Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, November 23, 2010

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. From our forests and parklands to our prairies and mountains comes the call of our land. From our farmsteads, towns, and cities comes the call of our people that as legislators of this province we act with responsibility and sensitivity. Grant us the wisdom to meet such challenges. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: Hon. members, this year, 2010, marks the 10th anniversary of the School at the Legislature program. Its official launch was in November 2000. Ten years have now passed, and over those 10 years we've welcomed 281 classes and some 10,145 students, teachers, and parent volunteers in this particular program. Seated in the members' gallery today are several students and teachers who participated in the inaugural year of 2010: Mrs. Lorraine Williamson, a teacher; Mr. Dan Serdachny; and students Anthony Smith, Kairee Kirkwood, and Jaine McCorquodale.

With them as well are the community sponsors of the School at the Legislature program: from Priority Printing Limited Mr. Tim Downey, president; from Access Television Mr. Lloyd Lewis, vice-president and general manager, CTV Edmonton and Access Television; Mr. Eric Rice from Access Television; from CKUA Radio Mr. Ken Regan, general manager; Mr. Paul Moulton, chair of the CKUA Radio Foundation; and from the Rotary Club of Edmonton Mr. Jack Clements and Mr. Dan Matthys. We also would welcome Mr. Ron La Franchise, a horticulturist and volunteer to our program.

This program has existed for 10 years. We're absolutely overwhelmed with the success we've had in these 10 years, and I'd ask all of our guests today to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a fine group of students from Ardrossan elementary school in the Strathcona constituency. They're accompanied today by teachers Mrs. Arlene Dutchak, Mme Jade Jordan, Mrs. Trish McBride, and aide Mrs. Gwen Sikora, also parent helpers Mr. Paul Bodell, Mr. Ian Osbaldeston, Mrs. Lisa McInnes, Mrs. Glenys Boe, and Mr. Gerald Melloy. They're seated in both the public and members' galleries today. I'd ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. It's a real treat for me today to introduce a class from St. Martin school if they're here yet. I'm not sure that they are, but I'll assume I can't see them up in the public gallery. I make a point of going out to as many grade 6 classes as I can, and over 10 years that's been a lot of classes. One class stands out more than any other year after year after year for being extremely well prepared, and that's the grade 6 class at St. Martin Ukrainian bilingual school, and I think that's a tribute to the teacher there, who is with the class today, Mrs. Harasymiw. I would ask the entire class to rise – oh, there they are in the members' gallery – and receive the warm welcome.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mrs. Sarich: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly three Albertans closely associated with the aboriginal pride program in place at both the Calgary board of education and Calgary Catholic school district. The aboriginal pride program endeavours to emphasize for First Nations, Métis, and Inuit students a sense of value, connectedness, and engagement within the school community. Seated in the members' gallery are Trish Bond, director of the United Way of Calgary strategic initiatives, which include the aboriginal youth and education strategy; Lorianne Tenove, supervisor of instructional support and FNMI education for Calgary Catholic school district; and Chantel Large, a graduate of the Calgary Catholic school district in 2009, who is also now attending the University of Alberta here in Edmonton. I would ask that they now please rise and accept the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today. First, I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Mr. Robin Hill and Mrs. Carla Cuglietta. Mr. Hill is my constituent in Edmonton-Rutherford. He teaches at Strathcona high school, and this year he was selected as a semifinalist for the Alberta excellence in teaching award. Mrs. Cuglietta is chaplain at the Austin O'Brien high school, also located in Edmonton. Earlier this year Mr. Hill and Mrs. Cuglietta were part of a group of six Canadian teachers sponsored by the Canadian Teachers' Federation that travelled to Sierra Leone to train teachers. I want them both to know how proud we are of their work, and I would ask them both to rise and receive the warm welcome of my colleagues.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, it's my privilege to introduce to you and through you to all members Mrs. Michele Fidyk and Mrs. Lucie Wong. Mrs. Fidyk is also a teacher. She teaches at St. Teresa school, located in my constituency of Edmonton-Rutherford, and Mrs. Wong is a board member with the Change for Children Association, an Alberta-based charitable organization working to eradicate poverty and teach global citizenship to children. Earlier this year Mrs. Fidyk led a program at St. Teresa school with the Change for Children Association called fill the bus. Thanks to her hard work and that of the students St. Teresa school collected over 11,000 school supplies to be donated to students in Nicaragua, enough to fill the bus. I would like to ask them both to rise and receive our very, very warm welcome and congratulations.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise and introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly three very special constituents that are here today from Athabasca for the Alberta Schools Boards Association convention. From the school board Aspen View, located in Athabasca, we have Brian LeMessurier, our very well-respected superintendent; Edgar Koehler, our long-time trustee and former county councillor; and Dennis MacNeil, former principal and new trustee, who is also a foster parent of four foster kids and has seen in excess of 30 children come through his home as a great caregiver. I'd like to thank them for their support and direction and hard work and ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to introduce a number of Albertans from Edmonton and neighbouring communities: Tanja Allen, Denise Baillie, Lorraine Bodie, Brendan Fitzgerald, Eva and Karl Grantmyre, Somayya Kasani, Charan Khehra, Dagmar Lofts, Robert Price, Misty Schuster, and Aaron Thompson. They are among the many people in Alberta who live with multiple sclerosis or who are affected as family members and friends. Some of them are members of CCSVI Edmonton, a nonprofit advocacy organization. The daughter of my guests Eva and Karl Grantmyre was treated for CCSVI in Mexico with excellent outcomes. Tanja Allen would like to have the CCSVI treatment but is unable to afford the high cost of treatment and travelling to other countries. Denise Baillie was diagnosed with MS in 2007 and uses a walker to move around. Her health is deteriorating, and she would also like to see CCSVI trials available in Alberta. My guests would like to see Alberta join other provinces in timely approval of CCSVI research and treatment. I want to welcome my guests, who are seated in the public gallery, to this Legislature. I would now ask them to rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm not sure my guests are here. If they are, they're in the public gallery, but I'm going to introduce them anyway. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly my wife, Linda; my daughter Paula; her husband, Brett; and four of my great grandchildren: Jenna, Keyrai, Anya, and Eilee. If they are here, would they please stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Aboriginal Pride Program

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize and celebrate the aboriginal pride program in place at both the Calgary board of education and the Calgary Catholic school district. Aboriginal pride programs endeavour to emphasize a sense of value, connectedness, and engagement within the school community. Children and youth who bond to their school environment are more likely to stay in school and more likely to succeed and have success with the programs of study in the Alberta curriculum.

Through an innovative partnership with the United Way of Calgary's aboriginal youth and education strategy pride programming has been implemented in eight different schools, Mr. Speaker, in the Calgary area. The aboriginal pride program shares a similar vision with the historic memorandum of understanding for First Nations education in Alberta, signed in February between the three treaty areas of Alberta, the federal government, and the government of Alberta. It emphasizes the cultural aspects of education and recognizes that aboriginal students are only one part of a larger picture that includes parents, teachers, community administrators, and policy-makers. We've seen higher graduation rates in pride program schools, proof that the initiative is working.

Mr. Speaker, perhaps this could be summed up by a quote by Gail, a program participant from Siksika Nation, a Treaty 7 First Nation, who recently said: "Not too long ago I was going to give up on school, and now I want to be a psychologist. I know that I will stay friends with the other kids in the program after high school, and the program introduced to me to other, similar programs."

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Caucus Discipline

Mrs. Forsyth: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday was another black mark on Alberta's already tarnished reputation as a leader in democratic values. The Premier proved once again that he has no use for MLAs who do what they are supposed to, represent the issues and concerns of the constituents who elected them. Those who dare to step out of line and tell the truth about issues that matter to Albertans are met with swift punishment from the Premier, who obviously prefers to have a caucus of loyalists who protect his interests than a caucus of advocates who fight on behalf of Albertans. The Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark found out first-hand what happens to MLAs who commit the unforgivable sin of representing Albertans first, as did previously the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

The message from the Premier to his elected MLAs is clear: fall in line, and keep your mouth shut. Mr. Speaker, I can honestly say that that is why myself and the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere are on this side of this House and not on that side. Over there the views of constituents take a back seat to the Premier's agenda, and if what your constituents want conflicts with what the Premier wants, you know who you answer to first.

This type of backward accountability continues to drive the wedge between everyday Albertans and the democratic process. We're in the middle of an emergency room crisis, and the government just fired its own emergency room doctor. Strict caucus discipline and heavy-handed leadership by the Premier have cost Albertans precisely the kind of honest and candid input that is needed right now. The bottom line is this. When it comes to democracy, this government and this Premier have failed Albertans time and time again.

Tomorrow our leader in caucus will announce the Wildrose plan to restore our democracy, to give Alberta back to Albertans. The Premier and this government have been slowly chipping away at the values and principles of democracy for years.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Penbrooke Meadows School

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and speak about a very special school – its students, staff, and parents – that has a very special part in my heart. This school, Penbrooke Meadows elementary, located in Penbrooke, the community in which I was born, earlier this year received a community initiatives program grant, that I had the pleasure of presenting, for over $90,000 to upgrade the playground and other facilities that serves the school and the entire community of Penbrooke Meadows. This fall the school was successful in obtaining a second CIP grant for over $40,000 for technology upgrades. These funds are being used to purchase laptops, Smart boards, and other technology, tools that will help students better realize their potential.

However, the real story here is the fact that these students have shown incredible academic progress. Not only have their provincial achievement tests been absolutely astounding in reading and writing, but they are above the provincial standards. This is a huge win for my area. Due to the complexity and diversity of families and learners in my area PAT scores have sometimes been low in comparison to other areas in Calgary. Specifically, in their reading scores they've shown great growth. In just a couple of years grade 6 reading scores have improved by 11 per cent, and the grade 3 students have been above the provincial average by at least 10 per cent over the last two years.

Although PAT scores are important, at the end of the day they're only one touch on the surface of what is significant in the role of an educator. The educators at Penbrooke Meadows recognize that each and every student's educational experience is about more than just scores. I would like to thank from the bottom of my heart the staff that work so hard to inspire and uplift these wonderful students.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Remington Carriage Museum

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On October 25, 2010, all of Alberta celebrated its annual tourism awards. One of the recipients of those awards was the Remington Carriage Museum in my constituency of Cardston-Taber-Warner. This award recognizes the incredible work that the staff and volunteers of the Remington Carriage Museum put forward during its unveiling of a statue dedicated to George Woolf.

For those who may not know, George Woolf was one of the greatest jockeys of all time, winning over 97 major races. He is perhaps best known as the rider of the legendary Seabiscuit, one of the famous racehorses in the history of the sport. On July 17, 2010, the Remington Carriage Museum, in George Woolf's hometown of Cardston, unveiled a statue of George riding Seabiscuit to widespread acclaim. Organizers of the event were hoping for 500 audience members but were pleasantly surprised when more than 870 spectators showed up. In addition, this event grabbed headlines around the world, in places as far away as India and Japan. The widespread success easily put them in the lead for the top marketing award for events under $5,000.

I applaud the efforts of the Remington Carriage Museum staff and congratulate them on their well-deserved win. Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Emergency Medical Services

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. When a patient is bleeding, you have to stop the bleeding. You also have to look at the entire person to restore health. Similarly, we have to deal with the bleeding in our emergency rooms with more staff and resources. That's clear. We also need to fix the whole system. We have a plan for an orderly transition to a structure that works. We recognize the need for local decision-making and clear, central accountability. To the Premier: will the Premier show leadership and establish a task force to begin an orderly, planned dismantling of Alberta Health Services?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, as I said yesterday with respect to the ER waiting times, there was a meeting on Friday. Protocols were established. These protocols were established at the request of the minister of health. Over a hundred health care professionals came together, and we are going to begin implementing that plan with Alberta Health Services. I believe it is a good plan. From what I saw, it will be adding more beds and more physicians and more nurses to ease emergency waiting lists.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, every single health professional works tirelessly for his or her patients. These people are torn in two directions. One is to help patients; the other is to follow late, confused directions from the top, a recipe for professional burnout and medical mistakes. To the Premier: what are you doing to restore confidence among our health professionals?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the number of people that were involved in drawing the protocols tells me – and I agree with the minister – that everyone does have a genuine desire to work together to not only reduce the waiting lists in emergency rooms but also to look at the other community-based programs. That's why so many of the allied health care professionals came together, to work with doctors and nurses to establish the protocols.

Dr. Swann: Right now everyone in the health system feels the chill. Will the Premier commit to introducing whistle-blower legislation so that people inside the system can identify problems and solutions without fear of losing their job?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, all staff have a professional duty with respect to the disposition of their professional duties, whether they be doctors or nurses, and if there is something inappropriate that is happening, whether it be in an emergency ward or any other delivery of service, I believe it is their duty to ensure that their profession is made aware of that.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Accountability in Health System Governance

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There is a rebellion growing among the health care system professionals. Frustration was increasing for years, but suspending the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark was the last straw. To the Premier: why did you kick out the dedicated, competent Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark and still keep the CEO for Alberta Health Services, who has failed to improve the delivery of health services for two years?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark and I had a very good, long conversation, I think for two hours. We talked about, obviously, the pressures that he was facing as a medical doctor, pressures as a father, and also the difficulties of getting caught between performing his professional duties as a doctor and also some of the issues that he faced in terms of carrying out his duties as an elected member.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, let me ask the Premier: do you have confidence in the CEO of the Alberta Health Services Board? Do you have confidence?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I found the comments last Friday quite offensive. In fact, all Albertans found them offensive. It came at a time when there was a really good plan put in place, but all of that good work was relegated to the back burner, and all of the focus was on what the comments were. There is a due process in place. I am not the employer; Alberta Health Services is the employer. As I said, due process will occur, and the board will make the appropriate decision.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, if the Premier has no confidence in the CEO, how can the front-line workers have confidence in the CEO? Take action.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the board is responsible for the CEO. Part of the look at the protocol in terms of improving emergency room waiting times was put together by the professionals. This came up; it was agreed to by the person who was responsible, Dr. Eagle. Now they're disseminating that information to all of the health care facilities to make sure that the plan can be implemented by the end of December.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Health Workforce Shortages

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, health care professionals are frustrated by the lack of consistency by this Premier on health care. When priorities change day by day, there is no clear direction. Stopping the bleeding in emergency rooms is an important first step, but there needs to be a long-term commitment to proper staffing. To the Premier: will the Premier immediately open and staff all acute-care beds that have been mothballed and keep them open to avert another ER crisis in this coming six months?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, that is a good question. In fact, looking at the protocol, I believe that there will be – and I have to rely on the minister for the actual numbers – something like 500 new nurses hired as quickly as possible and about 300 beds or something like that. It's a large number of beds. It's almost like opening up a couple more hospitals. Again, that is being communicated. I want it to be put in place by the end of December.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, that's good news. Thank you to the Premier.

Our second question. Family doctors will help keep people out of emergency rooms. Will the Premier immediately commit to increasing the number of family physician graduates from medical schools?

Mr. Stelmach: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have. I made that commitment to Albertans in 2008. We're going to increase the number of spaces both for medical training and for nurses' training and also for LPNs. Now, with respect to family docs they're very important in terms of the health care system. However, what I'd like to see is more primary care networks established above the 38 that we have so that someone that has a chronic illness can come in and go to the appropriate person that's in the PCN without going to a doctor every time.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, this Premier spent $24 million last year cutting 450 nurses, cutting 450 nursing positions. Will the Premier immediately commit to increasing the number of nursing openings in postsecondary schools so we don't have a staff shortage to respond to emergencies?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I made a commitment that we will increase the spaces and train and graduate 2,000 nurses by 2012.

We're going to meet that target. With respect to the doctors I think we're on target for increasing by 295 by 2012. So we're well on the path.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Member Suspension from PC Caucus

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the PC caucus whip told Albertans that they voted to kick out the MLA for Edmonton-Meadowlark and that it was unanimous. We were also told that the Premier wasn't in the room. My question to the Premier is very simple. Did all 67 of your PC MLAs, including yourself, vote yes to kicking out the only emergency room doctor in government in the middle of an emergency room crisis?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I will inform Albertans that I wasn't at the caucus meeting towards the end. I was here in the Legislature commemorating I think one of the world's worst atrocities; that is, the hunger, the famine. If you have somebody that has lived through that period, it is quite emotional. That's all I can say.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Regardless of whether or not the Premier was in the room, Albertans know whose fingerprints were all over the decision. The Premier just last Friday made an important point of saying how much he needed the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark's help in fixing the ER crisis, and then he simply fires him at the first opportunity. Given how fast you went back on your word, how can Albertans believe anything you say in the future?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, these are caucus decisions. I know that the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark today made some comments on the radio in a way saying, you know, that he regretted what was said. I can tell you that we're focused on moving ahead with the protocols. Those are very important to get the plan in place. We can spin this thing for the next week. It's not going to improve in terms of rapid progress on the protocols.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you. Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, the Premier accused my colleague from Airdrie-Chestermere of being theatrical when he asked why he fired the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. Since then members of our caucus and radio shows across the province have received thousands – I repeat, thousands – of calls and e-mails outraged at the action of this caucus and this Premier. To the Premier: does he think that these Albertans are also being theatrical?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, one just had to watch the behaviour of the member yesterday and, in fact, well into the evening. If that isn't theatrics, I don't know what is.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. [interjections] Hon. member, you have the floor. Forget about what the guy beside you says. You're recognized.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are two people in the health care system: one person closes hospital beds, lays off nurses, creates a disastrous flu immunization program and a crisis in our emergency rooms; the other exposes broken promises by the Premier and his health minister and stands up for the patients and front-line health care workers. My question is to the Premier. Which one would the Premier get rid of?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, this government has met its commitments and will exceed, hopefully, the commitments of increasing the number of nurses, increasing the number of locally trained physicians, increasing the number of continuing care beds in the province. Also, much to the delight of people living in Grande Prairie and Lethbridge and Red Deer, they will have their own local radiation vaults for cancer treatment. That to me is a huge advancement in the delivery of health care in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, that's typical, but the real answer has already been given by the Premier since actions speak louder than words. The wrong person was fired. The reason for such a bizarre decision is not hard to find. One was doing the government's bidding, and the other was exposing the uncomfortable reality of this government's health care failures. Will the Premier admit that when Dr. Duckett closed acute-care beds, laid off nurses, and created a crisis in Alberta's emergency rooms, he was actually doing the government's bidding?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, something that no other government in Canada has done is give a commitment to a five-year funding agreement. It's the only jurisdiction in Canada. That gives us the opportunity to ensure that we can take care of many more Albertans, Albertans that continually move to the province of Alberta, many that don't come here with their hospital or their medical doctor. That is some of the pressure that we're facing.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The message to health care workers, administrators, and politicians alike is now clear. If you cut, privatize, lay off, and generally create chaos in the health care system, you will be rewarded by this Tory government. If you tell the truth about this government's responsibility for the health care crisis, you will be punished. The facts speak for themselves. You can't trust this PC government on health care.

I have no more questions.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House.

Provincial Deficit

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Conventional crude oil production has increased by 47,000 barrels per day. That's above the government's production assumptions in the recent budget. My first question is to the Premier. Why are conventional crude oil royalties to the treasury $326 million lower than was anticipated while we see an increase in production and, of course, an increase in price?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I'll have the minister of finance and also the Minister of Energy respond, but this year we've had some difficulty, obviously. Oil was discounted considerably during a difficult period of time, when we saw some interruption in the flow of oil to the south. I think it was discounted to about $55 a barrel. I stand to be corrected on the exact amounts, but those are some of the issues that we've been facing.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier. To be specific, that was conventional crude oil. It was not synthetic crude production.

I have another question for the Premier. Can the Premier guarantee that the books will be balanced in this province before an election writ is dropped, that we will have no more billion-dollar deficits before the voters go to the polls?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, just to inform the hon. member, all oil flows through the pipeline, whether it's synthetic crude or bitumen. We receive royalties on both, and that oil will continue to flow to our best market, to the United States. However, we're as a government tremendous supporters of a pipeline to Kitimat so that we can open up access to foreign markets, where we'll be able to stabilize the oil pricing well into the future.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, so are we.

Again to the Premier: can the Premier guarantee that the books will be balanced in this province before an election writ is issued? Yes or no?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member would just look at the books, in fact the operations of government are balanced, meaning that what we pay for teachers, for doctors, for nurses is all balanced in the year that the expense is created. Where the so-called deficit is – and, again, it's not debt. We're taking money out of the sustainability fund, taking a cash asset and converting it to infrastructure, and that is the infrastructure that the hon. members across there are asking for: more schools, more hospitals, and more roads.

The Speaker: I sincerely hope that as we continue to go forward, we'll have a little more attention, please, to what's going on, and I do apologize to the schoolchildren who see this.

The hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Landowner Private Property Rights

Mr. Lund: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions today are to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Property rights are an issue that is very much like a birthright to Albertans and, I think, for that matter, probably to all Canadians. I'm getting a lot of concern expressed to me about the Alberta Land Stewardship Act and some of the sections that are in it, so I would like to quote section 11(1). "For the purpose of achieving or maintaining an objective or a policy of a regional plan, a regional plan may, by express . . ."

The Speaker: I'm sorry. We're going to whomever this is directed to. Please sit down, sir.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member is of course alluding to the Alberta Land Stewardship Act. What I will say at the outset is that there is nothing in that act that affects the title of anybody's real estate or freehold mineral rights. There are some inclusions in that legislation relative to statutory consent.

Mr. Lund: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would like to know how it is that the minister can protect property rights when a section would say that there is no right to compensation by any action under this act.

Mr. Knight: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, it relates to the same issue. In fact, if there is a statutory right that's affected by a plan under the legislation, what happens? It is very clear – it's very clear – that that legislation does not provide compensation, but it expressly states in the legislation that the compensation is housed in other legislation in the province currently in effect such as the Mines and Minerals Act or the forestry act.

Mr. Lund: Statutory consent could be a municipality approving a subdivision, and I'd like to know where that compensation is.

The other thing that really bothers my constituents is the fact that it says in 17(4) that "if there is a conflict or inconsistency between this Act and any other enactment, this Act prevails." How do you protect the property rights of an individual?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, again, ALSA does not invoke any notwithstanding clause regarding the Alberta Bill of Rights, nor does it expressly provide that any individual could be deprived of real property or mineral title without compensation. This section should be read as consistent with the Alberta Bill of Rights, and it cannot be construed in a manner so as to abrogate or infringe on one's right to the enjoyment of property without corresponding compensation.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Little Bow.

Home Inspection Industry Review

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Homebuyers across Alberta practise due diligence by consulting a home inspector before making the largest purchase of their lives. A poor inspection may leave homebuyers with massive repair costs because in Alberta you can be a home inspector just by printing a business card. To the Minister of Service Alberta: given that the department said that it was consulting on this issue 15 months ago, why hasn't the minister released any findings on the home inspection industry?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to the issue of home inspectors we did have an excellent consultation with a number of different stakeholders, from consumers and then from the real estate industry and from a number of people in the business. The point we're at is that we're still engaged in working out some final issues. Again, it's a very complex issue, but it's about informing consumers to make the right decisions as well.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister dragging her feet again, like always, because accurate home inspections would increase pressures on the government to deal with shoddy home and condo builders?

Mrs. Klimchuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, with respect to the whole area of home inspectors under Service Alberta's portfolio there's a whole, very complex area with respect to shoddy building as well as with respect to the New Home Warranty Program and that area. My focus has always been to enable the consumer to make good decisions, and we know that when you're purchasing a home, make sure that the home inspectors you are going to use are reputable and are going to give you the right information.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think the minister's focus is getting a little hazier by the day.

To the minister again: if British Columbia, which licensed home inspectors in January of 2009, can protect homebuyers, why can't Alberta do the same?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, there are other provinces that have done this. British Columbia was the first one to do so. I can assure the member this is something that we're looking very seriously at because, ultimately, we want to make sure that consumers, when they do purchase a property, have a reputable home inspector who does have the credentials to protect their decision.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Civic By-elections

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday I had the honour of attending a memorial service in Lethbridge for an outstanding husband, father, lawyer, and community contributor. As you're aware, Mr. Bob Babki garnered the second-highest number of votes in the recent city of Lethbridge municipal elections. Sadly and suddenly, two days before his swearing-in he passed away. A number of residents at the service are still asking what the system is for replacement.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First, I'd like to express my most sincere sympathies to Mr. Babki's family. Due to the unfortunate death of this alderman a vacancy did arise on council, and in accordance with section 162 of the Municipal Government Act in these circumstances a council must hold a by-election to fill this vacancy. This section further states that the by-election must be held within 90 days of that particular vacancy.

Mr. McFarland: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: would this procedure have been different if Mr. Babki had officially been sworn in as alderman?

Mr. Goudreau: No, Mr. Speaker. The situation would have been the same because of the fact that he had been declared elected in accordance with the Local Authorities Election Act.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. McFarland: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. The other question I heard quite frequently was: why not simply give the aldermanic position to the next highest number of votes that were garnered?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, under the legislation I as the minister do not have the legislative discretion under the MGA or the Local Authorities Election Act to appoint the highest unsuccessful candidate to the municipal council. They will have to go through a by-election.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Children in Care

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Children and Youth Services has stated numerous times in this House that budget cuts will not impact the quality of care. Well, Minister, the advocate begs to differ in his most recent report, and so do I. Youth are being forced out of the system before they are ready and before they've turned 18 because of budget restrictions. To the minister: how is this serving the best interests of vulnerable youth, who desperately need assistance with the transition to adulthood?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The member is incorrect. We are not taking services away from our children as they transition to adulthood. I can tell you, as I mentioned here in the Assembly yesterday, that $72 million was added to the ministry's budget in August, and $13 million of that funding was added to our family support for children with disabilities program, and that very much assists with the transition to adulthood for our youth.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. It sounds a bit like robbing Peter to pay Paul.

How can the minister deliver services that meet the needs of vulnerable youth when the youth leaving the system aren't even given an opportunity to provide feedback on their experiences? Where's the accountability, the evaluation?

Mrs. Fritz: Well, Mr. Speaker, actually youth do give their feedback on their experiences regarding the system, and I can tell you, hon. member, that they give feedback through this ministry and also through the child advocate's office. I want to assure this member that in Children and Youth Services we look after youth up to the age of 18 and that as youth transition to other services that are necessary, we do that over a two-year period.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. When the advocate argues that changes made 25 years ago have failed to develop an effective role for aboriginal communities in the children's services system, what makes the minister believe that the new round of consultation will be any more successful? We cannot simply revert to failed previous processes.

Mrs. Fritz: Well, Mr. Speaker, I know this member's interest in the aboriginal community and the resources and services for the aboriginal community, and I can tell you that the advocate, in commenting on 25 years ago, was not saying that today we aren't going to make progress through consultation with the aboriginal community as they assist with the model that should be in place in order for us to care for their children in need.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

AHS Food Services Review

Mr. Berger: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today Alberta Health Services announced recommendations from the food services review. The review was in response to complaints about the quality of food and the variety of food served in our nursing homes and small hospitals in rural Alberta. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. For residents of these facilities, especially long-term care, meals are a very special, anticipated time of the day. What is being done to respond to these concerns?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, it is a good question. The first thing that happened, of course, is that an independent consulting team of food service professionals was organized, and they travelled to 26 different sites across the province. They spoke with residents. They spoke with families. They spoke with cooks and other providers. Everyone involved from the staffing level was there. At the same time they came away with some recommendations, which have now been implemented by Alberta Health Services. More food choices, more sampling of menus, and more cultural favorites will be included.

Mr. Berger: To the same minister. In rural centres, particularly the smaller ones, facilities don't have the access to local suppliers that they had in the past. How will AHS be addressing this issue?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, in short, Mr. Speaker, facilities at the local level will now have more flexibility, with regard to the question being asked. At the same time Alberta Health Services will be investing in more on-site training so that the cooks and other people involved in preparing the food that comes out of the kitchen will have a more direct say in these things to be more effective in menu planning and in providing sample menus so that the families and the residents can actually taste in advance what they might be enjoying for the rest of the menu schedule.

Mr. Berger: My final question is to the same minister. The kitchen staff and the staff in these facilities are preparing food for the people they know. It's not a number in a remote area of Alberta; it's people they know. They know their likes, and they know their dislikes. How are we going to respond to that and prepare food that is locally acceptable?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, I certainly agree that it is the kitchen staff, the cooks, and so on at the local facility who know these residents almost as well as the families know them themselves. That's why when they spoke out, we listened. A review was done, solid recommendations are coming forward right now. I can assure you that the nutrition will be there, the home-like meals will be there, and they'll even enjoy such things as – who knows? – holubtsi and perogy if they like.

Health System Concerns

Mrs. Forsyth: Our seniors could be so lucky to get that.

We asked a number of questions to the health minister last week, of course, but we didn't get any answers, so I'm going to ask the same questions, and I hope he takes some time to provide us with some answers. To the health minister. We know that there are beds in Edmonton and Calgary sitting empty while our ERs continue to burst at the seam. Will you immediately conduct an audit of all hospitals so that we know how many empty beds there are?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, it's not a bad suggestion. In fact, some of that has already been done. I thought I had indicated something to that effect last week. If I didn't, then I was remiss in not doing that. Nonetheless, some of those beds have already been open. For example – I think I gave this information out – there were a number of beds that were recently opened at what was previously the women's pavilion at the Royal Alex here in Edmonton. Perhaps there are other sites like that. The suggestion to take a look at which beds might be available that weren't closed all that long ago while new ones were opened to replace them is one that is being looked at.

Mrs. Forsyth: We need the audit, Mr. Minister. We want to see what beds are open and what beds have been closed. We want net beds.

Given that we informed you last week that it is up to you to direct the Health Quality Council to investigate serious issues like the tragic deaths occurring in the ER, have you called them in to investigate yet?

Mr. Zwodzesky: Mr. Speaker, the Health Quality Council has been consulted. I want to let everybody here know and all Albertans know that with respect to the large number of incidents that Dr. Parks identified in the Thanksgiving e-mail to me a month or so ago, quality assurance reviews are under way right now, and the Health Quality Council had some input into that.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, I'd like to see him table the information he gets from the Health Quality Council.

Okay, Minister, I have a new question for you today. Given that seniors and others are being forced to go into their doctor's offices and clinics for simple refills and other things that could be handled over the phone, will the minister abolish the whites-of-the-eyes rule and allow physicians to bill for telephone advice?

Mr. Zwodzesky: Mr. Speaker, let me take that one under advisement because there are a number of things that are coming forward as part of our pharmacy drug review at the moment. I know that there are issues there with respect to prescription refills, prescription adaptations, consultation reviews, and medication reviews, and it's all part of the same scenario. I will get back to the member with the information.

Kainai Community Correctional Centre

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, the Kainai Community Correctional Centre, a facility mandated to deliver culturally sensitive, community-based programs to low-risk, minimum-security aboriginal inmates was saved from closure by last minute negotiations between Kainai and the Solicitor General. To the Solicitor General, Kainai was cited to close last March as a cost-saving measure, but you gave the facility a year's reprieve. What programs or strategies has your ministry implemented during the past eight months to improve the usage of this facility?

Mr. Oberle: Well, I'm not so sure, Mr. Speaker, that it's a question of what programs my ministry has put in place. The member correctly points out that we reached an agreement with the Kainai facility to extend their operation through this year. The commitment was that we would work together, particularly that the Kainai would work to talk about how they want to profile that facility, how it fits into their community. We certainly have our needs. We've been talking with the Kainai facility, and we're very pleased with the progress made there.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently the Solicitor General suggested that the Kainai correction centre was an asset to the community, as he indicated briefly there, and should be kept open. As such, correction officials were asked for input to ensure that the strategically tailored programs for low-risk, minimum-security aboriginals remain available. Has there been a result of these inquiries?

Mr. Oberle: Well, the member would or might know that our prisoner profile changes over time. We actually don't experience as many minimum-risk offenders as we have in the past, but we are working with the Kainai facility to figure out what we're going to do going forward.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd just ask the Solicitor General. The year is almost up. Do you have any indications as to whether we're going to be continuing with the programs at the Kainai centre, or have you made a decision on that front?

Mr. Oberle: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member would know that he's now asking me to divulge budget decisions or contract decisions going forward, and I can't do that. All I can do at this point is inform the member absolutely truthfully and heartfelt that we're having some excellent discussions with the Kainai facility, and we're going to continue that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Education Achievement Tests

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the spring of 2009 I brought forward Motion 503, which called for the government to do away with grade 3 provincial achievement tests in favour of an alternative assessment for learning. The Legislature voted in support of this motion, but 18 months later nothing has changed. My question is to the Minister of Education. Can he tell us when he is going to heed the advice of teachers and the desire of the Assembly to put in place testing that supports our students' learning?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an important question. The Legislature will know that we've been engaged in a very thorough discussion of education going forward. It's important to have that foundational discussion. Coming out of that discussion and changes that we make will be changes to programs of study and curriculum and, obviously, alignment of assessment to that. In the meantime we have been investigating other forms of assessment, but until we find a cost-effective way and a more effective way of doing assessment, the PAT 3 tests provide us with important information.

Mrs. Leskiw: Mr. Speaker, my first supplementary is to the same minister. If you are changing the way we develop curriculum, why not do away with these tests in the interim?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, the tests are very effective for us both in terms of providing information for the accountability of the system and in terms of how we're doing. The school boards tell us that they can use the results very effectively and do use the results very effectively. It's important information. We shouldn't stop doing something that provides good information, is a useful tool in the education system for accountability and for development of further educational opportunities for children until we have something better. We will hopefully have something better once we've aligned it with new curriculum development and new resources.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Leskiw: That's it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater.

Sale of Public Land for Commercial Use

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Food security is a growing issue internationally, and Alberta is not free of its challenges. We have lost a significant amount of our prime agricultural land to development, and it could get worse due to an increase in land grabs by corporations and investors, but the land-use framework remains stalled. To the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: this government recently illustrated its willingness to sell Crown land without a public process, so why should Albertans trust the government to protect our agricultural land?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member opposite for the question. In fact, what happened with the proposed bid on the Crown land that the member refers to is that it was going through the system and did not happen, which proves to me that the system is working.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question to the same minister: given that there are limited protections in law, how is this government ensuring that other countries and foreign corporations are not grabbing Alberta's land for their own food security needs?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We, of course, have agriculture as our second largest industry in this province, and it's a huge contributor. The agricultural sector has a great deal of input into the land-use framework. As well, Municipal Affairs and my ministry work very hard together over our concerns about fragmentation of land. About 85 per cent of our land base in this province is agricultural land or forestry.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Without completion of the land-use framework's regional plans, how is the minister able to ensure the protection of agricultural land for the long term?

Mr. Hayden: Mr. Speaker, we do have foreign ownership land legislation in Alberta that protects us and makes certain that we will continue to own the land and be able to control the food production. But we also have to be aware that we produce far more than we can consume. We export approximately 80 per cent of what we produce.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Education Curriculum

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Inspiring Education set a high-level direction for what education in Alberta will look like in the future and what it will mean to be an educated Albertan 20 years from now. Albertans told us that the education system must reflect the growing changes of both our local and global communities. To the Minister of Education: with the high-level direction set, my trustees would like to know how the minister is putting theory into practice in implementing the directions outlined in Inspiring Education?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have had a very robust discussion. We've had Inspiring Education, which has led us to inspiring action, talking about how we connect the conceptual side to the action side, developing that vision. I want to thank the hon. member for his role in getting us that vision.

There are three pillars which we must relentlessly focus on as we go forward: teaching excellence, recruiting, preparing, inducting, and supporting the best and brightest in becoming and remaining teachers; curriculum that focuses on foundational literacy and numeracy starting in the early years and developing a deeper conceptual understanding in the later years; and the third and perhaps . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With the consultation on Speak Out, Setting the Direction, and Inspiring Education can the minister tell my trustees how he is ensuring that the School Act will align with what Albertans are telling us they want and need?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the hon. member will know, in his report he talked about an education system that produces students who are engaged thinkers, ethical citizens who have an entrepreneurial spirit. We're building on that and bringing it forward for discussion, and it's still in the discussion stage. There's lots of opportunity for people to continue to talk about the issues, but new education legislation will provide an enabling framework which allows for the kind of flexibility, responsiveness, and innovation throughout the province that's essential to realizing the vision. A legislative framework, then policy and curriculum will follow.

Mr. Johnson: Rural Alberta school boards have been innovative in creating a wide range of diverse programs to meet the needs of students during a period of declining enrolments. Can the minister tell my trustees how future funding will support innovation and the maintenance of these necessary programs?

Mr. Hancock: One of the things that essentially will have to follow is a review of the funding framework to see whether it's actually accomplishing what we need. We have put a lot of focus on that. It is one of the issues for us in declining enrolment areas. We have, as the member will know, small schools by necessity, enrolment decline and enrolment growth, rural transportation, small board administration, small class size initiative, and interjurisdiction grants, so a number of areas we're funding now. Obviously, as we move forward and talk about how we deliver educational programs and options, both digitally and on-site, we're going to have to focus on how that gets funded so that every child has the opportunity to be successful.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Seniors' Education Property Tax

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. The education property tax assistance for seniors program has been administered by the Seniors and Community Supports ministry since 2005 but not mentioned in any act, administered by any regulations, and is only mentioned as a line item in the annual report. The 72,000 seniors who qualify are supposedly automatically enrolled when they turn 65, except that some of them aren't. To the minister of seniors: why does the government administer a program with no regulations or legislation, providing no oversight from the minister?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, I understand that seniors, when they are approaching their 65th birthday, do receive a letter from us outlining what our supports are and requesting that they apply for any of our programs. If a senior has missed that letter, I can understand that they may not be enrolled in the education property tax program, but we do send a letter out prior to their 65th birthday to let them know that we have programs and services available.

Ms Blakeman: It actually doesn't work quite that way. Back to the same minister: given that some of the seniors and specifically those who are living in condominiums or in mobile homes, say the department staff, are not automatically enrolled and that when they apply for retroactive enrolment, there is an inconsistent application of the back years they are entitled to, why is Seniors and Community Supports telling some seniors that they can only get the last two fiscal years of education property tax, but others get more if they fight for it?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, I am aware that when a senior inquires about the education property tax program, we do supply them with the information they need to have some back payment of whatever is owing to them. There are a number of different rules around that. You have to be in a certain place. When you move from your original residence and you start in your new residence, that's when the new education property tax starts on that property. It's a little bit complicated, but I do know that we have an excellent staff.

Ms Blakeman: Actually, that's not written down anywhere, so if you have it, please send it.

To the same minister: given that the regulations for all of the other seniors' benefit programs say 11 months of retroactive benefits but this program has no legislation, no regulations, and no policies written anywhere, could Alberta seniors be given a definitive time when the government will create legislation around this program to ensure that policy directives are applied consistently and not changed arbitrarily and applied differently behind closed doors?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, I know that we have an excellent staff that are very concerned about our seniors and deal with them very well on our voice and person-friendly information line. I will check into what this hon. member has asked and will take it under consideration.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Southern Alberta Flood Disaster Relief

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When the flood occurred in southeast Alberta late last June, there were a lot of meetings with officials and affected municipalities. After the disaster recovery program was announced, Alberta Emergency Management gave assurances that there would be a 30-day turnaround to complete evaluations. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs. My constituents are still asking: is the Alberta Emergency Management Agency meeting these goals, and why is it taking so long to clear up so many of these claims?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, as stated on page 11 of our RFP, and its also on our website, our commitment is to do an evaluation within 30 days of receiving an eligible application. We are meeting or exceeding that commitment a hundred per cent of the time. While we can't control all factors that lead to the closing of files, I can tell the member that more than 90 per cent of the residential applications have received an initial payment or are complete.

Mr. Mitzel: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: given that it's been reported that the LandLink contract is potentially worth $45 million dollars, will the minister please tell this House if this is indeed true?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, no, that's not true. The figure was incorrectly reported in the media. Again, I'm happy to share the correct facts. The current five-year contract to 2014 has a maximum funding amount of $20 million, and that's to provide turnkey delivery of all assigned disaster recovery programs across Alberta. If there are no disaster recovery programs, there are no payments. The actual amount depends on the number and severity of all disasters in the province over the term of the contract.

Mr. Mitzel: To the same minister: given that there seems to be a disconnect with the disaster recovery contract agency, how does the minister plan to monitor this contract to ensure that it delivers the required services as it has been nearly six months now?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, we have many checks and balances in place. One, our senior staff monitor the contracts very closely, including all invoices; two, the work has to be auditable by two levels of government, our provincial and federal governments – in fact, we randomly review a minimum of 15 per cent of all files prior to payment; and three, as has been stated all along with regard to a program of this size, we will be conducting a third-party review of the process, including LandLink processes.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Pre International Baccalaureate Program

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Highly motivated grade 10 students are eligible to enter the pre international baccalaureate program at many high schools in Alberta. Eligible courses for IB include French and Spanish. To the Minister of Education: I agree that learning other languages is very, very important, but why only specific languages like Spanish and French?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Actually, we support provincially quite a number of languages in the province, French as our official language being important but also Spanish, Mandarin, Japanese. Many languages are supported. But when it comes to international baccalaureate programs, those programs are not provincially mandated. They're locally developed courses offered by some school jurisdictions to students in grades 11 and 12. Some schools have created their own international baccalaureate middle years program. Pre-IB is a way to encourage grade 10 students to enter into the full IB program in grades 11 and 12.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental to the same minister: what is the process to get other languages and other courses included as part of the pre-IB?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I said, decisions around pre-IB course offerings are local decisions made by individual schools and school boards. They're locally developed courses which require approval. Choice is one of the important principles that we have in Alberta's educational system. We encourage that type of development of courses, enrichment of programming for those students that need it and want it. But, as I say, they're optional. They're based on student interest and teacher availability. Students and parents who have an interest in these types of programs usually arrange that through their local schools.

Mr. Bhardwaj: My final supplemental to the same minister: is the minister contemplating allowing students to take either IB or Alberta diploma rather than forcing them to take both?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have been in discussion with the IB program co-ordinators and leaders across the province over the last little while. I had the privilege of attending their annual meeting about a month ago to talk about some of the requests that they have, including whether or not students should be exempted from the provincial diploma exams if they've taken the IB examination, whether they have a choice to do that, how we can acknowledge their results on the transcripts for students, and how, in fact, we can recognize the role and function of courses like theory of knowledge.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Prepaid Home Contractors

Ms Woo-Paw: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have heard concerns from constituents regarding the overt and predatory behaviour of some fly-by-night and dishonest contractors. These questionable businesses are harmful to all Alberta consumers and the reputation of the excellent businesses and contractors in our province. My questions are to the Minister of Service Alberta. How are you protecting consumers from disreputable contractors working in this province?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Service Alberta has very strict rules for prepaid contractors who take money before the work is completed and solicit work outside of a regular place of business. The prepaid contractors are licensed with Service Alberta. They also must post a security. So it's very important for consumers, when they are making a decision to renovate or whatever, to make sure they are licensed if they are being prepaid.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Woo-Paw: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: it is good to have rules and share information, but what actions are you actually taking to stop these scams?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are severe penalties under the Fair Trading Act, which include fines of up to $100,000 and up to two years in jail. Also, in extreme cases we lay charges under the Criminal Code. Lastly, this summer we worked very closely with the Calgary Police Service to deal with a repeat offender who was preying on Calgary seniors. Indeed, this department does take action.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Woo-Paw: Well, thank you. Again to the same minister. My constituents actually think that these offenders are getting off with a slight slap on the wrist. Are there any real consequences?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's really important for Service Alberta to hear from consumers about what they are experiencing with respect to our consumer contact line. Some of the penalties that have been handed out by the courts include fines in excess of $80,000, restitution of $70,000, and jail of up to six years' time.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 20 different members were recognized today for questions, and there were 117 questions and responses.

Eid al-Adha

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Assalamu Alaikum. I'm pleased to rise today in recognition of the celebration of Eid al-Adha, otherwise known as the festival of sacrifice. I would like to thank you for putting on this important celebration in the rotunda later today.

Eid al-Adha is a Muslim celebration that recognizes the story of Abraham and Ishmael. This is a story shared by three of the world's major faiths: Judaism, Christianity, and Islam. As the story goes, Abraham, after spending his entire life asking God for a son, was finally blessed with Ishmael. After his son grew up, God came to Abraham and commanded him to sacrifice his son's life. Abraham obeyed this commandment, but as he was about to bring down the knife, God stopped him and told him to sacrifice a ram in Ishmael's place. Abraham had passed the test and showed his commitment to his God.

Traditionally, Mr. Speaker, members of the Muslim faith recognize this event by making sacrifices to Allah by offering a sheep, camel, or goat and dividing the meat from the slaughtered animal into three sections. The first section is eaten by the immediate family, the second is handed to close friends, and the third delivered to the poor. The festival of sacrifice works to bring the entire community together in celebration of faith.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to wish all Muslims in Alberta a happy and successful Eid al-Adha. [Remarks in Arabic]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Transgender Day of Remembrance

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last weekend I attended an event celebrating the Transgender Day of Remembrance. Even today the transgendered remain among the most misunderstood community in our province. Unfortunately, members of this community are often victims of physical and mental abuse, prejudice, and outright discrimination.

Recent events have shown that hate crimes remain a very real problem for our province. Intolerance, ignorance, and blind, unreasoning fury have no place in Alberta, yet these hateful actions continue. One of the speakers at the day of remembrance, for example, was working as a teacher, born female, when he was fired last year because he informed his school board that he was transitioning from female to male. Even this government showed a complete lack of tolerance and understanding when it stopped covering gender reassignment surgery, picking on an unpopular group because they knew they could get away with it.

It is astounding that even in the 21st century people can still make a big deal over trivial issues such as skin colour, disability, sexual orientation, or gender identity. Having spoken with the good folks who attended the day of remembrance, I can tell you that they share the same hopes and dreams of any Albertan. There is nothing strange or scary about that. To paraphrase the great civil rights leader Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., I dream of a day when people are judged not by the configuration of their gender identity but by the content of their character.

I hope that we can all show some empathy and support for the transgendered Albertans who have faced violence and discrimination because of their gender identification. All citizens deserve an equal measure of respect. That should be the Alberta way.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A couple of tablings for the House today. I'd like to table five copies of the Alberta Land Surveyors' Association report of proceedings of the 101st annual general meeting that was held April 22 to April 24, 2010.

The second tabling is five copies of the 2009 annual report of the College of Alberta Professional Forest Technologists.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a petition received in my office. This petition states:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Ministry of Transportation of Alberta to include the paving of Secondary Highway 529 from the Little Bow Provincial Park intersection to the intersection of Secondary Highway 845 to the 2010/11 - 2012/13 Tentative Major Construction Projects.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

The ASTech awards focus on the outstanding achievements of Albertans involved in research and science. It's a great opportunity to recognize the outstanding and talented leadership in Alberta's science and technology community.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first tabling is the special issue of the English Express the Solicitor General used as an important teaching tool for immigrants and foreign work guests working on their literacy to learn about crime and protection in Alberta.

My second tabling is five copies of the teaching notes for the English Express special issue, Help for Victims of Crime, allowing learners to learn new vocabulary, understand our basic legal system, and discuss feelings and emotions about crime.

My third tabling is a letter from Ann Goldblatt to the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology asking that he reverse his decision to defund the English Express because "the multiplier effect of this publication is enormous," making a difference to community adult literacy and learning and to thousands of Albertans.

My second set of tablings is from people opposed to Bill 29. Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of over 700 letters from supporters of the Canadian Parks and Wilderness Society. These Albertans have written to oppose Bill 29, the Alberta Parks Act. The first letter is from Jim Dutton of 3235 Beach Drive, Victoria, B.C., and that's the only one I'm going to mention. They're asking that the Legislature protect and conserve the parks for Albertans today and for generations to come.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, sir.

Hon. members, the chair is also pleased to table five copies of the School at the Legislature report card 2009-2010.

Orders of the Day Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 17 Alberta Health Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill?

Dr. Taft: Mr. Chairman, can I just ask a procedural question? Are we just beginning? I should know this; I'm sorry.

The Deputy Chair: No. We've been debating this already.

Dr. Taft: Yes. That's right. Of course. We spent two hours on it last night.

Actually, I will rise this afternoon to propose an amendment, Mr. Chairman, and I have the appropriate number of copies here.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. We'll ask the pages to distribute those, and then you can proceed. Hon. members, we'll call this amendment A1.

Dr. Taft: Mr. Chairman, that's appropriate because this is an A-one amendment; I can tell you that.

Just to read it into the record, I move that "Bill 17, Alberta Health Act, be amended by striking out section 10." That's the entirety of this proposed amendment. It's quite straightforward that way, but I think it's important to take the time to consider this. I'm going to begin by reading section 10. It's just one paragraph. It's titled Proceedings Not Subject to Review, and it proceeds like this.

A decision or action of the Minister, the Health Advocate or any employee or agent of either of them shall not be questioned, reviewed or made the subject of a proceeding in any court by application for judicial review or otherwise, and no order shall be made or process entered or proceedings taken in any court by way of injunction, declaratory judgment, prohibition or mandamus or otherwise to question, review, prohibit, restrain or compel the Minister, the Health Advocate or any employee or agent of either of them.

Our concern with this particular paragraph, Mr. Chairman, I think should be a concern to anyone who respects the rule of law, who believes that we are all equal before the law. The remarkable intent and effect of this particular paragraph is, in our view, to put the minister and the health advocate and any employee or agent of either of them above the normal law. Clearly, in our view, Mr. Chairman, that's completely inappropriate. I think we all need to be very, very cautious as legislators about putting anybody above the law, putting anybody beyond a challenge by any court or beyond a challenge by any individual who wants to proceed against the minister or against the advocate or against any agent.

Now, it doesn't take a lot to imagine a situation where this could quite quickly get out of hand. Let's say that the health advocate, swamped by all kinds of complaints, appoints an agent and that agent conducts some kind of review which may or may not be appropriate, which may or may not be conducted by an agent who has any particular training. Who knows what the qualifications of those agents may be? That agent files a report, recommends an action. The action is then taken against somebody. That somebody who is being acted against may say, "Well, this whole process was off base. The agent of the health advocate didn't consider all the facts or wasn't qualified to come to a particular conclusion or in some other way did not conduct things properly. I want to stop this proceeding through an injunction, or I want to seek a court declaration, or I want otherwise to take some legal action."

Well, the effect of this paragraph would preclude that. It would seem to us to cut off the normal legal recourse that's available to people if there is a misconduct or if there is a dispute. That's just not reasonable, Mr. Chairman. We believe that everybody should be equal before the law. I think that this is the kind of legislation that actually begins to erode one of the fundamental values of a modern civilization, which is the rule of law. The rule of law means that the law applies regardless of who you are and regardless of the circumstances. This would seem to be a short-circuiting of that particular principle.

When section 10 states that "a decision or action of the Minister . . . shall not be questioned," I think we have to ask ourselves: how extreme is that? "Shall not be questioned": I mean, that's pretty extreme. Surely, we want individuals to have the right to raise questions or to apply for a court to review a decision.

So I would urge all members of this Assembly to support this amendment. At least I would ask somebody in here, maybe the Minister of Justice, to explain and justify for us why paragraph 10 in the Alberta Health Act should not be tossed out as this amendment proposes. What's the point of going to such extremes in this legislation? If it isn't an absolutely compelling point – and I will wait for the Minister of Justice to try to make that point – then I think, you know, my amendment as proposed is a no-brainer.

I will take my seat and see if somebody on the government side – and there are many capable members who understand the law in depth. I look at the Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose. Maybe he can explain why we need to put such remarkable provisions in such generally useless legislation.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm pleased to rise today and speak in support of the amendment from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview. It's one of the amendments that we had already proposed and had gotten approval for from Parliamentary Counsel, so it's nice to see that there are a couple of people thinking on the same level.

I, too, have probably very similar questions that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview has. I guess what's striking to me is that under that section it says that a decision or action of the Minister, the Health Advocate or any employee or agent of either of them shall not be questioned, reviewed or made the subject of a proceeding in any court by application for judicial review or otherwise . . .

Then it goes on.

. . . and no order shall be made or process entered or proceedings taken in any court by way of injunction . . .

And it continues on.

I guess I'm having difficulty trying to figure out why. I'm not a lawyer. Maybe my colleague from Airdrie-Chestermere, because he is a lawyer, can explain to people in the Assembly. Or, for that matter, the Minister of Justice, who is responsible for the justice of this province, can stand up and tell us why this would even be considered in the Alberta Health Act.

I go back to the fact that I'm still trying to rationalize why we are even debating an Alberta Health Act when, quite frankly, Albertans are fed up. I mean, we've seen report after report. We've seen consultation after consultation. I listened to the member who chaired this consultation process to come up with the Alberta Health Act say that he was listening to Albertans. Mr. Chair, one of the things about being a member of the opposition and the health critic, actually, for the Wildrose that I've learned since January is the fact that all of a sudden we get inundated with phone calls, e-mails, letters, and sometimes, quite frankly, it's hard to keep up.

I guess one of the privileges that we have had is all of the health care professionals in this wonderful province that have come forward to talk to us. I sometimes feel that I probably know every hole in the cities of Calgary and Edmonton because people are still concerned about the code of conduct that's under Alberta Health Services. Quite frankly, while the minister and the CEO say that they have the ability to speak up, they don't see that as the opportunity to speak up.

Yet again, we have very clearly written in legislation under section 10 that a decision or action of the minister or, for that matter, the health advocate or any employee or agent shall not be questioned. I'm trying to think of anywhere on this Earth where someone shouldn't be questioned about anything, because ultimately they're responsible to Albertans. If someone sees something that they feel is questionable, then they should have the right to question.

With those short remarks I am going to support what the Member for Edmonton-Riverview has brought forward. He wants to strike out the whole of section 10. Until the government or even the author of this report, the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, speaks out, is able to stand up in this Legislature like he did when we had the emergency debate and told the members of this Assembly that he didn't see a crisis in health care whatsoever – obviously, he believes, or seems to believe, that there is no crisis in health care. I would love to understand or hear what he has to say on why this particular section was put in this piece of legislation. Otherwise, until we hear from the Minister of Justice, the minister of health, or the member for Edmonton-Rutherford, I will continue not to support this legislation.

I'd look forward to any members of government standing up and speaking to this amendment and why they don't support it. I know that there are many members, including the one from Calgary-Egmont, that are lawyers and understand the law much better than I do, so I look forward to them standing up and speaking in support.

I'll continue to listen to the debate, Mr. Chair, and hear what others have to say.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It is indeed a privilege to speak in favour of this amendment brought by the Member for Edmonton-Riverview. I enjoyed listening to the debate so far. When you see this type of legislation that comes through, where it says in section 10 – and this is right in the act. I think this sort of frames exactly what I'm going to talk about, where we go into the rule of law, what democracy stands for, the ability of the ordinary citizenry to challenge the power of the state and to have their day in court and to see if their rights and privileges under statute are being affected or have been interfered with.

Let's just start with reading section 10. Section 10 states that "a decision or action of the Minister, the Health Advocate or any employee . . . of either . . . shall not be questioned, reviewed or made the subject of a proceeding in any court by application for judicial review." It also states that no order shall be made or writ of mandamus, which is defined as a writ that is "issued by a superior court to compel a lower court or a government officer to perform mandatory or purely ministerial duties correctly."

If you look at the wording of that, that gives the government tremendous power, a tremendous ability not to be questioned. Really, the government should reconsider this as a real priority, a real infringement of the rule of law, as I see it, that we here in Alberta and the people of Canada actually have come to enjoy, have come to believe in.

If you look at this type of legislation, which is only meant to quash a citizen's right to appeal a government's behaviour or appeal what a health advocate or employee has done, whether it has merit or not is not the question. It's whether they have an opportunity to do so. It should be judged on procedural fairness but on substantive fairness as well.

These things appear in this section 10 of what is admittedly an inconsequential bill. I described it earlier as being a lot of feathers, not a lot of chicken. Actually, my cousin David Vanrobaeys in Lethbridge did.

Nevertheless, I think it's an innocuous bill because it really doesn't have much power. It really doesn't say anything. It really doesn't do anything. The government is sort of saying in this section, tacitly admitting by implementing this: "Yeah, this is a waste of time. These people – the minister, the health advocate, or employee – really shouldn't be doing anything, so we won't allow people to go to the courts. Really, the minister, the health advocate, or the employee in regard to this bill shouldn't be doing anything, so we'll just make sure of that by bulletproofing any decision they do make so that we won't be embarrassed in a court later on, that these guys actually tried to do something." That might be a reason why. I'm not sure, but if you're looking for some reason, that could be it. This could be an admission that the act is meant to do nothing. Okay? That's why they put this in here.

Really, in terms of this act the minister is not supposed to do anything. The health advocate really isn't supposed to do anything. Neither are the employees of this health advocate really supposed to do anything. So let's just make sure that if for some reason they wake up and do decide to do something, we're not embarrassed by what they did because this act is not meant to do anything. I think this is just basically an admission of that. Nevertheless, it should not be there.

Although they're probably not supposed to do anything, which is basically – let's face it here, let's look each other in the whites of the eyes and say: guys, this act is merely puffery, merely an act that claims to do something, that does do nothing, that takes a little heat off of us, that is for political purposes only but not really to deliver anything better in terms of health care. Okay. I get that. You guys get that. Everyone here basically gets that. But people out in Alberta may not understand it. They may actually go to a health advocate or something to this effect and try to get some information or ability.

Guess what? There could be a circumstance where, God forbid, the health advocate gives poor advice, an employee takes advantage of an individual who seeks the health advocate's advice. A whole host or a number of situations could occur, and they should have the ability to follow up on that bad advice, an ability to go into some sort of tribunal and then follow that up into a court of law.

A government should really be loath to make this type of law. The hon. minister of housing is a lawyer, and he should be able to explain this. The hon. Minister of Education. They're both here.

Mr. Hancock: You should be able to explain a privative clause.

Mr. Hehr: No, no, no. I need some real expertise. I think that if they remember back from their lab classes, governments should be loath to make this overarching type of ruling, where the citizens are unable to go to a court. Governments should be loath to bring this type of act. I'd like to hear their comments about why this is there, and maybe that would be an excellent opportunity.

Nevertheless, I'm very concerned that our governments are seemingly seeking protection from the courts or from rule of law, the rule of law that this country is founded on, that our governments and our politicians are not above the law, that they can be held accountable by their citizenry, that they can take the actions of their government to court and get a ruling on that. That's been enshrined in our Charter of Rights and Freedoms back as far as our nation has been formed.

Going through this, it is simply wrong, and we see this government doing it not only in this bill but other bills where they tend to hide behind ministerial authority. We saw that in the Parks Act. We see it in many acts where this government just doesn't seem to like to let citizens have their day in court or their day in the Legislature, or their day to really question anything this government does. This is a further example and a really egregious example of this government going to extremes to quash any dissent, to quash any problems with a system that right now appears to be broken, and they're just ensuring that that dissent doesn't come up in any embarrassing way.

I thank you very much for allowing me to make those comments. I believe this is overreaching at its worst, and the government should go back and should accept this amendment and possibly redraft this bill to allow for some sort of recourse for the people of Alberta.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Yes, Mr. Chair. Good afternoon. I'm standing today, and we're going to talk about this Bill 17.

The Deputy Chair: On the amendment.

Mr. Anderson: On the amendment. I have a very similar amendment that I'll propose later on, but I'll deal with this amendment. It is to strike out section 10, which, of course, just says:

A decision or action of the Minister, the Health Advocate or any employee or agent of either of them shall not be questioned, reviewed or made the subject of a proceeding in any court by application for judicial review or otherwise, and no order shall be made or process entered or proceedings taken in any court by way of injunction, declaratory judgment, prohibition or mandamus or otherwise to question, review, prohibit, restrain or compel the Minister, the Health Advocate or any employee or agent of either of them.

You see a version of this clause in a lot of different legislation, of course. Generally speaking, it insulates the minister from legal liability. There's a liability clause in section 11 which does that further, but this insulates the minister from, actually, any proceedings that might come against them by way of any action that they take under this act.

Here's the problem. Again, I mean, it's like a bad record. Every day we're in here talking about legislation that either gives too broad powers to the minister or takes them off the hook somehow for their decisions. You know, I remember when I was a new member sitting on this side of the House still but in the other party, the governing party, listening to hours and hours of late-night debate, and this hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview and other hon. members from that caucus as well as from other opposition parties would constantly bring this subject up.

At first, being new, I said: what's the big deal about that? You know, come on. It's ministers, right? I mean, they have a job to do. Let's just make it easier for them. But as I started listening a little bit more, they started bringing up some good points. The fact is that ministers do need to be accountable, and they do need to be accountable to this Legislature and, by extension, the people. We talked a lot yesterday when we were talking about Bill 29, the Alberta Parks Act, that giving ministers too much latitude can invite some very bad decisions later on.

This is kind of the same thing, in my view. Although we're not talking about giving the minister unilateral authority to do things through regulation, we are talking about giving them the ability to essentially not be held responsible. We're basically absolving them of all responsibility with regard to their decisions under this act.

I don't think that's wise. I don't think, of course, that a minister should be sued personally for something that they do as a member of government. They shouldn't have, you know, their bank accounts raided for something that they said as a minister, obviously, unless it's criminal, but that's different. Assuming it's not criminal, they shouldn't be personally liable for their decisions. I don't think anyone disagrees with that. Where I have a problem with section 10 is the fact that it's so broad. It says that any decision of the minister or health advocate or any employee or agent of either shall not even be questioned with something they do in this act.

I think about some of the things that I've experienced even in these last three years. Well, let's think about this emergency room crisis. If this thing lingers on much longer – and it appears that it does – then there might be a situation that comes where the minister needs to be questioned about his handling of the health care crisis. If this were to be passed – and there's obviously a patient bill of rights that's included in this. If the minister obfuscates his responsibilities and refuses to carry out his responsibilities under this act with regard to that bill of rights – say that they were to do so negligently or intentionally or incompetently or, you know, for whatever reason – you would think that we should be able to call in some kind of inquiry, some kind of body that would come and be able to question the minister on their handling of that situation.

I mean, people are dying. I thought this new charter that I read through was very broad. I mean, there are a whole bunch of motherhood and apple pie statements in there. It's kind of impossible to disagree with a lot of them. Nonetheless, there are situations – I know there'll be amendments forthcoming – where we could add in some stronger elements to that charter, whether that be legislated wait times or whether that be, you know, something like that, and that could really hold the minister's feet to the fire to get some things done, as it should.

To absolve them of all responsibility to actually do what this act says is just wrong. Again, we're not talking about making sure that there's personal liability attached to the minister. We're talking about making sure that we can get to the truth of the situation of a tragedy or something that occurs where the minister has been negligent or has handled the situation very poorly, that they can be questioned and made the subject of a proceeding.

Now, do you necessarily want them in front of a judicial body? Probably not. What about some kind of quasi-judicial body like a quasi-judicial public inquiry on the subject? Why would we absolve them from that responsibility? You see, the problem with this government is that they don't like to be questioned, and it's constant. They don't like to be questioned by anybody. They don't like to be questioned by their own caucus, even by people who clearly know more about the subject than anyone in their caucus, like the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark did about health care and emergency room health care in particular. They don't like to be questioned, so it gets them very nervous when there's a situation that might occur where they would be called to the floor, called onto the mat to defend and to justify their actions or their inactions. I cannot support allowing them to have the ability to get away from ever being questioned on their handling of public health under this act.

The other issue I have – and I'll bring this forward later, when I put out one of my other amendments on it – is that it says that a decision or action of the minister, da, da, da, da, da, “shall not be questioned, reviewed,” even reviewed. Let's talk about that. What does that even mean? It says: “Reviewed or made the subject of a proceeding in any court by application for judicial review or otherwise.” Correct me if I'm wrong, but couldn't “otherwise” mean an Auditor General? Does that apply to the Auditor General? Can the Auditor General not come in and review this because it says “or otherwise”? It's not just judicial review. If the whole point of the Auditor General is to come in to make sure that a department or something in Health or Education or anything is being run efficiently, is above board, that there's no unnecessary waste, that the duties under the act are being carried out, et cetera, if that's the whole point of having the Auditor General there, why would we absolve the minister from any kind of review of that Auditor General by this section in this act?

Again, if we're talking about, strictly speaking, court proceedings, I understand that we don't want the minister to be sued every two seconds because someone thinks that the minister didn't do his duty under a piece of legislation. I understand that. I do. But there are other avenues in government like the Auditor General, like a public inquiry, some of these other things where it is appropriate in certain circumstances, where there has been gross mismanagement or negligence or whatever it be, that we have the ability to review the processes and review the minister's actions and review whether their actions and whether they have in fact complied with the legislation that they are bound to enforce and bound to uphold. So that's another part of the section that I have a very large issue with.

Mr. Hancock: It's the standard privative clause.

Mr. Anderson: Well, you know, if it's the standard . . . [interjections]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere has the floor. Through the chair.

Mr. Anderson: Well, the Minister of Education brings a good point. We have privative clauses in most legislation, in fact in all legislation, I would say. Well, almost all legislation. That's right, but I think section 10 goes beyond, as opposed to section 11, which deals with the liability and the action.

No action lies against the Minister, the Crown in right of Alberta, the Health Advocate or any employee or agent of any of them for anything done or omitted to be done by that person in good faith while carrying out that person's duties or exercising that person's powers under this Act or the regulations.

That I agree with, section 11, no doubt. You need to have that in there. But I think section 10 goes well beyond that. Section 10 actually absolves the minister from any kind of review by anybody if you look at it. I mean, it even says “questioning.” You can't even question because it says “or otherwise.” It says: “Application for judicial review or otherwise.” What does “otherwise” mean?

Mr. Hancock: In any court.

Mr. Anderson: But that's not what it says. It doesn't say: in any court. It says: “in any court by application for judicial review or otherwise.” I mean, we don't know what type of proceeding we're talking about here. [interjection]

Mrs. Forsyth: He needs to get up and speak on the record.

Mr. Anderson: Well, in a few minutes he can speak on the record, and maybe he can clarify that.

I think that this is too broad of a clause. I don't think this is a basic privative clause. I think that it goes well beyond that. Again, it goes back to the issue of ministers being held accountable for their actions and for how they uphold or don't uphold the law. We're talking about people's health here. We're talking about, essentially, passing a patients' bill of rights or charter of rights or whatever you want to call it. If you're going to put those types of measures in, the minister should be held accountable. Judicial review: does that include judicial inquiries? “Judicial review or otherwise” doesn't include a judicial inquiry? I don't know. That's fuzzy. You'd think it could.

Anyway, it would be nice to at least have some clarification because the real thing I'm trying to get at here is that we need to make sure that ministers are held accountable for their action or inaction if it becomes gross mismanagement or negligence. Obviously, those ministers should not be sued personally, but should a situation arise where they have been negligent and people's health has been affected and their rights under this act have been violated under this new charter, there should be recourse for that individual to come forward and either go to the Auditor General or ask for a public or quasi-judicial inquiry or whatever to review the situation and call the minister to account. That's really the crux of it.

It does speak, Mr. Chair, to a rather long line of legislation proposed by this government whereby they continually try to insulate their ministers from having to come back to this House and try to bring their legislation and changes to legislation through the House. They're always trying to centralize power in the minister's office, (a), and (b) if they can't do that, they try to absolve them of responsibility. You know, maybe that's why I think we see over time that the sessions get shorter and shorter and shorter and shorter. I don't know. Maybe the Member for Edmonton-Riverview can tell us, in his long political career here in the Legislature, whether he has ever seen a session or a year where we have had as few sitting days as we've had this year. We were told that it was the lowest since the 1970s. Anyway, we'll have to look that up.

The Deputy Chair: Through the chair, please.

Mr. Anderson: On the amendment, that's right. Through the chair, please. Obviously, I look forward to having that question answered. Maybe he can remember.

The point is that these sessions are certainly getting shorter, broadly speaking. The days that we are sitting are certainly getting fewer. I think one of the reasons for that is that there are so many decisions that can be made unilaterally in the executive branch through executive orders, et cetera, that there's no reason to come to the House on so many different things. I think that's wrong, and that type of disrespect or lack of faith in the people's House, in the people's Legislature is disturbing. I think, you know, we see that not only in this act but in many different acts.

I think all Albertans are aware now. It brings this kind of feeling of, you know: who's running the place? Look at the confusion, the utter confusion in health care with regards to giving such broad powers to ministers and absolving all of their responsibility. There's this feeling of distrust, like: "Who's running this thing? Who's running the asylum? Are the inmates running the asylum, or are the politicians?" I guess maybe the politicians are the inmates. I don't know. It's very uncomfortable to know that in health care, for example, we don't know who's running it. We don't know if it's the bureaucracy that's running it or if it's the minister that's running it. The story changes every single day and in almost every single news story depending on if it's good for the government or not.

Mrs. Forsyth: It's the left hand or the right over there.

Mr. Anderson: Right. If it's positive to blame the bureaucracy, the bureaucracy gets blamed. If it's a victory, then the government takes credit for it, you know, even though it was a decision by that same bureaucracy. "Oh, we made that decision." Well, which one is it? Again, it goes back to this idea that there's just too much power being given to our centralized, mammoth bureaucracy and not enough responsibility, like under this section, given to the elected House. The more we allow them to absolve their responsibilities to the bureaucracy or through legislation like this or a section like this, I think that it gets very . . . [interjection] Oh, really? That's interesting. Well, now, congratulations to the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford on being the new parliamentary assistant for health. Good for him.

You know, we have to come here, and we have to be able to debate different things as they come forward, and giving too much power, concentrating too much power in the office of any one minister is a mistake.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members who wish to speak? The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'll be very brief. The amendment seeks to delete section 10 of the act. Section 10 is what's normally known as a privative clause. It's quite a normal clause to have in an act. Notwithstanding all the waxing eloquent that we've heard from members opposite, the section is very clear. It refers to "proceeding in any court by application for judicial review or otherwise, and no order shall be made or process entered or proceedings taken in any court by way of injunction." It's very specific to court actions. It's very specific, and it's quite normal to say that legislative processes and public policy should be dealt with by a Legislature and officers of the Legislature, including the ombudsmen, including Auditors General, those sort of things. If the Legislature orders an inquiry, that's a perfectly valid thing for a Legislature to do. The privative clause is a standard privative clause that talks about review by the court. Obviously, you cannot have a minister of health being taken to court on actions of public policy.

Section 11, that the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere indicated, is a normal liability clause and is a usual companion clause. These two clauses go together. I'm sorry, but the comments by the members of the opposition with respect to the extent and breadth of this clause are way off base.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's my pleasure to rise and speak to the amendment put forward by the Member for Edmonton-Riverview to strike out section 10. Section 10 states that a decision or action of the minister, the health advocate, or any employee of either shall not be questioned, reviewed, or made the subject of a proceeding in any court by application for judicial review. It also states that no order shall be made or writ of mandamus, which is defined as a writ that is issued by a superior court to compel a lower court or government official to perform mandatory or purely ministerial duties directly.

This is a very broad and overarching section, Mr. Chair. Under this section the reality is that if there's a decision which is not acceptable to Albertans or if any organization, for that matter, disagrees with a decision by the minister, they have no legal recourse to dispute the decision or actions of the minister or their appointed employees. The rule of the law should be applied equally to everybody, and this section is putting the minister of health or any employee above the rule of the law. Even the Auditor General could not question the minister or his or her appointed employees.

With this section in place, one cannot question the minister on any decision they make, and cannot be held accountable. It would be good to have some clarification from the government side on why this section 10 should not be yanked out of the bill. The bill is useless anyway. I think we should get rid of the whole bill.

From experience the government likes to concentrate power in just one hand, as they did in dissolving the health regions into one superboard. They just keep on experimenting back and forth under the guise of providing good health care service to Albertans, which is not happening, Mr. Chair. It has been going downhill for the last 16, 17 years because health care is being kicked around like a football. It's been a political football, kicked around back and forth between the minister and the AHS. It's not doing us any good. Every day health care is going downhill. Wait times are going up. We have red alerts, and we've got yellow alerts. By giving that much power to the minister, I think we will not be able to question them on anything.

This is very, very broad and overarching, like I said, and it provides too much leeway to the minister and the advocate. I think we should have some legal opinion on this. This entire section seems to be granting a large amount of immunity to the minister and the advocate, and any decision that is made will not be allowed to be reviewed by any means. This is giving lots of power to the minister, and the minister is becoming above the law, Mr. Chair.

Even with the cookie comments they could do whatever. We couldn't question them. You know, he could be eating his hamburger, or he could be eating his fries, or he could be over at Joey's Only having his fish and chips, and people could be dying in the emergency rooms.

Dr. Taft: He could be at the bakery getting cookies.

Mr. Kang: Getting cookies. We couldn't question him.

Mr. Chair, the reality is that if Albertans already recognize and disagree with the decision by the minister, as we have seen, there is no legal recourse to dispute the decision or the action. For those reasons, I'll be supporting the amendment, and we should just quash section 10.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thanks, Mr. Chair. I just want to say a couple things if I may. I actually appreciate the Minister of Education from Edmonton-Whitemud for speaking up and clarifying that. I think he said that section 10 is something that's in all legislation. While I appreciate where he's coming from, I guess here is the question that I have. We've been listening for months to the government in regard to this health charter. It's innovative, and it's new, and it's a first in Canada, and nowhere else has it been done. So all of a sudden we have this charter of rights in regard to patients, and it recognizes and says what it must do. The health charter must recognize this. It acknowledges the person's status. It must not be used to limit access to health services.

While that's admirable, it goes in here – you know, I've been with the government and I sat on the legislative committee in regard . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, we're on the amendment.

Mrs. Forsyth: I'm speaking on the amendment.

I sat with the Legislature lawyers, who I think are unbelievable, good lawyers. What I don't understand is the fact that all of a sudden we're taking a decision or action of the minister and saying that it can't be questioned. On one hand, we talk about a piece of legislation that's innovative, that's new, that's providing a health charter, and then all of a sudden we want to usurp a decision that's been made not only by the minister but the health advocate. I can understand where the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud is coming from because, obviously, being a former minister of the Crown for two portfolios, the Solicitor General and the ministry of children's services, yes, you don't want to be dragging the minister into every court case, especially if the government or the department is being sued. I've been sued frequently in both portfolios and had representation where I haven't even been to the courtroom or even known what's going on other than the briefing notes that I get from my department people.

Now we're talking about a charter, and I liken that to the federal Charter of Rights and Freedoms, and I would wonder if they have this. To me, quite frankly, it's confusing. If you want to have something new and you want to have something that's innovative and you want to give patients what they consider a charter and it tells in the charter what the charter must do, then I think everything in this piece of legislation must go from "may" to "must." We plan on bringing some amendments forward to deal with that in particular because you can't say "must" in one breath and then "may" in another or "shall," for that matter.

Like I said, I'm not a lawyer. My colleague from Airdrie-Chestermere talks about absolving the minister or the health advocate from any review. Yet, you know, in this piece of legislation the health advocate currently is reporting to the minister and not reporting to the Legislature, so that means he is absolved, too.

I'm going to listen, and I'm going to continue to hear. I want to thank the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud for trying to clarify what he considers something that's normal in any piece of legislation.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you very much. I appreciate this. I appreciate the debate, and I wish more of the government members would participate because we really need to see what the possible justification for paragraph 10 in Bill 17 really is. Otherwise, this amendment should pass through. Now, we've heard the Minister of Education say that this kind of paragraph is standard, a boilerplate almost – he didn't use that word, but he might as well have – in all kinds of legislation. I want him to prove it. I'd like to see, for example, how much of the legislation that we've debated this year has that particular paragraph.

As the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere pointed out, yeah, paragraph 11 is standard, and I don't think we have a problem with that, that any of us would. But paragraph 10 does seem to me to be a strange piece of legislation.

Mrs. Forsyth: It's not in the Parks Act.

Dr. Taft: As I just heard the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek point out that she can't find it in the Parks Act, Bill 29. Frankly, I'm questioning the claim from the Minister of Education, and I'd like him to prove his case, so let's see it. When I think about this and I study it more closely and I try to imagine myself as a lawyer – I'm not a lawyer, and I never intend to be one, but I'll admit, you know, they have their place, Mr. Chairman. Being surrounded by lawyers at this moment, I have to concede that.

I do want to point out here that it says, essentially, that this means that no action by the minister of health will be questioned and so on. It doesn't limit it to the parameters of this act. It simply says: no action by the minister. Given that the scope of this act is extremely broad – it's the Alberta Health Act – it kind of sets a framework for other legislation covering the whole health system. We're talking about an enormous scope here. I want to be very clear. The way I read paragraph 10, it says, in effect, that no employee or agent of the minister of health will ever be questioned.

Well, Mr. Chairman, there are 90,000 employees under the health system in Alberta, public service employees paid by the tax dollars distributed by this Legislature. Ninety thousand. Are they all in due course of their jobs above the law, then? Are they all exempt from being taken to court or questioned? Are they exempt from a court declaration?

I wonder if some of the lawyers present might want to think about class-action suits, if there was to be a class-action suit against the minister of health. Let's say that the minister of health fails to properly protect people and a Walkerton case breaks out. Public health standards are under the purview of this minister. One thing leads to the next, and eventually the victims organize a class-action suit against the minister. Well, how does this act affect that sort of course of events? Or does it? And if it does, why? Certainly, the way I would read it, it would seem that it could.

There are any number of those kinds of examples that could arise, and I just don't see the point of this legislation. It seems to me that there's a principle in law about fair application of laws, that there's a whole business of administrative law which gets opened up here. Again, are we saying that this minister and all his agents, which presumably includes the board of Alberta Health Services, all kinds of other organizations, are all above that sort of behaviour?

I wonder if there isn't a bit of a concern here about the success, the very dramatic and clear success, of a court declaration going back a few years. The teachers used the method of a court declaration several years ago when they were in a contentious bargaining situation with the Minister of Education. The Minister of Education at that time was Lyle Oberg, and the president of the ATA was Larry Booi. The teachers concluded that the minister was not bargaining properly, and they sought a court declaration, and they got the court declaration, which forced the minister to back down.

What's interesting in this current paragraph: court declarations are specifically mentioned. It seems to me that when I read that the minister of health shall not be "made the subject of a proceeding in any court" – and it specifically refers to declaratory judgment of a court – maybe they're concerned that, well, they lost once. They don't want to lose again. What happens in these kinds of situations? We may be seeing some anticipation of future problems.

I also want to return to a point that was briefly mentioned by the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, a fundamental principle of parliamentary democracy, which is ministerial accountability. Like it or not, every cabinet minister is accountable for what their department does, and if things go too wrong, they take the hit. They're questioned every day in question period because of that principle. At times – it doesn't happen very often ever in this government but in more democratic, dynamic Legislatures or in the Parliament in Ottawa – ministers resign because something goes wrong in their department. That's the idea of ministerial accountability.

Well, suddenly we have here the principle of ministerial nonaccountability built right into the legislation, Mr. Chairman. It makes me begin to wonder if after 40 years the ministers of this government have begun to imagine they have a divine right to govern, that they are above the law, that they are above the courts. We're not prepared to go along with that, and we don't want to see a piece of legislation that starts etching that into precedents or into law. Very, very dangerous.

I was also struck about another case – the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek might remember this; I don't know; she might have even been the minister at the time – but my memory needs to be firmed up. There was a case brought, I believe, under the AISH program where a large number of AISH – or maybe it was PDD – recipients were not paid what they were due over the course of a few years. This was discovered. [interjection] The Member for Calgary-Buffalo is confirming my hunch that it was AISH. They actually sued, took the government to court, took the minister to court, and won. The government had to pay up, and it was, I think, well over a hundred million dollars the government had to pay out under that.

Well, let's imagine that something similar happens in the health care system, that there's a widespread error and people are not given their due benefits. You know, it's not hard to imagine, whether it could be, as I mentioned earlier, a Walkerton situation or even employees of the department not getting properly treated. Maybe they're not properly paid benefits or maybe subcontracting like we saw at Bee-Clean. All of these issues could end up in court, and the minister or the health advocate or the deputy minister or a regional health authority or some other body may be named in these.

Why do we need this legislation? Nothing I've heard from this government has given me any confidence that this is needed. You know, I have a sinking feeling that this amendment is not going to pass, but we're going to go down with guns blazing, as it were, Mr. Chairman. I think that paragraph is a bad, bad piece of law, and I'm not hearing anything from government members that changes my mind. I invite the Minister of Justice: tell us differently; justify what is otherwise an extreme looking paragraph, please.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I was listening very intently to the minister's comments, the Minister of Education, the hon.

House leader, when he was standing up, and he kind of just waved his hand and said: ah, those are in every piece of legislation. Well, we've been looking through the legislation of this government, similar legislation where broad ministerial powers are being given, and there is no such clause in at least the ones that we've looked at. I'm sure that somewhere out there there are similar clauses.

With Bill 29, for example, which is in some ways a similar bill because you're giving broad powers to the minister to do certain things and to have certain responsibilities, et cetera, that's not in there. The liability clause is in there, as we mentioned. It definitely is in there. It's in several other of the bills, but there's not such an expansive privative clause, as he calls it. There isn't at all, and I'd be curious to see what is in other acts. Again, that's the point of debate in this House. We've got to work through these things.

Dr. Taft: It seems like this is meaningful debate.

Mr. Anderson: Yeah. It would be nice. It would be nice to have meaningful debate, for sure, but, you know, still waiting. Through the chair, it was good to see the hon. House leader, who stood up and talked about it for a little bit.

The other thing people have to understand is that when we're in the House debating, actually it's funny because it's important what is said on the record. When our justices in our courts interpret a piece of legislation, they actually take into account not only the words of the bill – that's obviously something they take into account – but they also take into account what's said in Hansard, in the Legislature, which is important. So when you get that kind of clarification from the minister on the record, it's a good thing. Clearly, he has put on the record that in his interpretation this clause does not insulate the minister from a judicial inquiry or a review by the Auditor General for their actions or inactions as pertaining to Bill 17.

I think even having that debate on the record is worth having. Now we at least know there will be a better chance that if this ever did become the subject of a legal case, clearly, from the Minister of Education's comments, a justice would say: a judicial review can be called on this minister as could any kind of review by the Auditor General. Now, unfortunately, of course, that's not who decides whether or not there's going to be a judicial review. That's kind of something that has to be brought in by the executive branch or by the Legislature. Anyway, that is now on the record, so that's good. That's good that that's his interpretation.

I would say again that the reason I think that this is still a very clouded issue is because it says:

A decision or action of the Minister, the Health Advocate or any employee or agent of either of them shall not be questioned, reviewed or made the subject of a proceeding in any court by application for judicial review or otherwise.

Judicial review or otherwise: could that not include a judicial inquiry? Again, I restate the point that, obviously, you can have a judicial review in a court of law, but I think it's very fuzzy to say that that wouldn't include a quasi-judicial inquiry. Maybe no, maybe yes. So it is important that we have this debate on the record.

I would like to see personally – and maybe we will bring forth an amendment on that, hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek. We'll have to think about it. It might be nice to have some kind of clarification of what this does and does not apply to; for example, having that you can't have somebody sue the minister for something they did here, but there can be a judicial inquiry or the Auditor General can review it. All of these things would be very helpful to have in there. It would clarify the bill further.

And it's good that the minister is on the record there. Again, I would never think to call that hon. member arrogant by any stretch, so I'm not going to, but just the way in which, "This clearly doesn't say this; this is pretty standard; this is in every piece of legislation like this; you know, we've pointed out three bills," goes back to the larger idea that: "You know what? This is just our standard way of doing things." Well, yeah. We know it's your standard way of doing things, Minister. Everything you do is to insulate your ministers from responsibility and to make sure that they have as broad a power as possible and as broad an authority as possible to unilaterally change legislation. So, yeah. We know that might be the standard operating procedure of this government, but it's sure not acceptable to me and to the constituents of Airdrie-Chestermere, and it's not acceptable to many others in this province. But it is acceptable to government.

You know, just because something is, according to a minister and House leader, quote, unquote, standard operating procedure does not necessarily mean that that's the way we need to do things forever. Things do change. Things are changing now. This is an interesting time in Alberta political history, for sure. We're going to have to start looking at clauses like this, and we're going to have to start thinking very hard about: is this is the way we want to do things? Do we always want to do it this way? Do we always want to insulate the ministers and give them broad regulatory powers and let the bureaucracy run the government as is currently being done? Is that the way we're going to do democracy in this province on a go-forward?

Well, our party clearly does not believe that. We clearly believe that on a go-forward the bureaucracy should not be running the government, but the people's representatives should be running the government, that good, solid public employees have a place, and we value their input and we value the work that they do, but there's a very clear line between supporting the legislative process and taking over the legislative process. I think that line has been clearly crossed on so many different levels.

I mean, I think of the chief of staff to the Premier and how he has incredible influence over the decisions that are made in this Chamber by the governing party. That worries me a lot because, frankly, he doesn't have any special abilities or knowledge that I know of that should give him that kind of sway. That is very concerning to me, and I think it's very concerning to Albertans.

I think that we need to look at ways in all of our legislation going forward that we can enshrine as much responsibility as possible on the House to pass our laws and not through regulation, government by bureaucratic fiat, as I like to call it. That is the hallmark of the Premier's current government. It is all about command, control, and government by bureaucratic fiat, and that, I think, is not healthy. So I would like to see us take a long look at clauses like this to make sure that we are in fact respecting our democratic processes and so forth. I think that's very, very important.

One of the things that this alludes to, that I wonder about, is the Proceedings Not Subject To Review, as the clause says. It kind of calls into question what will be reviewed. I think that when we look at a charter – if you flip back, we were talking about the charter in Bill 17 and how this clause affects that charter – they have all these motherhood and apple pie statements; then they've got the definitions; then they've got the health charter. Obviously, you know, it talks about:

The Minister shall establish a Health Charter to guide the actions of regional health authorities, provincial health boards, operators, health providers, professional colleges, Albertans, and any other persons specified in the regulations.

Holy. That's terrifying. Good grief. Did you hear that? We'll have to go over that one again: "The Minister shall establish . . . to guide the actions" of Albertans. In other words, you've got that the minister shall establish a health charter to guide the actions of Albertans. I'm not really sure what that means.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, we're speaking to the amendment.

Mr. Anderson: Well, what we're talking about, Mr. Chair, is how section 10 is going to affect the enforcement of the health charter, which is section 2. I think that what I'm trying to do here is go over section 2 and see how section 10 is going to affect whether section 2 can be enforced and whether or not a minister can be called to the floor for not enforcing it or enforcing it too vigorously or whatever. I think it's important. You know, if we want to talk about whether or not we should allow this type of protection for a minister to be questioned or reviewed under section 10, we need to understand exactly what that minister is being asked to enforce and to oversee. I think that's extremely relevant. The whole clause would be meaningless without knowing that.

Then it says:

- (2) The Health Charter must
 - (a) recognize that health is a partnership among individuals, families, communities, health providers, organizations that deliver health services, and the Government of Alberta, and
 - (b) acknowledge the impact of an individual's health status and other circumstances on the individual's capacity to interact with the health system, but the Health Charter must not be used to limit access to health services.

Okay. I think there are some positive elements to what is said there.

Let's flip to section 10, then. Under section 2(1) the minister shall establish a health charter to guide the actions of regional health authorities, provincial health boards, operators, health providers, professional colleges, Albertans, and any other persons specified in the regulations. The health charter must recognize all these things, and it must not be used to limit access to health services. So the minister is given charge of that responsibility – okay? – and let's say that they blow it. Let's say that they do not do this part here: "But the Health Charter must not be used to limit access to health services." Let's say they do something that, in effect, limits access to health services. Let's say whatever. I always ask myself: what would the NDP caucus do?

Mr. Mason: And then you do the opposite.

Mr. Anderson: That's right. And then I do the opposite, but maybe not in this case.

In this case let's say you had a crazy minister that came in and said: "You know what? We want to have a different style of health care system. We're going to do such and such, and we're going to charge these fees, and we're going to make it private and all that stuff." We wouldn't want that at all. That would be terrible. Under this act you would think that that would be used to limit access to health services for certain people – right? – because certain people can't afford to pay for it. Let's say there was only that system and there wasn't the public system, then there wouldn't be anybody who could afford it. There would be a lot of people that would have to buy their own insurance. It would be like the system south of the border, and nobody wants that. It would contravene this charter.

Okay. The minister is responsible for that, so he comes in and does something that contravenes the charter. Then we go over to section 10. Say he does it for the reason that – oh, I don't know; what would be a reason? – there's a big company out there. We'll call it big health. I know you like that one. Let's say there's a big health company that comes out, and they want to establish their own hospital or something like that and charge people for it. It just so happens that on their board of directors there are a few friends of that minister. Let's say we have a minister that's kind of, you know, a little shady. Not the current health minister; let's pretend that there's a future health minister that does something shady. That shady thing they do to enrich themselves: they don't technically break any law. There is some conflict-of-interest stuff. It's not technically illegal, but it puts money in the pockets of their friends and their donors to the party that they represent.

I mean, that would never happen. Certainly not. That would be an irresponsible, corrupt party that would do that, not right, left, or centre. It doesn't matter. It's just not the right thing to do. But let's say that that happened. I couldn't see that. It would be very difficult to see happening, you know. Ahem, Bill 50. Those things can happen from time to time.

Section 10 clearly says that it absolves the minister from any responsibility for doing something. So it absolves the minister from contravening the Alberta health charter here under this legislation. I just look at that and say: "You know what? That's not right." If there needs to be a judicial inquiry into a minister who uses his powers under this act to enrich his friends or the donors to his party, we should have the ability to call a judicial inquiry. There is a grey area as to whether or not this act allows for that.

Now, what happens if we go a step further? What happens if there's fraudulent misrepresentation? Something fraudulent has occurred, so there's a civil case or maybe even a criminal case, which, of course, is different; it's through a criminal court. But let's say there is something that is so grossly negligent that it goes beyond what is proper. Should we not make it clearer in this legislation that if the action of the minister is done with negative intent, it should be the subject of a proceeding in a court or, at the very least, a judicial inquiry? Isn't that a reasonable thing? I would think it is.

That's an example, I think, of how section 10 could be misused or could be used as not a get-out-of-jail-free card but kind of – what's the word? – a get-out-of-trouble-free card by a health minister that is abusing the health charter and does so intentionally in order to enrich others, maybe themselves but, certainly, maybe their friends or maybe the donors to their party, the governing party. Obviously, we're talking about a hypothetical situation. We're not talking about the current governing party; we're talking about a hypothetical future situation, which is what we do when we debate things. We need to think about hypotheticals and see how the legislation would stand up under those hypothetical situations.

Another example. You look under Health Charter in section 2 again to see the effect of section 10 on the health minister trying to enforce section 2:

- (3) A failure of a person to act in a manner consistent with the Health Charter may be dealt with by the Health Advocate in accordance with sections 4 and 5 or by the Minister under section 8 or 9.

And then

- (4) A failure of a person to act in a manner that is consistent with the Health Charter does not in itself give rise to and then it goes again into

- (a) a cause of action or other legal enforceable claim, or
(b) proceedings in any court or before any body or person having the power to make decisions under an enactment.

Well, jeepers, doesn't that sound like the exact same clause we're debating?

So that's the other thing. It seems to me that it's almost like there's a lot of duplication here. Maybe I'm wrong, but you have:

A failure of a person to act in a manner consistent with the Health Charter . . .

so would include the minister, obviously, and does not in itself give rise to

- (a) a cause of action or other legal enforceable claim, or
(b) proceedings in any court or before any body or person.

So there seems to be some duplication there, Chair.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore on amendment A1.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's an honour to get up and speak on amendment A1 by Dr. Taft, amending by striking out section 10.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, it's the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview. You called his name.

Mr. Hinman: Oh, I'm sorry. I'm reading here. I apologize, hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

The amendment strikes out section 10. I just want to bring it up again. I know that it's been brought up several times.

A decision or action of the Minister, the Health Advocate or any employee or agent of either of them shall not be questioned, reviewed or made subject of a proceeding in any court by application for judicial review or otherwise, and no order shall be made or process entered or proceedings taken in any court by way of injunction, declaratory judgment, prohibition or mandamus or otherwise to question, review, prohibit, restrain or compel the Minister, the Health Advocate or any employee or agent of either of them.

This is a major concern in a democratic country, where it is supposed to be one law, one people. Nobody should be above the law in Canada.

I know that when we look around at some places in the world and we see the litigious lifestyle that they're leading, that's fearful for many. They say: oh, you know, we don't want to do that. I absolutely agree. We do not want to do that. We do not want to have more court cases going forward, more problems being covered. What we need to do is make sure that the people who are doing those things are doing a good job. Whenever you tell somebody they're free to do what they think is best and, "Just so you know, there is no accountability," it just puts the scales of justice out of balance. As good-hearted and as well-meaning as someone might be, when there's no accountability and they say, "Oh, we're above the law," you create a position that there's going to be a problem with.

We need accountability. The most important thing in a democratic society is to have that accountability. When someone does something wrong, they need to be held accountable and not be above the law or absent from the law. That's what this is about. This is saying that whatever they do, we're not going to be able to take them to court, we're not going to be able to question them, we're not going to be able to review the subject or what they've done. We're going to take these proceedings out of the courts. [interjection] The Minister of Education is spouting off again. I'm not sure what it is. It's probably not making any sense because they're saying this is standard. Can't you hear him? Can't the chair hear him?

The Deputy Chair: Talk to me. Ignore him. Talk to me.

Mr. Hinman: I'm asking the chair a question. Can you hear him spouting off?

The Deputy Chair: No. Talk to me.

Mr. Hinman: Well, sometimes they need to be addressed through the chair. Mr. Chair, the Minister of Education seems to be spouting off about the judicial system. I know he's a lawyer. Perhaps he thinks that he's above the law, too, and that's why he wants this clause everywhere. I know he spoke earlier to it, saying that this is standard. [interjection] I'm speaking to the chair. How much better can I do?

It's not right for someone that's been in that position to say that we need to be above and beyond the law. It simply isn't acceptable. Again, this is speaking in favour of this bill coming from a minister of this government. We understand that they're in support of this bill. They've looked at it, obviously, in their cabinet and said: this is what we want to bring forward. But the question is: is this in the best interests of Albertans? Is this in the best interests of our health care system?

I know that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark is going to want to bring in legislation to legislate accountability for people working in the health care profession. That's exactly what this government doesn't want. It's one of the reasons, I believe, he's been turfed from the government. It's because he wants accountability. He's struggled for two and a half years inside that caucus, wanting changes.

The Deputy Chair: The bill.

Mr. Hinman: Yes. We're talking about section 10, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Yes.

Mr. Hinman: What section 10 is saying is that we're not going to be held accountable, that no one can ask a question. I mean, it's right in there on the second line: "shall not be questioned." So I'm speaking on why this needs to be struck, and part of that is an example of what's been going on. We had a report that two and a half years ago was given to this government on the condition of our emergency rooms. But they're not allowed to be questioned. They're not allowed to be held accountable. That's a problem. What this section will say is: no, we can't be questioned. Again, this is what regimes do in other places of the world so that they're able to squash the information. There's not public information. "You can't know about this. It's okay to keep these reports from the Legislature, from the people. We're not going to be questioned."

This is unacceptable if, in fact, we want to move forward. If we're going to have a great health care system, Mr. Chair, it's because there is accountability. It's because people know that I'm not above the law, that I can be questioned, that this is an open and honest... [interjections] We're trying to be efficient here and answer the minister's questions at the same time.

It is interesting the way this government wants to protect itself. What we want is to have the government accountable. What we want is to have health care officials accountable. The creation of the superboard, again, distanced all of those people from accountability. It's interesting, you know, that we have some members now calling for the head of AHS, but the whole process is what's wrong. It's not just who's at the head. It's the process of what that person at the head can do, and it's unacceptable.

Bill 17 in its current condition is not going to serve the public interest, and to say that the people that are put in those positions cannot be questioned is just wrong, Mr. Chair. What we need to do is to continue talking about this, debating this, and going over it and over it until we can come to an acceptable agreement. This section needs to be struck.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview would not have brought this forward just to have debate time. He's been in the health profession. He understands these things far better than I do, but this... [interjection] Yes, but he did do some research under health, I thought. Maybe I'm...

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Hinman: Sorry, Mr. Chair. I'm being easily distracted here because there's so much to talk about, and it's so critical that section 10 get struck from this – I don't even want to call it a bill because all it is is just a bad bill. It's a bill that when you cannot deliver, what you do is you deliver in words. Worse than that, though, you deliver in words, but you put in a clause like clause 10 that says that we're not going to be accountable.

My hon. colleague talked a great deal about the health charter and section 2 and the impact that section 10 has. It negates. My father always says that in a contract the large letters giveth, and the small letters taketh away. Read the details at the bottom of the page. At the start of Bill 17 they give wonderful admonition and wonderful ideas on what they're going to do to fix our health care system. All it is is words.

It's not going to deliver anything that they shouldn't and couldn't already be delivering if they were given the authority to actually act in their respective hospitals and able to fully use their facilities as well as to fully use their staff. They're not allowed to do that, and that's what this should be about. Do we want to hold our people accountable that are in health care? Yes. Do we want just litigious cases going forward? Absolutely not. I think that that's something, though, that can be addressed in the courts, accountability, by actually having to pay for frivolous cases that might be coming forward. That is not what we're trying to accommodate here. What we're trying to do is ensure that the health minister, the health advocate, any employee, or any agent is accountable to Albertans, that they can be questioned.

Again, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark brought this into question. It's fine if the government wants to kick him out for questioning them, but he should be able to continue questioning what's going on and to ask those hard questions. In here the proceedings are not subject to review; that's what section 10 is. These are the proceedings that are not subject to review. I just find it amazing that we have put these clauses in. I would actually think that if you were to take it to proper lawyers, they would say: "Well, no. That clause, even though it's in there, can't trump the Charter of Rights. It can't trump the Bill of Rights." Yet they put that in there, and it's just not what I call good legislation.

If, in fact, the words in the charter that "the Minister shall establish a Health Charter to guide the actions of regional health authorities, provincial health boards" are to have any effect – it's interesting that that's in there. Provincial health boards. Does that mean that they are listening to us and they're going to back off from where they are and go to regional health authorities? What is a regional health authority? Why is that still left in here under section 2? When they say that we're staying with the provincial health board, does that mean that they're going to have several boards that are all above the law and not going to be able to be questioned or, again, taken to court over neglect? That's what this bill in section 10 points to. Perhaps the Minister of Education will get up to clarify. I would be interested to hear his words in clarification, if that, in fact, is what he thinks that he can do on this, that I'm misunderstanding the purpose of this. But it just seems to me to be pretty plain English to say that we want no accountability in the court of law with our health care officials, right from the minister down to any agent that they have asked to carry out their actions.

Again, I think that it's most clear for us with the superboard that they're given the directions on those agents and what they should be doing. They've got protocols to say: "This is when you can actually open up extra beds in a hospital. You can't do it in seven hours and 45 minutes; it's eight hours." So if you had a loved one that was there and they waited for seven hours and 45 minutes – I'll show the loop back, trust me – the protocol and the administrator that has what I want to call just ridiculous protocol in place says: "Oh, no. We were within our limits. We got you in there before the eight hours." If we can't question that, what are we going to achieve?

This is being set out in the Premier's new protocol that he's so thrilled to talk about. It allows eight hours for someone to sit and suffer and not necessarily be treated underneath what's going to be part of their Health Act, and there's nothing that Albertans can do about it. They'll say: "Well, that's fine. It's within our protocol. That's what we've described." They can't question it. They can't have any course of action in the courts. What can they do on that? There are going to be so many cases and there are currently so many cases of individuals who have lost their quality of life, or they've taken their life, lost their life due to facilities that are being overrun, not enough workers in there, not enough beds being opened up in facilities to move people out of the way to allow new patients in.

You know, we hear mention that this is like a war zone, that there is so much that's happening, that it's just out of control, and they just line the beds up and say: well, the doctors will get there as quick as they can. It's also interesting to me that there's been a lot of discussion about doctors and whether or not we have enough. My understanding is that they've never cancelled a shift because the doctors weren't there but that it has been because the nurses are not there. Again we can see another hole in the system that without an actual administrator, that has the authority over the facilities and over the staff, can't be addressed. This again protects those authorities by saying: well, we can't be questioned. The authorities are handcuffed and they say, "Well, these are the parameters which you must function in. We don't want you to open up extra beds if someone has only waited six hours." We have to ask, "Is that good enough? Can we question it?" Section 10 says that, no, you shall not be questioned.

I just can't for the life of me understand why this government would bring this in and say it's a standard clause. You know, it reminds me of another standard clause that government has when it sells Crown land. The standard clause for years was that if you sell Crown land and there's swamp area on it or rocks or something that you can't actually use as a development or what you're buying it for, you don't have to pay for those acreages. In the same standard clause for years, though, it says: but if you are to drain the swamp or to upgrade it, then you have to pay for it. The government signed a contract with some developers around a city that bought some Crown land, and they struck that clause. So even if it is something they do for years and years, it's amazing when and how they strike clauses, again, at the minister's discretion.

This is just not acceptable, Mr. Chair. We need to take some steps back. We need to do some better consultation and ask: Should not the people have the right to ask questions? Should not health care professions be held accountable?

You know, we've had some sad tragedies in our health care system, and rather than hold people accountable, what we do is pass new protocols. There was a tragic death two or three years ago with a senior who was boiled to death in her bathtub. We had a review. We looked at it. The cost to the system was enormous. But most sad was the cost of life to that individual. Now we've put protocols in place. It's amazing the steps that we have to go through because common sense and accountability were never pursued in that case, in my opinion.

This again allows for such neglect. Whether it's wilful or by accident, neglect is neglect. When we have an accident, we're held accountable. Accidents are supposed to be just that. This was an accident. It wasn't intentional. Nobody intentionally drives into the person in front of them, yet we have a court of law where when that happens, someone can be and is held accountable. We can ask questions. We can refer to the courts for compensation. That's what our system is.

In our Charter of Rights and Freedoms it says right there that we will respect the rule of law. This does not respect the rule of law. This says that we're above the rule of law. We're government. It's okay. We don't have to abide by those rules or regulations because we're of good intent. It doesn't matter whether the intent is out of neglect, whether it's out of sheer selfishness, whatever that intent might be. Although we don't realize the motives behind it, it says that it's okay. We're not going to question. We're not going to take them to court. We're going to look the other way because, oh, this is the health minister or the health authorities, and they've appointed that individual. You know what? Accidents are accidents, and we're not going to hold them accountable, nor are you going to be able to be compensated for an accident.

The sad thing, to try and wrap this up, is that if you don't protect the individual's rights with the rule of law, whether they've been wronged or not, when an accident is not allowed to be followed through, we in fact don't protect our society as a whole. We need to protect a society. The way you protect a society is by protecting the individual. When an individual has been wronged, whether it's on the road, whether it's in our hospitals, wherever it might be, they need to be able to go through the due process of the courts to try for the best, again, with the balance of justice. We talk about it trying to be balanced out. It cannot always be, but we try to accommodate those people.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I am pleased to rise to speak to this amendment to Bill 17, the Alberta Health Act, moved by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, that Bill 17 be amended by striking out section 10. Now, section 10 is entitled Proceedings Not Subject to Review, and it says that a decision or action of the Minister, the Health Advocate or any employee or agent of either of them shall not be questioned, . . .

I can't believe that that's actually there.

. . . reviewed or made the subject of a proceeding in any court by application for judicial review or otherwise, and no order shall be made or process entered or proceedings taken in any court by way of injunction, declaratory judgment, prohibition or mandamus or otherwise to question, review, prohibit, restrain or compel the Minister, the Health Advocate or any employee or agent of either of them.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to sort of address this in two ways. The first one is a question which I have raised with the Attorney General. The question is whether or not this section is limited to any action or decision made specifically under this act or whether, because it seems to be written this way, “a decision or action of the Minister, the Health Advocate or any employee or agent of either of them” means anything they do under any authority given to them by any other act.

In my view, if the intention is that their decisions and actions cannot be questioned, reviewed, or made the subject of a proceeding in any court for anything they do under this act, then it should say that very specifically, but it does not. I think there’s a real question of how this would be interpreted by a court. I am assuming that it is not the intention to give the minister this kind of protection for anything he might do. I could be wrong. Maybe that is the intention, in which case it’s a horrendous exemption from due process and accountability.

Regardless, Mr. Chairman, I think that even if it was clearly written to limit scrutiny to functions the minister of health, advocate, their employees, or agents performed under this act only and that was really, really clear in the legislation, it would still be a very bad section, in my view. So for that reason I’m going to support the amendment brought forward by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, that this section be struck out. Frankly, I think that this is a very, very wide exemption from scrutiny that shouldn’t exist. I think, for example, that if the minister makes a decision which might cost someone their life or result in permanent, ongoing loss of ability to earn a living, the person who is affected or their family, their survivors, should have right of action against the minister. I think that we owe people that.

I also, you know, want to question the wording here. It’s one thing to protect a minister from a court action for political decisions that they might make, but what this says is that they “shall not be questioned.” I don’t know whether that means they may not be questioned by a court or they may not be questioned by anyone. I guess this reinforces my point, Mr. Chairman, that the language in this section is particularly sloppy and unclear and should, at the very least, be clarified by the government. I would suggest that even if this were to go ahead, the language should be reviewed and tightened up and made very, very clear because it’s not clear at all.

I’d like to just talk a little bit about how this affects the act in general because the entire act is written in a way that makes sure that nothing has to happen. There’s a health charter, and it is not enforceable in a court. There’s a health advocate, and the health advocate doesn’t have to investigate any breaches of the charter. He or she can or may, and if they do, they can’t enforce anything. They have no authority whatsoever. All they can do is write a report and send it to the minister, and even if there’s a complete breach of the provisions of the health charter and the advocate writes a strong report saying that Alberta Health Services, for example, is violating the health charter, the minister doesn’t have to do anything about it.

It leaves us wondering why the government thinks this is such a great step forward in terms of the health system. I don’t think that it’s designed to be effective in any way. I think it’s for show. I think this is something you put in the shop window to try and pretend that you’re doing something.

By including section 10 in the act, we have exempted the minister or the health advocate or any employee or agent of either of them from real accountability. This particular section reinforces the lack of effectiveness of this particular bill. It’s written deliberately and obviously designed to ensure that this act means nothing. There’s nothing enforceable. There is absolutely nothing that anyone can do if the minister doesn’t choose to act or the health advocate doesn’t choose to act no matter how egregious the breach of the charter is. Of course, this doesn’t even address the question that the health charter itself may in fact not be anything that defines clearly people’s rights.

We’ve had some discussion in the last couple of weeks about national standards for emergency room wait times, and when the emergency room doctors’ letter was first made public, it became apparent that these concerns had been raised nearly two years ago with the Premier. The Premier had promised to do certain things about them and, of course, did not, so that created quite a political problem for the government. The health minister rushed in within a couple of days of the letter, had a meeting with the doctors, assured them that everything would be fine and that they were finally going to act on their concerns.

One of the things that the minister then did was say: I am enforcing national standards in terms of emergency room waiting times on the health system, and we’re going to meet those targets. Of course, it soon became apparent, within days, that that was a joke and that because of the negligence and the failure to act nearly two years before, they were in no position to meet those targets.

At that point someone might have said: in the interests of accountability these standards should be enforceable. We should have been able to take the government to court two years ago to get a court order requiring them to meet those standards. If we had a charter with teeth, a charter that meant something, and if it included those sorts of things, then indeed people would have had recourse against the negligence of this government nearly two years ago and could have obtained, potentially, a court order directing the government to meet the standards that they had set for themselves, but we didn’t, and of course the chaos in the emergency rooms in our major cities has continued to grow unabated, and the suffering and even the dying, Mr. Chairman, have continued because there was not a charter that was enforceable.

Now, I’m not convinced that the charter is the right approach, but, Mr. Chairman, if we’re going to have a charter, then it seems to me the minister and all of his officials need to abide by it and respect it. This act is designed to let them not do that. It’s specifically designed to exempt them from any responsibility and thus, I think, renders the charter and the health advocate and the entire act virtually meaningless.

I think there’s a possibility that we could bring some relevance and meaning to this entire act by deleting section 10 so that, as I read it, this would imply that decisions or actions of the minister, the health advocate, their employees or agents could be questioned, could be reviewed, or even made the subject of a proceeding in any court by an application for judicial review or otherwise. I think that that gives and that places in the hands of the patient or the patient’s family or ordinary citizens, the people who use the health care system of this province, some rights to actually require the government and require the minister to do the things that they promised to do.

This has emerged, Mr. Chairman, if I may, as one of the defining hallmarks of this government, and that is to say that it makes promises and it makes commitments over and over and over again, and it does not keep them. The people should have some rights to enforce on this government the requirements of meeting the standards that they set out, meeting the promises that they’ve made, especially with respect to things like standards in health care. Had that existed, then I think we could have prevented some deaths and some very serious suffering that’s taken place in our emergency rooms.

Here’s an opportunity for this Assembly to actually put a little bit of teeth into an act that otherwise is just all gums, Mr. Chairman.

You know, it's got no teeth to enforce anything. It could slobber on you a little bit, but it cannot bite, and it cannot be used to make the government accountable, to make the government keep its promises with respect to health care, and to ensure that patients do get the care that they are entitled to under our health care system.

I think the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview has made a very good amendment, one that I think the House should seriously consider. Failing that, then at the very least the language in this particular clause needs to be made much clearer and more certain so that anyone in the future that has to interpret this particular section or interpret this act can do so with a very clear understanding of what this Legislature meant to do. I don't think that with the current wording that's going to be entirely possible. Perhaps a court might interpret it as it's intended, but I wouldn't guarantee that that would be the outcome. I think we're better off to clarify the language so that it's very, very clear that we're not intending a blanket exemption for the minister and the health advocate with respect to any decisions that they might make under any authority that they might have aside from this act.

Mr. Chairman, if I may conclude, this act as it stands is virtually useless. There is no right here of anyone in the province to be able to enforce the health charter so much touted by this government and by the MLA for Edmonton-Rutherford, who was today appointed the new parliamentary assistant for Health and Wellness. Congratulations to him. Good luck to him, I would say. I do think that if we take out section 10, then there's a little bit of accountability that's injected into this act. I think that if you're going to establish a health charter to set out the rights of patients, then you should make it possible. [interjections]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood has the floor.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much. Obviously, the hon. minister of finance has got lots of extra energy, you know, which often comes from eating a lot of salmon, Mr. Chairman, and he's obviously got a lot of energy today.

Getting back to this amendment, it really does seem to me that it's clear that a charter that is not enforceable, that doesn't have to be enforced by the health advocate or doesn't have to be investigated by the health advocate, who doesn't have to recommend anything, where the minister doesn't have to act on any report, is a charter that is worse than useless because, Mr. Chairman, it gives false hope. It gives false hope to people who think that they've got rights when, in fact, they don't have any rights at all.

This particular clause makes sure that they don't have any rights, and for that reason I think that we should support the amendment put forward by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview because I think that he has shown us a way that we can strengthen this act, however slightly, and maybe make it something that's even worth having, which without this amendment and some of the others it's not.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I appreciate the comments made by many of the members who have spoken on this bill so far. I too, like the hon. member who just spoke, believe that this is a bill that does nothing, that prescribes a make-believe charter that may have an advocate who may involve themselves in the health of the citizenry and may have some employees do something on your behalf. That said, it's all "may." The bill has no real force to it, no real oomph to it. [interjections]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, if you wish to speak to someone here in committee, please sit down beside them rather than standing. Thank you. And that goes for both sides of the floor.

Mr. Hehr: In my view, it's a bill designed to do nothing. That said, despite the fact that this bill is set up to do absolutely nothing does not mean that the government needs to put in a prohibitive clause such as this, that is essentially taking a sledgehammer to kill a fly.

I was just going back – and it's been a while. Nevertheless, I just found this textbook down in the library.

Dr. Taft: Way to go. A little research.

Mr. Hehr: Yes. I found a library. Yes, I did. It says:

What is administrative law? It is the law that governs public officials and tribunals who make decisions that affect the interests of individual persons and whose authority to make those decisions is derived from statute. Administrative law prescribes the rules by which these authorities are expected to operate and, when these rules are not complied with, provides the complaint procedure and the remedies.

That's essentially what we're discussing here. We've had a minister and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford bring forward an act that apparently is going to have a charter, that is apparently going to have a health advocate, and that is apparently going to do a lot of wonderful things for Albertans.

Dr. Taft: If you believe them.

Mr. Hehr: If you believe them. That is always the thing. That is what it is.

Now, let's go to section 10, what is currently written in section 10. Section 10 states that a decision or action of the minister, the health advocate or any employee of either shall not be questioned, reviewed, or made the subject of a proceeding in any court by application for judicial review. It also states that no order shall be made or writ of mandamus. You get the meaning of that: nothing shall be done at a court of law.

Essentially, what this says is that there shall be no recourse for our citizens should this health charter, in fact, get up, should this health advocate office get going, should this health advocate have two or three employees. Basically, it says that these people are going to be held to no standard whatsoever. There is nothing I can see here that does this.

What is even more troubling to me, even so, is that this is a bill that may actually take the place of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Okay. We have a bill here that is describing a health advocate and people who work very hard, who are going to be dealing with the health system, things that deal with the right to life, liberty, and the security of person. Those are things which our Charter in section 7 holds very dear. Now, call me crazy, Mr. Chair, but a health advocate and his employees will be dealing with things such as the right to life, liberty, and security of person. Okay?

My reading is, at least, that if you've established this for any kind of purpose whatsoever, a health advocate would be dealing with those issues. Under a charter you have to have an ability, then, to go have a tribunal or a court system look at whether the decisions this health advocate is making or this charter is doing have implications on your right to life. It seems fair that if we have a health advocate and we're taking away – we are talking on the amendment, sir.

It's pretty clear to me that we're taking away these people's rights not only to basic administrative law, which I read from earlier, that first chapter in here. It's from Administrative Law in Canada, the fourth edition, by Sara Blake. It actually got to the heart of the issue very quickly. I'll repeat that.

What is administrative law? It is the law that governs public officials and tribunals who make decisions that affect the interests of individual persons and whose authority to make those decisions is derived from statute.

That is the health advocate. That is this health charter. That is all that we're talking about.

Section 10 takes away that basic administrative law principle. It may actually be a Charter violation. In fact, I would go out on a limb and say that if this is challenged and if this health advocate actually does anything – I don't think it does, but let's give the extreme, extreme, extreme benefit of the doubt here that our health advocate is actually supposed to do something – it appears to be an infringement. Really, those are things governments should be loath to do. They should not take away people's rights and so callously throw them to the side.

The second thing. You know, even now, when I think about this even more, if they were just setting this up for shits and giggles – yeah, I'll say that: for shits and giggles – where they were just doing it to have some fun . . . I take that back. Okay? I apologize for using that term. For giggles, to amuse themselves, to say to themselves: hey, let's send these people to a health advocate where they can go rant and rave and do some stuff; it'll take them out of our offices, and we can all have a big joke out of it. I think that is grossly unfair to give this health advocate no power and no ability to do things. When you're dealing with people who have already been overrun by a system that they maybe don't understand and don't understand what is being effected to them and are going through a terrible sickness, terrible illness, or terrible disease, I think that's unfortunate and unnecessary.

If we look at this, back to the amendment on section 10, I stand by it that this is a good amendment that will at least allow people some recourse, allow people some ability to challenge the decision-making process, to have their day in court, to hold the government to account to see if their statutory and Charter rights have been taken advantage of. I think that's an important step. Governments should be loath to do things like putting in this section 10.

Nevertheless, sir, I'd just like to say thank you very much for allowing me the opportunity to speak on that, and we'll go from there. This is a good amendment on a bad bill, that makes a bad bill slightly better. Okay?

Thank you very much, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere on the amendment.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you. Thank you for respecting my democratic rights to stand up in this House and talk about the bill. [interjection] I am what, Mr. Minister? So disappointing to hear such language. So disappointing.

Obviously, I want to talk on section 10 again, just from different angles. There are just so many different angles to talk about this from because section 10 affects the rest of the bill. Really, I mean, the minister's job is going to be to clearly enforce this bill, enforce the provisions hereunder. So basically everything in this bill relates to section 10 in that if the minister fails to enforce the provisions here, you know, you've got a problem, and section 10 would protect that minister no matter how negligent they were.

We've gone over section 2, and I'm a little curious about it. I wouldn't mind getting the House leader's comments on this if he'd like to answer as he did the first time. Of course, he's been an MLA far longer than I have and has far more experience with regard to legislation and writing it and going through it and sifting it and all that sort of thing. He's obviously very skilled at it. I guess my question is that with regard to this section 10 it seems to be somewhat repetitive of section 2(4) of the bill, which says:

A failure of a person to act in a manner that is consistent with the Health Charter does not in itself give rise to

(a) a cause of action or other legal enforceable claim, or

That kind of goes to section 11. Then it says:

(b) proceedings in any court or before any body or person having the power to make decisions under an enactment.

Now, this is very interesting. I really would like the House leader to clarify it. Maybe I'm just not understanding something. That's okay, but I want to understand. If you look at section 10, it says, as we've been discussing:

A decision or action of the Minister, the Health Advocate or any employee or agent of either of them shall not be questioned, reviewed or made the subject of a proceeding in any court by application for judicial review or otherwise.

We've talked about how I think that that could be interpreted to disqualify something like a judicial inquiry. The House leader says that, no, that can't be used for that, clearly, and so forth.

Then it goes over. If you look at section 2(4)(b), it includes any proceedings in any court – okay; that's just like section 10, any court – or before any body, so it almost expands it: before any body or person, even a person, having the power to make decisions under an enactment. I guess the confusion is because 2(4) says, "A failure of a person to act in a manner that is consistent with the Health Charter." So if the minister fails to act in a manner that is consistent with the health charter, under that section it says that that does not in itself give rise to proceedings in any court or before any body – that could include the Auditor General; it could include a judicial inquiry; it could include any of those things – having the power to make decisions under an enactment.

That's troubling to me. If section 10 doesn't prohibit the minister from being responsible to a review of the Auditor General or a judicial inquiry, does section 2(4)(b) not do exactly that? Does it not prohibit the minister from being subject to a judicial inquiry or a review of the Auditor General?

That's my question. If the minister indicates that he would like to answer that question, I'll cede the floor. Otherwise, I can talk more about it. Again, the question that I have is that under section 10 the hon. House leader said this would not preclude a review of a judicial inquiry or a review of the Auditor General. Okay? He said that. But in section 2(4) it says:

A failure of a person to act in a manner that is consistent with the Health Charter does not in itself give rise to . . .

(b) proceedings in any court or before any body or person having the power to make decisions under an enactment.

Does that not preclude a judicial inquiry or anything like that should a minister fail to act in a manner that is consistent with the health charter? I don't know. Is that something that the minister would be willing to answer?

All right. Thanks.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm always delighted to enter and engage in debate if it can bring something that's as simple as section 10 to a conclusion. Section 10 clearly talks about court reviews of matters happening under the act. Section 2 is about the health charter, and clearly the term "charter" has many meanings in Canadian law and Canadian usage. There's a lot of charter law that has been created since the development of the Canadian Charter of Rights.

This is clearly not intended to be a charter which provides for the courts to spend the next 50 years defining things. This is clearly intended to be a patients' rights or an Albertans' rights charter with respect to the health system and to define the goals and objectives and the responsibilities that people should have under that charter. It provides a process for a health advocate to review and for that process to be dealt with. Those are dealt with clearly in sections 4 and 5 by the health advocate and by the minister under sections 8 and 9. Those are the processes for dealing with issues under the health charter.

Subsection 2(4) is clearly about providing for the fact that this charter is not the kind of charter that allows for litigation for the rest of time but one which is clearly intended to set out a specific set of expectations for Albertans and responsibilities, possibly, when that's developed and then a mechanism for people to deal with issues that arise coming out of that without going through the court system or other processes.

So the act clearly sets up its own processes for review and provides for those processes, and I think that's very clear on the face of it.

Mr. Anderson: Okay. I appreciate that. That was very clarifying, and it's good to have this discussion. Basically, what I heard from the minister – and I'll go back and read his comments in Hansard, fair comments – seemed to say that this charter is not intended, obviously, to go through any litigation process and so forth.

Now, here's the problem. I agree we don't want health charter challenges blocking our courts unnecessarily. However, I guess the whole point of this bill, Bill 17, is to – well, maybe it's not the whole point. There are a couple of things in it that the government is trying to get at, but one of the main objects of this bill is this health charter. It's to enshrine the rights of patients, Albertans, with regard to their health care system and to try to raise the level of expectation, I guess, or quality that we can expect. I guess I would say that, I mean, if there's no mechanism of enforcement, we're just going to put words on paper and look at the words: "recognize that health is a partnership among individuals, families, communities, health providers, organizations," da, da, da, da, da, "acknowledge the impact of an individual's health status and other circumstances on the individual's capacity to interact with the health system."

The minister is going to establish this health charter, whatever it is, so they put this thing into place. Then let's say that the minister fails to do something, and that triggers subsection (4): "A failure of a person to act in a manner that is consistent with the Health Charter." Under this legislation there's absolutely no penalty or enforcement mechanism or anything. They can't ask anybody to review a situation. They can't ask for a judicial inquiry or the House can't ask for that no matter how egregious the failure to comply with the health charter is.

I guess I'm here left wondering why we are here – and maybe that is why we're here – in this House putting together something that, frankly, the Premier could put out on his blog and say: you know, we're going to put out a set of guidelines and policies that we're going to try to uphold. It's just like the minister of health with his kind of picked-out-of-the-air health targets. It's just kind of like: yeah, sure, we'll do this, and we'll respect patients' rights to get timely care, and we'll make sure that that happens. But if there's no mechanism to enforce it, if one of them says – I'll give you an example, and maybe I'll make myself more clear.

I had a constituent of mine – and it was in the news a lot – who went to a doctor. He was having all kinds of dizzy spells and sensitivity to light, and all kinds of awful things were happening to him. He was just 14 at the time. His parents took him in to see a doctor at the Children's hospital. Now, doctors, of course, like everyone else, sometimes make mistakes, and that's what happened here. There was a severe misdiagnosis of this boy. Okay. So that happened. They said that, you know, he'll get over it, whatever, and they sent him home.

Time goes by, situation gets worse, and he's literally on death's door. It got worse and worse and worse and worse. So he went back to the doctor, and he wanted a second opinion because the parents said that they thought something was missed: "It's just not getting better. He's getting more sensitive to light. You have to tinfoil his room. He can't come out." They took him out of school. It ended up that for four years, eventually, they went through this ordeal, but for the first year they had to take him out of school. It just got progressively worse.

He went back, and the doctor said, "No; I won't see you; you're just making it up," da, da, da, da, da, for some reason. This is all documented. It's an absolute tragic case. So they went to try to go to another doctor. They set up the appointment, and just before they went in to that doctor – of course, the new doctor would phone the first doctor to kind of get an idea of what the diagnosis was, and the diagnosis according to that first doctor was that he was making it up. Okay. This happened two or three times to him, and this is over about a four-year period. They tried all kinds of naturopath stuff. I mean, they couldn't get a second opinion.

Eventually, it got so bad he was literally having seizures every day, and they took him down to the United States because there they didn't need permission to go get a second opinion; you just get one. They're not a wealthy family at all, but they raised some money locally, and they went down and got a proper scan. It turned out that he had a golf ball sized tumour in his head that the original scan had missed, and they refused to get him another one after that. So this was what they found. They found it, and they wanted to act upon it, but for whatever reason they still couldn't get back in to see a doctor up here. There was some kind of waiting application process that had to occur for them to be able to do it out of country, et cetera, et cetera.

Long story short – oh, just to give you an essence of how bad it was, I actually talked to the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark about it. He actually came down. We actually went together to his house. He did a checkup of this guy and phoned a colleague in Edmonton to come see him. The appointment was booked. The colleague in Edmonton phoned the first doctor at the Children's hospital, and the appointment got cancelled. So even bringing government into this – it was just bizarre. It was like: where do I live? It's insane. In this whole time, by the way, the family doctor kept referring them back to different specialists, so the family doctor was clearly onboard, clearly saw something wrong.

My point is that under a charter I would like to see the right to a second opinion on a life-threatening – if the family doctor says that something life threatening is occurring and the specialist says no, there should be a right to at least get a second opinion. I think that's a very reasonable thing to do.

If someone says that you have cancer and you only have a year to live, I think that it makes absolute sense that you should be able to go get a second opinion on that diagnosis – I think that's only fair – if you feel inclined. Some don't. Some just trust their doctor, and that's fine. But some feel that it's necessary to get a second opinion. In this case the lack of ability to get a second opinion almost cost this little guy – well, he's now 18. It almost cost this boy his life.

If we were to put something like that in the charter – let's say the minister says: yeah, I'm going to put that in my charter under section

2. So he puts it in into the health charter, and then the minister proceeds to do something. In the future someone like that comes to him and says: "I've got a problem. I need you to look into it. I'm not getting a second opinion," and the minister drags his feet. He doesn't get his bureaucracy to do anything about it; he doesn't call the head of the physicians and surgeons and say, "Hey, what's the problem?" et cetera, et cetera, et cetera; he doesn't put the processes in place necessary to make sure that this little guy can get a second opinion, then he would be in contravention of his own charter.

Okay. So that all happens. He's in contravention of his own charter. But then there's no mechanism to enforce it. It doesn't matter. They can't go to their MLAs, because they come to their MLAs and we can't do anything. We can't call a judicial review. We can't call for anything. Under this act we can do jack squat. We can't sue them under this act. We can't do anything. We can't ask the Auditor General to review. We can't do anything to enforce. There's no mechanism of enforcement in this act, and that's according to the House leader's own words. It's not meant to be something that's actually enforced.

Dr. Taft: Heaven forbid.

Mr. Anderson: Yeah. It's just words, right? It's a health charter. You know, we're going to try to do our best. It's like Boy Scouts. Do our best: DYB, DYB, DYB; DOB, DOB, DOB. That's what it is and that's why it's . . . [interjection] Absolutely. I'm a chief Scout. You didn't know that, hon. member? You should have remembered that. But I still can't shoot worth a darn.

Anyway, there's no mechanism of enforcement. That's a problem. I get really tired of legislation that comes forward and there is no – if you're going to pass legislation, please put something in that makes it enforceable. Quit the feel-good legislation, you know, whether it's Bill 1, the Competitiveness Act – it's almost laughable, something like that where it's just meaningless. If what we're doing is going to sit here and make a health charter, which I think is a good idea – I like the idea of the health charter. It could be a very powerful idea if it's done right. If the necessary system is in place to make it viable and make it accomplishable, it's a good idea. But the problem is that you can't pass something that has no enforcement mechanism. It's not going to do anything. It's going to amount to a hill of beans. It's feel-good legislation. It doesn't make sense to me.

That gets us back to section 10, which started this conversation. Section 10 essentially seems to be repeating section 2(4)(b), and it takes away any chance that this will ever be enforced by anything. Section 10 says: yeah, sure, there are no courts; there is no judicial inquiry. Well, there are certainly no courts under section 10 according to the House leader, no review by a court, no questioning by a court. But 2(4)(b) says there's no questioning by anybody. No one. If he infringes this legislation, if he drops the ball on this legislation, if he does so intentionally, if he does so negligently, no matter how he does it, there is no mechanism of enforcement.

That's what has come out of this debate. But that's good because we need to know what we're dealing with here. We're dealing with a charter that is essentially a feel-good piece of legislation and nothing more than that. The House leader made that very clear.

Now, I'm not saying that we shouldn't have goals. We need goals. Goals are good, and it's not a bad thing to have a goal that you're going to have a healthier population and this, that, and the other thing. I just think it's a lot of work to sit here for hours and hours and hours and hours on end, as we're going to be doing over the next few days, on the Health Act, on various amendments and so forth, and what we come out with is a piece of legislation that is good for nothing other than to use as kindling.

That, Mr. Chair, is my issue with this legislation.

5:30

Dr. Taft: So, Rob, we'll have a vote?

Mr. Anderson: Yeah, we'll vote on this right away. No worries. Have you spoken to this legislation yet, section 10?

Mr. Boutilier: No, I haven't, but I'm looking forward to it.

Mr. Anderson: Okay. You're looking forward to it. That's good. Then we'll have a vote on it right after. Don't worry. Before 6 for sure.

Anyway, we would like to see this legislation have some teeth. Section 10 defangs, makes this legislation essentially not worth the paper it's printed on, Mr. Chair, and that's unacceptable to Albertans.

Those are my remarks.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo on amendment A1.

Mr. Boutilier: Yes. Thank you. On amendment A1. Certainly, I recognize the important comments that have been made by the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, which really do capture the nonspirit of what is intended relative to this, quote, unquote, health charter. It is historic, quite clearly, in its rhetoric, but that's about the limit of what it has in it in terms of helping patients and helping Albertans, helping those who are in ERs. Clearly, it fails on all accounts. In doing so, that's what our fundamental concern is.

We are looking for a real dialogue with real legislation. This is not real. This is nothing more than a concocted type of discussion that goes on in a private caucus meeting of the governing party of over 39 years or 40 years, whatever. It'll be nothing more than a footnote in a few months' time, that's for sure.

What is disappointing is that there is an opportunity to be able to better serve Albertans. It is my hope that the amendments that are put forward right now are amendments that truly need to reflect the spirit and the will of Albertans. Albertans, in my judgment, want change. They recognize that this, quite simply, the noncompliance of what has been taking place, is just not satisfactory, and we saw that this week.

I was listening to the radio on my way over tonight relative to the amendment. In fact, a gentleman was making reference to Bill 17 and the amendments that are going forward. That was Mr. Layton on 630 CHED. He made reference to the important amendments that need to be placed to give real teeth, as the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere stated earlier tonight. I think it is so important that these amendments reflect something that has real teeth. We want to be assured that since this bill and these amendments are being proposed to this Legislature, as MLAs, be it with the government or not with the government, there is a judicial responsibility for us in terms of our spirit, in terms of what we believe is important. I don't think there's any member in this Assembly that would feel good about what is taking place today regarding the health care crisis that this government is in. Really, it is in our interest for all of us to have the best health care system possible.

But the dialogue is not real. On these amendments the dialogue is not real because, quite simply, no one is guarding against self-deception. It's not a real discussion. The gap continues to widen, and the gap continues to widen because of the fact that this amendment is failing in many ways, as much as the spirit is intended to be able to capture what Albertans are looking for. Each of us as MLAs, when we speak for or against amendments, tries to bring forward what our bosses have been telling us.

We saw this week a member of the governing party speak out, and it ultimately related directly back to this amendment because this amendment that is being put forward, I think, is really trying to capture the spirit of what Albertans have been telling us. We're not afraid to talk about that. That's why I stand this afternoon as the proud Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo to be able to share with you what citizens in my community have talked to me about. They've talked about the absolutely unacceptable situation that we are facing in a city of over a hundred thousand people. The emergency rooms are clogged.

Consequently, as we go forward, we believe that the community that I represent contributes a lot to this province in terms of royalties, and the funding that is absolutely necessary should not be squandered on rebranding theories of $25 million but should be going into the front-line troops of men and women who are serving Albertans. That's where it really is. It's not about more money. The issue of this amendment is about a charter that will really, really capture the spirit of what Albertans have been telling all of us. They are watching and they are listening, and I believe that it would be foolhardy if the government were to continue to ignore what they are saying. We know who the bosses are, but the question is: do the authors of this?

I think the people and the members have put forward the amendment . . .

An Hon. Member: We can't hear you.

Mr. Boutilier: Well, there may be a few on the other side who may not want to hear me, but democracy shines brightly in Alberta, and I know that certainly the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake is listening intently to all of my words, hanging on to the end of his seat.

I must say that this afternoon we had a good health care discussion, and I appreciated it because it assisted me in answering some important questions of clarity this afternoon. Those types of things are directly related to this amendment, that the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere spoke earlier about. I want to say that I'm beginning to clearly be able to capture that spirit of speaking to amendments, how often we talk about the amendment. It's almost instructional. It's almost like listening to Professor Dr. Taft at the University of Alberta. Consequently, this amendment . . .

The Deputy Chair: I'm sorry, hon. member. Names. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Mr. Boutilier: Edmonton-Riverview. I seem to always make that mistake, actually, just acting like a person who is in a Tim Hortons or a doughnut shop. I actually call them by their names because when I'm home in Fort McMurray, no one calls me Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo. They call me Guy.

An Hon. Member: They call you lots of things.

Mr. Boutilier: In fact, they call me lots of things during elections. In fact, I am certain they will call the government lots of things during the elections.

What's important is to have a real discussion on what is true. What is true is this. We can do better, this Assembly, all members from all parties, in terms of a health charter, a health charter that can be historic. This amendment, I think, will help in moving forward. It will help. The question is: why the authorship of the original frame of this amendment? Why are there so many gaps? We don't want more gaps. We actually want it narrowed down to connect with what the good people across Alberta and in our coffee shops are saying.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, I want to say that it's been quite instructive, as we speak to amendments, in terms of: school is in. I think it's important for all of us in terms of life-long learning, when we talk about "school is in" on amendments, to clearly be cognizant of the important spirit and principle of what this actual amendment is trying to achieve.

Mr. Chairman, I would say to you that my citizens are saying that Bill 17 – they have asked me to come forward. I think that members are bringing forward amendments because of the fact that, without any question, this bill is flawed at this time and needs – it's more than just a work-in-progress. It is a work-in-progress and then some in order to widen the gap.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I will take my seat and say that it is my hope – and I welcome comments from others in terms of how we make this the best that it can be for Albertans because Albertans simply deserve no less.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

5:40

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Yes. Thank you. To close debate. I hope to do that, Mr. Chairman. I want to comment on how extensively and how long the debate on this amendment went; it was longer than I expected. It's because it's such a good amendment. I don't need to repeat the arguments that have been made so often.

I'll thank the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud on the government side for engaging once in a while, but I do want to challenge him because he made a statement earlier in the debate that paragraphs like section 10 are standard boilerplate in all kinds of legislation. I don't think that's true. In fact, we've checked around and found a piece of legislation from New Brunswick that had a similar paragraph in it, but even that one was followed with a big exemption, so it was very tightly contained.

This kind of blanket exemption from court action I think is extraordinary. I think it's dangerous. Clearly, by moving this amendment, I'm strongly opposed to it. We've heard from several members of the opposition, from all three parties who are all strongly opposed to it, so I think it's time for us, Mr. Chairman, to have a vote on this amendment.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak?

I'll call the question.

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

The Deputy Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 20 Class Proceedings Amendment Act, 2010

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise today to speak about Bill 20, the Class Proceedings Amendment Act, 2010. Passed in 2003, the Class Proceedings Act established procedural rules enabling one or more persons to advance an action on behalf of a group of people who have suffered the same or similar wrong. The existing act serves three important purposes: increasing efficiency, improving access to justice, and modifying behaviors.

I would like to take the time today to introduce the House amendments that have been proposed to strengthen this bill.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, we'll pause for a moment while the amendment is distributed. Hon. members, this is amendment A1.

Mr. Drysdale: The bill is amended as follows:

- A Section 10 is amended in the proposed section 17.1
 - (a) in subsection (2) by striking out "section 17(1)" and substituting "section 17";
 - (b) in subsection (3) by striking out "to any non-residents".

There have been two proposed amendments to this bill, and I will explain them to provide some context. The Class Proceedings Act sets out procedural rules governing the context of class proceedings. With this bill the government is proposing to replace some of the current procedural rules with new ones. One of the most important changes proposed in Bill 20 is that nonresidents will participate in class proceedings in the same manner as residents. In other words, both residents and nonresidents who meet the criteria to be a member of a class will be considered to be class members unless they decide to opt out of a class proceeding.

Whenever we set out to make procedural changes like this, there is a need to consider when the old rules will apply and when the new rules will apply. The purpose of section 17.1 is to describe how the opting-in provisions in section 17 of the current act will apply to nonresidents once the amendments are brought into force. For example, section 17.1(1) says that if a proceeding is certified as a class proceeding before the amendments are brought into force, the opting-in rule set out in this section of 17(1) of the current act will apply to nonresidents. In other words, when a proceeding is certified before the amendments are in effect, the old rules apply, and nonresidents are required to opt in.

There is currently a problem with section 17.1(1) that we would like to fix. This section says that section 17(1) of the current act will apply to nonresidents if a proceeding is certified before the amendments as part of Bill 20 come into effect. There are other provisions in section 17 that should apply to nonresidents when a proceeding is certified as a class proceeding before these amendments are brought into force. Fixing this problem is very simple. The problem would be fixed by amending the proposed section 17.1(2) by striking out "17(1)" and substituting "17." This proposed change is necessary so that it is clear that all of the provisions of the current section 17, not just those contained in 17(1), apply to nonresidents when a proceeding is certified as a class proceeding before the amendments are brought into force.

It is important to point out that while section 17.1(2) sets out the general rule, section 17.1(4) provides the court with the authority to order that the new opting-out rules apply to nonresidents even if a proceeding is certified before the amendments are brought into force. Any party may apply for this order, and the court may grant the order if it considers it equitable to do so. This flexibility will give the court the tools it needs so that class proceedings are conducted sensibly and fairly.

An additional amendment for clarification. I would like to introduce a second House amendment, which has been proposed to avoid potential confusion. As I have just explained, section 17.1(2) provides the general rule that opting-in rules contained in the current act apply to nonresidents when a proceeding has been certified as a class proceeding before amendments in Bill 20 are brought into force.

Section 17.1(3) was intended to complete the picture for the reader. This section provides that when an application for certification has been brought before the amendments are brought into force but is not decided, then the opting-out rules will apply to nonresidents. In other words, the new rules will apply to nonresidents when an application for certification is brought before the amendments come into force but is not decided until after the amendments have come into force.

While sections 17.1(2) and (3) were intended to aid interpretation by making it clear which rules apply to nonresidents in different situations, section 17.1(3) as currently drafted may have the opposite effect. The phrase "section 17 of this Act applies to any nonresidents in respect of the proceeding" may lead some readers to wonder whether section 17 of the act as amended applies to anyone other than nonresidents. While it is reasonable to assume the court would conclude that section 17 of the amended act does not apply to everyone, deleting the words "to any non-residents" will remove any doubt.

These two proposed amendments will both clarify and strengthen the current bill.

In conclusion, shifting from an opt-in to an opt-out regime for nonresidents will align Alberta's Class Proceedings Act with legislation in other Canadian jurisdictions. Expanding the requirement for the court approval of a settlement will increase protection for plaintiffs in class proceedings. Mr. Chairman, these changes together with the adoption of criteria to guide the court strengthen the existing act to better reach the goals of increased efficiency, improved access to justice, and behaviour modifications.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Yes. Speaking in support of the amendments, what this amendment does is that it's inclusive. It allows individuals, if they so choose, to opt out but guarantees, whether they're a resident or a nonresident, that they will have equal status in Alberta law. That inclusion is extremely important.

With regard to how it affects Bill 20, the Class Proceedings Amendment Act, 2010, in general, the act is attempting to involve more people. It's recognizing the need for justice not only to be perceived to be done but to actually be done. My hope is that this will actually occur. The object of the bill, which is being amended by amendment A1, I'm assuming, is defined in situations where a mass wrong has occurred. Class proceedings, often referred to as class-action suits, offer the most efficient means to handle the issue at bar. The primary aim of Bill 20, potentially to be amended by A1, that has just been introduced, is to increase access to justice for claimants that might not otherwise have the ability to bring an action to redress a wrong that has been suffered.

Now, I'd like to just very briefly provide three examples of cases that have been class-action suits that I'm aware of that will hopefully be sped up by this process. I believe it's too late for the pine shakes class-action suit, where the government gave pine shakes made in Alberta equal status to cedar shakes. A number of companies seized the opportunity and went so far as to buy substandard shakes from B.C. Of course, although the pine shakes were approved by the Alberta government, when it turned out that they didn't last very long and caused considerable damage to roofs, there was no redress for the people in the class-action suits because the companies had gone belly up.

Another class-action suit which is ongoing and that, hopefully, will be helped by this amended legislation is the 40 per cent increase in long-term care costs, where individuals I believe it was in the year 2000 faced this enormous increase in their long-term care costs with no appreciable increase in the degree of services, whether it was the food they received or the care they received in their long-term care.

The most recent case that I'm hoping Bill 20, Class Proceedings Amendment Act, 2010, as we are hoping to amend it will occur is the case that is being put forward by Robert Lee on behalf of numerous children who have been injured or killed while in the care/custody of this government. I am hoping that this legislation brings the type of justice that so far has not been achieved by these individuals.

With that hope and possibly a degree of naïveté I'm supporting this amendment and Bill 20, Class Proceedings Amendment Act, 2010.

The Deputy Chair: Any other hon. members wish to speak?

Are you ready for the question on amendment A1 to Bill 20, the Class Proceedings Amendment Act, 2010?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Deputy Chair: Any questions or comments on the bill as amended?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 20 as amended agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

Electoral Divisions Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments or questions with regard to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Two items of controversy associated with this bill, the first being that this bill brings into action four new MLAs and the millions of dollars of service necessary to establish those four new constituencies. I want to have it on the record that the Liberal opposition has been opposed to the idea of creating more government in the form of four additional MLAs. We believe that government should be reduced in size as opposed to a growing, all-consuming being.

The second piece of controversy is the idea of naming a constituency after a person who is still living. There's a historic precedent, whether it's a school or whether it's a park or in this case, I would suggest, a constituency, that the honour is usually bestowed after the person has passed away and time has been given to consider and value their contributions. So with regard to the Electoral Divisions Act, Bill 28, there is controversy over the thought of changing Calgary-North Hill to Calgary-Klein.

Previously, in second reading, the member representing currently Calgary-North Hill indicated that he had talked to individuals at an AGM, and he felt, based on that AGM discussion, that people were in favour. I would suggest that when there is controversy associated, more than just a brief sampling is necessary to justify a specific name change. Therefore, I have concerns about Bill 28.

I do believe that every Albertan deserves to be well represented and have the choice of who it is that represents them and what party that individual belongs to. I believe that we can create the same types of efficiencies as we see with wards. I would not say that I would go to the extent of the MP circumstance and their broadness of boundaries, but we could certainly, I think, provide good governance for Albertans without having to go to 87 seats.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It is my pleasure to rise and join debate on Bill 28, the Electoral Divisions Act, in committee. I've heard and noted the points made by the Member for Calgary-Varsity. I must say that although I, too, would have preferred that we remain at 83 electoral divisions, this Legislature by majority vote made the decision some months ago to go to 87 seats. The Electoral Boundaries Commission had no choice but to follow that dictate, and they did their work, I think rather well from what I can see.

I'm reminded that somebody said – and I don't remember who it was, some wise political wag – that every 10 years or every two election cycles the Electoral Boundaries Commission tells us all where to go knocking on doors, and then we do it. I'm not going to stand here and complain or debate or even comment on the boundaries as they were drawn, you know, except to say that I think the Electoral Boundaries Commission did rather good work.

In consideration of the motion earlier in this session of the House which included the name change that was proposed for Calgary-North Hill, we missed one, Mr. Chairman, one that I think it's high time that we consider doing and one that I think a significant number of people in this province would like to see done. We have a number of electoral divisions that are named after politicians, former Premiers. We have Calgary-Lougheed. We have Edmonton-Manning. We have Edmonton-Rutherford. We also have used the names of former mayors of Edmonton and Calgary, two of whom subsequently served in another electoral office, for electoral divisions in those cities. This really is not a new trend.

But we have missed one name, and that would be the name of Grant Notley, who began his political life by participating not with any party that I've ever been associated with, although in my past life I did interview the current leader of that party a few times, the Alberta New Democrats. He began his political life by participating with the Alberta NDP on the U of A campus. He became the party's provincial secretary in 1962, after graduation. He was an unsuccessful candidate in '63 and '67 in the provincial elections and in a '69 by-election. He was elected leader of the Alberta New Democrats in 1968. In the 1971 provincial election he won a seat in the Legislative Assembly as the Member for Spirit River-Fairview and was for 11 years the sole New Democrat MLA in this Legislature. As a result of the 1982 provincial election he was joined by a second NDP MLA, Ray Martin, and became Leader of the Opposition at that time.

Grant Notley was voted as one of the top 10 in the Calgary Herald search for Alberta's greatest citizen in 2008, called Best of Alberta. He was seen by many as a visionary. Whether or not you agreed with his politics, just about everybody in Alberta at the time respected him, respected his courage, his particular vision and his willingness to stand up for that vision, and his, if I dare say the word – and this may not be the appropriate word – grit. He fought for the NDP cause his whole life regardless of never winning more than two seats in the Legislature during his 13 years of being an MLA in the Assembly. Don Braid in the Calgary Herald wrote, "Notley's enduring reputation is remarkable and even inspiring, a testament to public yearning for integrity, character and honesty in politics."

Mr. Chair, if I may, I would like to move an amendment, and I will pass this amendment to the pages now and allow them to pass it out to everybody. Then I will formally read it into the record.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you. We'll pause for a moment while the pages distribute the amendment.

Hon. member, please proceed.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I move that Bill 28, the Electoral Divisions Act, be amended in the schedule by striking out "Dunvegan-Central Peace" and substituting "Dunvegan-Notley (identified as Dunvegan-Central Peace in the DVD referenced in section 3)."

Grant Notley was killed in a plane crash on October 19, 1984. He was on a small plane that went down, killing six passengers. Everyone at the time was plunged into mourning in this province as Albertans by the thousands honoured a man whose flag they would never follow. They honoured him not because of his political stripe but because of the commitment and dedication he had for Albertans and his vision of Alberta.

I think, Mr. Chair, that the regard for an elected official doesn't get any higher than that. The level of respect that we can hope to earn from our constituents does not get any higher than that, so I would like to honour this great Albertan by amending the name of the riding that he represented for so many years. I mentioned that he was the MLA for Spirit River-Fairview. Over the years the boundaries have changed slightly. The name has changed now to Dunvegan-Central Peace, and I am proposing that we change the name now to Dunvegan-Notley.

Now, Mr. Chair, I'm hardly the first one who has done that. According to the Electoral Boundaries Commission there were several recommendations to the commission to have the name of Dunvegan-Central Peace changed to Dunvegan-Notley. Thirteen per cent of the written submissions to the Electoral Boundaries Commission – 13 per cent, Mr. Chair – were related to including the name "Notley" in a revised name for the Dunvegan-Central Peace electoral division. Quoting from the commission's final report, there were a number of submissions related to the naming of electoral divisions, far and away the most suggesting that the name "Notley" be included in the name of the Dunvegan-Central Peace electoral division. Only two of these submissions could be identified as arising from that electoral division. One supported the proposal. The other opposed it on the grounds that the current name clearly indicates the location of the division.

That's the end of the quote, although I will come back to the final report here in a second.

Mr. Chair, I'm proposing something in a sense not unlike what the Member for Calgary-North Hill proposed some weeks ago in proposing the change of name of his electoral district to Calgary-Klein. Not everybody favoured that. Not everybody favours this. But the interesting thing is that this notion had broad support and, I would argue, deep support from across the province in that nothing else came close to the number of requests that the commission got to make this name change in Dunvegan-Central Peace.

Going back to the final report again, they wrote:

In considering the submissions proposing the addition of the name "Notley" to Dunvegan-Central Peace, the Commission noted that the Legislative Assembly had not adopted any protocol regarding the naming of electoral divisions. The Commission generally favours the use of geographical names which provide an indication of the location of the electoral division.

So they decided to stick with the name Dunvegan-Central Peace. However, they said that "it has . . . identified in the Issues for Future Consideration section of this report, the advisability of the Legislative Assembly developing a naming protocol for the guidance of future commissions."

Mr. Speaker, it's probably a very good idea that we do that at some point. This amendment is not proposing that we go this far tonight. This amendment is simply proposing that we rename one electoral division that was represented for a number of years by a highly respected politician, a highly respected Albertan by the name of Grant Notley.

Back to the final report of the boundaries commission again:

The submissions suggesting that the name of Grant Notley be included in the name of Dunvegan-Central Peace . . . and other similar suggestions to name electoral divisions after persons, posed a conundrum for the Commission given the lack of guidance for naming electoral divisions. The last Commission used the names of former Mayors of Edmonton and Calgary, two of whom subsequently served in other elected office, for electoral divisions in those cities. Three electoral divisions are currently named after former Premiers.

Mr. Speaker, I mentioned them already. Those are Edmonton-Rutherford, Edmonton-Manning, and Calgary-Lougheed.

The commission was, I guess, in a sense looking for guidance from us on what it would do the next time around, and we haven't really given that guidance to the commission in any kind of formal way yet, Mr. Chair. But in dealing with the motion several weeks ago and in making some name changes there, in a sense we've started down this road, and I would like to continue one more kilometre down the road, if you will, and would strongly urge that this Legislature give what I think is the proper honour and the proper due to this great Albertan. Whether or not you agreed with a single thing he stood for, you had to respect the tenacity with which he stood for those things, and you have to respect his integrity and his character and his commitment and his dedication. Therefore, I propose that we amend the name of the riding that he represented for so many years, and I hope this House will see fit to support my amendment.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It is indeed an interesting amendment, a bit of a surprise from the perspective that I had had discussions with House leaders earlier about whether amendments were coming forward and advised them that we would have amendments coming forward with respect to names when we discussed the motion in the House and, in fact, brought forward the amendments that we had indicated we would have.

That being the case, I think it makes sense that hon. members have a chance to look at this motion, particularly the Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace, and for that reason I would move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 26
Mines and Minerals (Coalbed Methane)
Amendment Act, 2010

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. Obviously, we've had some discussion about this bill already in the House. Sorry. I'm trying to find something here, but I just cannot do it. I'll have to do it later. Oh, is that what I was looking for? Bill 26, Mines and Minerals (Coalbed Methane) Act. Obviously, the issue that we've had with this bill from the get-go is not so much what the government is trying to achieve, which is that we're trying to clear up some of the uncertainty, obviously, surrounding coal-bed gas. In other words, who on a split title – this is where on a title you have someone who is a freehold owner, who owns the minerals, and on that same title you have a separate person that owns the rights to the coal. So you have the split title, with one person or one entity owning the gas and one entity or person owning the coal.

Of course, this didn't used to matter because although people knew that when you mined coal, it would produce as a by-product methane – that's not new – no one knew how to kind of harvest the stuff or produce the stuff. So there's a lot of uncertainty in the law surrounding this issue. It's been litigated, obviously. There's litigation ongoing, and there's been a lot of litigation on this issue. Well, not a ton, but there's been some because we've just come to realize that, you know, there's a heck of a lot of coal-bed methane out there, and it's worth an awful lot of money, although not as much as we hope right now. But it's a valuable commodity, so the question has come as to who owns the rights to this.

Actually, I had the opportunity to work on this case when I was practising law at a law firm in Calgary. It was a situation where at the time we were acting for the gas owners. We came up, and one of the things we had to do was bring in all these experts. They would give this incredibly hypertechnical analysis of whether the gas molecules were attached to the coal or whether they were two separate things and they were just kind of in the same spot or what. The whole point of this was to try to convince the ERCB at the time to recognize this as being purely a gas and therefore owned by the freehold owner. That went back and forth, and it kind of wove its way through the regulatory body, and there have been a couple of decisions on it. There were some decisions made on it, and there were some court decisions that were made on it, and they've been very fact specific, so they haven't been very clear. There's been no grand pronouncement of who owns the CBM, the coal owner or the freehold owner. Like I said, there's a lot of uncertainty.

Of course, this legislation is an attempt to confirm that the coal gas tenure does not own the coal-bed methane, coal-bed gas rights, which is the same policy that they have in B.C. The implication is that the coal owners will have to pay royalties on the gas if they were to extract their coal, and then their by-product is the coal-bed methane.

Now, here's the issue. There's nothing wrong with creating clarity with regard to ownership. That's a part of our system, and it's an important thing that we want to try to do. The problem is that this has not been done with proper consultation. The issue is that you have a government coming in on a highly technical issue without any real consultation and without any real understanding. I mean, how many of the folks in here honestly understand this issue at all? Not many. Probably none. Like I said, I even worked on this a few years back, and it's already cloudy in my mind, all the technical briefings.

We're being asked to make this huge decision, and if you're going to have a highly technical thing that most lay people aren't going to understand, at least you could have the respect to do proper consultation. The government did a little bit of consultation a few years ago, and what they found out was that people were telling them that, in fact, because it was kind of winding its way through court challenges and court cases, the government should essentially stay out and let the courts decide based on the facts of the case in question.

Now, obviously, the gas owners didn't like that because that meant that they couldn't outright say: we own the gas, and that coal-bed methane belongs to us on the split titles. This was something that they weren't happy with, so they continued to lobby, and now the government is saying: "Okay. Yeah. We're going to recognize you as the owners." Of course, this is an issue because you're essentially taking a right that the coal owners thought that they had and you're saying: "No. You don't have that right. The freehold owner has it, and that's just the way it's going to be. Sorry. No compensation." The act says specifically that there's no compensation for the coal owner. There's nothing. It is what it is. It's just a declaration that this is the way it's going to be. No grandfather clause. Nothing.

There's a huge problem with that, and I want to read an e-mail here from a constituent. There's a split title on which he does not own the gas, but he owns the coal on that split title. I'll just read a small portion of it.

Dear Rob.

I just received a letter from the Minister of Energy . . . He basically side stepped everything I had mentioned regarding Coal Mine Methane and the previous correspondence I've had with the Department of Energy.

He mentioned that I can go back to the ERCB to verify entitlement to produce coal. I have been in contact with the ERCB requesting a preliminary hearing on the entitlement to Coal Mine Methane.

In other words, coal-mine methane, for those of you listening at home and in the gallery – I know this must be a riveting subject for the folks in the gallery – is the methane that's produced when you're mining coal. Okay? It's not total rocket science. That's what it is. So he's been to the ERCB requesting a preliminary hearing on the entitlement to the coal-mine methane.

However in the past they have responded there is no difference between Coalbed methane and Coal mine methane.

Okay. Coal-bed methane is slightly different. It's when you go into a seam of coal and you specifically are going to extract through microfracking and other methods the coal-bed methane from the coal, but you're not actually trying to mine the coal. That's the difference. In one you're mining the coal. The by-product is coal-mine methane. In the other one you're going for the CBM. That's what you're going for, the coal-bed methane, and that's all you're going for.

Okay. They say:

However in the past they have responded there is no difference between Coalbed methane and Coal mine methane in their view and I have yet to hear back from them for the last letters sent. It seems pointless to apply to produce something I don't own or am not entitled to and in the application process they ask you right up front for that information.

I find it very distressing and hurtful that this Minister basically said in his letter he does not care about my little project, this is what we are doing and that is the way it is so [blank] off.

I'm sure the minister didn't actually say that – I sure hope not – in his correspondence, but that's this guy's interpretation of it.

It shows that this man has little interest in the people of Alberta. At least from his letter this is how I feel.

I can't imagine how this Government extrapolated Ownership of the coalbed methane from the [former] EUB(ERCB) ruling 2007/24 when it was about Entitlement to produce the coalbed methane on certain leases that were under question and ended up in the Court of Alberta. This Bill essentially leaves me with few options for advancement of coal technology and clean coal production as gasifying in place was the best option. They want clean coal . . .

The government does.

. . . but only for the gas industry or major multinational corporations . . . Institutional Investors and the Little guy who throws his few cents into a stock hoping they can make a buck can rest assured their money is safe when they invest in Alberta.

Since the present Government listens to the ERCB and [the ERCB] seem to only speak in Latin, I propose you read this little poem I wrote to them perhaps they will get the gist of Political elitism. If I wanted to live in a communist country where historical property rights can be just deleted on a whim I would move to China.

Regards,

my constituent, who I won't name.

This is the poem he writes.

Truth Conquers all
Dare to be wise Dare to be wise
Truth conquers all
According to art or rule
To Science
The case is not clear, not proven
Mark well
No one assails Science with impunity

I'm reading this from my constituent, and it goes on. It's all in Latin, and then he's got the English version. It doesn't make as much sense when you read it as a poem because it doesn't rhyme, and I need rhyme in my life. But as you can see, this is a very frustrated individual. [interjection] I'm a rhymers. That's right.

Obviously, this constituent of mine feels very much like his rights of ownership have been attacked. They've been taken away from him without any compensation and without any sort of warning, frankly. The government has just imposed itself. I just don't understand why. It just does not make sense to me. A government does a consultation process. The product of the consultation process is: stay out of it; let it wend its way through the courts and the regulatory process, yada, yada, yada. Then a couple of years later the government says: "Oh, sorry. We're going to change the rules with Bill 26, and you're out of luck, okay? We've got to change the rules, so here we go. This is who owns the coal-bed methane. Period." Out of luck, no questions asked, no compensation, nothing. That's just not the way to go. It's not a way to govern, in my view.

The other thing is this question of in situ gasification from coal. He refers to it, too. There's just not enough clarity around it. Some of the thoughts that we've had here from people as we've met with them – and we've been taking notes. Here are a couple of things that they're saying.

This government is rushing through the legislation for this bill after spending tens of millions of dollars creating coal gasification projects which will be stuck in limbo as ownership of the value-added syn-gas is worked through the justice system. That's one question they have, and I would like to hear from the Minister of Energy or somebody over there that understands. Well, there's a former Minister of Energy over there that maybe can talk about these questions and just give me the clarification. I mean, he was in that portfolio for two years or more than that. Perhaps he can give us some clarification on these questions.

The second one. In situ gasification from coal is not clarified. The naturally pooled gas may belong to gas tenure, but the value-added from coal gasification is not recognized in the bill.

Among the conflicts between gas and coal owners that will arise, the crippling of an in situ gasification project seems to have the greatest potential impact. Does the government know all the ramifications of this when it comes to coal owners wanting to liquefy or gasify coal seams when they don't own the gas already sitting in it? Again, there's some confusion there. If they go and mine it, what are their obligations? What is the plus side of retrieving that gas for the coal owners?

This is the third point. Industry people suggest that pulling out CBM and in situ gasification cannot co-exist. CBM requires dewatering of seams, and in situ usually uses water. Also, the fracking and tapping of a seam for CBM can jeopardize the seal required for gasification. When that happens, there is then the degradation of the coal. We just don't know how this affects the new technology being put together for in situ gasification, which the government is very supportive of. Again, some uncertainty in how using this method will affect the rights of the coal owners.

Four. Without clarification of value-added processes and rushing this bill through legislation, Albertans will be losing a great opportunity with a fuel resource that has opportunities similar to the oil sands. This fact has been reaffirmed many times by the government, yet they seem to have forgotten this in their haste to ram this through.

According to this government clean coal has a big role to play in Alberta's energy future. The coal beneath our feet contains twice the energy of Alberta's conventional crude, natural gas, and bitumen, combined. To make the most of this massive resource, we'll need to use the same Alberta ingenuity that turned the oil sands into a source of long-term prosperity.

Now, he was talking about the combination of coal and coal-bed methane. They feel that this law will severely harm the ability of these entrepreneurs, these coal owners on split title, to make the most of it by splitting the rights and setting the owners against one another.

Currently the only method this government is actively pursuing towards clean coal is the hugely expensive, unproven, and ineffective carbon capture and storage project, and of course we'll talk about that more when we get to Bill 24.

In any event, those are some of the issues of some of the coal owners who own some of these coal rights on split title. Now, the Wildrose is not taking sides on this issue. We're not saying that the coal guys are right or that the gas guys are right. We're just saying that both have very legitimate arguments. It's a very complicated issue, so before we go headfirst and take away or at least be perceived to be taking away someone's property rights and ability and the potential of being able to develop a resource that they feel is important to them and to their future, we should do the proper consultation.

We should bring in the coal owners, we should bring in all the stakeholders and the freehold owners and some scientists and get a grasp on what we're talking about here. Maybe let's talk with these folks and see if there's anything we can do to make sure that the coal owners are properly compensated for the fact that they are not going to have the resource that they thought they were going to have. Or maybe we use some kind of grandfathering clause to give them time to develop the resource as much as they can, and then at the end of 10 years it goes into effect, 10, 20 years or whatever. The point is that we can bring certainty, but let's figure out what the right way to do it is rather than just ramming it through.

It's almost like this bill – I mean, it's about the thinness of a napkin – was created on the back of a napkin. There has not been any consultation going into this. With the new royalty framework we saw what happens when government doesn't consult first. When they don't consult first, there are all kinds of unintended consequences. There are all kinds of things that happen that the government surely didn't plan for. They didn't plan to put the oil and gas industry into the tank and cost thousands of Albertans their jobs, but they did it. Why did they do it? Is it because they hate Albertans? Obviously not. It's because they went ahead, they plowed ahead, and they did not do the proper consultation first.

We see it with the health superboard. They plow ahead; they centralize it all in a big board. It was almost instantaneous. It happened in, like, a few weeks. The former minister of health put that together. One of the reasons we see all of the massive problems – the ER crisis, the awful things that are happening in our health care system right now – is the lack of consultation before they acted. You see, if the government had consulted nurses and if they had consulted doctors and front-line staff and done the proper consultation, they could have identified some of the problems that would have happened with a large, massive, centralized, Soviet-style bureaucracy. It doesn't work. So let's do the consultation.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Interesting comments, but the fact of the matter is that there has been discussion about the contents of Bill 26 for many, many years in this province, and it's long past the time when we need to move to deal with the issue of the private ownership rights of individuals in this province.

However, Mr. Chairman, it is important to clarify one section of the bill, so I would like to move on behalf of the bill's sponsor an amendment to Bill 26, which I believe you have at table for circulation.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, it hasn't been circulated yet. We'll pause for a moment, and then we'll circulate it. Then you can proceed. This is amendment A1.

Hon. member, please continue.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. This amendment would essentially amend section 2 of the bill, referencing the new section

10.1, by striking out subsection (2) and substituting the following:

(2) Subsection (1) does not affect any conveyance, agreement, agreement for sale, lease, joint venture or any other contract that specifically grants, leases, excludes, excepts or reserves rights in land in respect of coalbed methane and that was entered into before the coming into force of this section by

- (a) the owner of the title to the natural gas in the land, or any person holding natural gas rights through that owner, and
- (b) the owner of the title to coal in the land, or any person holding coal rights through that owner.

Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to clarify that subsection and clarify the fact that because this issue has been extant in Alberta for some considerable period of time, there are, in fact, agreements in place between land owners, title owners, and it must be clear that those agreements that were entered into by owners in full knowledge of their situation should be respected and adhered to. That would be the nature of it. It's a minor yet important amendment to the bill.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm pleased to stand up and speak on the amendment. I think we were calling it A1, weren't we?

The Deputy Speaker: Amendment A1. Yes, it is.

Mrs. Forsyth: I'm somewhat taken aback by this because the government has always said that they have it right, yet they have it wrong. Here we are with a piece of legislation coming forward, and they have supposedly consulted. They've talked to all of the people that are involved in the area. The bill was tabled in the Legislature probably about a month ago. I would hope that when they were doing this in their consulting process and in discussions with the legal people, they had it right. Now all of a sudden on our desk appears an amendment called A1.

Quite frankly, this is just one of many. We've got Bill 29, our Alberta Parks Act. Same thing. Received hundreds and hundreds and hundreds of e-mails on this particular piece of legislation. They were told they were consulted, as this minister has said. Hopefully, maybe the government is listening on that particular piece of legislation. Maybe then we will get some amendments on Bill 29 that will appease Albertans out there that are so upset on that.

Unlike my colleagues from Calgary-Glenmore and Airdrie-Chestermere, who've been following this issue over the last few years, I'm really still trying to learn just what this whole issue is about. It's deep, and it's complicated. I have tried to spend as much time as I can learning about this particular issue.

I've mentioned many times in the Legislature that we're a party of four. We have two researchers, a limited budget, limited time, so we spend a lot of time working, trying to learn these issues, talking to Albertans, talking to people that we consider the experts in the field. That's, you know, the freeholders, the coal owners.

Let me first of all say that our party strongly supports the property rights of freeholders in Alberta and will continue to do so. I also recognize that there are some legal precedents that suggest that the freeholders have a strong claim to the coal-bed methane, and I do not want anything I'm saying here to suggest otherwise. But what I strongly oppose is the way this government is ramming this decision through the House in contradiction of their own stakeholders' consultation in a way that circumvents a court case and in a way that might affect the development of new clean-coal technologies, and that hearkens back to amendment A1.

My colleague from Airdrie-Chestermere indicated earlier that he suspects – and I suspect – that many of the members in this House are new to the split-title leases and the implications for coal-bed methane. I can tell you that I am. Yet we are here being asked to decide a controversial issue with a long history, an issue winding its way through the courts, with a trial date coming this winter, and we're asked to declare that not only is one side entirely right but to declare that it has always been right. I'm not comfortable with that, Mr. Chair, and I don't think anyone here should be either.

I think we should have much more debate and information presented on the history and the implications of this bill and, quite frankly, on this amendment A1. I just don't see why we can't table the bill – it makes it even more important after we have an amendment before us – and see if the courts come up with an acceptable compromise or at least take some additional time to consider the implications of the bill and, quite frankly, the amendment. I'd also like a clear explanation of why we are circumventing the court.

I think it's important that I put on record some of the questions I have not only about this bill but now, Mr. Chair, about this amendment and that I think everyone should be asking before blindly supporting the bill and supporting the amendment simply because the minister tells us that it's straightforward and that it'll make things easier.

Mr. Chair, the first question I have I need to ask because this amendment is very relevant to the court case. I'm sure the minister will tell us that this very clear piece of legislation, Bill 26 – and it's not so clear anymore because now we have an amendment – will resolve any disputes by declaring all coal-bed methane to have the same status as natural gas. Now, the problem is that clear laws are sometimes too clear; that is, they lose the ability to be fair in the real world, a place where things sometimes aren't so clear. The problem I've been made aware of is that this latest, most practical and even greenest way to use the deeper coal seams in the province is to liquefy or to gasify the coal.

The Minister of Education has tabled this amendment. I'm trying to read what the bill says. His amendment is, as he said, to clarify:

- (a) the owner of the title to the natural gas in the land, or any person holding natural gas rights through that owner, and
- (b) the owner of the title to coal in the land, or any person holding coal rights through that owner.

My colleague has actually talked about the split-title leases, and I'm imagining what this amendment is doing is trying to clarify that split-title lease.

I guess for us it's important for the minister to clarify exactly what he's trying to get to on this particular amendment. Mr. Chair, quite frankly, we are getting tons of correspondence on this, tons of people that, again, challenge the minister. He alluded to this when he tabled this amendment. The minister has publicly stated that the government consulted with stakeholders. Well, we've heard that before. We're hearing that on Bill 29. We're hearing that on Bill 17.

The consultation that the minister refers to is the final report of the freehold oil and gas issue and the stakeholders' consultation dated March 6, 2009, that recommended – and this is important because this goes back to the consultation process that the minister said has been done over and over again. It clearly said not to legislate anything. So in my mind not only does it talk about legislation, but it talks about the amendments that the House leader has just tabled, and it says clearly in this: "Do not legislate the ownership of CBM in split-title situations; wait for the results of the court cases and support improved negotiations through improved knowledge and understanding." Bill 26 would do just that against the express recommendations of the group established by the government itself.

That goes back to the amendment and trying to again usurp the court process, which has clearly been asked by the stakeholders in the stakeholder process that was in place. I am going to look forward to some comments from my colleagues, and I'm especially going to look forward to some of my colleagues that are being affected by this. I know the Member for West Yellowhead has an interest in this, and it will be interesting to hear him get up and debate this particular piece of legislation. I can tell you, Mr. Chair, that we're hearing from the companies in his riding, and we're also hearing from constituents in his riding that are very, very upset with Bill 26. I imagine that once they see the amendment, it'll be interesting to see what they have to say about this amendment.

Quite frankly, I'm trying to understand how the amendment that the House leader has tabled in the Legislature actually deals with the issues in regard to what we're hearing from the people that are affected by this piece of legislation and the emphasis that they have continually said in regard to letting the courts make the decision. As I indicated before, we strongly support the property rights of the freeholders in Alberta, and we'll continue to do so. I also recognize that there are legal precedents that suggest that the freeholders have a strong claim to the coal-bed methane and do not want anything I'm saying here to suggest otherwise.

Our role in government is to listen to what Albertans are telling us. We have done that. We have no problem with the minister hoisting this piece of legislation. Hopefully, he'll stand up and do the same thing on the Parks Act because we've been again inundated with correspondence from Albertans on that particular piece of legislation. It always seems to be that control. You know, when you give a minister control of anything, you should start worrying about what they're going to change.

Mr. Chair, with those few words I'm going to sit down, and I'm going to hopefully hear from some of the government members on what they have to say on Bill 26, the Mines and Minerals (Coalbed Methane) Amendment Act, and the amendment that the House leader has tabled, that you've indicated is A1.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members who wish to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Very quickly, this amendment A1 provides clarification. It basically grandfathers the rights of individuals who own the property, whether they're freehold or whether they're owned by companies. It allows for a transition. It protects those people who negotiated in good faith and allows for new laws to take place.

Where I have a concern in terms of when grandfathering is good and when grandfathering is not necessarily the way to go – and it's related to this type of transitioning – is the first in time, first in right that is applied, for example, to water rights or timber rights. I do not believe that water should be considered a commodity sold to the highest bidder. I believe that water should be considered a public right. It's going to become increasingly complex, whether we use grandfathering or some other form of respecting historical right when it comes to water allowances.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, we're talking to the amendment here, please.

Mr. Chase: Yes. Specifically, this amendment is a grandfathering amendment.

The Deputy Chair: But for natural gas.

Mr. Chase: Pardon?

The Deputy Chair: For coal-bed methane.

Mr. Chase: Yes. For coal-bed methane gas.

My hope is that this would potentially, Mr. Chair, serve as a template for further agreements in terms of declaring what is historically acceptable and at what point we need to transition. This is why I am supporting it, because it provides clarification. Hopefully, it will have some applicability to other circumstances such as water, such as timber if we can use this as a template.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you very much. I'll speak to the bill, and I'll say to the hon. House leader that I will be supporting this amendment. It's a very, very, very small step towards at least improving the bill if we're going to pass a bill today. I will be voting against the bill in its entirety, but if we can make it less destructive, that's good.

This is a section that obviously is – I don't know if it's really changing what's in the bill, but it's essentially making very clear that any conveyance, agreement, agreement for sale, lease, joint venture or any other contract that specifically grants, leases, excludes, excepts or reserves rights in land in respect of coalbed methane and that was entered into before the coming into force of the section by

- (a) the owner of the title to natural gas in the land, or any person holding natural gas rights through that owner, and . . .

And this is the new part, or one of the new parts:

- (b) the owner of the title to coal in the land, or any person holding coal rights through that owner.

I think that this is good. It changes the act in that it makes it clearer that we're not going to disrupt anything that's happened in the past with regard to conveyancing of different leases and joint ventures and things like that.

The real key here is actually the joint venture or other contract, but specifically it's joint venture. Again, this might be an issue here. Depends if you can prove it, but if there's been a joint venture and an agreement made with regard to a coal owner having the ability or if there's a contractor agreement that they'll be able to mine their coal over a certain period of time, this should protect certain amounts of the owners from there being maybe some legal disputes that come up where there was an agreement in place and then the person in the contract or the freeholder owner says: hey, sorry buddy; I know we had that agreement, but it says I now own the rights, so too bad. So this would kind of take away some of that uncertainty, and that's good. That's a good start.

Again, it doesn't go far enough in that it clearly does not go to the root of the problem, which is that there hasn't been any consultation. So it doesn't change the fact that we're still ramming through a bill, and we're ramming through this amendment. We're doing our business here without doing proper consultation.

So I will absolutely be bringing forward an amendment. Not right now, but I will bring it in third reading as a hoist amendment to put this into committee. I really do hope that the members opposite will consider that and that we do a proper job of consultation here and make sure that we get this bill right. I will support this amendment so that just in case the government sees fit to drive and hammer this thing through, we can at least do a little less damage by passing this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to comment briefly on the amendment to the bill as well. I think the amendment does bring some clarity to some agreements that have been made between different stakeholders, probably corporations that maybe own coal or have leases or rights in coal or developing gas. I think some of those stakeholders have probably entered into agreements that are not completely clear. Maybe their lawyers weren't working for them properly when they were entering into these agreements, and maybe they were under a different understanding. I think the amendment now will protect some of those stakeholders, so I would support the amendment and ask all members to support it.

The bill itself, the Mines and Minerals (Coalbed Methane) Act, 2010 . . .

The Deputy Chair: We're only speaking to the amendment.

Mr. Prins: Okay. I'll just leave that. As for the amendment, I think it's a very good amendment, and we need to do this.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Certainly, as I've been listening to the debate this evening, I'm quite surprised that after the comment from the hon. Government House Leader regarding the amendment that's proposed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, complaining about the lack of notice of his amendment, he would provide this amendment to the House with no notice.

Also, in regards to the hon. Government House Leader, the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud, I would have to say this: the less the hon. member states, the more suspicious I become, Mr. Chairman. His rather short introduction of this bill left me with many questions, as did the remarks from the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka. I would certainly like to hear from the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka again about how specifically this amendment – and I believe it's A1, or the EnCana amendment as I would call it – will protect resource owners regarding the question of their coal or their coal-bed methane or their natural gas and the arrangements or the agreements that have been made in the past.

Now, certainly, I would like to know before I vote on this amendment, Mr. Chairman, about the Freehold Petroleum & Natural Gas Owners Association of Alberta and whether or not they have been consulted regarding this amendment. The hon. member spoke about corporations, I believe, and the consultation process to reach out to these individual corporations to satisfy their interest in this bill. But what about the Freehold Petroleum & Natural Gas Owners Association?

It has been stated in this House previously that 10 per cent of the mineral rights in Alberta, or over 6.4 million hectares, are privately owned. The freeholders estimate that there are between 40,000 and 50,000 individual owners of freehold mineral rights in Alberta, with about 40 per cent of their members holding title or split-title mineral rights; that is, all mines and minerals except coal or all mines and minerals except coal and petroleum.

This is a very, very important issue, as we all know. There was quite an interesting gathering for a public debate on this matter – and I spoke about this earlier, Mr. Chairman – at a church west of Red Deer, just as you're going south on Highway 2. In fact, you'd be surprised to know that so many of your members were there, your government caucus could have held a caucus meeting in the parking lot.

Mr. Vandermeer: Where was this?

Mr. MacDonald: This was at a church west of Red Deer as you go south on highway 2, or the Queen Elizabeth highway.

There was significant interest. The leader of the Wildrose Alliance was there. The leader of the New Democrats was there. The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne was representing the government caucus. There were both cabinet members and government members in attendance at this meeting, Mr. Chairman, and that's testament to how important these freehold rights are to Alberta landowners, particularly the grandsons and granddaughters or great-grandsons and great-granddaughters of our pioneers in central Alberta.

They have a lot of interest in this, and that's why I need to know what consultation has been done with that group in regard to this amendment. I would like to be given an opportunity to consult with them to see how they feel about this because this is more than an innocent little change, from what I can understand. Again, the less the government is saying about something, the more suspicious we all should be, Mr. Chairman. That was interesting.

However, regarding this bill, we would be certainly making some changes about one provision contained in any conveyance. We're deleting that, and we're changing it to: "does not affect any conveyance, agreement." Now, I find that interesting, but what I find most interesting is the new section (2)(b): "the owner of the title to coal in the land, or any person holding coal rights through that owner."

Through this amendment we have seen or someone has suggested that it's necessary to delete the following: "that specifically grants rights in respect of coalbed methane to." We're going to get rid of that, and at the conclusion of that, we're getting rid of "of the title to the coal."

Why is it necessary to suddenly have this change? Whose interests are being served? Whose financial interests are being met and why? We've had this discussion. Certainly, there has been a need for this clarification. There has certainly been need, I believe, since 2003, when the original changes were brought into this House by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow. I think this is more than a minor amendment. This is more than a housekeeping amendment. Certainly, until my questions are answered, I would be very reluctant to support this amendment as proposed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak?

Seeing none, I will call the question on the amendment.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Deputy Chair: We are back to Bill 26 as amended. Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm pleased to be able to rise to speak to this bill, Bill 26, the Mines and Minerals (Coalbed Methane) Amendment Act, 2010. I think the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek in many ways articulated some of my original impressions of this bill in that it's very complex and that there are a number of very strong and complex interests that are being considered. Thank you very much, Member.

The analysis of the implications of this is not a simple matter, and this is not an area that I am the critic for. Even though I do have 13 critic areas, this one really is not one of my critic areas, so I'm not able to bring to bear that tremendous level of expertise that I'm able to always bring to my other 13 critic areas. Of course, I say that with tongue in cheek.

You know, it's interesting. Of course, the government says that the reason for pursuing this bill is because it will enhance and facilitate increased and faster development of coal-bed methane. However, one party, one of the stakeholder groups, actually suggests that, no, this bill will delay development of coal-bed methane, and that's used as a reason to not support it.

I'm in a bit of a conflicted position because in one sense I think that one of the things we've not dealt with yet adequately in this province is developing an adequate environmental regime to govern the development of coal-bed methane in our province, and we've not developed an adequate system of monitoring the implications of this development. I am somewhat concerned about any bill that purports to fuel an increased speed of development. I think that, you know, we don't currently have jobs resting on this, so we have the privilege of being able to take the time to ensure that what we do is done responsibly, with a view to preserving and protecting our long-term environmental interests.

Anyway, it's interesting because some would say that this act will actually slow things down and that perhaps for completely different reasons I should be supporting the act. However, I think others will argue and certainly the government itself argues that the act is designed to speed up development, so that is a concern for me.

On the flip side, though, there is no question that there is a long history in this province of the freehold mineral rights' owners not having their rights properly represented by this government and feeling somewhat frustrated with their inability to have their rights asserted and reflected in a way that allows them to develop their property at a level that gives them the same kind of benefits that larger industry would have.

In that sense, there's sort of a sense of fairness that, you know, we're defining the issue and handing over ownership to a much larger group of individual Albertans who reside in Alberta. From that perspective it's difficult to disagree with that outcome because we're all for ensuring that actual residents of Alberta get the benefit of our resource development as opposed to the shareholders in multinational oil companies, who really have very little vested interest in the future of our province. From that perspective we do support the bill and support that aspect of the decision that is reflected in the bill.

I, too, have concerns, though, because I've seen in the past this government sort of bring forward legislation asserting that it will clarify the process, only for us to discover that if you look at the legislation in a bit more detail, really it's not going to clarify the process, and what it's going to do is give a whole bunch of lawyers a lot more work. It may well be the case that that's what's going to come from this. I guess that remains to be seen.

Ultimately, I think the most important piece that I want to be able to put on the record with respect to this particular piece of legislation, once again, is the really profound need for this government to take seriously the much greater threat to the environment that can be posed by an unmonitored system of coal-bed methane development and the fact that there needs to be an adequate investment in environmental protection to match the rate of development that the government purports to be enabling through this piece of legislation. In failing to do that, this will end up being a net loss at the end of the day for all Albertans and even for those freehold mineral rights owners.

I certainly would like to see the government move forward quite aggressively to enhance the environmental protection resources in line with this development and also to more openly and responsibly respond to concerns that are articulated by Albertans, who already raise environmental concerns around the mining of coal-bed methane. We need to ensure that those voices are heard because those are the people that live here, those are the people that raise their children here, and those are the people that will be here, presumably, when this particular little gold rush is completed.

Those will be the extent of my comments this evening. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, and I'll be very quick. When I first at second reading spoke to Bill 26, the Mines and Minerals (Coalbed Methane) Amendment Act, 2010, I used the term "a gift horse," the analogy being that you don't look a gift horse in the mouth. In other words, you have to recognize the values and the possible problems associated with the horse, or in this case coal-bed methane. It's very important, Mr. Chair, that we don't fall into the same trap, that we learn from the experiences that occurred with regard to coal-bed methane fracking in Wyoming and New Mexico, that severely poisoned large underground aquifers.

Water protection in Bill 26 has to come first. I've travelled with either the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar or the Member for Calgary-Mountain View to Nanton, Wetaskiwin, Ponoka, Trochu, Drayton Valley, Ma-Me-O Beach, where large hearings, sometimes between 300 and 500 individuals, gathered because of their concern about the potential extraction of coal-bed methane and the intrusion onto their properties. People became so concerned that they required drilling companies to fill out complex contracts that would basically force the company to move further down the road because of the concern for their water.

Coal-bed methane, while it can provide tremendous resource and tremendous value, also has to be treated with kid gloves. I'm hoping that with Bill 26 not just simply defining that coal-bed methane is a gas separate from the coal that surrounds it but that the methods of extraction are taken into account. Without going into great detail, why did we have canaries in coal mines? It was because of coal-bed methane and other gases that arose from the coal seams. I'm suggesting that as we go forward with Bill 26, we must make sure we have the necessary cautions.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It is interesting as the debate on Bill 26 continues. Certainly, I appreciated the fond remarks from the hon. Member for Calgary-West towards certain members on this side of the House when the bill was introduced.

Now, my questions are around consultation regarding the amendment that was introduced by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud and the freeholders. Well, there is another issue, Mr. Chairman, and that's the consultation with the coal mining industry and what conversations were struck up with them regarding the drafting of Bill 26.

Many of the different companies that have been proposing coal-bed methane development in this province have curtailed or scaled back their efforts or their plans. Again, I'm going to point to the east side of highway 2, or the Queen Elizabeth II highway, the issue into Red Deer from the north and proceeding to Calgary. One would see a rather large lay-down area for a drilling operation, and the rigs that would be resting there or placed there would be used for the drilling of coal-bed methane wells. Whether they were in production or whether they were exploratory doesn't really matter, but for a while, Mr. Chairman, you would very rarely see one of the rigs laid down in the yard. Lately you see them there. Sometimes I think the ones that are absent have gone on to another jurisdiction.

The reason for this inactivity is the price of natural gas. It's the price of natural gas. What is the price of natural gas? Well, this government for the second time since their budget in April has revised down their projected price for natural gas in the second-quarter update. The projected price now is $3.50, so that is certainly going to have an effect on activity around the development of the coal-bed methane industry, particularly when we're looking at large volumes of natural gas that can be produced as a result of fracking.

Now, I was surprised to learn that some people in the coal mining industry in this province were not consulted on Bill 26. I will be surprised if the freeholders haven't been consulted regarding the amendment from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud, that we just passed, but there are other people with concerns about Bill 26, and their concerns need to be part of the official record of this Assembly, in my view. People are writing that there are significant or many shortcomings to Bill 26, and the unintended consequences are significant. These groups are very concerned that Bill 26 does not resolve the current split-title dispute that was articulated earlier. There's no clear answer to the split-title coal-bed methane ownership dispute.

These individuals are also of the view that Bill 26 will not halt the existing litigation and that it could create a new series of lawsuits in relation to existing commercial coal-bed methane production arrangements. I'm sure this has been examined by the ministry or the Department of Energy. I'm sure that they did their very best in drafting this legislation. I hope they weren't preoccupied with trying to get a deal on the bitumen royalties in Fort McMurray, that were under negotiation, and left the drafting of this bill perhaps a little late. Perhaps that's why individuals felt they weren't consulted. Perhaps Bill 26 was put on the back burner, and maybe it should be put on the back burner again, and another round of discussions with concerned citizens can take place. You'd almost think we're talking about the parks bill here, Bill 29, but we're not; we're talking about Bill 26. This is yet another example – I'm surprised – where this government is not consulting with stakeholders.

Now, there is uncertainty around Bill 26 the way it's drafted currently for coal mining operations. Bill 26, it is said, has the potential to complicate an already overloaded permitting system. Bill 26, Mr. Chairman, according to these sources will foster competing resource development and will garner additional industry disputes that, in turn, will generate more litigation. Certainly, the hon. member across the way is not drafting an act to make work for lawyers. I don't think we need to do that.

I talked about the negative impacts on resource development earlier, but I'm surprised to learn again – and I want this as part of the record, Mr. Chairman – no industry consultation on Bill 26. Well, I'll be. I can't believe this.

The announcement on October 27, 2010, regarding the introduction of Bill 26 was a surprise to Sherritt, a rather large, prosperous corporation that makes a significant contribution to this city and to this province, but they claim they were not consulted. It was a surprise to the company. It was a surprise to the coal industry, the natural gas industry, and many other large Alberta utilities. I think we can do better than this.

The absence of industry consultation and the lack of involvement in this significant decision-making process raises other concerns, other questions, including the unknown consequences of existing surface mining operations. Early consultation of coal-bed methane stakeholders, carried out in 2006 with brief follow-up meetings in 2009, in fact, reached consensus to recommend that there be no legislative reform. These are questions that we need to get clarification on before we proceed with this bill.

I was at some of those meetings. I certainly remember seeing Department of Environment officials there and standing up and speaking out but not the Energy officials. I don't recall that any of the individuals from the Department of Energy were in attendance speaking, but certainly ADMs from Environment were there, and they were willing to talk, which was quite interesting.

Now, as the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek indicated, the split-title issue is already before the courts, and I'm not going to go any further with that, certainly, and bore you, Mr. Chairman. I wouldn't want to do that.

Sherritt indicates that Bill 26 will not accelerate the development of coal-bed methane in Alberta, and we talked about prices being the key driver in that. I certainly would agree with them. But Bill 26 as currently worded, according to the correspondence I've received – and all members have received it – jeopardizes existing coal-bed methane production agreements.

Now, I wasn't satisfied that the amendment from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud clarified that sufficiently, and I'm not convinced yet. I'm surprised that as Bill 26 was presented to the Assembly, myself and other members would receive correspondence from Sherritt Coal. Certainly, the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere indicated there's significant correspondence coming to their caucus regarding this matter. It certainly is interesting that many of the hon. members of this Assembly would have a significant interest in coal-bed methane development and the rights of property owners, whether they're individual rights that have been handed down through the family since the province has been settled or legacy rights that some corporations like EnCana have inherited. Certainly, Imperial Oil would have rights. Some of the coal companies would have rights.

I think we should get this right once and for all, this Bill 26, and I think we can satisfy the needs of not only the freeholders but also the corporations who create a lot of the jobs in this province and create a lot of wealth and make a significant contribution to our high standard of living. I think we can do better than this. It'll be interesting to see what happens with this legislation, but this is very disappointing to this hon. member to have to stand here and recognize and put into the public record that, again, this is a government that seems to be preoccupied with their own internal divisions, and they're not reaching out and talking to individuals who make such a significant economic contribution to this province, and that's the coal industry.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Again, I'm very pleased that this bill has made it to this point. I have many constituents urging me to support this bill, and they've been talking about it for years. There's talk in the House here about consulting and whether or not we have consulted with the freehold owners or owners of coal or gas or split titles. This has been going on for years through our MLAs. MLAs have been consulting with their constituents, and my constituents have been telling me that we need to do this, so I'm very pleased that we're at this stage.

There are many, many thousands of owners of split title, and this whole issue of defining whether coal-bed methane is gas or part of coal only is a concern on split titles because if your title is one title that has coal, gas, and oil, all the gas on those properties is just gas. It's only when you split the coal out that some people, the coal owner, might think that the gas is then part of the coal.

When this became an issue on Crown land a few years ago, the Crown very quickly defined coal-bed methane as natural gas. There have been no lawsuits coming out of that. The government has not been sued or charged here. There have been no legal challenges to that issue. It's been working in British Columbia and in other places. If we now declare coal-bed methane to be natural gas on split titles, it should just clarify that for all owners of split titles where there's been a problem.

Now, in the past, of course, some of these owners of split titles have entered into agreements with developers of natural gas and have actually agreed, maybe, with owners of the coal that they might have part of it. That's why there are the amendments and the subsections to this amendment to the Mines and Minerals Act. What we want to do is clarify that on split titles the coal-bed methane is natural gas as well. It really is a big issue in my constituency. It is only an issue on split titles that were issued between 1902 and 1912. That's about half of each township that was freehold rights in central Alberta, in parts of Alberta that were settled in that time period, because that's the time period that titles were split. After 1912 there were no split titles, so it does not become an issue. Most of the land in my constituency, in my area, was settled in that period of time, so about half of the land in my area is owned by freehold owners, and much of that is split title. So this is huge.

Currently a lot of the freehold properties are being avoided by developers of coal-bed methane because of this problem with lack of clarity. That the developers of coal-bed methane are just avoiding these properties and drilling on Crown land, because that's where they know what's going on, or on titles where the owners own oil, gas, and coal. That's where the development is happening. This will add clarity so that the in-between land will be developed as well and gas will not be stranded, because what is happening is that if you avoid certain parcels, gas becomes stranded in those parcels. When the rest of the gas is developed and the field shuts down, there are just added costs to get these smaller bits of properties online into the pipelines.

This is very good news for the owners of split titles, and it's good news for junior companies that want to develop these types of properties. They can now have clarity. They can make deals with split-title owners, and they can get to business and actually develop these properties and develop resources for the province.

I want to acknowledge, Mr. Chairman, Mrs. Else Pedersen. She is the chairman of the Freehold Owners Association. She's a constituent of mine from Ponoka. She's been working tirelessly on this for years and years, trying to get the attention of the MLAs, the government, and all parties that are responsible for correcting this injustice, I would call it. I just want to acknowledge her and give her a lot of credit, she and her staff, for bringing these issues forward all these times.

I'm just going to wrap up there and ask all my colleagues here to support this bill as amended.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak?

Are you ready for the question on Bill 26, Mines and Minerals (Coalbed Methane) Amendment Act, 2010?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 26 as amended agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? That is carried.

Bill 21 Wills and Succession Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Olson: It's my pleasure to rise, Mr. Chair, in Committee of the Whole to speak to Bill 21, Wills and Succession Act. I'm pleased to see that this bill has received such strong support from all corners of this House. This act affects all Albertans, and it's important that we modernize existing legislation to bring us into the 21st century. As was mentioned, Bill 21 consolidates five enactments into one. These are the Wills Act, the Intestate Succession Act, the Survivorship Act, the Dependents Relief Act, and section 47 of the Trustee Act.

With regard to wills, the proposed reform is not a major change in policy; rather, it's a modern expression of it. The law would be refocused to ensure testamentary intent is met. Currently in interpreting a will, the court can only look at the words in the will and also look at the testator's circumstances at the time of making the will. As you just mentioned, the testator is the person, of course, who is making the will. No other evidence is allowed. To determine the testator's true intention, the will can now be interpreted by looking at all evidence relating to intention, provided that it's properly corroborated.

If I understood at least one of her questions the other night, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona had a concern about new rules around amendments to wills. Section 22 of the act provides the usual requirements for execution of a will, but there is a change in that the court, if there's not compliance with section 22, if it's satisfied on clear and convincing evidence, can recognize an amendment which wouldn't otherwise have been recognized. But it has to be satisfied, again, on clear and convincing evidence that it reflects the intentions of the person making the will. If there's a concern about undue influence and so on, I think that is really dealt with by having to present evidence to the court.

We also removed the law where a will is revoked on marriage because that is not in keeping with current society. Albertans are living longer, and as a result they may enter into second or late-life marriages after having made clear estate plans and wills. Consultation, I should mention, is very supportive of adding new provisions to clearly revoke this portion of the act.

Regarding intestacy – and intestacy means dying without a will or with a will that doesn't cover the circumstances – if there is no will, the property will go to the deceased's family. This isn't new either, but we did remove old rules such as a spouse being disinherited if he or she were living in adultery. This has been replaced by a modern rule that a spouse is disinherited if there has been a two-year separation or a court order separating the property or dealing in a final way with their relationship.

I'd also like to address a concern of the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, and that was regarding the issue of temporary possession of the matrimonial home. This is an important new right provided for in the legislation. An adult interdependent partner or a spouse of a deceased person will have an automatic right to stay in his or her shared home for three months after death. This provides a temporary right of shelter for spouses or partners who are not registered on the title of their home or named on the lease. I believe that the hon. member had a concern that three months wasn't enough.

This three-month period provides the spouse or partner with time to grieve and make other living arrangements if necessary. But, that said, if a spouse or partner needs longer than three months, it's still open to them to apply to the court to have this time extended. This recognizes the need to balance the rights of the spouse or partner to remain in the home for compassionate reasons with the rights of the ultimate owners or landlords of the home. The courts will be able to hear from the surviving spouse and all parties with an interest in the family home and will be able to determine if the time should be extended and for how long. The inclusion of this right was strongly supported by public consultation. It protects vulnerable Albertans who may otherwise be without shelter immediately after the death of their spouse or partner.

On the issue of family maintenance and support grandchildren can now apply for support from a grandparent's estate. This was also supported in consultation and is a response to a small but growing trend of grandparents parenting grandchildren. When this happens, it may be best for the grandchild to be able to get support directly from the estate because there is a fair likelihood that the child will otherwise be left without support.

In order to truly modernize the law in this area, the act will also abolish a number of outdated presumptions and doctrines related to whether property transfers made during life impact inheritance. These are ancient concepts that no longer reflect modern realities. The court will be given the power to decide what the party's intention was and to make a decision as to how gifts and transfers made during life impact inheritance.

Regarding matrimonial property, the Wills and Succession Act will amend the Matrimonial Property Act to entitle a spouse to matrimonial property whether the marriage ends due to death or due to divorce. As the law currently stands, if spouses are happily married and one dies, the surviving spouse doesn't have a right to apply for his or her share of the matrimonial property; that is, property acquired by the spouses during the course of their marriage. The bill changes this so that the surviving spouse can apply for his or her share of the matrimonial property upon the death of the other spouse.

The right to share in matrimonial property is grounded in the view of marriage as a partnership, where each spouse contributes to the marriage and to acquiring property during the marriage. Consistent with this view the spouse is entitled to an equal share of the assets acquired during the marriage once the marriage ends. This right was also strongly supported in public consultation, and it is consistent with the law in other provinces. Alberta has however maintained the position, supported by the Supreme Court of Canada, that matrimonial property rights do not need to extend to common-law or interdependent couples who choose not to marry.

Regarding survivorship, the survivorship rules in section 5 create a statutory rule that applies if there is no other intention found in the will. A court may find that in interpreting the will to give effect . . .

The Deputy Chair: Just a minute.

Hon. members, the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose has the floor, and decorum is that you take your seats, please.

Thank you.

Mr. Olson: Thank you. Regarding survivorship, the survivorship rules in section 5 create a statutory rule that applies if there is no other intention found in the will. A court may find that in interpreting the will to give effect to the intention of an individual, there is evidence through the provisions in the will and in the context of the individual's circumstances at the time of making the will that show a contrary intention. Examples of this are rare, but through the rules that apply to the types of evidence the court can hear and accept, the court may, in reading the provisions in the will and in considering the individual circumstances, also find that section 5 has been displaced. These instances will be very fact specific.

Finally, section 26 of the bill sets out how a will must be interpreted. It states that a will must be interpreted to give effect to the intention of the testator. In determining this, the court may admit evidence as to the meaning of words, as to the meaning of provisions of the will in the context of the testator's circumstances when the will was made, and as to the testator's intent regarding matters in the will. Survivorship rules generally only apply in tragic accidents, where both spouses die at the same time, such as motor vehicle accidents or mass accidents involving the death of numerous family members at the same time.

The Wills and Succession Act will benefit all Alberta families, and I encourage all members to support Bill 21. These changes reflect the changing family context and property interests in Alberta and will help to provide clarity, improve inefficiencies, and streamline processes.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you. While I do appreciate the clarification that has been provided by the Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, I will say that I do feel somewhat more assured by the notion that the court has a positive obligation to satisfy themselves that there's no undue influence when they're assessing amendments to a will that don't adhere to the proper form. I think that as long as there is that active obligation, that is good. I would be concerned, you know, that you'd have a situation where the court would only do it if asked, and then, of course, if the person himself was vulnerable to undue influence, they might not necessarily be the person that would ask.

I think I understand the member correctly, that he is suggesting that there is sort of a positive obligation in the interpretation of this act to ensure either through common law or through the act – I'm not sure which – for the courts to actively assess the issue of undue influence even where it's not raised by the party who might well have been the victim of that. So I think that's an important thing.

I do appreciate as well the amendments that ensure the temporary right to shelter for those residing in the testator's home, who are not ultimately the final recipients of that home. I agree with some about the concern about three months not being long enough. I guess I'm a little bit concerned that often the person that is in that position is also maybe not most able to get in front of a judge to make an application to extend that time. Of course, as we know, getting in front of a judge is not something that's either easy or inexpensive. So I remain a little bit concerned about that, but at least there is some opportunity to remain in the house, so that is good.

I only caught segments of what the member was saying with respect to how this act deals with matrimonial property in the context of wills. There was mention of the fact that a decision was made to not adopt a policy which is different from that which has been articulated by the Supreme Court of Canada, treating matrimonial property rights differently for those who have been officially married versus those who lived in a common-law relationship for a period of time.

If I understood that correctly – and again I will acknowledge that I only heard excerpts of what was being said at that point – I remain somewhat concerned by that. I think that might have been an opportunity for the government to move. The government always has the legislative authority to move beyond that which the common law currently suggests is the case. I would say that in our current society we have more and more dependent relationships, more and more families where children rely on those relationships of dependency, where the parents have not chosen to marry for a variety of reasons. I do remain concerned that we may in fact be treating particularly those children differently in this act than we would if their parents had gotten married.

Ultimately, the dependency experienced by the children, often through the surviving partner, whether it be a partner that is in a relationship that's one that is overseen through a marriage contract or one that is just simply through common law – the children are dependent regardless of whether there has been a marriage or not been a marriage. I guess I get a bit concerned if we are still talking about treating that family differently, the children of the survivor differently, where the survivor was married versus where the survivor was not married to the testator. Again, I put an asterisk beside this because I was only able to hear about half of what the member was saying at that point. So I have some concerns about that, and I'd be interested to see if the member could respond at all on that in this back-and-forth.

Again, I did mention that this appears to be a complete and total reflection of what was recommended through the Alberta Law Reform Institute, and I know that that is a very respected mechanism through which consultation can take place and best practices and best opinion can be garnered. I don't as a whole have tremendous concern because I am prepared to defer quite a bit to the opinions and the recommendations that come from the Alberta Law Reform Institute, but I wouldn't mind if the member could perhaps answer that one question about the matrimonial property, just clarify probably what he has already said.

Thank you.

Mr. Olson: I also had a little bit of trouble hearing the question, but I'll try to answer. I think the hon. member's concern was children of a less-than-formal relationship. Part 5 of the act talks about family maintenance and support, and the definition of family member has actually been broadened in this legislation to include children and grandchildren, even great-grandchildren, so I don't think there is a concern there. I think the types of people you describe are covered.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak?

Seeing none, I will call the question on Bill 21, the Wills and Succession Act.

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

Family Law Statutes Amendment Act, 2010

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill?

Seeing none, are you ready for the question on the bill?

Hon. Members: Question.

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

Bill 17 Alberta Health Act

The Deputy Chair: In committee this afternoon one amendment was defeated on Bill 17. Are there any comments or questions with regard to this bill?

An Hon. Member: Question.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Question? Holy. We've got a lot of work to do on this one. Come on. Boy, oh boy. Do we ever have a lot of work to do on this bill. [interjection] That's right. I think I'd like to see what the new parliamentary assistant for health after the axing of the doctor from Edmonton-Meadowlark, that absolutely pathetic excuse of a decision – it's too bad because the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford is a good man. [some applause] Absolutely. He's a good man, and he doesn't deserve to come into this position under such ridiculous circumstances as what we saw over the last two days. We have a few people that talk to us, and we got the story pretty good. [interjection] Oh, sorry; caucus confidentiality. That's right.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, I'm having trouble hearing. The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere has the floor, please.

Mr. Anderson: You know what? Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm having trouble hearing myself with this guy.

Mr. Chase: Tossed overboard.

Mr. Anderson: Tossed overboard.

One of the reasons this Health Act is an absolute train wreck, and I alluded to it earlier, is the fact that we have given so much power, authority, et cetera, to the minister under this bill, but there's no way to – sorry. We've given them the ability under the bill to obfuscate all of their responsibilities for actually enforcing what's in the health charter that this is proposing, and it's an absolute shame. It really does nothing, so what I'd like to do today is that I'd like to start by proposing an amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you. We'll pause for a moment while the amendment is distributed.

Hon. members, this is amendment A2.

Mr. Anderson: Okay. Well, here we go. We're talking about A2. I'll just read it into the record. I move that Bill 17, the Alberta Health Act, be amended in the last recital of the preamble by adding “, namely, that health insurance coverage is publicly administered, comprehensive, universal, portable and accessible” after “Canada Health Act (Canada)”.

If you look at the preamble right now and you look after “Canada Health Act (Canada),” that's on page 2 of the bill under the preamble, a few paragraphs down:

Whereas policies, organization, operations and decisions about Alberta's health system should be guided and measured and sustained consistent with the following principles:

that Alberta is committed to the principles of the Canada Health Act (Canada). . .

Then it would read:

, namely, that health insurance coverage is publicly administered, comprehensive, universal, portable and accessible.

Now, obviously, the Wildrose caucus has made it very clear that we support the principles of the Canada Health Act. I think every party in this Legislature supports the principles of the Canada Health Act. The reason we do is pretty simple, and I think that this is pretty much universal across all party lines. We do not believe that somebody should be denied access to critical health services because of an inability to afford them, an inability to pay.

Speaking as someone who has a family member in the United States suffering through a terminal illness and seeing the financial hardship that that family is going through with the treatments that she has had to take, it's something that you really think about, and it really gives you huge pause when you see it in real life. You know, you hear the stories about people not being insured or having insurance that is subpar, being underinsured I guess. Most have insurance down in the United States, but there are many, many, many that are underinsured. When they're underinsured, there are huge amounts of cost involved in getting expensive treatments like cancer treatment, for example. This is not something that I think any Canadian, certainly not any Albertan, takes lightly. I think the main idea of the Canada Health Act is simply that people should be given the health care that they need, the critical health care they need, the essential health care they need, without regard – in other words, it shouldn't depend on their ability to pay.

Like I said, to watch people in the United States, a particular family member with a terminal illness, struggle through that knowing that they make very little – I mean, a respectable amount of money but, you know, not a lot, very much middle class – and to see the expense of what they have to pay for their copayments and services that are not covered and all the stuff that we take for granted in Canada and in Alberta truly strengthens my resolve and strengthens our caucus's resolve and I'm sure strengthens everyone's resolve to make sure that we uphold the principles of the Canada Health Act.

Now, with that said, we have a system in this province that is broken. The principles are good. Universal coverage: those are good principles. We believe in those principles, but the way that we deliver on those principles is on the verge of collapse. We see this in our emergency rooms with people dying unnecessarily. We see this with a lack of family doctors. We see this with very long waiting lines, some of the longest waiting lists for medical procedures in the entire industrialized world. We do not have a good system. Our principles are good, what we're trying to achieve is right, but we have a system that is absolutely failing Albertans. It's failing to deliver on the principles and the promise of the Canada Health Act, and it needs to change, absolutely needs to change.

The problem is that there is resistance to change. The resistance to change comes from individuals – I do think it's with the best of intent – who are very averse to change. They feel that any type of new idea or new way of delivering health care somehow threatens the principles behind the Canada Health Act, and because of this, they use fear tactics. We hear our own Premier using those fear tactics when he cites, of all things, scary European health care even though those European systems are so far superior to our own, just beyond superior: shorter wait-lists, lower costs, more competition in a publicly funded universal system. Maybe it's fearmongers, maybe it's ignorance, just a lack of ability to get outside of their preconceived notions about things. They go around spreading lies. That's what they are. They're not true. Whether they think they're true or not, I guess, is another question, but the fact is that they're not true, so we've closed our minds to real health care reform.

We get it in our head that if we believe in competitive delivery where, for example, private deliverers of health care, nonprofit deliverers of health care, and public deliverers of health care compete in the same system for public dollars, competing for the same queue of people waiting for a service – there are people out there who think that that somehow threatens the foundation of universal coverage, public coverage. That's simply not the case. That aversion to change and that aversion to looking at what's working in Sweden and in France and in Luxembourg and in Belgium and in these countries where it's working so well, that push-back, keeps us from getting anywhere.

I would say that probably 80 to 85 per cent of Albertans are in complete agreement with a universal, publicly funded system. There is 10 to 15 per cent that say: "No way, man. Survival of the fittest. Buy your own insurance." But I think that's a small minority. I can understand that small minority's frustration with the current system that we're in, but I think that's a minority opinion. The vast majority of Albertans in all parties believe that we need to make sure everyone is covered, and so do we. That's what Albertans are telling us, so that's what we're bringing forward, as are all parties.

We have to make sure that in our rush to protect this system and the universal aspect of it, the universal coverage and public insurance coverage, we don't overstep our bounds and close our minds to innovative ways of delivering health care. Like so many in this room I have talked to hundreds and hundreds of Albertans, thousands, really, at the door and in our offices. I've heard a couple of interest groups say this in the media, Friends of Medicare in particular, but I've never once heard an Albertan in front of my face say: "You know what? Whatever you do, make sure that, no matter what, all health care is delivered in the public system. I want to make sure that the deliverer of that health care needs to be under the public system." I've never heard that.

They don't care about that. They want to make sure it's paid for universally. They don't want queue jumping; I've heard that. But no one cares if it's a nonprofit provider, if it's a private provider, like out of the Grace hospital, if it's out of a public hospital or facility or surgical centre. They don't care. They just want it done. That's all they care about. Just get it done. They don't want to wait and rot in line for 18 months. That's what they don't want.

I find it irresponsible of this government to sit there – and I hope they change their tune; I really do. I know that there are members over there that have a feeling of openness and are open to new ideas. You know who you are. You're open to new ideas. Just admit it, hon. member. You are different. I know that the hon. finance minister is open. I know he understands these things. He has studied these things. He knows these things, and I know what he has advocated for in the past. I know he still has those beliefs. He knows it because it's just the truth.

Competitive delivery works. It works in other jurisdictions. It works, so let's not shy away from it. Let's say: "Look. We've got 15,000 hip surgeries that we need done. Okay? We're going to break those up into contracts of, say, a thousand each. I don't care if you're public or you're private or you're nonprofit; bid on it. What can you do? What's your cost? Bid on it, and we will give it to the best bidder who can deliver it the fastest, the cheapest, the best." That's what we should be doing to alleviate our lineups.

We're always worried about more money for health care. Where are we going to get more money for health care? Should we bring in user fees and stuff like that? Should we bring in all these things? No; that's not the answer. The answer is that if you want to bring investment, you have to open up the contracts that are available to the private, nonprofit, and public sectors to bid on them. There's no reason why they can't. When they do that, you'll have people come in, and they'll set up shop. They'll say: "You know what? We're going to turn this building into a surgical centre, and we're going to treat patients in here. We can do this for cheap. We'll do a joint venture. We'll get it in there, and we'll specialize in this. We'll be able to do this cheaper than the big public hospitals, with some of the expensive things that happen in a public monopoly." And there are many.

Now, there will be cases where there will be public hospitals that will be able to deliver it cheaper. They will be able to deliver it cheaper. There are those instances where public hospitals, for whatever reason, do it cheaper, and they will want to compete.

There's a funny story in New Zealand that the leader of our Wildrose Party and caucus, Danielle Smith, always talks about. New Zealand was going broke. They were on the verge of insolvency, bankruptcy. They needed to completely rein in their spending. One of the big issues they had was that they were spending too much on their public service, and everything was nationalized.

One of the things that was nationalized was the ports. They had hundreds of employees at these ports, and the government went and talked with the unions and said, "Look, we need to privatize these ports." The unions came back and said: "You know what? Let us bid on it. We'll see if we can do it cheaper than the private sector." So there was a bid, and they said okay. They gave the opportunity, and the union actually won the bid. I think they cut it down – what was the number? – like, 60 per cent. They did the same work with 60 per cent fewer people, and they were able to do that. Now, obviously, it probably helped because they owned a lot of the infrastructure and all that. But the point is that they were able to cut costs and still deliver the same service.

People don't understand. People talk about private profit margins: oh, if we let the private sector in, that will drive up health care costs because there's a profit margin. Ooh, a profit margin. Well, the problem is that there's a waste margin in public delivery, a huge waste margin, especially when there's no competition. When you're in the public sector and it doesn't matter – you're going to get the same block of funding and increases every year and so forth – there's no incentive to be prudent with your spending. There's none.

Let the private sector, the public sector, the nonprofit sector compete for those public dollars. If that is allowed, you're going to have more investment from the private sector and the nonprofit sector into our health care system, which is less money that the taxpayer has to put in on the infrastructure side, and the public-sector unions and the private companies are going to find ways to streamline costs.

One of the biggest examples of this was HRC. I saw the reports from the Alberta Bone and Joint Health Institute. That is a nonpartisan, objective, funded by AHS group that did an analysis of the cost of doing hip and knee replacements in all the public hospitals around Alberta as well as in a couple of the private places, namely Grace hospital, HRC. They came back with some startling numbers: 40 per cent cheaper and 40 per cent faster than the average of all the other hospitals. Now, how is that possible? People say: oh, it's cream-skimming; they were cream-skimming. Not true. Absolutely, categorically not true. The patients were coming from the same queue of people. The doctors would just book their surgeries. They could book them at a public; they could book them at the Grace hospital with HRC. They could book it wherever they wanted, so they would do that. They could do it 40 per cent faster and 40 per cent cheaper.

Now, of course, we all know what happened. It's well documented. They were doing such a good job that they were asked to expand. They expanded, and then they got the rug pulled out from underneath them by our current CEO, Dr. Duckett, who, it seems, is not going to have a job here much longer. That was an incompetent decision, as was his handling of the Cookie Monster incident.

The point is that, you know, that's what happens when you have a large, centralized public monopoly with someone who's a poor central planner. You get bad mistakes made, and that's what they did. We've really got to make sure that we solve that problem.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I have a great deal of difficulty with this amendment because it appears to be just: an interesting idea; let's try it. It's saying that health should be viewed as a commodity, that it should be subject to competition, that competition produces better results. Well, if that were the case, then Australia wouldn't be moving away from private health care delivery back into public systems, buying up private clinics. Neither would Britain be undergoing this particular suggested transition.

It's a little bit of a cover-up circumstance. Use some of the universal health care language such as "publicly administered" and "universal" and "portable" and "accessible," and it sounds very good except that what it becomes, basically, is a voucher system. We'll give you a certain number of dollars, and you can choose where you want to go with those dollars, whether you want to go to a public facility or whether you want to go to a private facility.

What it doesn't take into account is that there are a finite number of doctors. The whole idea that if you allow people to pay for their own coverage and go to a private facility, then you're going to reduce the lineups in the public facilities – well, because there is a finite number of doctors, if they're operating in the private, they're not operating in the public.

Dr. Morton: Why is there a finite number of doctors?

The Deputy Chair: Through the chair, please.

Mr. Chase: Through the chair, the reason there are a finite number of doctors, unfortunately, partly, in Alberta, Mr. Chair, who I'm looking at and speaking directly to, is the number of seats that are afforded for medical training in this province. Unfortunately, as the hon. chair knows, those seats were reduced in 1994 and through 1998, when three of Calgary's hospitals were closed.

Now, the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere talked about the efficiencies of the HRC and how they could do things so much better, so much faster, and, he suggested, so much cheaper. Well, the reality is that that facility had a 10 per cent premium per operation.

Mr. Anderson: Where's your proof?

Mr. Chase: You look it up. That's the case.

The only reason that facility was even considered was because of the mistakes made by the Klein government in terms of blowing up the General, closing the Grace and allowing it to be converted into a private operating facility, and closing the Holy Cross. A false demand was created by taking three public hospitals and the operating rooms associated with them out of the circumstance. Therefore, where I'm coming from, Mr. Chair, are the false assumptions that this amendment A2 is coming from.

Now, the idea that physicians should be able to work and straddle both systems is something that I have a great deal of difficulty with. For example, in Quebec physicians are required to make the choice of whether they're going to operate in the private system or in the public system. They don't have the choice of whether they can straddle. Here in Alberta and in B.C. they have the choice of having a private operation or a public operation.

Mr. Chairman, this appears, as I say, to use some of the universality language, but what it's saying is that we're going to get better health results, as suggested in amendment A2, by just tossing it open to competition. We all know that this is a very questionable argument because when things go wrong in the private facilities, they end up in the public facility. The private, whether it's in the States or in Alberta, in amendment A2, where it talks about portable and accessible, does not take into account that it's only the easier, straightforward, less complicated operations that take place in the private facility. That's where there's less expense. With regard to the HRC, which has gone out of business, if it hadn't been for the guarantee of the WCB cases, of the RCMP cases they would not have been able to make a go of it.

Mr. Chair, when it comes to publicly administered, comprehensive, universal, portable, and accessible, and then referencing the Canada Health Act, we wouldn't be able to have Copeman clinics, where they charge a $3,000 entry fee and then bill their services to the public system. So what's happening is that we're seeing private systems basically getting public funding, and I'm suggesting that the product that is produced is not cheaper, is not more efficient. It is the result of governments' artificially created monopolies. Gimbel, for example, is given all the eye operations.

The Deputy Chair: We're talking about health insurance coverage, period.

Mr. Chase: Yes, we are. And what pays for those operations? If you take them out of the public system, if you delist the number of things covered, then it's the insurance that picks up the difference, and that's what I am saying.

Mazankowski, in terms of insurance, suggested delisting a variety of services. What we have here in terms of the public insurance is not a great system right now in terms of Blue Cross, which is a public insurance, but at least there is some universality to it. When you bring in public and private, paid for at public expense, the mix, I do not believe, ends up with better results. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, while this appears to use the language of universality, it's saying: let's let hospitals compete for the public dollars through the public insurance system, and we're going to have that much of an improved system. If public funding wasn't provided for these private systems through public insurance, these private corporations could not exist.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm pleased to rise to speak on amendment A2, that the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere has tabled. He has moved that Bill 17, the Alberta Health Act, be amended in the last recital of the preamble by adding: “, namely, that health insurance coverage is publicly administered, comprehensive, universal, portable and accessible” after “Canada Health Act (Canada).” Why this amendment has been brought forward is very simple. It’s what Albertans have been telling us, what Albertans have been asking for.

We’ve had the honour and the privilege to travel this great province, and over the last eight months, I guess, since the 4th of January, when I left the Conservative government and joined the Wildrose, I have spoken to thousands and thousands of Albertans and have had the ability to talk to many health care professionals in the system. I mean, we’ve talked to doctors, nurses, LPNs, NAs; you name it. The minister of health talked a couple of weeks ago about all of the people that he has spoken to, and he went on about talking to the emergency physicians, and he even spoke to the janitors. I guess our comment to that when he said that was: well, you can talk all you want, but have you listened?

That is something that I’m hearing throughout this province. While it’s easy to travel the province and say you’ve visited this and you’ve visited that and you’ve done this and you’ve done that, a whirlwind tour of going into hospitals or a meeting with nurses or doctors or anything like that takes good listening skills to hear what they have to say.

You know, Mr. Chairman, we can see what good listening skills the government has by the recent developments with the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark and where he’s sitting now, on this side with the opposition, as an independent, and not sitting where he should be sitting as health advocate for the people that voted for him and asked him to serve.

Mr. Chair, Albertans want access to the health care that they need. They don’t want and they have told us that they don’t want a U.S.-styled health care system that leaves millions uninsured. We’ve seen what’s been happening lately in the United States with what President Obama is trying to do and changes to the health care system there, and you can certainly see the reaction that he got by the recent election and some of the resounding defeats that some of his candidates that were running faced.

We have a place in the States, and as soon as you get into the States or you’re at the grocery store or you’re at the restaurant or you’re golfing or whatever, they seem to know you’re from Canada, and they want to talk to you about the health care system, what we have versus theirs. As a Canadian and an Albertan I was quite proud of our health care system until recently, when you see the long lines that we’re facing in our health care system and the long waits in the emergency, where the debate has been quite heated as of late in regard to what is happening in our emergencies. I can tell you as someone who has had a few health problems lately that waiting 18 months to get into a specialist when you’re really not sure what’s going on isn’t what I call fun, and I know that I’m not alone. I mean, I have constituents waiting three years for a procedure. While it might be a test, it’s still an important test to see if they’re cancer free.

So it’s critical that any proposed health reforms that we bring forward – and we have brought our health policy forward as the Wildrose caucus. The health insurance coverage is exactly what the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere has said, that it comply with the five key principles of the Canada Health Act. It talks about mainly that health insurance coverage is publicly administered, comprehensive in scope, universal, portable among provinces, and accessible.

I look at this fine province, you know, and we can have this continuous debate, if we want, about private health care. I sometimes get a stunned look on my constituents’ faces when we talk and I tell them that the clinic next door to my constituency office is a private clinic. The doctors are private. They’re there, obviously, to make some money. People keep saying: oh, we don’t want to go into private. Well, I guess if that’s truly where Albertans want to go, then we really have to look at our doctors’ offices, et cetera, because there’s that element of private, and it’s no different than anything else that you and I can face on a daily basis.

What Albertans want is timely access. They want to be able to have a family doctor when they need a family doctor. They want it publicly administered. My colleague from Airdrie-Chestermere talked about the incident that we’ve seen with HRC, a private facility, publicly funded, and providing a service for Calgarians of hip and knee replacement at 40 per cent less. You think about that, and, yes, they do make a profit, but, yes, they’ve taken all of the fat that you would probably see in the publicly funded hospital and gotten rid of that.

We did have the opportunity to visit that facility and talk to the patients that had their hip or knee replaced and talk about the planning, not only getting the surgery. Then they were working immediately with a physiotherapist. They were working with a dietitian. Their whole health was treated not only through the surgery procedure but in looking after them and getting them up and walking and running. Then, you know, their dietary needs because in some of the cases where we saw some of the hip replacements, we would have a patient that had a problem being overweight, so really that needed to be addressed.

The hon. member talks about the comprehensiveness, the universal, to be portable, to be accessible, which leads us back to the Health Act and one of the many amendments that we’re going to bring forward on the Health Act. This bill goes on under “whereas” to also talk about reasonable access to timely and appropriate care, including primary care, but at no time anywhere does this bill address what they consider reasonable access to timely and appropriate care. So I think that is a key element that we’re going to be talking about.

It’s unfortunate that there are some special-interest groups out there and political parties that have used what I consider scare tactics. I think that the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere bringing this amendment forward makes it very clear where we stand as the Wildrose, that we’re not looking at getting into what everybody says is a U.S.-styled health care system or, for that matter, that we’re going to start privatizing here and there. I can tell you that probably the most effective and sustainable and patient-centred health systems in the world, quite frankly, aren’t found in Canada, and they’re not found in the United States. We’ve heard our leader talk about western European countries such as France, Australia, Belgium, Germany, and Switzerland, which all deliver world-class universal public health care systems. Then you hear the opposition standing up, and the Premier especially talking in his theatric style, that we get accused of, about what’s happening in Europe and the tax stuff and things like that.

The Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, obviously, when he travelled this province on this consultation process, heard very much about, as he’s told us, what Albertans want to see in this act. I commend them for taking the time to travel, and I’m sure that I look forward to him standing up and speaking about this particular amendment because I can tell you – I would guarantee it – that we have had people attend some of those consultation processes that he did who talked about the health insurance coverage that is publicly administered and comprehensive, universal, portable, and accessible. Enshrining this, I think, in legislation sends a very clear, articulate message to Albertans that this is what we believe in, that this is what we think is one of the things. If we're going to go to the bother of Bill 17, the Alberta Health Act – quite frankly, it's not one of our priorities. I can tell you as an MLA since 1993 that I don't recall anybody ever coming into my office talking about a health charter, but that's for another day and another conversation and probably another amendment.

With those few words, I'm going to ask members in the House that are here tonight to support amendment A2, as you've referred to it.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I appreciate the opportunity on behalf of members of our caucus to speak to the amendment as proposed by the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere. A couple of things, and I'm going to speak strictly to what's on the page here as opposed to getting into a discussion of alternate financing approaches to health care systems and some of the other areas that have been explored by earlier speakers.

Initially, to try to determine the intent of the amendment, when the amendment was first distributed, Mr. Chair, I interpreted the purpose as being to add clarity to the particular clause by specifically enumerating the principles that appear in the Canada Health Act today. I suppose that if, in fact, that is the purpose that I'm to interpret from the hon. member, there may be some merit in doing that.

In fact, in consideration and in discussions on our side of the House prior to this bill being drafted, we did look at the question of going to this level of specificity. I guess we rejected it primarily for two reasons, Mr. Chair. First of all, should we choose to list these principles in the statute, assuming this bill is passed, we may run into a situation in the future where the Alberta Health Act, as it may be passed, is in fact not in alignment with the Canada Health Act should something change in the Canada Health Act in the future. That would be, obviously, one reason that we would not want to consider this, and it's a reasonable and prudent approach to drafting legislation.

The second, of course, is just the question of whether the amendment specifically as proposed, again leaving aside all of the other, unrelated discussion about other approaches to health care delivery in other systems, provides any measurable increase in value in the statute, should it be passed. We can't see that, Mr. Chair.

Notwithstanding some of the discussion that has been raised by other members, the premise of this bill is support for a fully publicly funded health care system in Alberta. It is based on the premise of our current single-payer model. To attempt to use this particular clause as a segue perhaps to other changes that people might want to propose in the future would simply be doing something that would be inconsistent with the overall purpose and intent of the legislation.

While I appreciate if, in fact, the original motive for the amendment was to offer some additional clarity on a specific clause, we can't support it, Mr. Chair, for the two reasons that I've just mentioned. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Boutilier: Yeah. Well, we couldn't disagree more with what the hon. member just said. My goodness. I can only say that the amendment put forward as a notice of amendment clearly is something that has incredible utility. For those who may not be aware, utility is usefulness with incredible value. That, in my judgment, is what the sole purpose is. I'm very disappointed that the member who has just been appointed the parliamentary secretary, I can only say, is . . . [interjections] There is value.

Perhaps one of the key principles that we have is: seek first to understand. I'm trying to understand the comments. I'm going to go back into the Hansard of what has been said by the new parliamentary secretary. From there, I look at this amendment. It appears that the governing side had looked at this amendment, but they thought that there is no value to it being publicly administered. They believe there's no value to comprehensive, universal, portable, and accessible, after the words of the Canada Health Act. Thinking that there is no value to something like publicly funded under the Canada Health Act absolutely astounds me. Quite honestly, it's everything that Alberta and Canada stands for.

What the parliamentary secretary for health really implied was that they don't see any value in this amendment. To the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, I'm certain that must hurt your feelings.

Mr. Anderson: I'm crushed. I don't know what to do.

Mr. Boutilier: I know – I have confidence – that you will, without question, build up and recover from the comments of this new parliamentary secretary for health.

Adding in the preamble “namely, that health insurance coverage is publicly administered”: this level of detail is required in order to be comprehensive, in order to be universal, in order to be portable and accessible, after the Canada Health Act. The new parliamentary secretary for health, appointed after the doctor got kicked out by his caucus members, says that this has no value. That is beyond comprehension. [interjection] To the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, through the chair, I can only say this. If you think there is no value in the Canada Health Act, then I couldn't disagree with you more because it actually stands for a value and a principle of Alberta.

I must admit that we saw that action today when, of course, we saw them kicking one of their own out. I must say that about a year ago, after I got kicked out for representing my constituents, senior citizens, on their health – they also are very concerned about health. I always give many of the members on the other side the benefit of the doubt that if I had been provided with the opportunity to go to a caucus to explain my situation, they would have understood. They had the opportunity to understand the member, the doctor, but what did they do? It was unanimous.

I can only say that I always had thought that if I had been provided the opportunity by the leader of this government, members on the other side would have listened intently. When I hear comments from people such as the Member for Red Deer-North or Red Deer-South – I'll have to be corrected; I don't know which it is – I'm disappointed that they say: you don't know the whole story. Well, I do know the whole story because the person is my friend. In fact, the very same comments that were made about me are the comments being made now by a member over there. I can only say that this, in terms of seniors, in terms of dealing with the health care of this province, is something that is so important. It's so important to a doctor that these members just kicked out, unanimously according to the whip, the Member for West Yellowhead.

I can only say to you that I had always granted the benefit of the doubt that if I had been given the opportunity, they would have listened. But you know what the comments are? “Oh, you just don't know the whole story.” I know the whole story and then some.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, let's get back to the amendment.

Mr. Boutilier: On the issue of this bill I want to be able to say: just put your hand on your chin and sleep. I can tell you, Mr. Chairman, that this is such an important amendment. We don't know the whole story? Well, I know something. You don't know the whole story of what Albertans think, but we are connected to what Albertans think, and they think right now that the disconnect between the bills that are in here by this government – thank goodness there is a saviour who is in here to be able to put amendments forward by the opposition, to be able to add some sanity to what is going on. [interjections] Mr. Chairman, through the chair, I'm trying to be able to speak.

The Deputy Chair: Well, talk to me. You have the floor. Talk to me.

Mr. Boutilier: I see the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud was laughing at my comments when I was speaking about the Canada Health Act and the fact that it has value.

Mr. Hancock: The fact that you talk about yourself as a saviour.

Mr. Boutilier: Excuse me. Through the chair. Mr. Chairman, if he wants to speak, it should be through the chair. [interjections]

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member has the floor, please.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I do have the floor, and I intend to have the floor a lot tonight. You know what? My elbows are getting quite sharpened tonight, and you ain't seen nothing yet because there is much more to come.

I want to say that I'm glad to see that the member across the way, when saying that we have no value – can you believe this? No value. It is absolutely unbelievable. No principles. I'm glad to see that the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster just realized. I might add that the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster just said: no principles. That's what concerns me. I can see that we have an agreement on something, that, yes, there need to be principles and values when decisions are made, Mr. Chairman. We saw some decisions made this afternoon. By the way, those decisions were unanimous. Unbelievable. Unbelievable.

I guess I can only go back tonight and talk to my wife and my three-year-old and say, "You know, Gail, I was thinking that if I had an opportunity to speak to caucus, they're reasonable-minded people," but clearly I have to say: who has no principles or values now?

I do know one thing for sure, that each and every one of us that sits in this Assembly represents people, 3.5 million people all across Alberta, that do have principles, and they do have values for things such as this very bill. I quote the amendment to Bill 17: by adding to the preamble "namely, that health insurance coverage is publicly administered." What does the new parliamentary secretary of health say? "We didn't think it had any value." The amendment says: "publicly administered, comprehensive." Also, it talks about: "universal, portable and accessible," after the Canada Health Act.

The comment across the way. Not even a parliamentary secretary for 24 hours, and he's saying: we don't think that has any value. Well, holy smokes. I can only say that there is some serious concern. As much as the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere might have hurt his feelings, he will get over this. I'm quite certain.

Mr. Anderson: I will.

Mr. Boutilier: I think he will. Wow, not a good start in the first 24 hours for the parliamentary secretary. As much as the member is not a doctor – and, my goodness, the experience of a doctor, I guess, is not really important any longer. I can only say today that it's clear to me from the drafting of this Bill 17 – and I want to thank the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere. In fact, I read in this newspaper today that they referred to him as a rock star. No doubt in my mind. Whoever made that comment was one smart person.

Mrs. Forsyth: It was me.

Mr. Boutilier: The critic in health, I understand, has had an important role to play in that.

I want to say that the administration of health is so important to our seniors, so important to the people of Alberta, and this actual amendment is one that I believe has incredible value, has a tremendous amount of utility. For those who don't know what utility means, that's usefulness and a lot of usefulness that can help Albertans.

So, Mr. Chairman, with that, I can only say that I endorse this amendment one hundred and ten per cent and then some.

I can only say tonight that as I look across the way and see who's sitting in the Premier's chair right now, I'm not sure if I need to be more worried or happy. Right now I don't know. Should I be worried, or should I be happy? I know I was happy when the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake sat in the Premier's chair.

But the question today is on the amendment, Mr. Chairman. I will be supporting this amendment because it talks about the principles and values. I'm so pleased that the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster actually agreed with those very principles that I'm speaking about, so it's obvious to me that this member will be supporting the amendment. I'll be looking for him to stand when this amendment is called for a vote, and I will go back in Hansard to see his comments.

To the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud, Mr. Chairman, who actually earlier today spoke in front of teachers who actually got a question – actually, he made reference to an Albertan who said: well, that's a very clever way of asking a question, with three or four questions rolled into one. But I actually, within reason, somewhat liked his response because his response had some principle and value. But for the members across the way and the new parliamentary secretary of health to say that it has no value and that this detail is not important is just unacceptable. To that individual member I would only say to govern yourself accordingly with your words when it comes to such important matters as health because, ultimately, there is nothing more sacred to this country and to this province.

I'll even provide an opportunity for him to retract his statement, considering that this amendment says: under the preamble adding, "namely, that health insurance coverage is publicly administered, comprehensive, universal, portable and accessible" after Canada Health Act, that we are very proud of as Canadians. Perhaps later this evening – I'm a gentleman – the new parliamentary secretary, who is less than 24 hours a parliamentary secretary appointed by this Premier, can retract his comments, and I'm sure Albertans will forgive him.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I obviously will be speaking to this important amendment, and at this time I will take my seat. I know people would like me to speak more. I will speak more. Would you like me to speak more?

Mrs. Forsyth: More, yes.

Mr. Boutilier: I will speak more, Mr. Chair, then. I will speak more. In speaking more, it comes back to the framework of community capital. Tonight on the health issue I was posed the question, actually, from the media out in front, asking about the Canada Health Act. Did you know that the media, the CBC and other news agencies, are outside asking about the Canada Health Act? I didn't take the opportunity to say that the parliamentary secretary less than 12 hours on the job said that he didn't see any value in the amendment put forward by Airdrie-Chestermere. But that's okay. We'll provide him ample opportunity to retract those comments, and I'm sure the 3.5 million Albertans will forgive him in his first 12 hours. We'll just call him a newbie in terms of what he was doing and that he just simply wasn't quite aware of the lack of utility in the kind of comments that are being provided.

Mr. Chairman, let us restore the community capital of Alberta. Let us restore the harmony and the organic harmonization that is required when it comes to an amendment to such an important act as the Canada Health Act through this Bill 17. Having said that, Mr. Chairman, I would like to say that I hope all members will take the opportunity.

As a gentleman I'm quite certain that the member, the new parliamentary secretary, will retract his comments and move on to the important usefulness . . .

Mr. Anderson: He'll have to go back to his seat.

Mr. Boutilier: Yeah. He'll have to go back to his seat to speak.

Mr. Chairman, I hope that this amendment will go forward. I hope that this member who spoke earlier will be a reflective practitioner, will think about this and realize: oh, my goodness, it was kind of foot-in-mouth disease; ultimately, I will retract, and I will move on with the issue of caring for Albertans and caring for the health of Albertans, such as the principles and the values that are in the Canada Health Act.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. When I first looked at this amendment, Mr. Chair, I immediately put in my head that I thought that the conversation was going to be about actual insurance, how we have publicly administered, comprehensive, universal, portable, and accessible insurance. But the conversation seemed to switch over to the actual delivery. So I'd like to just, I think, address the insurance part and perhaps ask the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere to go back and perhaps look at the insurance part. Right now we have Alberta Health, which gets you something, but we also have Blue Cross.

Mr. Anderson: This is looking at it.

Ms Pastoor: Well, it's not really private, but it's more private.

When you talk about insurance coverage, are you talking about public insurance that everybody would be able to afford, or are you talking about over and above that, that the health insurance would be a private company even if it was bought with public dollars? Perhaps if I could ask the member to address the insurance side of it and not the care delivery side.

Mr. Anderson: Well, it's a good question. This is actually just taken out of the Canada Health Act. The Canada Health Act only deals with the coverage aspect, the public coverage, the public insurance aspect. It doesn't say anything about public delivery. Delivery is just not mentioned.

That's a critical distinction. That's what I was saying earlier. You have I would call it a misconception that in order to comply with the Canada Health Act, we need to have complete public delivery of health care. That's just not the case. A good example of this – and the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek mentioned it earlier – is just your doctor. When you go into your doctor's office, that's a completely private facility in most cases. I think there are some clinics and hospitals and places like that that would come under public. Essentially, they're all private facilities. They're bought with private money. It's a private professional corporation. It is private. So our entire primary care network, essentially, is private.

You know, we still have problems in the primary care network. Obviously, the issue there is that we have a huge shortage of doctors. But I don't think that's because of the fact that we have private doctors; it's the fact that we're not graduating enough folks and we have quite a brain drain for family doctors to the United States. We're not giving enough incentive salarywise to family docs to stay here. We're not getting these doctors that are coming from foreign countries like India, for example, credentialed. There's some great medical talent that comes out of India and China and the Middle East. They come to our borders, and, you know, they're driving taxis instead of getting the certification they need and practising.

That's not an issue of privatization being the problem. In fact, primary care is actually in much better shape than our hospital care. It's in much better shape. There's just a shortage, and that's being caused, again, by mismanagement of government choking up the supply of doctors. A lot of that, too, I think, is intentional choking of the supply of doctors because they know they can't afford to pay. They're spending so much money in the other areas of health care that it's just ruining our ability to retain the family doctors that we need.

Part of that problem comes from fiscal mismanagement. I mean, you look at the contracts that have been signed. We're the worst offenders here. We tied our wages to the weekly wage index. Of course, if you do that, it's only fair that if you're going to pay a bunch of politicians according to that, you have to have that weekly wage index tied to our nurses' salaries, our doctors' salaries, and all of our public unions' salaries. I mean, it's only fair.

Ms Pastoor: People on AISH.

Mr. Anderson: Yeah. Well, they need all the help they can get, though, with regard to money, right?

I think it's unreasonable. The average weekly wage index, which is causing a lot of these problems: I mean, we've got to reassess that because we can't continue to jack up salaries, including, of all people, politicians' salaries. We set the tone. I can see it going up with inflation, but the average weekly earnings index goes way above that in most cases, and it's causing major problems.

I remember the hon. House leader talking today about his deal there with the School Boards Association. He was saying how even in a recession the teachers' hike in salaries next year is on pace to be 4 and a half per cent, even with the revenue issues. So they're going to have another issue where they've signed an incredibly irresponsible contract that's going to have to result in cuts or breaking of the contract. Either way it is completely unacceptable, but that's the position they put themselves in by setting this reckless precedent of tying things to the average weekly wage index. It just doesn't work because it takes into account overtime, and it takes into account all the big salaries of high-income earners, businessmen and so forth. It's just not a fiscally responsible way to run your system.

That goes for us, too. We should set the tone. If anything, we should freeze our salaries as we've done for the last two years. Of course, what was it, a 34 per cent raise before that? So that's about 11 per cent per year increase. Maybe if we froze ours and then kept everyone else's increases just to the rate of inflation, we'd be in much better shape.

My point in going there is just that we are our own worst enemy with regard to public health care. One of the reasons we have to turn to a lot of these alternative models is because we've made public health care so expensive. So that's why we really have to assess that. We have to get our public health care system working again. Privatization or private delivery has a role, but it will always be somewhat of a limited role. If we don't fix the public aspect of the system, then we're in a heap of trouble. Not only that, but if we don't fix it, you know, it's just not going to be able to compete with other systems around the world, let alone private deliverers within our own borders.

We've got to fix that system. Part of that is curbing and controlling our health care costs, not recklessly throwing money away as the former minister of health, who's mostly been responsible for the ejection of this member and the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. He's a one-party wrecking crew. It's a self-destruction button; just push him, and you'll get party self-destruction. Anyway, he's caused a lot of issues in our education system, our health system. Hopefully, he'll be a little more merciful on the Energy ministry.

Aside from that, getting back to the amendment, the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity brought up some things. We'll have to agree to disagree on this stuff. He cites a whole bunch of facts about HRC, fact after fact. Look, I'm getting my facts from the Alberta bone and joint institute, which is an objective, nonpartisan group that is funded by AHS. I don't know where that hon. member is getting his stats; he didn't put them out there. I believe my sources, which are publicly available, are far more – until I see what his sources are, I don't think there's an argument. There's no doubt they were doing it 30 to 40 per cent cheaper, 30 to 40 per cent faster and that it was as good a service. So I don't know where he's getting that.

He cited the issue of the United Kingdom. The fact is that the United Kingdom is actually doing exactly what we're advocating for. They're introducing more competitive delivery on the delivery side. He was saying that they're moving in the opposite direction. That's just categorically not true. Under Prime Minister Cameron they are clearly moving in this exact direction. I mean, it's literally moving in the direction of more competitive delivery, bringing in more private and nonprofit to compete with the public system, and hopefully tendering out contracts, open tendering contracts, and hopefully there will be good competition for those contracts.

The other thing, too. It's funny. The Wildrose isn't even going as far as what they do in these liberal social democracies like Sweden, Luxembourg, France, these places. We're not even talking about going that far. In those systems they have competitive delivery of publicly funded health services. They have that, but they also have an entire parallel, two-tier system where if you've got the money, you can go and pay for a service at a private clinic.

Now, a very small percentage of the population does that, but we're not even going that far. Look; all we're saying is that the public, the nonprofit, and the private guys should compete for the public dollars for patients. It's such a small, incremental step. If we could do that and maybe get costs under control and bring in more private and nonprofit investment, it would go a long way. Maybe we don't need to go any further. Maybe that fixes things. Maybe we can get the public sector competitive again and make sure that wages are competitive across the board and make sure that unions are involved and are actually stakeholders and they're driving change from within.

I mean, if you look at the case study of Sweden, the nurses union over there has been one of the biggest drivers of innovation and change within the public system. They're competing with the private system, but they've brought in a lot of the innovation. They've found that it actually gives them more options because they've got more than one place that they can bargain with and work at. It gives the workers more options, and they've been a huge driver of change. I don't underestimate the ability of our public-sector unions to actually be drivers of change, but we need to have them compete with private industry and private deliverers of health care and nonprofit deliverers of health care. It will make the system much, much stronger. Now, I want to make it clear where – well, here's another one. We talked about the docs' offices in the United Kingdom.

I want to make sure with regard to this amendment – and I do disagree with the new parliamentary secretary. You know, I do have respect for the hon. member. He's very well meaning. We don't see eye to eye on some things, obviously, but I think he was being as honest and straightforward as he could as to why they don't like this amendment. I think it was because they didn't see utility. It'd just be repeating itself. Maybe the Canada Health Act would change over time.

I would ask him: why would we want to cede our autonomy provincially? We have provincial autonomy to say no. What if they change the Canada Health Act, hon. member, to say that not only must it be publicly insured and universal, accessible, and all that good stuff, but what if they also say that it must all be publicly delivered now? If they say that, then that means we would have to put all of those private doctors and their private clinics under the umbrella of the public system. We shouldn't cede our autonomy. We should be able to say: "No. When we passed this bill, the Canada Health Act said these five things, and that's what we were talking about. We'll have to think about whether we're going to bring those other things into this act."

I don't think it's wise to cede our autonomy in that way. We're a big province. We're the third largest economy in the country. Surely, we can decide the rules by which health care will be administered. We've chosen as a province. All parties have agreed that we want to comply with the Canada Health Act and what's under the Canada Health Act. But if there is a coalition, NDP-Liberal-Bloc, government and if they were to bring in some very shackling legislation, which banned the public delivery . . . [interjection] That's right. Some would call it shackling. Some would call it innovative. That's right.

If they were to do that, we should be able to say: "You know what? No, we're not doing that. We're not going to include that in our health act because that's not an Alberta value. We do believe in competition. We believe in competitive delivery. That's what we're going to do."

I do want to say that there's no alternative motive here. These are the words that are in the Canada Health Act. The Member for Calgary-Varsity seemed to suggest this is some kind of privatization-by-stealth move here. But, of course, that's just simply not the case. These words are exactly from the Canada Health Act. These are the five principles that we're citing here. I don't see how this does any harm. It clarifies it. It entrenches. It says: look, we have the autonomy as a province to make these decisions. I think that it would be a good amendment to remind people about what we're talking about, that health insurance coverage must be publicly administered, comprehensive, universal, affordable, and accessible. I think that's a very good way of putting it.

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

Now, I'll put a few more issues on the record about this, hopefully in the time I have left before I have to sit down. But maybe you could pop up and give me a chance to finish it off because it's just two pages.

Mr. Boutilier: I think I probably could.

Mr. Anderson: It's not much.

Alberta's health care system – and this is about this amendment, about the public nature of it – has arrived at a critical crossroad. Despite massive annual increases in health spending, waiting lists are at all-time highs, patients are left languishing in emergency rooms for hours and sometimes days, finding a family physician is increasingly difficult, and many seniors actually find it impossible to secure the care that they so desperately need.

The PC government continues to mismanage health care. They have squandered millions of dollars on executive health salaries and bonuses for chronic underperformance. They've centralized control of health care in a massive health superboard bureaucracy that has been unresponsive to local needs. They have broken contracts with our most effective health care providers, subjected our health care professionals to intimidation and censorship – boy, did we ever see an example of that – and misallocated billions of dollars on projects that are unable to open due to unavailable operating funds and staff shortages.

To be clear, once patients actually gain access to our system, our doctors and nurses provide treatment that is second to none. However, being forced to wait weeks, months, and sometimes years for access to needed health treatments is not health care. It is a prison sentence that thousands of Albertans are suffering through each and every day.

Alberta's health care system can be fixed, but we cannot continue to allow the PC government to repeat the same flawed strategies and expect different results. Reforming health care will take honest and principled leadership. It will take a new government working cooperatively with Albertans and health care professionals to do what is necessary to build a health care system that puts Albertans first, and we believe the Wildrose is ready to be that government.

Albertans want access to the health care they need. Albertans do not want a U.S.-style health care system that leaves millions uninsured. It is critical that any proposed health reforms for our province comply with the five – that's what we're talking about – key principles of the Canada Health Act as per this amendment; namely, that health insurance coverage is publicly administered, comprehensive in scope, universal, portable among other provinces, and accessible.

Unfortunately, many special-interest groups and political parties have used the obvious flaws inherent in the U.S. health care system to actively scare many Albertans into resisting critically needed health reforms. This has resulted in one of the least accessible, least flexible, and most expensive health care systems in the developed world.

The fact is that the most effective, sustainable, and patient-centred health systems in the world are not found in Canada or the United States. They are found in western Europe. Countries such as France, Austria, Belgium, Germany, and Switzerland all deliver world-class, universal public health care to their citizens, and they do this while spending less per person on health care than we do. These countries and others are able to accomplish this by fostering a culture of patient choice and accountability and providing competition within their publicly funded health system.

We cannot continue to allow the voices of the status quo to keep our province from doing what so badly needs to be done. Failure to change our direction on health care will result in a bankrupt system with ever-growing wait times and increasingly poor health outcomes. Albertans deserve better.

A Wildrose government would implement the following principles to ensure Albertans have timely access to health care. As per this amendment we would uphold the five key principles of the Canada Health Act; namely, that health insurance coverage is publicly administered, comprehensive, universal, portable, and accessible. We would foster a culture of patient choice and competition by giving Albertans the right to use their public insurance to obtain needed treatment at the public, private, or nonprofit health provider of their choosing, and we would look to model Alberta's health care system after successful European systems that have substantially shorter waiting lists and higher patient satisfaction while maintaining universal health insurance coverage for all.

Here are some more concepts for you. Canada has the fourth-largest per capita health spending in the world – in the world – but it ranks near the bottom of the OECD nations in results. Almost every single European country has better results with regard to waiting lists, accessibility, number of family doctors per person, et cetera, et cetera, et cetera, with less spending than we do. Even with its elderly population – they have one of the oldest populations on the planet – Japan also has a much better system despite spending one-half of what we do on health care. We have to fix the system.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Boutilier: The chairman, I thought, might have forgotten where I came from.

The Acting Chair: No. I would never do that.

Mr. Boutilier: In light of the fact that we actually sat next to each other for a period of time, I'm glad to see that I've left an impression.

Mr. Chairman, on the amendment that has been put forward, I want to say that the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere once again has brought up and highlighted some very important points that we need to really examine. Really, as we look here, I think it's important to recognize that Albertans do deserve better, so let's harness our energy together to determine how we can do better.

How do we better? Well, we change this very legislation that's being proposed. How do we do it? We deal with these amendments because these amendments are going to in fact deal with the ultimate principle. It's going to deal with the values that Albertans have. I know that Albertans truly and clearly recognize the importance of getting it right the first time. But this is not the first time. This is not the second time. This is not the third time. This is not the fourth time. This issue has been going on for years, so this provides an opportunity, and very seldom is there an opportunity placed in front of us.

I might say that getting it right is important, in my judgment. How would I describe it? It's a critical situation because the situation we're in today is so critical. None of us want to see any of our family face what we're witnessing taking place today. This amendment and the umbrella that falls under it is all about the fact that we need to decentralize. We need to move away from this Pravda, the idea of a centralized health care system. We have witnessed first-hand that the health board as it exists today is not working, so consequently it has to be changed. It has to be decentralized. When I talk about decentralized, with each passing week it becomes increasingly clear that the PC government's decision to place control of health care delivery in the hands of a massive, centralized superboard has been one big mother of a mistake. What has been lost is the community capital.

You see, the law of the farm says that there are no quick fixes. You have to plant a seed. You have to hoe the land. You have to fertilize it. And, ultimately, then you will reap the harvest in the fall. But in the law of the school it says that you can pull an all-nighter, or you can go ahead and ignore the community capital of people. You can ignore the ideas of communities across Alberta.

We have over 360 communities across Alberta that are being ignored under this proposed bill. That should not happen because we believe that the Canada Health Act and the important principles that are in the Canada Health Act and that are in the amendment that we are putting forward tonight will do a major enhancement to what we believe is already a flawed bill. What we're really trying to do is to stop the hemorrhaging in a seed that's been planted wrong.

As we till the land, as we water our crop to allow it to grow, the unfortunate issue is that it doesn't work in terms of from the sky down. By that, the sky down, I'm specifically referring to the example of the CEO of the health superboard, which is an oxymoron in itself. There's nothing super about it. It's just one big superfailure.

We have other solutions. Our amendments that we're putting forward are about those solutions because Albertans deserve no less. Decentralizing health care is so critical. Ensuring that the flexibility that we have to harness the energy of good ideas from within communities is critical so that these ideas, what I call community capital, are never lost. Right now under the existing centralized system they are being lost. Clearly, the CEO of the superboard and the chairman of the board, who were in fact appointed by the former minister of health – and, wow, we've seen his actions. I diplomatically use the word “gibberish,” but there's more than gibberish in there.

I can only say that we have lost the community capital. We do not support centralized bureaucracy. Albertans are ultimately being put in a situation where they're being embarrassed by a system that has failed miserably, yet we have put in so much money. The Canada Health Act and the amendment that we have under Bill 17 really achieve important principles, important principles that should never be forgotten.

With that community capital comes a better crop, a better crop that right now is being ignored. We're not watering the system. Well, actually, if you consider the money we spend, there's lots of watering going on, but unfortunately the watering is being lost. It's not grabbing hold to the crop that is so important in reaping a good harvest.

Mr. Chairman, I say that the amendment that's being put forward by the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere is an important one. You know why? Because it's a new idea. After 39 or 40 years new ideas don't come often. Did you know that? New ideas don't come often after 39 or 40 years. But this amendment really is about not just a new idea; it's a new energy. It really is talking about amendments that are required in order to achieve the best care for Albertans. Therefore, I believe that this new idea, this amendment, has to be fed, and I'm feeding it right now. It has to be nurtured, and I'm nurturing it right now. It has to be given an opportunity to grow. This amendment is an opportunity for everyone across the way, even if this government has been in power for 39, almost 40 years.

Maybe it is old and tired. Yes, it is old and tired. I can see that by some of the closed eyes I see across the way.

Having said that, Mr. Chairman, I will endure because I'm willing to stay here all night long to feed it, to nurture it, to allow it to grow. That is the new idea of this amendment. Allow it the opportunity to grow. It's called the law of the farm. Rather than the law of the school, of pulling an all-nighter, we want the law of the farm, where there are no quick fixes, where you have to seek first to understand that you have to plow, you have to nurture, you have to fertilize, you have to water, and then with sunshine the idea will grow.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that centralizing the administration and delivery of core social programs does not work. Let me repeat: it does not work. I'm glad to see that some eyelids have been opened again. Eyelids are being opened; perhaps maybe ears would be opened. In fact, it's my hope that even when Q-tips have gone in to clean, they don't fall in; they actually, in fact, clean as opposed to falling in.

Having said that, Mr. Chairman, I believe that if we centralize control of all food production and delivery in the hands of bureaucrats at the Legislature, long lines, high prices, and shortages will inevitably result. Health care is no different. In fact, Albertans deserve better. In fact, they will get better when it comes to a Wildrose government, and that is a government who is right-thinking. I see members across the way are shaking their heads in agreement. That's nice to see, but I have to say that the door is closed. The door is closed.

I can only say this afternoon and this evening, Mr. Chairman, on this amendment, that I believe that gradually decentralizing the delivery of health care is the answer: decentralizing the care services, tapping into that community capital, tapping in and harnessing that energy of new ideas and new type of nurturing and feeding and all of those things together. [interjections] Mr. Chairman, I have the floor? [interjections] Mr. Chairman, I have the floor?

The Deputy Chair: You have the floor. Keep talking.

Mr. Boutilier: I can't hear myself think with all the noise on that side.

The Deputy Chair: You have the floor. Talk to me.

Mr. Boutilier: Oh, okay. Well, I thought you would interject with the comments on that side, Mr. Chairman. Well, thank you for allowing me to continue. I couldn't hear with all the noise on that side.

Mrs. Forsyth: They were cheering for you.

Mr. Boutilier: They were cheering for me. Oh, I'm glad to see, so glad to see. I am so glad to see. Hallelujah.

Immediately, I think, in getting it right, we have to overhaul the bonus incentives. The minister of finance, who's sitting there with his head lodged on his chair. I'm glad to see that his feet are not up on his desk. I'm glad to see that there is not a cigar hanging out of his mouth, and I'm glad to see that there is no ponytail anymore. That is nice to see because in Alberta what is most important, Mr. Chairman, on this amendment is that we want to overhaul bonuses. Under the Canada Health Act amending what the hon. member has put forward tonight will really, without any question in my mind – and just allow me to comment on this amendment – provide an opportunity to ensure the utility and the value that is utmost to Albertans.

Albertans that I speak to in coffee shops – and, by the way, I'm proud to say that there's no gap in my community. There is no gap in my community because I'm in touch with my community members. They are my bosses. Perhaps others across the way might have forgotten who their bosses are, but I know who my bosses are. They're the people that elect me to give me my job, and then I proudly represent all of them in ensuring they get the best health care, the best service because they deserve no less.

On Bill 17 and the amendment that's been put forward, I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that the Alberta Health Act should be amended in the last recital of the preamble by adding, in my judgment, "namely, that health insurance coverage is publicly" – and let me say publicly, p-u-b-l-i-c-l-y . . . [interjections] I'm glad to see that the member from Bragg Creek and the Member for Lloydminster-Vermilion have been paying attention and they support me; they support the amendment. We will hold to account.

Actually, we saw both of them on television, both of them on television with the podiums the other night. There used to be a cartoon about it, but I thought: I want to use parliamentary language tonight. Consequently, I will withhold my comments, but if you want, I'll share with you later that issue. Oh, they've settled down a bit, Mr. Chairman, right now, and I appreciate the fact that they are listening intently.

Mr. Chairman, speaking to the amendment, I welcome free advice, but obviously they'll have to wait their turn on this important amendment. I can say to the member from Bragg Creek and the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, finance one and finance two, that maybe the idea of merging them together could save Albertans a whole lot of tax money in itself. That's a novel idea in itself. Combining those bureaucracies might be something that might be clever, taking the savings by merging Finance and Treasury Board together. On this amendment, under the Canada Health Act, it would mean that we'd save money that we can put back into the front-line services.

There you go, Mr. Chairman. I think I've silenced both of them because they don't want to lose their ministries or their fancy titles. Well, that's okay. Really, the people with the most important fancy title are the bosses, and that's the people of Alberta, that I haven't forgotten and that I will never forget. By the treatment of the only doctor on that side, it's clear to me that you have forgotten who – I shouldn't make a broad stroke. Some of you have forgotten.

Mr. Horner: You're a bitter man, Guy.

Mr. Boutilier: Now, to the member . . .

The Deputy Chair: Through me.

Mr. Boutilier: Hi, Mr. Chairman.

To the member with the white shirt, the Deputy Premier, I can only say that I look forward with interest to being on a panel where I teach, at the University of Alberta, with the hon. minister of advanced education on Friday because it is going to be quite a beautiful debate. [interjections] Oh, the member over from Red Deer . . . [interjections] Mr. Chair, I have the floor, don't I? On the amendment?

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, you have the floor. We're talking to the amendment, and talk to me. If you talk to me, the rest of it will settle down.

Mr. Boutilier: I am speaking to you, Mr. Chairman, and I wish you could control your friends across the way. Why they want to speak when I am speaking I don't know.

To the hon. member across the way who wanted to, I think, make a comment relative to my comment on the amendment, which is to Bill 17, I can only say this: there's more to the story, and I know what the rest of the story is. I'm sure we'll read about that in the days to come. [interjections] Yes. Oh, It seems like the Member for Red Deer-North is settling down now. I can only say that I will share with you the rest of the story. Yes, Mr. Chairman.

Please, I love the opportunity of being able to participate with such an interactive group tonight. To the Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert, I would like to say to him that in terms of educating, in fact, the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud this morning . . .

Dr. Morton: Through the chair.

Mr. Boutilier: Someone said: through the chair. I find that really quite interesting. Mr. Chair, with the utmost respect, everything I say is through you.

Having said that, I am without question convinced of the ideas that we are harnessing here in this amendment, the idea of taking new ideas, something that on that side they don't really have a lot of after 40 years in power. I embrace them to join us, the Wildrose, with this amendment because this amendment is respecting Albertans, the bosses. Not only is it respecting them in this amendment; it's saying that the Canada Health Act will be publicly funded and that it will ensure that the bill, that is a disaster, Bill 17 – we're trying to stop the bleeding. We're trying to stop the hemorrhaging by this amendment because we believe that, my goodness, I mean, there is going to be a requirement for amputations down the road based on what is happening in here.

I can only say that I look forward to the comments, Mr. Chairman, from all corners of this Assembly because I value opinions when it comes to how we can deliver an amendment that provides the best care and the best hope. Hope is such an important component of who we are, so let me share with you what that means: the hope of a better tomorrow, the hope of a stronger community, the hope of not having to stand in an emergency line for a day, and the hope that when you're in that line, you won't die. I'm speaking about facts based on what Albertans have talked to me about, and that, I believe, is an indictment of this existing government. For the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster to laugh at the fact that someone died, I don't think . . .

Mr. Snelgrove: We're laughing at you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo has the floor.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, sir. Mr. Chair, there's nothing funny about this situation. Health care is something that is important to all of us. I think every member in here wants the best health care system. It's unfortunate that the governing PC Party threw out the only doctor they had. He was connected to the people of Alberta.

Ms DeLong: Relevance.

Mr. Boutilier: Let me share with you the relevance since it's been asked for by the Member for Calgary-Bow. Let me share with you the relevance of a doctor because a doctor is not a knucklehead. A doctor knows what's going on.

Ms DeLong: Relevance.

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Chair, the member continues to say, "relevance." She's waving a white flag and saying: I surrender. That's what she's doing. There's no doubt in my mind that she should surrender. I'm glad to see she has her white flag.

Mr. Chairman, I want to say that they need to do the right thing. You need to immediately remove any clause in the current AHS code of conduct that might act as a deterrent to the ability of health care professionals to voice their ideas and concerns regarding health care.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak on the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: I'm sorry. Not on the bill, on amendment A2.

Ms Notley: Indeed. I was rising, in fact, to speak to this amendment.

This is an interesting amendment that the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere has put forward, that basically we add to the preamble of the Alberta Health Act the further explanation that the Canada Health Act includes that "health insurance coverage is publicly administered, comprehensive, universal, portable and accessible."

There have been comments made that this is superfluous or that it's unnecessary and that it's not required to have this language describing what the Canada Health Act stands for. Regardless of whether one thinks that that is or isn't accurate, I think it is pretty easy to understand what the impetus for this amendment is. I think it comes from sort of a desire to try and clarify and further describe what it is the government is trying to do with this piece of legislation. I think that it comes probably from sort of an inherent sense of distrust that has developed with respect to what the direction is that this government is going to follow in the future when it comes to the future of our health care system in Alberta.

There's good reason for that sense of distrust, and there's good reason for that sense of confusion. You know, let's face it. The history of this government in terms of its approach to health care over the last 10 or 15 years is one that has repeatedly attracted the ire and the distrust of Albertans concerned about maintaining the public components and the health of their public health system. I think that this must be, obviously, the impetus for this particular motion.

You know, I will say that one of the things that I'm concerned about with this act is that, in fact, in addition to the Canada Health Act most of the substantive protections against efforts to privatize through a variety of different strategies that have been considered by both this government and other advocates of private health care over the past 25 years are included not necessarily in the Canada Health Act but in the interplay between other provincial pieces of legislation either with each other or with the Canada Health Act.

One of the things that concerns me the most about this bill, actually, is that as much as we all talk about enforcing and trying to protect the principles of the Canada Health Act, as it stands right now, many of those principles are actually protected by these acts, all of which stand to be revised substantially by this government in what the minister has referred to as phase 2 of the legislative rewrite.

Of course, as this government's political stability has become more and more tenuous, the whole concept of phase 1 versus phase 2 developed. It became clear that they really didn't want to take on phase 2 before an election because Albertans were going to demonstrate the kind of distrust that we see reflected through the introduction of this particular amendment and that it would be very, very difficult for them to run in an election right after phase 2 of the legislative rewrite.

Instead, we have phase 1, and phase 1 talks about, you know, adhering to and respecting the principles of the Canada Health Act. But most people who have spent any time really looking at this issue understand that the matter is a great deal more complex than that and that what really needs to happen is that we need to do a much better job in our province as well as across the country but particularly in our province asserting the fundamental need to preserve public health care, public funding of health care, and public delivery of health care and that, in fact, health care itself needs to be properly defined and provided for.

There's so much complexity to this. We always have this conversation. What is health insurance? What is health care? What is it that we're actually providing to Albertans freely? Of course, we've already seen from this government efforts to reduce the scope of what it is that we provide with last year's delisting of gender reassignment surgery and also chiropractic services. I mean, people use the word "delisting," but delisting is just another way to privatize because you delist it, and then, of course, what has to happen is that people have to pay for it out of their pocket.

We had the introduction of delisting, and then the government's political fortunes took a little bit of a nosedive. I suspect there were probably larger plans to delist subsequent to those two little test balloons, and the government backed off on them. But that whole concept of delisting is another issue about ensuring that our health care is publicly administered. Different people argue over whether the language that's included in this particular amendment, that "health insurance coverage is publicly administered," means that it's actually publicly funded. I think that we all believe that it does, but the jury is still out in many respects.

You know, in a lot of ways I do understand what it is they are trying to get at with this amendment. I guess my concern is that I don't believe it gets them to where they want to go although I'm never sure, with all due respect, where exactly it is this particular group wants to go with health care. I remain somewhat concerned that there is perhaps a sincere but, I would suggest, misguided belief that the more we can expand private delivery and expand the opportunity for private-sector involvement in our health care system, the better off we will all be. Certainly, I will say right off that I do not agree with that.

It's interesting. We all know right now that as much as we have the Canada Health Act, which says what this amendment describes, we actually do right now in Canada and in Alberta pay at least 30 per cent of our public health care out of pocket. At least 30 per cent of the public health care that we receive now is something that is only given to Albertans on the basis of their ability to pay. It is the kind of thing that lower income Albertans do not have access to. We have differential access to public health care in Alberta as we speak. In fact, across the country but certainly in Alberta it's as bad as it is anywhere else and perhaps in some cases worse.

That, of course, doesn't even include the characterization of pharmaceutical prescription as health care. Well, prescription is health care, but the actual intake of pharmaceuticals is, in fact, the most common form of medical treatment now, and that is not for the most part publicly funded. Many, many doctors will talk about how many patients they have that have had their health care and their treatment compromised solely by their income. They cannot afford to access the treatment that the doctor recommends because treatment is pharmaceutical, and pharmaceutical is not publicly funded. That's just one example.

We also have the concern around sort of the continuum of care. What is treatment? Well, treatment is going to see a doctor in a hospital. Well, is that really the best way for treatment? It's actually the most expensive way, but of course people go there because it's the way you actually get it publicly funded. It probably would be a lot more helpful to have the services of a public health nurse, a dietitian, a physiotherapist at your home, miles and miles away from an emergency room. Unfortunately, most of that stuff is not publicly funded right now, so what happens is that people's health deteriorates, and they end up in the emergency room.

All of this is to say that I support in one way the intention behind this amendment because I do believe the intention is to provide certainty to a piece of legislation that has no certainty and to reach out to the Canada Health Act, which, we have all heard for years and years, serves as the foundation of our medicare system. I guess my concern is, as I've said, that many people who spend a bit more time working with this understand that, really, the primary protectors of our public health system are the provincial acts, which function underneath the authority of the Canada Health Act, and also the political jeopardy which arises whenever a government tries to expand the role of privately funded and, indeed, privately delivered health care.

There's nothing to be lost by supporting this amendment. Because I understand the reasons behind it, we're perfectly prepared to support this amendment. But I think that ultimately, even if passed, this amendment will not fix what is a fundamentally broken piece of legislation, will not fix this government's failure to look at the challenges within our health care system head-on and take the kind of decisions that are necessary to truly protect, preserve, and grow a healthy public health system of medicare in Canada.

You know, the newly appointed parliamentary secretary to the minister of health led a consultation across the province that formed the foundation for this piece of legislation. While there were, you know, certain general motherhood and apple pie statements that came from that consultation, I will say that in our caucus's own consultation, which preceded his cross-province tour – if I recall, there had been a plan on the part of the government to have an Edmonton-only, invitation-only sort of consultation process. Then we in our caucus chose to travel across the province, meeting with Albertans in open public-hearing forums, and we prepared our report. Subsequently the government decided to also have a slightly more open hearing process, which ultimately resulted in the report which forms the foundation for this act.

While we were out there, we heard from people about what needed to happen in health care. There were a lot of truly innovative ideas which really focused on strengthening the quality of care, increasing accessibility, increasing affordability, managing health care in a more effective way, all those kinds of things which I'm sure I'll have a chance to talk about when we talk about the bill in general, all the things that were included in our caucus's report entitled What Albertans Want, which is a report which includes about 25 sound recommendations for improving the scope and quality of health care and public health care, particularly in Alberta.

I would have loved to have seen, ultimately, this government at the end of their consultation at least having identified the fact that 30 per cent of our health care right now is privately funded. I would have wanted to have seen some comment about that, some guarantee that that percentage was not going to go up and, perhaps, even an effort on the part of government to bring that percentage down. But as much as they identified the fact that roughly 30 per cent of health care in Alberta is paid for out of pocket by those who can afford to and not received by those who cannot, in fact, they were silent on that issue, and I think that was a huge shortcoming.

I think that's really what it is that this amendment is trying to get at. It's to refocus the discussion on public funding of health care. Whether describing the Canada Health Act in more detail is necessarily the best way to get to that outcome, I don't know. Certainly, I believe that we need to do whatever we can to legislatively describe and secure the objective of increasing the percentage of health care provided in Alberta that is publicly funded and not privately funded.

Then, of course, I'm reminded as well that there's a whole other issue, which is the issue of public delivery, which I've talked about already. That's an administrative issue, but it's an issue that I think is so blatantly obvious as the best way to provide the most efficient, the most easily managed, and the most comprehensive system of health care that you make sure that as much of it as possible is publicly delivered. The whole notion of carving off pieces to private-sector groups, injecting the profit margins so that suddenly we have to somehow have a health care system that not only provides health care but also provides profits to the shareholders of the for-profit deliverers, to me, on the face of it, just defies common sense, the whole notion of how competition will somehow improve the quality. Well, no, it won't. What it will do is fracture the quality, fragment the quality, make it harder to manage, and ensure less control over the system. So I fundamentally disagree with the mover of this motion on that particular issue, but I'm sure we'll have lots of time to talk about that in more detail down the road.

Having said all that, I certainly think there's no harm to be done by providing more description of the Canada Health Act in this piece of legislation. I would just like as well in the future to see better work in this piece of motherhood and apple pie legislation, that would include something more substantive, which, in my view, would be a commitment to increase the amount of public funding for health care and the percentage of health care which, as I've said, is publicly funded and to reduce the need for people to pay out of pocket for their health care because that is a growing area in Alberta. The more you talk with people about what the pressures are in our health care system, you know, what the pressures are in our ER as well, one of the pressures in our ER is the lack of long-term care. Long-term care needs to be something that is clearly defined as part of our health care system and publicly funded.

Right now we've got sort of a dog's breakfast of arrangements for providing that care, for describing that care, for delivering that care, and for funding that care. Any given day you can have four people in a room talking about it, and they can all be talking about different things. I think in some cases the confusion is intentional. Regardless, that's an important, important component of our system of public health care, yet it remains singularly unaddressed through this legislation or even through their statement of principles within it, so I think that that's another thing that needs to be addressed. You know, you can sort of argue that perhaps you're taking the first step through supporting this amendment here.

With that, I think I will end my comments on this. I look forward to a great deal of more fruitful debate on the state of our health care system in terms of the theatrics that we've observed over the course of the last three or four weeks. I don't actually see the impassioned plea of our ER doctors as theatrics nor the unfortunate circumstances that they've described publicly and openly to Albertans as theatrics, but there's certainly no question that there's been a great deal more public attention paid to our health care system over the course of the last two or three weeks. So I anticipate having some good conversations and debates about that as well, given that I didn't get the opportunity to get up and speak during our emergency debate, which lasted for, I believe, 65 minutes or something like that. I also look forward to talking more about the kinds of solutions that we in the Alberta NDP need to see aggressively pursued by this government in order to ensure the absolute greatest level of health for the greatest number of Albertans at the least cost to them.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's with interest that I rise to participate in the debate on amendment A1.

The Deputy Chair: A2.

Mr. MacDonald: Oh, yes. A1 was defeated, of course. Amendment A2, proposed by the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Certainly, I listened with interest to the comments, particularly the comments from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, who explained why the government at this time was not keen on this proposed amendment. I heard from the hon. members. The hon. members from the Wildrose are sensitive about the perception or the ideas that Albertans have regarding their position on public health care. I think this is a political amendment – there's no doubt about that, Mr. Chairman – to soften or to try to change the image that Albertans have or the questions that Albertans have regarding the hon. members' party and the direction that they may want to take with health care and the health care delivery system.

I have, quite frankly, reservations about the motives of this amendment. It certainly looks good, and it would not hurt, certainly, to have added after "Canada Health Act" in the last recital of the preamble of Bill 17 the fact that "health insurance coverage is publicly administered, comprehensive, universal, portable and accessible."

I have trouble, I must confess, Mr. Chairman, keeping track of all the committees that this government has struck over the years to have a look at public health care and what should be done, what needs to be done, and what could be done. It's quite odd that in the midst of this debate or discussion we're having on health care, of all the reports and all the committees that were struck, there was never a report done, a cost-benefit analysis done of the consolidation into Alberta Health Services from the nine regions and the Alberta Mental Health Board and the Alberta Cancer Board to determine if (a) costs could be controlled and (b) if it would improve service. There was never an internal study done by this government, nor was there an external study done.

There were lots of consultants hired. I'm looking at some information in the blue books, in the public accounts, about consultants and this government's use of consultants. Not only were there a lot of reports presented by committees that were struck, but there were also these external consultants. McKinsey & Company comes to mind, Mr. Chairman. They had some very, very good ideas. I rather doubt that they had any input into the drafting of this Bill 17. I rather doubt that they had any input into including in this section that "health insurance coverage is publicly administered, comprehensive, universal, portable and accessible," as is suggested by the hon. member, but certainly in the discussion about principles for renewed health legislation. I mean, it's a cottage industry. Sometimes I wonder if any of these reports have ever been read by government members.

I was waiting for my turn to speak on this amendment, and I was reading some of the work that was done. I didn't get an opportunity to look it up, but I'm going to go on the record, and if I'm wrong, I will stand corrected by one of the hon. members across the way. Certainly, in the last period of time – I'm going to say less than two years – McKinsey & Company has invoiced the taxpayers of this province for at least $1.4 million for reports. Now, were those reports considered when this bill was drafted? I would have to reluctantly say no. Did the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere read those reports? Did he think to himself that maybe, just maybe, this is what the government had in mind, and they overlooked it? That could be a reason for his amendment, but I rather doubt it.

I think it's a political reason, Mr. Chairman, that this particular party – and he's very proud of them, and that's certainly his right. We do know that their public suggestions on health care are contrary to what mainstream Alberta is thinking. Mainstream Alberta is sick and tired of this government. They see through this bill. This amendment is certainly not going to repair the bill to the point where Albertans are going to say: "Okay. This is really what we need, the Alberta Health Act." They're not going to get fooled again.

What Albertans really want and what is not in this bill are some ideas on how we can improve public health care delivery, how we can shorten wait times, how we can eliminate a lot of the chaos and confusion that occurs in emergency rooms. This is what people want. They don't want a public relations exercise, which is this Alberta Health Act. I can see the hon. member's sincerity, his earnest effort to improve this bill. Maybe it was overlooked, but we have to look at this. We have to look at all of the discussions that have occurred.

One of the committees that was struck, the Minister's Advisory Committee on Health: its conclusion is Bill 17. The terms of reference for the committee: as I understand it, there were two principles at the start of the discussion. One was that the public health system will serve the interests of all Albertans regardless of their ability to pay, and access to publicly funded health care services is to be fair and effective. Now, another way of describing these principles is patient centred, publicly funded, and accessible, which the hon. member certainly covers in his amendment. Albertans along with other Canadians value the national framework of health services available on the basis of need, not ability to pay, linking provincial health systems with the principles of the Canada Health Act.

What about quality and safety as principles? A focus on wellness? Well, it's quite interesting. I don't have – I should, but I don't, and I apologize, Mr. Chairman – handy some of the comments that the leader of the Wildrose Alliance has made regarding health care and what she and their party would like to do. It would fit into some of the comments that have been made in the past by some of the government members, not all government members but some. That, in my view, is the reason for this amendment.

When we look at the health care system and keeping it consistent with the Canada Health Act, it must include the principles of public administration, comprehensiveness, universality, portability, and accessibility, and that's again mentioned in the amendment. Maybe we should have it there. I'm not convinced this bill is necessary, but I may listen to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford on this because I'm not so sure that we need that. If it would satisfy the Friends of Medicare, if it would satisfy the many citizens from our constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar who are very, very concerned about the direction this government is going with health care, I would support the amendment.

I'm torn, actually, Mr. Chairman, between the effort of the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere and the comments earlier from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford regarding this amendment. What I do know and would like to repeat to all hon. members is that health care is what Albertans want this House, want this Legislative Assembly to fix. They know the system has been run into the ground by this government. We have seen countless managers come and countless managers go. We have seen ministers. Now, I'm not going to start counting up the members of that front bench who have had a time as minister of health. Certainly, there's the current Minister of Energy, the current Government House Leader, and the Minister of Education, and there's the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Mr. Snelgrove: Don't forget about us back here.

Mr. MacDonald: They have not been in health care, Minister, that I'm aware of.

And we have the Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek. So that's four. I could be missing one; I'm not sure. I could never count up the deputy ministers that have come over the years to Public Accounts. But these are reasons why Albertans in good health or in bad, retired or still working consider this government's management of the health care system a total failure. A total failure.

Now, when we compare their management style, Mr. Chairman, it would be safe to say that we have a minister of finance who is contemplating a different pension system. Meanwhile, we have this lavish pension system for health care managers, in some cases $22,000 a month for life, indexed. Yet we can have these pensions for these individuals . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, what does that have to do with the health insurance coverage, with this amendment? Please stick to this amendment.

Mr. MacDonald: I am definitely sticking to this amendment, Mr. Chairman. If you could allow me to finish, you would certainly see where I'm going with this.

The Deputy Chair: Get to the point.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Okay. I certainly will.

Now, it's another example of the mismanagement and the double-talk of this government. In one case we want to restrict and limit pensions for some people, but in other cases individuals who have been running up massive deficits, ruining public confidence in the health care system – and this bill and this amendment are not going to restore, whether we vote for it or not, public confidence in the health care system, because it's been damaged by the mismanagement of this government, totally damaged. There's nothing I can do about that, Mr. Chairman. I know certain members across the way may not appreciate that, but that's how it is.

Citizens are sick and tired. I was waiting for my turn to speak to this amendment, and I couldn't believe some of the comments I was reading on the Internet regarding the latest shenanigans of this government. I couldn't believe it.

Now, this amendment and how it will be reflective of the Canada Health Act: whether it's in there or not, I don't think it's going to make a lot of difference to this bill. Maybe it will. I think that people who understand and appreciate what public health care means and how we're protected by the Canada Health Act will see the efforts of the hon. member and say: okay. They will also see the veiled attempt by this overall legislation that the government is trying to work through here, and that attempt is a public relations exercise to say: "Hey, we're doing something. Finally, we're doing something."

This act, this bill, this amendment is not what Albertans want, Mr. Chairman. What they want are some reasonable solutions to fix the long wait times in emergency rooms. They want to see acute-care beds used in hospitals for those who are in need. It should not be a bed that's used for a long period of time when you have the patient waiting for long-term care. These individuals tell me that they want the mental health system. They want the plan that the Auditor General so accurately described in his report two years ago. They want that plan implemented. They don't want this bill. They're not talking about this amendment. That is what Albertans expect, and that is what they want. They don't want any more public relations fluff from the government.

No one has phoned and suggested to me today that this amendment is what we need or that Bill 17 is what we need, but people have phoned concerning wait times in the emergency rooms, access to orthopaedic surgery, access to a family doctor. Why are facilities being constructed? Why have the facilities been furnished with medical equipment, but we don't have enough skilled personnel to work in them? Those are the questions people are asking, Mr. Chairman.

In conclusion, when we think of the Canada Health Act and we think that health insurance coverage is publicly administered, comprehensive, universal, portable, and accessible, Canadians and Albertans understand that. Hopefully, the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere understands that. Hopefully, his party does.

Certainly, I'm going to express my gratitude to him for bringing this amendment forward, but I would like to remind all hon. members to work to ensure that the problems in the system are fixed. We can debate this amendment, we can debate this bill, but the rubber is going to hit the road when this government finally decides that we're going to need some different management techniques and different management skills than they have across the way. They are the leaders. They are the ones that have made the political decisions that have caused all this chaos and confusion, not the appointed or hired individuals. The responsibility lies with the hon. members across the way. That's where the responsibility lies. I know they're going to try to duck that responsibility, but they can't. They are the ones that after the 2008 election, that big majority – I don't know what they were thinking, Mr. Chairman, but Alberta Health Services was not a good idea.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. When we talk about the amendment to Bill 17, I think that patient-centred service delivery is so important, and this is part of what we believe is a fundamental principle. The most fundamental flaw of Alberta's health system is the lack of choice and competition in the delivery of health care services. I think we can all agree with this, and as we look at the Canada Health Act, we believe that this component can be under the Canada Health Act under the amendment that's taken forward.

The provincial government has created a monolithic public delivery monopoly, basically, wherein there is virtually no competition for patients, no incentives for providing effective service. [interjections]

The Deputy Chair: Just a moment. Hon. members, can you tone it down a little bit? I can't hear a word he's saying. [interjections] I'm the only one who's listening, though, so please tone it down.

Go ahead.

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Chair, I'm not sure why the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster would not be. "We're happy for that" is his quote. I'm glad to see that he's paying attention, with his ears wide open. Unfortunately, his mouth is wide open, too, but that's okay.

Choice and competition between health care providers is the key to really solving these problems. In many cases well-run public hospitals will provide patients with the best and the most timely treatment. The provincial government has created a monolithic public delivery monopoly, that I made reference to earlier, wherein there's virtually no competition for patients. Patients are not able to go to see where they can get the best or the quickest service and the most competent service, and I think it really reflects in terms of the crisis we're facing today when we talk about no competition for patients, no incentives for providing effective services or, for that matter, excellent treatment, and no reason to run hospitals or utilize operating rooms more efficiently. A fundamental flaw.

This amendment, I believe, will in fact be able to enhance the concerns that I raise. Is it any wonder emergency rooms are in the crisis that they're in today? Choices in competition, I believe, between health care providers is the key to solving these problems. In fact, in many cases well-run public hospitals will provide patients with the best and most timely treatment. I say "the best and most timely treatment," which is so important. In other words and in other instances, independent nonprofit and private facilities will be able to treat patients more effectively and efficiently.

I'd like to use just one example, under this amendment, of how that is done. I am very proud in terms of the category of nonprofit to talk about the Shriners hospital. I'm proud to have been a Shriner for over 10 years, an Al Shamal. In being a Shriner, it's our responsibility as Shriners to – did you know? – raise $1 million per day, $1 million per day that go towards not-for-profit hospitals such as the children's Shriners hospital, a wonderful example.

Choice. I believe competition between health care providers is a key to solving the many problems that we are facing. In the example of nonprofit the Shriners hospital, I think, is just one of many examples of where we're able to treat patients more effectively and treat children more effectively and efficiently without long waiting lines. I want to congratulate and I also want to take the time to say thank you to the Shriners across Alberta, the Shriners across Canada, in North America, for that $1 million a day that they raise 365 days a year.

If you can imagine, their commitment to caring for young children is through the amendment that we're talking about and the principles of the Canada Health Act, that are so important. As I speak about not-for-profit, it's about enhancing. This amendment, I believe, is enhancing the principles of a bill that is, as I mentioned earlier, very flawed but at the same time recognizing that we want to stop the bleeding. We want to be able to treat patients more effectively and efficiently, and our children: we want the best care for them. I don't think anyone in this Assembly would argue such a point as long as the needed service is publicly paid for and done safely. It should not make a difference whether an operating room is run by a public hospital or a private surgical centre.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek earlier and the Member for Calgary-Glenmore earlier and the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere clearly recognize the importance of new ideas to the important delivery of health care services to ensure that the actual emergency rooms are no longer faced with the dismal. We want to give people help.

One person who was giving Albertans hope was the doctor who, of course, was recently kicked out. I can say that the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark is a shining example of hope of the future for a better health care system.

Mr. Chairman, on the amendment that has been put forward, where we talk about, "namely, that health insurance coverage is publicly administered, comprehensive, universal, portable and accessible," I think that we are able to talk about not-for-profit. We are able to talk about providers such as private and also public all rolled into one. I think that kind of hybrid approach is one that Albertans expect no less of.

If I could give you an example, and this is where the minister of finance may want to astutely pay attention. The HRC, the Health Resource Centre, in Calgary is an example, under this amendment, where changes have been made, money has been spent, and now what used to be 1,600 people getting hips, knees, and other replacements – I think hip and knee is the most in the HRC. What I find really, really important is that there are going to be another 1,600 people – 1,600 people – who are not going to get due attention. I'm going to be introducing five of them next week with their hips and their knees. They're on wait-lists, and they're in pain because of what has taken place in Calgary.

This amendment is talking about publicly funded even if it means in a private centre, but what it really is about, what Albertans have told me, Mr. Chair, is that we don't care who does it. If it's publicly funded and it's private or if it's not-for-profit or it's private doesn't really matter. What we want to ensure is that the lines go down, no one can queue-jump. In the Canada Health Act no one will be able to queue-jump, and this amendment that's being put forward is another principal pillar in what I believe are Alberta values.

I believe that Albertans deserve better, and I believe that a Wildrose government will ensure, under this amendment, that we are putting forward that Alberta's health care delivery is patient centred and that wait times for specialists and procedures and emergency room care are significantly decreased by implementing important components that are framed under this Canada health umbrella. Let me just give you an example. You ask: give us an example. Well, let me give you an example: significantly reduced wait times for specialists and medical procedures by opening delivery of publicly paid for health services to any accredited private and not-for-profit health service provider. It's not radical science. It's not new. But it all fits under the umbrella of the Canada Health Act, which is of course mentioned in the amendment.

A private or a nonprofit provider such as the Shriners can deliver the same service, either as good or a better quality of care, more quickly. In other words, that person I'm going to be introducing next week in the public gallery here in this Assembly who is agonizing in pain, who is taking drugs because of the pain, because of their hip that they're waiting and waiting for, now that the decisions were made in Calgary, is going to have to wait longer. People and Albertans don't care, Mr. Chairman, under this umbrella of the amendment, under the Canada Health Act. What they care about is being able to get an efficient and effective service quickly. That's not happening in ER rooms, and it clearly is not happening if you happen to require a new knee.

I might add: how many over across the way need a new knee? How many across the way may need a new hip? When I introduce the people up there next week that will be travelling, they are going to be living proof of people that are in a line. You can go and pay out. You know, the HRC, the Health Resource Centre, in Calgary has been absolutely stellar in the approach that they have performing the service. So the public system can actually learn from what is going on. I can only hope that the members across the way may never need a new hip or a new knee because in my judgment they don't want to wait in a line any more than Albertans do, and that's what is happening.

Mr. Chairman, it is clear to me. The choice is obvious. Support this amendment. Do the right thing. You will be able to look yourself in the mirror tonight and sleep well tonight. That's if, in fact, you go home for a sleep tonight. We're not really quite sure on that point because we have lots of energy on this side. In fact, I often say: nous avons l'énergie; we have the energy. It really captures the spirit, under this amendment, of who we are, what we do, and how we do it.

I can say to you that when you put your hands on your head like this, it means you require more oxygen, just so you know. Some may require more oxygen, others may not, but that's okay because at the end of the day under a really good health care system you shouldn't require more oxygen because you should be getting enough through your ventricles and your blood system that is coming forward. So on this amendment, Mr. Speaker – and I'm not a doctor. In fact, they kicked out the only doctor that was on that side. On the amendment, it was unanimous.

Mr. Chairman, at the end of all of these important issues of a Canada Health Act, I find it ironic. Introducing a health care funding model in which public and private and not-for-profit health service providers and facilities are compensated according to the quality and the timeliness of care has to be a principle that the Treasury Board President can agree to and the minister of finance can agree to.

Mr. Chair, I see some movement on the other side in the far right corner.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. Well, you're talking through me.

Mr. Boutilier: In fact, Mr. Chair, on the amendment, I see a few dolls moving on that side, and it obviously has distracted me from my thoughts. I can only say that, you know, I don't think you're allowed to be theatrical when it comes to holding up dolls and things like that. I think you may want to forewarn your colleagues across the way that it's very important that they play nice in the playground because right now we want to get this right. It's clear to me that I can only say, when it comes to getting this right, a Wildrose government.

In fact, I want to say, Mr. Chairman, on this amendment, that when I drove back from British Columbia into Alberta this summer, there was a beautiful sign put up by the government, and it said: welcome to wild rose country. What a beautiful sign that was. It was truly beautiful. In fact, I got a picture by it. I think I was an independent at the time, on the amendment on the Canada Health Act, but I got a picture from it because I was coming back to wild rose country, and that is so nice.

I think it's important to dream, and in fact this amendment is about dreaming.

An Hon. Member: If you don't have nightmares.

Mr. Boutilier: Yeah. I would far prefer to have a dream than a nightmare, and I can say, Mr. Chairman, that this amendment is a dream. This is not a nightmare. I think a nightmare is actually Bill 17. I think it is quite simply a train wreck ready to happen, and that's why we want to amend this Bill 17.

Mr. Chairman, I'm finding it difficult to concentrate with all the activity going on. I will continue on without the distraction, but I always welcome active participation in terms of what's going on here. I want to say: how could anyone, on this amendment, disagree with the concepts of ending the practice of building expensive health facilities until there is clearly enough available staff to open them? What a novel idea, under this amendment, on the Canada Health Act. With the money saved from this practice, immediately work to open and staff available capacity within public systems to reduce wait times.

Not only that, Mr. Chairman, but the Minister of Transportation from Innisfail-Sylvan Lake may actually then be able to get some dollars to put some pavement on my highway, which is directly related to the Canada Health Act because of the fact that I and my family and Albertans who travel that highway that doesn't have pavement on it today may be in jeopardy. That's how that works.

To the head of the oil sands secretariat I can only say: clearly, to me you have a situation, under the amendment on Bill 17, and I think, please, give the Minister of Transportation some money for pavement so that we can save under the Canada Health Act. Right now, Mr. Chairman, clearly, he doesn't have the resources because there's sure no paving going on, and I continue to wait. I divert, for the benefit of my health, from calving caribou. I continue to manoeuvre around migrating birds. We do all of those things because I do know that at the end of the day we want what is the best health care system based on the best transportation. Because, you see, if we don't have a good system, under this amendment, then the health care system is actually going to be further burdened based on, in fact, more accidents.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, we're talking about health insurance coverage.

Mr. Boutilier: Right. That is so important, and that goes directly to my point, Mr. Chairman. At the end of the day this insurance is something that is an umbrella. This is an enhancement, the amendment that is being put forward here. I want to say that I will sleep better tonight when the members across the way support this amendment. I know they are eager to stand. Maybe it might soon be getting close to calling for the question on this amendment. This amendment stands for the values and the principles of Albertans. It stands for Wildrose Albertans. I mean, all Albertans are Wildrosers because that's actually what it says on our licence plates.

Mr. Chairman, on the amendment to the bill regarding the insurance I want to say that when I get my car insurance . . .

The Deputy Chair: We're talking health insurance.

Mr. Boutilier: Yeah. Car insurance and health insurance are very interrelated.

The Deputy Chair: No. Health insurance coverage.

Mr. Boutilier: Health insurance and car insurance. Why? Because, clearly, we want to ensure that our health care system is not burdened needlessly and unnecessarily. I believe that under the Canada Health Act and their insurance further reducing surgical and specialist wait times by funding patients outside of the province should also be an opportunity to be able to get timely access to medically necessary procedures, which are also sometimes unavailable within the province of Alberta. Of course, I don't think that any of us are at all pleased by that.

In such cases, under this amendment, Mr. Chairman, the costs to the government to have the same procedure performed in Alberta would instead be sent to an out-of-Alberta health provider. If that's what it takes, we will eliminate the 10 people that I'll be introducing in the Assembly next week under the umbrella of the Canada Health Act and the insurance. I might add that when we talk about Bill 17, the health insurance coverage is publicly administered, comprehensive, and, in fact, accessible.

Chair's Ruling Relevance

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, before I recognize the next speaker, I want to just make a couple of points under Standing Order 23(b) and Beauchesne's 459. First is relevance. We are talking to an amendment on health insurance coverage by adding that “health insurance coverage is publicly administered” go in after “Canada Health Act.” That’s what we are talking about. We’re not talking about paving roads to anywhere. We’re not talking about anything else on this. We are talking about this, so this is where we are going. We’re going to keep it relevant, and I will be calling everyone on relevance. Also, you’ve got to quiet down on both sides of the House.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I’m sure that when it comes to health insurance, as is being proposed in amendment A2, we’re probably all wishing we had the debate on health insurance tonight because it’s 20 after 12, and we’ve been basically chasing our tails with amendment A2.

One of the terms that amendment A2 calls for is “comprehensive.” Comprehensive has a couple of meanings. It means complete; it means understandable. I don’t believe that at this hour we have the comprehension available within this House to actively participate in the best interests of Albertans. Yes, we’re accessible in the sense that we’re all here, but the progress that we’re making, whether it be on amendment A2 as stated, is very questionable.

I do appreciate the hon. chair doing his level best to guide the direction on this debate and to also keep people in check, but the reality is that if there isn’t something particularly creative or changing, then an individual’s ability to participate in the debate on A2, that “Bill 17, Alberta Health Act, be amended in the last recital in the preamble by adding” – without that ability to comprehend what is being discussed tonight, the value of the exercise is terribly diminished. I’m suggesting that if there is the possibility of amendments that are going to bring us forward, that are going to positively impact on Bill 17, then I would suggest it would be very refreshing to move forward beyond this particular amendment.

Therefore, Mr. Chair, I would like to call the question.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Well, the reason we’re here talking about this: let’s put it in perspective. People want to know why we’re talking about the same amendment for the last however many hours. It’s probably quite simple: because we think this bill is a piece of garbage. That’s why. We will sit here and we will talk about it and we will talk about it and we will talk about it some more until you guys don’t want to talk about it and make the appropriate motion. That’s all that needs to be done. I’m sorry if that bugs people and if you just think this is such a waste of time. The fact is that people are tired. Albertans are tired of being bullied, and we’re going to stand in here and talk until the cows come home.

We’re going to talk about universal coverage, universal public insurance. That’s what we’re going to talk about. We’re going to continue to talk about it. The reason we’re going to talk about it is because we need some more options in this country with regard to our health care.

There’s no doubt that all this amendment says is – it’s pretty darn simple. It’s just talking about the Canada Health Act and naming the principles in the Canada Health Act. This is not a very large concession that we’re talking about here. It just shows how this government is unwilling to listen and to compromise.

You know, it’s funny. Not all the members on that side are like that, clearly. I know that for a fact. There are some that would love to work on things together and work on things constructively. But, no. It’s either the way Ron Glen wants to do it or the way somebody wants to do it, and that’s it. That’s the way it’s going to be. So we can’t even clarify what Canada Health Act means without getting permission from the puppet master. It’s not doable. That’s ridiculous.

We’re saying that all we need to do is name the five principles of the Canada Health Act. If you want utility, the reason we would do this is because, well, for one, if the Canada Health Act were to be changed and there were going to be different principles introduced, at least as a province we could keep our autonomy. We could say: no; these are the principles that we were talking about. Whatever the feds pass, do we give up our sovereignty? Am I unaware? Are we a colony or something? No. We’re a province. We have our own laws, and if we say Canada Health Act, it’s the Canada Health Act as it exists today with these five principles. We don’t want anything more than that.

You know, I think that that’s pretty self-explanatory. It’s fundamental. It’s not a big concession. We’ve been here for a long time, and it’s just to demonstrate the fact that this government once again is unwilling to even make the smallest little concession. It’s really about clarification. That’s all it is. It’s not even changing your bill. But you’re not even willing to do that.

It’s indicative of the bully tactics that are used by this government repeatedly, all the time. It’s just unbelievable, you know. I can’t even imagine – well, I can imagine. I do unbelievably still have friends over there, few, and I know what gets said. It’s absolutely ridiculous that we can’t stand here and actually have a debate on health care.

Mr. Boutilier: That’s why they should guard against self-deception.

Mr. Anderson: Yeah. Guard against self-deception is right.

Now, I would be happy to end this debate on this tonight if you would like. Just say you’d like to end it, and we’ll do it, and you just adjourn it. That’s all we ask, that we adjourn debate until we can do it at an hour that people are actually listening instead of in the wee hours of the night. So it’s totally up to you. You want to go? Make the call. Otherwise, we’re going to talk about this. You guys can camp in the back and you can be friends and buddies and laugh and see how smart you are. Just let us know when you’d like to stop for the night, and we’ll do so.

Why do we believe in universal coverage? Well, as I said earlier, the reason we believe in universal coverage and the reason we think it’s important to enshrine these principles is, hopefully, for the same reason that the government side does. We don’t believe that people should – somebody should not be denied health care coverage . . . [interjection] Pardon me?

Mr. MacDonald: I’m going to support you.

Mr. Anderson: All right. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, he has the floor. He is talking to the chair.

Mr. MacDonald: I’m sorry if I distracted him.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. Proceed.

Mr. Anderson: I appreciate that.

We on this side of the House don’t think, and I’m pretty positive that most if not all of the folks on the other side of the House believe, that somebody should be denied access to critical or necessary health care because of an inability to pay. That's wrong, and that's why I think everybody has that concept. But I think people get confused with what's actually in the Canada Health Act.

The Canada Health Act talks about insurance coverage being publicly administered, comprehensive, universal, portable, and accessible. It does not talk about the delivery component. What the Canada Health Act clearly does not say is that there needs to be a public monopoly on delivery. I think what this government should be doing – and we'll be bringing in lots of amendments at a better hour, when people are actually listening to this debate. We'll be bringing forward some amendments that, for one, will allow more competitive delivery in the health care system.

We need to allow private, public, and nonprofit providers to compete for every single public dollar that is spent. We think that that's important because we think that it will lead to lower costs, more competition, and more investment in health care from the private sector, and that's a good thing. That's something that we should be encouraging. That's what they do in Europe, and they have managed to almost eliminate waiting times. I mean, their health systems are so vastly superior to what we've become here, this monolithic public monopoly which is just failing Albertans at every turn. You know, that's something that we need to do.

Here we are talking about the Alberta Health Act and trying to find ways that we can make sure that our system remains completely publicly insured but have competitive delivery. We want to make sure that in order to protect that right, the right of having the option of private and public delivery, we have this amendment in there so that it gives us the flexibility. So if the feds decide to change the Canada Health Act to, say, outlaw any kind of competitive delivery, what we are saying is still enshrined in here and won't be automatically changed. I think that's an important thing.

Again, I look at the reason it's important. Well, there are many reasons why it's important, but one of the reasons is that you have in every single system that is superior to ours – in Europe, in particular, and Japan – that they have this competitive delivery model. And it's working, guys. It's working. Look at every report. We're here late at night. I mean, go on the Internet; look it up. Look up what they're doing in Sweden. Look up what they're doing in Luxembourg and France and Switzerland. Look at Japan. Look at those areas and look at the competitive delivery model that they have with private, nonprofit, and public competing for publicly insured patients. It works.

We're in Alberta. In Alberta, Mr. Chair, we should be leading the way. We should be forging the way. We should be the pioneers. There are 67 Progressive Conservatives over there. Well, I always thought that that meant that, you know, we didn't buy into this whole kind of socialistic, monolithic public delivery. I thought that meant that we were forward-thinking. You know, that's what I thought when I was over there. We were forward thinking, we believed in good conservative principles, but we were comfortable enough in our own skin to make sure that the things that weren't working we fixed. That's what I thought it meant to be a Progressive Conservative. But, no, it's not that.

We've become as status quo as any of the eastern left-wing parties out there, and it's just been ridiculous. It's almost like we're afraid to change or afraid to be pioneers in health care, and it's the most important issue to Albertans. Like, let's do it. I mean, come on, hon. member. Are you telling me that Sweden doesn't work? Is that social democracy too right wing for you? Come on. It's a left-wing social democracy, and they've got more choice in health care than we do by a mile. It just doesn't make sense.

How about France? How about Switzerland? Even the United Kingdom of all places, which, of course, was on the brink of economic bankruptcy, like the United States in a lot of ways, are going towards the models of western Europe. That's what Prime Minister Cameron has done. They're keeping these principles that we see in the Canada Health Act, the universality of public insurance, and they are moving towards a more competitive delivery model. They just ran on it, and they just got a mandate to do so. In the United Kingdom, well, they're far more left wing than we are in Alberta. At least I thought so, anyway. I think they are. And there they go.

Mr. MacDonald: No, they're not.

Mr. Anderson: Oh, sure they are. Well, maybe they're not. Maybe they're not.

Mr. MacDonald: There's a coalition government there.

Mr. Anderson: Well, they're a coalition government though the Social Democrats are allowing them or supporting them to bring in a more competitive delivery model both for health care and education. I think it's a real victory, and we'll see the results. It'll be a good experiment to see the before and the after picture. Will it result in what the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity thinks it'll become, or will it result in something positive? Well, we'll see. I think that it's clear from the evidence that it will result in something positive, that there will be less wait times, more private investment, nonprofit investment, that that will lessen the burden on the public purse for health care, but everyone will still remain publicly insured. It's an incremental step. You never want to go too far. You never want to go jump the gun and just say, "Okay; we're going to jump straight from this system to a totally other system," because you might way overdo it and then cause more harm than good.

Obviously, we know we have far too monolithic a system. I mean does anyone here think we don't have too monolithic a system right now? I guess there might be some. Well, maybe there are some.

An Hon. Member: No comment.

Mr. Anderson: No comment. That's right.

I'd say that a lot of us think that we couldn't really get any more monolithic in our delivery of health care, specifically when you're not talking about primary care. I don't think we could get any more monolithic. So why don't we look at ways that we can open up competitive delivery? Let's open the gates. Let's have some good competition and innovation. We can take the best of those, and we can make a made-in-Alberta approach. It doesn't have to be an exact carbon copy of those western European democracies. We can move more in that direction and see what works for us and what doesn't work for us. But piling more money into the system and making it more monolithic, which is what's happening, the damage we've done with the cataract people and, of course, HRC – I mean, we're becoming more monolithic, and that's not what the Canada Health Act says. That's not what it says. It doesn't talk about that it has to be publicly delivered. It talks about public insurance. I hope that people will realize that.

This isn't some hidden agenda. I mean, we just released a 20-page booklet. It's on our website. It's all in plain black and white what we want to do with this health care system in Alberta. I want to see what the government's plan is other than: "Yeah. Okay. We need more long-term care beds."

An Hon. Member: Let's see what you've got there.

Mr. Anderson: Well, this is just our health care policy.

I mean, that's not rocket science. We all know we need more long-term health care facilities, but what are we going to do to introduce more competition and innovation into the system? That's what I'd like to see.

I would love to debate another bill. That would be really fun tonight. We could leave this for more important things later. I'll leave it to the hon. House leader to decide when he wants to do that. So we'll just keep chatting about it.

I think it's important to understand the dangers of misinterpreting what the Canada Health Act says because if you misinterpret what the Canada Health Act says, that's where you've got a problem, and it leads to big issues. I think that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark had just a fantastic speech in the Legislature during the emergency debate. He encapsulated, I think, a lot of what you see when you don't have a model that incents innovation and incents competition and incents basic accountability in its structures. People say: well, just put in accountability measures, and that will work. Well, it won't work without the driving forces of competition.

People right now when they go into a hospital, when they go for surgery, are all considered an expense. Of course, any business owner knows that if something is considered an expense, you want less of it. It doesn't help. It means less for salaries. It means less for redoing the front lobby in the hospital. It means a whole bunch of different things. It means less. It's an expense. It means less workers to hire and more work to go around to the existing workers. That's what it means.

But if you change the incentive, if you make the incentive that people bring with them – I mean, the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity calls it a voucher system. That's not true because you don't actually hand them the voucher, but I would say that there are similarities because the money is following the patient. I think that's what you're alluding to. If we switched that incentive around a little bit and made sure that the money followed not just the patient but followed the patient if they're treated correctly, if they're treated properly, if the proper preventative approaches are taken with that patient – if that's how the money flowed and that patient could decide to go to a public facility or a private facility, all of a sudden they'd become a source of revenue for that elected hospital board, or they'd become a source of revenue for that private hip and knee replacement clinic. They'd become a source of revenue.

Everything that you do at that point is about getting more people to come to you, and if people are coming out of the same queue, you can only do that if you do more. So you streamline your services. You specialize. You try to get more people through the door so you can get more revenue. You want to get more hips done and more knee surgeries done. You want to get as many from the government queue as possible. So if the government's queue is 18 months, that's essentially a huge potential source of revenue. You want to just get as many of those guys through the door as possible. Of course, it all has to be safe, but you specialize and make sure that everything is as efficient as possible so you're getting people through the door.

That's exactly what HRC did, Mr. Chair. They found a way to do hip and knee replacements 30 to 40 per cent faster and, therefore, 30 to 40 per cent cheaper than what was done on average in the public hospitals. It was quite amazing. We talked to nurse after nurse and doc after doc at that HRC. A lot of these nurses were part of the union. They loved it. The quality of conditions, the work environment were fantastic. We didn't hear one complaint, and you could see because these nurses were in the Calgary Herald letters to the editor saying how great it was. I think that people lose sight of that fact, that that kind of choice and competition improves working conditions. I think it's important that we don't lose sight of that.

I think that that's another offshoot, the improved working conditions, the choice that nurses and doctors have in a competitive system. If you're a private clinic, you try to move things through as quickly as possible in a safe, orderly fashion so that you can get more patients through the door, and necessarily that leads to more efficiencies. We're not talking about any kind of U.S.-style, two-tiered thing. That's not what we're talking about, and I think that's pretty clear. It's unfair of the Premier in question period – and we'll call him out on this later on – to somehow refer to what we're proposing as a European two-tiered system.

A two-tiered system, just so that there's clarification, is when you have a system that's publicly paid for, and then you have a parallel system where people can take out their credit card and their chequebook and pay for their own health care. So you've got two systems. One, you've got a public queue, and then you've got a private queue on demand.

Now, of course, we kind of have a two-tiered system because people can go down to the States and get health care any time they want. Obviously, that's more inconvenient. It's only the really rich that can afford that other tier because you can't get health insurance up here. You don't have that option of private health insurance for critical medically necessary procedures. But that's not what we're talking about. We're talking about a one-tier public queue but with competitive delivery, with more choices on the delivery side. Everyone is coming out of that same queue. If they need a service they've got to get, they've got to line up in that same queue for their hip and knee replacement. But when they get to the front of that queue, they've got an opportunity to go in multiple different places, and because of that there are more options, and you can care for more people.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'd like to rise and speak in favour of amendment A2 to the Alberta Health Act. I think it's quite important that we realize and reflect on why we need to put this amendment in here. This government has tried several times in the last decade to change the Alberta health care system. They've tried in some areas, and they've failed even in bringing the legislation forward. I remember Bill 11, the debate over that and the rallies that were here. The previous health minister said that we just need to do it and not talk about it and push this through. Albertans are very uneasy not knowing what the direction is.

We hear lots about the Canada Health Act, but very few people know, well, what is the Canada Health Act. What are the principles? What this amendment is all about, very simply, is to say: let's name the five principles of the Canada Health Act so people realize exactly where we're coming from. What are those five principles? Namely, that health insurance coverage is "publicly administered, comprehensive, universal, portable and accessible." That's right out of the Canada Health Act. In Bill 17 what we have in the preamble is: "Whereas policies, organization, operations and decisions about Alberta's health system should be guided and measured and sustained consistent with the following principles." The first principle: "that Alberta is committed to the principles of the Canada Health Act." I'm sorry, but when you go and ask most people, the number one thing they usually say is that it's publicly provided. That isn't in the Canada Health Act, but that it's publicly administered is, that it's comprehensive is, and that it's universal and portable and accessible are. So by putting this little bit of clarification in there, I think that that would set at ease a lot of Albertans because they know that this is what is staying in. Albertans have been very clear in saying that we want to stay within the Canada Health Act. It's one of the great benefits that has . . . [interjections] It's always good to have the House leaders going head to head.

It's a great benefit that Albertans are very grateful for, that when there's a tragic accident, when all of a sudden our personal health or that of a loved one falls apart, the first thing we think about is not: can we afford it? We get there; people are treated. The first thing that's often thought about if it's not a critical problem is: when am I going to be able to get my hip or my knee or my cataract? When am I going to get my shoulder? When am I going to be able to get an MRI to see what it is? That's where in the third one it talks about timely access. We need timely access. It's critical that we have that.

Going back to this amendment and why we should be bringing it forward, like I say, if we reflect on this government and the number of attempts that it has made to improve our health care system, there have been quite a few, but it's always come under, I guess, the argument: oh, they're trying to privatize it. They're going to continue saying: oh, they're going to try and privatize it. So we need to put in that clarification and say: no; we're going to stay within the Canada Health Act, which is, namely – and we'll read it in again – publicly administered, comprehensive, universal, portable, and accessible. When you know that these are the parameters within which we're trying to make changes to our health care, people are much more comfortable because they're not worried that: "Oh, am I going to have to start to pay if I go to my doctor and have a checkup to see why I'm having this problem? Am I going to have to pay because I've got a frozen shoulder and need to have an X-ray of it? Oh, I don't want to pay." Albertans are very nervous about that, and they've showed that over and over again.

What we want to do with this amendment, a very simple amendment, is to bring clarity and, I guess, comfort to Albertans, to say: "No. You can depend on this, that we're going to stay within the Canada Health Act and to actually know what it is." Far too often the argument that comes forward is that this is private and this isn't acceptable, yet for most every Albertan that I know who has the benefit of having a family doctor – and there are too many that I'm running across that no longer have that benefit – the clinic that they go to is privately owned. It's privately run by a consortium of doctors, and there isn't a fear or a problem having it privately delivered. That isn't outside the Canada Health Act.

HRC was privately delivered, yet it was inside the Canada Health Act. The Gimbel clinic, world famous, renowned – he's done all kinds of charitable work on other continents; he teaches, does all those things – is a private clinic, and it was paid for by Alberta health when someone was told: oh, you need a new cataract; you need this treatment.

We need to clarify and talk to Albertans and let them know that, no, we are going to stay within the Canada Health Act. Without that in there, we're going to continue to have to argue, to have the debate with Albertans and say: "Oh, no. Trust us. Trust us." No. We learned a long time ago that Albertans do a deal on a handshake, but it's still good. "Don't trust us; we'll put it in writing. We'll have it in the contract, and you don't need to worry. You can take it to the bank. It's written down. It's in legislation. It's within the Canada Health Act."

What is it? There we go. It's publicly administered, comprehensive, universal, portable, and accessible. I do not understand why this government is neglecting to realize the importance of this, and we are going to keep talking about it and talking about it because this is what Albertans want. We're not just going to roll over and say: "Okay. Go ahead. There's nothing we can do." No. There is something we can do. We've been asked to talk about it. We've been elected to represent those people. That is what we're going to do. We want this amendment to go through. We're going to keep talking about it, and we can do that for as long as this government wants to until it listens and says: "Well, I guess that it is okay to clarify our bill. We don't want a misunderstanding going forward, and this is in the best interests of Albertans."

Let's look at health care as a bigger picture and what some of the challenges are. What are the problems, and are those within the Canada Health Act? Wait times have gone up. Emergency rooms are bulging at the seams. We've got people literally waiting in the hallways to get in to get diagnosed and to find out what their problems are. This government has come out with a new protocol. They had a hundred people come together because they said that we need a new protocol. No. What we need is a new process. Those doctors know what to do. It's that they're not allowed to do it. Health care administrators know what to do, but they're not allowed to do it.

I mean, can you believe anything that's so sad as to think that this new protocol says that, well, if someone waits for eight hours – eight hours – then they're in a position of authority to open up some new beds and move people? Why would we want to do that, to wait eight hours? It makes no sense. Nobody can get any understanding of it that's on the outside. We didn't have the privilege of being there for this meeting of 100 special individuals that are trying to accomplish this problem. You have to ask why. What is the difficulty on this? It's because of the process.

It's very sad to see this week that someone's job is on the line for only carrying out what he's been asked to do. He's been given the mandate: this is what we want you to do; now go and execute. I believe that he's executing what has been wanted to be done, but because he was probably told not to talk to reporters, a cute PR trick was to carry out a cookie, and then that way you can argue: I'm busy; I'm eating a cookie.

I'll take a quick little break here. I'm getting a little dry. I need a little drink here, and then we'll get back to relevance. Yes, I appreciate the motion there and understand what you're trying to relate.

What is the relevance of amendment A2 and Bill 17?

Mr. Boutilier: You don't have to answer their questions.

Mr. Hinman: Oh, no. The chair is asking me. I'm speaking to the chair, answering the chair, and that's what's important.

It's simple. Albertans are nervous and wanting to know what direction this government is going to go. This Bill 17 is full of platitudes, but when they look back over the last two and a half years at what's happened here in the province, everybody shakes their head, and they don't understand it. We're spending more money. We're building more facilities, so many facilities that we're actually shutting down some awesome facilities and are making people . . . [interjections]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, you have the floor. Continue.

Mr. Hinman: I'm sorry. Some of the chit-chat is kind of amusing, and I got sidetracked. We were talking about health, and someone was worried about someone's health, whether they're alive or not, I think.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, continue.

Mr. Hinman: Okay. We just wouldn't want someone who needs some help missing some help, but that's okay. We'll keep going here. Well, we're concerned about the health of some of the government members there.

What we need to do is back up and look at what's caused the problems when we've tried to make improvements here in Alberta. I think the number one cause of problems is the nervousness of people on whether or not the government is going to stay within the Canada Health Act. It's a simple amendment. It's about clarity. It's about setting out the definition on which we're going to operate. I mean, the whole purpose of bills and legislation is for clarity. It's a simple amendment to put it in there. What is the Canada Health Act? Anybody who opens it up: they read it; they know it. Like I say, I just can't for the life of me understand why this government wouldn't say: "You know what? That is a good thing. We can put it in there." But to say that it has no utility . . . [interjection] I would need more assurance than that. Again, we'll be so shocked, Mr. Chair, and disappointed, as Albertans are, in what this government is doing with health care. We'll say another wonderful line here, but they won't carry it out.

I mean, earlier we talked about the striking out of section 10 because people need to be held accountable. Again, this government wants to say: trust us; let us vote on it. Boom. It's gone by, and then we can't . . . [interjection] Why don't you tell us?

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, he'll have an opportunity to speak if he wishes to stand later. Continue with me.

Mr. Hinman: I will sit down and let him speak, then, and jump up after he's done.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much. On amendment A2. Now, I've been, again, listening to the discussion. Certainly, I'm leaning more and more into the view of the hon. member who proposed this amendment, the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere. Again, when we look at Bill 17 and we look at some of the consultation, Mr. Chairman, that occurred leading up to this bill – I spoke earlier about many of the different committees that were struck, and I overlooked the Putting People First, part 1: Recommendations for an Alberta Health Act. Of course, there were many noble principles proposed, and they include the "quality and safety of health services received by individuals, families and communities." That has to be assured. "All Albertans have access to timely and appropriate care." "Accessibility is based on need, not on Albertans' ability to pay." The primary focus of all of these consultations was, of course, Bill 17.

Did anyone make any recommendations or suggestions regarding whether or not we should be looking at the Canada Health Act in Bill 17 and, specifically, if we should be looking at anything in here that would not just talk about the Canada Health Act but would enshrine the principles of that act into the bill? Now, what the hon. member is attempting to do is I think supporting one of the recommendations of the Putting People First document.

When we consider the shape and the content of the components of the Alberta Health Act, everyone has talked about how they appreciate public health care. Certainly, the hon. member from Airdrie-Rocky View – why do I want to call that Rocky View? Airdrie-Chestermere. Through all of these consultation processes, it's been articulated by the hon. members that Albertans express a strong desire, Mr. Chairman, in support of medicare in Canada and for the principles of the Canada Health Act.

Now, to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, I have to say that whenever we're talking about the Canada Health Act, everyone thinks, of course, of Saskatchewan and Tommy Douglas. I was surprised and somewhat delighted to read in the Globe and Mail yesterday about the contributions Ernest C. Manning made to universal health care in this very Assembly. I doubt if it was at this hour of the night. The research that was conducted by this writer indicated that, of course, the Alberta Social Credit government was the first one to introduce medicare for seniors. To the hon. member through the chair, Tommy Douglas, when he was Premier of Saskatchewan, didn't introduce the actual medicare bill there. It was the individual who occupied the Premier's office after he did. That is a little vignette, shall I say, Mr. Chairman, on medicare in this country.

Of course, the Canada Health Act came through the federal government. I believe it was in 1982. Now, I could stand corrected on that, but Monique Bégin was the health minister at the time. I believe she's a professor at the University of Chicago at this point in her life, but I'm not sure about that, Mr. Chairman. The Canada Health Act was certainly discussed in one of the framework documents that led up to the drafting of this legislation.

It is noted and is interesting to note – and I think this is what the hon. member is trying to finish with his amendment – that these principles of the Canada Health Act have influenced publicly funded health care across Canada. That's another term that we cannot forget, publicly funded health care. Certainly – and it's been said here all evening – that's what Albertans want. I'm pleased to see that the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake agrees. I appreciate that.

Now, as principles-based legislation the Alberta Health Act stands to have a similarly powerful influence within our province. Well, I think the individuals who worked on this document, Putting People First: Recommendations for the Alberta Health Act, got a little zealous with that. I'm not so sure this legislation is going to have a powerful influence within our province. Certainly, the Public Affairs Bureau may have every intention of creating confidence in the public health care system through this bill, but I don't think it will work, Mr. Chairman.

The principles within an Alberta Health Act from the Canada Health Act must embody and reflect the kind of health care system Albertans want for themselves and their families. Sure, it has to be modern, it has to be efficient, it has to be economical, and it has to be a system that is focused on individual needs, recognizes a broader continuum of care, and works to support their overall wellness. Albertans said that the principles laid out in another report had merit but wanted to see transparency, accountability, and sustainability added to the principles of the act.

If we take what the hon. member is suggesting here – and that is publicly administered, comprehensive, universal, affordable, and accessible – will that satisfy Albertans, and will it work? Well, Albertans also want to know where the system is headed. Again, that has been discussed at length this evening. Not everyone has the same confidence that some government members have. Albertans realize that the system is continuously changing. Now, we only have to look at the IT budget of the government to know how much the entire system is changing. Many members here would be astonished to realize that we have spent or that the former health regions and the current Alberta Health Services have spent in the last four years on IT alone $1 billion. One billion dollars.

They have increased spending in that same time period by $270 million on emergency rooms. The reason I know this, Mr. Chairman, is because constituents ask me: where are they spending the money? I go to the coffee shop, I go to the dry cleaners, I go to the Safeway, and people stop me all the time – Mr. Chairman, I'm sure they stop you in Medicine Hat and Cypress Hills – and ask: hon. member, where is the government spending all that money? The budget keeps going up. Services are going down. Is it going to improve with Bill 17, the Alberta Health Act? I'm sure you're asked that question all the time. Is this the answer?

I don't know what you say, and it's your reply, but certainly if we look at this amendment, I can understand where the hon. member is coming from to try to ensure that everything in this initiative will be under the Canada Health Act.

Now, Mr. Chairman, when we look at some of the recommendations from Putting People First, that supposedly was the initial document that related to the drafting of this bill, the number one aspiration Albertans had for their health system, the legislative language in the preamble to the act – you'll be surprised and, I think, you'll be delighted to hear that the number one item on the list was that Alberta has to be committed to the principles of the Canada Health Act. That's reflected in the legislation. Specifically, it goes on to state: universality, comprehensiveness, accessibility, portability, and public administration of our health system.

Now, I heard, as I said before, from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford regarding why the government decided they just wouldn't put that in. I think the amendment from the hon. member certainly corrects an oversight by the government. If this was in the consultation report, the date of this report is very important: nine weeks ago.

We all work on behalf of our constituents. Some individuals had a chance to be involved in the emergency debate last Thursday afternoon, Mr. Chairman. Others did not have an opportunity to stand up and express on behalf of their constituents what they were hearing regarding the attempts by this government to reform and improve health care. Some members didn't get that chance, and I would say that this evening is an ideal opportunity. Whether it's on amendment A2 or whether it's on Bill 17 itself, it gives each and every one of us an opportunity to stand up and express on behalf of our constituents precisely what we're hearing about public health care and the delivery of public health care throughout the province.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the number one aspiration – and I'm going to repeat this for all hon. members – as set out in this report that was the basis for this bill: we have to remain committed to the principles of the Canada Health Act. I have no doubt of the sincerity of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, but certainly it was spelled out here. It appears to have been overlooked, and it has been corrected by this amendment. I think we should commend and congratulate and thank the hon. member for bringing this amendment forward. Again, we have to remember that we each have an obligation to try to fix the horrendous mistake that was made by this government when they consolidated the nine health regions into the Alberta Health Services Board.

I know, Mr. Chairman, it is difficult for some government members, but they only have to look at the financial statements, which are here in the Health and Wellness annual report 2009-10. They can see for themselves where the money that was budgeted went. Oddly enough, $220 million of that was unexpended, which the President of the Treasury Board put back in his bank.

The Deputy Chair: We're on A2.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, we certainly are on A2.

The Deputy Chair: And you are on A2?

Mr. MacDonald: It's 10 after 1. It's not near 2 o'clock.

The Deputy Chair: We are on amendment A2. You are on amendment A2?

Mr. MacDonald: Of course we're on A2. Yes, we certainly are, Mr. Chairman.

When we look at the principles that define our beliefs and how they're reflected in the public health care system, we should use them as a guide in our efforts to fix the mess that was made by the hon. members across the way with our public health care system. Now, some Albertans gave this government a bit of direction, and I'm sure they would be frustrated. I'm sure some of them would be suspicious, and I'm sure some of them would think to themselves: am I just part of some elaborate public relations exercise? I bet there was even a facilitator involved in this. That in itself would get some people suspicious of the direction that the government wanted them to go in. But we have this report. This report clearly outlines what the recommended components for the Alberta Health Act should be, and it's not there. Some of it is there, not all of it, but the number one recommendation is not there.

Now, Mr. Chairman, when I look through some of these other things that are in the bill, I think we're going to need amendments on that, too. Several members have suggested to me that they already have amendments drafted, so I think we're going to go from A2 to who knows what before we're finished with this.

I would like to conclude, Mr. Chairman, by thanking the hon. member for bringing this forward. I don't know where the hon. member got the idea for this amendment, whether he got it in the Putting People First document, part 1, or not, but it is a good suggestion. If it was the spirit of Tommy Douglas that mobilized the hon. member, I'm not going to say a word about that. I'm just glad that it has occurred and that we have this amendment before the Legislative Assembly at this time.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I will conclude my remarks and cede the floor to another hon. member.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chair, and thank you, hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. I really enjoyed the vignette and some of the other items that you brought up on why this amendment is so important. I guess I have to express my disappointment with the Deputy Premier from Spruce Grove, who pretended to want to talk and say: look what we're going to do. It's so typical of this government and this cabinet that they say that they're going to do one thing, and then it goes in another direction. That's why we need to have this clarity, this amendment A2, because of the misleading preamble that comes out of these ministers' mouths, and then they don't do it.

To clarify for them, Mr. Chair, what they need to do is to stand up and to say: you know, we see that this is a good amendment, and I'm for it. If they were to stand up and start saying, "I'm for this; I'm going to vote for this amendment," at that point we'll be happy to go to a vote. [interjections]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, I mentioned it when you were up before that they have the opportunity to stand up and speak if they wish after you're finished. If they wish. You have the floor now. We're speaking to A2.

Mr. Hinman: As you had mentioned it, I am also mentioning it to them because I don't think it quite clicked. We're talking about A2, so they know what they can stand up and vote for. They don't seem to understand that, so I was trying to clarify it.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. Let's talk to A2.

Mr. Hinman: Yes, let's talk to A2 and how we can pass this amendment. That's what we're trying to discuss. The way that this can get passed is for members like myself – Edmonton-Gold Bar, Calgary-Varsity, Lethbridge-East – to get up and say: "I'm in favour of this amendment. I think that this is a good amendment, and this adds clarity to Bill 17."

Mr. Fawcett: Let's vote on it.

Mr. Hinman: See, Mr. Chair? They don't even understand plain English. It's not: let's vote. Stand up and make your declaration. [interjections]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, Calgary-Glenmore has the floor speaking to A2, not about whether someone else should vote or not. Speak to A2.

Mr. Hinman: Okay. Thank you, Mr. Chair. Amendment A2 is an important amendment, and we'll keep repeating that. It's about clarity. It's about assurance. It's about comfort for Albertans to know the direction it's going. This government's track record continues to be poorer and poorer, and there are more and more questions and doubt and no trust anymore on what this government is going to do.

As I mentioned before, the previous health minister was very outspoken and said: our mistake was in the past. This is about clarity and why it needs to be written, Mr. Chair. Do you just want me to keep saying the same thing over and over again or try and explain it?

Mr. Chair, the former health minister has made this statement publicly many times: where we've made the mistake in the past is that we discussed it and said what we wanted to do, and there was opposition to it. So what we're going to now and what he did with the superboard was that we're just going to do it. That's the problem. Albertans want to know before, not after, and if Albertans don't like what's there, then we expect them to speak out and to limit the discussion on what they're trying to do. What we want to do is to put trust by passing legislation that says: this is what we're going to do. We're going to stay within the bounds of the Canada Health Act and then state what those are so that people have the comfort because people question that now.

Many people have gone out there and said that what the Canada Health Act is is publicly delivered, and that is not in there. That's why we put here, Mr. Chair, what it states, that it's publicly administered. Again, when you go to the family doctor, it's not publicly delivered; it's privately. That doctor has his own private clinic, and he is publicly funded. That's an important clarity that needs to be brought forward to give Albertans the assurance that these are the parameters on what we're going to do when we amend or move forward with some of our health acts.

It's frustrating for Albertans, just as it was frustrating for me to listen to the Deputy Premier say: oh, we'll vote and show you. What they're going to do is vote, and it doesn't add to the trust of the people on the way they're speaking and what they're doing. Because of that, we need to put this amendment A2 in. It's their track record. It's just like someone who goes and gets a credit check. If they've failed to pay their bills month in and month out, they can't just go in and say: oh, we're going to go by Canada credit, so you can extend us credit. Well, no, what are the parameters of that?

This is the dilemma that we're in here in the province of Alberta. Because of the past actions, because of the process this government has put in place, people question it. They question why these different facilities are being opened up and why other ones are being closed down. The arbitrary decision of the minister has gone forward, and all of a sudden with four days' notice our minister got up and said that we've received some RFPs and that in four days we're shutting down these four eye clinics, and we're going to open these other ones.

What we need is assurance. Yes, assurance. That's what this is. It's very simple. I don't understand the confusion about explaining why we need to have this amendment. I'm giving examples of what's happened in the past and why we need to have this amendment and what the Canada Health Act is because most Albertans think that it's just getting thrown out. So just to put in there the Canada Health Act. We need the clarity. Simple addition, simple procedure for members in the House to get up and say: "You know what? This is the right thing to do. I'm in favour of this amendment." It's that simple, Mr. Chair. But, again, simple isn't always easy to do, which has been demonstrated this evening by this government and its obstinance in stepping up to the plate and saying: "Yes. Let's make this clarity. Let's improve this bill so Albertans know where we're at and where we're going to go."

You know, there isn't a bigger expenditure in the province than what we do on Alberta health. To the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, I didn't realize that. I always appreciate his astuteness in the numbers that he brings forward, but a billion dollars on IT: is that correct? A billion dollars, and we have to ask: is that in the Canada Health Act? Is IT in there? No, I don't think it is. But Albertans want to know where the money is being spent. Hon. members like those that spoke earlier here, especially the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, point that out time and time again in this House where money is being spent. Is that money being spent within the Canada Health Act? That's a question that many Albertans are interested in and would like to know.

It's such a simple thing to do. It's the right thing to do, to give that assurance. It's to say that, yes, you can count on us to follow the Canada Health Act. What that is is publicly administered, comprehensive, universal, portable, and accessible.

Accessible. Isn't that an interesting word to bring up when we hear day in and day out how many people don't have access to an emergency room? When they are in that emergency room, Mr. Chair, they don't have access to a bed to be moved up. Then when they are in that bed and moved up, they don't have access to a surgeon because the facility has shut down. We only operated for eight hours today, and then this expensive surgical room is being shut down. Why it needs to be in there is that it's accessible because then people can say: well, if it's accessible, why am I waiting here and have no access to the system?

That's what happened day in and day out. It was very disappointing to hear the Premier respond earlier this week. When asked what he was going to do, he says: we're not going to go back to 300 health boards. We've never had 300 health boards. Why would he make such an absurd statement that we're not going to go back to 300 health boards, that we're going to go to a two-tier European system like the Wildrose? I mean, they're just ridiculous statements, Mr. Chair.

What we need to do is have a bill with clarity to say: where are we going to draw the parameters on the Alberta Health Act? I mean, when you read through this document, Bill 17, and you go through the preamble and you read all of it, it's words. The reason why this government is putting out this wordy piece of proclamation of what they're going to do is because they've failed to do it. So they think this can buy them another year if they just put out a wonderful document, pass it as legislation, call it the Health Act, and then people will buy that smoke and mirrors for another year because we're saying that we're doing all of these things.

Are these things – what are they inside of? Oh. “Alberta is committed to the principles of the Canada Health Act (Canada); that individuals, families and communities receive quality health services that are safe.” What are they saying? That before this bill came in, they weren't safe? That all of a sudden they've discovered – yet we know the number of errors that are made. “Albertans have reasonable access to timely and appropriate care, including primary care.” I spoke earlier. What's appropriate care, and what's timely care?

I asked the health minister a week ago to please provide an audit of all of the facilities and how many beds are closed in those facilities, and he refused to answer the question, which is regular. But it was amazing that yesterday he got up and he spoke: we've just opened up 360 beds. For two and a half years have these 360 beds been mysteriously closed off and shut so people don't have access when, in fact, the Canada Health Act says that we're to have access? Oh, no. You can line up and wait eight, 12, 16, 24 hours in the emergency room because I guess that's access. You've come in. You've checked in. We've seen you appear. But they don't address it.

The Deputy Chair: Are you on A2?

Mr. Hinman: Yes. About access.

The Deputy Chair: It's about health insurance coverage.

Mr. Hinman: Yes. Maybe I should come up, Mr. Chair, and see if we have the same amendment. Would you like me to do that?

The Deputy Chair: Health insurance coverage: accessible.

Mr. Hinman: Accessible. That's the word I'm talking about right now, accessible.

This government is coming up with a new protocol that they think they'll be able to initiate in 40 days. This is an emergency. In 40 days we'll be able to initiate this new accessibility, and we have these wonderful numbers and formulas that, when reached, trigger a reaction. We don't need to worry about reacting when they come through the door. It's when they pile up enough that all of a sudden: “Oh, wow. We get the formula. It's been hit. Now we can open up a bed for them. They've been here eight hours.” At seven hours, 55 minutes someone could still be sitting there, and they move them through in a disorderly manner. Why? Because they're handcuffed. They're gagged. They're chained. It says: “Oh, no. You can't actually work on this person and open up a bed to move out someone else because we haven't hit the trigger of eight hours or that 33 per cent of the beds or less are available.”

It's ridiculous to think that that is how we're going to manage our health care system: here are these wonderful formulas to assure you the comfort that you have accessibility. That's not accessibility.

Again, in the Chaoulli case, in Quebec, the Supreme Court ruled that waiting does not meet the Canada Health Act. To wait for eight months for a hip, to wait a year for a cataract, to wait nine months for an MRI because it's not deemed deadly, that you're okay: we're missing the point. We're not spending our money well.

We could ask some of the very simple, simple questions, Mr. Chair, when someone even comes into the emergency room. Often an ER doctor within an hour or two has a patient stabilized and is willing to sign off and say: “This one is now ready to be moved into an acute-care bed. We've done our job here.” But they can't do it. We've seen night after night the ambulances with a policeman, two paramedics sitting there looking after an individual because they're not allowed to leave until there's been the proper transition. We know with the transitional nurses, in their job, when the ER doctor has actually signed off and said, “This person is stabilized; you can now move them out,” the transitional nurse often has that individual for seven to 10 days inside their double computer system. Again, I say double computer system because my understanding is that they have to put all of the entries into two systems because they're moving from the hospital into postcare somewhere else, and they can't move them out. So they're locked into this system for seven to 10 days.

They're missing that we're not talking about that. We're not talking about accessibility. We're talking about formulas – formulas – that are going to somehow enhance your quality of life. No. It's actually having the accessibility to get the treatment that you need. That's what the Canada Health Act is about. That's why they took it to the Supreme Court in Quebec, and it was ruled that waiting eight months or waiting six months was inappropriate.

Then government comes up with formulas saying that this is acceptable. Well, why is it acceptable? If your father was having a heart attack, would you find it acceptable to wait six hours, have damage that's irreversible because there were three other individuals who had heart attacks first? We didn't want to call in another doctor even though there were doctors that were available if the CEO or the chief administrator had that authority to call up and say: look, we've got a problem.

I mean, when you go to a simple thing like a grocery store, you have the manager there. When people line up too much, there's someone there that says: “You know what? We need to open up another till.” They'll bring workers in because they understand the importance of service. We've lost that whole concept in our monolithic formula health care delivery system. It's not about people. It's not about service. It's just about numbers. What are the formulas on these numbers?

I can't even understand how our morale is where it is when someone has to go through one of those tough periods where people show up at the emergency room and aren't being treated. I can't imagine what it must have been like to be in that hospital, to find someone who had hung themselves or to be the person who actually delivered a pen and paper to him and was so busy and so distracted that it didn't even dawn on them why this individual would want a piece of paper and a pen. There are some major problems here on accessibility.

Why is this government so stubborn as to say, “We're not going to accept this amendment; we're not going to say that it's going to be accessible”? It's beyond those of us in opposition as we continue to say that we need a better bill. We need a health care bill that doesn't just give insurance in words but actually sees the action. We should stay in here and talk until that action is actually in place in the hospitals. I think that then those individuals over there would say: we need action now. They don't want to wait here 24 hours for something. They want it now. So maybe we should debate in here as long as people have to wait in an emergency room and say: “You know what? Let's see what it's like to be 24 hours.” They've got comfortable chairs. They're laid back. They've got their eyes closed so that they can think deeply and reflect on what we should be doing here.

I can almost feel the vibes, that they're thinking: "You know, I think it would be right to put in the definition of the Canada Health Act and actually ensure that when people show up at our emergency rooms, right now we're on top of it. We're bringing people in there. We realize what it is. Why not have the triage nurse – and they do this in some of the hospitals – say: "You know what? You need to go to your family doctor tomorrow."

But there, again, is the problem. Our system is such that people can't get in to a family doctor. It's very discouraging for individuals. I've talked to too many now who say that they can't find a family doctor. Theirs is retiring. They've had this doctor for 30 years. "Can you please help us find a new family doctor?" Family doctors are so busy that they're actually screening new patients or have signs on the door that say: "We're not accepting any new patients. Our practice is full."

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. If I could speak to the process. We've had considerable discussion on A2 as it relates to Bill 17, and I think part of the reason that we've had such a lengthy discussion has to do with trust in the process. So I'm going to very quickly suggest that the process amongst the House leaders was that Bill 17, the Alberta Health Act, would be debated and adjourned. I would suggest that it would be time to adjourn the amendment A2 so that we could then go home and come back tomorrow refreshed. I know that some of us will be in Public Accounts at 8:30 tomorrow, talking with Intergovernmental Relations. I, myself, would like to be sufficiently sharp to hold that ministry to account. Therefore, I'm suggesting that we adjourn debate on motion A2.

The Deputy Chair: Are you moving that?

Mr. Chase: That is what I am moving, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: You're moving a motion to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move that the House now rise and report bills 26, 21, 22, 20 and report progress on Bill 28 and Bill 17.

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bills: Bill 21, Bill 22. The committee reports the following bills with some amendments: Bill 20 and Bill 26. The committee reports progress on the following bills: Bill 28 and Bill 17. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: All those members of the Assembly that concur with the report, please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed, please say no. So ordered.
The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that we adjourn till 1:30 p.m.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 1:37 a.m. on Wednesday to 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Wednesday, November 24, 2010

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Grant us daily awareness of the precious gift of life which has been given to us. As Members of this Legislative Assembly we dedicate our lives anew to the service of our province and our country. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: Hon. members, it's my pleasure today to introduce you to the family members of our Clerk Assistant and director of House services, Louise Kamuchik. All members will know that several days ago I indicated that Mrs. Kamuchik will be leaving us for a retirement plan to begin in mid-December. Today at the Legislative Assembly we held a retirement reception, this morning, in her honour, and there was a very, very important and major turnout. I want to thank all members of the Assembly and other staff for that. Louise's contribution, as I've indicated before, has been invaluable, and she will certainly be missed.

Today her family members are here. If they'd rise, please: Bill Kamuchik, Louise's husband; Lorraine O'Connor, Louise's sister; Blythe Peleskei, Louise's stepdaughter; and Sherry Pleszuk, Louise's daughter-in-law. If you would welcome them all.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier and Minister of Advanced Education and Technology.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed an honour to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the House 84 visitors from St. Albert representing the Muriel Martin school. We have 72 very bright and energetic young students, who I hope can come back and see the magic spot when it is in operation. It was one of the things they missed on their tour today, but I'm sure they'll be back. They're accompanied by their teachers: Mrs. Jody Bialowas, Mlle Danielle Jean, Mlle Janelle Longpré, Mrs. Rhonda Surmon, and Mlle Britany Giles as well as parent helpers Mrs. Tracy Tiedeman, Mrs. Wendy Taylor, Mrs. Kathy Leachman, Mr. Tyng Ho, Mr. Kevin Huang, Mrs. Michelle Veldhuis, and Mrs. Wendy Grimshaw. I believe that they are seated in both of our galleries. I would ask that our guests please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a pleasure today for me to rise to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly a wonderful group of 15 grade 6 students from the brand new Monsignor William Irwin school located in my constituency of Edmonton-Whitemud. I had the honour of attending the opening of this great school earlier this fall. It's one of the ASAP 1 schools, one of the new P3 schools. It's a beautiful facility, but more importantly it has wonderful children and wonderful teachers. Fifteen of them are here with us today with their teacher, Michael Leskow, along with parent helpers Alan Simmonds and Gary Leskow, and that, indeed, is Michael Leskow's dad, who's helping him out, which is really wonderful.

When speaking with the students earlier today, we had some interesting questions. I know more questions will come when they invite me to come back to talk with them about government in their classroom. They're seated in the public gallery, and I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my great pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly 18 grades 5 and 6 students from Horse Hill elementary school. Horse Hill school is located in the northeast corner of the city just off the Manning freeway. These students are accompanied by their teacher, Ms Karen Fischer, and Mr. Ryan Duggan today. They are seated in the public gallery this afternoon. I would ask them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Back in June of '09 an accident at the intersection of highways 16 and 897 claimed the life of Pearl Watt, a long-time Kitscoty resident. Then again this August a tragic accident claimed the life of a young lady named Leasa Headon. At that time two young ladies from our constituency decided that something should be done, and they set out to start a petition to bring awareness about this intersection. In a very short time they raised 7,000 names on this petition, not only bringing attention to the intersection but to the fact of how much they cared about their friend and their community. The petition will be tabled later by the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Speaker, I can assure you that even the President of the Treasury Board needs to occasionally lobby our Minister of Transportation for intersections that make our highways safer, and I will continue to do that in their memory. At this time, though, to you and through you to all members of this Assembly, I'd like to ask these two young ladies, Miss Kylie McLean and Miss Erin O'Neill, to stand up so we can thank them.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour and a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Legislature a group of constituents from Edmonton-Castle Downs who also happen to be friends with our colleague from Calgary-East. The first one is Sheikh Ramez Mounzer. He is from the Druze Association of Edmonton. He has been a practising clergyman in our city for over 54 years, definitely serving the Druze community in our province with honour and dignity. He is accompanied today by his wife, Mazina Mounzer, who I have to tell you is a fabulous chef. She drops by my constituency once in a while with fabulous Lebanese cuisine, which I truly enjoy, and it shows. They are also accompanied by a friend, Rabha Ammur. I would like them to rise and receive the welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the newly appointed managing director of the Alberta

Emergency Management Agency, Mr. Dana Woodworth. Mr. Woodworth brings to the agency an accomplished background with the Canadian armed forces, including an assignment as the commanding officer of the Kandahar Provincial Reconstruction Team from 2007 to 2009. In addition to various leadership positions during his 28-year tenure with the military, Mr. Woodworth also served as director of human resources for the Land Force Western Area and was deputy commander of the Canadian Forces School of Military Engineering. Mr. Woodworth's most recent private-sector business management experience has been with Nuna Logistics Limited.

I'm confident that Mr. Woodworth's vast experience and collaborative leadership style will provide a great benefit to the agency as it continues to lead the co-ordination, collaboration, and co-operation of all organizations involved in prevention, preparedness, and response to disasters and emergencies. I would now ask Mr. Woodworth to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly four great Albertans that I have the privilege of knowing. The government of Alberta has been a proud supporter of Habitat for Humanity projects, including Anderson Gardens located in Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. Our guests are looking forward to all members of this Assembly attending our MLA build on December 14. These guests are seated in the members' gallery, and I'd ask that they rise as I mention their names: Alfred Nikolai, CEO; Steve Hertzog, COO and a U of S graduate; Susan Green, board chair; and Bill Winter, board member. I'd ask that all members please give the traditional warm welcome to these outstanding Albertans.

1:40

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure indeed to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House a guest from the constituency of Edmonton-Decore. Jane Chase is an area manager with Alberta Employment and Immigration for the Edmonton east area, which consists of Alberta Works offices in the Edmonton north, located in Edmonton-Decore, Edmonton south, Sherwood Park, Leduc-Parkland, and St. Albert offices. She is an active member of both the senior and regional management teams in the Edmonton region and is the chair of the linkages committee between Employment and Immigration and Children's Services. Jane Chase is also the lead and has been very involved with the families first project in the Edmonton region. I'll shed a little bit more light on the progress of the new office in Edmonton-Decore in a member's statement later on. I would ask that Jane Chase please rise and accept the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 18 members of the Elder Advocates of Alberta Society. I was pleased to meet with this group last week to discuss the Adult Guardianship and Trusteeship Act and how they feel it strips vulnerable seniors of their rights. Now, my mom is a senior, and the stories that they have told me tear at my heart. They are here today hoping that the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports will meet with them to discuss this act. Later I will be doing a tabling with literally thousands of names opposed to the Adult Guardianship and Trusteeship Act. I would like them to stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly the mayor of Crossfield and four councillors who are with him today. This mayor is someone that I've had many a scrap with through my life and thrown many punches with. He happens to be my brother, and I'm very proud of him.

Mr. Boutilier: His Worship.

Mr. Anderson: His Worship. I don't think I could ever call him that, though; that's for sure.

If he could please stand. There's Mayor Nathan Anderson of Crossfield, Deputy Mayor Jo Tennant, Councillor James Ginter, Councillor Jason Harvey, and Councillor Garry Richardson. If we could all give them the warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to have two introductions to make today. First of all, I'm honoured to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House the group of seven from Strathmore, the group of seven for their impact and significance, not their tenure just yet. Led by Mayor Steve Grajczyk, Deputy Mayor Bob Sobol, councillors Earl Best, Rocky Blokland, Dave Hamilton, and John Rempel, and accompanied today as well by the town manager, Dwight Stanford, I'd ask them all to rise and enjoy the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

My second introduction. I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the councillors and mayors from the city of Brooks. They're in the public gallery, so I can't see them, but I know they're up there: Mayor Martin Shields, Deputy Mayor Barry Morishita, councillors Kimberley Sharkey, Norm Gerestein, Ron Yewchuk, Noel Moriyama, and Bill Prentice as well as Bill's wife, Shirley Prentice, and accompanied today as well by the city manager, Wanda Mortensen, and by the city clerk, Amanda Peterson. I'd ask you all to stand and enjoy the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Habitat for Humanity Anderson Gardens

Mr. Vandermeer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm excited to stand here today to announce a Habitat for Humanity development called Anderson Gardens, which will provide 47 new homes for low-income families in the Bergman neighbourhood of northeast Edmonton. As the MLA for this constituency I am overjoyed since these new homes will benefit local families and residents.

On December 18, 2010, the first set of keys will be handed over to deserving families. On this day six of the 47 Edmonton families will see their dreams of affordable home ownership realized. Families who live in these homes will feel a sense of pride and community spirit.

Mr. Speaker, Habitat for Humanity builds more than just houses; it provides families with a better quality of life and a sense of belonging and safety. This is all possible thanks to Habitat for Humanity Edmonton and the many volunteers who donate their time and, of course, the Alberta government for donating $1.4 million to support this development. Anderson Gardens is the biggest development to date for Habitat for Humanity Edmonton and is also the biggest built green project in Canada. Not only is this an investment in affordable housing but an investment in the futures of the families who live in these homes, good news for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, indeed.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Health Care Solutions

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Three weeks ago in my member's statement I suggested that the health care crisis goes beyond partisan politics and that this Assembly should work together to fix the problem. It was a suggestion that was well received from all sides of the House at the time. Around that time we saw a shift in here, with question period often focused for the next several days after that on proposals and ideas about how to fix our ailing health care system and the government seemingly more receptive to opposition ideas.

However, recent events have once again put partisan politics ahead of solutions, I feel, and that, Mr. Speaker, is troublesome, especially in the life-and-death crisis situation that Albertans face in hospital. Members must not at any time forget who we work for – we work for our constituents and for the people of Alberta – and especially not at such a pressing time.

Unfortunately, I feel that in this instance Albertans aren't feeling like all of us are doing our jobs. Albertans are mad about health. Each week they're told there's a new reason for the crisis – acute-care beds, mental health funding, long-term care, home care, assisted living, you name it – but they're not given solutions. They're told instead by both sides, "We're working on it" or "No, you're not" before next week's issue comes forward.

Albertans don't want to hear any more about the problems. They want to hear about solutions, Mr. Speaker. They want transparency. They want reasoning. They want to be able to see what we're doing to solve the problem. Frankly, right now they're not getting that.

I applaud the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark for realizing the importance of this issue and the need for proposing feasible solutions in an open manner, and I encourage the rest of us to follow suit. I call on all members of the Assembly to stop telling us what's wrong but instead tell us what can be right. To the government, no more saying: we have a plan; we'll release it soon. Release it now for the people of Alberta to hear and evaluate. To those of us on the opposition benches, no more jumping from one problem to the next, finding more issues than solutions, more clubs to bash the government over the head with. To everybody, let's see the plan, give constructive criticism, work together to solve this crisis once and for all.

Thank you.

Northern Student Teacher Bursary

Ms Calahasen: School divisions across this province face some significant workforce planning challenges over the next few years, especially in northern Alberta, where a growing number of teacher retirements, growing student enrolment, and a decreasing supply of specialty teachers is causing great concern. One of the major challenges is recruiting and keeping teachers in these northern communities.

To address this challenge, government announced last year a northern student teacher bursary for new teachers. More than 150 students applied for the bursary, with 56 successful candidates.

This year Alberta Education and the Northern Alberta Development Council will be providing bursaries to a second group of postsecondary students who are interested in teaching in northern Alberta communities. To qualify, students must be in their last two years of teacher preparation studies at a postsecondary institution in Canada and meet other eligibility criteria. Successful applicants must live and work in the north for three years after graduating.

Many of my colleagues, like you, Mr. Speaker, know northern Alberta communities have a great quality of life to offer. I am pleased that this bursary will provide new teachers with an extra incentive to teach in these communities, and I have no doubt that three years will be more than enough to teach these young teachers to make northern Alberta their new home. More information on the northern student teacher bursary is available on the Northern Alberta Development Council's bursary website at www.benorth.ca.

That's why I'm pleased today to celebrate this exciting bursary and to encourage students to take advantage of all the financial support available to them for postsecondary education and training, so we can continue to grow our own, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Alberta Health Services Board

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The person most responsible for the situation we're in right now in health care is the former minister of health, who received a promotion for his bungling and inept health care experiment. The Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, on the other hand, got expelled from caucus, and the CEO of Alberta Health Services is hanging in the balance for showing frustration at attempting to implement this government's failed health policy. To the Premier: does the Premier appreciate how demoralizing it is to health care workers when he rewards incompetence?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, this government agreed to move to one board for Alberta Health Services. It was a decision made after careful thought, looking at the number of regions that we had, the duplication of administration. There were huge savings in reorganizing. I admit it was a huge merger. It was one of the largest in the country of Canada: a lot of staff, a lot of money. But it was the right decision to be made, and I stand by it.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, there's no question that Stephen Duckett must go. But does the Premier believe that firing Stephen Duckett will really solve the problem, which is the Alberta Health Services Board that this government has put in place?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the board will be deliberating in terms of the individual mentioned by the hon. member. That's another example, you know, of always looking for someone to blame. These are Albertans that came forward. It's really almost like a voluntary position because this is serious business, delivering health care in this province. They're working very hard at it and will continue to work with government and work with health care providers to find the best way of delivering health care in Alberta.

Dr. Swann: So the Premier saved dollars. How many lives did that cost? When will the Premier cowboy up and place the blame for the crisis where it properly belongs: on himself and on the former health minister for breaking the system?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, all of the money that was saved in the reorganization went to front-line services. Where does he think that we found the money to pay off all of the preceding deficits of the regional health authorities, to bring them up to what they thought would be the new level of standard to reflect the demands of Albertans? Again, add 6 per cent on top of that in last year's budget and then come forward with a five-year agreement. It all started by reorganizing and making sure that we reduced administration, moved forward with moving those dollars to the front line.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Emergency Room Wait Times

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Premier: to show his commitment to solving the emergency room crisis, will he support legislating emergency room wait times, which will keep this government accountable? Yes or no?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, it's a bit ironic because I just heard comments from one of the members across the way that that was not the way to go. I guess the bill is up for debate here in the House, and the motion will be made, and it will be debated. But there are other ways of resolving this issue, and that is to work with the 100 health care providers that came together that are moving forward on hiring 500 more nurses and opening 300 net new beds.

Dr. Swann: Well, to the contrary, Mr. Speaker, the United Kingdom has established these and had tremendous results.

To the Premier, again: will the individuals, both in Alberta Health Services and government, responsible for achieving wait time goals be truly held accountable by putting their jobs on the line to ensure these are achieved? Yes or no?

Mr. Stelmach: Well, I don't know who he is referring to, but I hope he's not referring to the people that are providing the service. Protocols have been put in place, there's additional money in place, there are new beds opening up, and of course there are more nurses being hired. So after that if there still is a backlog, we want to know what the reason for it is, and it shouldn't be vested in the board's domain because this is what has been done in the last week and unfortunately overshadowed by a lot of the antics since Friday. But that was a good decision made by 100 or so health care providers.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, to the health minister: why is the health minister trying to avoid putting his responsibility for achieving wait times into legislation? Is he afraid he can't deliver?

Mr. Zwozdesky: This question in other jurisdictions around the world would show you that in many cases the health system was more involved in the court system than it was in providing health services. So you don't want to go down that path. Secondly, Mr. Speaker, you can't just talk about legislating something in one area of health care. If you're going to talk about legislating it, you better be prepared to legislate everything, all the places that might have wait times, and that just is not possible.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Municipal Planning

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government continues to fail municipalities. This government has failed to institute a long-term funding arrangement, failed to comprehensively review the Municipal Government Act, and failed to make headway on the provincial land-use framework. To the Premier. In 2008 the government committed to complete the development of seven regional plans by this year, 2010. They have failed to do so. Why?

Mr. Stelmach: That statement is absolutely wrong in terms of completing the land-use framework by this time. In fact, we are the only jurisdiction in the world that has built a land-use framework based on the seven watersheds of the province. That, to me, puts a very important resource forward, which is water. The planning is continuing on the lower Athabasca, and to say that this government does not treat municipalities fairly with funding is just purely ridiculous.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, municipalities need stability, as you well know, having been involved. Will the Premier commit to entrenching a stable long-term funding plan for municipalities?

Mr. Stelmach: To all the municipal leaders here: sorry. Really. We have in place a municipal sustainability initiative. It's $836 million more money, more money than the traditional programs that we had in this government going to municipalities. It is the best funding model in the country of Canada. Just go to B.C., go to Ontario, go to the Maritimes.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, will the Premier, once again, this time open a comprehensive review of the Municipal Government Act instead of the piecemeal work that's been done every year, a comprehensive review of the MGA to provide greater autonomy to municipalities?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, unless something has changed recently, municipalities have a lot of autonomy. In fact, that's the reason why we're such good partners in delivering services for the very same taxpayer, the same voter. Just travel around Alberta and look at the improvements in infrastructure, again, municipalities working together where there's first response, buying fire trucks together, doing other municipal work together, building hockey arenas together. We have the mayor of Brooks here. I mean, go to that municipality, and look at the relationship they have with the county and the city. Now, get out of here, and go out and have a look.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. After a week of public outrage, Dr. Duckett's job is on the line. It's obvious to Albertans that this is a case of shooting the messenger, a scapegoat. The superboard is as ill-conceived a concept as was the new royalty framework. Dr. Duckett was hired by the former health minister. It's the Premier's and cabinet's idea that central planning is best. This plan does not work. Dr. Duckett's action last week reflects the attitude of the former health minister and how he deals with the public. Will the Premier admit the obvious, that their superboard is a failure and damaging our health system and it must be dismantled in an orderly way?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, my answer to that question is the same as to the first. It is the very same question as was raised by the opposition leader. We made a decision to reduce the amount of administration in the province of Alberta. We went to one board. We used a lot of those savings to pay down the deficit. We also put more money into the system, and we gave Alberta Health Services a five-year funding plan. There is no jurisdiction that's done that. That gives them a good planning mechanism for future use.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hinman: Central planning does not work.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, but Dr. Duckett's expertise is in measuring the cost and effectiveness of a health care system, not in the delivery of that system. It seems like the Premier and his cabinet have no idea of what his specialty is. Before you fire Dr. Duckett and pay him $700,000, wouldn't it be wiser to retain him to measure the actual cost and effectiveness of our health care system and to dismantle the superboard in an orderly way?

Mr. Stelmach: I have to correct the hon. member. He has to learn that the board is responsible for the employment of their CEO, and the board will make that decision. It's not a government decision. Then, again, I can tell you that we're not going back to 300 hospital boards. Where are you going to find the money? I just don't know where they're coming from.

Mr. Hinman: Mr. Speaker, the Premier doesn't even know what he's talking about. There never were 300 health care boards. No fearmongering. Get to it. And the Energy minister is a failure.

Not only does this superboard's failure destroy patient lives; it's also destroying careers. On Monday the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, one of our emergency room doctors, was kicked out of this government's caucus. On Tuesday Dr. Duckett's job is on the line. We need to refocus Dr. Duckett to dismantle the failed superboard in an orderly way and to do an analysis of the cost-effectiveness of our health care system. The people want their hospitals back. They ask you, the Premier, to dismantle the superboard.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Hinman: There is no question. Dismantle the superboard.

The Speaker: I heard there was no question. [interjection] Hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, I'll be happy not to recognize you in the question period if you don't want to raise questions.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Alberta Health Services President and CEO

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday outside this Assembly the Premier used what he called pretty strong language to criticize the CEO of Alberta Health Services. Can the Premier explain to this Assembly what his concern with the CEO of Alberta Health Services is?

Mr. Stelmach: Just reflecting what I heard from Albertans and that was clearly communicated to me as the Premier of this province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, the CEO of Alberta Health Services presided over a disastrous H1N1 immunization program, and this government said nothing. He presided over the closure of hospital beds and the elimination of nursing positions, and this government said nothing. But when he created a distraction from the government's messaging, he became a marked man. My question is to the Premier. Why does this government care more about its propaganda than about fixing the health care system?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, quite frankly, I don't know where the hon. member is coming from, but I think everyone in Alberta watched and saw the offensive comments. I'll just leave it at that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, when Dr. Duckett presided over an emergency room crisis that left hundreds waiting for hours on end suffering and even dying in emergency rooms, this government didn't issue one word of criticism. But when he embarrassed this government by eating a cookie, his days became numbered. Will the Premier admit that Dr. Duckett was doing the government's dirty work all along, and the reason that he is being fired, potentially, is because he embarrassed the government?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, when the CEO was first hired, there was a completely different scenario. We met with the Alberta Health Services Board to look at how we could bring about savings. Part of that, of course, was to reduce the administration in the system. All of those dollars went to front-line services, and then we also as a government looked at what was needed to deliver some long-term stability to health care in this province. That's why we took money out of other departments. We put it into health, which has a five-year funding model. Again, we're the only jurisdiction to do that.

Support for Policing

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association has been a strong advocate for urban communities for more than a century and are concerned that Alberta has the second-fewest police officers per 100,000 people. My question is for the Solicitor General. Policing costs for all municipalities have increased at a greater rate than population inflation, but the provincial policing grant has only increased to match population growth. Will the minister commit to finally take action and address this imbalance?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for bringing that up. Just as a matter of fact, I sat this morning in a bear-pit session with the AUMA, where not one single member raised any such objection to the work that we're doing in my ministry. We work with the AUMA as partners in delivery of law enforcement, and the funding that the department has brought forward has greatly exceeded the amount of population growth when you consider ALERT or sheriffs and any number of initiatives.

Mr. Hehr: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm glad the AUMA members are very hospitable during breakfast and kind to the Solicitor General, so I'll ask some real questions here. Given that Alberta ranks 12th out of 13 among the provinces and territories for police officers per capita, in my view, this proves that the government isn't doing enough to protect Albertans. What does the minister say to that?

The Speaker: If this is government policy, go ahead.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I deny the remarks, and I suggest that the hon. member shouldn't lightly brush over the concerns of the AUMA and suggest that they weren't ready for tough questioning at breakfast. It was after breakfast, for starters. Second of all, to the representatives here, we've worked very closely with them, and we're open to all concerns and questions that are brought forward.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was just saying that they're probably very hospitable and very nice people, and they don't always like to bring up things. That's all I'm saying, very hospitable.

Anyway, Mr. Speaker, although recent allocations of a hundred police officers per annum look impressive and make for a good sound bite, they still leave Alberta's urban centres underpoliced. As such, I'd like to know how many additional officers Calgary and Edmonton can expect during the upcoming fiscal year?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, it's good of the hon. member to correct himself there because what he first said was that they're incapable of asking good questions. Trust me; they're perfectly capable of asking good and tough questions, much more so than that member is there.

We continue to work with the Alberta municipalities, all of them, in the delivery of policing in this province. The member will know that the statistics are improving. We have a long way to go, but we'll get there by working together, not by lobbing bombs at each other.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Air Quality Monitoring

Mr. Berger: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Some say Alberta is lagging behind when it comes to air quality monitoring and reporting. Other Canadian jurisdictions have adopted the federal air quality health index, yet Alberta continues to use the provincial air quality index. To the Minister of Environment: when will Alberta adopt the air quality health index, which some are arguing is superior?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I've been in the centre of much discussion of late respecting the respective merits of both the provincial air monitoring program and the federal air monitoring program. I want to advise this member in the House that I even directed my officials to sit down with the federal government in a constructive way and develop a process whereby Alberta can adopt the federal program sometime in 2011. There are some system enhancements that need to be made, we believe, to our system and theirs.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Berger: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Back to the same minister. Well, I guess that I'm happy progress is being made, or is said to be being made. The bottom line is that Albertans deserve and expect air quality monitoring and reporting right now. In the interim, how is this minister going to ensure Albertans have strong air quality monitoring, a system that they can rely on?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, let me be clear. We have an air quality reporting mechanism that's up and operating and has been for quite some time. There are a lot of people who believe that there is an advantage to the system that we have in Alberta in that we have real-time reporting; the federal system doesn't. We have a greater range of pollutants that are monitored; for example, sulfur dioxide, hydrogen sulfide, and carbon monoxide. What we have to have that will serve the needs of Albertans the best is a hybrid model incorporating the best of the federal . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member. [interjection] The hon. member has the floor.

Mr. Berger: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That is encouraging.

My second supplemental to the same minister. Last summer we all had a skyline in Alberta that was covered with forest fire smoke from British Columbia. What other measures are in place to help protect and ensure our air quality for Albertans?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, following the events of last summer, in August of 2010 we established the first-ever initiative in Canada, between the government of Alberta and the government of B.C., that will allow for a forecasting system that will take into account natural events like forest fires. The system will be an online system. It will deliver hour-by-hour forecasts of location and concentrations of smoke up to 48 hours in advance. I think that will be of much improvement over where we were last year.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Environmental Impact of Oil Sands

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Proper environmental management of our oil sands is good economics. But instead of using the last two years of slower production as an opportunity to get ahead of the curve, this government has wasted it with international PR campaigns and spin. My question is to the Minister of Environment. Given that both the feds and this government have been throwing money at PR for years and lobbying campaigns with no success – the blows keep coming – will the government take real action and actually protect our assets, action before advertising?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, this member should know that all the advertising in the world won't do any good if you can't back it up with real evidence and real progress. Contrary to what this member would have Albertans believe, we have done just that. We have in the last year initiated something called directive 074, a significant advance. We've seen the first tailings pond reduced. We've seen dramatic reductions in the amount of CO₂ emissions that are associated with in situ. The list goes on and on and on. She just chooses to ignore it.

Ms Blakeman: Oh, Mr. Speaker, that's just sad. There is no evidence there.

Back to the same minister: is the minister so trapped in this government's rhetoric that he's unable to see the real environmental downside that our oil industry faces?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, the message that I have been delivering wherever I go is that there are challenges associated with the development of this resource. There are challenges associated with the development of any resource. But for this member or anyone to suggest that Alberta is ignoring those challenges, is doing nothing to protect the environment, is in my opinion doing a disservice to thousands upon thousands of people in the industry and in government who are working on this.

Ms Blakeman: Well, there's evidence, and we can all look at it.

My next question is to the Minister of Energy. In seeking wider markets in which to sell our oil, is the minister actively seeking countries with higher environmental standards, or do a country's environmental standards factor into the minister's strategy at all?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think we've made it very clear that what Alberta has to do is to ensure that we seek new markets because we are very much reliant on one market, and that's the market to the south. But I think what the member is actually asking is that we should somehow in Alberta be discouraging the sale and the production and the development of our resources. I would suggest that maybe they want to take that out as a policy platform in their next election.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Health Care Workforce

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question today is for the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness. For many years now we have been hearing a great deal about the shortage of health care workers in many parts of our province. My constituents of Calgary-East and all Albertans, for that matter, want to know how that shortage is affecting the delivery of health services and how it is affecting the current situations at the ER departments.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think the shortage that we have of health workers in certain parts of the province is in other parts of the hospital, not necessarily in emergency rooms per se. That's one reason why for other parts of the hospital system we are increasing the number of nurses who are going into positions. Our target over the next year and a bit will be about 1,900 more nurses. We're also adding additional LPNs. In the last couple of years, the last two years in particular, the LPN workforce has grown by more than 17 per cent, and similar statistics are available about doctors that are being recruited and hired.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister inform Albertans if the staff shortage is delaying the opening of new beds in our health facilities?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, we're opening more beds at a faster rate than in the history of the province. We're keeping up with demand, and I can tell you that in terms of training spaces we are training more doctors right now. First-year spaces in Alberta's two medical schools increased by more than 60 per cent just in the last few years, and this year the first-year intake is still going to be 50 per cent higher than a few years ago. We're moving in the right directions to fill those gaps where they exist in the province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister inform Albertans as to what concrete action he is taking to recruit the health workforce we need in order to meet the current and future health care needs for Albertans?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the short answer is that Alberta Health Services is very aggressively helping to recruit more doctors, more specialists. In that vein I have to tell you that we are leading Canada today in recruiting physicians and in recruiting specialists. In the last few years our physician workforce grew by 23 per cent, which is far ahead of any other province. Similarly, under the new three-year nursing agreement Alberta Health Services will be hiring at least 70 per cent of all the nursing graduates on a per annual basis. That's more than 1,100 new nurses. It's tremendous news.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Labour Protection for Paid Farm Workers

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Finally, a full year since the farm safety record report was completed, its release yesterday came with an announcement of yet another round of consultations but no action to give paid farm workers rights under the Occupational Health and Safety Act or to provide paid farm workers with mandatory WCB coverage. To the minister of agriculture: why does the minister continue to allow paid farm workers to be refused the same rights as other workers in Alberta, and has he spoken to his colleague the Minister of Employment and Immigration?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development.

Mr. Hayden: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, what's happened with this report's release is that it's pointed out what the industry itself has asked for. The industry itself has asked for a farm safety council so that they can determine their own future, which I think is important. This government is interested in saving lives, not complicating them like members on the opposite side.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. I will direct my next question to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Given that Alberta could easily be faced with condemnation from the United Nations International Labour Organization for breaking international law, as Ontario was last week, will the minister amend the Occupational Health and Safety Act to include paid farm workers?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, quite to the contrary. Alberta is encouraging, actually, our federal government to become a signatory to the international convention because we are so confident that our standards are not only adequate to meet the international criteria, but we by far exceed them. So we want to partake in that. I have to tell you that the best solutions will come always from the industry, that is aware of what they're doing, and that is why I believe the minister of agriculture is doing the right thing, asking farmers what is good for farmers.

Ms Pastoor: To the same minister: when the minister publicly stated that more substance needs to be added to the government's safety strategy for all workers, why does the minister continue to refuse to include paid farm workers?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, all Albertans know that the majority of farms in Alberta, even though incorporated, are still family farms.

By virtue of that, they are very unique workplaces because they're not only workplaces, but they're also places where people live and enjoy their lives. The fact is that the protocol that has been put in place will be consulting with farmers, those who actually live and produce. They will make sure that they are safe on farms, and they will tell us how to achieve that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Levy on Beef and Beef Products

Mr. Marz: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. At the request of the Alberta Beef Producers and the Alberta Cattle Feeders' Association the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development recently announced that he would be making the $1 national levy a mandatory, nonrefundable component of the beef cattle check-off. My question is to the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development. Why is this change being made now, when we just got rid of this check-off as part of the $3 check-off not that long ago?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The industry itself realized, I believe, the mistake that had been made earlier in that those groups that had lobbied for that found that it's very important that we put money into the Canadian Beef Cattle Research, Market Development and Promotion Agency. The $1 national check-off puts us on a level playing field with the rest of the nation and puts in place things that make the same things available to us as a country that other countries have.

Mr. Marz: Again to the same minister, Mr. Speaker: could the minister explain just how important these changes are to the beef industry, and will this be applied to imported cattle?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Absolutely. This now allows us to charge a levy on cattle that are imported into Canada, which is what we have to do when our cattle are imported into the United States. When we export into the United States, we pay a levy. That levy will amount to approximately a million dollars a year that will go towards market development and research to increase the possibilities for our business.

2:20

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Marz: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: when can the industry expect these changes to be implemented?

Mr. Hayden: Mr. Speaker, we've been moving it through the process as quickly as we can, and while this is maybe a best-case scenario and a best-guess scenario, I expect the changes to be implemented at the very latest by the end of this week.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Federal Support for Expo 2017 Bid

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's been a bad-news week for Edmonton and all Alberta as the federal Conservatives have rejected support for the popular campaign to bring Expo to Alberta's capital. Albertans are furious with being treated like this by a party that claimed they would give Albertans a seat at the national table while, instead, taking us for granted at every turn. But there is blame to go around. My question is to the minister of federal and intergovernmental affairs. Can she describe what direct efforts she and members of this cabinet have made to persuade their federal cousins to support Alberta's Expo bid?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, we have a member of our caucus and cabinet that actually sits on the committee. We've had numerous meetings, both individually and collectively, with members of the committee. We have spoken with our federal counterparts. Our minister of tourism has been extremely active on this file at every turn, even in the visits with Shanghai, talking to the federal officials. There isn't one person at this table, including the Deputy Premier, that hasn't made considerable efforts with the MPs and with the Prime Minister's office.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that, in fact, several Alberta cabinet ministers have justified luxurious junkets to foreign places as being part of supporting the Expo bid, will the minister tell this House why they have not been equally keen to get on a routine, early-morning flight to Ottawa to express as often as necessary to their federal Tory cousins that Expo would more than repay itself in the prosperity that it would generate in Edmonton, all Alberta, and Canada?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, not only have we lobbied, but we have put our money where our mouth is in support of this bid. Up to $3 million was spent, taxpayers' money, to support the Expo bid. There hasn't been anybody that hasn't, on their trips when they visit with the people in Ottawa, mentioned this. I recall last summer at the Stampede there were numerous overtures made to MPs when they were here in Alberta, not costing dollars to travel elsewhere. We've made a number of efforts on this file and many other files to try and support our province.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that it has taken Alberta's lone NDP MP to raise the federal Tories' abandonment of Alberta in the House of Commons and given that there is not one word on the public record of our Premier or any of this cabinet publicly urging the federal Conservative government to join the campaign, will the minister agree at this late point to finally get moving and publicly call on her federal Tory friends to reconsider their abandonment of Alberta? Will she do that today?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, there has been no attempt to be private about this. This has been very public, including texts of the Premier's speeches, in fact, asking for just exactly that. There has been nobody that's made an overture stronger than this Premier to that government.

May I also point out one other thing, Mr. Speaker. If we were on the floor of the House in Ottawa, we'd be doing exactly what the hon. member from the NDP caucus is doing and lobbying on behalf of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Electricity Costs

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government's electricity deregulation policy is like its health care policy, another mess that they're incapable of trying to fix. This government's flawed electricity policy drives up prices when temperatures go down. Yesterday the daily average pool price for power was over 20 cents a kilowatt, when the temperature was well below minus 20. My first question is to the Minister of Energy. Given that consumers won't see these high prices on their already high bills until after Christmas, how much will the price spike cost them?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, the easy answer to that question is that power prices in this province today on an annual basis are less than they were five years ago. You can take one particular example at one particular time of the day and make the comment that the member raised, but what he should do is look at it over the annual basis, and he'd come up with a different result.

Mr. MacDonald: This minister is responsible for driving up power prices in this province, and he knows it. Consumers know it every time they open their monthly bill.

Given that yesterday evening at 6 o'clock we were consuming here in Alberta over 10,000 megawatts of power, can this government guarantee that we now have enough power at a reasonable price to meet our demands on a winter day?

Mr. Liepert: Well, what we don't have, Mr. Speaker, is adequate transmission. That's why we brought in Bill 50, so maybe you want to think about whether you support Bill 50 or not.

Mr. MacDonald: You messed that up, too, and we don't have enough operating reserve either. We do not have that, and you know it.

Now, what operating reserve is adequate when we have a 10,000 megawatt demand for our electricity at supertime on one of the coldest days of the year? Is it 5 per cent, 7 per cent, 9 per cent?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, if you want to see a messed-up electricity system, go to Ontario, where the price is increasing by 15 per cent. It'll double in the next 10 years. That's a Liberal government in Ontario.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose, followed by the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Teacher Evaluation Process

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Having the highest quality teachers is a fundamental pillar of a high-performing education system. Our education system is ranked amongst the best in the world, and to maintain that position, we must ensure we have excellence in teaching. To the Minister of Education: what policies are in place to annually review the performance of teachers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member is exactly right. If we want to have the best education system in the world, we have to have excellence in teaching. That's fundamental. We have a very good track record in that regard, and we have some excellent teachers in the province. Most of our teachers, I would say, are responsible for helping us to be among the top five in the world. We have a teaching quality standard that outlines the knowledge, skills, and attributes that teachers are expected to demonstrate. When there's a formal complaint with respect to that, there's a process to handle that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what policies do we have in place to potentially remove teachers that may not be providing the best education to our students?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, that would be the practice review of teachers regulation, which outlines the appropriate process to review a complaint. Principals can utilize that process. Parents can utilize that process in the case of complaints about teachers in public and separate schools. In the public school system those go to a review process, which has been delegated to the ATA to administer. With respect to complaints about teachers in private or charter schools those go to a similar process but through the department.

Mr. Bhullar: Mr. Speaker, my last question to the same minister: does the concept of tenure apply in our public education system, and does that potentially create barriers that may not be in the best interests of our students?

Mr. Hancock: The short answer, Mr. Speaker, is no. There's no tenure for teachers in Alberta. Teachers are hired by school boards as contract employees, and if they're not performing up to the terms of the contract, the teaching quality standards, their performance can be reviewed, and their employment can be terminated. They are professionals, so there's a process for professional complaint if they are not practising to a professional level. So the old concept that teachers are there forever is not true. The new concept is that we have excellent teachers in this province, and we're going to continue to ensure that they are excellent.

Mr. Anderson: Today the Premier did what he does whenever he finds a public policy disaster on his hands: he finds a scapegoat. When the new royalty framework was exposed as a job killer, he blamed oil and gas entrepreneurs. When the budget crashed to unprecedented deficit levels, he fired his finance minister. And when his health superboard experiment turned into a bureaucratic centralized nightmare, guess what? He fired his parliamentary assistant and will likely axe the CEO. To the health minister: when is this government going to take responsibility for its actions, admit that they were wrong, and disband the failed . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There's no question that there have been some wonderful efficiencies brought about as a result of amalgamating the nine regions under one centralized administrative authority. I've indicated this before, but in case the member missed it, let me just repeat that we have reduced significantly the number of CEOs in the system, we have reduced significantly the number of VPs in the system, we have centralized the payroll, and also we've gotten into bulk buying or common procurement, which together with other things has saved us about $500 million to $600 million annually, and it's all going right back into health care to help in other areas.

Mr. Anderson: An 18 per cent increase in the health budget this year: that's efficiency. Congratulations.

This health minister isn't listening. The CEO and the doctor from Edmonton-Meadowlark are not your problems. Your flawed policy is. The superboard experiment has failed. It's over. The emperor has no clothes. Will this minister do the right thing and disband the superboard and put in place a plan to immediately decentralize control of health care back to front-line doctors and nurses in local communities? Decentralize.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, it's unfortunate that the member would take liberty with some of these numbers without explaining that out of that 15 per cent increase $1.3 billion was to get rid of deficits that in some parts were the creations of some of the former health regions, not all but some. That's a very important part of the equation we have to remember. Secondly, let's remember that in order to provide the best, predictable, stable planning, we brought in a five-year assured-funding plan for the first time in the history of this country, and we're going to stick to it.

Mr. Anderson: You're wrong, Minister. The superboard is a disaster, and anyone with a shred of credibility knows it. Not only has the superboard experiment failed; it has resulted in unneeded suffering and many deaths of Albertans. If you are going to stand behind this superboard, will you make this one promise? If your wait-time targets for the ER aren't being met over 95 per cent of the time within the next three months, will you resign your position? Will you do it, sir?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, what this province-wide Alberta Health Services Board has done is that they've just increased the number of acute-care hospital beds by 360, they've just increased the number of continuing care beds across this province by over 1,400, and they've just ensured that an additional 500 RNs will be hired to staff the acute-care beds. If time were to allow it, I could go on at some length about some of the accomplishments. Have there been some problems along the way? Yes, there have. Have they been owned up to? Yes, they have. Are they being fixed? You're darn right.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona, followed by Calgary-McCall.

Civil Forfeiture Program

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week we heard about how the proceeds of criminal activity seized through the Victims Restitution and Compensation Payment Act are being directed towards victims' groups and crime prevention projects throughout the province. My first question to the Minister of Justice: can the minister tell me how seized profits of crime and gang activity are being used to help vulnerable Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When we introduced this legislation two years ago, we made it very clear that there were two purposes to the legislation. The first was to directly impact street level crime and to give police the opportunity to intervene and to stop that crime. The other was to compensate victims. Through the last year and a half we've been able to seize almost $20 million worth of property and have now developed a civil forfeiture fund, which is funding community-based projects that deal with both prevention, dealing with the roots of crime, and also the protection of victims.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplementary to the same minister: why were these particular projects selected to be recipients of this funding?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The civil forfeiture fund will now be used to ensure that people who are impacted by crime at a community level working on projects in partnership with volunteers are able to develop both preventative programs and also support for victims. We've been able to support rural women's shelters across this province. We've also funded nine projects that are dealing with youth at risk to ensure that they have mentoring opportunities so that they make choices that aren't going to lead them to lives of crime.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Second supplementary to the same minister. It's been two years now since this has been implemented. Is there any indication that this legislation is actually making our communities safer?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I said at the beginning, there were two objectives. The first was to actually cut down on criminal activity, and what we have seen and what we have had reported in statistics from the police is that we are seeing much more seizure of marijuana grow ops. We're seeing the seizure of vehicles that are used in dial-a-dope operations to the point where in some cases, as ridiculous as it sounds, people that used to use vehicles to sell drugs are now walking because they're too afraid their vehicles are going to be seized. I know this has been a tremendous success in Edmonton, in particular. We've seized over 20 houses in Calgary. It is very effective.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Affordable Accessible Housing

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In Alberta the number of affordable housing units for those with disabilities is extremely low. For the few available spaces there are often long waiting lists, and few units provide in-house services. Those that cannot find housing often end up in seniors' long-term care facilities. To the Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs: does the minister agree that it is inappropriate to house a healthy 25-year-old in a long-term care facility with mostly seniors?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This member has a good question about accessible living and affordable housing. I've had the privilege of opening up and visiting many affordable housing projects that we've spearheaded through the entire province, not just in urban Alberta. It's actually our goal to have about 10 per cent of new affordable housing projects being fully accessible to people with mobility issues.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that housing is essential for independence, why has this minister forgotten about these Albertans in his 10-year housing plan?

Mr. Denis: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have to with respect reiterate my earlier answer. We have not forgotten about people who have affordable housing needs and who also have mobility issues. Again, about 10 per cent of the new affordable housing that we have is designated as accessible living. This is something that I'm very proud of as a minister.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister immediately provide policy direction to increase the number of adaptive and wheelchair accessible units to 5 per cent, which is needed right now? I know you've been talking about 10 per cent.

Mr. Denis: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have to say that, no, I will not immediately increase it to 5 per cent because, in fact, we're already doing 10 per cent. This is something that doesn't cost the taxpayer much more but at the same time has a big impact on the lives of people who require affordable housing and who may have mobility issues.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Grey Cup

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. With the teams now determined and the playing field at Commonwealth Stadium being prepared for the 98th Grey Cup, my questions are to the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit. With an early ticket sellout for the game and significant corporate sponsorship and fan interest why is the government of Alberta involved financially in the Grey Cup?

Mr. Blackett: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's one of those things. All of that success was predicated on a couple of different things, the early organization by the excellent Edmonton Grey Cup Festival Committee, but also, because we committed our money early this spring, the Edmonton Grey Cup Festival Committee was able to secure the corporate sponsors, they were able to go to the market with tickets, and they were able to sell out the Grey Cup prior to this season. Also, we did it because, like the Olympics, it was an opportunity for us to host the world, to host our federal counterparts. We have a large contingent of members . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is to the same minister. There is a lot of media attention and questions being put forth by my constituents regarding Huddle Town and the Grey Cup festival. Can the minister advise my constituents exactly what the government's role is in the Grey Cup festival?

Mr. Blackett: Just to finish off, Mr. Speaker, part of the reason that we did that is that, as I said before, because we have all these people from around the country, with a focus on Alberta a large contingent of our MLAs are going to be able to work with our federal counterparts to lobby on a wide range of issues, something the opposition members asked us to do, something that we continue to do.

As for the request about Huddle Town, it's an opportunity, through $300,000 from our department, to support Alberta artists, put them on a stage, showcase the great talent that we have, and make a venue that's available not just to those football participants but also those families in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My final supplemental is to the Minister of Tourism, Parks, and Recreation. What are the tourism and economic impacts of hosting the Grey Cup game for the province of Alberta?

Mrs. Ady: Well, Mr. Speaker, as a Stamped fan I'm a little sad, but as the tourism minister I am delighted because we're seeing the hotels and the motels fill up, and the restaurants and the bars. I think there's going to be a run on watermelons in this province. When we look back to Calgary last year, Calgary Tourism estimated $61 million in economic impact for the city and another $20 million for the rest of Alberta. Also, we showcase this great province. We can throw a great festival, and we're going to see Edmonton do that in the next few days.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Farm Safety

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The safety of Alberta farmers continues to be an important topic of discussion for many of my constituents. Yesterday the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development announced the creation of a farm safety advisory council. I wonder if the minister can tell us why he created this council and what he hopes to achieve.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Through this council we're going to be able to work together with industry and labour organizations to pave the way for an enhanced safety system for agriculture. Stakeholders are going to be part of the solution. The council will be co-chaired by someone from my department and people from the industry, and its membership will include people from all parts of the agriculture industry to reduce farm injuries and fatalities.

Mr. Prins: Again to the same minister, Mr. Speaker. The minister talks about working with industry in the formation of the council. What kind of input did the farming industry actually have in the work that went on prior to the announcement of this council?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Actually, the industry were the only people involved in the development of the recommendations that have come forward from Employment and Immigration. The consultation took place with 20 different agricultural groups that represented over 50,000 primary agriculture people. The message was very clear. There were 10 main recommendations, and we are acting on some of the recommendations already. One of the main recommendations was to establish this council so that people whose lives are at risk for injury or loss are the people that are putting together the plan for these safety programs that we need.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Prins: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: when is this council going to be formed, and what tasks will be assigned to the council?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are going to announce early in the process the names of the people who will be on the council. I want the council's work to begin and be under way early in the new year. We'll be working with that group to set the agenda for the type of issues that they want to see addressed, and we're going to work very closely with them to achieve that.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that concludes the question-and-answer period for today. Nineteen members were recognized. There were 113 questions and responses.

Before we move on to the Routine, there's a matter I want to raise with the Assembly when the maximum number of members are here.

Speaker's Ruling

Cellphone Cameras in the Chamber

The Speaker: This morning when I arrived at my office, because I could not join members until 1:35 or 2 o'clock this morning because you were in committee, a number of members brought to my attention a very serious violation of our rules and ethics which occurred in this House at approximately 1:30 in the morning.

The transgression goes to the very heart of the integrity of this Assembly and the right of members to do their work and the security and the privacy of members in this Assembly. Cameras and the taking of pictures is strictly prohibited in this Assembly, and at least several members – that is, more than two – identified one particular member who was undertaking such an activity.

This chair has made mention of this for going on nearly 14 years, so it's not the first time it's been raised. It's raised in a letter that's sent to all members prior to the commencement of a session.

No member rose last night on a point of privilege. That would have been the right of a member, to rise on a point of privilege. The member in question who committed this unethical transgression has been talked to by the Sergeant-at-Arms, has admitted it, and has apologized. I want to assure all members that if such an unethical transgression repeats itself in this Assembly, it is your responsibility and duty as a member of this Assembly to rise on a point of privilege, and we will deal with it in the Assembly on the subsequent day.

Members in this Assembly are elected to have all the freedom and all the rights of privacy and privilege when they work in this Assembly, and they are not to be interfered with by anyone, intimidated by anyone under the guise of whatever it is. It is not a joking matter in the eyes and the mind of this chair, this Speaker. You have every right – every right. I'll tell you why. I'll give you an example of why intimidation is so important. In 1933 in another country in this world, in the national Assembly of the Reichstag in Germany, storm troopers came into the Assembly and stood beside members who did not want to vote for the Nazi Party and intimidated the living daylights out of them to vote themselves out of existence.

It is a fundamental right for members to be in this Assembly and to have every right without harassment, intimidation, interference from any other member to do their particular duties. I raise that, but if members are aware of this, they must bring it to the attention of other members, and they must deal with it.

Thirty seconds from now we'll continue.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Calgary-Mackay School Achievements

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to bring some exciting updates from the constituency of Calgary-Mackay, a community with about 10,500 young people attending K to 12 schools. Panorama Hills elementary now has its beautiful playground in place due to the tremendous efforts of the parents, who worked on the playground on a windy and snowy day but with warm support from numerous local businesses as well as the excited, watchful eyes of the students. The playground is well used by students during recess, gym class, and after school.

John G. Diefenbaker high school, a feeder school for students from Calgary-Mackay, is proud to report that $700,000 in scholarships was granted at the fall awards program while Crescent Heights high school handed out over $350,000 for postsecondary scholarships.

Notre Dame high school, the only high school located within the Calgary-Mackay constituency, started the school year with the addition of the prestigious international baccalaureate designation. Additionally, the number of students that earned the Rutherford scholarship doubled this year to 122 students. In the athletics area the school's senior football team has repeated as the city of Calgary division 1 champions. The junior football team is also the division 1 champion.

Mr. Speaker, Mr. Kevin deSouza, the school's principal, told me that they cannot remember the last time a school won both senior and junior division 1 championships in the same year. More yet, this school's senior girls soccer team won its third consecutive silver medal in division 1, and the senior boys volleyball team is entering into the division 2 championship.

Mr. Speaker, I must say that I am very proud of the achievements of these students, and I'd like to applaud the efforts and supports from the teachers, school personnel, and the parents of these young people.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

North Edmonton Alberta Works Office

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On May 21, 2010, I was so pleased to help cut the ceremonial ribbon at the opening of the new north Edmonton Alberta Works office in Northgate Centre, located in my constituency of Edmonton-Decore. I was pleased to be joined by my colleagues the hon. members for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview and St. Albert and the Minister of Employment and Immigration to witness this exciting event.

Alberta Works offices are an important and integral part of our communities throughout the province. Our government strongly believes in the importance of equipping our workforce, both present and future, with all of the necessary resources for them to succeed. Mr. Speaker, this can only be accomplished through the wonderful and well-informed, competent staff at the Alberta Works offices. They offer career and employment programs and services to help Albertans prepare for employment opportunities. They also provide support for training and temporary employment programs.

Alberta Works offices offer four special categories of services for their clientele: employment and training services, income support, health benefits, and child support services. I am very proud to say that the new Alberta Works office at Northgate Centre is the sixth centre in Edmonton and the 11th in the capital region, which is indicative of the level of support our government offers to help Albertans, from those looking for their first job to others who wish to make career changes but don't know where to begin.

This new office provides Edmontonians with more convenient choices when seeking career services. Also, not only is the location itself very convenient for those who live in the area; it is very accessible by using the light rapid transit system. There is ample free parking. I am assured that it's going to help Edmontonians and Albertans to reach their goals.

The Alberta Works office is a great addition to north Edmonton, and I look forward to hearing the success stories.

Government Accountability

Mr. Hinman: Today the Wildrose caucus released our democracy and accountability policy. The political atmosphere of Alberta has been reduced to an undemocratic, aristocratic attitude. This government does not understand the importance of open and honest debate. They meet behind closed doors and use blind loyalty to support plans they know are failing. They follow along the theme that if you tell a big enough lie and repeat it often enough, the people will believe. The idea to bury ER reports for two and a half years is unacceptable. To force people to wait in hallways because they refuse to open closed units is wrong. They say, "People first," but their actions scream: not so.

They gag our health care workers with the threat of their jobs and then claim it's a misunderstanding. Their MLAs love the gag orders. It's blanket coverage for their bad decisions. They can come out and tell their constituents, "I voted against it in caucus" but that they lost the vote and must respect the majority of caucus. They truly believe that if you bury it deep enough and deny it long enough, people will believe. Oh, they have free votes. It's simple: you are free to leave. There are very few who have the intestinal fortitude to stand against, let alone speak out against, what they know is wrong: the new royalty framework, $15 billion in untendered and unneeded power lines, and the centralization of our health board, to name a few.

What has happened to transparency and accountability in government? The bills and regulations being passed make it more and more difficult for everyday Albertans to try and access information and carry on business here in the province. The first action of this new government was to give cabinet massive raises and sign gold-plated contracts with their friends and supporters. The next major act was to centralize our health care and sign new contracts with bonuses that are unexplained and seem only to be related to the time they remain on the job.

All decision-making processes should be done in the best interests and wishes of the people, not elected officials but the people. You say the right things, but your actions speak louder than your words.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and present a petition on behalf of the President of the Treasury Board, the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster. This petition contains approximately 7,000 signatures, as was indicated earlier today, and urges the government of Alberta to make changes to the intersection of highway 16 and highway 897 near Kitscoty. The signatures include constituents from Vermilion-Lloydminster along with many other Albertans that travel the highway and are concerned with the safety of that intersection.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I, too, have a petition to present, and it reads:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to immediately abandon plans to increase the role of private insurance in the health care system, and instead, commit to strengthening the single-payer, public system.

Thank you.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to give notice today of a motion.

Be it resolved that the Assembly waive Standing Order 3(4)(b) and extend the fall sitting as provided for under Standing Order 3(9).

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of an article written on August 12, 2008, by Danielle Smith, who is now the leader of the Wildrose Alliance Party. In the column that she wrote, it says that the former health minister was not planning to "tear the health system down brick by brick . . . Not by a longshot." She says, "He wants to make important changes, to be sure, but the system is in no danger."

The Speaker: I was so proud of you yesterday, hon. member, for standing up, identifying a document, and sitting down. Now today you want to have a debate. Table the document. Let's move on because we have to come to Calgary-Varsity yet, and we're running out of time.

Mr. Mason: But, Mr. Speaker, I'm doing God's work here.

The Speaker: I know.

Mr. Mason: Okay. Mr. Speaker, I will just table this document. It says, "There is nothing [the former health minister] is contemplating that is the least bit scary. In fact, he's off to a pretty good start."

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table five copies of a letter from a constituent, Marjorie McIlveen, that was sent to the Premier asking that seniors' benefits that were taken away during the early '90s be fully reinstated. She is particularly angered because seniors do not get the full cost-of-living bonus in Alberta, which other provinces give to their seniors, and because seniors' benefits in this province are, she says, determined by an unfair means test.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm going to have to catch up on the tablings of my letter and donation to the food banks. As per my pledge in the Assembly on April 2, 2007, half my indexed pay raise, $146.25, is donated monthly to a food bank in southern Alberta to push the fact that AISH should be similarly increased and indexed, which is only fair. I am tabling five copies of my letters: in March to the Crowsnest Pass food bank; in April it was the Claresholm food bank; and in May it was the Vulcan food bank.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is a letter dated August 4, 2010, and it is a letter I received from the hon. Minister of Energy indicating that “pursuant to Section 50 of the Mines and Minerals Act, Alberta Energy is prohibited from disclosing the names of the producers that have disputed the basis of bitumen royalty valuation.”

The second tabling I have is on behalf of a constituent. I have permission from Vanessa Pierce to table this correspondence. Vanessa Pierce is expressing concern towards the government regarding psychiatric care beds at Alberta Hospital Edmonton.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table a letter signed by thousands – and I mean thousands – of Albertans who believe that the Adult Guardianship and Trusteeship Act is unjust legislation that violates the rights of vulnerable seniors. It’s shameful, and with the minister recently doing a tabling on seniors abuse, it is my hope that the minister of seniors will meet with them and realize how abusive this legislation is.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I’m tabling with permission an e-mail from a constituent, Charmaine Roux, who wants the government to understand how difficult it is to survive on the current rate of AISH and to encourage changes in the amounts of the AISH benefits. She believes the government pledged in election promises to help the homeless and the disabled and would like to hold them accountable for thus far not doing that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’m tabling e-mails from the following people opposed to Bill 29: from Alberta Judy-Anne Wilson, Jill Seaton, Martin Lambert, Andrew Hurly, Alice Easton, Bill Termeer, Kathy Rothwell, Tim Hartley, Kristine Kowalchuck, Lisa Downing, Mike Warren, Robyn Termeer, Julie Desautels, Stephanie Hrehirchuk, William Strean, Kevin Calpas, Bonnie Drozdowski, Shane Drozdowski, Ngaio Hotte, Andrew Higgins, Bob Wieterman, Nancy Rourke, Tanis Eaker, Ross Smith, Wendy Seniuk, Roberta and Daryl Palanuik, Veronica Jordan, Leslie Ann McCloskey, Chuck and Lesley Young, Arthur Powlyk, Barry Ferguson, Cindy Davies, Shantel Koenig, Kerry Donahue, Kyle Cossette, Mike Blennerhassett, Caroline Bees, David Janzen, Renee Krysko, Tony Fricke, Emily Moss, Simon Ham, Hilary Young, Blair Shunk, Bryce Hleucka; from outside of Alberta Brian Kowalski, Bruce Donnell, Blair Jamieson, Ellinor Sandberg, Deanne O'Donnell, Fred Kaarsemaker, Joël Prades, Ben Ruwe, Sandra Deneault, Sarah Richardson, Frances Searle, David Hulsman, Alison Woodley, Bradd Tuck, Pierce Sharelove, Janet Feduszczyk, Sheila Adams, Tom Potter, C. Cummings, Bessie Wapp, Clare Powell, Lindsay Ansell, Barry Carter, David DeBacker, Georg Saure, Katherine Elliot, Jennifer Rae, Ross Powell, Robert Hii, and Oliver Kent.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of Mr. McFarland, the hon. Member for Little Bow, a copy of a petition signed by 66 Coaldale and area residents requesting amendments to section 7(1)(c) of the Alberta Human Rights Act.

Orders of the Day

Government Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Address to the Legislative Assembly by the Governor General

20. Mr. Hancock moved:

Be it resolved that the Assembly invite Their Excellencies the Right Honourable David Johnston, CC, CMM, COM, CD, Governor General of Canada, and Mrs. Sharon Johnston, CC, to the floor of this Chamber in order to have His Excellency address the Legislative Assembly on Monday, November 29, 2010, and that this address be the first order of business after Prayers, following which the ordinary business of the Assembly will resume notwithstanding the designated times stipulated in Standing Order 7(1). Be it further resolved that His Excellency’s address become part of the permanent record of the Assembly.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It’s my pleasure to move Government Motion 20. We have had a new Governor General appointed recently in Canada, as everyone knows. He is making the capital of Alberta one of his first official visits, and it is both prudent and appropriate for us to invite him, while here in Edmonton, to address this Assembly.

The Speaker: This is a debatable motion if anybody wants to participate. If not, I’ll call the question. Shall I call the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Cao in the chair]

The Chair: The chair would like to call the committee to order.

Bill 17 Alberta Health Act

The Chair: Any comments or questions on amendment A2? We continue on.

The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Okay. Thank you, Mr. Chair. I think that we’ve debated this amendment long enough. Just to recap very quickly, we want to enshrine in our legislation, in the Alberta patient charter, the principles of the Canada Health Act, meaning that publicly insured services for health care are universal, accessible, portable, and so forth. We put that into the record a hundred times last night. We’ve debated this. So I would hope that we can call the question on this amendment.

The Chair: Any other hon. member wish to speak on amendment A2?

Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment A2 lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 3:03 p.m.]

[Ten minutes having elapsed, the committee divided]

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Chair, I rise to speak on Bill 17, the Alberta Health Act. I have an amendment I would like to distribute and speak to.

The Chair: All right. We'll pause a moment for the pages to distribute the amendment.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, please continue on the amendment. It's now known as amendment A3.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'd like to speak to Bill 17. I think it is a very decent bill with good principles in it. I understand the work that was involved in bringing this together. The public was consulted by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

I think there are some very good principles in this bill. I like the idea that there's going to be a patient charter. I like the idea about principles. Now, some critics may say that that's to insinuate that we didn't have any principles to begin with. I disagree with that assertion. I think that we have had principles, but we're actually legislating them into the act. I think that's a very good, symbolic thing. The reason I think it's a very good thing is because the Canada Health Act is undergoing a review in 2014. The nation is watching to see what this province is doing in health care. I think that not only standing on principles but actually legislating principles is an honourable thing for this province to do, and I'm wholeheartedly in agreement with this.

Now, the main concern that I have with this. To be honest, I'm not really a policy guy. I'm just a stupid front-line emergency doctor from an inner-city hospital. I don't really understand policy. I'm a new member of government. I just got elected a couple of years ago. What's most important to me, Mr. Chair, is how policy is actually translated and implemented on the front lines, on the street, how it affects individual people and individual families. The thing that concerns me as a front-line health care professional and all front-line health care professionals and all patients is: what does this really mean for me?

Now, having said that, I think this is a very decent piece of legislation. My amendment is introduced for the purpose of making this a fantastic piece of legislation, something that Albertans can relate to. As you can see, there are four simple guiding principles that the average Albertan, Martha and Henry, can relate to.

Number one, the guiding principle is that we shall have in our system no unnecessary deaths. We shall have no unnecessary harm to patients, no unnecessary delays to care, and no unnecessary waste of resources should occur. And we need to set standards for lengths of stay in the emergency departments of hospitals with the Position Statement on Emergency Department Overcrowding, published by the Canadian Association of Emergency Physicians and dated February 2007.

Mr. Chair, recently you have heard of our crisis in the emergency departments. Dr. Paul Parks, the spokesperson for all of the emergency doctors of this wonderful province, 300-plus ER doctors, has raised a concern, a significant concern for public safety. We've had an emergency debate on this. The concern was that in the upcoming flu season the system may face a potentially catastrophic collapse of emergency services. These are not my words; these are the words of Dr. Paul Parks, who is the spokesperson for all the emergency doctors of this great province. The question is, Mr. Chair: how did we come to this?

Before I go on, I'd like to tell people specifically what this position statement for emergency doctors is. You can go online on your computer right now. Go to www.caep.ca. Look at the 2007 position statement. It means that if you're a minor case that goes to emergency, you need to be upstairs in the hospital or on your way home within four hours of entering the emergency room. If you're a major case, what we call a CTAS I, II, or III, the minors being IV and V, you need to be upstairs in the hospital if you're admitted or on your way home within six hours at the 95th percentile.

Some will argue that this is going to be causing lawsuits and legal challenges and that this is a wait times guarantee to people. It is not a wait times guarantee. The statement is about accountability measures for everyone working within the health system.

Lawsuits can only happen when there is harm that comes to a patient, when there's a duty of care and there's a breach of that duty, and there's a relationship between the breach of that duty and the harm. These are the four conditions that must be met for a successful lawsuit. I can tell you what Dr. Paul Parks' position currently is: thank God that Albertans are wonderful, forgiving, caring people.

As the previous representative of the emergency doctors of this wonderful province I was in Dr. Paul Parks' position. I was quoted in February 2007 as saying: it's a crisis; I have never seen it this bad before.

We are not meeting the basic standards of care as set by the emergency physicians of this province, the standards of care being from when you present to an ER department to getting your painkiller when you have a broken leg or when your child has a broken wrist and they're suffering, from when you present to an emergency department when your grandmother or grandfather is having crushing chest pain, and they're sweating, and they're short of breath to getting their ECG within 10 minutes – you can't get a clot-buster if you don't get the ECG to get the diagnosis, if you wait for four hours on an ambulance stretcher to off-load. We are missing all the time standards of care, not all the time but many times.

Look at the Health Quality Council report of 2009. From 2007 to 2009 the emergency wait times have gone up the wrong way – these are pre Dr. Duckett wait times – by 30 per cent for admitted patients, the sickest patients in the system.

Mr. Chairman, these are major issues and major concerns that have been raised, the six-hour and four-hour rules at the 95th percentile. This is actually a health care system problem. The health care system is broken, and we broke it. You can't blame anyone else. We can't blame these guys over here, we can't blame these guys over here, and we can't blame those guys over there. We can't blame the nurses, we can't blame the doctors, and we can't blame the patients. We broke it.

Mr. Chair, my own father has had five near-death instances when his care was delayed. When he actually got care, I'll tell you, he got world-class care. We have a fantastic group of health care professionals from the paramedics to the unit clerks to the people who clean the hospitals to the nurses to the nurse practitioners and the LPNs and the nursing aides and doctors and administrators. Once you get into the hands of these wonderful people, you don't have to worry about anything. They care for you and look after you.

The problem, Mr. Chair, is getting in, whether it's for cancer care, whether it's for your prostate surgery, whether it's for your child waiting for that hernia to be done, whether it's for your wife to get her hysterectomy, or whether it's for you to deal with your brain tumour. Fifteen to 20 per cent of Albertans don't have a family doctor, and if you have one, you have to wait – I don't know – a month, two months, to get in. If you get in, it's five minutes for one problem.

The waits to see specialists have gone through the roof. The waits to get surgery have gone the wrong way since I got elected, Mr. Chair. They have gone the wrong way. Yes, we've done some blitzes recently. I think the current minister of health is a fantastic fellow. That guy is the best thing that has happened to health care in modern-day times. He is working his buns off to fix a very broken system, that was broken by the previous minister of health.

How can I say that objectively speaking? Objectively speaking, I must give you objective information. You know what? I actually can't blame that minister either because it's a joint decision made by everybody on that side. I was there, and I accept responsibility for it personally. I didn't say anything. How do I know? Number one, the main system measure is how long admitted people sit in the emergency departments. It is the number one performance measure in the U.K., how long people wait in the emergency room. Every measure in acute-care feeds into that, whether it's your surgery time, your cancer time, from every medical service.

This is not an emergency problem. It is a broken health care system problem that manifests itself in the emergency room. That's the issue, Mr. Chair. We have to make this clear. It is not the runny noses and sore throats causing the problem in the emergency room. This is a rush hour issue. When you leave in rush hour, you know, when you leave the building at work, do you guys ever wonder: what the heck is taking so long getting home? Who's that guy or gal at the beginning of rush hour slowing everything down? Somebody is up there. Well, I'll tell you what the problem is. Health care is an input, throughput, output issue. For everyone who is a businessperson here, they would understand this.

Acute care cannot function if you can't get out of the hospital. To get out of the hospital, here are the solutions. I don't want to talk about negative stuff anymore; I want to talk about positive stuff. The solutions are, number one, we have probably one of the most mediocre home care systems in Canada because they're grossly underresourced. That's not any disrespect for the front-line staff at all. In fact, they're fantastic. They're overworked, they're overburdened, and we don't have enough of them. We need to have investments into home care, home care, and home care. When you're a senior, the best home to be in is the home with your own yard and your own flowers and your own spouse and your own family with the smell of your cooking and the smell of your own carpet, their own physical space. You know what happens to seniors when they leave that? They get confused and disoriented at nighttime. That's what happens.

Secondly, we need to invest in subacute care. Subacute care is if you break your pelvis, you don't need an operation, but you can't go home because you can't move. You don't need a doctor and a nurse; you need a couple of big, strong, husky, tough people to pick you up to take you to the washroom and move you around so you don't get a blood clot in your leg, so you actually can get some fresh air and get out and get fed. Your brain is working okay, you can change your own diaper, but you can't physically move. So we need more investments into subacute care, which is actually beyond acute care.

Then there's rehab care. The future is a lot of seniors, a lot of young people with chronic disease, younger people getting sick earlier, seniors living longer, getting sick when they should be getting sick at the age of 80 or 90. They're going to be having strokes, hip replacements, knee replacements, and they're going to fall. When they fall, the best thing is to rehabilitate them to get them back into the best bed, which is that bed with that nice comfortable blanket that they've had for 15 years, with their loving spouse beside them. So home care, subacute care, rehabilitation care.

Lastly, we have a lot of seniors, a lot of people actually, not just seniors, people with malignant illnesses like cancer, and they're dying. Well, you know where they end up dying? There are not enough community palliative care and hospice beds. They actually are brought to the emergency rooms. I've seen first-hand, as have many of you, and all of my colleagues in the emergency front lines will echo, that to lie three days half naked in a cold emergency department hallway with the whole world passing by you in the last few days of your life has got to be probably the most horrific way to exit life.

Then we need long-term care. Today one major reason the emergency department crisis has happened is that we have 800 seniors who are homeless. In fact, it contradicts the policy of this province's government because they're separated from their spouse. Eight hundred of them are all alone in cardiology wards, orthopaedic wards, medical wards, deserted in emergency rooms because they're homeless. They can't stay in their own home, there's not enough home care, so guess what? We're not building any long-term care, and they actually need long-term care.

When they come into emergency, maybe they don't need long-term care right away. But once you spend 10 to 15 days in hospital in a cardiology ward, you get confused at night and disoriented. You don't get up and walk around. All of a sudden you turn into a long-term care patient for the rest of your life probably – I don't know the number – maybe two, three, four weeks into it. You have healthy seniors sitting beside sick people, who have fevers and pneumonia, and then they get sick in hospital. That's on the output side.

On the input side, Mr. Chair, did you know – the data that I have I was given by AHS informally – that 16 per cent of patients are actually readmitted to hospital within seven to 14 days? First, they're discharged. They have no family doctor to go back to, and sometimes they're discharged too quickly. So we plug up the hospitals with healthy seniors though we are forcing the doctors on the ward to discharge a day or two earlier patients who probably need to stay one or two more days. So they actually end up, one-sixth of the time, back to begin the journey all over again, that I may not tell you about.

What happens is that upstairs is plugged up by long-term care. The emergencies, they get plugged up by sick admitted patients, patients who have been triaged, assessed, treated, stabilized, admitted, and they just never leave. They stay in the emergency room for one day, two days, three days. The record, I heard, was 11 days with the wrong doctor, wrong nurse, wrong hallway, for the wrong period of time. It's not the wait in the emergency room; it's actually the four or five days that the care is delayed, the specialty care upstairs. For every admission through acute care, their care is delayed for anywhere from eight hours to 11 days. So they actually are sicker by the time they get upstairs, which means they actually need to be upstairs in the hospital longer.

A pneumonia should be in the hospital five days on the average. When you spend the first four and a half days in emergency, well, what are they going to do? Kick you out in six hours when you get upstairs? Well, they actually need to be upstairs for an extra four or five days.

So the emergencies are plugged up by admitted patients who don't belong there. When I got elected, during the election in the University of Alberta hospital in a 48-bed emergency department there were 42 admitted patients. We were operating a quaternary care trauma centre out of six beds. There were people dying in the waiting rooms. The Royal Alex had 40 admitted patients. It was a crisis. My own father had an illness where he was triage category 3. He should have been in a bed in 30 minutes. He waited, I think, four to six hours in the waiting room. He was dehydrated. He just needed a bag of water. He was dehydrated from the flu, but due to his bad heart, it failed, and then he had a massive heart attack. He spent five days sucking on a ventilator tube and 10 days in the intensive care unit during the election.

An Hon. Member: Wow.

Dr. Sherman: Yes. They had an emergency doctor in the province who's running for government, and I didn't ask for special care. I have never asked, but I do know that paramedics, nurses, and doctors know that that's my father, and they probably pulled him out of the waiting room two hours earlier. So how about all of your constituents? What hope was there for them during the election?

Dr. Paul Parks recently brought up 322 cases. These cases happened during the election. During the day of the debate the Leader of the Opposition questioned the leader of the party that I ran for, that people are dying in waiting rooms, and our province's leader laughed at him and said: no, they're not. There were at least five deaths. Those 322 cases are just from the University of Alberta hospital at one point in time, and this was happening in every hospital. The doctors had given up, said: we're not going to document this anymore because it doesn't make any difference.

What have I done? Did this happen today? [Dr. Sherman's speaking time expired]

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness on amendment A3.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much. Mr. Chair, I want to begin my comments here by saying that this amendment, unfortunately, is not one that I could support. I'm going to explain why. I realize that the member who presented it has some expertise in this area, obviously.

Some Hon. Members: Some?

Mr. Zwozdesky: I'm talking about legislation, some expertise with respect to legislation and amendments and so on. I also recognize that he has a lot of expertise specific to emergency rooms and that he's trained a number of people in that field. He has my utmost respect for what he has done to help in that regard.

I want to comment a little bit here about a few things that he said which I, frankly, disagree with. Number one, I cannot agree at all with anyone telling me that the system is broken because the health system is not broken. I acknowledged today in question period that there are some problems. I've acknowledged that before, and I've also said: but we're working very hard to fix those problems.

With respect to the now-infamous Thanksgiving e-mail that was sent to me by Dr. Paul Parks, the current head of the Alberta emergency docs who work in this province, he did not say, that I can remember, that the system was broken. I think what he did was a good job of pointing out that some large potential – and I want to emphasize the word “potential” – problems exist in the system and need to be addressed immediately. Let me rephrase that: some large problems exist that could cause even larger potential problems. I think he used the term “potential collapse” or words to that effect. So let's not forget what was really said there. That is not to say that there aren't some problems. I'm acknowledging that there are, and we're working hard to do that.

The problem that I see here with respect to this particular amendment, however, is that in order to legislate the standards for lengths of stay in emergency departments and so on, that is something that you've got to be really careful over. I can't support doing it, and I want to explain why.

Number one, when you put something into legislation, as we all know, you are putting something into law, and if you put something into law and someone breaks it, then there are going to have to be some repercussions for that. Now, that's okay. That's called accountability. But what you have to understand, though, is that you can't just put one aspect of health care under that microscope. You would have to put all aspects of health care under that microscope because then others would come in and say: well, what about legislating wait times for cancer care, for access for kidney cancer, for brain cancer, for lung cancer? And the list goes on. Why not put in wait times by law for eye surgery? Why not put into law wait times for access to continuing care or whatever type of care you might have?

Now, while it sounds easy to say that that could be done, it's just not practical because as new improvements are made, what are you going to do? Bring that act in here every few months for changing, for updating, go through the whole rigamarole of yet another debate? Where those kinds of issues belong, Mr. Chairman, is in policy. They belong in policy, and they belong in action plans, and they belong in performance measures. That's what's coming forward. But for a lot of things that have taken us a little off that path that we were on so aggressively a couple of weeks ago, we would've had that all done and announced by now. But, no, we had to stop and take time for some of the other stuff that arose rather unexpectedly. So we've done that.

The danger with having something like this in legislation is to say that the court system would become even more involved than it already is. There's nothing wrong with that to a degree, but in the health care system it would hold up so many things that need to be done and acted on quickly without coming in for a full debate per se to change an act or words to that effect.

What is important here is to take a look at what we are doing, so I want to talk about a few things that we're doing that will help address exactly what the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark is talking about. First of all, what are the problems that we see with respect to the wait times in emergency rooms? One of the single largest problems, Mr. Chairman, is the fact that the emergency docs who wish to admit a patient for overnight stay, what they call an EIP, an emergency in-patient, have not enough places to refer them to because other parts of the hospital system are full; they're blocked, as the doctors would say.

Typically, a person who needs an overnight stay has to go to an acute-care bed. Typically. There are other options today, but that's typically what happens. As a result of that, they look to see what availabilities there are in acute care, and in many cases they'll find there is no availability. So you've got to take a look at who's in acute care and can we move some of those people out? That's why we are this year alone building now over 1,400 new continuing care spaces, to unclog the backlog of people who are in acute care that could be, should be, and ought to be in a different care setting. Fourteen hundred beds: that's up from the original target this year of something like 1,100. It's certainly up from 1,300 that was talked about just as early as two weeks ago. So you can see that significant improvements are happening, and that's just on the continuing care piece.

Similarly, there are other options with respect to opening up more beds to unclog that blockage that I was just talking about. We know that in Edmonton and in Calgary, for example, at least 70 more beds have opened or will have opened since September through to Christmastime this year, at least 70 additional beds. They're different types of beds. There are transition beds. There are medical assessment unit beds. There are medical observation beds. In some cases they might be hospice beds, and in other cases they might be detox beds. There's a lot of activity going on with that. So that's one of the solutions to the problems.

Another major issue with respect to what's causing the wait times to stagger back the way that they have been lately in particular is with respect to who is actually going to these emergency departments to begin with. Why are people going to these emergency departments? There are a number of reasons apart from the obvious. A serious, real, complex emergency should always be taken to and dealt with in emergency. Of course it should.

However, there are a number of people who are going to emergency today that perhaps have minor complications that could be dealt with in a medicentre or in a medical clinic or in some cases by a doctor, but perhaps the doctors' offices are full or maybe they're closed or whatever the case might be. People who are in the system, who work in it would tell you – I've talked to hundreds of them, and I know the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark has as well – that there are simply too many people coming into emergency who may not have a true emergency, but they have no place else to go or they don't know of someplace else that they can go.

That's why it's important to publicize things like the Health Link line. I had a couple of cases this weekend where people called, and they were immediately referred to the Health Link line. There are hundreds of these people, Mr. Chair. I just happen to know of two personally. They got the help that they needed through the Health Link line, and they didn't have to go to emergency. After checking with them today, their problem is under control. It just illustrates one point.

The other related point to that is with respect to physician supply, the number of doctors that we have throughout the system, and the number of nurses that we have throughout the system. That's why I indicated some of the good news on that front as well. Today I talked about the fact that there are more than 8,500 licensed practical nurses in Alberta, for example. That means that our LPN workforce has grown by more than 17 per cent in just the past two years – in just the past two years. This is tremendously good news.

Similarly, we continue to invest in the future of registered nurses and their profession. Over the past few years the number of registered nurses who graduated from training programs in Alberta increased by more than 20 per cent, Mr. Chair. We're also looking at targets for the next year, where we'll be able to bring in about 1,900 new graduates. That will be a total increase of more than 50 per cent in Alberta RN grads over the last five or six or seven years. Very, very good news.

Now, I'm not immune to a point that the opposition has mentioned to me, and that is to take a look at how many nurses are also retiring. I'm taking a look at that with Alberta Health Services because I think it's important to explain to people the difference between more nurses being added versus net new positions being created. We understand that. I'm working on that because I know the public has an appetite for it and so do we, so we're working together on that.

With respect to other areas where we're making significant improvements, through our continuing care strategy we're developing a dementia action plan which is going to be about $2.5 million, and that's just for the initiative, to create the strategy and implement the plan. That will result in developing guidelines for the care of clients with dementia. It will result in system-wide education and better training plans for all health care workers in that field. It will provide support for the caregivers who are providing that care to clients with dementia, and it will develop some important dementia networks and coalitions with educators, with researchers, with clinicians. I could go on. The point is that there is a major initiative under way in that area as well.

We also have a few other strategies I want to just comment on. One of them is with respect to training more physicians. I talked about one of the issues being that patients don't know who to go to, or maybe they don't have a doctor to go to. Mr. Chair, that's why we're training more doctors. In fact, first-year spaces in Alberta's two medical schools increased by over 60 per cent just in the past few years alone. What that means is that we'll have about a 50 per cent higher intake of year-one students than we've had over the past five years, a 50 per cent increase there alone.

I think I mentioned in question period today, Mr. Chair, that we're leading the country over the last few years in terms of physician recruitment. That's without even getting into the details of the rural physician action plan, which seeks to encourage more doctors to take up positions in rural settings, where they might be remote or where they might have other challenges. Nonetheless, that is an extremely successful program that helps doctors with office start-up costs of approximately $10,000. It also is a program that allows for additional premiums on top of the regular premium that a doctor in Edmonton or Calgary or elsewhere might get. We're paying those doctors a premium over and above that fee, and we're doing a number of other things to help them out.

Another area that's really important to take a look at, that is impacting the bigger position here, that is going to talk about what this amendment is all about, is how to shorten lengths of stay, of course, our five-year action plan, which will be coming out very soon. Mr. Chair, what you will see in that particular plan is a lot of the actions that we're going to take to use most effectively the money provided in the five-year funding plan. The five-year funding plan is the first of its kind ever. We've only had it for about six, seven, eight months now in the province of Alberta since it was passed by this Legislature, and it wasn't easy to get there because other ministries, other parts of the government at this difficult financial time had to give up some of their money so that it could go into front-line care and other forms of improvements in the health system. That five-year action plan and that five-year funding plan will help to address what is in this amendment regarding the lengths of stays in emergency departments.

We're adding 1,430 or so spaces, as I mentioned, in continuing care. We're adding approximately 360 net new positions, or acute-care beds, and 500 net new nursing positions to staff those acute-care beds. That's all happening over the next few months.

As a result, I should probably tell you that we're seeing some good movement, hon. members, with respect to the numbers when it comes to wait times. I can tell you that the monthly averages that we see in the major hospitals in Calgary and the major hospitals in Edmonton are starting to move the right way. The average monthly wait times today are far better in the month of September in Calgary than they were. In Edmonton they're not quite there yet, but they are trending down slowly. There are peaks and valleys and so on, and that's to be expected. I just hope that we can move more quickly, that Alberta Health Services, specifically, can move more quickly with respect to the new protocols that they are bringing in. I'll talk about those protocols in just a minute.

I want to move to another aspect, which is the first item of the amendment, where the member talks about unnecessary deaths. This is a very, very serious part of this, obviously, and I know it took a lot of courage for the hon. member to bring this forward and to talk about it because he lived with it every day of his professional career as a doctor, and on weekends he probably still does. In this respect I think members here know now that when Dr. Parks wrote to me over the Thanksgiving weekend of October 2010, he mentioned a number of cases that had propelled him to in fact write the letter. In response to that and particularly, Mr. Chair, in response to the deaths as referred to in the amendment, I want to tell people that Alberta Health Services has engaged an extremely important process, both within AHS and externally, to look into the deaths or serious incidents that occur within a hospital.

One of these important things that they are doing is with respect to the recent tragic suicide of an Edmonton man at the Royal Alex. I mentioned that I spoke to the family. I expressed my condolences to them. I listened carefully to the father, who explained what had happened and explained what some of the challenges were. One of the most significant problems for people with mental health difficulties – and I'm sure the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark would agree – is compliance. Are they being compliant with their drugs? So that's being looked at.

But here's the bottom line to this. At the Royal Alex there are couple of processes that are being looked at and implemented, and I think it will impact other hospitals as well. In fact, two quality assurance reviews are being conducted. One is being conducted by the particular hospital, and the other is being conducted by Alberta Health Services' mental health and addictions services branch, the unit that looks after that kind of work. Both of these reviews are ongoing, and they will serve to establish the facts surrounding that particular tragic death of that young man – on September 18, I believe it was – at the Royal Alex. They're also going to review the clinical systems that were in place and see what improvements might be necessary there. Then they're going to make some recommendations, and as appropriate they're going to move forward.

Once those reviews are completed, the results will first, obviously, be shared with the family, and then depending on confidentiality rules and everything else, we'll see where it goes after that. The point here is that we're expecting both of those reviews to be completed fairly soon and to move forward after that.

I want to conclude that part of my comments by saying that the Health Quality Council, whom I spoke with, were involved in providing some advice on how those quality assurance reviews should best be conducted, so there is some of that involvement with respect to the HQCA as well.

I want to turn my attention a little bit, also, to mental health. Why? Because mental health is, in my view, one of the most underserved areas across the whole country of Canada. That's very true. People who know mental health would agree with me. It's important that we acknowledge that, and we have. I have said this publicly, and I'll say it again: we have to work even harder than we've ever worked if we're ever going to stop what I call the revolving-door syndrome.

I'll probably have the bells ring here very soon and will have to stop, but I'll just tell you that with respect to mental health there are about 43,000 patients per year that go into one of our emergency wards looking for help – 43,000 – out of about half a million or so in total. That needs addressing.

So what are we doing? We're looking at mental health teams who would work in emergency departments. For example, there is an ongoing project that has 24/7 mental health team workers working in the Royal Alex hospital, and that is going to be expanded to the University of Alberta hospital within the next few months. We're also increasing access to addictions treatment with funding through the safe communities initiative, which is another pool of monies, and it's yielding good results. We're introducing hospital-based clinical counsellors that will be right there, right on site, to help persons with mental health complications.

We're also enhancing prevention counselling in our school system. We're also introducing mobile or outreach-type services in Edmonton, Calgary, Grande Prairie, Red Deer, Medicine Hat, and Lethbridge to provide services to those individuals with addictions issues who are otherwise hard to reach. Finally, we're expanding services that are available through the provincial family violence treatment program. In addition to that, however, we're also adding more physical capacity. Twelve new detox beds are going to be added at one of our local centres here in Edmonton. That will be very soon. At the same time approximately four to six new crisis beds will be added to another Edmonton residential facility very soon. I think we all know about Villa Caritas and the 150 new beds that are there for seniors with mental health complications. [Mr. Zwodzesky's speaking time expired] I hear the bells.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere on amendment A3.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. On the amendment. The Wildrose caucus will of course be speaking in favour of this amendment. This is the first time I've had the chance to stand up and really have an opportunity to say just how proud I am of the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark for standing up for his constituents, for speaking out. Never in a million years did I think he would be tossed for what he did, but I just think that what he did is an amazing example of democratic courage. I hope that his constituents understand how difficult it was to do what he did and to have the courage that he did in support of the sick and, in some cases, the dying. That was really an amazing thing to watch. So I support him in what he is doing.

I will say that, you know, we're talking with some of our colleagues over here: the Liberals, the NDP, and the independent. We've kind of been talking about it and addressing this emergency room issue. It's not a left-right issue. It's an issue of competence. It's an issue of accountability and credibility, but definitely accountability.

Emergency rooms will always be public because it's just the nature of an emergency room. It's urgent. You need the care right now. Period. No questions asked. It doesn't matter if someone has – I know that in the U.S., and we talked about that yesterday, they have systems where you have to pull out your credit card at the emergency room. That will never be the case in Alberta. We'll never allow it. It's so against everything that we stand for. This really isn't a left/right issue. This is about getting it right and making sure that we get people that are going into the emergency room treated appropriately.

In that spirit I think that we need to look to experts. We need to look to people who know what they're talking about. Look; as politicians our job is to listen to experts and try to make good decisions and judgments. We listen to experts, listen to our constituents, and try to take all of that information and make appropriate decisions. We're not experts. We're not scientists. Most of us aren't doctors. Well, we do have a scientist over there. I do know that.

Most of us aren't scientists or doctors, but we do have one doctor in this House. We have an emergency room doctor, and that emergency room doctor understands more about the issues and more about the need for emergency room reform and change than all of the people in this House put together. He understands what needs to be done. To not support what he is proposing – I mean, it's not like this man has not put a lot of thought into this. It's not like he hasn't talked with literally dozens and dozens of emergency room doctors from across the country and from across Alberta to come up with the proposal that he's putting out here.

It's a very reasonable proposal, this amendment. I mean, I wonder how you can disagree with the amendment. He talks about including in the principles of the health charter that "no unnecessary deaths, no unnecessary harm to patients, no unnecessary delays in care and no unnecessary waste of resources should occur." Pretty hard to disagree with that. Subsection (d) says that the health charter should set standards for lengths of stay in the emergency departments of hospitals consistent with the "Position Statement on Emergency Department Overcrowding" published by the Canadian Association of Emergency Physicians and dated February 2007.

What that basically says, essentially, is that the amendment would call for maximum emergency room wait times to be six hours for 95 per cent of standard patients and four hours for 95 per cent of more seriously ill or injured patients. Four hours for seriously ill people and six hours for – what do they term it? – standard patients is not unreasonable. That should be absolutely the minimum that our emergency rooms are capable of. If we can't do this, if we can't set a standard and make this happen, then this really is pathetic.

Standards for lengths of stay in the emergency departments of hospitals consistent with the position statement. Read the position statement. It's online. I just went through it. That in a nutshell is what it says: 95 per cent. That's the percentile for four hours and six hours. It's on the website. I looked it up when the member put it out there. That's what it says.

I think that it's an exceptionally important thing that we have accountability. Bill 17 is not worth the paper that it is printed on if it doesn't have any teeth to actually improve care in this province. Right now Bill 17 has absolutely no teeth in it. It is a wishy-washy, do-nothing, say-nothing document, and that in the middle of an emergency room crisis is not good enough. We have to do better. There are people that are sitting in our emergency rooms right now 12, 24, 36, 48 hours in some cases. There are folks like the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark's own father that have almost died because of this type of severe waiting that is going on in our emergency rooms. If it's happening to one of us in this House, you know it's happening to a whole bunch more people out there, many more Albertans.

Of course, we know that's happening because we have letters pouring in every day. I know the Liberal caucus has letters on health care every day pouring into their offices. I know the Wildrose caucus does, the ND caucus sure does, and I'm sure that each member of the PC caucus has letters coming into their office on these issues. I mean, just look at it. We have share your health care horror stories with regard to emergency rooms that we put on our website. Every day there are easily a dozen or more new ones. These are not works of fiction. These are real people that are putting their stories online, and some of the things that are being said and reported are terrifying.

We can do better, but you have to have accountability measures. If you don't have accountability, nothing is going to happen. I mean, the minister of health can be as well intentioned and as positive as he wants to be, but just saying, "We're going to do something; we're going to make it happen" is not good enough. Everyone knows this. It's accountability. It's basic. Every organization that is successful has accountability measures in place.

The hon. health minister said earlier: "You know, why do we need to legislate? If we legislate these emergency room targets, it means we're going to have to legislate cancer waiting targets, and then we'll have to legislate targets for hip and knee replacements and for all of the different procedures." You know what? Maybe that's the right thing to do eventually. The reason we're starting with emergency rooms is because we have an emergency room crisis on our hands. That's why we're starting there. I mean, we have to start somewhere, and the emergency rooms have been well documented to be in complete disarray.

It's a catastrophic collapse of our emergency rooms. That's what the doctors are saying. That's what people are saying. Everybody is saying this except for the Premier and the health minister, who are saying: "Oh, it's not that bad. There are a few things we've got to clean up." No. It's a disaster, so let's fix it. But we're never going to fix it if we don't legislate accountability standards. That is absolutely critical as we go forward. Maybe we need to grandfather these standards in, and we can talk about that. Maybe there are some other subamendments that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark can talk to our colleagues over on the government side about to, you know, have some sort of transition period. I don't know.

I'll tell you one thing. I trust his opinion far more than I trust any opinion in this House, including anybody sitting on this side of the House or that side of the House, when it comes to emergency rooms because he's an emergency room physician, one of the best ones in the province. He has said over and over and over again that this needs to change. It's not like this guy went into his office last night and googled online "emergency room wait targets" and pulled this out of a hat and said: this is what we need to do. No. He's done more research on the issue, more thinking about the issue, more everything on the issue than everybody else in this room put together.

I don't trust the health bureaucracy or Mr. Cookie Monster or anyone else, for that matter, to know more about what needs to happen in our emergency rooms than the Member for Edmonton-

Meadowlark. I mean, what's the point of our democracy if we're not going to listen to our MLAs and, certainly, if we're not going to listen to the people that actually know what they're talking about? I don't understand it. I do not get it.

Now, look; we're going to have a lot of time to talk about this tonight and today, no doubt, and we should talk about it a lot. But maybe over this period of time, however long we're here – one day, two days, four days, a week, whatever – as we talk about the health act and as we talk specifically about this amendment, I hope that the government members will have the time to talk to caucus about it and make the right decision on it. We need these legislated wait times. It's that simple. We cannot continue to defer this issue any longer. It's not right. Albertans need us to act. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark has put this amendment forward and these solutions forward. Obviously, it's not the whole solution, but it certainly is part of the solution.

If we can just take this one step and if we can free up the front-line hospitals to individually have the authority to manage their hospitals on the ground and not from AHS – I believe if you combined the accountability measures with what we've been talking about and other opposition parties have been talking about, the decentralization of health care and control of hospitals back to local physicians and health administrators on the ground in the hospitals, if we do that, those two combinations, we will see this occur. We will see these standards being met. But we can't do it if we're not willing to have accountability because if there's no accountability, nothing gets done. If there's accountability, there's healthy fear, and with that healthy fear of not meeting those targets comes action and pragmatism and making sure things get done.

This is not a left/right issue. This is not a Conservative/Liberal issue. This is just about right and wrong and about competence and ineptitude. We've got to put aside all of the things that have been done in the past by past health ministers and concentrate on the here and now if we want to go forward. I think the right thing to do as we go forward is to listen to the only expert that is in this House, who has done more consulting on this issue than anyone else. Listen to the man. Let's put this amendment in there, let's do the right thing, and then let's put together an action plan to make that happen. That is absolutely critical.

With that, Mr. Chair, those are my comments on this. I look forward to hearing from the other opposition parties, the government, and, of course, more than anyone else the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark on how we move forward on this issue.

The Chair: I have a list of hon. members to speak. I just want to read it: the hon. members for Edmonton-Gold Bar, St. Albert, Edmonton-Strathcona, Calgary-Varsity, Edmonton-Meadowlark, Calgary-Currie. Any others?

All right. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I certainly appreciate the opportunity to speak on the amendment that has been suggested by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. At this time I would like to note that the hon. member has certainly been very active and has a knowledge that this House should appreciate, a knowledge regarding emergency rooms not only in this city but across the province and how they work or do not work. This Assembly would be at a loss not to take the advice of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Now, certainly I and many other members of the House have received significant correspondence, whether it's via e-mail or by telephone call, regarding the expulsion or whatever you want to call it of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark from the government caucus. When we speak about the Alberta Health Act, this proposed Bill 17, and this amendment A3 as proposed by the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, we have to recognize first that he is an expert on this issue, and we need to take his advice in this direction.

I have a lot to say regarding this amendment, but first I would like to read into the record, Mr. Chairman, an electronic note that I received. I'm going to keep their names private. I'm not going to be like some government members across the way who, regardless of whether or not FOIP applies, willy-nilly release some information. I will keep their names confidential. It's regarding the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, and they start with this: we wish to express our appreciation to you for speaking the truth and saying it as it is; at the same time, we are deeply sorry that you have been unfairly treated by being suspended from caucus for speaking out for Albertans. They go on at length, but that's an expression of gratitude from some individuals living in southern Alberta regarding the efforts that have been made to fix the problem with our public health care system, in particular the emergency room crisis that we're in at the moment.

Now, when we look at amendment A3, certainly, no one in this House should have any objection to including as guiding principles that "no unnecessary deaths, no unnecessary harm to patients, no unnecessary delays in care and no unnecessary waste of resources should occur." There have been examples where – well, we had an individual who unfortunately committed suicide. We have had too many examples of hallway medicine as it is promoted by this government. We've had countless examples of delays in care, and we know that resources have been wasted by this government when they without any cost-benefit analysis went to the consolidated health board, the Alberta Health Services Board. There was no rhyme or reason for just eliminating the regional health authorities.

I've spoken in the past about the Capital health authority and how well respected it was across this country and across this continent. The managers there seemed to be quite competent. They weren't the ones, as the Premier suggested in question period today, that were running up big deficits. Uh-uh. We know and particularly the hon. Minister of Energy would know who they were and they are, and they weren't employed by the Capital health authority.

Now, the emergency room budget. We know that for emergency and outpatient services the budget is a little over $1.1 billion, and as I said last night, it's gone up in the last four years by close to $270 million, but the problems persist. That's why we should follow the suggestion of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark and support this amendment. The idea that we can set standards for lengths of stay in the emergency departments consistent with a position statement on emergency department overcrowding published by the Canadian Association of Emergency Physicians and dated a little over three years ago: what would be the harm in that?

I've heard the current minister of health say on a number of occasions: oh, this would just start a legal nightmare. Well, this is the same government that set up a legal nightmare when they consolidated the nine regions and the Alberta Mental Health Board and the Cancer Board. There was no issue at all about the millions of dollars in legal costs that were needed to facilitate the transition from these regions into the one superboard. They didn't care about those legal costs but now are hanging on that as an excuse to try to defeat this amendment.

In fact, I can't find the legal costs for the consolidation of the health board in the financial statements. How much money was spent? Who got that money? Which legal firms? Did legal firms compete with one another to get that work done? How much did it cost per hour? What was the total cost? With this secretive government we'll never find that out. For this minister of health to get behind the spin, the lame spin, that, oh, no, if we accept this issue of putting a standard of time where people will be seen and looked after in an emergency room, if it's not met, we'll have a legal nightmare – that's so untrue. There was no issue whatsoever with writing a blank cheque to who knows how many law firms in Calgary to facilitate the transition from nine health regions to one.

Now, when we look, Mr. Chairman, at the measures that perhaps we should introduce, we have to look at what Alberta Health Services has now. Some of this information is older. It's over a year, but it's obvious that Alberta Health Services is tracking emergency wait times. Now, why couldn't we set standards? Well, I know the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity is going to say that we can't set standards because they'd just lower them anyway. That's what this minister was caught doing. He tried to say: oh, no, he had no part of that. But I'll give the hon. minister of health credit. He would look at files. He would certainly read files, and I would be surprised if he was unaware that there was some lowering of the bar with the existing wait times and the standards.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark talked about his experiences at, I believe, a neighbourhood in the central area of Edmonton. We have to recognize – and this is something the government hasn't done – the workload that occurs at emergency departments. Now, the emergency departments, as we know, in this city are very, very busy. The top emergency department sites in terms of high patient volume, annual visits greater than 40,000 – and this is going back, unfortunately, three years, Mr. Chairman – have been identified in the city of Edmonton.

Now, what impresses me about the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark is that he's backing up his actions. Certainly, there were a lot of Conservative MLAs elected in Edmonton in the last election, and they were all going to be at the table, and they were going to stand up for the city. I heard this on the street corner the other day: "Where are they? The only one that is really speaking up is this individual from Meadowlark." The citizens appreciated that.

When the Capital health authority was disbanded, I never heard a word. When all the restricted and unrestricted funds that the Capital health authority held – and they had them for specific purposes for the city – were used to pay for someone else's mistakes, I never heard a word publicly. We brought this up. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre brought this up. Did the hon. member get any support from those individuals? Not that I'm aware of. Certainly not that I'm aware of. Where are they now?

If you look at the emergency departments – the U of A, the Misericordia, the Royal Alex, the Grey Nuns, the Sturgeon, the Northeast community health centre in Edmonton – these are all the high volume emergency departments. They're the highest across the province, yet silence. That's not, Mr. Chairman, representing the people, in my view, who were kind enough to vote for you.

Now, we look at the annual report for Health and Wellness. Certainly, the authors of this report, individuals who work in Health and Wellness – it was signed off by the minister, and there's a nice cheerful photograph of the hon. gentleman in the front here on page 5. Certainly, he signed off on this. We hear about management's responsibility, vision, mission, and core businesses, but it is interesting to note the public rating of access to emergency departments. Amendment A3 as proposed by the hon. member would certainly help, if it was adopted, this government meet this performance measure. I don't have much faith in this government's performance measures because whenever they're not working out, they change them or they eliminate them so the public does not know, Mr. Chairman.

I'm going to quote directly:

In 2009, Alberta Health Services established the Emergency Department Integration Team which has developed provincial standards for delivery of emergency department care including addressing the issue of overcrowding and long patient wait times in emergency departments.

This has gone on and on and on from previous health ministers. Last night we counted four. It's a growth industry in the PC caucus. Four health ministers. Four, Mr. Chairman. But, regardless, the problem is always there. They can't solve the problem. They don't know how. Now, there are people that say they're incapable. Others will say that they're incompetent. Could be a bit of both. Certainly, this problem of emergency room overcrowding and long patient wait times has gone on and on and on, way past the term of the current Minister of Education, the current Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. They had a try, a noble try, at solving the problems. It hasn't worked.

Certainly, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark is making an extraordinary effort to help this government finally come to grips with . . .

Mr. Liepert: He sure is.

Mr. MacDonald: Hon. Minister of Energy, you bet he sure is. Perhaps if you had taken his advice two years ago, we wouldn't be in this mess we're in. I have the memorandum of understanding, the original one that you signed – that you signed – to create this monster, this Alberta Health Services superboard, which is gobbling up financial resources and not improving service to citizens of this province who need it. When they need health care, what happens? What happens?

Mr. Liepert: They get it.

Mr. MacDonald: Forget it? No, I won't forget it.

Mr. Liepert: They get it.

Mr. MacDonald: They get it. Not in a timely fashion. Not in some cases without having to wait a long, long time. Some people can't even get a family physician. Some people are waiting a long time for hip and knee surgery. Some people cannot get psychiatric care. For you to say that they get it is totally wrong. It's totally wrong, Mr. Chairman.

Now, when the government talks about having a public rating of access to emergency department services, the target for this year with this annual report is 60 per cent: 60 per cent of the time the percentage rating ease of actually obtaining emergency department services needed for self as easy. The rating is "easy."

Well, if we adopted and forced – I think it's not too strong a word, Mr. Chairman – this government to make a commitment and meet a standard, perhaps that's what we need. This amendment certainly would force this government. Some hon. members have suggested to make them accountable. Well, I would agree with that. Do they need to be accountable? Yes. Are they accountable? No, they certainly are not. The current Minister of Energy knows fully well that this government is taking the support that citizens have given them for granted. You've forgotten that you can be voted out. You're not the New York Yankees of the political world. You're just not. You may think you are, but you're not. I think you're going to be judged on your actions, and that judgment may be a little bit more difficult for you to accept than you think. Now, we look at the annual report, we look at other documents from Alberta Health Services, and this initiative to force this government to finally act is a sound one.

I would, in conclusion, Mr. Chairman, urge all hon. members to please consider supporting amendment A3 as proposed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. Certainly, there are principles in here that I think would improve emergency room access for many Albertans, and the standards, the lengths of stay in emergency departments would put the interests of sick and injured Albertans first, not some ideology that this government decided would work in 2008.

Now, we look at some of the consultants that have been hired by this government, and McKinsey & Company comes to mind. They have invoiced a significant amount of money through to the government. They have made some sound recommendations. But I'm quite surprised, Mr. Chairman, that a lot of those recommendations for whatever reason – I don't know whether it's chaos, confusion, mismanagement by this government; I have no idea – it's apparent, have been ignored. I don't know how or why this government would be so willing to hire these consultants and then let the information that they provide rest on a shelf.

Thank you.

The Chair: The chair will now recognize, according to my list I read before, the hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

I just want to remind hon. members about movement in our Chamber during committee. Only the speaking member can stand. If anybody else has a conversation, please take a seat rather than stand. Thank you.

The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I've listened very closely to the comments of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness as well as the hon. members for Airdrie-Chestermere and Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. Above all, I've listened to my constituents, not just in the last week but for the last two and a half years. I recently wrote quite a lengthy letter to the Minister of Health and Wellness even before the emergency crisis erupted in the papers, and I expressed to him a number of concerns. A couple of years ago we were told that the problem with the wait times in emergency was because the acute-care beds were taken up by long-term care patients.

Mr. Liepert: Point of order. Mr. Chairman, I think you just had a ruling. Would you rule on the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, who is just not observing the ruling that you just made? He either sits down or in his own chair. [interjections]

The Chair: Hon. members, just to get the process going, if you want to have a conversation, please, there is a hallway outside, or take a seat close to the member and then talk. Thank you.

Please continue, hon. member.

Mr. Allred: Well, thank you again. If I can find where I left off here . . . [interjections]

The Chair: Hon. members, the hon. Member for St. Albert has the floor.

Please continue.

Mr. Allred: I believe, Mr. Chair, I was saying that a few weeks ago I sent a letter to the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness expressing some concerns. We were all told in this House that the problem with emergency was that there were too many acute-care beds being taken up by long-term care patients. We've added a lot of long-term care beds, but the problem continues. We were told that we were going to change the ambulance system to get the paramedics back on the streets, where they belong, instead of lining up at the hospitals, yet still today they're lined up in front of the emergency room, waiting to get care for their patients.

Not quite a year ago we paid off all of the deficits of Alberta Health Services and gave very generous funding for five years. I believe that funding was at their request, and we matched the request. Yet we continue to see deterioration of the system. There is no question in my mind that we're in a crisis situation. It's been brewing for many, many months. I'm certainly inclined to support this amendment because we need some accountability in the system. This amendment, Mr. Chair, may not be perfect, but I think it's a good first step.

Now, I heard the hon. minister express some concerns that by putting this amendment in, we would be creating potential legal liability. Well, Mr. Chair, I look at Bill 17, and this is an amendment of section 2. Section 2(1) says, "The Minister shall establish a Health Charter to guide the actions" – to guide the actions – "of regional health authorities." It goes on to say, "But the Health Charter must not be used to limit access to health services." This amendment says: "include as guiding principles." Guiding principles. Those words in both the bill and the amendment I'm sure are very carefully chosen words to avoid any liability. So based on my understanding of what is intended by both the bill and the amendment, I do not see a concern for liability.

I know that in some of the discussion on the health charter and some of the consultations last summer there was concern that by putting in a health charter, we would tie our hands. I know that in speaking to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, there was a very careful attempt to draft the legislation so it wouldn't tie our hands and wouldn't put us in a legal liability situation.

Mr. Chair, I guess that is the extent of my remarks. I know we've all had a lot of concerns expressed by our constituents, particularly over the last week. I must say that despite the crisis that we seem to have been put into in the last week, I think perhaps it's good. We've got to look at this very seriously now and make some changes to our health care system to make sure we can correct the problems that we have found. Get those long-term care patients out of the acute-care beds, get the paramedics back where they belong, on the streets, and get the system working.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: I have a list here. Referring to my list, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm pleased to be able to get up to join debate on this particular amendment to Bill 17. I'd like to start, of course, by congratulating the Member for St. Albert for speaking the truth that not only members on the opposition side of this House are aware of – it is fully the truth – but that I think almost all members of this House are aware of, that there is, in fact, a problem with our health care system. To suggest otherwise is to mislead Albertans, and more importantly it is to ensure that we don't address the problem, that we don't focus on the solutions. So I do congratulate the member for saying what I think all members on both sides of the House are aware of.

Now, the minister of health rose to speak against this amendment, and one of the reasons that he gave for speaking against this amendment was that it was his view that most of the work is already being done. "We're already on the way to fixing all the problems. Just, you know, hold tight. It'll all be there." In fact, he said that if we hadn't had this little bit of a "but for," but for some of the unanticipated activity of the last week or two, we'd all be there. All the problems would be fixed, and we'd be on the road.

I have to say that I'm not assured by that statement. This is the same minister who very dramatically held a press conference to announce a bunch of important performance measures that he was going to direct Alberta Health Services to put in place, only for us to discover that, in fact, those were performance measures that had been in place for eight or nine months already, and they had been missed. Then after dramatically holding that press conference and announcing that he was going to take action and put those performance measures in place, you know, the ones that had been there for the previous eight months already, he then acknowledged that he was probably going to have to water down those performance measures a little bit, play around with them, because it probably wasn't the case that they were really that realistic.

In fact, after all the drama and all this assertive action-taking was finished, what really happened was that we backed down from the assurances that this government had tried to give Albertans within the last year. So I get concerned about those kinds of statements. Of course, the minister said: you know, we've already announced lots of plans to make things better. I have to say that this, again, does not give me assurances because what we do know is that this government does like to announce things. It's very good at announcing. They must have a whole building stuck aside somewhere that holds the rolls and rolls and rolls of ribbon that they keep aside for their various and sundry ribbon-cutting events. I suspect that every building must presumably come with at least 10 separate events, so you've got to have quite a lot of ribbon stuck aside there.

They announce things. I can't even begin to imagine how many announcements there have been, say, for instance, in Grande Prairie for the hospital that is yet to be built. Announcing really does not make me feel a lot better. Before the last election it was announced that we were going to build 600 or 800 new long-term care beds, yet in fact what we've done is that we've taken long-term care beds out of the system.

This minister's assurance that, "Well, we announced the plan" really rings hollow, and I think it rings hollow for many Albertans, and that is why we are having this growing sense on the part of Albertans that the crisis is not going anywhere. They've just reached their limit in terms of how much comfort they can gain from a ribbon-cutting ceremony, particularly when the ribbon cutting is for a building that, even once it's actually built, still sits empty for weeks and months and years because suddenly one of the things that wasn't mentioned in one of the nine or 10 ribbon-cutting events around that building was that it was always going to be a phased-in project and that we had to reprofile the phasing-in of the project and that kind of thing.

I have to say that the language used by this government is disturbing and distressing, and it does not engender trust on the part of regular Albertans, who are trying to figure out what the heck the government's plans are with respect to health care. Of course, that's all relevant to this amendment because this amendment is about trying to actually inject some modicum of a trackable, accountable performance measure. That's what we don't have right now.

Now, the minister also went on to say, "You know, all of this stuff has to be managed through policy," and policy is part of that trust-us kind of thing that the government has been doing for years: just trust us; we'll manage it through policy. But policy can change. With this government we know that it can change. We know, for instance, that the government can delist services without touching the legislation, and we know that delisting is another form of privatization. We know that the government can reprofile and restage the opening of a health care centre that they had promised would address the very issue that is driving so many of Albertans' concerns right now, that being the issue of emergency room overflow and the unopened health centre in northern Edmonton.

So policy can change, and with this government it does change. It changes repeatedly. It changes over and over. Every day there's a new direction. The wind changes, and so does this government's plan with respect to health care. The Member for St. Albert expressed frustration because he said: "Well, we were told the problem in ER was long-term care beds. We opened a bunch of long-term care beds, so why is there still a problem?" Well, I will say to the Member for St. Albert that the problem is that we actually haven't opened a bunch of new long-term care beds. What we've opened are other types of beds, other types of beds with much lower levels of care.

I have been in those centres, and I have talked to people from across the province who work in those centres. What they describe is not having the medical staff available to deal with the medical crises of the people who are moved into those centres because there's no other place to go. What do they do? They program their phones to the ER and to the ambulances, and it's a rotating, revolving door between these understaffed centres, that are not designed to provide the long-term care that the government originally promised, and the ERs because there is not adequate medical care in these continuing care centres.

It's been said repeatedly in this House, but it obviously bears repeating: long-term care is not continuing care. Every time we ask the minister, "When are you going to follow through on even a portion of the promises that were made in the last election with respect to long-term care?" the minister comes back and talks about continuing care. We know that continuing care looks very, very different than long-term care. You know, this is not that complex. I'm sure that many MLAs in this building have visited these centres and talked to the people that work in these centres and talked to the families whose relatives are in these centres and understand that most of these centres do not or are unable to provide the level of care that often these people require.

Then, of course, we say: "Well, let's get home care. Let's get some home care. We can ramp up home care and have home care come into these moderately assistive living facilities." Well, that's a great idea if you have enough home care, but in fact this government had a line item for home care which was inadequate to begin with but also which they didn't even spend. They had unexpended home care dollars in the last budget. So not only did they not increase the budget for home care, as is needed to provide a comprehensive home care system, but they didn't even spend the money they have on home care. Yet they repeatedly trot out these speaking points: "Oh, you know, we've got more continuing care beds. We're going to max out home care. Yada, yada, yada." But that's not what you're doing.

It is frustrating, and it's frustrating to hear this minister get up and assure us that what we need to do is simply rely on their exercise of policy and their use of policy to fix the system when in fact what we've got is a strong history of policy being changed repeatedly, objectives not being met, standards changing over and over and over again . . . [interjection] There we go. Thank you. . . . standards not being met over and over again, that kind of problem with policy. So why would we trust it?

The Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has just brought to my attention that, in fact, the consolidated accounting statements of Alberta Health Services, ended March 31, 2010, show that they spent $10 million less on home care this year. So, in fact, they're spending less on home care even while this government is getting up in the Legislature and saying: we're going to ramp up home care to deal with the fact that we've broken our promise and decided not to build the long-term care beds because we're just going to have everybody stay in these assisted living hotels, that are mostly privately built and operated, and then we'll deal with the medical needs by bringing up and ramping up more home care. Yet we're actually spending less on home care. So it really doesn't make a lot of sense.

The problem is that we see the real-life consequences of this failure to take ownership for what you promise you will do, what you say will get done, and making sure that it actually happens. This disconnect between the press release and the ribbon-cutting event and what actually happens once all the media packs up their cameras and drives away and goes home – there is a profound disconnect in this government, so Albertans don't trust it anymore. We need to have clearer measures of accountability built into our system.

Another example. The minister talked about physicians, and he talked about health care professionals. Well, that's yet another – it's like a comedy, like some Greek comedy or something. You watch this government, you know. One minister gets up and passionately defends the need to increase our health care professionals and to increase the number of people entering health care as a profession, and you actually increase some of the spaces for that. But then at the same time, once we've injected all this money into – well, not all this money but a small amount of money into increasing the number of human resources in the health care sector, we then lay them off and have a hiring freeze, and all of these fabulous new nurses that have graduated actually go to other parts of the country because we couldn't be bothered to hire them. What was that? That was the most ridiculous backflip.

You could expect it if this government had been elected a mere six months ago and they were still, you know, wet behind the ears and trying to get used to being in this position. But, really, there is no excuse for a government that has been in power for 40 years to make these kinds of amateur mistakes. It really is quite surprising to see.

I found it interesting that the minister talked about how the LPNs that we have in the province have gone up by 17 per cent. I suspect those may in part consist of the foreign nurses who came in, who were then unable to find work in that setting, so they became LPNs. Oh, but he doesn't say that we have 20 per cent more RNs working in the system. Oh, no. No, no. He says that we have 20 per cent more RNs graduated. Well, indeed, we do because we did put money into ensuring that we had more RNs graduate. Of course, those are the RNs that then left the province because at the same time they were doing this, the right hand, that wasn't aware of what the left hand was doing, had decided to stop hiring those very nurses. So that's a concern.

We have empty assurances with respect to mental health. We have the minister saying – and it's not a direct quote, but it's close – that the area of mental health is one of the most underserved areas of health care throughout Canada. I will give him that. That is a very true statement. But what, of course, he didn't say is that by most measures Alberta is at the very bottom of that list, where across Canada none of us do what we need to do and are sufficiently aware of the investment that needs to go towards providing comprehensive mental health care, but at the same time in Alberta we ranked the lowest in almost every measure with respect to what we do with mental health care.

I recall that about a year and a half ago we released a leaked document that talked about the number of beds in Alberta and how that related to the shortage of mental health beds across the country. At the time I spoke to the former health minister, now the current Minister of Energy, about why there's such a profound shortage of mental health beds. He pointed me to a joint project that was being orchestrated, with many ribbon cuttings, through the ministry of the Attorney General, where there were a few new health care or rehab beds being opened as part of diversion projects through that ministry.

In effect, what he was saying was: yeah, we're opening new beds for health care, and for anybody that's about to be charged with, you know, break and enter or robbery or some kind of property theft, we might actually be able to divert them from the court system into these mental health beds. Of course, I think it's fairly clear on the face of it that that being the planned path of access to mental health services is probably not the best way to go. I find it amazing that that was even put out as a possible explanation for how we might possibly deal with the issue of mental health services.

I am quite distressed, actually, in the documentation that we received from Alberta Health Services around what they are spending Albertans' money on. We pretty much lost any kind of direct explanation for how much we can observe them spending on mental health services. That's pretty much gone. Not only do we not have the performance measures that the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark would like to see in this bill; we don't even have the basic ability to review the Alberta Health Services budget, line item by line item, the way we would if it was a direct service provided by the ministry because Alberta Health Services has decided not to break out mental health services in any kind of fashion that allows Albertans who are interested in the issue to track it. So we have no performance measures. In fact, we even look at: well, what are they spending on it? Let's just assume that there is some type of ever so amorphous relationship between the money that is spent on mental health and the outcomes in terms of the services provided to Albertans. But we can't even do that, so that's a problem.

You know, the minister is very proud of the changes that have been made at the Royal Alexandra hospital by having the 24-hour mental health team there. What he doesn't talk about is the fact that that represents a significant step back from what was previously there in terms of the beds that were there before. There are so many ways in which this government fails daily and continuously on the health care file. There are so few ways in which Albertans can transparently keep track of that. What this amendment is about is simply trying to inject more accountability into this process.

I have to say that I'm very, very disappointed that at least the short-term response on the part of this government is: "No, no. We need to carry on. Steady as she goes. Just trust us. Cross your fingers, close your eyes, and trust that we'll write a policy that will help with this and trust that we won't change our mind on that policy within six to 12 months and trust that after we've cut five or six ribbons in front of any particular health care service, there's a 50-50 chance that we'll actually go through with what it was that we announced we were going to do."

As I say, not only do Albertans not trust that; Albertans see what this means to their families in our emergency rooms, in the provision of mental health care, with what happens on our streets and in our communities in terms of the ability of people to seek treatment and what's happening to our seniors, what's happening to them as they are at home waiting for the nurse, who can only come once a week as opposed to the once a day she should be coming, not getting the medical care they need and hoping that the ambulance will come fast enough to get them to the ER when the predictable results of that lack of care once again force them back into the system at the most difficult place.

All that being said, I think that members of this House should at least consider what it is that this amendment is trying to do and should consider supporting this amendment.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Chair. In speaking to amendment A3, I want to thank all members who have participated in this very important discussion. I want to particularly recognize the hon. Member for St. Albert, who spoke in terms of his concerns. He spoke of a letter that he had written to the minister of health, I believe, expressing his concerns over the system. For that, I am very appreciative because lately it seems that if you're a member of the Conservative caucus and you speak out, there is potential for punishment.

Now, I have no trouble with the position of this amendment. I must admit that as a former teacher who marked numerous essays, I had a little bit of trouble with the wording in terms of the double negatives. What I did to get past that retentive nature of myself was I basically rewrote it in the positive. I substituted "unnecessary" for "avoidable" for my own self, but I think it might be helpful to other members: include as guiding principles that avoidable deaths, avoidable harm to patients, avoidable delays in care, and avoidable waste of resources should not occur. That made it easier for me to speak to.

The Chair: Hon. member, may I interrupt?

Hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, please take a seat.

Mrs. Forsyth: Sorry, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, please continue.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I also appreciated the comments from the Member for St. Albert with regard to the liability that was apparently a concern of the minister of health. Now, it talks about guiding principles, for example. It talks about: "resources should." It doesn't say: resources must. In other words, if somebody dies in emergency, it doesn't mean that it's an automatic, done-deal lawsuit that the family can put forward. I think that's a bit of a specious argument.

Now, what the amendment is all about regardless of whether you change the wording so that you understand it better is: do no harm. Of course, do no harm is the Hippocratic oath, and it's the oath that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark swore. What has happened is that the hon. member has been compromised. He has had to deal with an internal question of conscience, and he's had to make choices. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark as an emergency physician witnessed the shortcomings of the system with regard to his father's own care. He had sworn the oath to do no harm. He had a duty to himself. He had a duty to his family. He had a duty to his constituents. That brought him into a conflict with the former health minister, and in calling out the former health minister for the decisions he'd made with regard to the structuring of the superboard and the way he dealt with health care professionals, he basically by extension called out the Premier.

Because there is no whistle-blower legislation in this province, whether you're an orderly or an emergency room physician, he was punished. To his credit, despite the amount of pressure that he's experiencing due to the number of strokes and potential critical events that his father has gone through, he sacrificed his own well-being, his own health, but he did not give up his position as the representative for his constituents.

Now, there is a tremendous amount of stress that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark is undergoing, but I firmly believe in what I consider a guiding philosophy. That comes out of the play Hamlet, and it was Polonius' advice to Laertes: to thine own self be true, and thence it follows, as night the day, thou canst not be false to any man. If we cannot look into ourselves and live with ourselves, then how can we be any good to anyone else? I compliment the hon. member for sticking to what he believed in and continues to uphold and suffers a great amount of stress, but there is comfort in knowing that you did everything in your power to make things right.

Now, the hon. member, in discussing amendment A3, talked about the right type of care at the right time in the right place. He talked about the importance of home care. He talked about the quality of seniors' lives and what happens when they become disoriented when they're taken out of that circumstance.

With home care, if you look at it, the health minister is rightly concerned about expenses, but expenses versus people's lives: it has to be put into a balance. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark talked about home care. Home care, depending on the level of home care, regardless of whether it's professionals coming in or nursing aides or the Victorian Order of Nurses or whether it's a doctor doing a home visit, is considerably less expensive than treatment that takes place in a hospital. A hospital bed basically comes with a $2,000 bill per day. Yes, it's paid by our health insurance, our public insurance, but it's the wrong place for the wrong types of care, particularly for seniors or people who are younger and need to convalesce at home as opposed to taking up a hospital bed.

Now, in terms of the right place at the right time and the right level of care there's the other concern that the member brought up, about taking pressure off emergency rooms. One of the ways that happens, obviously, would be the family doctor. The family doctor would be the gatekeeper for the type of care you needed, and as you needed more professional specialized help, the family doctor could then refer you to the specialist.

Also, the member referenced the need for primary care networks, the need for a balance between urgent care centres and emergencies. The more people we can keep from having to take emergency services, obviously, the easier it's going to be within the emergency.

Now, in terms of getting the right mix of individuals, when it comes to triaging, what would be very helpful, in my limited medical understanding, would be the equivalent of nurse practitioners so that they could very quickly go throughout and provide the triaging, obviously in a private location so that people would feel that their privacy was respected.

Another combination of individuals we need in the emergency arena are social workers. When you get a senior coming in suffering from a degree of dementia or just stress, having someone to talk to is as important and as healing at least as a first step. I know, having coached wrestling for 25 years and gone to emergency with some big brutes of boys and some pretty significant wrestling girls when they had broken collarbones or broken arms, that just the act of holding their hand, whether it was a big hunk of a boy or not, provided a degree of support and helped relieve the stress until the individual could be seen by the attending doctor. There are a variety of people that can help within that emergency milieu before, actually, the person is seen. A lot of it is support.

I don't want to put orderlies out of a job, but unless we have more orderlies – one of the biggest problems that I've seen when going into a hospital with my wife or other family members is that when they're very weak or very sick, try to find a wheelchair. If you had more orderlies or even hospital volunteers, the equivalent of candy strippers, to do the running around to make sure that a person had a wheelchair at least so that they didn't faint, that would be terrifically helpful.

In terms of the right care in the right place the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark talked about where a person should be in terms of the care necessary. My mother suffered a stroke while she was in Cedars Villa. She was 86 years old at the time, and we knew how in crisis the emergency wards were. We were very fortunate that Dr. Gladman was willing to visit the facility, and he talked to us about where my mother could get the care she needed. It turned out that she could get the type of care that she needed right within the Cedars Villa seniors' home. She could get the oxygen. As the pain increased, she could get the morphine. There was a registered nurse available.

Rather than have my mom take up a hospital bed that could potentially save someone else's life, we made the decision to keep my mother as comfortable as she could be as long as she could with oxygen and with pain control. My mother, being a very strong person, a very stubborn person – guess where I get it from? – lasted almost three days after her initial stroke. The care that was provided in that home was sufficient as opposed to transporting her to the hospital. Again, being proactive and preventative, I spent 15 hours with a paramedic on a paramedic's shift, and I wrote an article, an op-ed, afterwards detailing my experience, called Angels of the Night. It was a minus 30 degree night a couple of years ago in Calgary, and for whatever reason there weren't a lot of calls coming in to the paramedic facility, which was also twinned with a fire hall just down by Stampede Park. Anyway, what we did when we weren't on call was drive around the streets, and very quickly we found a woman lying on the sidewalk. It turned out that her problem was inebriation, but had we not been there, she could very well have frozen to death or, at the very least, suffered frostbite.

Now, the paramedics would go along the river, they would go to the haunts of the homeless who, even in the most severe weather conditions, refused to go into the shelters, and they did those good things. With the woman who was picked up inebriated, instead of taking her to jail or to a hospital, they took her to a facility called Alpha House, and while it was a fairly minor type of treatment, there was at least a mat on a cement floor with 24-hour governance or watching out. The woman was able to sleep off her circumstance. She would awake in the morning with a headache but alive. So the combination is important.

Something else that would be very helpful is using our facilities to the best extent; for example, posting emergency waiting times. In the Calgary area we've got hospitals in High River, we've got hospitals in Okotoks. Further down we've got hospitals in Canmore. My experience has been that the emergency waiting times in rural centres are considerably reduced. Yes, they have limitations in terms of some of the critical care that they can provide, but that's where the air ambulances come in to transport them to the appropriate care.

The story that I found interesting was the story of a fellow who initially went to Rockyview because he had broken his arm. After waiting three hours in Rockyview, he had his wife drive him to Canmore. He got his arm casted. Then just out of interest, wondering how the health care system in Calgary had failed him, he went back to Rockyview. It was another four hours before he was seen. They asked: well, why are you here? He said: well, I was checking out the times involved.

Having posted waiting times and being able to transport people who aren't in a life-threatening circumstance to regional hospitals is part of the solution, in my mind.

We need to be able to provide in-home care. People should be able to have the choice of palliative care, whether it be in a facility such as beside the Grace hospital – the name of the facility I forget. It's a wonderful facility. If you have very few options left in life, there is a terrific amount of care that is provided at that facility.

Now, I've recently lost my brother-in-law because of a whole series of failures, not failures in the Alberta system, but I see parallels in what happened to him in Ottawa. While he had a colonoscopy, that wasn't the test that he required. His own GP did not realize the anemic nature and state. Even though he came to his GP in a very jaundiced condition, the physician did not recommend that he go directly to emergency. The following day when his wife drove him to emergency, he fainted in the parking lot and was rushed to the emergency ward, where he languished for eight hours before he got the service. He made the choice with his wife to seek palliative care at home, and that was hope that he would have a degree of comfort and be around his computer and have a little bit of normalcy in his life, but there were restrictions. The government would only fund so many TPN procedures, total parenteral nutrition programs. In other words, he was hooked up to an intravenous feeding tube. Because he was released from hospital and couldn't have a TPN, he died considerably faster than he might have if he'd remained in hospital. We need to realize the right . . .

The Acting Chair: Hon. member, can I interrupt you for a moment, please?

Hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, you're not allowed to move chairs in the Chamber, so could you return to your position, please?

Member, you can continue.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. Mr. Chair, I don't believe there is a whole lot to be gained in just simply jumping on the government without offering alternatives, but the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, not only in his amendment A3 but in his participation in the emergency debate, offered several solutions. One of those solutions is having the right combination of professional people. We need to have knowledgeable medical individuals. We need to have management expertise. Getting that right balance is extremely important. Right now the members of the superboard don't have that balance.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Chairman, thank you so much. It's an honour for me to stand and speak again. I started off my political career in this House by quoting Martin Luther King in my response to the Speech from the Throne. The quote that I live my life by is: life begins to end the day we become silent about things that matter. We're going to show the people of Alberta what democracy truly is about, talking about something that matters, is so near and dear to their very hearts.

I just ask one favour of my friends on the other side, who I still consider my colleagues and dear friends. I ask you to respect democracy and not invoke closure. You are able to invoke closure today, tomorrow, whenever. I ask you to allow this debate to continue until we can't debate this anymore. I humbly ask you to do that on behalf of Albertans who care about this very important issue. My office has received thousands of e-mails. This issue is so near and dear to Albertans. There has been an overwhelming outpouring of support for the likes of Dr. Paul Parks and those front-line health care workers who brave each and every day. Any effort, in my mind, to actually stop us from talking would actually be to disrespect Albertans, disrespect them on the most important issue. So I humbly ask all of my colleagues, whether it's on the left or the right or the middle left or the middle right: let's keep talking about this, my good friends. I promise to stay in this Chamber until I can't talk anymore, until I can't stand anymore, until my eyes can't stay open and my lips can't move.

Now, let's carry on. I would like to just pick up where I left off. I don't have the Blues, so I'll just summarize where we were. So we have people dying in the emergency departments. That's happened. We have people suffering, and we're missing every standard of care in the area that I'm an expert in. Mr. Chairman, I have supported everything of my colleagues for the last 2.8 years, whether I agreed with it or disagreed with it. To be honest, I really didn't know much about it, but the rules of parliamentary democracy are such that when you walk out of this House, you stand as a team. I have supported each and every thing. To be honest, I didn't really like the idea of Bill 44, and my constituents didn't really like it. But you know what? I understand that many people in this province did appreciate it and did like it. For many of my colleagues in rural Alberta it was the right thing, and I supported it despite the fact that my constituents didn't agree with it.

There's only one thing, Mr. Chairman, that I'm really good at. There's only one thing I know. The deepest, innermost fabric of my body has been – it's in my blood. You know why? My great-grandfather Basant Ram Pathak was a captain and surgeon in the Indian army. His best friend was Lala Lajpat Rai. He risked his profession, his honour, and his life in 1928 when the Simon Commission in India – they got beaten with sticks. You know what his friend said? He said: each blow aimed at me is a nail in the coffin of British imperialism. These were men above all men. They freed a nation from an empire to make the biggest democracy on this planet. That was my mother's grandfather. His children were all doctors. Their children are all doctors.

My father's side. His father came here in 1906, as a 17-year-old, to seek opportunity elsewhere. He talked about exclusionary laws in Canada in 1907. They had the head tax. I want to tell you how this links into health care because you have to understand why we're going to talk about this. You need to understand my family's connection to democracy and health care and caring for the most vulnerable. I'm just building context. My dad's father came in 1906 as a 17-year-old to seek opportunity in a strange land called Canada.

In 1914 my great-grandmother's brother, my grandfather's future wife's mom's brother, was on a ship, the Komagata Maru. The ship was not allowed to dock in Canada. For two months they were denied the basic necessities of life, and my father's father swam food to them late at night. The ship was turned back to India, and half the people were massacred. He financed India's freedom movement. This is the blood that courses in my veins.

His dream – I just visited India, because my father is not well – is to bring back his father's belongings and memoirs, his cane and the last writings of his father. My dad's sister, the only surviving member from his original family in India said that dad – dad being my grandfather – always wanted a doctor in the family. In my father's family I am the only doctor. In my mother's family, I am one of hundreds of doctors.

I ran because I wanted to make a difference. I wanted to change the world that I live in. I ran because I saw people suffering just metres from care. The hon. minister is a fantastic fellow. He's my veerji bhaji; bhaji means brother. I have the utmost respect for this man. He said a lot of things that I agree with.

I want to built context on this emergency issue. When I was in Dr. Paul Parks' position, there was a letter written to the minister prior to this minister, prior to that minister, prior to that minister, the hon. Member for Sherwood Park. In 2006, when I was the Dr. Paul Parks, I wrote a letter to her during the leadership race, and they made a commitment that there were long-term care beds coming and this and that and whatnot.

Here's a picture of me in February 2007. I am quoted as saying: "We face a severe challenge right now. 'I believe the problem is worse than it's ever been,' said Sherman, also head of the Emergency Physicians of Alberta. 'I've been working for 15 years and we've never had it this bad.'" We were told that things were going to get done.

So we worked with the minister at the time, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud. I was shocked. He actually listened. He actually listened to all of us doctors. He mentioned my name in this hallowed Chamber, and we helped implement short-term measures called the overcapacity protocols. It was a temporary measure to put people from the hallways upstairs. We actually increased the burden on all the nurses in every ward in every hospital. We actually reduced emergency wait times significantly while longer term solutions were supposed to come online from the previous minister, such as family doctors, more nurses, more home care, more long-term care.

We thought: fantastic. I respected that minister so much, and I told this Premier: I didn't vote for this government or this party in the last couple of elections because you wrecked health care in the '90s, but I like you and I trust you and I'm actually quite impressed by the fact that you care and you listen. I realized that despite the fact that you read in the newspapers that the Conservatives are made out to be some big, bad bullies, I thought: "You know what? These are actually human beings like anyone else. They are actually pretty decent people, and they're like me and like my friends." I realized everyone in this Chamber is that way.

I sacrificed my career, and I ran. I was quite vocal at that time. Since then I thought I'd try to change the system from within. Here's a commitment by the Premier, who I staked my career on in June of 2007, when everyone said, "It's Harry Strom. The party is over; he's not going to win." My good Liberal friends were supposed to form government at that time. I staked my career at that time when nobody wanted to run for him, at least in my area of Edmonton-Meadowlark. I door-knocked for 10 months, 5 hours a day, 5 days a week, until I wore the cartilage in my knees and I couldn't walk anymore, because he made a commitment to the seniors.

5:30

Dr. Peter Kwan, the section president of the emergency doctors after me, got a letter written to him February 23, 2008, during the election. It was signed by the hon. Premier of our province, Ed Stelmach. There were deaths and near-deaths during the election; those are the 322 cases at the one hospital alone. The ER doctors were going crazy. They were feeding all the political parties what was happening. Dr. Kevin Taft during the election on the day of the debate challenged the Premier and said that people are dying in the emergency departments.

Some Hon. Members: Names. Names.

Dr. Sherman: Oh. Forgive me. Sorry. I apologize, Mr. Chair.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview challenged our Premier. I asked the emergency doctors: "Please do not say a word. Do not interfere in the outcome of the election because I've been told that if you bother the Conservatives, they will beat the heck out of you if they get lots of seats, if they get a majority government." They said no word. Four days after the election a FOIPable e-mail was sent – this isn't government stuff I'm telling you; this is the doctors' stuff – to myself, to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, who was the hon. minister's assistant at the time, to the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness at the time, Edmonton-Whitemud, to the deputy minister at the time, and as well to the Premier. All these cases were sent at that time.

A Health Quality Council review was not done. The Ethics Commissioner of this province knew about all these cases, as did the previous CEO of Capital health services. This happened under Capital health. This is prior to AHS. Here is a commitment in writing.

I sent a famous e-mail recently, for which I apologized to the Premier. It was a factual e-mail. Emergency doctors were supposed to be engaged on a panel to fix this problem. That meeting just happened on Friday. This is dated February 23, 2008. Perhaps I was incorrect. Perhaps the Premier didn't break a promise. He did keep it two and a half years later.

The real issue is that this problem is caused by lack of long-term care and community care and home care in addition to primary care and prevention and wellness. Now, the Health Quality Council did a review of what's going on with long-term care. Here it is.

Dr. John Cowell, October 25, 2010

Gents, as the ED situation continues to be debated and in particular focused on "bed blockers" I thought you might like to see some real data. Raj called me tonight and we discussed some measures and targets for ED performance. I will think about this some more but happened to have this data at hand and believe you should see it.

There are some slides. What you see on the first slide is the proportion of Alberta acute in-patient beds used by patients waiting for an alternate level of patient care, otherwise ALC days, from 2006 to 2009. It went from 5 to 5.3 per cent in 2006-07, to 7.1 in 2007-08, to 8.4 in 2008-09. It's going up, not doing down.

Slide number 2, median ALC days per acute care discharge for patients waiting for ALC days. In 2006 it's 11 days; in 2007-08, 16 days; in 2008-09, 16 days. This is factual data.

Proportion of beds used by patients waiting for alternate level of care, acute hospitals only: in Edmonton and Calgary in 2002-03 3.6 per cent of beds were plugged up, and in 2008-09 it's 5.5 per cent; in Edmonton it was 7.2 per cent in 2003 and 7.9 in 2008-09. All going up. As they went up, the emergency department waits went up, and as they went up, people suffered and died in waiting rooms.

The previous Minister of Health and Wellness: much of the information he reiterated on what they were doing is correct. The reason I know that is because I'm the one who advised him and the deputy minister to do what they're doing. You're talking to the guy that actually listened to somebody who actually understands the one thing in this province that we talk about.

A couple of things I do want to take exception with. The system is broken. Well, if Dr. Paul Parks says that it's on the verge of a catastrophic collapse, if that isn't broken, I don't know what is. People are suffering and dying to get into emergency rooms.

Number 2, to legislate all aspects. To be honest, to achieve that wait time for admitted patients, the only way to achieve it is to actually get your hips and your knees and your cataract surgery and your primary care. Every measure feeds into that. I appreciate the minister. He's a wonderful man. The problem is that he's not a doctor, and he's not a health care professional. In principle, he makes some good points, but he doesn't understand what this measure is all about. You can't achieve this measure without actually fixing every bottleneck in the system.

Number 3, policy and action plan performance measures. The reason I'm asking for it to be legislated: I was going to bring up a private member's bill. The hon. Member for Calgary-West, who was the minister, said: "Don't do that. We'll make a performance measure." When Dr. Duckett came, I thought he was a saviour because by 2012 the performance measure was supposed to be eight hours at the 90th percentile. Somebody moved the goal posts. They moved the goal posts and made it 2015 and lowered it to 60 per cent by 2012, and then they lumped in the 15 busiest sites to average all the data out so that nothing would change.

Mr. Hinman: Was that the Member for Calgary-West?

Dr. Sherman: Well, I don't know. He wasn't the minister at the time it was changed. It was actually changed under this minister, but it was AHS and the bureaucracy that brought these performance measures. I never saw these. I never had any input into these. I was supposed to until I got turfed out.

It's going the wrong way, my friends. Usually the ministers come in just after the election. They wreck health care. Just before the election they fix it up with speeches, and that's what happened. The hon. Member for Sherwood Park: it got wrecked under her. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud before the election fixed it up. The hon. Member for Calgary-West wrecked it after the election.

This hon. member is communicating the bejesus out of it, trying to salvage it, and God knows what's going to happen after the next election if there is a majority government over there. God bless us all. No amount of communication will solve this problem. All they had on Friday was a meeting. There was just a meeting. The front-line staff don't even know anything about it yet.

Today I called the emergency departments. There's one available bed in Edmonton. One resuscitation bed in all of Edmonton. Every ER department is on yellow alert, and the flu hasn't yet hit.

Danger. What's the danger of passing this? It's actually dangerous if we don't pass this legislation and put teeth to very good principles. I really like the principles in this act, but this is about teeth and accountability, the strongest measures in the nation as the nation watches.

Mr. MacDonald: Tell us about the resuscitation beds.

Dr. Sherman: The resuscitation beds are where the sickest patients go. Today, if there was a multicase incident in Edmonton or northern Alberta and a tractor trailer hit a busload of school kids or an airplane crashed, we are not prepared for a multicase incident. Other members may disagree, but to be honest, if they did, they wouldn't know what the heck they were talking about. This is the one issue that I really know a lot about, that we have debated in this House for years. On this thing – I'm sorry, guys – I know what I'm talking about.

Physician supply. Yes, we have increased physicians. That's fantastic. The problem is that they're all specialists. We don't need any more. They can't find jobs. They're leaving to the U.S. anyway. What we need is family doctors. We've got to stop creating so many specialists. We're training them, but they're leaving. RNs: yes, we're hiring them. That's fantastic, but we're putting them on acute care. Stop spending money on acute care. It's downstream and upstream. [Dr. Sherman's speaking time expired]

Thank you, and I'll be speaking again on this.

The Chair: According to the list I have, the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's my pleasure to rise and speak to this amendment to the Alberta Health Act. You know what? I'm not going to drag this out very long. I know there are other people who want to speak to it as well. I just want to say that I fully endorse this amendment. I think that this is an amendment that this House should pass. I think that this amendment speaks to precisely what we need to do to give Bill 17 some teeth, some clout, some ability to actually make some changes. As it stands right now unamended, the bill is very much an act that approaches health care from the 40,000-foot level.

While I can understand some rationale for doing that and for needing that as an overarching piece of legislation, we also need to give some indication that we know how to get health care legislation down from the 40,000-foot level to ground level, where people live and where people get sick and where people end up in the hospital and where people end up blocking beds in acute-care hospitals because they're waiting for long-term beds, where people end up not being able to get the kind of care they need because of all sorts of blockages and shortages and crises in the health care system. I think, Mr. Chair, that it is really important.

Certainly, this is what I'm hearing from my constituents, what I'm hearing from Albertans. They want solutions to our health care crisis. They don't just want nice, well-meaning words and platitudes that say: you know, this is what it should be. They don't particularly care whether they get a charter right now or not. If it's a matter of choosing between getting a charter or getting a doctor or getting a doctor to look at them, they'd far rather have the doc look at them, quite frankly. I think it is really, really important that we turn this legislation from this 40,000-foot statement of principles that it is into something that actually on behalf of the people of Alberta makes a difference to the state of health care in this province right now.

I will be voting in favour of this amendment, and I urge everybody else in the House to do the same. Thank you.

The Chair: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, it's your turn, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Ms Blakeman: Okay. Thanks very much, Mr. Chair. I guess I want to start out by talking to the principle of the amendment that's in front of us. What I really see encompassed in this is the public's frustration over what they see as a lack of accountability. The whole concept of a wait-list, while it may be arbitrary, might be even a somewhat false accounting – and I'm sure there are people that can argue that – it is something that the public can grasp, look at, compare, and make their own decision on.

Based on what has gone on in this province over the last couple of weeks, the reaction I'm getting from my constituents and from others – and I don't know why I get them from others, but I do; I think because I used to be the health critic, and I'm still on people's Rolodex – is that they're really frustrated and bewildered at what is actually going on. What is the real status of stuff? Is it as bad as people say . . .

Dr. Brown: No.

Ms Blakeman: . . . or is that rhetoric? Well, the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill says no, but then someone on the other side of me is going to say yes. For the public, who are sitting in the middle of all of this, they're just saying: what the heck is going on? They don't trust us anymore, quite frankly, and they don't believe us. They want a measurement by which they can decide whether they think the system is doing well or not. Remember that most people are not in the health care system and, hopefully, never will be, and I hope that on their behalf, too.

I've just read through a stream of blog postings that roll on, and printed out it was – I don't know – 10 pages or something of people commenting on this. There's mostly – I don't want to say ignorance because that sounds mean – a lack of information about how the system actually works. Occasionally there are a few people who kick in there and say: "No, no, no. They use a system called triage, and here's how it works. For anybody who appears in the emergency room, you know, not breathing, bleeding, not conscious, or with chest pains, then they're in." Then you hear from the people who go: "Yes. That's what happened to me. I was in. I had great care. No problem." Car accidents: front of the line; you're in. But then there ends up being this whole long discussion about how intoxicated people who've been let out of the shelters at 8 o'clock in the morning come in to get a bed to sleep off their drunkenness, and somehow they're getting ahead of other people in the line, and you think: really, I find that very hard to believe. But people swear that it's happening.

This is the kind of discussion that's happening out there. There's a lot of – well, in the theatre biz you call it rhubarb. That's what the crowds do because you don't actually want to hear what an extra is saying in the back, so they do the old: peas and carrots, peas and carrots, rhubarb, rhubarb, rhubarb. That kind of gives a mumble of dialogue that you can't actually catch hold of. That's what people are experiencing when they look at our health care system and go: what is going on here?

What's being offered in the amendment put forward by the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, certainly, in the (d) section is:

Standards for lengths of stay in the emergency departments of hospitals consistent with the "Position Statement on Emergency Department Overcrowding" published by the Canadian Association of Emergency Physicians and dated February 2007.

Very, very specific. Measurable. I think that's what folks are looking for right now: something that's measurable, that's a clear target, that they personally can monitor and report on and, I suppose, would look to the government to enforce.

You know, today we have another example. We've got Dr. Duckett, who was the one everyone loved to hate. The government could point fingers and say: well, you know, the government didn't do that; Dr. Duckett decided to do that. He'd point fingers back. Well, now, Dr. Duckett has been terminated. Fine. So he's out. Now, what does that tell people about whether the system actually worked or not? It creates more chaos, which I was trying to lessen in the system. To be fair, I think the cookie thing was just too far, and people will not accept it. He's lost the credibility of the staff and the front-line workers and the administration in the system and of the public. He can't rebuild that.

I think that's why people are so interested in those wait lists. I note that Alberta never submitted their wait list times to the national program, so when they do the national announcement and we hear how wait times are getting better or worse, then they have to say, "Alberta is not in this" because we never gave our numbers to them. That also puzzles people. If we're doing so great here and we've got such a great made-in-Alberta system, why can't we put our numbers up against the national numbers?

The other thing that really shocked me was watching Alberta Health Services lowering the targets from where they started. The minister says: the target is 95 per cent on this. But if you watch Alberta Health Services, it starts to come down: 85 per cent, 70 per cent, and it's now come down to something really odd like 55 per cent or 40 per cent. Someone will correct me there. So I think that particularly this second section of this amendment is very good and speaks to what people are trying to grasp onto.

I'm interested in writing legislation. I spend a lot of time reading stuff like this, and I take the government's point that you've got to be careful about what you put in legislation because what is done in the Legislature must be undone in the Legislature, or it can only be changed in the Legislature. If you say that your wait time target is X and it's for eight hours and it has to be – let me make some numbers up here – 80 per cent for people discharged on the eight-hour mark and 70 per cent discharged on the four-hour mark, if you want to change that, even to lift it because you're doing so well, the bill has to come back in front of the Legislature. If you're not in the Legislature, then it gets more complicated. So I understand what the government is trying to say about, you know: don't load too much stuff into legislation.

On the other hand, this government loads nothing into legislation. Everything is by regulation. We have had shell bills as long as I've been elected here, and we have very few decisions that are made on this floor.

Mr. MacDonald: Shell bills: give me an example of one.

Ms Blakeman: Oh, just about everything that's come in here. The bills are two pages long or three pages long, and essentially they say: and the minister can decide what to do in the following circumstances. There's a long list, and then it says: and they can make regulations. That's empowered to the Lieutenant Governor in Council or to the minister. That's it. There's very little that's outlined by the bill itself, including the new Alberta Health Act as another example of a shell bill.

I'm struggling a bit, and I will look to the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark to explain this one to me. The (c) section of this talks about including as guiding principles that "no unnecessary deaths, no unnecessary harm to patients, no unnecessary delays in care and no unnecessary waste of resources should occur." I'm not understanding what the measurement is there. How am I as a citizen supposed to figure out what an unnecessary death is? Is it any death? Is it a death that happens within a specified period of time? Is a suicide an unnecessary death? That could be interpreted as a moral overlay rather than a physical overlay, so I'm struggling, to be honest, with the first paragraph because I can't figure out what the measurables are there.

What are the targets? How do I measure that as a citizen when I look at, hopefully, numbers that are published by the ER? What do you mean, unnecessary harm to a patient? I'll tell you. You talk to my mother. Sometimes you just get that close to her, you know, like kind of a quarter-inch away from her skin, and she is so unnerved by that that she is really uncomfortable. You think: okay, did I cause her unnecessary pain there by almost touching her? Hmm. I'm really struggling with the lack of definition around the first clause.

You know, unnecessary delays: what the heck is that? If there is a fire alarm and everybody leaves the building and something didn't happen, was that a necessary or an unnecessary delay? I even might want to recommend to the member that he look at severing these two so they could be voted on separately. At the very least, if he would be so kind as to provide me with some measurables on that first paragraph.

A number of other people have spoken very well about all the other things that could be done in the health care system, and I don't need to repeat them. I will talk very briefly about what my seniors most want, and that is very reliable home care that will keep them independent. The subacute is terrific. Everybody talks about great subacute home care. Wonderful. As soon as you're out of the hospital and at home, they'll come and do your bandages and stuff like that. Everybody thinks that's great.

The home care that is provided to seniors or people that are frail or need long-term assistance in their homes to stay independent: not so good. To me, that is an economics question, and I still argue and I think all the backup tells me and others that putting money into home care saves you money with people in hospital.

All the arguments about long-term care beds, real long-term care beds with the meaning of long-term care beds. Half of them are a medical portion. The government pays part of it. There's a certain staff ratio for RNs there and all the rest of that. We need those to continue to be provided by the government as compared to private providers. The government funnelling everyone towards assisted or supported living is just not the same thing, and I'm irritated that the government pretends that it is.

We need to look at palliative care, end-of-life care. It may well be that people would leave hospital if they knew they could go to a palliative care unit. Right now that's darn hard to do, and there are not very many of them.

Again, where are we with training and creating new school spaces for the medical professionals that we do?

The last thing is that the government is very fond, every time somebody says that everybody should have a family doctor, of saying that primary care networks are the fix. No. Primary care networks do not create doctors. It just takes the doctors that we already have and groups them together in one office clinic. So stop using that as an excuse, and deal with the issues around why people won't become GPs, and I think we'd be a little farther ahead there.

Those are the issues that I've heard from my constituents and my reaction, too. In principle I do support the amendment. I certainly have some real serious questions about the first, which is included here as section (c). I know the member plans on speaking again, so I'll read Hansard or listen to him about how he can answer that for me about what the measurables are.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's a real honour to rise and to speak to amendment A3 on Bill 17. I find it quite amazing that the government has written Bill 17. We've asked for some amendments such as in section 10 to be accountable, and this amendment is about legislating accountability because that's the problem that we're suffering with. The whole reason why Bill 17 was written, in my opinion and that of many people that I talk to, is because of the debacle that our emergency system is in. This government continues to think that if we put out a nice, wordy document and make a bunch of promises, that will please people, and we'll be able to carry on with this failed system, this failing system.

I kind of compare this to an application on a credit report for a mortgage. If you don't have good credit, you have to have collateral. Let's say that if there was a trust report to have to come out on this government's record and its promises and all of the reports, the ER reports for two and a half years that they buried, this government has lost the trust of people.

The former health minister, the Member for Calgary-West, did a great job of undermining, as the MLA for Edmonton-Meadowlark has put out several times, saying that this minister came in and wrecked the system. It's amazing to me that tonight another scapegoat has been shot. They brought in an expert from Australia that, to me, reflected the minister's attitude and the way he dealt with people at the time. They just said: you know, if we're in charge, we can do it. I remember the former minister from Calgary-West saying: "You know, what's failed in the past with our health care reforms is that we discussed it with the people. We're just going to ram it through" or words something like that. You know, we're not going to discuss it; we're going to do it.

They did it, and boy, did they ever do it. They rammed it so far through that we're now at the breaking point. We have emergency doctors after two and a half years being told: "If you speak out, you wait and see what we can do to you. Don't speak out." They passed the superboard, made them sign papers saying that health care workers are not to speak out, with their jobs at risk. Then they say: "Oh, no, no. That's a misunderstanding. It's fine to speak out." I'm sorry. That's like the army in some of these Third World countries saying: "Go ahead and speak out. The last two times someone got shot, it was merely an accident. Don't worry. Go ahead and speak out."

No. The morale in our health care system is undermined because of the former minister, because of Alberta Health Services and the dictates that they put out that said: "You do this or else. If you don't do this, you watch what we can do to your system. We can fire a thousand nurses. We can shut down the amount of doctors that are coming in." They've been doing that, Mr. Chair.

The reason why the MLA for Edmonton-Meadowlark wants this legislated is because this government has no trust report anymore. When you get to that point, you don't do a deal on a handshake. You don't do a deal on a wonderful, wordy piece of paper saying: oh, I promise all these things now. No. You have to actually have a contract. You actually have to have legislation.

The Chair: Hon. member, it's 6 o'clock. Pursuant to Standing Order 4(4) the Committee of the Whole is recessed until 7:30 p.m.

[The committee adjourned at 6 p.m.]

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, I would like to call the committee to order.

Bill 17 Alberta Health Act

The Deputy Chair: I would like to recognize the hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: I would move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, you had a question?

Mr. Hinman: A point of clarification. I thought that I was speaking and that when we adjourned to come back, I'd be able to continue speaking.

The Deputy Chair: We're in committee, and we're going back and forth. I'm sure that you'll have ample time to speak.

Bill 28 Electoral Divisions Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? We are speaking to amendment A1 as proposed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie. The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. As we were last engaged in this debate, the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie moved amendment A1. That amendment was with respect to the naming of an electoral division. It was to change the name of the electoral division currently named Dunvegan-Central Peace to Dunvegan-Notley. I would like to move a subamendment to that amendment, and that subamendment would be that the amendment to Bill 28, Electoral Divisions Act, be amended by striking out "Dunvegan-Notley" and substituting "Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley."

The Deputy Chair: Thank you. Hon. members, we'll wait till the amendment is passed out.

Hon. Government House Leader, do you wish to speak?

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The amendment was put forward the other night specifically to recognize the former Leader of the Official Opposition, who died in a plane crash while a Member of the Legislative Assembly.

While there have been a number of concerns raised about naming ridings after political figures, it's quite rightly been pointed out that there isn't a naming policy in place. It's hard to refute the comments put forward. I have spoken to the Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace. There were in this case a number of recommendations, as was pointed out, made to the commission. There's probably good rationale to say that we should not move forward with the amendment, but it's a difficult situation to deal with without a naming policy in place.

In any event, I believe I have the support of the Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace and would ask for support of the others to put Central Peace back into the name. The rationale for this is that, actually, Mr. Notley represented the riding of Spirit River-Fairview. Later the name was changed to Dunvegan. Dunvegan was not particularly descriptive of location, so it was confusing to people as to where the Dunvegan riding was.

Those of us who grew up in the Peace Country know all about Dunvegan and the Dunvegan bridge, but others were not so familiar with that. In previous redistributions the name Central Peace was added, so instead of Spirit River-Fairview or Dunvegan it became Dunvegan-Central Peace. That lets people know where the constituency is. That name is very important in the opinion, I think, of the member, but in many people's opinions it's important to have location in there.

In an urban riding it's one thing to say Edmonton-McClung or Edmonton with the name added to it, but in a rural area you need the descriptive. While I can appreciate the hon. member's reasons for bringing forward the name Notley, we do need the name Central Peace in there.

My subamendment is to put it back into the name so that it's Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley. I would ask members of the House to support it.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I'm pleased to rise and speak to the Government House Leader's subamendment to my amendment to Bill 28. I fully accept the Government House Leader's explanation for his amendment and the rationale for it and am pleased to support it.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much. I just wanted to get on the record, Mr. Chairman, that I support this subamendment. The original amendment as well is well intentioned. Clearly, we have an individual who as a former member of this House has made a significant contribution to this province. He died tragically in 1984, and ironically I actually had the chance to be taught political science by his former chief of staff.

This is something that we should do in honour of Mr. Notley's memory, and I encourage all members to support this subamendment.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chair. Delighted to be able to stand up and support this subamendment. I guess I would have liked to have dropped the Dunvegan and just had the two names. However, we'll take what we get.

I certainly was fortunate enough to actually have met Mr. Notley, and I sat right up there in the very first row right in the middle, looking down. It was a number of years ago. I wasn't quite as young as I'd like to let you believe I was. It was a thrill to watch him in action. He certainly was a class act. I did have the opportunity to meet him later at a little bit of a party.

I'm delighted with this. I think that perhaps in time all of our ridings would be named for Albertans that deserve that recognition.

With that, thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Boutilier: Yeah. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I will say that the amendment that's put forward is something that this Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo can support without question. I am very proud to sit in front of the member behind me, who, of course, is the daughter of the member named in the proposed amendment. From everything I have heard in my over 12 years on that side of the House and eight as a cabinet minister and the last year as an independent and now as a member of the Wildrose, I have never heard anyone across Alberta speak in any way, shape, or form in a negative way about the member that this amendment is intending to honour. Obviously, what took place was clearly a tragedy.

I will say that as I drive across the High Level Bridge on occasion, there is a park that the city of Edmonton had recognized in his honour. On this amendment, I believe it is another reflection of the people of Edmonton in terms of the role that Mr. Notley played in this province. I rise tonight to say that I without question can support this amendment, and not only that, even more appropriately, I congratulate the city of Edmonton and the council for their vision way back when they decided to take the initiative to name a park after him, Notley park, which you may be aware is just opposite, on the right-hand side, going across the High Level Bridge.

This amendment will, again, honour someone that was without question viewed as a statesman, a gentleman that was viewed as an honourable MLA and, most importantly on this amendment, was recognized as a wonderful Albertan. No matter what political party or stripe that we all represent, I can only say that the respect that Albertans have for what is intended in this amendment, I think, is unquestionable. Therefore, tonight I say that this amendment is one that I can support, and I look forward to continuing on speaking about this.

When my dad died, I started to reflect on the historical notion of representing and honouring an MLA that tragically, of course, lost his life at such an early age and clearly was at his prime. I mean, who knows? Perhaps this person could have become a Premier of Alberta. The values that that person brought to this Assembly, the respect that he had for others, the commitment he had to his constituents in representing northwestern Alberta are substantial, and I am quite certain that the Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace, clearly, as a minister of the Crown would agree. We may not agree with the politics, but we do agree with the principles that this hon. member had brought to this House at a very exciting time in Alberta.

I might say that this amendment is timely because once again it is a very exciting time in Alberta. There's the smell of change in the air, and that's exciting, very exciting. What that change will mean and what that change will entail in the months and the weeks ahead, only time will tell.

It appears to me that as I look around this Assembly tonight on this amendment, it's also equally important to recognize that a particular table officer actually is getting ready to retire. The relevance is that she sat in this Assembly and would have seen the hon. member that we're planning in this amendment to honour. What an honour for her and an honour for us to say thank you. So to Louise I say: thank you for all of your work and time, and congratulations in seeing so much change across Alberta, especially when Mr. Notley served as the leader of the New Democratic Party in this Assembly.

I was looking at the number of seats that the New Democrats had historically. I do know that the daughter of the leader is very proud – very proud – and I might say that she is honoured. Of course, being of the stature that she is, she does not want to participate in this amendment so that it's not viewed as a pecuniary interest in light of the fact that it's her dad. I think it provides an opportunity for each and every one of us in this Assembly to speak about her dad in this amendment.

To the Government House Leader, through the chair, I want to say that this amendment is without question a noble one. It is one that I think clearly reflects the spirit of good work by an MLA who was so suddenly taken from us in the '80s. I can support the amendment under Bill 28, Electoral Divisions Act, moving to strike out the name "Dunvegan-Notley" and substitute "Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley". I think that Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley really reflects the geography and the spirit of that northwestern part of Alberta.

I know the citizens in that area are, in fact, very proud to have a member in that area today, who – of course, the riding is changing somewhat, but I think that the members in that area have been served well no matter what political party that they represent. Certainly, one of the underlying foundations and principles is that they were men of principle and values that represent the principles and values that they represent. Clearly, they hadn't forgotten who their bosses were. The hon. member who takes that seat today or the majority of that riding, I know, hasn't forgotten that as well, and I recognize that.

This amendment under the Electoral Divisions Act is one that I can support because Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley is something that I believe is honouring the past, the present, and also the future, the future in terms of recognizing the name of a leader of the New Democrats, recognizing the father of a member who sits in this Assembly today in a different region, but also representing the value of the very bosses and constituents that elect the member that sits in that particular riding and that area and constituency. For that, Mr. Chairman, I believe that this is noble. I think it is something that has been long coming, and it provides an opportunity, to the notice of subamendment.

Now, in fact, my understanding is that this is a subamendment, so this subamendment, I believe, is one that is important and also, I might add, reflective of the change that is taking place around our province. Back then there were just under 2 million people in the province of Alberta. Now, of course, we near 3.5 million people; 1.5 million people have since come to this province. I am one of those people, almost 35 years ago coming to Alberta and to the electoral division that I represent, Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, but no different than others who come from far away, from other parts of Canada. This subamendment, clearly, under Bill 28, the Electoral Divisions Act, is something that is important, something that is representative but also, what's even more important, represents the values and the spirit of Mr. Notley, who was then the leader of the New Democratic Party and served the people of all Alberta in a very respectful, statesmanlike, and positive manner.

He also spoke not just as a critic or opposition. It was really an important value. He talked about the future. Being able to talk about the future is where my head is, not criticizing but actually talking about the future, talking about a better Alberta, talking about Alberta being a better place to live and raise a family. As a father with a three-year-old I think it's only natural that you think of the future because it's not only about today; it is about tomorrow and what we do in making Alberta an even better place to live, play, and raise a family.

I believe that the Electoral Divisions Act is one that is appropriate. I believe that the notice of subamendment is reflective of the respect that we have for the leader of the then New Democratic Party, Mr.

Notley. When I sat on the other side and when I sat on the other side as a cabinet minister for almost eight years, I remember some of the more elder statesmen on that side of the House, who had served when Mr. Notley was the leader, spoke very kindly about him. That's from all parties: from the PCs, from the Liberals. That, I think, really is a testament to the person in terms of this name honouring the commitment that he made to Albertans and the commitment that he made to his constituents.

He did not serve just the people of Dunvegan and the Central Peace; he served all Albertans because he was the Official Opposition leader. It was at the time when the New Democrats had just under 20 members in this Assembly. It was certainly a time of change, and I think it's only reflective that that time of change is upon us again.

Mr. Chairman, I can stand today and be able to speak towards that, and I'm quite certain the Member for Calgary-Glenmore is quite prepared to stand and speak on this important subamendment regarding the Electoral Divisions Act. I'll add, of course, comments regarding the Electoral Divisions Act in terms of the number of MLAs and so on and so forth because between that and the subamendment, obviously, there may be some disharmony.

In terms of the name Dunvegan-Notley and it being substituted with Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley, it is showing respect to a gentleman and a leader who had committed his time. We are so sorry, of course, for what happened at a point in time in his life that took him away from us in terms of the active debate that he offered and contributed to this Assembly.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I will take my seat and allow other members to speak about this subamendment and the importance of it in honouring a very, very good Albertan in terms of the family and what they have done in contributing to a better Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall on the subamendment.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It is a pleasure to speak on the subamendment brought forward by the House leader, amending it by striking out "Dunvegan-Notley" and substituting "Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley." As we all know, Mr. Grant Notley was a great, honourable man, and he made a great contribution to Alberta. His integrity and his commitment for the betterment of Albertans was unquestionable, and he died doing what he loved best, politics. Every time I remember him, you know, tears kind of start to roll down my eyes.

I followed him quite a lot back then. He was one man who was holding the government accountable. It is a great honour for Mr. Notley to keep his memory alive, and all the coming generations will also keep taking guidance from the role he played in Alberta politics and the contribution he made. It shows a great respect for the true Albertan he was.

Mr. Chair, he made a great contribution, as I said. Who knows how our politics might have been if Mr. Notley was around? There was, I think, the best Premier Alberta couldn't have because he left us for a heavenly abode at such a young age.

This will be a great honour. It shows great respect for a gentleman who gave lots to Alberta, and I will be wholeheartedly supporting this amendment, Mr. Chair.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak on the subamendment? The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chair. I would like to speak and address this subamendment to change the Electoral Divisions Act from "Dunvegan-Notley," substituting "Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley." I'm just trying to do a little bit of quick research here, and I believe one member said that he actually represented the area of Spirit River-Fairview, an area that I'm quite fond of and have actually gone up there many times to visit and one of the ones, I guess, that's blessed to understand what the Dunvegan bridge is and how important that bridge is in that area.

Mr. Goudreau: It's not the bridge; it's the community.

Mr. Hinman: Well, but we still have the Dunvegan bridge, which is left over and, like I say, is very significant for those people who live north of the river. That's their access across, and they've struggled for a long time trying to get a second bridge in there, so I think it's appropriate that we keep the name Dunvegan. Those people who travel north from Grande Prairie and cross the Dunvegan bridge are aware of it and the number of times that it's reduced to one-way traffic and the frustration that it can cause.

Grant Notley certainly was an incredible individual who had the tenacity to work hard in opposition. I think that he was one of those individuals who stood strong against many who were trying to speak against him.

I just want to do a little vignette here. The 20th Legislature, 1982 to 1986, was unique. It had a four-member opposition, two New Democrats and two independents. The two independents joined forces and then vied for Official Opposition status, which brought extra funding and privileges. That still goes on today, Mr. Chair. They tried to reach the four. It's interesting there, you know, that it's that position of official status to bring extra funding. After hearing arguments from both sides, Speaker Gerard Amerongen chose the New Democrats under Grant Notley, and the party remained the Official Opposition until the 1993 election.

I think that he's quite a remarkable individual who definitely worked very hard for the area of Central Peace. I think that it's fitting to put his name on there as we have so many other areas – Edmonton-Manning, to name one – as a former leader of a party. I'm pleased to rise and to recognize the late Grant Notley and the work that he did for the Legislature and the people of the Central Peace area. I think this is quite a fitting area to call after an individual who spent so much of his time and was so dedicated to the democratic process and wanting to see change here in Alberta.

I speak in favour of this subamendment to the amendment. I think, once again, like I say, that we're remembering the historical realities of the different regions of this country, this province, and the great people that were willing to serve. I wanted to look up a little bit more information – and perhaps someone else can comment on this – but I'm just not sure whether he was on official duty when the plane went down, what he was doing. Anyway, it would be interesting to have a little bit more vignette on what happened and what transpired there and a few more of the things that they know from some of the people that knew Mr. Notley personally. I was hoping to hear from some other members. We'll see if they stand up to speak.

With that, I'll sit down in favour of this subamendment.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak to the subamendment?

I will call the question.

[Motion on subamendment SA1 carried]

The Deputy Chair: Before we move on, hon. members, may we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's really an honour for me to be able to introduce to you and to all members here a number of guests. First of all, my son Wayne Prins – he's from Fort McMurray – is now the prairies director for the Christian Labour Association of Canada. With him are some of his co-workers: Don Geiger, Dan Dykstra, Dennis Perrin, and Nathan Matthews from Vancouver. Seated with them is Renée Reitsma, the legislative assistant for the hon. members from Red Deer-South and Grande Prairie-Wapiti. The Christian Labour Association of Canada now represents probably 50 per cent or more of all the construction workers in the Fort McMurray oil patch. I'd like to have them stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we're back to amendment A1 as amended. Does anyone wish to speak to the amendment as amended?

Seeing none, I will call the question.

[Motion on amendment A1 as amended carried]

The Deputy Chair: We are now back to Bill 28 as amended. The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'd just like to make a few comments with regard to Bill 28, the Electoral Divisions Act. In speaking to it, I'd like to compliment the Electoral Boundaries Commission on something they did that I think was fairly unique. As you will recall, in previous electoral divisions acts there is a very short act with about 40 pages of metes and bounds descriptions. I think this Electoral Boundaries Commission has recognized how cumbersome metes and bounds descriptions are, how archaic they are, how the layman really cannot follow them, and they've come up with an innovative section with a map. I believe the map is on electronic disc. It may even be a first in legislative history. I don't know that, but I'm suspecting it may certainly be a first.

As we all know, a picture is worth a thousand words, and a map portrays boundaries very well. It can be blown up and provide details to show the intricate locations of the boundaries. Electoral boundaries aren't something that need to be defined by a real fine line. Usually they go down a centre of a road allowance or something of that nature. I really want to compliment the Electoral Boundaries Commission for coming up with something that is a 21st century solution, getting rid of those archaic metes and bounds descriptions, which I'm sure very few people read and even less understand.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I haven't had a chance to speak to this piece of legislation yet, and it's fundamental to how we operate in here, so I thought I'd better take the opportunity before it's voted through. I want to get it on the record that I don't believe that we need to increase the number of MLAs. In fact, if I were inclined to lean one way, I'd lean to reducing the number of MLAs. But that's not what's happening in this bill. We're adding four more.

There are a number of reasons not to keep adding, the least of which is that there's not enough room in this Chamber to keep adding many more. But, far more importantly, I just think that we sometimes have too many elected officials at the provincial level in Alberta. One of the things that I think happens, especially in a province that's inclined to give governments huge majorities, is that the government ends up creating, as it were, make-work projects for MLAs to keep them busy. I think sometimes that leads to, frankly, too much government or to misguided government. I think we could run this province quite well, probably, with 65 MLAs or something like that. I wanted to get it on the record that I am not pleased that this bill is getting pushed through with 87 MLAs.

I also wanted to get on the record that I do appreciate that my constituency survived this legislation because I think it was a pretty close thing. I argued and I believe fundamentally that Edmonton-Riverview is a coherent, cohesive, sensible constituency and that . . .

Mr. Hancock: Are you talking about the member or the constituency?

Dr. Taft: Well, I'm not so sure the member is all those things, but the constituency at least is.

If you look at the two sides of the river in Edmonton-Riverview, they are mirror images, in effect. You have very wealthy neighbourhoods on each side lining the top of the river valley. You have solid middle-income neighbourhoods on each side of the river valley, all built in the 1950s, and frankly you have some pockets of fairly transient, lower income neighbourhoods on each side of the valley. Those two mirror images, those two halves of that whole, mean that those people have more in common with each other than they do with people who live out further from the centre of the city. The people living on the south side of the river valley along the top of the river bank, for example, have more in common with those who they can see across the river valley than they do with people way out in the suburbs.

I know that there were concerns for the way the boundary was drawn for the Member for Edmonton-McClung, and frankly the way it ended up I can see why he's concerned. It didn't have to end up that way, but that was not my decision. I do want to express the position that I think it's a good thing that Edmonton-Riverview survived as a constituency.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Back to Bill 28, the Electoral Divisions Act, I too would like to stand and voice my thoughts that 87 MLAs were not needed. We've expanded this. Again, it's a cost that's going to be incurred by the taxpayers. But your question is: is the efficiency of this improving? What are we really going to achieve by expanding from 83 to 87 MLAs? I think that this is an area where we really need to take two steps back. This is another case of the government bringing forward a bill that, I think, is poorly thought out and is just looking at a simple solution.

As was mentioned earlier, this building definitely has limited size. I think that the original Parliament did quite well to build this and to view the first hundred years and to be able to fit in 83 MLAs. Now we're asking them to look for the next hundred years if we're going to keep growing this way and into this new 21st century. I think we had a great opportunity here to look at what the vision is for the next hundred years. What's the democratic process? What are the electoral boundaries actually going to be in the next hundred years? How are we going to do this process?

I think that we should have perhaps struck up a committee that actually would have asked that question and talked to Albertans on how they wanted to go forward. Instead, this government just took the lackadaisical, simple thing that, "Oh, well, we do well in these areas. Let's just put in a few more MLAs and be able to balance it out with our current system," to be able to say: "There. We've addressed the concerns of those individuals that are now representing more people outside of the boundary of the plus or minus 25 per cent of the means in more than five ridings in the province."

Right now, I believe, the number is five; five ridings can be outside the plus or minus 25 per cent of the mean number that's determined, and from there we're going to divide up areas. When they put this together, even on those grounds, did they really think of, you know, the perception on where the growth is coming from in the next 10 years? I even have to question: on those areas where they put in the extra MLAs, did they really address the growth areas, in Fort McMurray, in Airdrie, in south Calgary, in northwest Calgary? Where's the geographical and population growth going to go? Whereabouts are those suburbs that have already been given the go-ahead by the developers? I don't think that there was a lot of thought going forward so much as to: how do we take a snapshot today and realign these boundaries so it meets the current legislation that we have on how to determine these boundaries?

I was also somewhat disappointed with the government's intervention, I'll call it, the presentation that they made afterwards, much like today. Do we have an Alberta Health Services or a health minister that runs the province? The health minister and the Premier were asked this evening – and I'll show the relevance in a minute here because the same process went through for the Electoral Divisions Act, where the Deputy Premier stepped in and made a presentation. But the Premier and the health minister made some fairly strong remarks about our president and CEO of Alberta Health Services, and not 48 hours later this individual has been dismissed.

I think the same thing happened here. The deputy minister went before this supposed committee and made the recommendations, and those recommendations, if people don't realize that – I don't know if the proper word is "intimidating." They just know that: oh, this is coming from the Deputy Premier, which is obviously coming from the Premier's office, so maybe we'd better look at that. It just strikes me, the changes even in Calgary-Glenmore that were revised. Macleod Trail is a very natural geographical boundary, and the problems or, I guess, the struggles on commuting are very different on one side versus the other of wanting the southwest ring road. It seems like there were two communities, Southwood and Lakeview, that the gerrymandering went on to adjust and change the way the communities were functioning as a whole or the cohesive value of those communities.

I think that, like I say, people that looked at it that live in those areas approached me and said – I don't know; can you use your own name? – "Paul, why did they change these boundaries?" I had to say, "Well, you know, the government is in that position. They appointed the majority of that panel. I think there's a lot of weight in those decisions."

I think this is another case, Mr. Chair, where the government puts out the words and says: "Well, we're putting up this nonpartisan committee. They're going to study it. Here are the parameters that we want you to use." Then they go forward where, really, what it should have done was start off with a committee to say: "You know, we've gone a hundred years; we need another hundred years. Things have changed. We have the electronic world now." It's quite interesting when you're a shareholder of a company how easy it is to vote, and they can tally up those votes and know whether the shareholders agree or disagree with the motions that that board is presenting.

I've talked to a fair number of individuals about democratic reform, asking them, you know: how do you think we could change things so that we have better representation, where people feel that they have actual input, that they can say, "Well, you know, it makes a difference if I vote"? I think I can almost say that the majority of Albertans, when it comes to provincial elections, feel like it doesn't make a difference, and they don't get out and vote. Over the last 20 years we've seen a continual decline in the number of people that have been willing to come out and vote. Some people give one reason, and the other ones give another one. To me the reason that I have found, talking to people at the doors, talking to people that have run in the past, doing those things, they say: you know, it really doesn't make a difference how I vote because it's just an impact that's going to happen, and once you people get in, it's going to be all the same.

An accountability that we released today at the Wildrose caucus talked very much about that, and we talked about such important things as recall, so when someone gets in, they're not just stuck in there for four or five years and there's nothing that the people can do.

I want to go back and talk a little bit more about what we could have done had we struck up a committee to say: let's study the electoral boundaries and see if there's a better way that we can represent Albertans and try to engage them in the democratic process. I want to refer back, as I mentioned, to electronic balloting, that I believe my colleague from Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo – what was the number of people that you were representing?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Hinman: I apologize. I just didn't have time to do all the research. We're limited, as you know, Mr. Chair, on the research money we have in our small little group, so sometimes just to add efficiency we can ask a question and not get too much heckling going.

It's a hundred thousand that this member represented and currently represents in the Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo area. Having that many people to represent, yet I know there are other people in this – and perhaps the chair would want to enlighten me how many he represents. I know that his is one of the more less dense areas. Maybe I'm incorrect on this, but some of them are as low as 17,000 in the north area, and in the south there are some areas that don't represent that many. Yet we say: oh, no; it's one citizen, one vote, and we're represented the same. There are many people that went to this boundary commission and said: "Well, my MLA actually only has a vote of 1.7," or "Mine has 2.1," or whatever the number the ratio is because of how many people that actually live in his riding. We did very little to actually address that and look at, you know, how many people are there.

Again, we went with the simple solution that we'll just grow the number rather than say: is there a way to redistribute it and at least keep the same number? I, like the hon. Member for Edmonton-

Riverview, believe that we could reduce it greatly. I look at the number of aldermen in Calgary and Edmonton, far fewer representing the city at the local level, which really is the government of those cities, yet they run efficiently and effectively with a much reduced number.

I think that it could even possibly be such that if we were to align the provincial boundaries with the aldermanic boundaries, there could be some efficiencies in representing those same areas, where those concerns would actually double up and be of more value, whereas when it's dissected the way it is, the alderman in my area does not represent all of my area. My area is much smaller, but it's still dissected, so I don't know that we look at the overlapping.

This is another problem as we go forward. Even today the one member mentioned and was upset, you know, with the provincial government and the federal government: did they do enough work to lobby for the world Expo? I think that perhaps the most important thing that we could do as elected representatives is to have a much better working relationship with the three levels of government. We have a lot of people that really struggle: "Well, this is municipal. No, that's provincial. No, it's federal." They really struggle with that. I think everybody in here agrees. They go back and say: well, there's only one taxpayer.

To me it should actually be: there's only one government. It has been divided into three levels of government. Right now we have three levels of government, all competing for one taxpayer. Each one has its little jurisdiction where it can tax and put that tax burden on the people. The next government says: well, I want more, so I'll take it. Then the third level says, "Well, we need more," so they'll increase taxes. We're losing the Alberta advantage because of this competitiveness between governments, taking the tax dollars and then trying to influence areas by redistributing those tax dollars.

We have a lot of interference from the provincial and federal levels in municipal politics. There was a question today saying that we need better, stable funding for the AUMA. I agree with that question. I believe it was the Premier who got up and said: oh, we've got the best funding anywhere. It's very, very partisan in the way that money is distributed to these municipal governments. They're very frustrated with the process that they have to go through to apply for money from the provincial and federal governments. There are some small towns that literally can't afford to hire the PR people to study all of the various programs that the government has and try and apply for money.

It's interesting. I was talking with one mayor, and he said, "Well, you know, Paul, we spend . . ." – and I regret that I can't remember the percentage of his budget, but it was significant – ". . . on applications to get funding at the provincial and federal levels." He said: "You know, it's funny. On average we get between $30 million and $33 million a year through our applications."

It would just be so much easier if that was assured and they got rid of all of the applications and looked at the different municipalities and said, "This is how much money you're going to get; these are your areas of responsibility: garbage collection, street paving, snow removal." They would have that money, and then they would know. But when they have to rely on applications, it's very difficult.

This government has talked over and over again about how one of their saving arrows for health care is that, wow, we've come up with this new concept of five years of budgeting for health care. They say: oh, now we can do it. To loop that back to the electoral boundaries act, these individuals do not have that stable funding. With our process that we've put in, they don't. I see the chair's eyebrows raising there, so I guess I need to explain that better. Obviously, his area is getting lots of funding, and that's great. That's what these areas talk about. If they've got good political connections, there's usually no trouble in the grant applications, and they get it. But if you're an area where there's an opposition member, you might be struggling because they don't have that ear of the minister, and they're not even kept in the loop on the priority list that this government has on where the money is going and how much. It's one of those things that we in opposition have always known, but we haven't been on the inside. I'm grateful for my new colleagues. Now, they can just stand up and say: "Well, no, this is the process. This is where it's at."

The first time I was elected, I was shocked at how many of these small-town mayors came up and asked: you know, with your $120,000 that's for you to distribute, where are we on your list? They started lobbying me. I went to the now Minister of SRD, and I said, "Where do I get this?" He said – and the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill is chuckling – "Oh, no, there isn't any for you. This is just for government members. It doesn't exist the way you've been told." I said, "Well, why would all of these individuals come and ask me?" The previous MLA for Cardston-Taber-Warner worked with them and was lobbied and told them: I can get you this and get you that. So we have a disconnect. We don't have a great electoral system that allows for the municipal governments to be connected to the province and know what their funding is. I really think that we made a mistake in just realigning the Electoral Divisions Act when what we should have been doing was realigning the whole process on how we decided we were going to make the new electoral boundaries.

The biggest and most important question should have been: how many MLAs do we need? What should we be going to in the next election? You know, should it be 83? Should it be 63? I want to talk about what some of the people that I visited with on this said. Again, going back to the electronic voting that we have in corporations and in many other areas, if we were to take an area – and let's just say Calgary – and reduce it to 12 MLAs, then I would roughly be like my hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo and might have 80,000 or 90,000 constituents there, and I think that that's doable in these cities. They can represent that.

I know in the rural area it's a real struggle to get around to seven and nine small towns and to represent them. We need to look at: how do we balance that off? Do we continue to have small numbers so that rural areas don't have to keep expanding their boundaries and making it tougher and tougher for the MLA to get around and to allow the MLA to represent so many small towns and jurisdictions? They're already stretched and running off their feet in trying to run around and do all those things. I mean, imagine the first time that you have the 11th of November Remembrance Day come around, and seven towns ask you: would you please be there for our ceremonies? It's not doable, but in the cities it's very doable. We can have multiple representatives there.

How are we going to fix this problem of an MLA with not too many people but a huge area and many towns and villages that want them there for their different functions and those in a big area? I believe that the area that we should be pursuing and looking at is electronic voting. If we were to actually represent – I'm talking electronic voting for MLAs, not for the electorate. Like I say, I might represent Calgary-Lougheed, and Calgary-Glenmore would be combined into one. There are 80,000 people there. Let's say that 50 per cent came out and that 40,000 people actually voted in that election. That could be one way that the MLAs in here represent the number of people that actually voted in their jurisdiction. You take Lethbridge-East. Perhaps 27,000 would come out and vote there, a very high percentage in turnout because they're so impressed with their MLA and the dedication and the hard work that she does, and they want to support her.

More importantly, if we were actually to do that, then people would say: "You know what? I need to go out and vote because I want my MLA to have a strong vote."

The Deputy Chair: On the bill as amended, the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. On Bill 28, the Electoral Divisions Act, one thing about this party on this bill is that we may not always agree because we believe in free votes. Not only do we believe; we practise. Talk is cheap; action is more accountable.

With that, I want to say tonight that, as the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore had indicated earlier, for the last 14 years almost I have represented our population. At one point our population, the electorate, was just actually around 50,000, which I think was just slightly above what the average was. As we all know and as we've heard in this House, my constituency of Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo is the oil sands capital of the world, which I will never apologize for because I'm very, very proud of the contribution that my constituency makes to this very province. I'm quite certain the minister of finance and the Treasury Board president would clearly recognize the dollars that they receive from my community in the royalties that are paid as contributing to the wealth of that. [A timer sounded] I don't know what that was, but I don't think that was your bell, was it, Mr. Chairman?

The Deputy Chair: That was wrong. Carry on.

Mr. Boutilier: Okay. Thank you. I thought someone was wanting me to sit down, and I know you love to hear me speak.

With that, I want to just say, Mr. Chairman, that my community has grown from when I had the honour and privilege of being mayor, where it was just over 55,000. It grew over the next five years after the generic fiscal regime under the electoral boundaries, where it grew to then 70,000. That in itself was a small city, just larger than Fort Saskatchewan, that was added to my constituency. I continued to serve them as their MLA and actually was very proud of the fact that I won every poll in the 77 polls that were in that constituency, and it remains an honour and a privilege to serve all of those polls.

Then we went after the generic fiscal regime, which saw a development where we expected $20 billion of investment in oil sands over the next 20 years. Well, for those of you that sat in this House during that time, the $20 billion, in fact, went from $20 billion to almost $120 billion. In my electoral division of Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo that $120 billion of investment had an impact of people pertaining to the electoral boundaries, going from then 50,000 to 70,000 to 75,000 to 80,000 to 85,000 to 90,000, from 90,000 to 100,000. Presently, according to city council and the mayor, we are now at 104,000 people.

It is the largest geographical constituency of the entire electoral boundaries in Alberta. I don't know if you knew that, Mr. Chair. In actual fact, my riding spans 68,000 square kilometres. I'm very proud to have played an important role, as the first mayor of Wood Buffalo, to amalgamate 13 communities into one. The purpose behind that was that as the oil sands were growing and more people were coming to the electoral division that I had . . . [interjection] The hon. member obviously doesn't know that I have the floor at this time, so maybe we can wait for his imparted wisdom at another time.

Mr. Chair, I was somewhat distracted, but I'll continue on with the important points and the important notes that I have. [interjections] I want to say that I think it's really important that tomorrow I go and get a haircut. You know, every once in a while everyone should get a haircut.

Having said that, Mr. Chair, I want to say that the fact that we've gone from 50,000 to 55,000 to 60,000 to 65,000 to 70,000 to 75,000 to 80,000 to 85,000 to 90,000 in the electoral division – here we remain at 104,000 people. Now, that's a large number for some to understand, but that's what it is. Per citizen those 104,000 contribute more to this Assembly than anywhere else, based on the royalties that are collected in the oil sands capital of the world. You know, the hon. member can roll his eyes, which he is choosing to do, but he might pay attention to the fact that apparently his Premier actually enjoys the oil sands and defending them. Yet, unfortunately, Mr. Chairman, for my citizens in the electoral district he threw the oil sands under the bus a few weeks ago with some dead ducks. Unfortunately, you know, the only person that didn't – I can't believe it – was the Minister of Energy, but the Premier and the Minister of Environment did, which is really ironic. The irony of that is absolutely incredible: purporting to support the oil sands but throwing it under the bus because we want to get the answers.

Mr. Chairman, for the 103,000 people that I represent, this Electoral Divisions Act really plays an important role for our future. Let me say that under Bill 28 I have mixed feelings relative to the issue of splitting the riding into two. I have already decided in terms of if this Assembly passes the two ridings, which on average would be 51,000 each, which I think is still above the average for what an electoral district would represent – I guess it basically means that for the last 14 years I've been doing the job of two MLAs and very proud of doing that.

Clearly, it's been an honour and a privilege to be rewarded on four occasions during elections and every time with the popular support going up. I know the hon. Speaker from Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock, I understand, continues to increase his majority when it comes to votes, and I'm proud to say that following in that way is something that I think speaks to the approval rating of your public. I've never forgotten who my bosses are. My bosses are not some person who has a fancy title such as honourable or minister or Premier. It actually is the people that give me my job. They're my bosses, and I have never forgotten that. [interjection] I see that the minister of finance has woken up, Mr. Chair, the hon. professor, as he was once called.

I find it interesting that the 103,000 people in my electoral district – the minister of finance should be smiling because per capita, per citizen, my citizens contribute more to the royalties of this province, that the minister of finance is supposed to steward. Rather than being a fiscal hawk, that I considered supporting as the potential leader and Premier of this province, he ended up to be a mallard. So I'll have to determine what that means.

Mr. Chair, we understand that there are many who want to move on to Bill 17, but before we do, I just want to conclude. In terms of concluding, I want to say that I'm proud to represent, hopefully, God willing – with my family I'm looking forward to reoffering in the next election. This seat now will be split, as proposed, from one into two. It's been an honour to serve 103,000 people. I never thought of it ever as work because when you do something you love, it is truly an honour and a privilege.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, the oil sands capital of the world will continue to have as its slogan, you know, We Have the Energy, capturing the spirit of who we are, what we do, and how we do it.

Mr. Chair, at this point, it's so important to move on to Bill 17. Therefore, I would move that we adjourn debate. Thank you.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion to adjourn debate carried]

[Motion to adjourn debate lost]

The Deputy Chair: We are back to Bill 28, Electoral Divisions Act, as amended. Does any member wish to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm thrilled to be able to get up and to continue talking about that. I couldn't believe how fast 20 minutes went by last time. I look forward to the hon. members across the floor who obviously want to participate in this debate as they all stood up. They even went to a division to let us know how badly they want to speak about this Electoral Divisions Act. That is exciting to me. It's going to be a fun night. We're going to talk about electoral divisions and we're going to have a committee here tonight to discuss how we could possibly change the Electoral Divisions Act. Maybe tonight, in the next 12 hours, we can look at that and realize that there are a lot of great ideas. I'm invigorated to think that there are so many government members that want to talk on this bill that they did not want to adjourn. That's exciting.

I want to continue from where I left off, talking about electronic voting of MLAs and how we could represent more people more efficiently and better if we were to switch to a process like that. To continue, Mr. Chair, what we need to do and look at and discuss – and like I say, I'm excited tonight that we get to do that. If we were to elect some individual, and let's say Calgary-Glenmore was to merge with Calgary-Lougheed and we had 20,000 houses with maybe 80,000 individuals and 50 per cent came out and voted and we had 41,000 individuals who voted, then what we could do is spend some of that billion dollars that they spent on IT for health care and upgrade in here.

So I as a member would vote on a bill, and there was 41,000 people who voted in Calgary-Glenmore, and pushed that. The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo had 102,000; a 50 per cent turnout was 51,000. What we would actually have is an electronic vote representing the number of people that actually voted in those areas. The tally could be such – and it would be far more democratic in the process. Something like that would be exciting, if we would have had the Electoral Boundaries Commission actually look at it. How can we change these boundaries? How can we be more efficient? How can we reduce the number of MLAs and be more effective? That's the key. Can we actually reduce the number of MLAs and be more effective? I believe we can.

Then if we wanted, we can go to the next whole level and look at: is there something else that we could do? Let's have a full discussion. We're going to have lots of time tonight. I'm more than happy, though, to let government members talk on this, to hear their thoughts. Looking forward to that. What we could actually do is look at those electronic votes, and we could go to the next level. One of the things that I actually brought to Members' Services back in 2005 was to change the way that we actually fund opposition parties.

An Hon. Member: Relevance.

Mr. Hinman: No. This is very relevant to the electoral boundaries act and how we change things. We have an opportunity here, if we defeat this bill, to go back and say: "You know what? We've got time. Let's look at what we're going to do for a new electoral boundaries act."

Mr. Chair, this is critical in my mind. It's a great opportunity. It's the 21st century. I don't know what could be more relevant about the electoral boundaries act than how we want to revise and represent Albertans better and more efficiently. If we were to actually engage – what we want to try and accomplish here is to have Albertans actually feel like: if I vote, I make a difference.

The federal parties actually give a contribution to the party if people get out and vote. I don't particularly like that, but what I do like is if the opposition parties and the government actually received $5 for every vote they received to do their research. This would be a way of kicking in a mechanism and saying: "You know what? I want to vote for the ND Party." The vote goes from 90,000 to a hundred thousand Albertans; their research funding would go up. [interjections] They don't even run candidates there.

Mr. Mason: I grew up there.

Mr. Hinman: Yes. I met your sister. It was a wonderful conversation we had.

Mr. Mason: Did she vote for you?

Mr. Hinman: I don't know. She wouldn't let me put my sign up, but I have to say that there were two or three ND people that took their signs down and put up Wildrose signs. I was quite pleased. We talked about how we want to ensure that people were represented and the wonderful ideas that we had for people that were suffering or needed some social assistance.

Anyway, I think that this would be a great way to engage Albertans. If they believed in the philosophies of whichever party it was, they would realize, "If I go out and vote, that's going to increase the research funding for each of those parties." It's nonpartisan. You don't have a Members' Services Committee that's dominated by one party and can easily decide how they're going to distribute the research money. That's what we want to do. We want to try and be as nonpartisan as possible. How do we actually divide the electoral areas? Can we reduce the number of MLAs yet increase the actual representation of the people? I think that, Mr. Chair, that's very much what the boundary act was about. They said: "You know, there's not equal representation. We have some MLAs that are only representing 17,000 people. We have other MLAs that are representing a hundred thousand people, and it just isn't right."

The commission was struck, and this government gave them the parameters on what they wanted to do. They said: we want to expand the number of MLAs because we don't want to have to increase the rural ridings anymore. It's already a challenge, I might say, to represent these large rural areas, so we want to go back. I will continue to say that it's important that we have democracy. There are many people that, you know, have pushed a lot on representative democracy. That was not discussed on this. They didn't look at changing any of those things. They didn't look at first past the post, and that's fine. But what areas could we and should we look at in order to improve the democratic representation here in Alberta?

This is what it was all about. The current legislation said that the ridings had to be within plus or minus 25 per cent with the exception of five ridings. We had breached that, so we needed to strike an Electoral Boundaries Commission to see how we are going to address that. This is the proposal that they brought forward, and I would argue, Mr. Chair, that this proposal does not really level the playing field where it's one Albertan, one vote.

If we were to change and, like I say, have electronic voting for the MLAs that represented large areas and those that had small areas, that would be an incentive. But there are two things that we could do also so that those people in those areas would realize: "Man, I want my MLA to have as many votes as possible. I'm going to go out and vote. I want Calgary to be well represented." So they go out and vote. Hopefully, that would be one more little thing that would help to get people to come out and vote. They'd say: I want my MLA to be representing as many people as possible. I think that that's important, Mr. Chair. How do we engage Albertans?

Like I say, there are two ways of engaging them. The other one is to realize that if they vote for the Wildrose, if they vote for the Liberals, if they vote for the NDs, they're actually going to get research funding. Basically, from 2004 to 2008 it was very close to that $5 per vote, and I actually approached the members from Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Boutilier: Oh, we get chicken.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you. A big bucket. There are a lot of us here. Two buckets.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Hinman: Sorry. Trying to be efficient.

Chair's Ruling Relevance

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, the purpose of Committee of the Whole is to go through the text of the bill and, if there's anything wrong with it, to propose amendments and discuss those and vote on those amendments. It's not to be changing the whole intent of what is here now. That was in second reading. If you would continue in that vein, then we can move on.

Mr. Hinman: Where are you quoting on that? Beauchesne what?

The Deputy Chair: Beauchesne 688.

Mr. Hinman: Beauchesne 688. Let me write that down so I'm aware of these things in the future. I'll go to that reference after I'm finished.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, I'm telling you what Committee of the Whole is for, and I'm just asking you to try and stay relevant and stay with the context of what the bill is here. If you have concerns with the bill, then propose amendments to make those changes.

Mr. Anderson: Word by word. Go over clause by clause.

Mr. Hinman: Well, I'm going to start off with the number, Bill 28. Have to wonder why this government brought forward the other 27. There were many of them that seemed like they were just a frivolous thing, that they're using up time. I don't know if they have researchers or what it is, but to think that it was Bill 28. If this is such a serious thing, why wasn't this Bill 4 or Bill 5? They were outside the actual . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, we are on Bill 28. Yes.

Mr. Hinman: Yes. That's what I'm talking to. The question is: why is it Bill 28?

The Deputy Chair: Where have you been?

Mr. Hinman: Oh, I've been in a lot of places in this world. Do you want me to spend 15 minutes telling you where I've travelled?

Chair's Ruling Decorum

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, there's a bit of decorum required in this House. You know the rules. You've been here long enough. Now, sit down. There is a bit of decorum required in here. You know how the Committee of the Whole works. I want you to conduct yourselves in a parliamentary manner, and we can move on with this and not have any of the frivolity that is going on at the moment. When someone mentions something about word for word, you took one point out of there, and now you're going to go through word for word in the entire bill. Look at the whole paragraph in context, and then from there you can go with it.

Mr. Anderson: Point of order.

The Deputy Chair: Sit down. I ask you to conduct yourselves in a civil manner, and we'll move ahead with this, or we're going to have quite a night.

Mr. Anderson: Can I make a point of order now?

The Deputy Chair: What is your point of order?

Point of Order Explanation of Chair's Ruling

Mr. Anderson: I'm going to quote from Beauchesne 688. I would remind the chair—I would hope that the chair would understand that his job is to be an impartial arbiter of the rules of this House and not favouring one side over the other. That's what I'd like to know.

Beauchesne 688 says, "The function of a committee on a bill is to go through the text of the bill clause by clause and, if necessary, word by word, with a view to making such amendments in it as may seem likely to render it more generally acceptable.” So we can go through it word by word as much as we want today, Mr. Chair. This is parliamentary democracy. This has been done a thousand times. I’m sorry if they’re uncomfortable with the filibuster. That’s not our problem. We are going to do that. It’s part of our rights as MLAs to do it, and until the other side invokes closure, we’re going to keep on going. That’s just the way it’s going to be. So it’s up to them when this ends tonight. That’s my point of order.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. Hon. member, it is not a point of order because you’ve also left out the fact: with a view of making such amendments as would seem necessary to render it more generally acceptable. If you have an amendment, fine. Then we’ll move with that.

Hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, you can proceed.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you very much for that clarification. My first comment is . . .

Mr. Mason: I wanted to speak to that point of order.

The Deputy Chair: I’ve already ruled on it.

Mr. Mason: Well, you’re being arbitrary, sir, and unfair. You should show that you have the respect of the Assembly in doing your job fairly and equitably. You just can’t cut off debate any time you feel like it, sir, with all due respect.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, you have the floor.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Not that I want to challenge the chair or anything else on the point of order, but we are filibustering. This government has brought forward a slew of bills that are unacceptable to the people of Alberta, and in my understanding as an elected representative that’s one of the last things an opposition party can do. We’re going to continue talking about the bill and going forward. It’s very parliamentary. I believe that filibustering has been going on from the very start.

I’m even going to go back to where I spoke on the amendment for a minute and talk about the Speaker and what went on back in 1982, when the Speaker ruled on who the opposition party was.

The custom of selecting a Speaker as official parliamentary spokesman dates back to the British Parliament of the 14th century. Early Speakers were messengers who conveyed the monarch’s wishes to Parliament and Parliament’s to the monarch. In the beginning they were the monarch’s servants, but during that long power struggle between Parliament and the monarchy the role of the Speaker changed dramatically. In 1642 a conflict between Charles I and Parliament redefined the Speaker’s role. Charles barged into the House to arrest five members who opposed him, but Speaker William Lenthall refused to turn them over, saying he was the House servant and he would follow only its directions.

Historically, the Speaker’s job could be hazardous, and our Speaker has talked about that. Nine Speakers lost their lives, many of them beheaded for bringing bad news from Parliament to the monarch. The new Speakers often had to be forced, and that’s why they carried them in with two hands. They actually had to be forced to accept the new position.

Today newly elected Speakers commemorate this part of the history by pretending to struggle as they are led to the Speaker’s chair. Physical danger does not stop modern Speakers although they are still all the centre of debate between opposing sides. Today they are referees whose primary role is to enforce the role of parliamentary procedure and oversee parliamentary administration. Speakers are also defenders of the parliamentary privilege.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, can you relate this to Bill 28?

Mr. Hinman: Yes.

The Deputy Chair: Please do.

Mr. Hinman: This is filibustering. The Speaker is to . . .

The Deputy Chair: Please do, to Bill 28.

Mr. Hinman: Okay. We’ll go back to Bill 28. Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. The table of contents, electoral divisions. What are the electoral divisions? If we switch over here to page 3, names of the electoral divisions, we have Dunvegan-Central Peace, Lesser Slave Lake, Calgary-Acadia, Calgary-Bow, Calgary-Buffalo, Calgary-Cross, Calgary-Currie, Calgary-East, Calgary-Elbow, Calgary-Fish Creek, Calgary-Foothills, Calgary-Fort, Calgary-Glenmore. Oh, I should be going: 13, Calgary-Glenmore; 14, Calgary-Greenway, a new name that we’ve amended; 15, Calgary-Hawkwood, a new riding that’s been developed in a city that has multiple MLAs already; 16, Calgary-Hays; 17, Calgary-Klein, another one where we’re recognizing the service of a previous Premier and have renamed it right along with 18, Calgary-Lougheed, another Tory Premier; 19, Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill; 20, Calgary-McCall; 21, Calgary-Mountain View; 22, Calgary-North West; 23, Calgary-Northern Hills; 24, Calgary-Shaw; 25, Calgary-South East; 26, Calgary-Varsity; and, finally, 27, Calgary-West.

We have 27 minus the first two: 1, Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley now, which is not here, but it’s been amended; 2, Lesser Slave Lake. We have 25 – 25 – electoral boundaries for the city of Calgary. How many aldermen do we have? Half of that and a mayor. What are the jobs of the elected MLAs? We need to ask that question. Not only do we need to ask that question, we need to ask the question: is 25 enough? Obviously, this government felt that it needed more MLAs, and I would have to humbly disagree with that.

Then we move on to Edmonton. Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, 28; 29, Edmonton-Calder; 30, Edmonton-Castle Downs; 31, Edmonton-Centre; 32, Edmonton-Decore, again named after another individual who has passed on but served our province well; Edmonton-Ellerslie; Edmonton-Glenora, 34; 35, Edmonton-Gold Bar; 36, Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood; 37, Edmonton-Manning; 38, Edmonton-McClung; 39, Edmonton-Meadowlark; 40, Edmonton-Mill Creek; 41, Edmonton-Mill Woods; 42, Edmonton-Riverview. We’ll turn the page to page 4, and what we have here is 43, Edmonton-Rutherford. For some reason we have an asterisk on that one on this bill. I’m not sure why; maybe because of his newly appointed parliamentary assistance to the health minister. Number 44, Edmonton-South West; 45, Edmonton-Strathcona; 46, Edmonton-Whitemud.

Again, numerous MLAs in a city that does not have nearly as many aldermen that are representing that area. Why would we give the Electoral Boundaries Commission the go-ahead and say, “Let’s do more of the same – more of the same – you know, we’ve had it this way; let’s keep doing it”?

There’s been much speculation on that. I hear over and over again; it's because we need to make sure we have enough rural votes that we can carry it. Again, that was part of the question that was given to the commission.

Number 47, hon. colleague from Airdrie, no longer Airdrie-Chestermere. Again, another one that you look at. This is truly the definition of gerrymandering when you look at the convoluted map that they were talking about.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I'm pleased to stand up and speak to this. I want to make just a couple of comments with respect to proceedings tonight, if I may, before we get under way, just to indicate that I would like to participate in the discussion but am not intending to participate in any all-night filibuster tonight. I do, however, think that it's important to protect the rights of members to do that because it's a long-established tradition. In my view it's not necessary with respect to this legislation. I do want to just make a few points on each bill, and I do have a few amendments tonight that I'd like to make, if I can stay awake that long.

With respect to the Electoral Divisions Act I'd like to make a few comments. I'd like to begin by thanking the hon. members for passing the amendment to rename the riding as Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley. I appreciate that. I knew Grant Notley as a student, and he got me involved in the New Democratic Party at that time. I admired him very much. He was a person who was very much at home in this Assembly, who was skilled and knowledgeable on a broad range of issues and always tried to put forward the best possible solutions. He is still very much admired in the province, particularly in his former constituency, which was known as Spirit River-Fairview at the time. His untimely death was a tragedy both for our party but I think also for the province as a whole, and I really do appreciate the hon. members for recognizing that. I very much appreciate it, and I can't thank the members on all sides of the House enough for making that recommendation. So thank you for that.

With respect to the issues raised in the legislation, I think that there are some good parts to the bill and some parts that are not as good. I just want to indicate that I think we need to do a better job in reducing the disparity in populations between the ridings. I will recognize that the Electoral Boundaries Commission this time did make an effort to reduce it. The Supreme Court, in respect to a case brought from Alberta, did set boundaries of plus or minus 25 per cent with respect to population of the ridings. In fact, before that in Alberta they often exceeded that. There were urban ridings that had 25,000 to 35,000 people, and one in particular at that time, my recollection is the riding of Cardston, had only about 8,000 people. So it got all the way to the Supreme Court, who directed that, in fairness, it couldn't be more than plus or minus 25 per cent.

Now, the commission made efforts to reduce that to try and hit the target of plus or minus 10 per cent, but they were unable to completely bring all of the constituencies within those ranges. It is a question of disproportionate representation for rural parts of Alberta, and I think that that is something that needs to be addressed. I don't think that Alberta as a very urban province, an increasingly urbanized province, that we can continue to do that indefinitely. I think we have to find more opportunities for equity.

I'd like to speak a little bit about the electoral system, if I can. The first past the post system which we have also creates disproportion in terms of the representation in our Legislature. This is common to all constituency-based or riding-based systems where it's on a first past the post basis. The argument, of course, is that it gives more stable government. I recollect that a couple of elections ago the Progressive Conservative Party earned less than half of the votes in the province – I think that was the 2004 election – yet they still had 75 to 80 per cent of the seats in the Legislature. Had there been seats allocated on the basis of the popular vote, we would have had a minority government. I know that that thought may make some government members a little nervous, but I think it would have been a very healthy situation for Alberta democracy. Even today, although the Progressive Conservative Party won a majority of votes, they still have a disproportionately massive majority which isn't indicated by their level of actual public support in the province among those who vote.

Which brings me to the next question, which is the whole question of voting turnout in the province, which I think is partly connected to the same first past the post problem because it gives a more predictable result. Many people interpret that as an inevitable result and decline to vote because they don't believe the vote is going to change anything. Now, that's not a problem for the government. I mean, I'm sure that it's, you know, perhaps even welcomed by some. But I think that on balance it's not a healthy situation, and I would like to see a significant increase in voter turnout in our province.

I know that some members have in the past suggested we even make voting mandatory, and I certainly think that it's one of the solutions that could be debated. I would like to see the Chief Electoral Officer involved in trying to encourage voting. There have been some good advertising campaigns. I think one in Ontario had people sitting at a restaurant getting ready to order their dinner and somebody comes along just when the waiter arrives and orders for them. Then the voice-over says: don't let other people make your decisions for you. I think that kind of brings it home. So there has been some effective advertising, and I think that our electoral office could do some of that. I think that we need to think about more ways to improve voter turnout. Certainly, I think the first past the post system has been abandoned in most democracies, and we should consider doing that as well.

In terms of public financing or financing for elections, which the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore was talking about, I have some thoughts on that as well. We have made some progress in this province in terms of how we handle that, certainly with donation limits and mandatory disclosure. That is certainly some progress that we've made with respect to that issue, but I think we could go further. In the United States, for example, they have donations to political parties in real time, so as soon as a donation is received and processed, it has to be posted so that you can see during the election itself who is giving money to which candidate and to which party, instead of finding out months after the election has already been decided. So that's certainly something that I think is very worth pursuing.

In terms of eliminating the financing of elections from corporations and unions, our party was the first to take that position based on what the NDP government in Manitoba did. That was followed by the Liberal government of Jean Chrétien federally. I think it's an important step to take. It's the citizen who is the core of democracy. He or she is the basic unit of democracy, and they are what democracy is about. It's not about special interests with money. It's not about a corporation or another organization that's prepared to use vast resources to attempt to influence electoral results.

You might say that then you wouldn't be able to afford to run the campaigns, and there would certainly be less money to do that. So some discussion needs to take place about whether or not you offset that with some public financing of elections, which has been done federally, so each vote is worth 75 cents. Now, I don't know about the research money that the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore was talking about, but this is campaign money that's paid directly to the parties to offset the loss of corporation and union funding. I think that that is something that needs to be considered as well.

Mr. Chairman, with respect to the rest I have already expressed concern with regard to some of the decisions that were made in the second report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission. In the first one I thought that they took a real unbiased run at it and made some good decisions. I think that subsequently, after hearing from the political parties, particularly the Progressive Conservative Party's submission was followed in some cases when it shouldn't have been. Certainly, taking a look at – and I mentioned this before – Calder and Glenora, the boundaries were quite rational, following the Yellowhead Trail. Before and afterwards they were changed so that there was all kinds of, you know – a piece here and a piece taken out there and so on, and it's obvious that it's been done in order to create favourable conditions for one or another candidate. And the word for that is gerrymandering.

Similarly in the two ridings up in Grande Prairie. They were going to follow what I think is a model used in Medicine Hat, where the majority of the city forms a single urban riding, and the remainder is then attached to a surrounding rural area. They tried that in Grande Prairie, but this wasn't to the satisfaction of the existing MLAs. There was a lot of lobbying that went on to change it back, so now Grande Prairie remains split in two and attached to two surrounding rural areas. So instead of having one solid urban riding, you have these two rural-urban amalgamations, which I don't think is what was wanted. When I had conversations with the Electoral Boundaries Commission, we did talk about that, and I strongly urged them, and I thought that they were inclined to try and create all-urban ridings where that was possible. We lost that as well, so I'm disappointed.

I think there was some retrograde movement between the first report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission and the second one. I don't think we made as much progress in terms of rationalizing the boundaries or the populations of the various constituencies as we could have, and I'm disappointed with respect to that.

I just want to indicate, Mr. Chairman, that I have very mixed feelings with respect to this. I think I'll probably vote for it. What swung me over, I guess, is the decision of the members to rename the riding. There was considerable community support for that name change. It didn't just pop out of the blue, and I am greatly pleased. I have warm feelings for the other side for the first time in a long time over that, and I very much appreciate it.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Marz: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure for me to rise tonight to speak and add my comments on Bill 28, the Electoral Divisions Act this evening. I'd like to thank the last speaker, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, before I get into my comments for his comments and for putting in my mind the former hon. Grant Notley. It was my pleasure as I was a municipal councillor to have met the gentleman on a couple of occasions before his tragic death, and he impressed me as a fine gentleman who was very dedicated to the well-being of Alberta. He was a fine Albertan.

I also feel very fortunate that I represent in my riding many of his relatives by the same name and that I had the pleasure of presenting him with a 100-year homestead farm award. They've been in the area that long. One of Grant's cousins, Wayne, also served on the David Thompson health authority, and he worked very hard for the province of Alberta in that respect. I consider him a good friend. So I certainly support the addition of the name "Notley" to Dunvegan-Central Peace. I think it's well deserved, well earned, and I'm sure many of my constituents will be pleased with that.

Although I have some trepidation about lengthening the names of constituencies, Mr. Chairman, in sympathy to you and Mr. Speaker and the Deputy Speaker of the House because you have to remember all these long names of every constituency, my own constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills is a relatively long name. I can't help but think that even the hon. members of this House oftentimes refer to it as Olds-Three Hills or Olds-Didsbury but hardly ever Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. It does become onerous on many of us in here. But I can also understand the reasons, the descriptive reasons and the honorary reasons, for including these names, and it's become a tradition in this province. So I would certainly support that aspect of the addition of that amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I'd specifically like to speak about section 1, the electoral divisions and the addition of four seats, from 83 to 87. Much has been spoken of that, and I'd like to add my comments to that, too. I currently have nine urban centres in my riding as it stands, before any proposed changes, two rural municipalities, three school boards, several community associations, a college, ag societies, legions. I am fortunate that I have a very good working relationship with all my municipalities. I meet with them frequently, whenever they wish. We always arrange a time to discuss their issues, how we can work together for the benefit of all Albertans within the confines of the available dollars that the province has to assist them in their priorities. That works very well, and we have a very good working relationship.

With the new proposed boundaries for my riding, even though we've included four extra seats, I'm going to be going to 12 urban municipalities from nine, three rural municipalities, another school board, and more legions, community associations, and that sort of thing. All would like to see their MLA, and they've grown accustomed to kind of a hands-on meeting scenario.

I guess I'd have to confess, Mr. Chairman, that I'm a bit old school when it comes to electronic communications. I find it impersonal. I find that people feel they almost have a licence to be rude by communicating through that. It's quickly done. It's poorly spelled. The grammar is terrible. It tends to have a little sharper tone to it. I don't know if any other members notice that or not, but I don't think face-to-face conversations can ever be replaced by electronic media totally, to get an understanding of how we meet. If we could do that, we wouldn't need any more chairs in here. We could simply sit at home and do it electronically from a computer at home. Perhaps some members would even entertain that idea. The hon. minister of housing seems to be of that bent, but then he's much younger and more in tune with electronic media.

Being hands on myself and having been accustomed to people in my riding – it's a rural riding, and people are used to communicating face to face; they seem to be comfortable with that – I would have to say that it's going to be more difficult with the new proposed ridings, even by adding four, than it was before to spread yourself around.

I can tell you – and you can check the invitations at my office – that when I'm not up here and have a free day, I tend to have about three invitations for every open space of time in the day. If I say yes to one, I have to say no to at least two and sometimes even more than that. I've been booked 13 months in advance to get to a Remembrance Day function.

I would like to be able to go to all of them. We keep track, and we try to spread ourselves around and try to make at least two. Legally, we can usually make two without attracting the attention of the sheriffs, and I like to keep it that way. We do try to spread it around, and people are understanding of that, but I certainly don't think they'd appreciate me showing up electronically on a television set at their Remembrance Day ceremony just to make myself available.

I think I'd like to at this point commend the Electoral Boundaries Commission for adopting the recommendation of 87 electoral divisions to try to minimize that. There's a huge difference between a rural riding and an urban riding in getting across it. Some of our members in here only have one school board to deal with, only have one council to deal with rather than multiple ones. They may be larger jurisdictions, but as far as the number of meetings, that's minimized. Often in cases you have more than one MLA in those larger urban jurisdictions. That can spread that load out. We don't have the luxury of that in rural Alberta. It's not just a simple matter of driving 20 minutes to half an hour across the city. Sometimes you can drive, depending on the weather, an hour or more in some of these larger ridings.

Of some of the larger ridings up north, the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, who's a neighbour, has a much larger riding than mine, huge distances to get across. In some of the northern ridings you can't even get there by car. So there are huge challenges. I think the commission recognized that in their recommendations, and I certainly support that.

I'd also like to commend the Electoral Boundaries Commission, if I may, Mr. Chair, for their openness and willingness during the consultation process. I made a presentation the first go-round, and I also made a presentation the second go-round. I reviewed my presentation with several of my municipal partners, whoever wanted to see it. I posted on my website the proposal I made and invited people to look at it, to provide input to me before I made the presentation. I met with all the municipalities that wanted to meet with me that had concerns, including new ones that were proposed to be part of my riding that aren't currently there, and they certainly seemed to appreciate that opportunity. I made a presentation myself and invited anybody else, if they wanted to make a presentation, whether it supported mine or not, to certainly do so because that's their opportunity to do that, and I certainly believe in that open consultative process.

Credit to the commission; they made some substantive changes that weren't really appreciated the first time around. People didn't think some of the proposals the first time around fit where communities were being split. That was a big concern for communities that worked together for years. Just the other day we met with the Solicitor General with a couple of communities making a proposal for regional policing to save money. They're going to be growing into that 5,000 category, where they're going to have to pay for policing and have to provide for their extra policing costs and actually a police station with cells and everything.

Well, if you've got two communities side by side facing the same issue, it does make sense to propose that we can work together, have one major infrastructure and maybe a storefront police station in the community. I think that's a great idea, and it's exactly what I think this government has been trying to promote for years. The municipalities came forward with their proposal to us. They thought this was something they wanted to try in their community. I certainly embraced the idea, and I believe the minister did, too. That will certainly help in that area.

Those concerns were brought to the commission. We wanted these communities to stay together instead of being in two different electoral divisions, and those ideas that were proposed to the commission were very carefully considered by all members of the commission. I don't know who was appointed by whom, but I think all parties had some input into the makeup of that board. [interjection] Well, I don't think they were all Conservatives, hon. member.

Certainly, they looked at the proposals, and they all commended me for my presentation in Red Deer and said that they'd carefully consider them. I have to say that I'm very pleased by what they brought back as it relates to my riding, which is the proposal to increase it to roughly 41,000 people from 36,000. We'll just be slightly under 7,000 square kilometres to get around. It's quite the distance between some of the communities; others are closer. I'm not complaining about the challenge, but certainly I can recognize that some people in this room here have much greater challenges than I do in servicing some of the huge constituencies we have in the northern part of the province.

With the task they had at hand, I would like to say, Mr. Chairman, that the Electoral Boundaries Commission I think did a very good job in the recommendations, which culminated in Bill 28. With that, I would have to say that I'll be supporting this bill and encourage other members of this Assembly to do the same.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Chair, for the opportunity to speak to Bill 28, the Electoral Divisions Act. We're all here in this House because we all want what is best for Alberta. I think we all have more in common than out of sync because politics has a way of exaggerating differences. However, I'd like to talk about some of the differences that I believe set me apart from the government on this bill.

As I travel the province, I hear concerns from Albertans. Being in public office allows me a great opportunity to meet many people from all walks of life. One thing they all mention is how out of touch they feel the government is with regular, everyday Albertans. I'm someone that believes I was given two ears and one mouth for a reason, and that's to listen. When I meet Albertans, I always ask for their solutions because I don't believe I personally have all the answers. The one solution that is never brought up is more elected members. Albertans – and I dare anyone to take a poll – think there are enough politicians out there, and, quite frankly, why do we need more?

Bill 28 will add four electoral divisions in Alberta: one in Edmonton, two in Calgary, and the fourth will be in Fort McMurray. While the Election Act mandates reviews on a regular basis, it doesn't require revision. There is nothing in the Election Act that says that you have to change the boundaries or add members to the Legislature. My concern is that the government is doing something to look busy, especially on a subject of such importance, and that's democracy.

Why does the government feel that they need to look busy? The people of my riding, Calgary-Fish Creek, like all Albertans, just want good government. They want a government that makes sound decisions on the issues that matter to them, like health care and education. From my experience when someone is trying to look busy, it's because they're not getting the job done.

Now, coming back to the four new ridings that will be added by this bill, I ask: does more mean better? I've always believed in quality, not quantity. It's hard to believe that by adding four more MLAs to the House, the frustrations felt by Albertans would be addressed. People across the province feel ignored by their government, and increasing the number of MLAs by 5 per cent won't fix anything. What is going to happen is that we will have a government pat itself on the back because it thinks it's doing such a great job, when it hasn't really addressed any of the underlying issues.

I have questions about costs. Democracy has a price, but so does a waste of money. There is a balance between sound investment and, quite frankly, throwing away money. Legislative and constituency offices have significant costs associated with them, especially staff. Now, I want to say this, and I want to get it on the record, Mr. Chair. My staff is excellent, and quite frankly they're worth every penny. The Wildrose caucus, in fact, is doing without a leader's allowance and limited dollars. Staff isn't the only obvious cost. The MLAs themselves with their salaries and their allowances are an issue, too. Albertans are upset enough with the raises this government gave its cabinet and the rest of caucus at a time when Albertans are still recovering from the economic recession, and it's hard to believe that spending millions on a few more members of this House is a sound investment.

Another question posed to me quite often when I travel the province is: why do we need more MLAs when most of them now don't stand up and do their jobs? In all honesty, I wonder the same thing. Why won't this government let its caucus do the job it was sent here to do? Every one of us here is in this House to represent the people of their riding. It seems strange that we're adding to this House when we're not using what we have. It seems a lot like the health system in this province right now. Beds aren't being used in the hospitals that aren't open yet. A lot of money is being spent on new capacity that isn't going to be used. This is just another example of how this party governs Alberta. They try to look impressive, like they're making progress, but really, when you step back, everyone asks: "What's going on here? What is the government thinking?"

My concern as we debate Bill 28 is about democracy, that we're losing the bigger picture. As my colleague from Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo says, the people of this province are our bosses. We need to look at what they want and what they deserve. In my mind, it's terrible when a government blatantly ignores the will of the people, and the will of the people has never indicated that they want more MLAs.

Mr. Chair, I have to say, though – and I want to say it on the record – that I support the amendments and the name change to Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley. I never had the opportunity to meet Mr. Notley, but I've heard a great deal of nice things about the man. I even like the proposed name of Calgary-Klein. I had the opportunity of serving under that Premier from 1993 until he left in 2006, and I can quite frankly say that I've never met anyone that I have more respect for or more deeply admire for what he did for this province.

There have been issues on the table about: how dare we name someone when they haven't passed away? Well, I can tell you that the last time I checked, Premier Lougheed was still here. My mother-in-law happens to sell his wife shoes, and she said that he was quite healthy, to be honest with you.

The previous member talked about . . . [interjections]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek has the floor.

Go ahead. You have the floor. I'm just quieting everybody down.

Mrs. Forsyth: You know what, Mr. Chair? I don't listen to them anyhow when I'm speaking, so it's okay. Thank you. They're just rude.

The previous member talked about the differences between rural and urban, and I found that quite interesting when you listened to him because it's something that we've discussed in the Legislature on numerous occasions. I'm an urban MLA, and I know that some of the members around this House are rural MLAs. I challenged one of my colleagues several years ago in regard to the population and the differences between a rural and an urban MLA. The challenge at that time from the hon. member was: "All right, Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, I'll make you this little bet. You spend a week with me in my rural riding, and then I'll spend a week with you in your urban riding."

I'm not a farm girl by any means, but I certainly got an education in regard to the workings of a rural riding. The member talked about the driving, and I found that interesting. Then I reciprocated, and I had my rural friend come and spend a week with me in an urban setting, where we're dealing with twice as many people in some of the populations. They were quite taken aback at the work that an urban MLA has to do, especially when you have an urban MLA from Calgary or, for that matter, Edmonton – it could be Red Deer or Lethbridge – and the amount of events that that particular individual has to attend. It could be one in a thousand. I mean, Mr. Chair, I know that you probably get as many invitations as I do on a normal day, trying to accommodate some of the things that people want you to attend, if it's this function or that function. I think it was probably a rude awakening for both of us because of that dispute between rural and urban.

What I particularly found fascinating from the member is in regard to his comments about electronics and technology. I'm finding that at my age – and I've struggled with it – we're going into an electronic and technological world. I'm one of these people that has struggled and, with the incredible help from my colleague from Airdrie-Chestermere, launched my web page and really started getting into Twitter, trying to communicate with people on that aspect. It's been fascinating, absolutely fascinating, the people you can connect with. Even if you're not face to face, hon. member, you're still connecting with them. You have an opportunity to connect with people. I have been incredibly blessed and surprised at the number of hits that I'm getting on my web page and the number of people that are visiting my web page and the number of people that are commenting on my website, which takes a process to go onto my web page. There's a contact for me, and they have to fill out their names and addresses and things like that. But they're doing that because they truly, truly care about what's happening.

Electronics and the phone and e-mails and Twitter are fascinating processes. I think that in the last two days – you know yourself, Chair, the hours that we've been putting in at the Legislature late into the night. I think on Thursday and Friday of last week we had received something like 326 or 356 e-mails on the Alberta Parks Act. On Monday and Tuesday I think we received another 400. That's just on one act.

You take the Alberta Health Act. Hundreds and hundreds of phone calls and e-mails have come in, to the point where – we've always responded personally to our e-mails – our staff at this particular time in Calgary are a little overwhelmed with trying to answer all of the people that are so upset in regard to what's happening on our health care and with the booting out of the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. We're trying diligently to respond to them all personally. You know, you do have that touch. They do appreciate the response back because we get them responding back saying: thank you very much.

Mr. Chair, I've been honoured to be in this Legislature since 1993.

I can tell you in all honesty that not one single person that I've ever talked to, whether they're happy with me or angry with me, in all the years that I've campaigned and all the years I door-knocked – and I door-knock every spring, from May till October – has said that we need more MLAs. Never has anyone ever said to me: we need more MLAs. In fact, if anything they've said: there are too many of you. Then they point to other provinces which have a higher population and fewer MLAs.

When the boundaries commission came out, they were somewhat taken aback. The constituents of Calgary-Fish Creek are a very vocal group. They're not a one-issue constituency. They're highly educated. They're well versed on the issues. We try and keep in touch with them in the monthly community newsletter that we write in. I always write an article on my web page called What's on Your Mind? We tally all of the votes or the phone calls, the e-mails, the tweets we get, the one-on-one contact of people coming into the office, the people that stop me in the grocery store. You know yourself, Mr. Chair, that there is not a lot of privacy for an MLA. Then we collate them all. Up pop the issues on the graph in regard to what the issues are.

I can tell you that when this discussion started on the electoral boundaries, that was a hot issue. The people that converse with us at no time said that they wanted Bill 28 to have an increase in MLAs. So it was important for me on behalf of the constituents of Calgary-Fish Creek to get on the record that I do not support increasing the number of MLAs. I was fortunate in my riding to not see a lot of changes in my boundaries other than to pick up some more people in my riding, which, of course, like everybody else, is new introductions of yourself, new door-knocking, and introducing people. We'll do that, and we'll continue to connect with the people that we consider are in our new boundaries.

Not only that, Mr. Chair. Of course, for me there's the new challenge of campaigning in the last several elections as a PC candidate and now campaigning as the Wildrose Alliance candidate, which I'm truly looking forward to at the doors. We spent a lot of time this year door-knocking and had a very, very warm reception. The people of Calgary-Fish Creek, quite frankly, when I did cross the floor, somewhat took me aback and surprised me by the overwhelming response that I got on making that decision. But elections can change very, very dramatically. As I said at the press conference on the 4th of January, when the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere and I were in front of national media, we would live with the consequences of our decision. We would also hope that if this was what it would take to get democracy back into the system, we were okay with that.

Incredibly privileged to be able to have the honour to have my buddy from Airdrie-Chestermere beside me in this process. We found it interesting, to say the least, probably a lot more interesting than what our fellow Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo or what the poor guy from Edmonton-Meadowlark is going through right now, to be, both of them, kicked out of a caucus that – you know what, Mr. Chair? – quite frankly has lost its way. I can't say it any more.

In my mind there is absolutely no need – absolutely no need – for more MLAs in this province. It's unfortunate that the decision was made to do that. I think that the commission, with what they were tasked to do, did a good job on the boundaries. As I indicated earlier, my boundaries weren't affected.

I think we're going to have to start getting into this century in regard to what's happening electronically, what's happening, again, with e-mails, Twitter. I can tell you that I spent a great deal of my time on committee work on the phone when we went through the FOIP legislation. In fact, I'd probably say that 90 per cent of the committee work that I have done has been on the phone, and I've found it very useful. I found it less expensive, quite frankly, than for me to drive down here, claim the mileage for the gas, claim the night for us to do it. I felt that I was being included by everyone who was attending the meeting or that was physically here. I think it's something that we're going to look at and have to do more of when we have all of the responsibilities that we do as MLAs.

What's interesting to me, Mr. Chair, is that when I went home last weekend, a couple of my constituents commented to me that they hadn't seen me around over the last several days. They also indicated that I was looking a little tired. So I can hardly wait to go home this weekend to see what they have to say about me. Their comments were to me that they didn't even know that we were in session. I can guarantee you that probably – I don't know. It would be interesting to take a poll of what percentage of Albertans even know that we're sitting in the Legislature till all hours of the evening.

While I think that's an incredible part of democracy, to be able to have the opportunity to debate legislation and, quite frankly, Mr. Chair, to debate legislation as long as it takes, getting everything on the record, whether we go for days on end or anything – it's an important part of the democratic process for us to have the opportunity to speak.

It's also an opportunity for Albertans to get their feedback through their individual MLAs. I can tell you that last time I counted, I think I've got – and this is just from today – 60 e-mails that people wanted us to read into the record when we're debating the Parks Act. I can't even remember; I think it's Bill 29. Yes. Each of us has been given probably anywhere from 60 to 80 e-mails. People have requested to get their voice heard.

It goes back to what's happening currently in the Health Act and what has happened, actually, to the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. People want to voice their opinions in regard to what they consider the democratic process.

I am going to end, Mr. Chair, on the fact that, again, I think it's important to reiterate that the constituents of Calgary-Fish Creek and the MLA representing the constituents of Calgary-Fish Creek and as one of the four members of the Wildrose we want it on the record that we do not support the increase of MLAs in this province and never have, that our voices as MLAs are to listen to the people that have elected us, and they've clearly, clearly articulated that they do not want more MLAs.

I also want it on the record that I appreciate very much the Member for Calgary-Currie bringing forward the amendment in regard to honouring Mr. Notley. I think that's a wonderful thing for the Legislature to do. As I indicated earlier I have . . . [Mrs. Forsyth's speaking time expired]

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I will be brief because most of the points that I wanted to make have already been made over the last hour probably. However, I did want to get on the record one more time to really express my opposition and objection to this bill for a number of reasons.

I don't believe that a mandate should have been given to this committee, to the Electoral Boundaries Commission, to say: yes, you need four more. They are the ones that should have done the work to actually determine if we needed four. I also believe that we are very, very overgoverned at all three levels, not only in this province but certainly in our country. I understand having to drive large distances, et cetera, but sometimes distance versus the number of the people that you have to look after is an issue. I understand.

I also believe that we are in the 21st century, and there is some technology that can be used to help eliminate some of those things. I agree with my hon. colleague from across the floor who said that, yes, there will be nothing that beats face to-face, and that is very true, very true. But I think that some of the answers that we can give back to those people could be done through technology, and the answers don't necessarily have to be given face to face. There are many ways to do it that it could remain personal.

The other thing that could well be considered at some point in time is that we could look at ridings that would be rural and urban. We could take part of cities and have part of the riding urban, and then it would branch off into the rural. Those that were, I think, lucky enough to get that type of a constituency certainly would be able to have a much better view of this urban versus rural that we sometimes come across because two-thirds of our citizens, actually, are urban residents.

Mr. Chair, with that I will take my seat. I am opposed to that because I believe that the increase of four seats was never proven. It was just something that was pulled out of the air. I also believe that we are very much overgoverned.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you. Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I'm still waiting on that answer.

I want to talk today about: in this bill we have 87 constituencies listed in the schedule, and of course there used to be 83. I may propose an amendment on this, but I would like to see us remain at 83 constituencies, and I'm going to tell you why.

Ms Pastoor: We can go way down.

Mr. Anderson: We can go way down. You know what? That's not a bad idea. Holy smokes. Especially with some of the seat fillers.

I think we need to at least remain at 83 if not go lower, and I'll tell you why.

I think that the role of the MLA – and it's the same way in Parliament – we have a chance here in Alberta, and I think you're seeing it. You're seeing it in this House tonight. You're seeing what's going on in our democracy. There's almost like a renaissance going on. You know what? It's a little bit like – it's cross-partisan, so it's different from what's going on down in the States right now. In the States it's more just one side that's really activated. There's that Tea Party movement, and they're really pumped. They're sick of big government and so forth and all that sort of thing, and they're sick of the lack of democracy and people not representing the people and all that. It's generally just on the right side of the spectrum. Of course, we saw that it's very powerful. It shifted the entire United States Congress. It was a powerful, powerful movement.

But I think this is a little bit different in Alberta. I actually think this is happening right across the spectrum. It's happening whether you're a Liberal, whether you're a Conservative, left, right, centre. I think that people right now are rising up. There's a wave of change growing. You saw this in the Calgary mayor's race. There are many different issues out there. There's health care, there's finance, there's education, budget deficits, all these different things that people are concerned about. But there's kind of this underlying unease that underpins all of these things, and I think it attaches itself to all of these things. People are frustrated with the issues, but they're starting to realize what the root cause of those problems is. It's all the same.

The root cause is that there is absolutely a total lack of democracy in not just our system in Alberta but across Canada and across the United States. In parliamentary democracies and republics like the U.S. people have forgotten – definitely in parliamentary democracies, especially in this country, we have forgotten what the role of the local representative is. So I think, you know, 87 MLAs – why do we need 87 MLAs if those MLAs are nothing more than the government spokespersons to their constituency and to their constituents?

Mr. Kang: Like you were at one time?

Mr. Anderson: Absolutely. Well, I never played by the rules, and that's why I'm over here.

Nonetheless, I think that's what governments and what people in power in our parliamentary democracies think the role of an MLA is. Now, MLAs over there know full well that they do deal with issues. On a lot of the issues that they say they do, they work with their constituents. They help them to get through the bureaucracy on certain things, and they help them to access certain programs. Absolutely. That is one of the roles of an MLA.

Mr. Chair, you're one of them. I know of your reputation for helping people in your constituency in accessing government programs that they need when they need them. You have a reputation of returning your phone calls, and that's good. That is one of the roles of an MLA. I know the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays is the same way. I think there are many others like that. Some don't. Some don't return their calls at all. I won't get personal tonight, but there are some MLAs in this House with horrible reputations about not getting back to their constituents.

Ms Pastoor: You got that right, because they phone us.

Mr. Anderson: That's right. They blow them off.

Generally speaking, I think most of the MLAs in here really legitimately try to serve their constituents and help them access the programs. Okay? So that's one part of the job of an MLA. Generally, I think, that part's fine. It's like the ombudsman role of an MLA. I think we still do a reasonably good job of that in our parliamentary democracy in Alberta.

Of course, another one is that you want to represent the state, and it's kind of a figurehead role, kind of like the Governor General type of role, where you represent the government in your community at a graduation, at a grand opening for an event or some kind of school, or something like that. Okay? So there's kind of that representing the province role, and then there's the ombudsman role, and I think those two are fine.

But there's a third one, and this one is the most important role of an MLA in my view. It supersedes all else. That is the role that an MLA has to be the voice of their constituents in government. MLAs are not responsible to a party. They're not. There's nothing in our constitution, not a shred of anything in our constitution that says that an MLA is somehow loyal or accountable to their party. That is fiction. It is something that has been bred into our political culture over many years. Now you're seeing the logical extension of that progression, where now we have a situation where with almost everything we do, if you're a government MLA, with regard to bills and things in the Legislature, this House has become a facade. This is just the Premier and his agenda and his bureaucrats' agenda, and then he gets all of you guys to sit here and push that agenda through.

Mr. Hinman: Oh, no. Many of those guys will agree with that, too.

Mr. Anderson: Some do agree, but many don't.

The point is that it's a facade, and the reason is that we have this mistaken loyalty as MLAs. We think we're loyal to the party, but we're not loyal to parties. We shouldn't be loyal to parties. That's not what we're here for. We shouldn't be loyal to donors. You know what? With regard to when we make legislation and when we vote on legislation, we shouldn't even be loyal to our friends. You know, when we're talking about voting on bills or not voting on bills, not even our friends should hold sway in that. They shouldn't. The people who hold sway when we vote on things should be the people that we represent, the voters, the people who go into that ballot booth and mark their X next to the name of a community member who they are entrusting to represent their interests and the interests of their family in the Legislative Assembly or in Parliament or wherever.

That's really the crux of what an MLA should be. Never should we vote along party line. That should never be a reason to vote. Too often in our political culture that's what it's become, and it's wrong. It's absolutely wrong. You know, with the exception of maybe one hon. member – and I think he's sitting right in front of me – I think every single one of us has voted the party line at one point or another for whatever reason even though we haven't agreed with something, I would think. Maybe not. [interjection] I know. It was easy for him because he was a party of one, so it's easy to not do that, but now that's not the issue.

Dr. Taft: You're going to have to crack the whip on him.

Mr. Anderson: He can crack the whip on himself.

The point is that I think we've all done it, so I'm not trying to point fingers here. I'll tell you one thing. Since I have crossed the floor to the Wildrose, not once – not once – have I voted on a bill that I did not agree with. Not once. On cellphones, for example, we had a caucus that was divided on that. We had two members, the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo and the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, who voted for Bill 16. They voted for it. Myself and the Member for Calgary-Glenmore voted against the bill. I know that our leader felt a certain way about it. I'll let her speak for herself. But it was a divided caucus on that. People asked us about it. I remember that there were a couple of reporters who asked and said: oh, so you have a divided caucus on it? And we're like: absolutely we have a divided caucus on it; we have free votes.

There are many votes where we do feel the same about something. Obviously, we have a small caucus, so it's a little bit easier to agree on some things than it is in a larger caucus. The point is that we have decided as a party, as a caucus that we are not going to go forward. The precedent has gone too far. We are way over the line. Parliamentary democracy has taken on a kind of a different almost bastardized version of democracy, and it's not right. We have to examine the rules. We can't just do things for tradition's sake.

I mean, these folks over here call themselves Progressive Conservatives. Well, progressivism used to mean that you're not stuck in the old ways of doing things, that you're willing to progress and to think about new ways of doing things. That's what I would ask those members over there. Liberalism as well, liberal democracies, liberalism: looking at what's innovative, what's going to build society for the better good, you know, moving forward.

Ms Pastoor: Progressive.

Mr. Anderson: Progressive. It's kind of the same: progressive, liberalism.

That's what it used to mean, and I think it's still what it means. But in some ways, I'll tell you, certainly on the democracy file the Wildrose Alliance is the most progressive party in this Legislature. I would challenge any caucus to say that we're not on this issue. Now, we can talk about other issues, and I'm sure there would be a different view on that. But there is no way on the issues of democracy that we are not being the most progressive, the most innovative, the most liberal, so to speak, of any of the parties. We want our democracy to change. It is not right the way that we run our party democracies. We have to change it. We have to change our paradigms.

So that's what we're going to be advocating for. We're going to run an entire election on that. One of the first bills we'll bring into this Legislature if we get elected: we will make sure to separate votes of nonconfidence from all other votes on bills. They will be separated, so never will a vote against any bill or any motion or anything be considered a vote of nonconfidence. Never will that happen. If you do that when you vote on something, again, your devotion to the party in seeing it continue as government trumps what may be the interests of your constituents. So you've got to separate those two things. That would help restore the role of an MLA. That's one thing that we will absolutely do.

Voter recall. There's another excellent example. How can you have truly free votes if you don't have your constituents standing behind you with the ability that if you get out of line, if you continue down that road and it is clearly working against the voters of your constituency, then they can axe you?

An example from my own constituency. We have a community of 40,000 people. Probably 20 per cent of the folks in that community make their living in oil and gas somehow: the service industry; they work downtown Calgary at one of the oil companies; they have some kind of trickle-down business that relates to oil and gas. In fact, if you count the trickle-downs, it's probably even more than that, but direct employment in the oil and gas industry is probably about 20 per cent. I mean, it's so huge in our community, as it is in many communities around the province.

During the new royalty framework debacle, which was a made-in-Alberta NEP and one of the most disastrous policies in this province's history economically, I would say, in my opinion, I had literally hundreds of constituents either write me or tell me, "You either do something about this, or you're gone in the next election. You're gone. I've been voting PC for 30, 40 years, and that's it. We're finished." That's an example of a situation where if I had not spoken out against the royalties, which I couldn't do under the PCs, I believe I would have clearly lost my job in the next election because I wasn't being accountable to my constituents.

But I couldn't break party ranks; I wasn't allowed to break party ranks. It was like shackling. I've never been supportive of the policy. Never once did I support the policy, and it was like being shackled, having to shut up and not say anything about the policy when it was so reprehensible. Everyone on that side of the House knows it. They know that in caucus I spoke out about it all the time. "Oh, Anderson's speaking up: cue to roll your eyes. He's talking about the new royalty framework again." It was torturous to not be able to speak out about that issue.

Airdrie schools was another issue. I talked to a senior official in Education while I was still with the government, and they told me flat out: yes, many of the schools in that 32 that they announced were placed for political reasons, and there was not an objective needs analysis done for some of them. They wanted to be equal between Edmonton public and Calgary public, and they wanted to be equal between Calgary Catholic and Edmonton Catholic. Then they had some rural considerations in the rural areas. This was admitted to me by a senior official. Airdrie, like Beaumont and like Chestermere and some others – we're just talking about the role of an MLA, why we don't need 87, why we only need 83. That's where I'm going with this, Mr. Chair. That's right, Bill 28.

When that happened, as an MLA I needed to speak out about it, but again I couldn't speak out. How could I say that it was politicized when my hands were shackled with party discipline and I didn't feel I could stand up for my constituents the way that I needed to do? I could stand up for them on some things, where it aligned with the governing party. I could do that. But that's it. If it didn't align with the governing party, I couldn't do it. I was shackled.

To the bill, I really feel that we just do not need 87 MLAs if we can't respect the authority or the role that the 83 MLAs already in this Legislature have. If we can't respect that role, it's wrong. I'm excited for what's coming up in the next, you know, 12 to 18 months. This is going to be amazing. We're going to have a democratic revolution here, I think. I think that the members that get elected, whether they be Progressive Conservatives, whether they be Wildrose, whether they be Liberals or New Democrats or independents – who knows? – most of them are going to be elected less on their party's platform and more on: are these people going to represent me in the Legislature? Are they going to be my voice? Are they going to stand up and be accounted for?

You see this with what's happened with the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. You see this. People are saying: "That's just not right. He should be able to stand up and voice his concerns publicly. That's part of what an MLA should do." You've certainly seen this in my constituency, and the hon. members will see at the next election. I have people that are NDP and Liberal supporters, and they still support me, only because of the one issue, only because I said: I promise you that the reason I'm leaving the government is because I want to be able to stand up in this Legislature and on every issue vote according to your interests, and party line will mean nothing to me anymore. That alone has been an extremely important thing.

The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo. We ran a poll across the province on every MLA to see what their approval rating was in their different areas. The highest approval rating in the entire province: sitting next to me, the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, an 82 per cent approval rating in Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo for that member. [interjection] Very high but not quite as high. Yours was very high, too, hon. member. Yours was very high as well. I remember that.

An Hon. Member: How many people did you survey?

Mr. Anderson: All 83. We won't get into some of the other numbers.

Mr. Kang: How about me, good neighbour?

Mr. Anderson: I can't remember. I'm sorry. We're not going to release that poll today.

Here's the point. We have got to make sure that as we move forward, we are doing things as MLAs, that we're being first and foremost loyal not to our party, not to our donors but that we are being loyal to the people that we represent. That has got to be job one. The only way we can do that is by changing a lot of the rules in parliamentary democracy. We've got to do that. That's going to be part of what we need to do moving forward. If we do not change those things, people are going to lose trust in our democracy. People are going stop voting, as they've already stopped voting.

I don't care. If there are PCs over there that are able to – we just saw a great example of this. The Member for St. Albert broke ranks today and spoke out for his constituents. Now, we don't know what the consequences of that will be – we will have to see – but that took courage. That took courage. And you know what? Courage is contagious, and you're seeing it all over the province right now. People are speaking up. They're stepping out on the right, on the left, in the centre. They're saying: "This is unacceptable. The state of our democracy is unacceptable, and whether we're Conservative or Liberal, progressive, moderate, whatever, it doesn't matter. Things are going to change going forward. If that means that we have to start a new party, the Wildrose, or we need to start a new party, the Alberta Party, things are going to change."

Thank you.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. It's an exciting bill to get up on. I kind of waited a little bit because when we had so many government members speak that they didn't want to adjourn this debate, I thought that some of them would jump up. Just a point of clarification: how quickly do we need to stand up, to be courteous, to allow those who want to call a division even? I believe that it was the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill who stood up and led that division. What's the point of clarification on how quickly we have to stand up in order to let someone else have an opportunity to speak, seeing as how they stood at a division to say that they wanted to continue debate on this bill?

The Acting Chair: Reasonable time, hon. member.

Mr. Hinman: That's what I love about this government. They're so clear in their definition of things, which is the clarity of this bill. Thank you.

I will continue on, then, and refer back. Because time keeps running out so quickly, I kind of forget. I get listening to the next speaker, and I forget where I started and where I left off, so we might be a little bit repetitive. I should've put a tick mark where I got to.

The number one thing that we're discussing here is numbers 1 through 87. I know I don't need to read them back in because I went through the 87 new ridings that this act, Bill 28, is describing. It's got 87 ridings, and many members have gotten up and spoken, again, that we don't need that. That is the problem and why this bill should not be passed.

This bill should be shelved and put to committee or something else to say: how do we reduce the number of MLAs yet increase the democratic representation and ensure that we're doing a better job for all of the people here in Alberta? How do we engage them so that we can be assured that they feel that they've got good representation?

Where I believe I was, Mr. Chair, was discussing the possibilities of electronic voting for different constituencies and representing different numbers but actually having a true representation of the number of people that voted. As I mentioned earlier, if in the next election we were to merge Calgary-Glenmore with Calgary-Lougheed and double the number of people there, we could set up electronic voting. It would be recorded. It would instantly go out on the Internet, just as our voice does. People can listen in and watch right now. I don't think it would be expensive to put electronic voting to where the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, which is going to be changed to just Airdrie, would push the button. It might be, like I say, for the total area 65,000 constituents or for mine around 39,000. That's what you would actually represent in the vote.

The other area, like I say, to drop back is to say: well, actually, you just get to represent the number of people that voted from your constituency. That would change things dramatically. People would say: my vote does make a difference; my vote does count because it's an electronic vote, so I'm going to get out to vote this time because I want to make sure that the area of southwest Calgary is well represented so that we can get the ring road there. Maybe I'd get a high turnout of 70 per cent because those people are frustrated that this government has failed to provide a ring road around the city, and the congestion in my riding of Calgary-Glenmore is bad. I continually hear from constituents that have to get onto 14th Street from 90th Avenue and are frustrated with the number of hours they have to sit, often up to an hour and a half, to get out during rush hour because of the lights that are there. They need an overpass.

We want to look at ways of: how can we represent an area better? I talked a little bit earlier about the geographical, making sure that you represent an actual area instead of looping out and reaching across into another area. I believe this electronic vote would be something that would actually encourage people to come out and vote, one, for their area to be represented. Then, two, like I say, I think it could and should be connected to the research money for those MLAs that are elected.

Dr. Taft: What's the electronic vote?

Mr. Hinman: Well, that we would actually come in here – do you know how many people voted in your constituency of Edmonton-Riverview, last time?

The Acting Chair: Hon. member, through the chair, please.

Mr. Hinman: Yes, through the chair. Let's just say that there were 12,000 people that came out and voted in Edmonton-Riverview. That would be the number that the hon. member – when he voted on a bill, it would be 12,000. If someone from another area had a very low turnout . . . [interjection] Well, it just would be immediately tallied because they would know how many we represent here. If someone from another area perhaps only had only 3,000 people come out and vote . . .

Chair's Ruling Relevance

The Acting Chair: Hon. member, I have to call you to order on this. This debate in the Committee of the Whole is regarding the clauses of this bill, and while I appreciate your passion and the discourse on various different types of democracy, that's not what the bill is about. So can you confine your comments to what is in the bill?

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I guess sometimes it takes a little while to wrap it back, but what we're talking about are the 87 ridings that this bill has created, and I can't agree with that. I'm speaking against, you know, the 25 that are represented in Calgary. If you want, I'll be happy to go through those. Obviously, it's been forgotten, but number . . .

The Acting Chair: Hon. member, you are presumed to have agreed to the principles of the bill because it passed second reading. We are now discussing the particular clauses of the bill and whether you have amendments or suggestions or any other discourse regarding the clauses of the bill. If you wish to address them, I'm not intending to restrict in any way your ability to discuss those.

Mr. Hinman: I have a lot of suggestions on how we could reduce it. To assume that I voted to get this to this point – I'm sorry – that's typical of the word "assume." I don't need to elaborate on what that is. We shouldn't assume things in politics or in life, and I don't want to be the "me" in there. Perhaps you want to be the first part of it, but I just do not want to go there.

I did not vote for this. I voted against it. I don't think it was a standing vote, so we can't go back to the records to look at that.

Perhaps, Mr. Chair, at this point I will move to adjourn debate on Bill 28, and we can move on to something else.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion to adjourn debate lost]

[Motion to adjourn debate lost]

The Deputy Chair: On the bill, the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I want to say thank you for recognizing me on the bill because that is so important in these types of situations. I want to say this evening that this particular bill, Bill 28, on electoral divisions, the 105,000, almost, that are in my community, that I've represented over the last 14 years, as much as I've had the honour and privilege of representing them, one thing is for certain: our population has grown from 50,000 to over double that. It remains an honour and a privilege to serve our citizens. After the next election it's my hope and intent to be continuing to serve them because it remains an honour and a privilege, never forgetting who my bosses are, the good people of Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Having said that, Mr. Chairman, it is interesting, the table of contents and in terms of Bill 28: do we need more MLAs? Now, I want to say that when this Legislature determined that – and of course the majority of the members in this Legislature are the existing government for the last 39 years, so ultimately because they have such a majority, they will determine. We should not confuse Legislature with government because they're really one and the same, even though we proudly stand as an opposition. But that being the case, when we say, "The Legislature gave direction," what we really are talking about is that the PC caucus gives direction to allow this to happen because of the fact that in this democracy there are 67 on that side now. When I first joined, there were 72. As you descend from 72 to 71 to 70 to 69 to 68 to 67, who knows what will happen from there?

Mr. Berger: We're getting better.

Mr. Boutilier: You're getting better. Yeah. You're getting fewer; that's for sure.

Having said that, I want to say that the hon. comments that have been made regarding the constituency we serve under the Electoral Divisions Act, I actually presented and indicated that in my electoral district right now with the 77 polls that are hosted in the community of 13 communities that spans over 68,000 square kilometres – I must admit that one citizen came up to me a couple of months ago when the electoral commission was collecting input, and they said: "Well, how does that work, Guy? You represent 103,000 people, but other MLAs in other areas represent less." They asked me what the actual average was in terms of – and I'm just dating back. I think the average was about 38,000 or 39,000, yet I had grown from 50,000 to 103,000.

Now, I know I have a lot of energy, but what's interesting with this point is that not only is it the most people, but it also is the largest geographical area to cover, 68,000 square kilometres, including Wood Buffalo national park. Now, in fairness, though, there are a lot of trees in those areas, and trees don't vote, but 103,000 people in my riding do. Even with all of those trees, trees don't vote. When I was the Minister of Environment, as much as I encouraged them to participate, it just never quite happened.

Mr. Chairman, I would say on this Bill 28 that I presented to the Electoral Boundaries Commission. I indicated that clearly if the average is 39,000 – I think it's going to over 40,000. I don't have the number in front of me of what the average riding is, plus or minus 25 per cent. I am proud to say that I've been able to represent my constituency as a strong voice for the last 14 years with that 103,000. Now, it wasn't always 103,000. In fact, at one point it was just over 50,000, but that was still even above the average.

Mr. Anderson: You're above average, though.

Mr. Boutilier: I'm above average. I don't know about that. My wife indicates I'm not quite above average on certain things, but I'm going continue to work on that.

That being the case, Mr. Chairman, I fundamentally believe we should have, in fact, fewer MLAs, with no disparaging comment to any of the members and the constituencies they represent. Actually, the idea came from a predecessor of mine. He's now a justice with the Court of Queen's Bench, but he served proudly as a Liberal MLA . . .

An Hon. Member: Wow.

Mr. Boutilier: He did, for the riding of Fort McMurray. I would like to say that I followed him as the MLA. I consider him a close friend.

You may recognize the name Adam Germain, who clearly was viewed as someone that was more conservative than most Conservatives. Having said that, he was elected as a Liberal, no different, actually, than the minister of health at one point, when he served across the way on the other side of the House. Actually, I believe there are only a few of us that have served on a variety of sides in the House, some by choice, some because they were booted, some because they chose to leave. That being the case, I think that each of us has a prime responsibility of serving our bosses.

When I presented, I indicated that I was torn. My fundamental principle was that we needed fewer MLAs, but that would mean everyone's responsibility as an MLA and the number of people they represent would have to go up. I think I can proudly say that that's not an unreasonable approach because I was at the time representing 103,000 citizens. When the average was below 40,000, I was at, I think, 103,400, according to the mayor of the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo in the most recent census.

I have to say: could I continue to represent my citizens in the existing riding without having two ridings? Yes, I can. I know each of us brings a lot of energy and interest and passion to this Assembly. I think it's fair to say that we are here because of the gratification we get from serving the public interest. I don't think there's a higher calling in any job or position that you may have wherever you work in Alberta. I will say that I was willing to continue to serve under the existing electoral boundary, meaning I was willing to serve 103,000.

Now, if that is the case, on the average of 103,000, which I've been doing now for almost 14 years – at one point it was lower; it was just around 50,000, but over the last 14 years we have grown with the development in the oil sands. Let's just do the math on that. How many MLAs would we have? With a population of just over 3 million that would be, essentially, 10 MLAs per million. In this Legislature if everyone had the average of what Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo had, of 103,000, then that would mean, based on my understanding of the electoral process, that we would ultimately have about 34 MLAs. Now, my instinct tells me that 34 might be a bit shy of the 87 that's being proposed by this Legislature in the Electoral Divisions Act. So I believe there's a middle ground.

Actually, to this day I agree with what the former Liberal MLA for Fort McMurray, Justice Germain, had suggested. At the time I was mayor. I agreed with the fact that we should have about 67 MLAs – 67 MLAs – not 87, which means 20 less. There would be no impact. In other words, the proposed extra seat in the Fort McMurray area, which will take it down to about 51,000 for each of the two ridings, would be the result. But I'm saying that for the last 14 years as the MLA for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo I feel, certainly, the people of Fort McMurray have rewarded me for my work over four elections.

Obviously, the geographical mass, which is larger than any other constituency, 68,000 square kilometres, and which forms the borders of the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo, which we worked collectively on with our stakeholders group to form – we actually had a time in the electoral boundaries when we used to have a snowplow that used to stop at the city border. It used to stop at the border, lift its snowplow blade, and then go through the city when I was the mayor of the former city of Fort McMurray. Then it would put its blade down to continue on in the boundary because that was another one of the rural communities that we bordered. That made absolutely no sense at all. The then Minister of Municipal Affairs, who, I might add, I consider a close friend, was the Member for Vermilion-Viking, Dr. Steve West. I met with him as the minister at the time and me as the mayor of Fort McMurray. I said, “Steve, this makes no sense. Why are your snowplows lifting their blades on provincial highways and going through borders? Why would we not uniformly put the electoral boundary into one?”

Actually, that’s what we did in forming the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo, which I believe was a very good move. Did you know the result of that? Well, at the time our taxes went down by almost $2,000 because in that approach to our electoral boundaries we were able to bring in the oil sands plants. It wasn’t called annexation. It was simply an amalgamation of communities coming together to form the Wood Buffalo name. As a part of history it would be interesting to note, as the former mayor of Fort McMurray and the first mayor of Wood Buffalo, that the name of the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo is only a temporary name. It’s only a temporary name. The strategy was that in the 13 communities the buffalo and the northern lights and the aboriginal compass on each of our crest that forms Wood Buffalo actually represented every community, and Alberta’s strength was that every community in those 13 regions also had an identity.

I’ll give you an example. In the electoral boundary of Fort Chipewyan the name Fort Chipewyan would follow with the Wood Buffalo umbrella. Anzac as well as Janvier and Conklin as well as many other communities, Sapræ Creek: all of those electoral boundaries fell under the 68,000 square kilometres that, in fact, form that boundary.

I can say that with our 103,000 people that we have today, if every MLA in here were to serve that number of citizens – and I know they would do that proudly and work hard for them – that would mean that there would be only 35 MLAs in this Assembly after the next election with the electoral boundaries no matter what political party you represent.

I presently represent 103,000 people. Let’s really think about this for a minute. I can see the Member for Livingstone-Macleod, the home of the first RCMP troop in all of Canada, shaking his head in agreement, and I thank him for recognizing the good work I do representing those 103,000 people. I’m so pleased by that. I can see the Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, who actually has been fairly quiet this evening, but I can tell he’s listening intently. I know from his background, be it his experience in hunting, his academic credentials, clearly, he understands that if every MLA were to represent 103,000 people, with 3.3 or 3.4 million Albertans that would be – the math on that maybe he could do for me – I think, on average, Mr. Chairman, under Bill 28, the Electoral Divisions Act, about 34 or 35 MLAs based on it.

Now, it was interesting that the commission had proposed that Fort McMurray would get another seat. I don’t think that’s a surprise to anyone unless they were going to continue with 103,000 per one MLA while other MLAs were serving far fewer people, but what’s interesting is that geographically we still had the largest geographical region in the electoral boundaries. If I travel the Athabasca up north to Fort Chipewyan, that actually takes almost six to seven hours in the middle of summer, and I might say that that’s by canoe. If you travel on the winter road in the wintertime over Lake Athabasca, it still takes over six hours to get to the northern tip of my riding as it presently exists with that 103,000.

I’m proud to do that and also because of the fact that the oldest settlement – not only is it the largest, with the most people; it’s the oldest settlement, dating back to the 1500s with the Fort Chipewyan people. It is the oldest settlement in all of Alberta, the first settlement in all of Alberta. I must say that I’m very proud of that, and it, indeed, remains an honour and a privilege to serve – to serve – that.

Mr. Chairman, on this Electoral Divisions Act I indicated that if 87 is going to be the number, then Fort McMurray and Wood Buffalo and the 13 communities should be treated no less, and they should be treated no less because if an MLA is serving on average now, I don’t know, 50,000 – in some areas it’s lower than that, but that’s not the MLA’s fault. I would have preferred to go back to what I have been able to do in serving, and I’m just really proud to say that I look forward to working with two members in the next Legislature. We will work hard in the election. In fact, I’m very eager about the election. I kind of wish the election was going to be called now because I think that change is in the air.

For me, I am going to be running not as the existing PC Party anymore after 14 years; I’m going to be running proudly as a member of the Wildrose caucus. I’m very proud of that and even more proud to represent the leader of the 21st century, who believes in free votes when it comes to electoral boundaries. We can vote in any way, shape, or form that we would like to vote in this House, and that is interesting because our policy on things that may be controversial is that we believe that ultimately our boss is the people of Alberta. If they feel so strongly about an issue, then we are allowed to have a free vote, and that is a refreshing change from the last 14 years.

Then, again, I have been noted for having free votes no matter what goes on, and that in itself is being true to one’s self. I think it was Shakespeare who actually at one point said: to thine self be true. I’ll have to yield to Dr. Brown to perhaps enlighten me in that. To thine self be true when it comes to electoral boundaries.

The Deputy Chair: To the Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Mr. Boutilier: Oh, I’m so sorry. Again, I just continue, Mr. Chair. My apologies. Let me withdraw the name Dr. Neil Brown and say the Member for Calgary-Nose Hill because that’s far more appropriate under the existing rules.

I can say that the next government, I hope, will consider working with the opposition to perhaps have a standing order where we move away from our constituency name to our actual name because that’s the name that we have, and I think it would make it a more collective and a more genuine and, shall I say, productive way so that the chairman would not have to be interrupting – not interrupting; properly calling me on a standing order that I have obviously innocently brought forward.

Perhaps, you know, to the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, the Member for Calgary-Glenmore, the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, the Member for Edmonton . . . Oh, it seems like we have a change of seating over here right now.

An Hon. Member: It’s committee.

Mr. Boutilier: It’s committee. Okay.

I want to say, Mr. Chairman, on the Electoral Divisions Act that I believe, in my judgment, that I’m willing to move from the 103,000. I have found it, with a three-year-old, to be quite demanding, the geographical region just in itself, with 103,000 people.

By the way, Mr. Chair, did I mention that in this electoral boundary we expected $20 billion in 20 years? What happened was that in my community, in the oil sands capital of the world, the $20 billion wasn't $20 billion in investment. It actually turned out to be $120 billion. Ultimately, the infrastructure such as a long-term care facility in the electoral district that I represent, which was a hot issue for me, and it remains a hot issue when it comes to the fact that we have 103,000 people – we are the only city of that size in all of Alberta that doesn't have a long-term care centre for seniors. That is sad. It's certainly not because of my attempts as a strong voice to convince the government.

In fact, on the electoral boundary, at the time I had cabinet agree to it and the funding agreed to. But guess what? It seemed to disappear, to go somewhere else. I'm not sure where that is, but I can tell you that the people of Fort McMurray and the oldest settlement in Fort Chipewyan deserve no less. And all those people were asking for under this division act is something that will speak for the spirit of Alberta.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, thanks, Mr. Chair. The Internet is a wonderful resource and how the Legislature is now hooked up to being able to watch us. Interestingly enough, we had some comments earlier by the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, and he was talking about the challenges that he faced with the Internet and, you know, wanting that face to face. Well, what's very fascinating is the people that are watching us on the legislative screen. They've been watching the debate and actually have been prompting and asking when the Progressive Conservatives are going to speak to this particular piece of legislation. I find it fascinating how people are starting to get into the technology. I promised that I would wave to them, so I'm waving for those who are watching because they sometimes don't think that we're paying attention. That's the nice thing about allowing us to have computers in the Legislature, and we're grateful for that.

I just want to be brief because I ran out of time, and I had promised the people that I serve and represent in Calgary-Fish Creek that I would make sure that I got all of their comments in. I have the privilege of serving a wonderful constituency called Calgary-Fish Creek, which is a constituency that has a provincial park in an urban setting. I'll be looking forward to the debate when we get to the parks because I'm sure that the minister who's responsible for this piece of legislation has probably been inundated with e-mails like we have. So it will be interesting as someone who lives and enjoys Fish Creek park to hear what she has to say when we get to that bill. That goes back to the democracy issue because if she's listening to the constituents that she represents in Calgary-Shaw, I'm sure they'll be eager to hear what she has to say on the record in Hansard when we start the debate of the parks act.

What I want to finish off saying is that democracy is something that we should all be proud of, and we released our democracy platform today. One of the nice things is when you're connecting with the community. They want to talk about the number of MLAs that this particular piece of legislation recommends, and that goes back to the 87 that we've talked about. Quite frankly, I'm really struggling with the fact that I've heard, since we started our debate at 7:30, one individual, one government member speak up and speak eloquently about his particular riding, how his constituents loved the idea of more MLAs.

I guess rural maybe thinks differently than urban, and I can't speak because I'm not a rural MLA. But I can tell you that I've met with lots of rural-nominated candidates, and they certainly have indicated that they don't support that. We've had the opportunity to travel the province and meet with many of the candidates that we currently have nominated with the Wildrose. They're asking me, as we speak to them and continue to talk to them about policies, where we – we – got the idea that we needed more MLAs because the constituents that they're representing, as they're out there door-knocking – and most of them are door-knocking very hard because of the process that they have to do to take out an incumbent MLA. It's important for them to get to the doors. They're telling us that they aren't hearing anything about more MLAs but are hearing a lot about what's going on in regard to the issues. Of course, that goes back to health care, that goes back to Bill 24, the Carbon Capture and Storage Statutes Amendment Act, 2010, and the property rights.

Mr. Chair, again, I have to get on the record on behalf of Calgary-Fish Creek that people are struggling with this. Constituents are struggling with 87. I'm sure your constituents are struggling with the idea that you're going to support the addition of MLAs, but I guess that's up to you to speak up on behalf of your constituents, as it is up to me, and be on the record.

So with those short remarks, I'm going to sit down. Again, thank you for the time.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I want to get back and continue that discussion or that dissertation or viewpoint, sharing on why we do not need 87, why I think we should think seriously – and, again, I welcome the thoughts from the other side – about why we need 87 MLAs, as per the schedule here, up from the 83 that we have now when we do not respect the role of an MLA now and we do not let MLAs do their job right now. We talked about the fact that an MLA has many different roles. I say three primary ones, and I'll do them in order from least important to most important.

The first is more of a symbolic role, the state-representative role, where you go to an event, or a new business comes into the community or a new school is opened or something like that and they want their democratically elected representative to come in and represent the government or represent the province at an event or an opening. So it's kind of a ceremonial role, we'll call it. That's the least important, but it's still part of the job.

I would say that the next one up in importance is that of an ombudsman, one that assists constituents to access certain government programs, to weave through the bureaucracy of government, to maybe plead their case to local law enforcement in some cases if there is something that they'd like to see the police take a little bit more time looking at. You know, sometimes they'll come to their MLA, and the MLA will say: "Hey, why don't you watch the street? I hear that there are problems there." So it's kind of a way of relaying information, being the eyes and ears on the street for law enforcement in some cases from what you hear from your constituents. There are all kinds of different ombudsman roles where you're trying to facilitate and assist and so forth. That's the second role and the middle importance role. It is important. There are some things that you can do for your constituents that are very important, and they're personalized. They don't have a kind of macro effect, but they definitely have a micro effect on that individual person.

The first and I think most important role of an elected official though is to represent the interests and viewpoints, primarily the interests, of their constituents when they vote on legislation. I mean, that is really what an elected representative is supposed to be. That's what an MLA is supposed to do above all. When they vote on a bill and when they stand up and give their view on things and when they propose amendments to bills and so forth and when they propose bills in their entirety, they should be doing so with one thing in mind: is this in the best interests of my constituents and the province? Those are the things that should be paramount in the mind of an MLA when they make a vote.

If that was the case, if MLAs were fulfilling those three paramount roles, I would say: "You know what? Maybe there's a reason to have 87. Maybe there's a reason to go from 83 to 87." You don't want to water down the representation on votes so much that every person's vote kind of becomes less and less important and so forth. Also, it becomes more difficult for one person to serve a whole bunch of people, especially in rural Alberta, where the ceremonial role is much more elevated because you have more schools to visit and more things to go to than urban MLAs do. I kind of have a middle riding, where it's not quite as time consuming as somebody in Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, for example. Probably a more graphic example would be the Minister of Municipal Affairs' riding, where you have this large riding and there are all of these ceremonial things that need to be done. You need to go to and you need to appear at different events and so forth. So as there's more and more population, you know, you might need more MLAs for MLAs to still be able to fulfill that role.

The problem is that that's not the only role of an MLA, and the fact is that it's not the most important. It's the least important. Although, yeah, okay, I understand the pressure of having to get to every school graduation and every ribbon cutting and so forth, that in itself is not a justifiable reason, in my view, to expand the number of seats. What you can do instead is: well, okay, if that's the case, then there are many different ways to solve that issue. I guess you could pay to send a representative of the government. We could give a slightly larger office staff budget to have an office representative go to some of the ceremonial things, like you see with Members of Parliament, for example.

We have a Member of Parliament in our area who has a huge riding. It's a massive riding. Wild Rose, ironically enough, it's called. It's wild rose country. In that riding he has a representative go to many of his things. He has two or three people on his staff, and all their job is to essentially represent him around the riding. So you can address that in a different way other than more MLAs, as our MPs do and are able to fulfill their ceremonial duty.

So it is with ombudsmen. I have an incredible person who's been in Airdrie-Chestermere or Airdrie-Rocky View. It's been switched back and forth. The reason you want to call it Airdrie-Rocky View is that it was once called Airdrie-Rocky View. I think that is what's throwing some of the members off in here. It went from Airdrie-Rocky View to Airdrie-Chestermere, and now it's just going to be Airdrie, as in the bill.

You can hire more staff in the office to fulfill the role of ombudsman in helping them get through the government bureaucracy. Like I said, I have an incredible woman in my constituency office, two actually. One is a little bit newer and is kind of learning the ropes and doing an amazing job, but one has been there for 30 years and is just amazing. She knows every government program like the back of her hand. It makes my job very much easier than it would be otherwise. She really helps with making sure that people's needs are addressed. If someone has an issue with unemployment insurance or WCB or PDD or AISH, any kind of issue, she can immediately help them know exactly who to ask and get it done. She's just marvellous. So she does a great job.

But the point is that you don't need another MLA to do that job.

In fact, MLAs, generally speaking, especially new ones, don't generally have a clue where to begin with regard to that ombudsman role. It takes a lot of time to figure out that role. Some of the folks that have been here a while are probably pretty good at that, but certainly when I first started, I didn't know. Good grief, if someone came to me with an issue with the lottery fund and getting a grant, I didn't know where to start. It takes time. The point is that you can hire people to do that. You don't need more MLAs.

But there's one role you cannot hire out. You cannot hire out the electoral part, the representative part, of an MLA's job. You can't hire that out. That's something that only you as an MLA, only we in this Assembly, each individual MLA, have the ability to perform. Only we have the authority because of the people who went to that ballot box and marked an X by our names, not by a party. They marked it by our names. They did that, and when they did that, they gave us the authority for everyone in here, who won our ridings, to speak for them.

Mr. Hinman: How many didn't win their ridings in here?

Mr. Anderson: No one. That's what I said. I said, "everyone in here." I'm speaking of all of Alberta.

The point is that only we have the authority to speak for our constituents, and we've been given that authority by our Constitution, and we've been given it by the people that we represent. With that in mind, you can't hire that job out. I could see that if we respected that position, if we respected that role of an MLA to represent his constituents in the way that they vote in the Legislature, in public, transparently, if we respected that role, going up to 87 MLAs might be justifiable. It might be. There might be a justifiable reason for that because you cannot hire out that function of an MLA. You just can't do it. That's not something you can delegate. Only you, the MLA, have that authority.

We don't respect that role. We respect the first two. MLAs act as ceremonial representatives and ombudsmen. They do it. Everyone in this area does, some better than others. Most of us do it. But we do a brutal job, generally speaking, of representing our constituents freely in the Legislature. We don't do that. Clearly, we don't. Now, there are some times when the interests of the governing party and the interests of what the government party is proposing and our own constituency interests, in our view, are aligned, and in that case the party whip and the lack of free votes doesn't matter because the interests are aligned.

But there are many times when those interests are not aligned, when the constituency's interests are not in line with what the governing party wants to do, what the executive branch, in particular, of the governing party wants to do, the Premier's office in other words. In that case if you're a government member or, I would say, in most other caucuses, you still have to vote the party line because of caucus unity and team player and all that stuff, because of what I think is a misplaced loyalty to party. There should be no loyalty to party if it conflicts with the views of your constituents. If it's aligned, great. If you can be loyal to your party and you can be loyal to your constituents, that's fine. Great. If you can do both, awesome.

Sometimes you cannot do both, and in those circumstances loyalty to party cannot trump loyalty to constituents. That's why we cannot justify 87 MLAs. Only when we respect the 84 MLAs that are already in this House can we then move on and think about putting in four more MLAs. Until we respect that role, it's just not doable. If anyone has read some of the writings of George Washington, he did a lot of letters, and a lot of the histories of George Washington come from the letters that he wrote back and forth to his family and to commanders in the field, et cetera, et cetera, et cetera. There's so much information in there.

I read a great book called 1776 on George Washington. One of the things it said was that after he assumed the presidency, which was, of course, after the Revolutionary War, there was this move towards parties. Of course, Thomas Jefferson and John Adams were kind of the first leaders of their respective parties, the Democrats and the Whigs. Washington refused to have a party. He wasn't a member of a party. The reason he wasn't a member, he said, was because he thought that parties would be the eventual downfall of democracy because parties take away the whole underpinning of democracy, which is that a person is elected to represent the people that vote for them, the people in the constituency, the people that mark the X, and the loyalty needs to be exclusively there and nowhere else.

He felt that parties were eventually the downfall of democracy because it would allow for, essentially, these parties to form where all the power would be concentrated in the party and all the interests in the party would outweigh and be able to quash kind of the individual needs of the constituents. It didn't really matter who you elected. It was all about what the party wanted, and you'd get small groups of people influencing that party. That's why he stayed out of that.

Now, of course, we all know the history. That's not how it ended up. We know that it has gone into party politics, and I think you see in the U.S. and in Canada what happens when you have partisan party politics. When it's just party versus party, machine versus machine, it's less about what the people want, and it's more about what's good for the party and what's good politics for the party. That's the system that the Wildrose Alliance is going to make an attempt – and it's up to the people of Alberta, obviously, in just over a year. Well, it could be sooner. That's up to the Premier, of course. We will know in the next, say, 12 to 16 months or so if the people will agree with this.

What the Wildrose is trying to do: we believe that we can enact laws and democratic reforms that will allow us to return the role of an MLA, of an elected representative, to its proper place. Again, maybe we could justify these 87 MLAs. Maybe we could insert into Bill 28 a provision that would separate, for example, votes of nonconfidence from all other bills so that you couldn't have both at the same time. They would have to be individual. I think that would be a good amendment to put in Bill 28.

The reason I say that is because if you have them together, then an MLA is voting to save his government in certain situations and is not voting in what are the best interests of his or her constituents whereas if you separate them, then you can still be loyal to your party, you can still be loyal to the Premier, you don't have to defeat the government, you can support your government, and you can vote the will of and in the best interests of your constituents all the time, not just when those interests happen to line up with what the governing party, specifically the executive branch of the governing party, wants to do. So that's one huge thing, if we can amend this bill to be a little bit more broad in here and cover a little bit more. We could justify those four extra MLAs if we could bring that increased democracy into place.

The other thing we could do: you know, it would be interesting to amend or merge the bills. The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore has Bill 208, which is the Recall Act. Well, that's something that could be placed in here to make MLAs more relevant again.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, are you proposing an amendment?

Mr. Anderson: Not yet.

The Deputy Chair: Well, we'll have to speak to the bill as it is, then, please.

Mr. Anderson: Yeah. Absolutely. I'm saying that right now it's a crappy bill because it doesn't include a specific clause that would see more accountability. I really want to hear from the other members of this House. What I want to hear are some ideas. I mean, rather than wasting paper on amendments, let's look at some ideas here in the bill right now. Why are we not including in here some provisions to – I'll just look. For example, it says, "The boundaries of the electoral divisions are those described in the DVD prepared by the Chief Electoral Officer as directed by a resolution of the Legislative Assembly and tabled as Sessional Paper 315/2010."

Why not have something in here like a subject-to clause? Maybe we should work on that together as a committee and say that we're going to, as I talked about earlier, make sure we separate votes of nonconfidence from votes on the bill and that we're going to have a recall provision in here. It doesn't even have to be his. We're going to have a recall provision in here so that when MLAs get so out of whack from representing their constituents, then we can recall them. The people could say: "You know what? You are going off your rocker. You're not representing us." At that point the MLA would be recalled in that case.

For example, some members over there think that, you know, it was just a travesty that I crossed the floor, that it's just an awful thing, that it's so undemocratic. Well, if we had recall, we'd be able to test that theory out, and that would be good. [interjection] No, no, no. You should get up. You should get up. We should have a chat about that, hon. member. Ask me that question. Get up, and I'll answer it.

Mr. Marz: Mr. Chair, I would be happy to discuss Bill 208, the Recall Act, on Monday when it comes up, but right now we are discussing Bill 28.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Once again we'd better reset, and I'll try and watch the time so I don't get cut off in the middle of a thought. [interjections]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, you have the floor.

Mr. Hinman: Okay. Thank you. There was just so much heckling coming from over there from the minister of – I can't remember. He's such a phony minister that I forgot what it is. I'll have to look it up.

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

Mr. Chair, what we're talking about here is Bill 28 and the need to shelve this bill because, again, it doesn't address the democratic electoral divisions that we really should and need to be addressing. We'll continue discussing the problem of 87 MLAs and why this government felt constrained that it needed to have 87 MLAs.

My hon. colleague from Airdrie-Chestermere has spoken about the three major roles of an MLA, and I would agree. I think the most important role is that when we come to this House, it's our solemn duty to pass good legislation. I've always said that there's only one thing worse than no legislation, and that's bad legislation. When you have bad legislation, people become discontent. They start going against the law, and it raises chaos in our communities.

One thing that I do know is that by human nature people really do prefer to have peaceful, safe communities and to have elected representatives that they can count on to be looking out for them, ensuring that we have good laws that are passed that add stability, that add safety so that we can enjoy our quality of life.

In the big cities one of the concerns in these areas – and, again, if we spend too much money on elected officials in other areas, we've got different neighbourhoods where crime is on the rise. That's a real concern for people that live in those areas. They're far more interested in seeing bills that are trying to eliminate the crimes in their area and to clamp down on problem people. It just seems like the more MLAs we have, the less value to some of the bills that are coming forward and the discussions we're having on those. I mean, we've tried to accommodate this House twice tonight on adjourning and going on to other bills, but the members keep voting to say that they want to talk. I thought one was getting up, but it's not the case, so I don't know why they don't want to adjourn the bill. We have a few more amendments that we'll be bringing forward tomorrow, but we're happy to keep discussing the lack of accountability of the 83 MLAs that we already have. Why do we need to increase that number?

I've never, not once, Mr. Chair, in my years of being in here had anybody come and say: "You know, there aren't enough MLAs. Could you cut the boundaries in half and have twice as many?" So I wonder why it was a priority. Again, it was numbered Bill 28; it's not like it was a high one. If it was so important to have this, I don't understand, again, why it wasn't Bill 4 or Bill 5. It's Bill 28 where it came up. Again, why did they not for the 21st century look at reducing the number of MLAs? What possibly went through this government's mind to say that we need more MLAs?

The only answers that I get, Mr. Chair, on why Bill 28 was necessary for this government to increase the number of MLAs is because they didn't want to reduce the number of rural MLAs. They were outside the boundaries of the electoral act that said that, you know, you can only be 25 per cent plus or minus of the average. Of course, again, we still have that exception where five ridings do not have to fit in there, but we had more than that. Two of my colleagues represent an incredible number of people, Airdrie-Chestermere and Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

So because we knew that we were coming up on that – every 10 years we have to look at that again by law – why were we not innovative in looking at and addressing: do we need to spend more money? Do we need more MLAs here in the House? Mr. Chair, I would welcome you to go back to your constituents and ask how many of them were all excited and said: "Oh, yes, we need four more MLAs. You're not able to vote well enough for me. We can't get appointments with you." We don't sit that long up here, so it's quite good to be able to have a lot of time in our home constituencies where we can visit with those who want to talk about democracy. It's more important that we can be that advocate for those people that really are struggling because of the rules and regulations that this government has put forward.

It was interesting to listen to my colleague talk about the wonderful lady that operates and runs his office and that it's taken years to become an expert on all of the different programs and the loops and the fences that you need to jump in order to get the different assistance. That would be a great help to reduce the time being spent on helping constituents if we focused on some of those things.

Why do we put out these programs and then hide them in books that are 200 pages long that nobody knows about? They find it very frustrating to get help.

You know, I often say that we have rules and regulations that are regulating us to death, and I don't think there's ever been a truer time than right now about being regulated to death than the regulations that we have in our Alberta Health Act. That's what we really should be discussing, Bill 17, but we're stuck on Bill 28 because the government keeps voting and saying that we want to stay here. So we'll keep talking about Bill 28 and why we have 25 MLAs to represent Calgary and why we need 87 in the province. Again, we listened, but I haven't heard any government members get up and say why this was such a good bill and why we needed 87.

To get sidetracked onto what the chair would say would be more to the point, section 4 says:

Notwithstanding section 3, if the boundary between 2 electoral divisions passes through a building used for one of more residences, the Chief Electoral Officer, after consultation with the returning officers for those electoral divisions, may by regulation . . .

Again, this is what we're talking about: regulations, regulations, regulations. Why don't we have some cold formulas, some processes in place so we don't always have to wait for the Chief Electoral Officer, so we don't have to wait for the minister, so we don't have to wait for the Premier to make regulations. It says:

prescribe the electoral division in which the building is to be located for the purposes of the Election Act.

Once again, Mr. Chair, what I see with this is purely a regulation given to an arbitrary individual that's appointed by this government that can actually go back and look and see the way that building voted and then say, "You know, I think it's strategic that we put it into this one," or "It's strategic that we put it there if so needed." Why would we not say in this bill that if it is between two boundaries – and we put up our grid, north and south, east and west – if it is touching on the west, it will go to the west. If it's touching on the north, it will go to the north. Anywhere in the province where a building is bisected, you automatically know that it's going to fall into one of those two axes, to the west or to the north, and take the arbitrary decision out of that.

For the life of me I don't understand why these people continue to put in regulations and say that we will allow this appointed person to make the decision on how and where this building is going to be encapsulated in the next election. It just doesn't make any sense to me, Mr. Chair, why this would be set up such, why we would put in a clause like that, to be totally arbitrary at the discretion of the Chief Electoral Officer and the returning officer. That's an amendment, to me, that needs to come forward. When I finish speaking this time, I'll go and talk to the table officers and see what we can do in the middle of the night.

We kind of thought that the government would be reasonable, that we would be able to go on to some other bills, that people were under the understanding we were going to debate tonight. But no. This government wants to push this through and says: "No, no. We've outvoted you twice. We don't want to talk about it." [interjections] Do we need to vote again, hon. member, to see if they're ready to switch to something else that we're prepared to talk on? They just want to overload with paperwork and say: "Oh, no. Just push this through. Just push this through." I would like to challenge – well, push, vote, I don't know what you want to call it. Freeze the water, and throw it in the air.

Dr. Brown: It's called democracy.

Mr. Hinman: Democracy. Now, there's a good concept. Is this representative democracy, or do you want to go back to the Greeks and have true democracy, where every person gets to vote?

Dr. Brown: Representative.

Mr. Hinman: Oh, yes. It's getting late, and I got sidetracked. I can't believe that the Member for Calgary-Nose Hill would want to pull me aside because he is so often sitting in the chair, and he's not speaking through the chair or allowing me to. Sorry, Mr. Chair.

Let's get back to section 4 and why this bill is set up such that it allows the arbitrary decision of an officer appointed by this government to make that decision. It just isn't right. We could put in rules and formulas that take the arbitrary out.

Dr. Brown: How would you do it?

Mr. Hinman: I just told you. Obviously, I'll have to go through it again. He's not listening. [interjections]

The Acting Chair: Hon. members, the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore has the floor.

Please proceed.

Mr. Hinman: Thanks. The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill asked me how I would do it, so through the chair I'll respond to him. Because I know that he's not going to have the tenacity to go back and read Hansard on what I said, I will go through it again, Mr. Chair, and we'll see if he's able to pick it up this time. He'll probably get cackling or looking at his computer and miss it, but we'll try. I don't mind repeating it. I've raised children. You have to say it and teach them more than once. So if we need to go through that process, I'm happy to do it for the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, who wants to know how we would do it.

What I would propose – on maps we have north and south; we have east and west. We have the two axes. We could say in here that any building that's bisected, if it's through the north and the south, all buildings that are cut in half will be moved to the north, to that electoral boundary. If it's being cut between the east and the west, we'd say that all those buildings will go to the west. Therefore, there would be no arbitrary decision. It would actually be a law that makes sense. Common law, Mr. Chair . . .

The Acting Chair: Are you speaking to the bill, or are you speaking to some hypothetical amendment that may be coming? We're on the bill right now.

Mr. Hinman: I'm speaking about section 4 and what I think is wrong with section 4. I thought that that was totally within the parameters of this when I was reprimanded earlier by the chair, saying that I was off the subject, that I'd have to speak about actual clauses in the bill. I don't know how I could be any more on the bill. I'm discussing the fact that we have an arbitrary clause in here that makes no sense to me. I would think that the government, who brings forward these bills, would do the due diligence and say: let's not have arbitrary decisions in here. That just makes sense to me. The democratic way to me is to pull out the long reach of the government and ensure that people know.

I want to go back and talk a little bit, because we're passing law, about: what is common law? What is the purpose? What is the actual meaning of common law and the origin of that? There are two angles to that, to my understanding. First, common law is that we all have that law in common. It's common amongst all people.

We don't have those who are above the law, which we see many times in these bills that this government passes, that the minister is above the law in the fact that in Bill 17, again, section 10, they cannot be taken to court, that they're above the law. Common law means that it's common for all entities that are under those rules of law as citizens of that country.

The more important thing is that in the British Empire the commoners could understand it. It was to be written in a way – and I see the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill shaking his head in disagreement on that, so I'll look forward to his getting up and explaining what common law is and what a good law is and what a bad law is. A good law for common law is that all people understand it and that we don't have to go to a barrister or a solicitor and say: could you please explain this to me? It's just what you call the greasy wheel. It's saying: "Oh, let's make it such that people have to come to us. Make it complicated."

We want to – what would I say? – be an unproductive and an uncompetitive country because we want the laws so complicated that people won't invest. People don't know. It's arbitrary. The Premier might change the royalties at any moment and crush the investment integrity that this province had for so long. That's the reason why law is so important, and that's why I talked earlier about good law and bad law.

The most important thing is that people with great law already know before what the outcome is going to be. When you're living in a house and it's in a cul-de-sac and it's actually on range 23, the 24th section, west of the 4th meridian and you know that that's the division line, you know that the law says: it's bisected east to west, so you're going to be in the west electoral riding. That's the importance of good law. They don't have to go to a barrister. They don't have to go to a solicitor. They don't have to go to the Chief Electoral Officer and say: "Where am I going to vote? I don't know because my house is bisected." That is a poor law. It's arbitrary. It's unclear.

The law is to bring clarity, to bring understanding, so the common person can look at it, read through it, and say: "Okay, I get that. I know that I'm voting in Calgary-Glenmore because I'm bisected north to south, so into the north." So it moves to the north into Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Chair, I just do not understand why it's the opposition's job to have to scrutinize these things. It should be government that realizes that we don't want arbitrary decisions in our law. That is a bad law. That is a bad clause. The government should be standing up and saying that we want to amend it. The sad thing is that this House is so partisan that most of the people are blind, and the only thing that they can tell between the two sides is: "Oh, was it the government or was it the opposition that brought that up? If it's the opposition, I oppose it." We always get accused that the opposition opposes things. You can check the voting record. Whenever the government brings something good, we vote on it; we're in favour of it. But if we were to bring forth that amendment, the government is going to say: "Oh, it's from the opposition. We're not going to do it. We oppose that." And they vote against it.

It's kind of discouraging to think: well, why waste a bunch of time writing up amendments? If you point them out, we would expect the government to go into their caucus tomorrow night – and they can't use their own thoughts. They cackle over there and say thoughts. We'll let you know when you have a thought. I would argue again that when you look at the actual cases, these people very seldom – and it has happened twice tonight. They have to look around to the alpha dog and see: "Are we standing up and opposing this? Are we voting this way?" They don't think. They look to follow at very best. Sometimes they can actually bark out a command, and we see them react to that.

The Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs was wanting to cackle about thoughts. My question, Mr. Chair, is: did he put any thoughts into this bill and realize the arbitrariness of it, or does the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs think that arbitrary is good and that unclear law is what we want? We want that confusion. We want people not to know. We want them to have to come and ask government, and we'll have more bureaucrats that we can hire that'll be underneath me. As a minister I can brag about how many members are underneath there.

Chair's Ruling Relevance

The Acting Chair: Hon. member, the chair has been listening very intently to your comments and with a lot of interest, but there's nowhere in the bill that the chair finds anything about speculating on the thoughts of the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs. If you would get back onto the bill, I think everybody would be more interested in it.

Mr. Hinman: Fair enough, Mr. Chair. It's just kind of hard, you know, when you hear this chirping in the background. Sometimes it's amusing, so we like to be amused by it. I apologize. I'll get back to Bill 28 and the fact that we still have arbitrary clauses in Bill 28.

Mr. Hinman: Like I said, I have spoken, and I'll say it again. The government seems very stuck on any amendments that come forward from the opposition, and very, very rarely do they ever make those amendments go through. I would urge the government to adjourn this debate and bring forward an amendment from their side so that it can come through and pass. They have no desire to adjourn the debate. They have no desire to have input into the debate. It just seems wrong, and I'm unable at this point . . . [Mr. Hinman's speaking time expired] Oh, so soon.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you. We're working on a couple of amendments. Here's the thing. We've been talking a lot about . . .

Mr. Hinman: We've got to do some research here.

Mr. Anderson: Yeah. Got to do some quick research.

You know, obviously, people are going to ask tomorrow, whenever that comes . . .

Mr. Hinman: Anywhere in Beauchesne does it say that there are time outs?

Mr. Anderson: No. No time outs.

. . . why we are putting the House through such torture on this bill? Why is this important? Why is this important? That's a good question. Why are we battling this out? The reason, we think, looking through this bill and making sure that we justify the 87 listed constituencies here in this bill, is because we really do feel as a caucus that one of the signature issues when we go to Albertans at the next election is going to be kind of the spirit of what was contained in this bill, that being: what is the role of an MLA? What does an MLA do? What should they be doing? Unless we can justify that there is a reason for 87 MLAs, for four more MLAs than there are now, then what's the point? What's the point of passing this bill, which asks for four more MLAs?

What I would suggest is that the reason we're having this discussion is because we want the public — of course, if you talk about it loud enough, at least a few people are going to notice that the Wildrose is very concerned with the state of our democracy. We're concerned about the role of an MLA to represent his or her constituents. That's what we're concerned about.

The thing is that if we can't justify the role of an MLA, if we can't justify that it's worth having four more MLAs under this act, then, you know, what's the point? What are we doing? I think that it's key that we have in our minds — we need to look back. If we're going to be able to justify MLAs, the existence of four more MLAs, we need to — frankly, in order to justify the existence of any of us here, we have to see if we actually are bringing any value-added. We like that term in this Legislature. Are we bringing anything to this Legislature?

Honestly, think of the money we could save if we just elected a president. We could still have a type of democracy. I think it would be pretty dark, and it wouldn't work well, but we could have a type of democracy. We could just elect a president. That president: we could elect him, and it could be all 3 and a half million of us Albertans voting for that president. You could have as many candidates as you want. That president would just roll over us. It would be elected. Right? I mean, the president would be elected, and everything would be great.

Yet we don't have that system. Why don't we have that system? Because we think that there is value in having a diversity of opinion. We think that it is a good check and balance to have more than just one person. In the U.S. government, of course, you've got the President, but you also have a couple of checks and balances. You have the judicial branch and the legislative branch in the Senate and the House. Those are a check on the power of the one President. Well, in a parliamentary democracy the check — some people don't understand this. There is an executive branch, and that's the Premier and the cabinet, the Executive Council. They all sit there in the executive. [interjection] Well, you've got to look at the more detailed one in the final electoral boundaries report, man. Come on.

Mr. Hinman: I couldn't find anything.

Mr. Anderson: Oh, just find it. I think it's Highwood-Norwood or Beverly-Clareview or something like that.

So there's the executive branch, and then there is a legislative branch, which is the whole body here. That's the legislative branch of government. Then there is the judicial branch.

An Hon. Member: First-year law school.

Mr. Anderson: Yes. First-year law school. Judicial branch.

So now the judicial branch is a check on the power of the Legislature for sure. We have that check. But the legislative branch isn't really a check on the executive branch any more. We don't have a check or balance. We don't have an elected check and balance on the power of the executive in this province. We don't. There is nothing, really, during a session that the Legislature can do to check the power of the executive unless there is a minority government. Under our party system unless there is a minority government, there is no check on the power of the executive. The reason we don't have that is because there are no free votes. There are no free votes on any legislation of consequence, really, any legislation at all.

Because of that, if a Premier and his chief of staff get out of control and start passing laws that nobody wants and that are harmful and that have dire effects on the economy and whatever, there is no way to rein that person in other than to have a full-out government caucus revolt. That's the only way to take a guy down, take an ineffective and ill-advised Premier down. It shouldn't be that way.

If an executive is doing something harmful like, say, the new royalty framework, when it came in – obviously, even the government agrees that it was harmful, or aspects of it were harmful anyway, or they wouldn't have changed it seven times. They couldn't do that until the executive branch gave them permission to do that. That shouldn't be how it is. I think that if there was really a free vote on the issue, if the proposed new royalty framework came through this Legislature, either parts of it would have been rejected outright, or it would have been amended such that we wouldn't have had that problem that we had, which is that the government went way over the line on the conventional side with the huge increase in royalties.

I think that that's something to keep in mind. If we had had a functioning legislative branch, if MLAs had a role in decision-making in this Legislature and it wasn't just all coming out of the executive branch, then we would have been able to stop that bad legislation. You know what? It would have helped the executive branch, too. It would have helped the executive branch in that the Premier would definitely be a lot more popular than he is today if we as a legislative branch had gotten rid of Bill 50 or severely amended it, if we had done more research and had done a better job with regard to Bill 36 or Bill 19 or what's the . . .

Mr. Boutilier: Which one?

Mr. Hinman: Bill 36, 50, or 19?

Mr. Anderson: No, no. The bulletproof vest one. I can't even remember which one that was. Anyway, the vest registry act, whatever that one was.

All these different acts, some of them very silly . . .

Some Hon. Members: Body armour.

Mr. Anderson: The body armour act. Is that what it was? That's right.

All of these different acts. Of course, the body armour one wasn't exactly one that has offended every Albertan, but I still think it was a ridiculously redundant and silly piece of legislation. But the other ones that Albertans are absolutely furious about were the new royalty framework, centralization of the superboard, the property rights bills, or lack thereof of property rights bills. I think the legislative branch, clearly, would have checked or would have kept those bills from going forward as they were. They would have been amended as such, and they would have come out the other end as good, solid pieces of legislation because, you know, the people in this room, generally speaking, are reasonable people.

If we had the freedom to express ourselves and bring forth good ideas to the legislation in a free and democratic way, I think that the wisdom of the common man would prevail. I think we have enough intellectual heft in this House as a collective group that we would be able to put out some good bills. Instead of that, we had a very small group of people, mainly the Premier, his very misguided chief of staff, and a few other people, a few powerful cabinet ministers, making all of this legislation and saying: "Here it is, folks. You vote for it or – we have to vote for it. If you don't vote for it, the government comes down." So, of course, everyone has to vote for it or they get punted or they get ostracized or they get whatever. It's just this culture.

Some Hon. Members: Kicked out.

Mr. Anderson: Kicked out. Well, that's what I said: the Edmonton-Meadowlark MLA.

Mr. MacDonald: Boutiliered.

Mr. Anderson: Or Boutiliered. That's a term, actually. Boutiliered is actually an action word. It's a verb now. Boutiliered.

Chair's Ruling Relevance

The Acting Chair: For about the last five minutes I've been trying very hard to relate to how your comments can relate to any part of the eight sections in this four-page bill, and I'm having a very hard time trying to do that. I believe the chair has allowed a lot of leeway here, but I need to bring you back to discussion on the bill.

Debate Continued

Mr. Anderson: All right. We'll bring it back. Let me clarify why. On page 3 of the bill – and I know it's a stretch of logic, but where I'm going with this is that you've got 87 in the schedule of names of electoral divisions. Clearly, there are 87 MLAs being contemplated. If you see section 1, it says "The electoral divisions for the purpose of the Election Act are the 87 electoral divisions established by this Act." We think there should just be 83 for now. Maybe there should be less but definitely just 83. So what we want to talk about is that either we need to change – and I don't want to bring an amendment forward to change all the work unless we have agreement in principle that what's in here right now is not proper, that we shouldn't have 87 MLAs until we fix the clear democratic deficit that we're experiencing right now.

You know, I think of another one, the check-off issue. I know that was a passionate one that you were feeling. I know. That's what I mean. We've got to make MLAs relevant in order to justify the 87. Well, there's a classic example. There are many people in this Legislature that were not in favour of that bill, yet they were forced to vote for it in this Legislature even though I know they weren't for it. I'm not going to name any names, but it's just very clear that they weren't in favour of it, yet it got put through. In fact, if I remember right, the caucus was so divided on that issue in particular that I am sure it wouldn't have passed because I know that with the opposition combined with the people that weren't happy in the government caucus, it wouldn't have gotten through.

Now, how I feel on that particular bill is irrelevant, or how everyone else felt on that is irrelevant. That's not what we're talking about here. What I'm talking about, the point, is that that piece . . .

The Acting Chair: You're right. That's not what we're talking about. We're talking about Bill 28, and you were specifically trying to tell me that you're relating back to the 87 members. How all of the votes on previous pieces of legislation that have passed in this House in the past few years relate to that escapes me. So could you talk about one of the eight clauses in the bill?

Mr. Anderson: Okay. I thought I was, hon. member. We'll try this one more time.

Maybe what we'll do instead is that we'll just go to an amendment. What we'll do is I'll propose an amendment. It's a name change amendment. Let's do that. Let's pass this around.

The Acting Chair: Did you want to move the amendment?

Mr. Anderson: Yeah. We distribute it first, right?

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, this is amendment A2. You may proceed.

Mr. Anderson: All right. I am really excited about this. All of this talk of democracy has inspired me while I've been sitting here. I knew this bill was missing something, and I finally figured it out. One of the great pioneers of democracy in our nation's history, I believe, certainly in Alberta's history, is the former Leader of the Official Opposition, the hon. Preston Manning, son of Ernest Manning.

Mr. Boutilier: A former Premier.

Mr. Anderson: That's right. Ernest Manning, the former Premier. That's right.

Dr. Taft: Have you moved it yet?

Mr. Anderson: Oh, I have to move it. Right. Sorry. Let me read it. I'm moving that Bill 28, Electoral Divisions Act, be amended in the schedule by striking out "Calgary-Elbow" and substituting "Calgary-Preston Manning (identified as Calgary-Elbow in the DVD referenced in section 3)".

The reason I want to do a renaming here, since we're in a renaming mood – Calgary-Montrose we've renamed Calgary-Greenway. We've renamed – what was the other one? – Calgary-North Hill as Calgary-Klein. Okay. All right. That's fair enough. I'm a big Ralph fan. He was a great leader, for sure. [interjection] Don't agree with me? No. I don't think anyone agrees with all of his policies, but he did some very good things for this province.

I think of some past renamings that have occurred: well, tonight. We had a great renaming tonight, where we . . .

Mr. Boutilier: Notley.

Mr. Anderson: That's right. I really would like to commend the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs for agreeing to that. I think he's an extremely honourable and gentlemanly member, and I'm so pleased that he would allow his riding to be amended to include the last name of Grant Notley. I think that was an extremely classy move by the minister to allow that, and he's a classy guy. I'm sure he doesn't really care for my compliments, but he's going to get them anyway. It was very, very classy. It was a classy move because I think some partisans would say: ah, we can't have an NDP put in the name of the thing. But, no, he wasn't like that. He rose above politics. I thought that was a very classy move.

We also have renamed, in particular, many names of ridings in the past to reflect the great men or women that went before. What are some examples of that? Edmonton-Manning, which, of course, refers to Ernest Manning, Preston Manning's father and former Premier of Alberta. So you have Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Boutilier: Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Anderson: Yeah, that's right. You have Calgary-Lougheed, of course, after . . . [interjections] It wasn't after Peter Lougheed? Oh, I didn't know that.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, please, through the chair.

Mr. Anderson: Sorry.

I didn't know that. That's interesting. I'll look that up, but thank you for pointing that out. That's why it's important, Mr. Chair, to have these important debates, because we all learn from each other's collective wisdom. I did not know that. I just assumed, and we all know . . . [interjection]

Mr. Boutilier: But then again, some contribute more than others.

Mr. Anderson: That's right. Some contribute more than others. I certainly didn't learn it from that member.

Anyway, my point is that we rename ridings often after great leaders and great people. What's another? Maybe we can have somebody give us a little history lesson on some other examples where this has occurred. I know there are others out there.

Mr. Boutilier: Decore.

Mr. Anderson: Decore. Yeah, of course. Edmonton-Decore. There's another one.

There are all kinds of these different – we've done this in the past. I can think of, really, the great leaders, the great pioneers, the great people that have come out of Alberta and have championed the cause of democracy and equality for the west and for Alberta and strengthening Alberta's place in Confederation and putting us on the map, when we had been kicked around by successive federal Progressive Conservative and federal Liberal governments, who had been kicking us around so much. Then we had a guy who went to the floor and stood up for us, and I think the contribution of Preston Manning has led to so many great advances for the province of Alberta.

Mr. Kang: Like he got rid of the pensions.

Mr. Anderson: You're going to have to debate this, Member. When I sit down, I want you to stand up and debate this. I think it's only fair that you do because I've got to go through the chair. I would like to talk to you about it.

Mr. Chair, if you look at what Preston Manning accomplished as leader, he really, I think, did a huge service to the province of Alberta. [Mr. Anderson's speaking time expired] Don't I get to speak 20 on the amendment? I thought I got to speak 20 on the amendment. No? Okay.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Yes. It is not Calgary-Preston Manning; it is Calgary-Glenmore.

It's interesting that we've passed many amendments here. We've honoured some great past elected representatives in the province. I would have to say that Preston Manning has done an admirable job through the decades of representing what I want to call reform to democracy, and I think that it is very, very fitting to have a riding named after him because of the service that he's done.

You know, it's interesting to me. One of the things about Preston Manning, being the true statesman that he is, is that when he went in — again, this is about the importance of being a man of your word, that when you say something, you mean it. I don't know how many people in this House realize this, but the offensive pension plan of the federal government was something that he was very opposed to. [interjection] Would you like to speak on this?

Anyway, we've got another minister that had some comment about Preston that I don't think . . . [interjection] Yes, only a lonely minister, a long-haired, lonely minister with a nice wave to it. He likes to run fast in the wind so that he can feel it. That's the only time he realizes that there's motion. The Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs. Why can't I remember that? He wants to mock Preston Manning. As if he even sits in the same category: just remarkable to me. To say derogatory things about someone like Preston Manning is amazing to me, Mr. Chair. Nevertheless, we'll endure those comments, and we'll go forward. I take it that he won't be voting in favour of this amendment, but we'll see whether he'll get up and speak to it. I doubt it.

Anyway, to talk a little bit more about Preston Manning and why it's fitting to name a riding after him. He wanted reform. He wanted democratic reform, and one of the things that he was very outspoken about was government waste. I still to this day believe that the reason why Paul Martin and the Liberals balanced the budget was because of the pressure of Preston Manning and those early Reformers saying how important it was to be fiscally conservative and balance the budget. [interjections]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, the MLA for Calgary-Glenmore has the floor.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I didn't realize that he would cause so much pain for the Member for Lethbridge-East as well.

Mrs. Ady: It's the exaggeration.

Mr. Hinman: The exaggeration? Now the minister from Calgary-Shaw wants to mention that it's an exaggeration what Preston Manning has done and the fact that he put pressure on the federal government to balance the budget? We're still hundreds of billions of dollars in debt. I guess now I kind of get it, Mr. Chair. Why these people would mock someone who's a fiscal conservative is because they're spendaholics. They think: let's put out some more money.

The Member for Calgary-Shaw, the minister, talked about the multiplication with the Grey Cup in Calgary last year and then talked about the importance of Expo. If this government is so astute in their fiscal abilities and the games that we get, why did they not put up the money themselves with their, I think, $12 billion sustainability fund for the 2017 Expo? They said that there's a huge multiplication factor and that you get all the money back. I would think that this government in its astuteness would say: "Let's put the money in there for Expo. We can do it. We have it, and it's a great infrastructure bid."

The Deputy Chair: That does not pertain to the . . .

Mr. Hinman: Oh, yes. Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's getting late, and the members from Calgary-Shaw and whatnot easily distract me. I apologize.

We'll go back to this amendment and why I think it's very fitting that the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere has brought forward this amendment. I don't see it written on here. Just so I can write it on here, it's A2, to change Calgary-Elbow and substitute Calgary-Preston Manning.

To get back to democratic reform and the years of service: "Oh, isn't this wonderful? Another amendment coming forward. Just what the chair and the people wanted. We're happy to bring them." This is what the chair directed me. I took that direction, and I'm grateful for that direction, Mr. Chair, because you've stimulated the thought, and we're working over here and excited about it.

Preston Manning, in his realization of the poor government and the accountability and the west wanting in, said that we need to be fiscally responsible. The debt load was just taking off hundreds of billions of dollars. It got up to, I think, around $640 billion before the government finally said: okay; we've got to start balancing the budget.

One of the things I admire the most about Preston is that he said that we're going to axe the pension plan that's so offensive to Canadians. To my knowledge, Mr. Chair, he is the only one who never did accept a pension plan. Preston Manning did his years of service, and he has zero pension plan, the only MP that I know of that put years of service in and has no pension plan. For that alone I think he's worthy of having a riding named after him. The taxpayers certainly aren't paying for his retirement. He worked hard. He's a humble individual, a man of his word.

I'm proud to speak in favour of this amendment, and I look forward, rather than to the heckling, to hearing a few of the government members speak on this and either get behind it or get against it. Stand up and speak out. Oh, you might get kicked out? I don't know, Mr. Chair. It's late. They don't want to adjourn another one, so I'll sit down to see if there are any government members that want to discuss the great opportunity that we have here in Alberta to name a constituency after the hon. Preston Manning, Official Leader of the Opposition of the government of Canada.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Do any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Boutilier: He already spoke.

Mr. Anderson: Oh, sorry. I didn't know you were up. Can I cede the floor to the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo? Am I allowed to do that, Mr. Chair?

The Deputy Chair: You want to yield? The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's indeed a pleasure to rise again and speak to this bill, Bill 28, the Electoral Divisions Act. I do say that as we go forward with some of the amendments here tonight and the amendment that's in front of us right now, which is referred to as: "Mr. Anderson to move that Bill 28, Electoral Divisions Act, be amended . . ."

Dr. Brown: Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Boutilier: I'm just reading what the amendment says. It says, "Mr. Anderson," so I correct the doctor from Calgary-Nose Hill.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, you know better than that. You know that the clerks, when they call them out, call their names. It is decorum here.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Airdrie-Chestermere, would you accept my apology through the chair?

Mr. Anderson: I totally accept it.

Mr. Boutilier: Thanks, Mr. Chair, for providing me the opportunity to apologize to the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Chair, I would like to say that the electoral division is something that I can see is going to carry us through the night; there is no doubt in my mind. Having said that, I think that the energy we use should be directed to some of the Albertans we're honouring with some of these name changes, such as the one in front of us, and the notice of the amendment that's been put forward substituting "Calgary-Preston Manning (identified as Calgary-Elbow in the DVD)" – there's a bit of a typo in here, I think.

With all of the important work that's going on here, I think it's an important move. I certainly hope that everyone in this House will speak to it because it represents the spirit. [interjection] Maybe the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere could go and take care of the business outside while I proceed with the important business inside.

Mr. Chair, as we go forward, I can say that some of the amendments that we've talked about and this amendment that we are talking about, speaking through the chair, really in fact represent important history to Alberta. I don't know the background to striking out "Calgary-Elbow." I certainly hope that there is not in any way, shape, or form any bad will intended in eliminating the word "Elbow" and substituting the words "Preston Manning." Obviously, we can all agree that I don't think we had a Premier or a leader of a federal party, their family too, that has served so well this province. The name Manning, of course, is presently in one of our existing electoral boundaries. By referring to Calgary-Elbow and substituting Calgary-Preston Manning, we would be honouring a very, very I think distinguished Albertan, an Albertan whose family has deeply etched into the shaping of this province in its second and first centuries.

Mr. Chairman, I do believe that as we go forward, it's really important to recognize people. Often it's said: oh, well, you have to wait until you die before your name should be recognized. I think we had that debate on the issue of Calgary-Klein, and clearly our former Premier is alive and well, and we obviously wish him many, many decades of good health. It's quite enjoyable, like in this particular amendment, to recognize someone who is living and has served this province with distinction. That in itself is worthy of further discussion. Serving with distinction: not everyone can say they have done that.

To the members that sit in this House today, I know that it remains an honour and a privilege for each of us to serve. The majority of us, not everyone in here but a majority of members here, know who their bosses are. Their bosses are not the people in this House but in the very constituencies we represent. Consequently, I don't believe that there was ever a federal leader called Elbow, but clearly there was a federal leader called Manning. Therefore, including that name and the history – of course, Elbow, I think, dates back to the natural flow of its trading corridors through its rivers. The Elbow River, as we know, is one that is so important.

I recall the Member for Fish-Creek saying how difficult it is to be able to talk when others are talking, but it's so important to be able to recognize the importance of Elbow, switching it to Preston Manning. I think Preston Manning is probably smiling and listening intently to this proceeding tonight.

Mr. Anderson: I'm sure he is.

Mr. Boutilier: I'm sure he is.

Mr. Anderson: Has he been tweeting?

Mr. Boutilier: I'm not sure if he tweets or not. I really have not been able to tweet a lot because of the fact that when you have a three-year-old, you don't get to tweet a lot. You tend to watch Treehouse more than you tweet.

Mr. Chair, I can say that this amendment is, I think, an important one. I know this amendment has been put forward by the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere. Obviously, as we go forward with this road map, I hope everyone will consider following this amendment and supporting it because we have much more to do tonight. I'm not sure what else could be said relative to this amendment, but I'm certainly willing to entertain any thoughtful comments from ministers, the member, the minister from Calgary-Shaw, who, I might say, is one of my most favourite ministers and is joining me tomorrow in travelling to Fort McMurray, the oils sands capital of the world, an electoral division that serves 68,000 square kilometres, which I'm sure is etched in stone.

Mr. Denis: Is that exact?

Mr. Boutilier: That is very exact. In fact, maybe some day the hon. member could go out with a measuring tape and confirm that fact. In fact, doing it in minus 40 degree weather would be a friendly suggestion.

Having said that, Mr. Chairman, I'm going to take my seat.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to offer a couple of comments to the three members that have preceded me. If we look at some of the names of constituencies that have in fact been named after previous political figures in this province or in this country, there is one commonality. I'm just going to point this out.

Edmonton-Manning, named after Ernest Manning, of course, who was the president, sorry, the Premier – I'm sorry; it's late, Member – of this great province for these many years, who sat in this House.

Edmonton-Decore, of course, named after Laurence Decore, the former leader of the Liberal Party, who also sat in this House.

An Hon. Member: And mayor of Edmonton.

Mr. Denis: And mayor of Edmonton, the point being that that individual sat in this House, God rest his soul.

Grant Notley: we're naming Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley after the former leader of the NDP, again, Mr. Chair, who sat in this House. We're also naming Calgary-Klein, of course, after the great Premier, Ralph Klein, who also sat in this House.

Now, Preston Manning I have a high regard for as well, but he never sat in this House. I suppose that if you wanted to name a provincial riding after some leader, you could look at maybe Stockwell Day, who was our Treasurer for many years, who brought in the flat tax.

Regardless, these four people that I've mentioned all sat in this House. Preston Manning, unfortunately, did not sit in this House, and I will not be supporting this amendment for that reason. In addition, I have also not heard as to with whom the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere consulted in Calgary-Elbow. Did he consult the Member for Calgary-Elbow? Did he consult anyone in Calgary-Elbow? I have not seen any evidence of that. I'm not saying that he didn't, but I have not seen any evidence of that tabled.

I would urge all members not to support this amendment, with the greatest of respect to a great Albertan, Preston Manning.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Allred: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. I'd like to just make a few comments, not that I'm particularly interested in entering into this silliness. I must say that there have been a few statements made in the last hour that have probably been the most intelligent statements made all evening. Those have been with respect to my dear friend Preston Manning, who, I agree, is a very honourable statesman in this country. He's contributed a lot and he continues to contribute a lot through his many lectures, his philosophizing, and his writings.

I've known Preston for many, many years now. I had the privilege of running with him in 1988 in the Reform Party. I was a founding member of the Reform Party, in fact, in Winnipeg with him, when he gave a great speech on the rebellions, political revolutions in Canada. He started off speaking of when Louis Riel stepped on the surveyor's chain in 1869 just outside of Winnipeg. He just went on from there and related the whole history of political rebellions in Canada. It was a very, very interesting speech, and as a result of that speech and his stature he won the leadership of the Reform Party at that time.

I've also been privileged to know most of the members of his family, who also are very respectful citizens. His wife is very committed to education. Even at a later age she has gone, I believe, out to the University of Victoria to get a master's degree after practising real estate and a number of other things while Preston was so busy in Ottawa.

Mr. Chair, I think we're trying to carry this thing too far. The next thing we'll have an Airdrie-Anderson proposal or maybe a Fort McMurray-Boutilier.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, I think we're talking about the name of a person that already is an MLA, and that is inappropriate.

Mr. Allred: Okay. Sorry. My apologies.

Mr. Chair, that's really all I wanted to say. I really wanted to recognize Preston Manning for his statesmanship and the respect that I think most Albertans and certainly a lot of Canadians have for him or for what he has done for this country. Certainly, in my opinion, he has changed the face of Canada in a lot of ways even though he was in opposition. I think a lot of the fiscal restraint that Paul Martin showed in the House of Commons as Finance minister came directly from Preston Manning's debate in the House of Commons. I think we can really respect him and honour him, but I don't think this is the proper place to try and change the name of an established riding in Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East on the amendment.

Ms Pastoor: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's a delight to be able to stand up at 12:30, in the middle of the night, and be able to address this House. Actually, the more I'm thinking about this kind of an amendment, the more I think that I can support the whole idea. I could support that in time all the ridings could be named after prominent, elected Alberta politicians. We have leaders of different parties that would be worthy of having ridings named after them. I'm thinking of Riverview-Taft, and another one that I think that . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, I just chastised a person for using the name of a person who was a sitting MLA in a specific riding. Please withdraw that. And would you all think about that a little bit?

Ms Pastoor: I'm sorry. I do withdraw that.

It would be good if we could name it Riverview and the last name of the sitting member for Edmonton-Riverview at this point in time.

Now, another one that we might look at is Chestermere-Rocky View. Now, what does Rocky View say? You know what? It's no different – it's sort of like new developments that are built around a waste-water pond and they call them lakeview lots. It's sort of the same idea. Rocky View doesn't really say anything, so it would be really easy to switch it to Chestermere-Nick Taylor, after a prominent leader that sat in this House, Nick Taylor. I think that sounds really good. I really do. I'm serious about this. I really do think that it would be a worthy way of recognizing prominent politicians who have devoted a lot of their life to the betterment of the citizens of this province.

With that, I will say that I could support this amendment simply because I believe that it's a good idea and a very good way of recognizing politicians who, as I say, have spent a good portion of their life making sure that the citizens of Alberta are well looked after.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you. This has been a good debate on Preston Manning. I could talk all night about Preston Manning. I just think he's the greatest. I was so disappointed that he didn't run for the leadership in 2006.

Anyway, aside from that, do you know what really set Preston Manning apart? He really was a great politician, I think. He did an incredible thing, starting a grassroots movement from scratch the way that he did. I mean, we're kind of having the opportunity to experience that on a smaller scale with Wildrose provincially. But to do it across the country, I mean, just an unbelievable amount of work must have been involved in doing something like that: the recruiting of the candidates and just all the things involved in that; setting up all the 300 and some constituency associations. It's just amazing to me that he was able to do all that in such a short period of time. He was an amazing tactical politician, but that's not what set him apart because there have been other good politicians.

What really set him apart is that this is a man that never compromised his principles. He always did things for the right reasons, I found. In fact, I honestly think that he was way, way, way ahead of his time. I think some of the proposals that he was bringing forward, not all of them but a great deal of them, were proposals that today would have been far more popular than in the past.

I think of, for example, you know, his idea on balancing budgets. You talked about that earlier and how that led eventually – that pressure was one of the things. I also think that some of the examples of Premier Klein here in Alberta had some effect on that as well. Unfortunately, he is not the leader of your party anymore, evidently. The really important part to remember is that the pressure from Preston Manning in Parliament I think clearly changed a lot of the thinking in the federal Liberal Party. You had another person there, a fiscal conservative, Paul Martin, that was able to balance the budget and balance the books. I think that a lot of that pressure, not all of it, granted – give credit to a whole bunch of different people, but Preston Manning was a huge driving force because he was the Leader of the Official Opposition.

As we know, that is the person, frankly, that the Prime Minister or the government of the day has to listen to the most, is forced to listen to them in question period, in the media, et cetera. I really do think he had a hugely disproportionate role, him and his movement, in getting our budget balanced again. We had those balanced budgets until just recently. It's very unfortunate that we're back into deficit and debt and under, I think, false pretenses that it was needed, that all this debt and deficit was needed. I think we've kind of thrown away a lot of that great legacy that he was partly responsible for.

He had all these great principles, but he was often chastised or told that he wasn't charismatic enough or that he wasn't this. He wouldn't kowtow to, you know, eastern interests. He wouldn't sacrifice his principles. Because of that, he was never elected in the Toronto area and in Quebec and in other places. A lot of that was because of false information that was spread by the media about him and about the Reform movement. Of course, there were a couple of turkeys in the Reform movement, as there are in every movement. [interjection] No. That's right. You're not welcome. That's the reason why. No turkeys in the Wildrose.

The thing is that it really was amazing to see the media demonize this guy. Yet did you notice? He never became a bitter person. He was always smiling, and he was always quick to shake your hand, quick to have a warm smile, quick to be agreeable on issues and to be a friend. He was just a marvellous person.

Politics can be a rough sport, especially when the media is castigating you relentlessly for things like the way you look. I mean, they were bugging him about his glasses and about some of the inflection in his voice and stuff, just ridiculous things that one should never ever do to another human being, let alone someone who is a very respected political figure. Yet that happened all the time. It really was tragic. That was one of the reasons. Also, the lies on his policy. Preston Manning is one of the most accepting, tolerant people that anyone could ever meet. I mean, this guy doesn't care – he really believed in a meritocracy.

He believed that it doesn't matter what your skin colour is or what your background is or what you did, your faith, or anything else. Everyone should be equal under the law, and everyone should be welcome, but they should be welcome on their own merits. He really embodies the concept that Martin Luther King talked about, that someone should be judged not by the colour of their skin but by the content of their character. That was Preston Manning, in my view. He embodied that. He really did feel . . . [interjections] I'm sorry, hon. member?

Mr. Hancock: You talk about him as though he has passed on.

Mr. Anderson: No, he hasn't passed on. [interjection] Ralph Klein; that's right. I have no idea where the minister is going. It is late, though. It's okay.

I first met Preston Manning, actually, when I was at the University of Alberta going to law school, and I started a group called Students for a Stronger Alberta. It was just a whole bunch of law students and a few others. Our big charter was all about democratic reform and about getting back to the basics of MLAs representing their constituents and free votes and all that sort of thing. We had this really idealistic charter, that just happens to align perfectly with the Wildrose policy, so maybe that group did actually lead to something good, hopefully, on democratic reform.

Anyway, we had this group. There weren't that many of us, about 30 or 40. We invited Preston Manning to be one of our speakers. We had a speaker series. We were only around for a couple of years, and we only had, like, four or five speakers, but they were big events. We had David Kilgour out to talk about how he crossed the floor after he stood up against the government, against Brian Mulroney's government and the GST. So just people that had kind of carried the torch on democratic reform.

One of the folks we invited was Preston Manning. We didn't think for a moment that he would accept our invitation because, I mean, he's a busy guy. He didn't know any of us at the time. We didn't have any connection or in with him at all. Somehow – and I forget how – we got hold of his secretary, and we asked him to come. Incredibly, he said: "Absolutely. When would you like me to come?" This was after he had unfortunately just lost the leadership vote to Stockwell Day. You know, I'm not going to get into those politics. Anyway, he had just lost the leadership to Stockwell. I like Stockwell, too. They're both good men.

Anyway, the point is that we invited him to come, and he came. It was 2001, and there were no hard feelings. We started advertising this event for Preston, and it was amazing. So many people were like: "Preston Manning. Oh, that guy. He's this and that and the other thing." Because, you know, universities are so liberal, and they don't like conservative politicians, and they've got bad things to say. It's not cool. So we held the thing anyway. To our amazement – we had an auditorium that could be expanded. It seated a hundred or 200 people, so we booked for a hundred, and the place started filling up like crazy. We had to open up the other auditorium anyway. The place was standing room only, totally packed, at this university, and we had just done a little bit of advertising.

He came in, and he gave one of the most elegant, incredible speeches that I have ever heard. At that point, when I heard him speak, that was absolutely one of the impetuses of making me decide: "You know what? One day I want to get into politics and fight for those same principles." What he talked about was what our democracy could look like in an ideal setting. He talked about direct democracy. He talked about free votes, and he talked about recall and citizens' initiatives and all of the direct democracy stuff that he advocated for for so long. He talked about how there are dangers to those things, to direct democracy, but he explained so eloquently how the positives far outweigh those dangers and how, if you structure them properly, they can actually be a phenomenal strength to society because they allow some of the best ideas to come forward and become law.

So he talked about this, and he was eloquent. He went on for about an hour at least, and he talked about all this. This is university, right? So you have people with nose rings hanging down, and you've got people with the punk hair-dos going on and the colored hair-dos and everything else. These guys were just – you know, he was getting to them. It was kind of funny. They were listening. There was no heckling. Then at the end they gave him a standing ovation when he was done.

I remember the one thing he said that blew me away. Obviously, I can't do it justice, but he said that after the session break, at the last day of session, after all the jabbering that had gone on, he would sit at his desk after everyone had left. He'd actually pick a time where he could come and sit in the Commons by himself, with no one there but maybe a security guard or something, and that's it. He would look at it, and he would just ponder and think about what this – he just had such a profound love for Canada. He has such a profound love for Canada. He would think about how great this country could be if we could put aside our party politics and allow elected representatives to be the voices of their constituents, all these different things, and direct democracy and how we could have a much more civil discourse and debate. He shared all these different ideas about how we could arrive at a better discourse and debate and more decorum. It literally made you tear up. What guy sits in the Commons afterwards and thinks about these things? You just could see the sincerity, how much he cared about this great country of ours. It really changed my perspective on what the role of a politician could be because up until that time I think I was like most Albertans, most Canadians, very cynical of politicians in general. So to see that, I mean, just blew me away. It was really cool, and I'll never forget that.

Then we had lunch with him after, and we went out with the dean of the law school. At the time it was Dean Percy. Now I'm losing the first name. That's really bothering me; I'm going to have to look that up. Anyway, so we went out to lunch with him, and Dean Percy of the law faculty would ask him to explain: what's the deal with religion and politics? How can they interact? And the way he explained it in legal terms was so eloquent. He had such a grasp of how they're not mutually exclusive, you know, how they can work together to build a strong society, but there's got to be that clear division. He was able to weave it so perfectly, and it just made so much sense. He'd obviously thought about it for hundreds of hours because you couldn't make something like that up on the spot.

I honestly think, Mr. Chair, that he was without a doubt the best Prime Minister that this country never had. It's a shame we never had him as a Prime Minister, but – you know what? – the fact of the matter is that his legacy lives on in the lives of thousands of Canadians across this nation. Many of the people in this Chamber – I heard the hon. Member for St. Albert. I heard, of course, the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, myself, and hopefully others – clearly have been inspired by this man and his fairness and his goodness and his principles. If I'm a little gushy, that's just too bad because the fact is that – you know what? – he's just the example that we should all aspire to, including myself. I mean, it's just so clear. It's hard to follow such a high standard, to try to copy that high standard. For example, everyone liked the guy, and I clearly have not reached that standard. He would be able to debate with people, and they wouldn't be mad at him after the debate. You know, you could have a real debate.

An Hon. Member: A true diplomat.

Mr. Anderson: That's right. A true diplomat.

He could keep his cool, he could drive home really strong points, but people could still look him in the eye and shake his hand afterwards, and they could go out and have a beer. That's something, you know. For a lot of us it's difficult to be diplomatic when you're in debate, so that kind of leads to some harsh feelings once in a while and so forth.

There's so much on virtually every level that we could learn from this man. I would like to see, I hope, that one day our Alberta history books as we go forward, our social studies curriculum, will include a chapter on this great man just like we include a chapter on . . . [interjections] I hope that there's a section or a unit where we explore the contributions of Preston Manning to the country and to the province of Alberta in championing the cause of democratic . . . [interjections]

The Acting Chair: Hon. members, could we keep the tone down a little bit? The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere has the floor.

Mr. Anderson: Hopefully, one day in our social studies textbooks there will be a unit devoted to this man and his contributions to the province of Alberta and to the country of Canada because I really think that it is exceptionally underrated. It is something that we can all be very, very proud of, that this man came out of our province. I think the least we could do is to name a portion of the riding that he used to represent in southwest Calgary, which includes Calgary-Elbow. I mean, Elbow. Great. It's a river. How can we say that that's contributed more to our province . . .

An Hon. Member: Fly-fishing.

Mr. Anderson: That's right. It's great for fly-fishing and all that. That's fantastic.

I think Preston Manning is someone who has inspired the best in all of us. I think that if we were to name that riding after him, I think it would be a great service to the people of Alberta and to his contribution.

So that was my little vignette, so to speak, of how I met Preston Manning. Of course, since that time I've had the opportunity on multiple occasions to sit with him, and it's just been a great, great experience.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's good to welcome the new crew of government members that's coming in. We've got some exciting amendments here. The one that we're talking about right now is amendment A2 to Bill 28, moved by the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, to basically amend Calgary-Elbow and substitute Calgary-Preston Manning. Like I say, truly, when you think of the great elected representatives in this province, Preston is up there with them all, including his father.

I'm just somewhat amazed that the member for – it's going to be Calgary-Acadia. Why am I drawing a blank here right now? Calgary-Egmont. It's getting late, obviously. The Member for Calgary-Egmont gets up and talks about all the precedents, and he went through the names and said that because he hadn't been in this House, he wouldn't be worthy of having a constituency named after him. I couldn't think of anything further from the truth. You know, many things that this government does set a new precedent. More often than not I find it a negative precedent: empowering ministers with power and authority that basically reduces the democratic process.

The Acting Chair: Hon. members. Hon. members, the chair is having a very difficult time hearing the speaker. The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore has the floor. Keep the noise level down. That would be appreciated by everyone. Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: I wasn't sure that I heard you, whether I had permission yet or not. Thank you, then, Mr. Chair.

The Member for Calgary-Egmont talked about the precedents and the reasons why he felt that Preston didn't deserve that. I just almost have to laugh that, you know . . . [interjections]

The Acting Chair: Hon. members, I'm going to have to start calling you by your constituency name and identifying you if you don't keep the sound down. The chair cannot hear the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, so please keep the tone down.

Please proceed.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you. I'll try again, Mr. Chair, but it just seems like many here are more interested in something else. I think you've said many times that they should move out into the lobby if they need to talk at such a level. It's hard to even think in here, and I can't hear your direction. Send them out.

Anyway, I think that Preston Manning is an Albertan that we should all be proud of. More importantly, he's a parliamentarian; he is a leader in Alberta. The effort, the sacrifice that he and his family made is truly incredible and has been mentioned by the hon. members for St. Albert and Airdrie-Chestermere. I'm mistaken. The Member for Calgary-Shaw was speaking to the Member for Lethbridge-East, not to me, on Preston Manning. It's encouraging to hear a few members get up and recognize the contribution that he has made, not only for Alberta but for all of Canada. It's just quite exciting that when we have new electoral boundaries in this act, we actually have an opportunity to honour some of these great people by naming a riding after them. Perhaps it's . . . [interjections]

The Acting Chair: Hon. members, if you want to have a side conversation, please do it in the hallway or discontinue it.

Hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, continue.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chair. There seems to be quite an amount of excitement at this time, at 1 o'clock. There's a changing of the guard with the government members. I don't know. Maybe we need to go back and repeat a little bit about what we're talking about on this amendment. I don't know that they even know what's in front or whether they've got so much paper on their desks that they're not sure what amendment we're on.

This is an amendment to Bill 28, which . . .

Mr. Hancock: I'm trying to figure out if you know what amendment you're on.

Mr. Hinman: Now we have the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud making some remark about wondering where we're at. I will try and clarify for him. It's obvious that they're not caring too much. We've asked to adjourn this debate to move to some other ones, but this government keeps saying they want to talk about this, so we're happy to keep talking. The Member for Calgary-Nose Hill: if it wasn't for him, we would have moved on. Because no one else was astute enough when we moved to adjourn the debate, the chair actually ruled to have it adjourned, and then he stood up to have a standing count, and we lost this. So because of his astuteness we will continue on. We've asked many times . . . [interjection]

Chair's Ruling Relevance Decorum

The Acting Chair: Hon. member, the chair is quite familiar with the history of this evening and doesn't need to be reminded of it. But I do need to remind you that we are speaking on amendment A2 to Bill 28. If you could confine your remarks to that, I think everybody would appreciate it and be very interested in hearing what you have to say. Please carry on.

Mr. Hinman: Mr. Chair, I'm trying to listen to you, but there's so much rhetoric and garbage going on, I don't know that I could quite hear you. If you want to repeat it once more. [interjection] What's the blathering minister from Innisfail trying to say, through the chair, now? I couldn't understand him.

The Acting Chair: Carry on with the amendment, please.

Mr. Hinman: Okay.

The Acting Chair: All members of the House have been guilty of infractions of disruption.

Mr. Hinman: Mr. Chair, I literally cannot hear you. I don't know if your mike's not on or what.

The Acting Chair: I said that all members of the Assembly recently have been guilty of infractions of disruptions of the House. Please, if I could have everyone's co-operation, I would be much happier, and I'm sure anyone that has the floor would be much happier.

Hon. member, please continue on amendment A2.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chair. We'll try again, but the unrest has come in. You're aware. I'm certainly aware. I've been here the whole evening. We've been speaking on this, but, like I say, I don't think the government members are aware. They're just taking a shift change and sitting like deadheads in their seats. We'll continue and see if we can get somewhere on this amendment and see if some of them will get up and speak, and we could vote and carry on because we have many more amendments that we're looking forward to presenting to this House but having difficulty going through here.

Preston Manning truly is a statesman that's worthy of having a constituency named after him. I disagree with the Member for Calgary-Egmont, who says: oh, he's never sat in this hallowed House. Then for him to go on and say: well, I don't know who he's spoken to. Well, it wasn't me who brought forward this amendment. I'm supporting this amendment. I think that's just how out of touch many of the government members and ministers certainly are. To think that he wouldn't be a recognized icon just shows how poorly connected they are and how self-interested they are.

I'm surprised that they haven't brought an amendment forward to name after the first Premier of their party, that started their dynasty, which they are so disgracefully going to lose after 40 years, kind of like the third or fourth generation family business where they've become out of touch in doing the service to the community, and they lose the family business or the family farm because of laziness and arrogance. I would think that one of these government members might bring forward the name of Peter Lougheed, who started there.

Anyway, Mr. Chair, what this amendment A2 is about is changing the name of Calgary-Elbow to Calgary-Preston Manning, again, an absolute statesman who sacrificed so much in trying to make a difference here in Canada. I just would have to say that he made that difference. He made that impact. He stayed true to his principles, principles that I continue to endorse and would like to see brought home here to Alberta. One of the few things that I ever, discussing with Preston, wouldn't agree with him on is that we needed a provincial Reform Party at the same time. We needed to bring in recall. We needed to bring in accountability. There are so many principles that Preston put forward that the PC Party adopted in part but often would not take the whole principle. Again, to this day it's costing the quality of life here in Alberta.

Mr. Chair, it's like I say. Let's reflect on the different people who have had ridings named after them and compare them to the service and the difference that Preston Manning has made for Albertans. He put us on the map. He's the one who said: the west wants in. He did it in a very eloquent way. He was always graceful. He's one of those individuals who came in and he just had this humble spirit about him that he could debate or discuss with anybody and a very powerful intellect that really understood and loved his country of Canada and wanted to make a difference. I know that he spent many, many hours consulting with his father, who became a Senator after being the Premier here in this province, trying to make a difference federally.

There are so many areas that we are suffering on because we haven't taken the higher road in saying: this is the better way. This is the democratic way. There are many things that we could talk about, the things that Preston stood for. Like I say, the thing that probably impressed me the most was that when it came to the principle that he had spoken, that the offensive pension plan had to go, you know, the federal Liberals tried to egg him on. Again, all of the other MPs except for Preston – to my understanding, he's the only one who never took a pension because he did not accept what they did. It needed to be a fair one, one that was in line with private industry. He said it wasn't right, and therefore he wouldn't do it.

Like I say, I just have to hold him in the highest regard because of that. Again, he continues to go on and to serve our country. He's founded the Manning Centre for Building Democracy. The purpose of that is to go around and to hold conferences and seminars trying to raise the level of democracy.

It's interesting, you know, that there is an individual in history – again, a lot of times in history we don't always have the best documentation, but Alexander Tytler is one name that's been given to him, a Scottish historian who talks about democracy and the fall of democracies. He says that the reason why democracies fail – and the average failing time is between 200 and 250 years – is because the people eventually vote for the party that will give the most out of the public purse. When we have a politician or a party that promises to take wealth and taxes from one area and redistribute to another area, they often gain and garnish votes. It's not in the best interests of the country as a whole, but it's very much in the best interests of the party that's trying to take over.

What we have, Mr. Chair, is an individual that didn't compromise. His values and his principles were more important than winning. I truly believe that if we had more elected representatives like him, we would have more people coming out and voting because they would understand that. Another thing that I kind of get a chuckle out of is that listening to government members talk, they often wonder: how can the opposition ever get re-elected? They don't understand that. It's because those opposition members know what they stand for. They don't have to worry about them blowing in the wind and changing. People have respect for that.

It's an easier race when you're part of government and you can be in power and you can do what Alexander Tytler talks about, promise extra goodies. I was quite amazed in my last election down in Cardston-Taber-Warner at the number of ministers that came down and promised paved highways, new schools, so many perks, but they said: none of these things come into effect until after the election.

Mr. Anderson: I got promised a new fire truck.

Mr. Hinman: Yes. We talked about a fire truck to Warner. It's sad to see where we can have democracy get watered down to that level, to where we feel like if we don't vote for the party in power, our area is going to be compromised. Again, the opposition today brought up the question on that, you know, with municipal funding and how there isn't a formula to know how that's going to come forward in the steady amount that's coming.

Preston was above all of that. Preston was a man of principles. Preston was an individual that was eloquent, just a vast knowledge of history, of the country, and he was so dedicated to serve. His family, his father, had spent a lot of time. You look at the time that he spent away from his family in serving Albertans and being a representative for Alberta. I just think that this is truly an individual that we can and we should name a riding after.

I support this amendment to Bill 28 to substitute the name of Calgary-Elbow with Calgary-Preston Manning. What I would move at this time, Mr. Chair, is that we would allow the government to go out and have a little discussion and come back and vote on this amendment. So I would move that we adjourn this debate at this time, and we can vote on that and then see if we can move on.

At this time I move that we adjourn the debate so the government can talk in private over this.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Acting Chair: Is there anyone wishing to speak on amendment A3? The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Boutilier: Yeah. Well, this, of course, has been put forward regarding the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark's bill of rights, his patients' bill of rights, which is essentially a foundation and the ultimate pillar of, I believe, our health care system and our society. In my judgment, as I speak for the next 20 minutes, I don't think 20 minutes is going to allow me an ample amount of time to be able to speak to this issue. But I will endeavour to try to capture my colleagues relative to what is important in terms of the bill of rights that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark has put forward.

The reason why I think this is so important, first and foremost, is that of all the members that are in this Assembly, it's interesting to see that there is only one medical doctor in here. He is the one who was kicked out the PC caucus yesterday, and I understand it was unanimous. I must admit that I was thinking of when they kicked me out, Mr. Chair. You know what? They didn't kick me out; it was one person. I thought that if they had been in the room, they would have defended the honour of representing your constituents, but I guess not. They just simply did that.

The Acting Chair: Hon. member, I don't see any relevance to amendment A3 in your comments thus far. We are speaking about amendment A3 as proposed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, so if you would please continue on the amendment.

Mr. Boutilier: Well, thanks, Mr. Chair. The point that I was attempting to make was that the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, who put forward the bill of rights as a medical doctor and an ER doctor, clearly knows much more than, I think, any one of us in here. I believe that his bill of rights is an important one. The distinction I was making was that the bill of rights is something – he's no longer with the government. The relevance was that he's a doctor. So the government had a doctor, but now they don't. In fact, that being said, the relevance is that this bill of rights, I am absolutely impressed with. I think it reflects the spirit and the value of Albertans. Consequently, that's why I will be supporting this in Bill 17.

Now, let me go on further. I also think that it's very important that the doctor spoke with experience. He spoke with passion. He spoke about what he had been hearing from people in emergency rooms. How could we all not be intently listening to such passion when it comes from a front-line MLA and a front-line service provider, as a medical doctor, that now sits as an independent?

I'm very proud, Mr. Chair, to say that I, also, sat as an independent. The relevance, you may ask, of sitting as an independent is simply this: the bill of rights, in representing patients, is similar to the bill of rights of representing constituents. Proudly, we both sat as independents, him now, because of the relevance that he thought what was more important is the honour of representing his bosses as opposed to honouring something that's not there on the other side when it comes to knowing who your bosses are.

I see the chairmanship has changed. That's always a pleasure. I kind of was liking the other chairman, but of course I like this one, too.

The fact of the relevance is that the Bill 17 amendment is an important bill of rights. It's an important bill of rights because it's coming from an ER doctor who is an MLA. Now, I was waiting on this bill of rights to see if the new parliamentary secretary of health was going to retract the comments. I understand that's becoming a habit on that side because of the Minister of Energy wanting a retraction. So we were hoping that he would retract his comments relative to the relevance of the bill of rights where he said, I think last night in this Assembly, that the Canada Health Act just simply wasn't relevant to supporting the amendment. It's just not important enough. Well, the bill of rights is even more important, more important because it's talking about representing the values of Albertans and, also, the principles of Albertans.

Mr. Chairman, in my judgment the Bill 17 amendment should be supported by everyone. This will give members across the way, the PC caucus, a chance that they never had – and this is their chance – to stand up and to vote unanimously in support of the amendment. Of course, the minister of health has stood in this Assembly on this Bill 17 amendment and said that he will not support it. That's been on the public record. Then after saying that, I'm very pleased to say that I saw members from this side and this side and that side say: we believe that this is a good amendment, first of all, because it's coming from someone who actually knows what they're talking about.

It was interesting. The comment made was, I think, knucklehead, and "knucklehead" is an interesting word. What is a knucklehead when it comes to Bill 17? Well, the direct reference was that there are a lot of knuckleheads that are existing when it comes to the issue of a bill of rights for patients. Rather than a bureaucracy, this bill of rights will be able to cut through that red tape, and that's comforting to know. Retrieving the community capital that's been lost by the Alberta superboard, that's how he framed it, and from an emergency doctor, I can only say that I concur with his observations. I'm sure that he's proudly looking at himself in the mirror tonight knowing he stood up for the principles and the values of Albertans. What more could any constituency ask of their MLA, rather than toeing the party line and thinking that there's a person over there in the front row that thinks they're your boss?

In the upcoming electoral boundary we just did – I forget; I think it was Bill 28 – the relevance is that the real bosses will determine if the bill of rights is the correct thing. If, in fact, you support the bill of rights that is being put in here with the Bill 17 amendment, will you be rewarded in the next event? We will quickly determine that we will have to listen to our bosses. Some may not like the answers to what our bosses will be saying. But I do say that the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, clearly, in my judgment, is directly connected to the information on the front line as an ER doctor but even more to Albertans because of their values.

It was interesting that there was something like over 400 or 500 comments already on the relevance of the Bill 17 amendment and on helping people in the bill of rights. So I think that this is very, very important, and it would be interesting to hear comments from others in this room. I do believe that I have 20 minutes to speak on this issue, which means I have more time to speak, so I want to take full advantage of my time to speak. I can see the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake listening intently. I thank the honourable gentleman for listening to my words of wisdom. It is so nice that he is listening to my words of wisdom. I know he got upset earlier tonight.

The relevance of this is that the bill of rights for patients and for Albertans is our principal responsibility as MLAs. Our principal responsibility as MLAs is to ensure that patients have a bill of rights, and not only a bill of rights, Mr. Chairman, but a bill of rights that will ensure – contrary to what the minister of health seemed to think, when he said he would not support this, I believe that he should support this, and maybe even the former minister of health should support this.

You know, I had accused him, Mr. Chairman, at one point of being full of gibberish. There is no shadow of doubt in my mind that the hon. member actually occasionally has a good idea. In fact, the one good idea that I heard in this very House, when we talk about a bill of rights, was that he didn't throw oil sands companies under the bus like the Premier and the Minister of Environment did.

It's interesting that our bosses – our bosses – have often told us that we should listen to them. I'm listening to them, but I'm also listening to an ER doctor who also happens to serve the people of Alberta. I know that he knows it's an honour and a privilege to do that, and I can only say and confess that he's indeed one of the smartest MLAs that I've met, and a passionate MLA, without any doubt in my mind, is the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Have you noticed I'm not using any names? I'm using the constituency name. Until that standing order is amended at a further date, I will continue to not use the coffee-talk name, rather the Edmonton-Meadowlark name. It's a teachable moment tonight, Mr. Chair, so I congratulate you for that.

I'm so pleased to say that then there are no other interruptions. Because of that fact, I am able to divert my entire amount of energy to the words of the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, which is a bill of rights for patients. Think about that for a moment, a bill of rights for patients. What a novel idea. It's like putting a safety net under Albertans because, God only knows, we need a safety net for all Albertans right now based on the crisis that we are faced with.

I know that on this important issue of health care there has been reference made to the Cookie Monster. I won't make any reference to the gentleman's name, pertaining to the bill of rights, but I can say that the Cookie Monster, who was referred to as the CEO of the superboard, is not the issue. The issue is the superboard itself. Under a bill of rights – they don't have a bill of rights right now, but under the superboard, essentially, the Cookie Monster is gone. But what about Ernie and Bert? They have to go next. I mean, Ernie and Bert – you can determine who they are, but clearly the former minister of health and the chair of the superboard are also some things that have to go. Rather than retracting, just simply going would serve that purpose very well.

I have had this direct discussion, Mr. Chair, on the bill of rights, regarding the important initiatives that are being done. Can you imagine if I were to say in here: it's either him or me. That gives a new meaning to democracy. But he appears to have sold a bill of rights in terms of convincing members of the PC caucus that an ER doctor in an ER crisis is not important enough. Nothing could be further from the truth. I would trust my son's life and my wife's life with this doctor. I know many members in here have sought his advice, and actually, in doing so, he espouses the bill of rights in protecting patients each and every day.

I believe that, clearly, tonight is about honouring the spirit of what the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark has brought here. That's why I am here now at 1:30 in the morning, that's why Hansard is here at 1:30 in the morning, because of the fact that we're honouring the spirit of what the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark represents in the patient bill of rights.

In other words, we need a safety net. And why do we need a safety net? Because of the mess that has been created. Not that it was created deliberately, but it started with the former minister of health, and now it continues with this minister of health. You know, the CEO has been basically fired tonight, but I find it ironic that the chairman of the board is still there – that's like the fox in the henhouse – who was appointed by the former minister of health. I don't think Albertans will be fooled by this, but they will support a bill of rights relative to Bill 17.

I am beginning to get somewhat of a dry mouth at this point. I am so eager to listen to others, but I would really like, Mr. Chair, to use my time for the 20 minutes because I'm usually not short on words. In fact, I've sometimes been occasionally . . .

Mr. Anderson: You can stop and take a drink if you want.

Mr. Boutilier: Yeah, I think I'll stop and take a drink, but I don't want to lose my spot, Mr. Chair. Beautiful, blue gold.

Well, Mr. Chair, I will say that I look forward to continuing to debate this issue throughout the entire evening to honour the spirit and the values that the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark has brought forward. Actually, we had an interesting discussion this afternoon on the intent of what his bill amendment was. It was so interesting for him to make reference to the fact that his oath that he took as a doctor versus his oath that he took as an MLA, there was an appearance of conflict, conflict from the perspective that he needs to be, first and foremost, for his constituents.

As we go forward, Mr. Chairman, I believe that this bill amendment is a very good initiative. It is a new idea. A new idea is like a newborn child: you have to feed it, you have to nurture it, you have to allow it to grow, you have to protect it. You have to keep enemies away from good ideas. First and foremost, this is a good idea.

Again, the hon. member has just been kicked out of the PC caucus, and why? For standing up for the rights of patients. Good for him for doing that, standing up for the rights of patients, standing up for Albertans. So, Mr. Chairman, I believe . . .

The Deputy Chair: Carry on.

Mr. Boutilier: Oh, I wasn't sure if everyone was listening, but I'm glad to see everyone is. I'm glad to see the member from down south here. I know he has a camera and likes to take lots of pictures. But, in my judgment, I'm glad to see he's paying attention as well, from Strathmore-Brooks.

In fact, speaking of Strathmore-Brooks, the former member from there was a medical doctor as well. He was a medical doctor actually that, again, showed the same type of vision that this medical doctor has shown, and for that I congratulate him. He is no longer a member of this Assembly, but he is still a medical doctor. In fact I spoke to him earlier . . . [A cellphone rang] I thought I heard a band, Mr. Chairman, playing on that side of the House, but I must have been . . .

Mr. Hancock: Do not ask for whom the bell tolls.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo has the floor.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Chair, for recognizing that I have the floor. Obviously, the Minister of Education didn't know that I have the floor. But I do have the floor, and I have the floor to talk about a bill of rights, a bill of rights that he should be absolutely compelled to support, to the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. Perhaps he can't, through the chair, because he doesn't want to be whipped for not following the party line, a party that has thrown a doctor out because of the fact that he stood up for patients' rights. My goodness. Really. To the Minister of Education, I'm actually disappointed in you, that you would not stand for the very principles – the very principles – and values.

Now, we could always have a point of order. I could see the pose of a point of order. That would be really nice. I think he doesn't want to speak about the issue of the bill of rights that the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark so astutely put forth because he's a doctor. He's a doctor. He's not a lawyer; he's a doctor. He actually knows something that's going on.

Mr. Chair, I want to say that whatever profession you're in, I know they are all noble professions. Certainly, serving in this House is a noble calling. As we all know, the time that we take to be here, which takes time away from our loved ones and our families, is okay. For those that travel hundreds of kilometres to be here, that speaks to the very principle of what the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark was espousing when he put forward a patient bill of rights, when it comes to that issue.

Mr. Chairman, I want to say tonight that this clearly, in my judgment . . . [Mr. Boutilier's speaking time expired] What I wanted to say is that my time is up. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate your creating the chance – I just need to confirm: how many minutes do I have?

The Deputy Chair: Twenty.

An Hon. Member: It seems like forever.

Dr. Taft: It is 20. Some of these speeches seem to go on forever. That's right.

I haven't had a chance to speak to this particular amendment yet. It was moved this afternoon. I have to sort out my thoughts on this as I listen to the debate. I hope the debate is widespread. We have had some brief discussion on this in our caucus, and I believe that our leader is in favour of this motion, but I just want to explore what it means.

There are two paragraphs to the amendment, and it comes under the section which I think the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo was calling a patient bill of rights. It's actually a health charter, but I just want to be clear here. So under Health Charter it would add a couple of paragraphs. In effect the first paragraph would cause Bill 17 to read that the health charter must "include as guiding principles that no unnecessary deaths, no unnecessary harm to patients, no unnecessary delays in care and no unnecessary waste of resources should occur." That would be part of the effect of this amendment.

A couple of issues come to mind. I'm sure that the spirit of this is something we'd all agree to. Who wants unnecessary deaths or harm and so on? It does raise – and maybe this is just semantics.

Hopefully, all deaths in an emergency room or a hospital are unnecessary as opposed to necessary. I don't know. [interjection] We could have this discussion so Airdrie-Chestermere could explain to me what would be a necessary death or what would be necessary harm, for example. But that's perhaps just semantics.

My concern with this is the practicality. If we pass a law that says there must be a charter that includes guiding principles that no unnecessary deaths, no unnecessary harm to patients, no unnecessary delays in care, no unnecessary waste of resources should occur, then what happens if those things do occur? What are the consequences? There's no other provision in Bill 17 to impose penalties or sanctions or anything if it's violated. So one of the first questions I have is: what's the effect of this? If we pass this, it's still kind of: so what? Because if there is an unnecessary death, it doesn't say that would trigger an investigation or there will be penalties or anything like that.

The other thing that's even more fundamental than that is that just because we pass a law, that doesn't mean that any of this is actually going to happen, and this is actually one of my concerns with this bill in general. We can talk all we like and put all the wonderful words on paper in this Assembly and turn them into laws, but outside of the walls of this Chamber, it doesn't change anything, certainly not necessarily. If we pass a law that says there shall be no unnecessary deaths in hospitals, it doesn't mean they're not going to happen, so I'm struggling with: what's the point of this first paragraph?

Surely, it's already clear to anybody working in the system that they're not going to cause unnecessary deaths. Doctors and nurses and health professionals have oaths that already preclude this from happening or already commit them to the first principle of medicine: thou shalt do no harm. I may be rambling a bit because it's so late in the night, but I'm not quite sure what the point of that is.

The second part of the amendment is more specific. I must begin by thanking the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, my neighbour here, who has brought to my attention the background document that's referred to in this amendment. What this second paragraph of the amendment would do would be to cause Bill 17 to say that the health charter must set standards for lengths of stay in the emergency departments of hospitals consistent with the "Position Statement on Emergency Department Overcrowding" published by the Canadian Association of Emergency Physicians and dated February 2007.

Now, what this is referring to are the famous benchmarks that we've heard quite a lot of discussion about. In fact, a week or two ago I tabled in this Assembly photocopies of pages from an Alberta Health Services report from earlier this year that included their benchmarks, which had been announced the day before by the minister of health as if they were brand new. In fact they'd been there for months and months.

Anyway, I am quoting here from the Canadian Association of Emergency Physicians' February 2007 Position Statement on Emergency Department Overcrowding. These benchmarks say:

1. That emergency department (ED) length of stay benchmarks be established nationally as follows:
 - (i) ED length of stay not to exceed six hours in 95% of cases for CTAS Level I, II and III patients.

I'm trying to remember what CTAS stands for, but it's essentially the severity. I think maybe triage assessment system or something like that. It's the severity of ailment that the person has.

- (ii) ED length of stay not to exceed four hours in 95% of cases for CTAS Level IV and V patients.

Then, actually, this document goes on at some length, and I suppose I'd better read this into the record because it's crucial to this debate.

Mr. MacDonald: I think you should because it hasn't been done. It was just referred to on the Internet.

Dr. Taft: My esteemed colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar is telling me that this hasn't been read into the record, and it's vital because it's actually directly quoted in the amendment.

2. That all admitted patients must be transferred out of the emergency department to an in-patient area within two hours of decision to admit.
3. That overcapacity protocols be rapidly implemented to allow Canadian hospitals to meet the national emergency department length of stay benchmarks until functional acute care capacity is sufficient.
4. That achievement of these benchmarks must be continually measured and ED length of stay should be documented on a daily basis by hospitals for all patients, and reviewed monthly. Hospital and Regional administrators should be held accountable if the throughput standards are not met.
5. That hospitals optimize bed management strategies to ensure the appropriate use of existing and future acute care beds.
6. That governments sufficiently increase the number of functional acute care beds to achieve regular hospital occupancy rates that do not exceed 85%.

Now, for Hansard's purposes this is on the web if you search the Canadian Association of Emergency Physicians, February 2007.

There's a lot in these standards that's contemplated in this amendment, and I actually rather like – in fact, I think there's an enormously important figure here in paragraph 6 of these standards. I have cited this many times over the years, and it's just been dismissed. It says here, "that governments sufficiently increase the number of functional acute care beds to achieve regular hospital occupancy rates that do not exceed 85%." For years it's been known in hospital circles that the optimal occupancy rate for a hospital is about 85 per cent, and if we have it below that, we're not really being efficient, but if we start to creep too far above that, various problems emerge. One is that you have no surge capacity, you have increased wait times, and so on. But you actually lose efficiency. As you approach a hundred per cent, you lose efficiency.

When I've tried to explain this to people, I use an analogy of a kitchen. If you have a kitchen that's designed for two people to work in and you have three people in it, you start becoming inefficient. If you have four people, you're bumping into each other, and you can't open the fridge, and you throw in an elbow because you're trying . . .

Ms Blakeman: And then you spill something.

Dr. Taft: Yeah.

Hospitals, just like kitchens, when they're working at overcapacity, efficiency goes down. What do we have in Alberta and what have we had in Alberta for the better part of 15 years: hospitals that are at a hundred per cent or 110 per cent capacity. We wonder why costs are so high and efficiencies are poor. The same reason that a kitchen can't function properly when there are too many workers in the kitchen. We need to build hospitals. Please. There's a bunch of cabinet ministers here. Please. You'll improve our system dramatically if you can meet that standard.

That used to be the standard: 85 per cent. So if there's a bus crash, you've got surge room. If there's a flu epidemic, you've got surge room. Day to day you don't have doctors and nurses spending hours and hours trying to find a bed because there's a bed available. I'm really excited about this particular stance because I kind of thought, "God, the world has moved on," and it hasn't. That is a historically mandated standard. So I like this paragraph in this amendment quite a lot.

Mr. Hancock: The question is: should it be here, or should it be in the context of all the benchmarks that we need to have?

Dr. Taft: The Member for Edmonton-Whitemud is making some good points. I hope you rise and make those. The question he, I believe, raises – I don't want to put words in his mouth – is: is the Alberta Health Act the right place to put these standards? I think the point is that they need to be put in legislation somewhere because if they aren't put into legislation, we lose accountability, and we have lost that badly.

I want to move back in this discussion to earlier paragraphs in this Canadian Association of Emergency Physicians position paper, and that is to paragraph 1, that says that "length of stay benchmarks be established . . . not to exceed six hours in 95% of cases for CTAS Level I, II and III patients." I wasn't quite right. CTAS stands for Canadian triage and acuity scale. I thought it was Canadian triage assessment system, but I was wrong.

Anyway, I think one of the things we need to think through in this amendment is the kind of chicken-and-egg effect here because until we get our hospital capacity so that hospitals are only functioning at 85 per cent capacity, I don't know that we can meet these benchmarks. What those benchmarks assume is that there's actually enough capacity normally available in a hospital that people can be moved through emergency into the hospital. For us to get that capacity opened up, we need to significantly increase the number of hospital beds.

I just want to return to this point here: in a timely fashion. One of the problems that I think we've had in our health care system for a number of years is that we have refused to have health care professionals in charge of the system. I actually quoted the former minister of health, who is now the Minister of Energy. When he appointed the Alberta Health Services Board, he said that the last thing he wanted was health care professionals on the Health Services Board. I was startled at that, and I challenged him. I said: if you were running an oil company, would you say that the last thing you want on your executive team are experts in the oil industry or that if you were running an airline, the last thing you would want on your board is people who know how to run airlines? It just struck me as crazy.

Then what do we do? We the government go out and hire an economist to be in charge of the health care system. Now, I don't want to necessarily wade into this debate, because it's not over, but an economist is naturally going to want to run things just instinctively at a hundred per cent capacity. Anything less than that, in the mind of an economist, is inefficient. But, actually, a health care professional will tell you that a hundred per cent capacity is inefficient. We have an economist who has constantly kept the screws on the system: "Oh, it's got to be 100 per cent. It's got to be 110. If we can get it to 100, let's get it to 110," not realizing that, in fact, he's breaking the system. The system is broken.

How do we fix it? We need to fix it by getting a little bit of slack in the system. I perhaps shouldn't use the word "slack," but you just need that. Then suddenly you'll be astonished at how much better it will run. Until we get to that point – I don't know – I don't think it's possible to meet these emergency room standards of six hours. So there's a tension, a paradox in this. If we adopt this in the Alberta Health Act, I don't know how we would ever make it work. Of course, again, because there are no consequences if they don't make it work, then maybe it's just all rhetoric, anyway.

There are other aspects of this paper, the Canadian Association of Emergency Physicians paper, that need to be discussed further, but I am, I think, going to take my seat because I'm getting low on time and will engage in those debates later on.

Thank you.

1:50

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I think that it was – what was it? – 6 o'clock, so eight hours since they adjourned, and I wasn't able to finish my discussion at 6 this evening. Now we're back onto something that many individuals have been wanting to discuss, the very importance of amendment A3 to Bill 17, which has been brought forward by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Again, I've enjoyed the remarks by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview and his falling back on the 85 per cent capacity and the efficiency of it. There are so many areas that he brought up that I would also like to discuss a little bit. What are the ailments of our emergency room and overall health care system? Why is it that we actually need now to write a charter act that actually has some bite to it if, in fact, those time allocations are not met? This government has a terrible track record of saying that it's going to achieve this and then appeasing everybody but that we need six months to do it, that we need a year to do it. Right now with their new protocol, where they've brought everybody together, they say that we need 40 days to approve it. That's the problem when you try to run something like health care by a committee rather than someone in charge.

Earlier today I asked the Premier the direction that he was going and asked him to please dismantle the superboard in an orderly manner. That's the problem. Yet this government fails to see that that's the problem, so we'll continue going through here.

The 85 per cent bed capacity isn't a new concept in the medical field. It's been there for a long time, and it does make sense when you talk to someone who is running a hospital. It's always disappointing for an individual who has gone in for elective surgery only to find out that that surgery has been cancelled because there are no beds. These are the types of things where our operating rooms can't function at full capacity and our doctors can't operate because there are no beds available.

I want to go down a little different line of thinking than the Member for Edmonton-Riverview in that he says that we need to build more hospitals. I was talking to an emergency room doctor from the Peter Lougheed last week. He said: Paul, at any given time there are between 130 and 150 patients who have come in through the emergency room, and I have signed off and said that they can be discharged, but the transitional nurse said, "Well, no, they need to have their oxygen monitored for another four days" or "They need to take these antibiotics." They realize that if they send them home – it might be a senior who is on an absolute fixed income. Because they won't send the drugs home with them, they have to remain in the hospital for what might be a $70 or $90 drug charge. They won't send them home. Or someone needs to have their oxygen monitored, but there's nobody there to do it.

If you had a vertically integrated system, where the chief operating officer says that we need to hire more respiratory therapists that can actually go out and monitor these people, we could clear up the beds. I believe that in talking to these individuals, there are far more beds available if we would just actually move the people through. We don't necessarily need to have more senior care facilities – that certainly is one of the problems – but we won't even allow them to go back to their home residence because we won't follow up, which is all that's needed.

I also talked to this emergency room doctor, and he said: Paul, the absolute worst place for these individuals to be, especially because the majority of those people are coming in with congested breathing and breathing problems, is in the hospital. We can treat them. We can get, you know, the inflammation down and get them on oxygen, but the worst place to be is in the hospital. It gives them the highest chance of having a secondary problem because they're being exposed in a high-exposure area, and he said: we can't get them out.

He went on to talk about these transitional nurses and how they have to double-enter all of the data about those individuals into two systems because they're in the hospital and they're moving out. The IT doesn't even connect, so they have to actually double-enter. They spend a lot of time doing that. They can't even go and assess people where the doctor has said: "You know what? This person can go out." They're backlogged because of the paperwork or the double filing they have to do. They can't even go and assess them.

Mr. Chair, what's so disappointing is that there are so many answers by doctors, like the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, who work the system and actually know the problems because they've signed them off and said, "They can move out" or said: "Okay, you can move them up. They don't need to be in the emergency room. They need to be in acute care now for a week. We've signed them out of emergency. We've got them under control, but there are no beds." Why are there no beds? Because of who is stuck in those beds because there isn't a place to take them to, and there's no follow-up, which is far cheaper.

Think of the costs. I said, "Down south maybe the problem is that the cost of the respiratory therapist and them driving around just isn't efficient, and it takes too long. Maybe they can only see 12 in a day." He said, "Paul, if they can only see 12 in a day, if that's all they see in a day, that is far cheaper than to have all 12 of those people in beds, let alone one person, at $800 to $1,200 a day occupying a hospital bed." He said: it's not about the money; it's about a failed, disjointed, disconnected system that's not vertically integrated; myself as an ER doctor I do not have the authority to tell those people to move them out or to hire more respiratory therapists or to say: "You know what? Send home the antibiotics with this senior so that they can take them for a week, and let's have a nurse or an RN drop by and visit them."

There are so many areas. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark wants to put accountability in, where it says in (d): "set standards for lengths of stay in the emergency departments of hospitals consistent with the 'Position Statement on Emergency Department Overcrowding.'" He wants to put that in there in writing. I understand why the government says: oh, we can't afford to do that. Even though the answers are there, they refuse to do it. Now if they're going to be held accountable with legislation, they just look at this as an entire economic boondoggle, that they can't afford to do it.

I want to switch back now for a minute and talk about our Cookie Monster, who's been released of his duty, and go back and ask: why did we hire this individual? What's the position of this individual? How could he have helped Alberta Health Services if at all? Could he do that? This individual is an economist, but more interesting about him is that he's actually capable of going into a hospital like the Royal Alexandra and going through their financial statements and saying: "You know what? The actual cost of keeping someone in a bed in here" – this is going back to relevance, Mr. Chair, on why we need to get these people out. The time allocation will actually put the force through to the government to say: "You know what? We have to address this."

But why we don't address it is because we haven't had someone come in to actually nail down the costs of these different areas where we have patients stuck, and we don't actually look at the economic cost. We just look at: "It's not in my department, so it's okay. I can shuffle off the cost and the responsibility somewhere else." If we had a vertically integrated health care system and someone like Dr. Duckett went in and said, "Here's the actual cost; it really does cost us $850 a day to have someone sitting in this bed when we could send them home for a cost of $75 a day and clear that bed out" – the biggest problem that we face inside Alberta Health Services is that we do not know the actual cost, whether it's for an MRI, whether it's for setting a broken leg, whether it's for having to do a lung transplant. We don't know the costs, and to think that we have an individual that this government has paid $600,000, $700,000 a year to be here and we're not utilizing his talents is shameful.

What we've done is that we've hired someone who, let's say, is a quarterback of a team and said: "Oh, by the way, we want you to be the centre. The Grey Cup is coming up. We want you to be the centre." They've never done that position in their life before. They're not educated or built for it, yet we put them there, and then when it fails, we say, "Well, we'll get someone new in that position." It isn't going to work. But if the government was held accountable with legislation like this, they would be far more likely to say: "You know what? We have to address this. We have to be honest with ourselves and realize that this is not working effectively. It's not working efficiently. It's costing lives."

I mean, right in here it says: "include as guiding principles that no unnecessary deaths, no unnecessary harm to patients, no unnecessary delays in care and no unnecessary waste of resources should occur." Mr. Chair, all of those are occurring in our current system. We've had unnecessary deaths. We've had unnecessary harm to patients. When the overcrowding is there, when there are too many cooks in the kitchen, it increases the number of mistakes, and it's impacting on people's lives. It's impacting on the patients and it has harmed.

Unnecessary delays. That's what happens every day when someone has had the unfortunate situation where they have to go to the emergency room because of a medical ailment. They go in there, and they are unable to be treated because of the backlog just sitting there. Way too many unnecessary delays in care.

Unnecessary waste of resources. What does that mean? To me the first and foremost resource that we have is the actual workers in the health care system. How many of them are not being used to full capacity? Even the ER doctor that I talked to said, "You know, it would be so much help to have an input person that is inputting our data." He said that there could be a possible increase in data error for doing that. What he would really like and does not have – when he's charting his patients and following them through, every day he has to start over. There isn't a cut and paste. There isn't a file that he adds to. It's day 3 and he has to enter all the data again. Again, it makes no sense, yet there's no overall CEO that they can go to and say: "Look. This is the problem. What can you do to solve it?"

There are just so many aspects in all of these areas where we could and would do better if there was an incentive whereby these hospitals received bonuses on merit. You know, it goes back to before we amalgamated – I said "we" again; I guess I'm like Edmonton-Riverview – before they amalgamated into one super-board. There are different hospitals around the province. Again, we had so many. It's always a little disappointing to hear the Premier talk about these 300 health boards when all we had was 121 acute-care facilities. I don't think that we had two health boards, Mr. Chair, for every facility. That would only make it 240.

Again, the fearmongering that is being put out there is disappointing. They're not addressing the full thing. That isn't what anybody is advocating for, 300 boards. I don't know why the Premier keeps bringing that up in question period. It's not accurate. It's not true. There never were 300 health boards in this province. I don't know who his researchers are or who brings that stuff.

Those are the points on why we need accountability, why we need to ensure that we're using our resources to full capacity, but as pointed out so eloquently here tonight, full capacity means 85 per cent. That's optimum. That's where we actually have the breathing room to be able to absorb these when the flu epidemic comes or whatever else so that people can come in and move through.

To go back to Dr. Duckett, his specialty is to look at the actual costs of those things. When you actually have costs, you can make better decisions, whether it's some of the diagnostic clinics that we have outside of our hospitals – it's amazing the efficiencies that they have there. I had a frozen shoulder for some time and went into the diagnostic clinic. It was, you know, a private clinic but publicly funded. The doctors were excellent. The efficiencies were there. It was quite amazing. But the question for someone like Dr. Duckett is: what's the cost to Alberta Health Services to have me go to this separate clinic versus waiting and going to a hospital and taking up room in a hospital with diagnostic equipment there that needs to be ready in case of an emergency? On the reverse side, because those emergencies are happening, they can't schedule and adequately move patients through on a regular basis.

What we need to do – and what we realize here is that this government's credibility, this government's trust factor has been thrown out the window. Albertans are upset that there's no movement forward. Two and half years ago was when this first report came forward to show the problems in our emergency rooms. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark gave up his daily charge, where he was working on those people, to come here because he was told: we're going to change these things. Two and a half years later, as he pointed out earlier – and I guess we call it today in Hansard because it's still the same day – the Premier finally called these people together to meet, two and a half years after that promise was given. So now the promise is fulfilled, but they say that it's going to take 40 days to put this information together to see if we can come up with new protocols on how to deal with people in the emergency room.

I humbly submit to the chair that we already have people in those hospitals that know what to do tomorrow. The problem is that our rules and our regulations have at no other time been so literal that they're actually regulating people to death. That is very, very sad, that when we have an emergency, we have people, we have doctors sitting there wanting to respond, but they're not allowed to. We really and truly have reached the point in the province of Alberta where we're regulating people to death. We talk about that all the time about businesses, but now the Alberta advantage has been lost so much that we're actually doing it to human beings. It has become a literal effect now, and we've had way too many Albertans that have fallen into that category.

Mr. Chair, I have to say that I'm very much in favour of the intent of this amendment. I'm looking forward to the hon. member giving some explanations. There have been some good questions, so I don't want to go over those again for the hon. member to answer. But the bottom line is that this government has brought forward Bill 17 to be another – I don't know whether you'd call it a white flag or their surrender; I call it another paper promise. It's paper-thin. What the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark is trying to do is: let's write it and legislate it. Let's not make it paper-thin. Let's just not make it a hope, a whim, a thought, a wonderful oration of what we dream to have here for Alberta Health Services, for health care. It's not worth the paper.

There's just a lack of trust, a lack of delivery, a lack of understanding that goes very deep in this government on what the problem is with the health care system. They continue to think that if we centralize the power, if we centralize the decision-making, if we centralize the money and we dictate where it goes, somehow they'll get a handle on it. They're not. It's getting out of control at an unprecedented rate. The minister talked about the 18 per cent, and he said: "Oh, no. That was before we centralized."

You know, it's interesting the points he brings up and that he says how important centralization is and the $600 million, I think, that he claims that they've saved. I would surely like to see them actually provide a paper and track the money that's being spent and show us where they're saving $600 million. On the inverse, on the new royalty framework they were going to get $1.4 billion; this one they were going to save $1.4 billion, yet it has cost us more. Both of them are faulty ideas. They're not going to work, and Albertans are very disappointed. Again, we've had a scapegoat today . . . [Mr. Hinman's speaking time expired]

2:10

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I just wanted to continue discussing the details concerning the document that's specifically named in the second paragraph of this amendment. Can you remind me: is this amendment A3?

The Deputy Chair: Yes, A3.

Dr. Taft: Amendment A3. Okay. Thank you.

So once again, just for the purposes of the record, I'm quoting from the position statement on emergency department overcrowding from the Canadian Association of Emergency Physicians of February 2007. It's a position that has six paragraphs, or six points, to it. I discussed paragraph 6 initially because that's the one that talks about getting hospitals to a regular hospital occupancy rate that does not exceed 85 per cent. To me that ought to be our long-term goal. We haven't been at that goal in more than 15 years, and it's no coincidence that it's also those 15 years that we've had such problems. The challenge is that it's going to be years to get to that point. It means building physical capacity and training thousands of staff.

I then went from that paragraph to paragraph 1, which speaks about the benchmarks of six hours for patients who are levels 1, 2, or 3 on the Canadian triage and acuity scale, and four hours in 95 per cent of cases for levels 4 and 5 patients on the Canadian triage and acuity scale. My concern that I was raising concerning paragraph 1 is: how in the world do we meet those benchmarks when we have hospitals that are operating at 100 per cent to 110 per cent capacity? I was and I am skeptical that those benchmarks can be met.

It is worth noting in paragraphs 2, 3, 4, and 5 of this statement that the emergency physicians have actually given this some specific thought and laid out some guidelines. Paragraph 2 states: "That all admitted patients must be transferred out of the emergency department to an in-patient area within two hours of decision to admit." In effect, that's another benchmark. That's saying that if you go to emergency as a patient, if the medical staff assesses you and says that this person, you, must be admitted, then this benchmark says that within two hours you actually have to be transferred out of emergency into an in-patient area. So that's an additional benchmark.

Then paragraph 3 begins to frankly address reality. Reality is that we don't have those in-patient areas. We don't have any excess capacity that we can move people from emergency into. Paragraph 3 reads: “That overcapacity protocols be rapidly implemented to allow Canadian hospitals to meet the national emergency department length of stay benchmarks until functional acute care capacity is sufficient.” So they are beginning here, in paragraph 3, to admit that there is a capacity problem and that overcapacity protocols need to be implemented and need to be implemented rapidly. Now, what in the world is an overcapacity protocol? Well, essentially, it’s a series of steps formally laid out to follow when an emergency room is over capacity. That might mean transferring them to a medical assessment unit or opening extra beds in the women’s pavilion of the Royal Alex or whatever the protocols might be. It doesn’t get that specific here.

Paragraph 4 of this document reads:

That achievement of these benchmarks must be continually measured and ED length of stay should be documented on a daily basis by hospitals for all patients, and reviewed monthly. Hospital and Regional administrators should be held accountable if the throughput standards are not met.

Essentially, what this would mean, Mr. Chairman, is that every day all of the patients coming into an emergency room are tracked, and how long they are in there and where they go is tracked, and those are documented and compiled every day. If you were the site manager there or the chief of the emergency department, each morning you’d come in and you’d get a report: yesterday we had 49 patients come in, and a certain number met the benchmark, and a certain number didn’t, and some went into in-patient treatment, and some were discharged. That would be made available every day.

It says here in these standards, “documented on a daily basis by hospitals” and then reviewed monthly. So once a month, presumably, there would be a meeting of all the senior management, and they would say: “Okay. How are we doing? How are we going to do better? Are we meeting our benchmarks? If we’re not, what are we going to do to meet them?”

Then it says – and this is crucial, something really missing in the system right now – “Hospital and Regional administrators should be held accountable.” Well, certainly, those numbers are not published, as far as I know. Actually, I might stand to be corrected on that because there’s so much information out there. You know, Mr. Chairman, I just need to pause and think here because, in fact, I think those numbers are published at least on a quarterly basis.

My question, then, would be to the Minister of Health and Wellness: what is being done to hold hospitals accountable? I’m looking right now at the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake and, even more importantly, the Member for Red Deer-North. The Red Deer regional hospital, Mr. Chairman, has one of the worst performing emergency rooms in the province. How do we know that? Because those numbers are actually published. So I’ve talked myself in a complete circle. Those numbers are published.

Then my question to the Member for Red Deer-North is: what’s being done to hold that hospital to account for failing to meet those benchmarks? When the Red Deer regional hospital emergency room has some of the slowest, longest waiting lists for admission and so on – maybe the Member for Red Deer-North will rise and engage in this debate – how are those people being held to account? To be honest, that shouldn’t directly be our job. That should be the job of somebody in the system. But when month after month after month you don’t see the improvement, then we’re the ones as MLAs who hear about it, and we’re the ones as MLAs who begin asking questions. So I hope the Member for Red Deer-North will speak to that.

Number 4, actually, is doable, and we are, at least I think, most of the way to doing that in Alberta, so that’s a good thing. Then number 5 from this position paper from the emergency physicians reads “that hospitals optimize bed management strategies to ensure the appropriate use of existing and future acute care beds.” That’s kind of a motherhood statement, to be honest, Mr. Chairman. Any management team in a hospital ought to be optimizing their bed management. Of course, in Alberta as a system we haven’t done a very good job of that because we are allowing far too many long-term care patients to be in our acute-care beds.

I had a call the other day from a physician at the Royal Alex telling me that about 200 of the beds at the Royal Alex were taken up by people waiting to be discharged into long-term care. I know from a week ago, because I was in there visiting a relative, that in the Sturgeon hospital 30 to 40 per cent of their beds – and that’s a significant hospital for this region – were taken up by people waiting for long-term care.

There’s a semantic game that gets played in here when we raise these issues. The minister pops up and talks about all of the continuing care beds and all of the assisted living and so on. What we need in this province is long-term care, what used to be auxiliary hospitals and nursing homes. If you’re sick enough to be spending weeks in an acute-care hospital, you’re not going to get discharged to assisted living. You’re going to need to go to, quote, a nursing home. When the minister talks about continuing care beds, those are not nursing home beds. So there’s a kind of semantic dodging that goes on in this Assembly which is quite frustrating.

The question raised by these standards would be: are hospitals managing their beds optimally when it comes to acute care? The answer would be, clearly, no. It’s one of the mysteries to me, Mr. Chairman, why we aren’t doing a better job on this in this government.

It may well be the case that passing this amendment and actually putting this into law is the only way that we’ll actually force something on the issue, but I’m not even convinced that’ll work because if they break this law, there’s no consequence. Nobody is going to go to jail. Nobody is going to get reprimanded.

An Hon. Member: I don’t know if we want jail time for them.

Dr. Taft: Maybe they shouldn’t go to jail. That’s fair enough. But there’s no consequence at all.

Again, I keep returning to this theme: is this bill really worth the paper it’s printed on? I can hear from some of the sounds around me that other members have the same sense of skepticism.

Mr. Chairman, I think that pretty well wraps up my comments on those six paragraphs in that position statement from the Canadian Association of Emergency Physicians. That, then, leaves among many questions unanswered the one that I mentioned a moment ago, which is: why hasn’t this government acted sooner, and why are we having to bring this sort of thing forward?

I was elected to this Assembly early in 2001, and I was made the health critic. In 2002 we produced in the Alberta Liberal caucus a very extensive health policy. I was reviewing that either today or yesterday, and I’ll bring it with me later in the debate, Mr. Chairman. But in 2002 we talked at length about emergency room overcrowding and the need to address it, and we had various solutions which are along the lines of those being proposed now, eight years later.

In 2006 we updated that health policy, and in a rather infamous and inglorious moment in this Legislative Assembly we sent it over to the then Premier, Ralph Klein, who announced – and I think this is in Hansard – “I don’t want this crap,” and he threw it at the page. Well, you know what was in there? In 2006 we were calling for solutions to emergency room overcrowding that are very much like these now.

So my question to the members of this Assembly – I see the new parliamentary assistant for health care is over there, and I appreciate he's paying attention – why haven't we acted more effectively and sooner? These are not new problems. They're all over the front pages in the last few weeks, but these have been around for 10 years and more, and all they've done is get worse and worse and worse.

Sometimes I get offended in here by the kind of joking and banter because we forget that behind these stories are real people, real people who have died, real people who have suffered, real families who go to an emergency room and are told that it's going to be days, and in the process they watch a loved one suffer and, too often, pass away. We forget that behind these policy debates are real human beings, and we're much too quick to dismiss that.

I'd invite any member of the government to stand up and explain why we have let these very serious problems fester so badly for so long when they've been broadly identified by the opposition and all kinds of other people for a decade or more. If we had solved them, you know, the smallest achievement is that we wouldn't be sitting here at 2:25 a.m. debating them. The much more important achievement is that countless thousands of people would have got the emergency care they needed. I hope that somebody on the government side gives me some explanation of why all these years have gone by and this problem hasn't been more effectively addressed.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I thought those were insightful comments by the Member for Edmonton-Riverview. I thought that he had some very interesting things to say there. He is right on this, that a piece of legislation such as Bill 17 in its current form is worthless without any way of enforcing it. Of course, the way that you enforce it is worth having a debate over. Obviously, someone should not go to jail for not meeting the benchmarks, but that's not what we're talking about.

What I think we could tie to those benchmarks is remuneration of some kind to the person overseeing it. We could have a person who's responsible for implementing this procedure at the individual hospital; in other words, if you had a local chief medical officer at each of the hospitals with an emergency room in it, as the Wildrose Alliance has been proposing, if you had that chief medical officer – it would be a doctor, generally, an on-staff doctor – that had the authority to open up beds in other places in the hospital, other wards, if there was a backlog. If certain things occurred, he or she would have that authority to open those beds, to move people, to do what needed to be done to achieve those targets. If you had that in place, that would be, I think, how you could get those benchmarks accomplished.

If they were unable to achieve those benchmarks, if they consistently missed them, they would be penalized somehow, whether that would be that they wouldn't receive part of their salary or, if it was consistent over time, they wouldn't continue on in that position as chief medical officer for that hospital, that delivery room. These are some things that you could do to enforce those benchmarks. You cannot have benchmarks without any kind of accountability, without any kind of enforcement. Obviously, we're not talking about criminal enforcement. Obviously, that's not what we're talking about. If you put someone in charge and there's accountability and they're given the authority to do what they need to do within the hospitals to achieve those benchmarks, then I think that it would do a lot of good.

I will say this, that I have incredible respect for the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. He's just a wonderful person and human being, and he's so passionate about health care and about helping people. He hates seeing needless suffering. I just have so much respect for people who leave a job, a position like that, take a huge cut in pay, and come and try to serve this Assembly and try to serve the people. I remember so many nights where some of the rookie MLAs, when we first got elected, would get together, and we would talk about the things we were passionate about until sometimes all hours of the morning. I just remember the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark talking so many times about the health care system and all the things that we could do better. That just really was what drove him.

He does a lot of volunteer work – I don't know if he's done it since he's become a member because, obviously, it's hard to juggle – with, you know, Doctors without Borders or whatever they're called. He goes to India and does a whole bunch of charity work there and does a whole bunch of different stuff. It's all about health care for him. He's just so passionate about it. I think that he's also an exceptionally smart individual – exceptionally smart – a genius in a lot of areas.

One of those areas, obviously, is the understanding of medicine. Another area of that, I think, is the understanding of the business side or kind of the technical side of an emergency room. He understands where the blockages are. He understands them clearly because he saw them every day, and he still sees them every week when he's doing his shift, usually on Sundays. He sees everything first-hand. He has a first-hand knowledge.

What's so spectacular about having him in this Assembly is that we don't have to worry. We don't have to spend millions of dollars on consultants or advisers or doing all these expensive studies. We don't need that because we have an expert on it in the room. Now, obviously, we'd want to confirm with other such experts, but they have been. If you talk with Dr. Paul Parks, if you talk with some of these other folks, as we have done as a caucus about this issue, you're finding that what they are saying is lining up with what the good doctor from Edmonton-Meadowlark is proposing. It's not like he woke up one day and said: "You know what? I've got an idea. We're going to pull this out of a hat. We're going to legislate these wait times" and never gave any thought to it. He's been thinking about this. This is almost like his life's work.

He's so passionate about our health care system, in particular making sure that our emergency room system is solid, and how does this government treat him? Well, he speaks out about health care, and the Minister of Energy gets hurt feelings, and he's booted from caucus. I mean, it's beyond belief, really, that people would treat him in that way, just thinking what he could bring to the table. I mean, good grief. It's caucus solidarity gone absolutely amok. In any case, he's still in this Legislature. He's not on the government side, but he's still here. I think the whole point of this debate – and it will be for a while – is to hear this hon. member bring forth his ideas for health care.

I tell you that they're going to have to shut the doors and lock the gates, et cetera, before we're going to sit down, until there are an emergency room plan and legislated wait times for emergency rooms put in place under this legislation. Ultimately, it's up to the government. Obviously, they have a huge majority. But we are going to do our part with our caucus of four, making sure that we support the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark in making sure that at the end of the day we have legislated wait times for our emergency rooms and some sort of accountability so that we could say that we left this session this year and have accomplished something good, and we've taken a first step.

It's not the last step. There's so much work to be done in our health care system. It almost hurts the brain to think about how much there is to do and how many different aspects there are. With regard to emergency wait times there actually are a few simple things that we could do, and this is one of them. I think it's very critical that we do so, and I look forward to hearing that member's comments as we move forward.

All right. I want to go over this document because it's part of the amendment. The amendment was a movement to amend section 2(2) in Bill 17. Section 2(2), of course, is the health charter, and it talks about what the health charter must contain. Section 2(2) says that the health charter must

- (a) recognize that health is a partnership among individuals, families, communities, health providers, organizations that deliver health services, and the Government of Alberta, and
- (b) acknowledge the impact of an individual's health status and other circumstances on the individual's capacity to interact with the health system, but the Health Charter must not be used to limit access to health services.

With all due respect to the author of this bill – he's a good individual, and I know he, too, feels passionate about health care – these two statements are borderline meaningless. That's great: health care is a partnership between individuals, families, and communities. There is absolutely nothing new in that, and I don't see how we have to recognize the blatantly obvious.

The second: "acknowledge the impact of an individual's health status and other circumstances on the individual's capacity to interact with the health system." Okay. Great. This is going to do nothing to help Albertans, absolutely nothing, as written here. Nothing. What I like about these amendments is that these will do something to help the health of Albertans, and it would be great to put something in this legislation that is going to actually accomplish something.

What the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark proposes is to include a sub (c), which is that the health charter needs to "include as guiding principles that no unnecessary deaths, no unnecessary harm to patients, no unnecessary delays in care and no unnecessary waste of resources should occur." The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview was saying that he didn't quite understand what that meant. Granted, I'm not the expert on what it means, obviously, but my interpretation of it is: no unnecessary deaths. There are going to be deaths in emergency rooms, clearly. That can't be avoided. That's kind of the nature of the thing. Some people cannot be repaired. That's part of life, as we all know.

What I think was meant by this, in response to the Edmonton-Riverview MLA, is that unnecessary deaths – unnecessary deaths – are preventable deaths. They're ones that do not need to occur, and it should always be the goal of the emergency room to make sure that we are treating people and giving them the best chance possible to survive, the best chance possible to heal. That's why the revelations that have come forward from Dr. Paul Parks and others that we have had just over the last little while – five emergency room deaths that have occurred that are preventable.

Now, there have been other deaths in that time in emergency rooms, but there have been those five recent ones that were identified as being unnecessary, as being preventable, meaning that if the ER system had performed properly, had functioned properly, those deaths would not have occurred. That's what the hon. member, I believe, is referring to, unnecessary deaths. There are going to be deaths. You can't prevent certain deaths, but these ones – I think of the young man who hung himself and who, right before he did so, asked for a pen and a piece of paper. I mean, if that isn't a warning sign, when a suicidal individual asks for a pen and a piece of paper, I don't know what is. That's a preventable death if proper protocols were in place.

That's why we've been asking for the Health Quality Council to come in and investigate that. We've got to make sure there are protocols in place in the future that make sure that that situation does not repeat itself or that we figure out if those protocols do exist. I don't know; maybe they do. If they do exist, why were they not followed in this case? That's why it's so important to have the Health Quality Council come and investigate such an egregious preventable death. That's what I think we're talking about there.

No unnecessary harm to patients: now, that's pretty obvious. When you go to an emergency room, sometimes you have to cause harm to patients in order to fix them. You have to do surgery. You have to make cuts, incisions. You know, sometimes you need to break bones. You need to do all kinds of things in order to eventually be able to repair them. Doctors, of course, in their Hippocratic oath do no harm. It's all about making sure they never do something to somebody unless it's for their benefit, unless it's to eventually make them better. I believe that's all we're talking about there.

"No unnecessary delays in care and no unnecessary waste of resources should occur." Now, those last two are kind of motherhood and apple pie statements, I would say, especially the first one, "no unnecessary delays in care." "Unnecessary" is very vague in that way. That's why I think subsection (d) is so important, because it defines "no unnecessary delays." What are unnecessary delays? In other words, what are preventable delays? Well, he goes into that. This health charter should

- (d) set standards for lengths of stay in the emergency [room] departments of hospitals consistent with the "Position Statement on Emergency Department Overcrowding" published by the Canadian Association of Emergency Physicians and dated February 2007.

I love that because it is specific. It's a real benchmark. It's something you can sink your teeth into, and it's something that will hold people accountable.

Let's go over the position statement on emergency department overcrowding. Here's the position statement. Here are the things that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark would like to see in this health charter, and that's what the amendment says.

That emergency department (ED) length of stay benchmarks be established nationally as follows:

- (i) ED length of stay not to exceed six hours in 95% of cases for . . . Level I, II and III patients.

Level I, II, and III patients are those who are very ill, who need urgent care but aren't on death's door. I mean, that's kind of in layman's terms. So within six hours for those folks. Then for those who are really in trouble,

- (ii) ED length of stay not to exceed four hours in 95% of cases for CTAS Level IV and V patients.

Of course, those are very technical terms, but it's just a basic benchmark that says that we expect that in 95 per cent of circumstances – there is going to be the odd time where there's a bus crash or there's something brutal that happens where there's just not enough staff to deal with it. You can't achieve what are acceptable levels of care a hundred per cent of the time because stuff does happen, but 95 per cent is reasonable. The system should be such that in almost every case when someone goes to the emergency room, they're treated in an acceptable amount of time.

Think about the numbers here: four and six hours 95 per cent of the time. That is so much faster than what's going on in our emergency rooms right now. We're talking about 12-hour waits, 16-hour waits, 24-hour waits, 48-hour waits for people. I mean, how can we sit here and allow that to happen in our own emergency rooms? Shouldn't we do whatever it takes to get those down? You know, we've got to address the wait times for everything, for hip and knee replacements, for cataract surgery. We've got to address all that stuff. Absolutely. But before we even go into that other stuff, shouldn't we prioritize and make sure that the matter of life and death that occurs at the emergency room each and every day – shouldn't we make absolutely certain that that happens right away?

Somebody was asking for a solution. The solution is simple. As we said, appoint a chief medical officer in every single hospital so that there's always a chief medical officer on staff at the hospital. It usually will be a doctor. You don't need to hire a bureaucrat; usually it should be a doctor that's on staff. That chief medical officer should be empowered to do what is necessary to move to open up wards of the hospital that aren't necessarily the emergency wards, to get alternative arrangements for seniors who are able, where it's safe, to leave their acute-care beds and go into a different type of facility, so have kind of like a place where if things get bad, if a nurse needs to take a couple of seniors to a senior-safe hotel or something like that to get them out of acute-care beds and then take care of them for that time or whatever in an emergency situation, that's what they could do. That might save lives. It would save lives. I think that's a solution. That's what we could do. But it's not going to happen if we don't give the proper authority and if we don't have the proper expectations.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I rise again to speak to amendment A3 as proposed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. I have listened with interest to various speakers for the last couple of hours regarding the amendment and the position statement on emergency department overcrowding published by the Canadian Association of Emergency Physicians, that is dated the second month of 2007.

Now, there has been a lot of effort made over the years by this government to try to solve the problems with emergency department overcrowding and with health care in general. It's certainly a file that they're having a great deal of difficulty managing. Our party has come up with a lot of very, very good solutions to this problem, but to date they have unfortunately been ignored by this government. I would like to say at this hour of the morning, hon. members: put your pride in your pockets and take some good, sound advice. Certainly, we have suggested innovative strategies to reduce emergency room overcrowding.

Of course, where would you begin? Well, you would begin with increasing acute-care capacity. Now, the minister of health gives a list of the number of beds. The number, Mr. Chairman, seems to always change. It goes up. It goes down. It never remains the same. In the length of time – and I'm now of the opinion I'm going to have ample opportunity to speak – there's going to be a lot of information, some of which the government has been reviewing, and I'm not going to say scheming, but information that they have been reviewing for some time regarding solutions. Emergency department overcrowding, not only in Alberta but in the entire country, has been escalating. We've heard about patients who suffer prolonged waiting times, a reduction in the level of service or care, and adverse patient outcomes.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this whole issue: I'm not going to say that it boiled over, but it came to a point about a month ago, in October. A letter, of course, was written by Dr. Paul Parks, the president of emergency medicine with the Alberta Medical Association. This letter was obtained by local news media. This doctor issued a serious warning to both Alberta Health Services and to this government across the aisle regarding the state of Alberta's emergency rooms.

This is why, I think, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark was forced from that caucus, forced to sit here under the watchful gaze of Prince Philip, a younger Prince Philip. I don't know how old he was when that portrait was commissioned but a few years younger than he is now. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark from this seat proposed this amendment earlier this afternoon.

Now, I think he was compelled to act. I think his actions here are sound. When we think of what the president of emergency medicine outlined in his letter, certainly, there are still grave concerns a month later regarding the overcrowding in Alberta's emergency rooms, and the province has been informed of and aware of these concerns for at least two years.

We heard earlier about the leadership debate that occurred in the 2008 election. I'm not so sure, Mr. Chairman, with the noise . . . [interjection] I'm on the bill. Give me a break.

The Deputy Chair: On the amendment. On the amendment.

Mr. MacDonald: I'm on the amendment. I don't need that, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: What's that got to do with the leadership?

Mr. MacDonald: I'm sorry?

The Deputy Chair: I hope you bring it together.

Mr. MacDonald: I've heard all of the speakers this evening address this Legislative Assembly without interruption from the chair . . .

The Deputy Chair: The comments on the leadership: I hope you bring them into this.

Mr. MacDonald: I'm sorry?

The Deputy Chair: I'm saying that I hope you pull the comments on the leadership into the amendment.

Mr. MacDonald: You bet I will if you'll allow me.

The Deputy Chair: Okay.

Mr. MacDonald: Okay. So in the leadership debate that occurred in 2008, we had the current Premier, we had the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview – and this was talked about earlier this afternoon, if you were listening, Mr. Chairman. During that debate there was the whole issue of emergency rooms, what was going on in them, who was waiting, for how long, and what the consequences of those long waits were, and the Premier laughed it off. He brushed it off.

We know from the letter that was issued last month about the overcrowding that this government knew it was going on, and they have done nothing about it for two years. For two years not a thing.

Here we are at 5 to 3 in the morning discussing this issue. We could almost say that we're having another emergency debate on emergency room overcrowding. This amendment A3 certainly is turning into this.

The letter from Dr. Parks states that the overcrowding is due to blocks in access to the rest of the hospital units, which is a direct result of the lack of capacity, both in acute-care beds and in continuing care beds. We have been suggesting, as I said earlier, that the start of solving the problem begins with acute-care beds. Now, Dr. Parks' letter also reads: "Our overcrowding problem continues to worsen and we anticipate the potential catastrophic collapse of timely emergency care delivery in the upcoming months. There must be an intervention immediately."

Well, this amendment, these guiding principles and these standards, certainly would force this government to act. They haven't done a thing in two years. The situation is deteriorating. So I think that if we need another reason to support the amendment, that certainly would be it. Dr. Parks also advocates for the tracking of true, objective wait times, not averages, and that those responsible for the management of the system be held to account on whether the measures are met or not.

Now, I have the view that Dr. Parks' letter is the most likely reason the minister of health made the impromptu announcement on October 20, in the press conference regarding the government's response to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford's report, that 250 new acute-care, continuing care, and detox beds would be open by December 2010.

Through access to information the Official Opposition received quite some time ago, over a year ago, April 2009, a document regarding the shortage of health care workers in Capital health. This is information that was obtained by Capital health through reports and studies that they had commissioned. The projection that I'm looking at, Mr. Chairman, is between the years 2000 and 2010. It's ten years. By the year 2010 the projected nursing demand is estimated here by the letter "X". They don't know. They don't know how many nurses they may need, but they give us a list of long-term care beds, acute-care beds, and estimated total beds: 930 long-term care beds would be needed and 380 acute-care beds, for a total of 1,310 beds. No idea how many nurses would be needed, but those are the beds.

The hon. health minister made his announcement on the fly, and it was completely different than that. It would be interesting to get from the government members an accurate, up-to-date list of the beds, what kind they are and where they are.

Dr. Taft: Yeah. Totals. Maybe a total monthly count by hospital.

Mr. MacDonald: Totals.

Mr. Hinman: We've been calling for an audit for two weeks on that.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, you have, and rightfully so.

Now, the proof on the announcement of new acute-care beds was shown in a Calgary Herald story where Alberta Health Services medical director, Dr. Francois Belanger, said that he could not provide specifics on how much staff were needed and what the cost of the initiative would be. The actual quote that came after that was: "We don't have a final plan yet. I'll have to get back to you with those numbers."

Mr. Chairman, the letter "X" represents what Capital health thought may or may not be needed, and I find that interesting. But here is another fact, and that is that the 250 beds announced on October 20 included the 132 additional beds for Calgary that were announced on September 8. So if the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore is talking about having an audit to see what beds are where and what potentially they could be used for, that sounds like a logical and reasonable request because it's one of the tricks of this government. If you go onto the Alberta government website and if you look at the press releases, sometimes you could just go back four or five years, change the date in the press releases, and make new announcements. You just have to change the date, and you could save a few dollars over at the Public Affairs Bureau.

There are serious concerns about how these additional beds will be funded. The minister of health has stated that the new beds will not be funded with additional money from the government. Where's the funding going to come from? Maybe we're going to take some of it from the surplus, the surplus that the ministry of health had last year.

Dr. Taft: Maybe the federal government. Instead of funding Expo, they'll fund health care.

Mr. MacDonald: Maybe they will fund health care instead of Expo. That's quite a thought.

Maybe we could, through the course of the discussion on this amendment, Mr. Chairman, also get to the bottom of the issue of the money that's coming from the federal government for emergency room response times. We never did get an answer on whether that money was left on the table or not.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there's also real concern whether or not the new beds can be staffed. We have gone through this training and recruitment exercise of this government. We see the issues that have not been dealt with. We have one month a shortage of nurses; the next month it is declared there is a surplus of nurses. We have money being spent in Employment and Immigration on foreign recruitment of nurses. The recruitment activities take place. In some cases the individual nurses are attracted to this province from different places – the Philippines, India, Australia, New Zealand – and there's no job. Of course, those folks go home, and they tell the people in their communities of their experience. It's not a good one here. The next time that we need to recruit individuals, it's going to be a lot tougher.

This debate we're having is the result of a government that is in complete damage control over this emergency room overcrowding, the chaos and confusion surrounding our emergency rooms. Does this amendment help? I certainly think so. It improves Bill 17. I don't know whether I'm going to vote for it or not, but I think I would support this amendment. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark certainly has a plan and some good, sound ideas as to how we can fix the system. But clearly this government has no plan – no plan whatsoever – for the future of public health care, and it is clear that they're flying by the seat of their pants. The most telling part of this whole issue is that it seems that Alberta Health Services was completely, as I said earlier, taken off guard by the minister of health's declaration.

If we could get these beds up and running and staffed, I think it would help. But, Mr. Chairman, not only should we have a look at this proposal, A3, but we've got to recognize that it will alleviate the long delays in emergency wards that are frustrating the public and turning the public against this government. In fact, opposition to this government is growing within the Assembly and is certainly growing outside the Assembly in communities across this province because this government cannot get a handle on the health care file. They just can't for whatever reason.

Now, it is common to hear concerns that people are using the emergency rooms or the emergency wards by visiting them when they only have a minor ailment. That is certainly not true. A large portion of emergency patients do not have life-threatening problems; however, very few people visit an emergency room or a ward without a justifiable reason or a justifiable illness. People often go there because there is no reasonable alternative, especially after hours and especially since we don't have enough family-trained physicians.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark spoke earlier today about how we need more front-line health care workers, more family physicians. I was interested to listen to his remarks regarding the training of specialists. I didn't know that, and I was unaware that so many of them that we are training – I knew a few were leaving this jurisdiction, but from his comments I think we all should be concerned.

Now, there are innovations. [Mr. MacDonald's speaking time expired] I'm sorry I ran out of time. I look forward to participating in the debate.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you. It's a pleasure to rise again. I think there is a song out by the Rankins: Rise Again.

The Bill 17 amendment, in my judgment, is important. Most importantly, it sets standards for the lengths of stay in the emergency departments of hospitals consistent with the position statement on emergency department overcrowding published by the Canadian Association of Emergency Physicians. I might say that we actually sit a lot closer to a physician than you guys do, and that was because of your unanimous vote the other day. Guess what? It's important to recognize in the amendment to Bill 17 that we "include as guiding principles that no unnecessary deaths," which is very important, "no unnecessary harm to patients, no unnecessary delays in care and no unnecessary waste in resources should occur." I think this in itself, Mr. Chairman, is something that is reasonable, even more so because it has a tremendous amount of credibility from the physician that we sit close to.

Mr. Chairman, I want to say that Alberta's health care system really has arrived at a critical crossroad. It's like talking about an important story to my three-year-old son. Despite massive annual increases in health spending, waiting lists are at an all-time high. Patients are left languishing in emergency rooms for hours and hours and hours. How long do you say? Hours and hours and hours and sometimes days. Finding a family physician is increasingly difficult, and many seniors find it impossible to secure the care that they so desperately need.

I must say that as we look at the guiding principles, that no unnecessary deaths, no unnecessary harm, no unnecessary delays in care, and no unnecessary waste of resources should occur, I believe that setting standards for lengths of stay in emergency departments of hospitals consistent with, again, the position statement on emergency department overcrowding published by the Canadian Association of Emergency Physicians is so important.

The PC government, as you know, Mr. Chairman, on Bill 17 and on this amendment, let me just say, continues to unfortunately mismanage health care, squandered millions of dollars into a big black hole. No one knows, no one can even determine or measure if it is effective or not. This centralization, which I used to refer to as Pravda – they have centralized control of health care, losing all of the community capital that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark did not want to lose. I want to say that the doctor that wrote this was on that side. You guys were close to him. Now you've lost him. You've lost him, and we're closer to him than you guys.

I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that change is in the air, and this bill amendment is a refreshing, refreshing, refreshing start to that change. I want to thank the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark because he is capturing the important points that he sees front line in emergency rooms on a weekly and daily basis.

Alberta's health care system can be fixed. But, you know, I will always yield to a doctor or to an MLA who knows what he's talking about, certainly more so from that side. With that, the hon. doctor, I think, is ready to speak. Therefore, I will yield my time, Mr. Chair, to the hon. doctor, the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. You've recognized me. I will grant my time to the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo obviously thinks we're in the U.S. Senate or something, where he can cede his time or cede his place.

Mr. Boutilier: I didn't give my time to him.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, you don't have time.

Mr. Boutilier: I didn't yield my time. Raj was up ahead of Dave.

Mr. Hancock: I don't think so. Besides, Mr. Chair, as you so rightly recognize, we do tend to go back and forth when the opportunity affords. In any event, I won't be very long. Don't worry about it. I just wanted to put a couple of comments on the record about the amendment because I have a lot of respect for the hon. member who moved this amendment in terms of his abilities. I've worked with him on health issues over the years and don't necessarily disagree with the concepts embodied in the amendment.

The first one, as was quite rightly pointed out in a very interesting speech, one of the only real interesting speeches of the evening, actually, by Edmonton-Riverview, who said some very, I think, appropriate things about this amendment, in particular the first piece, the guiding principles that no unnecessary deaths, no unnecessary harm to patients, no unnecessary delays in care and no unnecessary waste of resources – I mean, fundamentally, if you have to write an act to say that, you probably should have gone home a long time ago. That is a fundamental understanding of a health system, that you're preventing preventable deaths and you're not doing harm. In fact, that's the fundamental oath in medicine. So I'm not going to dwell on that. I'm not going to repeat what Edmonton-Riverview said, I'm just going to say that I appreciated him rising and saying it.

With respect to the second piece, setting standards for lengths of stay in the emergency departments, that, too, is actually something that's very unnecessary. The only question is: what's the appropriate way to do it? The answer is: not in the foundational statute that talks about the things the Alberta Health Act, Bill 17, talks about but, rather, in a comprehensive set of appropriate benchmarks for the health system that we're prepared to have the system be accountable to and have government be accountable to in terms of what we're aspiring to. Those targets should be national and international standards, but they also should be standards which can be adjusted as things change for the better: new technologies, new techniques, new drugs, new procedures, new processes.

In fact, Alberta can be very proud of being leading edge in a number of different areas in terms of pushing the envelope and doing things. We're doing hip surgery now on 90-year-olds that you never used to do on anybody over the age of 70. A great Albertan, Ray Nelson, passed away not too long ago. He had a heart transplant at approximately the age of 80. It might have been 79, but at that age. That was something that you would never have seen happen anywhere in the world earlier on.

Standards change. They get better. We push the envelope. We have the Mazankowski health centre here in Edmonton, in Alberta, with some of the finest technology and some of the finest doctors working on not only new and better procedures to assist people who have health issues related to the cardiac area but also to push the envelope on the prevention side, to help people stay healthy.

We could say the same thing about diabetes in Alberta. We could say the same thing in some areas of cancer, where we have some of the finest specialists in cancer research and cancer care right here in Alberta. When the Edmonton clinic opens, we'll be able to say that about ambulatory care processes.

We should have benchmarks that are published, that are out there, that say what we aspire to and how we're going to get there, but is it appropriate to pick one of them and put it into the middle of this act, where it has no relational context and the act doesn't actually speak to that particular aspect? No.

With respect to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark – and I'm just saying now to the House what I've said to him before – I certainly appreciate the standards with respect to care in emergency medicine, the other standards which need to be discussed with respect to how the health system should perform and what we want as Albertans, the standards that we aspire to in the health system, that we should be able to meet, the national and international benchmarking standards. Absolutely. The Premier has said that we're going to have the best health care system in Canada if not in North America, and to do that, you have to know what the benchmarks are. So, yes, we should have benchmarks, yes, we want to make sure that they're published, yes, we need to be able to get to them and we need to have a plan to show how we're going to get to them, but no, they shouldn't be part of Bill 17 because it's not the right context, not the right place. It's picking one benchmark, albeit an important one, albeit a pivotal one in terms of how you measure a health system, but not in this place.

I think we can look forward to these actually being published and part of the health care system in the future, but I would say that they do not belong in this particular act of the Legislature. I would ask the hon. member to keep these in his back pocket or on his blog or wherever he wants to keep them, and let's discuss them at the appropriate place and stage of the process. I would suggest, Mr. Chair, we've been debating this bill in second reading and then committee for a lot of hours, and I've heard people say that they have a lot of things that they want to talk about with respect to this bill. I would suggest that we vote on this amendment and that we see what else there is that other people would like to talk about with respect to Bill 17. I for one would be very interested.

I think Bill 17 is a great foundational bill. It sets some really key areas for health in terms of how we build and where we go in building that comprehensive, quality health care system for Albertans, building on the great health care system we have now, because we do have a great health care system. We've got issues – no question – but we have a great health care system. It always pains me, Mr. Chairman, when I hear somebody talking about a Third World health care system because they have obviously never been anywhere near the Third World. When you see the type of technology and equipment we have, the type of facilities we have, and, most importantly, the quality of the health care professionals we have and the number of health care professionals we have, we have an excellent health care system. But we do have issues, and this government has been working on those issues and will continue to work on those issues.

You might be surprised, Mr. Chairman, for me to say that the fact of the matter is that there will always be issues because the nature of the system, the nature of a changing population, the nature of demands on the system will always require that we continue to work. There will be no time where you can stop and say: "The job is done. It is complete. No more needs to be done." It will always be a moving target, and it will always require work. We have an excellent system. There are things we need to deal with now to move to the next level. We need to identify the benchmarks but not in the bill.

I would say to the House, you know, that we've spent a lot of time. We've spent all afternoon on this particular amendment and now several hours tonight on this particular amendment. Now is the time to vote on this amendment and then bring forward the other amendments. Let's see what else there is in the bill that needs to be discussed because this should be the best foundational act for health in this country if not in North America or the world. Let's make it that way. If it's not that way now, if you think there's something better to put in this act, then bring it up. But we've spent a lot of time on this particular one, and I don't think there's a lot more to say, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you so much, Mr. Chair. It's truly an honour to join all of you today. I'm truly humbled to speak to a very important topic that affects all of us. For me, I feel like being a doctor again because, by the grace of God, when I was working full-time as an emergency doctor, the phone would ring, and I'd get my STARS bag when it was an emergency. I'd jump in my car, get to the helicopter; it's an emergency. We're having an emergency debate. I'm here with my pillow, and I'm here with my blanket. If somebody wants to talk theatrics, this is not theatrics. I'm here to camp out all week and all month to talk about a very important issue.

Mr. Chair, I want to speak to a very important issue. This is the Alberta Health Act. First of all, I'd like to start off by a quote. Many of these members were sleeping when I first said this quote, and now that they're awake, I'm going to reiterate it for their benefit. As Martin Luther King said, life begins to end the day we become silent about things that matter.

Another quote, Mr. Chairman – and I don't mean this in any way, but it's going to hook up at the end of this debate. I'm going to give a short snippet of it: evil happens when good men and women stay silent. The reason we're here is that there is an emergency debate. You know, we all agreed on the state of the health care system. The reason I'm here tonight is that we had an emergency debate, and there is a bill before the House as a result of the emergency debate. I have introduced an amendment on behalf of all the front-line health care workers: doctors, nurses, paramedics, unit clerks, cleaning staff, you name it, all those warriors of health care, the gatekeepers of health care.

The amendment to Bill 17: the reason I did it is because Bill 17, I believe, is actually a very good piece. I really can't disagree with anything in here. These are very good principles. It talks about a health charter, a patient advocate. I really can't disagree with much in here. It's a decent piece of legislation. Now, the critics can say: "Why do we have to enshrine principles into legislation? Is the intent that we actually didn't have them to begin with?" We've always had them, but we're actually enshrining them into legislation, which has never been done. I think the symbolism is so important.

Now, my amendment: what is it doing to Bill 17? My amendment to Bill 17 is to turn a decent piece of legislation into a great piece of legislation. Some critics will say that Bill 17 is a bunch of airy-fairy principles. I don't believe that. But the amendment makes it absolutely clear that there's nothing airy-fairy about this bill. This is to legislate teeth. The teeth to health care is the accountability and performance piece, where we tell the nation and we tell the country and this province that we are actually really serious about fixing health care. Mr. Chairman, I'm just a simple emergency doctor from the Royal Alex. It's inner city. You know what? Just simple people come to that place. They suffer, many of them dying metres from care and suffering metres from care, and I feel it's important to speak on their behalf.

Mr. Chairman, Dr. Paul Parks, the section president of the emergency doctors of the province, raised legitimate concerns on behalf of all the emergency doctors to the public. On October 8 a letter was sent to the Premier, to the current minister of health, to myself, and I guess that letter was sent across the world or at least across the province and across the country. In his letter a quote was: the emergency health care system is on the verge of a catastrophic collapse if something is not done urgently as soon as the flu hits. As an emergency doctor I fully agree with those remarks. Absolutely.

Yesterday I made a phone call to the emergency rooms. There was only one resuscitation bed available in all of Edmonton. No other emergency beds were available. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud is a good fellow. He's a good friend of mine. He actually convinced me to run for public service. Before I ran, I said: "You know, hon. member, I've got to admit. I have to be honest that I didn't vote for your party because you wrecked health care over the previous couple of elections." But I said: "You know what? I like you, and I trust you, and if you listen, I will help you and advise you."

I want to put everything into context before I talk about details. When I was in Dr. Paul Parks' position, as section president in 2006 I sent a letter to the minister prior to the hon. member, the hon. Member for Sherwood Park, saying that the emergency departments are in big trouble. There was a leadership campaign that was on, and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud subsequently became the health minister.

When he became the health care minister, the health care system suddenly over that winter, after the leadership race in 2006 for the PC Party was over – he inherited the health care file. It wasn't his fault, Mr. Chair. It was a result of neglect by the previous ministers.

Here are my comments when I was in Dr. Paul Parks' position. I will read this article to you.

Crisis in the ER: Doctor Cites 11-day Wait for Patient in Emergency Room.

A veteran emergency room physician says that the state of the city's ERs is the worst he's ever seen.

Dr. Raj Sherman, an ER doctor at the Royal Alexandra Hospital, told the Sun that emergency rooms are routinely overcrowded.

In one recent case he said an admitted patient had to wait in ER for 11 days before a bed became available elsewhere.

"I believe the problem is worse than it's ever been," says Sherman, also head of Emergency Physicians of Alberta. "I've been working for 15 years and we've never had it this bad."

Capital Health is expected to unveil a plan in the next few weeks to deal with the problem of admitted patients clogging up ERs.

It's expected to improve what's being called a "full-capacity protocol" – an idea being pushed by Sherman's group and endorsed by the Alberta Medical Association.

Under the plan, patients in the emergency department would be transferred to a non-emergency ward within four hours of being admitted, whether there is a bed available or not.

It might mean lying on stretchers in hallways, but at least patients would be receiving the specialized care they need, Sherman said.

Moving the admitted patients would free up ER beds for new patients, reducing waits.

It would also spread the burden of over-crowded emergency department rooms hospital-wide, Sherman said.

"We'll hopefully be able to say something about it in the next few weeks," said Capital Health spokesman Steve Buick.

Buick said that the protocol is being considered for the whole region, which would be a first in Canada.

While some hospitals in other provinces have introduced similar measures, no health care authority in Canada has adopted it for all their hospitals.

Buick emphasized it would be a temporary measure.

A temporary measure, Mr. Chairman. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud: this man was the first minister in the nation to have the courage to do this in every hospital, and I have to thank him, and I owe him that respect. Edmonton-Whitemud, when he was minister, saved hundreds of lives by listening to the emergency doctors. He did. Please give this man a round of applause. [some applause]

He said that, ultimately, more beds are needed in the system.

Guys, listen up here. More beds would be needed in the system. Come on, guys. Wake up here, please. It's very important.

3:30

He said more doctors and nurses are also needed.

"We face a severe challenge right now," Sherman said.

"I don't believe we've ever had a day in the past year where there's not been an admitted patient waiting in emergency for longer than they should."

Coun. Linda Sloan, a former emergency room nurse, said while the full-capacity protocol is not ideal, it may temporarily ease some of the ER pressures.

"I really don't believe we can achieve quality and ethical care of patients when we're delivering the care in the hallways," Sloan said.

Mr. Chairman, this was a temporary solution to an urgent emergent crisis.

In fact, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford was the assistant to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud. I worked very closely with them. And you know what? They were actually very gracious, very decent. So I have to pay due respect to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford. You did the right thing. Thank you so much. What happened, Mr. Chairman, is that we actually saved hundreds of lives. We actually had a number of deaths and near-deaths, and we were not meeting the basic standards of care. Now, this was the alternative. We weren't happy about putting people in hallways upstairs.

We had 42 admitted patients at the University of Alberta hospital in a 48-bed emergency department. We had six beds at the U of A in a quaternary care referral trauma centre for all of northern Alberta. Six beds. As a result, the waiting room was full with 50 patients. Guess what? The ambulances were waiting six to eight hours with the sickest patients in town. Intracerebral bleeds were waiting six hours on beds until they seized. Pregnant women were miscarrying on the triage stretcher. People with heart attacks were diagnosed and sat in waiting rooms with a hep-lock in their hands for five hours after the diagnosis. We had a gentleman who had a ruptured esophagus. He waited seven hours in the waiting room until he collapsed, and then we looked after him immediately because we did not have a resuscitation bed. We had hypertensive ruptured ectopic pregnancies, women whose pregnancies were outside of their wombs, lying on stretchers for six hours with low blood pressures, dying and bleeding to death.

The alternative was to have untreated, undiagnosed, undifferentiated patients in the waiting room and delaying their care. What was worse: record numbers of sick people were leaving without even being seen after waiting six to eight hours. I am aware of a case. Somebody had fantastic cardiac surgery; we were number one in Canada. But guess what? They had a complication. They waited eight hours in the waiting room. They had what we call a pericardial tamponade. Fluid built up around the heart, and that fluid built up so much that it constricted the heart. They actually died in the waiting room. When they had cardiac arrest, they got immediate care, but we had to tell the family that we did the best we could. Mr. Chairman and hon. members over there who are talking amongst yourselves, I ask you to listen to this carefully. Did the system really do what it could for that patient?

Mr. Chairman, there was another patient with a pericardial tamponade. The fantastic cardiac surgeons had operated on a patient. That patient left without ever being seen, and I am aware that they never came back. I am aware that there was no ambulance on the street to respond to an urgent 911 call because the whole fleet of ambulances were tied up in the emergency room waiting to off-load patients. They called the ambulance when that patient had a cardiac arrest at home. It wasn't available, and by the time the ambulance arrived, that patient never came to the emergency room. My good friends, that patient went straight to the morgue, to the coroner's office.

Mr. Chairman, the morale of front-line staff in Alberta is at 25 per cent for the doctors. They are supposed to be the leaders of the team. It's at 36 per cent for everyone else.

I worked permanent night shifts at the Royal Alex through the cutbacks. We only had one doctor who worked nights. When we cut beds to half overnight, your friend, this guy, looked after all of the disasters of northern Alberta and Edmonton. People were dying left and right in waiting rooms in the midst of the cutbacks in the '90s. Yes, Mr. Chairman, I was there, and I am still there. I advocated. In fact, before me Dr. Chris Evans advocated with the previous ministers prior to the minister from Sherwood Park. He advocated with the three, four, or five ministers prior to this minister. We have been advocating with every minister.

This system didn't start getting broken yesterday or the day before. This started in the mid-90s when it was dismantled, when the government at the time had an agenda. Well, mind you, they were in a tough situation. The economy was really bad. They were advised that privatization was a solution, and under their watch hundreds of patients died in waiting rooms and suffered when their care was delayed. The front-line staff banded together and said: "Politicians, bureaucrats, and administrators don't care. We must fix this system." With regionalization everything went vertical. We broke those vertical lines. We said: "Forget it. We're going to talk to one another on the front lines." We held hands. We went horizontal. The front-line staff did it. The system actually came back.

It actually improved until the boom hit, before we drove the staff out. This time we drove 1,800,000 patients in without the staff. Guess what? The same thing. It's a supply and demand issue. A lot of illness, not enough health care workers; teachers, roads, you know it. Society's and the system's problems end up in the emergency rooms.

I appreciate what the hon. member says, that this is not the place to put these, Mr. Chairman. Imagine if every patient was an airplane. You know what would be happening? There would be an airplane crashing every 10 minutes in this province. This isn't a funny thing. Would this be acceptable in the airline industry? The members on the board are all businesspeople. Mr. Franceschini is on the board. Would this be acceptable in Stantec? I think not. Is this acceptable in any society?

Mr. Chairman, I worked with the hon. member. He actually convinced me. He said: "Raj, get off the headlines. If you want to fix this problem, come on inside where you can truly make a difference." By the grace of God and the grace of the good people of Edmonton-Meadowlark, I was elected, and I thought that we would have the health care dream team with myself – I'm just a simple front-line guy. I don't know much else other than doctoring and maybe looking after a couple of kids and coaching soccer and basketball in McKernan. I thought: we have the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, who is the policy expert in this House – I'm just a delivery expert – and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud. I thought: wow, we would be the health care dream team and we would fix it.

When I received my phone call to be parliamentary assistant, I was so honoured. I thought I'd be so honoured to work with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud. But there was silence on the other end of the phone. This minister actually reduced emergency wait times.

The health care system is broken. There's only one governmental party in this House, that needs to take the full responsibility for breaking it. It wasn't these guys in the red. It wasn't those guys in the orange. What colour are you guys, by the way?

An Hon. Member: Green.

Dr. Sherman: It wasn't these guys in the green and gold. It was my good friends for whom I ran, the guys in the blue. Nobody else.

When we ran . . . [Dr. Sherman's speaking time expired]

3:40

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you. Well, personally, I would like to hear the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, if he would continue, hear a little bit more about what he would suggest for our health care system, he being the only emergency doctor in this Assembly and, clearly, the expert on the subject. I'm learning a lot every time he stands up, so I hope that he would do that.

The Deputy Chair: Yeah. It's not 29(2)(a). You spoke, and it's his turn to speak again.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Chairman, thank you so much. I'm honoured and humbled to have the opportunity to keep speaking. Thank you.

After this, I declared it was a crisis. The hon. member did the right thing. He responded, and we actually improved emergency department wait times. That was in 2007.

In 2008, in the lead-up to the election, in the fall the flu hit. This was a temporary measure, so we actually increased the workload of the nurses on the wards upstairs by 3 to 5 per cent. I had talked to Heather Smith three times. In fact, you know what? I had talked to everybody. I had talked to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre in her office. I talked to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. I said: "Please, I ask you and urge you, do not fight about this in the Legislature. This is a nonpartisan issue. I ask all of you to support it."

To Heather Smith from the United Nurses of Alberta I said:

"Heather, your nurses on the front lines are working at 140 per cent, and they're burning out. Please have the rest of your nurses, the clan, come rescue the front-line guys and gals. I know they're already overburdened upstairs. I know their work is going to go up 3 to 5 per cent more. The real solution is more nurses, investments to long-term care, home care, and then more beds, and I will be advocating for that in addition to this. So please don't say this is a bad thing. It's the alternative to what's a disaster." Then summer hit and, you know, we have elective surgery cancellations, and usually the flu is gone. It was okay.

In the fall of 2008, because it takes time for long-term care beds and all this stuff, I was working in the emergency room. I was already nominated, actually, to run along with my hon. colleagues across the way as a candidate. The election wasn't yet on. What happened when I was an emergency doctor one day – when the Royal Alexandra ER gets up to 30 admitted patients, we know that everybody else is plugged, that the other hospitals in Edmonton are plugged. When the Royal Alex hits 30 and our resuscitation beds – we had none in the city. We had 15 closed ICU beds. All our trauma beds were full of intensive-care unit patients in the departments.

On one shift I had four cardiac arrests. Mr. Chairman, I ran two of them in the hallway in front of the nursing station. It was sort of like TV on the show ER. I mean, George Clooney is just an actor. My buddies are the real deal. We ran cardiac arrests in the hallway. Thirty people were watching a good Albertan suffer and die in a hallway. The two following cardiac arrests we actually ran in a storage closet. I said: "This is horrendous for the staff and the other patients and the other family members. We can't let them see this."

I had a young fellow who got stabbed. It was 2:20 in the morning. He was being rolled in by the paramedics. My shift was over, and I was with this young student resident. You know, I'm one of the old dogs in the emergency – well, maybe not the oldest one. That would be Dr. Sosnowski. But I was the first emergency-trained doctor in the Edmonton training program in '93. I was a rural family doctor. I went back and specialized because our job became so specialized. I needed more education and training to do the job, and the nurses had to do that as well. That's why they're more highly trained, so we can do more. Patients are more complex, and they have more problems.

Anyway, getting back to this guy who was being rolled in. I told this young student: "Look, son. Let's stick around and keep an eye on things." We had no trauma bed available, so you know what? He got stabbed in the chest in the same hallway, across from the nursing station. We did what we call the full meal deal. The full meal deal is that he lost his pulse because he had bled out from the hole in his heart. The whole team, just like on TV, cracked his chest, put a tube in his windpipe, opened up both sides of his lungs, made sure we fixed the collapsed lungs.

For the young surgical residents this is the moment that we live for, the front emergency room doctors. They're tragic situations for the patient, but this is what we're trained to do. Immediately that chest was opened up, the hole was discovered, the finger was plugged. Between myself and the student, I said: "You know what? Watch these young guys. They get so excited that they're going to forget the most basic thing, to put the central line in." So I taught this young student how to put the central line in. We ordered some blood, some fluids, got them into the body so that patient could actually have some volume with which to have a pulse.

It was fantastic what we did, but it was tragic because we did it in a hallway in front of everybody. Those are the circumstances under this good minister, who did the best that he could but inherited a disaster, and under the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford. They listened. They did the best that they could.

After this, during the election I clanged the bells. We had an emergency meeting with the chairman of the board, who is now the Ethics Commissioner, and with the previous CEO, Sheila Weatherill. As soon as we phoned, that same afternoon we had a meeting. Boom. She was a nurse, and she listened. Right away she said: I want to know what's going on on the front lines. She was up here. She said: tell us what's going on because the junior and mid-level administration isn't telling us. She actually asked the front-line doctors to document cases and pass them on to junior management and to senior management, which is herself and the chairman of the board, Neil Wilkinson.

Then there was another action. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, who actually happened to be my MLA, during the debate challenged the hon. Premier, for whom I sacrificed my career and my reputation, and said: people are dying in the emergency rooms. I saw the debate, and I was a little ashamed that my leader actually laughed at him, laughed at him and shouted him down during the debate. Unfortunately, for some reason the hon. member was unable to convince Albertans that this was a significant issue. I had asked the ER doctors: "Please do not interfere in the outcome of an election. You'll be critiqued for politicking."

Jim Dau, the previous Premier's communications fellow, said: "Raj, don't mess with the Conservative Party because they'll get you. That's how things work in Alberta. Don't do it. Work with the system because those guys will get you. I'm just telling you." I met with him at the Century Grill. That made the hair stand on the back of my neck. He said: "They can do it in any other province; there are changes in government. But do not even think about it in Alberta. Don't even consider it." So I told the doctors: "Shut up, guys, please. If you guys go public and if these guys get a majority, oh, God, you guys are done. Don't say anything during the election. I'm begging you."

Mr. Chairman, I rolled my dad into the emergency room Monday in the middle of the election. He had the flu. He was dehydrated. He needed one bag of water. He's got a bad heart, that functions at 10 per cent. The waiting room was full at the U of A hospital. I left him there in the emergency room. I have never asked for special care for my father. Having said that, I know that the staff know him. The doctors know him because many of them trained me, and I trained many of them as well as the nurses and the paramedics. I know he got special care because people were waiting eight hours in the waiting room, and he actually only had to wait six hours in the waiting room. He should have been in in 30 minutes. He was a triage category 3 patient. On a scale of 1 to 5, 1 is most urgent, immediate; 5 is two hours. He was supposed to be seen within 30 minutes. He got special care, and he got seen within five or six hours. His heart failed. Suddenly they called me and said, "Raj, you better come back. Your father is dying. He's on a ventilator." He sucked on a ventilator tube for five days in the intensive care unit, seconds from death. His heart got so damaged he spent 10 days in the ICU during the election.

Some people say: why does Raj always talk about his father? I talk about my father because I want people to know that if it's affecting my father – you know what? – it's affecting their father and their mother and their daughter and their wife and their grandmother. I want people out there to just understand that there's someone in the Legislature who actually, truly cares and understands. In fact, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud understands, too, because his mother suffered. His family members suffered, too. That's why he wanted this fixed. He understands. This affects everybody. This is a nonpartisan issue. This has nothing to do with politics. It's a human issue. It's an issue of human dignity and human honour.

Mr. Chairman, as a front-line health care worker my heart goes out to all those families whose family members are suffering. Many have died metres from care. I'm aware of at least four, five, six deaths and probably a hundred near-deaths during the election. Those 322 cases released by Dr. Paul Parks were from during that election period in 2008. That's when those 322 cases were from.

I want to put everything into context. I want all the front-line health care workers to understand that there are people in this Legislature who understand their issues. My heart goes out to each and every patient. Mr. Chairman, we cannot wait to fix this broken health care system. This is not an emergency problem. This is a health care system problem that manifests itself in the emergency rooms. I believe this system can be better. Our lives depend upon it.

I want to talk about solutions. That's what we've been talking about. We've been talking about solutions for years. These are the solutions. The solutions are: one, let's reduce the number of patients. Let's not get sick in the first place. The way to do that is to actually get healthy seniors who are homeless out of hospitals because they're sitting beside sick, infectious patients and getting sick in acute care. Let's get them back home where they belong, with their spouse or their family, with world-class home care. Let's invest in subacute care, rehab care, community hospices. It's unacceptable for patients who are palliative to be dying in emergency rooms in the last days of their life.

This is the sequence of investments that needs to be made and then long-term care. Then if we need acute-care beds, then, yes, build acute-care beds. That's on the output side of acute care. Then let's deal with the input side. Everyone needs good primary care. The primary care system is broken. There's only been one government in power here. They broke it. Nobody else broke it. They broke it, the government that I ran for. The primary care system is broken. We need to concentrate on health promotion and injury prevention.

Number two. Let's ask the front-line health care providers for local solutions to local problems. This is what used to happen. We had site-based decision-making until we regionalized, when we went up four levels. Guess what we just did? We just regionalized. Now we went up seven levels. We broke all the horizontal linkages. I'm sure the hon. members for Edmonton-Whitemud and Edmonton-Rutherford would not agree with how the one region was implemented and communicated to the front lines – I would ask them to comment on that – by the previous minister of health, the hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Going to one region in principle may be a good idea, I think, certainly for the centralized functions of bulk purchasing, bulk ordering, standards of care, human resources, electronic health records. For the backroom stuff, absolutely. But, Mr. Chairman, the problem in health care isn't backroom stuff; it's front-room stuff, where I come from.

The hon. member did the best he could to address it with the workforce action plan: training more doctors and getting more beds. In my home he announced 600 new long-term care beds. All the heads of the medical association were in my home. He announced that. I dug the shovel at the Villa Caritas to build long-term care beds in my area. I dug it. Later on I found out those were actually just replacement beds. I was shocked when I found out they were replacement beds.

Mr. MacDonald: How did you find out?

Dr. Sherman: Oh, I think I read it in the newspaper.

I didn't know they were replacement beds. I thought they were brand new beds. The hon. members for Edmonton-Rutherford and Edmonton-Whitemud were in my home. I thought: what? Replacement beds? They're going to shut down the ones at the – hold it. We're closing down beds and opening new beds. We're just replacing them. All we're doing is shuffling deck chairs on the Titanic while the ship is sinking. This is the reason the emergency health system is in crisis.

Here is the evidence. You need real evidence. Heart-wrenching stories are one thing, but you need evidence. The Health Quality Council of Alberta shows the median alternate level of care days per acute-care discharge for patients waiting for ALC beds. For 2002-03 the number was trending down, from 15 days down to 11 days in 2005-06. For 2006-07 the number went from 11 days to 16 days. So the numbers were actually trending down under the previous Premier. Things were coming down until 2006, and then there was a change in leadership, and the numbers started going up. As they started going up, more bed blockers increased upstairs, more emergency beds were plugged.

And Paul Parks. You see, I sounded the bells in February, in the second hit of the flu season, but Dr. Paul Parks has rung the bells, and the flu season hasn't even hit. We have never clanged the bells in the emergency rooms before fall. This was a first, actually, a first during this decade. We actually clanged the bells in the '90s, when they did the cutbacks. And when they did, every front-line health care staff who complained even two words at a staff meeting was punished. They were made to be punished by their own colleagues.

Mr. Hinman: What was the punishment?

Dr. Sherman: Well, gee. Mr. Chairman, you don't want to know. They'd find one case, one mistake, one complaint. They would have your own colleagues research the one mistake, if it was a mistake, and they would take it to the college because the College of Physicians and Surgeons is underneath the government. The government would have those colleagues under contract to the region take that complaint to the college. Sometimes the doctors would get upset. Then when they'd get upset, they'd say: hey, these guys are crazy. They were passionate, but they'd say they were crazy.

You know how I know they do this? Because at one medical staff meeting, Mr. Chairman, when I was working nights, I said to my doctor colleagues at a closed-door staff meeting: "Look, people. How can we find this acceptable? We're doctors. If we're not going to stand up for patients, who is?" I said maybe 10 words. How do I know this? This happened to me. The wrath of Capital health fell on my head. It took me 10 months to get my name and privileges back.

Mr. Chairman, recently I heard there is a smear campaign, a whisper campaign. I don't believe this, but about 10 different people have told me, from Don Braid to Jodie Sinnema. I don't even know what that is: a whisper campaign started against Raj Sherman about what happened years ago, a Gordon Campbell moment in my life, I was told. I'm just telling you what the Gordon Campbell moment was. I've got nothing to hide. My colleagues punished me. It took me 10 months to clear my name and my honour. They used my colleagues on contract under Capital health to punish me for a patient complaint that was never shown to me. There was no legitimacy to it. To this day there has not been one official complaint against me to the College of Physicians and Surgeons. It took me 10 months to clear my name and my honour, and there's no negative record with the College of Physicians and Surgeons on my record. After 100,000 patients there has not been one complaint to the college.

Mr. Vandermeer: What was their rationale for that?

Dr. Sherman: The rationale is not the important issue, hon. member. The important issue was the fact that front-line staff were bullied. They were bullied then. They are bullied now. When the minister . . . [Dr. Sherman's speaking time expired]

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I can tell that the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark needs to continue talking, and I'm interested in listening, so I'd be interested if he would continue.
Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Thank you so much. Chair of the CPC for health, because of confidentiality reasons I'm not at liberty to discuss the details, because of patient confidentiality and regional confidentiality. I had to sign these things in order to ensure I wouldn't sue. They did this to three or four other doctors, and they actually successfully sued for $4 million or $5 million. I don't know the truth, but the rumour was that, hey, this was all hushed up, and the money was hidden in the books. They left town, and they were blackballed, never to work in this province ever again. I signed a confidentiality agreement saying I promised not to sue. I promised never to discuss details. So, hon. member, I'm sorry. I can't discuss the details.

The point being, this happened to front-line staff. When the hon. Member for Calgary-West, incoming after the election, the new minister, came in, they went to one region, and they brought in something called the code of conduct, a very draconian code. The code of conduct means the same thing: "Anybody who says anything, look out. We're going to deal with you. We're going to hammer you." This is why the Alberta Medical Association and all of the physicians said: "Hey. This is unacceptable. We need to advocate for our patients. We have a duty of care."

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, you're my friend. I know we can't talk about caucus confidentiality, but I think we can talk about the stuff before we walk into the caucus room. We were both pulled aside before entering the caucus room by the previous hon. minister of health from Calgary-West, and he said: "Well, by the way, I'll tell you guys before you walk into the room. We're going to one region, and we're meeting the board." That's when we found out – isn't that correct? – that we were going to one region. You and I are the health leads in this government. You're the chair, and I'm the junior health minister.

Mr. Anderson: Raj, I was there, too.

Dr. Sherman: This hon. member was there.

We were told one minute before we walked into the room, and that hon. member, the minister, brought in this region. I had no input into who was on the board and who was the chairman of the board and the deputy minister. They brought in draconian code of conduct measures. That's what this is. It's about intimidating front-line staff. If they speak up, they will be hammered. That's why our front-line staff, from the nurses to the doctors, said that this is unacceptable.

Poor Dr. Duckett, who just got released from his job, didn't create this. He walked into it. He actually amended it. He actually amended it and improved it and said: I'm happy with people talking.

This is actually what I did. This is a case in point, Mr. Chairman. We have an oath as doctors and nurses as health care providers when we get a licence. It's a duty that trumps every other duty, our oath that we must speak up for patients when they're suffering. We must. It trumps every other oath. It actually trumps the oath that I've taken in this Legislature. If given an option, yes, that oath sits above this oath for me as a physician. It does. I'm sorry. It's intertwined in the deepest inner fabric of every health care worker, and that must trump.

So you had the junior health minister, who's a doctor, who actually clanged the bells and who supported Dr. Paul Parks. Case in point, I just got removed from my position because I spoke up. It appears that the code of conduct within the government that I ran for still exists. It appears I spoke up for patients who were dying and suffering, and as parliamentary assistant I was told that I violated the ingrained code because I went against the minister as parliamentary assistant. My oath as a PA: I cannot speak against the minister and the government.

Mr. Chairman, what really happened? My family, my grandpa was a rural family doctor and a sugar cane and dairy farmer. I grew up in India.

An Hon. Member: Where?

Dr. Sherman: In India.

In my mother's family they're all doctors. Everyone is a doctor. In my dad's family they're all freedom fighters. There's one doctor, which is me, from my dad's side of the family. We were taught by our grandparents – I was raised by my grandparents; my mother has five sisters and two brothers – to always tell the truth, always be honest. The truth will never hurt you.

I was told by my grandfather on a nice, beautiful night in India – I think I was three years old. He said: son – he was my father, really. I thought my mother was my sister. I didn't see my dad for seven years. He was in Canada trying to make a better life for our family. I was the baby of the family. My mom was a single mom with three boys. I remember it was a beautiful night. There would be hyenas in the background. You know, we had tigers. We didn't have little snakes; we had pythons. It was sort of like Mowgli where I grew up. We had real guns. We had 20-gauge elephant guns where we grew up, and we didn't go hunting until a tiger ate at least 10 of us. We didn't go hunting for Bambi. That's where I grew up.

My grandfather – I remember this night. The moon was up, and it was a beautiful sky. He said, "Son, there are three things in this world you cannot hide." He pointed at the moon, and he said: "The moon. We named you Rajnish. Raja means king. Nish means night, moon. We named you after that. You are king of the moon." Interestingly enough, I worked all night shifts at the emergency room. I was actually king of the night shift. He said: you can't hide the moon. During the day he showed me the sun, and he said: you can't hide the sun. You know what else he told me? You can't hide the truth. The sun, the moon, and the truth you cannot hide.

He said: "Son, above all. In our family your forefathers helped free a nation from an empire without spilling blood. When you utter the truth, God will protect you. You must have the courage when you are faced with making a choice to have the courage that my father had." My great-grandfather, my grandfather's father, was a captain and surgeon in the Indian army. His friend was Lala Lajpat Rai. In 1928 there was a protest of the Simon Commission. It was in the movie Gandhi, where they got beaten with sticks. My great-grandfather, Basant Ram Pathak had the courage to stand up to an empire for freedom, and they were beaten with sticks. He was in prison three times. My great-grandfather was a physician. He was beaten with sticks. His brother Mukand Lal Pathak came to the U.S. in 1906. He invented the modern-day steam engine. I've got to write a book about this. I heard Obama's story, and I thought: jeez, that's nothing.

Getting back to this bill. We're talking about health care and medicine. We're talking about the courage of speaking up, of getting beaten with sticks. In this society we are not beaten with sticks literally. The front-line health care workers, when they speak up, they are figuratively beaten with sticks. Doctors in this province, I will name them. Dr. David Swann: Mr. Chairman, you beat him with a stick, and you fired him when he spoke up as a health care professional on the Kyoto protocol.

Dr. John O'Connor was beaten with figurative sticks by this government when he raised legitimate concerns. They used the college of physicians and the Alberta Medical Association to beat him. They use our profession during contract negotiations. Our profession is told: deal with your members if you want this contract done. This is how things work in this province.

Dr. Lyle Oberg, another member of this government, talked about skeletons. In my mind, you know, he's a doctor—he's a rural family doctor—and he's probably talking about patients dying in hospitals and emergency rooms. That's what was happening, and they beat him with figurative sticks, and they stuck him on this side. Mr. Chairman, you know what? This is so sad and tragic. The only way to keep my sanity is that I have to smile and laugh.

Their own junior health minister, me, stood up and spoke not against my government but for my government, for this province, and figuratively I have been beaten by the same stick, and watch what's going to happen. They're going to stand up and beat me again. They're going to say I'm wrong. They're going to bring up some other excuse of why they expelled me from caucus. We will give them a chance in the Legislature to tell the world why they expelled me from caucus. The hon. Deputy Premier will have an opportunity to explain this.

Mr. Chairman, I'll tell you. My dad's father came to Canada in 1906 and on the ship Komagata Maru came my great-grandmother's brothers. This is my grandfather, my dad's father, who wanted one doctor in his family. He died 10 months before my birth. I just went to India, and my dad's sister said: my gosh; I swear you are our father, and you are back. He helped finance the freedom movement of India.

Here is a little historical fact. In 1913 the Ghadar Party started on the west coast of North America, from Vancouver to San Francisco. Ghadar means revolution. He was the western hemispheric operations manager for the world for the Ghadar Party. My mother's family were in that Bhagat party, which means patriotism. Her family were the politicians, with Gandhi and Nehru. My dad's father was with the soldiers, with the warriors. They were going to bomb the Indian Assembly, and he says: "Hey, hey, hey, guys. Don't do that. Don't be killing people. If you want, throw a little firecracker to make a point." So that's what they did. They had a big fight. In 1928 Bhagat Singh threw a little firecracker into the Assembly to make a point about freedom.

Mr. Chairman, I know what you're going to say, and I'm going to quickly come back to the point. This is what I'm doing, this is a figurative bomb in this Assembly that I'm throwing today on health care, that my dad's father had thrown into the Indian Assembly. They didn't hurt anyone. They just wanted to make a point. I'm not hurting anyone. My family asked me not to bring this up, but I said

I must. This is 72 years later in a different country, that guy's grandson, myself. This is a political bomb that's being thrown into this Chamber. We cannot ignore what's happening in the health care system.

The health care system is in crisis. It is broken. The government of this province broke it. The problem surfaces in the emergency rooms, and the doctors are clanging the bells.

Why did I go public? Before the doctors went public, I had Dr. Paul Parks meet the deputy minister. They met with him, and he had Alberta Health Services meet with the docs, and they were told by Alberta Health Services that there's a plan coming August 2011 to fix this problem. The doctors were blown off.

The AMA, Alberta Medical Association, met in September at the emergency meeting on a Thursday night. I got my ear chewed off by the 30 ER docs from all across the province. They said: "Raj, we have lost faith in you. You told us not to say anything. We haven't said anything for years. We actually don't even vote for this party or this government. We've been silenced." I in my exasperation said: "Gentlemen, I give up. I've done all that I could. Your voice has gotten to the caucus table of the government."

I've been the parliamentary assistant of two ministers. The previous minister may disagree with me. He may have heard me, but I don't think he listened to me. He may say: hey, Raj never said anything. Come on. Do you seriously think that I was in the media 45 times, and then I ran, and I didn't say anything to the previous minister about this issue? Come on. If he says that, that's a ridiculous allegation if that ever comes up. The hon. members here know that I've been fighting like stink for health care workers at caucus because those are the rules. I've been silent publicly. I've gotten lots of criticism, saying: "Raj, why didn't you speak up earlier? Why now?"

When Dr. Paul Parks felt like he and the emergency doctors weren't listened to, I told them that before they called the media, it's their responsibility to let the current minister know, because this guy didn't receive the letter, and let the current deputy minister know and let the current chairman of the board of AHS know and let the current CEO of Alberta Health Services know because they didn't have this letter from 2008, when they sent that letter to the hon. members for Edmonton-Whitemud, Edmonton-Rutherford, Edmonton-Meadowlark, to the hon. Premier, and to the hon. deputy minister at the time, in 2008. I said: you have to resend that information because since then we've had an interim board for a year, we've had an interim CEO, and then we've had another minister in between.

Oh, by the way, when the hon. Member for Calgary-West was minister, he got a letter from Dr. Kwan, who was the section president between myself and Dr. Paul Parks, and he said that it's just runny noses and sore throats. He said: we've got too many doctors and too many nurses. The previous hon. minister did the right thing. He said that we need more doctors and nurses and long-term care beds. Then the election happened, I was paired up with the minister, and suddenly I thought: what the heck? He's saying that we don't need long-term care beds; we're capping them. He says that we've got too many doctors and too many nurses. I said to myself: what's this? So we fought at caucus.

Then Dr. Paul Parks felt they weren't heard recently, so they sent the letter on October 8, 2010, the same FOIPable e-mail, but we don't need to FOIP it because some emergency doctor got upset and sent it to the media. Those are those 322 cases. There's no patient-identifying information on those cases. It just tells the story. The patient identifiers are separate because that would be a violation of patient confidentiality. And it was Sheila Weatherill who actually wanted these cases in this format. So those cases are in there.

I believe the letter from the Premier is there, a commitment from the Premier to the emergency doctors during the election. It's on PC Alberta letterhead. There are three letters that are attached, which are letters to the minister of health Edmonton-Whitemud, to the minister of health Calgary-West, to the minister of health Edmonton-Mill Creek. There's no confidentiality of patients that's broken. Dr. Paul Parks sent these in 2008, and he resent them again. He sent them to me again as well.

I'm an elected member of government. I said: hold me accountable. This is why I publicly have said that I take personal responsibility because I was here, and I knew about it. Society can blame me. It is my fault. I'm a doctor. They may not know what they're talking about, but I know what I'm talking about. It is my fault. I was the assistant to the health minister; however, I was powerless to do anything about it. I did bring it up at caucus. I am only one vote. It's a parliamentary democracy.

I took an oath as a parliamentary assistant. I took an oath as a member of the Legislature. When Dr. Paul Parks went public, suddenly, Mr. Chairman, came a collision of values and principles. That's what happened, a collision of values and principles. The values of a political party collided, and political loyalty collided with the values that my grandfather taught me on that starry night and the values of my profession.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. I do intend to provide the hon. member with another opportunity to speak, as have others, because I'm sure that he does want to continue speaking. I would like to put on record my views on the amendment to Bill 17, which is actually what we should be talking about here in the House. We shouldn't be talking about, you know, reasons why someone would have been suspended from a caucus because the hon. member well knows why he was suspended from caucus, and it had nothing to do with his views around health care. In fact, we had a good discussion about this amendment at one of our caucus discussions.

As has been pointed out by members of the opposition, there are some issues with this amendment. To put into law that no unnecessary deaths, no unnecessary harm to patients, no unnecessary delays in care, and no unnecessary waste of resources should occur – well, Mr. Chair, we've heard a lot about family. My father was a family doctor. My father was a doctor that used to do house calls, used to drive out in the middle of winter and do an appendix operation on a table in the country. That's pretty good commitment. I'm sure that he would have said that there is no such thing as a necessary death, that there's no such thing as necessary harm to a patient, and he would also say that you don't put that into a legislative framework.

They already have an oath, Mr. Chairman, not to do that. But, as we have seen, sometimes oaths are broken, and there should be consequences for that. This amendment doesn't provide any consequences, as was pointed out by the hon. member from the Liberal opposition. What's the consequence? Is it a feel-good statement? Is that what this is about?

Mr. Chairman, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark has some very positive things to say about our health care system. He has some very positive things to say about what we need to do to change our health care system, and we applaud him for that. Every member on this side of the bench applauds him for his views on health care. That's not why he was suspended from our caucus, and it isn't the floor of this House that we would talk about that.

Mr. Chairman, I cannot support this amendment, and I can't support it because it's not good legislation, not because of the context of the amendment, not because of the spirit of it. Certainly, everybody in this House can agree to the spirit of this amendment. But, again, in agreement with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, I believe that this is not something you would put into the legislation that should be part of Bill 17. Therefore, I cannot support the amendment.

I would also point out, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. member knows full well why he was suspended from our caucus.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, may I just say that we have listened with compassion and interest for the last hour on the things you've told us, and I will direct you to deal directly with the amendment.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Chairman, thank you so much. I really appreciate it, and I am truly honoured and humbled to rise again and rebut some of the remarks of the Deputy Premier. I like him. His father is a rural guy. Like my grandfather and my great-grandfather, he was a rural family doctor.

The reason we're talking about the amendment is that these are the accountability measures. I encourage every member right now to log onto www.caep.ca, the Canadian Association of Emergency Physicians. The amendment talks about this position statement of the emergency doctors of this country. The four principles of the amendment are a guiding principle for the whole system, that there should be no unnecessary deaths. People are going to die. If you have a cardiac arrest, you're probably going to die. But if you go in with appendicitis, you wait for eight hours, it ruptures, and you die in a waiting room, that's an unnecessary death, that tragic case.

My heart goes out to the family of Dr. Guy Woolsey. He's my friend, actually. He's my friend. The mother of my children: he was good friends with her years ago, her best friend in university. We were all good friends. His brother hung himself in the emergency room at the Royal Alex when he sought mental health services. And somebody was going to close Alberta Hospital Edmonton. That was an unnecessary death, when you go for care, you wait for hours at the University of Alberta hospital emergency department, you walk across a bridge and think about jumping, and you think: "You know what? My brother is a doctor. I'm going to go to the Royal Alex, where they look after everyone." Every hour he came out of the room to say: when is a psychiatrist coming?

The department was plugged up by admitted patients and psychiatry patients. Every psychiatry bed was plugged up. They say: "What's the purpose of coming down at midnight? We can't do anything anyway. We've got no beds." Then he asked a nurse for a pen. I read this in the paper, so I'm not violating patient confidentiality. This was a story in the Edmonton Journal by Jodie Sinnema. He asked the nurses for a pen, and do you know what he did with that pen, Mr. Chairman, in this story that I read in the paper? He penned his suicide note.

Mr. Chairman, do you know why the morale of front-line staff is at 25 per cent? My emergency doctors, nurses, staff, and colleagues at the Royal Alex emergency department – dear hon. members, please listen to this. Hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul, please listen to this, please. You know what happened? When the staff opened the curtain in his room, they found my friend's brother hanging from the rafters.

Mr. Chairman, there's a smear campaign saying that Raj has an emotional problem. Damn right I have an emotional problem. Someone I love in the Public Affairs Bureau has leaked something, that Raj has an emotional problem.

My father almost died four weeks ago. He never got to an in-hospital bed. He was discharged from the emergency room after four days. He never got upstairs. On the day I went to India, within 30 hours his arm hurt and he had a heart attack. I'm sitting in the intensive care unit with my family at 4 p.m. on October 28 because the cab is coming at 5 p.m., and I've got to go to the airport, and my dad is possibly dying in the ICU. I have a couple of uncles that passed away, who raised me, that I mentioned earlier. One had died two months ago. I had to go bereaved to that family. This has been such a hard time for my family, for my children to see their grandfathers.

This has been such a hard time for me as a human being. Damn right I have an emotional problem. I have been part of a government that dismantled a broken health care system. I cannot defend it any longer, and they're smearing my name to discredit me. I spoke up, and they fired me.

The other thing is that I hurt the feelings of the hon. Member for Calgary-West. I hurt his feelings. [interjections] I'm just answering the hon. member's questions. I have on the Rutherford show said: I wear my heart on one sleeve, and I wear my brain on the other sleeve. I'm a passionate guy. You are always going to get the honest truth from me. Damn it, when somebody is suffering and they need someone to stand up for them, then somebody needs to take an arrow for them. Damn it, I came from a family that will do that. I came from a profession that will stand up for those that nobody will stand up for. It's in my blood. It's in the fabric of who I am. Beat me with a stick. Every time I am beaten, I am strengthened.

I mentioned earlier that I will not stop talking in this House until my lips can't move anymore. I will not stop talking until an ambulance has to carry me out of this Legislature. Mr. Chairman, if a human being doesn't sleep for 72 hours, they have a cardiac arrest. If they don't sleep for 24 or 48 hours, they'll go insane; normal human beings will. I have brought my pillow, and I have brought my blanket, and I have brought my STARS bag. This is who I am.

Mr. Chairman, I'm going to get back on point, to the hon. member. The amendment has a guiding principle of no unnecessary deaths. People that are going to die are going to die, but people that shouldn't die shouldn't die. "No unnecessary harm to patients" means if you've got a broken leg and you've got to leave without treatment or when you've got fluid around your heart after your operation and wait for eight hours and you've got to leave out of frustration; that's unnecessary harm, and you die at home. That's unnecessary.

When you have fluid around your heart, a pericardial tamponade, and you wait for eight hours in the waiting room, when you have an ectopic pregnancy and it's ruptured and your blood pressure is in the boots and you're waiting for six hours on an ambulance stretcher metres from care, when you've got a brain aneurism that's burst and you're sitting for eight hours on an ambulance stretcher metres from care, when your child has a fever – we don't know if it's meningitis or a sore throat, a runny nose. I'm sorry, Mr. Chairman; a nurse in a call centre can't tell. The hon. member here is not a doctor, but his father would tell him that a nurse in a call centre can't tell. His father would tell him a doctor has to see that patient. So that's unnecessary delay in care.

"Unnecessary waste" refers to: where do we make the investments into health care? Are we making them in the necessary spots or unnecessary spots?

Then part (d) says:

Set standards for lengths of stay in the emergency departments of hospitals consistent with the "Position Statement on Emergency Department Overcrowding" published by the Canadian Association of Emergency Physicians and dated February 2007.

Please, hon. members, turn your computers on and stop talking.

You have all got to listen to this so that I don't have to repeat it again. Hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, please get that group to listen so I don't have to repeat it again. I'm repeating this for the second time. In this statement are the details of the accountability measures. I will quickly try to get these for you here. Mr. Chairman, if you will just indulge me and just give me a little bit more time while I keep speaking to the amendment to the Alberta Health Act.

I've talked enough about problems. You know what? Somebody may say that this is theatrics. If anyone were to say that this is theatrics – well, it's for society to judge what this says.

Here it is, the position statement on emergency department overcrowding from the Canadian Association of Emergency Physicians, February 2007. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud said that there should be "national and international standards." Well, this is the national standard. Hear it today.

CAEP Position

1. That emergency department (ED) length of stay benchmarks be established nationally as follows:
 - (i) ED length of stay not to exceed six hours in 95% of cases for CTAS Level I, II and III patients
 - (ii) ED length of stay not to exceed four hours in 95% of cases for CTAS Level IV and V patients
2. That all admitted patients must be transferred out of the emergency department to an in-patient area within two hours of decision to admit.

That comes underneath (i) and (ii). Let's go to three.

3. That overcapacity protocols be rapidly implemented to allow Canadian hospitals to meet the national emergency department length of stay benchmarks until functional acute care capacity is sufficient.
4. That achievement of these benchmarks must be continually measured and ED length of stay should be documented on a daily basis by hospitals for all patients, and reviewed monthly. Hospital and Regional administrators should be held accountable if the throughput standards are not met.
5. That hospitals optimize bed management strategies to ensure the appropriate use of existing and future acute care beds.
6. That governments sufficiently increase the number of functional acute care beds to achieve regular hospital occupancy rates that do not exceed 85%.

We have been above 100 per cent for a decade. This didn't start yesterday; this started in the mid-90s. There's one government that broke the system. It ain't the green guys, the orange guys, or the red guys; it's the blue guys, that I ran for. This Premier actually didn't start it.

These hon. members that I ran with, fantastic people, are my friends. I have the utmost respect for each and every one of them. We're not even debating differences of ideas. We want to fix this. We actually are in agreement with all of this. We just have a difference of opinion on how to fix it.

We'll go back to the statement, that speaks to the amendment, as you had asked, Mr. Chairman. Point 1 in the footnotes:

ED length of stay is the time of patient first encounter (the earlier of triage nurse assessment or patient registration) Until the time of patient departure from the [emergency department].

So they register at triage, and they physically leave the department on their way home or physically leave the department on their way upstairs to an in-hospital bed.

Footnote 2:

For more information on the Canadian Triage and Acuity Scale (CTAS) . . .

That's for CTAS I, II, III, IV, V: I is the most urgent; V is the least urgent. They all need to be seen. Patients don't know what their diagnosis is. You know what? The front-line triage nurse doesn't know the diagnosis but is able to assess, based on protocols, where the patient fits. It's the doctor who actually is trained to do the diagnosis.

The hon. member who's the Deputy Premier would sort of understand it if he ever talked to his dad about health care and doctoring. His dad would fully understand it, God bless his soul.

The background on this statement:

Emergency department (ED) overcrowding occurs when the demand for emergency services exceeds the ability of an emergency department to provide quality care within appropriate time frames. ED overcrowding in Canada has been escalating resulting in patient suffering, prolonged wait times, deteriorating levels of service, and adverse patient outcomes.

4:40

Causes and Consequences of ED Overcrowding

The primary cause of ED overcrowding is hospital overcrowding. Hospital overcrowding arises from several factors, including a shortage of acute care beds, staffing shortages, limited community care resources, and a lack of integration of community and hospital-based resources. With the shortage of hospital beds, hospitals increasingly have more patients requiring admission than there are beds to accommodate them. The current approach to dealing with hospital overcrowding involves an excessive and unsafe use of EDs to inappropriately "warehouse" admitted patients, both stable and unstable, for long periods of time. This causes a blockage in the outflow of admitted patients from the emergency department to hospital in-patient areas, which in turn results in ED overcrowding. ED overcrowding is not caused by inappropriate use of [emergency departments] or inefficiencies within EDs. This is because "non-urgent" patients do not occupy acute care stretchers, require little nursing care, and typically have brief treatment times.

Mr. Chairman, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud understood it. The hon. Member for Calgary-West said that it's the runny noses and sore throats causing the problem. This refutes that statement.

A significant consequence of hospital and ED overcrowding is "access block." This is a situation in which referring hospitals and ambulances are unable to access secondary and tertiary care facilities or their emergency departments in a timely fashion.

Access block is a particular issue for rural physicians . . .

Rural physicians, the same physician who is the father of the Deputy Premier and his colleagues in all of rural Alberta and all of rural Canada. This is a particular issue, actually, for all of my rural colleagues here. It's actually worse for them.

We're talking about access block.

. . . who are frequently unable to transfer patients requiring a higher level of care because urban receiving facilities are full.

The rural doctors cannot get their sick patients into the cities because the city hospitals are full.

Similarly, when EDs are gridlocked with admitted patients, paramedics are unable to transfer care to ED staff in a timely fashion, or are diverted [elsewhere].

You get ambulances flying across the city, from one end of town to the other, with sick patients.

This leaves paramedics and their patients in an untenable situation and compromises the ability of the emergency health services system to serve other patients requiring emergency pre-hospital care. Access block also occurs within hospitals when elective surgery cases are cancelled in an effort to deal with hospital and ED overcrowding.

When people are dying, they actually cancel elective surgeries because there are no beds. They take the elective surgery beds because people are dying in waiting rooms. Given an option, it's a partial deployment of the disaster plan. That's what that is. So for poor patients who are waiting for six months for cancer surgery, hip and knee surgery, the surgery is cancelled because if given an option, we have to re-triage to look after dying patients in waiting rooms. This is why surgeries are cancelled. A significant consequence of hospital and ED overcrowding is access block.

Canada has only 3 hospital beds per 1,000 Canadians, ranking 26th out of 30 OECD countries.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, how many hospital beds do we have per 1,000 population?

Ms Blakeman: I have no idea.

Mr. MacDonald: How many hospital beds per population? In Alberta there 515 Albertans for one bed.

Dr. Sherman: Okay. So the ratio in this province is even lower.

Our lack of acute care beds means that most Canadian hospitals frequently operate at unsustainable occupancy rates of higher than 90%.

In this province it's been higher than 100 per cent for years. [Dr. Sherman's speaking time expired]

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's a pleasure to stand up and give my views on this amendment, A3 I believe it is. Are we on A3, or are we on Members' Statements?

The Deputy Chair: On A3.

Mr. Marz: Thank you. I have a great deal of respect for you, Mr. Chairman, and for the rules of this Assembly, so I would try to stick to the subject matter as much as I can, but I've noticed you've afforded some examples to relate back. I, too, would probably like to be afforded that same privilege, and I'm asking for that up front.

Much has been said about the health care system: broken, problems with it, needs fixing. I'm not going to get into putting a specific label on it. I guess we've all got experiences with the health care system, and I'd like to have the patience of the Assembly just to outline some of my experience that would relate back to how this amendment would fix it or not fix it. I'll try to respect the confidentiality. A lot of it involves my family members, and I don't want that in Hansard too badly, but I have to say something in response to what I've heard here tonight.

In 1998, a year after I was elected, the whip saw me sitting down at that end – I think it was the hon. Member for Medicine Hat – and insisted I go up to the clinic because he said that I didn't look very well, so I went to the clinic. I just accepted any doctor that would look at me, and I ended up by ambulance in the Royal Alex, which I thought was very good. I ended up with a stent, and a day later I was back in the Assembly. I probably shouldn't have been – I was told not to be for a few days – but I was back here because I think the work of this Assembly is important.

Ten years later that same doctor that I saw at the clinic that day – I had kept in touch with her over the years – called me and initiated an appointment. I didn't call that particular doctor. I said: well, my schedule is quite busy, so if you want me to come in, I would like an appointment first thing in the morning or first thing in the afternoon, when the clinic opens. Now that particular doctor was working in a different clinic. Well, when I got there at 1 o'clock, the arranged time, there was a big lineup, and the doors were locked. After 15 minutes I saw them through the glass window, the staff and the doctor, so I phoned them. They looked at the phone and kept on talking, and the doors remained locked. I happened to inquire with the group of people that had assembled outside, "Does anyone else have an appointment here for 1 o'clock?" and three other people put up their hands. I then pursued it because I was under the impression that when I make an appointment, I'm entitled to about 15 minutes. That could be erroneous, but that's the assumption I had.

I asked if anybody else had an appointment with that doctor at 1:15, and four more people put up their hands. Again, I asked about 1:30, and again four more people put up their hands. So when the doors opened, needless to say there was a rush for the counter, and I no longer was first. It probably was after 3 o'clock before I finally got in.

Now, when I got in, I was asked by the doctor that arranged the appointment, not at my request but at theirs, what I was there for. I said, "Well, you called me in." A chart was dug out, and I was told, "Well, we need to double your prescriptions because you're about to have a heart attack." Well, that sounded strange because about a month ago I had just visited the cardiologist that did the stent 10 years ago, and he had updated my prescriptions, and he'd just renewed them. I said, "I find that odd." I was told that, no, I was wrong. I said, "Well, could I please look at the chart?" I was handed the chart, and I looked at the date, and it was 10 years old. I'm wondering if the mover of the amendment could tell me how this is going to fix that.

I was asked by the member to look up the protocols in the position statement on emergency department overcrowding, which I did yesterday. A couple of points. Number 2 says that all admitted patients will be transferred to an in-patient facility within two hours of the decision to admit. I'm not sure if the in-patient beds will be available, but nevertheless that's what it says. Number 4 is interesting. It says that failure to fulfill that would result – I'm not quoting it exactly. The hospital or regional administrators should be held accountable. Well, I'm not sure how holding a hospital or regional administrator accountable for the actions of that doctor's office would have solved that problem. If anybody thinks that that's not a problem, then I guess I'm in the wrong place. I think that's a major problem.

Mr. Chair, if you'll indulge me, another situation. My wife was unfortunate enough a few years ago to have back surgery in the Foothills hospital in Calgary. It was the fall of the year. We were harvesting, and my wife is an integral part of the harvest operation as she is my combine operator. Her appointment came up, and we dropped everything and went down. She had the surgery. I did not leave her bedside the first two days. If she needed ice in a cup, I got it for her. There was no burden on the staff for that. I stayed in the room 24 hours except to go out for a sandwich. Once she needed to get up on her feet walking after surgery, I was the one that took her down the hall and walked her. I did everything to help.

On the Saturday morning the doctor came in and told both of us that there was no way she would be going home until the Monday. This was at about 10 o'clock in the morning. So the doctor told us there was no way she was going home at 10 o'clock in the morning, so my wife, being a good farmer's wife, insisted. She heard the weather forecast, a chance of rain. I'd better go home and do harvesting. She assured me she'd be all right without me there. I reluctantly left.

When I got home, I noticed the answering machine was flashing. Before I was here, I didn't pack a cellphone around very much. I checked the answering machine. My wife had called, and she said that within 15 minutes after I left, some nurses came into her room and said that they had no plans on manning that ward she was in and there was no room in another ward, so they were discharging her. She was sitting in the waiting room of the Foothills hospital on the say-so of three nurses that came in after the doctor told her she had to stay until Monday. So I had to turn around, race back to Calgary, pick her up, and take her home and watch her. By Monday she had an infection and some complications, and I had to get her back to a local doctor in Three Hills, who had to transfer her back to another city hospital for treatment. I'm not sure how this amendment and keeping some regional hospital administrator accountable for the actions of some individuals is going to fix that. I don't believe it is.

Mr. Chair, I've got a lot more stories. My parents both died of cancer in their 50s. I've got a long history with the health care system from Edmonton south with various things. I have a practice that when a loved one of mine went into a hospital, whether it was one of my children or my wife, I stayed there until they were released, and I did everything I could to make sure that they were tended to properly because I guess, quite frankly, I didn't trust what I saw happen. We can blame the system. We can blame government. But, you know, there are individuals making decisions. I went and sat up at the station and watched TV at various times of the day just to see how things were going.

I disagree with a lot of the things that were said tonight. We've talked about everything in the last couple hours except this amendment. I'm trying to relate my comments to the amendment. I just don't feel that this amendment is going to fix the problems that I've encountered with the system. Therefore, I can't support it.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Got to stretch my legs a little bit and talk about health care. This is what I find amusing, that all the comments I've heard from the Deputy Premier – and I do appreciate the Deputy Premier speaking to the bill and actually putting something on the record and the member that just spoke and earlier the Education minister and so forth. I really appreciate that because it's good. That's what a debate is. We've had more debate on health care in the last couple of days than we've probably had in this Assembly, certainly, during my time here, so that's three years or thereabouts. It is exciting to see.

Here's the thing, though. I just don't think we're quite in tune, we're quite listening to Raj with regard to what he is proposing.

Some Hon. Members: Names. The rules of the House.

Mr. Anderson: Oh, yes. Sorry. I get tired, as we all are tired. That was a mental mistake. I apologize. I withdraw saying his name. Sorry about that. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

What I would say is that we have a situation here where you have an emergency room doctor. This was the head emergency physician in the province for a time. This guy understands the health care system with respect to the emergency room more than anybody in the province or as well as anybody in the province. So I get a real kick out of watching people who don't have a clue what they're talking about with regard to emergency rooms.

Mr. Hancock: That would be you.

Mr. Anderson: That's right. That would be me. The hon. member doesn't know, but certainly the Education minister gets it, clearly, because the system is so good right now. You clearly get it, and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark doesn't get it. Think about what you're saying.

The arrogance is unbelievable. I'm listening to him. I'm listening to him, and so are all the people over here who are going to be supporting this amendment. This didn't come from the Wildrose.

It's not a Wildrose amendment. This is the amendment of an emergency room expert, a doctor, okay? What I would like to see is a little bit of humility and a little bit of listening and realize that sometimes there are people out there that know more than you do about a subject. I certainly know that that member understands a lot more about the emergency room than I do.

We have an expert here. He has come up with a very good plan. He has put it before this House, and now we have an opportunity to debate and vote on it and accept it. I'm telling you that we are not going to do anything in this. We're going to continue on Bill 17, talking about this, until this is passed or until you throw us out. That's one of the two. It's your pick, okay? That's all it is. You decide.

So we want to make sure that we have an ample opportunity, that all the people in Alberta can come here, and they can sit in the gallery. They can look on their Internet TV, and they can have the opportunity to take a good look at this amendment and take a good look at this government, who refuse to listen to an expert on emergency rooms during an emergency room crisis. Absolutely hilarious. If it wasn't so serious, it would be hilarious. It's unbelievable to me that you folks over there can't see the value in this amendment. It's about accountability.

I know that's a foreign concept. I really do know it's a foreign concept to a lot of the folks over there. But it's absolutely amazing to me that you can say that you want to pass this fluff piece of legislation. That's what it is. It's a piece of fluff. It's nothing more. Read it. Like, look at the health charter. The health charter must "recognize that health is a partnership among individuals, families, communities, health providers, organizations that deliver health services, and the Government of Alberta." Seriously? That's the health charter? That's what we're going to recognize in the health charter?

We've put a bill together, and we've spent time running around the province talking to people and talking to so-called experts, and the best we came up with was that a health charter must "recognize that health is a partnership among individuals, families, communities, health providers, organizations that deliver services, and the Government of Alberta"? Holy Toledo. That's some creative thinking. Way to go. That'll blow the roof off the place.

Then the health charter must "acknowledge the impact of an individual's health status . . ."

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, we're on the amendment. You're on the bill. We're on the amendment.

Mr. Anderson: Okay. Fine. This amendment here amends in this book here section 2, and I'm reading section 2. Okay? This amends it.

Here we go: "acknowledges the impact of an individual's health status and other circumstances on the individual's capacity to interact with the health system." Okay? That's what it says. It's fluff.

The member comes along with this amendment, and he says: "Look, we're going to take this piece of fluff, and we're actually going to make it a bill worth passing. We're actually going to make it worth something, okay? What we're going to do is we're going to add (c)." I mean, (c) is good. Those are good principles. They're also a little bit of motherhood and apple pie, but, you know, they're okay.

Then it says:

- (d) set standards for lengths of stay in the emergency departments of hospitals consistent with the "Position Statement on Emergency Department Overcrowding" published by the Canadian Association of Emergency Physicians and dated February 2007.

Then you go to that document, and it lists very clearly for us that what we're talking about here; that is, hitting our targets for seriously ill patients of a maximum six-hour wait and for very ill patients a maximum of a four-hour wait 95 per cent of the time. It gives actual targets, actual accountability. That's what this Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark has essentially flushed his career with the folks over on that side of the House down the toilet with because he thinks this is more important. He thinks it's more important that we actually have some accountability targets in place, and then we can work towards those targets.

The way you work towards those targets is to do what Dr. Paul Parks and the other emergency doctors have done if you're going to achieve the targets that are in this amendment. The way you do it is you do what the Wildrose has been proposing and what these other emergency room doctors are proposing. You put site-based decision-making or a chief medical officer – call it whatever you want – in that hospital and let him make site-based decisions to achieve these targets. It is doable, but if we don't even pass the accountability measures, how is it going to happen? It's not going to happen. It's pie in the sky.

It's like the health minister when he came and said: "Don't worry. I know we have an ER . . ." – he didn't call it an ER crisis. "We have some issues in the ER, and guess what we're going to do? We're going to make sure that we meet these targets. We're going to move it from the 25 per cent or 30 per cent it is right now to 40 per cent or 55 per cent" or something like that. I mean, what's that going to do? There have got to be teeth. If it's not legislated, nothing is going to happen. It's just going to be a feel-good statement.

I mean, look at all the books that we've gone through with the government plans for different departments. "This is our plan. This is what we're going to do. This is what we aspire to." How many times are those plans met? Not a whole lot. It's government; it's slow. If it's not legislated, if we don't hold the government to account, it's like spending. If you don't have spending control, if it's not legislated, it ain't going to happen because there's no accountability.

That's what I want to see, and that's what the constituents of Airdrie-Chestermere want to see. The constituents of Airdrie-Chestermere don't have an emergency room. We want to see targets. We want to know, if we are going to have an ambulance take the extra time it takes to come out and get us into an emergency room, that when our folks get to that emergency room, there are targets in place that are going to make sure that the wait is as short as possible so that we can save lives.

I go back to the main issue here. We have the former head of emergency physicians in the province, an accomplished emergency room doctor, putting out on a platter some very, very doable targets. He's the expert. How many doctors do we have sitting in this House? We have none except for him, and he was in government. Now he's not in government because he chose to speak out for his constituents and for the people he cares about. They make some ridiculous, you know, antidemocratic malarkey about caucus unity: oh, we've got to keep caucus unity.

There are people dying in hospital rooms, for crying out loud. Give your heads a shake. Get your priorities straight. Pass the blinking legislation. This isn't rocket science, guys. It's an accountability target. Legislate it, and then give the doctors in the specific hospitals the authority, the site-based authority, to make it happen. [interjection] Well, you debate that, hon. minister. I want to hear it, but you've got to stand up when I'm done and tell me what we need to do on this, okay? I want to hear it. I want action. Okay?

We're sitting in here. There are people dying in the emergency rooms, and we're doing nothing about it. You want to pass this stuff, this fluff. Look at this stuff. The health charter must "recognize that health is a partnership among individuals, families, communities, health providers." Wow. Inspirational. That will do something. And it goes on.

The hon. member is proposing something that is going to save lives, guys and gals. It's going to save lives. Lives. This is what he is proposing, and if we put this on the shelf and we ignore it, you know what? I hope the hon. member doesn't go too far because I only have about 10 minutes.

It just makes sense that we actually put some teeth in this legislation. If the members on the other side of the House have proposals or amendments that they'd like to share, then I would ask them, you know, between when I'm speaking or when the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark is speaking, to share what they're going to bring forward. Share it. [interjection] No. We're not going to go down that road because then we can't come back to this once it's passed or once it's been defeated.

Mr. Horner: So it's all about you?

Mr. Anderson: No, it's not. What kind of logic is that? Honestly. Thank goodness you're not going to be in that chair in 14 months. [interjections]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, Airdrie-Chestermere has the floor.

Mr. Anderson: It's ridiculous, the absolute blinders that these folks on the front bench have on. That's right. Take a picture of me. It's all about you guys. It's all about power. That's all it has ever been about with you. Does it look like we're about power here and that Edmonton-Meadowlark is about power? We're sitting in the back because of undemocratic people like you. You're the reason your party is tanking right now. You. [interjections]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, through the chair.

Mr. Anderson: Anyway, that's the reason.

The point is to the amendment. We've got this position statement on emergency department overcrowding, and we need to find a way – and I hope the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark understands this. I hope the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark is listening and takes his seat in his chair here pretty quick. In your chair, please. Please go to the chair. There you go. Okay. You don't need to be in the chair anymore.

Okay. We've got this bill, and we've got this document that one of the foremost experts on emergency room care in the province has given us.

An Hon. Member: Are you his flunky?

Mr. Anderson: Am I his flunky? You guys are so ridiculous. It's just unbelievable. Do you guys care about anything other than yourselves? [interjections]

The Deputy Chair: Through the chair. Speak through the chair.

Mr. Anderson: Well, then, tell them to stop chirping. [interjections] Not during debate. Not tonight. Keep yapping.

Here it is. Here's the opportunity that we have to do something about this. We've got an opportunity to put some targets in place and have accountability, and that's what we want. If you don't have any kind of accountability measures, if you don't have any kind of targets, how are you going to have accountability? How is it going to be reached?

The hon. members on the other side can chirp all they want and make fun: oh, this is just all theatrics. No, it's not theatrics. I trust the emergency doc. That's who I trust. I don't trust any of you on this issue. You think I trust the Minister of Energy on this issue or the Minister of Education or any of you all? No. Because you don't know what you're talking about, and neither do I, but he does. So let's trust the guy who's the expert, okay? The finance minister has many strengths, but he has no clue about emergency room care. That's not his area of expertise. But the emergency doc from Edmonton-Meadowlark does.

It's not like this is just his idea. Other emergency doctors have spoken out about this issue as well and said that we need this, so why are we afraid to actually have some accountability measures in our emergency rooms? Why are we afraid to do that? That principle is sound. That much I do know, that if you do not have legislated accountability standards, it will not fly.

[Mr. Cao in the chair]

I'm telling the members in the House that this is self-survival for you folks. If this issue is not taken care of in 14 months, you're gone. That's the way it's going to be, guys. So fix it, okay? Do something about it. Don't just go to your blinking caucus meetings and do nothing and just be a bunch of trained seals. Stand up and be accounted for. I don't expect anything different from the front bench. But the people in the back: you guys know better. You can do something about it. You can do anything you want about it right now. They can't afford to do anything to you because they're on the edge. So do something about it.

Don't take my word for it. Take the emergency doctor's. If this was a finance bill or something like that, then, yeah, we'd talk to some of the people who have an economics background here. We'd listen to them a little bit more and give their opinion more weight. When we have issues on education, we give larger weight to some of the teachers. We want to hear what the teachers in this Assembly have to say about it. That's important. We need to take that into account. That doesn't mean we give them carte blanche, but it does mean that we listen to them. If we don't have a clue what we're talking about, then we listen to experts. We bring in more experts in committee, and we listen to experts outside of this House.

This government doesn't do that. It plows ahead with endless different rules and laws and regulations, and it doesn't listen to experts until it's almost too late, until a lot of the damage has been done. Whether it's the new royalty framework or it's the ridiculous way that schools were chosen around this province or the ridiculous centralization of the superboard, et cetera, it's all a product of not doing the job.

I'm glad we're having a lively debate, and we should. This isn't a partisan issue. That's what's so funny about it. It's not. This is not a left or right issue. It's not a conservative, liberal, or moderate issue. This is about doing the right thing. That's what this is about. I think that the government has an awesome opportunity here to show that democracy still lives, to show that – you know what? – the right thing to do is to be accountable, to stand up and say that we need to set standards for lengths of stay in the emergency departments. They need to be legislated, and then we need to empower the chief medical officers or physicians on the ground at the site and allow them to do what is needed to get the job done, give them the authority that they need to get the job done.

You know, it's just like the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake on Motion 503. There's a teacher. She knows, because she taught grade 3 students, that those PATs weren't working. She had seen it up close. She saw the damage they were doing. They weren't working. They were just giving hardship to the kids and all that sort of thing. I come from a nonteaching background, but I listened to that member, and she and a couple of others convinced me.

We need to listen to the docs in that same exact way.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I would like to continue on with some of the comments that I was making before. I'd like to just cite another example or two of how I don't feel this amendment would address some of the problems that I've encountered. I've outlined some in the past, some in the last 10 years, and one more recently, that I'd like to share.

We all know what our schedules are like, up here all week. I recently had a requisition done for some blood tests. By the time you get home Thursday night, there's no place to get them done, and Friday you're at the constituency office all day, with no chance to get them done. So these requisitions were bouncing around on the dash of my vehicle for about a month. My wife kept telling me that I should get these done. I said, "Well, I'll have to wait till session is over to get them done because there's just no opportunity to do that." She said, "Well, the lab is open every Saturday morning, and staff is there until noon, from 8 o'clock till noon." She insisted I go.

Obedient husband that I am, I drove in and got there about 8:30. To my surprise every chair in the waiting room was absolutely empty. There was one person getting up from the chair, rolling his sleeve down. I didn't see it, but I assumed that he'd just had some blood taken. I'm standing there with the requisition, and I was asked, "What do you want?" I said, "Well, I'm here with a requisition for some blood tests." I was told abruptly, "We only do emergencies on Saturdays." That's what I was told, and that's how I was told. I was a bit taken aback, and I didn't know how to respond to it because, of course, there's a sign there: zero tolerance for abuse. Although I felt I'd just been abused myself, I guess this only applies one way.

I tried to be as diplomatic as I could, and I said: "Perhaps I'll take a seat down at the far end of the lineup here because I can see that you're swamped. Perhaps by the time you get to me just before noon, I will become emergent, and I'll qualify." At that point the paper was ripped out of my hand. "I'll do you now." So I got the blood test, and I hoped that I hadn't appeared to be abusive to any staff because I certainly didn't want to do that.

Again, Mr. Chairman, I'm wondering: is that a systemic problem, or is that an attitudinal problem? I would say that it's an attitudinal problem. I've already cited a couple of other examples over a longer period of time, and I can go back to the '70s, when both of my parents died of cancer, in 1972 and 1976. They were in their fifties. I've had lots of experience along that line, too. You know what? Without going into detail about that, I saw those same attitudinal situations at that time in many different facilities in the province, and it disappoints me. So this is not a new thing. It's something that needs to be addressed, but I can't possibly see how this amendment is going to address that. Therefore, I think it's going to continue, which is unfortunate.

I'm not trying to pick on anybody here. I'm trying to come up with solutions, but all fingers are always pointing at administration. They're always pointing at governance. I believe the problems are much deeper than that. Maybe I'm alone in my thoughts in this Assembly. I'd be happy to hear if people think I am. I can tell you they are my personal experiences, and they're the truth. I can produce my wife as a witness. She has been with me every step of the way, or I've been with her.

I'm looking at this amendment closely, and I was hoping the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark was listening intently to my comments so that he could respond to them. I don't see that happening, which is unfortunate because I did sit here and show the respect for all the members and listened intently to everyone's comments tonight. I don't see that I'm afforded the same respect by my colleagues in the House, and I'm truly disappointed in that, Mr. Chairman.

With that, I'll take my seat.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark according to my list.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Hon. member, may I have that computer again, please? Just carrying on in answering the question of the hon. Deputy Premier, on speaking to the amendment, staying on topic, I wasn't finished reading the CAEP guidelines under subsection (d). I will ask all hon. members to go to www.caep.ca to pull this up on their computer and go to position statement 2007 so that they know what I'm talking about. Some may say that this is an old, outdated position statement. The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness, Edmonton-Mill Creek, I believe, is on record as saying that it's an old statement, and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud is talking about national-international standards. I am debating and answering those questions.

These are the Canadian national standards, set by the experts. The politicians have set eight-hour and four-hour rules, targets that they aren't even achieving. That's something from the politicians and the bureaucrats, who are good people doing their best in an area where sometimes they're a little in over their head, but they mean well. I understand that because I'm actually a politician. I meant well alongside all of my colleagues, but the experts are the front-line doctors and nurses, the emergency doctors of the nation. These are their standards in Canada. The international standard benchmark is in the United Kingdom. Their standards are even more strict.

When I went to visit my uncle, to bereave in India, I went to the top hospitals in India. On the way back I went to the top hospital in London. I talked to Dr. Matthew Cooke. He's an emergency doctor.

People were dying in the emergency departments in the U.K. left and right. A reporter's mother died. That reporter – and this is a message to all the media when they listen tomorrow morning – ran headlines for two weeks, every day on the front pages, when his mother died in a waiting room. Prime Minister Tony Blair got 5 million letters. If any media is listening tomorrow, I would ask you to run this in national headlines. I ask you, the public in this province and in this nation, to write the Prime Minister of this nation and the Premiers and elected members of this nation 5 million letters on this issue.

Prime Minister Tony Blair passed the toughest performance measure on the planet for a nation. On the planet. Once you present to an emergency room, you've got to be in and out, either out on your way home or up. Regardless of the reason that you came, whether it's a CTAS level I, II, III, IV, V, you've got to be in and out or in and upstairs to a bed in four hours at the 98 percentile.

Mr. Chairman, I don't know much about oil sands, and I don't know much about the environment. I'm trying to learn. But I'll tell you that growing up in India, what really matters is math. You learn calculus in elementary school. You know what? English and biology were my lousiest courses in high school. I only got 94 per cent on those. I got 100 per cent in every math course in high school and from 97 to 100 per cent in university. What I understand are numbers and statistics, the P and P confidence intervals and all this. What I can tell you is that people who are experts in numbers, the fuzzy numbers, the fuzzy magic, can issue fuzzy magic and fuzzy numbers, and suddenly politicians can spin stuff.

In statistics there are means, medians, modes, percentiles, averages. They're all over the place. The most accurate measure in this situation is the percentile measure. I'm still speaking to this amendment because that's what we're talking about, percentiles. In the U.K. it's a four-hour rule at the 98th percentile. These are the most stringent measures on the planet, in answering the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud on international standards.

Dr. Chris Evans was the past president of the Canadian Association of Emergency Physicians. He works at the Royal Alexandra hospital. Interestingly, from the Royal Alex as well is Dr. Louis Francescutti, who is a specialist of all the doctors of the nation today. They're the ones that trained me. I'm just the little guy on the block that just showed up. I just had a little bee in my bonnet about this issue. Yeah, I'm an expert amongst the members here, to be honest. I am not the national expert. The national experts are the Dr. Francescutti and the Dr. Chris Evanses and the Dr. Cathy MacLeans. Dr. Cathy MacLean is the head family doctor in the nation.

In Calgary you've got the head specialist in the nation, the head family doctor in the nation, and the head emergency doctor in the nation in this province. Dr. Chip Doig is an intensive care unit doctor and past AMA president. His sister was the head doctor in the nation in the neighbouring province. Mr. Chairman, we have world-class talent here that wasn't listened to. I'm not the world-class guy. I'm just a simple little ER guy who is a politician, probably more of a politician than an ER guy because I haven't spoken up for the past three years.

I've broken my silence publicly. I'm going back to everything that I said before I ran. There was no reason things weren't changing. I tried to work within the system, but I said that I could remain silent no longer. That oath, the principles of morality and ethics: there was collision of principles. There will be caucus confidentiality about these things that were brought up, but really a collision of principles is happening that is bringing us to discuss this amendment on Bill 17: the principles that collided with the values of my family to tell the truth, the principles of partisan politics that collided with my values as a health care professional who took a Hippocratic oath.

These principles far outweigh those principles of partisan politics and allegiances. This is not a partisan political issue. It's a nonpartisan issue, and I'm actually quite impressed that the left, the middle, the right, the extreme right, the extreme left, the extreme middle are actually all here, staying up here all night supporting this. My gosh. I'm so impressed by these people here, from the red caucus to the orange caucus to the green one and to the independent caucus, I guess. I'm so impressed that we're actually united on this issue.

Getting back to the international standard, in the U.K. it's four hours at the 98th percentile. Did you know that the administrators in the U.K. are based on those accountability measures set by Prime Minister Tony Blair? They're actually fired every 18 months. The politicians outsurvive the ministers whereas in this province the administrators outsurvive the politicians, outsurvive leaders, outsurvive ministers. When people die in emergency departments, we break every standard of care. What do we do? We give them a tip. We give them a tip.

There's only been one government here that hasn't set any accountability measures. You can't blame the red, orange, and green guys. There have been no performance and accountability standards. The ER doctors have been talking about this issue, that front-line staff have been redlining for 15 years, and this is why it is so essentially important.

This amendment is actually a conservative value because it's about fiscal responsibility. It's about fiscal responsibility because health care spending under the Premier that started the PC Party was like this until 1993. There was a dip, and then the health care spending went up, and the waits started because there was no accountability. Premier Lougheed brought in Dr. Cochrane as the deputy minister, and he straightened out the bureaucracy shop and the delivery shop, and that all got wrecked in the mid-90s. That's why the country has watched to see what we in Alberta do. This is why in the nation health care spending has gone up, why waits have gone up. Because we broke it, and the nation followed suit with Alberta.

The nation is watching to see what we're doing, my good friends. The Canada Health Act is coming. Some people think private, for-profit delivery is the solution. That may be one small part of the solution for the rich guys, who have lots of money. Personally, I think how businesses are run is actually the solution for the public system. It needs to be run with the efficiency of a finely tuned business like the airplane industry, with performance measures and checklists of the airplane industry. Dr. Atul Gawande from Harvard took checklists from Boeing and applied them to the health care system.

I completely agree with the private business principles of a successful company. This is like today. If patients were airplanes, I tell you, holy cow, there would be an airplane crashing in this province every 15 minutes, like they're crashing right now. There's only one bed available.

Getting back to the percentiles, it was four hours at the 98th percentile in the U.K. They're meeting it at the 96th percentile all the time, actually, in the U.K. They are meeting it in a nation of—I don't know; what is it?—70 million, 75 million people. The problem is that they're having to fire their administrators every 18 months: the top administrators, the board, the chairman of the board, the CEOs, not the middle management. They actually reduced it to the 95th percentile so they don't have to keep changing their top-level managers.

I was just in the U.K. I was at St. Mary's hospital with Dr. Matthew Cooke, the top emergency doctor in the United Kingdom. The rules of debate here are based on the U.K. Their emergency room had about six, seven people, who were waiting not too long in the waiting rooms. What CAEP did was it took the U.K. standard and said: "Look, that's too strict. Let's go to six hours and four hours at the 95th percentile." That's what's in here.

I'd like to just finish off with a statement here on the CAEP on overcrowding.

Canada has only 3 hospital beds per 1,000 Canadians, ranking 26th out of 30 OECD countries. Our lack of acute care beds means that most Canadian hospitals frequently operate at unsustainable occupancy rates of higher than 90%, . . .

I mentioned that in Alberta we've been higher than a hundred per cent for the last 15 years.

. . . a level at which regular bed shortages, periodic bed crises, and hospital overcrowding are inevitable. Acute care bed capacity is also significantly affected by patients who require an “alternate level of care” . . . but cannot access this care because of shortages in community resources and chronic/palliative care beds. These patients account for up to 20% of acute care hospital beds and thereby contribute to ED overcrowding by preventing the admission of emergency patients to hospital beds.

Solutions. Implement overcapacity protocols, which is what the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud did.

ED overcrowding is symptomatic of demand exceeding capacity in hospitals and requires system-wide solutions. ED overcrowding can be addressed immediately, with existing resources, through mechanisms to improve patient flow. CAEP recommends the rapid implementation of overcapacity protocols so that all hospitals have an organized approach to deal, in the best manner possible, with situations of demand exceeding capacity. Implementing overcapacity protocols would effectively share the responsibility of already stabilized and admitted patients with all wards in the hospital, instead of just “warehousing” them in the emergency department with the wrong doctor, wrong nurse, wrong hallway, wrong place, for the wrong period of time.

It is anticipated that the need to regularly utilize such protocols will end when initiatives to increase in-patient and ALC bed capacity are successful.

Mr. Chairman, what has caused health care to be unsustainable is people who are sick and in their most dire circumstances, who wait in an emergency room with crushing chest pain. When that care is delayed – listen up. Listen up, please. Past Minister of Health and Wellness from Calgary-West, listen up. Listen up, gentlemen in the front row: the Deputy Premier, the past Minister of Health and Wellness from Edmonton-Whitemud. This is very important. You need to understand this. And, finance minister, this is what’s costing you all your money.

When the care is delayed for the man with crushing chest pain . . .

Mr. Marz: A point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: There’s a point of order. Yes, hon. member.

Point of Order

Criticizing Members

Mr. Marz: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark is playing your role as chairman, identifying certain members to pay attention. I can’t let this slide without mentioning that while I was speaking and mentioning certain concerns I had to, specifically, this member, he was in a huddle paying no attention to me whatsoever. I’m still waiting for him to address my concerns, which haven’t been addressed yet.

The Chair: Hon. member, there’s a point of order. My explanation is that when an hon. member speaks, if you are eloquent enough, you draw the attention of others. Also, you need to focus on the amendment that you have.

Please continue, hon. member.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Chairman, I will keep addressing my concerns to you. I was not addressing my concerns to them. If I have done something wrong, I apologize. As a new member of government this is a very new thing for me. I have never spoken up. I am just a simple emergency doctor from the Royal Alex trying to do his very best. I humbly apologize.

Thank you so much for the opportunity to continue.

Debate Continued

Dr. Sherman: I will read the footnotes to this, and this speaks to the amendment on the bill. Under subsection (d) this is the information.

Under solutions we’ve talked about implementing overcapacity protocols and their footnotes. Now I will move on.

Establish national benchmarks for total ED length of stay

CAEP recommends the establishment of national benchmarks for total ED length of stay. ED length of stay begins when the patient is first registered or triaged in the [emergency department] and ends when the patient physically leaves the [emergency department.] An ED length of stay benchmark must be measurable and be linked to an accountability framework in order to adequately assess performance. Reliable, complete, and accurate data, such as ED process time and ED length of stay must also be collected in every ED so that progress can be measured and evaluated.

Link ED length of stay benchmarks to incentives and infrastructure investment

ED length of stay benchmarks must be linked with positive incentives and infrastructure investment for meaningful change to be achieved. The UK has achieved significant reductions in ED wait times following the adoption of a country-wide target.

A country-wide target. As I mentioned, the nation is watching to see what Alberta does. This is a challenge to every member to keep going with the status quo and mediocrity. Do we know what the definition of insanity is? Keep doing the same thing and expect a different result. This system has a mental health problem.

I will continue.

All patients should be admitted, discharged or transferred within four hours of arrival at an ED. This was coupled with financial incentives, accountability measures, and tackling delays in access to in-patient beds, specialist doctors, and diagnostic investigations. 96% of patients now spend four hours or less in UK [emergency departments.]

Increase bed capacity & optimize bed management.

In addition to increasing the absolute number of acute care beds, in-patient bed capacity can also be improved by optimizing bed management. Effective bed management strategies should smooth the degree of variability in the numbers of admissions and discharges. Such strategies can target discharge planning, admission procedures, capacity planning, operational planning, and hospital policies for bed availability priorities and bed use.

Mr. Chairman, may I get back on the list, please? Thank you.

The Chair: I have a list here. The hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology.

Mr. Horner: I’m good. Thank you.

The Chair: All right.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I would like to address some of the earlier speakers. I appreciate the Member for Olds-Didsbury sharing his concerns, and I would have to say that I concur with many of the things that you were saying, that it is very frustrating. You asked the question, you know, whether it was attitudinal. I think that attitude starts at the top and comes down. It's been talked to many times this evening about the general morale of our front-line workers, that it isn't good.

But I would go back to the overall problem, in my mind, and to why amendment A3 is worth continuing the discussion on. Because it's always about accountability. Mr. Chair, if there's no accountability, there is no improvement. If there's no measurement, we don't know where we're at. This government for 18 months failed to put forward the results in our emergency rooms, and it was demoralizing for those people working in there, knowing that the problems existed yet with nothing being reported. The big problem that we have, Mr. Chair – I must not be eloquent enough; the chair is looking in other directions – is that we don't have accountability in the system.

I do agree with the Member for Olds-Didsbury that . . .

Mr. Marz: Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Hinman: I'm sorry. I can only go to two. I know the feeling, being formerly from Cardston-Taber-Warner. I agree that the names should be much shorter, but it's the way it is.

Mr. Marz: It's the respectful thing to do.

Mr. Hinman: I appreciate that. As you mentioned in your talk earlier, that I was listening to, it's hard for us to remember so many two- and three-name constituencies. I apologize. You know, you've been in here longer than myself, and you're used to it. There's just so much. We don't have the researchers. It's difficult to spend the time making sure I know all of them. I do have the chart here.

The Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills referred earlier to the frustration of going in and sitting down just to get a simple process like a blood test and the attitude that he received. I kind of enjoyed the way he dealt with it to get through that. Sometimes it is frustrating, but think of the other side, Mr. Chair, if you were actually working in those conditions and had an individual that you needed to rush in to get treatment, but the person in charge said: "No. The beds are all full. We're not going to move anything upstairs. They're just going to have to fill up and back up down here." It's just not a good situation.

I think some of the questions that were asked are good questions. In section (c) it says, "include as guiding principles that no unnecessary deaths . . ." Unfortunately, we know those have been occurring. Those reports finally came to light, that have been buried by this government, by the Premier, by the health minister, for two and a half years. That's not right, Mr. Chair. Where's the accountability for something like that? These reports come forward. They're not being forwarded to the Canadian Medical Association, where they're supposed to go, or whatever that group is. They weren't reported from the Premier's or the minister's office. They just got buried, taken in and buried. Then we expect to see some changes come in. Somehow in Bill 17 we need to address that. But the bottom line is that what we've got here for Bill 17 and the amendment here is paper. I don't think that the words they're putting down there are worth it.

I'd have to tip my hat, if I had one, to the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud and say that, yes, he is very eloquent. He can get up, and he understands these things. The Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark has given him and the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford a lot of praise, that they made great efforts, but somehow that all dropped when it got passed on to the next minister.

It's interesting to hear the speech and the discussion on how the superboard was introduced to caucus over there, that they came in and said: this is what we're doing. A very, very poor system of governance, an even poorer system of accountability and actually doing the homework and going forward. It's just really appalling to hear the conditions, the decisions, and the way things are handled. You know, it kind of goes back to that old Shakespearean quote: thou dost protest too much for an innocent man.

I think that Albertans are getting tired. This idea that we're solving our health care because now we have five years of stable funding – you know, I asked two weeks ago and a week ago for an audit of all of the closed beds in our current hospitals and facilities. I'm saying that I know they're there. I've talked to emergency room doctors. I've talked to nurses. We can do much better. That's what we need to do. We need to refocus. We need to be honest.

I enjoyed the member talking about truth. I think the truth is that he has a little bit more to say, so I'll sit down. The chair will probably recognize him as the next speaker, and we'll see where we go.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Just a couple of comments on amendment A3 as has been proposed. I want to throw in an example of the other side of the equation. I've heard some interesting comments about redlining for 15 years. I've heard about proposals, that we could enact a very good possible system where people have to be moved out of an emergency room and placed either in an acute-care bed or in intensive care or presumably discharged in four hours.

But I want to relate an actual story about a constituent. He was a passenger in a vehicle accident who was delivered to a hospital that I'm quite familiar with by an ambulance, who was examined by the nurse, who called in the emergency room doctor, who looked at this individual, who had sustained head injuries as a result of his head hitting the dash as a passenger in the middle seat of a car, who had the orbital bones broken, who had damaged eye sockets. Granted, this person had had some alcohol to drink, but he was not driving. He was a passenger. And I think the emergency room doc had this opinion that maybe the alcohol was more to blame and of bigger concern to him than the injuries to this individual.

The resulting action of this emergency room doc – I guess he was living up to his own guideline of handling the patient within four hours – was to take this young individual, parade him nude down to the X-ray room with a pillow in front of his private parts. That was his proper way of treating this individual with quite a severe head injury. After the X-ray was taken, they proceeded to tell this young gentleman – he was over 18 – that he should go to Calgary and that they would be forwarding directions to the receiving people up there, and he would be undertaking some reconstructive surgery.

Now, I think this is a pretty good example of how you really move people through the system and get them handled within four hours. I don't think for one minute, Mr. Chairman, that those standards are exactly something that you want to have etched in gold if it's up to the discretion of an emergency room doctor who obviously has a bias to somebody that, God forbid, had a drink and had been in an accident.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. Speaking to amendment A3 and just because it's approximately 15 hours ago since amendment A3 was brought onto this floor, I'll refresh individuals' memories. The Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark moved that Bill 17, Alberta Health Act, be amended in section 2(2) by striking out "and" at the end of clause (a) and by adding the following after clause (b):

- (c) include as guiding principles that no unnecessary deaths, no unnecessary harm to patients, no unnecessary delays in care and no unnecessary waste of resources should occur, and

So the first part of the amendment was guidelines. Then:

- (d) set standards for lengths of stay in the emergency departments of hospitals consistent with the "Position Statement on Emergency Department Overcrowding" published by the Canadian Association of Emergency Physicians and dated February 2007.

Mr. Chair, since that was brought forth, as I say, approximately 15 hours ago, the time, while it may have stood still in this House, has moved on. This House began sitting at 1:30 p.m. on Wednesday, November 24, 2010. For the rest of the province it's 6 a.m. on Thursday, November 25, 2010, but this House with its parliamentary rules stubbornly clings to the notion that it's still Wednesday. We all know what happened. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview pointed out that when King Canute attempted to control the tides, it was a foolish effort, just as debating throughout the night is not good for the health of the individuals in this House, nor is it good for the health of democracy in Alberta.

The hon. Minister of Education, the Government House Leader, suggested at the beginning of Orders yesterday – and it was yesterday. I'm one of those who clings to the reality that today's date is actually November 25 and not November 24. He talked about the possibility of extending the session. Mr. Chair, I think that's absolutely necessary, that it be extended during the day, during the regular hours of 1:30 to 6, as opposed to what we're experiencing right now. We've got people, many of whom have been here for significant portions of if not the whole night, attempting to have the government recognize that they're not infallible, that amendments are necessary to even attempt to make Bill 17, the Alberta Health Act, functional.

Now, one of the observations I made when I walked into this House at slightly after 5 a.m. on November 25, 2010, was that this House needs a prescription. What we have here, if you look around, is far too much testosterone and not nearly enough estrogen. What estrogen does is provide the equivalence of the Senate, the sober second thought. What has happened is that instead of policy, this has become a question of potency versus impotence. We have individuals who feel the need to continue to force their way, to have their way. That's not democracy, Mr. Chair. That's bully tactics.

Now, to have the least degree of intelligent debate, people have to be awake. They have to be alive. They have to be able to participate with a degree of energy. What we've seen, basically: I was here till 1 o'clock on Tuesday the 23rd. I was here till 20 to 2 in the morning on Wednesday the 24th.

The Chair: Hon. member, we have amendment A3. We're not talking about the process of parliament.

Mr. Chase: Yes. Yes, we have an amendment that talks about guidelines, guidelines that are missing in this province. It talks about standards and the fact that we don't have standards in this province. What we have are targets. We have targets that shift. When government can't meet the targets, they lower them, and when they can't meet the lowered targets, they extend the time period to meet those targets, those standards.

The political farce that's being played out in this province goes beyond health. It goes to the health of our democratic state. In 2008 in terms of a healthy democracy, which A3 is attempting to improve on, barely 40 per cent of Alberta's population felt sufficiently motivated, sufficiently healthy to participate in the democratic process. What happened, Mr. Chair, was that barely 21 per cent of the healthy, eligible Albertans that chose to participate in the democratic process gave this government a majority, and our health, as A3 points out, has been in jeopardy ever since.

Mr. Chair, A3 recognizes attempts to undermine the public health care system. You cannot help but go back in time to other attempts by this government, whether it's Bill 11 or Premier Klein's third way. The health, the standards, the guidelines have been missing. This government has tried to rewrite the Health Act. When Premier Klein tried to ignore the Canada Health Act by allowing physicians to extra-bill, the federal government recognized that the types of guidelines and standards that had been established, that A3 is talking about, were broken; therefore, the federal government withheld transfer payments to this province.

It's my hope that not just the government but all of us in this House take the time to recognize what is necessary not only to improve the emergency health care delivery but to improve the guidelines and the standards for democratic participation within this province. Mr. Chair, other provinces do their business in the day as opposed to conducting it like a thief in the night. They have sessions in the spring. They have sessions in the fall. Their houses of parliament meet as long as is deemed necessary by the majority of voters and participants, whether it's MPs or MPPs or, in our Alberta case, MLAs. They do the business that they were elected to do, and they do it during the daylight hours, when our cognitive powers are, hopefully, at their highest point.

Mr. Liepert: It's the best time of day. It's first thing in the morning.

Mr. Chase: Yes, hon. Minister of Energy, I'm glad you've recognized that it's morning. Through the chair, I wonder if the hon. Minister of Energy knows what morning it is, what the date is. Does he believe, as parliamentary rules would suggest, that we're still on Wednesday? Or, through the chair, as we debate A3, does the hon. Minister of Energy recognize . . .

The Chair: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader – sorry; Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: You keep demoting me, Mr. Chair, and I suppose you'll want me to take the pay cut that goes with it.

Point of Order Committee of the Whole Debate

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Chair, I rise under 23(b), which says that a member will be called to order by the Speaker if in the Speaker's opinion the member speaks to matters other than the question under discussion. It's 23(b)(i), the question under discussion. I raise that because the hon. member is really, understandably, instead of talking about the amendment, talking about the time of day. In doing so, he's attempting to focus on the fact that this House is debating this amendment to Bill 17 at about 6 in the morning, having been debating it all night, and somehow relating that to parliamentary democracy, none of which actually is in Bill 17. So he's not debating the amendment to 17.

We're in committee, and in committee there's actually, Mr. Chairman, notwithstanding – and I don't mean this in any pejorative sense – the fairly lax standards we have relative to keeping to the protocols in the House, a line-by-line discussion of the bill, and it's actually very, very focused. Second reading is a very broad discussion of the bill, about the principles. Third reading is a narrower discussion of the bill, having already approved the principles and the line-by-line, word-by-word analysis. But committee is focused on the word-by-word, line-by-line analysis of the bill. That's what it is.

In this particular case, we're discussing Bill 17, and we're discussing an amendment to Bill 17 which is fairly specific. The hon. member is far from that, so I would suggest that under the standing order he ought to be asked to debate the bill. I think it's important to really point out why he's so far off base. Mr. Chairman, I want to do that by saying that his concern seems to be that we need time to debate bills. Time is a very relevant issue because in committee there is an abundance of time. You can debate over and over again if you want to. You can say the same things incessantly, and members opposite do and have for the last 15 hours.

I want to say this because it's particularly important to the member's point that he was trying to make even though it wasn't on the bill and, therefore, violates section 23 of our standing orders. The point he's making is that we should just confine debate between the hours of 1:30 and 6 p.m., the standard afternoon hours of the House. That would be a very wonderful idea, but those sorts of standard practices don't work when opposition members use, admittedly, the only tool they have in a parliamentary democracy where they're not in a minority government, and that tool is time.

So, Mr. Chairman, you end up in situations when a Government House Leader wants to schedule debate to allow for a fulsome discussion of a bill without using the other appropriate tools, as they use regularly in the federal House when they schedule a bill, setting out the amount of time that you'll spend debating the bill. We could in this House use time allocation, which says that we'll have an hour.

But, no, on an important bill like health we want members of the opposition to bring forward because we've heard members from the Wildrose Party particularly say: this is such a waste; there are so many things we can improve. In fact, I've heard people say that they've had in the past stacks of paper on their desks, showing that there are, you know, six or seven or five or nine amendments coming forward. So you need to give them opportunities to do that. But when you do give them opportunities to do that, Mr. Chairman, they don't do that. They spend all night debating one amendment. That's why, Calgary-Varsity, sometimes you stray outside the normal scope of 1:30 to 6 o'clock, because you never, ever finish when you do it that way because somebody always goes back and gets another amendment.

There's no other way to do it. There are only two ways to deal with making sure that debate is fulsome and wholesome in the House, and one is to be here year-round and go for afternoon after afternoon after afternoon. That will never get you to a conclusion. It will never get you to a conclusion because committee is open ended. Or you can bring in a time allocation motion, and then you hear the opposition say: oh, democracy as we know it is dead; debate is being cut off. Or you can provide an opportunity, difficult as it is, hard on us as it is, to do our duty to Albertans by spending the time, sometimes for long, extended periods of time, so that there's very clearly an opportunity for every member of the opposition to put the amendments to the bill that they want discussed, the things that they believe are necessary to improve the bill and make it a wholesome piece of legislation, to allow them to do it.

So, Mr. Chairman, under my point of order under 23 I would ask you to call the member to order and ask him to address the bill.

The Chair: Having heard the point of order, the chair shall make the process go further. Hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, you have 10 minutes on the amendment. Please, from here on focus on the amendment.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Prior to focusing on the amendment, I would like to have the opportunity to discuss the section that the hon. House leader discussed. He talked about fulsome debate as opposed to foolsome debate, and he was suggesting that this debate had reached the second level, the foolsome, that people weren't directing their comments specifically to amendment A3.

Mr. Chase: Now, I want to read you the first six words of the second part of amendment A3, clause (d), and you can read along with me if you still have sufficient brain cells left to do that given the lateness of this debate. What I'm talking about very specifically in A3 is "set standards for lengths of stay." As I've pointed out and as people have tried to point out in A3, the length of stay is not necessarily profitable. In fact, when it comes to the emergency rooms that we're discussing in A3, the longer a person has to stay in the emergency situation, the less likelihood there is of moving towards the healthy resolution that they came for in the first place.

With regard to the Minister of Education saying we need to focus, somewhere between meeting 365 days of the year and meeting merely weeks in the spring and the fall is probably the right balance in terms of setting guidelines and standards as A3 puts it together.

My concern in talking about the guidelines and standards of A3 is that if we're going to make progress in the emergency departments, A3 is saying that we have to have lengths of stay in the emergency departments of hospitals consistent with the position statement on emergency department overcrowding. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark talked about a standard set in Britain of four hours. After four hours you're either treated and released or you're moved into a bed.

It is impossible, Mr. Chair, at this time to have those standards for lengths of stay because we have a bed shortage. Actually, we don't have a bed shortage; we have a shortage of staffed beds. Therefore, people wait hours and hours and sometimes days on gurneys in hallways, in what had been visiting rooms. We triple-bunk people because we don't have standards. This is what A3 is all about. I'm hoping the hon. Minister of Education, the House leader, is seeing how focused I am on the need to improve the emergency circumstances in this province.

Mr. Chairman, the problem was exacerbated particularly in Calgary when we lost three of our hospitals. Half of our hospitals went. In order to improve where we're at, we need to make sure that when the southeast hospital finally comes online, at close to three times the original expense because of the delay associated with it, we have the people in place who can provide the support both in the emergency departments and throughout the hospital.

In terms of dealing with emergencies and setting standards and guidelines, as A3 proposes, there is concern about the number of mental health beds in the southeast hospital that were cut by this government. We've seen the problems associated with Caritas: the fact that the government didn't draw up a financial contract, the fact that construction of the facility was supposed to allow for an opening in May and now they're suggesting it's going to open in January. Mr. Chair, whether it's guidelines in the emergency department or standards for construction that will relieve the pressures in the emergency departments, major improvements have to be made. A3 talks about guidelines. It talks about what should be done. It provides directions. It indicates the importance of setting standards. If those standards existed, we wouldn't be here at 6:15 in the morning, whether you call it in parliamentary time, which doesn't seem to have a bearing on reality, on Wednesday, the 24th, or Thursday, the 25th.

Mr. Chair, there is an emergency, and I do understand and I do appreciate the Minister of Education's comments about staying focused. Again, in order to stay focused, we have to be able to have the time to have the types of debates necessary. If this Legislature ends on December 2 despite the best efforts of individuals through the amendment process such as A3 to bring forward suggestions, to have the fulsome debate, to quote the hon. House leader, then there has to be a sufficient time provision.

The hon. House leader, who is very familiar with the rules because of his participation in this process over many years of having been chosen by his constituents, I am sure recognizes the shortcomings of not only what's happening in emergency departments but the shortcomings of what's happening in Parliament. We have SO 30s, Mr. Chair. That's our equivalent of an emergency. But last week, for example, when we were having that SO 30, the government members pulled the plug at 4:30 in the afternoon.

I am glad that the government members have shown sufficient tolerance to this point not to invoke closure or, as the hon. member, the House leader, mentioned, time allocation. At the point when that shoe falls or is dropped, then democracy is effectively shut down. The opportunity to debate, whether it's A3 or A16, will have been lost. That's why the people have stood up throughout the nights of Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday, throughout the mornings of Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday, to attempt to improve the legislation through the process that is permitted, amending.

Mr. Chair, there is still hope for democracy in Alberta if we can engage the population that to date has become less and less involved in the process. There is hope. There was an over 53 per cent turnout in the municipal election in Calgary. There was a similar improvement in the municipal turnout in Edmonton. Democracy is not dead, but if we don't allow the time for democracy to take place through the amendment process, then I not only fear for the emergency crisis that is occurring in the shortchanged hospitals across this province, but I fear for the emergency and the well-being of the individuals in this House, who on many occasions after the next election, whenever it occurs, will not be here, some by choice because they feel that they have contributed to the best of their ability, and some by the voters' wish that they not return to this House.

Regardless, Mr. Chair, A3 calls our attention to the necessity of establishing guiding principles, the essential nature of having standards in emergency care, ones that are substantive, ones that are upheld, ones that can provide the type of health care Albertans should be receiving.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's a pleasure once again to rise and discuss amendment A3 and the reasons why we are discussing this into the wee hours in the morning – and I appreciated the comments by the House Leader – and the importance of it. The opposition does have very limited tools, and those tools are open debate in Committee of the Whole as well as being able to put amendments forward. There's been some discussion that perhaps a person should be putting through a bunch of amendments to be looking more productive. I think that our stance is that there are some critical amendments that could possibly help the bills, but the truth of the matter is that Bill 17, Bill 24, Bill 29, in many in the opposition's opinion, should never leave this committee. They're not worthy to be passed as bills. I talked earlier about: only one thing worse than no law and no bill, and that's a bad bill or a bad law.

This Health Act is a dilemma that this government is in. They spent many months going around. I went and participated in some of their open houses and the process they were going through to try and find out. It's interesting to me that they would spend so much time opening up and having people come and have a discussion and have breakout groups on what's important when the real problem is the administration and how we're running the process in our hospitals. Like I say, I went and participated in those, that we were going to come up with a new Alberta Health Services that was all of a sudden enlightened. We had this great opportunity to make a wonderful health care system because we went on tour for four months and listened to the people of Alberta.

The fact of the matter, as has been brought up here many times in the last – I don't know – 15 hours is that we have an awful lot of talent here in the province. We had a CEO of Alberta Health Services that on the 24th – I'm confused, hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity; I don't have my calendar in front of me – was let go. In the press release they said that they'd come to an agreement. We don't know what the details of that agreement are, but I have a grievance that I think will come to fruition that we'll end up paying $600,000, $700,000 to send an individual down under rather than utilize him for what his real expertise was, and that was to actually go in to analyze hospitals, to analyze health care facilities, to know what the actual costs are of running those facilities, and to know a group like HRC, that stepped up to try and improve the quality of care for people needing to get hips and knees, or what we were paying to get them done in the hospital. There was no measurement taken, nothing concrete.

You know, in the reports that came in, it was funny. One of the hospitals here in Edmonton said: well, we just threw numbers together; we didn't think it was serious. The serious nature of our health care system is that there's way too much taken for granted. There's not enough accountability. Here on amendment A3 what the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark is trying to do is bring in some accountability. I would be the last one in this House, I believe, to say: oh, yes, if we pass this and all the words in it, all of a sudden things are going to be okay.

You mentioned the fact that all they do is change the target. If they put it in there, we'll be back in, and maybe they'd have to sit more days because they'd realize, "Oh, oh; we've got a problem here; we've got to change this bill" and reconvene.

There's a real lack of accountability. There's a lack of understanding how operations work. This government took the attitude – and, again, it was interesting to hear them speak about how the superboard came about. The Energy minister walked into caucus, basically, and told a few people as he was going in: "We're going to have ourselves a superboard. We're going to get rid of the nine boards. We're going to centralize them into one. We're going to put all these individuals on there. Well, actually, there's not too many that know a lot about health care, but these are really good people. They're our friends. We can trust them to carry out our bidding. We don't need to worry about it."

It was kind of interesting. What was the year? Was it 2001 when we were able to elect one-third of our 17 boards that they had shrunk down to and had appointed originally?

Mr. Chase: Less than nine months.

Mr. Hinman: Yes. In nine months they had an uprising. "Oh, my goodness. Elected people. We can't count on them to carry out our bidding. They challenge us. They want answers. They have different priorities than the top-down direction.” They tried for years to get control of the board and the people through more and more centralization, and it has failed. It has failed everywhere in the world that has ever tried to centralize power and authority, saying: if we just have that benevolent dictator at the top, we are going to have utopia; everything is going to work well.

At this point my pity falls on the new temporary CEO for Alberta Health Services. It kind of sounds to me like being called to be a Speaker in the 1600s. Perhaps they’re dragged in there, kicking and screaming: “No, not me. I don’t want to be number 9.” Right now we’re at number 2 or 3. How many people are going to have their heads roll, their jobs, careers gone before this government is going to come to its senses and realize that centralized health care decision-making, with the dollars and allocating those dollars, doesn’t work?

This bill amendment, though, is being brought forward by an emergency doctor who feels that this would make great movement forward. I, like many in this House, question – this is just a piece of paper that’s written on – how long they will actually leave these documents here before they have to amend them or change them. I certainly understand why they don’t want to legislate them. They wouldn’t be able to just do it by order in council. They can’t just snap their fingers and tell some bureaucrats: “We need to change these regulations. We need to go from four hours at 95 per cent to six hours at 65 per cent.”

These are the shenanigans that continue to go on. They’re not serious about it. If they were serious, they’d be open, and they’d be honest. We’d have those emergency room reports. People would be informed, and we would change that. If they were serious and honest, we would have a vertically integrated system. You’d have someone in charge to say: “You know what? We’ve got an extra 15 people who came in tonight. We need to call in two more doctors. We need to call in 10 more nurses. We need to open up unit 34, that has 24 beds. We only need 15.” Those are the types of things that could be done.

If we were to change the way the funding works – right now the person that’s supposedly put in charge of a hospital is given an allotted amount of money and basically told: you know, if you have money left over at the end of the year, we’ll give you a bonus. So they bring in accountants and actuaries, and they’ll say: well, what we can afford to do is to operate on four people a day even though there’s a capacity for 12, and that way we’ll still have money.

When I was running in the by-election earlier that spring of 2009, the podiatrists had used up their allocated amount of money, and they were told for I think it was six weeks in Calgary that they weren’t to operate, that they’d have to shut down the facilities even though there were people waiting that needed it. We have a standard here: harm to patients, unnecessary delays, and waste of our resources. We had our resources sitting idle. We had unnecessary waste because we had doctors that were here in the province that weren’t allowed to operate. We had the operating rooms there, but they weren’t allowed to do it. Why? Because their allocated dollars had been used up. I don’t know how they messed up so much that they weren’t managing it. Obviously, the doctors were able to do more operations than they were keeping track of.

We’re in a real dilemma here. Some hon. members say that we shouldn’t be discussing this, that we should just let it pass. I don’t feel I’d be doing my duty if I was to let such a bill of no consequence pass through this House. As I mentioned earlier, there are at least three bills that should not pass this House. When the fall session ends, these bills should die. Bill 17, the Alberta Health Act, is just paper that these guys can wave like Chamberlain. “Look what we’ve done. Look what our promise is. We’ve got a health charter. We’ve got an ombudsman.” There they are, waving that to say that we’ve got victory now; we’ve passed this through.

The Chair: Hon. member, I wish to draw your attention to amendment A3. Focus on that.

Mr. Hinman: I thought that I was actually talking on that. I’ll try and refocus a little bit so that there’s no question. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

We have these bills that are before us, and the question is: what accountability is in there? What does the health charter produce for us? Is it going to give us standards for the lengths of stay? The former health minister and the Deputy Premier talked about doctors and how, you know, they’re going to perform that. I don’t dispute what he said. You know what? Every doctor swears that Hippocratic oath, that there is going to be no unnecessary death, that there’s going to be no unnecessary harm to patients. It’s shameful to think that we even need to write it down. That in itself means that we’re failing because if we were doing these things, we wouldn’t be writing them down; it would be accomplished. Actions speak louder than words.

I talked about it, and again the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud was very eloquent with his words, a very knowledgeable, wonderful individual. But what good are the words or the ideas when the doctors are handcuffed, when the administration is handcuffed, and they can’t move people up to a bed? So we want to legislate it and think that it’s going to happen? I have to be a skeptic at this point. Like I say, the only tool that’s left is to say that these bills do not deserve to be passed, so the parliamentary procedure that we go through is that we talk. It would give me great pleasure for this House to come to an end in the fall and have those three bills die on the Order Paper and not go forward.

Mr. Chair, that is the reason why we need to keep debating these, because we’re not getting any movement forward. Until we have something where the government members stand up and get on record and say, “We need to do this; this is what we’re going to do,” then the confidence of the opposition is – because they don’t like to be caught in an absolute hypocritical position of standing up and speaking in favour of a bill and then not voting for it. They think that they’re cute and egg us on: oh, let us vote on it. My goodness. You’d think that we’d been up for 46 hours if we’re going to buy into that.

No. They don’t get up. They don’t speak on these bills. They sit there. It’s been nice that we’ve had a little engagement every now and then, every few hours, that it would scratch their conscience and they’d say: well, we’ll speak a little bit on it or share a few thoughts. But these bills . . . [interjection] I’d be happy to.

The Chair: Hon. member, I would like to draw your attention to amendment A3.

Mr. Hinman: Yes. Amendment A3, subsection (d): “Set standards for lengths of stay in the emergency departments of hospitals consistent with the ‘Position Statement on Emergency Department Overcrowding’.”

It was interesting to hear the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark back in 2007, where he had to talk to Heather Smith, where he talked to all of the different people, saying: “Look, we’re at 140 per cent down here at emergency. We need you to share some of the load.” It goes back to what I talk about: rules and regulated to death, that, no, it’s okay to back people up in emergency rooms, but we can’t do it upstairs, or we can’t dilute the number of nurses for beds that are occupied. It's okay for someone to die in the emergency room with a heart attack, but we're not going to move that through. It just talks about the broken system that does literally exist. It's just hard to imagine unless you're sitting there day in and day out.

I've been to the emergency room. I've taken my children there and have been very fortunate, haven't had to wait an overly long time. But the worst time that I had was with my grandmother, who had fallen down, and I was with her way into the night. I thought she was going to be okay. Mr. Chair, she died, internal bleeding. I regret not staying the night with her. She did get moved up, but again the diagnosis wasn't there. They were doing the best they could.

What was really sad about that night, while I sat in there with my grandmother, was that the person who kept coming in – and I was there a couple of hours before I realized what it was – was a volunteer. “Is there anything we can do? Can we help you?” She did the best she could. Finally, I asked: “Is the doctor coming? Who is going to do this? Who is going to be here? What's your position?” She said, “Oh, I'm the volunteer. I only work until 11 o'clock at night, and then I'm off.”

I think that most all of us in here have some horror stories of what goes on in our health care system, yet the question is: as we look around, do we have some other ones that we want to emulate, to look at? That's what our duty is, to look around the world and see those places where they're working. Again, it's sad to hear the Premier mock the idea of looking over to Europe, saying: oh, it's a two-tier European system. I doubt the Premier has even looked at it. Some PR person is filling him with some cute little lines, saying: this is what you need to say, Mr. Premier, when they talk about that; the Wildrose are going to cut $1.4 billion. Is he clueless, that he doesn't ever listen to prioritizing? One has to ask that question with the remarks.

He doesn't spend a lot of time in here. I know he's busy, but, man, he and his health minister should maybe catch up a little bit to realize what's going on and wake up and put on some new clothes rather than having all of his little minions say: the emperor has no clothes. It's pathetic on many levels, and that's why we're here debating Bill 17 all night. Why? Because it isn't worthy of passing through this House. Those people over there maybe feel it is, but it isn't.

We've got an amendment that's been brought forward by an emergency room doctor that is really frustrated. He was so frustrated. He was told: “You can make a difference. We can change things. Stop your practice. Get elected. Come join us, and we'll do it.” Two and a half years he bit his tongue. He worked and talked himself into a tizzy, no doubt, to say: this is what we need to do, and we haven't done it. This government is fixated. I listened to the Premier and I listened to the health minister at 6:15, 6:30 this evening say, “No, our vision is to have the best health care” – I think they said in the world; I don't remember now – “and the way we do that, our vision, is one superboard.” Well, that vision is a nightmare. It's a nightmare for people who go into the ER. It's a nightmare for the front-line workers. That vision is eventually going to evaporate and be gone. The question is: how many people are going to suffer? What are the standards that they're going to put in place?

I mean, they come up with this protocol after bringing a hundred people together and say: oh, we've got great news, that after eight hours that will be a trigger where we can open up beds. Why eight hours? We questioned this government on how many empty beds were in current facilities. Do an audit. Do they do that? No. They're not taking anything seriously on this, yet when the crisis finally came, when the emergency room doctor couldn't bite it anymore, 360 beds were answered the next day.

The Chair: On my list, the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I'm going to very briefly talk about unnecessary delays. Guy Smith, the head of the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees; Heather Smith, the head of the United Nurses association; Elisabeth Ballerman, the head of the Health Sciences Association of Alberta; Dr. Louis Francescutti, who is an Edmonton emergency doctor and is currently the chair of the physicians and surgeons association of Canada – his talents were recognized, and he now represents medical standards throughout the province – have all spoken about staffing and the need to prevent unnecessary delays. What has happened in the province has been the equivalent of a train starting up, sort of a jerking movement: laying off staff at great price, rehiring.

Not only does that point to unnecessary delays; it also points to unnecessary wastes of resources. I would suggest, for example, that blowing up the General hospital without having a replacement was an unnecessary waste of resources; selling off the Holy Cross hospital for approximately $5 million when it had just undergone $32 million of upgrading; the delay in the building of the southeast hospital, which should have been built before the General was decommissioned. Forget decommissioned. Blown up.

Mr. Chair, as the hon. House leader pointed out, A3 is at the crux of the matter. If the government rejects the guidelines and the standards that are put forward in amendment A3, then there isn't a whole lot of hope for the process of moving on. As the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, an emergency physician whose value is no longer deemed sufficient to remain within the government, has pointed out, there is an emergency crisis. For Bill 17 to actually have impact on that part of the crisis in health care in this province, A3 needs to be passed.

Therefore, Mr. Chair, in order to move debate along, I would like to have the vote recorded on A3. If the government supports it, then there's a sense that progress has been made, that the hours that have been spent tonight have been of value, that the point has been made, and we can move further on. So I would like to call the question on A3. [interjection] Apparently, my wires are somewhat crossed here.

It would be premature for me to shortcut the necessary debate on this significant motion that's at the heart. I thought, in the name of progress, that we could move farther, but it's obvious that this is of such an important nature that I would not want to cut out, for example, the other doctor in the House, who has raised similar concerns throughout his time since being first elected on November 22, 2004. I apologize, Mr. Chair, for providing potential false hope for closure. The debate must go on, and therefore I'll take my chair.

The Chair: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. Obviously, the most significant issue that we have faced this session is the health care bill and emergency services, the crisis in emergency departments. It's hard to overstate something that has become so dysfunctional and so serious in its impact both on patients and on professionals in the system, a system that is completely overtaxed, that has no surge capacity to deal with the current situation that we're in, with the possible flu season impending, potentially major accidents, that will put extra demands on the system.

Now before us is an amendment that is simply trying to say to people that what we have done so far has not worked. Let us hold ourselves accountable by making specific timed amendment accountabilities, timelines, that have been accepted elsewhere in the world with great effect. I've specifically reviewed the United Kingdom. They have eliminated their long wait times in emergency departments in the U.K. by legislating wait times, and we can't find any court cases, such as the minister of health would suggest, that might follow this kind of very specific expectation. I'm not sure what the barrier is here to improving the health system.

This is only one small dimension, of course, of what's needed in a health care system that is very complex, very large and that as a result of the former health minister's machinations with the system has resulted in such chaos and such confusion, mixed messages, changes in orders between the Health Services Board and the health minister. There are a tremendous number of areas one could look at for where the problem is, but fundamentally it's a reorganization that has not taken into consideration the vital regional differences and the need for prompt, timely, flexible action in different parts of the province.

As we've said, the various changes that have been attempted to relieve the pressure on emergency departments haven't worked: trying to beef up staffing, trying to extend the number of long-term care beds to relieve pressure on in-hospital beds, the recognition that the elimination of almost 50 per cent of our hospital beds over the last 15 years has resulted in a tremendous backlog of challenges. That in combination with a decline in primary care services, from prevention programs to early intervention programs to home care services to diagnostic services, chronic care management right through to long-term care and palliative care, rehabilitation care, all added to a system that is simply not providing the services that Albertans need. The question before us is whether or not we have the political fortitude to admit that we have done this in a very poor way and that we need to rethink the whole structure of the system, that we need to put in place early intervention measures that will help us to get back on track in our emergency departments.

As has been said by a number of physicians in this province, people are dying from preventable causes in the usual circumstances that we would have found ourselves in. Staff are having to take leave because of stress and overwork. We have professionals leaving the province, retiring early because of the unfortunate work culture that has evolved out of this, a culture of frustration and burnout. We now see an administration that is back on its heels, having lost their CEO, or the scapegoat of their CEO, and that is again unwilling to take responsibility for the chaos in the system, board members who no longer have confidence in this government and its ability to maintain a clear line of authority, clear jurisdiction between health ministry and Health Services Board. Clearly, this is not a recipe for an improved situation as we head into some of the most difficult times in our year in terms of demands on the health care system.

When I look at this amendment, it's bold; it's new for Canada. It's not new elsewhere in the world, but it brings to the fore the key elements of what is needed to make the emergency department work more effectively and more efficiently. It would give a sense of hope to the front-line workers, that are looking for some sense of understanding the system and a willingness by this government to hold themselves accountable. That's fundamentally, of course, where the buck needs to stop.

No CEO could deliver in an organization with an ambiguous mandate such as he's been given. There's no question that the quality, the access, and even the efficient spending by this government have diminished since this new system was put in place. It's clearly because of a number of factors, not least of which is that a centrally managed organization of 90,000 people with an array of services across the province simply cannot manage to deliver the same services that it's managing. A budget, standards, policies, statistical gathering, monitoring, enforcement of those standards: we simply cannot expect a single board to do all this and know what's happening in every part of the province in every region and adjust to some of the pressures and unique circumstances, demography, and needs of those areas.

I mean, from top to bottom we need to rethink where we're going. With a two-year time frame since this was put in place and progressive problems in the system and no improvement in emergency wait times, one has to say, surely, that throwing more money at this situation is not an answer. The kind of creative alternative that is being presented here is to legislate wait times and ensure that not only the emergency personnel but the administrators in the different institutions and the Health Services Board and the minister can clearly be held accountable if we do not meet those. Everyone along the line begins to see the connection between the emergency department and the broader health care system.

It all has to work together if the pressure on emergency departments is going to be relieved. If we don't have the prevention programs and early intervention programs, we're going to see people get into trouble and they're going to end up, especially after hours, in emergency departments. If we don't extend the hours of walk-in clinics and physician offices, if we don't expand the staffing across the board and deal with some of the backlog, if we don't maintain people in a healthy, active way in their homes, in their communities, this is going to end up in emergency departments.

When we put timelines on emergency department wait times, that's when we start to see people look at the whole system and say: "We simply can't hire more emergency doctors. That's not the solution. The solution is to reduce the demand on the emergency department." How do you do that? You begin by prevention. You begin with primary care. You begin by ensuring that there are home-care services in every community, a very cost-effective investment that this government has only recently embraced. I mean, the solutions are many and varied. The whole system needs to be addressed, and this is only one element, obviously. This is only one element of what is needed.

Surely we can come to a decision, make a bold decision, pass this amendment, try something new and in the interim begin to make a phased transition from a single management board to zonal or regional, whatever you want to call them, five or more regional delivery systems, where they can be closer to the action, where they can see the local conditions, where they can recognize the pressure points, the staffing needs and address them in a very timely way, instead of the frustrating, "Wait and see," and finally, "Don't even express yourself," in this health care system. You don't express yourself in the health care system because, number one, it takes so long to get an answer and, number two, you risk your job if you challenge the system as it is.

Fundamentally that's what the health professionals that I've talked to are saying: we do not believe in the structure and function of the health system. What we see is a tremendous demoralization across the board in our health professionals, and they're simply not performing because they don't believe in the system that is in existence today. Surely we have to listen to and work with the professionals working in the system.

This amendment would go a long way in sending a message to the health professionals: "We will hold ourselves accountable. We as the authors of governance and policy in this province, we as the custodians of the public well-being, we as the planners for a health care system that's healthy and sustainable, both for professionals and for patients, will take this on and will listen to what patients and professionals are saying and make the necessary changes, the changes that are going to put in place a set of accountability measures to which not only the professionals but the politicians can be held accountable.”

We are forced, then, to work together to make these timelines work. We are forced to look at the barrier points in the system and the failures that the system has created and, I would say, the inevitability of failure without structural change and without role and responsibility change.

A single board of 14 men and women cannot manage a 90,000-person organization. They simply don't have the flexibility, the time, the knowledge, especially when so few of the board have a medical background. This is not General Motors. This is not producing widgets. This is a complex, interconnected array of human services that have to do much more with understanding how and why people do what they do and a very nuanced recognition that respects individuals, that respects the processes of decision-making at the local level and that honours the commitment that these health professionals have made to a lifetime of caregiving. I know there are some in this House who have a background in health services, and I think they understand that. I hope they can be free to vote with their conscience on this.

The Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark has put himself on the line. He has put his neck on the line, and he has opened his heart to Albertans. He has challenged the very powers that be in this province, with their lack of understanding, their lack of clear goals, their lack of commitment to the long-term well-being of the health care system. This is not about short-term fixes. This amendment is part of what would be a long-term commitment to establishing benchmarks all across the system. They don't all have to be legislated, but wait times at the very front end, where the canary in the mine shaft is saying that things are in danger, that we are in danger of a meltdown in this health care system: these kind of measures would avoid this kind of brinkmanship, this pushing us to the edge of what could be a most terrible impact in an overtaxed system, with progressive demoralization of professionals, loss of confidence of the public, and a system that has become untenable for most Albertans.

The 233 stories from the emergency medicine practitioners was one hospital in one month. We have no sense of just how close and how staggering the crisis is. One major disaster, a major epidemic will push this system into chaos. We'll have a breakdown of health professionals. We'll have a breakdown and lawsuits related to poor outcomes and preventable deaths. We simply cannot take this seriously enough. We cannot overstate the seriousness of this issue. When confidence is gone, what is there? When trust is gone, what is there in terms of the possibility of solving problems, small or large, in our health care system?

Very clearly, Mr. Chairman, we have to move on this. We have to support this amendment from a man who has worked in the system, who has experienced all kinds of emergency delivery systems across the world and, based on our research, is moving an amendment that stands to move us to the next level, at least, of accountability, standard setting, and confidence building in the system.

I'm very hopeful that the members in the House will look at this at its face value, look at the seriousness of the situation that we're in, the reason why we're still here today, after a full night of debate, and the reason why this man from Edmonton-Meadowlark has captured the imagination of Albertans in his willingness to stand up and say: the emperor has no clothes.

This government has no expertise in managing a health care system this complex. It is not going to work. It is not going to work with this particular arrangement. We have to change the system. There can be no shocks to the system. That's very clear. We cannot cope with major, major change rapidly. It has to be very thoughtful, very planned, very orderly. Over the next one to two years we need to begin to look at a more effective, more thoughtfully managed system, where patients come first, capacity comes first.

The ability to manage disasters has to be at the forefront of everything we're planning. That means taking the pressure off emergency departments in hospitals. I've discussed, as many people have, the range of issues that have to change, but most fundamentally we have to recognize in the emergency department that if we are not doing things to state of the art, to the very best that is happening in the world, then we are not contributing to the kind of outcomes that we say we want and our patients deserve.

Mr. Chairman, I think, I'd just admonish people in the House to put this aside as a partisan issue. This is not a partisan issue. This is a human rights issue. It's a humanity issue. It's an efficiency measure, you could call it. It's a deliverable that we can put in place to build confidence, not only in patients but in professionals, that we have some sense of the seriousness of where we are and have some commitment to making some tough choices to change that.

That concludes my remarks, Mr. Chairman. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to make some remarks on amendment A3. This will be my first opportunity to be on the record with regard to the amendment, and having been here throughout the evening with other colleagues, I must say that I think I appreciate most the perspective that the hon. Leader of the Opposition has brought to this debate in the last few minutes.

While I can't agree with the hon. leader that this amendment should pass and that, you know, a key part of the solution to this is to in fact legislate waiting times as proposed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, what I can agree very wholeheartedly with the hon. leader and with others who have raised, I think, similar points throughout the course of the debate is that we need to be looking at the underlying causes that result in some of the waiting times we have seen in emergency rooms in this province. In fact, we're seeing similar times across the country.

I guess I'll just sort of deal, first, with the question of the amendment as proposed. I guess for me, Mr. Chair, I would have to say that given all of the factors that have been discussed in the last 24 hours, the simple passage of this amendment – and I think most members would agree – is not going to result in any immediate change in the issues in our emergency rooms across the province. While it is, perhaps, a noble idea and, certainly, is fundamental to a high-performing health care system that appropriate benchmarks exist, that we measure and we continuously monitor our performance against those benchmarks and, I would say, most importantly, that we take the opportunity to learn from that measurement and create a system that's focused on continuous improvement, putting those sorts of benchmarks in legislation is not the way to go.

There are a number of reasons for that, I think, that have been enumerated over the last little while. One, of course, is that if we accept the notion that we should legislate maximum waiting times in our emergency rooms, no doubt the question will immediately arise as to why this House would not legislate similar benchmarks with respect to elective surgical procedures, with respect to access to family physicians, with respect to a whole lot of other things in our health care system that Albertans are concerned about.

What I think, as I said, we can agree on, and I think the hon. Leader of the Opposition did an excellent job of illustrating, is that the real thing that will drive improvement in any health care system has less to do with technology and equipment. In fact, it has to do with people who deliver health care and with cultural factors within the health care system that create an environment where people do feel free to speak about their concerns, where front-line health professionals are actively engaged in discussion and decision-making because in many cases they're best suited to provide that advice, where, as I said, we use benchmarks, we monitor performance, and we focus on our waiting time targets, not as a static target to be enshrined in legislation in perpetuity but as a target that we hopefully can improve and reduce over time so that people are waiting less. I think it's very important to recognize that as much as we might recognize the spirit of the amendment that has been proposed, it certainly is not a solution, Mr. Chair, in and of itself.

The hon. Leader of the Opposition also talked about a couple of other things that I'd like to elaborate on. I think it's true that when you look at most health care systems around the world, there are really three sectors in the health system that drive waiting times in emergency rooms. If we look at those waiting times in ERs as a snapshot of what is going on in the larger system, at least in Alberta, I think we can say that we can look to three areas in terms of where the drivers are.

The first is the area of primary care. As we know, Mr. Chair, primary care just basically refers to the front door of the health care system. Traditionally for most of us that has been through a family physician. Increasingly today it is through other practitioners – nurse practitioners, pharmacists, and others – working as a team, serving the needs in a particular community. That is a very important issue. We spend a lot of time in this House talking about family physicians as one area of need.

Again, going back to the amendment and following through on my argument here that the simple legislation of these waiting times won't change anything, what I think we need to be doing in primary care is capitalizing on the opportunities that we have with primary care networks. This is a highly successful model. There has been research. There is more evaluation under way now about the model and its effectiveness in reducing the prevalence of chronic disease and proactively helping manage population health by pulling people in for screening, screening that is appropriate to their age and to their health condition. Most importantly, and I think we can put it fairly this way, is having a key priority of the health system being to give our citizens a home within that system. It is very difficult, Mr. Chair, to talk about a system that's focused on the needs of patients and families and their communities if we, in fact, don't take the necessary steps to provide them a home within that system.

The success of our primary care networks, which is a result of collaboration between the Alberta Medical Association, the health regions, represented by our health professionals, particularly physicians and nurses and pharmacists, and the government, has created a situation today where we have 38 primary care networks serving upwards of 2 and a half million Albertans. So it is a realistic goal in terms of looking at this amendment, Mr. Chair, to say that the solution is not to legislate an artificial benchmark, that we may or may not be able to deliver on today, but to look at opportunities in primary care as a key part of reducing those waiting times and, in fact, improving the health status of our own people over time, improving the health status of the next generation. So that would be the one area that drives the waiting times.

The second I'd point to – and this has also been referred to in the debate – is the area of continuing care. A number of hon. members, including the Leader of the Opposition, have talked in this House about the need to look at continuing care not as a strict series of program types, bed types, and rigid eligibility criteria that govern what needs can be met by citizens who are occupying those facilities but looking at, in fact, continuing care as a continuum of services from independent living and home care all the way through to long-term care, services provided by auxiliary hospitals and nursing homes.

In fact, again to go back to the amendment, Mr. Chair, just in terms of developing the argument that this initiative to legislate ER wait times is not the answer, I think the bigger discussion – and it has been raised in the House – is to look at how we increase flexibility and how our continuing care system can become more responsive to meet the needs of people where they are, to truly support the notion of aging in place, that has been put forward by this government and that we are working very hard to make possible.

The third area that's a key driver – again, it's not an area that will benefit from the simple passage of this amendment – is the question of mental health services across the province. I think I mentioned in the emergency debate last week, Mr. Chair, that we are now seeing more and more mental health professionals actually practicing in primary care networks, providing services at the coal face, so to speak, of the health care system, providing services in the community, in many cases identifying people who perhaps are at risk of developing a chronic mental illness such as schizophrenia, providing that early intervention and support without which the individual may have been required to receive services in an institutional setting.

That's my argument, Mr. Chair, with respect to the real issues that drive emergency room wait times and why we should be focused on those rather than the bill amendment.

The second area that I just wanted to pick up on briefly – again, it was referred to by the hon. Leader of the Opposition – is what I'll call the question of the culture that we build in our health care system. The mover of this amendment, Mr. Chair, is well known to us as someone who has made a conscious decision to speak out on behalf of his patients and on behalf of other health professionals. I don't think that there is anyone in this House that would suggest for a second that he should not do that. His role as a member of this Assembly offers an important opportunity for him to do that, and he should be encouraged to make use of it. But many of the concerns that he and others have raised really point to the bigger question of the attention that we need to put on building a positive, open, and transparent culture in our health system, particularly with respect to front-line health professionals.

When we talk about the health system and the decisions that have been made around the structure of the system, I think we have to be very careful, Mr. Chair, particularly in terms of this amendment, not to simply decide that we as a House should once again embark on a discussion about the entire reinvention of the publicly funded health care system. I don't think that's what my constituents want, and I don't think that's what most Albertans want. In fact, I think that would be a very destabilizing discussion for this House to embark on. Regardless of the structure, what I think we can point to and the question that we should be asking is: what opportunities and are there sufficient opportunities that physicians and other health care providers have to make constructive comments and to provide advice and to actually participate in the design, the operation, and the improvement of the particular programs that we offer in our health care system? That, Mr. Chair, is a question of leadership that is provided by those who are charged with managing the health care system on a day-to-day basis. It is also a question of policy leadership that is offered not only by the government but by all members of this House as we debate health care issues and as we discuss future directions like those that are laid out in the Putting People First report and the Alberta Health Act and as we talk about the vision for our health care system in the future and the very strong desire, I believe, on the part of Albertans to look much more broadly, beyond acute care, to look at things like end-of-life care, prevention, mental health.

For all of those reasons, Mr. Chair, I think it should become apparent that the focus of all of us, in fact our duty as legislators, is to focus on the underlying issues that really drive quality and access and improvement and sustainability in our health care system.

With absolutely no disrespect to any members here that have made comments, perhaps to the contrary, that carry a different perspective, my submission is that that is the obligation of all members of the House and, to look at recent events, particularly in the last two weeks, an opportunity to refocus ourselves on those questions. For it is, in fact, the philosophy and the commitment and the attitude that we bring and the principles, if I may say, that we apply to the decision-making, including the ideas that are enumerated in the health charter that's been proposed for Albertans, all of those things together, that will make for a substantive, constructive, and educational debate not only in this House but throughout the province.

I would conclude, Mr. Chair, by indicating that I am unable to support the amendment as proposed, but in many ways I dare say that despite – I was going to say the late hour – I guess, the early hour at this point, despite the amount of time that's been devoted to this amendment discussion in the House, I would suggest that it's not, in fact, in vain provided that we're prepared to look beyond something that is an easy opportunity to simply legislate waiting times and have an honest and fulsome discussion about the priorities in our health care system, about the opportunities for us to provide good leadership and to engender a full debate with the full participation of the professionals that deliver care. That should be, I think, our most important priority.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore on amendment A3.

Mr. Hinman: It's the same amendment that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford was speaking on. I will continue, and I'd like to ask questions on some of the comments that he made, that were illuminating. It's good to see the government members starting to engage in this and realizing that we have a crisis here and need to do something about it.

He talked a little bit about the importance. He mentioned one little item there, about reducing the needs, and he started to refer to and talk about primary care networks. There's no question that another area where we're failing in this province is proper care for the citizens of Alberta. To my understanding, if I remember right, the two big things that we deal with in the province that cost a lot of money are the heart and diabetes. These are two areas that need to be monitored. They need to have a primary care doctor and people to help them.

When we look at the outcome – I talked to a CEO of one of the former regions, a chief medical officer. He talked about the dilemma and how we really need to reduce the number of people coming in. Again, being the former MLA for Cardston-Taber-Warner, it was an interesting dilemma in Taber. They were a small hospital outside of Lethbridge, and they had this dilemma on what they were going to be allowed to run. Dr. Wedel and the doctors in Taber were one of the pilot projects for primary care networks, and their work was quite astounding, I think, and illuminating for this government. They really had to push hard to say: just let us show you what we can do.

The reduction in emergency admittance went down tremendously when they started monitoring their patients, actually bringing them into their health care facility and educating them on how to monitor their asthma, how to monitor their diabetic condition, and to really educate those individuals in Taber on how to improve their health. It was a huge reduction in the actual needs of the emergency room. It's been a few years, but if my memory serves me right, I think the average number of emergency room visits for asthma patients there was 6.7 or something like that a year, and after they'd been in there and had educated these people, it was reduced to, I believe, 2.5 times per year that they were coming into the hospitals.

Something that we've done a lot of discussion on is the appropriate people being able to intervene at the appropriate time. We have a high volume of individuals that don't have a family doctor, that aren't able to get into a walk-in clinic, so they end up in the emergency room and, again, add to that pressure that we're not able to attend.

There are just so many aspects. If we take two steps back and are honest with ourselves, we say: well, what can we do? Look at the entire system right from the primary care network physician that has these individuals right up to the aging and realize that it's a cost all the way through that system and not look at it as: well, it's costing this much to have someone go through the emergency room.

There's another interesting statistic. Again, I haven't had the time to reread a lot of these articles, but I believe that an individual that does not have a primary care physician and is sick and ends up at the hospital in an emergency room to see a doctor there is six times more likely to be back in the emergency room to be treated than one who has a primary care network, who went into the emergency room because he couldn't get in to see his doctor and then was able to go back to his primary doctor. He is only two times as likely to show up at the hospital again whereas for someone who actually is able to get in to their primary care network and not have to go to the emergency room, one visit is usually what it is. The member wants to nod.

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

We have a lot of expertise that is out there and pilot projects that have looked at these things. Again, what's discouraging for me is that this government has known these things for years and has failed to act on them. They've failed to implement those things that they know work, and I don't understand why they haven't implemented them in more areas. It's hard to understand, and because of that, what we've got to is an emergency room doctor who's brought forward this amendment to Bill 17 and said: "You know, back in 2007 I talked to this hon. member and to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud, and we were going to do something. We were going to implement them." They did take this Band-Aid by moving people upstairs and increasing the floor capacity to 3 to 5 per cent upstairs, but there was no follow-up. Back then they talked about needing to build new beds, and with this huge gap of two and a half, three years of silence it is astounding to think that they knew this and didn't act.

Now that we have someone who's broken ranks, spoken out, we were able to last Thursday, a week ago now, have an emergency debate, which was very short. Only five people, I think, were able to speak in that short timeline and on a 10-minute basis. It was an emergency debate that was extremely limited and didn't accomplish anything. Now, though, a week later, we're really into the emergency debate and asking: what are we going to do about this?

Probably the thing, again, that bothers me the most because we'd asked the questions: let's do an audit. Let's know the capacity of our facilities and the utilization of our facilities, and let's bring it forward so that we can actually make some real decisions rather than just talk about values and principles and paper promises of what we're going to do. Again, they haven't come forth. They haven't done that audit. They're not looking at it.

Again, I say with some regret that this is something that Dr. Duckett should have been assigned to do, an audit on the system, and to come back and report to the health minister, saying that, well, this is what we've got. This is where we're starting, and this is where we can go if we go to those principles that we know: 85 per cent utilization, to have those beds where we don't have extended care individuals taking up acute-care beds. I mean, the list just goes on and on and on.

What's upsetting to Albertans and those who have been caught in this system is to find out in this last couple of weeks how much information this government had and did nothing because their attitude was that if we just bury it, if we threaten the health care workers that if they speak out, they're going to lose their jobs, they're going to be demoted, they're going to be decertified – that is truly sad. You have to ask: what type of world are we living in here?

The Member for Edmonton-Whitemud kind of scorned at a few people that said that this is Third World health, and I have to agree with him in the fact that if you look at the technology, if you look at the capabilities, we're leading edge in the world. Why are we not leading edge when it comes to administration? Why do we have such great physicians, great facilities yet no administration that seems to be able to put it together?

What the doctor from Edmonton-Meadowlark is proposing here is to say: "You know what? It's time we put some pressure on. You've known. You haven't done anything. You've failed the system." The bottom line is that, to compare it to credit, we've extended credit to you over and over and over again. We're going to garnishee your wages now. We're not going to allow it. We're going to go to the courts. We're going to garnishee your wages, and that's just the way it is.

What this is saying in this bill amendment is that this is what you have to do. If four hours kicks in, you have to move them. You have to respond. You have to be accountable. I can truly understand that we don't want to go there with legislation, but the fact is that we didn't pay our debt, we didn't meet our obligations, so now we have people demanding that. We've put ourselves in this conundrum because we didn't act. We didn't show any improvements. It's been a year, and actually the problem is going up.

Like I say, cross our fingers, do what we do, but when the flu season hits, is it going to be a mild one that we skim through, or is it going to be a major one and we get into a pandemic again? We don't know. We're not prepared for that. We can hope for the best, but that's a pretty sad system to be running on, a hope and a prayer that people aren't going to get too sick and show up in mass numbers at our emergency rooms.

Mr. Chair, the dilemma that we're faced with here is two and a half, three years, six years, nine years, going back to the '90s, of failing to do our job. For that reason the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark says: "You know what? It's time to put it on paper. It's time to hold some people accountable." Again, I'll agree that the chances of doing this and, actually, the government being held accountable and actually doing those things is remote, but what else do we do? I haven't heard anything else presented by this government that gives me any faith that they're actually going to move on this other than that they're going to try and cover themselves and say: "Well, this is the reason. These are the problems."

Again, we keep hearing the Premier and the health minister talk about the golden arrow that's saving all of this: we've got five years of funding.

The Acting Chair: Hon. member, I'd just like to know how this relates to amendment A3. It's very interesting subject matter, but I'm missing the connection there.

Mr. Hinman: I can appreciate that, and I guess, you know, we've been here a long time, but I'm just kind of responding to the things from Edmonton-Rutherford. I guess I'd have to ask the same questions. At that time I didn't really know what he was speaking to in regard to this other than saying that we shouldn't have legislation, so I'm trying to say: "No, this is why we've got ourselves in this dilemma. This is why it's been presented." It is the big picture, Mr. Chair, but that's the dilemma that we're in.

The question is: do we pass this legislation? We hear from one government member after another saying: "No, we can't pass this. We can't legislate this." With all due respect, as he says – and this is an open debate, and we're trying to move forward on this – if we legislate this, then what do we have to do? Do we have to legislate cataract times, hip times, and everything else? No, actually, maybe if we got tied and did this and we learned our lesson, if we started having good credit and paying every month, people wouldn't demand those things because they'd actually start to see an improvement. That's what this is about.

Can we show that turning of the graph to say – you know what? – wait times are starting to go down? We're starting to have fewer people return because we're doing a better job in treating them when they come into our facilities. We're actually doing a better job in our primary care networks in ensuring that people don't need to come back multiple times because they didn't feel comfortable with the treatment they received.

[Mr. Cao in the chair]

It's just critical that we come up with a solution. Like I say, we've been here all night, and I haven't heard any solutions from this government, from the health minister, the parliamentary assistant, saying: this is what we are going to do that's new. What they said, Mr. Chair, is: "Oh. What's going to save this is that five years of funding. Now they can go out and do it." So are they saying that for the last five years they always wondered every year whether that hospital was going to get any funding and might be closed down? That's ridiculous. The funding has always been there. They've run debts. They weren't able to balance the books, and they realized that – you know what? – the government has got to come up.

I remember Jack Davis really put the twist to them, I think, in 2008, when the election was coming. He spoke out 30 days before the election. I don't know – the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre would probably remember better – but did he actually speak out during the election? Jack Davis from Calgary really put the screws on this government because he knew he had to hammer on them, and they ran it and said: yeah, we'll pay off the debt. I mean, to all of a sudden say that that's what was causing all of the administrative problems, that they didn't have the funding in place, the surety: that's the problem with all of our municipal governments; that's the problem with our schools. It was not the problem and has never been the problem with our health care facilities. That isn't what it's been about, Mr. Chair.

The problem has been that those people working inside are extremely frustrated because they've talked and they've talked and they've talked and they've pointed out and they've shown the way, yet the administrative level continues to choke them, to hold them back, to handcuff them. Again, it went from a four-tier system to a seven-tier system, and it's elevated to such a height and such a disconnect that these hospitals are not even functioning anymore.

Again, Dr. Duckett backed off, but it seems to me that about eight months ago it was that there was no expenditure over a thousand dollars that didn't cross his desk. Just think of that, with $15 billion how many things went through. No nurses were hired, no nothing, no changes. They were unable to move, and that caused the deterioration over the last 18 months to where we're in a critical stage here, to where the ER doctors say that again we've reached a new low. And 2007 was bad; now in 2010 we've gone lower. It's always amazing in life that we look at: oh, it can't get any worse than this. And it does.

We really need to take a serious look. This government needs to offer something more than what's put on the paper here, the promises saying: oh, we've seen the light. No. What happened was that the light was exposed, the door was opened on all of the information, all of the documents. All of the discussion has been opened up, and now the public is starting to become aware of it. So now the government is saying: oh, we're going to react. There's this miraculous 360 beds that appeared this last week, when we've been asking for the audits. Then they think they've done something wonderful. No. It's sick to think how many people sat, laid, stood, and waited in ER rooms because of the policy that the superboard has imposed on the hospitals and especially our emergency rooms. It's wrong. This government hasn't offered any solution, so once again what does the ER doctor from Edmonton-Meadowlark say? He says that we've got to put it on paper. We've got to hold accountability.

We talked about striking section 10 from Bill 17 and the necessity of doing that so that people could be held accountable. It's interesting to me, you know, that this government hasn't learned with its gold-plated contracts, that it says: oh, we signed the contracts. The previous health minister, when he let them go – I mean, they couldn't sign up their friends and their acquaintances quickly enough to these positions with gold-plated salaries and then gold-plated severance packages. Maybe there's one thing that they could learn if they're hiring the next CEO, to actually not put in a bonus clause; put in a penalty clause. If, in fact, the ER times don't go down, if in fact we don't have better facilities, this administrator is going to lose 10 or 20 per cent of his wage. Say: "No. We expect you to do these things."

The Chair: Hon. member, I'd like to draw attention to amendment A3.

Mr. Hinman: A3. Yes. I'm sorry. We get segued into different directions here because this is such a big and important bill, but we should be talking on A3. I will try and go back.

A3, section (d): "set standards for lengths of stay in the emergency room departments of hospitals consistent with the 'Position Statement on Emergency Department Overcrowding'." Why is it that this government has been changing the standards in order to tell Albertans, "Oh, we're now meeting the standards" when, like I say, it wasn't that it was 95 per cent at eight hours. All of a sudden it goes down to 65 per cent at six hours and reduced the standards. That's why he wants them written.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'll be brief. I, for one, don't see a requirement to use the entire 20-minute period each time I rise, but I wanted to make a couple of comments. First of all, thank you for the latitude that you have shown to the members of the House in terms of the importance of keeping the attention on the amendment, and I'll continue to endeavour to do that.

I was encouraged at the beginning of the remarks made by the Member for Calgary-Glenmore early on when he, you know, responded to my suggestion that perhaps at least part of our time would be better spent looking at some of the bigger picture system areas that we need to address that will ultimately result in lower emergency wait times. He talked about primary care networks, particularly the one in Taber, which, I would agree, is a model for the rest of the province in many ways. This is not a new initiative, Mr. Chair, as I'm sure the hon. member knows. We began developing primary care networks in 2003, and as I said before, we have 38 of these today serving over 2 and a half million Albertans.

I guess I just want to take this opportunity to observe, Mr. Chair, in terms of the whole debate on the amendment, that because of the latitude that you've shown the House and because of the, I think, upwards of almost 17 hours now that this amendment has been under debate, you've probably given all of us an opportunity to very, very thoroughly vet and discuss what we might respectively believe are the underlying causes for some of the wait times that we're seeing today, some of the initiatives that should be explored.

With reference to the comments of the hon. Government House Leader early this evening, I think, or at least I'm detecting, based on what I'm hearing, that there are probably a number of other amendments that have been contemplated by members opposite in some of these areas that with some appropriate time for debate in this Chamber might well contribute to the solution for the problems that you're so thoroughly reiterating for us. You know, one of those might be the audit that the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore refers to. There have been a number of other suggestions with respect to structure of the health care system.

I just wanted to express my interest, Mr. Chair, in actually having the opportunity to hear of some of these other amendments that have been perhaps hinted at but have yet to be disclosed by members opposite in the course of this debate. So I would put that, with respect, to the hon. members opposite. If you are of the view, as I think many of us are, that we have pretty much thoroughly debated any conceivable issue directly related or peripherally related to this amendment, I think we should take the opportunity to vote and to move on to other amendments that may be presented.

Thank you.

7:40

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: All right. Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's a pleasure for me to rise and speak to the amendment in regard to the legislation of wait times. One feels a lot better when they've had a couple of hours of sleep and have the opportunity to get up and speak. Unfortunately, when you're the health critic, not much sleep is granted. You're keenly interested in what's happening in the Legislature, so instead of sleeping, you end up watching what's happening. You end up, believe it or not, talking until all hours of the morning to people who have been watching this and the health professionals, actually, who have been contacting us, wanting to get their two cents in.

I guess I said to one of the docs I talked to – I don't know what time it was; 1 in the morning? I was quite surprised. I said to him: well, it's quite late. They're used to these hours, and the doctor from Edmonton-Meadowlark can probably attest to that. They're keenly interested in what's happening. They're watching very much what's going on, and I would assume a lot of the health professionals that are watching at this particular period of time have never ever tuned in to what's happening in the Assembly. You just have to look at what's happening in the e-mails that are pouring in to us and the twitters that are coming in.

I have to first of all put on the record that I'm going to stand up, and I'm going to support the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. I'm going to support that particular piece of legislation because as the health critic for the Wildrose and the MLA for Calgary-Fish Creek people have clearly articulated that we're in a crisis situation. It's interesting when you start reading through Hansard. I'm trying to keep up with that. One member from the opposition says: no, we're in a crisis. Another says: no, we're not in a crisis. Then you have the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, who is an emergency physician and, if I can get on the record, a highly respected emergency physician: yes, we are in a crisis.

I think that not only are we in a crisis; this is just the tip of the iceberg. It's amazing to me that neither the health minister nor the new parliamentary secretary from Edmonton-Rutherford is aware of that. Quite frankly, he travelled the province all summer, and if he was listening instead of talking, he would have quickly realized that not only do we have a crisis in ER; we have a crisis amongst our health care professionals. [interjections]

You know, Mr. Chair, it's interesting how you get the government talking away. I don't mind that because I do that also.

Mr. Liepert: Stick to policy and not personal slams.

Mrs. Forsyth: Oh, it's the former minister of health . . .

The Chair: Hon. member, address the chair. You have the floor on amendment A3. Thank you.

Mrs. Forsyth: I am talking about A3.

. . . the current Minister of Energy, who was the previous minister of health and managed to screw that up quite royally, not only the Energy file but the health.

I'm pleased to stand up and talk about legislated wait times. I'm going to go back to Hansard, when the current minister of health, from Edmonton-Mill Creek, talked after the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark tabled the amendment. He's talking about: "When you put something into legislation, as [you] know, you are putting something into law." Well, gee, that's an intelligent conversation. "If you put something law and someone breaks it" – well, this is the same government that's put things into law and broke them anyhow. I go to, you know, our deficit accountability act. I mean, you put a piece of law; then you break that law. We're the ones, quite frankly, that are supposed to uphold the law.

Then he goes on to say: "Then there are going to [have to] be some repercussions for that. Now, that's okay. That's called accountability. But what you have to understand, though, is that you can't just put one aspect of health care under that microscope." I guess my answer to that is: why not? I mean, under the microscope right now, quite clearly, has been the emergency crisis that we're dealing with. If you don't think that is under a microscope, then you'd better wake up. Under this microscope all of a sudden we're having talks with emergency physicians, which is in my mind quite interesting because the same emergency physicians that we're talking to – I believe Dr. Parks sent a letter to the government in 2007 reiterating the problems with the emergency situation. Nothing was done. Nothing. I would expect that was under the Minister of Energy when he received that. Then it gets worse. It took a lot of courage, and quite frankly it took a lot of guts for a physician to speak out because of the fact that we've been told by numerous health care professionals about their fear with the code of conduct that came under Dr. Duckett.

So you go back and you think: this is not happening in 2010 in the province of Alberta, when the government continues to talk about this five-year funding and how it's going to change the system. The minister goes on to say:

You would have to put all aspects of health care under that microscope because then others would come in and say: well, what about legislating wait times for cancer care, for access for kidney care, for brain cancer, for lung cancer? And the list goes on.

Well, Mr. Chair, what I would like to say to the minister is: why don't you try a pilot project? The government is great at pilot projects. They have more pilot projects than you can count. So if you want to have one aspect of health care and you want to have one pilot project, then why don't we try and talk about a pilot project, legislate it, and say: okay; let's see if instead of talking about it, we can get it done. If the government is so committed to having this emergency care go from four to eight hours – I had a disturbing call from a senior yesterday who is a real sweetheart. She said to me: Heather, I talked to your mum, and I understand that you're in Edmonton, and when you come home, I need to talk to you. I said: well, why is that? She was having some problems with her heart. She went to emergency and waited seven hours. Now, this is heart problems, and here we are supposed to be having this service that is supposed to be giving us some time. And that seven-hour time was only before there was anything even started.

What you see here is that things aren't happening the way the government wants them to happen. You know, the minister goes on. Not only does he question where the wait times and legislation should be on cancer care, but then he talks about eye surgery. Well, that's shown that's worked after the monopoly and you start hearing from the eye surgeons and the long waits for seniors with cataract problems. I'm sure that's going to roll out as one of the other most successful things the government has done. I can tell you that that's another thing that's going to start biting them in the butt: when you start dealing with what's happening on that aspect of giving two companies a monopoly, and, yup, they can do the eye surgery.

I can tell you that the ophthalmologists that I'm hearing from are quite concerned. The patients they're dealing with I can't even imagine. They're getting me some numbers on the backlog of eye surgery that has gone from here to there and is backing up in the system with people that have got to have cataract surgery. You know, you can talk about whether it's a simple procedure or very complicated, but he seems to think that the eye surgery doesn't have to be legislated either.

Then he goes on to say, "Why not put into law wait times for access to continuing care or whatever type of care" you want? Well, I'm sure that we'll be dealing with all of these other health issues when you start having people and doctors come out and speak about this.

Now he says, "Now, while it[s] . . . easy to say that that could be done, it's just not practical . . . as new improvements are made, what are you going to do?" You know what, Mr. Chair? That's an interesting comment by a minister of health, when he says, "it's . . . not practical because as new improvements are made, what are you going to do?" Well, you're going to do exactly what we saw yesterday, when we had a piece of legislation that we were currently debating, and an amendment came forward.

If the minister felt that something necessarily had to be done and you needed to bring the House back and make amendments to a piece of legislation, I would suspect that every member in this Legislature would be back here. I mean, you see what's gone on across the country when there's been an emergency situation, whether it's a strike action or something, where the Legislature has been reconvened, and members show up. We all deeply care about what's happening in this province, and we all deeply care about the fact that health care obviously is a number one priority amongst Albertans; at least, it is for Calgary-Fish Creek.

I can tell you that Albertans and the health care professionals have made it very, very clear that there has been no improvement in the system. We continually hear the government talk about the new beds. I've gone to the dictionary, and I've looked up what "new beds" is. You know, while they open a new bed, they're always closing more beds behind.

The Member for Edmonton-Rutherford wanted to talk about what other amendments we're going to be tabling. I think that at the last count that we had, we had 10 of them. The more that they talk, the more amendments are coming forward in regard to what we think needs to be changed in the legislation.

While I think this bill may have had some good intentions, I can tell you that it's deeply flawed when you have a well-respected doctor come out and talk about guiding principles. It's an interesting amendment. He talks about:

include as guiding principles that no unnecessary deaths, no unnecessary harm to patients, no unnecessary delays in care and no unnecessary waste of resources should occur.

Then he goes on to:

set standards for lengths of stay in the emergency departments of hospitals consistent with the "Position Statement on Emergency Department Overcrowding" published by the Canadian Association of Emergency Physicians and dated February 2007.

That's from emergency physicians.

We had this meeting – I believe it was last Friday – when they brought together 100 people to talk about that. They had given their idea of what they thought was important to improve the emergency situation. We will be interested to see if they table the minutes from that meeting because we had asked that particular question in question period.

Mr. Chair, you know, it's sad when you see what's happened over the last several days in regard to the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. Now we're hearing about what's happening to Dr. Duckett. We're also hearing that three people, possibly, from the board will also resign. It's shooting the messenger. The messenger that was shot was just delivering what they were being told to by the previous health minister, who's now the Minister of Energy. While it was unfortunate with the cookie situation – and I thought a great deal about that cookie situation – you wonder what kind of state the CEO was in to come out and talk about eating his cookie instead of about health care.

No one likes what's happening. No one trusts the government. We have the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford speak in debate in Hansard. He talked about the Canada Health Act amendment that we brought forward, and he didn't support that. He spoke the "we" instead of the "I," which I found quite interesting.

The minister has also spoken about the fact that legislating times hasn't worked because of the tie-up in the court system. Well, there won't be a tie-up in the court system if the expectations of what's in that particular legislation are met. You have to get a buy-in not only by the emergency physicians, but you have to get a buy-in by all of the health care professionals. They want to see a health care system that's fixed.

We have seniors in an acute-care situation that should be in what the Premier calls – I don't even know what he calls it. He has called it several things, where he wants to see partners together, long-time couples together. Well, that's not happening. You can talk about it, but putting it into effect is very difficult. For example, what I see happening where my mom is staying. They're in assisted living. One partner isn't doing so well compared to another, so you have to move that particular partner into long-term care or a nursing home, and they're separated. It's a goal that has to be well thought out, well done, and researched to see what's going to happen.

Mr. Boutillier: Cindy, is it that cold over there?

Mrs. Forsyth: She's got her Grey Cup jacket on. I'm sure she bought that, too. It's interesting, Mr. Chair, when you talk about a critical situation that we're trying to discuss, and members on that side of the House are talking about the Grey Cup and bragging about their Grey Cup jackets. It's just mind boggling to me at this particular time.

We want to continue to talk – and I've got to do some more assessment in regard to some of the notes – about speaking in Hansard that the minister of health has talked about. He talks about:

The danger with having something like this in legislation is to say that the court system would become even more involved than it already is. There's nothing wrong with that to a degree, but in the health care system it would hold up so many things that need to be done and acted on quickly without coming in for a full debate per se to change an act or words to that effect.

Now, that's an interesting comment by the minister. I briefly spoke about that. I guess he's referring to the legislation. If we need a word changed that he thinks is going to add to or is needed in the amendment of the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, we will discuss that.

I mean, the government has an incredible amount of resources. An incredible amount of lawyers work for the government. I have had the opportunity in two different ministries to be able to work with the lawyers that are employed by the government. I can tell you that their number one priority is always to do what's right and what they think is good for Albertans. We have lawyers, I know, in the health department, as we do in every department. It would be interesting to see if the minister of health has shown this amendment to the lawyers that he has under his employment. Maybe they can come back with an amendment that they think would be a deterrent to the amendment that Edmonton-Meadowlark has brought forward in regard to legislating the wait times. We're not lawyers on this end, and as I indicated . . . [Mrs. Forsyth's speaking time expired]

The Chair: Hon. members, I have a list here, and the next hon. member is Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. Speaking to amendment A3, which I've previously reread into the record so that people stay focused on your directions, how many times have members of this House heard me say, "I'm conflicted"? The most recent of that conflict arose within the last hour, when I spoke of the possibility of calling the question, moving on.

Now, in the last series of speakers to A3 the . . .

The Chair: Hon. members, Calgary-Varsity has the floor. Please lower your level of conversation.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Within the last four speakers the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford suggested the possibility of moving on to other amendments. I interacted with government members, and I asked, "Do you have other amendments that you would like to bring forward that could attempt to accomplish what amendment A3 is doing? In other words, do you have amendments that would set standards? Do you have amendments that would set guidelines? Do you have amendments that would provide some teeth to Bill 17, which at this point lacks goals and objectives?" In discussing with members of the government, they said that this is just setting the foundation. We all know the Biblical phrase that if your house is built on sand, it's not going to stand up. Well, neither will emergency responses stand up.

Now, the reason I'm standing up and speaking about amendment A3 is the reality that 24 hours a day individuals come to our emergency departments in varying levels of distress. A number of emergency physicians have said that people are welcome to come to those facilities. They said the problem is not in the medical facilities, not that people shouldn't be there. The problem is that the unnecessary delay that's referred to in A3 is the result of a shortage of supports.

When people come, they've tried the health line, and the health line has recommended that they should see their physician, and their physician's office doesn't open until 9 or 10 in the morning. Then they have no alternative other than to go to emergency. Therefore, 24 hours a day we have that possibility of people being treated at emergency. But the type of treatment they're receiving, through no fault of the staff – the doctors on call, the nurses – is that there is not sufficient capacity in terms of the number of professionals providing the emergent service or the beds available for individuals to be dealt with in a life-saving manner. This is what A3 is about. It's at the heart of the matter.

In talking with government members, they've indicated that they have no desire individually or collectively to see this amendment, which would require guidelines and standards, passed. We're at that impasse circumstance, Mr. Chair, where, unfortunately, we've been for almost 18 hours.

Now, what A3 talks about is guidelines and standards. Mr. Chairman, guidelines and standards are what I as a professional teacher brought into my classroom on a daily basis. Without the type of guidelines and standards, what I called . . . [interjection]

The Chair: Hon. member, please take a seat. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity has the floor.

Continue.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Mr. Chair, without objectives and goals, that I set with my students, there was no direction. If we don't have standards, if we don't have guidelines, if we don't have evaluatory procedures, how can we reach our goals? This is what amendment A3 is about. It's talking about setting standards for lengths of stay. That's just one of the standards that it's talking about.

Mr. Chair, as Bill 17 stands, we have motherhood statements. The government in Bill 17 talks about having a patient advocate, but that advocate has no capacity to ensure that there's a follow-up in treatment. Currently in Calgary we have patient advocates, a gentleman whose wife suffered the indignity and the pain of a miscarriage while waiting for an emergency procedure. While that miscarriage was probably not preventable, the fact that it occurred in the midst of the waiting room certainly should have been preventable. So we have individuals who are raising the cases, but without the power to actually change the procedures that led to the failures of the health system, there's no point in having an advocate who doesn't have a role.

The Chair: Hon. member, please take a seat. Take a seat, please.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills talked about the importance of treating each other with respect, and I appreciate, Mr. Chair, that you're attempting to have that type of decorum.

We've been elected to uphold high standards. Unfortunately, those high standards are missing from Bill 17, and that's what A3 is attempting to do. It's trying to inject into Bill 17 the guidelines and standards that are currently missing.

Mr. Chairman, it appears that whether it's the liability excuse, the thought of being sued, whatever the excuses, the government does not appear willing to set minimal standards of care within Bill 17. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford in fact toured the province trying to gather ideas that would provide relief within the health care circumstance. He had direct input. I appreciate the time he spent in consultation throughout the province. But the end result of that consultation, Bill 17, which A3 is attempting to amend, is that there aren't any regulatory standards being set. So people, while we debate the lack of provision of emergency care, are showing up at the various steps, whether it's at the University of Alberta hospital, whether it's at the Children's hospital back in Calgary-Varsity, that I represent. People are coming. Not only are they coming to these emergency departments, but they're experiencing inappropriate delays.

Everyone in this House appreciates the quality of care that the individuals get once they see the physician. They appreciate the care in the triaging process, where a nurse determines the priority with which they should be seen. But, Mr. Chairman, we're in the wealthiest province in Canada. It's not due to lack of resources that we're not moving forward on what A3 has suggested, guidelines and standards. It's a lack of will. We have within this House the intelligence, whether it's in terms of broader based thinking through all-party standing policy committees, to improve the health care delivery in this province.

In conversations that I've held with hon. government members, the notion of having the right prescription, the right combination of expertise on the boards, on the superboard is absolutely essential. Doctors are trained for specific circumstances. The Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark specialized in emergency medicine. The former head of Alberta Health Services, Dr. Duckett, his specialty was accounting, management. He's no longer in that position. We have Dr. Chris Eagle, a medically trained individual, as the interim head. But what is lacking is the right combination for A3 to occur. That's a combination of the best intelligence, the best combination, the best team, the managers, the people who do the accounting, the people who create the timelines, and obviously with input from doctors who are on the front lines, coming up with the best possible prescription or recipe for success.

Mr. Chair, we to the largest extent come to our constituency offices. I can't think that there's a single one of us who at four o'clock goes home and that's the end of their expectation. I know that's not the case. How do we, short of lengthy debate, short of SO 30s, get across the point to the government that the collaborative methodology is superior to just simply consultation? Consultation does not require that actual action takes place after the consultation in the same way that the health advocate can bring up a circumstance but doesn't have the power to deal with it. Whether it's the Ombudsman, whether it's the advocate as proposed in Bill 17, whether it's the Auditor General, the powers are limited to raising an issue, to potentially suggest solutions to reduce waiting times, to speed up particular procedures. But they lack the power to do that.

The power rests within this Assembly. We are the ultimate say in what actions are taking place. How do we prevent, as motion A3 says, “unnecessary deaths . . . unnecessary harm”? Well, hon. Chair, we do it by putting forward the best legislation possible.

Bill 17, I agree, is a work in progress, but so much of Bill 17 is reliant on a health minister to make decisions. Even though there are deputy ministers, even though there are thousands of people employed within the government’s ministries to provide the minister with advice, in the end the minister has to take the best collective wisdom and come up with a decision. But the decisions that have been put forward in Bill 17, that are attempted to being amended by A3, they’re not it. We haven’t reached that ultimate pinnacle of success, and we won’t reach it in Alberta until we have standards such as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, a doctor himself, and the hon. Leader of the Opposition, the Member for Calgary-Mountain View, indicated. Unless we have standards similar, at least, to what’s been established in other locations such as in Britain, the four-hour business, we won’t have reached the quality of care that Albertans deserve.

Whether it’s in the legal field or whether it’s in the medical field, we need to incorporate best practices. We need to value the research that other jurisdictions have done and attempt as much as possible, whether it be through amendment A3 or other government amendments, to improve the existing legislation.

Mr. Chair, a concern that has been frequently brought up in this House is: is it best to keep in legislation the authority, the rules, the guidelines, the standards, as A3 is proposing, or to what extent should regulatory powers, discretionary powers be given to the minister? It’s a combination of both that’s necessary. We have the ability through amendments. The government, for example when they realize a shortcoming in the legislation, they want to bring it up to date, as has been the case with a number of bills on wills and succession and so on, updates the legislation.

Now, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford said: we’ve heard you. You know, I think that at that time he said: we’ve spent 18 hours so far on A3. I believe that was his comment. If I felt that the government had heard what A3 was suggesting, if I felt that the government valued all the concerns that have been brought up by a number of individuals – we’ve heard people recounting. For example, the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek recounted the circumstances that she’s had with her mother’s health. We’ve heard from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. We’ve heard from the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. What we are all in agreement on in this House is that the system isn’t working, but the difference between just recognizing that the system isn’t working and actually creating legislation to improve it is, unfortunately, at a standstill.

I would look forward and I would gladly take my seat if the government could show that based on the last 18 hours of discussion, based on years of recommendation from various opposition parties, based on suggestions from their own physicians that they move forward – but this business of, “Trust us; this is just the first step; we’ll move forward” doesn’t provide any assurance to members of this House or to people who, as I say, are currently sitting in one of those chairs in an emergency waiting room across this province.

Please, government members, if amendment A3 is too prescriptive or too restrictive, come up with a middle point. Come up with a middle ground. Come up with a position, a compromise that does not compromise patients’ care but covers your concerns about liabilities. Offer us something. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford indicated a desire to move on, and I would challenge, through the chair, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford to, based on your hearings, come up with amendments that will bring us closer to what A3 is asking for.

Mr. Speaker, I don’t want to monopolize the debate. I’ll sit down. I have other concerns, and probably the next time I stand to debate A3, I’ll focus further on the unnecessary waste of resources. Thank you for this opportunity to participate in the debate on A3.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Indeed, this motion that was put forward by the only emergency room doctor in this entire building today, who ultimately has put forward an amendment to Bill 17, which is clearly a flawed bill, is trying to resurrect or trying to inject some life into this bill to reflect something that can help front-line doctors and, specifically, the patients that he so deeply cares about. He talks about including as guiding principles – and I might add that this amendment is the direct opposite of what the minister of health said he would not support.

In other words, he would not support: “include as guiding principles that no unnecessary deaths, no unnecessary harm to patients, no unnecessary delays in care and no unnecessary waste of resources should occur.” Can you believe that the minister of health will not support that, nor will the newly founded parliamentary health secretary? His job has now been in place for all of 24 hours. Not a good first step by the minister of health or his junior parliamentary boy. Mr. Chairman, I’m glad to see that the Government House Leader is listening intently to my words of wisdom. In fact, I see the connection because, actually, when he was the minister of health, the parliamentary secretary worked for him.

I think that last night the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark talked about the government building up health care and then tearing it down. I guess we’ll allow Albertans to determine if the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud was the minister of health when it was building up or if he was the minister of health when the tearing down came in? In fact, that same question could be asked of the Member for Sherwood Park. Since both of you were ministers of health following each other, which one tore it down, and which one built it up? I would welcome the answer to that. It seems like the members got very quiet.

Mr. Chairman, setting standards. The minister of health said in this House to the doctor, the only ER doctor – I might say that I have to pose a couple of questions. I find it ironic that the minister of health visits 35 ER rooms, but the member who was then the parliamentary secretary of health was actually number 301 on his e-mails. So it really shows you the absolute failure of structure that is going on over there. Can you believe that? The minister of health has an ER doctor who’s in the front-line troops, and what does the minister of health do? He puts his parliamentary secretary of health as number 301 on his e-mails. What does he do rather than talking and listening to the ER doctor? He goes and visits 35 ERs. One has to really question the wisdom of what is going on on that side of the House.

The Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark astutely said: this government built up health care; then they tore it down. So I’m assuming the Member for Sherwood Park was one of the ministers that was trying to build up health care, and I guess, Member for Edmonton-Whitemud, that would mean you would be the one trying to tear it down. As much as I know that that is never the intent, sometimes you have to stand up for the principles of the Canada Health Act, something that the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, when the amendment came forward the other night, didn’t want to support, and he had been the secretary of health for less than six hours.

So, Mr. Chair, I have to truly, truly question . . . [interjection] It was on insurance, thank you. I want to thank the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud because I see he's listening. It was actually about Canada health insurance. The parliamentary secretary didn't support a fundamental cornerstone of Canada. Can you imagine? You just get appointed as a parliamentary secretary to health, but you can't support the cornerstone of our Canada Health Act and its insurance. [interjection]

The Chair: Hon. member, address the chair, and it's about amendment A3.

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Chair, on this amendment, of course, we talk about the minister of health. The Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark said: I want to put in an amendment to "include as guiding principles that no unnecessary deaths, no unnecessary harm," and the minister of health said that he can't support that. Shame. He said that in here. So let's think about this. Everyone appears to be kind of saying that the Edmonton-Meadowlark doctor knows first-hand what is going on, but in the meantime not one single person over there is willing to help in his amendment. I find that strange. In fact, I think the word is "unanimous." Well, what does that mean? [interjection]

Oh, my goodness. The Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster has awakened. I refer to him as the prime-time rock star. I saw him the other night, and I had a lot of pleasure taking my remote and turning him off because we truly have heard enough from him and, actually, the former minister of health, Mr. Gibberish.

Mr. Chairman, I can say clearly that setting standards – how can a minister of health and a parliamentary secretary of health be against setting standards for lengths of stay? How could you be against setting standards for lengths of stay in emergency departments of hospitals consistent with the position statement on emergency department overcrowding. This is from an ER doctor, but the minister of health and the parliamentary secretary are against the very amendment that this good doctor is bringing forward. I think someone, clearly, needs a doctor.

I can only say that being against this amendment by the good doctor, the only good doctor – and by the way, to the Government House Leader, through the chair, of course, and to the former ministers of health, of which I see three or four over there: I find this ironic. You had an ER doctor right beside you, and what did you do? You threw him under the bus; unanimously, you did. Why? Because he was speaking the truth about health care. I know that he can proudly look at himself in the mirror knowing that he has done his best in advocating for his patients. I have to ask, you know, those who may be well intended, but I'm not going to be as charitable as the good doctor: why would you not stand in here and support this amendment that is being put forward by the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark? He is seeing first-hand. Would you deny, to the Government House Leader, that this doctor has seen first-hand what's going on? Why would you not want to take the advice of this good doctor? This good doctor has also developed important links with health care officials.

Why would a minister of health go ahead and put him number 301 on his e-mail list? Mr. Chair, when I asked a question on this amendment last week, the minister of health quite simply said: I didn't see his e-mail; I get so many. It was on the front page of the Calgary Herald and the Edmonton Journal, and the minister of health didn't see it because, one, he's either absolutely incompetent or, two, he's being dishonest. I can only say: I've got the inside story. [interjection] Or his e-mail batteries might have gone again.

We know that the minister of health used to be able to go to an editorial board, pick up his cellphone and be Superman and say: let me call Duckett. Of course, now there's no Cookie Monster anymore, but we still have Ernie and Bert, and I see one of them right across the way, right next to the Treasury Board president. I find it really quite interesting.

8:30

The system is broken. The Wildrose Alliance has a five-point plan to fix this crisis, that has been created by the very members across the way who are going to vote against an ER doctor who knows what's going on. In fact, the ER doctor made references to knuckleheads. Well, I can only say to you, Mr. Chair, that not supporting this amendment is clearly bordering on not just knuckleheadedness but just pure unacceptable representation of your constituency. Your constituents want solutions. Your constituents want you to be listening to doctors and nurses.

Mr. Chair, I would like to say that I'm so pleased that the Government House Leader is listening, but as a former minister of health who actually hired the parliamentary secretary of health, I find it ironic that the minister of health has said: I'm sorry; I get so many e-mails. Let's think about this. You have one parliamentary secretary who is an ER doctor, yet you don't look at his e-mails. Obviously, the minister of health doesn't read the Journal or the Herald because it was on the front page talking about the crisis. To this day the crisis that he speaks about continues to worsen.

What separates us from you guys is simply that we have solutions. We don't believe in being critics or just simply being in opposition. We believe in solutions. Not only do we believe in being down the road on health care; we want to be around the corner. Obviously, this side doesn't even know what around the corner means. [interjection] What does it mean, you ask? I'll tell you. It means caring for Albertans, listening to Albertans, listening to the doctors and nurses and health care professionals because they know what's going on. They're not knuckleheads. The knuckleheads are people who don't listen.

Mr. Chairman, I am saddened. At one point I thought: I'm saddened. In fact, my feelings are hurt, similar to the former Minister of Energy. [interjection] No, you're not the former Minister of Energy yet. But I can say that my feelings are hurt that this side would not listen to their own ER doctor, that was right next to their side. What did they do? They threw him over the bus. Not only threw him over the bus . . . [interjection] Thrown over the bus.

Mr. Anderson: Under the bus, wrapped around the tires, and popped out the back.

Mr. Boutilier: Yeah. Threw him overboard.

In fact, I think Albertans are not only just going to throw some folks under the bus in the next election; they're going to put tires on top of a few of you. [interjection] Uh-oh. The Minister of Energy has awakened. That's so nice. I'm going to send him over some Kleenex. I know his feelings were hurt, and I understood that he used the Kleenex from yesterday, blew his nose, and he sent them back over. Thank you so much for that. We're going to do some DNA sampling of that. We'll let you know what we find out, okay? Thank you. [interjection] Oh, Mr. Chair, we also have the Alberta Primetime star. It has a lot of pleasure in taking the remote and turning him off at around 11 at night. It really does. So much pleasure.

On a more serious note here, setting standards for lengthy stays in emergency departments is a noble idea. [interjection] Mr. Chair, I'm somewhat worried now because I think the Member for Calgary-Egmont now thinks he's the Premier. That's not a dream; that's a nightmare. That is clearly a nightmare.

I want to say that for the standards that we set, that this ER doctor has put forward, I commend him. I commend him because he has recognized what patients are saying to him. His comments were very heartfelt. What you're seeing is a real person talking about real issues.

Consequently, I believe that as we go forward, Alberta's health care system has arrived at a crossroads. You have the opportunity today, minister of health. For the junior minister, the parliamentary secretary, this is his chance to retract. I've heard that word "retract" a lot lately. I think the parliamentary secretary should have retracted his comments in his first 24 hours, when he said that he doesn't support the Canada Health Act when it comes to insurance. On this amendment that is a fundamental cornerstone of Alberta and Canada in terms of protecting.

That's why I am absolutely shocked. I think it's fair to say that the minister of health has lost his superman status. We saw from the editorial board that I was speaking with that some of the participants at the Edmonton Journal and the Calgary Herald said: yeah, we began to realize that the minister of health calling Dr. Duckett was not so impressive with, "Let me get him on the phone." But when it came to bonuses, Mr. Chair, his batteries went dead. When it came to trying to deal with putting wait times in legislation, his batteries went dead again. I think we are beginning to have a minister of health whose batteries are going dead, and that's unfortunate. Then, again, if you've been around for 39 or almost 40 years, you need more than a booster jump. Clearly, that booster jump is the Wildrose Alliance because we have new ideas. We have a five-point plan to deal with this very crisis that we are facing.

I can see that Calgary-Edgemont is enjoying sitting in the Premier's chair. That is scary.

An Hon. Member: Where's Edgemont?

Mr. Boutilier: I don't know. It's somewhere. I think you're supposed to represent it. I think you should actually go get door-knocking right now.

An Hon. Member: It's called Egmont.

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Chair, I want to say Egmont, Edgemont. You know what? I can only say this. Do the right thing. Look yourself in the mirror. Listen to your inner voice; you know, your inner voice that you have. I hope everyone is feeling good on that side because your inner voice will guide you to the true north. That inner voice will say: care for Albertans. Okay? They obviously do not understand the important value.

Let me share with the former minister – no, he's not the former Minister of Energy yet. He was the minister of health, but then when I asked him the question, Mr. Chair, he said: no, I wasn't the minister of health.

An Hon. Member: Relevance.

Mr. Boutilier: Well, the relevance comes back to the letter that ER doctors sent to this government and to this Premier two days after the last election. The minister of health at that point said that he wasn't the minister of health. He was trying to distance himself from his own government. It gives a real new meaning to open and transparent. I guess that at that point the Premier was the minister of health. That's just pure gibberish. Obviously, I think it reflects . . .

The Chair: Hon member, we are debating amendment A3, so focus on that.

Mr. Boutilier: Let me conclude, Mr. Chair. I'm going to take my seat. Who would like me to take their seat? Please speak so I can offer a few comments to you. Would anyone like me to take my seat?

The Chair: Hon. member, on A3, and please address the chair.

Mr. Boutilier: Well, before I take my seat, I'd like to offer a comment, through the chair, of course, to the former minister of health. I see the other former minister of health and actually one down there, a former minister of health. Do the right thing. To the former minister of health, I think that in your profession you folks call it billable time or something like that. That's fine in your profession, but my profession is actually to represent my constituents, to listen to my bosses.

I want to say that the 6,000 e-mails and letters that I've received relative to what you . . .

Mr. Anderson: I'm a lawyer, too.

Mr. Boutilier: You know what? There are lawyers. There's good, there's bad, and there's ugly.

An Hon. Member: Relevance.

Mr. Boutilier: I can only say, Mr. Chair, that the relevance is simply this. They may require a lot of lawyers in the future. In fact, it's my understanding that the Minister of Energy's bosom buddy . . . [interjections]

The Chair: The hon. member has the floor.

Hon. member, please stay on amendment A3.

Mr. Boutilier: I'm sorry, but they're trying to lure me into further discussions on other issues.

I can say, Mr. Chair, that I really want to keep on the focus of setting standards. What does this side say? No to setting new standards. What does that side, the government, say on wanting to have guiding principles? They say no to their doctor, that they threw under the bus, and then they rode over him. We have been able to get a jack and lift that bus up, and I can say that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark feels liberated, and so he should. Liberated.

I might add, Mr. Chair, on this amendment, when we talk about setting standards for lengths of stay, how could anyone be against that? That is like motherhood and apple pie.

The Chair: On my list the next hon. member is Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair, for permitting this third opportunity this fine morning – it is the morning of November 25 – to participate again in debate on motion A3. The last time I sat down I provided a little bit of a forecast as to where I was going to go next, and that had to do with clause (c), that refers to "no unnecessary waste of resources." What we have seen in terms of the wasting of resources is the reduction. We had fully paid for hospitals such as the General, the Holy Cross, and the Grace, and in terms of reductions and the loss of resources we had the General hospital blown up. That is the greatest monument to unnecessary resource destruction that I think just about any province can point to. Then we had the fools on the hill clapping while the hospital imploded.

Now, not only did we blow up a hospital, but we sold off the valuable asset of the Holy Cross. I referenced it earlier, so I won't go into the detail that I've put on the record. A concern I have is that in losing those hospitals, the unnecessary waste of resources referenced in motion A3, we not only lost beds, Mr. Chairman; we lost a variety of health support individuals. Nurses were laid off in large numbers. We lost specialists, particularly to the States. The government, in its wisdom or lack thereof in terms of unnecessary waste of resources, did away with a number of the laboratories that provided timely results so that the doctors could continue with their healing work. If that wasn't enough in terms of unnecessary waste of resources, as A3 points out, the government decided that the cheapest way to save money at the advanced education/postsecondary level was to reduce the number of seats for training doctors.

Now, Mr. Chair, that was back in the Ralph Klein era, but in this latest era those reductions are still in place. For example, we had positions, we had seats at our postsecondary institutions for upgrading 60 foreign-accredited doctors to bring them up to speed with our Alberta system. Unfortunately, those seats were reduced from 60 to 40. The government put forward initiatives whereby a variety of postsecondary institutions – Grant MacEwan here in town, SAIT in Calgary in terms of LPNs; Mount Royal becoming a university is another example – took on training registered nurses, and we started to make up for the unnecessary waste of resources that had occurred back in the 1990s with the shortsightedness. Just at the point where we had sufficient nurses to provide the relief necessary to the system, freezes took place.

Now, Mr. Chair, it's important for the general public to realize that when those freezes took place, there was still $11 billion of the $18 billion sustainability fund in place, so those nurses could have been hired.

Now, again in terms of A3, unnecessary waste of resources, it's important to note that not only were those nurses not hired, but a whole variety of nurses were fired at a cost of $22 million in separations. In terms of the wastage of resources we have a system that delegates authority in a questionable manner, that suggests Alberta Health Services works at arm's length from the ministry of health, so they suggest, "Well, we had no part in the retirement bonuses that, for example, Jack Davis was given, that came into the millions, and the fact that he receives $22,000 a month for the rest of his life." The government claimed that they had no part in the decision of Paddy Meade, who was hired for the superboard, worked barely six months, and then was given two years' worth of compensation.

Where the government positions itself with regard to unnecessary waste of resources, maybe it was necessary, but for Stephen Duckett we'll probably never see the exact details of the settlement that will see him no longer in that position. If it's anything along the lines of what we've seen in previous examples, it'll be a multimillion-dollar settlement.

In terms of unnecessary waste of resources let's look at what happened with the HRG. The HRG was the Health Resources Group that basically bought their operating rooms in the Grace hospital, the best former women's treatment hospital in western Canada. When they picked that up for a song, thanks to the generosity of the former Premier, they were considered the absolute best thing since sliced bread. Talk about a waste of resources. Every operation that was performed at that particular centre came with a 10 per cent premium, and a lot of people don't realize that the doctors who operated in that private facility were public physicians. They were public health care nurses. They performed wonderful service. It was a public service, but they performed it in a much more costly private institution. Now all of a sudden we talk about tossing people under busses, overboard, and things like this. They were tossed.

An Hon. Member: Relevance?

Mr. Chase: The relevance? It's directly related to the unnecessary waste of resources. If we don't learn from the past, how can we avoid that waste of resources in the future? The Health Resources Group fell out of favour. Their contract was cancelled.

In terms of unnecessary waste of resources here in Edmonton all eye surgeries, all cataract surgeries were performed within the public domain. Somebody got the neat notion in terms of unnecessary waste of resources that they would contract out privately to a wonderful physician. I will not impugn his reputation. Dr. Gimbel does absolutely wonderful work, but the point is that the costs of doing the cataract operations in Calgary were considerably higher and, therefore, I say, an unnecessary waste of resources than they were in terms of the publicly delivered surgeries that were done here in Edmonton.

In terms of unnecessary waste of resources we see the Copeman clinic, for example, in Calgary charging individuals $3,000 entry fees, and then they bill the services that they provide, the private services, to the public taxpayer. Mr. Chair, that is another example of an unnecessary waste of resources.

A further example of unnecessary waste of resources is the number of private MRIs. There are bars and private medical facilities giving away MRIs as prizes. Guess what? When those MRIs take place, quite often the bill makes its way back to the public system. In terms of unnecessary waste of resources, as A3 mentions, the hon. doctor, the representative from Calgary-Mountain View, and I had a discussion with a radiologist at a Calgary hospital. I don't want to mention the hospital for fear of retribution such as we've witnessed with the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, but he talked about the unnecessary MRIs . . .

An Hon. Member: Fearmongering.

Mr. Chase: It's not fearmongering, hon. member. It's what happened. Speak up, and see what happens to you.

Now, as I was saying, the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View and I spoke with a radiologist, and he indicated that the old-fashioned medicine of one-on-one, a GP in his office, could frequently diagnose more accurately than an MRI a particular problem. But MRIs became the soup of the day for medical facilities, so what this government has done – it began with laundry services, and it has proceeded to food services. The government, in the false assumption of saving money, has contracted out a whole series of services formerly delivered within the public domain. Each time that happens, the cost to the health system escalates. This idea of competitive health delivery but publicly funded is one of the most colossal wastes of taxpayers' money possible.

In terms of unnecessary waste of resources, in terms of unnecessary delays, in terms of not doing harm to patients, the best service is the service that follows the attributes of universal health care: publicly administered, publicly funded, and the most important part, Mr. Chair – it's something that countries across the world have come to recognize – publicly delivered. The sooner this government stops the flow of funding into private, contracted institutions and supports our health care system through the education of physicians as opposed to the raiding of doctors from South Africa, the sooner we provide training for nurses and then once we have trained them, instead of wasting the resource that we've invested, hire them, the further we'll be ahead.

Also, this government, in terms of not wasting resources but, rather, investing, has to put more investment into general practitioners, family doctors. If we had a family doctor for each Albertan, then the emergency crisis would be solved. In terms of unnecessary waste of resources stop promoting private, for-profit assisted living facilities and promote publicly funded long-term care facilities so that people can get the services they need . . .

The Chair: Hon. member, please take a seat.

Hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, continue on.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Chair.

. . . so they don't end up being labelled as bed blockers and taking up acute-care beds because there is no long-term placement for them or, as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark discussed almost 24 hours ago, the need for improved home care. Unnecessary waste of resources, public first, support the public. Well, actually, public first and public last is the way I would express it in terms of the best utilization of resources.

Mr. Chair, in terms of whether you want to talk about unnecessary delays and harm, the combination is absolutely important to deliver the service. I talked about the necessity of having the right combination in administration, but the right combination at the doctor's office, at the emergency care is absolutely essential. That's part of the triaging effort that this government has to do to prioritize. Now, you can start with the family doctors, or you can go to the emergency facilities and work backwards, but regardless of where you start, you come to the same conclusions: we need better long-term care; we need better home-care support; we need a number of general practitioners; we need a combination of urgent care centres, primary care centres, and delivery through hospitals; we need sufficient beds in the hospitals to provide the different levels of care necessary.

Mr. Chair, the wonderful thing about being in this province is that we still have $8 billion in the sustainability fund . . . [interjection] Unless I've heard wrong. Maybe it's down to only $7 billion. The result is that with proper investment, with proper efficiency in the delivery of public health care, we could improve the system. We have the intelligence. Whether it be in accounting, in health care professionals, we have the intelligence to improve the system, but what is lacking is the will. Because of that lack of will, we have been standing for, I think, fairly close to 20 hours now talking about solutions to the problem.

On previous occasions when I've stood, I have challenged the government to come up with amendments that would help to fix their own legislation. They created it. They should be the best ones in the position to fix it. But this is a team effort; therefore, we're offering opportunities to the government. Amendment A3 is the third offering. Amendment A1, proposed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, questioned accountability. We're talking about accountability. We're talking about guidelines. We're talking about standards. I wish we could move on with the process of creating greater efficiency, as A3 refers to.

Thank you again for this opportunity to speak, Mr. Chair, and if you could re-add me to the list. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It has been a long 12, 13 and a half hours since 7:30. The time has actually flown by. Every time I look across and see the whip's smiling face, it makes me happy that I'm here.

I just want to again go through this. I'm trying to figure this out in my head after 13 and a half hours. We are in the middle . . .

[interjection] Yeah. I wish I could have figured it out in the first half an hour, but it's so completely nonsensical, so completely asinine that I can't figure it out, Mr. Chair, and I need the members opposite to help me. I need them to help me understand. Here is what I need to know. We're debating this amendment that has coffee stains all over it, this one right here. We're debating this amendment from the hon. doctor and MLA for Edmonton-Meadowlark. The man is an emergency room doctor. He was head of the emergency room physicians in Alberta for how long? Years?

Dr. Sherman: A couple of years.

Mr. Anderson: A couple of years, several years. We're sitting in this House debating a motion that he's brought forward, and the government members over there are somehow under the belief that they know better about how to solve our emergency room crisis than the guy sitting in the seat behind me over here, that they just punted from their caucus. So you have the ER doctor, the expert on emergency room care, one of the foremost in the province, and the government kicks him out in the middle of the largest emergency room crisis in this province's history. If that is not the most nonsensical, ignorant thing to do in such a situation, undemocratic as well, I don't know what is. I don't think it's ever been matched. I mean, it is really something else.

9:00

People are suffering. People are dying. We know that; they're dying. It's well documented. The government even agrees. We've talked in this House during question period many times about this, and somehow the government still thinks that after all this, after all the outcry and after all the e-mails and after all of the people phoning in to talk radio shows and mailing their letters to the constituencies and their e-mails and everything, the Twitters, the blogs – everyone is telling the government to listen to this man, to listen to the doctor, the emergency room expert. Yet they still don't. They still just sit there and say: "No. Well, we know better. That's very nice, Edmonton-Meadowlark MLA. That's very nice. We'll pat you on the head, and you go your way. Just, please, don't be around anymore because you're giving us heartburn. You're not conforming to the plan, man. You're not sticking in the caucus."

Mr. Boutilier: Oh. You mean the five-year fable plan?

Mr. Anderson: The five-year plan, whatever that is.

I just for the life of me can't figure it out. He has clearly documented what needs to happen. We need to have an accounting. We need to have a benchmark, and the benchmark is that seriously ill patients will be seen in four hours 95 per cent of the time; for less seriously ill patients in need of urgent care, six hours 95 per cent of the time or better. Those are the benchmarks that have been laid out. He said that we need to do that.

He also goes on to say further in this amendment – and we've talked about it – that the way to accomplish that, of course, is site-based decision-making, giving somebody at the site, at the hospital, the authority to make decisions immediately: if you need to open up a ward, a different ward in the hospital, if you need to bring in some more nurses at the drop of a hat, if you need to open up more beds, if you need to move some seniors that are plugging up acute-care beds safely into a hotel arrangement with a nurse with them for a couple of nights while they get the emergency room under control, whatever it is.

Of course, all this is safe. That's why you have a doctor who would make these decisions. It would all have to be safe. But the point is that someone on-site is given the authority to make those decisions, not some bureaucrats sitting in Edmonton in one of the buildings around the Legislature and 85 vice-presidents who have taken three months to solve an emergency room crisis. How's that an emergency response to an emergency room crisis?

This isn't something like: "Ah, we'll get around to it. You know, it's like building a building. It takes some time. We've got to wait a little bit. We've got to make sure of the cement and that we have the foundation." That's not what we're talking about here. We're talking about people that are dying in emergency rooms and suffering in emergency rooms unnecessarily while rooms are sitting open and beds are sitting unstaffed, and we've got these 12-, 24-, 48-hour wait times. That's what's going on. All it would take would just be a modicum of effort by this government to say: "You know what? Enough is enough. We are going to set these targets. We are going to show leadership. These are the targets we're going to set, and we're going to empower local physicians, local emergency room doctors and nurses to get the job done."

You know what? If we did that, hon. members, the job would get done because I have total confidence in the emergency room physicians and health care professionals that we have in this province. I have total confidence that if we gave them the independence, if we gave them the authority to act, they would act in the best interests of patients because their whole life's work and purpose is to help people. It's to do the right thing, to not get bogged down in the regulations of a heavy-handed superboard bureaucracy that doesn't know what they're doing.

Good grief. We just lost the Cookie Monster CEO that we had. We just lost him. I mean, I remember when we got the health CEO. You remember that, hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek. "Oh, we did a world-wide search for the very best talent. You know, we did all of this." This was the former minister of health. "We did all of this. We put it all in the blender, and after an extensive search, tah-dah, we found the best person possible for this job." And here we go, not more than — what is it? — a little bit of a year later or something like that: gone. Gone because not only was he insensitive and completely inept with, obviously, the media, as we saw, but he wasn't getting the job done.

So we give it to his second-in-command, as if that's going to solve the problem even though he's been involved from day one, Dr. Eagle. I'm not besmirching Dr. Eagle, but the fact is that it's not the personnel. I don't care who you have in the seat at the top of the superboard. It's not going to work until you decentralize decision-making down to the local level. That's the way you do it. That's what everyone is telling us, all the medical professionals: put it back in the hands of people in the community, doctors and nurses and chief medical officers in the hospitals.

Now, going back to the emergency room, because it's going to take some time to repair the entire health system and the damage that the superboard has done and that the previous and current health ministers are doing or have done to this health system, what won't take time, what we could do immediately, today — in fact, we could do this 30 seconds from now. We could sit here and we could pass wait-time targets that set a very clear standard for Alberta patients in emergency rooms.

The government members are saying: well, if we do that for emergency rooms, we need to do it for hip and knee replacements and cancer treatments and all this, and it'll just open up a Pandora's box, and pretty soon we'll have to legislate wait times for everything. Well, I think a lot of Albertans might actually kind of like that, but that's not what we're talking about here. We're just talking about starting with the most basic, fundamental level of health care. The most basic, fundamental level. That's emergency room care.

Everyone in this House, when we have family members that are sick or — you know, everyone has had injuries in their families, to their children. Their mother is sick. Their father is sick. Their grandmother or grandfather, their uncle, their aunt, their spouse, whatever it is, is sick. They have times when they need the emergency room, the health care system to respond now. They can't wait. They can't book an appointment. They can't wait for six months for an MRI or a year and a half for a knee replacement. They can't do it because if they wait more than just a couple of hours or even a few minutes in some cases, they will die. They will die or become permanently maimed, or there will be a tremendous negative outcome that will occur.

This is the one thing where you can't get it wrong. People can wait for MRIs. It's not good. We need to solve that problem. Those waiting lists need to be shortened. Same with hip and knee replacements and cataract treatments and all these different things. We need to shorten the waiting lists. But at the end of the day, if they wait a little bit longer, it ain't gonna kill 'em. It's not good, but they're not going to die from it in almost every case.

The emergency room is different. If you screw up at the emergency room, there's a dead person. It's that simple. [interjection] And there's the health minister laughing at that last comment — unbelievable — laughing at the comment that if you don't get treated right away in an emergency room, you may die. I mean, it's unbelievable. It's like he just doesn't get it at all.

Anyway, whatever the case is, if you don't get the emergency care right, if it's not immediate and right when it's needed, people will die. We've seen that. We've seen it five, six times just in the last few months with the five unnecessary deaths that were reported, but does this government do anything about it? Do they pass legislated wait times in this amendment? No, they don't. They don't do anything.

Do they call in the Alberta Health Quality Council to investigate why a suicidal patient went from one emergency room to another emergency room, asked for counselling and care multiple times, did not receive it? Then right before the individual, whom the hon. doctor knows, hung himself, he asked for a pad of paper and a pen. That didn't raise any flags for anybody. Isn't that something worthy of the Health Quality Council coming in to investigate to make sure there are protocols in place to make sure something like that doesn't happen again in the future, never happens again in the future? It's not about allocating blame. It's about: what the heck happened there? Who didn't get the red flag, or are there not protocols in place at all?

Did this government ask the Health Quality Council? They haven't. We've asked the health minister probably 10 questions, or nine questions, on the Health Quality Council alone. Are you going to bring it in? Are you going to bring them in to investigate the unnecessary deaths? Why aren't you going to do it? Every time: "No. No. We're not going to do it. I'll take it under advisement." Da, da, da, da, da, da. Tap dance, tap dance. Yes, no, maybe so. I mean, it's just absurd. They don't do anything. They have done nothing to address the problem other than hold some meetings at a big centralized bureaucracy, which resulted in a cookie incident which had the CEO fired. I mean, if it wasn't so serious, it would be comical. But the problem is that people are dying. People are dying, and that's what makes it not comical.

All we have to do to get on the road here is pass this amendment, put some basic wait time benchmarks in place, and then make sure you give the authority you need to the front-line staff so that they can move the patients, open up the beds, move things around, make the decisions that need to be done to meet those targets. If they meet the targets, they get paid, and they get to keep their job or they get whatever financial structure is in place, whatever incentive is there. If they don't meet the targets, they don't get it. If they continuously miss the targets, they get fired and you get somebody in there who can do it. That's what this is about. It's about legislating accountability because there is none in the system right now, none, absolutely zero accountability in the system right now.

We don't even know who's in charge. Who fired Dr. Duckett yesterday? I mean, was it Chairman Hughes? Was it the minister of health? Was it the former minister of health? Was it the Premier? Was it his chief of staff? Who is running health care in this province? Does anybody have any clue over there on the other bench what the heck is going on in our health care system? That's what I want to know because I don't think they do. Every time something bad happens: oh, that's AHS's fault. Every time something good happens: that's all us, guys. Every time that there's confusion, they just look confused and they confuse the doctors.

Staff morale is at all-time lows on the front lines, and these issues are going to take forever to solve. One thing we can – again, I keep going back to it because the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark keeps going back to it over and over again. We've been here 18 hours. What have we been? Three o'clock. I don't know; 16 hours or something like that we've been here, 16 hours, 18 hours, something like that. Here we are for 18 hours trying to point out that all this government needs to do to get going in the right direction is to listen to the emergency room doctor in the House, the head, not just any emergency room doctor.

It's not like this is a newbie, you know. Oh, it's a guy cutting his teeth. It's a new emergency doctor: no, no, no. It's not a new emergency doctor. It's the former head of the emergency room doctors in all of Alberta, one of the brightest minds in the entire province, a guy who understands health care, specifically emergency room care, better than anybody in this House and anyone in their bureaucracy could ever dream of understanding the health care system, and they kick him out. Gone. For what? For advocating for sick patients, for advocating for people who are dying and who are suffering.

"Oh, but that's not why we kicked him out," the other side said. We kicked him out because he hurt the former minister of health's feelings. He said something that hurt the man's feelings, and therefore he's got to retract that statement and apologize, and then he can come out.

Even though everyone in the province knows full well that many of the problems in the health care system started to occur, started to go down hill at an accelerated pace – it's not solely his responsibility, but squarely he was part of the problem, the former minister of health. No doubt about it, he is the one that got this. He did nothing about this mess. We knew about it in 2008. The e-mail was sent in 2008. The man did nothing. Now, I'm not saying he wanted to hurt people. Of course not. But I am saying that he didn't know what he was doing, and he did the wrong thing.

If you look at the new minister of health, he has had a chance to do the right thing, and he hasn't. He has diddled and daddled and dithered and done nothing, and that is not appropriate.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Point of order.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness on a point of order.

Point of Order Factual Accuracy

Mr. Zwozdesky: Yes. I want to cite Beauchesne 459. I also want to cite 23(h), (i), and (j) out of our own standing orders. Citation 459, as we would all know, is about relevance or, as the case may be, irrelevance. However, I want to talk about imputing false motives. It is simply incorrect for this hon. member to stand there and have the nerve to try and even convince his own caucus colleagues there that this minister, myself, has done nothing to help address this matter, so let's set the record a little bit clear here, Mr. Chair.

Upon getting an e-mail from Dr. Paul Parks on the Thanksgiving Day weekend, immediately I responded to him, immediately we set up a time to meet, immediately we put in place an action plan, and we are now delivering on that action plan. I can go on, Mr. Chairman, but I would simply ask you to remind the member that what he has said here is false. It is incorrect. I would ask him to please retract those comments, which he knows are not accurate.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere on this point of order.

Mr. Anderson: On the point of order. The hon. health minister is going to have to show me the record where I said anything that was untrue. I did not say that you received the document in 2008. I said that his office had the document, the former health minister, in 2008. I said nothing untrue.

I know you just got here. You can spin it all you want, but you obviously weren't listening. Until I see the document, sir, that is not what I said. Clearly, that is not what I said. I said that the former minister of health, while he was there, knew about it in 2008, had the document in his possession and did nothing about it. This individual here, the current minister of health, has done nothing about it since.

I didn't say anything about when he got the e-mail. I didn't say anything about that. Okay? There is no point of order.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Chair, he said that the current minister, that being me, did nothing about it, and that's the part that's not true. I'm not going to comment about stuff he said about the past. I'm talking about his reference to me as the current minister. I'm sure I heard him correctly saying that I have done nothing about it. I want the record to show clearly that I have done something about it. Not only that, but I did it immediately, within 24 hours, as I recall.

Mr. Anderson: We will let the people decide.

The Chair: On this point of order.

Mr. Anderson: No. I'm done with the point of order. I'm done with the point of order. I'm done with the point of order. Edmonton-Meadowlark would like to speak on the point of order.

The Chair: On the point of order, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I have to say that since I made the commitment to go back to the front lines, it's nice doing a night shift all over again. This feels like the emergency room.

On the point of order I think we're talking about semantics. The current minister of health did immediately call Dr. Paul Parks. I have the e-mail. He did his best. He did the right thing. He did the right thing as minister, but the right thing wasn't done for health care. I'll tell you. I sat with Jody yesterday in an emergency department. He did the right thing as a minister, but on the front lines, how things translate onto the street – This is the advantage I have.

The Chair: Hon. member, on the point of order.

Dr. Sherman: It is on this point of order. It is. I was paired up with him to help him and teach him what was happening on the street. He teaches me policy and politics, and I teach him this. On the street nothing has changed. ER departments are all on yellow alert. The flu hasn't hit. There was only one bed that was available, a resuscitation bed, all day yesterday. It was a delivery problem.

The Chair: Please get to the point of order.

The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere on the point of order.

Mr. Anderson: No, no. I'm done with the point of order. Are you done with the point of order?

9:20

The Chair: So there's nobody else who wishes to talk on the point of order?

After listening, the chair rules that there is a point of order. I would love to see the hon. member retract the statement that the current minister of health did nothing. I heard that, so please just retract that.

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Chair, based on what evidence?

The Chair: I heard both times.

Mr. Anderson: No, no. That's fine. I just need to know for clarification purposes, 13(2). I need to understand what exactly you would like me to retract, the quote. Can you give me the quote from the Blues? If you can do that, if we can get that, I would be happy to retract any untrue statement that I said, but I would like to see the actual quote before I retract something. Okay? Is that fair? So we can retract it later on, but I would like to see the exact wording that I need to retract because it's unclear. I think that's a fair thing.

The Chair: The chair clearly heard that. The words that the chair heard were that the current minister of health did nothing. Those are the words that I heard. So I call on the member to just retract that statement.

Mr. Anderson: Fair enough. Fair enough. Anything that I said that said that he has done nothing, I retract that. Okay?

So I will change the words and say that what he did was completely and totally in no way enough, absolutely did not solve the problem and has not in any way made Albertans safer. That I will not retract because that's the truth.

He might have done something. I retract any untrue statement. He obviously did something.

The Chair: Hon. member, please sit down. I already asked the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere to retract saying that the minister did nothing. He has retracted that statement.

Mr. Zwozdesky: I accept the member's retraction.

The Chair: Shall we proceed?

Mr. Zwozdesky: I would like to do that. I know that we don't call points of order on points of order, but if he continues down this line, then I will have to rise on that point as well. Just so that the member is advised.

The Chair: So continue, hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, on amendment A3. Let's focus on the amendment. Then we'll have no points of order.

Debate Continued

Mr. Anderson: Okay. Fair enough. On the amendment. Absolutely.

We've been here, Mr. Chair, and we're debating this amendment. I will tell you that this minister has not done enough. If this current minister was serious at all about fixing this health care system, he would stand up right now in support of this amendment. That's what he would do. He wouldn't complain and talk about points of order. He would stand up and say: "You know what? We're going to legislate some standards in this province, and we're going to make sure to put all of the resources that we need and give all of the authority needed to allow the front-line staff to get the job done." And he hasn't done that yet. In my opinion, he hasn't done it, and in the doctor from Edmonton-Meadowlark's opinion and in Albertans' opinion, generally, from all the e-mails, he hasn't done enough. I think, in my opinion, that he has dithered, that he has done nothing substantive to solve the issue.

The Chair: Hon. member, we are debating amendment A3, not about the hon. minister.

Point of Order Factual Accuracy

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Chair, I'm going to raise another point of order. If the member wishes to waste the House's time in this fashion by continuing on with innuendoes under 23(h), (i), and (j), then we will be here forever on points of order. [interjection] Please, I have the floor here.

It is simply inaccurate for him to say that nothing was done or that insufficient amounts of things were done when the member knows full well that a lot has been done. I have stood in this House and answered questions in question period and participated in the debate, and I have said that we have opened more beds. Let me recount this stuff now so that they get it right. We're opening 1,430 more beds. We've already opened 800. That's already done. We've got a new discharge protocol. We had a meeting on Friday, November 20. I could go on with a number of things that have been done. So it's inaccurate for them to be making these false accusations.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness has raised a point of order. [interjections] Hon. members, one member stand up and speak at a time. The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo stood up first. Please, sit down, hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Chair, I find this interesting . . . [interjections]

The Chair: The hon. member has the floor.

Mr. Boutilier: Yeah. Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for graciously allowing me to participate in the point of order that the hon. minister of health has raised, but this is not a point of order. I heard very distinctly what was said. He said words like "dither"; he had said words like "do nothing" relative to not enough. He actually retracted earlier, which you accepted as the chair when he said that, clearly, it was not enough. In fact, then the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark very astutely stood up and said that it wasn't that the minister of health hadn't done anything; it just happened that nothing got done. The Wildrose looks for outcomes.

Then, Mr. Chairman, on the point of order the minister of health said that he's answered questions in here. I will table in here under the point of order how the questions that he thinks he answered really were not answered. Albertans have talked to us. I'm talking about thousands of seniors that said to me: why doesn't the minister of health ever answer a question? So I offer that, that there is no point of order.

The Chair: Hon. members, on the point of order I think I've heard enough. [interjection] Hon. member, let the chair do his duty here and rule on this. First of all, when the two members talked, that's a matter of the opinions of the two of each other. If we focus on the subject matter, which is amendment A3, rather than on individuals, then we proceed on the proper work of our Legislative Assembly. From this moment on I will call on all hon. members to stay on the subject matter.

Proceed, hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, on the subject.

Point of Order Parliamentary Language

Mr. Denis: Point of order. I have another point of order dealing with the decorum of this House. Mr. Chairman, I just heard the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere refer to me as a joke in his heckling, and I would ask that he please withdraw these comments as they're clearly unparliamentary.

The Chair: On this point of order.

Mr. Anderson: Is he serious? Is that a serious point of order? Is that a serious point of order, Mr. Chair? You're actually going to allow him to call a point of order. Well, with the amount of heckling that goes back . . .

The Chair: The hon. member stood up and spoke on a point of order, so the hon. member now has the floor to reply on the point of order.

Mr. Anderson: I clearly thought that the man, by standing up and making a point of order, was making a joke, so I was just clearly pointing out that I thought he was making a joke. Obviously, he wasn't making a joke. So what are we talking about here? This is a point of order? This is what this has come to?

The Chair: Okay. The chair heard the point of order and heard the response. Let the chair rule on it here. Okay? Please sit down, hon. member. First of all, the comment is not recorded, right? In the Assembly the comments overheard here and there are not part of the record. Two, I want emphasize again: hon. member, stay on the subject matter. We are talking about amendment A3. If you read amendment A3, you know what it is. Please don't impute motives on each other.

Thank you very much.

Shall we proceed on amendment A3, hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere?

Mr. Kang: Mr. Chairman, what is the point of order about? Why don't we deal with the point of order?

The Chair: The chair already ruled on that, so please sit down.

We'll continue with amendment A3. Please refer to amendment A3, read it properly, and debate on that.

Thank you.

Hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, continue on amendment A3.

Mr. Anderson: They're not big fans of hearing things that they don't like. They don't really like that.

9:30

Mr. Anderson: What is contained in this bill is an amendment asking the health charter to include wait time guarantees, legislated wait time guarantees. These legislated wait time guarantees: Mr. Chair, this is the focus here. We've got the wait time guarantees right here. I'm saying that that health minister, by not implementing this piece of paper right here and not agreeing to it, is not doing enough or, in my view, is doing nothing that will help Albertans resolve this ER crisis. That is my opinion. Okay? That's my opinion. I know that's hard for the health minister to understand, but that is my opinion. All right?

When I say that he's doing nothing, what I mean by that is that my opinion is that he's doing nothing because I don't see any results. I don't see this document being passed. That's very frustrating for people who are dying and waiting in emergency rooms. It's really funny for some of the members over there with the smiles on their faces. They get really happy when they call points of order. But I think Albertans want to know why they haven't passed these wait time guarantees. Why are they sitting there just doing nothing about this piece of paper here legislating the wait time guarantees? Why won't they act?

The health minister has clearly met with people. He has met with people lots. But that's not enough, sir. That's not enough for Albertans. We need that health minister to stand up and support this piece of paper, get some benchmarks – that's what this piece of paper calls for – benchmarks for waiting times in our emergency rooms. Once those benchmarks are in place, we will be a whole lot safer in this province, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for St. Albert according to my list.

Mr. Allred: Well, good morning, Mr. Chair. It's nice to see everybody so bright and chipper this morning. Yesterday I indicated that I was inclined to support this amendment, and since then I've had a pretty good discussion with the minister of health, who is very accommodating, I must say, and provided me with a lot of background information and a lot of projections on the future.

There's been some discussion about the hon. minister dithering and doing nothing. I have to disagree with that. I find the minister has been very responsive. I've had the occasion to meet with him on a number of issues over the last several months, and I've always found him to be very accommodating despite his very busy schedule. I have the utmost respect for him. I've observed his actions over the last eight or nine months – I don't know how many months it's been – and I must say that I've got a lot of admiration for the minister of health. I think he is doing an excellent job in trying his best to bring some accountability and to get the system working.

Mr. Chair, we had a very detailed discussion about the amendment. The minister expressed his concerns to me, and I must admit that I share some of those concerns. In sub (c) it says: "include as guiding principles that no unnecessary deaths, no unnecessary harm to patients, no unnecessary delays in care and no unnecessary waste of resources should occur." The hon. minister expresses concern: what does "unnecessary" mean? I must say that it's pretty difficult to define. What is an unnecessary death? I would have to say that every death is unnecessary. Those are certainly some of his concerns.

Under (d) he has a concern. I will read it:

Set standards for lengths of stay in the emergency departments of hospitals consistent with the "Position Statement on Emergency Department Overcrowding" published by the Canadian Association of Emergency Physicians and dated February 2007.

I don't think he has any concern with the first part of it, setting standards for length of stay in the emergency departments of hospitals. The latter part he has a difficulty with. He has expressed a difficulty to me, in any event.

We have a lot of different standards. We have the Alberta health council. I believe we have a national hospital accreditation board, all of these different standards. I guess the concern that he expressed to me is that, really, we're just talking about the Canadian Association of Emergency Physicians' standards. We need to be looking at a standard that perhaps we need to create based on our circumstances here, but it must be a realistic standard, and it must be a very aggressive standard.

In thinking a little bit further about this, this is only addressing emergency room standards. I think we need a broader set of standards, and I would really like to see the minister come back with a different amendment, relating to broader standards for the whole health care system as opposed to just picking on the crisis of the week. I think we need to look at a broader set of standards that address all of the different aspects of health care. Maybe we have them through the Alberta health council. I don't know the details.

Mr. Chair, the minister did share some statistics and some projections with me on emergency room standards. Last year the percentage of cases being admitted within eight hours was only 28 per cent. Well, that, in my opinion, is abysmal. The projections – and they're projections – are to rise from 45 per cent on up to 90 per cent four, five years out. That's great, but those are projections. I guess the whole intent of amendment A3 is to set some accountability standards. For that reason and for the reason that I have the utmost respect for the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, I'm going to continue to support this amendment.

I'm sure this amendment is not going to pass, but I would hope that there is a message in this amendment and that the minister will come back with perhaps something a little more definitive, something a little broader, something that he can live with, something that is very clear and doesn't have some of those unnecessary words like "unnecessary" that are somewhat meaningless.

Mr. Chair, with that said, I'd just like to reaffirm that I think the hon. minister of health has been very receptive and is doing his utmost to try and improve this system. Based on the size of the system, it's a very difficult thing to turn around. We do need to set some standards, and we need to have some accountability in the system.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. Mr. Chair, you're in a rather unenviable position. You're being called upon to be a referee, to assume the wisdom, the authority provided to you as a result of the position you've been elected to perform.

Very briefly, in speaking to A3 and some of the conflict it's called up, I don't want to come across as sounding holier than thou or delivering a lecture, but a standard principle is that for respect to be earned, it has to first be given. In order for us to get past pettiness, we have to focus, as you've indicated, on A3. We have to move forward, come up with suggestions, debate the suggestions that we have received. Whether or not a person is called on a point of order because they happen to know where the insult was coming from or if an insult was not necessarily intended but perceived, we have to get past that.

When I came in at 5 o'clock this morning, I talked about too much testosterone. We have to realize that we're here to come up with solutions, and anything that prevents us from doing that is a waste of time. Points of order should not need to be called because the conditions that arose that required them in people's minds should not exist. If there was sufficient attention being paid to the debate, that would also speed up the process.

In referencing amendment A3, I want to talk about section (c), where it talks about: "include as guiding principles that . . . no unnecessary harm to patients" occurs. Speaking specifically to that clause of the amendment, I want to bring forward Dr. Louis Francescutti, an individual who is a colleague of the representative from Edmonton-Meadowlark. He's the president of the Royal College of Physicians and Surgeons of Canada. Dr. Louis Francescutti, because he's a front-line individual, has seen unnecessary harm to patients, and he has indicated in numerous articles – and he has spoken of it – that the way to prevent unnecessary harm to patients is not to have them show up in emergency as patients.

One of the areas that he's championed, for example, Mr. Chair, that would prevent unnecessary harm to patients is helmets for ATV users. We've had in the last year almost 20 deaths. The majority of those deaths have been children. Those are the individuals who show up before members like the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark or Dr. Francescutti. If we legislated sufficient safety items such as helmets for ATVs, as we have done with helmets for motorcycles, as we have done with seatbelts and, most recently with Bill 16, as we have gotten rid of hand-held cellphone usage, then these people would not show up as patients and would not be subjected to unnecessary harm because they wouldn't be there in the first place.

Now, with regard to A3 and unnecessary harm to patients, Dr. Francescutti has put forward his concerns regarding the fact that this Legislature did not go farther on Bill 16, for example, to include hands-free cellphone usage to prevent people from showing up in his emergency room. He indicated and several studies have indicated that it's the mental interaction of a discussion on a hands-free cellphone that is most likely to cause the accident as opposed to the physical nature of just simply holding the phone. We need to recognize as much as possible safety issues that are going to prevent people from ending up in emergency in the first place. I think the distracted driving legislation, Bill 16, is going to go a long way in that direction.

Now, I want to commend the hon. Member for St. Albert in supporting amendment A3 and seeking from his government colleagues a broader set of standards, concrete timelines. He also to his credit recognized that the chances of this amendment being accepted by his colleagues was very slight. However, when the vote does occur, I hope that he is sufficiently recovered from his hours of service in this debate to be able to stand up and follow through with his concerns over the support necessary for this amendment.

Mr. Chair, we can make the changes that would improve the conditions in health care in general. The hon. Member for St. Albert felt that strictly focusing on the emergency room was limiting the debate. He felt that it was possibly too focused. Well, you've got to start somewhere. Based on the sequence of events that have unfolded this week with the emergency doctor from Edmonton-Meadowlark being fired, it brings to a head the specific concerns that A3 raises, and that's emergency care. I appreciate the fact that the hon. Member for St. Albert challenged his colleagues to come forward with amendments to improve Bill 17.

I would like to hear from members of the government as to where they would go from Bill 17. If Bill 17 is the foundation, if Bill 17 is the starting point, I think it would provide Albertans with a degree of comfort to know what the next proposed step is because we have indicated, as the hon. Member for St. Albert inferred, that this first step isn't sufficient.

So the health minister – I appreciate the difficult position he's been placed in. Part of the problem that we're facing, Mr. Chair, is the revolving ministerial doors. You know the expression of not changing horses in mid-stream. Part of the problem is that we haven't had a minister on the job long enough to see the problem through. I appreciate the efforts that a variety of ministers have had with regard to working on the problem, but as has been stated numerous times over the last number of hours, the problems have yet to be solved.

If any members of the government or any members of the opposition have positive suggestions such as amendment A3, if the wisdom of the majority does not believe that A3 is the vehicle to take us to where we need to go, then I would call upon members of the government or members of the opposition or our independent member to put forward other suggestions, if necessary, during the debate on A3. What could members suggest that would fulfill these requirements of no unnecessary deaths, no unnecessary harm to patients, no unnecessary delays in care, no unnecessary waste of resources? If you have ideas that would augment A3 or if you feel that A3 should be replaced with something more broad or more conclusive, then I would look forward to hearing that.

I would like to see the level of the debate raised. Again, I hope that's not being considered personal conceit on my part. It's a desire for the best possible intellectual considerations to be brought to this argument. Health care at this point in Alberta is not at the level it needs to be. Let's talk about how we can move it further.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I welcome the opportunity to join into the debate again. I heard the hon. member across the way say that he would like to hear from government members on a few points, and fair enough. What I want to do in responding partly to that, hon. member, while also addressing this amendment is to make a few comments with respect to the amendment itself, starting with the request that we put in as guiding principles "that no unnecessary deaths, no unnecessary harm to patients, no unnecessary delays in care and no unnecessary waste of resources should occur."

9:50

I want to assure members here that I, too, know something about the health system. Although I've not ever worked in it, I have visited enough facilities now. I have spoken with enough doctors now and nurses and other health caregivers as well as hospital administrators and other people who do work in the system and have passed on their wisdom, their knowledge, the benefit of their experience for me to consider.

So I look at this, and I say that it's a given that there should be no unnecessary deaths. I mean, this is a given thing that the doctors, the nurses, and everybody in the system is pledged to ensure does not occur. Unfortunately, it does occur in hospitals around the world, Mr. Chairman, and there are things that we can do to help prevent it in the same way that we can help prevent the unfortunate syringe incident that occurred in High Prairie and the unfortunate syringe incident that occurred in Hinton. I hesitate to raise those, but I do to make the point that on occasion there will be human error with respect to some of those administrative protocols.

But for us to have to say that there has to be a definition here included as a guiding principle or whatever is absolutely unnecessary in my viewpoint. We shall not cause "unnecessary harm to patients." Well, I don't think there is anybody who is intentionally creating unnecessary harm. Sometimes you have to have a needle; that's a little bit of harm. But that's not how it's intended, I'm sure.

Now, the point here that "no unnecessary waste of resources should occur." I fully agree with that. I thanked the hon. member for mentioning that yesterday, and I'll thank him again for pointing it out. I fully agree that there shouldn't be any unnecessary waste of resources. That's why we have the specific action plan coming forward that addresses all of these areas of access to care and the quality of care and the sustainability of our health system. Sustainability is right in our action plan, and it talks about exactly this. Of course, there won't be any waste of resources in a perfect world. Now, once in a while that might inadvertently occur. I wouldn't call it a waste; maybe it's an overexpenditure or something like that. Every cent in health care goes toward health care in one fashion or another.

The other point that I want to comment on is, again, setting standards for the lengths of stay in emergency departments of hospitals that would be consistent with the overcrowding protocol published by the Canadian association. I have no problem with abiding by or adhering to those kinds of lengths of stay standards, but I think we should have them across the entire health system. Putting them into policy, which is where I think they belong, and putting them into performance measures, which is where I think they belong, is the better way to go. You cannot start legislating every single aspect of any department, including Health, including Education, including Environment. You would have legislation that you couldn't ever carry in a truck if you were to start doing that.

I don't want to diminish from the importance of what the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark has brought forward because he has brought forward some valid issues here. That's why we're going to come forward with a form of support for the member and for all Albertans and for all the docs with our performance measures.

Now, let me talk about what those performance measures would be because it is exactly what this amendment would talk about. I'm telling you that it's already under way, and I've said this for a few weeks already. I will apologize that they're not out sooner because possibly that would have taken away the need for this. Nonetheless, they are there, and I'm going to share a few of my thoughts in that respect.

We need some performance measures not only with respect to emergency rooms; we need performance measures that are accountable for and hold us up to a very high standard in the province and across Canada, for that matter. With regard to, for example, population health, we know that improving population health is extremely important to people. That's why I'm hosting Alberta's first-ever wellness forum on December 1, 2, and 3, to talk about how we can improve population health, to talk about how we can improve health outcomes. How can we help people from needing to go to emergency in the first place? Can we do a better job of that? Yes, I'm sure we can, and I'm sure that we also will.

In that respect, over the next few years I know that we're going to put an expectation on the system that would rival any benchmarks people want to set. In this particular case – you know what, Mr. Chairman? – we haven't yet seen a national benchmark, but we will set one ourselves. We would say that we want life expectancy to increase in a manner that is consistent with the overall Canadian average, but specific to Alberta we will have the goal of being above whatever national average might be forthcoming.

Similarly, we have expectations that there will be improvements for increased life expectancy amongst First Nations populations. That's an important performance measure. That, too, will occur.

We want performance measures with respect to primary health care. That is another way of saying we're setting standards and other targets pertaining to this important area. We know that the rates of hospital admissions for health conditions need to be managed. They need to be improved. I can tell you that the national benchmark is about 320. That's the rate of hospital admissions for health conditions that may be prevented or managed by appropriate primary health care. In Alberta we're going to come out with a target that's better than that. So why would you tie yourself through legislation to something that is outside or beyond our own control when we can do better than that? Why can't we do better than that? We can do better than that. That is the correct thing to do, to strive to be better than the national average.

We're doing the same thing with respect to the percentage of emergency department or urgent care visits for health conditions that can be appropriately managed in a physician's office. We're doing a performance measure in that respect.

We're doing the same thing with respect to continuing care, Mr. Chairman. We're talking about the number of persons that are waiting in an acute-care bed or a subacute hospital bed for continuing care.

I've had numerous discussions with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, who has been a guiding light for me in this respect. He has helped me with a lot of information. That's why we've ensured that the thrust of what the hon. member has in mind with this amendment is going to be included in the performance measures. We've already done all that work.

Had we not been distracted by a few recent events, we would have had this all out already, Mr. Chairman. I deeply regret that we were taken off that path because of a few unfortunate events that occurred. Everybody knows very well what I'm talking about, so I won't go on about that.

I think it's important that we have a performance measure that tells us what is an acceptable number of people that might have to be waiting for community care, and we're going to have that as well, even though there is no national benchmark that I'm aware of for that.

So why would you tie yourself to something published by the Canadian Association of Emergency Physicians such as this amendment calls for when we should have something that pertains to Alberta? Let's talk about Alberta. Occasionally we'll measure ourselves against the national standards, the national benchmarks, and I'm fine with that. I'm simply telling members here that we are already doing this and there will be more to be done about it.

We will be talking about average lengths of stay for patients waiting in acute care or subacute hospital beds for continuing care, about patients waiting for long-term care facility placement. We have some work to do in these areas, but those performance measures have to come. [interjections]

You know what, Mr. Chairman? It would be nice if we had a little decorum in the House. Thank you.

The Chair: The minister has the floor, please.

Mr. Zwozdesky: What I'm talking about here is that it's important that we not only talk about lengths of stay in emergency departments, but let's talk about faster access to places where people would have stay provisions such as designated assisted living beds or supportive living beds or long-term care beds or whatever form of stay they might have. Let's talk about the number of home-care clients by client type. Let's talk about that in terms of this amendment and why this amendment is just not possible to bring in.

The spirit of it is correct. I know the member has his heart in the right place. I know that, and I just want to give him assurances that while he's no longer sitting with us, for the time being at least – I mean, I'm hopeful that something will be worked out; we'll see how that goes. I want him to know that even though he's not here and having this discussion on a daily basis with me like we once used to have, there is action being taken that will satisfy what I think the hon. member has in mind here. I just want to assure him that that is being done. We've always spoken at a high level of respect with and for each other, and I hope we can continue doing that.

Home care is . . . [interjections] Could I ask for decorum again, Mr. Chairman?

The Chair: Hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, please.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you.

We have to talk about home care in terms of improving that. That's why Alberta Health Services has just increased their home-care budget by another 7 per cent, to ensure that. They're going to have over $400 million dedicated to home care.

Now, what are they going to do with that money? I want to tell you. First of all, they are going to increase the funding to increase the services, to increase some of the staff positions, and so on. That will give people more home-care expertise, more home-care service, more home-care programs, more home-care advice and help and support. [interjection] Could I ask for decorum again, Mr. Chair, please?

10:00

The Chair: The hon. minister has the floor. Hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, please sit down and be calm.

The hon. minister.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I want to tie it back together with what I started to say a few sentences ago, and that is that we have to set standards not only for what this amendment calls for in terms of lengths of stay in emergency departments, but you have to look at standards in many other areas that might need improvement. I have already said that there are many aspects that do need improvement, and we're working on that. But for events of recent days we would have been past this and moving forward.

With respect to home care there are also pilot projects going on right now where people who are specialists in the provision of home-care services are right in the emergency departments, right there helping people who are on home care and who have come into hospital for some emergency care and/or have come into the emergency ward and will need home care in follow-up. We have somebody from home care on a couple of pilot projects to see how this can work, a home-care type co-ordinator who will ensure that when that patient is discharged back to the home, the services they need are there, that they are in place so that that person will not be one of the statistical readmits. I know the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark would know exactly what I'm talking about even though perhaps a few others might not so sharply know. That is the truth.

We're talking about lengths of stay, that are important in other areas. We're talking about performance measures with respect to acute care. We're looking at how we can reduce the wait time for surgical procedures, not just what the amendment calls for, which is about emergency department lengths of stay. I'm making the point, Mr. Chair, that it's not just about picking one or two spots. I'm personally very sensitive to the emergency room issues because I was taught and trained somewhat myself what to look for by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, and those are valuable lessons. I want to go down on record thanking him for that. I did learn a lot travelling the province with him. I have the utmost respect for his knowledge in this area, and he's taught me what to look for in terms of lengths of stay and how I can help influence better and improved standards in that respect, which is what the amendment talks about. So we're going to do that but not just in emergency care.

At this point, Mr. Chairman, I want you to know that we are looking at a better way to reduce the wait time for surgical procedures. We want to look at province-wide access to surgeries in a different way. We know that the national benchmark might be about two weeks. We also know that last year we were a little bit above that; we were at 2.4 weeks. But we need new targets, and our new targets are going to be better than the national average. I don't want to tie ourselves to a third-party type document here, as good as it might be, hon. member. I want our own plan going forward, that is better wherever possible than the national averages issued, put out by some national bodies. That's no disrespect to those national bodies. They have a place to put their information forward. They set a national benchmark, and it's a good one to aspire to. I'm simply saying that I think we can do better than that. We can do better than that in a number of areas.

We can talk about scheduled surgeries. We can talk about cataract surgeries. The maximum time that 9 out of 10 people should wait for a cataract surgery will of course be heavily influenced, as it should be, by the cataract surgeons, the ophthalmologists. Let's talk about the wait time for knee replacements. There are simply lineups here that are too long for hip and knee replacements. We're working on new performance targets now that we have a five-year funding commitment, an unprecedented commitment, Mr. Chair, that will help us set standards, which is exactly what this particular amendment talks about.

I'm very supportive of doing that. I'm just not supportive of putting that into law because that's not where it belongs. It belongs in an accountability document called performance measures and action plans. [interjections] I wonder if I could call for decorum again, Mr. Chair. Just too many interruptions coming from the Alliance side of the House.

The Chair: Hon. members, the minister has the floor. Please, I'd like to listen.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much. Now, one other thing I want to mention, and I know the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark will appreciate this because we've had many discussions about it, the passion that he has shown to me and the passion that I share with him with respect to two very important parts that tie in with emergency wait times or lengths of stay in emergency departments such as this amendment refers to.

One has to do with the four-hour protocol. There is a target that says that we have to examine: how long is an acceptable length of time, all things being equal here? Let's not get carried away or sidetracked by the severity of someone's health condition in an emergency visit. The point is that for people who have what you might call a minor reason for being in an emergency department visit situation, what is the acceptable length of time they should have to wait?

The protocol that we're working on is to say that the percentage for patients treated and discharged from the emergency department without needing an overnight bed, obviously, would be four hours. I think the hon. member would agree that that is something that we should be aspiring to. I'm not aware of any specific national benchmark that has been identified yet. We're saying that last year's percentages need to be improved upon. We're saying that we have to have a more aggressive approach to this to ensure that we're closer to that four-hour wait time target.

The same thing can be said with regard to the eight-hour wait time target. The eight-hour wait time target talks about the number of patients that are in an emergency room inside the beds. They're involved in a length of stay, and they will need an overnight bed. We're talking about an eight-hour protocol.

What is the acceptable length of time that a person should be spending if they have a very complicated, a life-threatening, a critical type of emergency situation and they're in a space in an emergency room? The common parlance says that it shouldn't be longer than eight hours from the moment they come in, are triaged, are diagnosed, are treated, a bed placement is made, and they are moved out of the emergency into some other part of the hospital, be that into an acute-care bed or a medical assessment unit or a medical observation unit bed or whatever. Eight hours is the target to move them out of emergency, if that's what their complexity is, into another part of the hospital. That is a length of stay target that is coming in these performance measures, and we will have a chance to discuss and debate that further, I'm sure.

The last point I want to make in that respect, Mr. Chairman, is with respect to: which sites? I've had numerous discussions with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, and I agree with him that it is not enough to simply aggregate the numbers. It's important to have an aggregate number of the busiest 15 or 16 sites – I'm sure the member would agree – but it's more important to have it on a per site basis, and that's what we're going to have. You might have to have slightly different targets, depending on where in the province that length of stay is occurring and in which hospital and so on. In some of our rural acute-care hospital facilities there are little or few or no lineups that way. In our urban centres, where we have thousands, hundreds of thousands, if not over a million people in the catchment area, then we have to look at what kind of an acceptable wait time is okay in those cases.

We've seen aggregations, for example in the Edmonton area, of eight hospital sites. In Calgary it's more specific to Calgary itself, not metro but just Calgary. In Edmonton we talk about performance measures aggregating Sturgeon community hospital in St. Albert, which I've talked about with the hon. Member for St. Albert. He's very passionate about improvements that need to happen there. I'll be visiting that hospital with him very soon, and we'll talk about these lengths of stay, hon. member, the same way that you and I have talked about them before because I know you're a strong advocate for that.

We talk about lengths of stay in other locations such as Stony Plain, such as Leduc, such as Fort Saskatchewan and the major sites in Edmonton. About seven or eight are aggregated there. I've given my undertaking and my sincere promise and commitment to Edmonton-Meadowlark that we will make those improvements.

The Chair: Now the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo has an opportunity to speak here. Stay on the subject matter, amendment A3. Thank you.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I listened very intently to what the minister of health had indicated. I do know that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek is trying to do his level best, but I believe there have been some contradictions. He complimented – he complimented – the only ER doctor in this Assembly, who has been a parliamentary secretary, but I have to say that it's my observation that the minister of health was not listening. That's my observation.

10:10

Why do I say that? He speaks here about a shining light that the Edmonton-Meadowlark doctor brings, but I have to say relative to this amendment that he doesn't defend him when he gets kicked out of the caucus. He actually then – I find this ironic – says all the great things that are going on, but, Mr. Chairman, when it comes to the amendment . . .

The Chair: Hon. member, please. I keep reminding you about the amendment, the substance of the amendment, not about individuals.

Mr. Boutilier: Yeah. On the amendment, Mr. Chairman, one would think from the words that I have here in the Blues that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek would be supporting the amendment. But we have to judge not by words. We have to judge by actions. I will be watching closely to see that this minister stands and supports the amendment that's being put forward by the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. It will give me great joy to see him stand, but only time will tell over the next while if he stands and if he has the courage to stand for the betterment of our citizens.

Mr. Chairman, it's important to note that there is talk about lawsuits relative to this amendment under Bill 17, the Alberta Health Act. It says that it's amended in section 2(2) by striking out "and" at the end of clause (a) and by adding the following after clause (b). It talks about "guiding principles," "no unnecessary deaths" – no one would like to see that – but it's important to note that talk about lawsuits. This is a futile argument. Amendment A3 would add a definition, and I know the minister of health must be aware of that. I cannot understand why he would not want to support this particular amendment.

Amendment A3 would add a definition to section 2, the health charter. It would say that the health charter must, and the following sections deal with the actionability of the health charter. For instance, under subsection (3) a failure of a person to act in a manner consistent with the Health Charter may be dealt with by the Health Advocate in accordance with sections 4 and 5 or by the Minister under section 8 or 9.

Also, under section (4)

a failure of a person to act in a manner that is consistent with the Health Charter does not in itself give rise to

- (a) a cause of action or other legal enforceable claim, or
- (b) proceedings in any court or before any body or person having the power to make decisions under an enactment.

Then, finally, under section (5), all intended in this amendment, Mr. Chairman, the Minister shall, subject to the regulations, review the Health Charter at least once every 5 years.

Now, Mr. Chairman, one would think by what we heard from the minister of health that he would be the first to stand to be supporting the doctor, the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, but at the end of the day he spoke in this very Assembly saying that he's not going to support the amendment. So here are the words, but here is the action. I can only judge – and the people of Alberta will not judge on words. They will judge on action. I would only suggest that the minister of health guide himself accordingly when it comes to what you say versus what you do.

In my judgment, the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark is providing guidance in this amendment, one would think, but I predict, Mr. Chairman, that under this amendment every single member of the governing party will not support the amendment, and that's how Albertans will judge you, not by your words but by your action. If you were to listen to what the minister of health had talked about on this amendment, he made reference to the doctor as a shining star, yet at the very same notion, "Shining star, sorry; you don't get my support of your amendment," and that's very, very unfortunate. Fortunately, Albertans are going to judge this minister and this government not by words but by actions. I'll be looking very closely to see who on that side of the House will in fact support the amendment that is being put forward by the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, the only ER doctor. I'm going to judge and Albertans are going to judge on where you stand relative to this amendment.

Mr. Chair, in my humble opinion, I believe that the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, the only ER doctor, has given sound advice, but it's being ignored. That is my opinion, that it is being ignored. With all of the things said by the minister of health, you would think that, obviously, the minister of health is going to go ahead and support this amendment, but then when it comes down to the action, it is my understanding that he's not going to. Only time will tell, and we'll be held in suspense to see if, in fact, the member will stand or not to support the amendment. I'm going to judge and Albertans are going to judge that minister of health by how he supports or doesn't support this amendment. It's like saying one thing out of this side, and then saying another thing out of this side when it comes to the actions. Consequently, I believe that the hon. member has brought forward so many things.

Now I would like to say, though, that I take exception, Mr. Chair, to a comment by the minister of health when he said: I've answered all the questions in here. He said that referring to question period. I've sent him a list of 42 questions that remain unanswered, so I truly have some friendly advice to everyone: guard against self-deception. Guard against self-deception because I can sincerely say that I'm still waiting for the answers to those 42 questions that were asked by this caucus.

On this amendment I want to thank the hon. chairman for the principles relative to having a fruitful debate. But let us judge not by words; let us judge by actions. I am going to be specifically watching this minister of health, who talks a very good game, but at the end of the day we have to judge him by his actions. I think Albertans would expect no less of anyone because that and this amendment is true accountability.

Let me take some time now, Mr. Chair, to talk about accountability. This amendment put forward by the member, the only ER doctor in here, is about accountability: accountability to measure, accountability to hold to account what is taking place. I want to say just on this topic that I found it interesting that the ministry had come up with some statistic that said that wait times potentially could be going down. But when you ask: was the actual evaluation done on a Friday night or a Saturday or Sunday? No. It was done on a Monday morning. Statistics and data can all be left to the beholder in terms of how they can be interpreted. I don't think that is a fair representation of what is taking place in ER rooms today.

In fact, I believe there is denial that we're in a crisis. I heard the minister of health say that there is no crisis. Mr. Chairman, there is a crisis. Please, to the minister of health, guard against self-deception, do the right thing, and support the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, support Albertans, 3.5 million of them, who are being advocated for by a doctor and who are being advocated for by someone who is on the front line who says that we need this amendment. We will wait. We will judge the minister of health and this government not by their words; we'll judge them by their actions.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: I have on my list the hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Ms Evans: Thank you. Today I speak as a Member of this Legislative Assembly, and I will iterate words that I have presented to my . . . [interjections] I'm sorry, Mr. Chairman. Am I interfering with something?

The Chair: The hon. minister has the floor. I have a list of speakers here. So, hon. minister, please continue. You have the floor.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I know that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark is aware of my sentiment on this proposed amendment to Bill 17, the Alberta Health Act. It rests not in the substance of the amendment. It rests in the fact, I would venture to state, that there isn't one Member of this Legislative Assembly that is familiar with the position statement on emergency department overcrowding by the Canadian Association of Emergency Physicians dated February 2007. It behooves us on every piece of legislation that we pass to be fully familiar with it and to determine whether, in fact, Mr. Chairman, the content of that sort of document would be appropriate for legislation and to enshrine it in some kind of legislative amendment.

In fact, if we endorse that, it is tantamount to giving it the credibility of the balance of the total law. As legislators it seems to me important for us to understand exactly what provoked the emergency department overcrowding position statement and also whether or not this Canadian Association of Emergency Physicians' statement was ever endorsed by the Canadian Medical Association or our own Alberta Medical Association.

Mr. Chairman, in terms of relevance we have passed laws and made amendments to laws based on what we believe to be sound evidence, but I haven't heard anybody this morning expound on any evidence that they have found conclusive from that particular position statement identified in section (d). We have also heard from our minister of health that standards are better kept in policy, in guidelines, or protocols dealing with the delivery of health services rather than enshrined in legislation.

I'm going to give you a parallel example. You can have good curriculum, but with a poor teacher the curriculum matters not. With a good teacher the curriculum is much less relevant because the teacher will find a way to do it. Similarly with our laws, these are not the kind of things that emergency physicians – and I worked in an emergency department, albeit only as a nurse – have placed in front of them. They have in fact got not only the policies of their respective health authority; they've got the protocols in order as agreed to by that hospital administration based on what they're capable of doing. So we find various emergencies with various capacities all over Alberta, some that have linkages with the telehealth and with emergency physicians in Edmonton so that they are able, for example in Beaverlodge, to accomplish so many complex procedures because of the video conferencing that they're able to do.

To pass one particular position paper and enshrine it in legislation, to me it's not the appropriate way to go. I certainly agree that the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark has the capacity as a physician to understand many of these things in ways that not one other individual here likely has. It's possible that the hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition would be fully familiar with those as a physician in the past. I'm sure that may be something he's fully familiar with, although since 2007 I venture a guess that he's been a part of the legislative process and less likely to be practising with those kinds of length-of-stay acknowledgments contained in this position paper.

Guiding principles, again, by the very definition of guiding principles, are much better placed in a document within the context of the health facility or within the health region itself. In this Legislative Assembly we've had many arguments made by the opposition to having local representatives to help assist in the management of health care delivery pertinent to their own respective areas. If that is the case, then doesn't it behoove those local advisory teams to provide the kind of advice and the kind of support to policies and principles generated within the facility that are appropriate to the capacity of that facility to deliver?

When you look at our ambulance protocols across the province, where we have volunteer support for ambulances, which are delivering as well as they can the highest standard of service they're capable of, they may not have the capacity to deliver the same things they do have in some of the central urban areas. So when I'm asking for a differentiation, putting something in policy or principle within the context of the actual facilities themselves, within the context of the minister of health in the administration of health and the overarching framework, I think that's the right place to do it.

Mr. Chairman, it could be argued that in passing something like this, this Legislative Assembly was less responsible because nobody here has ventured to identify the actual criteria that provoked this position statement. Nobody here has been familiar with the emergency department overcrowding that took place at the time that these physicians provided this. Nobody here has presented any solid evidence that this is the best position paper on such a matter. If it was presented here, then wouldn't it behoove us to have it in a position paper in support of the minister of health. This position paper, by definition, was never forwarded, to the best of our knowledge, to any other government to pass and enshrine as legislation. The argument to have an Alberta criteria, an Alberta model that considers what Alberta and Albertans want is duly made and is duly appropriate.

Mr. Chairman, I'd like to just simply say that I, too, share the respect of our health minister for the valiant attempts of Edmonton-Meadowlark to suggest that we can do more for emergency rooms. We have agreed with that. There is something being done. There are many things being done. As I explained to one of my constituents yesterday, there is no place else in Canada where a Premier and a caucus have provided leadership for a five-year funding model, a 6 per cent increase after topping up the amounts that were already a part of the supports for health. There's no place else in Canada that provides a higher standard of health overall.

I've had constituents, while I knocked on doors this summer, tell me that if they were in their own province, they wouldn't have had the level of health they've been able to get in health supports here. I had a meeting the other evening with several of my constituents, one of whom had some emergency contacts and need for emergency services. He stated emphatically that this health system, this emergency system, is there when you need it. When you need it. The most important thing in emergency was to be triaged properly, to get the type of care you need when you need it, and if you are waiting in emergency – and waits are regrettable – then we hope that the kinds of service delivery elements that the minister of health is bringing forward will help correct, if not all, at least most of the difficulties that we have been experiencing.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I'd like to take my leave and thank you very much for the privilege of speaking on this amendment this morning.

The Chair: Thank you.

The chair has a list of speakers here, so I just want to read those on my list: the hon. members for Edmonton-Strathcona, Calgary-Fish Creek, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, Calgary-Varsity, Edmonton-Meadowlark, and Calgary-McCall. So, hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, your floor on the amendment.

Ms Notley: On the amendment. Thank you very much. I'm pleased to be able to rise again to speak on the amendment to Bill 17 put forward by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. I had a chance earlier today, I guess is the way I would characterize it, to speak on this issue, but I think that there's so much to talk about on this.

What this amendment goes to is the question: how do we build some kind of accountability, accountability that is linked through our democratic process to the people of Alberta for the improvements that need to happen in our health care system? That's really what this amendment is trying to do. It's trying to read into a piece of legislation, legislation which, unlike regulation and unlike policy, is actually directly linked to the people of the province through the democratic process and through this House. In so doing, what we can do is put out there in a way that the people of Alberta can see and touch and feel to some extent the ways in which we are going to hold the government accountable for its treatment of that system for which we all care so deeply, that being our health care system.

I think that the provisions that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark wants to have us include in the charter are provisions that are geared towards improving our health care system, where the government suggests: well, this is a problem because, you know, we're worried that somehow this will have some kind of legal force and effect, and then we're going to be in court, and we won't be able to meet these objectives, and we're a long way away from these wait time objectives and all that kind of stuff; therefore, this is far, far too dangerous a provision for us to consider including into our piece of legislation. I think that, in fact, what we need to do instead is look at this particular set of standards that the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark is putting forward and talk about: well, how can we achieve them? Are they achievable?

You know, I was just sort of looking through earlier this morning some of the documents from the plan that Alberta Health Services talked about at their meeting last Friday. In looking through those documents, I have to say – I mean, there are documents in there which appear to me to show a pretty clear pathway to making a pretty significant impact on these wait times very, very quickly. In particular, there is a document that outlines how many days each year, how many hospital bed days each year, we have beds that are occupied by people that ought not to be in acute care. So how many days do we have acute-care beds occupied by people who do not need acute care?

It's kind of a complicated measure, but nonetheless what it's really saying is: to what extent do we have people who need to be in lower levels of medical care, not in hotels, where they have a privately paid for maid pop by once every couple of days, but in places with medical care accessible to them – how much time do we spend, how many days do we have people who need that level of care occupying our most expensive acute-care beds? We know that when those acute-care beds are occupied, everything backs up, and we end up in the situation where our emergency rooms are overcrowded.

I was quite surprised to see this document that had been distributed by Alberta Health Services, that talks about the number of what they refer to as alternate level of care days. They talk about the number of alternate level of care days in Calgary hospitals from 1999 to 2009. It is really quite a shocking little graph. Basically, from 1998 up until 2007 the number of alternate level of care days went back and forth between about 15,000 and about 24,000 or 25,000 days per year, I think is. So it would be somewhere between 15,000 and 25,000 days per year when hospital beds were occupied by people that ought not to have been in acute care, and for the most part we're talking about our seniors. That's interesting. That's how much we were seeing.

Then in 2003 what was very interesting is that that number dropped. We went from a high in 2003 of about 22,000 days, and it actually dropped in 2005 to about 12,000 days. So we actually saw some progress being made previously on this issue.

Then, lo and behold, along come 2006 and 2007, and between 2007 and 2009 we see this dramatic change in what's happening in our hospitals. In 2007 we had roughly 18,000 days in which we had beds occupied by patients needing a lower level of care, but they were, in fact, in acute-care beds because there was no place to put them, right? So these are the people that need to go into long-term care, but there's no long-term care, so they are occupying acute-care beds at a greater cost to Albertans. That was about 18,000 days. Then here's a good one. Two years later, after the brilliance of this government's approach to health care has really had a chance to percolate through the system, Mr. Chair, 60,000 days per year in Calgary. We start at 18,000 in 2007, and by 2009, two years later, we're at 60,000 days. The line on the graph is almost vertical.

It is unbelievable how many acute-care beds are now being occupied by people that should be in alternate levels of care. We've seen a 300 per cent increase in that phenomenon over the course of the last two years. What's happened in the last two years? Hmm, what can we think of? We've gotten rid of the regional health boards. We've broken our promise to build long-term care beds. We fired a bunch of nurses. We tried to close mental health beds. I mean, the list goes on and on.

I would say that what this shows most clearly is how misguided this government plan with respect to long-term beds has been. What this shows is that as much as the government and representatives of the government can get up and talk about: "Oh, we're building all of these new continuing care beds, and we've come up with this fabulous new term called continuing care. Because we're calling them that, we can throw in all of these great new hotel-type things that we and our developer friends are putting together that have almost no or no medical staff in those buildings. We're going to call those continuing care because, you know, they're wheelchair accessible, and therefore Bob's your uncle. They are now included in this list of beds that we are theoretically building for our seniors." That hasn't worked. That clearly hasn't worked.

This graph shows with such clarity how ineffective that process has been. It shows us that the number of people who are in our acute-care beds who should not be in our acute-care beds has tripled – tripled, my friends – in the last two and a half years in Calgary alone. That's not just a trend that, you know, every province is managing and dealing with. That's not something that's: well, you know, it's a complex case, and we have to gradually work at it. That is a profound change in the effectiveness of the system that can be clearly linked to this government's decision to break its promise and not move forward on building long-term care beds. It is black, and it's white, and it's right within the government's own documents.

They should be ashamed of this. When they look at this amendment and they say, "We can't afford to go ahead with this amendment because we could never meet these standards," they should know that, in fact, there are some answers out there. Perhaps they could cut by two-thirds the number of people improperly occupying acute-care beds in our hospitals right now were they to start moving forward with the promises they made two and a half years ago, before the election, and subsequently broke. If they were to go back and actually make their promises real, they could actually start to deal with this issue. As a result, this amendment would not be so scary for them because, in theory, they could fix the problem, or they could come awfully close to fixing the problem.

I have to say that I was really quite amazed by this document and what it shows and how clearly it shows the mismanagement not of the Conservative government generally but of this particular administration over the course of two and a half years, the dabbling and the experimentation and the elimination of boards and the creating of new boards and the: "We need more staff. We're going to fire more staff. We're going to build new types of hotels. We're not going to build long-term care. We're going to not spend the amount of money we should be spending on home care." All of these lovely little experiments that these guys are talking about: this is the result of those experiments. It's very clear that this is the result, and it is very clear that this is the explanation for the crisis that we are hearing about in our emergency rooms.

What is particularly – particularly – dumbfounding about this is that in 2008, right before the Premier of this province was re-elected as the Premier of this province, he received correspondence from front-line professionals who are working in the very place that is most likely to most quickly see the results of this government's failed experiments, that being, you know, our emergency rooms, the metaphorical canary in the coal mine. That's what the emergency rooms are. Those front-line professionals wrote to this Premier before 2008 and said: "Whoa. We have a crisis. Things are about to go down. We need to act on this, and it's only going to get worse."

The Premier responded by saying: we're going to build 600 new long-term care beds. Right after that, he got elected. He broke that promise. He did not move forward on any of that stuff, and exactly as predicted by those professionals who were working in emergency rooms, who were writing to the Premier in good faith in the early spring of 2008, the numbers of people inappropriately in acute-care beds skyrocketed – skyrocketed – and the effects of that were felt, first and foremost, in our emergency rooms because people could not be admitted.

This government has a lot to answer for. I mean, we've got the travesty of this government's history with respect to health care over the last 15 years, the various and sundry attempts to privatize. I can't even remember all the different catchy phrases that their Public Affairs Bureau came up with to describe each of the different attempts to privatize, but I mean we've been through it over and over and over again. There's this constant attempt to overhaul our public health system and open it up to their friends in the private sector and create money-making opportunities for those people at the expense of Albertans. That's been going on for years.

I have to say that just looking at these numbers, I'm not sure whether any of that stuff really has been quite as damaging as what this government has done in the last two and a half years. I suppose I should qualify that a little bit because, in fact, statistics show that in the early '90s, right before the former Premier Klein was elected, we had twice the number of acute-care hospital beds in this province. Under the steady draconian slashing-and-burning leadership of the hon. former Premier, this government managed to close roughly half of those acute-care beds. If you look at the numbers that we had in 1990 in Alberta of acute-care beds, we have cut those numbers by about one-half. At the same time our population has increased dramatically.

So there's no question that that approach to managing our health care also is in part to blame for the position that we are in right now because we have had a shortage of acute-care beds in this province for two decades. In fact, as this government well knows, we have the lowest number of acute-care beds per capita of any province in the country because of the decisions made by this government when they decided they were going to theoretically eliminate the deficit by just creating other deficits. People dying in emergency rooms are the kind of other deficits that I'm talking about. It's not on the balance sheet, but – you know what? – I think that at the end of the day the families of those people who had to watch the outcomes of those decisions would say that the deficit they describe is far more meaningful than the dollars-and-cents deficit that this government congratulated itself about in the mid- to late-90s.

Nonetheless, that was certainly a huge contribution to the difficulties that we find ourselves in now, when this government chose to aggressively close hospital beds across the province such that we went into the current crisis less prepared than any other province in the country because we had that much less infrastructure, that much less capacity to deal with the demographic changes that are now putting pressure on us.

Of course, let's be clear. When you have demographic changes, these are not things that suddenly you wake up in the morning and discover: "Oh my goodness. One of our caucus members has just decided to talk to the media and stand up for their principles." That's not something that happens overnight. Demographic changes, the kinds of things that are pressuring our health care system right now, are entirely predictable. In fact, I find it interesting. As much as we're in the situation right now where the number of acute-care beds that are occupied by people who don't need that level of care but have no other place to go to get the adequate level of care required has gone up 300 per cent, we know that that number is just going to continue to skyrocket.

This government's own minister of seniors' care has put out the fact that they expect that in roughly 10 years – actually, this number came out last spring, so we're almost at the point of saying nine years. In nine and a half years from now they expect there to be 15,000 more seniors who require some form of medical care. In nine and a half years from now 15,000, my friends.

What's the plan that the government has right now? Well, they have no plan. Now, if you were going to give them a tremendous benefit of the doubt, which I uncharacteristically decided to do last summer, when I was working through these numbers, if you assume for the moment that the continuing care beds that they're building actually provide the care that is required, which I would argue and most people will argue and the numbers in our ER rooms will show you is not true – let's just say for the moment that members of this government actually believe that the continuing care beds that they're building now are the answer to the problem. What I'm talking about here, you know, is: is this intentional mismanagement, or is it hapless mismanagement? How do we characterize the mismanagement that this government is demonstrating to Albertans day in and day out?

If you assume for the moment that the continuing care beds that the government is currently promising are what's needed and if you assume that the government continues to create and build these beds at the level that they currently are building them – and, again, we have no reason to believe that that's the case. The finance minister has started talking about how we're going to have to pull back and cut services more than Albertans are used to in the next year because we're not out of the woods and that if we're going to get rid of the deficit, we're going to have to start doing some much harder cuts.

Let's just move away for the moment and assume that the government is going to carry on at the same pace that they're carrying on now. Do you know how many beds that would mean they would have to have built nine and a half years from now? The answer is 6,000. Just to go back to what I said before, the number of people that will need beds nine and a half years from now by the government's own number: 15,000. That means that the government's nonplan right now anticipates having 9,000 seniors homeless.

I heard somebody else use the phrase: they are homeless. They are homeless because it is medically dangerous for them to live alone without some form of care in their homes, so they need to go to the hospital, and of course there's no place for them. There's no room for them in the inn, as it were.

This government plans now. Right now they know that the crisis we see is going to increase. If we assume right now that there are about 2,000, 2,500 people that should be in long-term care who aren't, that problem is going to increase by 400 per cent, a little bit less than 400 per cent.

The Chair: On my list, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Chairman, thank you so much. I'm truly honoured and humbled to be standing here before you to speak on this very important issue. Like I've said, I'm going to keep talking – my lips are moving – until my lips can't move anymore.

Martin Luther King, I'll reiterate, said: life begins to end the day we become silent about things that matter. Mr. Chairman, these are things that matter to Albertans that we should not be silent on. We have a job to do. Dr. Paul Parks, a representative of the emergency doctors of this province, raised a legitimate health care concern. On October 8 he sent an e-mail to the Premier and to the minister, to myself when I was on that side of the government, to the deputy minister, to Mr. Ken Hughes, to Dr. Duckett saying that when the flu season hits, the emergency medical system of this province is on the verge of a potential catastrophic collapse.

Mr. Chairman, emergency doctors don't clang bells if they don't need to be clanged. We don't complain. And emergency nurses don't do that either. Paramedics don't do that either, and neither do police officers or firefighters or unit clerks or cleaning staff of the emergency room or the nurses on the front lines or the nurses in the back lines. Health care workers do not cry, "The sky is falling" for political gain. Politicians do that. This is why the respect in this society for firefighters, for paramedics, for nurses, for pharmacists, for doctors is above 90 per cent, and this is why the respect for politicians is below 14 per cent: when the people elected by the people blow the people off and do not listen to the people.

Mr. Chair, I don't know what it will take to get my colleagues on that side to listen. I tried from within caucus. I didn't intend to be here. I did not make this decision. They made that decision. I will say that these are the words I said within caucus, and they will hear them outside of caucus in the Legislature because they made that decision. We are bound by the truth.

My grandfather, when I was a child, put me on his lap. I remember this moment. I was three years old. My grandfather was a sugar cane and dairy farmer in India and a rural family doctor. His sons are doctors. His father was a doctor. His grandson is a doctor. My grandpappy put me on his lap. My father left for Canada in search of opportunity when I was two months old, so he was really my fa'ther, as were my uncles. It was a beautiful sky; I remember this moment. I used to have this photographic memory. He said: "Son, look up there. What do you see in the sky at nighttime?"

The Chair: May I interject, hon. member? This is about amendment A3.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Chairperson, I'm coming to the point. This is why: I'm building a case. Please indulge me. I'm building a case on why we're discussing the amendment on legislating the emergency department wait times.

This is about a clash of principles. He taught me about the truth. You can't hide the sun, the moon, and the truth, the medical principles of the Hippocratic oath. The nurses and every health care worker take an oath. Politicians take an oath here. Then you have your political oath of partisanship. This is a nonpartisan issue. This is a clash of principles. It is a sad day when you clash with the truth and the principles of health care, when the duty to report and partisan politics clash. You know what won out, Mr. Chairperson? Politics. It was a sad day in this province and in this nation when partisan politics won out.

Dr. Paul Parks raised legitimate concerns. First of all, these gentlemen and gentlewomen here on this side asked for an emergency debate – I was out of this nation visiting, bereaving my uncle that passed away a few months ago – and it was rejected by my colleagues on that side. I found out about it, and I said: "You'll have that 15th vote when I come back into town, guys. Ask for it again." Because I'm personally aware of a number of deaths and a number of near-deaths, I cannot be silent. To my PC caucus friends, I am so sorry. To the PC Party, I am so sorry. Please forgive me. I cannot be silent.

I promised them my vote. I told the minister: it's up to you, my good friend. I can't not support it. Many of my PC colleagues actually supported it, so I have to thank them, credit them, for they actually learned the wisdom to do the right thing from these people. You've got the left, the middle, the right, the extreme left, the extreme right – call it what you want – the orange, the red, and the green. I don't know what I am. Call me brown. We're all united in bringing this up. We're all united in legislating ER wait times.

Dr. Paul Parks brought up a legitimate concern, Mr. Chairperson. Look at what just happened yesterday. A board was set up by the previous minister of health, the hon. Member for Calgary-West. He made some very difficult decisions. From the board that he put in, the chairman that he put in, the CEO that he put in, was just recently removed by the current minister of health. I haven't read the papers, but what I've been told by others is that the whole board was going to walk. One or three members walked. I'm not sure what the truth is.

The CEO of Alberta Health Services was fired. Was he fired for cookiegate? Come on, guys. You can't fire a guy for cookiegate. That's just a poor guy that got stuck by the media. We all get stuck by the media when we walk up the stairs. You can't fire a guy for cookiegate.

The Chair: Hon. member, I just want to remind you that this is the amendment you introduced, so please stay on the amendment. Thank you.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Chairperson, I'm building the case. There's a crisis in the emergency rooms. Three of the board members quit. There's a crisis of confidence in delivering health care services in Alberta today as we speak.

The reason I'm bringing up this amendment is that when I was the hon. Member for Calgary-West's assistant, I think I went to about two minister/deputy minister meetings in two years. At the first one

I was going to bring a private member's bill to legislate emergency department wait times. They asked me not to. They said: "You know what? We'll make it a performance measure."

When they brought in Dr. Duckett, to be honest, at that point in time, with the information that I was given, I was actually quite impressed. I actually defended Dr. Duckett in an all-party committee with the minister. I made those remarks, and I stand by those remarks based on the information that I had at the time.

By 2012 the length of stay in the emergency room for admitted patients, which is a health care system measure – it's not an emergency problem; it's a system problem – was eight hours at the 90th percentile. The 90th percentile. I thought: "Wow. You know what? I can go back to the front lines after 2012. I don't have to be a politician anymore. I can go back and do my job because I love my job as a doctor." This was before any big bailout of money. I was happy with that. I thought: forget legislating it; I agree with you.

What happened is that suddenly Alberta Health Services needed all this money. They asked for 4.5 per cent. I believe the minister actually gave them 6 per cent, which is a good thing. But after that, they actually asked for another billion and a half and five years. At that point in time there was no big bailout that they required.

They asked for all this money, and then they moved the goalposts, Mr. Chairperson, to 2015. Then they reduced it to the 60th percentile by 2012. Then they lumped in the busiest 15 sites. You heard the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness today saying that we're going to talk about this disbanding. In the current measures the emergency issue is only 5 per cent of the measure. Internationally, in the U.K. the emergency department wait time is the number one health care system measure.

The Minister of Health and Wellness: I really respect this guy. We spent a lot of time together. He's a good man. He's a good teacher. He's been working his buns off because he sort of walked into a disaster situation. I gave him a big hug when he became minister, and I gave him my condolences. I said: "You poor sap. You have no idea what you walked into. You poor sap." The emergency department wait times pre Dr. Duckett – he became minister a week before they actually went 30 per cent the wrong way, from when the previous minister started to when this minister came, from 11.2 hours to 14.2 hours. They went the wrong way. The Premier had made a commitment in writing during the last election to Dr. Peter Kwan and the emergency doctors to fix this problem and to put them on a panel, and that had not happened. You heard rumours about an e-mail. I apologized for hurting the Premier's feelings, but I make no apologies because there was no panel that was set up. That meeting just happened. The ER wait times had gone 30 per cent the wrong way by the time this minister started.

Now Dr. Paul Parks has clanged the bell because the flu season is upon us and we're already in yellow alert. I checked yesterday. Every emergency department in Edmonton is on yellow alert. There was one resuscitation bed available.

With all due respect to the current Minister of Health and Wellness, I don't know a heck of a lot about teaching. I'm an assistant lecturer/clinical professor. I don't know what they call me at the faculty of medicine. I'm not a teacher, but I'll tell you – and I don't mean this with any arrogance, please, so I hope no one takes it this way – I am a doctor. I was the section representative for the emergency doctors. I do know a couple of things – maybe not everything but a couple of things – about health care. Well, maybe more than a couple.

On the emergency issue I was the first emergency-trained doctor in the Edmonton emergency training program – I was a T100 model – when dummies like me could get in. Now it's the top training program in the nation. Many of the senior members trained me. Since then – I was the first residency trained one – I train them. I was their spokesperson and had their confidence. On February 2, 2007, I called it a crisis. I clanged the bell because the flu season was upon us. Here we are, right here, Mr. Frank Landry of the Edmonton Sun.

I'll tell you why I want these legislated, hon. member. Where is he? I wonder if I can invoke his phrase. Mr. Chairman, I wonder: is it appropriate for me to use the words "gobbledygook" and "gibberish"?

My emergency colleagues have been at this for 10 years in advocacy. I became president-elect of the emergency doctors in 2004, and for two years the current president at that time was advocating. I became president in 2006. We got involved in political election campaigns to try to make national and provincial wait time targets. In 2007 disasters were happening. In the fall of 2006 the hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations, the hon. Member for Sherwood Park, was at that time the Minister of Health and Wellness, and there were deaths and disasters happening in the waiting rooms. Okay? They were happening at that time. We were given these reassurances and promises that long-term care beds were coming, that more beds were coming.

Then in February 2007 – I wish the ministers were in this room because I could ask them questions and challenge them. The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness at that time – oh, there he is; he's over there; Mr. Chairman, I'll speak through you – from Edmonton-Whitemud actually listened. He mentioned my name in the Legislature. With the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, they allowed us to help them with their policy on overcapacity and protocols. He did the right thing. I owe him a great amount of due respect. He's a good man. He actually convinced me to run. Despite the fact that I told him I didn't vote for your government because you wrecked health care in the '90s, I said, "You're a good man, and I like you. You know what? I'll stake my career on you." I had never met the Premier at the time, "but if you trust him, I trust him."

What happened in 2007 is that in Vegreville and in Lloydminster there were some infection prevention and control issues. That occupied the attention of the hon. member who was minister at the time, so the government – I was quite disappointed – introduced Bill 41. The doctors from the College of Physicians and Surgeons and the AMA weren't happy about it because it was a hammer against the doctors, a hammer to deal with something that actually required a scalpel. Even we emergency doctors don't use chainsaws or hammers. We use a blunt scalpel, not the plastic surgery ones. Even we use a scalpel, and we're known to be sort of the guys who aren't so good at cutting.

The government got distracted because of headlines and politics because it happened in the Premier's and the Treasury Board president's constituencies. What happened? Health care got ignored, and in 2008 when election day came, people were dying left and right in the emergency rooms. Those 322 cases that Dr. Paul Parks sent to the Premier were actually sent four days after the election in 2008 to the hon. members for Edmonton-Whitemud, Edmonton-Rutherford, Edmonton-Meadowlark, the deputy minister at the time who was under the hon. Member for Calgary-West, and to the Premier, and they sent them again as a reminder because the Premier made a commitment in writing during the election to solve this problem.

During the election people were dying. They died. For the ones that didn't die, what was more tragic were the delays in care. We had mothers miscarrying on triage stretchers. We were examining children in tents at the University of Alberta hospital. In waiting rooms we were looking at intracerebral bleeds that were waiting for eight hours. Women who had ruptured ectopic pregnancies were waiting for six hours on ambulance stretchers until they seized. A man with a ruptured esophagus waited seven hours in the waiting room. A woman bled to death in the emergency department at the Grey Nuns hospital. In this e-mail that everyone talks about, that I sent to the Premier, this doctor at the Grey Nuns hospital had the courage to put his name forward. A senior bled to death in the emergency department at the Grey Nuns hospital. These are just a couple of cases that were documented. The emergency doctors said: we can't document them anymore; there are just too many, and nothing has been done.

I worked with that minister. Previous to that the other guy worked with that minister. I worked with the minister from Edmonton-Whitemud. I was the assistant to the minister from Calgary-West. Dr. Paul Parks says that it's worse than it's ever been. I didn't call this a catastrophic collapse; I just called it a crisis. Are we crying wolf? Do we not know what we're talking about? Do politicians know more about front-line health care than doctors and nurses and paramedics and firefighters?

Then we have the other minister. He's a decent man, but I'll tell you where we do disagree. I had to read in the newspaper about the four new members of the board. No one asked me what I thought of them. I read it in the newspaper. I got to – well, I can't tell you what had happened at caucus. That would be inappropriate for me to mention here because of confidentiality rules.

I really didn't have any say in the emergency performance measures. I commented on them. I can't tell you what happened at caucus, but I'll tell you that the emergency measure is only 5 per cent. In the United Kingdom it is the number one measure. It's an international benchmark because it cannot be achieved until you solve the family doctor problem, the home care, the long-term care, the hips, the knees, the cataracts, everything the minister said. Yes. You don't have to do all those other ones. You just have to do this one because everything else feeds into this one. The length of stay for admitted people in the emergency room: you cannot meet that until you meet those other ones. This is the international measure, and the emergency physicians of this nation developed these guidelines, the CAEP guidelines.

You're going to love this, Mr. Chairman. The minister said: well, what about Alberta? Dr. Chris Evans was the head emergency doctor in the nation. He's from Alberta. He works at the Royal Alexandra hospital, and he's on the board of the Alberta Medical Association.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'll be back.

The Chair: On my list here, the hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I've been listening to this debate very patiently yesterday all the way from the conclusion of question period at probably around 3 p.m. until about 1:30 this morning and then again from 8:30 a.m. I'd like to offer a few comments on this amendment and, in extension, on the nature of the debate.

I have to tell you, Mr. Chairman, that I have a number of concerns that I have to bring to your attention, but I think there are a number of commonalities in this Chamber that we can all agree upon. First of all, there is not a doubt in my mind that there isn't a member in this Chamber who doesn't honestly and sincerely care about the state of health care in this province and in this country. I would suggest that there isn't one member in this Chamber that would not like to see our constituents and, by extension, our families – our mothers, our daughters, our fathers – when in need, receive the best quality of care possible, on time and with compassion wherever they happen to reside in the province of Alberta. We can have titles in front or behind our names, whether it's hon. or MLA or MD, but in the end we're all human beings, and we all have families. At the end of the day when we leave this Chamber, we are just average Albertans who want to make sure that our families and our constituents and our friends receive the best care possible. I think that this is what we have in common. I don't think that needs to be belaboured any further.

Where the differences lie, though, is in what the approach to fixing our current state of health care should be, and further political considerations make that even more blurry. I would have to point out to you, Mr. Chairman, that in this amendment the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark is basically asking for something that all of us would agree upon. He says: let's improve health care. Really, what both his subsections (c) and (d) say, in essence, is: let's make health care more responsive; let's fix health care. As I said earlier, all of us agree on that. The problem is that the fix is not that simple.

I just read in a newspaper article a few minutes ago that Edmontonians said: well, why is it that they can't figure out how to fix the system? Well, Mr. Chairman, obviously, it is a complex system; there isn't a one-bullet solution that will fix the problem. I have to tell you, sir, that it was actually this government that for a number of years – I have been here in this Chamber now soon to be 10 years. I recall that on at least 10 different occasions government has brought forward a very clear statement saying that the state of health care, the way it operates right now, cannot last. This health care system that we have right now is doomed to fail sooner or later. We argued that it is not sustainable in the manner that it is managed right now.

A number of solutions were brought forward, but every time government brought forward possible solutions, all of the opposition would scream and shout and say: "No. You're trying to privatize the health care system. You're trying to make sure that instead of an Alberta health care card, at that time people will have to bring a Visa card. You're bringing an American-style health care system to Alberta." Basically, the message from the opposition constantly has been: fix it, but don't change anything. And I don't think anybody in this Chamber would argue that.

Well, Mr. Chairman, the prognosis of this government of a decade ago and even as recently as two or three years ago is coming true. Perhaps in some areas of our health care system the wheels are starting to fall off. We had predicted that that would happen because if we don't change and improve the system, that's inevitably what will happen. But the message still out there is: fix it, but don't change it.

The amendment that the member brings forward says, basically, to legislate time limits on how long a patient can sit in an emergency room from the moment he walks in to the moment he starts receiving care. Well, that, you'd think, logically makes sense. You know, if you put a limit so I know that if I walk in with, God forbid, my daughter one day into an emergency room, I can have the assurance that no matter what – no matter what car accidents happen, no matter what airplanes may crash on that day – I have the legislated right to have a doctor see her within four hours.

Well, it sounds good, but this is truly not innovative. It was actually tried. The United Kingdom legislated waiting times, and soon after Australia followed suit. They tried it. So we're not dealing here with an untried model. They actually implemented legislated waiting periods. Mr. Chairman, guess what happened? A few weeks ago the United Kingdom got rid of that. Now Australia, right now as we're speaking, is in the process of eliminating legislated, mandated waiting times. Why? Well, because it didn't work.

Now, why didn't it work, Mr. Chairman? It didn't work because it was putting unreasonable and unrealistic pressure on the service providers, on the very physicians like the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. The fact is that emergency changes from minute to minute. Different cases arrive. Different accidents happen. Different levels of urgencies of patients are there. But if you legislate waiting times, you're basically putting a gun to the physicians' heads and saying: "I don't care what you have to deal with. I don't care what kind of patients you have in your emergency room right now. I don't care how many of them you have. You will be seeing every single one of them within four hours."

What the U.K. has found and Australia is finding right now is that as a result of this, the quality of care has significantly deteriorated because our health care providers were scrambling to meet those deadlines and, consequently, probably have seen every single patient within a specified period of time because there were penalties if they didn't. But at what expense? At the expense of the quality of care. Now you could not prioritize the person with, perhaps, a lacerated finger and say: "Look, you can wait much longer. We have other, more urgent cases to see." Now they have to see everybody within a specified period of time.

Is it well intended? Does it mean well? Yes. Has it worked? No. So why should we assume that if it hasn't worked in two Commonwealth countries already as recently as a few weeks ago, we will implement it here and make it work? It simply makes no sense whatsoever.

My other concern, Mr. Chairman, is the quality of debate over here. As I said earlier, we all agree that health care is this government's priority, without a doubt. Just look at the budget and the resources allocated to it. But the quality of discussion: I would say that 80 per cent of the last 12 hours had really nothing to do with health care. It was simple political posturing.

You know, during my 12 hours here I definitely concluded that we have somehow lost focus. I know the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo took a great deal of time discussing my hair. He was giving me advice to go to a barber and get a haircut, and he was talking about the wind blowing through my hair. I see the Member for Edmonton-Riverview is now looking with envy, but trust me, nothing to envy. You have other gifts that I don't, so I think we're even there.

The fact is that – you know, it's a funny matter. If health care is really that important to these members, which I don't doubt it is, why are we doing this? Why are we discussing my hair during a debate on health care? Well, I'll tell you why, Mr. Chairman. Because this is simply about politics. The fact of the matter is that if we really want to focus on fixing health care, the fix won't come from this Chamber. The fix is outside of the Chamber, and that's exactly what the minister is doing. That's why you see the minister running spastically in and out of the Chamber, because the actual work is being done outside of the Chamber with the health authority, with Alberta Health Services, and with the front-line workers, with the doctors who are now gathering and pulling together, pooling expertise and giving advice. That's where the fix will come from.

You know, these misguided debates, taking pictures of each other in the Chamber or the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark pointing his fingers as if he was shooting individuals with a gun: that's really not doing us any good. Mr. Chairman, I think that having some 16, 17 hours of theatrics on a topic that's very important – but the substance of the debate definitely was not reflective of the importance of the topic – was not as productive as it definitely could have been.

The amendment that we have before us right now, Mr. Chairman, I know is very well intended but, as I said earlier, has proven itself not to be workable. Most of the debate was not about the amendment. Nobody has discussed the U.K. model and the Australian model of this amendment actually being in action and being pooled. Nobody has shown what the time limit should be. Is four hours a reasonable time? Should it be three or should it be six? I don't know that. How can we possibly debate this amendment in this House and now legislate our physicians, our nurses, our paramedics to a standard when we don't even know in this Chamber if it's a reasonable standard?

I'll give you an example, Mr. Chair. About a year ago I had the opportunity, a sad opportunity – I had to take my daughter to emergency. She opened the door as she was leaving school, wind blew, dust and sand fell into her eye, and it swelled up. I needed to take her to emergency to have the eye looked at and washed out. It was quickly determined that there was a minor scratch on her cornea.

We waited in the emergency room for a very long period of time. I think we were there for about six hours. Was it irritating? Extremely. But then I started to inquire. I was wondering: why are we here for so long? Well, the fact of the matter – I figured it out very soon – was that the other cases that were going in for care before my daughter were victims of car accidents. I believe there was even a shooting that day, so there was a gun-wound victim that went ahead of us. So there were many other, more urgent cases that were receiving care. Now, imagine if it was to happen after we'd passed this amendment. My daughter would have the very same right to see a physician as the guy who arrived with a bullet hole through his chest. By legislation this one doctor in that emergency room would have to see her, perhaps, before him because she arrived earlier. Is that what we want? I don't believe so.

Mr. Chair, I always believe that the best ideas will come from within the system. We have to make sure we enable them to do that. I know the minister is on the right track. I know the funding is in place. But perhaps if there is one lesson that we could have learned from these last God knows how many hours we've been here, it's the fact that the predictions of this government a few years ago that the system simply needs to be amended, needs to be improved, needs to change were valid predictions.

Now we're starting to see signs, very tangible signs, of the fact that some serious fixing needs to be done, and I hope that as a result of this lengthy debate and some of the high-pressure points within our system that are now starting to percolate, the opposition will come to the realization that this approach of fix it, but don't change anything, having Friends of Medicare saying that you're privatizing health care, or you're bringing American-style health care, whatever that may mean, is not constructive. If we continue doing this for another decade, Mr. Chairman, there will be other pressure points in other parts of the system. The fact of the matter is that the system is strained, and it needs to be amended.

Mr. Chair, I think that we need to engage in a more substantive discussion. We know we have a lot of reports collecting dust that can be implemented wholly or in part or combined. There are great ideas on the table for improving the system. I know that the hard-working health care providers in the system also want the system fixed because they actually bear the brunt of it. We bear the political brunt. We get e-mails. We get phone calls. But they actually deal with this day to day, and they are the ones facing unhappy patients and cannot have the professional satisfaction of delivering the quality of service that they would want to.

So, Mr. Chairman, I would say to you that it's time to end this debate, the political debate, the debate aimed at scoring points and twittering and facebooking and taking pictures of each other and pointing gun finger signs at each other. Let's get into a more substantive debate on how, actually, we are going to fix the health care system so that when we go back to our constituencies on Friday, we will be able to say to our constituents that we're actually working on the health care system, not working on increasing our margins of votes for the next election. That's not what this is really all about.

At this point, Mr. Chair, I suggest to you that the prudent thing to do would be to adjourn this debate, and I'm putting a motion forward for adjournment of this debate.

The Chair: The chair heard the motion by the hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration to adjourn the committee debate.

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Bill 20

Class Proceedings Amendment Act, 2010

Mr. Drysdale: I move third reading of Bill 20, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. member wish to speak on Bill 20?

Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 20 read a third time]

Bill 21

Wills and Succession Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and move third reading of the Wills and Succession Act.

Mr. Speaker, as this document stands, we are going to be bringing the wills and successions of this province into the modern realm, into the 21st century. The amendments in this act are positive for people throughout this entire province. It's important that everyday people understand as much as possible their legal rights and obligations, and that is what this act actually does.

Moving forward, this shows, further, that Alberta is prepared to lead this country and, in fact, the common-law world, which obviously includes the United Kingdom, the United States, South Africa, New Zealand, and Australia, in moving forward from old traditions past and, rather, reflecting the modern reality of our society and the modern reality of wills and estates precedence.

On that, I would say that we move third reading on Bill 21, the Wills and Succession Act.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. member wish to speak on Bill 21?

Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 21 read a third time]

Bill 22

Family Law Statutes Amendment Act, 2010

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and move third reading of Bill 22, the Family Law Statutes Amendment Act, 2010.

Mr. Speaker, I did give a rather lengthy and rapid speech to this bill in second reading, and I will not beat a dead horse, as the saying may go. This also brings us into the modern reality, reflecting the modern reality of Alberta's families, of Alberta's legal practice. This bill also reflects some changing practices in reproductive technology. I would submit to this House that it is simply good law that we actually look forward to what may happen as opposed to simply relying upon the courts for absolutely everything. I think the Minister of Justice and Attorney General has done a good job with this law, and I'm pleased to stand and recommend third reading to you.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. member wish to speak on Bill 22?

Seeing none, the chair shall now put the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 22 read a third time]

Bill 26
Mines and Minerals (Coalbed Methane)
Amendment Act, 2010

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and move Bill 26, the Mines and Minerals (Coalbed Methane) Amendment Act, 2010, for third reading.

Mr. Speaker, this is a very good day, in my view, that we're at third reading of this bill. When this bill passes, if the Legislature so agrees, we will have done something that many of my constituents have been asking for for a long, long time, and that is to clarify the ownership rights of their private property.

People who have had the privilege of living in this province, actually, for a long, long time were able to obtain title to land prior to 1930, when lands were transferred and mines and minerals essentially became the purview of the Crown under those titles. But for many families who had land before that, mines and minerals went with the title of the land. In some cases, the coal was separated as a separate title, depending on how close it was to one of the railroads. It's this problem that has been extant in Alberta for a considerable period of time, the question of the gas that is in the coal. Who does that belong to? Obviously, there are issues around this issue because if you were to mine the coal without having first dealt with the gas issue, that might cause a problem. There are issues, of course.

One of the most important issues is to define the ownership of the gas for private property owners in the same way that it's already been defined for some time for government, and that is that gas is a mineral which is owned by the mineral title holder, and coal may be a property which could be held on a separate title by a separate owner, and the owner of the mines and minerals title owns the gas. That is what my constituents have been asking for for lots of years. We've been working for a number of years to try and get this resolved.

I'm so pleased today to be able to move this bill for third reading.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. members wish to speak on Bill 26? The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to stand to speak briefly on Bill 26 at third reading. I spoke a little bit in second reading. I was unable to get to Committee of the Whole, so I'd like to be able to just share a few concerns. This is an important bill, but the question is about timing. The question is about expertise in the decision that's been made. As the minister mentioned, this has been an ongoing debate for a considerable length of time, and it's been in question as to who does own the gas in the coal. The thing that we're concerned about here is that this is a complex issue.

This government made agreements back in 2006 saying that they weren't going to change anything, that they were going to let it go through the courts. My understanding is that the courts have been preparing for two and a half years, and it's coming with a date in March of next year. The question is: are we preempting the courts? What we've normally seen here in the province is that when something goes to the courts, we stand back and say: well, we'll wait until it has gone through the courts, and then if there's a problem, we'll clarify it or pass legislation.

It's just one of those things, Mr. Speaker, where it caught a lot of people off guard. They thought that there was an agreement that was going to go through the court. There's been a lot of time and preparation with experts to present the case to a judge who is going to be able to understand the full scope of it. What we've done is taken a very technical, difficult question and boiled it down to a simple bill, that this government is just going to pass without all of the expert knowledge.

Certainly, as a member in this Legislature in passing a bill like this, although we've done a little bit of research and talked to both sides — like I say, this is a very complex bill. It should not be passed, in our minds. We should be waiting until next spring. Probably the most disappointing thing is that if they wanted to bring this bill forward and pass it, it should have been brought forward in the spring session to have the time through the summer and then have the fall to pass it through. But it was just sprung on people a short two and a half weeks ago, and there's been very little time to debate or to get out and to talk to experts in this area, and there are not a lot of experts, Mr. Speaker.

We just need to be on the record that we feel that this is a bill that is being pushed through without the due diligence that should have been done, which seems like the protocol of this government this sitting, to push these bills through fast and basically cut off any opportunity to really study these and know why we're passing these bills.

I'm not in favour of this bill. I think this bill should fail and that we should be waiting until the spring and bringing it back and letting the discussion go forward and, most importantly, letting the court case finish going through rather than intervening two-thirds or three-quarters of the way through the litigation process when they're getting ready to go to court.

With that, I'll sit down, Mr. Speaker, and hope that this bill doesn't pass. We'll see the results which we all know will be.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Ouellette: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think this is a very, very important bill. It's been I don't know exactly how many years but a lot of years now that we've been waiting for this. It seems like everybody has been delaying in the actual courts.

Gas has always been gas for the Crown. So if gas is gas for the Crown, the only really fair thing to do is to make sure that gas is gas for the private mineral rights holder. For those reasons I think that everybody should be supporting this bill. If you think about people's rights, if it's right for the Crown, it's right for private individuals. I really believe that we should be going forward and passing this bill right away.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Allred: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and speak to Bill 26, the Mines and Minerals (Coalbed Methane) Amendment Act, 2010. In particular, I'd like to clarify a few comments made on November 3, as recorded on page 1106 of Hansard.

There is no question that the concept of split titles for subsurface minerals is a very complex issue that has evolved over a millennium of real property law. It just seems to get more complicated every day. Even though Bill 26 is intended to clarify the situation of who owns the methane that is contained within seams of coal, it doesn't make the situation less complex.

Mr. Speaker, my comments relate to the debate of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre. Actually, Mr. Speaker, I've got good news for her, and I've got bad news. Firstly, even though she thought that she had lost the mineral rights to her small lot in the heart of Edmonton, she still owns them. When a lot is subdivided or in her case replotted, a mineral title is cancelled as to the surface only, and a new title is issued for the new surface parcel. The minerals remain in the name of the original owner in a separate mineral title. So the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre still owns those minerals in that small lot.

Now for the bad news. Actually it isn't really so bad. The mineral title for a 33-foot lot is probably worthless given its location in the heart of Edmonton. But don't give up, my friend. With modern technology – you never know – you may in fact become the next Jed Clampett of The Beverly Hillbillies fame.

There's a further point I'd like to clarify in the hon. member's comments. I understood her to say that under this legislation coal-bed methane would become the property of the Crown. Except in a very few cases where the Crown owns the natural gas and the freehold owner owns the coal, this is not the intent of Bill 26. The intent of this legislation, as I understand it, is merely to declare that whoever owned the natural gas is confirmed as the owner of the coal-bed methane. I understand that there may be very few cases, about 2 per cent of the cases, where freeholders have ownership of the minerals. The Crown may own the natural gas and hence become the owner of the coal-bed methane pursuant to this proposed legislation. Given this intent, Mr. Speaker, the original freehold owner of the natural gas would be confirmed as the owner of the coal-bed methane, and the owner of the coal would not.

Another clarification, Mr. Speaker. Contrary to what the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore stated in the House on November 15, the surface owner owns more than the top 10 inches. The owner of the surface is presumed to own everything from the centre of the earth to the sky above, the heaven-to-hell concept, or as the lawyers like to use the Latin phrase, cujus est solum ejus est usque ad coelum et ad infernos: to whomever the soil belongs, he owns also to the sky and to the depths. Yet the minerals can be split out of that title and owned by a number of private owners. To complicate things even more, the Crown owns all gold and silver even though there is no title for gold and silver.

As I said, these are not simple concepts, particularly when you have a land registration system that guarantees title to each and every one of these landowners, be they surface or mineral owners.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to clarify these matters for the record. If the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre has any additional comments, unfortunately there's no further time to debate it, but I would be pleased to talk to her further on this issue.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of comments or questions.

Seeing none, I have on my list here two hon. members, Whitecourt-St. Anne and Lacombe-Ponoka. The hon. member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I had the opportunity last spring to address a couple of hundred freehold mineral rights owners in Red Deer at a conference that was held by the association. They stated very clearly to me that the coal-bed methane and natural gas for both Crown and freehold minerals needed to be defined, and they asked for this legislation. I find it very interesting that the leader of the NDP, the leader of the Wildrose opposition, and a member of the Liberal Party all slammed the government for not dealing with this. Here we've dealt with it, and I hear their remarks.

I'm very proud today to stand up and say that we've dealt with Bill 26 and that we've fulfilled our commitments to that group of very important Albertans. Thank you, sir.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of comments or questions.

Seeing none, the chair shall now recognize the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, I will not repeat what all the other members on my side have said about this issue. I think the issues are very clear. The ownership of coal-bed methane in split titles is now going to be clear. I am somewhat interested in what the opposition has said about this. The last member that spoke said that they're now contradicting themselves.

I want to thank once more all the people that have talked to me, all my constituents and others from around the province that have brought this up, particularly my constituent Mrs. Else Pedersen, who is the president of the Freehold Owners Association, and her staffpeople, and especially David Speirs from Calgary, who's a consultant that has worked very closely with our government and the people working on this issue. I'm going to recommend to them that they use their website to broadcast to all their members our comments and also the comments of the opposition because they're always talking about property rights. I would like our members of the Freehold Owners Association to know where the Wildrose Alliance has now stated their position on property rights related to coal-bed methane. I think this would be very interesting to the 70,000 freeholders in the province and their families and their friends.

I'm going to just leave my comments at that and ask all my colleagues to support this bill. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows five minutes for comments or questions. The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Yes. I would like to ask the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka: do you feel that the courts are insignificant and the promises that this government made, that they weren't going to do anything? What I spoke on – and you can send the actual Hansard – is that this government is jumping in and breaking promises, saying: we're not going to do it. It's the short period of time; that's the problem, member. It's the short period of time this government does it. It all of a sudden throws out a bill and says: okay; let's pass this.

There is nobody – nobody – in this province that respects property rights more than the Wildrose Alliance. It's your Bill 50, your Bill 36, your Bill 19 that say that we will extinguish rights. We didn't put that in there. We spoke against it. So, hon. member, you should think a little bit. Your other minister from – I can't ever remember where he's from. He's sitting there talking and claiming that you're looking after people when you're not. What you're doing is politicizing it. You want to jump in because it's four months away from a court case. Just be open and up front. Why didn't you bring the bill forward? If they've been doing it for so long, why wouldn't you have the respect for Albertans and bring the bill forward in the spring?

My question is: why would they do this? Why would they ram it through in three weeks when it's been pending in the courts for years and they said that they weren't going to interfere?

Mr. Prins: I would like to answer some of those questions. First of all, our constituents have been asking for this for many years. This is about property rights. This doesn't have to be settled in court. The entire issue of coal-bed methane on freehold split titles is not a court issue. This is a legislative issue. The issues that are in court are specific issues that are separate from the entire legislation. We have the right to do this, and this is the right thing to do.

Regarding property rights with Bill 36, the Alberta Bill of Rights completely and totally protects property rights, and this is property. Natural gas and oil or coal are property, and the Alberta Bill of Rights protects that. We're just adding clarity to what natural gas is and coal-bed methane is.

This is a very good bill. I'm going to encourage members, all colleagues to support it. The members of the Freehold Owners Association will take note of what this member has said.

Thank you.

Mr. Hinman: You failed to ask the question: why does this government play such politics and only bring it forward with less than three weeks? Why did you bring it forward on such short notice? We've known about this for years. Since 2006 you've been dealing it. What was all of a sudden the rush that you had to do that? We respect property rights. We also respect the rule of law. Obviously, you don't. You're in trouble with your Bill 50, going through your own property there. You're not sticking up for your landowners. This is nothing but a smokescreen. We stick up for property rights. Why two weeks?

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, if you wish.

Any other hon. member on Bill 26? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. Is the Member for Calgary-Glenmore concerned that this is a slippery slope and that eventually the government will be going in to seize people's guns and things like that?

Mr. Hinman: No. The concern that we have from talking to both sides is that this is very technical. The government has stood off for a long time, and now they're saying: oh, in a two-week period we're going to change and pass the rules on this. That's fine.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, there's a point of order, please.

Point of Order

Question-and-comment Period

Mr. Hancock: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. I would have appreciated if you had interrupted the speaker before he continued because, in fact, 29(2)(a) does not provide for questions and answers all around the House. As much as I was interested, quite frankly, in the response to that question, I thought it's not quite an appropriate question. Actually, the hon. member has to raise questions of the speaker and not of everybody else in the House.

The Deputy Speaker: Yes. I agree there's a point of order there. Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for questions and comments to the sponsor of the bill.

Dr. Taft: I'll retract my question, Mr. Speaker. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. member under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, the chair shall now put the question.

Government Bills and Orders

Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 27

Police Amendment Act, 2010

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to rise this morning to begin debate in committee on Bill 27, the Police Amendment Act, 2010. I want to get on to the debate and listen to what the opposition has to say about it. I would like to clarify a couple of points that were raised in second reading, though, that I think are quite key to the debate.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo had a number of comments on a number of areas. First of all, I'll start with the issue of third-party complaints, the idea that a person that's not involved – they're not a witness, and they're not affected by a particular police act – but they see something in the news that disturbs them, and they're prevented by this bill from lodging a complaint. They are prevented in a sense from lodging a formal complaint, but anybody at any time can complain to a police chief about the conduct of his officers, and the chief is responsible to the commission, so there is a complaint process even for somebody that's completely unaffected by a particular act. So it's not true that people don't have the right to complain. As I said, if they do complain to the chief and they're not satisfied with his response, they can complain directly to the commission, which is the chief's employer. I think they still have access.

Now, there was an issue raised also by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, I believe, about providing the Law Enforcement Review Board with the authority to dismiss an appeal if a complainant fails to follow the process. Mr. Chairman, the spirit and intent of this provision is to address extreme cases of belligerent or obstructive behaviour. It's not intended to restrict participant behaviour. Certainly, the complainant whose behaviour or conduct is under question has the right to attend the hearing and to be represented by counsel. It would be the extremes of behaviour that would allow the LERB to dismiss a complaint. I'll give you an example. If somebody has moved from the province, the LERB can dismiss the complaint, and when the complainant doesn't return to the province to participate, the LERB has to have a recourse.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood did table some concerns about whether the chief should be able to decide when a matter is not serious. I think we have to admit that some matters simply are not serious such as, for example, a complaint of disrespectful behaviour on the part of an officer during a traffic stop. While I don't for a second deny that such things go on and that people should have a right to complain, there's a point where such a complaint should not proceed to the Law Enforcement Review Board. The person does have a right to complain to the chief. If they're not happy with the chief's decision, they have the right to complain against the chief. In addition, the Police Amendment Act brings forth a number of alternative dispute mechanisms. The employment of one such mechanism would probably lead the police chief to dismiss the formal side of the complaint and proceed with the alternative dispute resolution.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo talked about the ability for the LERB to dismiss a complaint outright. All complainants can appeal the decision of a chief of police directly to the LERB within 30 days. The Police Amendment Act does allow the LERB to decide if the complaint is valid or frivolous or vexatious or made in bad faith. Again, the person has a right to be there and a right to have counsel present. Such a claim can be made in a court case as well.

For valid appeals the amendment act allows the LERB to decide which appeal process is most appropriate and to ensure timely and efficient resolution. That's what this bill is about, Mr. Chair. We have to find a way to get these complaints and appeals through a process in a timely fashion so that Albertans are satisfied with the response and the timing of the response.

The Member for Calgary-Buffalo raised some interesting concerns about the powers of public complaint directors and said that the provision allows for the second-guessing of investigators during an investigation and provides for unnecessary scrutiny over investigators. The integrity of the investigative process is paramount; I agree with that. We did some pretty extensive consulting on this one after the member raised those concerns.

Really, the Police Amendment Act clarifies that the role of the public complaint director is to monitor. The complaint director has no investigative function at all. His role is to support the integrity of the complaint process from a civilian standpoint. It's an oversight role. The provisions forwarded here are consistent with the move in British Columbia and Ontario legislation to secure a higher level of civilian oversight – I think that's what we're all after – and the due diligence of complaint investigations. But the complaint director cannot intervene in an investigation. It's, in fact, obstruction to do so.

In Alberta the police chief is the disciplinary authority here. The police investigations of misconduct not properly investigated would bring a police service into disrepute. I don't find any cause for complaint there.

But I'll say in closing, Mr. Chairman, that I was surprised by the objection to the bill on that side of the House by the various opposition members that spoke to it. We double-checked with our stakeholders that, in fact, they were consulted on these and that they remain in support. That is, in fact, the case. The couple I talked to – I made a commitment, but I'll publicly make the commitment here. I think for some of the people that originally provided input, the stakeholder groups that provided input, the devil may be in the details. So I've committed to a couple and I'll commit here in the House that we will take the regulations out before we pass them or go back to our stakeholders.

Mr. Chairman, I thank the House for the ability to speak to address some of the concerns on Bill 27. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Do any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to speak to Bill 27 in committee. I appreciated the comments from the Solicitor General. It's always valuable when the minister brings back specific answers to questions that are raised in debate.

If I heard correctly, I was particularly struck and pleased by the minister's closing comments that he would take regulations and circulate them around back to stakeholders before implementing them. Of course, we would prefer a process in which the regulations were brought forward with the legislation. Believe it or not, there was a time when that was the practice. Nonetheless, I do appreciate the responsiveness of the Solicitor General.

This bill is about something very fundamental to our society, which is public confidence in the police. We spoke about this. I spoke about this the other night. Canadians have a wonderful heritage, a very important heritage, in our civilized country of excellent relations in general between civilians and police. In many, many countries in the world there's always tension between the police and the civilians. Even with our neighbours to the south many, many times the relations between police and civilians are strained. Certainly, in many countries in less developed parts of the world, you know, the term "police state" is used for a reason. People live in fear of the police.

Sadly, as has been remarked in this Assembly, the reputation of police in Canada has been tarnished in the last decade or so, whether it's dramatic cases involving tasers – and it's not just the RCMP; it's many other police forces who are caught in controversies concerning tasers or around other complaints: the G-20 episode in Toronto or the Whyte Avenue riots in Edmonton several years ago, where police conduct is being called into question. We need to have measures in place to ensure that civilians have confidence that if they file a complaint against the police if they feel that police are abusive, the complaint will be properly dealt with.

At the same time, it's delicate because we have to respect the very difficult job the police have in dealing with people who are themselves abusive, violent, you know, sometimes intoxicated, or otherwise difficult. So my huge respect goes out to all police officers who try to navigate that line about treating people with respect when those people are often being abusive to the police. Nonetheless, as an Assembly we have a job to protect the public confidence in the police.

I know our caucus has looked at this legislation, Mr. Chairman. I actually have an amendment to propose for Bill 27, and I've got the appropriate number of copies here.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. Hon. member, we'll have the pages distribute them, and then we'll proceed.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, please proceed.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. This will be, I take it, amendment A1?

The Deputy Chair: Amendment A1.

Dr. Taft: I'll read it into the record. It's very brief. I signed this amendment on behalf of the Member for Calgary-Buffalo, who is our critic for this area, and it reads as follows: "Mr. Hehr to move that Bill 27, Police Amendment Act, 2010, be amended in section 6(a), in the proposed section 20(1)(e.1) and (e.2), by striking out 'is unable' wherever it occurs." That's the sum total of this amendment, Mr. Chairman.

12:30

Really, this amendment is about clarification. This isn't, I don't think, a controversial move, but it is about precise language and clarification of what's intended here. Now, at this stage, in committee, I just want to get into the record our understanding of how Bill 27 reads before this amendment. As it stands right now section 20 of Bill 27 was amended in subsection (1) by adding the following after clause (c):

(e.1) if a complainant fails to attend, to answer questions or to produce an item as required under clause (c) or (d), and then the next two words are crucial, Mr. Chairman, is unable or refuses to participate or to follow processes or conducts himself or herself in an inappropriate manner, the Board may dismiss the matter; and then it continues:

(e.2) if a witness fails to attend or to answer questions, is unable or refuses to participate or to follow processes or conducts himself or herself in an inappropriate manner, the Board may dismiss the witness and continue with the matter.

Mr. Chairman, the point of the amendment I have moved on behalf of the Member for Calgary-Buffalo is to pull out those two words "is unable" because as we read it, it doesn't make sense. Let's imagine that for whatever reason somebody is unable: they're in a coma or they're somehow predisposed. We shouldn't have legislation that forces this particular outcome. Even where a complainant – well, I'll go on our briefing notes here.

The proposed changes to section 20 are patently absurd in situations where the complainant or a witness is unable to respond. Their inability should not be used as a pretext to dismiss what might be a valid appeal. Even where a complainant or witness falls into any of the behavioural classes provided above, it should simply be assessed against their credibility rather than used as a means to expedite the disposal of the appeal. This type of power is foreign to criminal matters, civil trials, administrative tribunals, or almost any other professional discipline systems. In almost any other adjudicative setting if a complainant or a witness is guilty of behaving in the ways listed in (e.1) or (e.2), the hearing would simply proceed to its conclusion based on the available evidence. In other words, this is an opportunity to refine and clarify the language of this legislation, Mr. Chairman.

With those comments, I look forward to hearing from any other members on this. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Public Security.

Mr. Oberle: Is there nobody else?

The Deputy Chair: Does the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity wish to speak?

Mr. Chase: Yeah. Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. From my – and I'll put it on the record – limited understanding of legal procedures despite the fact that my son-in-law is a member of Bennett Jones and my brother is a partner at Miles Davison, and I'm proud of both of them, and the hon. housing minister went to school with my son-in-law at the University of Alberta, a terrific institution . . .

Mr. Denis: Bar school.

Mr. Chase: Oh, pardon me. Bar school. Okay. They went to the bar frequently together.

My understanding, Mr. Chair, of this legislation, is that it's attempting to recognize that a person who is being tried has every right to fair representation. In other words, if for some reason they're affected by addictions, if for some reason they're affected by mental illness, if there is an intellectual capacity problem, if there is a health concern, if they're not capable of interpreting and understanding and responding in the court proceedings, then they should not, basically – I think the word is indemnify themselves; in other words, they should not accidentally not be able to defend themselves.

Therefore, this amendment, by taking out "is unable," recognizes the fact that certain individuals require almost greater understanding or greater appreciation than a person whose faculties are without question. It may be, Mr. Chair, a person who does not have the educational background to fully comprehend what is taking place during the court proceedings. This amendment gives more protection to the complainant to ensure that they're fully understanding and can then be properly supported. It's an attempt, basically, to make the law level to all individuals regardless of where they're at in their comprehension.

Mr. Chair, I very much appreciate the opportunity to do a little bit of service toward explaining the justification for this amendment, and I'm going to turn it over to the professionals to argue it to a stronger extent. Thank you for the opportunity to participate on amendment A1.

The Deputy Chair: Do any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm pleased to be able to rise to speak in general on this bill at the committee stage and particularly to the amendment which we have before us today. I'd like to start by saying that had I had my way, I would have been able to speak on this bill in second reading as had been originally planned. But through some unfortunate turn of events the matter was voted out of second reading, even though the opposition had indicated that they had some amendments prepared to first address this bill in second reading.

One of those amendments, of course, which relates to this amendment, was simply to have the whole bill referred to committee for greater review because there are a number of elements in the bill which sort of seem to appear out of nowhere and do not reflect extensive consultation with all of the stakeholders involved in police complaints, police oversight, and the policing process. I appreciate that not all the stakeholders in this community, for lack of a better word, necessarily have the same position on issues as it relates to how this overall function is administered. Nonetheless, it appears to me through my consultations that there is a fair amount of consensus that would be better dealt with by an opportunity to review it in its entirety with all of the stakeholders. There is quite a bit of consensus in that regard.

Having said that, though, we are now in committee because we didn't have an opportunity to refer this bill to a standing committee of the House, where we could have a more wide-ranging conversation. Now we're in the position of looking at amendment after amendment after amendment to this bill.

The amendment that was brought forward by the Member for Edmonton-Riverview on behalf of the Member for Calgary-Buffalo relates to one particular element of this bill which is problematic, and that, in particular, deals with the rights generally of the complainant in this process because, you know, one person's streamlining of an adjudicated process is another person's loss of rights. Of course, in this particular case what we are dealing with are those people who are filing complaints against the actions of the police.

Let me start by saying that, like most members of this House, I have tremendous respect for the work done by our police officers and the important role that they play within our society and within our communities in terms of keeping people safe. They often put themselves on the line, and they jeopardize their own safety day in, day out in terms of doing that work. I don't think it's possible, really, you know, to articulate often enough our appreciation for that choice that they make. And let me just sort of say as well, before I get to my next point, that because we believe generally in the important role that the police play, we have also often supported calls to increase the number of police officers who are funded throughout our province and in our communities.

Notwithstanding that, while our community and all of us from all sides of the House have tremendous respect for the police, we do that because they have a tremendous public trust. They hold a tremendous public trust, and they are in a position of tremendous public trust. Because of that they are given uncommon levels of authority and uncommon tools with which to administer that authority. And it is when you give over to a group of people a tremendous amount of public trust that on the flip side of that you also raise the bar of what it is and how it is you expect them to conduct themselves. You cannot hand over public trust to such a level that we do to the police without at the same time expecting a very high standard of conduct. I know that we get a very high standard of conduct from the majority of police the majority of the time, and I don't question that.

But the reality is that sometimes – they are human, like anyone else – the dynamics of the relationship between the police and the public is such that there is a particular portion of the public that they're most likely to come into contact with. That particular portion of the public is not, actually, you know, the gangland dealers and the Tony Sopranos of the world and all those people. It often, actually, tends to be the most downtrodden within our society who engage in property crimes and who suffer from a variety of other challenges within society. Those people, who are often very voiceless and are struggling themselves, are the ones who make up the biggest group that the police deal with. Those are the people with the least amount of voice.

So when we have a group that has unprecedented authority, unprecedented capacity to exercise that authority, and unprecedented levels of public trust coming up against a group that has an unprecedented lack of all those things, the possibility exists for there to be problems in that relationship, and there needs to be a mechanism for those folks to be able to file complaints against the police where it is necessary, where the circumstances require that. What this act does in general is that it limits the scope and the opportunity for that to happen. In particular, in the section that this particular amendment addresses, section 20, it expands tremendously the ability of the panel which would hear these complaints to dismiss the complaints when they seek to deal with their workload or move through a problematic process or whatever.

The new bill actually would allow for a much broader range of circumstances within which these complaints can be dismissed by this panel. One of the ways that this bill would allow for these complaints to be summarily dismissed by this panel is by essentially saying that they can dismiss them if they are unable to participate in the process.

Well, let's talk a little bit about the various ways in which a member of the public might be unable to participate in the process. Let's think about the most well-known example of where a person, a citizen who came into contact with the police was unable to defend themselves. I speak of the Dziekanski case in Vancouver. There we had the classic example of somebody who came into a tragic and unfortunate interaction with legal authority in that this was a person with a mental health issue. That person was taken into custody. They had a mental health issue. They were unable to describe their situation, to describe what was going on with themselves, and then they were accidentally killed, frankly, in that process. All of that happened because they were unable to stand up for themselves or speak up for themselves in the first place. Then, of course, they were unable to speak for themselves subsequently because they were dead.

That's the most obvious place where someone might be unable to participate in a process. But had that situation unfolded slightly differently, wherein Mr. Dziekanski had simply ended up in the hospital and, we wish desperately, had actually survived that process such that he might have been able to file a complaint against his treatment by the police at that time, he still may well have been unable to meet the requirements that this minister wants us to put into this act in terms of how he fulfills his complaint or how he handles his complaint. Under this act the panel has the authority to dismiss a complaint where the complainant, well, fails to attend, fails to answer questions, fails to produce an item required, refuses to participate, refuses to follow processes, or basically fails to conduct himself or herself in an appropriate manner.

Well, I hate to break it to you, but a lot of the people who have legitimate complaints against the police happen to have what are referred to as comorbid conditions of mental health issues and addictions issues, and they may well not be able to meet these criteria. It may simply be a function of being unable to meet these criteria because of their mental health issues. This gives far, far too much authority to the Law Enforcement Review Board or to the police chief to dismiss the complaint just like that. So what we do, then, is we take these people who have been historically and systemically marginalized within our society, and we crystalize that process of marginalization within this piece of legislation so that it builds on itself and just grows from itself. We do that in a way that I think does not befit the intentions of the police complaint process and, I think, even perhaps the intentions, in many respects, of this government. This is something that needs to be changed.

Last year I went to . . . [interjection] Pardon me? Sorry. I'm receiving a note of some type.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, could you clear the paper away from your microphone? Then perhaps we'll be able to hear better.

Ms Notley: Oh, sorry. I thought it actually wasn't by my mike but was by my colleague's mike. Who knows? Thank you. Sorry about that.

I remember last year going to a meeting around the closure of Alberta Hospital Edmonton, and at that time we had a representative from the Vancouver Police Department come and speak to us at a rally that consisted of 500 or 600 very concerned and upset Albertans. They spoke to us about the fact that – I can't remember the specific figures, so you'll have to take this with a grain of salt, but I'm close to having the right ones, anyway – roughly 60 per cent of the work that they did involved about 500 of the same people going through the system over and over and over and over again. Those people went through the system over and over and over again because they were basically people conducting petty crimes and were homeless in many cases and suffered from mental health issues. They were the people that were the result of a failed experiment in B.C. to deinstitutionalize mental health and close a mental health institution akin to Alberta Hospital.

The fact of the matter is that these police officers came to us and said: "The vast majority of our work is working with the mentally ill now. Just so you know, you're paying your police officers and giving them all this authority but not training them to do this job. But because we are the place of last resort, because we are the emergency responders, we are the ones who are dealing with these people. They've long since been moved out or kicked out of the ERs in many cases, and we are the last responders. This is whom we do the most of our work with." That's what they told us at this really important public information rally.

In fact, what happens is that they often end up putting these folks into jails because there's no other place for them. We talk about how expensive the acute-care beds are in our hospitals, and in fact the beds in jails are even more expensive, if you can believe it. Nonetheless, all this goes to say that these are the people that come into the most contact, unfortunately, these days with our police officers. These are the people who are most likely to fit the description of being unable to meet the various criteria which are set out in this section of the act that this government wants us to pass, so these are the people who are most likely going to be the recipients of this new discretion that we give to the Law Enforcement Review Board to simply dismiss their claims.

You know what? Just because someone is mentally ill does not mean that there wasn't something done to them that was unfair. You know the old saying: just because you're paranoid, it doesn't mean that someone isn't out to get you. Well, the fact of the matter is that if you're living on the street and you're coming into contact with law enforcement officers over and over and over again, there may well be some inappropriate interactions between you and that law enforcement officer. We have heard examples of that through the previous hearings that we've had to date that were conducted by the Law Enforcement Review Board. I shudder to think what would have happened to some of those high-profile cases if this piece of legislation were in place. They probably would have been dismissed very, very early on.

Last night, Mr. Chairman, I was at an event in my community that was a fundraiser for an organization that assists young adults who live on the street in my riding. Of course, in my riding, including the Whyte Ave. area, we have probably a disproportionate number of young people who, unfortunately, are living on the street because they have fallen through the ever-widening cracks created by our inadequate system of social supports. While there, I spoke to some volunteers who work in that area, and they talked very positively about the intentions of some of the community police that they had run into. They talked very positively about the practice of many of the police officers whom they had had occasion to work with and those police officers within the community. They spoke very positively about their own interaction with them, and they also spoke very positively about how many of them interacted with people on the street.

However, they also talked to me about how in some cases, in the minority of cases, yes, but in some cases nonetheless, they observed a distinct change in the way the officers interacted with the young people who were living on the street who were often causing – you know, they were definitely engaging in criminal activity, not by any way the most serious criminal activity on the spectrum of criminal activity but criminal activity nonetheless. They talked about how these officers changed the way they dealt with those people and how a very different, authoritarian, and sometimes inappropriate process or inappropriate set of tactics was engaged in. Let me be clear. This was without question the minority, the very small minority of police officers, but they told me just last night that they saw that occurring.

Once again the young adult, who should be in receipt of benefits for persons with development difficulties, who according to the children's advocate clearly is not receiving that kind of support because of the budget cuts with PDD, who should still be in care and receiving support through Children and Youth Services but who has effectively been cut loose because they are of the older group and the resources have been cut – and this is exactly the thing that the children's advocate talked about in his report, that was filed in this Legislature a mere week ago.

That child or young adult may suffer from a range of challenges, whether they be learning disabilities, whether they be mental health issues, whether they be addictions issues, whether they be issues arising from growing up as victims in abusive households. Whatever their story is, these are people that come into contact with the police on a regular basis, who very possibly will be unable to meet the criteria that are set out by the Law Enforcement Review Board and who as a result would be summarily dismissed from being able to file and have seen through complaints against police officers at the Law Enforcement Review Board.

This is why this amendment is an important first step. It's a small first step. If I had written the amendment, I might have written it a bit differently. I might have done more than simply remove the one clause which allows them to be summarily dismissed. I might have actually, instead of removing the words "is unable" . . . [Ms Notley's speaking time expired] Sorry. I'll speak to it again.

The Deputy Chair: Do any other members wish to speak to the amendment to Bill 27? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity on the amendment.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair, for this opportunity to speak again on amendment A1. I very much appreciated the comments made by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, who has the legal background and knowledge to more thoroughly explain what is being asked for in the amendment. I do want to point out that while I believe in the need for civilian oversight, very much in the way I have expressed the need for ministerial oversight, legislation as opposed to regulation, I have tremendous faith in a number of individuals that I have come into contact with.

This gives me an opportunity to indicate Inspector Guy Slater of the Calgary police force, who has provided a tremendous amount of information. Also, I want to toss a bouquet to Police Chief Rick Hanson of the Calgary police force, Police Chief Mike Boyd, who is soon retiring from the Edmonton police force and who spent a tremendous amount of his policing time in the RCMP. I want to send out bouquets to all the school resource officers, who involve themselves with youth at a very early age and help to establish the respect that police are due in the pursuit of their duties. So thank you very much, Mr. Chair, for allowing me to pass out those bouquets.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak to the amendment?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Chairman, I need to address some of the comments that were tabled, in particular, by the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. First, the Member for Edmonton-Riverview made an interesting comment – I don't have the words here – something in the nature that police forces have fallen into disrepute or incidents of disrepute in the last few years. I wouldn't deny that. I don't think anybody in Canada would deny that there have been some serious incidents, but I beg to point out: not in Alberta.

Mr. Chair, we've got an excellent police system in our province, an excellent group of fine, professional police officers in the towns and cities, whether it's the RCMP, the municipal police forces, our sheriffs. We have a great law enforcement system in our province, in fact. It's not because we just happened to get the luck of the draw and get some really good, fine, upstanding officers, which we did. We have a good oversight system, and I would argue that oversight is absolutely critical.

The current Police Amendment Act before us attempts to maybe streamline that process a little bit and bring added rigour to it, I think, but it doesn't intend to in any way overturn it, restrict anybody's access to the system in any way. I've heard comments of closing of ranks or something like that. Far from the truth. Not only does it continue to allow everybody access to the system; it allows for alternate dispute resolution mechanisms, which broadens the range of options available to us.

Nonetheless, occasionally there are people that come before the system that refuse to participate in the system for whatever reason, and I would have to admit up front that I can't say that I understand it. It is true that there are occasionally frivolous complaints. There are complainants who do not participate, who refuse to show up at hearing. There has to be a way at stages through the complaint process where people that are there for whatever reason but not for the reason to forward a legitimate complaint through the system – we have to be able to halt the process, to say, "This is not a legitimate complaint" or "This complainant is acting in a frivolous or vexatious manner." That's a remedy that the courts also have available to them.

I've got to say, though, that the view of the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona regarding the word "unable," while it certainly tugs the heartstrings, is not a very fair characterization of how the process works. If I was to envision some poor perhaps handicapped, challenged person sitting at a table with floodlights pointing at them and this array of mean-looking police officers and lawyers and maybe the odd police officer had his hand on his weapon or something, the person trembling there, being beaten upon, I might agree that the person might in that circumstance be unable to participate. I think the member would have to agree that that's most certainly not how the complaints process works. For starters, that person most likely is going to have either counsel or some agent or representative with them, who would be able to participate, and second of all, this is not an inquisition. It's a professional dispute resolution mechanism.

So I take a little bit of offence at that because it's an unfair characterization of how the complaints process works. In actual fact, it works very well today, and it's going to work better after the passage of the Police Amendment Act. Today citizens across our province, whether they're in a large municipality policed by a municipal police force or in a rural municipality policed by the RCMP, have access to what I think is an excellent oversight mechanism, and it's staffed by a bunch of great people, whether they're police commissions or committees. There are complaints directors. Department staff work very hard to ensure that policing is fair and effective and that oversight is fair and effective in our province. And I do seriously think that they do a bang-up job of it.

Mr. Chair, one of the reasons that works is because there's excellent communication, and I think that's borne out in the consultation that happened leading up to the tabling of this bill. All of the stakeholder groups were consulted. You know, we went to great lengths to talk to people, recognizing that sometimes compromise is required between divergent viewpoints. In many cases unanimous opinion was forwarded about sections of the act that need tweaking.

Again, I don't think this is an overhaul of the discipline process. It's a bill designed to streamline, to make it more effective and more transparent. It doesn't restrict anybody's access, and I think that's important.

While I don't think the hon. member wishes to bring any police forces or any police commissions or the LERB or anybody into disrepute, I think the characterization of the word "unable" in that particular case is perhaps a little unfair to how the process actually works.

Mr. Chair, the functioning of police in our society is absolutely critical, obviously, and hand in hand with that is the understanding of the populace that their actions are fair and effective. I think that our current complaints process as proposed to be modified by this bill provides that oversight.

We have not only the oversight process that's scoped out in this bill, but the very serious complaints involving severe officer misconduct that may bring the reputation of a police force into disrepute or conduct that injures or causes fatalities to civilians are in fact removed from this investigative process. They're turned over to ASIRT, the Alberta Serious Incident Response Team. That is just another part of what I think is an excellent oversight system of our police.

That provides for independent investigation by professional investigators. It's been lauded nationally as an oversight model. It's been accepted, in fact, by the RCMP, who have, you know, their own complaint system. They have nationally endorsed ASIRT or ASIRT-like models. That is something for Albertans to be proud of. It was struck, designed here.

It's chaired by the unbelievably capable Clifton Purvis, who is just amazing, actually a public prosecutor in our system. He chairs ASIRT and does just a bang-up job. While there have been incidents in other provinces and there have been incidents here, they've been effectively and quickly and to a proper and right end investigated and dealt with.

Some of the issues that we see residing within the complaint system now actually predate some of the oversight mechanisms that we have today, and that's precisely why the amendment act is required. We want to continue to clean up our system, to provide a flow. It's got to be effective and timely and transparent and all those things.

I really do honestly believe that the current Police Amendment Act before us is a good bill. It will move forward. It will improve our oversight system in the province. It will continue to allow complainants to bring forward complaints.

There was one other argument made in second reading that I failed to address and that I need to mention here, that being the issue of: now we've curtailed the timelines. There's a point where it's too late, where a complainant should not be able to bring a complaint forward. Actually, we haven't changed the timeline except that we've allowed for the timeline to be from not the incident happening but from the discovery of the evidence. In fact, that extends the timeline, not shortens it.

If I was a complainant before the system and during the complaints process, after a couple of appeals and going back to the police chief and whatever else happens in the disposition of that complaint, I were to discover that a police officer had actually illegally searched my name, through criminal records or some other system, I could at that point, even though it may be two years later, lodge a complaint within one year of my discovering that that actually happened. It's unlikely that I would discover that the night that the original incident happened. Maybe the police officer never even did it that night, but it's unlikely to impossible that I would know that that happened that night. So the complaints process actually extends the timeline from the point of discovery, not from the point of the initial incident.

I just wanted to relay those comments. I believe that the Member for Edmonton-Riverview wants to rise. I'm going to take my chair, Mr. Chairman.

Thank you.

1:10

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Yes. Thank you. I just wanted to comment on a couple of the comments made by the minister before the Member for Edmonton-Riverview proceeds to close debate on this amendment. The minister suggested that I had unfairly characterized the hearing process and unfairly characterized what constitutes "unable," and I really do feel the need to challenge his challenge of my characterization.

First of all, I think it's important to understand that this amendment goes together with an attempt to address as well other parts of the act that are changing. One of the key parts of the act that is changing is the fact that the people who are characterized as parties or who are eligible to serve as parties are limited. Where you might have a complainant who truly for all intents and purposes is not able to navigate through a complaint process, right now it is possible for other interested third parties to file a complaint on their behalf. Indeed, we have specific examples of this having occurred in the last two or three years, where other interested parties have filed a complaint on behalf of someone who has been the unfortunate recipient or victim of inappropriate activity on the part of the representative of the police force. So that is a concern. Because that's going to be limited, those people truly may not be able to conduct themselves appropriately, and that's just the way it is.

Another reason why they may not be able. I mean, the minister said: well, they may well have access to a representative or counsel. The minister sits directly beside the Attorney General and has observed the conversations that have gone on at some length over the course of the last year where we have determined that regardless of who is funding what and whose fault it is that the net amount of money available to our legal aid system has dropped dramatically, the fact of the matter is that legal aid has dropped dramatically. It is no longer the way it used to be, and access to counsel is prohibitive. Prohibitive. The fact of the matter is that it is very commonly the case that people go before administrative tribunals without the benefit of counsel.

As someone who has in the past sat as a member of an administrative tribunal, I know full well that the rules of administrative tribunals actually in some cases limit tribunal members from attempting to engage in what could be characterized as any form of advocacy for an unrepresented complainant who comes before them. They may know that the complainant clearly does not understand the issue that is being discussed at that particular point. They may know that the conversation has moved on to, let's say, some type of preliminary legal issue, but they see that the complainant completely does not understand that that's what happened and are unable to make the appropriate legal argument on their behalf. This happens in administrative tribunals all the time. So they sit with their hands tied because the person that comes before them simply is unable to represent themselves or to follow the process or to do any of that kind of stuff. There's only so much discretion that administrative tribunal members are given to allow for a certain amount of latitude in terms of process.

With this clause, counsel for the other parties, the police, may well actually have the ability to use this clause to specifically compel the LERB to dismiss something even where the LERB may not want to. They'll certainly now be able to make an application under this clause. So we're actually going to increase the opportunity for the person's voice to be lost in this process.

I want to say very clearly that as someone who has served as a member of an administrative tribunal, I do believe that my characterization of "unable" is absolutely fair and that it's not in any way a comment that is meant to be negative about how the LERB functions. Quite the opposite. It is how most administrative tribunals are compelled to function. I have heard from all parties that they're quite happy generally with how the LERB functions, but it's an administrative tribunal, and it is complex, and it is legalese, and the people that come before it as complainants are often not able to function at the level that others might want them to, particularly because of the population that we're talking about here. That group is particularly vulnerable to suffering the negative impact that I am suggesting this act will bring about.

To be clear, I will say that I support this amendment, and I urge members to pass this amendment. I will however go further to say that I think this amendment only starts to get at the problem and that what we really need to do is delete subsection 6(a)(e.1). I am prepared to consider that the witness element of it might need to stay, but the complainant piece absolutely should not. That needs to go. But since that's not the amendment before us and we're simply talking about constricting the application of that amendment somewhat, as a first start I would urge all members to consider supporting this amendment.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, before we continue, may we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests (reversion)

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Culture and Community Spirit.

Mr. Blackett: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'd like to rise today to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly Ms Luanne Whitmarsh, a constituent of mine in Calgary-North West and the CEO of the Kerby Centre in Calgary. The Kerby Centre is an organization run by seniors for seniors with the support of more than 500 volunteers, who contributed more than 80,000 hours of support in 2009 alone. Ms Whitmarsh, a social worker by trade, is someone who has worked with communities and our seniors throughout her professional career. I invite her to rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you so much, Mr. Chair, from the bottom of my heart. I've been waiting for approximately six months to make this introduction, so today is a wonderful day. I'm overflowing with appreciation as I introduce the three most important people in my life, who are sitting in your gallery today. My wife, Jennifer, is truly my hero, and just one reason for that is that just over six months ago, after a very difficult labour and emergency C-section surgery, she gave birth to a little one, whom we think is tied for the title of the world's most beautiful boy. Early in the pregnancy we were told that there may be serious complications for our baby, so we gave him the name Evan, which means God is gracious, and we thought he could use a strong middle name, especially under the circumstances, so we chose Armstrong. I'm proud and humbled to report that everything worked out very, very well. Evan Armstrong Rodney was nine pounds, six ounces when he was born, and he is now a very strong, peaceful, and happy young man, who has without a doubt the best mom in the whole wide world. He greatly admires my third guest, our first-born, Dawson Logan Rodney, who is athletic, intelligent, and respectful. I would ask that all of our colleagues join me in welcoming my family to our Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Chair. This is obviously going to be a day of families. I have three introductions today, and I am so very proud to be able to introduce to you and through you to this House three amazing young women, who are coincidentally my daughters. My oldest daughter, Florence Christophers, mother to my granddaughter Skye, was the president of her high school and a STEP student for the late MLA Dick Johnston. She's a grad of the University of Alberta and was elected to student council. Her master's in philosophy is from Trinity College in Dublin, Ireland. She was a constituency manager for a retired member of this House, Dr. Raj Pannu. She worked for the UN organization with children from war-torn countries. Florence ran for the first time in the last municipal election and is now a councillor for the town of Okotoks.

My youngest daughter, Bridget Mearns, belonged to the Progressive Conservative Youth Association, along with many of those who are staff members to ministers of this government today. She was also a STEP student for the late MLA Dick Johnston. Her undergraduate degree is from the University of Lethbridge, and she has a French language diploma from the University of Rouen in France. She worked on the Hill in Ottawa as an executive assistant to MP Blaine Thacker. She was an executive assistant and constituency office manager for this member and actually was considered the babysitter. She has extensive knowledge in the financial investment industry. Bridget ran for the first time in the last municipal election and is now an alderman for the city of Lethbridge.

1:20

My middle daughter, Shelagh, is the mother of my granddaughter Kerstin, and she is our reality rock. She is not political at all. However, she did work for the Member for Strathcona. She is the one with the real walking around skills. She is a hairstylist and, before she hurt her back, was an exceptional personal care aide in geriatrics. She can drive a combine, a five-ton truck, a tractor. She can vaccinate and tag calves. In other words, she can feed us. She is presently with the Sherwood Park News.

Please join me as I ask my girls to stand for the traditional welcome.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Today I'd like to rise and introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly three awesome classes of students from George McDougall high school who I had the opportunity to meet just a few moments ago and their teachers Ms Stephanie Malo, Mrs. Barb Racine, Mr. Gregg Moss, and Mrs. Virginia Taumoli, of course, and their parent helpers who are there with them: Mrs. Carolyne Turk, Mr. Terry Little, Mr. Andrew Talbot, Mr. Scott Kolstad, and Mrs. Diane Martin. If they would all rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Deputy Chair: Are there any others?

Hon. members, it's my pleasure today to introduce today to the members of the Assembly 15 students from the Faculty of Law at the University of Alberta who are enrolled in a course on legislative process and legislative drafting taught by the law clerk here, Mr. Rob Reynolds, and the chief legislative counsel for the government, Mr. Peter Pagano, who is accompanying them. They're seated in the members' gallery, and I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm just noticing an introduction of special guests slip at the adjacent desk, and I'd like to report on behalf of the hon. Member for Medicine Hat that if those from Alberta Environment haven't been introduced, I would be honored to do so: Susan Johnstone, Janelle Hancock, Jacqueline Desrochers, Nick Beranek, and Josh McGregor. If they are indeed in the members' gallery or in the public gallery, I would ask that they please rise and receive the warm acclaim of our members here.

The Deputy Chair: Are there any others?

Dr. Taft: Mr. Chairman, I know that in a moment the Member for Edmonton-Centre wants to introduce some special guests. She just got pulled out of the Assembly for a moment, so we may have to revert again.

The Deputy Chair: Yes. We will revert back.

Dr. Taft: Thank you very much.

Bill 27
Police Amendment Act, 2010

The Deputy Chair: Okay. We will go back to amendment A1. Any comments or questions on amendment A1? The hon. Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I'm pleased to rise and just offer some comments here. I am going to support the notice of amendment on Bill 27 that we received from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview on behalf of the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo. I first just want to tell this House how I'm excited that there are 15 future lawyers in the galleries. If there's one thing we need, it's more lawyers in this Chamber.

This bill, of course, is about police oversight. When dealing with police oversight I often look back – one of my best friends is a police officer in the city of Calgary. He often tells me what the complaints process is about, some of the things he's gone through, some of the things that are good, some of the things are bad. But where this all really goes back to is the whole concept of the common law rule of law, Mr. Chair. I pulled up something just on the Internet briefly about the rule of law, and it goes back to 1610.

Amongst many other points of happiness and freedom, which your majesty's subjects of this kingdom have enjoyed under your royal progenitors, kings and queens of this realm, there is none which they have accounted more dear and precious than this, to be guided and governed by certain rule of law, which giveth both to the head and members that which of right belongeth to them; and not by any uncertain or arbitrary form of government.

In the spirit of our common law tradition that we have in place in places like Canada, of course, in the United States, the United Kingdom, Australia, New Zealand, and several other realms across the globe, I'd argue that this is one of the best aspects of our whole system, the fact that all people are considered to be equal before the law.

As this relates to the Police Amendment Act, Bill 27, dealing with police oversight, the police in our society and our province and our cities and our towns are an essential service. Even the hardest core of libertarians would argue that police are one of the essential services of the government. But the police are comprised of individuals, and guess what? Individuals make mistakes. That's why we need a police oversight process and an adequate complaints process.

This bill in and of itself, Mr. Chair, is going to streamline the complaints process. It's going to make the process better. It's going to make the process more accessible to the average, everyday person. It's going to deal with frivolous and vexatious complaints. These types of complaints, obviously, are going to be dismissed summarily, and I wanted to commend the hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security for dealing with that and recognizing that, in fact, there can be frivolous complaints that are deceitful, that inveigle, that obfuscate the entire process.

In addition, this bill also prevents unaffected third parties from filing a complaint. That doesn't mean that a third party cannot have access to the complaints process, Mr. Chair. It means, rather, that we have to set reasonable checks and balances. A third party can still go and apply to the chief of police if he or she feels that they are aggrieved.

Now, in particular, I wanted to just address a couple of things.

Dealing with the amendment itself, though, the amendment seeks to amend in section 6(a) proposed section 20(1)(e.1) and (e.2) by striking out "is unable" wherever it occurs. Now, just moving to section 6 here as it currently reads:

If a complainant fails to attend, to answer questions or to produce an item as required under [a subsequent clause], is unable or refuses to participate or to follow processes or conducts himself or herself in an inappropriate matter, the Board may dismiss the matter.

The amendment as it is proposed by the Member for Edmonton-Riverview removes the word "unable" in this case. What that would indicate is that removing "unable" removes the fact that a person could make a defence indicating: oh, I was unable to perform these duties. Well, that is a rather subjective determination. I think the member is actually quite correct because if you talk about just refusing as opposed to being unable, refusing, again, is just someone who makes a negative reaction: we need you to produce this, and they simply say no.

Clearly, the spirit of this bill, again, is to streamline the whole process, and by streamlining the whole process, you're going to have a better process in which people can have confidence in the entire police system of oversight but also in the entire complaint process as well.

I did have a couple of comments on Twitter about this. I'm not going to quote them directly, Mr. Chair, but people here just want an adequate complaints process.

Dealing with this amendment, I have to say that this is one of the rare situations where I agree with the Member for Edmonton-Riverview. I know of maybe one other; I think maybe it had to do with the head of state in this country. But I think that he's on the right track here, and realistically as a government we have to go and be open and actually consider some things that the opposition has to say. They do have some good ideas occasionally, and this is actually one of them as well.

I think that this amendment, again, will further foster greater confidence in our police process, in our system of rule of law, and also in the complaints process. I actually was part of one of the complaint processes, representing someone once. Of course, I won't say what that was. In particular, this process must be accessible to the average, everyday person, knowing that not everybody has a law degree; not everybody is a police officer.

Supporting this amendment goes directly in favour of the pith and substance of Bill 27, the Police Amendment Act, 2010. I would just encourage all members to support this amendment, as I will be doing.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, may we revert again briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman, and thank you to my colleagues in the House for allowing us to revert. You've helped me out of a bind because, believe you me, asking drag queens to come this early in the day is one thing, but asking them to come and then not introducing them truly would have made a short end to my life. So thank you so much.

I am very, very honoured to have visiting us here in the Alberta Legislature in the public gallery members of the current year of the Imperial Sovereign Court of the Wild Rose. Now, this is one chapter of an international group that exists in Canada, the U.S., and Mexico. Our court here in Edmonton is celebrating its 35th year. They are primarily a service organization and fundraising arm. Currently they are supporting prostate cancer research, HIV/AIDS research at the U of A, Camp fYrefly youth leadership camp, the John M. Kerr scholarship fund, and they're working on a partnership with HIV Edmonton to create a camp for children who are infected and affected by HIV.

I would ask the following people to please rise: the Personal Puppy Prince to Emperor 35, Randy Quiver; His Most Imperial and Sovereign Grace, Imperial Grand Duke 35, JJ Velour; His Most Imperial and Sovereign Highness, Imperial Crown Prince 35, Jeffylube XXXPress; Her Most Imperial and Sovereign Majesty, Empress 35 and 1/2, Oprah Cleo Patra. Introducing the current reigning monarchs, friends of mine – I'm very proud of them – His Most Imperial and Sovereign Majesty, the Superhero Wannabee, Playful Puppy, Emerald Emperor, 35th Elected Emperor of Edmonton, Alberta, Canada, Lj Steele; and Her Most Imperial and Sovereign Majesty, the Twisted Emerald Starlight Empress of the People, the 35th Elected Empress of Edmonton, Alberta, Canada, Dee Luv.

Please join me in welcoming them to the Assembly.

The Deputy Chair: The Deputy Premier and Minister of Advanced Education and Technology.

Mr. Horner: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It truly is an honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Mark and Stacy Maurier. This spring Mark and his lovely wife, Stacy, attended the St. Albert Housing Society's second annual home-style breakfast. There was an auction to raise some money for the society, and they were the successful bidders for a lunch at the Legislature. They had intended on watching question period; however, I'm sure they're getting an education as to how we work here in this Legislature today.

Mark is the president and owner of Cam-Trac Inspection Services, operating out of Legal. Cam-Trac cleans and inspects water and sewer pipelines in many of our municipalities and cities in Alberta and the Northwest Territories. His wife, Stacy, is a lawyer practising litigation and wills and estate law at Stewart, Weir & Co. in St. Albert. She is the secretary-treasurer for the Canadian Bar Association's solo and small practice forum. Together Stacy and Mark have two girls, Brooke and Trinity, who attend school at l'école Father Jan. They're very active in ringette. We had a great discussion around ringette and living in our riding. As well, we had a great discussion around property rights and the future of Alberta.

Mr. Chairman, the family resides on an acreage outside St. Albert in Sturgeon county. They are seated in the members' gallery. I would ask that they now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Deputy Chair: We will go back to amendment A1. Does anyone else wish to speak? The hon. Solicitor General.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I just need to make a couple of additional comments and bring this debate on this amendment to a close. The amendment was numbered A1, I believe, so we will refer to it in that sense.

Mr. Chair, again, the operation of the police in our province is, I think, an excellent system of professional police officers overseen by a very professional and modern oversight mechanism. This bill endeavours to bring more clarity, more certainty, and streamline the timelines of that complaints process without restricting people's access to it. I think that's important.

It follows some moves that have been made in other provinces. I think it's sort of leading edge for how oversight is conducted. I believe our oversight mechanism, in fact, stands up to national scrutiny and, as I mentioned earlier, has been nationally lauded as an excellent model. So we want to continue on in that vein, and we want to provide an oversight mechanism that continues to meet the needs of the citizens and allows the police to function but makes sure that they function in a way that they're intended to.

We run a community policing model in our province, which has police officers as members of a community, accountable to the community for how they operate, and I think that this oversight mechanism provides exactly that. That's why we're proposing the amendments to the Police Act today.

Mr. Chairman, with regard to amendment A1 it proposes to amend section 20(1)(e.1) and (e.2) by striking out the words "is unable." The Member for Edmonton-Strathcona made some – and I'm not entirely sure that they're fair. Nonetheless, the context that she used of being a disabled or otherwise incapacitated person, literally unable to participate in the process, and that we're just going to say: well, sorry; you have to go. I think that's clearly – clearly – (a) not the situation that arises but (b) also not the intent of the bill. So the amendment has given me some pause here, some cause to reflect on the wording.

I believe that the words "is unable" as they appear in the sentence "is unable or refuses to participate" are intended to address a situation where a person as an excuse says: "Well, I'm unable to attend. I know your hearing is on November 29. I am unable to attend." That is a classic approach. And there are complainants in the system that will use that repeatedly: I'm unable to attend.

I find, though, that if that's the intent of those particular words, that's pretty much covered by the opening: "If a complainant fails to attend, to answer questions" – and the sentence goes on – "or to produce an item . . . is unable or refuses to participate." I think "if a complainant fails to attend or refuses to participate" probably covers the situation where the complainant is unable to participate, in the context I believe it to mean, the context that it should mean. And there are other reasons here: fails to produce an item as required or conducts himself or herself in an inappropriate manner. I think the intent is already captured in those other words, Mr. Chair.

I find that amendment A1 is in order and productive. I'm quite willing to support this amendment to the bill, and I would urge my colleagues to do the same. I see no problem in doing so.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Deputy Chair: On the bill as amended, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: On the bill as amended, I want to open by thanking the Solicitor General and all members of the government caucus for supporting that amendment. It was meant in the spirit of improving legislation, and it was obviously received that way. So that's good.

Mr. Chairman, I have a second amendment, which is consistent with the one that we just passed, that I would like to propose for Bill 27.

The Deputy Chair: We'll pause while the pages deliver that amendment.

Dr. Taft: Mr. Chairman, if I could just briefly, while we're distributing this – we have a lot of guests in the gallery. I don't want to introduce them but just explain to them briefly that we are debating a piece of legislation that governs how complaints about police are handled. I don't want to speak for all members of the Assembly, but I think the debate reflects that we all understand that the police have an extremely difficult job, and they have to navigate that fine line between respecting everybody and treating them fairly, at the same time dealing with people who sometimes are very disrespectful and even violent with the police.

Sometimes there are complaints against police officers for overzealous pursuit of their duties or unnecessary use of tasing, unnecessary use of violence, and there's a process in place for handling those kinds of complaints. We need to respect the police and their situation in this, but we also need to respect the public and ensure that public confidence in the police remains very high.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, I believe that you handed the same amendment to the pages.

Dr. Taft: No. It's very similar, but it's to a different section.

The Deputy Chair: It's to another section. Okay. All right. Thank you.

Dr. Taft: If everybody has it, Mr. Chairman, I am moving this on behalf of the Member for Calgary-Buffalo, who is our critic for this area. It reads as follows: "Mr. Hehr to move that Bill 27, Police Amendment Act, 2010, be amended in section 17(a), in the proposed section 47(1)(d.1) and (d.2), by striking out 'is unable' wherever it occurs."

We don't need to repeat all the same debate that we had. I did want to just point out to the minister that while we have immense respect for the women and men who serve in Alberta's police forces, whether they're RCMP or municipal forces, there are incidents in Alberta right now where there are very public complaints about police behaviour, both municipal forces and RCMP. I think there was one that played out this week about the tasing of a civilian and an investigation into how that was handled. These are constantly going to be occurring in that interface between the police and the public, so I just wanted to make sure the Solicitor General understands that these are issues that do play out not only in British Columbia and Ontario but also in Alberta.

The purpose of this amendment, similar to the previous one, is taking out the term "unable." Right now the section that we're amending reads:

If a complainant fails to attend, to answer questions or to produce an item as required under clause (c), is unable or refuses to participate or to follow processes or conducts himself or herself in an inappropriate manner, the person conducting the hearing may dismiss the matter.

We simply want to take out "unable." If somebody is unable, genuinely unable to participate in the process, the person conducting that hearing should not be tied by the legislation. Where a complainant is unable, it's not grounds for the matter to be summarily dismissed. We should, in our view, simply proceed with the hearing until it is concluded, deciding the case strictly on its merits, which is done, I'm told, in Law Society hearings and other professional discipline hearings. So this is a point where we just want to refine the wording of the legislation so that it's that much more effective.

With those comments, I look forward to any further debate. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Solicitor General.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Pleased again to rise here to address Bill 27, the Police Amendment Act, 2010, and the amendment before us now, amendment A2, which, as pointed out by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, is quite similar in content and intent to the previous amendment. I'm curious as to why they weren't merged into one amendment. They're similar. That being the case, having accepted the previous amendment, having been persuaded through the rigours of parliamentary debate, or having folded like a cheap tent, depending on your viewpoint in the House, I find it hard to understand how I would object to the current amendment, which does exactly the same thing to a different section of the act. I'm certainly leaning that way.

I do want to point out, Mr. Chair, that in both of the sections the fact that a complainant fails to attend, fails to answer questions or produce an item as required, and, as currently worded, is unable to participate, follow processes, or conducts themselves in an inappropriate manner does not require the board or the person who hears the complaint to reject it. It says that they may dismiss the complaint. It does not require them to. So I did want to point that out, which further clarifies the intent of this. It gives the board some tools to manage the flow without throwing out legitimate complaints.

Nonetheless, we have before us an amendment which deals with the same wording. It intends to strike out the words "is unable." I again find, Mr. Chair, that the situation where I think that wording would come into play would be already addressed if the complainant fails to attend, fails to follow processes, fails to conduct themselves appropriately: those sorts of things. I think the intent of the section is there and is not harmed by removing the words "is unable", and I'm quite prepared to accept this amendment as well.

With that, I'll close my remarks, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity on the amendment.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, and I'll be extremely quick. It's basically passing out bouquets. I want to thank the Member for Calgary-Buffalo, who together with our researcher Michael Decore suggested improvements to Bill 27. I am very thankful that the hon. Solicitor General saw the intent to improve the legislation and embraced the amendments. I want to thank the minister of housing. I'm glad he's back here to hear the thank you for the work he's done with a lot of people who were involved with Bill 27.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona pointed out the homeless. The plan to end homelessness now has eight years to go, but the member has been active in working with groups such as – a bouquet to Bonnie Malach, who is the head of the Homeless Awareness Calgary Committee, that receives funding from the United Way. I'd like to thank Dermot Baldwin, who is recently retiring from his terrific work in the homeless shelter, where he has enabled tens of thousands of individuals seeking refuge, seeking health care, and seeking guidance over the years.

With that, Mr. Chair, I am pleased to sit.

The Deputy Chair: I will call the question on amendment A2 as proposed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

[Motion on amendment A2 carried]

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I really am pleased that we were able to make some progress on Bill 27. That was one of those bills that we hadn't had a chance to deal with, and I would like to move that we adjourn Bill 27 at this point. It's not part of the motion, but I do anticipate that it'll come back on Monday evening at first order of business.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Deputy Chair: We will report progress when the committee rises.

1:50

Bill 17
Alberta Health Act

The Deputy Chair: Any comments or considerations or questions with respect to this bill? We are speaking to amendment A3. The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. This morning in an earlier discussion I raised the question about section (d) in the bill amendment and suggested that perhaps it would be useful to have an understanding of exactly what the Canadian Association of Emergency Physicians said in their paper of February 2007. When I finish my comments, I will table five copies for the Legislative Assembly, something I don't think has been presented.

In fact, the CAEP position talks about the length of stay benchmarks nationally and talks about how admitted patients must be transferred out of the emergency department to an in-patient area within two hours of decision to admit.

It goes further to talk about overcapacity protocols to be implemented to allow Canadian hospitals to meet the national emergency department length of stay benchmarks until functional acute care capacity is sufficient.

Then it talks further, that achievement of these benchmarks must be continually measured and ED length of stay should be documented on a daily basis, and reviewed monthly.

Then it goes further.

Hospital and Regional administrators should be held accountable if the throughput standards are not met.

It goes finally to point 5, that hospitals optimize bed management strategies, [et cetera],

and then

that governments sufficiently increase the number of functional acute care beds to achieve regular hospital occupancy rates that do not exceed 85%.

Mr. Chairman, there's significant meat in these particular procedures, but I would suggest that this is a protocol that does not in any part of this information talk about legislating such a particular position. Legislation, I think, would be wrong.

If you go to the Hippocratic oath, you look at the fact that what was suggested in the Hippocratic oath has been updated and amended a number of times. The original Hippocratic oath was translated from the Greek by Ludwig Edelstein with the Johns Hopkins Press in 1943, then again by Louis Lasagna, dean of the School of Medicine at Tufts University, in 1964, and then the last editorial amendment on July 13, 2002. I quote that because frequently even things that we hold as cherished commandments, if you will, of our profession are updated to keep pace with current times.

I would like to challenge this Assembly to really pay attention to what the minister of health has stated; namely, that Alberta's standards be developed, that Alberta's standards be enforced, that we look at new technologies and the rapid evolution of technologies and look at a process for implementing protocols that really apply to Alberta facilities, Alberta physicians, Alberta health care workers and apply to the circumstances we find in a province that's the size of three European countries and not to without study or merit really look at something and accept something that I have no knowledge whether was accepted on a national level by the Canadian Medical Association.

I have not heard whether our Alberta Medical Association adopted this, but if they did adopt this – if they did – then at no time in the previous history of our discussions in this Legislative Assembly that I can remember in the last almost 14 years did anybody ever table this kind of document. It's only that narrow window of how we admit patients and deal with overcrowding and does not apply to the overall standards that must be in place in any kind of health care facility. Mr. Chairman, I'm going to table these particular pages.

I would encourage my colleagues to consider that when we fetter legislation with a formula or regulation that has been adopted at a finite time, in this case February 2007, and not adopt it as a legislative amendment – we should look very carefully at legislation through a different, broader lens to make sure that it keeps pace with the policy, the progressive nature of what government should be, not look back at what it was but look forward to what it could be with a very properly managed health care system, a system that, I will underscore once again, has in place a five-year funding capacity at 6 per cent per year after a topped-up budget that has positioned us to do the very best possible work for the patients and for the families and for the communities in Alberta. Reject this particular amendment and challenge the health care professionals in consultation, as they already are, with the minister of health to make progress on standards that will be implemented in our facilities and will be a guideline for hospital administrators, not legislate something that was suggested at another point in time in another place but look to the future of what Alberta needs.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I will take my leave.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Chair, thank you very much. I listened intently to the former minister of health from Sherwood Park, a nurse, actually. It's interesting to hear her speak up and eloquently speak in regard to the position statement on emergency department overcrowding that was published by the Canadian Association of Emergency Physicians, dated February 2007.

I guess my question to the minister at that time, if she's so passionate about these protocols, is: why didn't she bring them in when she was the minister of health? Then we probably wouldn't be where we were today. I can't even remember when she was minister of health, but to passionately speak about the protocols and not talk about legislation: if the protocols had been put in place when she was the minister of health, we wouldn't be sitting here talking about legislation five or six years later. [interjection] The Member for Edmonton-Whitemud is obviously going to get up and speak about this because he's trying to carry on some conversations with me also. It's the same minister who doesn't have the hospital in the constituency, so it just shows, you know, where we're going with the government.

Mr. Chair, I'm pleased, again, to be speaking to this important amendment, put forward by my colleague from Edmonton-Meadowlark. He's someone whose opinion I value because of the experience in emergency room medicine. Not only was he a doctor; he was the AMA section chief for emergency medicine. Clearly, he's a leader in the field. He's so well thought of that the minister of health this morning or last night indicated that he had the utmost respect for the member. He spoke about his passion. He spoke about numerous other things that the member has done and how he respected him – I've got notes all over the place – but still they managed to boot the poor guy out. I've never seen anything like that as long as I've been an MLA.

My colleagues and I have spent the last day in this Chamber – a day or two days? It's been a long time, anyhow, listening to the members of the government repeatedly, on one hand, praise the member and, on the other hand, dispute any of these ideas that he's clearly put forward. The hon. health minister, as I indicated, described the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark as his guiding light, and then he went on to dispute and second-guess everything that he has put forward.

Now, his amendments call for a legislated wait time in emergency rooms, and we've all heard from the government how bad the idea is. They tell us how it can't be done. They tell us how it doesn't work. The health minister has repeatedly said in the House over the last 24 hours how wait times don't belong in law. He goes on at length about how important wait time limits are, but he refuses to give them an anchor in legislation. He likes to say how wait time limits belong in performance measures.

Given how often and how badly this government misses its performance measures or changes them to claim political victories, how can anyone, seriously, any Albertan, believe this government will meet guidelines on their own without a law to enforce it? The bottom line is that the government won't legislate wait times because they know they have no plan to actually meet them. A performance measure can be missed or it can be changed with no repercussions, but this government continues to be allergic to accountability, and we've seen that over and over and over again.

Mr. Chair, the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs was trying to discredit other jurisdictions who have legislated wait time limits. He says that time limits that are enshrined into law are like putting a gun to the heads of doctors, but there are countries that have succeeded where this government continues to fail when it comes to legislating wait times in health care delivery. In Norway the patients' bill of rights guarantees that you see a specialist within 30 days of referral. The legislated time limit has been in place since 1999, and quite frankly it's still working. It works because the system is accountable to patients. If the system can't meet the obliged time limit, patients are treated in nearby Scandinavian countries at no cost to them. This example illustrates how accountability measures and practical solutions that are entrenched in law force government and, quite frankly, force the bureaucrats to adapt and respond to the needs of patients.

The minister also talked about court time and how he wants people to get into the health system and that he doesn't want them to be tied up in court time. I found that comment very interesting, actually, coming from the minister. Quite frankly, you can learn from what other people have done and what other mistakes have been made. He has a huge, huge department, and he can find out what they were doing right and what they were doing wrong. It's a good way to learn where others have made mistakes or why they were not able to make the legislated wait times. The government is continuing, again, to show a stunning lack of political courage in making themselves accountable.

I'd also like to talk about Scotland, a jurisdiction that is similar in size and system to Alberta, that is moving forward on legislated wait times. It's single payer. It's universal. It's a publicly funded system, just like ours. They have a superboard; we have a superboard. They have an aging population; we have an aging population. They have pharmaceutical drug growth; we have pharmaceutical drug growth. They have a shortage of family doctors; we have a shortage of family doctors. But they're moving ahead while this government keeps dragging its heels and refuses to show leadership.

We have a lot to learn from social demographics in Europe and elsewhere. We aren't the only ones trying to find solutions, but we seem to be the only ones who lack the courage to make the decisions that professionals like the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark are asking for. It's our front-line medical staff like doctors, nurses, nurse practitioners, LPNs, nursing assistants who intimately understand the complexities of our health care system. They know the reforms, they know the answers, they like the legislated wait times, and they know that that will at least improve one area of the system.

We've heard a lot of criticism from the minister in regard to the repercussions and that if we legislate wait times for emergency, why aren't we legislating wait times for cancer care, for access to kidney care, for brain cancer, for lung cancer? The list goes on. Well, Mr. Chair, they're all connected. Quite frankly, if you're someone that is unfortunate enough to have cancer, whether it's kidney cancer, brain cancer, lung cancer, any kind of cancer, if you have eye problems, if you have knee problems, your first point of entry when you're not feeling well is emergency. If you can't get into emergency when you're feeling sick or you need to have some care because you're throwing up from the chemotherapy, you can't even possibly think of getting well.

The health professionals who work in the trenches, as I indicated, know the answers. They only need to be asked. While the government indicates health care professionals can speak out and indicates that the code of conduct, better known as the code, doesn't stop them, the message in the trenches is, quite frankly, much different, and they're scared of coming forward.

I can tell you as the health critic and as a member of the Wildrose – and I've mentioned this in my speaking – that I don't know how many meetings we've had in quiet places where no one can see the health care professionals that we meet with. I know the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, who is just as interested in the health debate as I am and is interested in health – I can't even tell you how many meetings we've had. We've met in places that we didn't even know existed in Calgary, meeting with some docs and some emergency docs, a lot of doctors and a lot of health care professionals that want to talk.

Mr. Chair, let's be honest here. Quite frankly, we wouldn't be having this debate at all if the government had been doing their job in the first place. It's amazing to me that the Member for Sherwood Park can stand up and literally read from a doctor's oath, I think it was, and can read from the physicians, and she is a former health minister. She's talking about all these protocols that we can put in place, and she had the opportunity to when she was the minister of health, as did the Minister of Energy when he was minister of health, as did the Minister of Education. We're now on a new health minister, so that's four health ministers, that I can recall, that all had the opportunity to put this protocol in place, which they haven't put in place. That's exactly why we're spending hours and hours debating this particular issue.

This emergency issue is not a new issue. It's an old issue. It was brought to the forefront by the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark when he was an emergency physician. It was brought to, I'm sure, both ministers' attention, that being the Minister of Energy when he was minister of health and now the current minister of health, when they were ministers, about what was happening in the system. Then it was rebrought up by Dr. Parks after he had sent an e-mail to the Minister of Energy, who was then the minister of health, telling him about the emergency.

The letter that we happened to get and leak out was from Dr. Duckett indicating that health care was in a crisis at that particular time. He indicated right in that letter that one of the reasons that they were dealing with this situation, which I found absolutely appalling, was public pressure. If that public pressure hadn't been there and if the courageous doctor from emergency, Dr. Parks, and our doctor here hadn't brought this again to the forefront, I'm not even sure if we would be talking about the amendment that's before us at this particular time.

The amendment, quite frankly, Mr. Chair, that the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark is proposing is what I think goes to the heart of the system, truly goes to the heart of the health care system. The other thing it goes to is the heart of accountability, and that's accountability in the health care system. We have decided as our caucus and, I know, probably as the Liberal caucus and the ND caucus and our independent members – and we have quite eloquently heard from one of the government members, the Member for St. Albert, about how they support this particular amendment. I think that's very brave on behalf of the Member for St. Albert.

I sat here for hours along with my colleagues waiting for some of the other government members to come up and speak out about the fact that they believe that this is the right amendment. They have to, have to, have to be hearing from their constituents. Mr. Chair, we're inundated with phone calls, e-mails. I was on the phone till 1:30 last night talking to doctors, telling them that we're into a late night, and my caucus was kind enough to let me go home and grab a few hours of sleep. When they were e-mailing me, I said to them by e-mail that, oh, it was late, and they insisted that I call them anyhow. When I did call them, talking to them till 1:30 in the morning, I was saying: well, don't you find this late? It is a normal procedure for them to be up at 1:30 in the morning and doing their emergency care, et cetera.

We could go on and on, Mr. Chair, about this amendment, but I can tell you, in all honesty, that why I believe this amendment is the right thing is twofold. The first reason, quite frankly, is what we're hearing from the emergency physician from Edmonton-Meadowlark and what we're hearing from other health care providers in the system, that they believe in that. That goes to the emergency doctors, in fact all doctors and, quite frankly, all health care professionals.

I think that more important, though – and this goes to the heart of the situation – is what we're hearing from our constituents and what we're hearing from Albertans about the importance of the amendment that the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark has brought forward. We've spent hours and hours of debate on this. I would hope that the government members will speak up on this particular amendment, whether they support it or not, and if they support it, as the Member for St. Albert explained why he supports it. I have the utmost respect for members to get up and speak about why they don't support the amendment because, ultimately, the buck stops with them, and the voters in their constituencies are the bosses, as the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo likes to say.

We have continually debated this one amendment, and we will continue to debate this amendment. We've all obviously said that we're prepared to go for all hours at night to discuss this. I'm pleased once again to stand up and support the amendment that Edmonton-Meadowlark has brought forward. In fact, I'm proud to be able to stand up and support this particular amendment. I'm proud to stand up on behalf of the unbelievably dedicated, compassionate health care professionals, and that's all health care professionals. That goes down to the janitors and every other single person that works in this health care system that tries to make this health care system run smoothly no matter what job they take on. They're all important.

I'm more proud, actually, Mr. Chair, to speak on behalf of the constituents of Calgary-Fish Creek as the health critic for the Wildrose Alliance, to speak on behalf of the hundreds and hundreds and hundreds of e-mails, Twitters, letters, phone calls that we have received on behalf of Albertans.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. We have certainly gone around and around and around on the great health care crisis here in Alberta, and we haven't heard a great deal of anything except how bad it is. We've heard how good it would be if we'd just pass the law making it good. It is as simplistic as saying that somehow the five-year funding arrangement was going to make the financial pressures go away or that if we're just the most compassionate people here and we just outlaw poverty magically, we won't have to worry about those poor people.

We have watched over the last few years a health care debate in the States, our neighbours to the south, where they can't even agree to get together to talk about it, a system that's funded by pharmaceuticals, by private interest, and by lawyers. The last thing that a publicly funded health care system needs is lawyers in there telling doctors what they can and cannot do and how quickly they're going to do it. If I am a patient in this system, I want the doctor to know that he can take the time it takes to assess what's wrong with me. That might be a while, but I want to get the treatment that the doctor believes is necessary and not their lawyer.

Mr. Chairman, it's really tragic that it seems like the only way one of the other parties can get their message out is to exploit fear. We live in an area of the world where – they wouldn't want to admit it – we have one of the best health care systems in the world. People come to this province looking for the health care that's provided here. That's not a big secret to Albertans. We hear every day, literally, from hundreds that get treatment in this system that they wouldn't get other places.

Is there a problem with overcrowding in emergency rooms? Absolutely. The solution is not to sit in here and call names or infer somehow that we're not doing anything. In 1995 we were spending $15 billion total as a government. We're spending that now on health care. If you listen to them, they say that the health care problem is all the fault of the superboard, that if they were gone, things would be magically better. Well, we didn't get to this problem with the superboard, Mr. Chairman. We got here with hundreds at the start and then a dozen regions. We had no cohesive go-forward so that Albertans in every corner of Alberta could access the extremely good care that we have at some of the most highly respected institutions in the world in Edmonton and Calgary.

I believe and I think this government believes that everyone in Alberta should have access to world-class, leading – not research but results and care. If that is such a bad thing, then they've got to stand up and – I mean, it's perfect. It's acceptable and not only acceptable but appropriate that we have different policies to go forward with different challenges that we're faced with. Ours is to first put the patient first. It is exactly what we stated and what we're going to do. We're going to do it respectfully. We're going to do it in a system that can be sustainable, so that it's here for our children and their children, and we're going to work with the health care professionals that want to work within the system.

For most of the health care system they do very well. They sit there and say how much they appreciate all the health care professionals – they really do – and then they trash the system. It's really a shame for the 50,000 people in Alberta that go through our health care system every day and get great care, for the people in our nursing homes and our long-term care facilities that are dealt with on a daily basis, with great compassion and an attachment to the people that care for them, to then hear in here that our health care system is just – well, I don't think we can use the parliamentary language that would explain it.

We've got health care funding of around $15 billion, and I'm one that can say: well, you have to keep an eye on your spending. This isn't being driven by spending. No one has suggested, including the emergency room doctors, that if they just had more money, it would be better. So the obvious choice here is to deal with them, to look at all of the contributing factors to an overcrowded emergency room situation.

About a week ago we watched the minister and a doctor on Global Television talk for half an hour respectfully, intelligently to Albertans about some of the challenges. For anyone that had the opportunity – don't pass this around – to go to CBC after, they had a whole show on the health care crisis in Canada. If you were to listen to those folks over there, you would think we were the only place that was having a problem with emergency room crowding. Well, Mr. Chairman, much to our surprise, all across Canada, in every corner, the demands on the system are changing. We don't have family doctors that are either willing to live in small communities or willing to maintain their practice as family doctors, so people are forced to go to emergency rooms. That's a fact. So you can throw out all of the other gobbledygook about what's going on; we need to understand all the factors contributing to the situation.

Where they were able to identify Alberta as having a problem – and what a wonderful opportunity it is for some political parties and some media to exploit the emotions of a very caring physician. It's unconscionable, but that's a different story. They were able to focus on the crises in Alberta and in Vancouver and in Toronto and in the Maritimes and compare us to the rest of the world.

Mr. Chairman, we have the opportunity in Alberta to work our way through this. Albertans tell us on a consistent basis that they would like to see the evolution of health care, not the revolution of health care. We've got a very good system, and we're going to make it better. We have issues with access, and we're going to start to remove those issues.

To suggest that nothing has happened is – I mean, I could accept that there were probably times last night when some of our hearing aids would have been turned off, mercifully so. But to suggest nothing is happening in the health care system is so stupid that any clear-thinking Albertan sees through it. We are building centres for continuing care now that will get people out of hospitals and into their homes. It can be an institution but a home. Isn't the most important thing we need to look at: what quality of life does that person deserve? They don't want to be in that hospital. They want to be in the facility that suits their needs.

Mr. Chairman, we are working. We've listened to our constituents. We've listened to people that historically had to be separated because they didn't have the same level of care requirements. In my case of a couple together for 74 years, one had to go to Consort, and one had to go to Two Hills because of an Alzheimer's issue. Is that the system that they want over there, to go back to bunching them up somewhere that we can't find them? No. Albertans have told us clearly that things are different. The aging population is more active. They want facilities where they can live and grow old, still stay active. We know and it's agreed that we need to move those people out.

One of the solutions to the emergency room issue is to make sure that, wherever possible, we can get anyone that's in that facility that doesn't need to be there moved out so that those front-line emergency room physicians do have access to more beds. That can't be accomplished overnight, but, Mr. Chairman, it is absolutely one of the requirements if we're going to make more effective use of our hospitals and of our emergency room physicians.

The other thing that was stated in the CBC article – I'm not picking out Alberta – is that approximately 80 per cent of the people in the emergency rooms shouldn't have been there. They should have been in clinics. So if we know that – and that wasn't an Alberta issue – the fact is: do you want to attack the system, the reason that they're going there, or do you want to pass a law that says that if you've got all those people there, they've got to be admitted and treated? Come on. Let's get real. Let's work together in the way we have been in trying to make sure that people know where the appropriate health care is available to them, things like health hotlines, things like walk-in clinics. Those are all part of the solutions. I mean, I don't know why they don't just pass a law saying: "Let's not go to mandated wait times. Let's just pass a law that no one gets sick." We'd all support that – we'd all support that – and then we wouldn't need that amendment.

Does it contribute to health care to have a debate that's pretty much emotionally and politically charged? No. Is it important that we listen to people that do have the expertise in it? It absolutely is. Mr. Chairman, I readily admit I am not a physician. I am a politician who's grown up in this province with two older parents, both in their 80s, four children. We've all had health issues. Whether they're from the glorious arrival of our children or a father with liver cancer, we've all been faced with these things.

But I can tell you, as someone in this business, that you never put your family ahead of anyone else in the medical system. You need to be a part of it. We are a part of it. We shouldn't receive anything other than what we'd expect Albertans to accept, exactly the same level. Is it difficult? Yes, it is. But we all have the attachment to the health care system universally across the board. I impugn no motives to the opposition or to any of the speakers in this House. We all want a health care system that can satisfy Albertans' needs in a timely manner. That's a fact. I wouldn't question anyone's motives. But we do have different methods of trying to attract attention for what we're trying to do. [interjection] Don't worry. Nobody listens to him anyhow, Mr. Chairman, so I'm not worried.

We made a commitment, Mr. Chair, when we started to bring the regions together, to try and understand where the synergies were. There is no question that when you're running a corporation with 96,000 employees covering an area this size with the number of facilities that we've got, you are going to run into glitches. But the people in that system deserve the opportunity to continue to work to build the health care system we want. Focusing solely in here on a legislated requirement around wait times in ER may solve one very small part of the health care system.

Dr. Swann: No. It's a symptom of a broken system, Lloyd.

Mr. Snelgrove: I know. And so are ducks in tailings ponds bad for energy. You have your own opinion, and you can talk next. I've been very respectful as I've sat in here, so I would appreciate it. I don't expect it, but I'd appreciate it.

Mr. Chairman, we need to also share what we're doing with the other provinces. When we meet with our counterparts across this country, they tell us continually: you are the only province with enough guts to tackle health care head-on. For the hon. member to suggest we didn't have the courage to change, talk to the other provinces. They'll tell you that Albertans are people that are willing to try, and Albertans have guts to go ahead with changes. [interjections]

The Deputy Chair: The hon. president has the floor. [interjections]
The hon. president has the floor.

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Chairman, do we have an obligation to look very, very seriously at the issues around the emergency room wait times? Absolutely. That obligation is bigger than just Alberta. The obligation is to work with our neighbouring provinces, with our federal government, with the College of Physicians and Surgeons, with everyone who wants to make a positive change to the situation that's there.

Mr. Chairman, I'm perfectly willing to sit here as long as they want. They don't probably want to tell the taxpayer what it costs to stay here day after day; that money hasn't entered into it. So we'll listen. I've made a list of the positive suggestions that have come up in this debate. It's very short. I think the best suggestion was that we would adjourn, and we did.

One positive note before I quit, Mr. Chairman, and I'll warn them right now that it doesn't have much relevance to the health care debate. For a brief moment last night we talked about the boundaries. I just want to say to the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona that she should be very proud of the fact that in this Assembly we talked about the name for her father, and it was supported overwhelmingly by every member of this House, both past and present. You should be very proud. [applause]

I can only say this, Mr. Chairman: were he still here, he would probably have some very positive suggestions towards health care in Alberta.

With that, I'll take my chair.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, may we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests (reversion)

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's a great honour and privilege to stand and introduce to you and through you to the House some very dedicated front-line health professionals, mostly emergency physicians, who are here to stand in solidarity with the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark and to support him in this very challenging time addressing the most fundamental part of the front line of the health care system, its ability to deliver emergency services.

2:30

Mr. MacDonald: Are they making a House call?

Dr. Swann: They're making a House call today, and I'd like them to stand as I introduce them by name so that we can recognize them and welcome them to the House: Dr. Roger Yao, Dr. Darren Nichols, Dr. Jarrod Anderson, Dr. Samina Ali, Dr. Aisha Mirza, Dr. Hussein Kanji, Dr. Wiley Thompson, and Dr. Jennifer Williams. Let's give them the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Chair, I'd just like to thank all of my friends for coming to this very important debate. Thank you so much.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity on amendment A3.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'd like to begin my resumption of the debate on amendment A3 of Bill 17 by thanking the members in the gallery, that the hon. Leader of the Opposition just introduced, many of whom have come off last night's shift in order to be a part of this very necessary debate on Bill 17 and the emergent state of health care in Alberta. I think we have a sense, those of us who have participated for the last three nights and mornings in debate, of what these emergency physicians go through. We have a small sense of the hours and dedication necessary to do their job.

Earlier this morning, about the 18th hour of debate, throughout the current minister of health's commentary and those of previous and subsequent contributors, I listened intently to concerns raised and have taken notes to be accurate and focused on amendment A3. Both the minister of health and the hon. Member for St. Albert spoke about a need to broaden standards, suggesting that A3 is too narrow.

Mr. Chair, the proof is in the pudding. The hon. minister of health has frequently referenced his extensive consultations, which are appreciated. He is probably the most travelled minister within Alberta, whether in his role of Minister of Education or as minister of aboriginal affairs. There is no doubt about his consultative efforts. However, the time has come for the minister to sit, to summarize, and to act on the information he has gathered.

The minister suggested: let's talk about faster access to care, whether at home or in a health care providing institution. The minister talked about moving beyond emergency care improvements. The minister of health talked about exceeding national standards and the need to create a made-in-Alberta solution. My concern is: how far into the future is this solution going to occur? Bill 17 doesn't go far enough in setting standards or guidelines as amendment A3 would recommend.

Now, something, Mr. Chair, that you're familiar with and a number of members of this House are familiar with, particularly the hon. minister of finance, is the hunting analogy. There's been an awful lot of talk about targets. Depending on what target you are aiming at, the instrument you use varies. For example, when duck hunting, you don't use a .22 as it limits your chances of a successful shot, and your single missed slug can travel up to a kilometre. On the other hand, you don't use birdshot to bring down a larger animal. Rather than the broad, scattershot approach the minister is suggesting, I suggest he start with a single focus, a .22 approach, which will cause a ripple effect in health care.

Amendment A3 says to start the healing with emergent care and go forward from there. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's been a good discussion by all sides of the House, both last night and this morning. I want to give the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark the utmost respect from me and from my constituents and from my family. When my granddaughter needed help, he was there for my granddaughter. Many of his constituents and the people that he works with, whether they be younger people like what's here: he has offered lots of assistance to them.

Last week we had a hundred clinical leaders from across Alberta's health services create a task force and tell us what they felt we should do. In turn, I went home on the weekend and talked with constituents. We counted on the advice that the hundred clinical leaders from across this province had given us. They said: "Give it a chance. Give it a chance, and let's see how this will work. We haven't been happy with what has happened to date, but give it a chance."

I have to tell you that, you know, when I read parts of the bill and reference A3, I look back home and say that in rural Alberta we count on the good work of the emergency physicians and the professional caregivers in the city. When the doctors at home in Whitecourt or in Mayerthorpe get into trouble, they count on these people helping my constituents out, and they do a darn good job of it. My mom and dad have both ended up there, and we can't say enough for the care, the dedication, and the love that they have given to my family.

Mr. Chairman, I think we owe it to the experts that gathered last week to give it a try at what they've come up with. You know, if that doesn't work, we're going to have to have a debate again. I don't mind spending the evening or however many evenings it takes to get this debate out and get the feelings of each and every member from across this great province. I don't think there is one fix to the issues that are in front of us.

In my constituency I had the honour to have the previous minister of health out, and we talked about the care that's needed in our lodges. And what do we have today? We have 24-hour care in those lodges that is offered through the Lac Ste Anne Foundation and through Alberta Health Services, a great partnership that doesn't exist everywhere. The last place I want people to end up is in emergency, so that's how I felt that in Whitecourt-St. Anne we could reduce the pressure on these folks. We don't want them there. We want to keep them healthy. We want our parents and our grandparents living in a place where they can get that 24-hour care, so that they don't overdose on medication, where they have their nails taken care of before they have an ingrown toenail, before they have an infection. These are the things that we see in rural Alberta that are so very, very important.

I'm not going to stand up here and say that I know anything close to what the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark knows. I'm going to say that the hundred clinical leaders from across this province that got together do know, and I'm going to put my faith and my vote and my trust in them. If it doesn't work, you can count on me supporting an emergency debate again, like I did last time. I supported that as well. I've learned from all of us around this table. So let's learn from those hundred clinical leaders that have said: "This is what we've come up with. Let's give it a try." Let's respect them and give them the respect that this Legislature should give them, and let them do their work.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm truly honoured and humbled to get up and speak again on this very important subject that's very important to all Albertans. We've been going – oh, geez – how long now? How long, guys? Twenty hours? Twenty-two hours? It's a good thing I'm an emergency doctor. I used to do permanent nights. I think I used to work 27 shifts a month, 12 nights, and I got cut back to 16. So, guys, I haven't even started yet.

Now, the reason we're here on Bill 17, the reason I gave this amendment. I'd like to reiterate: the Alberta Health Act is decent legislation. It talks about a health advocate. People who have problems with health care are going to complain to a health advocate. It talks about principles. I do agree that we've always had principles, but I think it's important to legislate them.

2:40

An Hon. Member: Live up to them.

Dr. Sherman: Absolutely. I do believe it's important to live up to those principles.

If today we had a health advocate, that poor advocate would have 1,000 complaints a day from Edmonton alone just on the emergency issue. This is why. The reason I'm amending this bill is actually to make it a much better bill, the best bill in this nation. The reason it hasn't been done in the nation before is because no one has shown leadership in this nation.

Health care is an international problem. This is why one of the four principles is no unnecessary deaths. This is what an unnecessary death is. My father has a cardiac arrest, and he dies. That's not unnecessary. That's going to happen. My good friend Dr. Guy Woolsey: his brother walks into a department, can't get in, walks across the bridge, waits for 12 hours at the Royal Alex emergency department. These doctors have seen him. They're waiting for a psychiatrist to see him, but there are no beds. The patient: sheesh, my heart really goes out to this family. I was in tears last night talking about this. He comes out every hour asking: when is the psychiatrist going to come? Then he asks the nurse for a pen or a pencil; I'm not sure what it was. I read it in the paper, from Jodie Sinnema's article. And then he hung himself in the department.

A young child with a ruptured appendix who waited in the waiting room died. There are mothers miscarrying on triage stretchers. Guys, I don't work at all at the Royal Alex anymore. I work at the Northeast in minor emergency, but these people all work there. I trained them all, and my colleagues trained them all. We can talk gobbledegook and gibberish in here all we want. Come on, guys. Why do you think front-line staff are demoralized? Staff morale is at 45 per cent. Because of the malarkey in this House. I'm not sure if I'm allowed to use that word, Mr. Chair. If I'm not, I apologize.

An Hon. Member: Policy decisions.

Dr. Sherman: Absolutely correct.

Before I ran for politics – again, I will reiterate. Here's my picture. I said, "It's a crisis" in 2007, when I was in Dr. Paul Parks' position. To the hon. minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations, who's a nurse, who was the health minister at the time, I wrote a letter in 2006. Prior to that, in 2004, our godfather, Dr. Chris Evans, who was the head emergency doctor in the nation last year, homegrown right here in Alberta – he is on the board of the Alberta Medical Association. Isn't that right, guys? He's the one who drafted these guidelines. They're made in Alberta. Do we want some other province to do this first, or do you guys want to do it when our expert is the one who did it? Come on, guys. Does Alberta want to lead by following, or does Alberta want to lead by leading?

The reason I'm asking for these to be legislated is because these are the teeth. They will actually hold doctors accountable, administrators accountable, nurses accountable. In fact, it's actually good for politicians. No one is going to get sued because of it. The health care system is actually currently going to be sued because of all the delays in care.

What I mentioned was an unnecessary death. So no unnecessary deaths. No unnecessary harm. The harm is when you wait eight hours in a waiting room with a bellyache and your appendix ruptures. That's unnecessary harm. That's unnecessary. If you come in with a ruptured appendix, that's a ruptured appendix. If you come in with a ruptured appendix and you wait eight hours in a waiting room and then you die from it, that's unnecessary.

No unnecessary deaths, no unnecessary harm, no unnecessary delays in care, and then no unnecessary waste: these are just simple principles. You know where I got them from? They're at the Trillium Health Centre, a top-performing hospital in this nation, in Ontario. Their staff morale is at 92 per cent. Their CEO is Janet Davidson. Guess where she's from? Take a guess. She ran the U of A hospital years ago. She used to be an assistant deputy minister in this government. All our best people have left for Ontario. We lost the cream of the crop. There are still good ones here. There are some good ones here. But we still lost a lot of good ones, and there are a lot of good ones right now who are feeling that their voice is not being heard. You know what? They're actually better than good; they're actually great. But they're not being heard. We have a whole bunch that will be great, but if they feel that the great ones aren't being heard, well, they're not going to get involved.

So they are the four principles, and the most important part is the teeth of legislating ER wait times. It's actually not an emergency problem; it's a health care system problem that manifests itself in the emergency room. The people who are discharged: that's more sort of an emergency/hospital problem. The people who are admitted: that's more of a hospital/system problem. It's like rush hour. Did you ever leave work and then go: who the heck is slowing everything down at the front? Well, somebody who's driving really slowly and cautiously, probably my grandma or my grandpa.

That's the problem. We have an inadequate home-care system in this province. We have not enough. It's inadequate because it's not appropriately resourced. It's not inadequate because the staff are not good. They're great, but they're overworked and overburdened. We need a lot more staff. We don't have enough subacute care. We don't have enough rehab care. We need more community hospices and palliative care beds. People should not have to die in an emergency department half-naked at the end of their life with the whole world walking by for four days. And then we need long-term care. If we actually need acute-care beds, then, sure, go ahead and build more acute-care beds.

Then what we need is to work on the input side. We have a broken primary care system. That's actually the problem. We have too many sick people. People are sick because they have no access to primary care. You can't get in to see a family doctor for a month or two – five minutes, one problem – and 20 per cent of Albertans on the average don't even have one. In rural Alberta the problem is actually even more acute. These problems all back up into the emergency room.

They have 48 beds at the University emergency room. During the election 42 were plugged up by admitted people. There were 50 sick people, not sore throats and runny noses, in the waiting rooms, dying in the waiting room to get in. These are the 322 cases that Sheila Weatherill asked these doctors to collect. She asked them to collect them, and these are the cases that Dr. Paul Parks gave to the Premier and to the hon. past Minister of Health and Wellness from Edmonton-Whitemud, to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford when he was his assistant, and to myself and to Paddy Meade, who was the deputy minister at the time. These are the cases that he actually re-sent just recently with the letter with the Premier's commitment from 2008, with the letter to three different ministers, which didn't include my letter to the minister in 2006 or Dr. Evans's letter to the minister in 2005 or to the minister in 2004 or in 2003 or in 2002 or in 2001.

The hon. minister, the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud, in my home announced 600 long-term care beds prior to the election. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford was there, as was all the Alberta Medical Association leadership. I'm just looking at my watch. It's 2010, and it's November 25. The question is: when are politicians going to stop announcing things five times and taking pictures and doing gobbledygook and malarkey, call it what you may, and not actually doing anything and trying to sneak through an election with a Public Affairs Bureau that will spin the bejesus out of things? That's what drives these guys crazy, and that's what causes good Albertans to suffer: governments that do not have the moral backbone to be honest and who do not do the right things by patients.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona pulled up on her computer a graph of how many days in Calgary alternate level of care patients wait on acute care. The graph sort of went like this up until 2006, and then the line took off like this, at a 50- to 60-degree angle. Would that be correct? At a 50- to 60-degree angle. Upstairs is plugged up by healthy seniors who are actually separated from their spouses and their families for up to a year or two years, sitting in cardiology and orthopaedic and medical wards. It's actually contrary to the Premier's policy. They are separated. They have been separated for years. Nothing has been done. This promise was made in 2005, 2006, 2007, 2008, and 2009.

That's why admitted people, who should have been upstairs three or four days ago, plug up the ER. That's why sick people who should be in ER beds are in waiting rooms and on ambulance stretchers. That's why ambulances that should be on the street are actually all clogged up, waiting to off-load patients in the emergency room or taking sick people and giving them tours of the city while they're dying at the other end of town because they can't get into emergency departments, and that's why there are no ambulances on the street to respond to an urgent 911 call. They're all waiting to off-load sick people.

The whole province's ambulance fleet is tied up in emergency departments. We used to have 12 cars on the road when I started that did eight to 12 trips a night. Now we have 37 cars in Edmonton that do one to three trips a nights. They're sitting around on lawn chairs, ordering dinner, changing their shifts, and people are suffering.

I do not know how much more I can tell my colleagues in government. This is why I lost confidence in the leadership of this province. This is why I sent that e-mail. I apologized to the Premier because I thought it was important for the province to have confidence in their leadership. I do not apologize for sending that letter. It's entirely truthful. I am so sorry, my good friends. I am so sorry.

Here's where partisan politics butted heads with the values my family taught me, to be truthful. The truth will never hurt you, said my grandfather when I was a three-year-old child. There are three things in this world, he pointed out. He said: you can't hide the sun, the moon, and the truth. Then there's the oath that we all took, the Hippocratic oath to society, the same society we represent, that we must do no harm. We must tell the truth.

What happened was a battle of principles between partisan politics and the truth and moral values of an honourable profession. It's a sad day in this democratic country, which is the greatest country on the planet and the greatest province, when partisan politics actually win. I had to be honest. I'm so sorry. This is why we must legislate these wait times. It has been too long, far too long. These people are burning out. This is our new, young group. You'll see that there are no old guys here because they're burned out. They're waiting for retirement. These are their babies.

I'm not burned out yet. I haven't even started yet. I will not stop talking on this issue until I have no pulse in my body. I will keep talking on this issue. One day when my pulse ends – those guys up there have a lot of pulse, and they're going to do it. The reason they are here is because I want 10 of them to run as MLAs, and I want one of them to be the Premier. If you guys don't fix it, they're going to fix it. But I'll tell you that if they run against you, you guys aren't going to win. That's why I bring every medical student to the Legislature. I've said: if these people don't listen, take them out.

We must legislate this, my good friends. It's actually good for the government. Your health care spending will actually come down; we will actually improve care. Governments are at risk of lawsuits currently because of the delays in care. This will actually reduce the lawsuits that the regions and government are currently having. How do I know that? Because I actually used to sue the system. When doctors and the system made mistakes, I'd say: hey, they made a mistake. Guess what? After I got elected, when I became the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Health of Wellness from Calgary-West, there were a few major lawsuits settled against the Calgary health region because I gave the expert opinion. They did not want to put the junior health minister on the stand.

I know the province is being sued because I gave the expert opinions. In fact, I got the province off the hook and the doctors off the hook. I'd say: "Look, they didn't make a mistake. The patient would have died anyway, and the harm would have happened anyway." But many times the delays in care caused the harm. That is actually what causes the lawsuits we have. This legislation will actually reduce the lawsuits that we're currently having, improve care, and decrease that spending curve. We must do it, I tell you, because Ontario will legislate this before we do, something that our head doctor, homegrown here, did.

This government legislated no deficits. How do you get a deficit? It's really simple math. You spend too much, or you don't earn enough. We just repealed that legislation. Well, what's the number one cost expenditure? It's health care. So why would we not legislate this? The difference is that we're actually legislating human care and human values. These are the values Albertans espouse. My dear friends, I don't know how to convince you. Do you really want to send the message to the people of Alberta that you do not want to enshrine into law the values that you have, the compassion you have for their suffering?

We pass so many other laws here, guys. I have to be honest to my team. I have supported a lot of laws that I didn't agree with because of the rules of parliamentary democracy and for teammates. I ran for only one reason. I realize that as an MLA you have many other duties to do, and I've learned them, and I've done my best at them. But this is the main reason I ran: to be the voice of all health care professionals, not just emergency doctors. They're just the gatekeepers to a very important system, a fantastic system, actually, because once you get in, you actually get world-class care. That's something the province should be proud of, and that's something this government has actually done. Geez, guys, give a round of applause. This government did that.

Thank you so much, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. I, too, would like to join debate on this bill, Bill 17. I first of all want to thank all members that have had the opportunity to join in on the debate. I think we've had many hours of good debate and good discussion. I want to begin this debate and my discussion by doing as I have locally to our health care professionals, by thanking all health care professionals across this province for the outstanding job that they do every day, 24 hours a day, seven days a week to make sure that we are all well taken care of as it is relating to our health care.

I want us to as well acknowledge the work that has gone into this Alberta Health Act. I want to commend the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford for spending the time to go and talk to Albertans across the province and the extra time to come into my community of Drayton Valley-Calmar for us to be able to have the opportunity in our constituency to have some good discussion and good input into this act.

I want to tell you that folks want us to get on with the business of health care and reducing the wait-list times. They want us to get on with the vision of Vision 2020. They want us to make sure that our seniors – the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek spoke early this morning when I was here about her mother, as she has many times, and I can relate to that. Both of my parents, my father first, were in acute care, a place that is not a place for our seniors, but long-term care after that. I have to say that in the acute-care beds for both my father and my mother, who have since passed on but had both spent time in both of those types of beds: outstanding service. Albertans all say, no matter who talks to us, that when they are in the Alberta health care system, they receive outstanding service from our health care professionals, so I say that. When they were able to move into long-term care, there's even better service there because that is the quality of care.

In saying that, my parents were married for over 50 years, and I can tell you that splitting up couples and partners for life, not being able to share in the same health care facilities, is not the answer for our seniors. It's not the answer for them. Part of that answer is that we have accommodations, assisted living accommodations, where a well senior and a not-well senior that needs some extra health care have the opportunity to live together. As we've added and we continue to add more assisted living beds, as we continue to make sure that we have our seniors in the beds that are right for them, we then free up the acute-care beds, which we so desperately need to do. That is part of our long-term vision. When we look at Vision 2020, we talk about that.

When we look at the Alberta Health Act and putting patients first, that's what Albertans have told us. That's what our constituents have told us. They want us to get on to the business of doing that. When we spoke about that and we talked about a five-year commitment to funding, people were very happy about that, to see that the health care workers that are there day to day, 24/7 are able to do their job while those that are looking after budget needs and hiring needs and all of those things have a longer term outlook, have a broader outlook rather than from year to year. We're very happy about that piece.

Now, in saying this, folks that are in, I would say, the bigger centres compared to our local emergency hospitals – I have to speak very highly of the emergency hospital in my constituency of Drayton Valley-Calmar. You may have to wait, but the wait is certainly not the wait that we would see in our larger centres of Edmonton and Calgary. In saying that, folks from my constituency that have been in both of those centres have said to me that if they absolutely needed the health care to get into emergency, they get there, and they're well taken care of. They commend the health care professionals that we have. That does not mean that we can't do better and that we won't do better and that we should not do better, because we will. That is what this act is about. It's about doing better. It's about setting priorities.

It's important that we as elected folks listen to those folks. That is why when the 100 health care workers came together with a plan to really look at this and how to deal with it, I put a whole lot of respect into those folks. Those are the folks that are dealing with the health care system. Those are the folks that understand what needs to be done in emergency care. Those are the folks that are going to play a large piece in helping us resolve the issues that we have.

I have to just say again how much my constituents appreciate the work that happens in our health care system and the great work that the staff do. We will work together with our minister and with this act and with the Premier and with all of our colleagues and with all of us on all sides of the House to find solutions. That's what Albertans want. They want us to start finding solutions so that together, for them and with them, we will find solutions to reduce the wait-lists, to increase the amount of beds for assisted living and for our seniors' care, thus freeing up acute-care beds so that those beds are there for the people that need them at that time.

[Dr. Brown in the chair]

I want to thank the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford for the work that he has done across this province. What people told me was that this member in particular, as he respectfully travelled across the province – there was a quote earlier today that someone made: but did he listen? My constituents said that not only did the member listen; he heard and he reflected back in this act exactly what they were saying.

Together, let's make sure that we're all working for all Albertans to make this a better health care system. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's been a privilege to participate in this debate on amendment A3 to Bill 17. There have been a lot of good things said. There's been a lot of repetition. We've got an opportunity. I think the one thing that I would focus on is that we need to respect and look at the truth. Why are we here? When we look at and analyze the function that's been the process of the last year and a half since the superboard came in place, it's one of these systems where we've been regulated to death in the literal sense. It's very disappointing that we're not actually looking at and addressing the different bottlenecks. There are many of them that we've talked about. There are many of them that have been pointed out. The question is: are we going to address them?

Again, we've asked for an audit. It's always the first and most critical thing if you want to be able to make the improvements. How many beds do we really have in our facilities that are currently closed down and could be opened? We found last week that there were 360 beds that miraculously opened when all of these problems came to light. All of a sudden the door was opened up, and there was a light on: oh, we need to do something; we need to do it now. Three hundred and sixty beds miraculously appeared. Where did they come from? How many do we have in there?

We've had several of the government members talk about how this is all about politics. That's exactly what the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark has been saying. This has been about politics. It hasn't been about addressing the problems in our facilities. We need to do better. We've talked about the number of people that show up in our emergency rooms, up to 80 per cent that don't belong there. What are we going to do about that to address that?

We've talked about the people that are in there that don't have a bed to go to upstairs. Again, it's been said many times – I can't remember who all they are now that spoke it – that site-based decisions are critical. You can't have someone in Edmonton say:

here's the formula; when you hit it, then we're going to react. What you need is a chief administrative officer that's looking after that facility top to bottom that says that we're going to act on this because this person needs it and they need it now, not looking at a clock or looking at the percentage of beds and saying: now we've hit the trigger point. It isn't good enough.

One member said: "You know what? This document going back to 2007 is from another time and another place." No; 2007 existed here. We made adjustments for the Band-Aid, but did we follow through and get the proper treatment, to open up those beds, to have the site-based decisions? Mr. Chair, we did not.

The biggest problem – and this is what goes back to the crux of all of this – has been the cover-up. They've been given this information for years. It hasn't been released. They need to be honest with Albertans and put out the reports, let them know what is happening, where it's happening, and what they're doing about it.

We can't keep doing this. This idea that they continue to hang onto about the superboard as the solution isn't it. Until they let go of that and say, "How do we get those site-based decisions? How do we actually get it moving through the system?" it's not going to change, Mr. Chair. We need critically to go back and to give people the authority to make the decisions.

We have another problem in the system, and that's the funding of the system. Currently, how are our emergency rooms, our hospitals funded? There's just a bulk funding. It goes there, and those people that have that so-called position, compartmentalized to be able to make a decision here or one here, start off with their money, their budget for the year. Then they're told to work it out so it's going to last a year. Every doctor that shows up, every nurse that shows up, every patient that shows up, every facility worker that shows up is an expense in our system. We've talked many, many times about changing that around to where the funding needs to follow the service. We have to think outside the box and change this to where an administrator realizes that if he's more efficient, he's going to have more money.

We have an economist that specializes in health care that was fired a day and a half ago. I don't know what the agreement is, but we tried speaking out before it came. What we need to do is this audit and an analysis of the system so we know where we're starting from. This hasn't happened. I don't hear it happening.

What's discouraging for Albertans – the doctors, the patients, the people that we're talking to – is, they say, that these people are not reacting to the problems. Again, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark repeated that time and time again. We gave them the information, it was politicized, and there was never a solution. They never reacted. They just took the information, buried it, put it in a compartment, and said: "Yes, we're going to look after it. Don't worry about it." It doesn't work that way.

We need to change our system. We need to have someone who's actually in charge locally and has the authority to make those decisions realize: "You know what? We've got to call in an extra shift of nurses. We need to call in an extra doctor." And they can, not go for the approval and call up to Edmonton or say: oh, look at the formulas here; we're okay.

It's unbelievable; it's shameful, the number of paramedics and ambulances that we have sitting for hours and hours at an emergency room and no response. They seem to think that that's the norm now. It isn't right. It shouldn't be the norm, and it shouldn't be accepted. We need to change what we're doing.

What I wanted to do to bring this all together is the fact that when you read Bill 17 and you read the amendment to Bill 17, it's really nice words. It's really flowery. You've got a health charter.

You've got a health advocate. We've got it written down here where we have this many hours and we're going to react. We don't need the words. We don't need the papers. We need the work actually done. We need a system that's smooth running, that grabs these people, puts them through, treats them, and gets them to the right area.

Another problem that we have is that we're not using our trained people to their full scope of practice. I talked to way too many on how much time they're spending on things that they shouldn't have to be doing. We could hire someone else.

Again, it's been said many times that what we need to do is allow that vertically integrated system, to say: "You know what? These seven people are through the emergency room. They're stabilized. It's not healthy for them to be in the hospital here. We're going to send them home." Again, this person, this network looks at that and says: "You know what? We're going to hire two more respiratory therapists. We're going to hire these other individuals that are going to go and check on them and see that they're okay." We save thousands of dollars a day by moving these people out. But, more importantly, we save them from the high risk of sitting in a hospital, being exposed in a high-risk area.

There are so many things that if we just look at them and start one by one checking them off and start addressing them, we could make a move. Are we going to deny that a year and a half later our wait times are longer, that people who want hips can't get them?

It just goes on and on, Mr. Chair, and we have to change. We have to look at it. We need to do this in a systematic way, look at where the bottlenecks are, and move forward. How many times have we heard that we don't have enough long-term care beds and promises going back two and three years that we're going to build them? We need to change what we're doing. Bill 17: the reason why we've talked about it so much and will continue to talk about it is because it isn't good enough. It isn't going to change things to make a new statement and say: now we're going to do it.

We had a hundred ER doctors that got together – and this sounds like the Committee of the Whole, that they're going to throw things together and do that. I don't think so. Just the idea that it's going to take 40 days tells you that there's something wrong with this when they can't come up with a solution. As the Edmonton-Meadowlark MLA said, we have people that know how to run these facilities. Some of the best ones that have been trained have left the province. We have more here that could do it. Are we going to hire someone to actually run these facilities in an orderly fashion that doesn't have the waste, that doesn't go through those four points that he talks about, to do no harm or not cause unnecessary deaths, unnecessary pain? We're not addressing those things. It just seems like we're in a disconnect. We have the triage nurses. We can move them through if we just open up the system.

Mr. Chair, I'll sit down, but we haven't come up with any solutions. All we've done is talk and talk and talk, and Bill 17 does not address the problems that we're facing here. It's a feel-good paper. It's a paper with promises. As has been mentioned, there are no teeth in it. What we need are actions. We don't need words. We don't need promises. We actually need actions where people can see the numbers going down, realize that we're changing our system and that we're doing it right.

As much as the members want to continue saying, "Oh, it's the superboard" or "It's not the superboard" – 90,000 people, one CEO: show me where that's worked anywhere in the world. Centralized government, centralized planning: it hasn't worked. We need to dismantle the superboard in an orderly fashion. We need to go back to people that understand how to run the facilities. It's not about 300 beds.

The Acting Chair: Hon. member, we are speaking about amendment A3 and the content thereof. If you could confine your remarks to that amendment, please.

Mr. Hinman: I will try and do that.

I appreciate the time to speak on this. I realize that the reason why the discussion has gone on is because the solutions have not been proposed by this government. They're not in the bill. We need to do better. It's a flat, wasted bill. There are broken promises that are now paper promises.

I'll sit down. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Acting Chair: The chair will recognize the Member for Lethbridge-West, followed by the Leader of the Official Opposition, followed by the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to rise today and speak to both this important amendment and some of the impacts of the bill. It's been a pleasure to be here over the evening and listen to a lot of the discussion around both the bill and this amendment as well as a whole lot of other things that have been discussed through the evening.

I'd first like to thank the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark for bringing this forward and creating the opportunity for discussion around wait times. I'd also like to thank the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark for taking the time over the past two years to explain a little bit about what it's like being an emergency room doctor to me. Never having worked in the industry or been part of the health care system, really I didn't understand a lot of the issues around emergency rooms, emergency room medicine, so it's been really nice to have the member explain some of that to me and talk about some of the wait times.

Wait time is one of those words that you hear, and every person I talk to has a different idea of what wait time is. Is it waiting to get into an emergency room, waiting to talk to a triage nurse, waiting to get into a bed, waiting for the tests that you actually need so that a doctor can do an assessment to get you into a bed? There are a whole host of things, and the member did take some time to talk about how that flows within an emergency room and where the critical pieces of that might be.

I did bring up the CAEP, Canadian Association of Emergency Physicians, pages and read a lot of what's in there around their overcrowding position, around some of the issues that they see that might fix that, and there are some really unique things. What I'd really like to talk about is Lethbridge. I come from Lethbridge, and with the Member for Lethbridge-East we're very, very pleased and proud to represent Lethbridge, and southern Alberta is very well represented. In Lethbridge we also have wait time issues, Mr. Chairman, that I'd like to talk about and address a little bit because that's what we're talking about in this piece of legislation.

In Lethbridge we have made significant changes. Now, Lethbridge is a unique area. We have in southern Alberta Medicine Hat and Lethbridge, two urban areas, and large rural areas with a variety of things happening, farming and ranching, people living long distances from services. We also service a great swath of southeastern British Columbia in Lethbridge, so activities and actions there can create impacts on wait times.

As was said in the CAEP pages, a big chunk of emergency department overcrowding is really hard to predict because it can occur any time for a whole host of reasons. You can't often predict. In southern Alberta we've been very fortunate to have very manage-able wait times. I believe wait time averages are around two and a half hours to get a bed in southern Alberta. They've rated hospitals across the country, and Medicine Hat and Lethbridge continue to be in the top few hospitals across the country for wait times as specified through this amendment.

I think that we can look to some of the places right here in Alberta where really good things have already been done within the system, where Alberta Health Services and the men and women on the front lines have worked together and created protocols where wait times have been significantly reduced. One of those things that's happened in our region is the increase in continuing care spaces and home care. We've increased over the past few years from a thousand to 1,500 continuing care spaces. I'll tell you what. Having those extra care spaces, where we can move acute-care patients into the appropriate level of care, freeing up acute-care beds, has been a significant move towards helping maintain these wait times that we see.

I'm going to quote the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark when he said that we have a primary care problem, and these problems back up into the emergency room and plug it up. I think what we need to focus on is that we've got to fix those issues. We've talked a lot about emergency room wait times, about trying to set standards for that, but until we can start to deal with those issues that are backing everything up in the emergency room, those standards will mean little.

We must – we must – continue to work. Some of the good work that has been done across the system in beginning to reduce some of these impediments, building new long-term care beds and facilities across the province, has been helpful, but we've got a ways to go there yet.

In Lethbridge we're also blessed with a combined service. We have a fire-ambulance service that works together, jointly. Alberta Health Services have worked with us to create the opportunity. We just signed a new contract to continue delivering that service as a combined service. It's wonderful for our community. The ambulances are less expensive to run, and they provide great service, and it also helps to keep our fire-ambulance system operating well. This is a place where through creative thinking, through working together with our municipality, with the city of Lethbridge, with our health care providers – don't forget that those emergency room doctors, as well as doing all that they do in the emergency room, are on the phone with our paramedics, working with them as they triage patients in their homes, in travel, around the community. These men and women are very, very busy and are helping us to make sure that people even in their own homes, before they ever get brought to the emergency room, are being dealt with effectively.

Mr. Chairman, I believe those are the kinds of things that we have to continue to do, that we have to continue to take across the province. We've talked a lot about Bill 17. We heard things like: well, you know, this is about a health charter and a health advocate. You know, people in Lethbridge believe that a health advocate and a health charter are good things. They believe that Bill 17, generally, is a good thing. When the member from Edmonton came to Lethbridge and held sessions around what we need to do in health care, people came out. They showed up, and they spoke freely about what they saw and what they thought needed to be done.

Mr. Chair, that is outlined in this bill. The vision of Albertans as we met with them is carried forward here, and I believe that we need a vision for health care. If we're going to fix all those things as laid out under CAEP to do with overcrowding and a whole host of other things, we need that overall, overarching vision to go towards. This bill will help give us that vision. It will help create the opportunity into the future and maybe allow us to deal with some of these very critical issues around overcrowding, wait times, and others.

Mr. Chairman, I think that we continue to move forward using some of those wonderful examples across the province of Alberta of where things are being done right, where Alberta Health Services and the men and women at the front lines are delivering fabulous service to our citizens. Most of the people that I talked to, when they get into our system, are so pleased with the level of care that they get. I get calls and people dropping into my office every week saying: you know, Greg, it took a little while to get in, but when I got in, the service I got was unbelievable. We have a fabulous health care system here. We need to keep what we have as well as develop and increase the quality of our emergency rooms, speeding up that service, but we do that as a holistic approach. I believe this bill will do that, and I would ask everyone to support that.

Thank you.

The Acting Chair: The chair recognizes the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's a privilege to get another opportunity to speak on health care and the delivery of health care, on this government's record, and on what we need to do to improve access to emergency care for sick and injured Albertans across the province. Certainly, amendment A3, that was introduced by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, needs consideration from this Assembly.

Now, I've been hearing all afternoon and last night as well that, of course, there's no need for this, that we can't have this sort of legislation. In particular, I listened with interest to the President of the Treasury Board, and I certainly appreciated his remarks. He talked about a number of things, but this is a government that at one point had to have a law to protect themselves from their own deficit habits. In other words, Mr. Chairman, this is a government that is reluctant to put into the act the suggestions not only from one emergency room physician here in Edmonton but recommendations from their national association. We can't have that written into the law – and I'm going to use that as an example – but when this government had ballooning deficits, of course, they had to have a law to control themselves and meet a certain standard. If you can have that standard for financial requirements, how come you can't have it for medical attention? That would be my first point.

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

Now, the President of the Treasury Board talked at length about health care costs, and he's absolutely right. He talked, Mr. Chairman, about a time – I think he said 15 years ago – when the total budget of the province was $15 billion, and now we have a $15 billion Health and Wellness budget. I understand we have to improve service and we have to control costs, but how can this government stand up and complain about the increasing financial costs on this treasury of health care delivery when they consolidated the nine regional health authorities into one superboard and did this without a cost-benefit analysis, either among themselves or by hiring an external consultant, to see if it would control costs and improve service? They didn't do it. They publicly acknowledged that they didn't do it, so to stand up and complain about costs getting out of control is totally wrong.

3:30

Now, the Canadian Association of Emergency Physicians has a good standard. Why it can't become part of this bill is beyond me.

Maybe the government knows they could never, never meet that standard. I talked last night about how suddenly the minister and Alberta Health and Wellness and Alberta Health Services had to change the bar and lower it because they knew full well they couldn't meet it. But these are standards that should be met and, I think, can be met.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview has worked for the last decade to come up with solutions so that we can accelerate access by sick and injured Albertans to the health system. It's all there for everyone to see. There have been a lot of proposals put forward, but it was always with the interest of accelerating access for those who need for one reason or another to visit a doctor or a hospital.

Speaking of hospitals, the former minister of health, the current Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations, spoke earlier about hospitals and what we need to do.

Dr. Taft: Does she have a hospital in her constituency?

Mr. MacDonald: No. There is no hospital in Sherwood Park. There is a form of a hospital. Maybe it'll become a primary care network. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview and I had the privilege of visiting a primary care network in the south part of the city, a fast-growing neighbourhood, and it was quite interesting to see. That was one of the ideas that the hon. member and this party had been talking about quite some time ago, and it's a pleasure to see the government adopt in one form or another another one of our fine ideas.

The former minister of health was talking about the three-page document that was referred to many times in debate by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, and I believe she went as far as to table it. I appreciate that. Certainly, there are a lot of items that have been used in the debate so far this afternoon on this amendment A3 that should be tabled. I would certainly like to see the hon. Member for St. Albert's letter, that he sent to the current minister of health I think a couple of weeks ago, two or three weeks ago. I would love to have a look at that. I appreciate the hon. Member for St. Albert's participation. It's almost 24 hours since he had an opportunity to participate in this, but I would like to see that document, get a chance to have a look at that. I would also like to see some of the other documents referred to by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark in his discussion and debate on this issue.

However, with regard to the former minister of health, the Member for Sherwood Park, who has no hospital, when we look at the details that are provided by the emergency room doctors from across Canada – and, unfortunately, this a 2007 document – they state that Canada has only three hospital beds per 1,000 Canadians, ranking 26th out of 30 countries in the OECD. Now, this is quite interesting because if that's the Canadian average, three beds per 1,000 Canadians, in Alberta we have one bed for every 515 citizens. I'm getting this information from a distinguished researcher, Donna Wilson. I think she's a professor of nursing over at the University of Alberta.

That is quite a change, and we've talked about this before. We see the announcements – we have a hard job keeping up with them – that this government makes. Essentially, this is a government of ribbon cutters. They love to cut ribbons. They love to have photo ops making announcements, but they have a hard job getting the project finished. An example of that would be the Mazankowski heart centre. I was astonished to find out that we had a grand opening and a gala.

Dr. Taft: The Prime Minister was there.

Mr. MacDonald: The Prime Minister was there.

Dr. Taft: I think Diana Krall was there.

Mr. MacDonald: Diana Krall was, yes.

Dr. Taft: Lady Gaga wasn't, though.

Mr. MacDonald: Lady Gaga wasn't there, no. Or if she was there, I didn't know about it.

But that would be an example, Mr. Chairman, of inaction by this government.

Now, our bed total here in this province. If we go back 15 years, to when we had less money, the hon. President of the Treasury Board was talking about that the total provincial budget was not more than what we're currently spending on health care. I'm going to find the figure here, Mr. Chairman, because it's really, really important. We had one hospital bed for every 400 Albertans. When we had less resources, we put more time, it seems, into keeping hospital beds open. Hospital beds are very, very important. They're what keeps the system operating. We heard that from the hon. member.

One of the solutions that we could look at again – and the President of the Treasury Board knows better than I. Certainly, McKinsey & Company, the research and consulting company, has done some very interesting work for the province. They talk about primary care networks. They talk about reducing the pressure on the emergency rooms through health centres such as the one that has recently opened in northeast Edmonton but for some reason or another is slow to get up to full function. In the course of this we have put an additional $3 billion recently into the budget of Alberta Health Services.

We've got the famous five-year funding, stable funding, which is interesting. I hope it continues. I'm not so sure. The current minister of health is very proud of that and takes full credit for it, but I believe we have to publicly give credit to the current Energy minister, who at the time was health minister. I think it was him that brought that through Treasury Board. He did the heavy lifting on that file. [interjection] Oh, I think he did. I think he did the heavy lifting on that file. Others are wanting to take credit . . .

Mr. Snelgrove: If it works, others will take credit. If it doesn't, we'll blame them.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. But it takes more than one guy to score a touchdown, and you know that.

Mr. Chairman, they're distracting me over there.

Now, I would like to remind the House of some of the solutions that we could have to speed up access to the system and that I think would be much, much better. The immediate shortage of health care professionals – physicians, nurses – we talked about last night. We talked about the issue of recruiting abroad, at taxpayers' expense locally, and then not hiring the people. We've got to get our act together on that. Staff shortages are forcing hospitals throughout Alberta to close some of their operations and some of their units. We know that. We've got to train locally as well. That's reflected in the McKinsey report. That's reflected in work that the current Minister of Education did when he was advanced education minister.

There was quite an effort put forward to once and for all end the shortages by recruiting and retaining and training people in the health care professions. But this all fell by the wayside for some curious reason, and here we are 24 hours later in this House having what I consider another emergency debate on health care. Whether we want to look at it or not, we're also discussing the track record of this government over the last two decades, and it's not a very good record. It's not a record you should be proud of, but it's your record, and you're going to have to live with it.

Now, unfortunately, 1 in 5 Albertans don't have access in a quick fashion to a family physician. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview and this party have talked about increasing the number of seats in the medical schools. That has to be done. Don't listen to us; listen to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark because he put it quite well, I think, in the first or second hour of this debate.

Building capacity and easing ER overcrowding: I think we can certainly do that, and we can do that without increasing the deficit in this province, but the government has to make commitments and priorities. Right now their commitments and their priorities are wrong.

Another idea of ours was to have these bed management coordinators in some of the busiest hospitals in the province. We suggested that it be a pilot project six years ago, and it's quite interesting to hear this minister talk about it.

Speaking of pilot projects, Mr. Chairman, regarding emergency department overcrowding, the British Columbia government did pilot projects on what may or may not work with health care. They didn't dismantle the whole system and create one superboard. They have pilot projects going on all the time to see if they will improve service and control costs. But not here. This crowd meets behind closed doors and decides through this memorandum of understanding, that the former minister of health, the current Minister of Energy, quarterbacked, and of course that's the memorandum of understanding which created the superboard. I just can't understand that, when I do research on what goes on in British Columbia and how they do pilot projects, and then this crowd here.

Now, also with emergency room overcrowding we immediately need to increase the number of available long-term care beds. We have discussed this. That gets me to another point I would like to make, and that's about the remarks that the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar gave. I appreciated, again, hearing from her.

Now, this McKinsey & Company report. This is a million-dollar consulting contract. They indicate here the percentage of acute-care patients waiting for continuing care. This is why we have suggested the idea that we get some long-term care beds constructed in a timely fashion. In 2007 – and the government may have updated statistics on this – Aspen was 19 per cent. In the former Aspen health region 19 per cent of acute-care patients were waiting at any one time for continuing care; East Central, 16 per cent; Peace River, 14; Palliser, 13; followed by Capital health region with 11 per cent; and Calgary was the lowest, at 9. So you can see that in some of the former rural regional health authorities they had the largest number of patients waiting in acute-care beds. This is a big issue that we need to resolve. I would certainly photocopy any of this information that the minister of health would be interested in reading over the weekend.

Now, we can do better. We've seen these policies or these programs that have been introduced. We've seen arbitrary cutbacks. We've seen poor manning. We have seen creeping privatization. All erode not only the public health care system but confidence in that health system.

In the time I have left I would like to remind this House and the President of the Treasury Board again that we can't blame senior citizens or an aging population for driving up health care costs and creating this mess that the government is in. We have demographically one of the youngest provinces, if not the youngest, in Canada. The three youngest metropolitan census areas in Statistics Canada's catalogue respectively are Saskatoon and Edmonton followed by Calgary. The average age is 36 years. So we don't have, hon. minister, an aging population driving up health care costs.

If we plan this now for when the President of the Treasury Board is ready to retire, we'll have a place for him. We'll have a nice, comfortable place that's safe and secure for the hon. minister to retire. He can think about his curling games and his football games and his construction projects. He'll have lots of time.

We do not have an aging population that's driving up these health care costs, and I resent the spin by the Public Affair Bureau that this is what's causing our problems.

Mr. Chairman, I certainly would urge all hon. members to have another look at amendment A3.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, may we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm a little late. I had two guests that I was going to introduce, but one just left. The one that just left was a former president of the PC Association of Alberta, Marg Mrazek.

My other guest is my best friend, my confidante, my best supporter ever, my first wife, Jan. She's my wife of 45 years, so I suspect she'll also be my last wife. I would ask that she rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. It's a real delight to see up in the gallery an unexpected guest, a former member of this Assembly who served for, I think, two terms, one term that he wanted to, and who also served quite a length of time on St. Albert city council. I'd ask him to rise. His name is Len Bracko. It's great to see you here.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I would like to introduce a former colleague of ours, the former Member for Edmonton-Calder. He is the executive director of Friends of Medicare and was recently nominated as the NDP candidate for Edmonton-Glenora. Mr. David Eggen, if you would please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Deputy Chair: Are there any other introductions? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Despite all of the negative stuff that's happened recently, I'd like to introduce Sharon MacLean. She's the love of my life. Thank you so much, dear, for supporting me through this interesting time.

Bill 17
Alberta Health Act

The Deputy Chair: The next hon. member to speak is the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the opportunity. Relative to this amendment, in retrospect I'm glad that I moved the adjournment at the time that I did because I have to tell you that the level of discussion has definitely significantly improved compared to what was happening at night. That's quite reassuring and refreshing.

3:50

First of all, I would like to start by sincerely saying thank you to the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark for bringing forward this amendment. As I said earlier, there is not a doubt in my mind that he is a well-intended individual who shares with all of us in this Chamber the common goal of trying to make our health care as good as it possibly can be in this province. At the same time, I have to say that even though our goal is the same, I'm not sure that the means, the vehicle by which we arrive at this particular goal should be the one that he furthers in his amendment.

I will tell you, Mr. Chairman, that I'm looking right now at a daily publication, a national Internet-based newspaper publication called canada.com, and coincidence would have it that one of the major headlines in this paper is Heading to Emergency room? Bring lunch, maybe a pillow, too.

Then the article goes on to say:

Patients in Ottawa and surrounding areas can expect to spend about 7.4 hours in the emergency department, according to a new report on emergency wait times in Ontario from the Canadian Institute for Health Information.

The article goes on to say, if I may take the liberty of reading one paragraph:

Patients in Ottawa and area emergency rooms are not being treated within recommended times, according to a new report on emergency visits in Ontario by the Canadian Institute of Health Information.

Last fall, benchmarks set in a report by the Ontario Hospital Association, the Ontario Medical Association and the Ontario Ministry of Health and Long-Term Care recommended that 90 per cent of patients requiring urgent care should complete their emergency department visit within six hours. Those needing less urgent care should stay a maximum of four hours.

Mr. Chairman, as they report, their average waiting time is 7.4 hours, surpassing the urgent and nonurgent, obviously, by far. Now, this takes me back to two points. Number one, the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark eloquently argued that the best of the best and the brightest of the brightest left Alberta and went to Ontario, and they're working very hard to improve the Ontario health system. I am not doubting that they are good, and I'm not doubting that they're working hard in Ontario, but if we are to measure their success by what I'm reading here in this article, they're not doing so well. Their waiting times are actually longer than what we have here in Alberta.

Mr. Chairman, that also brings me to another point. In Ontario they have set guidelines for what the average waiting time should be – and as the article indicates, it should be six hours for urgent, four hours for nonurgent – and even though they have those guidelines in place, those guidelines mean nothing. Patients in Ottawa are waiting 7.4 hours on average and are advised to bring lunch and pillows with them to emergency. That really speaks to the fact that what point is there to legislating, basically setting in stone, the maximum allowable time for a patient to wait in an emergency room when the fact of the matter is that the emergency room cannot live up to that standard?

What I find very interesting is that the Wildrose opposition is in support of legislating timelines, yet their argument just about four or five days ago on a bill relevant to distracted driving and using cellphones in cars was: we don't support any law that cannot be implemented and/or enforced. They argue that there is no way to implement that law; there is no way to enforce that law. Why would you pass a law when right off the top you know that you cannot either (a) implement it or (b) enforce it? Here they're arguing, Mr. Chairman, that we should pass a law right now in this Chamber that we know right now we can neither implement nor can we enforce.

The Member for Calgary-Fish Creek has a habit of somehow always including me in her speeches, and I thank her for that because I take that as a sign of either adoring me or recognizing me in a positive way. She indicates that I said earlier last night that passing a law like this would be like putting a gun to those doctors' heads in the emergency room. I stand by that comment. If we all in this Chamber in good conscience know that today if this law was to pass, our emergency doctors, with their best skills and best intentions, which they have, are simply not able to meet those targets, why would we now legislate them by law to meet those targets? Mr. Chairman, that would be patently unreasonable. Why would you force someone to do something that you know he cannot do to begin with?

Why can't they do this? That should be the question that we should be asking ourselves. Perhaps passing this kind of legislation later on, when achieving those guidelines is actually practical and possible, would be the right thing to do. But now I think we need to step back and ask ourselves: why is it that we can't get to those desirable waiting time limits so that we can legislate them perhaps or put them into practice guidelines and compel our system to live up to those guidelines?

Well, Mr. Chairman, as I said earlier, it is again a twist of irony – and now I will refer to the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek. Just a few months ago she sat on this side, and she sat on this side for many, many years. She was one of the contributors in a positive way to this government in arguing that something has to change in health care, that we just can't carry on like this. She was here in this Chamber during the Bill 11 debate. Remember the infamous Bill 11, when we had rallies in front of the Legislature where people actually were breaking windows to get into the building, where one individual was hanging off this bannister over here, trying to jump into the Chamber? The fact is that opposition and special-interest groups fought against Bill 11 because government was going to change health care.

Ms Blakeman: They were going to privatize it.

Mr. Lukaszuk: That's right. As the Member for Edmonton-Centre says, we were going to privatize it. We were going to bring American-style health care. They were saying: fix health care, but don't change anything. Then this government, including the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, was saying: "We live in this province, just like everybody else. We share the best interests of health care, just like anybody else. But we foresee a day when if we continue managing our health care system the way we're managing it right now, there will be problems. There will be growing lineups in emergencies. There will be patients that won't be served at a level that we would like to see them served. Since we are aware of the fact that this will happen, let's change it." But, no, the opposition were very much set in their opinion that we shouldn't be doing anything. Just put more money into the system.

Well, Mr. Chairman, the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek was right, and this government was right. We are starting to see issues in the health care system that could have been prevented. Now, the irony of ironies is that when this government for another reason tried to repeal Bill 11 because we were bringing in other legislation, that very same opposition then fought against repealing Bill 11. So the message is clear. Either the opposition didn't read either piece of legislation, or the fact still remains that health care is a topic on which one can definitely arouse the masses because we all care for health care.

All of us have family members, have children, parents, or others in health care or simply anticipate that one day we will need it, and we are very emotional about it. Like the Member for Lethbridge-East said: health care is emotional. Well, health care is emotional, particularly when you make it emotional, and unfortunately in our political structure we make health care political. Really, in essence, in the very nature of health care there is nothing political about it.

You know, there are really two systems that interact with each other. There is the medical profession, the healers, that do their art of taking care of human beings, and then there is the administration, that runs the system. Those are the only two arms that should be involved in managing health care. But once you include the third, the politicizing of the system, you end up with 24-hour Legislature sittings where we discuss everything and anything other than actually the merit of what needs to be discussed. The question is: why did we get to where we've gotten to, and how are we going to get out of it?

The fact is, Mr. Chairman, that the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark said that in general our health care system is fabulous, and just two, three minutes ago here in this Chamber he told me that even relative to the emergency room situation we are the best of the lot, that we are the best in Canada.

Dr. Taft: That's not true.

Mr. Lukaszuk: The Member for Edmonton-Riverview says, "That's not true." Well, Mr. Chairman, if the Member for Edmonton-Riverview accuses me of lying, let him do so, but I just spoke to the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark literally 15 minutes ago in this chair beside me, and the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark told me that we're the best of the lot.

He further said that it's a national problem. It's not an Alberta problem; it's a national problem. The fact is, Mr. Chairman, that I believe what we need to do – and the minister of health has been doing this, not only this one but the previous one and the ones prior to him – is focus on the actual health care system. Perhaps with some degree of co-operation from the opposition we could introduce amendments to the system that will result in better quality of care to our patients, to our constituents, because that's what all of us really want at the end of the day.

Mr. Chairman, as I said earlier, I am glad that the level of the debate has elevated somewhat. I am glad that we had this opportunity to discuss this matter, albeit for 24 hours now. I have confidence in this particular minister of health. I know his intentions are nothing but the best. I know that Alberta has the means of having the best health care system in Canada. Definitely, the situation is not a financial problem because we have the best-funded health care system in Canada. We have the only system that has at least some predictability in its funding. We definitely have the infrastructure, and we're building the infrastructure, so we're ahead of the curve that way. If we only remove one component, if we remove the politics out of this and stop scaring our constituents, then perhaps we can focus on the real issue, on the issue of fixing access to the emergency rooms and making sure that those who really need it receive emergency care and that those who have less urgent medical needs will have a place to turn to as well.

On this note, Mr. Chairman, I thank you for this opportunity. Even though lengthy, it was definitely time well spent. It's a topic definitely worthy of the time of this Chamber and every single member, and I believe that in some spirit of co-operation and less politicizing we actually can also elevate not only the level of debate but the level of the quality of care.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. It's been a long 24 hours – that's for sure; I think everyone agrees about that – but I think that it was a good debate. I think there's still more to debate on the amendment. The reason I say that is that I still have not heard a compelling reason given by this government why – I mean, the government members are all saying the same thing. It's like watching reruns or something. It's amazing. The caucus is very united. It's almost like there's no . . . [interjections]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere has the floor.

Mr. Anderson: Sometimes when I speak, Mr. Chair, it's very compelling for the members opposite, and they feel that they need to comment, and I think that's positive.

The thing is that, again, it's like we hear the same thing over and over. They're saying the right things. They want a good health care system. "Look how great our health care system is. We're doing everything we can to fix our health care system. We've got the best health care system in the country." It's very touching that they're so unified, but the fact of the matter is that no one in the province believes a word they're saying about it. That's what's funny about it. No one believes that they are doing the job in health care at all. Now, we can talk about that, and we can throw statistics around about how off base they've become with regard to public opinion on this issue, but I agree with the hon. member opposite that last spoke. Let's just talk about solutions. That's what we're going to try to do.

I think that the first thing we need to assess is: where do we go from here? We have so many problems in our health care system. Some are systemic – most are systemic, actually – in their nature, so we're not going to fix anything like that right now, okay? We can start on the road to fixing it, but we're not going to fix systemic problems overnight. Everyone agrees. The government says that all the time, that these things don't happen overnight. The Treasury Board president just was pontificating for a good 20 minutes on how things just don't change overnight. We got it.

But there are some things that we can change, and one of the things that we can change immediately is that we can raise the level of expectation in our health care system, in our emergency rooms in particular. We can start there. You've got to start somewhere. Everybody knows in this House that when you have a mammoth task to accomplish, you've got to start somewhere. You've got to start somewhere, and what better place to start in our health care system than the place where we have a crisis on our hands? Wouldn't that be a good first step? You know, instead of addressing something that is going to cause delays and is going to adversely affect people but they will still be alive at the end of that delay – yes, they will have more pain and suffering and all that sort of thing, and it's important to alleviate that, but it's going to take some time to get those wait times under control.

If we're going to put our energies into something, why don't we attack the place where we are weakest right now, the place where we are failing utterly and completely? That is in our emergency rooms. People are dying in the emergency rooms. I didn't write the documents; the emergency room docs wrote the documents. I'm not writing up letters to, you know, the Wildrose caucus and the Liberal caucus and the NDP caucus and the PC caucus saying: oh, look at all the problems in the emergency room. Those aren't coming from us. They're not coming from the politicians in this room. All we're doing is communicating what we're hearing to the government and saying that this is what is being said about our emergency rooms.

Every one of us in here – well, I'm not going to speak to that. Certainly, from my constituency office and from the letters to the editor in my local papers every indicator that I can possibly get right now says that we have a major emergency room crisis on our hands. People are scared to go to the emergency room. They are. There are so many people that they don't know what to expect when they go there. They honestly don't.

You know, I just had a constituent the other day come in and tell me about him and his wife. His wife has had a history of problems, various health issues, and she had an episode of what she struggles with. They went to the emergency room, and they spent over two days there. Now, she ended up not dying, which is fantastic, but she was in pain for 48 hours, in total, excruciating pain. They finally saw her. It was actually a pretty minor thing that they needed to do. It barely took any time. It was like half an hour, kind of: see, assess, get a test, and so forth. I understand there are more complicated cases, but this is not something that we're making up.

I think the bottom line is that we have to start somewhere, and let's pick an issue that is nonpartisan in nature. I think emergency rooms are nonpartisan. They're not left, right. There are no ideological differences on what to do about the emergency room. That's not what we're debating here. We're just debating on the method. I think there are several members on the government side that said that, and I agree with that, so let's start there.

But how can you start there if you don't have any accountability in the system? Just promising is not enough. Everybody knows that. You've got to have some kind of accountability measure. We're not talking about if the minister or if somebody fails to get these targets, as per the 2007 statement, to treat them in four hours or less or, for less serious patients, six hours or less 95 per cent of the time. I don't think we're even disagreeing on that. I think the only difference I'm hearing in this debate – we all agree that this is probably the right standard or close to it, anyway; it's just that we don't like the legislated part. Well, the thing with the legislated part is that it's the only way you can put teeth in the legislation to make it happen.

Now, what the penalties are for not adhering to those standards: that's up for debate. We can talk about that. Obviously, you shouldn't send someone to jail for not accomplishing these things. That's not what we're talking about. We're not talking about giving them fines. What we are talking about is that if we're going to hire somebody to oversee a hospital and make sure that an emergency room is working effectively, then we should tie their salary or tie the existence of their job, whether they can keep it or not, to whether they are accomplishing the targets.

Most importantly, give them the authority to do what they need to do. Give them the authority to open up the beds if they need opening. Let's say that there are five or six seniors in an emergency room who are clogging up acute-care beds and therefore it's backlogging the emergency room. Have those people have the authority to designate a couple of nurses and put them in temporary, safe hotel arrangements with those nurses to oversee their care to open up those beds quickly if there's a huge overload on the system. Right now there's none of that.

We've talked to so many emergency doctors, and they say that that is not in place. There's no one in a hospital who can say: "Okay. This ward needs to open up these two beds. It's a nonemergency ward, and you need to open these two beds right now. We're going to staff them. We're going to get people in there. It's done. It's temporary, but we need it right now to fix the problem, the overload." There's no one with that authority right now, so how do we expect them to fix the system?

All of the solutions I hear from that side are long-term solutions. Yeah, we all agree that there's a need for more long-term care. Does anyone in this House disagree with that? I don't think anyone does. Everyone is saying it; the government is saying it. Great. So build the long-term care facilities. But that takes time, and it doesn't solve the crisis now. What does solve the crisis is giving local people, local chief medical officers, the ability, the authority to open up beds, to move people into other accommodation and so forth.

These are achievable goals. These wait times are achievable, but it just won't be done. If we don't legislate them, guys, and give the person the authority needed to run the hospital and make sure that the backlog is taken care of, if we don't do that, it won't get done. The answer will always be, "Oh, we just need more long-term care," and slowly but surely over time we will build our long-term care infrastructure and capacity. But in the interim there will be a lot of dead people and a whole lot more injured people or suffering people that don't need to be suffering. That's what this whole amendment is about.

Nobody here wants unnecessary deaths. The health minister, clearly, does not want any unnecessary deaths and unnecessary suffering. You know what? I think the health minister thinks that everybody is as motivated as he is on everything, and it's just not the case. If you don't have accountability measures in place, if you can't hold someone's feet to the fire, inevitably things get put off, and people take the easy way out, et cetera, et cetera, et cetera. If we don't have these accountability measures, nothing is going to happen.

A good quote is: a goal unwritten is only a wish. A goal unwritten is only a wish, and we all wish for a better system, but that's not enough. We have to get past this. In every system that we have, it seems that we just want to spend, spend, spend, and we don't ever ask for accountability. It's just not working.

Why do we want to start with emergency room wait times? It's very simple. With emergency room wait times, if you don't solve the problem, you have dead people on your hands. It's a crisis right now. It's not like access to family doctors. Do we need to improve access to family doctors? Obviously, we do, but there are not too many people that are going to die because they don't have a family doctor at that time. They can go to a walk-in clinic. They can self-diagnose if it's a cold or a fever or something like that. It's not the end of the world. It's not going to kill the person right there. Is it going to cause problems in the system down the road? Yeah. That's why we need to solve the problem.

It's the same with a hip replacement. Is that going to kill a person if they can't get their hip replacement in three months and, instead, they have to wait nine months? No. But it means lots of suffering, absolutely. We want to alleviate those lists and alleviate that suffering, absolutely, but it's not going to kill the person right now. So let's work on it together and get that done, but there's going to be a time period.

The emergency room crisis is different. People are dying now. They're suffering now. There's an immediate need. I challenge the government. Honestly, government, I know you're not listening, but are you honestly saying that you want to come out of this session and have absolutely nothing to show? You want absolutely nothing to show for this session on the issue of emergency wait times other than a few promises? There's nothing you want to go to the people of Alberta with and say: "Okay. We're serious enough about this that we're going to put it in writing. It's in writing. It's a contract with the people of Alberta that this is going to be how long you wait and no longer in our emergency rooms." It just needs to be done.

You can almost sense that there are going to be several issues. There's going to be an issue that happens in the next little while – you know it's going to happen – where someone is going to lose their life because they were unnecessarily in an emergency room for 10 hours and didn't get treated. People are going to say: "Oh, that's too bad. Oh, that's so tragic. We're going to get more long-term care beds in place." That's what the government line is going to be. "We grieve with the family. Here's our plan for more long-term beds." That's going to be the government line, and someone else is going to die unnecessarily.

It just seems so preventable to me to just do what is needed to be done now. Pass the accountability measures. Empower a chief medical officer at every single hospital with an emergency room that has authority to move people around that hospital at will without AHS hording over them and telling them what they can and can't do with different regulations. That doesn't work.

You know, one of the things that works for every big corporation – look at other big corporations. Look at WestJet. Does everyone agree that WestJet is – does everybody want to agree? You know, to the doctor from Edmonton-Meadowlark: are you familiar with WestJet?

'Mr. Chair, the thing with WestJet is that these folks actually empower their folks on the ground to make decisions about, you know, whether someone gets a free flight because of a screw-up. They empower people right there, their front-line people on the ground. They empower them. They say: "You are going to have the authority to make decisions. You'll be accountable for those decisions at the end of the day, but you have the authority to make decisions. You don't have to go to the CEO of WestJet. You don't have to go to managers below the CEO of WestJet. If you think there's an issue here and the customer needs to be serviced right now, you can make a decision, and you will be accountable for that decision." There's no red tape. You just do it. And if you did a bad job, you'll pay for it later. You'll be accountable for it later.

Why don't we treat our health care system more like that? Why don't we say to our doctors and nurses on the ground . . . [interjections]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, can you please keep it down? It's getting difficult to hear. Please keep it down.

Mr. Anderson: As I was saying, with WestJet – and Walmart is another example of a company that empowers their front-line employees to make decisions right there on the ground without having to go to upper management to make them. They have to be accountable for those decisions later on – they're assessed – but they make the decisions on the ground. If Walmart trusts the Walmart greeters, why can we not trust our doctors and nurses, who are some of the most highly trained health professionals in the world, to make the right decision?

4:20

An Hon. Member: They're not WestJet; they're Air Canada.

Mr. Anderson: That's right. You know what? That's right. It's because we're not WestJet here; we're Air Canada here. That's it.

We call it Air Communist. That's how this government believes health care should be run. Everything has got to go through the Air Canada administration. Everything has got to go through the bureaucracy to get any kind of decisions, and that's why Air Canada stinks. That's why WestJet is a better company and it's more profitable and people like flying it more. Same with Southwest. They do the same thing. Same with Walmart. That's why everyone shops there, because if you need something returned, if you need a decision made, bang. The person on the ground makes the decision, period, and then is accountable for it later when they do assessment because there are accountability measures in place in all those companies.

Just look at some of these corporations. Why wouldn't we do this in our emergency rooms? Let's set the targets. Let's set the standards: this is the WestJet standard. Then empower our doctors, our highly paid, our highly trained doctors and nurses to make those life-and-death decisions right away on the ground, no questions asked. You need a bed opened up in unit 32? Bang. Done. It's open. We're bringing in that nurse to staff those five beds or those two nurses to staff those five beds, period. We don't care if those five beds aren't in the emergency room. They're open now. That's the type of service that we need to get to, but we can't do it unless we empower our local health care professionals on the ground.

It's too bad that we've gone through this 24-hour – you know, all I would ask the government to do: if we're going to come back on Monday, come back with an amendment. Come back with something. Just show us beforehand how you want to take action on this right away so we can all get behind it. We can come out and say to Albertans: here's the plan. Together we're going to legislate it. This is the way it's going to be. If there's some wording here that you think needs tinkering, let's talk to the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. Maybe we need to make some slight tinkering. I don't know. I'm not the emergency room doctor here. Certainly, you guys aren't. But there's one sitting in the back row right there. So why don't we work with him to go over this amendment or maybe propose an entirely new amendment that he feels will do the job and that the government is comfortable with. Until that happens, I would feel guilty as the representative of Airdrie-Chestermere for going forward with this without finding a solution.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's my pleasure to stand today to join the debate on the amendment by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, a member that has educated me on many of the needs of the health care system and has been able to do it in a language that a politician and an agricultural producer can understand, which is indeed a rare ability in these days.

What that member told me was that being 85 years old in Alberta is not a health condition; it's a condition of health. As we talk about this amendment and we talk about the emergency care in our province, our problem isn't the people that give that emergency care. It isn't the front-line workers. They are very, very qualified. The problem is having the proper places for the people as they age. As a government we are doing a great deal in that direction, in making sure that people are able to age in the right place. The efforts that are being made are going to take time.

Mr. Chair, there's no magic dust that we can sprinkle into an emergency ward today that's going to make all the problems go away. If there was, that magic dust would have to make the patients go away, and that's simply not going to happen.

It's my pleasure to speak on this today and on this amendment partially because of the position that I have in the order of speakers, which is right towards the end of our day. I think Albertans deserve to finish off this week of the Legislature in speaking on this amendment with good news. The good news is that in this province we invest per capita either the highest or close to the highest of anywhere in this nation. We have taken steps in the reduction of administration that have put $600 million more into the system. We need to talk about the facts and what's really taking place in this province. [interjections] I'm sorry, Mr. Chair. I'm having a little trouble talking over the members.

Mr. Chair, people are living longer and having a better quality of life. This amendment moves in the direction, I know, to try and improve that, but those numbers would wind up a minimum, and we need to do better than that. When I look at the care received in this province, I try to think historically. When my family first came to this province, life expectancy was 47. A child born in Alberta today will live one hour longer than a child born in Alberta yesterday.

The system is not failing. There are things that we need to do to improve it, but people are living very well. The procedures and things that we're doing and that our medical profession is doing for people now in many cases did not exist in my father's generation, and it has produced a quality of life for me that generations before me haven't seen.

Mr. Chair, we have many people in this province that we need to take care of and that are at risk. We run a danger when we look at one area specifically and think that that will solve all of our problems. Some of those people that are at risk are losing our time and attention because of spending too much time in certain areas and not enough time in looking at our overall system. I do not want people not getting the support that they need out there in our society, losing faith, and possibly taking their lives before they ever get anywhere near our health system. We have a lot of things to take care of. Let's think about them reasonably.

Let's think about this amendment. This amendment is at best a Band-Aid. We are called to a lot higher effort than that as Albertans, and we will achieve a lot higher effort than that. I have faith in our health care workers. I have faith in Albertans, and if there was a message I could leave with them in speaking about this amendment today, it would be: "If you need emergency care, do not be afraid to go into the system that we have before you because we have the best health care professionals in the world. You can go in there. You will be taken care of, and your quality of life will be great."

Mr. Chair, I would like to move that we adjourn debate on Bill 17.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you. Mr. Chair, I would move that the committee now rise and report what progress is possible on bills 17 and 27.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports progress on the following bills: Bill 27 and Bill 17. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

Thank you, sir.

The Acting Speaker: All those members in favour of the report, please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed, please say no. So ordered.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I know that in the real world it's actually Thursday, but for us here in this Assembly it is still Wednesday because members dedicated themselves to an all-night, two-day debate on important issues. We have now sat for 27 consecutive hours, and I just want to say thank you to everybody for their input.

On that note I would move that the House now stand adjourned until 1:30 p.m. on Monday.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 4:30 p.m. on Thursday to Monday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Monday, November 29, 2010

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. As legislators we give thanks for the rich heritage and the diversity of the people of our province. We are thankful for the many opportunities so abundant in the province of Alberta. On this occasion, as we welcome His Excellency the Governor General of Canada into our Legislature, we dedicate ourselves to both the present and the future in the service of Alberta and Canada. Amen.

Please be seated.

[The Premier and the Sergeant-at-Arms left the Chamber to attend the Governor General]

[The Mace was draped]

The Speaker: Hon. members and ladies and gentlemen, the Royal Canadian Artillery Band will now play the movement The Arrival of the Queen of Sheba by composer George Frideric Handel. The timeless splendour and beauty of this music is a fitting prelude to the entrance of His Excellency the Governor General into the Alberta Legislature. The band is under the direction of Captain Eric Gagnon, who is in the Speaker's gallery.

[The Sergeant-at-Arms knocked on the main doors of the Chamber three times. The Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms opened the doors, and the Sergeant-at-Arms entered]

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Ladies and gentlemen, all rise, please.

Mr. Speaker, His Excellency the Right Honourable David Johnston, Governor General of Canada, and Her Excellency Mrs. Sharon Johnston await.

The Speaker: Sergeant-at-Arms, admit His Excellency the Right Honourable Governor General of Canada and Her Excellency.

[A fanfare of trumpets sounded]

[Preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, His Excellency the Right Honourable Governor General of Canada, David Johnston, CC, CMM, COM, CD, and Mrs. Sharon Johnston, their party, and the Premier entered the Chamber. His Excellency took his place upon the throne]

The Speaker: I would now invite Mr. Paul Lorieau to lead us in the singing of our national anthem.

Hon. Members and Guests:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Your Excellencies, hon. members, ladies and gentlemen, please be seated.

On behalf of all members and the people of Alberta I am pleased to welcome Your Excellencies to the Legislative Assembly of Alberta.

By any measure Your Excellency is an exceptional Canadian of uncommon and high achievement in many fields. Her Excellency and your family mirror your devotion to the service of others, family, and the ideals we strive to embrace as a nation. We congratulate you on your appointment as Canada's 28th Governor General.

This is a rare and significant occasion. Today marks only the second time that a Governor General has addressed our Assembly since its first sitting in 1906. [applause]

Your Excellency's presence here today serves to underline the connection between the Crown and our Assembly. The authority for all that we do here flows from the Crown, and the acts of this provincial parliament are in the name of the person that you have the honour to represent in every cardinal point in this great dominion, Elizabeth II, Queen of Canada.

Please carry the affection, great respect, and the good wishes of all members of this House with you wherever your travels take you throughout this beautiful province and across our absolutely outstanding country.

It is my honour now to invite the hon. the Premier of Alberta, Premier Ed Stelmach, to deliver his remarks to Your Excellencies and the citizens of Alberta.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Boy, that was quite a rendition of O Canada.

Your Excellencies, distinguished guests in all the galleries, ladies and gentlemen, it is my very great privilege to welcome Their Excellencies the Right Honourable David Johnston, Governor General and also commander in chief, and Mrs. Sharon Johnston to the Alberta Legislature.

Earlier today I had the privilege of hosting a luncheon in their honour at Government House. Many of our guests at the luncheon are seated in the galleries today. At lunch I announced the creation of the David Johnston law scholarship to mark His Excellency's first official visit to Alberta. This scholarship is a new addition to Alberta's already generous scholarship program and will provide two annual awards of $10,000 each, beginning next year. They will be for students taking a law degree, one at the University of Alberta and the other at the University of Calgary. The David Johnston law scholarship will be awarded to students who demonstrate academic achievement and community service. I'm sure that all members of this Assembly will agree with me that this is a fitting tribute to a man with such a long and distinguished career as His Excellency has had.

Your Excellencies, all Albertans are honoured to receive you as our guests, as we are honoured that Her Majesty's representative in Canada has come to Alberta so early in his term. We hope that you both enjoy your visit to our province and experience the warm western hospitality which Albertans are so well known for. You'll find that there are no more proud or committed Canadians than Albertans.

Thank you so very, very much, and welcome once again to our Assembly.

The Speaker: Thank you, Mr. Premier.

I would now invite His Excellency the Right Honourable David Johnston, Governor General of Canada, to address the Legislative Assembly of Alberta.

Address to the Legislative Assembly by His Excellency the Right Honourable David Johnston

His Excellency: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Mr. Premier, Members of the Legislative Assembly, dear friends, let me begin with a question. Is there any place in Canada where O Canada is sung with the enthusiasm and pride as in this Legislature in Alberta? Wonderful to hear.

Mr. Premier, let me say first of all how deeply touched I am with these two scholarships to recognize the first visit that Sharon and I have paid to Alberta. You could not do anything that would touch my heart more. Thank you.

Je veux dire aussi félicitations sur l'événement d'hier, la Coupe Grey. C'est vraiment une organisation spectaculaire. La Coupe Grey est un festival national, et ici en Alberta vous avez montré à tout notre pays les méthodes d'organisation de vraiment créer un spectacle que j'admire beaucoup, ici à Edmonton cette année et l'année dernière à Calgary. Merci et félicitations pour cet événement.

Now, if some of you have roots in Saskatchewan, you may not have quite the same enthusiasm that I have for the Grey Cup.

In my installation speech some two months ago I spoke about a dream. I spoke about a smart and caring nation, a call for service, the Canada that we wish to be. There were three pillars in that caring and smart nation. One had to do with family and children, the second had to do with learning and innovation, and the third had to do with philanthropy and volunteerism. I can tell you what we've seen in a short 24 hours in this remarkable province of Alberta. You do all three of those things very well and set the standard for the rest of Canada.

Family. We spent a wonderful hour this morning at St. Mary Catholic school in south Edmonton, and for those of you who have not seen the innovative programs there, particularly the information technology, it is a wonder to see, and I urge you to visit it. Again setting the standard.

You know, one of the very special things about this country is that I think we've tried harder at equality of opportunity than any nation in history. Our challenge is to have both equality of opportunity and excellence, too, to see those two qualities or objectives as not competing ones but complementary ones. At the heart of it is our public education system, which you consistently have done so well in this province at every level and are setting the standards for the country and setting the standards for the world.

Our country more than any other is a country of immigrants, people who came to this country with little more than the shirts on their backs but a firm determination that life should be better for their children than it is for them, and that dream lives so well.

Vague après vague, des immigrants sont venus ici, abandonnant tout dans leur pays natal, mais par leur ardent désir d'offrir une vie meilleure à leurs enfants. En Alberta cet esprit de pionnier est encore bien vivant. Vous comprenez l'importance d'aider vos voisins, et je vous en félicite.

We spoke about a couple of paintings at lunchtime that hang in Rideau Hall, and I invite all of you and your families to visit the people's home, which is Rideau Hall. As you come into the foyer, as I was telling Premier Stelmach as we were speaking about his own upbringing, there are four pictures by William Kurelek there. The first shows a scene in the Ukraine in 1931 with a little girl leaving her home clothed in rags in the middle of winter with a begging bowl to go to the neighbours for help. In the background it shows soldiers rounding up the adults in that village to take them off somewhere unknown. The second picture shows those families from the Ukraine landing at Halifax, at Pier 21, coming to this country with nothing more than hope. The third picture is a scene from the prairies. It's the same families there with the forest, and they're cutting down the trees to clear the land. The fourth picture is a picture some 20 years later of a farmer standing up to his chin in a grain field looking at the bounty that this has promised. This is this land, Canada, with equality of opportunity and excellence, too.

Let me move from family and children to learning and innovation and say to you what you probably don't fully comprehend because you're in Alberta and part of Alberta. When we look at Alberta from the rest of the country and the rest of the world, we see a spirit of entrepreneurship, of innovation here which is breathtaking and is very heartening to everybody across the country. It's the entrepreneurship that I want to teach to my children.

I once was asked by our students at the University of Waterloo to address their conference on entrepreneurship. They asked me to address the question: "Can you teach entrepreneurship, or is it simply something you have? Is it born in your DNA, or do you learn it?" I said: well, let me tell you about my granddaughter Emma. We have seven grandchildren. Emma was then four years old. She's now eight, a lovely little girl adopted from an orphanage in Colombia. She calls me Grampa Book. I was with her one evening in Ottawa and brought the book to read to her, and we finished the book. Because she's a very lively little girl, you always have to keep her engaged, so I said: "Now, darling, your mum and dad tell me that you're taking dancing lessons. Will you dance for Grampa Book?" She said, "Well, Grampa Book, if I dance for you, how much money will you give me?" Four years old. Now, you're always looking for a teaching opportunity, so I said: "Now, darling, Grampa Book loves you, and you love Grampa Book. Will you dance for Grampa Book for love?" She says, "Grampa Book, for love you can dance for yourself."

There is a cluster effect that is very important in this business of family and children, of learning and innovation and philanthropy and volunteerism. Philanthropy and volunteerism I depict with a metaphor I use from my part of the country, Waterloo country, which is barn raising. When a neighbour's barn burns down, all the other neighbours go to help. When a newcomer comes to the community, the other neighbours come to help that person raise their barn.

A story that Sharon and I tell. We live on a farm, 11 minutes from my office, in Mennonite country. Our neighbours are horse-and-buggy people. Sharon runs a stable with 30 horses boarded there. It's a tough business to break even in, I've got to tell you. Those of you who are farmers here will understand that. We were there a couple of years, and the insurance had gone up, and Sharon was looking at each of the buildings on the property to determine what the right valuation was. Could we lower it to reduce our premiums?

Edgar Shantz, our neighbour who farms our land, happened to be there at the same time. She said, "Edgar, this drive shed: we've got a value of $20,000 on it; is that right, or could it be less?" He said, "Well, why do you ask?" She said, "Well, I have to insure it." He said, "Why are you insuring it?" She said, "Well, if it burns down, we have to replace it." He said: "If it burns down, we'll replace it. We'll come and help you. That's what neighbours do." Then he said: "Well, on second-hand materials, which we can get, I'm not so sure. You might want something new. So put a $2,000 value on it. That will cover the materials. If it burns down, we'll come and help you." That wonderful spirit of volunteerism.

These things come together in a very interesting cluster effect. I just leave you with this story, and then I'll finish so that I don't occupy too much time in the Legislature today. There's a reinforcing cluster that's very important. I love history. One of my favourite periods of history is the 16th century. It's a story that has either three characters or four characters or more if I have more time. Today it will be only four characters. The characters are John, Marty, Fred, and Nick. Take 1523 as your year of departure, and ask yourself: who were John, Marty, Fred, and Nick? John is a bit earlier. For Marty, that year would be fine; for Fred, that year would be fine; and for Nick, that year would be fine.

Well, John was Johannes Gutenberg, who developed movable type, who, quote, invented the printing press. That was in 1470 or so in Amsterdam. He was a jeweller, and he went bankrupt not once but twice. His printing press didn't go anywhere. His technology did not take root.

It wasn't until 1523, when Marty came along, who started the Protestant and cultural revolution in Europe. Marty was Martin Luther. In 1523 he translated the Bible from its original Hebrew and Greek, not the Latin translation of the church but the original Hebrew and Greek, into German, into the vernacular, so that people could understand the Bible in their own language.

The most important thing in 1523 was an individual's relationship with God, but heretofore that had been translated for that individual by priests and bishops and cardinals and popes, an intermediation. He began the process of disintermediation and permitted people to seek out those truths on their own, not relying on authority and an oral tradition but reasoning it through themselves in their own language. Others did the same thing. Wycliffe in England and others translated the Bible, the Holy Word, into the language people could understand, and that Protestant revolution of people learning in a different way took the printing press and transferred it across Europe.

What about Fred? Fred was essential. Fred was Frederick, the Elector of Saxony, who in 1523 sheltered Luther for one year in his castle in Wartburg. Had he not done so, Luther would not have been able to translate the Bible. He needed protection from other forces that said: "This revolution in thinking, in communication shall not occur. This revolution in technology of the printed word shall not occur."

All three were indispensable. What happened from that is that the religious tracts, the religious word began being disseminated not through an oral and authoritarian tradition but by people reading on their own, interpreting for themselves, developing critical thinking, and that was the breakdown of feudalism in Europe. The cities began to rise, serfdom diminished, people began to contract for their labour, the Industrial Revolution began, democratic governments began to establish themselves, public education, where people were taught to do this, spread throughout the lands, and Europe advanced.

The fourth person was Nick, Niccolò Machiavelli, who in 1523 wrote The Prince in Florence, that beautiful city, the cradle of the Renaissance, and that was the first secular book to become a bestseller. So the printing press no longer was simply for religious education; it was for education and learning of all kinds. Now, it took 250 years for the printing press to reach the stage where a majority of the people in Europe enjoyed the benefits. The Internet took 10 years to achieve the same kind of revolution. Just think about that.

That's how western Europe advanced, and if you doubt that, realize that for 2,000 years the world of Islam, the world of China, and the world of India were advanced beyond western Europe. Western Europe was the backward power for 1,500 years of the 2,000 years, but western Europe advanced because this new method of communication spread into the hands of all people imaginable. China had the printing press when Marco Polo arrived there in 1215.

It is believed that movable type was invented in Korea in the second century AD. Those other civilizations – Islam, well advanced in engineering, India, where mathematics began – those societies all had the Johns. All had the technological revolution. What they lacked was the Martyrs, and what they lacked was the Freds and then the Nicks.

You ask: today who represents the Freds? You represent the Freds right here. We create an environment in which learning can advance, in which we can innovate, in which people can ensure that life is better for their children than it is for themselves, and in which philanthropy and volunteerism are not simply something that we opt into or opt out of when the United Way or the Salvation Army comes canvassing or our neighbour needs a barn built but as a mainstream feature of Canadian life.

In the year 2017 we'll celebrate our 150th anniversary. I hope that as we proceed to that time, the people of Alberta will continue to lead Canada, as you have so well, in being a smart and caring nation. Let me leave you with just two lines that I quoted to the Premier at lunch that I love and I'll use again. They come from Shaw, and they go this way: some people see things as they are and wonder why; we dream of things that ought to be and ask why not.

Thank you for the great privilege of addressing you today. [applause]

The Speaker: I invite all of you to remain standing, please. I'd like to thank His Excellency for his warmth, his enthusiasm, and his humour, all fundamental traits of the people of Alberta, and I believe that from my quick consultation with the Premier, that manifests itself into declaring you an honorary citizen of Alberta. [applause]

Excellency, I'd like to also draw to your attention one situation in this Assembly which is unique in the country of Canada. This is the only parliament in the country of Canada that flies all of the flags of the provinces and territories in it. It's unique.

I would now like to invite all of you to rise, please, to join in the singing of the royal anthem, God Save The Queen. We'll be led once again by Mr. Paul Lorieau. Would you please remain standing for the departure of Their Excellencies after the conclusion of God Save The Queen.

2:00

Hon. Members and Guests:

God save our gracious Queen
long live our noble Queen,
God save The Queen!
Send her victorious,
happy and glorious,
long to reign over us:
God save The Queen!

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order!

[Preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, Their Excellencies, their party, and the Premier left the Chamber as a fanfare of trumpets sounded]

[The Mace was uncovered]

The Speaker: Please be seated. Hon. members, we will continue the Routine momentarily. I just want to ensure that we have one clarification today. As a result of Government Motion 20, passed the other day, which afforded the opportunity for His Excellency the Governor General to be with us today, we had to in essence waive standing orders, which basically say that we would commence at 1:30. We will commence the Routine momentarily, and my understanding is that we will continue to the conclusion of the Routine even if it goes beyond the 3 o'clock that's mentioned in Standing Order 7(7). Is that everybody's understanding?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Speaker: Then, once we begin the Routine, we will conclude the Routine.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you two groups of people. First of all, I'd like to introduce three board members from the Assist Community Services Centre. I'm not sure where they're sitting, so if you can see from the other side, you can let me know. They're there. Wonderful. Today we have Mr. Allan Kwan, the vice-president; Mrs. Mary Fung, the public relations director; and Mrs. Mei Hung, the treasurer. I would ask them all to now rise and receive the traditional warm greeting of the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, carrying right along, the second group that I'd like to introduce is 34 parents, teachers, and students from the Coralwood academy. The Coralwood, a Seventh-day Adventist academy, is a family facility, and they exist to teach children to follow Jesus, to nurture their love for Him and for others, to teach them to think, and to empower them to serve. The Coralwood staff and students are very committed to the highest standards of personal and academic excellence. With our 25 students today are five staff and parents. We have Ms Marian Rochford, Mr. Dan Rochford, Ms Ellen Kim, Ms Sharon Baragona, and Mr. Michael Adams. I would ask them all to rise and receive the traditional warm greeting of the Assembly if they're here.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted this afternoon to introduce to you and through you to all members 22 students from Rideau Park elementary school in my constituency of Edmonton-Rutherford. They're accompanied this afternoon by teacher Mrs. Tanja Burns and by parent helpers Mrs. Susanne Hoffmann and Mr. Oliver Schmidt. This is a fine group of grade 6 students that have asked some very astute questions, many interested in the parliamentary process. I'd like to invite all of them to stand and receive the very warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today, one a little bit lengthy, that I hope you will indulge as it is a number of individuals in our galleries. I rise to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a group of 16 students that are here today representing the medical schools of both the University of Alberta and the University of Calgary. They are here along with several other medical students to share some of the great ideas about how we can ensure postsecondary, particularly our medical schools, as an option for all Albertans regardless of their background.

I'll just read through their names, Mr. Speaker, and if they are seated in the galleries, I would ask that each of them stand as I call their name to receive the warm welcome of the Assembly. They are Sahil Gupta, Stephane Doucette-Preville, Kelsey Macleod, Inka Toman, Salma Shivji, Kelli Taylor, Mischa Snopkowski, Lise Malta, Alyssa Cruz, Danielle Maurice, Adil Abdulla, Esther Kim, Alistair Waugh, Graeme Mulholland, Jennifer Amyotte, Daryl Dillman.

These students are very concerned about the diversity of our medical schools and the diversity of the clinicians that will be treating our patients in Alberta for years to come. They have come to our Legislature to spread their message of concern. I would ask all members of the Legislature to give them a very warm reception.

Mr. Speaker, I have one more introduction – and I believe that she's still in our gallery – my partner of 30 years. It was our anniversary this year. I've taken several different directions in my career over the years, and she has stayed with me over that period of time as well as taught our three children the values of Albertans and the values of staying in our province. She is a grandmother this year, as I am a grandfather, I guess. The things that I have accomplished could not have been possible without my partner of 30 years, Aukje Rose Marie Horner, who I believe is sitting in the gallery, and if she is, if she would rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I've never ever in the time that I've been Speaker had this list of introductions before me. At 2:22 we are going to the question period, so we'll just continue through the process.

The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my great pleasure to stand up to introduce to you and through you to this House a woman who probably needs no introduction, but it is my pleasure to be able to do so. We are pleased to have Senator Joyce Fairbairn here with us this afternoon, an amazing woman who has worked on the Hill in Ottawa for 50 years next year. That is an amazing accomplishment for a woman. She started off in the press gallery, worked in the Trudeau government, and, of course, has served for 25 years as a senator. Her main focus has always been literacy for all Canadians, and she has used her position as a Senator to forward that. She is here with her aide-de-camp, retired Warrant Officer Glenn Miller. I would ask you to welcome both of them to this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Was somebody introducing his school group? Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, proceed.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two groups, actually, to introduce to you and through you to all hon. Members of this Legislative Assembly. The first group is on behalf of my colleague the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview. Crestwood elementary-junior high school is with us today. The group of 38 is lead by Ms Ludwig and is accompanied by parents Mrs. Tracy von der Ohe, Mrs. Lee, and Mr. Procter. They were in the public gallery, and if they're still in attendance, I would now ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

I have a second introduction today, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure also to introduce a former colleague of mine in this Legislative Assembly, Mr. Bharat Agnihotri of Edmonton-Ellerslie. Bharat is accompanied by a past candidate for the Alberta Liberal Party, Aman Gill. They are seated in the public gallery, and I would ask them to also rise and receive the warm and traditional welcome of this Assembly.

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour, a privilege, and a pleasure to introduce an important person in my life to this Assembly, my wife, Debbie. We've been through a lot in nearly 27 years of marriage now, and it's been a pleasure every step of the way. I believe that I'm the luckiest man in the world, and I believe that because she tells me regularly. My wife, Debbie.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Mr. Fawcett: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a very good friend of mine, Nick Ziemann. Nick and I have been friends for our entire lives as our parents were good friends. He's come up today to watch the proceedings. Nick lives in Chestermere, and he's a welder. He's been married to his wife, Krista, for almost five years now, and they have a very cute daughter who turns two in April, and her name's Sienna. I would like Nick to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Our Governor General made reference to this moments ago, and it's now my honour to introduce a number of individuals who are responsible for arranging the 2010 edition of the largest annual sporting event in this country, the CFL's Grey Cup, which set a record for the fastest sellout ever in just one week. With roots in Saskatchewan and as a Calgary Stampeders season ticket holder, this is not easy for me to say, but the truth is that from east to west people agree. I'd like to thank everyone in Edmonton for putting on the best Grey Cup Festival ever. Over 600 people were involved, and over 30 people served on the steering committee, some of whom have joined us today, including – if you would stand, please – co-chairs Doug Goss and Rick LeLacheur, executive director Duane Vienneau, Joan Forge, Bruce Bentley, Shirley Zylstra, Cathy Presniak, Bruce Keltie, Greg Treble, Terry O'Flynn, John Moquin, Bob Turner, Brad Sparrow, and Keith Keating. Thank you all, and thank you, Mr. Speaker. [applause]

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the House two old friends, active citizens and real philanthropists, having given the largest single donation of land to the University of Alberta. May I introduce John and Jenny Bocock in the members' gallery and thank them on behalf of all of us.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I had the privilege to dine with six people from Alberta today that are promoting the passport to Alberta's community icons. With us today is the first Albertan to complete the Alberta icon journey, Mario Boulanger, and his favourite daughter, Christina. Along with them are the promoters of this program from Woodlands county, that both you and I have the great honour to represent: first, Jim Rennie, mayor of Woodlands county, councillor Alan Deane, councillor Daryl Yagos, and their communications director, Brigitte Jobin. I'd ask them all now to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Ms Woo-Paw: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you Miss Gwen Cham.

Gwen is the project director for south health campus with Alberta Health Services, which is anticipated to open in 2012. Her role there is to oversee the $1.4 billion capital development and the $400 million clinical, nonclinical, and IT operational planning and implementation. This centre is designed to transform health care by way of efficiency and reshaping demand, with the emphasis on patient-family centred care. I see Gwen as representative of a generation of young and innovative professionals working diligently at improving our health services. I would like to ask her to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce three students through you to this House: Nikhil Shah, Ambica Parmar, and Matthew Karpman. This morning I had the great pleasure and opportunity to discuss with them the issue of demographic diversity of the medical students in the universities in this province. I'd like to ask them to rise to receive the warm welcome of this House.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great privilege to rise and introduce through you to all members of this Assembly your wife, Kristina Kowalski. It's great to see Kristina in the gallery today. You are an inspiration to us all. I know my colleagues would want to join me in giving you the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege and an honour today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Dr. Mike and Mrs. Maureen Mahon. Mike is the president of the University of Lethbridge, recently installed. We're pleased to have him up here today and would ask you to give him the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions. It's an honour for me to rise today and introduce to you and through you Mr. Yash Gill, who is visiting us here from India. Mr. Gill works as an excise and taxation officer for the government of Punjab. He came to my constituency of Edmonton-Ellerslie to visit his friend Sanjiv Aggrewal. Mr. Gill is very interested in the political system of both Alberta and Canada. I had the pleasure of meeting Mr. Gill earlier this afternoon, and he was very much looking forward to the visit of the hon. Governor General. At this time I ask my guest to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

My second introduction. I'd like to introduce to you and through you a constituent of mine, Mr. Parshotam Aggrewal. They celebrated their 50th wedding anniversary last week. He's joined here today by his son Sanjiv Aggrewal. At this time I'd like him to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mr. Benito: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly

Mrs. Lulu Bernal. Mrs. Bernal, a retired employee of CIBC for 30 years, is the past secretary-general of the Filipino Retirees' Association in Alberta. Mrs. Bernal helps many Filipino foreign workers because she believes that it meets the economic needs of this province. I would ask her to rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great honour today to introduce a very principled and huge community contributor, a philanthropist who knows no boundaries, a quiet man in his own way who has done so much for this city, who recently took leave of his law practice to chair the Grant MacEwan board, a very valued institution with over 20,000 students. Ladies and gentlemen, I'd invite John Day to rise. Let's all salute a man who is doing great things in our community and in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly someone that I just noticed in the gallery, a very good constituent of mine who I'd like to have rise now. This gentleman is certainly someone who is known to us all here, and I'd like to introduce to you Mr. Tom Olsen.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislature constituents of mine, Loretta Adams and her husband, Keith. Loretta was diagnosed with MS in 2003 and is scheduled to travel to California for chronic cerebrospinal venous insufficiency, known as CCSVI, testing in December. Loretta is a member of CCSVI Edmonton, a group seeking to increase awareness of CCSVI and its link to MS, and she encourages our government to support and participate in research on this important matter. My guests are seated in the members' gallery. I'd ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly representatives from the Palestine Solidarity Network, the Canadians for Justice and Peace in the Middle East, and the Canada-Palestine Cultural Association. Today is the International Day of Solidarity with the Palestinian People. In 1977 the United Nations General Assembly called for the annual observance on the 29th of November each year as the International Day of Solidarity with the Palestinian People. My guests are seated in the public gallery, and I would ask them to rise as I call their name and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly. From the group Canadians for Justice and Peace in the Middle East Breanna Ho, Nariman Saidane, Bryan Hosking; from the Canada-Palestine Cultural Association Ahmad Mustapha, Mohamad Issa, Anas Elkhateeb, Mousa Qasqas, Hani Huoseh, Hani El-Zein, Alaa Kadri; and from the Palestine Solidarity Network Alex Freeman. If they would please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I indicated earlier that this is very unique. I still have 11 members that want to introduce their guests. We're now 20 minutes into the Routine; it's 2:22. I indicated that normally under our rules we start at 1:30; at 1:50, 20 minutes later, we'd be into the question period. I'm going to ask if I can have unanimous consent to conclude these introductions.

[Unanimous consent denied]

The Speaker: Okay. We're into the question period. Clerk, please proceed.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Publicly Funded Health Care

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Our caucus has just obtained a leaked document proving this government's hidden agenda for Alberta's health care system, an agenda which pushes our health care system towards two-tiered, American-style health care. To the Premier: given this document describes the government's plans for private health insurance, delisting, increased for-profit delivery of health care, when was the Premier planning to make this document public? We'll table it in the House today.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, nothing could be further from the truth. This government is committed to a publicly funded, publicly administered health care system.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This document shows the government has two phases of the Alberta Health Act: the one we're in now, which does nothing, and the second one, which dismantles everything that Albertans cherish about our system. How can the Premier explain this plan to Albertans?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, if only the member would have read the bill that's before the House. It commits us in legislation to a publicly funded health care system.

Dr. Swann: Is the real reason the government will limit debate to one hour on the Alberta Health Act so that the government can ram this new legislation down our throats?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, our government is committed to having a full and open debate on all the legislation. We have had over 27 hours of debate in this House on the bill. Isn't it interesting? After months of open-door consultation with Albertans, with medical professionals at the table listening to Albertans and health care advocates, what is in this bill that is not what Albertans told us to put in? I want to know from that party.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, what the public assumed was simply incompetence by the government is now revealed as a cynical, subversive agenda to sneak two-tiered, American-style health care into Alberta. Again to the Premier. This document talks repeatedly about pursuing private insurance options. Does the Premier stand behind what this document says about shifting from public to private health insurance? Yes or no?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I stand behind a publicly funded health care system, and I'll defend it to the very end.

Dr. Swann: While the U.S. is trying to get a single-payer system, this government is trying to dismantle ours. Why is the government pushing towards more private health insurance? How much are Albertans going to be asked to pay?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we have in this country of Canada a good publicly funded health care system. As we heard earlier today from the Governor General, the province is leading in many ways in terms of compassion and care not only for Albertans but for Canadians. I would ask everybody to just set aside this bickering back and forth. Let's just focus on outcomes, move the system ahead so we can show progress not only for Albertans but for the rest of Canada.

Dr. Swann: Well, I guess, Mr. Speaker, many Albertans are asking: has the Premier kept Alberta's health care system in a state of permanent crisis in order to pave the way for two-tiered American-style health care?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, being the only jurisdiction in Canada to actually have a five-year funding plan, which gives a commitment to a publicly funded health care system, I would say: you're saying that we're moving to a two-tiered system?

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier can say what he wants, but this document shows what the Premier really has in store for Albertans, and just like the failed experiment of the Alberta Health Services Board, the public won't know what he's planning until the next election is over. To the Premier. Let's have some straight answers. Do you or do you not support forcing Albertans to pay for private insurance for services now publicly funded?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I don't know how many times I have to repeat in the House that this government is firmly committed to a publicly funded, publicly administered health care system. Period.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, does this Premier support a single-payer public health care insurance system? If so, why is he opening the door to private insurance?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, once again, as I said, not only in the bill but after hearing hundreds of Albertans that took time during a busy summer to provide their input into the legislation that's before the House, I firmly believe it is good legislation. It reflects the values and priorities of Albertans. Just move on with the bill and get it passed so we can show some outcomes.

Dr. Swann: How can this Premier stand in the House and pretend to be open and transparent when a document shows that the Premier and this government are anything but open and transparent?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, without a doubt, this government is open; it is transparent. It has consulted time and time again with Albertans. This time we went out and said: look, let's go out there, talk to Albertans, all kinds of Albertans in every corner of the province. They brought their views forward. Those views and priorities and comments were all reflected in the document that went for further consultation. After another round of consultation it came back, it was formed into a piece of legislation, and it's now before the House for debate.

Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, last week the new parliamentary assistant for health called the president of the AMA and told him he was concerned with the mental health of the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. This has resulted in the good doctor from Edmonton-Meadowlark being ordered by the College of Physicians and Surgeons to undergo a psychiatric evaluation in order to retain his medical licence. Regardless of the intent of the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, what he has done is inappropriate given his position of influence. Will the Premier instruct this member to apologize for what he has done?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the accusations raised by the member are absolutely not true. Nobody in this government has the authority to pull anyone's licence. As I said the other day before the media, we don't even have the authority to pull a driver's licence, let alone a medical licence. There's a professional organization in charge. Leave it to them. Just leave it. It doesn't belong on the floor of this Assembly. I don't want to besmirch anyone's reputation because of some political motives on that side.

Mr. Anderson: As everyone in this House knows, he did make the call, Premier. Quit contorting and distorting the facts.

2:30

Will the Premier now personally apologize for the way this member has been treated by this government caucus and immediately call the AMA and the College of Physicians and Surgeons, asking them to ignore the comments from the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford and withdraw their order mandating that the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark submit to a psychiatric evaluation? It's absolutely shameful, Premier, that you've allowed your caucus to do this to this hon. member. Shameful.

The Speaker: We've got a point of order here. This is going to discontinue. The language is to become temperate here pretty quick. Hon. the Premier, do you want to participate in this?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, members of this government caucus have reached out to the member a number of times, taken the time to support him through what he described as a bit of a difficult period. We're still behind him to offer any help that may be available. He is a valued representative for his constituency. It's unfortunate that comments have been misconstrued by some opposition members, who, quite frankly, won't even sit and listen to the response because they do not want to hear the truth.

The Speaker: The hon. member. [interjections] The hon. member. [interjections] The member has been recognized. I take it we're finished? Do you have a question?

Mr. Anderson: Yes.

The Speaker: I've recognized you three times.

Mr. Anderson: The public's confidence in this government has been shaken to its core. Last week the curtain was pulled back on a culture of fear and intimidation, and we see that here today: MLAs being effectively coerced to toe the party line even if it means turning their backs on those they represent, whisper campaigns targeted at the very livelihoods of the government's opponents. The government may think this will all blow over, but it won't. This government has lost the moral authority to govern, and Albertans will make that very clear at the next election. Shame on all of you. Shame on every one of you. No question needed.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, this government has a justly deserved reputation as a bully. Just ask Dr. John O'Connor from Fort Chipewyan or the MLA for Calgary-Mountain View. Now, steeped in sanctimonious protestations of compassion, the government is attempting to discredit the MLA for Edmonton-Meadowlark. My question is to the Premier. Why are you and your MLAs attempting to discredit this MLA if not for the very fact that he poses a mortal danger to your government?

Mr. Stelmach: I'm not quite sure what the member is talking about. I don't know what was said about the Member for Calgary-Mountain View, but he is the Leader of the Official Opposition, he's in the House, and I'm sure that he is very capable of defending himself and speaking up for himself in this Legislature.

Mr. Mason: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Premier forgets that the Member for Calgary-Mountain View got fired when he spoke out against climate change when he was a medical officer of health. Now we're seeing the same pattern continue, Mr. Premier. I want to know, again, why this government is trying to discredit the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark if not because his articulate vision for health care completely blows up your government's credibility.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, once again, nobody is destroying anyone's credibility. This is an open and transparent House. Anybody can bring up different issues and make comments.

With respect to the Member for Calgary-Mountain View, as I said, he was elected, he's a member of this House, and he can bring forward any of his comments or any position that he wants to bring forward to the House. He doesn't need him to bring it up.

Mr. Mason: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think we realize why this is actually happening. The government has produced a document dated July 12, 2010, that shows that phase 2 of the legislation this government is planning talks about private hospitals, opting out by physicians, and double billing. Will the Premier admit that his secret plan to privatize our health care system is the real reason for the persecution of this hon. member?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, not true at all. Once again, as a province we're trying to move to a position where we can provide equitable health care across the province, sustain it for the next generation, deal with some of the demographic issues that we'll be facing in the province over the next five to 10 years. This is all planning for the future and ensuring that we have the best publicly funded health care system in the country of Canada.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Provincial Achievement Tests

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Education uses the results of provincial achievement tests for grades 3, 6, and 9 as a key indicator of progress in achieving the admirable goal of attaining excellence in student learning outcomes. I'm interested in what appears to be the minister's curious definition of the word "progress" because his ministry's targets for both acceptable and excellent levels of achievement in the tests in 2012-13 are precisely 1 per cent better than the results achieved in 2008-09 – 1 per cent in five years. Can the minister disclose the rationale for setting a target of a mere 1 per cent improvement in student learning outcomes over a five-year period?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, when you're doing exceptionally well, it's hard to get even better.

Mr. Taylor: Well, it was concise in any event.

Again to the minister: given that he's actually set these targets eight-tenths of a per cent lower for acceptable and over 2 and a half per cent lower for excellent than the targets he set in his previous business plan, can he explain why he's become more pessimistic about the ability of Alberta Education to produce the desired results?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, one of the goals that this government has is to encourage high school completion. I think it probably goes without saying, but I'll say in any event that as we get more students who are dropping out of school to stay in school and complete, it's likely that the results on exceptional and perhaps even acceptable may go down. We have a huge achievement gap, for example, with the FNMI population. If we can bring FNMI students into the school, keep them in school, and encourage their success, it will in fact be better for everyone, but the overall targets will flatten.

Mr. Taylor: Interesting considering that we still have about the lowest high school completion rate in the country.

Can the minister explain why a nearly 70 per cent increase in government funding of basic education between 2004 and 2009 would translate into a 6 per cent decline in the number of students who tested at the acceptable level in '04 and the number expected to hit that mark in 2013?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I was saying, we have a number of competing values in the system. One is to encourage excellence in education and make sure that every single student has the opportunity to be the best that they can be. One of the other goals that we have is to include more people in the education system, to bring students into the education system and to make sure that every student is a participant and every student aspires to be successful. That will in fact lower the overall results. So there are two competing goals that we have. One is to raise the number of students who achieve the standard of excellence and the acceptable standards, and the other is to make sure more students . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Emergency Room Wait Times

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many of my constituents are very concerned about the emergency department issues. Everyone knows that wait times are too long. My constituents want answers. So do I. My questions are for the Minister of Health and Wellness. How long do we have to wait before we see real action, not just words?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I would say to the hon. member that action is occurring right now. In fact, it's the most aggressive action with solutions for any jurisdiction in Canada. We're adding more acute-care beds in the hospitals. We're adding more transition beds. We're adding more continuing care beds. We've got a new discharge protocol that's occurring, and there are more improvements coming. We've put that squarely before Alberta Health Services, they are responding, and yet more will occur before Christmas.

Mr. Xiao: Really? Then what action will you take if the improvements are not in place by your deadline, which is December? What is the accountability for that?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the administration at Alberta Health Services has responded very appropriately. There is no option other than to accomplish what they've been asked to accomplish. They're working very hard with a new CEO, who's in there doing the best that he can to make sure that these new protocols are coming forward. That's why 100 of Alberta's top administrators, top medics, top nurses, and other people involved with health care met on November 20. We're trying to move forward with that action plan because that's what people really want to see.

Mr. Xiao: To the same minister. Will there be public transparency and reporting about these actions? How will Albertans know what is actually going on?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, that's a very good question, and I'm pleased to tell the hon. member that the short answer is yes. In fact, Alberta Health Services has been posting and they will be posting more of the information pertaining to Alberta's busiest and largest ER departments as we speak, and even more of that transparency and accountability will be forthcoming, as is characteristic of this government and of them themselves.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

2:40 Health System Acute-care Beds

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The only thing that this government has been consistent with in health services over the last few decades is cutting acute-care capacity. In 1989 Alberta had 13,300 acute-care beds. Alberta Health Services' annual report shows that now we have 7,802. That's why we are in an acute-care crisis: a history of government cuts. To the Minister of Health and Wellness. The minister of health states that around 300 acute-care beds will be opened . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister has the floor.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure how the question ends, but let me just say that there have been a number of improvements and additions to the acute-care system. Alberta Health Services has a number of details that they'd be happy to share with you. However, in March of 2009 there were over 7,700 acute-care beds, a year later there were over 7,800 acute-care beds, and now they are adding another 360 hospital beds, all of which is in stream and under way right now, and the staff will be there to accompany that announcement.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps I won't ask the question because you answered some of my questions. My question is: I want to know the absolute total number of acute-care beds that we have as we speak that are actually with trained staff.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have to get the exact number through Alberta Health Services, and perhaps they can accommodate that request. But the important thing to know is that we are opening more beds in the hospitals, in our communities, and wherever we can to help address the pressures that the system is facing, and the response so far has been very good. Alberta Health Services is doing a good job to do that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: I'm fine. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Arts and Education Grant Program

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Constituents of mine have been advised that the funding for the arts and education program has been cut completely from the budget of the Alberta Foundation for the Arts effective March 31, 2011. Could the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit please advise if this is true?

Mr. Blackett: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to respond by saying unequivocally and emphatically that there will be no funding cuts to the arts and education grant program in the forthcoming year.

Mr. Allred: My second question, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister. Why does the Ministry of Culture and Community Spirit fund this program and not the Ministry of Education?

Mr. Blackett: Well, Mr. Speaker, arts and culture in our province transcend a variety of different ministries, and we fund this program like many others such as the AFA youth program, the arts summer schools, the community presenting and individual artist grant streams because it's important in our communities right across our province that we continue to fund the vital fabric of our communities.

Mr. Allred: Well, my final question, Mr. Speaker, is to the Minister of Education. What, sir, are your plans to provide for education in the arts in the future?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, it should be clear as we move into further discussions about what a 21st century education looks like and what our children need that arts are not peripheral to education; arts are core to education. But education is not just about what the Department of Education does, so we very much value the work that we share with Culture and Community Spirit and with others. We are revising the arts curriculum because it hasn't been revised for the last 25 years. There's been public discussion on that. That will continue. But I can assure the hon. member and all Albertans that arts are core to education, they're not peripheral, and they will be part of our curriculum going forward.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Alberta Health Services Board

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This government has created hundreds of agencies, boards, and commissions. When critics look for ministerial responsibility or accountability for these creatures of government, we are told that they are independent, that they operate at arm's length, that the government is not responsible for their decisions. We believe the government is responsible. The government creates, funds, and directs these agencies, and indeed the chairman of Alberta Health Services has said that the minister gave clear directions on firing the CEO. To the Premier: does the government rely . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier. [interjection] Okay. We're moving on.

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister of Health and Wellness would probably like to clarify the reporting procedure.

The Speaker: Okay.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Let's be very clear. I did not give such an instruction. The instruction – call it a request, call it a direction – that I gave was for an immediate decision because we could not wait for two weeks or two months or whatever for a decision to be made.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks. Back to the Premier: given that there have now been resignations from that board on the grounds of government interference along with a call for clarified roles and responsibilities, what will be told to the new board members about their role in overseeing delivery of health care in this province?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the role and the mandate of the Alberta Health Services Board is very clear. They're there to promote and protect the health of Albertans. They're there on an ongoing basis to assess the health needs of Albertans. They're there to help determine priorities for the provision of those health services, for operating the system, and for ensuring that reasonable access is there as well as sustainability of the health system for all.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again, to the Premier: how can the government claim to be transparent and accountable when they deliberately send conflicting messages about who is in charge and, therefore, who is responsible for delivery of health services in this province?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, it's very clear in the Regional Health Authorities Act, which I would encourage the hon. member and others to have a look at, that the Alberta Health Services Board reports to Albertans through and to the minister of health.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose, followed by the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Foreign Qualifications and Credentials

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I often talk about wasted potential in two forms. One is those that fail to utilize their true educational capacities, and two is new immigrants where we as Canadian institutions fail to recognize their educational credentials. To the Minister of Employment and Immigration: why do we encourage economic class immigrants to come here, give them credit for their specific work and educational experience when applying, when there are no jobs for them in their respective careers here?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, let's be clear. It is the federal minister of immigration, not I, who assigns points to individuals for their education and credentials in their assessing of their visa application abroad. I can tell you that this ministry works not only with immigrants but with all Albertans to make sure that those who are unemployed become employed and those who are underemployed become fully employed. For that reason, we have 59 or so offices throughout the province working with Albertans to make sure that their skills and education are utilized to the maximum of their benefit and, by extension, to our benefit.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What we really need is we need the minister to push the professional organizations and colleges to recognize their credentials. Minister, what is your ministry doing to help skilled, educated newcomers get their qualifications and experience recognized here so that they can play their rightful role in Canadian society?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Very good question, Mr. Speaker. First, as you may know, just a few days ago I held a forum in Edmonton with experts in that area, those being the service providers, educational institutions, and many employers in the province, to recognize the credentials of foreign skilled and foreign educated individuals. This ministry has programs in place that assist foreign credentialed individuals to enter our workforce. At the same time, we have to make sure that we don't jeopardize in any way the standards that we are accustomed to have over here. So it's a balance.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would say that I agree that we should not jeopardize our standards, but at the same time we should push the envelope to ensure Canadians are not engaging in protectionist behaviour. Does this mean, based on what the minister just said, that doctors, accountants, and other highly skilled professionals can hopefully sometime soon stop working in entry-level jobs that are absolutely unrelated to their professions?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, let me tell you what this ministry is doing. I cannot speak for my federal counterparts. First of all, we have published very clear information on our websites with associations, with colleges, and with many self-governing bodies to allow individuals who are contemplating coming to Alberta to find out what the process will be for them to become credentialed. We're working very closely with professional colleges to make sure that the process of accrediting foreign-trained individuals is as smooth and as short as possible. At the end of the day it is to our benefit. We recognize that everybody should be working to the maximum of their credentials.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This Assembly has often been referred to as the people's House. We heard that from the Governor General earlier today. What's interesting is that government is now running and hiding. In fact, one MLA on that side has said: we just want to get out of Dodge as quick as possible. That's code for saying: we're afraid of questions in question period. Why is this government so afraid of being accountable to the people of Alberta by invoking closure?

Mr. Horner: As the Deputy Premier I guess I'll answer the question. We're not afraid of anybody, Mr. Speaker. We're here to represent the people of Alberta that elected us to this Legislature, similarly to them. We also believe that no one should hijack the process of this Legislature so that I don't get a chance to vote or that any of my colleagues don't get a chance to vote and move the agenda forward for Albertans.

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, the minister of health says that the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark is a friend, yet he votes to kick him out of caucus. The minister of health says that he wants to listen to the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, yet he rejects his accountability amendment when it comes to Bill 17. My question is: why did you vote to kick this member, the only ER doctor, out of your caucus? Why did you vote to kick him out?

The Speaker: Hon. member, I have no idea what this has to do with government policy.

Mr. Zwozdesky: I'll just clarify, Mr. Speaker, that I was not present for any such vote.

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, given that the minister of health was not present, it's interesting to say, then: he's trying to distance himself from the decision of this caucus. My question to the minister of health is: why doesn't he support his friend, who is an ER doctor?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the member referred to was my friend, is my friend, and I'm sure always will be my friend. The fact here, however, is that we have a difference of opinion on where these lengths of stay protocols should be in place. He would like them in legislation. I've explained why they can't be in the law from my perspective, but I'll be happy to put them into the action plan and into the performance measures, which will be released very soon.

The Speaker: I don't know what the motivation is here.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Emergency Room Statistics

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta Health Services posts on its website wait times for its emergency departments in the large urban hospitals. This information on wait times for both discharged and admitted patients goes back to November 2009. To the health minister: does Alberta Health Services have this wait time data going back to 2002, when emergency room doctors identified the problems around lengthy emergency wait times?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, one of the great benefits of having one single province-wide health authority now is that they will have more consistent gathering of data and, equally important, more consistent delivery of data. Right now that's exactly what they're doing. They're collecting that information on a site-by-site basis at the busiest sites – I've answered this question earlier today – and they're going to continue doing that. Equally important, they're going to be reporting it fully, transparently to all Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Again to the minister of health. Sir, with all due respect, you have not answered the question. In light of openness and transparency will you admit to this House and to the people of the province that you have data going back prior to 2009 on how the emergency rooms in the large urban centres were working or were not working?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I don't know how data was collected back in 2002, but I'd be happy to take that question under advisement and have a look and see if I can get the answer that the member is looking for.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the health minister. You have to provide this information, sir. Given that these emergency room wait times are very important statistics for the government to know, why is this information not publicly available now if we're trying to solve this emergency room crisis?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, it's hard to live in the past. What I would prefer to do, if the hon. member doesn't mind, is to indicate very clearly that since I've come into this post, I've had some of these discussions with Alberta Health Services. They are posting not only the busiest sites aggregately, but they're also posting information on an individual site basis. I've taken under advisement the earlier question, and I will look into it for the member.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Alberta Junior Hockey League Outdoor Game

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday Alberta hosted a memorable Grey Cup match, but that's not the only major sporting event that happened this past weekend. The community of Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo did an outstanding job hosting the first outdoor junior hockey game in Canada last Friday, with their team battling my team, the Drayton Valley Thunder. I commend the community, mayor and council, and of course the local MLA and players all. My question is to the Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation. The province invested $1.1 million in Grey Cup festivities. Was there any support . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Ady: Well, Mr. Speaker, you know, this was a great event. It was inspired by community spirit. I was able to be up there last Thursday for the jersey gala, and I was so impressed with what the community had been able to do. They pulled it together in less than three months. It was sold out in less than an hour. They built a temporary outdoor stadium at MacDonald Island Park. Although we did not provide funding for this special event, the province had previously committed $1.3 million for the MacDonald Island Park multiplex to help promote recreation in the region.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you. My final question to the same minister: can the minister tell the Assembly if, in fact, she supports the AJHL, and if so, why didn't the province provide funding for the event, and will they consider future funding for events like this?

Mrs. Ady: Well, Mr. Speaker, the event, as I said before, was pulled together very quickly. It was amazing, the community spirit in Fort McMurray. Volunteers actually built the outdoor stadium, 5,000 seats in it. They raised $75,000 on their own in order to help cover the costs of this event. It was only one night, but there are great benefits from it. The ice rink is going to stay in place this entire season for the families of Fort McMurray to use. As well, the boards are going to be donated to a community in rural Alberta. A great outcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question today is for the health minister. I was wondering: will the selection of the new CEO for Alberta Health Services be done in a completely open and transparent manner?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, there are specific protocols on how the Alberta Health Services Board goes about recruiting positions like that. To the best of my knowledge they will be following those protocols. At the end of the day typically people are invited through an application process to submit resumés, and those resumés would be considered through the application process that follows.

Mr. Hehr: Well, Mr. Speaker, again this is for the hon. minister of health. Can the minister guarantee that whoever is selected will be someone with experience in patient care, someone who views patients as who and what they are, people who need care and respect, more than the just a line item on a budget?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I'm happy to say that the acting CEO of Alberta Health Services has 33 years of experience in the medical community, 20 of those years include administrative type work in the health area. I think that the Health Services Board, which is responsible for the recruitment of a full-time, permanent CEO, will take every one of those types of criteria under their purview as they design the process going forward. I'll make sure they see your comment.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. A new CEO is just a person who implements the policies of government. We can see so far that they haven't led us to a very good point right now. My final question for the minister is: will the minister make change that really matters and appoint a task force to immediately start planning the orderly dismantling of Alberta Health Services?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I don't know that that would be necessary. We have a board that laid out a large game plan, and that game plan includes things to do with the health workforce, facility operations, acute care, continuing care, and the list goes on. Now there is a very competent group of people who have the day-to-day job to implement those strategies, and they're doing it. That's why we're anxious to get on with these plans as opposed to being sidetracked by some of these peripheral issues.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

School Construction

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over a week ago a group from Airdrie had a rally at the Legislature calling for new schools to address the needs in that community. Airdrie is not alone. There are many other communities in this province needing new schools, such as Beaumont in my constituency. My question is to the Minister of Education. How does the Ministry of Education determine its priorities in the capital planning process to address the needs of its school boards and their students?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, we do consult with school boards on a regular basis. In fact, we ask school boards to provide us with a three-year capital plan and update it annually so that we know exactly what their priorities are in their jurisdictions. Obviously, we have to overlay that with our own demographic analysis with respect to the demographic shifts that are happening in the province, the growth of students and the areas of growth, which hopefully will match what the school boards are telling us, and have those discussions. Then, of course, we have to deal with priorities across the province with respect to health and safety.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate those comments. Again, Mr. Minister, we have communities that are bursting at the seams, communities like Beaumont, where 25 per cent of the population is under 20. How does the minister deal with these priorities where communities are bursting at the seams? How do we deal with these situations?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, clearly, we have to work with communities that have these types of growth issues, and we have worked with Beaumont and with Rocky View with respect to the Airdrie community and others to try and assist them in getting, for example, modular classrooms in place to deal with growth on an immediate term. At the same time, we're working on a longer term capital plan which will put in place immediate construction in those areas that need it, and plan for the longer term for those areas that can wait a while. But there are issues across the province relative to . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the minister: when will you provide Albertans with a long-range, sustainable, and sensible plan to address the urgent needs not only for today but for the future?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, we do have that plan. We're working through it in the department. We're looking at the issues of growth. We're looking at the fact that 50 per cent of our schools are more than 50 years old, and that has implications for us. We also need to note where we're going to need those schools going forward, which ones need to be renewed and refreshed going forward, and which ones are going to be external to our needs. That's a long-term plan that we are working on going forward, and I hope that we'll have announcements with respect to that within the near term.

Funding for Medical Students

Mr. Chase: Mr. Speaker, during the last election campaign the very first promise the governing party made was to aggressively increase the number of health care professionals in this province. Three years later Albertans are still waiting. To the Deputy Premier: if the Premier wants to make it easier for Albertans to study medicine, why did this government cut postsecondary education so much that the U of A and the U of C had to trim medical schools by 31 spaces this year?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, in actual fact, we have exceeded the promise that we made in our campaign in 2008. We had said that by 2012 we would have a minimum increase of physician graduates from 227 to 295. Our target right now is still 295, and in fact we believe we're going to exceed that target by a very good margin. It is true that given that this year's enrollments were down a little bit from last year . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Why did health sciences and related clinical fields, the health professionals Alberta desperately needs, have the highest number of qualified students refused admission not only last year but for the last five years in a row? Something is not right here.

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member needs to look at the number of spaces that we've increased. We have increased a tremendous amount, and we've actually reduced the number of turnaways, if that definition is still out there. We have reduced the number of turnaways in every jurisdiction in this province, and we've done it very substantially. We are increasing the number of health care spaces in the province. We're going to increase the number of graduates in the health care fields. That's the important part, the graduates.

Mr. Chase: So like with the minister of health: we'll wait for Christmas for his gifts; we'll wait until 2012 for yours. Mind you, this government won't be around to see it.

How can the government claim that Alberta Health Services has a handle on workforce planning when the College and Association of Registered Nurses said just this month that AHS's workforce plans are not based on sound evidence and research?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I guess I would be in disagreement with that because the number of health officials and health experts that I was in the room with when we did work on the plan and established those targets indicated to us that that was the appropriate level of staffing. It's a staffing mix. You can't listen to just one part of the model; you have to listen to all parts of the system.

We will have an increase of approximately 350 graduating physicians in 2012. We're going to be beyond our 2,000 nurses commitment that we made, and we're going to be beyond our 1,000 LPNs commitment we made. We are building more spaces than any other jurisdiction in Canada.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Support for Rural Tourism

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. With the Grey Cup being hosted here in Edmonton this weekend, we hear lots about what's being done to promote tourism in the big cities. As I will mention later in my member's statement, there are unique, innovative programs in rural Alberta that are worthy of attention. My questions are to the Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation. How do more operators, especially those in rural Alberta, get funding and support from Travel Alberta?

Mrs. Ady: Well, Mr. Speaker, we are pleased to see communities working together, like on the icon passport system. The tourism industry is always stronger when we work together. I always say: hunt in a pack. So we see these kinds of creative initiatives come out, like the passport system. It's a great example of creative thinking that's fostered through Travel Alberta. Last year Travel Alberta provided $2.6 million to north, central, and south tourism destination regions to come up with these kinds of innovative ways to attract tourism.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, that's great news.

To the same minister. Mr. Speaker, you know, again, we hear the stats about the visitors to the Grey Cup. We hear about the millions of dollars that are being spent in Edmonton with this great event. My question to this minister is: are we seeing more people visiting and spending money in other parts of this great province, like in rural Alberta?

Mrs. Ady: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is right. During the economic downturn there's no question that tourism took some hits, but I've always said that this is a resilient industry. It knows how to battle and fight. It just didn't sit down and mire in the fact that it was losing ground during an economic turnaround. They got out; they promoted. They've worked very, very hard. This icon passport is one great example of them working together. I am starting to see the tourism industry turn around, and we're seeing activity out there.

Mr. VanderBurg: Again to the same minister. We talk lots about the innovative ways that operators are continuing to build this industry, but what's your ministry doing to promote more campgrounds? They're all full; you can't get in anywhere.

Mrs. Ady: Well, Mr. Speaker, we do have wonderful campgrounds in this province, and I understand why they're full. We actually created 100 new campsites last year in the province of Alberta. We need to add more. We're out looking at opportunities at this very moment on adding to those. We brought our reservation system – remember we doubled it from 25 to 50? We had 180,000 reservations on that campground reservation system last year. We're doing a lot; we need to do more. It's a wonderful province, and people want to visit it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

School Utilization Formula

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The school utilization formula is creating challenges across Alberta in both rural and urban areas alike. Last year the Edmonton public school board voted to close five of its schools, which was hugely upsetting to the affected students and their community schools, which are the hub of these communities. My question is to the Minister of Education. Given that schools are a vital component of a community, why could your department not find some way to keep these schools open?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, the governance of education and the government of education is a two-pronged process: there's the provincial level, of course, the Department of Education, the ministry, and there are local school boards. We ask school boards to govern in their area by making determinations about what their physical plant needs are, where they need to have school spaces, and in doing so, we hope that they will work with the community. We help to guide some of that discussion where appropriate and work with them on shaping that, but ultimately it comes to a school board determining whether or not the school facilities they have are the ones that are necessary in order to provide the programs. This is where it's really critical. It's all about the appropriate . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member. [interjection] The hon. member has the floor.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is to the same minister. Given that these schools are critically important and many of these particular schools had low utilization rates based on your department's admittedly flawed formula for calculating utilization, when can we expect to see a new formula in place?

3:10

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, an important question that needs to be addressed from a number of different aspects. First of all, the utilization formula that people talk about and say is flawed does take into account — people suggest that it doesn't take into account the other spaces in the school, but it does provide a formula which calculates how much gymnasium, how much hallway, how much other space needs to be put in place. It should be clear that the utilization formula, which was critical a number of years ago in making determinations about where new schools were allocated and those sorts of things, doesn't play that significant a role currently in that process. So the utilization formula . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member. [interjection] The hon. member has the floor.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the same minister. What can communities do to help prevent the closure of these neighbourhood schools and protect them for the future?

Mr. Hancock: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, again a very important question. First of all, we would encourage school boards and communities and municipal councils, et cetera, to work together to talk about the future of the community, what the needs are for the future of that community, what the cycle of growth might be in that community, and how to appropriately use the school facilities first and foremost for education purposes and then when no longer needed for education purposes, for some other community use until the cycle of the community comes around and the school is again needed for educational purposes in that area. That can't be simply a matter of . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Condominium Bylaws

Mr. Benito: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I know some constituents have concerns regarding the purchase of condominium units. I have heard my colleagues say in the past that consumers need to do their homework before investing in new or used condo units as their new home. My questions are to the Minister of Service Alberta. How can consumers do the homework you suggest before buying a condo when it can be difficult to get condo bylaws and financial information from the condominium association?

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Under the Condominium Property Act buyers can certainly ask the board for copies of documents, which include bylaws, meeting minutes, the budget and most recent financial statements, and the statement of the reserve fund, which is absolutely so important. The board must provide the buyer the requested information within 10 days. Many condominium boards are responsive. If a potential buyer is concerned, they should put a subject-to condition on the offer to ensure that they get to see the documents before the offer closes.

Mr. Benito: To the same minister. It takes so long for an interested buyer to arm themselves with vital information to help them make the best decision. Why is this the case?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It can certainly take time for the property managers or the board to go through the files, retrieve the documents, and send them to the recipient. As well, if a buyer would like to receive a copy of the bylaws right away, they can do so by logging onto the Service Alberta website, and ordering a copy from the spatial information system for a $5 fee to expedite the process and to ensure that they get the right information.

Mr. Benito: Again to the same minister: why are there big differences in the charges to the potential buyer when requesting this documentation?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Currently the Condominium Property Act requires that fees charged for producing and providing corporation documents be reasonable. Under the current review of the Condominium Property Act we are looking at options for standardizing fees, making sure that they are affordable to owners and buyers. These kinds of discussions and options will be included in the consultation document as we move forward with the consultation in late spring of 2011.

The Speaker: Hon. Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs, you were catching my eye a minute or two ago. Did you want to rise on something?

Mr. Denis: I wanted to rise, actually, on a point of order.

The Speaker: We'll deal with the point of order later, at the conclusion of the Routine.

Hon. members, 20 members were recognized today for 115 questions and responses.

We'll continue the Routine momentarily.

Statement by the Speaker

Rotation of Questions and Members' Statements

The Speaker: First of all, I want to draw to the attention of all members revisions with respect to the rotation of questions and members' statements. I want to advise of certain modifications as a result of recent changes to the composition of caucuses. As of Tuesday, November 23, 2010, the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark is sitting in the Assembly as an independent. This change affects the rotation of questions and of members' statements outlined in the chair's October 25, 2010, statement in this Assembly at pages 917 and 918 of Alberta Hansard for that day.

Given the number of changes to the rotation and to the seating plan so far this session the chair has attempted to integrate the new independent member into the rotation of questions and members' statements with a minimum of disruption to the existing order. As this chair has indicated previously, changes to the rotation are done in the spirit of fairness, that marks the proceedings of this Assembly. Accordingly, the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, like the Member for Calgary-Currie, will be entitled to one question every four days.

Today is considered day 1 in the rotation scheme used in the Assembly. As the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark took his new seat Tuesday, November 23, it seems appropriate that he be able to ask a question this Wednesday, which is December 1, 2010, or day 3 in the rotation. He will be entitled to ask the sixth question, and the remaining places will be moved down one, so the Official Opposition will have the seventh question, government members the eighth question, et cetera. It will mark a departure from our previous rotation as the Official Opposition will now have the 18th question.

Similarly, the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark will be able to participate in Members' Statements on the same basis as the other independent member. Given that the member's affiliation was changed last Tuesday, by the rotation used in this matter, he will be entitled to a member's statement also on Wednesday, December 1. The chair will provide calendars and outlines of the order of questions during question period to all members.

Now, hon. members, as the part of the Routine we were at before we moved to the question period was dealing with Introduction of Guests, we will now return to that. I have still, I believe, 11 members that wish to participate, so I'll go through my list, and I will ask you if you want to do an introduction or not.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The guests have departed.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce two very bright women: Corrie Adolph, who is seeking the Wildrose nomination in Calgary-Currie, and Joanne Autio, who is seeking the Wildrose nomination in Edmonton-Mill Woods. Both Corrie and Joanne will be shadowing me today to find out what an MLA does on a daily basis. I would ask them both to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour for me today and gives me pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members my wife of 37 years, Pauline Prins. Pauline has been a registered nurse for the past 36 years and has worked in the health care system in Edmonton, Bentley, Ponoka, and Lacombe. She retired earlier this year after working many years serving the people of these communities. She is now on the Lacombe hospital foundation board.

Pauline came by her love of medicine and serving people in need from her grandfather, the late Dr. Klaas Lugtenborg, who practised for many decades in the Netherlands. Mr. Speaker, she has passed on this dedication to our son Mark, who is also a medical doctor, well known to many members in this House. Now, this past summer Mark married the love of his life, another doctor, Dr. Nadia Salvaterra. Our son and daughter-in-law are now working in Rankin Inlet in Nunavut.

Mr. Speaker, I've been surrounded by health care professionals for most of my life, including two sisters-in-law and four nieces who are nurses, so I want to recognize all the wonderful work that they do. Pauline is seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask all members to give her the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a very good friend and an extremely dedicated volunteer from my constituency. Marcia McLeod has volunteered with the Black Gold Health Foundation, the Leduc hospital, the Edmonton International Airport, Santa's Helpers, Leduc-Nisku EDA, Leduc chamber of commerce, and many other organizations in the city of Leduc. She also served as the president of my constituency association. I'd like to ask Marcia McLeod to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Berger: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Unfortunately, my guest, my daughter, had to get on the road back home, so she has left. Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, would you like to proceed?

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My guests have also departed the Assembly, so I'll pass on that. Thank you.

The Speaker: Okay. Is there anybody that I missed? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Vandermeer: Mr. Speaker, it gives me pleasure to introduce a constituent of mine. His name is Ravi Grewal. I'm not sure if he's still here, but if we could give him a warm welcome.

Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: The hon. minister of tourism and recreation.

2010 Grey Cup

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to congratulate the Grey Cup Committee, the city of Edmonton, and all Albertans in our capital region on an extraordinary weekend of Grey Cup hospitality and celebration. I'm so proud of the welcome extended to the Governor General, the Prime Minister, Premiers of several provinces, and thousands of Saskatchewan and Montreal fans. This city was at its best.

Last weekend you couldn't go anywhere in Edmonton without seeing happy, smiling visitors. From Huddle Town and all the fun activities in Churchill Square to the parade and the amazing game and halftime entertainment at Commonwealth Stadium in front of more than 63,000 fans and millions more television viewers across the country, Edmonton has once again shown that we know how to welcome the world.

Our government is proud to have supported the 2009 Grey Cup in Calgary and this year's Grey Cup in Edmonton. One truly wonderful and memorable event was the youth brunch that we hosted on Saturday morning. Through our sponsorship of the Grey Cup we were able to provide 50 tickets for deserving youth and minor football players in the Edmonton region to attend the Grey Cup game.

As we did at the Vancouver Winter Olympics, we took advantage of this opportunity to showcase Alberta artists and culture at the Huddle Town Alberta House. Aboriginal storyteller Ron Walker, Rapid Fire Theatre, and artists from U22 Productions entertained visitors while they enjoyed hot chocolate and marshmallows and warm Alberta hospitality. This was a fabulous opportunity to promote Alberta's performers on a national stage.

Mr. Speaker, the economic impact of hosting an event like the Grey Cup is significant. As I mentioned last week, fans stayed in hotels and motels. They ate in restaurants and bars, went shopping, and spent money here. Calgary Tourism estimated that the economic impact from last year's Grey Cup was $61 million for the city and a further $20 million in impact across the province. We expect that economic impact for Edmonton may be even higher. This is one of the reasons that we're disappointed that the Edmonton Expo 2017 bid is not proceeding.

Edmonton has successfully hosted numerous world-class events over the years, from the '78 Commonwealth Games, that gave us Commonwealth Stadium, to the '83 Universiade Games, the 2001 World Championships in Athletics, the 2003 Heritage Classic outdoor hockey game, the 2005 World Masters, and four Grey Cup championships.

Congratulations to the Montreal Alouettes on their second Grey Cup victory in Alberta, and congratulations to the Saskatchewan Roughriders and the Rider Nation fans for their tremendous heart and team spirit and camaraderie.

My thanks to the Grey Cup Committee and the more than 700 volunteers and citizens who helped make this the best Grey Cup weekend in Edmonton and such a resounding success. Congratulations to everyone involved. We can all be very proud.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity on behalf of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. During its long and storied history the Grey Cup has evolved into one of our nation's most treasured institutions. Though the championship game itself remains the heart of the event, the parties and exhibitions and celebrations leading up to the kickoff have become a phenomenon all their own. For that reason the people of Edmonton must be saluted. They welcomed visitors from across the nation, including Their Excellencies Governor General David Johnston and Mrs. Sharon Johnston, and showed them the celebration of a lifetime.

Thousands of Canadians came together in downtown Edmonton to enjoy the festivities of Huddle Town. It was full of activities which brought together family and friends. Many even had the pleasure of zip-lining through our province's capital.

Without the hard work of countless volunteers this feat would have been impossible. The 98th Grey Cup event showcased the spirit of Albertans, where they had such an overwhelming response that they were quickly at full capacity and unable to accept any more volunteers.

The good-natured spirit of the event can be seen in that not one charge was laid all weekend as a result of the Grey Cup festivities. This spirit is unmatched anywhere in the world.

This Grey Cup was particularly personal for me as it had a potential to create conflict in my family. You see, Mr. Speaker, I was born in Saskatoon, and my brother Greg was born in Montreal. Yet instead of creating divisions between family and friends, this great Canadian game unites all of us in our love of sport, a true testament to how great it is.

I can tell you from my experience playing rugby for 17 years that when it comes to the finals, players always give 110 per cent. This Grey Cup was no exception. While the best team won, all players on both teams played valiantly, and they can all leave Edmonton with their heads held high.

The Eskimos may not have made it to the final this year, but by playing host to thousands of excited Canadians from across the country, Edmontonians have proved that this remains the city of champions.

Mr. Hinman: Mr. Speaker, may I respond to the statement?

The Speaker: I gather there's a request for unanimous consent to allow the Member for Calgary-Glenmore to participate in this.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Wildrose I'd like to congratulate the 98th Grey Cup organizers, who have done an extremely wonderful job in bringing Canadians together for our Grey Cup event. Special congratulations, though, are due to three members of the champion Montreal Alouettes who hail from Alberta: offensive lineman Jeff Perrett – I might add that his parents have come and visited me twice, and I have a photograph from him, an outstanding athlete – and Dylan Steenbergen, both from the Lethbridge area, and defensive tackle J.P. Bekasiak from Edmonton. We also recognize offensive lineman Chris Best from Calgary and defensive tackle Keith Shologan from Spruce Grove, who came up just short as members of the Saskatchewan Roughriders team.

What a wonderful weekend for Canadians and the fans who had the opportunity to enjoy this fine city and the thousands who watched the game on TV. Congratulations to all involved and for those who got to participate.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Okay. Before we move on to the next item, it's now 27 minutes after 3, and I think it would be inhumane on my part to deny hon. members an opportunity to have tea or juice or coffee in the House before we call Orders of the Day. I'm not going to call Orders of the Day, but you can order such if you wish.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

2010 Grey Cup Festival

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Alberta has been proud to host the Canadian Football League's Grey Cup for each of the past two years. Congratulations go out to repeat champions Anthony Calvillo and the Montreal Alouettes on an inspirational and well-deserved victory.

Mr. Speaker, everything is just fine in the New West Partnership, which originated between the Alberta and Saskatchewan governments, but 2010 just wasn't quite the year for our teams. I'd like to again salute the Grey Cup steering committee, which I was able to introduce earlier, and their volunteers. It was an amazing festival, and it included an extremely successful parade, the entertaining and free Huddle Town, which featured not only a 520-foot zip line but, for me the important thing, contributions to the armed forces, a great selection of receptions, ever-exciting player awards, and countless other unforgettable activities.

I would like to acknowledge the ministries of Culture and Community Spirit and Tourism, Parks and Recreation for invaluable initiatives. I'd also note the contributions of the ministries of Children and Youth Services, Agriculture and Rural Development, and the Public Affairs Bureau. In the grant agreement $200,000 was earmarked for cultural activities, which provided a fabulous showcase for our world-class Alberta performers. Another highlight was Alberta House, which featured our trademark western hospitality.

Mr. Speaker, at one time I thought there might be one way for this year's event to be slightly better, for Albertans at least, and that would be if the Calgary Stampeders and the Edmonton Eskimos had both qualified for the big game using the crossover format and played to a tie. But, of course, that scenario cannot happen. There needs to be a winner. My point, though, is that in many ways, with the way things were organized, all of Canada, all Canadians, were winners in the 98th edition of the only truly Canadian professional sport, with Albertans as the gracious hosts.

Next year, with Vancouver arranging the festivities, hopefully the Stampeders or the Eskimos will bring the cup back to Alberta, where it belongs.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Alberta Liberal Emergency Health Care Solutions

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Friday I launched the Official Opposition's plan to help Alberta navigate its way through the current crisis in our emergency departments. It's a long-standing crisis caused solely by the mismanagement and incompetence of this Progressive Conservative administration. I urge the Premier to adopt this plan immediately to undo some of the damage from perpetual disruptive organizational change and revolving doors in senior leadership.

Our health care system is lurching from crisis to crisis to crisis. Conditions in emergency rooms across Alberta are worse than ever before, with patients waiting dozens of hours, some dying before receiving the treatment they need. We must take the pressure off the system and treat the situation as if a major event such as a bus or plane crash or a serious epidemic existed.

In the next few months we must anticipate and avert the potential for catastrophe by creating space, surge capacity in the system. A short-term investment now will reduce costs in the longer term. We must act now. The lack of front-line health care professionals is the number one cause of the crisis. The government must hire more health care professionals while at the same time creating enough long-term care space to meet Alberta's needs.

3:30

Our plan has seven steps: the creation of an emergency task force comprised of top-tier professionals to report daily on bed availability and wait times and ensure people move through emergency departments quickly; a mobilization of all available health care professionals; an advertising campaign to help Albertans navigate the system more effectively; the immediate provision of alternative long-term care settings; extended hours for diagnostic imaging and lab testing;

the opening of mothballed acute-care beds in Edmonton and Calgary; and initiating a long-term plan for the future improvement of public health care, including a regional delivery system.

Mr. Speaker, the Tory administration has caused the greatest health care crisis in our history. This government has a duty to immediately atone for dangerous mismanagement. Act now and save lives.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Investing in New Canadians Program

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak on an innovative research initiative between the University of Calgary and RBC to study how organizations can take full advantage of Calgary's diverse working community. As Roger Straathof, vice-president of RBC, said:

It's estimated that more than 80,000 Canadians with professional credentials are not recognized by industry simply because their credentials were earned outside of [Canada]. This is equal to billions of dollars in human resource waste annually.

A $1 million gift from RBC offers the U of C's Haskayne School of Business the unique opportunity to look at the ingredients of a successful immigrant-employer relationship in a longitudinal study.

Mr. Speaker, the investing in new Canadians program would develop, promote, and facilitate talent management programs to internationally qualified new Canadian professionals. The fundamental intention is to assist immigrants with professional-level foreign credentials in gaining employment in their field of expertise. The university will partner with a number of Calgary organizations, including the Bow Valley College, Alberta Talent Pool, and the Calgary Region Immigrant Employment Council, to look at the effectiveness of current mentorship and recruitment programs when it comes to including new immigrants in the Calgary workforce. The investing in new Canadians program will launch in 2011.

Mr. Speaker, I'm sure we can all see how this type of collaborative initiative is immensely important to a growing, developing province like ours. This initiative holds real promise in addressing our critical workforce needs in areas of health services and resource development and, in fact, all aspects of our economy and social infrastructure.

I would like to extend my congratulations and best wishes to this much-needed project that will help our province immensely. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Alberta Icons Passport Program

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to talk about a great new program that's drawing attention to some of Alberta's most unique attractions and helping to encourage tourism in our great province. Woodlands county has spearheaded the creation of the passport to Alberta's community icons. The passport is a free traveller's guide that's stamped at 24 of the big-things sites across Alberta, from the world's largest bee in Falher to the Taber cornstalk and almost everything in between. The passport program has been very successful so far, and there's already one Albertan, that I introduced earlier, Mr. Mario Boulanger, who has completed the entire passport and visited all 24 sites.

These communities are proud to celebrate their claim to fame on a monumental scale. Their icons are symbols of our heritage. They are reminders of what makes these communities so special. I invite my colleagues to join me in thanking Woodlands county, the participating communities, and their partners at Travel Alberta for promoting these sites and communities.

Mr. Speaker, on your desk and, colleagues, on your desk is a copy of the passport. I encourage Albertans to visit www.alberta-icons.com to learn more about the big things icon passport program and to get out and explore our beautiful province.

Thank you, sir.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Recognition of Legislature House Staff

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is probably fair to say that we don't often achieve unanimity in this Chamber, but I want to speak to a matter today about which I think we can all agree. As you know, in the last few weeks we've been putting in very long hours, and the schedule has been gruelling. Some of us, certainly me, may have felt at times that it was just almost more than a person could bear, almost above and beyond the call of duty.

I was here for the debate in the middle of the night last week at probably about 3 in the morning on Thursday when I slipped out for a short break and happened to strike up a conversation with a member of the security detail. They were doing their usual job plus also taking a turn at some of the duties normally performed by the pages. I asked him when his shift had started, and he indicated that he had started at 1 p.m. the previous day. He also indicated that they aren't platooning. They're not taking shifts because there aren't enough of them, so they just work right through until whenever the session for the day ends. In fact, some of those people had been here since 8 a.m. the previous day.

This got me to thinking about all of the people who work so hard to make it possible for this Chamber to operate, even around the clock when necessary. These security people, pages, table officers and officials, the Sergeant-at-Arms, Hansard staff, camera and sound people, leg. and office assistants, researchers, maintenance and janitorial staff all do their jobs quietly and professionally and always in the most accommodating way. They truly go above and beyond the call of duty, and their families often have to make adjustments and sacrifices for them to do their job.

Mr. Speaker, these are Albertans who are great leaders. They lead by example, by their work ethic, and by their service. I would like to thank them for what they do.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. The way you were going there, I thought you were going to conclude that the Speaker was a brutal boss for making people work from 8 in the morning to 4 the next day. But, in the end, I gather that leadership is all important, right?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Assist Community Services Centre

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today in this House to discuss a very important community organization in Edmonton, the Assist Community Services Centre. Earlier I had introduced Mr. Allan Kwan, vice-president of Assist; Ms Mary Fung, their public relations director; and Mei Hung, the treasurer. Originally this organization was known as the Chinese Community Services Centre. Assist was founded by Mr. Kim Hung.

It's a nonprofit, charitable organization that provides many valuable services to its community. It's been a pillar of the Chinese community in Edmonton for over 30 years and has become more prominent as the Chinese community has grown. Although it is primarily a centre for immigrants of Chinese origin, Assist offers services in English, Cantonese, Mandarin, Vietnamese, Korean, and Arabic. In helping immigrants, its overarching vision is to enhance the lives of individuals and families through quality programs and services.

Mr. Speaker, it has certainly achieved its vision over the past several decades in a number of ways. Assist empowers immigrants by providing essential services that help make the transition to living in Alberta much easier. These programs include adult English courses, one-on-one counselling, group activities, and an integrated services program. Just this past weekend Assist hosted an information session on employment insurance. Future workshops include one on how to become a journeyman in Alberta and one on the public school system in our province. The centre also provides children, youth, family, and senior services.

Mr. Speaker, the Assist Community Services Centre is a tremendous organization which gives back to the community by helping immigrants adjust to life in Edmonton. It helps immigrants of all ages by providing a number of useful services. The volunteers at this organization are tremendously dedicated and hard working. I would ask this House to please give the members of Assist the warm welcome that they deserve.

Thank you, sir.

Water Allocation

Mr. Dallas: Mr. Speaker, water and access to it is the lifeblood of our province. It sustains our ecosystems and contributes to Albertans' high quality of life. However, our water supply is limited, and in order that we continue to grow agriculturally, industrially, environmentally, and economically, we must face these challenges. We've already seen the ramifications in the South Saskatchewan River basin, where there is not enough water to meet a variety of demands.

Albertans expect our water resources to be managed in a way that ensures the province can fully weather future growth demands. That's precisely why the government of Alberta is reviewing ways in which water is allocated in the province. Not surprisingly, Albertans are interested in what changes may occur. For example, we've heard concerns about a free market system where water licences would only be available to the highest bidder. Let me be clear. This will not happen. The government of Alberta has no intention of privatizing or selling Alberta's water resources, and this includes any transfer outside of our province. Water is owned by the Crown on behalf of Albertans, and its use in Alberta is regulated by the province. Any new tool for Alberta's future water management would have that same provincial oversight.

No decisions have been made about the future of Alberta's water resources, and no decisions will be made until the people of this province are consulted. Throughout all of this the guiding principle is that the government of Alberta remains firmly committed to ensuring water resources are protected. The review is about enhancing a system that has supported Alberta well over the past century but may not be sufficient to meet our future social, economic, and environmental expectations. We must adapt and be prepared. I urge all Albertans to take advantage of engagement opportunities when the time comes.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I understand from the chair of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices that we will be in need of a search committee for the Ombudsman's position. That being the case and given the potential agenda for the House under standing orders to conclude by Thursday unless otherwise ordered, it would be prudent, therefore, for me to put on notice a motion.

Be it resolved that a Select Special Ombudsman Search Committee of the Legislative Assembly be appointed consisting of the following members, namely Mr. Mitzel, chair; Mr. Lund, deputy chair; Mr. Marz; Mr. Lindsay; Mr. Quest; Mr. Rogers; Ms Blakeman; Ms Notley; and Mr. Hinman, for the purpose of inviting applications for the position of Ombudsman and to recommend to the Assembly the applicant it considers most suitable to this position.

- (1) The chair and members of the committee shall be paid in accordance with the schedule of category A committees provided in the most current Members' Services Committee allowances order.
- (2) Reasonable disbursements by the committee for advertising, staff assistance, equipment and supplies, rent, travel, and other expenditures necessary for the effective conduct of its responsibilities shall be paid subject to the approval of the chair.
- (3) In carrying out its responsibilities the committee may with the concurrence of the head of the department utilize the services of members of the public service employed in that department and of the staff employed by the Assembly.
- (4) The committee may without leave of the Assembly sit during a period when the Assembly is adjourned.
- (5) When its work has been completed, the committee shall report to the Assembly if it is sitting. During a period when the Assembly is adjourned, the committee may release its report by depositing a copy with the Clerk and forwarding a copy to each member of the Assembly.

In providing this notice, Mr. Speaker, I am anticipating perhaps a tabling that might be made later, but I think it was prudent to give notice to the House of the necessity for this motion so that it could come to the floor on a timely basis this week. I would also indicate that I have approached members of the opposition to confirm that they would allow their name to stand in the motion as I have reflected it.

The Speaker: The House will deal with the motion a little later. It was my intent as Speaker to have tabled the letter from the Ombudsman on Thursday last, but unfortunately there was no opportunity to do it. The chair of the Leg. Offices Committee has a copy of that letter. Mr. Button did meet with me, and he's resigning effective May 31, 2011, for personal and family reasons. There are some issues, and both he and his wife want to have a different future than to be under pressure. We will deal with that later in the week, but the letter is there, and the chair has it as well.

Thank you.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: Okay. Like Introduction of Guests today, I have a very long list.

We will deal with the Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to table eight copies of my response to amended Written Question 10 as submitted by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, which reads, "As of December 31, 2009, how many Albertans were on wait-lists for long-term care placement both in hospital facilities and in the community?"

In addition, Mr. Speaker, I would like to table eight copies of my response to Written Question 23, as submitted also by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, which reads, "What was the total amount spent by the Ministry of Health and Wellness on external consultants during the past three fiscal years?"

It is my understanding, Mr. Speaker, that written questions 9, 36, 37, and 38, which were directed to my ministry, are being tabled by the Clerk. Thank you.

Also, if I could, I would quickly like to table the appropriate number of copies of the following annual reports: the 2009-2010 report of the Alberta College of Occupational Therapists and the 2009-2010 report of the Health Quality Council of Alberta.

Thank you.

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, two tablings. One on behalf of the Minister of Finance and Enterprise responding to questions from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar with regard to expenditures on external consultants during the past three years.

Also, Mr. Speaker, on my behalf, responding to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to the same question: how much had Treasury Board spent on external consultants during the past three fiscal years? Those appropriate numbers of documents will be tabled.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Okay. It's okay. I'm getting it all down. It's going to take a long time before we ever get there.

The hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I beg your indulgence for the number of things that I must table. Number one, I am pleased to respond to Written Question 15, that was posed to me by the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, which read, "What was the total amount spent by the Ministry of Employment and Immigration on external consultants during the past three fiscal years?" In my correspondence I addressed that question to the point that I'm sharing it with this Assembly at this point.

Mr. Speaker, my next tabling. As required, I am tabling five copies of the 2010 annual report of the Certified General Accountants' Association of Alberta. For those in the House who don't know, CGA Alberta is a self-regulated organization of professional accountants created to further the interests of Albertans in our business community and develop professional standards in the province for that particular profession. Thank you.

My next tabling, Mr. Speaker, is five copies of the Association of Professional Engineers, Geologists and Geophysicists of Alberta 2009 annual report, the last available, Bridges, which I'm compelled to share with this Legislative Assembly. Much like the prior report, this self-governing body administers the professional conduct of its members and assures the quality of standards of services rendered to Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, my next tabling is again five copies, as required, of the annual report of the Radiation Health Administrative Organization. Not to repeat myself over and over, but this is again a self-governing body that assures the quality of service provided to us in our health care system among radiation professionals.

Next, Mr. Speaker, I again am required to table with you today five copies of the Alberta Dental Association and College 2009 radiation health and safety program. This organization has developed a program for Albertans to ascertain that we receive the best quality of care when it comes to radiation. This is to be tabled with the Legislative Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, next, from the University of Calgary five copies of the annual report of the University of Calgary, again on radiation health administration issued by that university.

I feel bad for the pages, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Don't worry about the pages. You just continue.

Mr. Lukaszuk: And about your patience as well.

Mr. Speaker, I have five copies of the Authorized Radiation Health Administrative Organization annual report for 2010 as well.

3:50

Mr. Speaker, also the annual report of the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Alberta for 2009-2010.

Mr. Speaker, also the last report available for the Alberta Veterinary Medical Association radiation protection program.

Today, Mr. Speaker, I would also like to table five copies of the College of Alberta Professional Foresters 2010 annual report.

Mr. Speaker, last but not least, I would like to table five copies of the Workers' Compensation Board of Alberta annual report.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a document that I will table today on behalf of the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, and I have the required number of copies. The document is a letter scribed by Mr. Earl Kading of Cessford, Alberta, a constituent of the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, requesting to have secondary highway 561, known locally as the Cessford road, paved from Veterans highway 36 to secondary highway 884. Mr. Kading notes that as a member of the special . . .

The Speaker: That's probably a pretty good summarization you've got already. You can probably table it now and move on.

Mr. Doerksen: I will do that. It is signed by more than 100 residents from the Cessford area. Some are my constituents. I won't read them this afternoon.

The Speaker: Wonderful.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, you have one, too, now? Same road?

Mr. Hayden: No, Mr. Speaker, unless it's hidden in my papers.

But I do, Mr. Speaker, want to table in response to the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East the response to their request for the amount spent over the past three years on external consultants. I'll table the required number of copies.

Mr. Speaker, I also would like to table the response to the question from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview with respect to: "What is the total number of complaints regarding zoo standards dealt with by the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development from January 1, 2003, to February 7, 2010?"

I also have, Mr. Speaker, the response to the question from the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East with respect to: "What specific programs have been developed to aid Alberta pork producers who suffered economic losses due to the recent H1N1 outbreak?" I have the required number of copies.

I also would like to table the required number of copies of the Stakeholder Consultation: Occupational Health and Safety report as prepared by Stroh Consulting, covering the 10 questions that were to explore ways to get others involved with health and safety by encouraging collaborative partnerships and initiating processes for agricultural societies to include health and safety activities as part of their program. Also:

Research approaches used for [occupational health and safety] in other jurisdictions and consider adopting best practices in Alberta, [as an example] do we need a safety organization?

Continue [Employment and Immigration] and ARD [occupational health and safety] project team to facilitate industry engagement.

Create and launch a multi-phase awareness campaign for [occupational health and safety] in the agriculture industry.

Facilitate an industry and government process to develop a long term Agriculture Health and Safety Enhancement Strategy.

Investigate possible recognition programs similar to the Partnerships in Health and Safety Certificate of Recognition (COR) Program to cover the agriculture industry.

Identify an industry champion for health and safety on farms and ranches to maintain profile and promote safety initiatives.

Identify possible incentives for improved practices ([and those are like] reduced Workers' Compensation premiums, reduced premiums for crop insurance, interest rates or increased benefits of grant programs).

Investigate possible inclusion of contractors carrying out non-agricultural work on farms under [occupational health and safety] . . .

And finally, Mr. Speaker, to develop best practices guide for high risk duties.

I have the required number, Mr. Speaker, and I'm happy to table them.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I just have one document I'd like to table. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies in response to Written Question 26, which I received through my office from the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie. This response to Written Question 26 lists payments of external consultants for the Ministry of Housing and Urban Affairs, which consists of the Department of Housing and Urban Affairs and the Alberta Social Housing Corporation. I'd also like to note that the Ministry of Housing and Urban Affairs was established on April 1, 2008, and as such, the external consultant records pertaining to the '07-08 fiscal year will be included in the response from the Ministry of Municipal Affairs. I would indicate also that the amount is negligible.

Thank you.

Mr. Blackett: Mr. Speaker, I rise to table the appropriate number of copies in response to Written Question 1, raised in the Third Session of the 27th Legislature by the Member for Edmonton-Centre. The question was: "What was the total amount spent by the Ministry of Culture and Community Spirit on external consultants during the past three fiscal years?" Two, the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit was constituted in 2008, and we have records for the last three years to that effect.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table eight copies of the response to the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, who had posed a question in the House that had to do with external consultants which the ministry has used over the last three years, which we were able to bring forward, being developed on a lot of these things. I believe that – was it you, member?

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. You bet. I appreciate this.

The Speaker: Anyway, would you speak through the chair. He feels lonely if you don't.

Mr. Horner: My apologies, Mr. Speaker. I heard the hon. member question where this should go, but I'm sure the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity will provide the answer to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. I have the appropriate number of copies here. As I said, the question was: "What was the total amount spent by the Ministry of Advanced Education and Technology on external consultants during the past three fiscal years?" We've just broken it out into a summary, and we'd be happy to provide that.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Liepert: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Member for Calgary-Currie, I think, is going to have a lot of reading to do here tonight if we sit fairly late because I, too, have a tabling of a request, Written Question 25, from the Member for Calgary-Currie, again relative to payments to external consultants as it relates to the Ministry of Energy. I would like to table the appropriate number of copies.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Two tablings today. The first is a government of Alberta policy and strategy document entitled Alberta's Health Legislation: Moving Forward, from July 2010; in particular page 15, advocating allowing opt-in/opt-out provisions by health professionals; page 19, advocating new legislation for different funding models; and page 21, advocating private insurance options for public health care.

The second tabling is the appropriate number of copies of a report that I comprised because I received 307 signed letters from Friends of Medicare from Albertans all over the province. Rather than table 307, I've done a report of those that wrote and a sample copy of the letter that they wrote expressing their concerns about scrapping existing laws, putting too much power into the hands of health ministers. They're wanting to see open and transparent processes and encourage reviewing other options.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased today to table five copies of the June 2010 Inspiring Action on Education, Alberta Education's follow-up document to Inspiring Education: A Dialogue with Albertans. Inspiring Action connects the high-level policy and governance shifts of Inspiring Education to the everyday work of students, teachers, principals, and school boards. Many Albertans have contributed their views about this particular document through an online discussion process at www.education.alberta.ca/engage.

Also, Mr. Speaker, if I may, I am pleased to table today the 2009-2010 year in review for Speak Out, the Alberta student engagement initiative first promised by this government in the 2008 Speech from the Throne. In the past year Speak Out has heard from over 2,300 students about what works and doesn't work in their education and has garnered significant international attention and many awards.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

4:00

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As per my pledge in the Assembly on April 2, 2007, half my indexed pay raise, $146.25, is donated monthly to a food bank in southern Alberta until AISH is similarly increased and indexed. I am tabling the required five copies of my letter and donation to, for June, Medicine Hat food bank; July, Lethbridge Salvation Army food bank; and August, Lethbridge Interfaith Food Bank.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table a letter from Anne Landry — she's a concerned citizen — regarding her complaint dated October 28, 2010, to the hon. Premier. This letter outlines her concerns with her personal information being held at ATB Investor Services, ATB Financial, and information regarding a series of unresolved breaches of security of personal information. Ms Landry's case has been ongoing for seven years. She hopes that this letter will encourage the government to change legislation to ensure that the harm that has occurred to her will not happen to others.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to table the appropriate number of copies of your passport to Alberta's community icons, just in case you didn't get the message earlier.

Also, I did an interview last week with the Whitecourt radio station and promised that I would table the appropriate number of copies of the emergency department surge capacity protocols, sir.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation.

Mrs. Ady: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I only have one tabling today. I'm pleased to rise and table the appropriate number of copies of our response to Written Question 6 from the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity. The question was: what was the total amount spent by the Ministry of Tourism, Parks and Recreation on external consultants during the past three fiscal years?

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter from me to the Member for Edmonton-Centre responding to her written question as to the payments to external consultants that were provided by my department for the years 2007, 2008, 2009, and a total for the three years.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have just two tablings today. The first is a photo and article about Afghanistan's first national park, Band-e-Amir, which became a park on Earth Day 2009 despite three decades of warfare. The park is critical to biodiversity, conservation, and economic development.

My second tabling is from Christopher Shank, PhD, from Cochrane, who wrote from Afghanistan disconcerted that halfway around the world he is working to organize world-class protected areas while this province is dismantling legal protections for its parks and wilderness areas.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, as required by Standing Order 114, I'm pleased to present you with the 2009 annual report of the Legislative Assembly Office and the 2009 annual report of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association, Alberta Branch. The report includes the LAO annual report, the financial statements for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2009, and highlights the activities and achievements of the LAO for the calendar year ending December 31, 2009. It also contains a report of members who have participated under various other Commonwealth Parliamentary Association activities as well.

The hon. Minister of Education on tablings? Sorry. Did I miss you?

Mr. Hancock: You did.

The Speaker: Oh, a thousand apologies. How could I have done that?

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. No apologies necessary. That was a long list.

As you may have discerned, the written questions that were accepted and the motions for returns that were accepted some time ago are due today. Therefore, we do have an obligation to get them on the table today. I appreciate your allowing me to proceed with the ones that I have, not having had an opportunity to table them last Thursday.

First and foremost, I do want to table responses to written questions 5 and 29. Written Question 5 reads, "What was the total amount spent by the Ministry of Education on external consultants during the past three fiscal years?" And Written Question 29 reads, "What was the total number of sole-source contracts the Ministry of Education entered into in Edmonton during the past three fiscal years?" Those are responsive to the MLA for Calgary-Varsity.

I also have, Mr. Speaker, on behalf of other members who have a responsibility to table today answers to written questions because they're due today. On behalf of the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports in response to a question from the MLA for Lethbridge-East the appropriate number of copies of the response to Written Question 20: "What was the total amount spent by the Ministry of Seniors and Community Supports on external consultants during the past three fiscal years?"

As well, on behalf of the Minister of Children and Youth Services in response to Written Question 4 from the Member for Calgary-Varsity a response with respect to the total amount of payments for Children and Youth Services.

With respect to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General a response to the Member for Calgary-Buffalo with respect to Written Question 7: "What was the total amount spent by the Ministry of Justice on external consultants during the past three fiscal years?"

Mr. Speaker, I have the privilege of tabling on behalf of the Alberta Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security the response to Written Question 8 asked by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo: "What was the total amount spent by the Ministry of Solicitor General and Public Security on external consultants during the past three fiscal years?"

I also, Mr. Speaker, have the privilege on behalf of the Minister of Service Alberta to provide to the House the answer to Written Question 12: "What was the total amount spent by the Ministry of Service Alberta on external consultants during the past three fiscal year?"

I have the privilege as well, of course, on behalf of the Minister of Transportation of tabling the appropriate number of copies of the response to Written Question 13 requesting the total amount spent, in aggregate, on external consultants per fiscal year for the Ministry of Transportation.

I'm sorry. The last one was a response to a question from the Member for Calgary-McCall, and I don't think I mentioned that the previous one was also from the Member for Calgary-McCall.

This one, Written Question 19, was raised by the MLA for Lethbridge-East, and I'm pleased to table the written response to that question on behalf of the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. That is, again, a question relating to the total amount spent, in aggregate, on external consultants per fiscal year.

Then on behalf of the hon. the Premier I'm pleased to table the response to Written Question 21 raised by the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition and Member for Calgary-Mountain View, I believe. Written Question 21: "What was the total amount spent by Executive Council on external consultants during the past three fiscal years?"

Finally with respect to those tablings, from the Minister of Aboriginal Relations a response to a question from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview with respect to Written Question 22 on the same general matter.

Mr. Speaker, those are the responses to the required tablings, because they're due today, of answers in response to written questions. I do have a few other tablings.

Firstly, Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to table to the Legislative Assembly today the requisite number of the individual audited financial statements of school jurisdictions for the school year ended August 31, 2009, that I'm obliged to table in the House. Treasury Board directive 05/98 requires that the individual financial statements of organizations be tabled in the Legislative Assembly when only a summary of individual statements is included in the ministry's annual report, which is the case for Alberta Education's annual report and the financial statements of school jurisdictions. It's off here because you'll recognize that our fiscal year is from April 1 to March 31 and the school jurisdictions' fiscal year is from September 1 to August 31. This tabling shows that the school jurisdictions' accumulated operating surplus was $371 million as of August 31, 2009. Our school jurisdictions are in excellent fiscal shape. I've taken the liberty of providing the other copies to the chair because they are fairly large volumes, so the other copies required for tabling have been delivered to the Clerk's table already.

Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to also table on behalf of the minister of international and intergovernmental affairs the requisite number of copies of a position statement on emergency department overcrowding from the Canadian Association of Emergency Physicians, February 2007. This is a statement that has been referred to in debate a number of times but was specifically referred to by the hon. minister of intergovernmental affairs during her debate on Bill 17, and as such she was required to table it. She attempted to table it at the time, and it had been returned to her for tabling at the appropriate time, which is now.

I would also like to table, Mr. Speaker, the appropriate number of copies of a document entitled The President's Letter dated November 26, 2010. It's a copy of the letter written by the president of the AMA and published on the AMA website. It references a number of matters that have been raised in the House and may indeed be raised again in the House. In order to make sure that the House has access to the actual document itself, it's prudent to have that tabled.

The penultimate tabling, Mr. Speaker, would be a report on the OECD education ministerial meeting, Investing in Human and Social Capital: New Challenges, which was held in Paris on November 4 and 5 and which I had the privilege of attending on behalf of not only Alberta but on behalf of the Council of Ministers of Education of Canada. It was focused around the necessity for governments to continue to invest in education even in troubled fiscal times. It's very good reading, and I would commend it to members of the House to read because it is a very important topic. [interjections]

I'm hearing grumblings from the opposite side. Mr. Speaker, we hear them tabling all sorts of things all the time, but these ones are things that we are required to table for the most part.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would like to table five copies of a document entitled Success in School for Children and Youth In Care: Provincial Protocol Framework. It's a very important document. This very evening we're celebrating with the participants in the departments of Education and Children and Youth Services and Health and also community partners who have put together this protocol, which helps set the parameters so that we can share information with respect to children in care appropriately so that Children and Youth Services, Education, and all of those who are interested in sharing the success of children communicate appropriate information appropriately.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Directly to the chair I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of my response to Written Question 11, whereby the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall asked for the total amount spent by the Ministry of Infrastructure on external consultants during the past three years. The Ministry of Infrastructure makes use of experts in the province as we work to fulfill the Premier's vision of the most advanced infrastructure in North America. We have a responsibility to ensure that the buildings we construct are well planned and designed for the Albertans who use them and for the communities that surround them.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do have one document to table from the Ministry of Municipal Affairs. I have the appropriate number of copies to table, and this is in response to Written Question 28 regarding the total amounts spent on consultants. We've covered the years 2007-08, 2008-09, and 2009-10. Those, again, include the amounts for both contractors and consultant payments.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Knight, Minister of Sustainable Resource Development, return to order of the Assembly MR 1 asked for by Mr. Hehr on March 15, 2010.

On behalf of the hon. Minister Zwozdesky, minister of health, response to Written Question 9, asked for by Mr. Hehr on March 15, 2010, and responses to written questions 36, 37, and 38, all asked for by Dr. Taft on March 15, 2010.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we have three points of order we have to deal with today. You've been duly notified during the session.

The first point of order was raised by the hon. Government House Leader.

Point of Order Improper Questions

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do believe that we are achieving a new low in terms of the decorum and respect that we have in the House. I raised a point of order with respect to a purported question being raised by the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere during question period today. I raised that point of order – and I haven't been raising points of order in this House – because I am very, very concerned that if we do not have the respect that's deserved for elected members in this province in this House, we can hardly expect anyone in the province to respect the process of government. I'm not asking for respect for any individual member. That has to be earned.

I'm rising under a number of citations, Mr. Speaker, and I want to give you the citations because there are a considerable number of ways in which the presentation by the hon. member – and I don't have his exact words with me. I assume that by now you have the Blues. I don't have that benefit. I want to give you the citations and then get into the gist of why I believe that we need to take a step back, calm down, and get to what the regular business of the House is and what the appropriate use of question period is.

First and foremost, Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 23(h), "makes allegations against another Member"; 23(i), "imputes false or unavowed motives to another Member"; and 23(j), "uses abusive or insulting language." It is the very essence of this place that government governs and the opposition calls government to account. In fact, it goes further than that for private members in the House because under the parliamentary rule of government, cabinet is the government, and all members of the House are here to hold government to account and to make sure that government is governing in the interests of all Albertans. It's essential to government that we have a structure and a set of processes that we adhere to. One of those processes is question period, and the principles of question period – and they're clearly delineated in all the rule books – indicate what question period can be used for and what it can't be used for.

Today in question period the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere made allegations with respect to statements that he, obviously, is not privy to. He made assumptions with respect to those statements. He made the suggestion on the floor of the House that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford had done certain things which had led to certain other things which had led to certain other things. Not only was he making allegations under 23(h); he was imputing false and unavowed motives under 23(i). In doing so, I think all members of the House would agree that he used very abusive language, under 23(j).

I want to give a few other citations, Mr. Speaker, which are relevant to the points in question. First of all, I would refer the House to Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules & Forms. Under that particular document – and I'm reading from the sixth edition by Fraser, Dawson, and Holtby of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules & Forms – number 64 on page 19: "The House has occasionally taken notice of attacks on individual Members." It goes on, and I'll just paraphrase it. It basically goes on to discourage and, in fact, to indicate that it's inappropriate to make attacks on individual members. That's 64.

Then, of course, we go over to 409 on page 120. In Beauchesne's 409 there are a number of citations which are particularly relevant with respect to questions. Under 409(1) "it must be a question, not an expression of an opinion, representation, argumentation, nor debate." Well, in the way in which the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere phrased his interceding in question period today, it was clearly an expression of opinion because he had no knowledge of the facts. He couldn't possibly have had any knowledge of the facts. Clearly an expression of opinion, clearly a representation, obviously, in the very nature of all of those that heard it, argumentation and therefore out of order under 409(1).

I would also direct the chair's attention to 409(3). "The question ought to seek information and, therefore, cannot be based upon a hypothesis, cannot seek an opinion . . . be argumentative or make representations." I'll come back and cite why I believe 409(3) is relevant.

Beauchesne 409(7): "A question must adhere to the proprieties of the House, in terms of inferences, imputing motives or casting aspersions upon persons within the House or out of it." The hon. member was clearly out of line on that point.

There has been a very unfortunate amount of public airing of issues relative to the circumstances surrounding the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark and other comments made in that context. The Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark has made certain things that he is aware of public, but he was not aware of – no one has been able to comment, other than the president of the AMA and the president's letter, that I have tabled, on what exactly happened with respect to the series of events that the hon. member referred to in the preamble to his question and during his question. He had no knowledge of it. He was making assumptions, and in making the question, he also, clearly, cast aspersions.

Beauchesne 409(10) says, "A question ought not to refer to a statement made outside the House by a Minister."

Then on page 122 of Beauchesne's it is observed under 410:

- (10) The subject matter of questions must be within the collective responsibility of the Government or the individual responsibilities of Ministers . . .
- (16) Ministers may be questioned only in relation to current portfolios.
- (17) Ministers may not be questioned with respect to party responsibilities.

I'll come back to those later.

Mr. Speaker, it's also clear in House of Commons Procedure and Practice, second edition, 2009, on page 502 that a member should

- ask a question that is within the administrative responsibility of the government or of the individual Minister addressed and may not
- reflect on the character or the conduct of Chair Occupants, members of the House and of the Senate or members of the judiciary . . .

clearly reflecting on the character or conduct of a member of the House,

- refer to public statements by Ministers on matters not directly related to their departmental duties;
- address a Minister's former portfolio or any other presumed functions . . .
- create disorder;
- make a charge by way of a preamble to a question.

Now, some of those relate to other actions that have happened in and around the House in the course of the last few days and few months, but making a charge by way of a preamble to a question falls full square on what the hon. member did this afternoon.

At the top of page 504 it goes on. A question should not

- seek information from a Minister of a purely personal nature . . .
- concern internal party matters, or party or election expenses.

Again, you'll see, just by stating those, how they have relevance to the question at hand.

Then, of course, to the bible of parliamentary conduct, Erskine May: Parliamentary Practice, 23rd edition, published in 2004. There are just a couple of matters there, but they back up what I've been talking about, and that is that questions addressed to Ministers should relate to the public affairs with which they are officially connected, to proceedings pending in Parliament, or to matters of administration for which they are responsible.

That's on page 344.

On page 346:

Questions which seek an expression of opinion, or which contain arguments, expressions of opinion, inferences, imputations, unnecessary epithets, or rhetorical, controversial, ironical or offensive expressions, are not in order.

Now, Mr. Speaker, all of that is to say that the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere breached virtually all of those citations that I mentioned in one question today and in many questions over the course of this fall session.

But let me just reference today. I don't have the Blues, as I said, but I clearly heard the hon. member indicate that the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford had made a call to the AMA and that that call had resulted in some action being taken by the College of Physicians and Surgeons against the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

First and foremost, there is no evidence of any sort that that happened. The only evidence that there is, and that is evidenced by the president's letter and by an admission made by Edmonton-Rutherford – and he may wish to address this – is that the hon. member made a call to Dr. P.J. White, who is a personal friend, to raise a concern with him about another personal friend so that other friends of Edmonton-Meadowlark could be attentive to his health. Now, that was a perfectly reasonable thing to do, as Dr. White indicates. That was a perfectly reasonable thing to do.

I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that I myself on Wednesday, prior to the debate continuing the way it did, approached members of your office to ensure that we had in the Legislative Assembly, not in the Assembly itself but in the precincts, people who had a first-responder capability in health because I was concerned not just about Edmonton-Meadowlark but about the health of other members of the House. I think it's prudent for us as House leaders, it's prudent for us as members, above all the passion that we bring, to be caring, responsible adults and friends.

I can say very easily that I am friends with members of the opposition, a number of members of the opposition that I would consider friends. We don't necessarily agree on everything, but that does not detract from our humanity. It's very clear that the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford engaged in nothing but an act of friendship and humanity, and the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere is attempting to impugn his motives and make representations about things that he has no knowledge of whatsoever. There is absolutely nothing to connect that call with any action being taken by the College of Physicians and Surgeons, the first that we've heard of that particular piece. So the hon. member ought to retract his question and apologize to Edmonton-Rutherford and to the House for that alone.

Mr. Speaker, I want to also indicate that it's more than just that allegation of motive and imputation of character that's important although that's the most important piece. It's also the abusive language, the talking about morals and ethics that constantly come from that hon. member. This is important. This is very important to the integrity of the House and how we do our business as all members. If we want the public to respect government – and I don't mean government as in the 24 members now who formally form government. I'm talking about the governance structure of our province, as the Governor General today indicated, that defends our democracy and allows us the opportunity to speak freely and to participate in our own governance. If we want to have respect for that, we cannot be engaging in this type of degradation that goes on. That's not necessary in a partisan political process. We can have adult discussion and debate about policy issues with honest differences of viewpoint.

I share honest differences of viewpoint with Calgary-Varsity on a daily basis. He and I agree on some things with respect to education, and we disagree on some things on education. We attend a lot of events together. We don't hold hands and sing Kumbaya, but we have engaged in a few renditions of Me and My Shadow, and, Mr. Speaker, it's important. It's important that we have the opportunity to discuss important issues of public policy and public importance in this House and in public without having people attack our character and our morals. That is not on. That's not happening for the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark from this side of the House, and it's not happening for anyone else. We will not be engaged in that kind of activity.

Hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, with a smirk on his face and a laugh on his face, it shouldn't be happening from you. It should not be happening. The only way that government, we the Legislature, does its job is if we are able to come to this place with the passions that we hold for public policy and for the future of this province and be able to engage in that debate respectfully and honestly and for government to be called to account by members of the opposition and private members of the House on the government side for what the government is doing in an honest, respectful way.

I'm not asking anybody to like me as a member. I'm just saying that when I hold office, I hold office not for myself; I hold office for the public of Alberta. You can disrespect me as a person, but you must respect the office. It's the only way government works. We have to raise the level of debate and raise the level of decorum in this House, Mr. Speaker. I have refrained from raising points of order on these matters, but it's gone too far. It's gone too far with today's question and the circumstances today when above all, if for no other reason, we should be respecting individual members of the House, and now I'm talking about Edmonton-Meadowlark.

It is not appropriate for the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere to be talking about Edmonton-Meadowlark in the House. If Edmonton-Meadowlark wants to talk about the issues that he's had, that's fair game. I mean, that's up to him. Advisable or not advisable, that's in his hands. For the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere to be doing it is, as well, totally inappropriate.

So for all of those reasons, Mr. Speaker, I would ask that you call the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere to order and ask him to retract the preamble and questions that he raised in the House today and to engage in the future in a much more respectful manner, not respectful of cabinet because, clearly, he has no respect for members of cabinet but respect for the process and the institution, which is something that we all owe an obligation to Albertans about.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, please.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, a lot of information there. I do actually have a tremendous amount of respect for this hon. member that raised the point of order. I always have. I've always thought of him as someone — although I disagree with him on some issues, I agree with him on many other issues. I find him to be very respectful and a true democrat, so to speak. He's a parliamentarian that I hold in high regard. You know, it's obviously tough medicine to hear such things from such a gentleman. I will say that I agree with his viewpoint that we must respect the office.

I, for one, respect the office, and I'll tell you why. The office of MLA is what we're talking about. I respect the office because I believe that there's no higher calling that I am aware of than having the opportunity to represent in this House the people that voted for me in Airdrie-Chestermere. I do so with everything and every fibre of my being. No doubt, there are times when I get emotional and get very passionate about it, and that can be interpreted many different ways, to be sure. One of the things that I am very sensitive to — and the hon. member opposite mentioned it, and you could see it in the way he was defending his friend from Edmonton-Rutherford. I defend my friends when there has been a wrong done to them.

I feel very strongly that there has been a wrong done to a very good friend of mine, someone that I've spent a great deal of time with both when I was in government and since I've been out of government, spent time with him, talking with him, et cetera. I refer, of course, to the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. It has been very difficult and has opened up some old wounds in this House to hear and to see first-hand the way that he was ejected from caucus. I, of course, was not ejected from caucus, but many of the same feelings of intimidation that I experienced I feel he has experienced, although he has experienced far more than I have had to.

Going back to the question, Mr. Speaker, and on the point of order, I do have the question in front of me. I have notes of what I said. I said: "Last week the new parliamentary assistant for health called the president of the AMA and told him he was concerned with the mental health of the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark." Obviously, the member opposite, the House leader, was very clear that that is not being challenged. That, in fact, did happen. I think that has been very clear both in the media and from the comments in this House. I then went on to say that "this has resulted in the good doctor from Edmonton-Meadowlark being ordered by the College of Physicians and Surgeons to undergo a psychiatric evaluation in order to retain his medical licence." I'm assuming that that's what the hon. member opposite, the House leader, was taking issue with.

Now, obviously, in a 35-second question it's very difficult to explain all the dot to dot to dot things that have happened in this sequence of events this last week, but I have heard two phone recordings on this exact thing. I've heard the three doctors in question first-hand, heard the recordings. I've heard what was said by the president of the AMA to them and also what they thought the direction of this would lead to, which would be a psychiatric assessment for the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. I heard these things first-hand. I'm not making these things up. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, of course, will have the opportunity to release those phone messages if he so chooses. That's his right, not mine.

I am very convinced that the actions of the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, regardless of whether it was intentional or nonintentional — and I'll get to that in a second. I never impugned his intentions, and I want that to be on the record. Regardless of whether it was intentional or nonintentional, it did lead to what has happened, to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark having to submit to a psychiatric evaluation in order to maintain his licence, which brings me to the intention, Mr. Speaker. Never in my remarks — in fact, I even said: "Regardless of the intent of the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford." In other words, I did not impute any bad intentions. I said that what he has done, regardless of his intentions, "is inappropriate given his position of influence."

Now, I don't know the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford very well, but what I do know of him, I do hold him in high regard. I can't imagine that he would be the type of person that would intentionally do this to injure a friend, nor have I ever said that. What I do think, though, is that he acted very naively if he thought that a person in his position as the parliamentary assistant to the minister of health – it's very naive to think that someone like that calling in the middle of the night to the president of the Alberta Medical Association would not have an unintended effect.

That effect is that you have with the president of the Medical Association, which is, of course, a bargaining unit, a group of people that bargains with the government for the salaries for our physicians here in Alberta. To think that that wouldn't create undue influence on what the president would do next, that for just a layperson, even if it's not true, just the appearance of it seems very – it's not something, certainly, that we should aspire to in this House. It doesn't look good. I would say that although I don't think his intentions were malicious, I do think that it was very inappropriate, and I say that in my question. I felt that it was necessary for the Premier to ask the member to apologize for this. I think this is only right, and I think it's a very minor thing to ask.

Regarding his statements on language and decorum, Mr. Speaker, I'll be the first to admit in this House that I could definitely – like I said, I do often let my emotions get the better of me when I'm talking about things that I'm especially passionate about and especially when I see and feel that democracy and a friend have been wronged. I know that members opposite don't agree that that's the case, and that's fine, but I do feel it's the case. I do feel that the member was wronged, so when I gave the questions, when I talk about moral authority to govern and the fact that I believe this government has lost that moral authority to govern, I do mean that.

It is a serious allegation, but it is one that I feel strongly about because I don't feel that what they have done to the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, ejecting him from caucus for the reasons that they stated, as well as their ejection of the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark as well as the way that they dealt with me personally when I started to speak out publicly . . .

The Speaker: Can we stay with what we're talking about?

4:40

Mr. Anderson: Absolutely, Mr. Speaker. I'm just trying to explain why I think the government has lost its moral authority to govern. I'll move to a different point. Absolutely.

The Speaker: That's not the issue here.

Mr. Anderson: Okay. If that's not the issue and that's not going to be a problem, I'll just leave that out.

I mean, I just feel that, obviously, in a give-and-take opinions are given. The opposite side is not going to agree with my opinion a lot of the time, certainly. Mr. Speaker, I will say that I will attempt – it's like those New Year's resolutions that you keep making and breaking – as we go forward to have a higher level of decorum. But please do not ask me to apologize for defending my friend and for defending his interests from what I think has been an absolutely mishandled and reprehensible situation.

If you just look at the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford and what he did, if that's all we're talking about, then I would say the intentions are – I'm not questioning his intentions. I still think it was inappropriate. However, if we're going outside of that and we're talking about some of the other whisper campaigns that I know of first-hand, which we're not talking about, then that's where I go back to that strong language that I used about this government losing the spirit or the moral authority from the people.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I'll take my seat.

The Speaker: I think it's appropriate, as part of the question here today involves the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, that we hear from him on this matter as a direct participant in the question if he chooses to. And if the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark is about, somebody might find him.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, please.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's difficult to know where to begin. I will certainly attempt to be brief, and I will attempt to speak as directly as possible to the point of order that has been raised by the hon. Government House Leader.

I do have the benefit of the Blues. The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere began his first question of the hon. the Premier as follows:

Mr. Speaker, last week the new parliamentary assistant for health called the president of the AMA and told him he was concerned with the mental health of the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. This has resulted in the good doctor from Edmonton-Meadowlark being ordered by the College of Physicians and Surgeons to undergo a psychiatric evaluation in order to retain his medical licence. Regardless of the intent of the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, what he has done is inappropriate given his position of influence. Will the Premier instruct this member to apologize for what he has done?

Mr. Speaker, I can't think of a way to imagine a grosser distortion of the facts, and I find it difficult to imagine how any member of this House could take greater liberty with discussing private and personal affairs of another member of this House as we have observed here today. We've observed it in the media in the last few days, and we've heard other members from other caucuses also speculate as to what took place. I'm going to take a second, if you'll permit me, just to set the record straight.

The Speaker: Oh, I think it's very important to get the record set straight. Proceed.

Mr. Horne: Absolutely. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I entered the House at 1 a.m. on Thursday last. Those proceedings, of course, are recorded as proceedings of Wednesday, November 24, in Hansard. I have been close friends – and this is not new – with the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark for a number of years preceding our entry into politics in the election of 2008. I have been involved in discussions with my friend the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark for some time, for the last couple of years in fact, regarding some shared concerns and some shared ideas we have around Alberta's health care system, what the issues are and how some of those might be approached.

I've taken a great deal of pleasure in working collaboratively with that member, Mr. Speaker, over the last several years. I know that is true for many other members, I dare say, on all sides of the House. The Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark is particularly knowledgeable given his position as a physician. He's in a unique position to talk about the issues, to identify potential solutions, and he has done nothing but work collaboratively with all of us to try to move improvements forward.

Mr. Speaker, it is no secret that I have become concerned about the stress that my friend had been experiencing, particularly in the last few weeks, and this sort of brings to bear the first incorrect statement made by the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere. I must say that I feel quite uncomfortable because the subject that we're talking about here is mental health. At no time did I express concern for the mental health of that member or another member of this House. At no time did I suggest that any member of this House suffered from a mental illness or disability of any kind. I am not qualified and neither is any other member of this House with the exception perhaps of the two physicians who are members, given their experience and training, to make such a determination, and I would never take it upon myself to do so.

What I have been concerned with, in addition to the declining decorum in the House in recent weeks, is the human factor, the stress, particularly in the early morning hours of Thursday last when the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, basically carrying a debate on his own with respect to a particular amendment under debate with Bill 17, was obviously very tired. I will leave it to hon. members who wish to consult Hansard from those hours to observe for themselves that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark discussed many issues of a personal nature that – and I want to be respectful in how I say this – were completely unrelated to the amendment that was under discussion at the time.

Unlike perhaps some other members in this House, Mr. Speaker, I am not going to take the time to reiterate what those are other than to say – and those of us that were in the House at the time observed it – that the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark took upon himself, as an example, responsibility for the deaths and some of the adverse events that have been reported to have taken place in emergency departments and other health care facilities in the last few weeks. He in front of the House took personal responsibility for that. He talked about a number of other personal matters, including family issues, talked at length about previous experiences he had in dealing with regulatory bodies and previously constituted health delivery organizations in the province.

In short, Mr. Speaker, it was very apparent to me that this was a friend who was speaking on the record and perhaps disclosing information that he might not otherwise have chosen to disclose about himself at a time of great stress. As members who might have been here at the time would have observed, I crossed from my seat to the seat occupied by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods so that I could sit closer to the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, my friend, and attempt to offer him whatever personal support I might be able to, including perhaps an opportunity to step out into the lounge and chat for a few moments. But the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark was vigorously engaged in the debate. He was not interested in such a discussion, and it was very clear to me that I would be unable to offer him any personal support or advice or encouragement or otherwise that might be of assistance to him in those particular circumstances.

I'm being as careful as I can here in terms of the tone. [interjections] If I do have the floor, Mr. Speaker, I will continue.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford does have the floor. This is a matter that is very serious, and I want everybody else to shut up and listen.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, I offer all of this because I do believe that under 23(h), (i), and (j) the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere has called my character and my conduct into question.

From that point, then, what I did was that I had a personal conversation to the side with the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. As I said, it was clear to me that he was determined to continue and that he appeared to be unconcerned about some of the information that he was disclosing that was unrelated to the amendment under debate. He made a statement to me, which I won't relate, to the effect that this would all be over very soon, that I need not be concerned, and that he would not be around to have to worry about it any further.

At that point, Mr. Speaker, I made a decision to call a mutual friend, who the hon. Government House Leader had referred to earlier, not to express an opinion about the mental state of any member of this House because I'm not qualified to do so and not to request the commencement of any sort of proceeding by a regulatory body. I'd like to remind the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere that the Alberta Medical Association is not a regulatory body in this province. It does not control licensing of physicians. I made a decision to call that friend, and I made that call in confidence.

When I made the call, I asked for the assistance of Dr. White in perhaps identifying other physician colleagues who the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark might be interested in hearing from, who might reach out to him, who might offer support either here outside the Chamber or subsequently. That was the reason that I made the call. The Alberta Medical Association has a very well-known peer support program, Mr. Speaker, that they make available, much like many organizations offer to their members.

The point I want to make, Mr. Speaker, is that at the time I had every reason to believe and I should still have reason to believe that that conversation was held in confidence. The fact that the call was made – and I've just relayed what the contents of the call were to others – is not something that I can take responsibility for. The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere has played, I would suggest respectfully, fast and loose with the truth, if not logic, by suggesting a cause and effect relationship between the telephone call that I made to our mutual friend and any other actions.

I would suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that if the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere is aware of any proceedings that might be under way by a regulatory body with respect to health professionals in this province, I would have to question why he would be aware of such a thing. I certainly am not, and I am aware that legislation in this province protects our health professionals from such information, including the existence of any sort of investigation or discussion, from being disclosed. I think, as part of this, the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere needs to be called to account for making such a statement in this House, not to mention, if he believes that to be true – and I certainly have no knowledge of any of that – attributing that inquiry or investigation or proceeding to some action on my part.

Mr. Speaker, what it boils down to is this. But for the actions and the statements of some members of this House in the last few days in the media and then quite boldly in this House today during question period, none of what I have just revealed to this House – certainly, it's against my feeling of proper procedure and proper treatment of a human being to actually say what I have said. But for their actions none of this information would be in the public domain. The Member for Airdrie-Chestermere would have no basis – and I hesitate to use the word “basis” – to make the speculation and the innuendo and the other assertions that he's making irresponsibly in this House. Neither would other hon. members on the opposite side who have done so over the last few days as well.

For those reasons, Mr. Speaker, I have felt compelled to offer this more detailed account of events. Again, my telephone call was to a mutual friend. I've explained the intentions behind it. Quite frankly, I'm not interested in the evaluation of the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere of my intentions. I stand by my actions. I believe they were correct. I believe that the person I called took the correct action in terms of trying to initiate some peer support. I think those who have chosen to put this information in the public domain, to speculate loosely about motives, about consequential events that may have occurred, do so at their own peril, and they will be held to account by their own constituents for those actions.

The final thing I want to say, Mr. Speaker, is that in addition to the transgressions under 23(h), (i), and (j) with respect to allegations against myself, with respect to imputing false or unavowed motives to myself, and I dare say with respect to using abusive and insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder – I think, quite frankly, we’re quickly approaching that point in terms of the way that this Assembly is addressing an issue as important as mental health and an area of health that is subject to such a legacy of stigma. We – I guess I would have to include myself by virtue of the comments I’ve just made – do a disservice not only to this House but to Albertans and particularly those and their families that deal with these issues.

To conclude, I made no such allegation regarding the health of another member. I completely deny the allegations, as loosely framed as they have been, with respect to any of my conduct. I hope I have explained it to the satisfaction of yourself, Mr. Speaker, and I leave it to your good judgment as to whether this member should be called to order.

Thank you.

The Speaker: As I listened very attentively to the exchange, I heard the Government House Leader, the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford mentioned. Only one other member, who just has risen here, was ever mentioned in any of the context, and that was the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

I don’t know how you get into this, but if you have something to add to our understanding of it, please proceed.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I indicated in my note, I’ll be extremely quick. I understand the hon. Government House Leader’s desire to have decorum in the House. That’s something that yourself as the Speaker and every other Speaker attempts to achieve to the best of their ability. What happens when short sessions lead to stress, which leads to inappropriate actions and words, particularly at 12 o’clock, 2 a.m., 5 a.m. . . .

The Speaker: Okay. I think, hon. member, we’d better have relevance with respect to the question being discussed, okay?

Mr. Chase: Yes. Thank you. The relevance is that allegations, perceived intentions, innuendo are very difficult to interpret, to judge. That’s what you’re being asked to do today, Mr. Speaker, and you have qualifications to do so. There is precedent, and there is a reason for the individual from Edmonton-Meadowlark to feel chastised. Dr. John O’Connor is an example of an individual being beaten up by both the provincial government and the federal government for speaking out on health issues relating to First Nations in Fort MacKay and Fort Chip.

The Speaker: Please, please, please. This is a very, very fine point that we’re dealing with, and the truth is all that’s important to me. Let’s focus on what it is. If you have something further to add, fine, not speculation that because something happened over there, this obviously happens over here. Let’s be very specific. I’ll still recognize you. [interjection] Airdrie-Chestermere, we’ve already heard from you.

Calgary-Varsity, if you want to continue.

Mr. Chase: That’s fine. [interjection]

The Speaker: Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, you do not determine who speaks.

Are you finished, Calgary-Varsity?

5:00

Mr. Chase: I thought that was your wish, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: No. I said: just focus on the issue.

Mr. Chase: Thank you.

The Speaker: We’re going to have full transparency here if it applies to this issue. Only if it applies to this issue.

Mr. Chase: Right. What I’m saying, Mr. Speaker, is that we do not operate at our best at 2 a.m.

The Speaker: But we’re now at 5 p.m.

Mr. Chase: And, I gather, Mr. Speaker, you’re suggesting that we’re not operating at our best at 5 p.m.

The Speaker: Oh, no. We are at 5 p.m. much better than 2 a.m.

Mr. Chase: Thank you.

The Speaker: Okay. Thank you.

Who else wanted to participate? Now, how does Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood get involved in this? You were not mentioned by anybody.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, as you are aware, I have been involved in this, and I have prepared to discuss this point.

The Speaker: Okay. We’re on the point now. Were you here in the House to hear all the other debate?

Mr. Mason: I heard it. I heard it on the speaker and came as quickly as I could.

The Speaker: Okay. As long as you’re up to date so you’re not missing anything.

Mr. Mason: And I have the Blues as well.

The Speaker: Proceed. Proceed on the point we’re talking about.

Mr. Mason: Now, Mr. Speaker, the hon. Government House Leader has stood up in this House and has brought an allegation against the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere under sections 23(h), which is making allegations, (i) imputing false motives, and (j) abusive or insulting language. Now, I have, in fact, the Blues, and I have the question.

The Speaker: But, hon. member, you haven’t concluded the list. There are another nine more. Well, okay. Now, let’s do them all.

Mr. Mason: I’ll address these ones, Mr. Speaker, if I can.

I have the questions of the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, and here’s what he said. He said that “the new parliamentary assistant for health called the president of the AMA and told him he was concerned with the mental health of the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.” That much, I think, is all agreed.

The Speaker: Okay. I said earlier, when we were listening to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford: everybody, shut up. The same applies now.

Proceed.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The suggestion of stress has been used, and of course other things have been implied, and this is something that needs to be taken into account, the implications here that are coming from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford and from other members on the government side.

Stress. It was interpreted as mental health. I have the letter from Dr. White to AMA members with respect to this matter. I have also followed his other public comments with respect to this, and he has acknowledged that he used – not the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford – the word “manic,” and he drew the conclusion that that would be used, in a sense, in a general way rather than in a specific medical application. That was based on his conversation from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere said, “mental health,” and I think that is a reasonable interpretation. Then he goes on to say that it has resulted in the good doctor from Edmonton-Meadowlark being ordered by the College of Physicians and Surgeons to undergo a psychiatric evaluation in order to maintain his medical licence.

He is making a connection with respect to this, a call that was made by Edmonton-Rutherford to the doctor as contributing to – he says “has resulted.” That is an interpretation, Mr. Speaker, which I share. I believe that the call which was made to the president of the Alberta Medical Association and a practising psychiatrist has lead directly to the College of Physicians and Surgeons now being involved. That is my opinion, but I think it is a reasonable opinion that a reasonable person could hold.

He goes on to say that “regardless of the intent of the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, what he has done is inappropriate.” My goodness, Mr. Speaker, there’s language that is designed to incite disorder in the House, to say that someone did something inappropriate. Then he asks the Premier to instruct the member to apologize.

Mr. Speaker, he goes on, then, in the second question, to ask the Premier to personally apologize and asked him to “ignore the comments from the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.” In the last question I don’t believe the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford is mentioned at all.

So, Mr. Speaker, the whole charge that’s been brought by the Government House Leader against Airdrie-Chestermere is based on his suggestion that Edmonton-Rutherford said that he was concerned about the mental health of the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark and his interpretation that that has led directly to the action by the College of Physicians and Surgeons.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that those are both very reasonable assumptions and connections. I fail to see that there is anything here that would fit the definition of (h), (i), and (j). I know that government members are angry and frustrated at the situation they’ve found themselves in, and they want to lash out. We have seen some of the things that happen to people when they dare to criticize this government.

I think that there is not a point of order here that I can see in any way. I think that the statements by Airdrie-Chestermere simply say two things: one, he alleges that Edmonton-Rutherford said “mental health,” and I think there is plenty of evidence that that is an interpretation that is reasonable; and secondly, he connects that phone call to the subsequent actions of the College of Physicians and Surgeons, which is a connection I share.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I hope that we can expect that when members stand up in this House, they have a wide latitude to make political points, and the fact that the government and government members right now are feeling an enormous amount of heat frankly is immaterial.

What the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford did was inappropriate. As much as he would like to address it in terms of friendship between three old friends, there are other relationships that are very, very pertinent. He is a member who has just been appointed as the parliamentary assistant for Health and Wellness, a government that’s under heavy attack for its mishandling of the health care system, hurting badly, and he phones a psychiatrist and the head of the Alberta Medical Association about an opposition colleague who’s creating a great deal of trouble for the government. That’s another way to look at it, Mr. Speaker, and a legitimate way to look at it. It’s certainly how I look at it.

Frankly, I think some of the hypocrisy on the other side is not a sufficient reason for us to proceed with a point of order against Airdrie-Chestermere, who was doing his job as an opposition MLA in holding the government to account for its bullying tactics.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Okay. I want to deal only with people who have an interest in this matter directly, not speculative debate.

How are you, sir, minister of housing, involved?

Mr. Denis: I’m involved, sir, because I wish to correct the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood in a statement that he had just made which I believe is inconsistent with the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

The Speaker: You want to correct the statement made.

Mr. Denis: That’s correct.

The Speaker: A statement of fact or a statement of opinion?

Mr. Denis: It’s a statement of fact that the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood indicated that we were agreed on the whole facts of the whole situation. In fact, that is not the case. It’s inconsistent.

The Speaker: Well, obviously you’re going. Proceed to conclude it.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to rise and correct that the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood had indicated that there was somehow an agreement as to a statement of facts here between the earlier submission and the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford. The correction is, first off, that the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford contacted the Alberta Medical Association, not the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Alberta. There’s a distinct difference between the two. One is a licensing body; one is not. That’s like the Law Society and the Canadian Bar Association.

In addition, the manner in which the comments were disseminated, you have to include the tone and the context, and we have to stick to the facts here, Mr. Speaker. The Member for Edmonton-Rutherford did not make that agreement, and that’s very material to the entire issue that we are debating here today.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Now, hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, how are you involved in this?

5:10

Mr. Boutilier: Well, sir, I am because I actually heard the tape recording by the member.

The Speaker: But that's not unique, hon. member.

Mr. Boutilier: No, it's not unique.

The Speaker: Everybody else has heard the tape.

Mr. Boutilier: But I also must say that as a member who spoke directly with the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark . . .

The Speaker: That's not unique either. Virtually everybody else has, too.

Mr. Boutilier: Also, I might say, Mr. Speaker, that the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark and I talked about the actual tactics of a government that have taken on me as a member who got kicked out.

The Speaker: Well, that's not relevant to this either. Okay, I'm going to recognize you, Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, but you are going to stick to the point that we're talking about. Your issue and your case are nothing to do with any of this, okay?

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday I had spoken to the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. We had spoken specifically about what had transpired pertaining to this actual point of order that's being raised, that we didn't know was going to be raised. However, it's important that the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere clearly had pointed out something that I believe is not a point of order.

Even more importantly, I can say this: the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark and I had talked about the whisper campaign that was going on about him relative to this point of order. Specifically, there were two things that the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark had heard, the whispers of the government about him and his health condition, the same whispers that were about this member a year ago, but also the member's comments that were made about: you don't know the whole story. It seems to be a common theme that is being made by this government.

Mr. Speaker, when the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark actually called me, he provided me with a tape of the recording. The term that was used in the recording was "hypermanic," to be very specific. I do know that tomorrow that the member and perhaps you would like to hear the tape recording by the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark in terms of making your conclusion on this point of order, which I do not believe it is. Clearly, that information the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark has I think is very important to this issue, and the term that was used was "hypermanic."

Mr. Speaker, I clearly do not believe there is a point of order. I can say that the whispers that continue on relative to the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark and the whispers – and I might add just one final note, that in actual fact the same reporter, and I will name him, from the Calgary Herald, Don Braid, called the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. The same call came to me, and it was about: watch your back because of the whispers they're making and the allegations they're making against both of you.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Okay. Hold on, now. Hold on, please. Please. How does the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar get into this? You're next on my list. What's your involvement in this?

Mr. MacDonald: I would be delighted to share that with you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: I'm not interested in opinions. We're dealing with the point of order.

Mr. MacDonald: No. I'm certainly not going to express an opinion, as much as I would like.

The Speaker: Proceed, then.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I've been listening to this. I was present in the Assembly for the recorded date of Wednesday. It was Thursday morning. I think it was well after 4 o'clock, when I was preparing for debate on amendment A3 on Bill 17, when I saw the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford come across with the hon. Member for Camrose-Wetaskiwin to have a talk to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. Of course, we were in committee. That's certainly allowed. I'm surprised that as a result of that chat we now have a classic example of damage control.

The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, certainly in my view, did not violate 23(h), (i), and (j), as has been suggested. He was, in my view, doing his job. If you look at Beauchesne and you look at oral questions and what's permitted, specifically 409 suggests a question must be brief. The hon. member's question was brief. He was certainly trying to seek information. It is an important matter. It certainly was not frivolous, as Beauchesne indicates it should not be. The matter ought to have some urgency. Well, I would suggest that it certainly does, when we had such a quick letter from the president of the Alberta Medical Association to all members of this Assembly regarding the matter before us in this point of order.

In conclusion, I would like to remind all members, Mr. Speaker, before you make your decision, that the primary purpose of question period is a seeking of information and calling the government to account. Well, we have government members here. We certainly have the cabinet here, as the hon. House leader pointed out. But the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere was just doing his job, and the greatest possible freedom should be given to members consistent with the other rules and practices during question period.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Okay. Hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, with due deference, everybody's your friend; everybody says they're your friend. Have you heard anything of what's gone on in the last hour and 15 minutes?

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, to be honest, I was in my office when my assistant said that there were some allegations about me saying something to the effect that I wasn't going to be around much longer so nothing mattered. My assistant said: you'd better get your butt in the House and clarify some incorrect statements that were said here by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford. I haven't seen the statements.

The Speaker: Proceed.

Dr. Sherman: I guess, everyone should actually hear from me.

The Speaker: We're on a point of order, hon. member. If you want clarification, it's with a point of order that we have. We're not interested in the history or anything else. We're on a specific point of order here.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, if you can just give me a two-sentence, Coles Notes version of what went on in here because I'm not privy . . .

The Speaker: I can't do that, hon. member. I cannot give a précis of what these hon. members have said in two minutes, so take your place. The Blues will be available. They'll be provided. You can get a hold of them.

Mr. Hinman: Mr. Speaker, I rise to address this point of order with Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j); Beauchesne 64; Beauchesne 409(3), (7), and (10) on page 120; and House of Commons 502 and 504. It's interesting and it needs to be brought up that the discussion has gone on, but the point of order that's being asked is missing the whole point of the actual question, which was asking for an apology.

I, too, have no understanding of why there was a point of order called on all of this. It has been totally inappropriate, in my opinion, Mr. Speaker, on the evidence and the speaking notes that the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford put in there. He continues to imply and make innuendos concerning the health of the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. He made specific statements with absolutely no proof of evidence, saying: this is what he told to me when I was in there. I won't repeat them. They were very damning, and they were inappropriate. If this was a court of law, there was no evidence on that.

The point going back is . . . [interjection] Did you not listen to the things that he said?

The Speaker: Through the chair.

Mr. Hinman: Mr. Speaker, I guess I'll repeat some of them in the fact that . . .

The Speaker: No. You don't have to. I heard them.

Mr. Hinman: Well, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark perhaps hasn't, so to bring him up to date . . .

The Speaker: No. You'll deal with the point of order.

Mr. Hinman: Okay. He continued to undermine the character of the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark in his remarks. He said that he was a close friend. He understands very well, and he sits there with a straight face and says: I had no idea, nor do I have any desire for any repercussions to come out of this. There's absolutely no question of the repercussions that have come. The letter has come from the Alberta Medical Association stating these things. To declare that nothing happened – he continues to imply and now makes remarks with no proof of personal conversation stating that the member said to him: not to worry; it will be over soon. He continued to go on with that line of speech.

They're missing the whole point of this point of order, which was that the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere asked the Premier to ask that member to apologize. That's what it was. Then it got out of hand from there. Again, the comments and the statements that have been implied by the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford continue to undermine the character, implying that this member is not of stable mind. Again, he should be apologizing for what he said here because he acted like this was a public conversation. He said: oh, I really don't want to put it on the record, but I feel like I have to. Then he continued pouring all of this information out that is absolutely inappropriate and wrong. He should get up and apologize for that.

Mr. Speaker, there was nothing wrong with what the member asked. The Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, though, very much made many comments in here, insinuating that the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark was suicidal, though he was very careful not to say that. That's what's on the Blues, and I'll stand by that. He needs to apologize, Mr. Speaker.

5:20

The Speaker: Well, that is quite a statement. That really, really is. I sat here; I've listened, one of the few people in the Assembly that has not moved since this started. I've seen people go in and out, go back and forth, papers flying. I'm the one sitting here. I never heard that. I don't know where that came from with those words, hon. member. Now, look, it's very important – okay? – that we use the words that were used. He never said that, and I've sat here and listened. Why do you say that he said that?

Mr. Hinman: Because that was the whole point of what he said when he talked about that he's not going to be around long, that it's going to take care of itself.

The Speaker: That's what he said. That's what he said.

Mr. Hinman: Yes. Those are all great innuendos undermining the character and the state of mind of the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, and he did a very, very good job of doing that.

The Speaker: Oh, you know, hon. member, whoa. We've got some great connections here. Whoa. Okay. I'm not a psychiatrist. I don't pretend to be. What I am is a wordsmith, and I listened very attentively to the words, and I know what the meanings of the words are. After that it's supposition and a whole series of other things. I just want the truth, okay? I just want the truth.

Now, who else has something important to add to this situation? Hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, I'm happy to recognize you on the point of order.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm not much for wordsmithing.

The Speaker: Oh, you're good at it. I've known you a long time.

Dr. Sherman: Let me set the record straight. I have not been suicidal or homicidal. Period. The words that I heard, I didn't utter those words in this House to the hon. member when he sat beside me. Those are incorrect. I would ask the hon. member to apologize and withdraw those statements.

At 9:30 in the morning Dr. Chris Evans telephoned me and said, "Raj, you have to listen to this message" on his machine. The message was from the AMA president. The message went something like this: "Hi, Chris. P.J. here. Fred called me and said Raj is manic."

I had another doctor, Andrew Stagg – I have a message on my machine; you can listen to it. He said that a fellow by the name of Dr. P.J. White, who identified himself as my friend, as the AMA president called to rally support and he alluded to the fact that I was hypomanic and I was – what was the word, guys?

Mr. Boutillier: Hypomanic.

Dr. Sherman: Hypomanic and destabilizing in the Chamber.

Mr. Speaker, as a physician – I am a physician – I am the one who certifies people; so are the emergency colleagues. When they are manic or suicidal or homicidal, for mental health reasons we fill in the mental health form, and we certify people to the hospital to protect them against their will.

I take offence at the fact that these allegations, these smear campaigns, have happened against me. They've been going on for six weeks. Don Braid told me this was happening; Jodie Sinnema told me this was happening. I've heard this from PC Party insiders who've said: "Raj, watch your back. We like you. The knives are out for you." I take exception to the fact that we are even having this conversation. [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark has the floor.

Dr. Sherman: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford and the hon. member from Camrose came beside here – I don't know – at 4:30 or 5 in the morning while I was doing my job. It's a filibuster, and I introduced an amendment. I am doing my job to stand up for the people of Alberta.

The Speaker: Okay. Sir, please, the issue we're talking about.

Dr. Sherman: I am alleged to have said these statements, which are absolutely incorrect. It's a lie. Why would I say those when I'm doing my job, and I stayed doing my job until 4:30. I'm still here doing my job. I would ask the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford to apologize and withdraw those statements.

Thank you so much. Let's stop this nonsense.

The Speaker: Okay. Does anyone else want to participate in this discussion? Hon. Member for St. Albert, how are you directly involved?

Mr. Allred: On a point of relevance, Mr. Speaker, the issue is the conversation of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford. The issue is not what the subsequent consequences were between Dr. White and the AMA or whoever. The only thing that is relevant is what the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford said, nothing more.

Thank you. [Dr. Sherman rose]

The Speaker: Sorry, sir. I've already recognized you.

Does anybody else want to participate?

All right. Let me, first of all, point out Beauchesne 494: "It has been formally ruled by Speakers that statements by Members respecting themselves and particularly within their own knowledge must be accepted." So from that perspective I will accept the word of everybody who has spoken today. It goes on to say, "On rare occasions this may result in the House having to accept two contradictory accounts of the same incident." Okay. We have a point of order. All of the citations were correct, every one of them. The citations are absolutely correct, and they could be used in the whole thing.

I am not finding a point of order with respect to this. [interjection] No, don't do that to me, please. It's not a popularity contest. I will do what's right, not what you think is right.

This is on the edge, however. This is on the edge with respect to the use of language. I heard the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, but I've heard him before, say that he believes that decorum in this House is important and he will try really hard. Well, I've heard it before. The sledgehammer is coming down next time. This House cannot afford to have that decorum.

I heard the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere say, "Please, do not ask me to apologize." Well, why, sir, did you ask the Premier to apologize? This is the contradiction that I find in all of this. On the one hand, it's okay to do it; on the other hand, don't have it apply to me. I don't think anybody has to apologize for what they say in here unless they're completely, 100 per cent off base and erroneous, deliberately erroneous. Then there's more than an apology that is required.

I think it's been a really stressful week. We're on the edge here with respect to some really difficult issues. I think that hon. members should take a deep breath. Everybody, take a deep breath. Politics, once to be played outside of this House, is now coming into this House. I think this is not good. I think this is inappropriate. I think this is wrong. Everybody in here purports to be a friend of everybody else. Let's show the respect that's required. Some people argue and shake their head and say: no, no; I'm not a friend of somebody else. Well, too bad. Poor guy. Sit by yourself in a feeling of paranoia. That's your choice. But I think that most people here should have respect for one another.

So I repeat. It's not a point of order. It was a useful discussion. We have to accept the words of different members because that's important. I would like to see an elevation of decorum, please. I'm saying this on behalf of the children of Alberta who continue to send me e-mails mentioning some of you by name as being bad. Well, we can make all that public, too.

That was point of order 1. It's 5:29.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader, point of order 2.

Mr. Hancock: The Deputy Government House Leader?

The Speaker: Sorry. I meant the hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: It's just a series of times in which I've been demoted, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: No, no. That was no disrespect on my part.

Point of Order

Questions about Caucus Matters

Mr. Hancock: I'll be very brief on the second one, Mr. Speaker, because I think that much of the discussion that happened was the important discussion we had this afternoon. Under Standing Order 23 and under Beauchesne that I cited earlier – and I won't waste the House's time by citing them again. Suffice it to say that in those citations "Ministers may not be questioned with respect to party responsibilities" and "Ministers may be questioned only in relation to current portfolios," Beauchesne, page 122, 410(16) and (17), and questions that "concern internal party matters" are not appropriate, House of Commons, page 504.

5:30

Today in question period the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo was raising questions about the participation of the minister of health in kicking a member out of caucus and a lot of language around that. Again, I haven't got the Blues in front of me to get the precise language, but, Mr. Speaker, I think it's important for us to put on the table in a point of order of this nature the question of what is appropriate for questions and what's not appropriate for questions. It's entirely appropriate for the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo or any other member to hold the government to account and certainly to ask tough questions of the Minister of Health and Wellness. Albertans want tough questions asked. They want issues around health raised in this House, and there's certainly nothing wrong with that.

But we've heard day after day from members on the other side with their own version of reality relative to why a member might or might not still be a member of our caucus, and that is really a matter for individual members of the House, Mr. Speaker. As you've said from time to time in this House – I’m paraphrasing, and if I paraphrase wrongly, I’m certain you’ll correct me – we are members of party caucuses by virtue of choice. We are elected as individuals to this House, and we choose to sit together to form a caucus so that we can form a government or be part of an opposition.

No one commands our vote in this House. Our vote is our own vote, that we hold and we use in the interests of our constituents, but we remember that our constituents elected us not only because we are such upstanding individuals but because we have aligned ourselves with a party platform and a leader and those other things. When we come to this House, we sit here as members. We choose whom we sit with, and we choose when we won’t sit with them anymore. That’s a matter of choice.

But it is not under the rules of this House for the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo to ask a minister or anyone in this House what role they had in a member staying in or leaving a caucus or what the circumstances were around a member staying in or leaving a caucus. That’s, quite frankly, party business. That has nothing to do with the policy nature. Unless they can carefully craft a question around a policy issue, it’s totally inappropriate, and I would ask that you rule so.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, please.

Mr. Boutilier: Yeah. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the Government House Leader’s comments relative to choosing to sit in a caucus and choosing where we sit in this Legislature. I proudly represent my constituents of Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo as I’ve always viewed them as my boss. Having said that, what he makes reference to, I chose to sit in the PC caucus, that the Government House Leader has now just brought up. Then at that point it was one person, not actually the PC caucus but one person, the Premier of Alberta, who kicked me out of that caucus that I chose to sit in representing my constituents.

Mr. Speaker, on the point of order that the member raises and the words that he just said, I would like to make a point of clarification. I chose not to be over here, but actually based on what the Government House Leader has said, in actual fact I was kicked out not by caucus or by that party; it was by one person. I sit here proudly to represent my constituents. I have been in direct relation on the ER crisis with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, and I do say that I do not believe it is a point of order on any of what I have asked this afternoon.

The Speaker: Anybody else want to get involved in this? Well, now, pray tell, what’s the involvement, please?

Mr. MacDonald: As a member of this House and a witness to what happened in question period this afternoon.

The Speaker: You’re not a member of the caucus.

Mr. MacDonald: Pardon me?

The Speaker: You’re not a member of either caucus.

Mr. MacDonald: No. I said that I’m a member of this House, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Agreed. Proceed. Right to the point on the subject we’re talking about.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much. Certainly, I would disagree with the hon. House leader that there’s a point of order here. I would remind hon. members of this House that the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo was certainly asking a valid question. When we consider that we now have a new parliamentary secretary of health – and we know where the old parliamentary secretary of health is now sitting, on this side of the House – and that the salary for that individual is paid for by taxpayers, the hon. member has every right to ask for direction and seek opinion on that. The new parliamentary secretary is certainly one of the architects of the rather controversial bill that’s before the House, the Alberta Health Act.

The Speaker: Would you please get to the point?

Mr. MacDonald: The point in all of this is – and we get to Beauchesne 416: “A Minister may decline to answer a question without stating the reason for refusing, and insistence on an answer is out of order, with no debate being allowed.” When we look at Beauchesne 416, I certainly don’t see any point of order here. The hon. minister of health could simply do as he usually does if he’s not satisfied with the question, refuse to answer it.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Okay. I think that’s enough. Hon. members, the question is very, very clear with respect to the Blues with respect to this. The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo: “My question is: why did you vote to kick this member, the only ER doctor, out of your caucus? Why did you vote to kick him out?” Well, okay. Then the hon. minister of health comes back and says, “I was not [even] present.”

Then we have the most important citation of all. This is traditional. It’s been raised time and time and time and time again in that questions with respect to party matters are not the purview of the House and have nothing to do with government policy. Participation in a caucus is by those who belong to a caucus. If a caucus chooses to ask someone to leave, that’s always a right, a fundamental right of that particular caucus.

In this case there was an inappropriate question. The point of order is a valid one. I’ll start ruling all of these questions out of order before they even get here if they have to deal with party matters.

Okay. Number three. The hon. Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs.

Point of Order

Referring to the Absence of Members

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. With your indulgence I just want to rise on a point of order, and I’ll undertake to be brief. An infraction occurred on Thursday, November 25, but I was made aware of this alleged offence the evening of the same day, well after this House had adjourned. Beauchesne 319 says:

Any Member is entitled, even bound, to bring to the Speaker’s immediate notice any instance of a breach of order.

It also states:

Even the provisions in the Standing Orders that action must be taken “forthwith” or “forthwith without debate” with respect to certain proceedings do not bar a Member from raising a point of order when a serious irregularity occurs.

This point of order is raised at this point at the earliest opportunity after learning of the alleged infraction. Beauchesne 289(3) under Attendance of Members states: “This absence from the chamber should not be the subject of comment.” That particularly gets to the crux of the matter, Mr. Speaker. It doesn’t restrict it to verbal comment; it restricts it to comments that are made within this House.

Keeping this important principle in mind, the point of order I have arises from the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere's comments. He stated on November 25 at 3:26 a.m., "No," and it's the last name of the Minister of Energy; "No," and there's the last name of the Minister of Health and Wellness, "just a lot of sleeping Tories." This clearly indicates an absence of a member in the House. I'd put to this chair that this is a clear violation of Beauchesne 289(3) and may also be a violation of Standing Order 23(h) and (i).

Mr. Speaker, you had raised a similar infraction on November 24, last week, when ruling on pictures taken of members in this House with a cellphone camera by another member. In your words you said:

Members in this Assembly are elected to have all the freedom and all the rights of privacy and privilege when they work in this Assembly, and they are not to be interfered with by anyone, intimidated by anyone under the guise of whatever it is.

You further went on to state that it is a fundamental right for members to be in this Assembly and to have every right without harassment, intimidation, interference from any other member to do their particular duties.

Mr. Speaker, Beauchesne 1 indicates that a principle of parliamentary law is "to express opinions within limits necessary to preserve decorum." That is the crux of the matter that we've been debating today. This is an important, time-honoured principle that is relevant today with the new opportunities available to communicate with Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, you also stated on November 24 that "the transgression goes to the very heart of the integrity of this Assembly and the right of members to do their work and the security and the privacy of members in this Assembly." There are no precedents in Beauchesne for using social media to violate the rules of this House, but I put it to the chair that we need to set some.

Moving forward, we're in a different situation than we were even five, 10 years ago, than I'd say even two years ago. The method used to disseminate the information that led to the infraction was a social media application called Twitter, an application I actually find very useful as a member of this Assembly. However, this application was used as a tool to violate the very principles and rules of this Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, I put to you and to all members of this Assembly that we all work hard. There is a long-established rule that we do not name members that are not present within the House. It is true that the medium used was not a traditional one, but this should not change the fact that rules were broken and that principles were in fact violated. The important distinction is that the application was used during House proceedings.

Mr. Speaker, my submission to you is that we need more established rules for dealing with social media. I'd ask you to take the appropriate action against this member or rule me out of order. We need to know one way or the other what is acceptable.

Just in conclusion, I do want to mention something that the Member for Calgary-Varsity had mentioned in an earlier point, that I think was quite astute, the fact that we are not our best at 2 in the morning. Well, similarly, this same member, quoted, just said: "Quick." The Minister of Education "is getting his jollies in the house calling points of order." Mr. Speaker, this is inappropriate. We need to have some decorum in and outside of the House.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Well, you were identified, so I'm going to recognize two of you. First of all, the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, then the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, I'm looking forward to a ruling on this, too, because I think there's not a lot of precedent, obviously, around this new technology, Twitter, and its use in the Legislature. I do look forward to and will respect any decision that you make on the matter, obviously.

I do want to point out the incredible hypocrisy of this member on this point. I'm not denying that I made this statement on Twitter. I absolutely did make the statement on Twitter. This same member retweeted on Twitter just the day previous that the Wildrose Alliance members were not in the House for the third reading vote on Bill 16, so he's actually done exactly what he's accusing me of doing. Of course, we have four members, so if none of us are here, that's impugning that we're all not here, obviously. I would say that it is extremely hypocritical.

With regard to the photo that he talked about earlier, Mr. Speaker, there was no photo. That was just people at 2 o'clock being jumpy. There was no photo; it wasn't there. So they can be – I don't know – paranoid if they want, but there's no photo. I don't think that that should even be assessed in this argument. I don't see any evidence of a photo. There is no photo. I can show the pictures of my kids on my phone to prove it.

Anyway, I will say this. I'll put in quickly what I hope you will find on this point of order and, of course, will leave it completely to you. With regard to Twitter and with regard to social media I think it's important that we're able to communicate with people outside of the House about the goings-on in the House that perhaps they can't see. Now, I think that's an important kind of new way that we've involved people in the process, and I think it's been very helpful.

This hon. member talks about and quotes another couple of Twitters that I've put on there. You know, it's funny because I follow the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont, as I think a thousand other Albertans do. I just want to say, Mr. Speaker, that I've heard him many times slag the Wildrose and slag our leader and slag other people in his Twitter comments. Of course, what slag means is subject to interpretation, but the point is that this is part of the give-and-take. Usually the comments are good. They're just good debate back and forth, and sometimes we poke a little fun at each other, as is the case in this case.

I just don't see the difference, Mr. Speaker, between somebody watching the online version of the Legislative Assembly, that you've set up very nicely for us, that people from home can watch – I don't see the difference between if I was sitting there, you know, and somebody was watching from home. They can see who's there and who's not there. As long as it's not done in this House – if I was to say it in the House verbally, then I totally agree that that's out of order. I think that it's in Twitter nation, so to speak; it's a fair way to get people involved in the process. Again, I defer to you on your ruling on it, for sure.

The Speaker: Okay. Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. There are a number of individuals, including yourself, here who are teachers. You referenced bad-behaviour letters you had received from elementary schoolchildren.

The Speaker: Oh, and older folks, too.

Mr. Chase: And older folks as well.

The point is that we're elected to respectfully carry out the wishes of our constituents, and I think we all need to learn lessons. We could probably cite all kinds of examples where someone took offence. I remember, Mr. Speaker, for example, that I think it was 14 times that you drew to my attention how loud and raucous I'd been in the Assembly. That was probably about two and a half years ago. I would offer myself as an example. If I can tone it down, if I can avoid the heckling, if I can avoid the raucous behaviour, then I would put out the challenge to everyone in this House to get on with the business that we were elected to do.

I don't see it as a point of order, the tit-for-tat bit that was going on that evening. If all we dealt with were points of order, we would never have even approached the debate on amendment A3.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think this is a fairly narrow but fairly important piece that we need to deal with. In the ordinary business of the House members come and go. We have a lot of duties that we attend to. We're not all sitting here all the time, and it is the assumption and the rule that we will not refer to the presence or absence of members. The one exception to that is when there's a standing vote and votes are recorded so that people know who was there for the vote and who wasn't there for the vote.

It's an important piece for us. It's important in the House. The fact of the matter is that once we've moved past a period of time, you can make whatever allegation, I suppose, outside the House that you want, but there's no record of who was present and who was absent except for when there's a standing vote. Therefore, the assumption is that members will attend to their business in the House, but there's also an understanding that we often have meetings or other things which take us outside the House, and we need to maintain a quorum in the House to carry on the duty of the House.

It is important, then, when you get to the question of the social media piece, where people are starting to follow, and we have members – and I use it myself periodically – trying to engage people in public discussion and an understanding and interest in what we're doing here. We always want to try and make sure that the public is interested in what we're doing here.

There are protocols, I think, that we need to utilize, and those protocols include – I mean, I don't have any problem with somebody on Twitter, whether it's Airdrie-Chestermere or somebody else, making comments. People make comments all the time. They'll be judged for their comments, and I'll be judged for my comments – that's quite appropriate – even the comment that Airdrie-Chestermere made about an hour ago saying: "Quick – Hancock is getting his jollies in the house calling points of order on me – how fun is this?"

Mr. Horner: Great respect for the institution.

Mr. Hancock: It shows a complete disrespect for the discussion we had, but it's up to him to say it. He has to be accountable for what he says, and people will judge it.

The point is that because I was here at that time in the morning, I could easily have written a tweet at the same time commenting on a member on that side who was absent or resting his eyes or some other characterization of what he might have been doing. It would have been true, but it wouldn't have been appropriate, and I didn't do it. I think that we have to govern ourselves.

I'm not chastising the hon. member in this. I don't intend to. I'm just saying that the rules in the House are here for a reason. Again, to go back to a point I made it seems like eons ago, if we want people to respect the job we do, then we need to have that decorum recognized. If we want them to respect us, we have to guard what we say in public and make sure that we say things that are appropriate and that we handle ourselves appropriately. I've always been of the view that I shouldn't do anything I wouldn't want my mother to have read when she was alive, rest her soul, on the front page of the newspaper. That's a personal thing, and that's how we get our personal respect.

With respect for the institution and respect for Albertans in terms of governance, we do have to be very careful about this sort of thing, so I'd ask you to consider this. I would ask you not to clamp down on use of social media, and quite frankly I would hope that we could even broaden it so that we could actually use our iPads during question period because it's very useful to check our calendars and to do other things.

I'm not suggesting that we should clamp down on this. I'm suggesting we should as members follow the rules that we have in the House with respect to what we do in the House even when we're communicating not on the record, not shouting across the floor, but communicating using social media tools.

The Speaker: This is not a generational thing, okay?

First of all, a clarification. If you're here in the question period, why are you dealing with items in your calendar? Why aren't you listening to what's going on in the question period and paying attention to what's going on in the question period?

Secondly, if three people say, "You did this" and you stand up in this Assembly and say, "I did not" and you were before a court of law, what would the judge say if three people verified that you did it? I think there's some thinking here with some statements that I've heard this afternoon because I have written evidence about certain things being denied in the last little while.

Now, what's really interesting in here is that the hon. minister has raised a point of order concerning the use of technology. Okay. Fine. We're dealing with principle. The technology of today will be outmoded five years from now. All the twittering we're doing today will be something else five years from now. It'll be gone. It'll be forgotten. It'll be like the 33s, the 78s, all the other stuff, so don't get captured with the little toy of the day kind of thing. If you've been here for more than 35 years in your life, you'll know what I'm saying. We have evolved. Twitter is just a game that somebody is making a ton of money on.

The point of order that was made here is that the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere announced on Twitter that certain members were absent. The principle is, though, that if the member would have said that in the House, he'd have been called to order. How is this any different if we're dealing with a principle?

It's like saying that you can do something if you go through the back door which you can't do if you go through the front door. The point is that you can't do it, period, but somehow you can go one way, and you can get it. You can't beat the system by using words to say: well, if the principles don't count, why have any rule?

Without any doubt, if that would have been made in the Assembly, it would have been called to order, and it would have been right. You can look at the references in Beauchesne's paragraphs 289(3) and 481(c) and page 213 of the second edition of House of Commons Procedure and Practice.

I want to make it very, very clear that whatever technology we have today will become outmoded in a couple of years, before we even get the investment return on it. Look back to see when the first computers were brought into the system and why we have a policy that says that every two years it's going to be changed and that something else is going to happen. It's the rules and the principles that we have to make and common sense and a whole series of other things, not the technology, that should be driving us. If our rule is that you don't make mention of the absence of a member, it has to be applied in all worlds. It has to be applied universally across the spectrum. Otherwise, why have it?

Needless to say, there's nothing in the standing orders with respect to twittering, I'm sure, in the same way that there's nothing in the standing orders with respect to 33 records or anything else. It's the decorum. It's the dignity and what this is all about. Unless you can elevate it, this is childlike, juvenile action. "Oh, sir, sir, sir, can I?" "No." "But sir, sir, sir, Johnny is getting away with it." Basically, what we're coming down to is childlike behaviour at some point.

A guy walks around in this Assembly at 3:30 in the morning with a camera in his hand, verified and witnessed by others: that's wrong. That's wrong, and this is going to lead to a point of privilege one of these days in which there is going to be a prima facie case of privilege. It's going to go to a committee that can actually do a lot of very serious things to the reputation of a member. If a member wants to stand up at 4 o'clock in the morning and say, "I don't believe in rules; I don't follow rules; I won't abide by any rules," you go home and tell your children that. Tell your children that. Go to Sunday school on Sunday, and tell everybody there: "I don't believe in the rules of this place. It's not important for me to abide by rules."

It's on the record. Hansard is fabulous reading. A lot of people should actually take time to read it. It's amazing what we'll learn about one another.

So, darn right this is a point of order. This should not have happened. The Legislative Assembly of Alberta provides for the materials. We're not going to take the materials away from anybody. We're not going to end it. We're not going to have a universal rule because 82 people out of 83 abide by the dignity and the decorum and the honour of the Assembly and one violates it. We'll recognize the one who violates it. That's what we'll do. This is a point of order, and that's where it will land.

Hon. Government House Leader, I was going to call Orders of the Day. Did you want to do something else?

Mr. Hancock: I think you have to call Orders of the Day before I do something else.

Orders of the Day

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think that in light of the hour and in light of the afternoon it would be prudent for us to move adjournment until 7:30.

The Speaker: Thank you very much, hon. Government House Leader. I have not left my chair since 1:30, and it's time for me, too.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:56 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: Please be seated.

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Cao in the chair]

The Chair: The chair would like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 27 Police Amendment Act, 2010

The Chair: Are there any comments or questions? The hon. Minister of Public Security and Solicitor General.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It saddens me that now that we've arrived at the point where we're calling the question on Bill 27, the Police Amendment Act, 2010, I must rise this evening and offer an amendment to the bill.

If I could have the amendment circulated, please.

The Chair: We'll pause a moment for the pages to distribute the amendment. This amendment is now known as amendment A3.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Through you to my colleagues in the House, I'll guide you through this. Essentially, at the request of the federal government, of the military police, we were asked to include the military police as a police force in Alberta falling under the jurisdiction of this act, most particularly with respect to ASIRT and the jurisdiction of ASIRT in investigations of serious incidents. Though it was at the request of the federal government, upon further review, for reasons that I'm afraid I can't share because I don't understand them myself, the federal government has now decided, at least at this time, that they do not want to fall under that provincial jurisdiction, so they have asked that we withdraw military police from consideration in this bill.

Therefore, the amendment that I've tabled before you first of all strikes out section 15, which reads in its entirety: "For the purposes of this section, 'police service' includes military police as defined in section 250 of the National Defence Act (Canada)." What this amendment does is that it strikes out the reference to military police. It makes no other changes provincially.

The second part of this amendment makes an amendment to section 22, and you can see the wording there. All it does is remove the reference to section 15, which is struck out under section A. So all we're doing here is, at the request of the federal government, remove military police from the provincial jurisdiction at this time. They may, in fact, at some later date decide to move forward, but that's the state of affairs at this point.

We've decided to move forward, and I propose this amendment for discussion, Mr. Speaker.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak on amendment A3?

Ms Blakeman: I'd like to support the Solicitor General in this amendment because I don't really think it's appropriate that the government would have control over military police as defined in section 250 of the National Defence Act. So, yeah, I think it's very important that they're not in there, actually. I can't understand why they put themselves in there in the first place, but I'm glad they asked to be taken out, and I'm happy to co-operate with the government members in agreeing to do so.

The Chair: Any other hon. members?

Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question.

[Motion on amendment A3 carried]

The Chair: Hon. members, back to Bill 27. The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It is my pleasure to rise and again discuss Bill 27, the Police Amendment Act, 2010. As I mentioned briefly at first but will expand upon further through some amendments I propose today, this is a very important bill. Often when we go about our daily business, we take the police for granted. We understand that their role both to protect and serve is a very important one and that in the vast, vast majority of cases our police officers go above and beyond the call of duty. They go on to both protect our rights as citizens and keep us free from harm and the threat of violence and also the loss of personal property.

They're also there to uphold our democracy, for without the police and, by extension, the government there would really not be any real civil liberties because, sadly, we need the protection of the police officers and the protection of the government for us to live truly free lives. Without those two apparatuses and the rule of law, simply put, in my view, the world would be considerably less free. It would be considerably less free for most individuals. To start naming them would take too long. Needless to say, they play a very important as well as privileged role in our society.

It's on that note, because of the police's special duty both to us as citizens as well as to upholding the Canadian Constitution, that this act is very important. The police not only protect our powers; they protect our rights as citizens. They also have an ability to step in for the government and at times, maybe, go further than the power that we, the Legislature of Alberta and our federal government counterparts, have given them. When that happens, we need an apparatus that effectively deals with those situations, no matter how rare they are, no matter how unfortunate they are.

When these situations happen or when they're even perceived to have happened, it's very important that there be an avenue for individuals to go on to a complaints process that allows them, rightly or wrongly, to have had their day in court, shall we say, even though it's not in court, their day in front of the Law Enforcement Review Board or their day in front of whomever our panel of decision-makers is.

It's because of that that this bill has been changing some of those rules and regulations and, in my view, has been limiting some of those rights and privileges and, in fact, conferring far more of an ability for lessening people's ability to be heard in these situations. In my view that is the wrong direction not only for this province but for democracy in general.

Like I said, the police have a special duty, and when citizens have their rights really infringed or a perception that their rights have been infringed on by a person in a position of power such as a police officer, it's our duty to allow them to have a venue not only for their protection but for the protection of democracy, like I said earlier.

On that note, I would like to go through and offer some amendments tonight. Hopefully, we can hear and discuss, and hopefully I can engage people's attention to possibly consider these as, in my view, I believe the act will be better.

I left some amendments up there for Parliamentary Counsel, and if we could distribute the first one there at this time, that would be great.

The Chair: We shall pause for a moment for the distribution of the amendment. This amendment is now known as amendment A4.

Hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, please proceed.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you very much. If we take a look at this section 19.3, it reads as this: "The Board may dismiss an appeal if a direction given by the Board under section 19.2(3) has not been complied with by a party or if a party has not responded to the Board's direction." You can see I've amended that in section 5 by striking out the proposed section 19.3.

The reason for that, in my view, comes back to some of the things I was saying before. When an individual is making a complaint before a board or a tribunal such as the LERB, despite how frivolous or nonsensical or even minuscule you or I or even the police service sees it as or how unlikely it is to succeed, I believe it would be important to be able to allow them to hear the complaint, to give the party an opportunity to at least present their case at a hearing.

To dismiss what may be bona fide complaints without a hearing can really lead to problems in both our respect for police officers and respect for the rule of law and allow people to fall through the cracks. If you give them the opportunity to be heard, I think many times people will go to these proceedings and realize: man, that really didn't make sense, when they explained it to me or dismissed it, why it was dismissed or why this wasn't the most appropriate venue. It can become clear.

Incorporating this type of power for the LERB will jeopardize procedural fairness, principles of natural justice, and access to justice for those who make complaints. I don't know if many of you were in the House here last time when we discussed procedural fairness. It's one of the basic concepts of law. If a government body or an arm of the government, the police, is subject to a type of complaint, it is most scholars' view that they are given an opportunity to speak and at least to be heard. This is taking away that right.

This amendment was developed in response to, I think, many stakeholders who have said that this is not a good amendment, who indicated during the initial discussions surrounding these amendments that the dismissal process at the LERB on the listed grounds would water down the complaints process to a point where it just simply didn't serve the interests of the general public.

Those are my comments. I believe in this place we should err on the side of allowing people to be heard in this forum rather than shutting them down.

The Chair: The hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Chairman, thank you for the opportunity to respond. I must with regret inform the hon. member that despite having favourably reviewed two previous amendments, this one I cannot agree with. The amendment proposes to strike out the proposed section 19.3, which says, "The Board may" – not shall; it's not a requirement – "dismiss an appeal if a direction given by the Board under section 19.2(3) has not been complied with by a party or if a party has not responded to the Board's direction." It doesn't require the board to dismiss an appeal; it allows them to. This is one of the central reasons for this bill: allowing the board to manage the flow of its business.

Now, we have had cases where respondents have moved out of province and refused to participate and the appeal is open because the board has no powers to dismiss it. All we're doing is providing them with the power. In this clause "may" does not direct that they shall. We're allowing the board to manage. I think the hon. member will agree with me that any court of law in the province is also allowed the same powers. Just because you've filed a complaint or a case doesn't mean you get your day in the sun no matter how you act from that point forward, right?

So there are some requirements here, but again I'll stress that the board may dismiss. It doesn't require them to dismiss. There are, certainly, always extenuating circumstances which the board or any court in the province could consider in the event that this clause is triggered.

I regret that I can't agree with the member and his comments. To me this is fairly central to the bill. We need to allow the Law Enforcement Review Board to manage the flow of its cases so that they move through and they're effective and they're seen to be effective and that justice is not only complete and effective but swift.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre on amendment A4.

Ms. Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. Well, I'm mindful of what the previous two speakers have laid on the floor before us. I think that what we're always trying to achieve is a fair balance. It shouldn't swing to one side or the other. I tend to err on the side of allowing people to be heard, to make sure that the appeal processes are in place for them to take advantage of them.

I understand what the Solicitor General is saying in that you can't take a process hostage through neglect, which is what he's actually describing here, if someone moves out of province. Yes, you can see that, but there are other reasons why somebody may not be complying with what the board has given directions to do. I think we have to be very, very careful here. We are playing with a very powerful force; that is, the police forces and the power that they hold over our lives. We give them that power. They govern by consent. They police by consent. But we do give our consent for that. We need to be careful that when we get into situations of dispute with the police, people are able to carry on.

I understand what the Solicitor General is telling me, but I believe there are other circumstances in which you may be wanting to take advantage of the amendment that is proposed by Calgary-Buffalo. I'm not going to agree with the Solicitor General, but I am going to give my colleague another opportunity to make his case.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other hon. member wish to speak on amendment A4? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I do understand the Solicitor General. The board and tribunal process needs to move along. It needs to move along with some speed and in some reasonable fashion. In this situation we're dealing with a police officer, who holds a very sacrosanct responsibility in not only protecting us but protecting the rule of law and as such has an extreme position of importance. They have a position that they can abuse. Although it happens rarely, they can and do abuse their authority from time to time. That's why we have the LERB and other investigative tools, to allow for them to do a full and fair investigation.

I just find that if people have gone through the process, filed their thing, whether they've moved or whether they haven't or whether the commission – when you use the term “may”, that always leads it into the commission's hands. I know many people in the LERB, and they're very good people. In most cases they're the most rational people in the world. In 99 per cent of the time, there's probably a valid reason why you would use “may,” and they would only dismiss those cases that they would deem appropriate to dismiss.

7:50

The only thing here is that because this is such an important tribunal and such an important area, I think we have to err on the side of caution. In my view, you would eliminate “may,” eliminate the human error factor, and allow people to get there. They show up, and they say: “Yeah. These are the crackpots. Here's how we're going to get rid of this case.” Understandably, that's going to take five or six minutes, and it's going to set them back, and they may have to schedule a new thing. I understand that's going to happen a lot of times. In my view, because of the importance of the situation, I think we should err on the side of caution and allow for this procedural fairness to occur.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chair.

Mr. Oberle: Just a brief comment in response to the last speech by the Member for Calgary-Buffalo. I'll point out again that this is in respect of an appeal. The board may, not shall but may, dismiss an appeal. We're talking about people that have already made a complaint and had it investigated and adjudicated, and they may now wish to file an appeal with the board. So they've already proven themselves capable of going through the process, either themselves or with counsel, which they're allowed to have as they go through the process.

So all this refers to is whether or not a direction given by the board; that is, to produce certain evidence or those sorts of things, has been complied with or if the party has responded to the board's direction. The hon. member mentioned crackpot behaviour. Nothing in here says anything about behaviour. It's failure to comply with the direction of the board. You're talking about a person who's capable or has counsel that's capable of replying to the direction of the board. So what I'm asking for here is to allow the board to manage their process. This has nothing to do with behaviour or how one deports themselves during the course of said appeal. That's not allowed here, actually.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Any other hon. members on amendment A4?

Seeing none, the chair shall now put the question.

[Motion on amendment A4 lost]

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo on the bill.

Mr. Hehr: Yeah. Not to belabour this any further, but I do have another amendment. If we could pass that out to the hon. members of this House, that would be great.

The Chair: All right. We shall pause for the distribution of the amendment. This amendment is now known as amendment A5.

Hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, please proceed.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. This is an amendment we've passed out, where it states as follows – and this is the original wording

9 Section 28.1 is amended

- (a) in subsection (2) by striking out “or” at the end of clause (c), adding “or” at the end of clause (d) and adding the following after clause (d).

And then (c)(iii)(d) reads: “review the investigation conducted in respect of a complaint during the course of the investigation and at the conclusion of the investigation.”

If we look at this act, what this act has . . .

The Chair: Hon. member, let's pause a bit here. I have in my hand amendment A5: “amended in section 9(c)(iii) by striking out the proposed section 28.1(3)(d).” Is that the one?

Mr. Hehr: Yes.

The Chair: Okay. Just to make sure.

Mr. Hehr: Yeah. Okay. I'm often confused, too, Mr. Chair, so I'm glad you got me on the correct page there. Thank you very much.

What this act has is a body in it called the public complaint director. So any complaint that is lodged under the Police Act can be subject to a public complaint director. If we look at this, one of the principal concerns or one of the principal mantras of policing is the independence of a police officer to carry out their investigation without any interference from political individuals, from other members of the force, from people outside the realm, from a person's neighbour. In other words, one of the core principles of policing is that the investigator has the ability to oversee the investigation from start to finish and to come to a conclusion of that investigation without being prompted by the political arm; in this case it looks like the public complaint director.

Actually, this came to me after a discussion with some people from the Calgary Police Commission. They were worried that not amending it in this fashion would allow the public complaint director to second-guess an investigator during the course of an ongoing investigation. The proposed change could result in the public complaint director overseeing and unnecessarily scrutinizing the investigator and the investigator's actions. They also expressed the concern that the complaint director could attempt to insert himself or herself into the investigative process.

In my view, it would be unwise to allow the public complaint director's own opinions or views of how the police process should go when an investigator is in the very middle of a police investigation. It goes against the core belief of policing, that the investigation should not be interfered with from a political arm. In my view, that extends to a public complaint director, who may be in contact with all sorts of people. You know, I don't know where the public complaint director could be getting his information.

Nevertheless, I think it would be wise for us to allow our police officers to investigate the process and go on that notion. I believe the police officers would be jeopardized somewhat in being able to do their investigations, and there would always be someone looking over their head who could interfere in actually finding out the true process of what is in fact going on. Our police officers must be trusted to do their own investigations, or else they should not be in that role.

It is with that in mind that I make this amendment. I urge all hon. members of this Assembly to support this amendment because I believe it leads to better policing and better results and less political interference.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chair.

8:00

Mr. Oberle: Well, Mr. Chairman, unless I'm missing something, this is, as I would read it, sort of a reversal of what the hon. member argued in the last amendment, which would be that oversight of police and the rights of the individual are paramount in the process. In here they are arguing that there should be no external examination of the investigation, and I find that curious.

The proposed clause does not allow the complaints director to inject themselves into an investigation. It does not ask them to investigate. It talks about reviewing the investigation – and I think that's fair – to monitor the flow of an investigation through the police force and to inform a complainant as to where we are in the process without injecting oneself into the investigation. I firmly believe that. So the intent of that clause is to have someone independent oversee the flow of that investigation. It does not say that that complaints director should investigate. They do not have investigative powers. They are not allowed to inject themselves into an investigation. I think that's a fair way of providing oversight without allowing the complaints director to interfere in an investigation, on which I certainly agree with the hon. member.

I might add, Mr. Chairman, that the clause in question – well, the bill itself. You know, we did consult with police commissions, and we received no complaints from police members or police commissions on this or any clause that I'm aware of. You'll understand what some of the concerns forwarded are, and some were mentioned in this House, but I have not heard from a police commission that they have a problem with this particular clause.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo on the amendment.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I appreciate the Solicitor General's comments here. That actually helped me a little bit on the fact that you often get a call from the public that will say: what's the state of existence of my complaint? I understand that they should have an opportunity to hear that complaint. I'm just wondering if there's someplace in the regulations or someplace else where it sort of limits the power of the public complaints director in this regard.

I just see this "review the investigation conducted in respect of a complaint during the course of the investigation and at the conclusion of the investigation" as still being somewhat of a slippery slope where a public complaints director, when he is worried – or not even worried. Let's just say for optics that we could use the scenario where this individual may want to interfere. In my view, there's an opportunity for him in the middle of an investigation to get hold of a police officer and possibly interfere. I don't know if there's a place in the regulations or if it could be more defined in this act. Nevertheless, I still look at this at face value, and it says to me that the person could investigate during the course of an investigation. This leads me to being somewhat of a nervous Nellie or what have you on that note.

I also just want to respond to the first comments to make sure that these are two separate issues, what I'm talking about in this act and what I discussed in the first bill. I understand I'm asking for police oversight and for us to have an effective process. But this is one of those internal things where you can be for police doing their investigation while at the same time being for an oversight body, and I just want to make sure that, you know – I think I am reasonable and rational in having both those points of view in discussing this bill.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Chair, I must rise and apologize to the hon. member. I'll begin by offering an apology. Your comment now clarifies for me what your concern with this clause is. It's a bit of a conundrum. You would agree that a public complaints director needs to be independent of the police. For an independent person, yourself, for example, or myself for that matter, if we were to phone the Calgary police to inquire about the progress of an investigation, we would be told quite short and sweet what we should be doing that afternoon.

Clearly, this public complaints director has to have different powers than an independent member of the public. There has to be some power specified where they can be involved in this investigation somehow so that they can monitor at least the flow through. So there's the rub. I have to grant that person some additional powers, and that's what this clause proposes to do.

The member is right. He referred several times to regulation. In my mind, this has to be nailed down further in regulation. While we've received no complaints from a police commission with regard to this clause, we've been rather well received out there by committing that once this act is passed, I will go back to the stakeholders with a regulation. I don't think there's any misalignment of intent at this point, but the proof is always in the pudding. We've already committed that to all of our stakeholders. We will go back with the regulation because, you know, there are a couple of pretty key points about police oversight and independence and those sorts of things that need to be nailed down when we get to the fine detail, and I've already committed to doing that.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much. I don't have the benefit of the entire act in front of me – maybe the minister does – but I take it, then, that there is specific meaning assigned to the word "review" versus the meaning that is assigned to the word "investigate." Therefore, when the clause says, "Review the investigation conducted in respect of a complaint during the course of the investigation and at the conclusion of the investigation," review has a different meaning. Someone who is reviewing something would not – oh, this is why the specificity of language is so important.

For example, in a not-for-profit society you can have an audit, which means that it is conducted by a registered CMA or CA, and they go through that according to certain principles, or if you're a smaller agency, you can have a review, and a review is by two members who didn't prepare the books, who can look everything over and then sign off on it. Is that what I'm understanding is being contemplated here, that someone who reviews this is not taking the same actions as someone who would be an investigator? Can you explain that?

The Chair: The hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. That would be correct. To investigate would clearly be different than to review an investigation. The public complaints director has to be able to follow this process through to its conclusion to ensure that a complainant has had reasonable access to it, that the flow is reasonable, and that the complainant can get their questions answered at an appropriate time, without investigating because this clause does not allow them to investigate. They can be a police officer, but they cannot be from that force. They are an independent person. They cannot investigate. They are to review the investigation.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Any other hon. members on the amendment?
Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question.

[Motion on amendment A5 lost]

The Chair: Hon. members, I've gotten a note here. May we revert briefly to introductions before carrying on?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It is with great pleasure that I introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly three guests in the public gallery. Their names are as follows: Doug MacDonald, Karen Sevcik, and Ray Pinkosky. I'd ask them to rise, and I'd like all members of the Assembly to give them the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Chair: All right. Now we'll get back to Bill 27. The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. If we could just get to it, I'd like to pass out another amendment here.

The Chair: We'll pause briefly for the distribution of the amendment. It will be known as amendment A6.

Hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, please proceed on amendment A6.

8:10

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chair. The amendment, as you see before you, says that the Police Amendment Act, 2010, be amended in section 12(d) in the proposed section 43(11) by striking out "one year" and substituting "two years." You can see that that just refers to the ability of the police chief or the commission with respect to a complaint, that they shall dismiss any complaint that is made more than one year after

- (a) the conduct complained of occurred, or
- (b) the complainant first knew or ought to have known that the conduct complained of had occurred.

Mr. Chair, the reason for this amendment is, I think, fairly clear. It allows for more time for an individual to review the circumstances and to fully appreciate what may or may not have occurred to them and decide whether to go ahead with their case under the Police Act. If we look at this, this simply moves more in line with what other discovery principles in law are.

Recently in our courts of Alberta we now accept that there is a two-year discoverability principle when people knew or ought to have known when they had a claim against them or when their legal rights began to run in regard to a situation. It has been pretty much accepted that two years is the standard here in Alberta and, in fact, throughout Canada for this to happen. This first change came about in about 2000, and we recently, I believe, codified it in the Rules of Court in about 2006. Again, this is just to keep it more consistent with, basically, legal forums throughout Alberta.

I've read some things on the discoverability principle from different law groups, and in my view there's been an acceptance that two years is the standard course that this should run. Given what we've discussed earlier, the importance of police and their importance in looking after the rule of law and people's rights and how from time to time situations may come where police officers may or may not overstep their bounds and that there will be an opportunity for citizens to make their case heard, in my view it would be wise for us to use the two-year benchmark instead of shortened to the first year. In this situation I think we should give more opportunity for a person to bring a complaint.

There are often intimidation factors or a fear factor for a person to get over to feel comfortable filing a complaint. If we look at it, many of the people who are affected by our legal system or who could possibly have dealings with the police officers are often people who may be on the margins of society, who may not have a voice, who may not understand that there is a recourse for them, who may be outside the traditional person who would feel comfortable filing a complaint in these circumstances. We just should err on the side of caution and, because of the importance of this, allow people the two-year limit to file their complaints. I think it would be wise of this House in this situation to recognize that.

It most likely wouldn't affect very many complaints. If they didn't file it in one year, I'll tell you what: they're most likely not going to file it in two. But there may be three, four, five situations where it allows that person to gain the confidence or the comfort or to line up the witnesses or line up moral support to be able to do that.

I put that to us and would say that we would be wise to follow what many in our legal profession have already gotten to us. In this case, it makes even more sense to do it. Thank you very much, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks. I guess I'm coming at the same issue here but slightly differently than my colleague because I can recall several bills that have gone through this House in which we were trying to achieve that standard. I'm sorry. There is a word that's used where you're accepting a certain protocol or certain standard across the country. It is two years, so I'm a little surprised to see one year in here. That's certainly what came out in the Limitations Act. It tends to be mostly two years. We changed it in this House around reporting either violence or sexual assault against women to make sure that the two-year rule came into play.

The language that's used in this section is that the chief of police, with respect to a complaint referred, shall dismiss any complaint that is made more than one year after

- (a) the conduct complained of occurred, or
- (b) the complainant first knew or ought to have known that the conduct complained of had occurred.

That's pretty cut and dried. This is not a may situation or a might situation; it's "shall." I'm wondering if this just isn't a bit too narrowly focused. Why was this choice made over the two years, which is much more common?

The Chair: The hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Might I begin by pointing out that the previous clause said that the chief of police "shall dismiss any complaint that is made more than one year after the events on which it is based occurred." There is no discoverability: ought to have known or should have known. One year is the window. So this is not a change from the previous bill. That clause has actually been in our legislation for some time. I'm unaware of any complaints that were made because the timeline had expired and a complainant was unable to approach the police.

Secondly, it refers to when “the conduct complained of occurred” – so there’s still the one-year timeline from when the actual conduct occurred – or when “the complainant first knew or ought to have known that the conduct complained of had occurred.” Now, that actually extends the timeline that was under the previous act because it brings in: how could I have possibly known that two days after this event occurred, the police officer illegally searched my name through the records system? If I don’t discover that for a year or two years, I wouldn’t be allowed to complain about it under the old act. Now I would be because I now have an additional one-year window. So it actually extends the timeline.

Just before we go there, both of the speakers alleged, you know, some form of criminal behaviour: what if an assault occurred? True, in many of our courts, actually, it allows two years as a limitation period. Under the Municipal Government Act it allows 90 days to sue a municipality for certain instances. So two years is not a standard window, but in serious things like a criminal assault, for example, a two-year window might be reasonable.

This clause would not kick in in the case of a criminal assault. Any case that involves that discreditable a conduct of a police officer, involving the injury or death of a civilian, any injury, requires an immediate notification of the Solicitor General under section 46.1 of the Police Act, and we can institute an investigation immediately without a complaint. We can investigate either by calling in ASIRT, by calling in a companion police force, or directing that particular police force to continue with the investigation. We can oversee it right there without any public complaint. You’re not really talking about complainants having brought forward some alleged criminal activity or alleged criminal assault and then being unable to have it investigated because it was a year later. We’d be all over that one the night it happened.

We’re talking about a less serious offence at this point. I think it’s reasonable to put the limitation of one year. Again, it allows for a reasonable flow of complaints, and the way it’s worded does extend the complaint period now because of discoverability.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Hehr: I appreciate the comments of the Solicitor General, and I really thank him, actually, for talking about this. I realize that it does expand the rights that were given under the last act. That has to be a positive change, and I’m not denying that. But, you know, simply because an assault would always have the two years or something more serious would have the two-year window or an ability for the police to investigate the misconduct, I don’t think it lessens the need to put the discoverability principle for something that might be less egregious.

In my view, it would be wise for us not only to give that protection and that larger window for individuals but also just for clarity of our legal proceedings. You know, obviously, that has an argument to it as well. Broadening the ability of people to be heard and to file their information with this type of organization is paramount to it at least being able to be seen as an adequate place where justice is heard. In my view, it would be wise for us to do this.

The second thing. Yes, although they put in the Municipal Government Act that you only have 90 days to sue the city of Calgary, the vast majority of people know that you can file with the court and they’ll hear the whole thing, that it’s a two-year discovery principle. In my view, that act should be changed, too. Because that act is wrong doesn’t mean that this act should be wrong, okay? I don’t think that was a valid recommendation.

I thank the Solicitor General, and if he wishes to talk some more, that would be fine.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wish to speak on amendment A6?

Seeing none, the chair shall now put the question.

[Motion on amendment A6 lost]

The Chair: Now we will go back to the bill. The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Chair. If you could pass out my last amendment.

The Chair: We’ll pause for the amendment to be distributed. This amendment now is known as amendment A7.

On amendment A7, the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chair. Section 45 is amended by adding the following after subsection (4): “(4.1) Where the chief of police disposes of a matter under subsection (4), the decision of the chief of police is final.” What we have here is a situation where a matter has gone through its initial phase of review, and it could go up to another higher level of viewing either with the LERB or somewhere else, yet in this part of the act, so far as it’s drawn, we have allowed the police chief to decide in his sole discretion whether or not this should be heard by the LERB. In my view, this is a horrible change. You know, this change is wrong. It can only jeopardize procedural fairness, the principles of natural justice, and access to justice for anyone who has made a complaint.

This amendment will enable the police chief to evade LERB scrutiny simply by characterizing the misconduct as not a serious matter. End quote. Lord knows I like our police officers. I love them to death. I think nothing but the most of our police chiefs, in particular the one in Calgary, Chief Rick Hanson. He’s done an amazing job and has the respect of his troops. He has really presented both a tough-on-crime stance but an understanding of the roots of crime as well and an understanding that it’s not an either/or, that there have to be all points discovered.

Nevertheless, I’m not comfortable with even him having this power to dismiss a complaint if, in his view, it is not a serious matter. We have examples of cases where, in fact, things would not have gone before the LERB, that we know would not have gone before the LERB, where chiefs have said that this is not a serious matter, but in fact the LERB saw that it was and dealt with it accordingly. There are incidents out there in the not-too-distant past where this has occurred, and in my view to simply say that the police chief, whoever that might be, is above board and should have this decision-making power is wrong. It’s wrong in the fact that, simply put, it shouldn’t happen for the sake of civilian oversight, for the ability of people to be heard, for people to have their day in court. To have a matter disposed of by the police chief, “Well, that is not of a serious matter” – let’s face it; this bill is not only about whether it is a serious matter or not a serious matter. That’s not what this bill is all about. It’s the optics of procedural fairness, the optics of Caesar’s wife rule, of not only being pure but seen to be pure. Okay?

In this case if someone gets a note back saying, “I would love to appeal this, but the police chief said that my concern wasn’t a serious matter,” can you imagine what that person feels like? They feel like they’re not being heard. They feel as if the police have drummed it up, have said that no one can be heard, no one can see what's in front of them. There's that big blue wall up there that no one gets past, and they protect their bone no matter what. In my view, that would be enforcing that unfair stigma instead of trying to break that down and giving people every avenue, every recourse out there to be heard. That's what we should have in this bill.

Even though I understand that sometimes there may be issues, that may not be of the highest priority, shall we say. That doesn't matter. They should have the opportunity to be heard. That's why I disagree fundamentally with this bill even though I understand that very good people are working in our police forces and in particular the leaders of our police forces.

I thank you very much, Mr. Chair, and I urge all members of this Assembly to support this amendment.

8:30

The Chair: Any other hon. members? The hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security.

Mr. Oberle: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman, for the opportunity to rise and address the comments of the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo. The member has certainly hit upon, I guess, what is the crux of the act, or some of the concerns about the act, in that it allows a police chief to dismiss a complaint, and when the chief does that, the decision of the police chief is final. I might point out that that's one of the reasons that it's useful to have a public complaints director reviewing the investigation as it goes along.

But at the end of the day the police chief does not operate independently, nor does he have pure and independent power. The police chief is accountable to his community and to his police commission. In the event that a police chief acts unreasonably in dismissing a complaint and calling it final, then the police chief's conduct itself is subject to review by the police commission, either upon recommendation of a complaints director or by a complainant filing a complaint about the police chief. "You didn't think my complaint was serious? I don't agree with you. I'm filing a complaint about you." So it's not as if the police chief is independently able to decide, "That's it. This is a stupid complaint. We're not proceeding from here" and have nobody review that. There is lots of review, and the person's right to carry that complaint further is in no way erased.

What it does though, again, is manage the flow of complaints to allow more serious complaints to get to and through the Law Enforcement Review Board process. That's the intent of this clause.

Having said that and having discussed this clause with other stakeholders, again, it's one of those where the intent appears to be clear and agreed upon, but the proof is in the pudding. This clause is actually the main reason that I committed to take the regulations out to stakeholders. How the regulation around this one is written is pretty key, and I wholeheartedly agree with that. I think the member would agree with that as well. So this was the clause that caused us to think that we'd better take the regulation out there. I've already committed that to stakeholders, and I commit it again here tonight.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Hehr: I thank the hon. Solicitor General for again agreeing to take this regulation and already identifying, before I did, that there may in fact be some difficulty for this as it is proposed. I would like to just say a couple of things in the spirit of what we're involved in here, sharing ideas. I'm sure some people will bring this up to him along the regulation path, but I don't know if you've seen Rick Hanson lately in Calgary; he's the most popular guy there. It is what it is.

The police chief holds an unbelievable amount of power in our city, and I have a feeling that he does in many places. So for us to then believe that the public complaints director is going to take on the police chief, well, God love us, but I think that might be a little bit naive. Okay? That's simply why, in my view especially, we'd be saving the police chief a whole lot of unnecessary grief, where no doubt there is going to be a case which somehow gets out from under him and it spirals out of control. In my view a police chief has far too much power to expect that—I hope the commission would be able to and I hope the public complaints director would be able to; however, in the real world that I live in sometimes I question that, whether they would have the intestinal fortitude. I hope so, but I think that to err on the side of caution, it might be wise for us to do it.

On the other point, I've already forgotten. I trust that the Solicitor General is going to go out and find this in regulation, unless an hon. colleague brings it out. I've enjoyed this tonight. It sounds like we're going to go get some input from stakeholders on the regs, and I look forward to that process and will note that I'll pay attention to it when the time comes.

Thank you very much.

Mr. Oberle: I wonder if I might just add one comment in closing this debate on the amendment here, and that is that Chief Hanson has obtained the position in his community because of wisdom and effective leadership, not by making frivolous decisions that the community doesn't agree with.

Also, I just want to clarify that in the event that such a thing happened, it would be the police commission that oversees the activities of the chief, who have the ability to hire and fire chiefs and who, very clearly, are accountable to the community and to city council, not to the chief. They are his boss. So there is an accountability mechanism.

Despite the fact that you called him the guy in Calgary, I somehow felt the need to jump to his defence anyway.

I offer those comments.

Mr. Hehr: One more time just for the record, I think Rick Hanson is doing a fabulous job, too. I meant it as a compliment that he's doing a wonderful job. That's just for clarity as well.

The Chair: Any other hon. members on amendment A7?

Seeing none, the chair shall now put the question.

[Motion on amendment A7 lost]

The Chair: On the bill?

Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question on the bill.

[The clauses of Bill 27 as amended agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I move that the committee now rise and report Bill 27.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports the following bill with some amendments: Bill 27. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

Thank you, sir.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 27 Police Amendment Act, 2010

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise this evening thankful for the to-ing and fro-ing that we've had with the opposition parties. A couple of well-thought-out amendments came from there. I'm pleased with the way the act has been amended. I now propose that we call the question.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much. I, too, would like to thank the Solicitor General for participating in debate and going back and forth on this and considering what I had to say. I think we should have more of that in this House. I appreciated very much the fact that the Solicitor General has indicated he will go out on the road and continue to find ways to better this act through regulation. But I am also a member of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, and I can't in all good conscience let this bill go through without one last kick at the cat, if you know what I'm saying, Mr. Speaker.

If you look at this bill in its entirety, for the importance I stated in both second reading and for the reasons I said in committee and those amendments I put forward, I believe that this bill could be better. It could be better. I think that this bill goes a long way to shortening the ability of the public to make complaints against a police force. In my view it goes against the best interests of our justice system in both the short and the long run, Mr. Speaker.

I've said that overall the importance of police officers is second to almost none in our society. They protect the very freedoms that you and I take for granted, and without their protection I think it would be very difficult for any of us in this House or people outside of this House to enjoy freedom of speech, freedom of association, in fact all of the Charter rights that we believe in. It's not a perfect world out there, and the police officers not only protect those values that we have enshrined in the Charter, but they also protect our homes, where our families live, where we keep whatever possessions we may have, where we have an ability to go to bed at night, and where we feel safe and protected. I, like most people in society, view the police as being the perfect role models out there for any society and the perfect protectors of that peace.

That said, sometimes things go wrong, where a police officer can have a bad day on the job, where circumstances exist where things go off the rails, so to speak, and a wrong is done to an individual at the hands of a police officer. Am I saying that it happens very often? No. To be honest, I am sure it happens relatively slightly. In fact, it's amazing more complaints aren't lodged against the police given their power and their ability to, I guess, enforce the law. It's their expertise and their training that even is a reflection of the fact that there are very few cases that go forward.

Nevertheless, for the comments, you know the old Caesar's wife rule: that we cannot only be seen to be pure, we must – I messed it up. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre is looking at me, and I always get nervous when she looks at me . . .

Ms Blakeman: Because it's sexist.

Mr. Hehr: Okay. Allegedly. I'm not going to say that saying anymore. That's the last time you heard me say the Caesar's wife rule.

Nevertheless, I think – I think – this bill could be better, and that's why I'm going to put through one more amendment, and we can go from there. So without further ado, can we put that through?

The Deputy Speaker: We will pause for the distribution of the amendment.

Hon. members, this amendment is now known as amendment A1 to the bill.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It says that

Bill 27, Police Amendment Act, 2010, be not now read a third time because the Assembly is of the view that the bill is contrary to the public interest and will jeopardize access to justice, procedural fairness, and the fundamental principles of natural justice for Albertans victimized by police misconduct.

Sir, many of the arguments I have made in this review are more along the lines of: justice not only must be done; it must be seen to be done. Did anyone get the slight nuance there? Justice not only must be done; it must be seen to be done. Not only that, but perception is reality, and we go from there. Nevertheless, on this act we should bend over backwards to ensure that procedural fairness and the fundamental principles of natural justice are followed.

I believe this bill waters down some of the principles that we hold near and dear to our hearts, and I would advise that it's something that can be put aside, that it is not of such an immediacy that it needs to be passed through. I am confident in the Solicitor General and his staff's ability to come back in the fall or the spring with a better bill that can ensure some of these concerns are brought in. For those reasons I'd ask all members of this honourable House to get behind this sentiment, to agree that more work needs to be done and that we can bring it ahead at some other time but after some more work is done.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It has been an honour and a privilege to take part in this debate this evening.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. member wish to speak on the amendment? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood on the amendment.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to speak to this amendment. I agree with it. It's similar to an amendment that I also have, but this one is the more general of the two. I think it wraps up my view of this, that this bill "is contrary to the public interest and will jeopardize access to justice, procedural fairness, and the fundamental principles of natural justice for Albertans victimized by police misconduct."

Mr. Speaker, I couldn't agree more with the sentiment here. We have before us a bill that creates a process for dealing with police
