gravel industry on water in Alberta, why is new gravel extraction being allowed?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, to suggest that gravel extraction should be unilaterally stopped throughout the province is irresponsible. We build buildings, homes, offices, pave our streets, and build our roads with gravel. What we have to do is ensure that we mine gravel in a responsible way. That is why we have a strict set of guidelines that all gravel operations must abide by.

Ms Blakeman: Back to the same minister: when will this ministry finally step up and provide a strong legislative framework to ensure municipalities have the regulations and resources necessary to fully assess the impacts of a gravel mine on their environment?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, let's not forget: the role and responsibility of a municipality is a very valid one, and that is to deal with land use and land zoning. Until a municipality makes a decision with respect to the zoning and the land use in a particular area, then it's not appropriate for the provincial government and my ministry to interfere. At the end of the day, once a decision has been made to proceed, it's up to us to determine and ensure that that operation operates at minimal impact on the environment.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks. Back to the same minister: why does this ministry continue to take a this-is-not-our-problem approach to gravel mining approvals when they have such far-reaching and dramatic impacts on Alberta's environment and on water and water quality?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, I think I answered that question the first time around. It is the responsibility of municipalities to deal with land zoning issues. Once that issue has been dealt with, it is the very clear responsibility of Alberta Environment to ensure that the operation proceeds in such a way as to minimize the impact or, if necessary, protect the environment.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Immigration Fraud

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many people from around the globe are interested in immigrating to Canada and to Alberta in particular. They come for a better life, and they often want to share their fortune with their family members still back home. Unfortunately, there is a case in Calgary where an unscrupulous scam artist is taking money to assist with immigration and disappearing. My first question is the hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration. What programs are in place to make sure that families can sponsor their family members without the assistance of scam artists?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, of the member asking the question and now me answering the question, both are immigrants. I have to tell you that there are programs that are legitimate, and all Albertans and Canadians should know about them. Aside from the federal side, our province has the Alberta immigration nominee program, the family stream, which allows you to bring into Canada brothers, sisters, mothers, fathers, daughters, sons, and even nieces and nephews if they qualify. The ultimate issuance of a visa is by the federal government, but we do have a legitimate provincial program. I would strongly advise any applicant to familiarize themselves via the Internet or any other sources with the proper way of doing it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My next question is to the hon. Solicitor General. What action is your department taking to protect newcomers from this scammer?

Mr. Oberle: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's unfortunate that there always seems to be some fraud artist waiting to take advantage of somebody. My heart certainly goes out to these people. It's almost ironic. We just recognized Fraud Awareness Month and laid out a bunch of tools for people to be aware of fraud in our province. Fraud prevention is really probably the most powerful tool we have. That being said, we do fully investigate and prosecute every fraud event that's brought to our attention, and I would urge anybody that feels they're a victim of fraud to report it to the nearest police.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question is to the hon. Minister of Service Alberta. I understand that you are reviewing the regulations about immigration fees. What steps will you be taking to protect Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, currently we are having consultation with the public on ways to improve our employment agency regulations to make them even stronger. We do welcome input and feedback from Albertans, but it's important to note that it is illegal to charge a person a fee to secure work for them in Alberta. It's even more important that anyone with allegations of recruiter or employment agency issues please contact Service Alberta so we can check into them. That's why we are doing the consultation on this important issue.

Edmonton Remand Centre Admissions

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, last month the Solicitor General wisely reversed the decision to eliminate late-night admissions at the Edmonton Remand Centre and rely on police lock-up facilities to house offenders after an outcry from police and corrections personnel. To the Solicitor General. You indicated mid-March that this issue would be resolved almost immediately. I'd like to know what solution has been reached after a month's time.

Mr. Oberle: Well, Mr. Speaker, no solution has been reached right at the moment, which is why we are still operating overnight admissions and discharges, and we will not change until we've reached an agreeable solution with the police forces involved.

Mr. Hehr: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker. Although nighttime remand admissions have continued downsizing, they still occur at these understaffed and overcrowded institutions. Are you still planning to eliminate five or six guards at the Calgary and Edmonton remand centres? Is that option still on the table?

Mr. Oberle: We haven't made any changes until we've determined what we're going to do with overnight admissions and discharges, but we're not actually reducing guards on the floor. I'm not sure what the member is talking about.

Mr. Hehr: Given that you told me that you were going to have a reasonably quick decision made in regard to these late-night admissions, have you revised the timetable when something will be done on this issue, or are we going to continue to have overcrowding all through the summer months?

Mr. Oberle: Well, whether we have overnight admissions or discharges, Mr. Speaker, surely the member would recognize, has absolutely nothing to do with overcrowding in our facilities. We manage the levels of inmates very well in our facilities and move them around. We're doing a very good job there. It has nothing whatsoever to do with overcrowding.

Hospital Discharge Orders

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, the government has often stated that the health care system should always put patient needs first. However, I have heard suggestions that in some instances patients may have been discharged from hospitals on a Friday in order to free up acute-care beds for the weekend. My questions are for the Minister of Health and Wellness. Can the minister assure Albertans that decisions such as when to discharge a patient must always be done in the best interests of the patient and not as a result of financial matters?

Mr. Zwodzesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, let's be very clear. The policy about discharges is always in the interest of safety and patient care, and those decisions are not made by administrators. So if there are rumours like that, I would hope that everybody here would help correct them. Those discharge orders are only issued by qualified clinical personnel. That's a staple policy of this government and also of Alberta Health Services.

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, my second and final question for the minister is: given the concerns that I've been hearing, will the minister also assure the Assembly that the new code of professional conduct will not inhibit health care providers from raising their concerns about health care to either the minister or to other administrators in the health care system?

Mr. Zwodzesky: Mr. Speaker, I can assure everyone here that the new code of conduct is not about a set of rigid rules whatsoever. It's a set of policy statements and guidelines based on trust and respect and dignity and so on. In fact, the new code of conduct does not inhibit people from speaking out and raising concerns such as has been alluded to here.

The Speaker: The hon. member?

The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Cataract Surgery

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government has slammed the door on cataract patients. Unfortunately, their surgeons' fingers are caught in the door. There is no reason for us to wait any longer to fix the problem. Just open the door, and let the current accredited facilities continue to provide surgeries at the government's prescribed rate if they choose. Will the minister make this happen?

Mr. Zwodzesky: Mr. Speaker, what Alberta Health Services did was conduct a very open, transparent, public request for proposals, which closed on January 15. As a result of that, we've got a much better price for the same quality of care, and we've saved taxpayers $1.4 million, all of which is going right back into yet more cataract surgeries. There are a few issues that need to be talked about going forward, and that's why we're meeting on Saturday to discuss them.

Mr. Hinman: Mr. Speaker, it was closed, but it's never been disclosed. That's what we need here.

Given that patients are extremely frustrated and confused about where to go or when to get their surgeries, will the minister do the right thing and provide a 60-day extension to current accredited facilities until this government-created problem can be fixed?

Mr. Zwodzesky: Mr. Speaker, government did not create any problem whatsoever. What has been created are some wonderful opportunities for people to get on the list quicker and to have their surgeries dealt with more efficiently, more effectively in some cases. At the same time, I've got a guarantee from Alberta Health Services that all the patients that were scheduled in some of the so-called nonwinning bid facilities have now almost all been contacted and rescheduled for a time very close to the time that had originally been set for them.

Mr. Hinman: Mr. Speaker, they're not addressing the problem about being open.

Given that this issue can be resolved before the summer break and given that we should be able to work together to resolve many of the problems here today, will the minister support our motion for an emergency debate on this so that Albertans can receive their cataract surgeries from the surgeons and facilities of their choice?

Mr. Zwodzesky: Mr. Speaker, let's be very clear. Patients can have their cataract surgery or their corneal surgery or their droopy eyelid surgery or other surgeries done by a surgeon of their choice. It's just that the facilities that have won the bid are perhaps different than were originally scheduled. Those particular procedures will be done by fully accredited, fully qualified surgeons who are chosen by their own patients.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

PDD Funding Appeals

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On March 18 we asked a question to the minister of seniors regarding disabled Albertans' rights to appeal PDD funding decisions. An answer was not provided. Calgary area PDD service providers need clarification about their own liabilities because of the cuts that they've had to deal with. To the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports: will the minister confirm that under regulation 181/2006 it's true that PDD-funded individuals have no right to appeal to the minister if their supports are cut due to their service provider's budget being cut?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, I want to make it very clear that PDD clients do have the ability to appeal any decision of the community board that affects their levels of services, including the hours of service and the level of service itself. The PDD Community Governance Act makes this very clear. To be clear, if any client is notified about a reduction in services arising from a decision of the community board, they can appeal that decision.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you to the minister for that. But there is confusion between the PDD Community Governance Act and section 2(c) of the regulations. Will the minister provide clarification as to the legal liabilities of PDD service providers if they cut their individual supports because of the changes to their budgets?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, I'm not exactly clear on the regulations that the hon. member has cited, so I will check into that, and I will provide an answer to her for that question.

However, a service provider, once they've signed a contract with the community board, cannot appeal the contract itself, but they do have a very clear dispute resolution mechanism to turn to.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. I hope that this isn't the government's way to quietly cut PDD numbers and leave vulnerable Albertans with no right to appeal, which is, in my mind, a basic principle that anyone should have.

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, I would agree with that. But I would make it clear again that our PDD clients have the ability to appeal any changes to their levels of service or the hours of service that they have been granted as long as they're eligible for PDD.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Southern Alberta Power Outage

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As everyone is probably aware, last week southeastern Alberta and central Alberta were hit by a massive blizzard. This had an impact on the power in the region, and tens of thousands of people were left without power. The service providers in the area have done a significantly good job of returning power to most of these people. To the Minister of Energy. It's my understanding that there are still some people that haven't got power back, and I'm wondering if you could tell me when they may be able to expect to see power.

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, the member is absolutely correct. Last week, as many of the members of this House know, their constituencies were under a fair bit of snow, not only in the city of Lethbridge but throughout southeastern and eastern Alberta. In total some seven large and many more smaller lines were out of service, and in the city of Lethbridge a major line supplying the city went down. Some 300 employees and contractors from around the province were dispatched, and they repaired more than 400 poles and 200 lines. As of last evening, there were still some 50 residential and farm customers without power, and I know that service providers are working diligently to get them back on line.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of all the residents of southern Alberta, I want to thank those service providers for a wonderful job in having their people do such a quick repair. My first supplemental is to the same minister.

The Speaker: You provided a brief preamble. That's against the rules, so let's go to the Minister of Energy for the response.

Mr. Liepert: Well, the member is absolutely correct, Mr. Speaker, that they did respond in a way that I think was around the clock in getting the lines back on time. It really puts in perspective how we take something so essential as electricity for granted and don't really appreciate it until we don't have it. I think it's also a strong endorsement that we need a strong transportation grid throughout the province and a modern distribution network for electricity.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Without preamble, my final question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Mr. Minister, did the Alberta Emergency Management Agency get involved during this blizzard condition?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, first, I'd like to recognize the good job that our communities did in this case with their existing emergency plans. The government emergency operations centre was activated to offer one-window support to anyone who needed help. Field staff from the Alberta Emergency Management Agency went to a number of communities to offer assistance. This agency regularly monitors and prepares for emergency events to help keep Albertans safe.

Land-use Framework Aboriginal Consultation

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, dedicated aboriginal consultation is essential for developing oil and gas and implementing the land-use framework. Aboriginal groups hold that meaningful consultation is not taking place, and some have taken their fight all the way to the Supreme Court of Canada and won. My question is to the Minister of Aboriginal Relations. Why does this government continue to put the legitimacy of the land-use framework at risk and provoke expensive legal battles by continuing an inadequate approach to consultation?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Webber: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to thank the hon. member for the question as well. I would also like to say that it's about time that the opposition asked a question on aboriginal relations. Being a member and sitting here, that's quite frustrating when aboriginal relations issues are important. My department is working with all First Nations, all three treaties with regard to consultation, and we are working forward. We're doing some wonderful things with respect to consultation, anyway.

Dr. Taft: Well, given that this consultation has been going on for years and given that the courts have ruled that the way the Alberta government approaches its duty to consult is contrary to treaties, to reconciliation, and to mutual respect, how and when will this be remedied?

Mr. Webber: It is something that is ongoing, Mr. Speaker. It can't be fixed overnight. We've been working diligently with all our ministries with respect to consultation in the aboriginal communities. We are moving forward, and we are progressing.

Dr. Taft: Well, it seems whole lifetimes are passing, Mr. Speaker. When will this government finally begin a legitimate process of consultation with the aboriginal groups who are affected by the land-use framework and by oil and gas development?

Mr. Webber: Mr. Speaker, I've been consulting with all of the grand chiefs within Alberta, and we are working positively. We are making progress, and I look forward to continuing our relationship with all the grand chiefs and chiefs throughout Alberta. We will get a consultation process in place soon, I hope.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Education System

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Many of the world's leading educational thinkers believe that education systems around North America are systematically draining creativity out of our children by focusing on standardized curriculum, standardized instruction, and standardized testing. To the Minister of Education: what is your department doing to ensure our system is developing and building upon the natural ability and passion of our students?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A very interesting question. Of course, many people have seen the TED broadcast by Sir Ken Robinson talking about systems of education driving creativity out of the process or out of the students. I'd like to think that in Alberta, as one of the leading-edge educational systems in the world and recognized as such around the world, we are not doing that, but that obviously speaks to what's happening in each and every one of our classrooms across the province. That's why we have an Inspiring Education process talking about what education needs to be for our students to be successful not only today but over the next 20, 30 years into the future.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. How does our system ensure that students do not become or feel alienated or disengaged from our schooling systems because of our methods of teaching and testing?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, the Inspiring Education process is about how we make sure that our education system is relevant to our students not only in terms of the competencies, the attributes, the skills, and the knowledge that they need to have to be effective going forward but how they build creativity and innovation into the education process. It's about making sure that our teachers are well prepared for their teaching profession and that they have the opportunity to stay current through professional development and stay passionate about what they are doing. I believe the Inspiring Education process will provide a great platform going forward for us to do exactly that in our education system.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question to the same minister. The minister brought up the role of teachers.

Obviously, teachers have a very significant role in education. How do we assess the performance of our teachers?

Mr. Hancock: Well, first and foremost, Mr. Speaker, we have to respect teachers as professionals. Teachers have an obligation as professionals to keep themselves current and to understand what the challenges are with respect to the students that come before them in their classrooms and in their schools. That's first and foremost. We have to understand and respect the role of principals as curricular leaders and their role to ensure that their teachers are engaging students and are engaged in modern and progressive pedagogy and educational practices. Beyond that, it's a management issue with respect to teaching quality standards. We're reviewing our teaching quality standards act, and we expect that all teachers will fall within the teaching quality standards.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Child and Youth Facilities

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Social Care Facilities Review Committee raised a number of concerns in their recently tabled annual report that I have previously referenced in this House. This government should take their concerns seriously and make the necessary changes to improve the children's services system. To the minister: when will the minister introduce province-wide standards for qualifications and minimum requirements for wage levels to ease some of the challenges service providers face in recruiting and retaining staff?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will take this question under advisement and look into that and see where it is at currently. I can tell you that the recommendations that were made by the Social Care Facilities Review Committee have all been followed through with, but I'll look at your question in more detail and get back to you, hon. member.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Again to the minister: what specific steps is the minister taking to ensure that children always receive adequate support when moved to a new facility, something that is currently lacking?

Mrs. Fritz: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can tell you very clearly that that is in place and that it's followed through. There are a number of ways. It's either through our staff, through the good work that's being done through our child and family services authorities, or, of course, on reserve through our delegated First Nation agencies, people that work with the family, work with that child wherever they take that child in whichever way and with what you're involving here, hon. member. Anyhow, that is taken into consideration very clearly by staff.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Again to the Minister of Children and Youth Services: how is the minister working with other ministries to ensure that women and families making the transition from emergency shelters to affordable housing are fully supported?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I did just recently meet with the Alberta Council of Women's Shelters, and I can let you know once again – we've discussed this in the Assembly before – that through the housing first program women and children that are leaving emergency shelters either go to second-stage housing through this ministry, or they go on to housing programs, which are through the minister of housing.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

PDD Transition Funding

Mr. Benito: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My questions today are for the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. What will happen to Albertans with developmental disabilities who turn 18 this year?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, we have a very good government program for people with disabilities. This program helps these Albertans to be included in their communities, to live as independently as possible, and to be involved in the communities. When a young Albertan turns 18, they can access supports to a residential setting of their choice, they can participate in community activities and events, and they can get a job and keep a job if that's what they wish to do. Right now about 3,000 of our young Albertans who are people with developmental disabilities do have jobs.

Mr. Benito: Back to the same minister. When you receive government assistance, becoming an adult can also mean transitioning between silos such as from children's services to a department like yours. What are you doing to break down government silos for people with developmental disabilities as they turn 18?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, the member raises a very good question, and I think that we're making progress in this area. For those who are eligible for PDD supports, staff from our children and family services authorities work with our PDD community boards to help families in this transition from child to adult services. Through the review of our social-based assistance programs we're working on finding solutions to streamline the process to make it easier for families.

Mr. Benito: My third question is to the same minister. Agencies and PDD individuals are asking: is there enough funding in the program to begin supporting these Albertans when they turn 18?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, we are very aware that there will be some caseload growth in the PDD program from children with disabilities who reach adulthood. That's why we're committed to managing our caseload growth within my ministry's budget. I've instructed my staff to work with PDD community boards to find efficiencies in the program and direct any savings to the front-line supports. These savings can include sharing resources between regions, reducing discretionary spending, and reduced travel to meetings, for example.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Alberta Health Services Decision-making

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since the establishment of a single health governance board in Alberta in April 2008, Alberta Health Services operates under a rather large and sometimes complicated org chart. Health care professionals have expressed frustration with having decisions made efficiently and getting good ideas implemented on a timely basis at the local level. My first question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. What is being done to expedite the decision-making process to ensure that local rural health initiatives are implemented on a timely basis?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I'm happy to report that there are a lot of very positive initiatives that have been undertaken since we went to a single board system across the province. For example, with respect to the exact question on health administration, it's important to note that the administration of health services has been streamlined under this new process. It has not simply been expanded in a few areas; it has been made more efficient. That's partly because we only have one CEO now instead of 12 and because we only have seven executive and senior vice-presidents instead of 66. So you can see that there are fewer layers to work through, fewer hoops to jump through.

Mr. Doerksen: To the same minister. Local health foundations have also expressed frustration with regard to projects funded by local health foundations being implemented on a timely basis as a result of a lot of decision-making to get the decision made. Is that process being expedited as well in order that health foundations can get their projects under way on a timely basis?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, local health foundations are a critical part of our health service excellence in this province, and I want to begin by saying thank you to them and to the hon. member for flagging their concern. I also want to assure everyone that funds that are raised locally, be it by foundations, as has been referenced, or through other means, will remain there for local activities. Finally, the approval of projects at the local level is in fact an issue, specifically in rural Alberta, as has been mentioned to me on a few occasions. I've asked Alberta Health Services to make some adjustments, and they are.

Mr. Doerksen: To the same minister. Stephen Duckett recently invited health care workers to bring forward good ideas to improve the health care system through the Action Your Ideas initiative. Are some of those ideas being implemented? There were over 700 responses to that initiative. I'd like a progress report with regard to the implementation of some of these.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, in fact, the solicitation that the hon. member refers to ended on March 31. Several hundred responses were received. As a result of that, we did have a joint meeting of upper executive management people from AHS with upper executive members of Alberta Health and Wellness and myself just last Friday. The best ideas will of course go forward, but all of them will be given careful scrutiny. One of the advantages now of having a significant five-year funding plan committed to by this government is that ideas like that can and will be dealt with expeditiously.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that concludes the question period for today. Today 19 members were recognized, and 112 questions and responses were given. Of these 19 members, nine came from the Official Opposition, three from the independents, and seven from the government caucus.

We will continue with the Routine in 15 seconds from now.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to give notice that at the appropriate time I'll be raising the following issue under Standing Order 30, which is:

Be it resolved that the ordinary business of the Legislative Assembly be adjourned to discuss a matter of urgent public importance; namely, that the agreement made by Alberta Health Services with ophthalmology service providers is detrimental to patients awaiting cataract surgery and the ophthalmologists who provide cataract surgery procedures.

I have distributed the appropriate number of copies. We have the appropriate number here.

The Speaker: You have another notice? Please proceed.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to give oral notice of a motion.

Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 4(1) the Assembly shall meet on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday evenings for consideration of government business for the remainder of the 2010 spring sitting unless on motion by the Government House Leader made before 6 p.m., which may be made orally and without notice, the Assembly is adjourned to the following sitting day.

The Speaker: This is a notice?

Mr. Hancock: Yes.

The Speaker: We'll deal with it tomorrow?

Mr. Hancock: Yes.

The Speaker: So we can't sit tonight?

Mr. Hancock: No.

The Speaker: Good.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of two news photos of students from l'école Bellevue school carrying their desks photos of the street to a makeshift classroom. These photographs relate to questions asked earlier today by my colleague for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate amount of copies of a letter from Mr. Larry Stowards on a situation that has come up where he has been denied Blue Cross coverage because of pre-existing conditions after 30 years of service with the city of Calgary, a very tragic situation. I'm going to table this now.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon.

Mr. Renner, Minister of Environment, responses to questions raised by Ms Blakeman, hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, and Ms Notley, hon. Member for Edmonton Strathcona, on March 16, 2010, Department of Environment main estimates debate.

On behalf of the hon. Mrs. Ady, Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation, Travel Alberta business strategy 2010-2013.

Request for Emergency Debate

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore on the Standing Order 30 application.

Cataract Surgery

Mr. Hinman: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I feel that it's a very serious situation that we're in in the government's process of requesting the RFPs. Although the minister has repeatedly said that they closed earlier this year, they were never disclosed to the facilities. The whole process that it has traditionally gone through has been abdicated for some system or process that the ophthalmologists are not aware of. I think that there is enough information that we can provide here that this can be resolved today with just a simple 60-day extension on the old contracts that we had and to work through this. But if we don't have the emergency debate, next Saturday is a long way away for those people that are waiting.

I know the minister says that they've been rescheduled, but there are surgeons that are not comfortable and do not have access to the facilities that the minister is claiming are available and ready to go. We just feel that this is in the best interests of Albertans and something that can and should be resolved on an urgent basis, seeing how they made such a short decision over a four-day period of closing down ophthalmologists and the surgery that they were performing in those accredited facilities. It just seems like the minister has not received all the information. I think that we have enough that we can bring to light to come to a much different conclusion and a speedy change here in our system to help Albertans with this problem.

We feel at this time that it is of great importance to have the emergency debate for the benefit of all Albertans, especially those needing cataract and cornea surgeries to have those in their local communities rather than having to travel a long way for a cornea transplant or those things. We just feel that it's urgent. It doesn't need to be a long debate, but there is enough information that we think it's worth the time.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Clearly, everything to do with the health system and many other things are of public importance and important to many members of the public and often to all members of the public. In order to be eligible for a Standing Order 30 debate, there has to be a broader test than just a question of whether it's of public importance. Is it of public importance that the Legislature should adjourn its ordinary business to debate that issue?

I think that if you go back to the recent history on this, the questions that have been raised in question period and responded to by the Minister of Health and Wellness have clearly indicated that no surgeries are to be cancelled, that all of the surgeries are to be rebooked. Even today he indicated that they are to be rebooked as close to the time frame that they were scheduled as possible. Certainly, he's indicated that the rebookings will be completed within 90 days and that, in fact, rather than fewer surgeries, there will be more surgeries. So the question of urgency needs to be addressed from the context of: what will this accomplish? With all due respect, Mr. Speaker, it will accomplish nothing except putting more heat and less light on the subject.

The Minister of Health and Wellness has indicated he's meeting with the ophthalmologists on Saturday with Alberta Health Services so that any of the issues that ophthalmologists raise can be dealt with in that meeting. That's the appropriate place for those issues to be dealt with. It serves no public purpose to scare people with rumour and innuendo about what an ophthalmologist might have said to somebody somewhere. It makes much more sense to have ophthalmologists who are concerned, if any are, attend the meeting with the minister, which has already been scheduled, which he's indicated to the House has been scheduled, and he's given notice that that meeting is going to be happening this Saturday, that notice has gone out to all the affected parties.

The public has been very clearly advised that the process that has been engaged in is an RFP process within Alberta Health Services. So, Mr. Speaker, what would make it urgent for this House to deal with it today? What could this House do? The hon. member, in raising the Standing Order 30, has talked about some resolution. Well, of course, there is no resolution in Standing Order 30 debate. It's simply a matter of raising issues.

One has to be careful in raising issues that one doesn't raise issues by way of rumour and innuendo that cause, actually, more harm than good. I would submit to you that the most appropriate way for the public to deal with this issue with respect to cataract surgery is through the questions that have been appropriately raised in the House over the course of the last number of days so that any of the issues that might be of concern are raised for the minister's attention so that he can deal with them and for the minister to take action, as he has done, by convening a meeting of the appropriate parties, the ophthalmologists and Alberta Health Services, to say: what more needs to be done? So far as the minister is concerned and Alberta Health Services is concerned, they've engaged in a process which will provide more access to more Albertans to get cataract surgery more quickly, and in the process of transition the rescheduling of those surgeries that were being scheduled is being taken care of.

So, Mr. Speaker, this is not an appropriate subject, not because it's not an important issue but because if this is an important issue, then we will be adjourning the debate of the House every day to debate a health issue because health is very important to Albertans. It has to be what we add to that debate that needs to be determined here, and in my humble opinion we would not be adding anything to the debate. We would be adding fear and innuendo and alarming Albertans rather than resolving the issue.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, would you like to participate?

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, the order is Standing Order 30, and I'd like to look at (7)(a). It says:

A motion under this Standing Order is subject to the following conditions:

- (a) the matter proposed for discussion must relate to a genuine emergency, calling for immediate and urgent consideration.

The reason, Mr. Speaker, that this is a very urgent matter – and I do agree with the hon. minister that we can't be debating everything in the health care system on an urgent basis. Of course, health care is a very important issue. It's a very emotional issue for a lot of people, and I certainly understand that we shouldn't be on every single issue shutting down all debate on all bills in order to debate health care issues as they arise.

There's a little bit of a difference on this one. It's a big difference, actually. This House is about to recess for the summer, by all indications that we're receiving in talks with the House leader and deputy House leader, et cetera. By the end of this week we'll likely be gone for the summer. The problem is that what could happen here is we have a situation where if we do not get this corrected, we could go an entire six months, or five months anyway, without being able to address what is a very alarming situation for not only some of the patients involved but also many of the cataract doctors, the eye surgeons, that want to do these surgeries but can't because they've essentially been shut out of this process. They're losing business, and they could lose their businesses, essentially, because they've lost such a huge chunk of the government contracts under this new legislation.

It was mentioned earlier: oh, they can still do them, but they just have to use the facilities of the other doctors, the facilities that have been approved. Well, some facilities don't want these doctors coming in and using their facilities, which is what was brought up in question period today. There's a doctor in Edmonton that won the contract and that is actually thinking now that he didn't know what was involved. He didn't know he had to let his facility be used by other eye doctors in performing these surgeries.

It's a very fluid situation right now, and I don't think we want to blame anybody. We just need to get to the bottom of this. We need to discuss it as a House. We need to figure out what the best way is moving forward so that we don't go over the summer and people can't get their surgeries done, so that doctors aren't put out of business in the interim because their whole business model has been thrown off by this government's decision on this issue. That's the urgency. If we wait another few days, we'll be out of session and we won't be able to debate this very important issue. People will lose their businesses; patients could lose their opportunity to get their surgery. That's why we have the urgency.

I would say with regard to the Saturday meeting that a meeting is great. We're glad that the health minister is going to meet with the doctors involved and try to straighten this mess out, but in the interim we can't bank everything on that Saturday meeting. We don't know what's going to go on there.

Again, this is something that is very urgent, and that's why it's so time sensitive, because we're going to be out of session and because these doctors' business models are failing as we speak because they've been essentially shut out of all of these eye surgeries which just previous to the minister's decision on this they relied on. So it is an urgent matter, and we would ask that we have debate on it.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness and Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, it's a serious matter, obviously, which is why we've listened with some intensity to the debate thus far. But in my view it does not constitute an emergency in the normal sense that previous precedence in this Assembly has allowed certain debates to go forward on the basis of them being an emergency. What has to be kept in mind here is specifically that there is more capacity being added to the system both physically and in terms of the number of surgeries that will be performed.

I do appreciate that there might be some anxieties amongst some of the ophthalmologists and amongst some of the surgeons and the surgical facility owners as well as perhaps expressed by some of the patients. However, those anxieties are only about the temporary transition of having their particular surgery done in a different setting. Those are fully accredited settings, fully accredited by the College of Physicians and Surgeons. Those winning bid facilities have to accept the surgeries that are being awarded to them – that was part of the deal – and they also have to accept the accredited ophthalmological surgeons who would perform those particular services to be done in their facilities.

There's no blame being asserted anywhere here whatsoever, and I appreciate the hon. member who just spoke saying that because neither will any doctors be put out of business. These are nonhospital surgical facilities, or private clinics by another name. As such, they perform several other services as well that are not medically insured. If there's a public appetite for those non medically insured services, then they will proceed, and they will presumably stay in business on that basis. However, I also want to indicate that the non winning bid facilities, if I can refer to them that way, will continue to remain open if they wish. In fact, they will be invited to participate in the second blitz, Mr. Speaker, of several additional surgeries that we'll be adding to the system, which I indicated we would do back in February.

We did the first blitz from February 15 to March 31. We added approximately 2,230 more surgeries and approximately 3,500 more MRIs and CAT scans. Now we're going to do a second blitz, and the non winning bid facilities on the eye surgical side will be invited to participate in that process. So we'll have additional capacity through those few mechanisms as well.

That being said, I just don't see that there is an urgency. If there are other issues, that will be, I'm sure, the tone and tenor of the meeting on Saturday which I have called. I invited people last week. I've spoken with several of these ophthalmologists personally, and I will continue to address their concerns in that way. But the big issue here will be to deal with any other anxieties on the Saturday.

As such and given that I've answered a number of these questions in the House – I think I did six or nine questions again today in addition to the ones last week – I don't personally subscribe to the fact that there is a need for an emergency or an urgent debate.

The last point, Mr. Speaker, is that subject to Standing Order 30(6) and directly in response to the previous speaker, "an emergency debate does not entail any decision of the Assembly," hon. member.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to speak of two types of urgency. One is the urgency of the patients who have been waiting for contractual services with their eye care, in some cases for months on end, and now are not certain as to whether those surgeries will actually take place, who is going to do the service provision, and where the service provision will take place. That's the first urgency, the immediacy of dealing with the eye operations.

Of secondary urgency but of equal importance is the fact that this kerfuffle, this confusion, is taking place in Calgary, is not taking place in Edmonton. The reason it's taking place in Calgary is because the government in terms of its understanding of universal health care provisions has got stuck with publicly funded but not dealt with the publicly delivered or the publicly administered parts of our universal health care system.

Edmonton isn't facing this problem because the majority of the surgeries are done in public facilities in an expedient amount of time by public physicians. This confusion that has arisen in Calgary is the result of years and years of expensive contracting out of the procedure, and now we've got private clinicians fighting over the funding and the government contracts.

Eye surgery should be a public service that is delivered in an appropriate time within a publicly administered system. That has fallen apart, and for an Albertan wanting to have faith in their health care delivery, that's urgent for Albertans. For those poor people waiting and wondering, the delivery of their operation is key to the quality of their life. Therefore, I would suggest that it is urgent, Mr. Speaker, and worth at least a small time of our discussion here today.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek on the subject of urgency.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think that through my history of being involved and being elected since 1993, this is the first time that I've stood up in regard to the emergency debate.

The Speaker: Did the member hear what I said on the question of urgency?

Mrs. Forsyth: I have to speak up on this issue because of all the calls that we're receiving.

The Speaker: Hon. member, that's fine, but I asked you to speak on the question of urgency – I've already heard from two of your colleagues – urgency of the reason why we should give up the whole agenda for today.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, I was actually getting to that, so if you could give me a few minutes. The problem that we're facing here is the fact that we're hearing from patients in the system that are calling the minister's office. The minister's office is telling them to call the complaint line at Alberta Health Services. Alberta Health Services is telling them to call the ophthalmologist. So none of these patients that are in the system are getting answers whatsoever.

The minister alluded to that he's been answering questions in the House in regard to the questions that we've been asking him. Well, he hasn't really answered the questions because he doesn't really know the answers, and every time he answers a question, my BlackBerry goes crazy with more questions to ask the minister, which is happening at this particular time.

He indicated to the Herald that there are legitimate concerns in regard to what's happening on the contracts, so he's wanting to meet with the ophthalmologists on the 24th.

He talks about the fully accredited facilities. Well, the one, when he talks about the expansion of surgeries that are going to be done in this province, hasn't even been built yet. It's difficult to get the College of Physicians and Surgeons to accredit anything when the facility hasn't even been built yet.

Mr. Speaker, I met with somebody that was waiting for transplant surgery. He was called by his ophthalmologist; his transplant surgery has been delayed. I look at Bill 1, the Alberta Competitiveness Act, and they talk about Alberta wanting to be the most competitive in this country. Yet the same way they're being competitive, they're striking a monopoly with two people getting the contracts. What do you tell patients that are waiting for a transplant? This particular individual has decided he's going to try and get his transplant surgery in B.C. If he can't get it in B.C., then he's going to try and get it at the Mayo Clinic.

You get calls in regard to tissue transplants, all the tissues that are actually going to waste at this particular time.

Mr. Speaker, there are a whole bunch of unanswered questions.

This is an emergency. We've got people waiting for surgery. Yes, they haven't been cancelled, but they've been postponed. How do you tell somebody that's had their surgery postponed, that has been waiting forever for this, that "Yes, we're going to do your surgery, yes, we're going to postpone it, but we need to find out when we can give you the particular surgery"? Just so many unanswered questions.

Mr. Speaker, this is urgent.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore has already spoken on this matter. Are there others?

Hon. members, an application for Standing Order 30 is clearly identified in the standing orders that we have. The chair may identify and recognize a number of members to briefly speak and state arguments in favour of the request for leave. The chair did allow everyone who wanted to speak on this particular Standing Order 30 application to participate. The chair also did not restrict the argument to urgency as per the thing other than to give one caution to the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek as two of her colleagues had already spoken on this matter. There was wide latitude given to the issues involved, many of which had nothing to do with the urgency of the motion. I am prepared, thus, to rule on whether the request for leave for this motion to proceed is in order under Standing Order 30(2).

First of all, the Member for Calgary-Glenmore has met the requirement of providing at least two hours' notice to the Speaker's office. Notice was received this morning at 11:18 a.m. Secondly, before the question as to whether this motion should proceed can be put to the Assembly, the chair must rule whether the motion meets the requirements of Standing Order 30(7), which requires that "the matter proposed for discussion must relate to a genuine emergency, calling for immediate and urgent consideration" of the subject. The relevant parliamentary authorities on this subject are pages 689-696 of House of Commons Procedure and Practice, second edition, and Beauchesne's paragraphs 387 to 390.

The motion reads as follows:

Be it resolved that the ordinary business of the Legislative Assembly be adjourned to discuss a matter of urgent public importance; namely, that the agreement made by Alberta Health Services with ophthalmology service providers is detrimental to patients awaiting cataract surgery and the ophthalmologists who provide cataract surgery procedures.

Now, the focus words are: "be adjourned to discuss a matter of urgent public importance; namely, that the agreement." The chair has difficulty understanding and is not certain what makes this an urgent matter today as opposed to last week or last month.

If the chair understands this correctly, the statement with respect to cataract surgery was issued by Alberta Health Services on March 26, 2010.

The Assembly reconvened on April 12. On April 12 this matter was raised in the Assembly by the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition on pages 689 and 690. The subject in the question period was cataract surgery.

This matter was not raised in the question period or any other time, to the chair's knowledge, on Tuesday, April 13.

On Wednesday, April 14, cataract surgery was the subject of a member's statement made by the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore. In addition to that, cataract surgery was an issue of the question period at page 758. The subject was raised by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, and it also was raised by another member, the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

This matter was also raised in the Assembly in Oral Question Period on Thursday last by the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore and raised twice in the question period today.

In terms of an opportunity to raise this, it cannot be said that this is the first opportunity to raise this matter; it certainly was raised last week on a number of occasions. With respect to this whole question of a Standing Order 30 application, that it's a matter of urgent public importance, it had been raised, has been raised, could have been raised to adjourn the agenda of the Assembly on a certain day.

Certainly, the issue is, with no doubt whatsoever in the chair's mind, an important matter, but let's never forget Standing Order 30(6), which clearly states that even if there was to be a debate today, "an emergency debate does not entail any decision of the Assembly." There would be no decision made; it would simply be talking about the issue for the remainder of the afternoon till 6 o'clock.

The chair actually would have a very difficult time finding this request for leave to be in order under the Assembly's rules to put such a question. If he were to put such a question and the question were to be in the affirmative, that would certainly end the remainder of the business today. Third reading of Bill 202 would not come up. That would be very clear and not be dealt with, and neither would any other matters this afternoon.

In recognizing the availability of members to discuss this matter and to deal with the matter in the last five days, recognizing the importance of Standing Order 30(6), that this would not entail any decision of the Assembly, recognizing the number of opportunities that there were to raise this matter, and also recognizing the very wide latitude that the chair gave to those who participated in petitioning for Standing Order 30, that in essence much of it would have been the many discussions that would have been provided later, the chair does not find the request for leave in order under the Assembly's rules, and the question will not be put.

Orders of the Day

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 202

Mandatory Reporting of Child Pornography Act

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Once again I appreciate the opportunity to stand in the House to speak in support of Bill 202, the Mandatory Reporting of Child Pornography Act. While I appreciate the support that Bill 202 has received, I will say that I have been surprised by the reaction from the government.

I've also been surprised with the lack of willingness to confirm a date that this legislation would come into effect. I've heard their reasons for not providing dates, and frankly, Mr. Speaker, these reasons ring hollow with Albertans, they ring hollow with the opposition, and they ring hollow with law enforcement, victims' advocates, and those who suffer at the hands of those who abuse and exploit children to satisfy their sick sexual perversions. I will let them explain their position to Albertans; that is not my job. They can explain why they consistently change their position on the refusal to provide a date that this would actually go into effect.

But please know this: I will not let this piece of legislation go into the never-never land of private members' bills. I think that the government is familiar with the never-never land. It's a place that they have created where more than 1,411 private members' bills have gone. It's a quiet place, Mr. Speaker, because nothing really happens there. You see, this never-never land of private members' bills is a place where each bill has powers, and it's a place where each bill is supposed to be working and in action. But for a reason that only the government knows, only about 50 of these private members' bills have made it out of never-never land. Bill 202 will make it out of never-never land, and I am determined to see that it comes into effect, whether it is because this government puts it into effect as a revised government bill or because it takes Bill 202 and we put it into effect on our own.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

I cannot tell members of this Legislature how horrific images of child pornography are. We can all say the words; we can all imagine it. As the former Solicitor General and minister of children's services I have seen these images that were involved in some of the investigations that unfolded during my time in these positions. I can never get these images out of my mind, Mr. Speaker. I will not describe them for you, but, hon. members, please know this: I can think of nothing more vile, more evil, or more disgusting than the sexual exploitation of a small, innocent child. I hope you never have to see these images for yourself because they are seared into my memory forever.

These images that are sent around the Internet by these organized criminal networks of child pornography and sexual abusers we are trying to disrupt with Bill 202. When someone inadvertently comes across these images, we want them to be able to report this information to the police or organizations like Cybertip without having to fear that they will be investigated. When someone accidentally comes across these vile images, we want it to be clear about the steps that law enforcement agencies or child protection staff must take to investigate and remove children if there is evidence of ongoing abuse.

When someone finds out that a child is being sexually abused by a child pornographer or a predator, we do not want the abuser to be able to hide. Bill 202 is about giving police and those who come across this information the tools they need to be protected and stop the abuse from continuing. Bill 202 provides the framework for these child protection steps to be taken into practice. What we need now, Mr. Speaker, are the actual regulations. With Bill 202's passage it will be up to this government to give police the regulations they need to have clarity, to change their work practices, and to launch effective investigations that will help protect our children.

I extend an offer to work with the government to study the regulations that are needed, to bring law enforcement and reporting agencies together to achieve strong and enforceable regulations which will stop this vile cycle of child abuse and sexual exploitation. I hope this government will accept this offer. I do not care who gets the law passed or the regulations put into practice.

My record as a member of the government and as a member of the opposition speaks for itself. Protecting children must come first. Protecting children must be a shared goal. Protecting children is what I hope we can all achieve through Bill 202.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I encourage every member of this Assembly to pass Bill 202.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Speaking in support of Bill 202, I think it was Marshall McLuhan who suggested that the message was more important than the medium, and that's what the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek has put forward. The hon. member has been perceived as a valuable contributor as a minister of this government. She was given the responsibility to head the crimes and community task force, and she has raised over her political career a number of issues with regard to the administration of justice and the protection of children. Last year she brought forward Bill 206 with regard to bullying, and she has brought forward other initiatives worthy of consideration.

While we wait for Bill 202 to be resurrected in some form, whether as a government member's motion or, better still, as a government motion, children are suffering from abuse, and that should be a major consideration of all members of this Legislature. We have seen – and I've brought this up, so I'm not going to belabour the point again – examples of legislation receiving amendment. In other words, if it wasn't absolutely right the first time, we fixed it. Bill 202 correctly addresses a number of key issues, as the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek pointed out, that police agencies, parent groups, groups opposed to the abuse of children have raised. If it's not the complete vehicle, then it's gone a long way in the correct direction and is worthy of support.

If the government wishes to amend the legislation, the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek has been very willing, for example, to have time extensions. She has attempted to deal with the concerns that have been brought to her, the objections of government members. Unfortunately, to date those concerns have not resulted in Bill 202 receiving the support that is required for it to be proclaimed.

The notion of upon proclamation: that's the obvious circumstance at which time a bill is actually put into force. But while we wait for that distant proclamation day, as the hon. member pointed out, suffering continues to occur.

We have seen various enactments of other pieces of legislation. Back in the year 2005, for example, I brought forward a motion on attempting to ban hand-held cellphones, and the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays has pursued it, pursued it, pursued it. Finally, it has hit the floor in terms of Bill 16. But Bill 16 at some point will probably be amended because in this case hands-free cellphones have the same mental distraction that hand-helds have.

The point I'm making is that no piece of legislation necessarily gets it right the first time, but it should be recognized and welcomed as a stage in the legislative process that will achieve some very important results. In the case of private member's Bill 202 there is a requirement for reporting to the appropriate agencies. It does put an extra degree of oversight and the potential of getting these individuals who are abusing children through the transmission of pornographic images to think twice because they see that this government is serious about dealing with this particular crime.

Mr. Speaker, in closing, I believe Bill 202 has good intentions. It has dates. It has sound reasoning for its need to be proclaimed. If the government feels that it can improve upon it, I would urge the government to at the latest bring it forward as a government bill this fall so that it can finally receive the proclamation that is well-past overdue.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise and join the third reading debate on Bill 202, the Mandatory Reporting of Child Pornography Act, brought forward by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek. I would like to congratulate and thank the hon. member for her commendable efforts in developing this legislation that will help to fight child exploitation. There's nothing more important than the safety and security of our children.

Bill 202 would require individuals to report child pornography to a reporting entity, and it would also establish procedures that a reporting entity must take following the filing of a report, including ensuring that a reporting entity performs an inspection. If it is believed that child pornography is occurring, a report is made to the child and family services agency or law enforcement agency to protect the child and apprehend the offender.

Currently Canada's Criminal Code states that the possession of child pornography is illegal although it does not require individuals to report any content they may encounter. Thus, Bill 202 would serve as a useful new tool for law enforcement in the ongoing fight against child pornography and exploitation. While this legislation alone will not eliminate the cases of child exploitation, it should help to reduce the cases of child abuse, and as with any crime it is important to bring those who perpetrate these horrific crimes to justice as soon as possible in order to ensure that they are apprehended. Bill 202 will help us to do exactly that: help bring these criminals to justice.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that those who witness a crime should not only have a moral obligation but also a legal obligation to report to law enforcement in order to protect the victims and apprehend those responsible. For example, a witness to theft, act of violence, or other forms of criminal activities should have the legal obligation to bring them to the attention of law enforcement immediately. By doing so, evidence can be collected quickly, and there's a greater opportunity to apprehend the criminals. Mandatory reporting will provide law enforcement with valuable and timely information to pursue predators wherever they may be.

This legislation builds on current initiatives and efforts on behalf of our government and organizations to report cases of child pornography. One such initiative is the Alberta integrated child exploitation, or ICE, team. It is a provincial integrated unit involving the RCMP, Calgary Police Service, Edmonton Police Service, Lethbridge Regional Police Service, and Medicine Hat Police Service. It is divided into two teams covering territory both north and south of Wetaskiwin. Each team has a team leader, investigators, and forensic technicians that address and investigate child exploitation concerns. These concerns may include accessing, processing, distributing, importing, and manufacturing child pornography and any computer-related sexual abuse. They may also investigate child luring over the Internet, voyeurism involving victims under the age of 18 years, and the child sex trade and tourism. Another reporting entity is Cybertip.ca, Canada's national tip line for the reporting of online sexual exploitation of children.

Bill 202 will through regulation make it mandatory to report to an entity such as the ICE team or Cybertip.ca which, in turn, would be responsible for investigating the tip. Furthermore, other provinces have made it mandatory to report such cases to reporting entities. In 2009 Manitoba became the first province to enact mandatory reporting of child pornography. Since that time Ontario and Nova Scotia have followed with similar legislation. Mr. Speaker, Bill 202 would mirror the intent of these pieces of legislation; therefore, I believe the time has come for Alberta to join these jurisdictions in passing similar legislation.

This legislation alone will not eradicate child exploitation, which is indeed a growing and world-wide epidemic that knows no border or no jurisdiction. However, Bill 202 recognizes the moral responsibility we all have as citizens to join in the fight against child pornography and catch predators as soon as possible before they are permitted to reoffend. With the reporting agencies such as Cybertip.ca and the Alberta ICE team and with the protection of informants, there is no good excuse or reason not to report cases of these horrific crimes to the proper authorities.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 202 reaffirms our belief as Albertans that we share responsibility for the safety of our children. I would like to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek for bringing forward this timely and well-thought-out piece of legislation. Her dedication to and passion for the children of this province is valued by all those who serve in this Assembly and, indeed, all Albertans. I would like to offer my full support for Bill 202 and strongly encourage all of my colleagues from both sides of this House to do so as well.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I look forward to the remainder of the debate.

The Deputy Speaker: I have on my list here the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, then the hon. Member for Calgary-East, and the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to be able to stand up again and speak to this bill in third. I'm wondering what kind of statement is being made in this House that we are even discussing these crimes that are so despicable by people who, in my mind, have to be sick. It's reprehensible, and it's disgusting what they are doing to young children and the fact that they are actually making money off it, which is the whole point of it, to make money off this behaviour. I don't think there are enough adjectives that could describe who I think are really evil people who would use young children for sexual exploitation and make money off it.

The fact that it needs to be debated in the Legislature means to the good people out there the question: have we become so tolerant that we turn our heads, that we don't go after these people, that we don't say, "This is not acceptable in our society"? I think perhaps we have become too tolerant and perhaps do turn our heads away.

The other thing that I think can happen is that people who view these really horrible videos, slide shows, computer pictures, et cetera after a while can become immune to what they're looking at. Certainly, there is research to prove this in terms of the use of pornography, that they then need more and more and more, and it gets worse and worse and worse. Even people who are trying to prosecute and have to sit and look at all of this garbage after a while have almost not an acceptance, but they can't see it for what it is because they get immune to it. They get desensitized. I just think that's very sad.

I guess my point is that I cannot believe this debate didn't go one, two, Committee of the Whole, three, passed and that tomorrow morning at 9 o'clock, right after this is passed, something concrete isn't being done, that proclamation isn't instant. How can we possibly wait? How can we possibly have any kind of an excuse that we would wait, that we wouldn't give the money, the funding to the police forces, which, of course, include global police forces, the Interpol, the Mounties, the FBI, et cetera, et cetera? All of these organizations, all of these policing organizations that we want to protect us should have the extra funding. There should be, as there are, but more of them, specific people who are trained to be able to track down this reprehensible behaviour.

The fact that we would even discuss putting off a bill like this to be proclaimed is very surprising to me. As has been mentioned, I'm sincerely hoping that in the fall there would be a government bill that would come forward and make this thing start moving. Let's put money towards it, and let's try to educate the public so that they will be able to say that this is intolerable and not turn their heads the other way when they actually suspect something might be going on. It's a way of protecting our children, but even more so, I think, it is is protecting our society and allowing people in society to not be so tolerant and have the backbone or whatever it takes to be able to stand up and say: "Count me in. This is very, very wrong."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to be able to rise to speak to speak to Bill 202, Mandatory Reporting of Child Pornography Act. It's interesting because this is a bill that has a tremendously positive objective, and we will of course be supporting this bill. You know, I don't for a second question the good intentions that lie behind the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek's decision to bring this bill forward, but I want to do two things. First, I want to point out a couple of the concerns that arise just sort of from a more technical point of view. These are not the kinds of concerns that will result in us not voting for the bill, but I think it's worthy simply of note.

It's simply a couple of things. I suppose the bill itself doesn't speak to this, but there's this whole issue of who the reporting body would be that complaints would go to. I think we just sort of need to be aware that it's probably a better idea to have the reporting body be Cybertip or some group like that because right now as much as the police have a specialized unit, we also have a problem with the police being incredibly understaffed, and though – and I will get to this other issue – there's certainly the possibility of properly funding our police force, should that not happen, then Cybertip might be the other place to serve as that body. Certainly, that is the model that we see adopted in, I believe, both Manitoba and Ontario.

The other thing that is a bit of a concern is that as much as we all, I suspect, can completely agree in this House and outside of this House that the people who make and/or use child pornography deserve no sympathy, hesitation, qualification in terms of the way their actions are treated, those who don't report it necessarily right away – that situation is very close to black and white, I will say. It's very close to black and white, and it should be. But there is the scenario, say, for instance, that you could very likely in some cases have the spouse who is the person that is aware of it and the spouse themselves being the victim of an abusive relationship and that kind of thing. We want the focus of this bill to be on the makers and the users of child pornography. We don't want the criminals to become those who don't report it right away. There's no limitation in this bill, so you could genuinely have a spouse charged five, 10 years later, after they've left, say, an abusive relationship, for not reporting in that original period of time.

That's why the federal bill, that was introduced nationally, is in some ways a better bill and a more effective bill. It focuses on the Internet providers and the social networking sites and those places that ultimately make money off the capacity to traffic images of child pornography, and it puts the obligation on them. That's a very effective way of dealing with it.

At this point we've got three other jurisdictions that have a piece of legislation like this. I think everybody absolutely adopted it right away because they were so collectively concerned about this issue. We don't yet have a clear sense of what the outcome has been. We do know that even in places that don't have this legislation, those bodies that currently have the responsibility for reviewing these complaints are overwhelmed with the number of complaints they receive and do not currently have the ability to properly investigate the number of complaints that are currently received.

I guess the point I'm trying to make is that we can all pile on and agree that this piece of legislation helps deal with the problem, that we all agree is an abhorrent problem that should be eliminated immediately, but we need to understand that this legislation is not a panacea and that it comes attached to the very real obligation to substantially fund the system's capacity to actually respond to the complaints that would come forward. In the absence of that funding what we simply end up with is a piece of paper that allows everybody to pat themselves on the back about how we've done something to deal with this horrific problem.

I am particularly concerned by some of the comments that I have heard made by members on the government side of this House, that are starting to sound to me a little bit like that trend where we pass the legislation, we feel really good that we put legislation in place, but we don't ever fund it adequately. What happens is that we don't actually deal with the problem that the legislation is geared to address. I quote, in particular, from the federal Ombudsman for victims of crime, who commented on the federal legislation. "Mandatory reporting on its own is not likely to make a significant difference in the fight against online child sexual exploitation." As he says, "Law enforcement agencies . . . are struggling to keep up with the number of cases they [currently] have." Then he goes on to say that the problem isn't a lack of reports; it's "accessing information about suspects, identifying children and preventing future abuse." Then he cautions against "acting on mandatory reporting just to be seen to be doing something."

That's what I want to make sure that this government doesn't get away with. I don't want this government to pass this piece of legislation, quote, just so it can be seen to be doing something. Let's be clear: children are abused in this province every day. Children are sexually abused in this province every day. The social workers, who work desperately hard for this government to try and make this stop, are overworked and underfunded and underpaid and don't get the support from this government that they need to make this stop happening.

Our own children's advocate, who is restrained and stopped from performing his job in a way that every other children's advocate in every other province in the country can, still reported, almost inadvertently as a result of legislative requirements that hadn't been thought through, but nonetheless reported, that in the first six months of last year over 150 incidents of physical and sexual abuse occurred solely to children in the care of this government who had reported to the children's advocate. So let's be clear: that is not the full amount of children that are being abused sexually or physically in this province; that's just those who are in this government's care, who happen to know enough about the system to be able to report to the children's advocate. We know that that is the tip of the iceberg.

That's what's happening in this province right now. What is the answer of this government? To take $25 million out of this ministry, specifically out of the area of child protection. The last thing that I want to see is this government get away with speaking in favour of this bill and trying to make Albertans think that they are working really hard on this at a time that they are making a choice to take $25 million out of child protection at the same time that they're giving $750 million back to the oil industry. These are choices. These are choices that this government has made. You can pass legislation like this and frame it and appoint a day and do a little bit of a press release every now and then, or you can genuinely fund and support the system that's actually designed to stop this kind of abuse. I would suggest that right now the latter is not happening with this government. That is my concern about this piece of legislation. It's good legislation, but it is not legislation that will have any impact if we don't fund the resources necessary to give the people who actually become aware of these problems the capacity to respond to them.

We currently can't keep up with reports of child pornography. Increasing the number of reports in and of themselves is not going to fix the problem. We have a government that has not moved forward on hiring new police officers as promised in the last election. We have a government that's, you know, cutting services in our courts and not dealing with a number of emerging and pressing issues in our prison system. We can frame this and put out a press release when it passes, but we need to remember that that's not the solution to the problem. Until we make a real commitment to address those issues and to make the kinds of choices that put these at-risk children above our friends who need royalty rebates, we're not going to get the job done.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East, followed by the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today and join third-reading debate on Bill 202, the Mandatory Reporting of Child Pornography Act. This act is being put forward by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, and I would like to thank her for the intent behind this bill. If passed, this piece of legislation will make it a legal requirement to report findings of child pornography. To be more specific, if a person stumbles upon or inadvertently finds child pornography, they would be required to report this finding to either a police service or to a designated reporting entity. In addition to a mandatory reporting requirement, Bill 202 would also designate actions for reporting agencies to follow once a report has been made to them. Finally, Bill 202 would protect the informant from potential repercussions of reporting child pornography while at the same time making it clear that it is not the duty of an individual to actively search out child pornography.

Mr. Speaker, the proposals made by this bill are designed to reduce the creation and distribution of child pornography in our communities. It is a laudable goal. While I believe the intentions of this bill are clear, I am concerned that this legislation may not be as effective as it could be. This is not to say that it would be ineffective but, rather, that more could and should be done.

Mr. Speaker, the greatest concern I have with Bill 202 is that it does not actively target the creation of child pornography, only the distribution. I say this because the vast majority of child pornography in circulation in Alberta is created outside of our province. It is created in other nations, jurisdictions where Alberta laws have no effect. Therefore, in order to target these cases, we may need to take an alternative approach.

What we need are two things, Mr. Speaker. First, we need to work with our federal counterparts to develop a more comprehensive piece of legislation that can encompass all jurisdictions within Canada. After all, if our goal is to stop this heinous act from taking place, we need to target the creation regardless of jurisdictional boundaries. Secondly, we need to expand and enhance the programs and initiatives that we already have in place. This is where I think Bill 202 fits in.

In Alberta we have many programs and policies in place to catch and prosecute creators and distributors of child pornography. The programs are run and operated by dedicated individuals who make an invaluable contribution to the safety and protection of our society, and they are to be commended for their hard work. It is difficult to imagine, Mr. Speaker, the material that they deal with on a daily basis. An example of one of these programs is the integrated child exploitation units, or ICE units. ICE units are made up of police services from all over the province, including the RCMP, Calgary and Edmonton police, as well as police personnel from Lethbridge and Medicine Hat. ICE teams are dedicated units whose primary task is to investigate and pursue all cases of child exploitation, be they child pornography, child luring, or the child sex trade. These are the people who are on the front lines.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that if passed, the strength of Bill 202 would lie in its ability to assist these groups. If we legislate the mandatory reporting of child pornography, we would be providing these officers with an additional tool to help them combat child pornography. After all, if we provide these officers with more material to look over, they in turn may be able to analyze these pictures to locate and save these children.

As with everything, however, we need to be cautious that we are not putting too much strain on these teams. We do not want a situation where we are overloading our police forces by providing them with an overabundance of outdated and incorrect material. Mr. Speaker, to the credit of the member there is a section of the bill that should help address this concern. As part of this legislation there is a section that addresses the duties and responsibilities of reporting agencies once they have received notification of child pornography from an informant. One of these responsibilities could be to first identify the material to confirm that it is indeed child pornography and, the second, to ensure that it is material that has not already been sent to police teams, like ICE. In this way we would be able to guarantee that our police services are not being overloaded while also ensuring that they have access to all the material they need to effectively fight this horrible crime.

Mr. Speaker, as I said before, this bill in itself will not stop child pornography in our communities; it is hampered by jurisdiction. However, Bill 202 is a step in the right direction. Ultimately, the effectiveness of this legislation will rest on its ability to complement the programs and initiatives already under way, programs like Alberta ICE teams. I believe that if implemented properly, in a manner that does not overburden police services, this legislation has the potential to provide additional tools to our front-line investigators.

Mr. Speaker, in closing, I would again like to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek for bringing forward this bill. While I believe that this legislation may not be the best approach to combating child pornography, I recognize the valuable role that it could play in improving the safety of our communities. I will be standing in support of Bill 202 and urge all members to support this bill as well.

Thank you.

3:50

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, followed by the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to rise and again convey my full support for Bill 202, the Mandatory Reporting of Child Pornography Act. I have mixed feelings today because, I mean, this is such an urgent bill. It's one that needs to be passed and proclaimed, and I wish we could have done so in a way that would have seen a proclamation date for the fall. But the good news is, I think, that several members on that side of the House have alluded to the fact that we might be able to see this proclaimed and the regulations put in place some time this upcoming fall.

I sure hope that they find it in their best interests as well as the children's best interests across Alberta to get that done by this fall. I can promise them that if they don't get it done and proclaimed by this fall, I will make it my mission for the fall to remind them of it and to remind them of it in their constituencies.

This is not a bill that should be delayed at all. There is no excuse for it. You know, the groans and everything else: there's no reason for it. It's a bill that is long overdue. The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek has done countless hours of work on it consulting, getting it right, and although I'm sure we'll need to add even more legislation on this issue, as the last hon. member spoke about, we need to move forward with this.

We have, I believe, four ICE teams. Is it four ICE teams? There might be just two ICE teams in place right now. That's not enough at all. I'd like to see some of that wasted carbon capture and storage corporate welfare handout that they're giving out right now used, maybe a tenth of that or a fifteenth of that, and put it into new ICE teams to tackle this issue.

You know, it's just a matter of priorities. It's like anything else. We spend a heck of a lot of money in this province, Mr. Speaker, and there is no reason why we can't prioritize and put first things first and put needs before wants. If ever there was a need before a want, it would be more ICE teams to enforce the child pornography laws that we have in this province and to put a huge amount of our resources as a government on that side of the House into making sure that the regulations get made for this bill, which is likely going to pass third reading today, making sure that it gets passed and that those regulations get proclaimed and the bill gets proclaimed and receives royal assent as soon as possible. That absolutely should be job one for the Solicitor General, for the Justice minister, and for this Premier. I sure hope that by the fall they will get that done.

I had a constituent come up to me in Airdrie over the weekend at a function. Her little girl had been sexually abused, and they had just been able to get a decision against the criminal who did this. She was very emotional, as you would expect a mother to be in that situation. In that situation there were people that knew about what was going on and didn't say anything. That does happen in our society. There are people today that know what's going on, and they say, "Oh, it's not my business" or "That so-and-so is addicted to it, and I have to help him through it." You know, there's just no excuse for that sort of behaviour. There is no grey area; there's none.

If you know about a child that is being abused, if you know about a child that is involved in child pornography, if you know of someone who is purchasing child pornography on a website or you come across it by some accident or someone brings it to your attention, there is absolutely no reason for any resident, any citizen in this province to turn a blind eye to this. It is totally unacceptable. There's no grey area on this issue. You just do it because there are little boys and girls right now, one as young as two years of age, who are being grossly violated every day. We talk about a lot of things in this Legislature, in this House, but I just cannot think of anything that is more important than what we're dealing with in this bill, which is trying to eradicate one of the most disgusting and serious scourges of our society today.

I again commend the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek for the bill. I hope and would ask again that the government and Solicitor General and Justice minister make sure that they make it their number one task going into the summer to get their departments working on the regulations, get things together so that by the fall we can take a big step forward, proclaim this bill, and move forward as a province.

I know that today it looks like we'll probably receive unanimous approval of this bill, which is good. I don't question and never once have I questioned any of the other members of this Assembly as to their views on child pornography. Obviously, we're all very much opposed to it for what it is. But there is a question of urgency. Perhaps the question is really just that we get our minds tied up with other things, and these crimes are so horrific that perhaps at times we think, "Well, it can't be that big of a problem," because it's just beyond our comprehension to believe that stuff like this occurs. But it does occur, and it occurs lots, more often than I think any of us in this Assembly are aware of. That's why we have to kind of refocus and be reminded sometimes that some things can't wait. This is one of those things that can't wait.

Mr. Speaker, those are my remarks. Again, I support this bill wholeheartedly.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Marz: Well, thank you Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to speak to Bill 202, the Mandatory Reporting of Child Pornography Act. I'd like to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek for bringing forward what I think is a very significant piece of legislation that aims to protect our children. Child pornography has become one of the scourges of our age, and I welcome the opportunity to enter the debate on this subject matter today.

As some of you may be aware, the federal government is also working to address the issue of child exploitation. In 2002 the federal government enacted Bill C-15A, which strengthened the Criminal Code by increasing the offence of possessing and distributing child pornography and accessing it. The amendments also made it an offence to communicate with children by a computer system for the purpose of facilitating or committing certain sexual offences such as child luring or abduction.

Parliament then enacted Bill C-2, which included a broader definition of child pornography and increased penalties. On November 24, 2009, the federal government introduced Bill C-58, the Child Protection Act (Online Sexual Exploitation). This bill would have required Internet service providers to report cases where child pornography may be available to the public or if they have reasonable grounds to believe that their Internet service is being or has been used to commit a child pornography offence. While Bill C-58 was dropped from the Order Paper, I understand that the federal government has promised to reintroduce this legislation. Mr. Speaker, Bill C-58 is certainly a step in the right direction. A national initiative would be welcomed on this issue.

However, Bill 202 is in some ways even broader in scope than what the federal government proposed. One way that this bill is broader is that unlike Bill C-58, which states that a person must notify the police after they view what they believe to be child pornography, Bill 202 directs people to reporting entities. These reporting entities may be individuals or organizations that are qualified in determining what the next step of the reporting process should be. This could be by notifying the appropriate authorities or referring the material to another jurisdiction or organization.

Reporting entities could be integral to police services, especially in regard to authorities' valuable time. In other words, by allowing reports to be issued to reporting entities, who then could sort through the claims and evidence of child pornography and refer it to the appropriate police services, Bill 202 ensures that we don't burden law enforcement officers. Additionally, Bill 202 includes special provisions that would protect the identity of an informant by ensuring that no undue detriment or suffering is caused by reporting suspected child pornography to the proper authorities. Bill 202 clearly delineates expectations for individuals when it comes to the accidental discovery of child pornography and moves a step further to protect the informant, which Bill C-58 does not fully address.

Further, Mr. Speaker, Bill 202 is broader in that it proposes to make the reporting of all materials suspected to be child pornography mandatory in Alberta. It indicates that any material which may be child pornography be reported. Bill C-58 is specific to child pornography and the Internet. This may leave a hole in legislation in light of the fact that not all of this terrible material is viewed and disseminated on the Internet. Obviously, the Internet is the source of a lot of this material, but child pornography is evident in many different media, including drawings, video, and still images traded from one offender to another in person.

While C-58 aims at protecting children, Bill 202 may have a broader effect here in Alberta because it mandates the reporting of all materials. Mr. Speaker, Bill 202 reiterates to Albertans that we all have an important role to play in the prevention of child exploitation. In addition, by passing this bill, we could send a strong message to potential offenders that Alberta does not tolerate and never will tolerate this kind of child abuse. With this bill and the help of the entire community we could continue to ensure that the perpetrators are exposed and punished for the criminals they are.

Mr. Speaker, child pornography is not a new occurrence, but the electronic media has provided new opportunities for criminals to commit these type of crimes, and we must be vigilant in eradicating this blight on humanity. For these reasons, it is important to involve the public in our attempts to discover offenders. I continue to urge the federal government to bring forward a successor to Bill C-58 as I believe the nation-wide legislation will have a tremendous impact on this issue. I would in fact encourage our federal counterparts to consider also broadening the scope of their legislation. However, in the meantime I applaud Bill 202's broad approach.

With Bill 202 Alberta would have another tool to assist law enforcement, which can use it to not only ensure the safety of our children in this province but also to contribute to the global fight against child pornography. Mr. Speaker, this legislation also effectively coincides with this government's stated goals of ensuring safe communities across our province and protecting our most vulnerable citizens.

In closing, I support this legislation, and I urge my colleagues to do the same. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Is there any other hon. member wishing to speak on the bill? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to rise today and speak to third reading debate on Bill 202, the Mandatory Reporting of Child Pornography Act, brought forward by the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek. I thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek for drafting this bill as it highlights the importance of child protection laws.

It's unfortunate that we as legislators even have to stand and debate child protection, and I believe it is the right of every child to live in freedom and enjoy their childhood to the fullest. However, Mr. Speaker, the fact is that there are predators out there that obstruct this freedom and submit our children to conditions that will permanently damage and scar them. Child pornography is one of these evils and can cause a devastating emotional toll on children. Not only do these children have to endure the abuse, but they carry this abuse with them throughout the rest of their lives.

That is why it is crucial that we have child protection laws that will act as a deterrent and prevent these horrendous acts from ever occurring. Mr. Speaker, Bill 202 will make it a legal requirement to report findings of child pornography. This will ensure that if a person comes across any images of child pornography, they will be required to report these images to a designated reporting entity. This is an important measure because it engages the participation of each and every Albertan in combatting child pornography. Adding this responsibility could increase awareness of how these deplorable images are not tolerated in Alberta and that if they are found, they will be reported.

In addition to a mandatory reporting requirement, Bill 202 would also designate actions for reporting agencies to follow once a report has been made to them. This would ensure that the general public knows where to go if they have knowledge of pornographic images of children.

I thank you very much and ask everyone to support this legislation. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member.

Standing Order 8(7)(a)(iii) provides up to five minutes for the sponsor of the bill to close the debate. I would now invite the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek to close the debate.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I honestly value the time that the private members in this Legislature have to debate private members' bills. I know that there is another private member eagerly waiting to debate his private member's bill, so with that I'll call the question on Bill 202, the Mandatory Reporting of Child Pornography Act, and I ask everyone in the House to support it.

[Motion carried; Bill 202 read a third time]

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 203 Municipal Government (Local Access and Franchise Fees) Amendment Act, 2010

[Debate adjourned April 12: Mr. Chase speaking]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to be able to rise today in this Assembly to talk about Bill 203, the title of which, of course, is the Municipal Government (Local Access and Franchise Fees) Amendment Act, 2010. Just before I begin my remarks, I think the Member for Calgary-North Hill – I did get that right this time – deserves commendation for taking this bill much further than where I actually could take it when I had to hand it off to him.

Just a bit of background, Mr. Speaker. Bill 203 is quite simply about transparency and accountability to the taxpayers of this province but also to the ratepayers, people who pay their electricity bills, which is most of us in this Chamber and throughout this province. In fact, it's about making sure that when taxpayers see their electricity bill, they know what they're being charged for and how much they're being charged.

I just took a bit of an opportunity to do a bit of research on the weekend on this, Mr. Speaker, and I actually looked at my own electricity bill. Of course, I won't get into too many details about this, but if you look at local access fees, it's defined on Enmax's electricity bill as a surcharge imposed by the city of Calgary and is not approved by the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board. Isn't that interesting? That's right on its own bill. Now, I'm a single individual, and I live half my time in Edmonton, so of course the local access fee on my own bill is only about $2. But I actually was able to obtain another bill from another constituent of mine, and when I looked at the local access fee on this – this is for a condominium complex – in one month it was $685.73. Wow. That's almost $700 in one month that that one particular condominium complex is paying.

So this is an issue that Albertans want to debate. Some have suggested that we shouldn't even be debating this, we should just put this bill aside. I think, simply, that that is wrong. Albertans deserve more accountability and more transparency in these fees than to simply push it under the rug just because it might serve the convenient political agenda of some individuals or parties throughout this province. And when I say "parties," I don't mean political parties, Mr. Speaker.

Bill 203 addresses concerns around access fees that municipalities apply to their tax base. What we want to do through this bill is to create a common methodology on how these local access fees are in fact calculated. Specifically, this bill will allow for the calculation of the prescribed franchise fees for each unit of energy a household consumes. This would be uniform, then, throughout this entire province.

Mr. Speaker, I have to say that the way it is done right now is a little bit disingenuous to me. In fact, I was talking to a friend of mine in Ottawa about this this weekend, and that's exactly the comment that I received back. Municipalities currently have the authority to charge fees rather than property taxes for the use and maintenance of their electricity and distribution systems. Now, some people have said to me that these fees in fact are not a tax. On the other hand, those same individuals also say to me that if we get rid of this, we're going to have to raise the property tax. If this is in lieu of a tax, a tax is a tax is a tax.

The Premier of this province has been very clear that he doesn't want any further taxes as we go through the recession. This is why this is of particular concern to me. This is a tax. In fact, this local access and franchise fees attract a further tax, attract GST, on top of that at a rate of 5 per cent. Existing legislation allows municipalities to charge whatever they think is fair in forming these fees. In addition, Alberta municipalities use three different formulas to create these fees. These can be very, very confusing and convoluted, Mr. Speaker. There is always a taxation practice that, I believe, is unfair. It's unaccountable.

One municipality that has taken issue with this Bill 203, of course, is my home city of Calgary. Now, the city of Calgary has suggested that a system based on distribution only, like many municipalities currently use across this province, could lead the average homeowner to see an increase of about 20 per cent in their local access fees and that industrial consumers could see a rise of 12 to 18 per cent. Now, there is some basis, with fairness to this, Mr. Speaker, but this shows, again, why a distribution-based formula is not what Bill 203 looks at.

The method that the city of Calgary currently uses to calculate access fees is based on a percentage of the total power bill. For example, if the cost of energy doubles, so does the local access fee, and the municipality gets a windfall from ratepayers. I don't think that's right, Mr. Speaker. Under this model delivery charges can vary widely from community to community, and they may also be calculated with different percentages. That's why Bill 203 proposes an alternative to the distribution fee system and to the system used by the city of Calgary. That's what is needed. That's what this bill calls for.

Bill 203 proposes a formula which is to be calculated off the rate of energy consumed based on the kilowatt hour of energy usage. Now, people ask me: what exactly is that in plain English? Basically, the more you use, the more you pay. So if you have a large industrial user, a large commercial user, of course that particular body is going to pay more than a ratepayer like myself, that uses maybe $20 or $30 dollars of electricity per month. Now, this approach doesn't choose winners and losers, Mr. Speaker. It's a fair system in which high energy consumers pay more in fees, and those who conserve energy would pay less. You might argue that this approach would encourage energy conservation. I would argue that it would, but at the same time this isn't the pith and substance of this bill.

Overall, for anybody to suggest that access fees would surely increase with this method of calculation, I say right to their face that I think it's false. After all, the city of Calgary would still be free to set the rate of fees per unit of consumption. They could set it higher. But this is about transparency and about accountability. Research shows that consumers in consumption-based municipalities pay less in access fees, not more. Again, that's less, not more, contrary to what may have been said. Ultimately, it's the consumer that benefits from a formula like this one that Bill 203 proposes. A formula based on this consumption is simple, and it could easily be applied uniformly across municipalities across this province.

Mr. Speaker, the city of Calgary also suggests that an alternative formula could result in less municipal tax revenues, which would in turn be passed on to the taxpayer in the form of rate hikes or service cuts. Well, again, it proves that this is in fact a tax. But even if we do accept that, that's not the case. Municipalities would remain free to set their own unit rate as to make it revenue neutral. The difference would be that municipalities would be setting access fee rates based on a per-unit rate of electricity used, which, I submit, is both equitable and fair. This means that pursuant to Bill 203 the new formula used could be made revenue neutral if that's the prerogative of the city of Calgary or of any other municipality across the province.

This method also allows consumers to accurately compare their local access fee rate with every jurisdiction in Alberta. Let's face it, not everybody goes and scrutinizes their bills. If we have one uniform formula across the entire province, that is most fair, and that is transparent. This will provide a further layer of accountability, Mr. Speaker, for municipalities who might face complaints from residents who discover that their access fees are higher than their friends' or family members' in other parts of Alberta. Indeed, I have received many calls about this issue since the Member for Calgary-North Hill brought it up.

Further, Bill 203 would mandate that access fees be declared within the text of local utility bills. This legislation would also require local governments to include a clear explanation of fee revenue in their yearly financial statements, something which I don't think is adequately done at this juncture, Mr. Speaker. Municipal annual reports would be required to include the amount of money generated by these fees as well as the formula used to calculate the fees. This is a long-overdue reform.

The Canadian Federation of Independent Business calls this system hidden taxation. They call it exactly what it is. They further call it convoluted. Couldn't agree more, Mr. Speaker. Bill 203 also would bring these fees out of the darkness and would set a fair standard across Alberta. Albertans deserve full information on all fees that they're required to pay, and access fees should be no different. This bill enshrines transparency, it talks about openness, and it talks about accountability, all of which are important for this government.

Mr. Speaker, I have to say that I also have received some comments, some calls in my office saying that this is one order of government talking to another order of government. At the end of the day I don't think the average consumer actually has one pocket for what they pay to their local government and one pocket for what they pay to this government and one pocket for what they may pay to the federal government.

We have to go and look and examine these issues. This is a matter that should be debated, and I understand that there is some intention here to refer this to a policy field committee later today. I think that that's an excellent idea. It does require some more study, but at the same point in time we also want to consult with local groups like the Canadian Taxpayers Federation, and we want to consult with any other individual citizens as well as the municipalities themselves. Let's bring them in here. Let's have a dialogue as to what's going on. Let's make it open, let's make it transparent just like this whole process that we are actually seeking to do.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I'll conclude my comments, and I look forward to the remainder of the debate on Bill 203 today. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, you have spoken, according to my record. You adjourned it last time.

Mr. Chase: Oh, well, if I adjourned it, then I didn't finish. I have to start where I left off.

The Deputy Speaker: Oh, you still had some time? All right. But you should have been the first one up, right? After adjournment, you should have stood up.

Mr. Chase: Can I continue where I left off?

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur for the hon. member to continue? If not, then the chair will say no. [interjections] Sorry; you have passed your time to speak.

The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Bill 203, the Municipal Government (Local Access and Franchise Fees) Amendment Act, 2010, no doubt has noble goals. Bringing clarity and transparency to small business and residential consumers is a very important goal and something that I support. However, there is a problem. Yet again this government is going about this the wrong way initially. This government has a terrible track record of shooting first and then asking questions later. They did this with the royalty review, they did this with health care centralization, they did this with the ambulance dispatch system, and they did it with Bill 50.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it's obvious to many Albertans that with the way this government has handled health care and energy issues, they mean well, but they keep getting it wrong over and over and over again, so it's time they get it right. That's why I'm pleased to hear some of the members in this Assembly get up and say that they would like to refer this bill to the appropriate committee, to bring stakeholders in and to talk to those stakeholders, and to understand through consultation what the needs and the concerns are of the municipalities and other stakeholders that will be affected by this bill.

Municipalities, of course, have been given the authority to charge utility companies a fee for entry to municipal land so that they can build, operate, and maintain their electrical and natural gas distribution systems. Sadly, the authority delegated to municipalities has been, as has been alluded to in here, abused in some cases. Rather than charging a reasonable fee for a necessary service, some appear to be taking advantage of the situation. At the very least, the fees are confusing as they have different names in different cities, called fees in some, called charges in others.

Many municipalities have been proactive on this issue. In Medicine Hat, for example, their council doesn't charge a fee for access. They realize that, ultimately, the cost is shouldered by the taxpayer and have chosen not to burden their citizens in that way. In Calgary their fee, which is a charge for something used, is calculated based on the entire power bill. If the price of natural gas goes up, so does this so-called fee. This, of course, is inconsistent with what the fee is intended for: a fixed access charge by the municipality. The costs to access city property do not go up because the cost of power increases. That's not the point of the fee, and it's not appropriate.

Ensuring transparency and fairness is the job of government, so this is an important issue that we need to address. Again, this gives us the opportunity, by referring it to a committee, to include vital stakeholders that have not been consulted, to consult with stakeholders like municipalities, power users and generators as well as just average, everyday Albertans and consumers. Mr. Speaker, I endorse the principles and sentiments behind this bill, but I fear that if we do not send it to a committee, this will be another bungled attempt by this government to do something that is well meaning but has unintended consequences affixed to it.

In my view, the Standing Committee on Community Services is the appropriate venue for further discussion and consultation on this important issue. As such I would therefore propose the following amendment, and I have appropriate copies of the amendment that I would bring forward.

The Deputy Speaker: The pages will distribute the amendment.

Hon. member, please continue with this amendment.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, I'd move that the motion for second reading of Bill 203, Municipal Government (Local Access and Franchise Fees) Amendment Act, 2010, be amended by deleting all the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 203, Municipal Government (Local Access and Franchise Fees) Amendment Act, 2010, be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Community Services in accordance with Standing Order 74.2.

I've already spoken to why I feel that, again, we need the opportunity to consult with various stakeholders, power users, power generators, municipalities, consumers, et cetera. That is the reason for referring it rather than just barrelling on ahead and passing a bill that could have some very severe unintended consequences.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright on the amendment.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the member bringing forward an amendment that is referring this bill to the Standing Committee on Community Services. I would like the member and the House to know that I, too, had intended on bringing forward an amendment, which I still intend to do, that refers this bill to the Standing Committee on the Economy. Because of that and because I do believe that there are a lot of members here that would like to have further debate and this is an issue that needs to be debated in this Assembly before it gets referred because there are a lot of comments that people would like to make, I encourage all members to defeat this amendment and carry on with the debate.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: On the amendment, are there any other hon. members who wish to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore on the amendment.

Mr. Hinman: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's interesting, and I appreciate the comments from the hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright. My question is that there are a lot of bills to come forward, and if it's going to go to the committee, wouldn't that be a more efficient place? It's not like this bill is being voted on and gone. It's actually going to a committee, where we're going to have a more informed discussion. We're going to be able to listen to stakeholders and, like I say, raise the level of discussion and the depth to make sure that this bill is correct, again, having openness and honesty to the taxpayers, realizing what they're paying for, not just having a tax loophole where the municipalities can just raise a tax and generate income. It's a need. Almost everybody in the province is on the grid. There are a few people that have gone off the grid.

I just think that we should vote on this amendment as is. I think that going to Community Services is a good area, but I'll wait to hear the discussion from further members on this amendment.

The Deputy Speaker: On the amendment, are there any other hon. members who wish to speak?

Seeing none, the chair shall now put the question on the amendment.

[Motion on amendment lost]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, we go back to the bill.

The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured today to rise in this Assembly to speak to Bill 203, the Municipal Government (Local Access and Franchise Fees) Amendment Act, 2010, put forward by the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill. Bill 203 would essentially create a common methodology for calculating local access fees and franchise fees. This is an important issue.

Every month all of us get utility bills which include local access fees. My first question is: what is this fee for? And the second: how is this fee calculated? Bill 203 would address these questions through greater transparency and a common sense approach to calculating local access fees and franchise fees. Mr. Speaker, Bill 203 would clarify the method of calculating local access fees and franchise fees by creating a common methodology of calculation at a prescribed rate per unit of energy consumed and prohibiting calculation by other methods.

Bill 203 would also require local governments to include a clear explanation of fee revenue for their yearly financial statements. The purpose of this is to improve transparency. Albertans expect transparent billings for all items that they purchase, including utilities. This would also clarify that it is the municipalities that are charging these fees, not the utility company, as it may currently appear. I believe that there is some misunderstanding and lack of adequate clarity in that regard. This is important as many consumers assume that it is the utility companies that are charging these fees when, in fact, it is the municipality.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 203 would also require that municipal annual reports include the amount of money generated by these fees and the formula used to generate them. Furthermore, Bill 203 would require municipalities to advise consumers of any changes to the rate of local access fees and franchise fees publicly in the local paper three calendar months in advance of the rate change.

Mr. Speaker, what I want to specifically focus on are the benefits of a common rate per unit methodology as opposed to the current method of calculation that some municipalities use based on distribution charges. This is a crucial element of the bill because currently there isn't a common methodology for calculating local access fees and franchise fees on utility bills. Many jurisdictions calculate local access fees based on distribution costs. Distribution costs are charged to the consumer for the costs incurred by the electricity company when they transmit power from their generation sites to the city. However, under this system the distribution costs can vary widely from community to community.

In addition to this, they may calculate these fees with different formulas. For example, one community may charge 22 per cent on a distribution charge of a hundred dollars, resulting in a monthly payment of $22, whereas another community may charge 10 per cent on a distribution charge of $300, resulting in a monthly payment of $30. This discrepancy makes it impossible to accurately compare percentages across municipalities.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 203 proposes a formula which would be calculated off the rate of energy consumed. Specifically, access fees would be based on the kilowatt hour of electricity used. This would result in a system where consumers would pay more in access fees if they used more energy and less in access fees if they consumed less energy. In addition, these fees would not be tied to a shifting commodity or to a distribution charge that may change over time. This method of calculation provides numerous benefits to consumers over the method used on distribution charges.

First of all, formula-based consumption would be simple, based on a common formula that would be applied uniformly across all jurisdictions. This method allows consumers to accurately compare a local access fee rate with every jurisdiction in Alberta. This could have the benefit of reduced access fees across the province as all jurisdictions would want to have competitive access fees to attract both business and residents. Under the current system, where rates are based on a distribution charge, it is impossible to compare between jurisdictions because different regions are served by different utility firms that charge different distribution charges.

A second benefit would be to the individual's ability to reduce their access fees by reducing energy consumption. With a rate that is based on the amount of energy consumed, it would be in the interests of consumers to be energy efficient. This could involve purchasing energy efficient appliances or just making common-sense changes to conserve energy, both of which benefit the environment and the consumer. Under the current system the access fees are based on a distribution charge which does not correlate with the amount of energy consumed.

Overall, Mr. Speaker, a method based on the energy consumed is much more equitable than a rate calculated as a percentage of the total delivery costs. The current system is not transparent and not uniformly applied. Furthermore, consumers would benefit by implementing a unified format across jurisdictions.

As a private member I embrace open, transparent, and accountable government, and this bill exemplifies that objective. I would again like to thank the Member for Calgary-North Hill for introducing this important bill, and I eagerly look forward to the remainder of the debate.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to be able to rise to speak with respect to Bill 203. I'll keep my comments brief because I don't really want to get into a long discussion about the merits of the bill and the various and sundry disagreements about funding formulas that the government has problems with, I gather, particularly the city of Calgary engaging in, but I will say a couple of points.

First of all, one of the members across the way got very concerned at one of the other opposition members here suggesting that this was a government bill. Of course, we all know that it is not a government bill; it's a private member's bill. Having listened to the comments made by a number of government members that were clearly prepared by a similar researcher with similar talking points that were written in similar styles, I think we can all conclude that there's a certain amount of consensus on the part of the government MLAs or at least those who access the same research budget.

However, let's just talk a little bit about probably the biggest concern around Bill 203, which is, of course, that the Alberta union of municipal associations is quite opposed to it for the simple reason that they have not been consulted at all on the crafting of this bill and believe, obviously, that it interferes with some of their own authority and the practice and the level of respect that has theoretically developed between the provincial government and municipal governments and the level of deference in negotiation that usually goes on between those two levels of government notwithstanding the provincial government's relationship to municipal governments through the Municipal Government Act. There is, obviously, represented here a clear break with some of that sort of traditional deference and respect.

I have to say that it is a little bit sort of inconsistent and, I would suggest, perhaps even a little bit hypocritical because, of course, where necessary, say, for instance, with school boards, this government is very quick to go on at much length about the importance of those school boards' independence and how all decisions that might potentially offend Albertans, say, for instance, the closing of community school after community school after community school, are clearly within the purview of the school boards, and, oh, how dare we suggest that the provincial government might possibly exercise some level of leadership to stop that particular disaster from unfolding?

Then when it comes to the actions of municipal governments, which have a great deal more independence than school boards because, of course, they still have some control over the amount of funds that are given to them as opposed to the school boards, suddenly the government is stepping in, writing legislation, and wants to get into the minutiae of how these organizations raise their funds, so clearly a certain amount of double standard, depending on what the political objective is to be reached in that case. I have to say, too, that this whole issue of: "Oh, well, we want transparency. We want municipal citizens to understand how much they're actually being taxed, and we want them to understand who it is that's actually taxing them. That's really important, and that's why we're going to go ahead with this legislation" is, well, again, a little bit of a double standard on the part of this province.

We have a government that's constantly going on about how they theoretically have this very, very competitive income tax system in Alberta. Now, in fact, it's only really competitive for those who are the most wealthy. Nonetheless, if you listen to their message box, they'll have you believe that we have very low tax rates in Alberta. Much like the city of Calgary, who's doing the same thing, these guys run around saying: "Look at us. We have such low tax rates." Yet, of course, we have loads of hidden fees all over the place that Albertans need to pay, which are far in excess of what many other jurisdictions have to pay. We have amongst the highest cost for child care and the lowest quality. We have amongst the highest tuitions and additional fees associated with tuition. You know, we've delisted more things, so people have to pay more out of pocket for services here.

There has been study after study showing that when you add up the basic social services that, essentially, come for free in other provinces and add them to Alberta's, then in fact this is the most expensive place in the country for low- and middle-income people to live. Why is that the case? Well, because they're hidden costs, just like the hidden costs that this particular member is claiming he wants to get rid of through this bill when talking about municipal governance.

I guess my point is simply: what's good for the goose is good for the gander. If this government truly believes that it's all about, you know, making municipal politicians accountable for how much they're asking citizens to pay, I would suggest that this government ought to maybe adopt the same policy with respect to their own taxation efforts. Until such time as they do, I really have some difficulty feeling particularly sympathetic for the arguments being made here.

Ultimately, whether there does need to be a change to the way in which franchise fees are addressed, that's something that requires more discussion. I would say that at the starting point there certainly needs to be consistency adopted on the part of this government, and there needs to be a greater level of consultation and negotiation with municipalities before Big Brother steps in and starts telling them what to do. For that reason I can't support this bill, and if at some point a motion comes forward to have it referred to committee, I will probably support that.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today in this Assembly to speak to Bill 203, the Municipal Government (Local Access and Franchise Fees) Amendment Act, 2010, being put forward by my friend the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 203 would essentially create a common methodology for calculating local access fees and franchise fees. This methodology would be based upon the prescribed rate per unit of energy that would be determined by each municipality. This means that municipalities in Alberta would continue to set the rate for local access and franchise fees. However, they would have to use a common methodology for calculating their rates.

In addition, Bill 203 would require municipal governments to include a clear and straightforward explanation of their fee revenues in their financial statements. This would include listing the amount of money generated by the local access and franchise fees as well as the formula used to generate the fees in their financial statements. In this way the information would be readily available to the public.

Mr. Speaker, municipalities have the authority to charge fees in lieu of charging property taxes for use of and access to their land in order to conduct and maintain and operate distribution systems exclusively within the municipality's boundaries. The Municipal Government Act allows the municipality to charge what it believes is fair considering the local market. Thus, a local access fee is something most Albertans are required to pay. Therefore, the revenue generated from the local access fee is important information, and it should be made available to the public.

Mr. Speaker, when Albertans are required to pay a fee, it is only reasonable to ask that they are provided with some basic information on that fee. After all, a clear explanation of local access fee revenues, describing what they are as well as the formula used to generate them, is standard information which Albertans have a right to know, especially since it was their money to begin with, and they should know what they're paying for.

By ensuring this information is made public in annual financial statements, Albertans will be more informed and aware of exactly how much is generated by each municipality. This is essential because some consumers would like to compare their local access fees to other municipalities' or at least have that option available to them if they choose. For instance, as of January 1, 2005, the franchise fee in Edmonton was $21 compared to Calgary, which had a franchise fee of $40. Under this bill Albertans could compare and then determine for themselves if they are comfortable paying their current rates, and if not, they would be able to contact their municipality to address their concerns.

Not only do people want to compare current local access and franchise fees across Alberta, but they may also want to reference fees from previous years. They would be able to do this under Bill 203 since all financial statements are easily accessible no matter what year. Bill 203 ensures this valuable information is available to the public as this is the only way to ensure that it benefits consumers.

Mr. Speaker, this information is not only important for individual Albertans, but it can also be useful for businesses that would like to know about the local access fees they are paying. For instance, they may want to compare and review different local access fees across Alberta, and as you know, businesses have utility bills as well and, therefore, pay local access fees. Bill 203 will help Alberta businesses plan their budgets since they will be able to review the exact formula that was used in determining the fees. This type of comparison is only possible if consumers and businesses can review the local access and franchise fees for all municipalities across Alberta.

Albertans would benefit from greater transparency if local governments would publish this information in their financial statements. This consistency would make it easier for Albertans to locate the information in a format that is comparable to other municipalities. Mr. Speaker, the information is valuable. More individuals and businesses need to know about the local access fees they are paying and how the fees are being determined. In this way the better they can plan for their budgets and address their own concerns.

Mr. Speaker, this bill will also help municipalities clearly communicate their messaging since they want to ensure that consumers are informed and aware of their local access fees. In this way Bill 203 would create a consistent way to display local access fee information that would be accessible to residential consumers, businesses, and all Albertans. Making certain that Albertans are fully informed is all a part of this government's commitment to greater accountability and transparency, and that is exactly what Bill 203 intends to do.

Thank you for allowing me to speak on this subject, Mr. Speaker. I eagerly look forward to the remainder of the debate.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore on the bill.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to speak on the bill. There are certain aspects that I, of course, agree with, but there are others where I have concerns. Seeing as how we're debating in the House and not going to committee, I feel it's important to put those on the record at this point. First of all, I find it interesting that these government members are saying that there's the importance of having openness and a formula, which I very much agree with. Whenever we talk about good government is when we have formulas. If, in fact, we know the flat tax in Alberta is 10 per cent over and above $16,000, it's very simple. We see it, and there's no manipulation that can take place.

Again, what I want to address on Bill 203 and where I agree is that this formula is there to address competitiveness, and that's what we want. Right now too often in many areas, when it comes to energy and other areas, Albertans are actually punished for reducing their consumption because they're paying a higher percentage per bill. This is true for kilowatts here. It's true for water usage. There's not a great advantage in many areas because you reduce your consumption, and they have a flat fee and then a consumption after that. So the aspect where we're tying this, actually, to consumption is very good and something that I'm a strong advocate of and agree with. I hope that the members of this government will continue to take hold of that, the importance of a formula that's based on consumption.

I also find interesting, though, the dilemma that we're stepping on here. This is where I need to do more research, and we don't have the research money that the government members and some of the other opposition parties have, so it's a little tougher to address. But the fact is that many municipalities are strapped because of the government's dealing with those municipalities. I want to refer to my own at this point, Calgary. From the latest numbers I have, from 2006, the personal income tax that was paid by Calgarians was $7 billion. I've been unable to get the corporate tax, but the personal income tax was $7 billion; $5 billion of that went to the federal government; $2 billion went to the provincial government.

What we need to address here is a formula where a percentage of tax goes back to the community where it comes from. If we were actually to go back and have a formula like that, many of these municipalities wouldn't have to look at the few areas where they can raise their money to try and balance their books. The municipalities are given the responsibility to provide many of the things that we as citizens need: our schools, the libraries, the garbage, the water. All of those things are at the municipal level, but very often we get provincial and federal interference in those areas saying: "Oh, we'll give you some grants to do this. We'll give you some grants to do that." But if we go back and look at the actual tax structure and the amount of money that leaves our communities, most individuals would find this quite eye opening, I believe.

Again, the Solicitor General last week made a point and said that I was going to destroy communities because of the change in the tax system. I would say quite the opposite when I don't want the interference of the provincial government in deciding how much money is going to go to which communities for schools, for hospitals, in those areas. It would be just the opposite. If the money actually stayed there, those communities could make the decision rather than cabinet or some level of government like Alberta Health Services to decide what services could be there. Formulas are critical, and we need to come up with a formula. We should be strong advocates with the federal government for having a formula base returned to our municipalities because that would make a huge change.

The most important principle that's good in this bill is the biggest detriment going forward here in Alberta for business to be competitive outside our jurisdiction, and that is that this government has brought forward Bill 50 and has given the minister the opportunity to declare this as essential needs and to decide the size and the scope of these power lines around the $15 billion mark.

What's really lacking in all of this, though – and it goes back to 2001, where this government defeated a transition in how electricity was going to be paid and distributed in this province – is that someone can set up anywhere in the province, and then the minister can decide that, well, we're going to build a power line from that facility to serve Albertans. If we were to use this formula and say that, yes, you can produce power wherever you want, but the actual cost of the grid and to run it – again, if we look at the total cost and then divide it by the kilowatts per kilometre that it travels, that would change the whole dynamics of the competitiveness and what we'd actually generate electricity with.

We've actually got a system here with Bill 50 that just is going to counter any good that Bill 203 does. I'd urge the members of this government who are supporting Bill 203 to look at Bill 50 and realize: "You know what? We have a major flaw here. It's not going to be open, it's not going to be competitive, and it's going to drive industry out." This government is going to spend $15 billion on power lines because they want somebody to be able to set up anywhere in the province to produce electricity when, in fact, if those power companies had to pay a percentage – and the old motion coming forward on that was, I think, 50 per cent paid by the producer per kilowatt per kilometre – all of a sudden it's not necessarily economically viable to put a power plant or a nuclear facility way up north and then have to build those power lines.

If, in fact, we have a municipal structure that says, "Oh, it doesn't matter where on the grid; you're going to have to pay for this" and it's redistributed through industry and consumers and citizens, then all of a sudden it's economically viable. I think this principle of a formula is critical, it's important, but it's more important that we apply it to the provincial-wide grid than that we apply it to a municipal grid.

Again, the problem of why municipalities are forced to do this in many jurisdictions is because we don't return the tax dollars that are already being generated in those areas. Government pulls it out and then says, "Well, we don't think you need it for this or that," and they make all the decisions with the strings attached, whether it's schools, whether it's overpasses, whatever. We need to go back and have a proper reallocation of the tax dollars with a formula so that each level of government can make their own efficient and wise decisions on how they're going to ensure the basic services are provided for those people in those different communities.

I'd have to overall be in favour of this bill, looking forward to it going to the committee. What disappoints me is that the principles that make this bill sound are not in there. I'm very concerned, though, of overstepping, again, municipal jurisdictions, saying that, you know, "You have a tax problem, but we're not going to allow you to tax in this area" while we're robbing them on the other side, where they should have those tax dollars being returned to them.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure today to rise and speak to Bill 203, the Municipal Government (Local Access and Franchise Fees) Amendment Act, 2010, as was brought forward by the very hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill. The purpose of Bill 203 is to establish a common methodology for the calculation of local access and franchise fees. These fees are included on Albertans' utility bills. However, they're not actually a part of the utility companies' revenue, nor are these fees determined by the utility companies. Rather, all the money collected by these fees is returned to the municipality. The reasoning is that the electric distribution system is located on municipal lands, lands that would normally be charged property taxes. As such, the Municipal Government Act authorizes municipalities to collect these fees via the electricity and natural gas distribution companies for the use of the land on which the distribution system lies as well as the exclusive right to provide distribution access services within a municipality.

This is an important source of revenue for municipalities; there's absolutely no doubt about that. They rely on these fees to fund part of their annual budgets, to provide services to their constituents. However, Mr. Speaker, while these fees are collected by almost all cities across the province, they're not collected uniformly across the province. Each municipality is empowered to make an agreement with the utility companies regarding the charge and the collection of the fee. As such, there are a variety of methodologies, or quite a mishmash, employed across the province's municipalities that direct how the fees are actually calculated.

The variance in the fee calculation methodology can pose several difficulties to local consumers. First, it precludes the comparison of franchise and access fee charges across the province. Second, depending on the method used, the fees paid by the consumer and, therefore, collected by the municipality lack an important degree of predictability. For example, one methodology used to calculate fees is based on the distribution costs of the utility. Using that method, a municipality charges a percentage of the cost of distribution as a fee. For example, if the distribution cost is a hundred dollars, Mr. Speaker, the municipality could have a rate of 10 per cent and, thus, charge $10 in fees. The difficulty with this method is that the cost of distribution varies from community to community, depending on the distribution system itself as well as the distance the customer is from the generator. Further, generation costs can actually vary, which impedes the consumer's ability to predict cost and the municipality's ability to predict revenue.

Another methodology bases the amount owed for franchise and access fees on the overall cost of the utility consumed. While the formula is transparent, it's important to acknowledge that the values of natural gas and electricity are very variable. At times commodity prices are high, which results in a greater than expected return to municipal governments. In contrast, if commodity prices drop, the expected, not to mention budgeted, revenue will not be realized.

Yet another methodology involves levying access and franchise fees based on the amount of utility that's actually consumed. This is a more predictable and transparent method of collecting fees. This means that regardless of the market commodity prices individuals and businesses will be able to understand and predict the amount they will owe in terms of franchise and access fees. Mr. Speaker, Bill 203 aims to establish the mechanism as the provincial methodology for calculating. However, it does not legislate the rate of charge. That is still left up to municipalities.

Mr. Speaker, regardless, we've heard from many people who have spoken about the complexity of this situation, so it's critical that this bill be sent to committee for further consultation with municipalities. I apologize. I was incorrect in the reference I made to the standing committee that it needed to be referred to. But as such – and my apologies to the member – the amendment still requires a referral date back to this House. At this point I would like to move an amendment to the motion for second reading of Bill 203 by deleting all the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 203, the Municipal Government (Local Access and Franchise Fees) Amendment Act, 2010, be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Community Services in accordance with Standing Order 74.2 and that the committee report the bill back to the Assembly on or before October 28, 2010.

Mr. Anderson: Point of order.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere on a point of order.

Point of Order

Amendment to Bill 203

Mr. Anderson: I understand, Mr. Speaker, that mistakes happen, and that's fine. But the fact is that we had a motion, a proposed amendment on the table that essentially did what this member – it's essentially the same amendment. I'm trying to figure it out. I mean, one of the reasons in his comments, when he spoke about the reason to defeat the bill, was because he had another amendment that would refer it to the SPC on the Economy. So that argument, of course, I would say, changed the entire debate. You know, I don't understand. Should we not go back, then, and redebate that . . .

Some Hon. Members: Citation.

Mr. Anderson: Misleading the House probably. It's in Beauchesne's. I could look it up if you can give me two seconds to come up with an argument, but that's the argument that I have. This is the exact same amendment that was just shut down.

The Deputy Speaker: The chair recognizes 5 o'clock. The next order of business.

5:00 Motions Other than Government Motions

Underground Utilities

508. Mr. Allred moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to require that all future underground utilities be buried at least one metre underground and an accurate as-built location be added to a comprehensive underground facilities registry.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert on the motion.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to introduce Motion 508 and what I believe to be a very important issue that affects all Albertans. This proposal attempts to create a database so that accurate records of buried facilities are available to landowners, other pipeline and cable companies, contractors, et cetera, to prevent the danger and expense of hitting an underground facility. The wording is intentionally broad to include pipelines, electrical and communication cables, underground storage tanks, and anything that is buried. It is ironic that we have better records of gravesites than we do of potentially dangerous gas lines and electrical conduits.

Mr. Speaker, an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure. The onus should be on the party that owns and buries a facility to record the location and to bury it at a safe depth so it will not be struck by an innocent party rather than shifting the onus onto an innocent party who may be developing his own property. The development could include digging the foundation for a new building, plowing a field, excavating for a dugout, landscaping, laying a new pipeline or conduit, or perhaps a major construction project.

Mr. Speaker, it is not reasonable to place the full responsibility on anyone conducting a ground disturbance to locate underground facilities when the owner of the facility has not taken care to bury that facility at a sufficient depth or place it out of danger of normal operations and has not taken proper precaution to ensure that they are able to relocate that facility. Preparing an accurate as-built record is a normal cost of doing business. Utility companies need to protect their investment by maintaining proper records.

In addition, a proper record of buried facilities will enhance the operation of Alberta One-Call. This proposal is fully supported by Alberta One-Call. This will not eliminate but enhance the operation of Alberta One-Call. In fact, I have received a letter of support from Alberta One-Call, which I will table tomorrow, but I'd like to read it now. The letter is addressed to myself.

Re: Proposed Motion with Respect to Buried Facility As-Built Records

Dear Mr. Allred:

In the interest of preventing further damage to buried facilities, Alberta One-Call supports in principle your proposed motion to the Alberta Legislature with respect to mandating spatially accurate as-built records of buried facilities installed after some date yet to be established. The collection of such records into a secure central repository with limited, pre-approved, web-based access would be both efficient and cost-effective. The platform to contain such data is in place.

Over time, during the normal course of facility maintenance and ground disturbance activities, the records of existing buried facilities could be brought to this higher standard.

Given the extent and complexity of the underground infrastructure in Alberta, the rate with which it increases every year and how essential it is in the provision of goods and services to all Albertans, a requirement for spatially accurate records ought to be considered reasonable and in the interests of keeping our province safe and connected.

Yours sincerely,

Robert R. Chisholm, P.Eng.

President

Alberta One-Call only has a record of the presence of a buried pipeline or conduit on a property. They do not have an accurate location of that line. In many cases they don't even have a record of the presence of many buried facilities. When called, Alberta One-Call advises the operator of any lines that are indicated in their database as being in the vicinity of a proposed construction or excavation and have that operator take steps to mark the location of the line on the ground.

Alberta One-Call will not do locates for proposed construction planning, only prior to an actual ground disturbance. Current legislation is not as thoroughly co-ordinated as it could be in regard to requirements for burying and recording of the creation of buried facilities. For instance, the Gas Distribution Act, the Pipeline Act, the National Energy Board Act, and others all contain loose provisions regarding depth and need for as-built records. Pipelines under the National Energy Board's jurisdiction or communications facilities are not subject to Alberta legislation. Very often, however, if a province has reasonable standards, other jurisdictions will accept them voluntarily.

The broad wording within the motion is intentional. It is a privilege, not a right to bury something, and for that privilege an owner of a facility has the responsibility to ensure that it does not pose a hazard and that an accurate record of its location is available to the landowner and the public. Electrical and gas utility lines are very often buried less than a metre deep, and that is a problem. It is not uncommon for landowners to drive fence posts or iron bars into the ground, Mr. Speaker. Landowners have struck utility lines in the past. Agricultural operations have disturbed shallow lines that were not buried to a sufficient depth.

In 2002 there was an incident in Stony Plain where a man doing landscaping pounded an iron bar through a gas line, blowing up his house and killing himself and his wife. Last summer just down by the Royal Glenora a pile was driven through a waterline. The waterline location was revised during construction to avoid an obstacle, but the revision was not recorded, and hence the operator of the piledriver was unaware of its presence. The incident resulted in a major flood inside the Royal Glenora.

Mr. Speaker, adoption of this motion will make Alberta a leader in underground planning that will be looked up to by other provinces and jurisdictions around the world. Alberta has over a million kilometres of buried pipelines and conduit, likely more than any other jurisdiction in the world. We have a responsibility to our citizens to set standards for their protection. We need to show leadership in managing our buried infrastructure.

The cost of the $250 million overpass at Gateway Boulevard and 23rd Avenue is largely a result of the myriad of pipelines that come in from the southwest across that intersection to the former Dome Petroleum facility on the northeast corner of that intersection. These pipes all had to be relocated and moved in order to accommodate the overpass construction.

Very often extensive pipeline facilities are constructed adjacent to urban municipalities only to find that 10 or 20 years later they are right in the heart of commercial or residential development, exposing residents and contractors to unnecessary risk. For example, the Mill Woods pipeline explosion back in the 1980s caused major panic and tied up emergency vehicles for most of a day.

Mr. Speaker, we need one simple system to record the location of all buried facilities. We currently have an accurate cadastral database that could easily accommodate another layer to show the locations of all buried facilities.

Poor records cause problems for those who do not comply, resulting in damage and/or injury which they may be liable for. Compliance is for their own protection. This motion is intended to apply to all utilities as there are many utilities that are buried by private agencies. The importance of the motion is not to address who owns the facility but for the protection of the public.

In most cases private utilities pose more danger than government-owned or -supported utilities. The problem is that very often so-called as-constructed or as-built plans are not as-built but merely a carbon copy of the proposed plans stamped "as constructed." This is usually the problem in that diversions and revisions do not get recorded and the public is led to believe that the buried facility is where it was supposed to be, not where it was actually constructed. The unrecorded location of dangerous buried infrastructure is definitely a safety hazard. Steps can be and are taken after the fact to locate buried facilities, but sometimes this precaution is overlooked or the lines are not found.

Mr. Speaker, one metre is a minimum in the opinion of many groups ranging from farmers to surveyors to Alberta One-Call. Several agencies have good, accurate records of underground facilities, but many do not record an accurate location of those facilities, and very few records are readily available to the public. The intent is not necessarily to capture historical information but to require information to be provided from this day forward. We need to start today to avoid compounding the problem in the future. Historical information can be provided as existing pipelines, et cetera, are uncovered and recorded to enhance the record.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I believe this is a common-sense approach to this issue which potentially affects all Albertans. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to debate Motion 508, future underground utilities regulation, and I appreciate the hon. Member for St. Albert bringing it up. I can't help but flash back to six years ago, when we were talking about a different type of shoveling. At that point it was shoot, shovel, and shut up that was a solution our former Premier suggested for BSE. Well, obviously, cover-up doesn't apply to what the hon. Member for St. Albert is putting forward.

I've had the privilege, the opportunity to work two summers for Alberta Gas Trunk Line. In the summer of 1967 I worked out of Rocky Mountain House, and in the summer of 1968 I worked out of Fort Macleod. I got to see a lot of backcountry, and in the process I covered several kilometres with the old-fashioned witching rods, trying to find buried pipelines. Obviously, the larger pipelines were easier to find, but those that serviced local farms were often quite difficult to find, especially when they weren't well marked in the midst of the field. So from first-hand experience I know how important being able to find that pipeline is and not coming up with a surprise or a tragedy, as indicated, by not knowing where these pipelines are located.

As the hon. Member for St. Albert pointed out, it seems unbelievable that the depth is only a metre, considering how easy it is in some areas to go down a metre very rapidly, an example being when I worked for Keith Construction in terms of developing the area around Lake Bonavista and the subsequent lake developments that occurred. Around the Lake Bonavista area in south Calgary the earth is primarily a sandy soil, and I can remember being down in different areas where we had to go through clay and gravel. We were using a variety of instruments to penetrate into the earth to bury the weeping tiles and so on as part of the process of constructing homes. Then we came beside the lake, and all of a sudden with little effort at all we found ourselves three and four feet down in the basement because of the sandy soil. I'm very grateful that during my experiences with both Alberta Gas Trunk Line and working for Keith Construction and Kelwood Corporation, that did a lot of the maintenance for Keith, that I didn't have any surprises occur.

It's absolutely essential that this information be recorded. Questions that I would have to the hon. mover of the motion. Who would be responsible for the upkeep of the registry? Who would pay for the registration of this information? What about proprietary information? Is that a concern of the central registry? It's important from a safety point of view that this be dealt with. As to the record keeping, who keeps that information that's essential? Also, who pays for it? My experience in working with individuals out of Turner Valley over water concerns in the Sheep River at the site of a former gas and oil refinery just on the edge of Turner Valley and then some crossover concerns not only for the river but concerns about where old well sites, both gas and oil, were located, where the town was building its new reservoir: the town of Turner Valley ended up paying thousands and thousands of dollars because the old well sites weren't recorded.

The first time they did their excavation, they found that right within the area that they were building their reservoir, there were old sites. There was buried equipment and the potential for leaching of contaminants into the water reservoir that they were building. This was a great concern for local residents. Alberta Environment, to its credit, became involved in the discussions, and a resolution was achieved, but in the process of that resolution an awful lot of money was paid out by the town of Turner Valley in order to do things right. Obviously, things should be done correctly, but had this information on well sites been available, these concerns would have been considerably less and less expensive to deal with.

We have to be aware that burying facilities deeper will likely cause an increase to the costs of installing underground utilities in the future. How those extra costs are borne will have to be determined as well. However, given the importance of safety and the pervasiveness of underground utilities throughout Alberta, the millions of kilometres, as the hon. Member for St. Albert acknowledged, best practices in burying the facility and in record keeping have to outweigh capital concerns.

It's for this reason that I am supportive of the hon. Member for St. Albert's Motion 508, future underground utilities regulation. I appreciate that through the government of Alberta and working with industry the Alberta first call exists. This will only enhance what Alberta first call is attempting to create by, at least from here on in, recording very vital information both for safety and for economy.

Again, I want to thank the hon. Member for St. Albert for bringing forth Motion 508, future underground utilities regulation. It makes sense; therefore, we support it.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and join in the debate on Motion 508, being brought forward by the hon. Member for St. Albert. Motion 508 urges the government to require that all future underground facilities are accurately recorded as built and added to a comprehensive underground facilities registry. For the sake of clarity the term "underground facility" refers to any piece of infrastructure that's buried underground. This could range from pipelines to mine shafts to electrical cables and irrigation systems. In simple terms if something is buried underground, it constitutes an underground facility.

Mr. Speaker, I agree with this motion for several reasons. First and most importantly, this motion has the potential to greatly improve safety in and around our construction sites. There have been several cases in recent years of situations where people were injured or killed when they accidentally struck a power or natural gas line. In many cases either the positions of these lines were not known to the victim or the lines were buried in a different location than originally indicated. Sometimes an individual had called ahead to get a map of the underground infrastructure only to hit a line anyway because the map was as proposed versus as built.

Second, having an up-to-date as-built map registry could dramatically reduce maintenance and repair costs in the long run. Repairing a major pipeline, for example, has the potential to cost millions of dollars and cause untold environmental harm.

Mr. Speaker, Motion 508 is not proposing that we go back and mark the location of our entire underground infrastructure. This would be impossible. After all, Alberta has over 1 million kilometres of underground pipelines, cables, and gas lines. The cost to locate and record an as-built map for all of these lines would unduly burden many industries throughout the province. Instead, Motion 508 is specifically requiring all future projects to be accurately recorded as built. With the advent of GPS surveying technology it is quick, it's easy, and it's affordable to mark down an underground facility as it is being constructed. This requirement does not place an unworkable or unaffordable burden on our businesses. Rather, this requirement is exactly what a regulation should be. It is a policy in place to ensure public safety and welfare without unduly hampering the effectiveness of our businesses.

In closing, I would like again to thank the hon. Member for St. Albert for bringing forward this motion. I believe this is a common-sense solution to a potentially dangerous problem. I applaud the preparation and effort that went into drafting Motion 508 and strongly urge all members to stand with me in support of it.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and speak in favour of Motion 508, presented by the hon. Member for St. Albert. I have some experience with the installation and identification of underground utilities, and I must say that any tasks that would suggest that we could readily and effectively identify all of the underground utilities that are out there certainly would be impossible, I think, to say the least.

Two very specific issues come to mind for me personally. One occurred in 1978, at the very start of my construction career. That involved the gas line strike in Mill Woods, where a propane line was hit with a trackhoe. In the resulting fire and explosion two guys were burned up, and we lost the natural gas service for the entire community of Mill Woods in the middle of the wintertime. Part of my role in that particular event was to go back in and start relighting furnaces the next day.

The second incident that comes to mind where identification would have been very useful was on one of the neighbouring farms to our place, where the fellow was subsoiling and had struck the main gas line some seven or eight times before he actually started to note that pieces of yellow plastic were surfacing up around the back end of his machine. That, too, occurred late in the year and resulted, I think, in the municipality or in the gas co-op having to replace about a mile or a mile and a half of two-inch gas line. I don't know how much gas he lost. He was, however, I would say, Mr. Speaker, very lucky that he wasn't smoking in the cab of his machine at the time.

On my own particular facility sites, where, I'm very proud to say, we've never had an inappropriate line strike, the first rule is that if you don't know, you explore. The best way to explore, Mr. Speaker, I would strongly suggest, is not with a fence post or an iron rod, but it is in fact with a device called a hydrovac, which is a wonderful tool for exposing relatively small areas of high-risk and high-exposure utility line. Now, the technology of hydrovacs, I think, was actually created in response to the fact that we don't have a good handle on and we certainly don't have a good spatial view of the locations of all of the utility services that are installed in the province.

Indeed, for many of the people in this room I would suggest that if you were to call Alberta One-Call to come and look at your own backyard at your house, you may in fact be surprised to find that while they can identify, certainly, the municipally and franchise operator installed utility lines, if you have, for example, run a barbecue line or have a power line running out to one of your sheds or, in my case, have a heated garage, you'd be quite surprised to find that, in fact, those lines do not appear anywhere. Those are, I think, probably the more common ones and the more unfortunate ones in this case. I don't know that the hon. member's motion would necessarily capture all of that information because a certain amount of work does occur under, shall we say, cover of darkness, and work occurs that we don't necessarily talk about or don't necessarily know where some of these things are.

Nonetheless, Mr. Speaker, I'd be very pleased to say that passing Motion 508 certainly demonstrates our commitment to the safety of workers, and ultimately at the end of the day that's really what we're here to talk about. The mapping of utility sites from this moment forward I think would be a very positive move. It would, again, be very difficult for us to go back in time, but I think that a good time to start would certainly be now. I think that the hon. member is on the right path here, and I would certainly thank him for having the foresight to bring this motion forward.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod, do you wish to speak on the motion?

Mr. Berger: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and join in debate on Motion 508, being brought forward by the hon. Member for St. Albert, and I would like to applaud him on his dedication to this matter. Motion 508 proposes to urge the government to require that all future underground facilities are precisely recorded as built and added to an inclusive underground facilities registry. The purpose of Motion 508 is to recommend that the government introduce legislation and policies to create a comprehensive and detailed registry of all underground facilities. This could range from pipelines to electrical cables and irrigation systems amongst a host of other vital buried facilities. In addition, all future underground projects would be required to plot out their exact locations and give them to a centralized mapping agency.

Mr. Speaker, mapping underground facilities could reduce the potential for costly repairs to underground infrastructure. The repair costs associated with the accidental disturbance of underground pipelines and cables can reach into the millions of dollars. Compound this with the lost productivity felt by the owners of such lines, either cable or pipe, and this cost skyrockets. Last year contractors on the outskirts of Jasper national park ruptured the main gas line to the town, disrupting services for many hours. A total of 1,300 residents were affected. With Motion 508 these types of accidents can be made more avoidable. Alberta relies on these vital lines for our gas, our phone, cable, and fibre optic connectivity. Any reductions of these services can severely hamper industry in this province as well as commerce.

With initiatives proposed within 508, we could see a reduction in construction accidents related to underground excavation and building. In November of 2009 a gas line was struck in Airdrie while a construction company was digging a basement for a new home. This led to the evacuation of a whole neighbourhood. If it had not been for the quick action of emergency personnel, the situation could have been fatal. Mr. Speaker, with the advent of new technology like GPS the as-built mapping of future underground utilities can be done efficiently and can be very cost-effective. In addition, passing Motion 508 would confirm the government of Alberta's commitment to the safety of our workers.

Mr. Speaker, I wholeheartedly support this motion and would like all members to do the same. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Liepert: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and speak briefly to this motion, a motion that I believe is well intended. I've listened with interest to all the members who've spoken here this evening and, I'm sure, equally well-intended comments relative to the motion that is before us.

I guess I'd want to start off by saying that this is a government that believes that less government, not more, and fewer regulations, not more, is what we should all be striving for. I know that the Member for St. Albert has made those views known on many occasions. I guess I've just got some real concerns with the motion as it's presented before the House today because it will result in more government, and it will result in more regulations and more constraints on doing business in this province.

Now, I come back to the way the motion is worded. It would be an undertaking that I think would be worth while to have this Assembly encourage the government to do some cost analysis as to what an undertaking like this might entail because there are significant costs associated with what is being proposed here today. Ultimately, Mr. Speaker, every cost is passed on to the consumer at the end of the day. In fact, I think we just finished discussion on a particular bill that's before the House where we were talking about increased costs that have been put onto municipal bills, onto utility bills. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that this particular initiative, if adopted the way it is worded, will add, I would believe, I don't know how much of a cost, but there would be a cost associated with it. I would feel much more comfortable in supporting this if we were encouraged to do a cost-benefit analysis before we pass the motion that requires that all of these initiatives take place.

Now, it's been mentioned on a couple of occasions by a couple of speakers, including the mover of this particular motion, that there have been experiences that have led to this, and there's no doubt. I know that just about any one of us can pick up the phone on a given day or sign on to our computer and it may not be working. The likelihood is that somebody has cut a line. You know, Alberta is criss-crossed with lines and cables throughout the province, and when you consider how much digging and how much construction and all of the activities go on, really the numbers of instances that are severe, those that have been highlighted in this Assembly today, on a percentage basis are actually pretty small.

Our first-call system actually does work very well, and I would suggest that in most cases when you've got a serious incident that occurs, it is very much because somebody has not used the first-call initiative. I agree that there are times when you would have a situation where something may be missed, and that clearly could happen, but generally the onus is on the person that is planning to go into the ground. If you're planning to go into the ground, you have some obligations and some responsibilities. I think our system works very well today considering, as I say, the extensive network of pipelines and cables that exist in this province.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I know that the mover of this particular motion is very clear about the fact that we're not looking retroactively, that we're looking at the future. It's going to result, I think, in a bit of confusion. If you can put yourself now in a 10-year-out plan, if you're 10 years from now and you're deciding you need to dig: "Do I need to do the first-call, which would cover anything that happened before 2010, or do I rely on the registry, which is post 2010?"

I think that there are a lot of what I would call unanswered questions relative to this particular motion, Mr. Speaker. As I said earlier, I would feel much more comfortable if the motion encouraged government to do a cost-benefit analysis of this particular undertaking. I cannot support in this Assembly this afternoon the motion as it is written here today.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other hon. members wishing to speak on the motion?

Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question on the motion.

Mr. Allred: May I close?

The Deputy Speaker: Oh, hon. member, of course you have time to close.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd just like to make a few comments. There are a number of points that have been made. Certainly, there are means to locate underground facilities. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity mentioned witching. That's a very crude method, but it works sometimes. There are M-Scopes, there's ground-penetrating radar, and there's also the hydrovac. None of those are a hundred per cent accurate. The only way you can accurately locate it is to actually dig it up. Hydrovacking comes very close to that, but some utilities are very difficult to find. In fact, some utility companies refuse to join Alberta One-Call. Alberta One-Call doesn't even have a record of them. So the poor developer or anybody searching for a line doesn't even know it's there.

I would like to commend all of the major oil and gas companies and the municipalities, most of whom have fairly deep utilities, for very accurate records. Those are not the ones that are causing the problem. The ones that are causing the problems are the shallow utilities and very often, as I said earlier, the dangerous utilities: the gas lines and the electrical conduits. If somebody strikes a sewer line, all that you have is a bad smell for a day. If somebody hits a gas line, somebody may die, or there may be major property damage. If somebody strikes a communication cable, a whole business district could be out of communication for a whole day, and you know how we rely on communications these days.

The hon. Minister of Energy raised a number of points that I'd like to address. Yes, I certainly am a proponent of less government and less regulation. I readily admit that, and I strongly agree with that. This, however, is the type of regulation that we need, the type of regulation that will protect the public. Yes, it's going to impose more costs on the utility companies, but it's a cost of doing business. In comparison to the capital cost of that line and the insulation of that line, it's a minuscule cost. It's a minuscule cost compared to the cost of going out and relocating that line or replacing it if it gets damaged.

Yes, it would be great to do a cost analysis, but I think it's very preliminary in doing a cost analysis. As I understand it, a motion before the House is really just sort of a proposal in principle. If it's approved and the government wishes to go ahead with it, then we do the cost analysis and determine what the costs are.

A lot of the infrastructure for the filing is in place. We have a cadastral mapping system. All it needs is another layer. There may be a small fee required to record it. Yes, that's admitted. But this is such an important issue. We're talking about standardizing our GIS information system through the land-use framework and through the capital region plan and things like that. This is very vital information that needs to be in those GIS systems.

One major problem we have, again, concerning the registry is that there is no registry of incidents. It's very difficult to determine how many incidents have occurred. I was quite surprised by all of the speakers today that referred to incidents, many of which I've never heard of. I've heard of quite a large number myself through personal stories that have been related to me, et cetera. There is no standard registry of incidents, but there have been an awful lot of them over the years. Some of them have been very, very serious and have caused, as I indicated, major property damage or death.

Mr. Speaker, I think the bottom line in this is that we have more buried infrastructure in the province of Alberta, and we're going to have a lot more in the coming years. That is assured. We need to take a step now; we should have taken a step 70 years ago, but we didn't. Now we need to take a step and put in place a registry to record all of those utilities from now on.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

5:40

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

The chair shall now call the question on the motion as moved by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 508 lost]

Mr. Chase: Mr. Speaker, may I ask for some clarification?

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, you wish to ask for clarification?

Mr. Chase: I don't know whether someone else's auditory skills are better than mine, but that sounded rather close. I don't honestly know where we stand. I do not want to take 10 minutes out of this Assembly's time to have the vote recorded.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, the Speaker has the ears, and the Speaker already ruled by the voice vote. If you are wanting to do otherwise, that's your discretion, but the voice vote said defeated.

The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Mr. Fawcett: Yes. Mr. Speaker, I would like to request unanimous consent of the Legislature to go back to the motion that was put on the floor by the Member for Battle River-Wainwright to deal with Bill 203 and the amendment that was put forward to send it to policy field committee.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, you are indicating that you want to go back to private members' bills?

Mr. Fawcett: Yes.

The Deputy Speaker: Okay. We need unanimous consent on that.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 203

Municipal Government (Local Access and Franchise Fees) Amendment Act, 2010

[Debate adjourned April 19]

The Deputy Speaker: There was a point of order, so we'll continue with the point of order. The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Point of Order Amendment to Bill 203

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since the point of order was against me, I'm pleased to rise to make some comments. The hon. member across the way rose on a point of order without reference and still has not made any reference. Still, in the suggestion that I made, I had incorrectly cited the committee that we were hoping to refer this to, but I immediately apologized at my first available opportunity for misciting the inappropriate committee and also cited that there were other reasons: members still wanted to debate this motion.

The private member across the way, who had another amendment himself, did not put a referral date in his amendment, which was unacceptable, I believe, by the standing orders of this House.

So there were many reasons for defeating the amendment, and there was absolutely no intention of deliberately misleading this House; I simply read the wrong sheet of paper. Without a citation I'd suggest that there is absolutely no point of order and that we should move on to immediate business.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity on the point of order.

Mr. Chase: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To try and facilitate some progress, I believe that the hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright has the best of intentions. I believe also that the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere has the best of intentions. Rather than, you know, two wrongs not making a right, what is important is that we, I believe, are all in agreement – I have spoken with the representative from Airdrie-Chestermere – on moving this forward to the Standing Committee on Community Services. However we can best achieve that process I would suggest we move forward on. Let's not assign blame; let's move forward, please.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. member on the point of order?

Seeing none, the chair shall put his thoughts together here. As the chair understands the point of order, it is on the amendment proposed by the hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright and saying that it's out of order. In the chair's view, the amendment proposes a different question. In fact, when I read the two amendments, the hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright introduced an amendment that included the date. So it's different. It is correct that there could have been a subamendment proposed, but there was not.

Looking at House of Commons Procedure and Practice, pages 532-534, especially at 532, if the point of order is that the member was misleading the House, then the chair would caution the member that the charge of deliberately misleading the House – it's the chair's view that this is a dispute between the members and not a point of order. I would say that the amendments are different and things are in order. So there's no point of order.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity on the amendment.

Debate Continued

Mr. Chase: On the amendment, which is where we're at. If I correctly understand the amendment – and I want to make sure I have it right – it's that this Bill 203 would be sent to the Standing Committee on Community Services. Is that correct? In that case, I would like to call the question, Mr. Speaker, on the amendment, and then we'll deal with the bill as amended.

The Deputy Speaker: Seeing no other hon. member wishing to speak on the amendment, the chair shall now call the question.

[Motion on amendment to second reading of Bill 203 carried]

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, it's a referral motion. There is no further debate. That being the case, I would move that we call it 6 o'clock and adjourn until 1:30 tomorrow afternoon.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:48 p.m. to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon and welcome.

Let us pray. Guide us all in our deliberations and debate that we may determine courses of action which will be to the enduring benefit of our province of Alberta. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Mr. David Mulroney, Canada's ambassador to the People's Republic of China. China is Alberta's second-largest export market. We share a vibrant and multisector trading relationship. Most recently China has become another key investor in our province's energy industry.

Alberta is very pleased with the strong working relationship we have with the Canadian embassy in Beijing. Ambassador Mulroney and his staff do an admirable job in promoting Canada and Canada's priorities in this very important marketplace. We appreciate all the good work as well as their co-operation in the Alberta China office, which is co-located in the embassy.

I had the pleasure of spending some time with the ambassador around noon today. His knowledge and his commitment to helping Alberta and our interests are very admirable, and his knowledge of China and the Asian marketplace is very impressive. He's seated in your gallery. I would now ask our honoured guest to please rise and receive the tremendous warm welcome from this Legislature.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to this Assembly a grade 7 class from Menorah Academy, who will be here later. I just want to get their name on the record in Hansard. They'll be here with their teacher, Steve McGowan, from my constituency of Edmonton-Glenora. They've been taking a tour of the Legislature and will be experiencing the excitement of question period a little bit later. I'd ask that we give them the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly before they get here.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Ouellette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with great pleasure that I rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of young, enthusiastic constituents. There are 80 grade 6 students from Fox Run school in Sylvan Lake. They're seated in I think both galleries along with their teachers and parent helpers. One of the classes is a French immersion class. I always enjoy it when constituents of mine tour the Legislature and sit in on question period. I think it's even more important for our young Albertans to attend, and it is always a pleasure to welcome them here as they will be our leaders of tomorrow. I would ask them all to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members here seven very outstanding students who are visiting us from the Aurora Learning Foundation along with two of their teachers, Barb Raymond and Jessica Skinner. This is one of the many outstanding schools in my constituency, and I'm so proud that they are here. Could I please ask all of you to rise in the gallery and the rest of us to greet them with a thunderous applause for the Aurora Learning Foundation.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly two very special people, two of my bosses from Athabasca-Redwater, Dawn Minns and Sheena Pacholok. I'm very blessed that these two ladies run my constituency office. I've always found that if you want to be successful, you surround yourself with the best people you possibly can, and I'm blessed with that. I'd ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to take this opportunity to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly three special people, and I'll ask them to stand as I say their names: Mary Phillipo, Janessa DeCoste, and Shirley Johnston. Mary and Janessa are both employees of the Kids Cancer Care Foundation of Calgary, and they have been for a total of five years. They are in the Edmonton area for training and upgrading at the Stollery children's hospital. Accompanying them is my lovely wife, Shirley, of 36 years. I'd like you to give them the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 11 volunteer first aid responders from St. John Ambulance. Each of these volunteers served over a hundred hours in 2009. I'll be discussing their efforts more in depth in a member's statement shortly. For now I would like to call upon these volunteers to rise as I call their names to receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly. With over 100 hours we have Alison Craik, Michael Halliwell, Jason Raymond, Dan-Christian Yeung; with over 200 hours we have Monique Romeo, Kyle Young, Jessica van der Ahé, and Ingrid Sebes; with 387 volunteer hours we have Mr. David Romeo; with 512 hours, Melanie Peters; finally, with a remarkable 638 hours we have Mr. Dean Smith. I would ask them all to receive the traditional warm greeting of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour for me to rise today and introduce to you and through you Mr. Balwinder Singh Fidda. Balwinder is a recipient of the prestigious Arjuna award, the highest award for an amateur athlete bestowed by the government of India, for his accomplishment in kabaddi. Albertans may recall the sport of kabaddi when it was showcased for the first time as part of the centennial celebration right here in Edmonton during the 2005 Masters Games, which was hosted by the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness, who was then the minister of community development. Balwinder is seated today in the members' gallery and is joined by a number of my constituents. Please rise as I call out your names: Mr. Jarnail Singh, Mr. Charn Dhalliwal, Mr. Parmjit Sanghera, Mr. Laddi Padda, Mr. Karamjit Gill, Mr. Paul Atwal, and Mr. Tony Thind. Please give them the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

St. John Ambulance Volunteers

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to speak more about the outstanding St. John Ambulance volunteers I just introduced. Volunteers have such an enormous presence in this province. Each year approximately 1.2 million Albertans volunteer their time and energy for various events and organizations across the province.

The volunteers with us today from St. John Ambulance have all individually volunteered as first responders for at least 100 hours this year. In 2009 St. John first aid response teams provided over 6,000 hours of direct first aid coverage and treated some 342 patients. This number of hours does not reflect the thousands of hours volunteers commit to learning and maintaining their medical first responder skills necessary to provide care.

As a former health and safety professional myself I am so thankful that we have this level of injury support here in Alberta. These skilled and dedicated volunteers provide a valuable and essential service to our communities. I want to thank all those who volunteer for St. John and, in particular, those who are here with us today. Your dedication, hard work, and community-minded spirit help countless Albertans in need.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Occupational Health and Safety

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On April 28 Albertans will recognize the National Day of Mourning for workers who have been killed, injured, or developed diseases at the workplace. Sadly, the Auditor General's latest report shows that this government has done little to offer workers a safer environment.

The report condemned this government for lax enforcement of occupational health and safety rules, finding that 63 employers repeatedly broke those rules and got away with it without punishment. One hundred and ten noncompliance orders from OH and S inspectors were suspended without justification; others were never followed up at all. Some of these bad employers even continued to receive rebates off their WCB premiums despite injury rates three to four times the provincial average. To make matters worse, the government won't publicize the names of bad employers with bad safety records, keeping workers from making informed decisions about where to seek employment. As usual, this government rewards incompetence.

Eight years ago the Official Opposition proposed an amendment to the Occupational Health and Safety Act which would have forced the minister to publish the names of employers with the best and worst safety records in the province. That amendment would have made it a lot harder for some of the employers mentioned in the Auditor General's report to escape their moral duty to their workers and their responsibilities under the law.

The AG's report also revealed that out of 5,700 new cancer cases identified yearly in this province, as many as 760 could be work related. This government should immediately commission a thorough study of the effects of workplace carcinogens on Alberta workers. Furthermore, this government should also legislate mandatory joint work-site health and safety committees. Alberta is one of the few provinces without one. Finally, this administration must recognize the rights of paid farm workers by protecting them with access to workers' compensation and coverage under OH and S. Alberta workers deserve protection.

As we prepare for the day of mourning, I hope this government will at long last take action. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Safety and Underground Facilities

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. April has been designated in many jurisdictions across the continent as digging month. No, this does not mean that you should go out and dig your garden, but it does mean that if you are going to be digging for whatever reason, you need to take proper precautions to ensure that all buried facilities in the vicinity of your proposed excavation are marked and exposed if you will be digging in close proximity to those facilities.

Alberta has a very comprehensive and complex underground infrastructure that provides essential electricity, natural gas, communications, water, and sewer to our homes, businesses, and industries. The inadvertent failure of one of these buried lines can be costly to repair, cause considerable inconvenience, and cost millions of dollars in lost production. In addition, the person or operator who strikes one of these facilities can be exposed to serious injury or death from explosion or electrocution.

The Alberta Damage Prevention Council is dedicated to minimizing damage caused to underground facilities from unauthorized contacts and is mandated to promote safe working environments for all agencies involved in development and construction. When an individual or organization is planning any ground disturbance, they must contact Alberta One-Call in advance of construction to have all buried pipes, cables, and other facilities marked on the ground to ensure that they do not come into contact with those facilities, causing damage to the facility and/or danger to themselves. There is no cost for this service; costs are borne by the individual utility companies.

As they say, an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure, or it's better to be safe than sorry. Be safe: call Alberta One-Call before you dig.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Workplace Health and Safety Awards

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On April 12 I attended the workplace health and safety awards. Eight employers were honoured for their work in making their workplace safe for their employees. This year's winners in the category of workplace health and safety innovation were Northern Platforms Ltd. for the NP sampler, a device that allows the worker to gather a sample from a truck-trailer without climbing on top, and Colter Energy Services Inc. for the wellhead access safety platform, which allows safe work during wellhead completion.

This year's health and safety leaders were Edmonton Exchanger and Champion Technologies. Both are organizations that lead their industry with top-notch health and safety management practices and proven injury and illness prevention records.

Health and safety performance improvement winners that reduced their workplace injuries and illnesses are Pollard Banknote, Swamp Mats Inc., Van Houtte Coffee Services Inc., and St. Michael's Health Group. I am very proud that St. Michael's Health Group is from my riding of Edmonton-Manning, Mr. Speaker. The names of the employees at St. Michael's who received awards are Ed Hladunewich, the board chairperson; Kay Willekes; and Lynne Connelly. They employ 320 people and are a great asset to the community.

All of these companies are worthy of recognition because they are good examples for other employers to be able to make the entire province safer for working Albertans.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Democracy and MLA Representation

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour and a privilege to sit in this Legislative Assembly representing my constituents of Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo. It's ultimately the principle of our democracy. However, yesterday I was visiting senior citizens in my constituency and having a coffee with some of the seniors. A senior citizen of many years, late in her life, brought me two articles that she read in both the Calgary and Edmonton newspapers, and she said she often reads the Hansard, which I complimented her on. It concerned her, she said, that democracy could potentially be in peril. She said: "It's an Alberta value. It's a value where MLAs get freely elected to come and represent the voices that elect them in their individual constituencies." She thanked each and every one of the men and women who serve that value.

However, she asked: when does an MLA say no to the pressures that perhaps are put on them from the discomfort of deviating from an Alberta value? She says that MLAs will go back to their constituencies in not too long to listen to their constituents. However, she said: are they willing to brave the future relative to the discontent they are asked to bring to this Legislature? She said: few are willing to brave the disapproval of their fellows, the censure of their colleagues in order to speak out on behalf of this democracy that we represent, our constituents. She said: I thank the men and women who have not forgotten that Alberta value in representing the constituencies and the electorate that they elected in the very home of the constituencies that we represent.

This lady is over 80 years old, and I thank her. It's a reminder to us all for that important Alberta value.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

George Lamouche

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. During this National Volunteer Week we recognize the contributions of individuals who generously give their time and energy to our communities. Today I want to recognize a special individual from my constituency who has not only contributed tremendously to our community in his lifetime but has succeeded in reaching a remarkable milestone. In his 101 years Mr. George Lamouche has been one of the integral movers and shakers in dealing with Métis settlement independence. An elder from Gift Lake, George provided sage advice and volunteered endless hours of his time to move along the process which made the Métis settlement accord a reality.

While his volunteer dedication deserves recognition in itself, his greatest achievement is probably a more personal one, his family. George and his wife, Maria Ward, raised 13 children and many of their grandchildren as well. If the secret to aging gracefully truly is to never lose our childish enthusiasm, then George has the right idea. He has a remarkable 202 grandchildren, numerous great-grandchildren, and three great-great-grandchildren.

With family and friends at his side this centenarian celebrated his 101st birthday on March 11, 2010, at the Gift Lake Métis settlement. To live past a century seems impossible. To reach 101 years and still have the wit, kindness, and determination to push for things that Métis people need deserves recognition. Congratulations, George, for reaching an incredible 101 years still jiggling and for all that you have done in your life.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Did the hon. member say 202 grandchildren?

Ms Calahasen: Yes. He was prolific, Mr. Speaker.

Page Recognition

The Speaker: Hon. members, we're not quite at 1:50, but I've received a letter that I'd like to share with all Members of the Legislative Assembly. The letter is addressed to me, and it comes from the retiring pages.

Mr. Speaker,

As another session comes to a close, we face the regrettable reality that many of us will not be returning in the fall. We would like to express our gratitude for the wonderful opportunity we have been provided to serve in the Legislative Assembly.

We would like to sincerely thank you, Mr. Speaker, the Table Officers, the Sergeant-at-Arms, the women in [Room] 315, the Security staff, and all the other staff of the Legislative Assembly Office. Of course, we would be remiss not to thank all of the Members of the Legislative Assembly as well. All of these exceptional individuals have contributed to the tremendous experiences we have each enjoyed.

Being on the floor of the Chamber has presented a unique perspective that very few others will ever experience. The knowledge and understanding that we have developed about the institution of Parliament and the functioning of democracy has been invaluable. Furthermore, the enriching experience of working alongside a diverse group of people, each dedicated to improving our province, means we leave as more informed individuals with insight that will undoubtedly assist us in our future endeavors.

The relationships we have forged, the memories we have created, and the skills we have developed are priceless. As we have grown in this environment, our appreciation of this opportunity has grown with us. From our encounters with the influential men and women who help shape our province to firsthand participation in important ceremonies, we will take these experiences with us for the rest of our lives.

It has been a great honour and privilege to be able to work with everyone in this Assembly, and for this, we are greatly appreciative.

Yours sincerely,

Conor Smyth, Justin Forth, Andrea Bailer, Alexandra Bennett, Alexandra Candler, Abigail Huyser-Wierenga, Edward Davies, Rayleen Nicolajsen, Motiejus Osipovas.

Isn't that a wonderful letter? [Standing ovation]

Ladies and gentlemen, hon. members, I'd like to ask the Deputy Speaker to make a brief presentation.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As Deputy Speaker I would like to draw to the Assembly's attention that we will send off nine wonderful pages at the end of this session. They are Abigail Huyser-Wierenga, Alexandra Candler, Alexandra Bennett, Andrea Bailer, Conor Smyth, Rayleen Nicolajsen, Edward Davies, Justin Forth, Motiejus Osipovas. I ask you to join me in recognizing the great efforts of our pages, who daily show patience and understanding of our many demands. They carry out the task with attention to duty and in good humour and suffer some very late nights to work with us.

On behalf of all members I present to each departing page a memento gift. These gifts are from the personal contributions of every member of our Assembly. Along with the gifts are our best wishes. We are honoured to have our pages work with us in the Legislative Assembly of Alberta.

Now I would like to ask our Deputy Chair of Committees to hand the nine gifts to Justin Forth, the Speaker's page, representing the nine departing pages.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Public Accounts Committee

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Public Accounts Committee is one of the most important ways taxpayers have to gain a public accounting of how their hard-earned money is being spent. Given the public outcry over the recent decision to introduce veto power over the chair of Public Accounts, we have heard that your government is reconsidering this change. To the Premier: can the Premier confirm that this change will be reversed at the earliest possible opportunity?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the Public Accounts Committee is a committee of the Legislature. It does not report to the Premier or to government. It reports to this Legislature. It is within the committee to make any recommendations or changes that they see fit with respect to the operation of the Public Accounts Committee.

Dr. Swann: Well, then, given that the Premier's own House leader said that this action was taken to slap the wrist of the chair of Public Accounts, will the Premier reverse that decision?

Mr. Stelmach: Once again, Mr. Speaker, the committee itself sets its rules and guidelines, and any change that they may want to make to the operation of that committee is within the purview of the committee.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, then, I would like to ask the Premier, would he say yes or no? Was he involved in that decision?

Mr. Stelmach: If it's in the purview of the committee, I won't be involved because I'm not a member of the committee.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Water Allocation

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm hearing from across Alberta that this province needs a plan to help Albertans with water shortages now and into the future. I'm concerned that this government will continue with its fire, ready, aim philosophy, simply reacting to crisis instead of planning for it. If I were Premier, I would have implemented a proper water management framework, including accurate measurements, conservation, and storage in case of emergency, with human consumption the first priority. To the Premier: given that this is shaping up to be one of the worst droughts in years, how will this government's reaction be different than it has been in the past?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is right: we are heading into one of the driest years on record, perhaps. Perhaps. To those in the agriculture industry, obviously, a concern. We haven't lost a crop as yet in April ever in my memory, but we have to be careful as we proceed. There are some issues with respect to pasture for cattle. I would submit that every Albertan has a responsibility to conserve water. It's not only good for the environment but in the end it's also good for their pocketbook.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Alberta is facing a drought now, how can the Premier continue to dither implementing a new water use strategy?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, the government has been very open and sincere in our commitment to bring forward a water allocation policy that not only respects the historical water rights that individuals have but that provides for adequate opportunities for increased population and economic development. We remain committed to bring that plan forward this year.

Dr. Swann: Well, again, I'd like to put this question to the Premier because the province is looking for leadership, Mr. Speaker. The continuing drought will mean more people competing for less water. How can the Premier continue to defend an antiquated first in time, first in right principle that removes power from Albertans to control the use of their own water? To the Premier.

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, first in time, first in right is a long-standing tradition in law in this province. As I indicated, the issue that we need to deal with is: how do we allow for increased population, increased pressures on water supply and still respect the long-standing traditional rights of licence holders? That is the essence of the water allocation review which is upcoming.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Electoral Boundaries Commission

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, this government has undermined the authority of Public Accounts, disparaged the office of the Auditor General, and is now submitting its own 200-page report to the Electoral Boundaries Commission. Clearly, in the name of transparency and accountability it was inappropriate for the government to present a position when it has no reason to do so other than blatant political interference. To the Premier: why did the government, which does not represent a constituency, submit a proposal to the Electoral Boundaries Commission?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the Electoral Boundaries Commission is an arm's-length commission, and all MLAs have an opportunity to present to the commission the views and the wishes of their constituents. In this particular case what had happened is that two members presented to the electoral commission the collated, collected presentations from what MLAs heard from their constituents in terms of some of the splitting of particular community leagues, et cetera, and that came forward yesterday.

Mr. Hehr: Well, Mr. Speaker, who decided the Deputy Premier should present a 200-page submission to the Electoral Boundaries Commission? Did this come from the Premier, one of the political ministers, or the Tory party executive? Who?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that this is about something that I did last night, first of all, I want to say that I will not apologize to anyone about doing my job. There was a line in one of the documents that was submitted with the compilation of all of the MLA submissions that did say "Government," and I apologize for that. My letter to the commission clearly indicated that this was a compilation of what our members had heard from their constituents. I also made it very clear in my opening comments that it was exactly that.

Mr. Hehr: Well, I thank the hon. Deputy Premier for that apology and recognition of his error.

I'd ask the Premier: why does this government continually attempt to undermine and disparage the institutions set up exclusively to ensure accountability, transparency, and democracy in our province?

2:00

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, there was no interference, and there was no attempt by anyone on this side of the House to interfere with the decisions of the commission. You know, sometimes these allegations come from some members of the opposition. I note that there were a number of opposition members that made presentations, and I know that it was done on Legislative Assembly letterhead. It's funny how we have a letter . . .

Mr. Horner: On my letterhead.

Mr. Stelmach: . . . on his letterhead, yet the opposition can use their own letterheads and that's okay. That's fine for them, but it's not fine for this member.

Mr. Anderson: Well, I didn't use any letterhead.

Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Electoral Boundaries Commission heard submissions from several individuals. One of these was a presentation authored by the Deputy Premier. This 207-page document contains, in his words, "recommendations made by Government Caucus in response to the [Electoral Boundaries Commission] Interim Report." In our view, the submission of this document by the government calls into question the integrity of what is supposed to be a fair and nonpartisan process. To the Deputy Premier: why would he place the commission in the untenable position of having to respond to a partisan submission from the very government that appointed it?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, with the last boundary commission, which was in place, I believe, in 2004, many MLAs, myself included, made presentations after the interim report was put out so that the boundary commission could hear from people who represent constituents in those ridings, to hear what the response and the feedback was. Last night my colleague and I presented what was a compilation of the same kinds of things from members of this Legislature on our side that have been out talking to their constituents. We compiled it and put it into a binder for the ease of the commission's work that they have to do.

Mr. Anderson: You're the Deputy Premier, not some backbench MLA.

To the same minister. Given that the presentation came from the office of the Deputy Premier and minister of advanced education – that's you – and given that government resources are not to be used for partisan purposes, why would this Deputy Premier use government resources to prepare and submit what is obviously a very partisan document? Your letterhead, sir.

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have a copy of the letterhead of the leader of the NDP with an address to the Electoral Boundaries Commission. I have a copy of a letter from the Member for Calgary-McCall constituency to the Electoral Boundaries Commission. I have a copy from the office of the mayor of Grande Prairie in response to the interim report. The point that I'm making here is that I did write a letter on my letterhead as the MLA for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert and Minister of Advanced Education and Technology. I also made it very clear to the commission that this was a compilation of what other members have brought forward to ease the members of the commission's work.

Mr. Anderson: Keep digging, Minister.

To the Premier: since his government and Deputy Premier have placed the commission in a very compromising position, will he do the honourable thing and ask that the submission by his Deputy Premier be withdrawn so the commission can conduct its important work without undue political pressure and influence from this government?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the commission is independent. It is chaired by a very respected Provincial Court judge, retired. It has two members appointed by the government and two appointed by the loyal opposition. They are all members of integrity. They're there to hear the submissions and make the decisions based on what they hear from Albertans, and in some cases various MLAs brought forward their constituent concerns to that commission. That commission is neutral, and it will make the best decision in the best interests of all Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Combustion Technology in the Oil Sands

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, the oil industry has a new plan for the oil sands. They want to set them on fire. That's right. Excelsior Energy wants to set underground fires in Alberta's oil sands as a way to liquefy underground bitumen so that it can be pumped to the surface. This land is rich with oil and coal, and setting it on fire could result in an environmental and economic catastrophe with grave implications. Will the Minister of Energy put a stop to this ludicrous application now, before industry sets the oil sands on fire?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I have no idea what this guy is talking about. You know, I do have to come back, though. I'm not sure who this member is getting his information from, but I can tell you he's not getting it from his union leaders, that typically want to support this hon. member and this party, because those members of those particular trade unions want to see development in the oil sands so they have jobs, not like these two sitting in the corner over there.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, the minister states the obvious, and that is that he doesn't know what's going on. Given that I have in my hands a release from Excelsior Energy that says that they wish to deploy a proprietary in situ combustion bitumen recovery process at its Hangingstone oil property, can the minister tell us whether or not he is prepared to allow this company to start underground fires in the oil sands and whether or not he's considered the implications of this process or whether he is unaware of that as well?

Mr. Liepert: What I assume is happening here is that a private-sector company – and let's be clear in this House, Mr. Speaker; there's incredible innovation in technology that is being deployed in our oil sands today. We have a company that has made it known that it would like to apply to the Energy Resources Conservation Board, which examines all of these technologies to determine whether or not it's in the best interest of Albertans. I would suggest that this fear that this member is trying to spread is way premature.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Given that the only thing I'm afraid of is that this minister doesn't know what's going on, I ask him whether or not he will use his authority under section 18(1) and 18(2) of the Oil Sands Conservation Act to prevent the approval of such a scheme, that could place not only the environment but Alberta's future economic prosperity at risk, or whether he's unaware of his own act as well.

Mr. Liepert: What I will commit to, Mr. Speaker, is to let the process unfold as it should. There is an independent Energy Resources Conservation Board, which has a lot more expertise in examining these kinds of proposals than that particular member has, and I would trust them before I'd trust him.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Highway 63

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I drove highway 63 today, like the 40 or 50 times I do. Some citizens asked me this yesterday for the Minister of Transportation. The question that was asked by citizens was this. Why were work crews removed from highway 63 in the Grassland area, where no work has been seen being done? As well, not one piece of equipment for over 450 kilometres has been seen. Where is the equipment? Where is the work?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, this hon. member has been around here for years, and he pays no attention to what's going on. If he absolutely knew what was going on – we went in there. Actually, we worked 24 hours a day for a while because we had to vacate it during the migrating birds situation, and we can't go back in till July 15.

Mr. Boutilier: Given that the migrating birds are getting in front of the 400-tonne trucks that were there last year, that the member took off the road, I have to ask the question: do you really believe, through the chair, that migrating birds are the reason why you're not doing work on highway 63 for the workers that travel that highway?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, now I'm going to add one more thing for the hon. member: it's also calving season for the caribou, and we're not allowed to be in there during calving season for the caribou.

Mr. Boutilier: I have to ask: given these comments about animals, I want to know if the Minister of Transportation is actually running a zoo.

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, that's about how intelligent this hon. member is. We have to follow the laws and the rules and regulations in Alberta. Absolutely, when we are told that we have to shut down our construction – we're widening a road – because we're in the area where we have protected species of caribou, we can't go in there. I'd love to be there doing the work. We work 24 hours a day for this member's constituents, and we will do it again.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Water Allocation Licence Amendments

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Albertans are facing real challenges for long-term sustainability of water for human consumption, including drinking water and for agriculture and industry use, but the minister is going ahead with changing the policy on the irrigation districts to allow redesignation of water, something that will remove any need to consult with government or the public forevermore. To the Minister of Environment: given that this is a precedent-setting decision, does this signal that a decision has already been made on the future of the entire water allocation system?

2:10

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, it certainly does not. In this particular instance there was a policy that was established about a year ago that allowed for very, very restricted reallocation of the licence within an irrigation district's purview so that they can continue to provide the needs to municipalities and to small industries within their area where there is no access to water. This is simply the next step, an application under that policy.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Back to the same minister: what exactly are the circumstances, the criteria in which it is appropriate – the minister's own words – to allow irrigation districts to redesignate water, and will he table that criteria in this House?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, I'll be more than happy to table it. It's a policy that was developed in consultation with stakeholders, as I said, about a year ago. I don't remember the exact timing. This particular application is under that policy, and it will be considered. There is opportunity for the public to have input, to make comment, and we're going through that process as we speak.

Ms Blakeman: Well, according to his remarks in Hansard from April 13 on page 725 he talks about changing the policy. "We will be changing that policy." Now he's referring to a policy that has already been changed. Could the minister clarify his comments, please?

Mr. Renner: I'd be more than happy to. At the time that the member asked me the question, I couldn't recall whether or not the policy had been actually finalized. I knew that discussions had taken place. What the member is referring to is an application under that policy. That policy is in place now, and as I indicated, I'll be providing that member with a copy of the policy.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Cataract Surgery

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday an hon. member raised questions that successful bidders in the Alberta Health Services RFP for ophthalmology surgical services are trying to get out of their contracts. These questions cause concerns for the public and, in particular, my constituents. My questions are to the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness. Has the minister been able to find any evidence to support these allegations made by the hon. member, and are any of the contracted surgical facilities trying to get out of those contracts?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, there is no evidence to that effect whatsoever. I'm just short of asking the member from the Wildrose Alliance to apologize for those false rumours, those very, very hurtful allegations that they were making. The fact is that Alberta Health Services immediately contacted every one of the four winning-bid facilities, and all of them unanimously said that they are fulfilling their contracts. They will be there as specified in the RFP. I hope the Alliance takes a lesson from that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East has the floor.

Mr. Amery: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: does the Mitchell surgical centre, one of the successful bidders in Calgary, have enough capacity to provide services even though they're undergoing expansion right now?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, Alberta Health Services is very confident that the number of eye surgeries that were allocated to the winning-bid facilities can and will be accomplished inside the facilities as they exist today. It's true that there are some expansions going on, but that is not related directly to the way in which the RFP was confirmed nor to the way in which the contracts were awarded. There is every confidence in the system. Let's be very clear. The RFP, such as it was conducted and such as it was awarded, was based on current capacity at the time.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: how will the minister address any issue related to those facilities that were unsuccessful in the latest RFPs?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, that will be done very soon, as I indicated in the House a few days ago. We will follow through with that because very soon along with Alberta Health Services I will be announcing the second blitz, as was promised when we announced the first blitz for additional surgeries back in February. During this second blitz, that will come out very soon, there will be a variety of surgeries, and that will include hundreds of eye surgeries. Those facilities that won the bid or those facilities who didn't win the bid can be given every consideration under that process for surgeries in their facilities.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Wetland Policy

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The government's wetlands compensation guide is weak: weak systems, no monitoring, no controls. The ministry has created a system with one organization responsible for restoring wetlands destroyed by development, and according to the Auditor General the Department of Environment still can't manage to monitor restoration standards or how taxpayer dollars are spent on the program. My questions are to the Minister of Environment. Why does the minister continue to put Alberta's wetlands restoration at risk by applying this weak, lacklustre approach?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, first of all, the member is inaccurate in saying that the province has allocated all of the wetland restoration to one organization. The fact of the matter is that there is only one organization because no others have come forward. If they come forward and can demonstrate their ability to reconstruct and to redevelop wetlands, then the opportunity is there for any others. Our wetlands policy is one that, as the member well knows, is in the process of being updated to reflect the current needs.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. Well, given that the Auditor General has stated that there are no controls in place, no one in the ministry responsible for monitoring wetlands restoration, and processes in the ministry's outdated guide are not even being applied, how can the minister determine if the current processes are effective?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, we do have a responsibility for ensuring that the dollars that flow through to organizations such as Ducks Unlimited are fulfilling the requirements. I think what the Auditor General was getting to is: is there a direct correlation value for the dollar? Frankly, that's difficult because it is more expensive in some locations than others. You have to buy the land and do the restoration.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. Back to the same minister: when will the minister release an updated wetlands policy for the whole province that includes a no net loss policy? Mr. Minister, children who were born at the time the current interim policy went into place have now graduated from high school.

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I've answered that question numerous times in the House. The updated wetlands policy is under construction as we speak, and there's a commitment on my part to bring forward that policy for further consultation as soon as we've got it complete.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Pediatrics for Kids in Care Program

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My colleagues and I on the front lines have had the misfortune of seeing much suffering on the front lines. The most vulnerable in our society are children.

Children and youth coming into the care of the provincial government often do so from unfortunate circumstances which contribute to their poor physical, emotional, and mental health. My first question is to the Minister of Children and Youth Services. Are the children and youth being properly assessed by the appropriate health care professionals after they come into care in order to ensure that they receive the necessary wraparound services?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A year and a half ago the Calgary child and family service authority in partnership with Alberta Health Services, the Southern Alberta Child & Youth Health Network, and community pediatrics came together and established a program known as pediatrics for kids in care. It's an excellent program. We have 15 pediatricians in Calgary who see children and youth that come into our care within eight to 12 weeks, which is quite remarkable. I want you to know that it's the first of its kind in Canada, and it has been highly successful.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is to the same minister. We strive for evidence based on outcomes-based decisions. You speak of successes. What performance measurements does your ministry have in place to evaluate the outcomes of this initiative?

Mrs. Fritz: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I said, the program is a year and a half old. I can tell you that there have been over 600 children within that time that have received assessments from pediatricians. The assessments cover a wide range of that child's health care needs, but more importantly that assessment then becomes the foundation for a health care plan where there are family physicians and pediatricians, the case worker, support workers, different people involved with the health care plan. The best outcome, I think, is that the emotional and physical needs of the child are being met and they're being unified . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member. [interjection] The hon. member has the floor.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the same minister. I'm glad that you've helped the vulnerable children in Calgary through this program. When do the children and youth in care in my constituency of Edmonton-Meadowlark as well as other constituencies in the capital health region and rural Alberta get their health care needs met?

Mrs. Fritz: Well, Mr. Speaker, one program that this member might be interested and maybe even participate in because he is a physician is an excellent one through the Edmonton child and family services authority. That program is for high-risk youth, where a physician will go to the emergency shelter and look after the health care needs of the youth on-site. Also, with the Stollery children's hospital pediatrics we co-locate our staff there. Also, this pediatrics for kids in care program is being modelled for other areas of the province.

Special-needs Education Funding

Mr. Chase: Mr. Speaker, funding cutbacks are causing boards to eliminate segregated programs for special-needs students. This government's flawed school closure process has targeted a school for complex learners in Calgary-Varsity. With concerns growing, the government can only gesture to a review of special education two years in the making. Parents, students, teachers, and staff need answers now. To the minister: what does the minister have to say to parents concerned that special-needs students are being pushed into traditional classroom settings prematurely?

Mr. Hancock: It would be quite inappropriate to do so, Mr. Speaker. We have a special-needs review process which has been under way for some time. It's been under way for some time because it's a very important area. We've had extensive consultation. We're now working to do the collaborative processes between health, education, children's services, and then we'll work again with school boards and stakeholders and parents to design the implementation process. This is something that's particularly important, that every student be included in the education process, and it needs to be done right.

Mr. Chase: Special-needs funding has also been frozen for two years. Given the developments in the Calgary public and Edmonton Catholic boards will the minister release any details about his plan for special-needs education, or will he continue to hide behind his ongoing review?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, we are actively engaged in the process of getting internal policy approval, and as soon as I have approval to move forward, we will be obviously including the same people and more who were included in the discussions leading up to the setting the directions task force report. That will happen, I hope, very quickly.

Let me be perfectly clear. Nothing is going to change overnight. This is a change in culture relative to moving from a diagnostic process to a learning-needs-based process. It's going to involve a lot of work, and it has to be done right.

Mr. Chase: I hope that when it finally gets done, special ed children will be protected.

Why is this minister spreading even more uncertainty by publicly musing about getting rid of the evaluative practice of coding without indicating what the new system will be? Clarify.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I try to respond to questions when they're put to me, whether we're in this House or elsewhere. People have asked about coding. As late as at noon today on the inappropriately named Wildrose program on CBC I spoke directly to the question of coding. The fact of the matter is: we're not getting rid of coding necessarily; we're moving the funding model and the special-needs model to an all-inclusive model. It requires work. Students will still need to be diagnosed. There still will need to be health professionals involved, but they won't necessarily drive the learning process.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater.

Sodium Hydroxide Spill

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituents are concerned about a caustic soda spill that occurred last week in our area. While the community affected is grateful for the support they received from the government, some have raised questions about the response time and the cleanup. My question is to the Minister of Environment. What is Alberta Environment's role in the cleanup of this spill, and how quickly did his department respond to the issue?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We were advised of this incident through the Coordination and Information Centre and had our staff on-site within an hour. Our role really is twofold: one, to ensure that all environmental and public safety concerns are effectively addressed and, secondly, to ensure that cleanup meets the strict environmental standards. Now that the emergency itself is over, our role becomes one of monitoring and ensuring that those standards are met.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the same minister please clarify for my constituents: what is caustic soda, and what are the dangers, short- or long-term, that it poses to this community?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, caustic soda is also known as sodium hydroxide, and it's a substance with very high pH levels. It's a base as opposed to an acid. It's industrially used as a chemical base to manufacture products like pulp and paper, and in fact it can be a very dangerous chemical. That's why we took it so seriously. It could cause a chemical burn with direct contact and inhalation.

The spill was contained to an open roadway. Again, no adverse environmental impact or human concerns were or will be on an ongoing basis once the cleanup is complete.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Alberta Emergency Management Agency was also involved, can the Minister of Municipal Affairs please clarify for my constituents which department or ministry actually takes charge on an issue like this? Specifically, whose responsibility is it to communicate to adjacent landowners?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. All municipalities have emergency response plans in place and activate them when necessary. They are the ones that are responsible for resident information. They're the ones that are responsible for notifying their residents. The Alberta Emergency Management Agency helps municipalities prepare these plans, and they help them test those particular plans. All responses concerning spills must adhere to our provincial and federal environmental laws. In this case Environment was the lead.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Lower Athabasca Regional Advisory Council

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The regional advisory council for the lower Athabasca River had their final meeting almost two months ago. Last April the former Minister of Sustainable Resource Development suggested that there would be opportunity for public comment when the report was complete. In estimates the current Minister of SRD said that the advisory council's work was complete. My question is simply this: why hasn't the minister released the report yet?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think the program and the process of the land-use framework has been very well advertised and understood by most people. The regional advisory commission has completed their work, they're working on a draft of the proposal that they're going to give to government, the secretariat are working with them and assisting them to finalize that document, and at that point in time we will deal with it.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that the regional advisory council was supposed to be pretty much the only multi-stakeholder forum for considering the environmental impacts of different levels of extraction and given that that report was given to government two months ago, will the minister admit that his refusal to publicize this report is nothing more than yet another stalling tactic and . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister. [interjection] The hon. minister has the floor.
